Mr. RYKERT. I understand that the Senate has struck out certain words which would have a retroactive effect, and have inserted a clause to provide that the Bill shall not affect any pending litigation, although it was shown to them that no litigation was pending.

Mr. EDGAR. Does that reverse the action of the Railway Committee of this House?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, so far as those two clauses are concerned, and also so far as the third clause is concerned. There was a provision that certain sections of the Railway Act should apply to this Act, which has been struck out.

Mr. EDGAR. Do these amendments materially affect the decisions arrived at by the Railway Committee, because if they do, we ought not to rush them through without consideration?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think they do. The Senate amended a clause which they considered to have a retroactive effect, and I do not think anybody will complain of that. Then they thought proper to provide for pending litigation. There are other slight amendments.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. McMULLEN. When you left the chair, Sir, at six o'clock, we were dealing with the statement made to the House by the hon. the Minister of Finance with regard to our guarantee of the interest upon certain bonds of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. the Finance Minister represented to us in that statement the financial condition of the Canadian Pacific Railway as eminently satisfactory. I am sure it is a matter of great gratification to every true Canadian to learn from the lips of the Minister of Finance that the Canadian Pacific Railway is in a healthy condition. We rejoice to know that there are men amongst us who have had the ability and the courage to undertake the construction of that line, notwithstanding the fact that it has cost the country so much money; there is no Canadian who would desire to say a word derogatory to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or those connected with it. On the contrary we wish them every success. The country is largely interested in their success; and we shall be gratified year by year to see the financial prospects of the company improve. Still we cannot help remembering that the construction of this line has cost the country a good deal of money. When the hon. the Minister of Finance, some years ago, introduced his resolution with regard to the advance of \$30,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway, he depicted in glowing terms the influx of population in the North-West, and the vast amount of progress which he anticipated would flow from that influx, and he gave us a very glowing account of what we might look for in a very few years in that country. We now begin to realise that his prophetic utterances on that occasion were not the words of true inspiration; we begin to doubt very seriously that the utterances of the hon. gentleman now and in the future may prove as wide of the fact as his utterances in the past. It is therefore fitting that we should closely and carefully criticise the statements he makes to us. He has of course painted the future of the Canadian Pacific Railway in glowing colors. I shall be rejoiced should his statements be fully realized. At the same time the country has expended a large amount of money, admitted on both sides to be \$71,000,000, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it is high time that, in dealing with the company, we should take care to guard against the country being called on to pay any more money. No doubt the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have honest intentions in this matter. I believe that company to be composed of high minded and honorable gentlemen. I have no doubt that if their lives are spared they will carry out honorably the contract they asked the country to enter into. But the day may come when the present directors of the company may have to abdicate their position; and if the affairs of the company should not be as carefully handled by their successors, we may be called on to pay this interest of \$625,000, the payment of which we are now asked to guarantee. We have no guarantee to protect us against this contingency. We have no security. The land in itself is absolutely devoted to the producing of funds for the purpose of meeting the principal sum of \$15,000,000. No portion of the money to be realised from sales of lands can possibly be devoted, under any circumstances, to the payment of the interest, until the proceeds of those sales reached the sum of \$15,000,000. Should they ever reach that sum, and I hope they will, the country will then become the borrowers of the \$15,000,000, and have to pay the interest at 3½ per cent. for the balance of the fifty years. The hon. the Finance Minister, in addressing the House the other evening, said he was able to borrow on the credit of the country in England at 3½ per cent., and he anticipated a very decided reduction in the value of money in the old country. We hope his prediction may be verified and that the value may be still further reduced; but should that reduction continue, we will find ourselves placed in the unfortunate position, so far as this loan is concerned, of being committed to paying 3½ per cent. for the balance of the fifty years. We cannot possibly redeem the debentures before then, and the Government, should the land realise, in the course of 5, 10 or 15 years, the sum of \$15,000,000, the company will be entitled to a discharge of the mortgage on any of the balance of land that remains, and the Government will become the borrowers of \$15,000,000 at 3½ per cent. As far as the statement of the hon. the Minister of Finance is concerned, we hope that his predictions may be realised, but, in the event of the company not being able to meet their annual interest obligation of \$525,000, the country will be called on to meet it. The road of course in the meantime will have to be operated. We all admit that, under any circumstances, the road must continue to be operated. As I have said before, we have sunk already \$71,000,000 on the Canadian Pacific Railway, the interest on which is \$2,840,000. Now, the people are paying that annual interest. It may be said that every dollar of that \$71,000,000 was not directly borrowed in the English market, but that possibly some of it came out of the very large surpluses which the Government had in years past. The result is that we now have, and will continue to have, as long as those bonds continue in existence, to pay \$2,846,000. If the Government has to meet the interest of \$525,000 a year, that will increase the annual drain on the resources of the people so that it will amount to about \$3,400,000 a year. That is a large sum, and before we put ourselves in the position of adding \$525,000, we should seriously consider the whole question. It is highly desirable no doubt that the Pacific road should be placed in a proper position. Anyone who has passed over the line, as I have, must have seen that it is desirable that the trestle work should be replaced by solid embankments, and I am glad to learn that it is the intention to carry that out, because otherwise it would not be a complete road. There is a history of the transactions between the Government of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway which has yet to be explained, and some of the best statesmen of this country have declared that the connection between them has been very disastrous to the best interests of Canada. I believe that we cannot look forward with any reasonable expectation to the end of this until the country is placed in such a position that the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are separated, until they cease to be mixed up the one with the other. I have no fault to find with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for asking what they have demanded from the Government, for if they were permitted to retain the monopoly granted them, it would be worth more money annually than the interest on the loans, and I have no doubt, if it had not been that the people of Manitoba and the North-West became sensible that they were suffering from the monopoly which was granted, and threatened revolt, they would never have obtained the rights conceded them under this arrangement. The Government, in bringing in this proposition, have placed the Opposition in a very awkward position by the terms in which it is worded. They have prevented the Opposition from assenting to the proposition which they have introduced by the manner in which it is brought before the House. The Opposition have contended for years that Manitoba as well as British Columbia could not be prevented from granting charters to any local railways. Then, why should the Government expect that the Opposition should agree to any such proposition as this? But, while the Opposition are willing to do anything reasonable to do away with that monopoly, they are not willing to admit that there ever was any right to this monopoly in Manitoba. We would be compelled, if we accepted this, to disregard the statements that we have made and the grounds that we have taken for years past, we, therefore, are compelled to vote in opposition to the propositions now submitted. No one on the Government side has attempted to show, by any logical argument, that there is any legal monopoly, so far as Manitoba is concerned, and the utterances of hon. gentlemen opposite have gone largely to show that it is not in regard to any right in connection with the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway in Manitoba that disallowance has taken place, but it was owing to the friendly relationship which has existed between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that they have been disposed to protect them as long as they dare. Under these circumstances, we are in such a position that we will have to oppose the proposition which is made, in its entirety. They say that this is to be the last and I earnestly hope it is to be the last demand made on the country, but the same statement has been made before. The Finance Minister stated before that this was to be finally final. The Finance Minister stated that the earnings of the road from the Government would be a part of the arrangement, and that they would be a part of the security for the additional amount of \$525,000 which the Government would have to pay to the bondholders. I do not know, if the hon. gentlemen remain in power, whether they would retain that amount or not. We had a case where a quantity of freight from British Columbia was carried down to the Provinces, in regard to which there was a considerable amount of money owing to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and that was much less than the amount of their indebtedness to the Government, but still that was paid in full and the indebtedness has been left standing against the company. The Finance Minister said something to us with regard to the financial condition of the line. Amongst other things he told us that there was a sum of five millions for floating debt. Well, I understand that the company have been making very large improvements in the city of Montreal, and I understand they are going to make very extensive improvements in the city of Toronto. With regard to those termini, in all probability they will cost considerable money, and my impression is that it would have been much better if improvements of that kind had been postponed for some years; and that the main line, with the necessary branches in the North-West that will have to be constructed, should have been built first, and after that, if they found their financial condition would enable them, out of their own resources, to make the necessary improvements, or what they consider to be necessary, in Toronto and Montreal, they might have done so. They might have adopted the American system of building roads. I have been through that country a good deal, and I have seen a road opened, running, and earning, without even stations, and in many instances without fences. They continued in that condition for several years, until such time as their earnings would enable them, after paying working expenses, and interest upon the bonds to complete the stations and do a certain amount of fence work. I think if a course of economy of that kind had been adopted by the Canadian Pacific Railway it would have been better. However, as the men at its head have had an extended experience, perhaps they have done what was best. Now, we are told that a land board is to be appointed, and that is to be a drain upon somebody. The Minister did not tell us whether the salaries of that land board are to be paid out of the receipts of the land, or whether the Canadian Pacific Railway will have to contribute towards paying them. If they are paid out of the lands, of course it will take some time longer before a sufficient sum accumulates to enable the company to ask for a release of the mortgage; but that is a point the Finance Minister overlooked. Now, when we come to consider the history of this entire scheme, we have to express regret, in the interest of the country, that the Government should have entered into the bargain that they did. They were warned at the time that the monopolies they were creating, were going to be a serious injury to that country; they were also warned that in all probability a release from the monopoly would be pressed for by the people of that country before many years. Our prediction with regard to that matter is now being fulfilled. The Province of Manitoba is now pressing for a release, and it has been released. Well, Sir, it has been very unfortunate in the history of this country that so many blunders should have been made in the North-West. If that company was the only one that offered to build the road, it might not have been so bad; the Government might not stand charged before the country to the same extent that they are. But there was another company at that time who offered to undertake the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and to do it without the monopoly clause at all. Now, owing to the Government being so closely committed to that company by that first offer, they are now compelled, owing to the bargain they entered into, to ask the country to run the risk of paying a further large amount of money to get rid of that monopoly. But it is no use to go on setting examples of the blunders that have taken place in that colony of ours. It has been one after another. The first unfortunate blunder was in connection with the government of that territory, when officials were sent up to govern it, virtually in opposition to the people's will. The second blunder brought on a war. The third blunder was committed in persisting to maintain a monopoly, year after year, that almost ended in a rebellion, and possibly might have caused a rebellion if the Government had not receded from their pretensions, and made up their minds that it would be too great a risk on their part to attempt to hinder these people any longer. But taking the entire history of that whole country, and the amount that it has cost the people of the Dominion, it has run up already to an enormous sum. When we consider the cost of the two rebellions and the cost of the Mounted Police, which is now about \$1,000,000 a year, we find that altogether we have virtually spent very close on \$20,000,000. We had spent \$71,000,000 in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway; we have paid for officials and surveys, within a short amount of \$15,000,000; and the guarantee we are now going to give the company is worth a little over \$13,000,000, making in all \$119,000,000. We have received something like \$6,000,000 in all for lands sold, leaving a total of \$113,000,000 that that country has virtually cost the Dominion. Now, with regard to the value of this guarantee, the leader of the Opposition stated this afternoon that it would cost the country some \$26,000,000. If you take an annuity of \$525,000 for fifty years, at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and the country was to go to the Bank of Montreal and ask them what amount of a deposit they would accept and release the country from this agreement, and meet the interest every year, the Bank of Montreal would tell you that they required an immediate deposit of \$13,870,541.61. If they were called upon to meet \$525,000 a year, allowing $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest on the money in their hands, it would take that amount to meet the sum of \$525,000 every year. Now, I am not at all finding fault with the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have no doubt that under the contract they are entitled to what they are asking; but as I said before, I do not think they are entitled to anything so far as the Provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia are concerned. Whatever amount we are called upon to give them, or whatever sum they ask us to guarantee, must be taken as a sum in lieu of the monopoly that exists in the North-West—not including Manitoba or the Province of British Columbia, because, as I said before, we claim that in paying money for any supposed monopoly that exists in those Provinces, we are paying money for what does not exist at all, and the Government cannot make out that such a claim does exist. I do earnestly hope, in the interest of the country, that, as the Finance Minister has said, this is the last demand that will be made upon us, but from past experience I can scarcely expect that such will be the case. I am afraid that as long as the present Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway are hand in glove, as they evidently are, demands will be made year after year, and if the people of this country ever want to be released from the annual drain upon their resources in this connection with this line, my opinion is that they will have to ask the Government to take the opposite side of the House before the people will ever be able to get rid of the influence that will be exercised—not to say that the company is exercising an undue influence in this matter, because, as I said before, if they could retain their monopoly I daresay it would be worth more money to them. However, when they get this guarantee and complete the works that the Finance Minister says are so necessary, I hope they will not come back to this House again and ask us for any more money.

Mr. AMYOT. I think it my duty in a few words to explain the vote I am going to give on this question. I have always been in favor of the speedy construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think the company has been a great success. I have great admiration for the energy and boldness of the company, because they have succeeded in constructing a railway which is not surpassed in any part of the world. As for the directors personally, I cannot refrain from expressing my admiration for them. I believe in the second place that the resolutions which take away the monopoly are necessary to-day. When the monopoly was granted it was thought to be necessary to induce the company to build the road, and I believe it is proper that it should now be brought to a termination. The amendment declares that the monopoly of the company extended only to the North-West and not to Manitoba or British Columbia. I believe such to be the case; but admitting that it only extended to the North-West Territories I still believe that that is sufficient to warrant the abolition of monopoly and acceptance of the security we are consenting to accept from the company, at all events it removes all possible doubt, and it will release the country from a great embarrassment. The amendment further says that disallowance was productive of loss and injury. I know that to have been the case from the number of letters I have received from farmers in Manitoba, some of whom left there because they could not make a living on account of disallowance. But as the proposition of the Government is to do away with disallowance and bring it to an end, I will support it so far as disallowance is concerned. The amendment states further that the security offered by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company is not sufficient. I have gone over the North-West pretty thoroughly, and I am of opinion that the security is sufficient. I believe in the value of the North-West lands, I believe that those lands are of immense value, and that the more they are settled the more productive and valuable they will become in the market. The amendment also states that the construction of branch lines should have been provided for. That might be so; but I know that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will be bound in their own interest to construct many branch railways in the North-West. I am sure that such will be the case, and when the interests of the company urge them in that direction they will promote those interests. Being in favor of the resolution of the Government, in favor of the settlement of the question, being anxious to see the Canadian Pacific Railway advancing from success to success and doing well for themselves and also advancing the interests of the country, I shall take this opportunity to make a complaint, not perhaps against the directors themselves, but against the management of the road by their officials, and I do not think I could adopt a better method of informing the House as to the state of affairs than by reading an extract from a paper, La Presse, of Montreal, which takes a great deal of interest in railway matters. The article is contained in one of its late issue, and is under the heading "It does not pay." I read this translation in order that the Government may be informed of the position of affairs and may bring it before the directors of the company with a view to have it remedied. The article is as follows:—

"IT DOES NOT PAY.

"The reason given by the subordinate officials of the Canadian Pacific for the wretched service and accommodation afforded to the public on the north shores of the St. Lawrence and of the Ottawa, is that the line and its branches do not pay.

"In the first place, persons eminently competent to form an opinion on the subject assert that those officials do not speak the truth, but are simply seeking to mystify and browbeat parties who venture to complain, as one of these officials recently attempted to do with the agent of a short line having a connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. An employé of the latter, on being asked to alter the time for starting fifteen minutes, made answer: 'What! do you want us to upset the whole arrangement throughout the vast extent of the Canadian Pacific for the sake of your small little line?' This is mere humbug, but it is just the same with every complaint made, or to be made, by those who are dependent on the Canadian Pacific for railway service in this section. When the officials do not understand our complaints, they do not take the trouble to ask for explanation, and when they do understand what we want they give the matter no attention. This is the true state of the case as between the French-Canadian community and the Canadian Pacific.

"You say 'the line does not pay.' But surely the parsimonious manner in which the service is conducted is not exactly the best way to make it do so! Is the closing of branch lines for eighteen days at a time the way to make the line pay? Is it by neglecting to halloo a line ever since it fell into your hands, and running nothing better than a 15-miles-an-hour moccasin-train you are going to make it pay? You imported from Ogdensburg an individual named Bosworth, who could not speak a word of French and whose high breeding and culture were evidenced by tap-room oaths and tobacco chewing, to establish a set of stupid regulations for a new country where everything has yet to be created. At one blow he destroyed the splendid lumber traffic over the Canadian Pacific Railway from Hull to Montreal, which has now been diverted to the Ottawa; by the absurd rates he established he put a veto on the transport of cattle in large numbers from St. Thérèse, Joliette and Berthier; he established a special tariff for cordwood, calculated by the pound weight, instead of by the car load, and actually killed a branch of trade which was being extensively developed along the whole line of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

"But the sapient Bosworth has now vanished from the scene! What has become of him? What has become of the farmers who formerly shipped their produce on the company's trains? Many others also are missing, and will continue to be missed, so long as the company fail to place at the head of the eastern section of their railway, from Quebec to Ottawa, and branches, a competent man familiar with our language, knowing our people, their manner of living, working and trading, their way of travelling, and the periods when they like to travel whether for business or pleasure; a man with whom we can converse, and who can understand us, and with whom it would be a point of honor to treat us well and to create a profitable business for his own section of the road.

"The company are not justified in saying that the line does not pay, so long as they do not work it intelligently and under a system adapted to the French-Canadian population with whom they have to deal.

"You say the road does not pay! But how could it be otherwise when our people are daily subjected to treatment which no other class would patiently submit to, and which would not for one day be tolerated in France or in England!

"Let our legislators and the directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway read what follows:

"The other day, a person from Ste. Thérèse, holding a 'commutation ticket,' took the 9 o'clock, a.m., train at Montreal, which, as the newspapers stated, was to stop at Ste. Thérèse. He was not allowed to stop at that place, but was compelled to go on to Lachute and return later at an additional cost of $1.20. Two other passengers were treated in the same way. Is not this downright extortion? But the company, notwithstanding their absurd and annoying arrangements, cannot assert that the line does not pay as respects the carrying of passengers. Many of their leading officials have again and again said the reverse; and any one who has occasion to travel on the line now and then, will bear witness that the cars placed at the disposal of the public on certain of their branches are literally filled, and that the passengers, men and women alike, are frequently compelled to travel crowded together and standing, for several miles. But do your two Toronto lines pay so very well! Have we not seen a train laden with but two first-class passengers arrive from that capital?

"The answer: 'It does not pay,' is simply a ready-made reply to meet all cases which you do not want to deal; or an impudent attempt to impose on a population of 500,000 souls who have paid too much to stand any longer such a service as the company now afford."

This is a perfect picture of what is going on to-day, and I hope the Government will make representations to the directors of the company, in order that justice may be done to the trade and travelling public on that section of the line. I have another complaint to make. When we leave Quebec for Ottawa, we have to stop over at St. Martin for three or four hours, to obtain connection with Ottawa. This is perfectly absurd and unfair to that part of the country. It is no reason for the Canadian Pacific Railway to say that it does not pay. When the Canadian Pacific Railway wanted to have a terminus at Quebec, we hoped it would open a second road, and thus develop the country, but instead of doing so, they bought the North Shore line from the Grand Trunk Railway, and the Government came to the rescue of the Canadian Pacific Railway and gave to the company the $1,000,000 which was going to be given to the Province of Quebec. By arrangement, if the Canadian Pacific Railway does not meet the interest of the money placed in that section, the Government is bound to indemnify them. The company has no excuse whatever to treat our section of the country in that way. I do not suppose that the directors know that this state of things exist, because I know they are well disposed towards the Province of Quebec generally speaking, and I think they want to give us fair play and justice. I hope that those few remarks may have the effect of causing a modification in their conduct, and that they will give us fair play and justice. I believe that the abolition of this monopoly will be a great benefit to the country and that it will be the cause of encouraging many branch lines in the North-West and Manitoba. We will, I believe, extend our commercial relations with the States, and we will make those relations so extensive and profitable, that the great cause of reciprocity will be enhanced by it, and finally we will have such trade relations through those railways that the great mass of the people will bring about the success of the reciprocity question. For all those reasons I will support the resolutions of the Government.

Mr. WATSON. I wish to address the House for a short time on this subject. My remarks will be brief, on account of the lateness of the Session, and the anxiety of the members of this House to conclude the business of this session. I must say that I have pleasure in supporting the amendment moved by the leader of the Opposition, because I believe that it is an amendment moved in the proper direction. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat has stated that he believed the Canadian Pacific Railway will build branch lines fast enough in their own interest. Most people would suppose that the Canadian Pacific Railway would build branch lines in their own interest, but such is not the case. We have had experience in the past that it was not so, and we have found that portions of the country that were promised to be accommodated by branch lines years ago, are still without those lines. As I have stated in the House on a previous occasion, the company said they had no money to build branch lines in Manitoba. I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact, that in the Local Legislature of the Province of Manitoba, they have passed resolutions asking that, as a condition of this settlement, the company should be required to extend branch lines. That resolution was moved by the Premier of the Province of Manitoba, and carried without a dissenting voice. When the Finance Minister introduced those resolutions to-day, I was a little surprised to hear his attempt to lead this House to believe that the Government of the day were overflowing with generosity and kindness towards the people of Manitoba, that they were now giving to that Province all that was asked for, and that he believed it was true statesmanship for men to alter their position when they found it necessary. The people of Manitoba do not feel particularly grateful to the Government for making this change, but they do commend the wisdom of the Government in making the change. The Government of Canada have inflicted monopoly and disallowance on the Province of Manitoba just so long as that Province would submit to it. When they found that the Province was prepared to take the bit in its teeth, and construct a line of railway to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and break down the monopoly, then this Government yielded; and only then. I do not intend to go over the whole history of disallowance, because I have spoken about a portion of it on previous occasions, but this House must regret that the Government did not take advantage of opportunities which were presented to them on previous occasions to wipe out this monopoly clause, at a time when they could have wiped it out without the cost of risking one cent to the Dominion of Canada. In 1884 it will be remembered, when the Canadian Pacific Railway asked for a loan of $30,000,000, I took advantage of that opportunity to move an amendment, which was supported by the Opposition in this House, to the effect that on condition of that loan being granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway, the right of monopoly should cease. That amendment was voted down by the Government and hon. gentlemen opposite. I have no doubt that at that time the Canadian Pacific Railway would have been only too glad to have given up clause 15 of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract on condition of receiving that grant. It was stated at that time that the road was not constructed, but it appeared to me then, and it appears to me now, that if the Government were prepared to vote $30,000,000 at that time to the Canadian Pacific Railway as a loan, taking that railroad as security, that the company should feel perfectly safe, in trusting to the Government to protect their security. If they took the power of disallowance in their own hands, and if they saw fit to make it a part of the policy of the Government, they had a right to do so. The Minister of Finance stated that clause 15 was a similar clause to that which was contained in the offer made by the leader of the Mackenzie Administration for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That is not so; it is entirely different. This clause was placed in the Canadian Pacific Railway contract giving those powers to a private corporation, while the Mackenzie Government had proposed to build that road as a Government work, and they made that provision in the contract, but they had it in their power, at any time, to relinquish the monopoly, and allow competition. In 1884, when the Finance Minister introduced the resolutions on the $30,000,000, pledges were made by him, which I need not point out have been violated. He promised at that time that as soon as the road was constructed north of Lake Superior, the Government would see fit to revise the policy and allow competing lines of railway to the boundary line. It is unnecessary for me to state that that promise has not been carried out, and that the Government had gone on persistently disallowing the local Acts of the Province of Manitoba. The Minister of Finance has stated that the Government felt that they were now bound to revise their policy on account of the exceedingly large crop of last year. He went on to state that we had three very bad years in Manitoba, and while those three bad years existed, that the farmers who had very little grain to ship, according to his estimate, should have to pay a higher rate on that very small crop. I do not think that this House will accept the hon. gentleman's logic. He told us in 1884 that some 600,000,000 bushels of grain would be shipped out of Manitoba in 1890. If he expected 600,000,000 bushels of grain in 1890, why did he wait so long? Why did he not allow the construction of railroads? He has admitted that the Canadian Pacific Railway had not the capacity to export 14,000, 000 bushels of wheat out of that country last year, let alone 600,000,000. It appears to me this is not the particular reason for the change of policy, and in fact I feel satisfied that it is not. The hon. gentleman cannot speak too highly of the prospects of Manitoba for the present season. I believe that this year we will have at least a third more grain to export out of that Province than we had last year. I was surprised to hear the hon. gentleman state that we had three bad years in Manitoba, for when some years ago I made reference, not to Manitoba but to a portion of the North-West that is not admitted to be as good as Manitoba, I was called to task by the hon. the Minister of Finance, who claimed that it was a very nice description for me to give of that country. That description has proved true, and so far as Manitoba is concerned the hon. gentleman cannot speak too highly of the prospects of this year. We have not had a crop during the past three or four seasons which has not been a better crop and has suffered less from natural causes than last season's spring crop in the Province of Ontario. The hon. Minister said that the question of disallowance in Manitoba was a legal question. I think that is not an argument which he can fairly bring up at this late day. The hon. Minister of Justice stated to the delegates who visited Ottawa last Session that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had no legal right of monopoly in the old Province of Manitoba, and if the hon. Minister of Finance had consulted the hon. Minister of Justice on that subject, he would have had no need to state to the House to-day that it was a legal question whether that power extended to the old Province or not. The hon. gentleman stated that the Government had been led to believe that disallowance should cease, and that the monopoly clause should be wiped out, in consequence of the large crop we had in Manitoba last year, and in consequence of the persistent endeavors of myself and other gentlemen from Manitoba and the North-West. Now, Mr. Speaker, it seems rather strange that such a statement should be made. I might ask those hon. gentlemen, why their sudden change on this matter? I remember that in the debate last Session on the resolution which I moved that monopoly should cease in Manitoba, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Royal) stated that with the exception of a few hot-headed politicians and ruined real estate men, there was nobody in Manitoba who wanted disallowance or monopoly to cease. I might also call the attention of the House to the views expressed by other hon. members, to whom I suppose the hon. gentleman refers as having urged the Government to do away with the monopoly. I find that W. D. Perley, M. P., at a meeting of the Conservative Association at Qu'Appelle, on the 30th of December last, is reported by the Progress to have stated his position as follows:—

"Mr. Perley spoke of the disallowance agitation as being a blow at Confederation, and said he refused to be party at striking the blow at the Dominion as a whole."

I wonder if the hon. gentleman expressed similar views to the hon. Minister of Finance and the Government at Ottawa during the Session. The Regina Leader of 24th May, 1887, gives the views of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) as follows:—

"Mr. Davin voluntarily declared his opinion in his address against disallowance."

That is what I stated last Session, that the hon. gentleman had declared in his address to the electors that he was opposed to disallowance. But that hon. gentleman did not vote in the House, but paired with the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) on that question:

"He is against it still, but the question was hardly before the constituencies and were he to vote in favor of his abstract opinion he would go against the practical interests of his constituents."

These were the views expressed by those hon. gentlemen only a short time ago, and when they voted against my resolution in this House last Session, I supposed that they did not wish the Government to change their policy.

Mr. DAVIN. I merely rise to remark, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentleman attributes words to me that I did not use. That is a newspaper's comment on my opinion.

Mr. WATSON. The newspaper is the Regina Leader, which is supposed as a rule to express the views of the hon. gentleman. Of course, I give the extract for what it is worth. I thought the hon. member for East Assiniboia had more appreciation of the truthfulness of the Regina Leader. Now, Mr. Speaker, I maintain that under the arrangement proposed by the Government Manitoba receives nothing, unless some such changes are made in these resolutions as are proposed by the hon. leader of the Opposition. Manitoba has now the right to build railroads, as has been maintained by the Opposition all along, and as was admitted by the hon. Minister of Justice to the Manitoba delegates last Session. It is not necessary for me to state to this House the views expressed by hon. gentlemen opposite during the session when the contract was adopted—for their speeches have often been quoted—to the effect that the monopoly clause did not apply to Manitoba. Therefore I maintain that Manitoba has no right to be charged with any portion of this guarantee, because Manitoba is receiving no benefit from it, and I say that the Government should be censured even at this late day for coming down here and dealing out justice to Manitoba which she should have received years ago. The people did rely on the statement made by the hon. Finance Minister three or four years ago that as soon as the railway was constructed north of Lake Superior the monopoly would cease, and they remained quietly waiting for the completion of that line before they raised a voice for competition. By the proposed arrangement the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in reality give up all claim to any lands in the North-West, and so they will not have the same interest in developing the country as they have had while holding the lands, because they find that there is enough land now under cultivation to tax the carrying powers of the railway. Therefore I believe that the money they realise from the guarantee will be used in binding the monopoly still tighter on Manitoba. I do not know whether or not it is on the strength of this proposed guarantee, but I see that they have purchased controlling interest in the Sault route, which the people of Manitoba expected would be held by an independent company which would be willing to give running powers to the Grand Trunk or any other company that would wish to come and relieve Manitoba from monopoly; and I fear that the moneys they will raise on the strength of this guarantee will be used for the purpose of maintaining their monopoly as strongly as they have done in the past. Now, I am not going to say that the Government are not taking sufficient security for the guarantee; I am not going to discuss that question; but I do say that in all reason the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will not encourage settlers to come into the country, which they find is already too large for their carrying capacity, and they are trying to get the Government to relieve them of some of the responsibility. Now, the policy pursued by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and this Government—for I charge this Government with having prevented the construction of competing lines—has caused great loss to the Province of Manitoba, and directly to the owners of last year's crop. It is estimated that if that crop had been carried out promptly and at as reasonable rates as the grain of Dakota was carried at, the people of Manitoba would have realised an advantage of at least $1,500,000. And the Government did not simply leave the monopoly to the Canadian Pacific Railway, but they prevented a road that was built up to the boundary line from carrying any portion of that crop. The Northern Pacific Company built a line of railway to the boundary line and asked for bonding privileges, whereby they might ship wheat out of Manitoba to Ontario, but the customs authorities refused to grant bonding privileges, and thus forced the whole crop to be carried over the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, I will simply call the attention of the House for a very few moments to the action of the House in preventing the construction of the Red River Valley road last year. That road was to have been built under a charter granted by the Local Legislature of Manitoba, a charter which was entirely within the power of that Province to grant, it was a charter for a road running directly over a route laid down by the hon. the late Minister of the Interior in his speech in 1881, when he said that Manitoba had a perfect right to build a line of railway from Winnipeg to the boundary, and there connect with the American roads. The Local Legislature passed an Act granting a charter for the building of such a road, but that Act was disallowed by the federal authority. Notwithstanding that disallowance, the Local Government, finding it impossible to get private parties to undertake such an enterprise on account of the hostile action of the Dominion authorities took power to build that road as a Government work. The Local Government then proceeded to build the road as a Government work, and the Federal Government again disallowed the Act and every other Act for that purpose, for there were several Acts which took power to build to the boundary. The Local Government still persisted in building the road; and what was the next move? The Canadian Pacific Railway purchased or got an agent to purchase a lot of land, which extended between the Red River and the Canadian Pacific Railway South-Western, which runs to Greta, extending the full length between the river and the Canadian Pacific track, except road allowance at the rear end of the lot. The Canadian Pacific Railway then obtained an injunction against the construction of the Red River Valley line across that lot. The Canadian Pacific Railway then went to work and built a spur line and a switch across this road allowance, to prevent the Red River Valley road being constructed on that road allowance. The Local Government persisting, however, in proceeding to construct the Red River Valley line across this lot, and then several injunctions were obtained against the construction of that work by a director of Canadian Pacific Railway, who has the honor of a seat in this House, I refer to the hon. member for Montreal West (Sir Donald A. Smith). The injunction, however, apparently failed in that case; and then this generous Government went to work and obtained an injunction against the construction of the Red River Valley Line across the land that had been held and occupied by settlers for a number of years, on the ground that, as patents had not been issued for those lands, they belonged to the Government. The Premier of Manitoba then proceeded to try and raise money for the construction of that line, the estimated cost of which was $750,000, in the money markets of the world, whither he was followed, according to his own statement, by an agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway, who threw all the obstacles possible in his way, the result being that he was unable to float the bonds for the construction of that work. The people of Manitoba, who are the proper parties to be credited with this change in the policy of the Government felt justified—whether properly or not, it is not for me to say,—in believing that Mr. Norquay, the Premier of Manitoba, was not sincere in his endeavors to raise money for the construction of the work, and the result was he had to resign the leadership of the party. Then a gentleman came to the front who was supposed to be a better Conservative than Mr. Norquay—a man who had always been true and had never kicked—Dr. Harrison, and he proposed a compromise between the Dominion and Local Governments. He was premier but for a few hours when he had to go to the wall, as the people of Manitoba would accept no compromise, as they would accept nothing less than the right to construct the railway to the boundary line. Mr. Greenway was called upon to form a Government, which he did, and he is backed up, not only by the Liberals but by almost the solid vote of the people of Manitoba on this question of disallowance. Mr. Greenway proceeded to Ottawa where he succeeded in obtaining a letter from the Government to the effect that the policy of disallowance would be discontinued. Now, I will just say this, that if the Dominion Government had ceased, during the past autumn, objecting to the construction of the Red River line, the House to-day would not have been called to guarantee this large amount of money to the Canadian Pacific Railway, because the construction of that work would have settled the difficulty, as far as Manitoba is concerned. The construction of that work would have shown the people of Manitoba and this House that Manitoba had the right to build that road, because she had built it and defied the authorities to impede her in the exercise of her just rights. Last Session I ventured to use some strong language in this House during the debate on this question of disallowance, and was called a traitor and several other harsh names, because I stated that, if the Government interfered with the construction of this line, there would be trouble in the west. The events have proved that I was right in making that statement and in warning the Government at that time as I did; and the Government have had to yield, not to the prayer or petition of Manitoba, but to the demand of Manitoba for the acknowledgment of the right to build that line without being interfered with by the federal authority. Why this change of front to-day on the part of the Government? The hon. the Finance Minister has given us his reasons for it. He has told us that it is due to the large crop of last year that the Government made up their minds to yield on this question. But what do we find stated in a report of the sub-committee of the Privy Council to the Imperial authorities, dated the 4th January, 1888? In that report, that sub-committee, composed of the Hon. Thomas White, Minister of the Interior, and the Hon. J. S. D. Thompson, Minister of Justice, recommended that the petition of Manitoba, which had been forwarded to the Imperial authorities, should not be listened to, and gave the reasons why. How is it, I would ask, that the eyes of the Minister of Finance and of his colleagues have been opened since the 4th January, 1888? Did he not know then that we had this large crop, and that the Canadian Pacific Railway were unable to carry it out of the country? Did they not know that cars could not be furnished by the Canadian Pacific Railway to carry away the crop? Did they not know that tens of thousands of bushels of wheat were piled along the line waiting transportation, which the Canadian Pacific Railway could not furnish? Now he comes down and tells us that this change of policy has been brought about because of the large crop, when only on the 4th of January, 1888, the sub-committee of the Privy Council recommended that the policy of disallowance should be continued and gave the reasons why. I am sorry to say, Mr. Speaker, that the reasons given consist in the quotation of extracts from speeches made by members of the late Government in the Province of Manitoba, but the people have risen in their might irrespective of party and have demanded of this Government the right to construct railways in that Province, of which they should have never been deprived. I will call the attention of the Government to another fact. They are taking this land as security, and I do not know whether it will be considered as Government land or Canadian Pacific Railway land. During 20 years from the letting of this contract, the Canadian Pacific Railway lands are to be exempt from taxation. It appears to me that the Government may practically hold those lands for another 12 years, a large portion of them may not be disposed of, and the Province of Manitoba and the Territories may not be able to obtain any taxes from them just in the same way as if they remained in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The question of the taxation of the Canadian Pacific Railway lands is now becoming a burning question in Manitoba and the Territories. Under that clause of the contract, they had a right to the exemption of their lands from taxation for twenty years and of their rolling stock and matters of that kind forever. Well, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have a certain mode of disposing of their land. The Minister of Finance has told us that the average price at which they have disposed of their lands is $3.15. Why is that the price? Because a large portion of those lands are exempt from taxation; they are exempt from taxation until an agreement is registered in the registry office of the municipality, so that the municipality may find out to whom the lands belong. The North-West Company bought a large amount of lands from the Canadian Pacific Railway, and they were sold in such a way that I do not think there could be a cent of taxes collected. The Local Legislature of Manitoba, sympathising with the municipalities, have agreed to undertake the cost of testing a case between one municipality and the North-West Land Company. The amount of taxes which the municipalities lose in consequence of this exemption is enormous. I find that the amount of land in the Province of Manitoba which is exempt from taxation and is supposed to be held by the North-West Land Company is as follows:—

	Lands Exempt.	Annual Loss.
North Cypress	26,720	$ 923 53
Odannah	10,080	401 00
Osprey	3,200	168 00
Miniota	11,680	473 73
Elton	3,520	284 59
Glendale	3,520	330 00
Woodworth	30,160	1,241 25
Cornwallis	3,860	359 95
Archie	19,360	608 77
Brenda	115,840	1,200 00
South Cypress	38,560	1,186 45
Whitewater	18,080	271 20
Oakland	8,960	305 53
Daly	2,240	118 00
Burnside	58,320	2,814 58

This does not include all the lands, because in some of the municipal returns, it is found impossible to separate the Canadian Pacific Railway lands and the lands of the Land Company, and so they cannot show what proportion of land should be taxed. I have no desire to decry the quality of the lands, but I must point out that, when the Minister of Finance stated that the average price was $3.15, it should be remembered that these are selected lands, and must necessarily be the best lands in the country. I say that company made a good bargain in buying the land at that price, but the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are holding lands in Manitoba to-day at a price which no purchaser will pay. They are holding lands from $4 to $10 an acre. These lands are not subjected to taxation. They are in different municipalities, and they are a great loss to the municipality, because schools and churches and other public institutions have to be maintained, and it is a great drawback to have these lands locked up and paying no taxes. I do not feel disposed to occupy any more time. I will certainly support the amendment. It is unnecessary for me to repeat what I said in the House before as to the causes which led the people of Manitoba and the North-West to demand competition in railways, but, so far as the North-West is concerned, through their representatives, we have not heard any objection to monopoly. Last year, the representatives of the North-West voted in favor of monopoly, and against doing away with disallowance, and that because they can only expect to have their railway communication east and west through the Province of Manitoba. All their freight has to come through that Province, and it is simply a question for the North-West whether they will tap the international boundary in the old Province of Manitoba or in the added territory. Before long, we expect to have a competing line by means of steamboats from Duluth. We feel that we will not be able to ship freight at the rates which the Canadian Pacific Railway will be compelled to charge for carrying our grain by all rail from the North-West to Montreal, so we expect to send it by water by way of Duluth or Port Arthur. I am satisfied that that will be the result and that they will connect with the all-rail route from eastern boundary of Manitoba. For the reasons I have given I intend to support the amendment moved by the leader of the Opposition, and I trust that the Government will see fit to make such changes in their proposed conditions of settlement, as will afford all sections of country in the Province of Manitoba the railway accommodation that the Canadian Pacific Railway have promised them for years, I know that the settlers in certain portions of Manitoba, particularly in south-western portion, represented by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) are greatly in need of railway accommodation. The member representing West Brandon moved in the Local Legislature the other day that it was of the utmost importance that branch lines should be extended from Brandon to the south-west in the very near future, and that it would be a considerable loss to that section of the country if railway accommodation is not provided. Settlers located in that district years ago when they were promised that they should have railway accommodation immediately. They have lived there for years, they have grown a large amount of grain, but they have not been able to dispose of it at remunerative prices. The gentleman who moved this resolution, Mr. Kirkcaldy, and who is a supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite in politics, stated that unless the people were afforded such accommodation, it would be necessary for them to cease growing grain, and actually to abandon the homesteads which they have held for years. Mr. Speaker, I have made these remarks in order to set forth my position, and what I believe to be the views of a majority of the people of Manitoba.

Mr. DALY. Hon. members will no doubt recognise the fact that as a member from Manitoba, I have a particular interest in the question before the House. I am indeed surprised at the stand that has been taken by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) who has just sat down. That any man from the Province of Manitoba, that any gentleman representing a constituency, either in Manitoba or the North-West Territory, should stand upon the floor of this House and oppose such a resolution as the Minister of Finance has brought down to-night, I never supposed would come about in the history of the Parliament of Canada. What else has been the cry in the Province of Manitoba during the last five or six years, but "this crushing monopoly was grinding the life-blood out of our country?" And when at the last moment the Government has conceded that this monopoly should be done away with, when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has been induced to enter into an arrangement with the Government to do away with the monopoly, and the Minister of Finance asks this Parliament to assent to that arrangement, an arrangement which it is conceded by the Reform press of Canada, throughout the length and breadth of it, to be a fair one, we find the hon. member for Marquette, supposed to stand here, as he has been called by the Reform press of Manitoba, the sole representative of that Province—that hon. gentleman stands up here and has the hardihood to say that he is going to vote for this amendment. I say, Mr. Speaker, that the sooner this rip, ranting, and roaring hypocrisy that we see upon the other side of the House, is done away with, the better. We beheld a spectacle in this House last Session that, I suppose, has never occurred before in Canada, when my colleague from Winnipeg (Mr. Scarth), and myself, had to vote against the Government upon the question of disallowance, I who have been a supporter of the right hon. gentleman who leads this House, as far back as I can remember, and the hon. member for Winnipeg who has been a life-long supporter also of the right hon. gentleman. We carried out the pledges that we made to our constituents, echoing the voice of the whole people of Manitoba upon this question of disallowance, and we came down here and manfully withstood the reproach that we were voting against the party that we were elected to support, and voted against the Government upon the question of disallowance. We stood true to our colors then. But we find now that things have changed, we find that Richard is not himself? The hon. gentleman on the other side of the House who criticised my conduct upon that occasion, the press representing that gentleman in the Province of Manitoba who criticised my conduct, will find that, to-morrow, when that speech is read in Manitoba, that the man whom they looked upon as being their sole representative, has acted far otherwise to-day than they expected him to do. Now, Sir, we find that the great Liberal party of Canada were not able to pose in Manitoba as Reformers, but they endeavored to pose as Manitoba Liberals, they designated themselves as being Manitoba Liberals, they went to work and drew up a platform. A meeting of that association was held in Winnipeg on the 2nd March, 1886, and the fifth plank in their platform was the following:—

Mr. WATSON.

"PROVINCIAL RIGHTS PLATFORM.

"The absolute right to charter local lines of railway not extending beyond the boundaries of the Province, and it is asserted that whatever arrangements the Dominion Government may have made with the Canadian Pacific Railway curtailing the said Dominion Government is in duty bound to cause such arrangements to be set aside by purchase or otherwise, and thus restore to Manitoba her rights in this respect."

Now, Sir, that is a plank of the "Provincial Rights" platform in Manitoba. They laid it down as a plank that the Government should purchase the rights of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the monopoly. What is the Government seeking to do to-day? Are they not seeking to purchase the rights of the monopoly? Have they not come down with a resolution which says that this "grinding monopoly" is to be abolished? But we find, in face of that fact, that the hon. gentleman opposite, who is the sole representative from that Province, is opposing the resolutions that the Government have brought down. In addition to the resolutions that that were passed by the Liberal Association, we find that the Winnipeg Free Press, which supports that hon. gentleman, which has boomed that hon. gentleman, which has told the people of Manitoba and the people of Canada that he is the sole representative of Manitoba—the Free Press, on the 22nd July last, stated, in reference to the monopoly:

"The monopoly must be abolished everywhere, and if the Dominion Government have contracted to grant it to the Canadian Pacific Railway in the added territory and the North-West, that contract must be rescinded without being repudiated."

Again we find that the Winnipeg Free Press on the 7th December, 1887, stated:

"There can be no two opinions regarding the advisability of buying out the monopoly rights which are actually possessed by the Canadian Pacific Railway in the added territory of Manitoba and the North-West Territories. Although the Dominion Parliament did not contract to give the railway a monopoly in old Manitoba, it did enter into an agreement to furnish it with a monopoly in the added territory and in the North-West."

Then again, the same newspaper, on the 21st December, 1887, says:

"In old Manitoba, to be sure, the Canadian Pacific Railway has no legal right to monopoly, but in the 'added territory,' which forms a very considerable part of the Province, it does possess such right just as fully as it possesses a similar right in the North-West Territories. As to the project of buying out the monopoly right we fail to see how any journal in this country or in the Dominion can oppose it."

The reason I have troubled the House with these statements is to show that the Reform or the Liberal party in Manitoba are bound to the plank laid down in their platform, and that is that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have certain rights in the added territory, as it is known, or the larger portion of Manitoba, and that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would not be likely to give up those rights without compensation. Yet, in the face of this fact, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), whose constituency is largely composed of counties lying within the added territory, as is my own constituency, rises and states that so far as Manitoba is concerned the Government have no right to compensate the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. We heard the Minister of Finance state this afternoon that 7,000,000 bushels of wheat were sent from Manitoba this year, and I venture to say, without fear of contradiction, and the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) will bear me out, that of that quantity exported over 4,000,000 bushels were raised in the added territory; and that very added territory would have remained until the expiration of twenty years under the ban of monopoly unless this resolution had been brought down by the Government.

Mr. WATSON. Does the hon gentleman not suppose that the grain of the added territory will always be shipped through the old Province of Manitoba?

Mr. DALY. I do not know any other line of railway in Manitoba to-day by which it could be shipped. I am speaking of matters as I find them. I will come to a question later on which will possibly answer the hon. gentleman. I was about to point out to the House that I represent the largest constituency in Manitoba so far as population is concerned, there being 34,000 people there according to the last census, and 11,500 votes upon the voters' list. Of these 11,500 voters there is no question whatever that 8,000 live in the added territory, and therefore 8,000 of the voters who sent me to this House are men interested the same as is the hon. member who represents Eastern Assiniboia in the question of monopoly. I was surprised to see the leader of the Opposition expose his ignorance in regard to this matter; I did not suppose he would do so in discussing this question. I presume the hon. gentleman has never been in the country, either in Manitoba or the North-West, and that he has been inspired, as was the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), when he made a statement during the earlier part of the Session that thousands of bushels of grain were rotting at the stations. The hon. gentleman made that assertion simply upon statements made to him by men interested in decrying the country. I would simply state that the largest portion of Manitoba is as much affected by clause 15 of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract as it any part of the Territories. The hon. gentleman's amendment is cunningly worded to catch myself and other hon. members who voted against disallowance last year; but they are not going to catch me. I have used every possible endeavor, and the leader of the Government and the Minister of Finance will say so; they will say that I and my colleagues, the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Royal), the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) and the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Scarth) pressed, in season and out of season, the Government to carry out the view they now take. Although the question of disallowance was a moot question in Manitoba, yet at the same time only a certain portion of the Province would be affected and that was old Manitoba; the largest portion of my constituency would still remain under the ban of monopoly if disallowance were removed and it was conceded, as I have contended and will ever contend, that the Local Legislature had power to grant charters for lines running to the boundary, and if Mr. Greenway had obtained the declaration of the Government previously that no more charters would be disallowed, the agitation would still have gone on. My people would not have yielded in that way; the mere fact of Mr. Greenway chartering lines to the boundary was not going to give compensation to the people I represent in the added territory. The people living in the added territory, among others in the constituency represented by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), would not be affected if disallowance was simply going to be done away with, and it would not have brought peace to Manitoba. I, and the hon. members I have mentioned, urged on the Government that the only thing that could possibly be done was to wipe out the monopoly clause, and by that means place the added Territory in the same position as the rest of Manitoba. I may say for the information of the House that it is my intention to move an amendment to the resolution in Committee of the Whole, to the effect that we regret exceedingly that the Government have not seen fit to provide for the building of the branch lines spoken of in the last clause of the amendment of the leader of the Opposition. The position taken appears a very singular one to me, representing as I do the very people who are most affected by the question of branch lines, knowing that the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) must know, and through him the leader of the Opposition, that I have urged this question on the Government in season and out of season. I presented a petition to Sir Geo. Stephen not long ago signed by 229 ratepayers in nine townships, who stated they had marketed 532,000 bushels of wheat, that they had 32,000 acres of land ready for crop this year. That petition was taken into consideration by the directors of the company, and the reply I received from Mr. Van Horne was to the following effect.

"1st May, 1888.

"MY DEAR SIR,—The petition of the resident ratepayers of the municipalities of Glenwood, Whitewater, Oakland, and Brenda, concerning the construction of the Souris Branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which comes to us through your hands, was considered by our board of directors at their recent meeting.

"The directors do not feel justified in deciding upon any policy as regards railway extension in Manitoba at present or until the policy of the Provincial Government in this particular is fully determined. While our directors fully appreciate the needs of the settlers in the Souris district in the way of additional railway facilities, they cannot find money to build railways in competition with the Government.

"It should be remembered that the Provincial Government is now engaged in the construction of a line between Winnipeg and the international boundary which will destroy the value of the two lines belonging to this company, together amounting to 135 miles of railway, and representing in value more than $2,000,000, and the company has reason to believe that the Government contemplates extensions in other directions. The company's ability to provide additional railway facilities will be reduced at least to the extent of the destruction of its existing property by such action of the Local Government. With a view to preventing this loss, the company some time ago intimated its willingness to lease in perpetuity its existing line from Emerson to Winnipeg and has lately repeated this offer, indicating at the same time a disposition to go as far as possible towards meeting the views of the Government as to rental. No decisive answer has yet been received, and until we know the intention of Mr. Greenway's Government we will not be able to say what the policy of the company will be, but I fear that the pressure upon him from those in Winnipeg who want some money spent by the Government, whether it will serve a useful purpose or not, may be greater than he can withstand.

"Yours very truly,

"W. O. VAN HORNE."

"T. MAYNE DALY, Esq., M.P.,
"House of Commons,
"Ottawa."

It is apparent from the tone of that letter that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were prevented from taking into consideration the question of building those branch lines simply from the fact that Mr. Greenway and his Government had made up their minds that they were going into competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway in building branch lines in Southern Manitoba. Now, Sir, at a meeting which was held in my constituency about three weeks before I left home, men stated on the public platform that they desired to have branch lines constructed, but that they wanted those lines to be built by the Canadian Pacific Railway and no other. They had lived in the Province of Ontario, and they lived on the line of the Midland Railway, and they knew what it was to be served by an independent railway which carried their grain to the Grand Trunk, necessitating the payment of double freight charges. They did not want the same treatment they received in Ontario, and they wanted this line to be built by the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have shown that I have urged in every possible way that the Canadian Pacific Railway should build those branches, and I am going to show that I am in earnest in the matter, by moving this amendment in committee. It seems to me strange that the hon. gentleman from Marquette (Mr. Watson) and the members of the Opposition, should be actuated by so great a desire to serve the constituents I represent in this House. They imagine, I suppose, that I never thought about such a thing as this. I tell the hon. gentlemen opposite, that the people of the Province of Manitoba will appreciate their anxiety in their behalf, when they see the amendment moved by the leader of the Opposition, and they will appreciate it further, when they read the speech that has been made by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson). The hon. member for Marquette referred to the question of the Red River Valley Railroad and he said, that was the burning question in Manitoba. It was a burning question. So burning was the question that I predicted at a banquet given me on my return from Parliament last year, that it would be a cold day for Mr. Norquay when he introduced the Red River Valley scheme, and it was a cold day for him, for he is now in the cold shades of Opposition. I predicted that, and I predict now again in this House, that the Red River Valley Railway will prove a cold day for Mr. Greenway also, and that this gentleman will fall by the scheme. The Red River Valley Railway means the building of a line from Fort Rouge to the boundary line. That would only accommodate the people of Winnipeg and the surrounding country, and it could not go to the people I represent. The reason I stood upon a platform in Manitoba as soon as I went back, and condemned this Red River Valley Railway was, because, I believed that on a question of that kind, I should represent the interests of my constituents. It is true I stood up and faced the whole public opinion of Manitoba on that question, but I did it for conscientious reasons, because I believed, and I believe now, that that railway could never, and will never, accommodate the people I represent. Our people wanted monopoly to be wiped out and that the 15th clause of the contract should be abrogated. I find now that the Canadian Pacific Railway are willing to abrogate the clause. The Reformers of the Province of Manitoba, and the Liberal press of the Province had made it a plank in their platform that the Canadian Pacific Railway should be compensated for this, yet at the earliest possible moment when those negotiations were brought down, when the resolutions were placed on the Table of this House, we find the great Liberal party of Canada and the only Liberal representative west of Lake Superior coming down here and opposing this very policy. Why, gentlemen, we are told in the Province of Manitoba to-day by the Liberal press, that this arrangement between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Government has been brought about by Mr. Greenway. We all know that Mr. Greenway and Mr. Martin were down here, and that they came as representing the Province of Manitoba. What did those gentlemen come here for? According to the memoranda published in the newspapers of the Province of Manitoba, Mr. Greenway said he came down here to try and discuss with Sir John Macdonald and the Government, the question of abolishing disallowance. He never referred to the question of monopoly, and monopoly is not referred to in any of the memoranda he has made. At the same time that hon. gentleman was here endeavoring to do away with this disallowance, and to do away with it to an extent which would only affect one portion of the Province, we, the representatives from Manitoba on this side of the House, were busy day in and day out, negotiating with the right hon. the Premier to try and wipe out monopoly, and he in turn was negotiating with the Canadian Pacific Railway. The fact is, that when Mr. Greenway went back, he stated to reporters in Winnipeg and in Toronto, that he knew nothing whatever of the terms and negotiations that were going on between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway. We were conversant with those terms because the Government had taken us into their confidence and although I do not seek, nor do my colleagues seek any credit for the bringing about of these terms, I want to state here, as I will state in Manitoba, that from the first time I was elected, I have been trying and endeavoring to try and wipe out the monopoly. After all the efforts I and my colleagues on this side of the House have made, and after all the abuse we have been subject to by the hon. gentlemen on the other side, we find the efforts we have made have not been seconded by an hon. gentleman who represents a Manitoba constituency on the opposite side of the House.

An Hon. MEMBER. Misrepresents.

Mr. DALY. Yes, misrepresents. I was about to say "misrepresents" a Manitoba constituency. After the efforts we have made, he hurls back in our teeth, and tries to belittle the work we have brought about in the interests of the Province of Manitoba. In these memoranda that were published in the Winnipeg newspapers, Mr. Greenway sets out among other things, that he had several interviews with the right hon. the leader of the Government, that those interviews were not satisfactory, that they could never reach the leading question, and that leading question, mind you, was disallowance. When this was proceeding there was engaging the attention of the right hon. gentleman a question which it was not his business to inform the Premier of Manitoba about, and that is the question we are discussing here to-night; for the question of disallowance is included in the greater question of monopoly. The hon. the leader of the Opposition and the member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) have stated that that is the Liberal platform, that so far as Manitoba was concerned all they required from the Canadian Pacific Railway was that monopoly should be discontinued in the old Province of Manitoba. I have shown by my action on public platforms in Manitoba, and by my vote in this House last year, that I was not in accord with the policy adopted by the Government on the question of disallowance. At the same I felt this: that although I represented a constituency that was not actually interested in the question of disallowance so far as their material interests were concerned, because if disallowance had been discontinued it would not affect the building of railways in my constituency, yet as an abstract question, as a question of principle, as a question of right, I felt that the Legislature of Manitoba should have the same right to charter lines of railway to the boundary, as any other Province in the Dominion had. What has Mr. Greenway secured at the hands of this Government to-day? He has admitted that he knew nothing about the negotiations between the Canadian Pacific Railway and Sir John A. Macdonald, he felt that he was not being taken into his confidence; he felt that he was being kept here longer than he thought he should have been kept; he did not like the idea of remaining here until Mr. Van Horne would return from the west, or until Sir George would be here; he felt aggrieved; he leaves here and he comes back. When he went back to the people of Manitoba all that he took with him was a letter from the right hon.

the Premier, and there is nothing in that letter except the concluding portion of it which is as follows:—

"The great and unexpected harvests of last year and the increased area proposed to be sown this year prove that additional facilities for the transport eastward of the agricultural products of the North-West will be required, and while I have reason to believe that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will make large expenditures to enable it to handle this increased traffic the Administration will not advise the disallowance of a Bill similar in principle to the Act for the construction of the Red River Valley Railway."

That is all that Mr. Greenway took back with him, a promise that the Administration will not advise the disallowance of a Bill similar in principle to the Act for the construction of the Red River Valley Railway. Does that say that the Government of the right hon. gentleman would discontinue the policy of disallowance throughout the whole of Manitoba? Does that say that those numerous lines that have been chartered by the Local Legislature are not subject to disallowance to-morrow? It simply says that a charter similar to that granted to the Red River Valley Railway Company will not be disallowed. But, on the other hand, while Mr. Greenway went back with that simple letter, myself and my colleagues, the hon. member for Winnipeg (Mr. Scarth), the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Royal), and the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross), were not content with doing away with disallowance merely. We wanted the doing away with the greater matter; we wanted to wipe out monopoly, and I can say this, as I have said before, that the doing away of disallowance would not affect my people, because they would not be able to secure any competing lines by the doing away with that. I contended on platforms in Manitoba, and I contend here, in accordance with the report of the two members of the Privy Council, that no Local Legislature, be it that of Manitoba, Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or Ontario, has a right to charter a line of railway running beyond the boundary of the Province. The leader of the Opposition said to-day that it was a question on which lawyers differ. My opinion as a lawyer has been all along that the British North America Act did not contemplate that any Local Legislature had the power to grant charters to lines of railway running beyond the boundaries of the Province. If it did, why did the Canada Southern Railway Company and the Great Western Railway Company, whose lines ran into the United States, come to the Parliament of Canada for their charters? Now, all that Mr. Greenway has got is a letter to the effect that a charter similar to that of the Red River Valley Railway Company shall not be disallowed. Does that mean that other charters shall not be disallowed. Does it give to Manitoba the constitutional right to charter lines beyond the boundary? Certainly not. So far as Manitoba is concerned, the question of disallowance to-day stands in the same position as it does with respect to other Provinces, and the measures passed by the Manitoba Legislature are still as much subject to disallowance as those passed by the Legislature of any other Province. I congratulate the Government, I congratulate the right hon. Premier Minister, I congratulate the people I represent, and I congratulate the whole Province of Manitoba, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have consented to negotiate with the Government on this matter, and that the Government in turn have consented to negotiate with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and that a settlement has been brought about; and I trust sincerely that the people of Manitoba will, as I am sure they will, appreciate the efforts of myself and my colleagues on this side of the House in connection with this matter; and at the same time I am perfectly satisfied that they will deprecate the action of the hon. member for Marquette who preceded me. Now, there is one point that I do not want the House or the people of Manitoba to lose sight of; there is one point that I do not want the constituents of the hon. member for Marquette to lose sight of, that is, that if the amendment of the hon. leader of the Opposition is carried, for which the hon. gentleman says he is going to vote, monopoly will continue, and everything we are fighting for will be lost, and the people he represents will remain under the bann of monopoly. Why, we have been told on platform after platform in the North-West by those righteous Liberals that monopoly has been grinding the life-blood out of the country; and two years ago, when we approached the Canadian Pacific Railway on the subject of abandoning the monopoly, they pooh poohed it; the sums they asked were too large; the Government would not agree to them; and now, when the Government bring down a measure to accomplish that very thing, the hon. leader of the Opposition moves an amendment which, if carried, will continue disallowance and monopoly during the whole period for which the contract provides; and the hon. member for Marquette intends to support that amendment. I can scarcely conceive of the hon. gentleman occupying so unfortunate a position. Now, a great deal has been said by the hon. leader of the Opposition in regard to the security that the Government will hold for this guarantee. The hon. Minister of Finance has shown clearly that the Government will have sufficient security in the lands which will be held by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and which, after all encumbrances are removed, will be worth $1.15 an acre; and I think the policy the company are pursuing to-day is a wise one. They are endeavoring in every possible way they can to secure the settlement of the Government lands, the homestead and pre-emption lands throughout Manitoba and the North-West Territories, and they are not devoting the same effort to sell their own lands that they would do if the Government lands were all settled. It stands to reason that when a mangoes into a new country like the North-West, if he can get a homestead on payment of $10 in a Dominion land office, he will prefer doing that to paying $2.50 or $3 an acre for Canadian Pacific Railway lands; and when that country is fully opened up and settled, there is not the slightest doubt, in my mind, that the value of those lands will greatly increase. It has been contended by the hon. member for Marquette that, as soon as the monopoly is done away with, the population of the country will increase, which would increase the value of the lands, and if the proposition of the Government is carried to-night, monopoly will be done away with; and, carrying out the reasoning of hon. gentlemen opposite, there is no doubt that population will increase largely, and that the value of the lands will also increase, and that the Government will have ample security. Now, I will not detain the House at any greater length, except to say a few words with regard to the amendment which I propose to move in committee, as I may not have another opportunity. The people living in south-western Manitoba are very much interested in the building of branch lines. Hon. members are aware that a Bill was passed in this House last Session extending the time for the building of the South-Western Colonisation Railway, which now runs to Deloraine. The Act provided that that railway, which is controlled by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, should be built to the extent of 50 miles this year. In 1881 the Canadian Pacific Railway Company sent out surveyors south-west of Brandon, and they surveyed a line running south-west to the Souris coal regions. The line known as the Glenboro' Branch runs about 70 miles south-west from Winnipeg; and the people in the section which I represent wish it to be extended for 15 or 16 miles, and they wish the Souris Branch to be extended at least 50 or 60 miles to Melita, and the Deloraine Branch extended to the boundary of the Province. But I regret exceedingly that while the schedule and the agreement were signed by the hon. Minister of Railways and Sir George Stephen, the schedule did not provide for the construction of these branch lines. To give the members of this House and the people of the country some idea of the quantity of grain raised last year in the country of which I speak, I will cite a few figures, showing the quantity of grain grown by some of the settlers, which will indicate how prosperous our farmers are in that neighborhood:

Settlers.	Bushels.
Gray Bros., tp. 7, r. 18.....	16,000
T. Nichol, tp. 7, r. 17.....	18,000
Jas. Elliott, tp. 7, r. 17.....	14,000
Jas. McFadden, tp. 8, r. 17.....	18,000
F. O. Fowler, tp. 7, r. 18.....	10,000
Jas. Brenner, tp. 7, r. 17.....	20,000
E. Donaldson, tp. 8, r. 18.....	8,000
B. Lines, tp. 7, r. 19.....	6,000
A. H. Carroll, tp. 7, r. 19.....	5,000
H. C. Graham, tp. 8, r. 19.....	7,500
Jas. Henderson, tp. 8, r. 19.....	7,000

Making an aggregate that those men living in those three townships marketed of 123,500 bushels of wheat. Everyone of these farmers had to team their wheat 18 miles into the city of Brandon, and all that is required to give them market facilities is to extend the South-Western Colonisation Branch some 15 miles, which will bring them within seven miles of a market. I ask, therefore, that the Government should urge upon the Canadian Pacific Railway to extend that branch these 15 miles. Then we come to another portion of my constituency, which lies south-west of the city of Brandon, which is 25 miles from the city of Brandon and 16 miles from Alexander, the nearest point on the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, there are very large markets there. For instance, Mr. Wenman, last year, marketed from that district some 8,000 bushels, and another man, whose name I do not recollect, who took the prize in Manitoba for wheat some years ago, marketed 14,000 bushels, and Mr. Beckett marketed 12,000 bushels, and all these men are settled considerably further south-west. If this branch of the line from Brandon to the Souris coal fields was extended 25 miles, these men would be within two or three miles of a station. To give an idea of how the settlers in that portion of Manitoba have prospered this year, I may read an extract from a letter written by Mr. Norman, correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette of London in connection with this very country, to which I desire the Canadian Pacific Railway should build their branch line:

"Wm. Wenman, from Kent, farmer, Plum Creek; came 1881; capital, about $1,000; took up homestead and pre-emption for self and two sons, 960 acres in all; has over 8,000 bushels wheat this year; three teams of horses, worth $1,200; eight colts, worth $1,000; cattle, worth $500; implements, &c., $1,000. His real estate at present is worth at least $8,000.

"H. Selby, from Leicester, office clerk, 23 years old, came 1882, took up homestead and pre-emption; capital nil; has this year 1,200 bushels wheat, some oats and barley; yoke cattle and implements worth $400; real estate worth $1,200. (This is a worker.)

"Michael Creedan, carpenter, from Cork, came 1882 with wife and six children, arrived at Plum Creek in debt £80; has now good plastered house and two lots in Souris town; 160 acres good land; four cows in calf, three heifers, pigs and fowls; no debts; real estate worth $300; cattle worth $300.

"Dan Connolly, plasterer, from Cork, came 1883; brought out wife and seven children; has now good plastered house in Souris town worth $600; cash at least $500; no debts.

"James Cowan, Irish, arrived in Manitoba 1882, without a dollar; hired out until he could earn enough to buy a yoke of oxen; owns now 320 acres, of which 200 are under cultivation; comfortable frame house, two teams of horses, eight cows, and everything necessary for carrying on a large farm; also a wife and two children; has 900 bushels of grain this year.

"Stephen Brown came out in 1882; was hired out till 1885; saved enough to buy a team of horses and make payments on land, broke land in 1885 and had his first crop in 1886; got his brother to come out, who also had a team and bought land alongside, so that they worked together; raised their second year 7,000 bushels of grain.

"Morgan and Thomas Powell, Welsh miners, came in 1882, £30 capital; last year brought out their wives and families, whom they had left behind; have each about 4,000 bushels this year.

"Patrick Buckley came out in 1882; has worked on a farm, hired ever since; has £300 in bank.

"Phillips Brant, a Guernsey carpenter, £200 capital; has 320 acres, 60 head cattle, and three grown up sons settled within four miles, all on their own farms of 320 acres and rising large crops.

"Donald Sutherland and Thomas Stewart came from Scotland in 1882; bought each a yoke of oxen and went to work breaking their land, their wives meanwhile erecting sod houses, in which the families lived for two years. They are now independent; good frame houses, a quantity of stock and large crops."

I will detain the House a few moments longer because, owing to the Government having cut down the immigration expenditure from $500,000 to $50,000, it is necessary we should endeavor on every possible occasion to show to the world that we have a country fit to live in, and that those industrious people who have a hard struggle to make both ends meet in the old country can, by settling in Manitoba, look forward to securing, within a few years, a competency. I will read a few of the many letters received from actual settlers. Is there any known country where such similar results can be obtained?

"KEMNAY, 16th January, 1888.

"I take great pleasure in giving a correct statement of all the crop I had on my farm, which is situated on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, seven miles west of the city of Brandon.

"I had 145 acres of wheat, from which the total yield the past season was 6,840 bushels. One piece of 45 acres of summer fallow gave 2,340 bushels, being an average of 52 bushels per acre, and 100 acres averaged 45 bushels per acre. I had also 45 acres of oats, which yielded 3,150 bushels, an average of 70 bushels per acre. Off 6 acres of barley I had 387 bushels. I planted about $\frac{1}{2}$ of an acre potatoes and had 225 bushels good dry mealy potatoes. The yield of roots and garden vegetables was large and of good quality. In conclusion, I would say that previous to coming to Ontario, Canada, I farmed in one of the best agricultural districts of Germany, and after coming to Canada I farmed twelve years in the county of Waterloo, Ont. I removed to Manitoba in March, 1884; that summer I broke 190 acres, off which I reaped in 1885 a fine crop of wheat fully as good as this year. My two sons have farms joining mine and their crops yielded equally as large as mine.

"I must say that farming has paid me better in this Province than in Ontario or the fatherland.

(Signed) "CHRISTIAN SENEKELL."

"From J. R. NEFF, Moosomin District, N. W. T.

"Range 30 and 31, township 14, 4 miles from station. Came to country 1883, and settled in present location. Amount of capital $12,000. Acreage now owned 4,000. Under crop in 1887, 600 acres, present capital $40,000. Yield per acre 1887, 30 bushels average. Live stock, 14 horses.

"I am pleased to give my experience since I came to this country; my success has been far beyond my expectations. I am fully convinced for extensive farming, wholly grain, or mixed farming, it cannot be surpassed.

"I think Moosomin district is equalled by few and surpassed by no other point in Manitoba or the North-West Territories.

"Moosomin is a first-class grain market and is growing rapidly in importance."

"W. Govenlock—S. 27, T. 11, R. 23, near Griswold. Had 60 bushels of wheat per acre on 5 acres, and 37 bushels per acre on 250 acres.

"Samuel Hanna—S. 7, T. 10, R. 22, near Griswold. Had an average of 40 bushels of wheat per acre on 250 acres.

"John Young—S. 1, T. 10, R. 23. Had 75 bushels of wheat from one acre.

"Alex. Johnson—Near Elkhorn. Had an average of 41 bushels wheat per acre on 14 acres.

"Geo. Freeman—Near Elkhorn. Had an average of 37 $\frac{1}{2}$ bushels of wheat per acre on 50 acres.

"Thos. Wood—10 miles north of Virden. Had an average of 63 bushels of wheat on 5 acres. (315 bushels of wheat from 5 acres.)

"Rich. Tapp—South of Virden. Had an average of 51 bushels of wheat per acre on 20 acres.

"Thos. Bobier—Half mile north of Moosomin. Had forty acres of wheat, averaging 38 bushels to an acre.

"J. R. Neff—Three miles north of Moosomin. Had 115 acres of wheat, averaging 37 bushels per acre.

"G. T. Chesley—Four miles north-east from Alexander. Had an average of 45 bushels per acre on 100 acres of wheat.

"A. Nichol—Four miles north-east of Alexander. Had 100 acres wheat, averaging 40 bushels per acre.

"H. Touchborne—Four miles north-west of Alexander. Had an average of 40 bushels per acre on 100 acres of wheat.

"W. Watt—South-west of Alexander. Had 80 acres wheat, with an average of 40 bushels per acre.

"Robt. Rogers—Near Elkhorn. Had 10 acres of wheat averaging 45 bushels per acre."

I have taken up the time of the House to show that in the constituency I represent, the people are more affected by this question of monopoly than the people residing in the eastern portion of Manitoba, and that unless the Government had brought down these resolutions, these people would not be relieved from the ban of monopoly which now rests upon them. No credit is due for this relief to the gentlemen who have prated so much about monopoly in the eastern portion of Manitoba. So far as that portion is concerned, which is affected by the Red River Valley Road, it has not sent out 500,000 bushels of wheat, while the city of Brandon has marketed 1,300,000 bushels of wheat this last year. The last statistics I have got from the city of Winnipeg show that all they marketed was 30,000 bushels. Yet, forsooth, because the city of Winnipeg, which has been nurtured and built up by the Government, and were it not for the shops of the Canadian Pacific Railway would fall to the bottom, agitated for this Red River Valley Road, which they wanted to be built at the expense of the whole Province of Manitoba, they claim the credit for the discontinuance of monopoly. Last year, the Provincial Government said they would expend $1,000,000 on the Red River Valley Railway, and they asked that that amount should be borne by the whole Province of Manitoba. I have shown that the part of the Province from which I come would not receive a dollar's worth from the money expended in that way, and yet, forsooth, in order that these men should get competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway, they were going to run us into debt in order to get a second outlet from the city of Winnipeg. They knew very well that that railway could not be built by a charter from the Local Government. If they thought it could, why did they come down here and ask for authority, as the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) has done by his bills to build two bridges across the Assiniboine River. I pointed out, in a speech I made in Brandon, that the Assiniboine River would have to be bridged, and that it would be necessary to ask the Government for authority to bridge it, and the best proof that I was right is that the Provincial Government have asked, through Mr. Watson, for legislation at the hands of this House. But, still further to carry out the idea that I expressed that ratification from this Parliament is necessary for the construction of competing lines, I may quote an article from the Brandon Sun of 17th March, 1887—and everyone who knows anything about Manitoba knows that the Brandon Sun is grit of the gritty:

"What is desired and what must be obtained is a local charter that will be immediately ratified by the Dominion Government, and unless we can secure this we might as well at once give up all hopes of ever being able to obtain the relief that is to free this country from the monopoly that is now crushing it."

Now, in view of that utterance from a Grit paper, when the Government have decided to wipe out the monopoly, and we find the Reformers of all the Provinces coming here and proposing an amendment, I say that, in the annals of this Parliament, no such rank piece of hypocrisy has ever been exhibited as that which is now exhibited by these hon. gentlemen. They held me up to scorn last year, and said I was pledged to my constituents to vote against disallowance and that I was bound to carry out my pledge. I did pledge myself to my constituents, because I believed that the Government policy was wrong, and I told my constituents that, as far as they were concerned, this matter did not affect them at all, because, unless monopoly was wiped out in the added territory, they would not receive any relief, but, as desiring the prosperity of the whole Province, I said we would pitch in with the men from the old Province and so they might receive the same relief, as a matter of right and justice, which the old Provinces of Confederation possessed. All I have done and all my constituents have done, would be thrown to the wind if the amendment should carry. Representing my constituents in that added portion of the Province, as the hon. gentleman misrepresents his constituents, I thank the Government for bringing down this measure to-night. We have not had that measure of prosperity which we expected, and why have we not? Because we have had an agitation there which would drive immigrants from any country in the world. I have shown what a land of promise that is, and all I ask is that my friends shall stand at the back of the leader of the Government and show to those hypocrites on the other side that they cannot seduce his friends from this side on any such question as this. Although the Reformers are in power in Manitoba to-day, I prophesy that within two years the people will discover the hypocrisy of that party. We find that Mr. Greenway has gone back to Manitoba with the idea that he has brought about this settlement. What will he think when he finds that his friend Mr. Watson is voting against a proposition for the abolition of monopoly? The Grit press of Manitoba, from one end to the other, has been advocating the abrogation of clause 15 of the Act, and yet, the moment the Government proposes to agree to that, the hon. gentleman is found to vote against it. Flushed with victory in Manitoba, the present Premier is now acting in the manner the Reform party would act when they got into power, as the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) suggested the other night, when he said: "God help you people when we get into power; we will wipe your friends out of office." We find that an Act has been passed in Manitoba wiping out every Dominion officer from the voters' list except those in the Indian Department. There are two officers in the Indian Department, Mr. McColl and Mr. Leveque, both of whom were appointed by the Government of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie). The postmasters in Manitoba are also wiped out, except in cities or towns. In the country districts there are some Grits, but in the cities and towns they are nearly all of the other stripe. The Government there have carried out the threat which was held out before the election and have practically dismissed every officer who was appointed by Mr. Norquay. So it goes on, and so it will go on until the people of Manitoba dismiss the men who are now acting in that hypocritical manner.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Hear, hear.

Mr. DALY. Yes, you may say "hear, hear," but the people of Manitoba will say "hear, hear" before long and don't you forget it. I may have the opportunity of meeting the hon. gentleman on the platform in Manitoba, and he will find that my constituents will consider that I have carried out the pledge which I made when I was elected, when I stated that I would vote against disallowance. I did vote against it, and I will vote against it to-night, particularly as this proposition not only wipes it out in the old Province of Manitoba but in the added part of the Province and in the Territories as well, and gives to the people I represent and to the people of British Columbia that measure of right for which we have so long contended that we, in the same way as the other members of Confederation, had to charter lines of railway within any part of our Province.

Mr. DAWSON. When anything connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway comes up, Manitoba always takes a prominent place, and very properly so. I am very happy to think that the people of Manitoba will now be satisfied and will be able to build railways wherever they like within their boundaries, and go wherever they please; but there is another section of the country through which the Canadian Pacific Railway passes to which the hon. Minister of Finance alluded. He alluded to the great quantity of minerals which were to be found to the north of Lakes Huron and Superior. There is no doubt that a great development has taken place there, and that it has been principally caused by the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. At Sudbury, there are mines of copper which I believe to be inexhaustible, and at Thessalon to the north of Lake Huron there have been recent discoveries of gold. Sections have been discovered there where formerly gold was only found in the quartz, but now alluvial gold has been reported, and the existence of alluvial gold above all other things, draws people into a country. At Sault Ste. Marie and vicinity, they are now opening up mines of galena, and also copper mines, and quarries of the most magnificent marble, which latter is now being exported to Chicago. If you go further west, you will find valuable minerals in great abundance. Within a short distance of Port Arthur there are silver mines which are now attracting a good deal of attention, miners are going in, and we expect a considerable influx of population during the coming summer. But it is not in silver alone that that district is rich, but also in iron. There are immense deposits of iron ore towards the height of land in the country through which the Port Arthur, Duluth and Western Railway will run, for that railway touches on the great belt of iron ore extending through to the State of Minnesota. To give the House some idea of the importance of that great band of ore, I may state that from a section of it just beyond the line in the State of Minnesota, there were exported no less than 400,000 tons of iron ore last year, which is a quantity sufficient to load 800 vessels with 500 tons each. Then at the Lake of the Woods, which is also in the district I have the honor to represent, they have discovered gold, which is giving rise to an important industry. Mines are to be opened next summer, and I believe that the great district of Algoma will be found to be very rich in minerals. But that district is not only rich in valuable minerals, but also in agricultural lands. Along the shores of Lake Huron towards Sault Ste. Marie and in that direction generally, there are large tracts of the very best agricultural lands, which are now being opened up. We have heard a good deal in this House, within the last few weeks, of a great exodus of Canadians going to a foreign land. But that is not the case in the regions I speak of, where a large influx of population is now occupying the fertile lands along the coast of Lake Huron. On the Islands of Lake Huron, more especially on the Manitoulin Island, and on St Joseph Island, there is now a very large population. It has more than doubled since the last census. I believe that in Eastern Algoma alone we have now a population of 35,000. On the Island of Manitoulin there are no less than 12,000; on the Island of St Joseph, 4,000, and on the other islands, corresponding numbers, so that on these islands, fronting the north shores of Lake Huron, we have now a population of 18,000, chiefly brought in from the prospect, in the first place, of the opening up of the Algoma Branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Here, Sir, we have no exodus, here we have a country growing up. Those who have been speaking of an exodus might have pointed to Algoma, where at least 40,000 people could be accounted for within the last eight years. But it is not alone on the shores of the lakes that people are settling, but they are going in along the great Rivers, such as the Mississagua and Thessalon, and spreading backwards into the interior. Now that this railway is opening up the country, there is no doubt that the north coast of Lake Huron will become one of the finest sections in Canada, rivalling even Manitoba in its agricultural resources. More than that, there is now growing up in Algoma an immense lumber trade, occasioned by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Saw mills are being built, and a water power canal at Sault Ste. Marie, is among the enterprises in contemplation. The people of Minneapolis are speaking of building mills there to grind the wheat of the North-Western States, because the water power at Minneapolis is insufficient to run the mills that are required. This fact is in a great measure owing to the Canadian Pacific Railway. When this Algoma Branch, which has been so long in contemplation, is fully completed, I believe that the amount of traffic thereon will even exceed that of the main line. The traffic already going over it, although it is not quite completed, from the direction of Minnesota, is immense. I believe that in the future large quantities of wheat will come down Lake Superior from those great regions north-west of Duluth, and north-west of St. Paul, then it will find its way to Sault Ste. Marie, and a great portion of it come over the Canadian Pacific Railway to Montreal, where it can be shipped to foreign ports. I need not go on speaking of the resources of that region, but since Manitoba has occupied so much of the attention of this House, and as Algoma is more than treble the size of Manitoba, and contains a very much greater length of the Canadian Pacific Railway, I think it is just as important as Manitoba and the North-West Territories, and it is only proper that the attention of the House should be called to it. Sir, no one is more impressed than I am with the energy and financial ability with which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have pressed forward their work. Only eight years have elapsed since the contract was given out, which gave them ten years to carry the railway across the continent. A great part of it has been already four years in operation, and numerous branches, developing the country in all directions, are now being carried out. I say that the energy, the enterprise, and the pertinacity with which that company have carried through their operations, is something extraordinary, and the country at large is greatly indebted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the bright prospect before it. I think the present arrangement is one that must receive the approbation of every person who has given attention to the subject. It will put the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in a position to complete their line from ocean to ocean, and to improve it along the north coast of Lakes Superior and Huron and there can be no doubt that they will now put their line from one end to the other in the best possible order. Then we shall have population flow in in all directions. With the great crop of last year, and with the prospect of a favorable crop the coming year, there is no doubt that we will have a large immigration to the great regions of the North-West. I can only say, without going into details, that I approve in the strongest manner of the arrangement which has been entered into by the Government with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as it will enable them to put the line into good order, and will be of immense advantage to the country at large.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly), who closed his speech a few moments ago, made some statements with reference to the richness and development of Manitoba which I was very glad to hear, and which I do not propose to criticise. I hope he has not over-estimated the wealth and value of Manitoba lands, and I hope he has not drawn a brighter picture than the circumstances justify of the future of Manitoba. Nor am I concerned with a large part of the criticism which he devoted to the claims of Winnipeg. He seemed to think that one part of the Province had been unduly favored at the expense of another; that is a local matter on which I have neither the knowledge fitting me to discuss it here nor have I the desire. But the hon. gentleman made some general observations with regard to the course he intended to take to-night and with reference to the policy of the Reform party upon the question of disallowance, which I cannot allow to go unchallenged and upon which I desire to take issue and to take issue promptly. The hon. gentleman talked at some length about my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson), whom he designated as a rank hypocrite and as one who he said, unfairly misrepresented the people of Manitoba. Well, I have had the honor of sitting with that hon. gentleman some five or six Sessions, and I know I am but voicing the opinion not only of his political associates but the opinion of the manlier part of his political opponents when I say that a better, nobler, more self-sacrificing patriot does not sit in this House. That hon. gentleman time and again has fearlessly and ably advocated the interests of the whole

Province of Manitoba, and especially of the district he represents, in a manner which commanded and won for him the expressed admiration of some of the leading members on the other side of the House. At the time when the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) was skulking in his seat, afraid to open his mouth, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) was raising his voice loudly in defence of the rights and privileges of the people he represents, which he said were being trampled upon by the policy of the Government. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) took great credit to himself that he worked his enthusiasm up sufficiently once, after he had got the permission of his leader to vote against that disallowance. If it came to a question between the people he represents and allegiance to his party the people would have been sacrificed to that allegiance. I would advise him to imitate not only the modesty of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), but the industry which prompts him to master subjects before he addresses the House, and then he will receive from the House at large that kind attention which generally greets my hon. friend behind me. But the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) says to-day that the Reform party are opposed to the abolition of the monopoly. I interrupted him because I thought the hon. gentleman was delivering himself of some very flippant remarks without reading or understanding the resolution of my hon. friend before me (Mr. Laurier). The policy of monopoly has received the bitter opposition of the Reform party from the time it was first proposed and carried by hon. gentlemen. When the monopoly clauses of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract were first introduced in this House, from what quarter came the unswerving and relentless opposition with which they were met? Was it not from the united phalanx of those who composed the Reform party, and from that day to this I challenge the hon. gentleman or any of his friends to point to any occasion when the voice of the Reform party has not been raised strongly in denunciation of those monopoly clauses, which to-night he says, he is proud are going to be removed. The hon. gentleman is confusing monopoly and disallowance. My hon. friend for Marquette (Mr. Watson) has contended, acting in unison with the Reform party, that the monopoly clauses of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract never extended and never were intended to extend to the Province of Manitoba proper. He contended, and we all united in the contention with him, that when the Government by their policy of disallowance thought to give an extension to the monopoly clauses of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, they were acting in defiance of the expressed wishes of the people and in opposition to the interests of the people of Manitoba. We were opposed to monopoly from the first, we denounced it from the first; but the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) became the subservient and obedient follower of the father of the monopoly clauses. We opposed the disallowance policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, and when my hon. friend for Marquette (Mr. Watson), not once but time and again, brought the matter before the House and moved resolutions, how was he met? It is true he received at one time a reluctant assent—I will not say that, but I say he forced the hon. gentleman to acquiesce in the resolution he proposed, and when he gave that acquiescence he said he was sorry he was voting against his leader. But to-night what does the hon. gentleman do? He says my hon. friend is taking a course condemned by the people of Manitoba. What do I find? I find in the Manitoba Free Press of 24th April a report of the proceedings of the Manitoba Legislature, and that the leader of the Government, who I think it will be admitted represents the feelings, wishes, desires and hopes of the better class of the Manitoba farmers as well as any other man and better than most other men, moved a resolution which was unanimously adopted by the Legislature. What was that resolution? It was a resolution affirming the very principle which the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) supports in the amendment moved by the leader of the Opposition. That resolution declared that a humble address should be presented to the Government, praying that in the proposed settlement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, it should be made a condition that the branch lines of the Manitoba South-Western and the Canadian Pacific South-Western should each be extended a distance of 50 miles during the present year. The mover went on to support that proposition. He received the unanimous endorsement of the representatives of Manitoba, and to-day in supporting the resolution in the House declaring that the money received from the Government should be applied to the construction of branch lines in Manitoba and the North-West, my hon. friend is carrying out a proposition identical in principle with one that received the unanimous assent of the Manitoba Legislature. So I do not think he need fear when he goes back to his people and points out that the resolution he supported here had been in advance supported and endorsed by the representatives of the Manitoba people. But the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) intimated that he was going to screw his courage up sufficiently high to move a resolution. The way was open to him now. He said he was going to move something in relation to branch lines. Why did he not do it now? I will tell the House the reason. Because he had not the courage to move a resolution when he would have to divide the House, and when the votes would appear on the record. He prefers to act in committee when there is no record of the vote taken, when the people of Manitoba will not know how any one votes. I prefer the manly course of the Opposition, supported by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), to the rank hypocrisy which dictates the course of a man who says: I will not move when my vote can be recorded, but I will move at a time when I will escape having my vote recorded. Did the hon. member read the propositions embraced in the amendment moved by the leader of the Opposition. What are those propositions? The first proposition is, that the exclusive monopoly clause in the Canadian Pacific Railway contract does not apply to Manitoba proper. Does that proposition receive the consent of the member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly), or of the member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross), or of the other members from Manitoba? Are they prepared to vote against that proposition? Are they prepared to go back to Manitoba, and declare that they believe that these monopoly clauses do extend to Manitoba proper? I do not think they will do that. I remember last year that the member for Selkirk, and I think another member from Manitoba, if I mistake not, the member for Winnipeg (Mr. Searth), voted for a proposition involving the same statement that is contained in the first clause of the amendment before you, a proposition to the effect that the exclusive privilege does not apply, and never did apply, and never was intended to apply to the old Province of Manitoba. If that proposition is correct, why is the House now asked to assent to the proposition to buy from the Canadian Pacific Railway the monopoly which they do not possess and never did possess? We are asked to assent to a proposition which involves indirectly the paying to them of money for a privilege which they never received from Parliament, and which they do not possess at this day. The next proposition of the amendment is, that the policy of disallowance which has been practiced for the past five or six years by the Government of the day, is at variance with the declaration and statements made by the leader of the Government when he was submitting the Canadian Pacific Railway contract for ratification to this Parliament. I need not elaborate upon that point. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition has to-night shown the language made use of by the leader of the Government when he introduced that contract. At that time the contract was opposed by the entire Reform party, and they opposed it on the grounds that you were not only giving the Canadian Pacific Railway a monopoly in that country by your contract, but you were extending to them a monopoly over the Province of Manitoba, one of the existing Provinces of the Dominion. An agitation arose not only in this House but out of it, which gained strength day by day, and the leader of the Government saw it was necessary to allay that agitation. What did he do? He rose in his place and he said that that agitation was based on a wrong impression. He said: It is not the intention by this contract, to extend this monopoly to the Province of Manitoba. We cannot check Manitoba, to use his famous historical phrase. "We cannot check Ontario." We cannot check Manitoba, and the House believed this, and the country believed that the leader of the Government was honest in his declaration when he said, that the contract then before this House could not check Manitoba. They believed that he was honest in that statement that he would not introduce legislation to the House, or in his capacity as Premier of the Government and head of the Executive, do any act which would check Manitoba in her constitutional actions in the building of railways. Sir, the hon. gentleman then carried his contract and he has broken his word. He did check Manitoba. He checked her persistently and consistently, and I do not know of any policy of the Government in which they have been consistent, excepting in this consistent disallowance of every railway Bill which the people of Manitoba passed, with the object of obtaining access to the boundary. That is the second proposition to the amendment of the hon. gentleman; that this policy of disallowance which has prevailed in the Government from that day to this is a policy at variance with the statements of the leader of the Government when he introduced and carried his contract, is a policy antagonistic to the best interests of the people of this country, and is a policy which should be abolished. There is another proposition in the amendment which says that the terms of that contract, was an enormous addition to our liabilities without adequate security. That proposition I will discuss in a little while, but not at any great length as I do not wish to detain the House. I will pass over it in the meantime. The last proposition in the amendment is that the terms do not provide for the expenditure of this money on branch lines in Manitoba and the North-West. Which of these propositions is it that receives the hatred and opposition of the hon. member from Selkirk (Mr. Daly)? Which one is he going to ask the Manitobans to condemn the Reform party for introducing? Why, Sir, the proposition to construct branch lines in the Province of Manitoba, if I have read rightly, has been the policy of the Reform party for many years back. I remember years ago, when that branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway was about being constructed, reading a very remarkable speech made by the then leader of the Opposition in this House. In that speech he pointed out that the only way we could help to develop the resources of that country was by building a main line with reasonable speed, and as we went on, and as settlers came into the country, building branch lines to develop the land to the north and south of the main line. That policy then seemed to me to be a manly and statesmanlike policy, and to-day, Sir, in this resolution we are only asking that the money which will be received on the sale of the $15,000,000 of bonds, shall be appropriated in the construction of branch lines in that country, which will go to develop and render more valuable the lands they gave us in security. From that standpoint, from the standpoint of a Manitoban especially, that proposition of the leader of the Opposition should receive a very hearty assent. From the general standpoint, from the standpoint of even a Maritime Province man, it should receive assent too, because it is calculated by developing the country there, to increase largely in value the lands which are given to us as our only security. If those branch lines are built and the country developed those 15,000,000 acres may become valuable. If they are not built, and if the country remains with a single main line, then the lands will remain, most probably at about the average price in value that they have been bringing for some time past. I cannot see—and the hon. gentleman who spoke so vigorously and with such apparent heat and warmth failed to show—one single proposition contained in the amendment of the leader of the Opposition, which ought to receive disapproval from any Manitoba or North-West representative. Before I sit down, let me call your attention for a moment to the proposition contained in the main resolution. That proposition has been said to be one, having for its principal object, the abolition of monopoly in the North-West. I have already referred to the fact, that when that contract was passing, one of the strongest arguments against it was this very monopoly clause. I have referred to the language made use of by the Premier, in which he led the House and the country to believe that that monopoly should not extend to the old Province of Manitoba. I have shown how he has broken his pledged word to this House from that day to this, and that he has disallowed every Bill which has been passed by the Province of Manitoba, with the object, as I have said, of obtaining access to the United States. In 1884 we had the hon. the Finance Minister coming down to this House and asking the House to assist, with a large grant of money, the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate. We had that hon. gentleman then declaring that he was speaking not only for the Government, but for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and declaring that if the agreement the Government were then submitting to Parliament should be assented to, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would abandon the monopoly they had claimed, and the Government would abandon the policy of disallowance, and there would be prosperity in the North-West from that time on. I am not going to repeat the hon. gentleman's language, but I will say that he used language at that time with the object of inducing Parliament to assent to a contract which I doubt they would have assented to unless he had pledged the Government of which he was a member that if the $30,000,000 were voted, the Government would not continue further to exercise the policy of disallowance, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would not claim the further continuance of their monopoly. The implied contract the hon. gentleman then made with the people and the Parliament of this country was no sooner made than it was broken, and as soon as the company got the money the Government resumed their policy of disallowing every railway Bill the Manitoba Legislature passed. Sir, the hon. gentleman has been charged to-day with a breach of faith, one of the grossest in the political history of this country, and I repeat the charge. Then, in 1887, came the resolution of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson) reciting all the facts of the case, and asking that the pledge which had been given by the hon. gentleman should be carried out; and what was said at that time? I am not going to quote the earlier speeches; but when the hon. Finance Minister was confronted with the solemn pledge which he had given two years before, what did he do? Why, Sir, we had the hon. gentleman rising in his place the other day and reading a lecture to this side of the House upon the desirability of a great political party having some fixed principles to go upon, and he told us that unless we had those fixed principles we never could hope to succeed to place and power. This hon. gentleman talks about fixed principles, and yet his whole career during this Session has been a chameleon record of changes. One morning he held to one policy, and by the time the afternoon shone upon it, it disappeared and a new one was set up in its place; one day he was in favor of unrestricted reciprocity, and another day opposed to it; his pen was hardly dry in writing the proposition which he himself had made to the Secretary of the United States in favor of such a policy before he stood up in this House and declared that such a proposition would be an act of insane folly. But to come back to the point, when my hon. friend moved his resolution in 1887, and called upon the hon. gentleman to carry out his pledge, he said:

"I never made a more candid statement to the House, I never made a statement with greater pleasure than when with the authority of the company and the consent of my colleagues, I found myself in a position consistent with the policy we had pursued, and the policy we had adopted of preventing competition, while at the same time we encouraged Canadian interests, to be able to state that the time was near at hand when we would be enabled to be relieved of that obligation and not feel it necessary in the interest of Canada longer to continue that policy."

Then, the hon. gentleman, after showing that the Government and he himself had frequently changed their opinions, went on to say that it was not a provincial matter merely, but a great national matter, and he deprecated, he said, looking at it from a narrow provincial standpoint. It was not a question for Manitoba, but it was a question for the great Canadian people, and he said, I appeal to the gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces, the independent opinion of the Opposition, and I ask them whether they ever could consent to a policy which is calculated to act so detrimentally to their interests as this one. He said:

"It is a question between the Northern Pacific Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the men to the south of us, the men who think that, regardless of everything else, setting patriotism aside, setting the development of their own country aside, it is to the best interests of Canada to build up a great rival line to the Canadian Pacific Railway, must expect to have their views put before an intelligent people, not in a small Province, not before a comparatively small population of this Dominion, but broadcast over the whole of this country. It must be understood, and it may as well be understood at once, that this is not a question between two great Canadian companies, but it is a question between a great transcontinental highway, binding all these Provinces together and giving us easy and rapid communication with each other, and a rival line of railway that has spared no effort and is prepared to spend any amount of money in order to undermine that serious competitor for the traffic of the east that the Canadian Pacific Railway has already shown itself to be. Under these circumstances, I feel that this House will not hesitate. Gratified as every man here, on either side of the House, would be to meet the views, even the erroneous views, and to satisfy the prejudices of the rising city of Winnipeg and the important Province of Manitoba; anxious as this Government has shown itself to be by every act by which a Government could evidence its anxiety to develop and promote the interests of the Province of Manitoba and the great North-West, notwithstanding all that, the time has come when we must choose between what I believe to be the prejudices of a section of the community and the interests of the whole of Canada."

The hon. gentleman contended that the interests of the whole Dominion were bound up in the carrying on persistently and continuously of this policy of disallowance for preventing the people of Manitoba from obtaining any access to the markets of the world excepting over the Canadian Pacific Railway; and he denounced those who looked at the matter from a provincial standpoint, telling them that they were speaking from their prejudices, and that the interests of the whole country must be looked to. Now, I want to read another extract, in order to call the attention of the House to the manner in which the hon. gentleman spoke. There was no hesitation; there could be no doubt; there was not a man with a head on his shoulders who could hold any view but that which the hon. gentleman was at the moment propounding. It mattered not how much it might be at variance with the pledges or the statements or the arguments which he had used before. The hon. gentleman is always so thoroughly satisfied with his arguments that he invariably says there is not a man in the country with a head on his shoulders who will hold any view different from the one he is at this moment propounding. What did he say on that occasion:

"I say there is not a man in this House, I care not on which side he sits or what his political proclivities are, who will not say that as we stand to-day in the presence of a threatened danger, the danger of having our own lines of communication on which we have expended so large an amount of public money, embarrassed and paralysed—there is not a man to whom I cannot confidently appeal on such an occasion as this, to stand by the whole country."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear hear.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman says "hear hear"; and yet he is asking us to-night with a calm, unblushing countenance to reverse that policy.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The circumstances are changed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has changed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sorry it is so late in the Session for I would like to reply to the hon. gentleman, but I shall be glad to hear him continue quoting from my very interesting speech and read the whole of it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not going to read the whole of it, but I will just finish this quotation, because it is interesting reading. Mind you, the hon. gentleman called upon us then to stand by the whole country and not to form an opinion on the subject which might be in the interest solely of some one or more of the Provinces; and he appealed to the representatives of the older Provinces, which had expended the $71,000,000 in building up this highway in the hopes that they might reap from it some of the advantages of the great traffic which was to flow from the great North-West, to support the policy he then proposed. We cannot allow this line, he said, to be tapped by railways on the other side. Such a policy would be suicidal, and therefore he called on the Opposition to lay aside party feeling and to vote for the country. To-night the hon. gentleman, with equal impressiveness, asks us to vote for the opposite policy. But I will conclude the quotation:

"It is a painful position for me and my colleagues to occupy, after all we have done for the Province of Manitoba and the city of Winnipeg and the great North-West, after the support they have unanimously given us at the recent elections, it is an embarrassing position to stand for a single moment in conflict with the hopes and sentiments or even the prejudices of any considerable portion of our friends; but we owe something more to Canada than to any personal consideration for ourselves, and that debt can only be discharged by independently, at any cost—aye, at the cost even of alienating the political support of these gentlemen which we have had the good fortune to obtain, and which we value so highly—even at that cost, we owe it to ourselves and to our country, straightforwardly and unflinchingly to pursue the course that, not our expectations of a couple of years ago, but the present exigencies of the country demand it at our hands."

The hon. gentleman to-night asks us to pursue a course directly opposite. He is the general of fixed principles who represents the party of fixed principles, and we have the evidence of it in his speeches. Did he ever shrink, when asking Parliament to accept a proposition, from declaring that it involved all that was great and good, and that everybody with a head on his shoulders and who was not a fool, ought to accept the proposition at once? But a proposition exactly the reverse may be presented the next night, and everybody is equally a fool who fails to see its justice and strength. Some of us may be pardoned if we cannot change our views so suddenly and completely. But the hon. gentleman says, the times have changed, the circumstances are different, and he used these words: "The duty of a Government is to change their policy with changing circumstances." That is perfectly true, as a general proposition, and I never saw a Government that could change quicker than this one. They are changing from day to day. But let us see how long it is since the last change. The hon. gentleman has tried to make us believe it was because the crop was a large one last year and the Canadian Pacific Railway could not carry it, that the Government abandoned their policy of disallowance. But the hon. gentleman knows that is not the reason. He knows that the circumstances show that it is not the true reason. He knows that his record proves it is not the reason. He knows that in January of this year, he assented to a Minute of Council, which declared that the unyielding policy which he recommended last year must continue to be the policy of the future. He knows that he declared the Government had a mandate from the people to carry out that policy, that that policy was necessary to develop the best interests of this country, and that any other policy would be suicidal in the extreme. He knows that he put those views on record only a few months ago in a Minute of Council, signed by the Minister of the Interior and the Minister of Justice and dated on the 4th January last, and which the hon. gentleman ratified. That Minute of Council reads as follows:—

"It is impossible that the policy which has produced these results can be properly stated as calculated to deter immigrants from settling in the Province, or to prevent the investment of capital therein."

He was then urging that the policy of disallowance had not worked detrimentally to the North-West.—

"On the contrary, while the policy of the Government has been to afford the fullest development to the resources and industries of the Province, it has had in view to prevent the diversion of a large part of the traffic of the Province to a foreign country, by which the forces that have been most effective in building up the different industries of the Province, and bringing settlers to it, would be seriously impaired."

Then the Minute in Council continues as follows, and this is the important part of it:—

"The sub-committee, therefore, are unable to recommend that there should be an abandonment for the present of the policy of Canada, pursued by both political parties in the past, of preventing the trade of Manitoba and the great North-West from being diverted for the advantage of foreign railway corporations and foreign commerce, and of protecting the great national interoceanic highway for a reasonable time to permit permanent direction to be given to the traffic of the country. Canada has made great sacrifices to secure the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Upwards of $71,000,000 and over 18,000,000 acres of land have been voted by Parliament for that purpose. These generous subsidies have been voted under the conviction that the older Provinces of the Dominion would be greatly benefited by the increased trade which would flow down upon them as the result of the development of those portions of the Dominion lying west of Lake Superior; and the unwillingness to forego these advantages by permitting this great western trade to be diverted to United States railways for the advantage of the commerce of a foreign country, found its expression at the last Session of Parliament in the emphatic vote of the House of Commons, in which every Province is represented, and which had just come from a general election at which the question formed one of the leading subjects of discussion. That vote, the sub-committee submit, must be regarded not only as an endorsement of the policy of the Canadian Government in the past, but as a mandate to the Government to continue that policy in the future."

That official record of the hon. gentleman's opinion of a few months ago was forwarded to Her Majesty the Queen, and Her Majesty the Queen was told that this Government could not depart from that policy, the object of which was to retain to Canada the benefit of the great trade of the North-West, and to prevent that trade from being diverted to the country to the south, to enrich, as the hon. gentleman sometimes tells us, foreign corporations. And mind you, this is not the unstudied language which the hon. gentleman sometimes uses to catch a vote in the House of Commons. This is his deliberately recorded conviction, which he placed upon the councils of the country and forwarded to Her Majesty the Queen. Yet the document has hardly crossed the Atlantic, it has hardly reached Her Majesty, before Her Majesty will learn by telegraph that the hon. gentleman has changed his mind, and that nobody with any sense can fail to see that the change is altogether in the interests of the country. We hear of nothing now about diverting our trade to the foreign country, but we have a glowing picture given us of the development of the country under this new policy, which, but four months ago, would be ruinous to every Canadian interest. Now, however, we are all going to be rich. Such is the marvellous richness of our western country that when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company get these $15,000,000 and when the harvest of last year, which he told us was not an abnormal one, has been duplicated for a few years, the riches of the North-West are going to flow all over the Dominion. A year ago, if the Canadian Pacific Railway were tapped by a line leading to the States, that would be ruin, not to the interests of Manitoba alone, but to the interests of all the Provinces. All the Provinces had invested $71,000,000 in this road, and had a right to get some return for that expenditure out of the trade, which, if it were tapped by a line leading to the boundary, must be diverted to the States. The hon. gentleman has turned his back on the cities by the sea and he has reversed all his policy, and he asks us to follow him in his wonderful vagaries and windings. We are asked to give our quota for the payment of interest on bonds to the extent of $15,000,000. The country will naturally ask, as we have a right to ask, what guarantee have we for the payment of this? As far as the principal is concerned, I do not think any difficulty arises, but there is no such relief in regard to interest which, for fifty years, amounts to no less than $26,250,000. We have been voting one, two, three, four or five millions to this and that corporation, and that is not considered to amount to very much, but, when you vote $26,000,000 to one corporation, it appears to be a serious matter, and the first question which will be asked in any constituency will be, what security have you got? I have no hesitation in saying that you have not got a scrap of security. The Minister of Railways, in his original report to council, stated that we were to have the security of the freight and the postal subsidies. That report stated:

"The Company are willing that all postal subsidies and other moneys payable to them by the Government of Canada may be set off against any interest which the Government of Canada may be called on to pay, and these moneys will at no remote period be sufficient of themselves to carry the interest guaranteed."

That might be true or it might be debateable. I am not going to enter into it; I do not know what the postal subsidies amount to. I find that, although the Minister of Railways states that they are willing to give this as a security, the Government have not taken that security, but they have gone further and entered into a binding contract which this Parliament is free to accept as a whole or to reject, and in that contract there is no security given for the payment of this interest. The hon. gentleman told us that we ought to be satisfied because this rich corporation had a surplus last year of $250,000 over and above its fixed charges, and, in his usual way of dealing with those matters in a grandiloquent style, he said that this quarter of a million would amount next year to a million dollars. But this country has had such promises from the hon. gentleman long enough, I do not think they will accept his statement as a guarantee. He has stated nothing except the good name of the company as any security whatever. What is that worth? Supposing the company were to fail in paying the interest, and that we, under our guarantee, are called upon to make good their default, and we must look upon it in that light, what is the total amount which we would have to pay at the end of the fifty years? At 3 per cent. interest on the amount of $26,250,000, it will tot up to the sum of $45,543,750, and at 3½ per cent. it would come to $48,975,000. We must remember that this agreement which the Government had entered into and which has been signed by the Minister of Railways, is not an agreement which they submit to us for amendment, but is already entered into and concluded, and that Parliament has simply to go through a form and take it as it stands. In that agreement, it is carefully provided that the lands shall be security for the principal, but not for the interest. Section 4 of the agreement is as follows:—

"4 It shall be a condition of the said mortgage that the net proceeds of the sales of said lands shall, from time to time, be paid over to the Government, and the company may at its option also pay over other moneys to the Government, the whole to constitute a fund to be set apart and held by the Government exclusively for the purpose of satisfying the principal of the said bonds."

We are, therefore, trustees for the bondholders, and we are bound to appropriate whatever is received for the sale of the lands to meet the payment on the principal. We have no authority, and it would be a breach of our duty to divert one dollar of that amount to the liquidation of the interest. There are many other clauses in this contract which I cannot reconcile with each other, and which show that there has been a most culpable negligence in the preparation of this contract. There is clause 5, which leads to the belief that, if default is made in the payment of the interest, the Government may receive the amount from uncompleted sales. It says:

"But if the company should at any time make default in the payment of any interest which may become due on any of the said bonds, then if required by the Government the company shall thereafter pay over to the Government all interest which it may collect, under uncompleted sales, upon the price of lands sold as well as the principal realised from the sales thereof, and the Government shall allow on the amount of such payments interest at the said rate, and shall apply all of such additional payments and the interest thereon as well as all interest accrued on the said principal fund towards satisfaction of the interest on the said bonds."

Any ordinary reader, any lawyer or any critical reader would understand from that that we had the security; that, in case there was default in the payment of interest on the bonds and we had to pay the interest, we could fall back on the moneys derived from the uncompleted sales of land by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the unpaid purchase money on the uncompleted sales, and that we would receive from that source sufficient to indemnify us for the money paid out. But it is not so, because every dollar to be derived from those uncompleted sales has been already pledged for the payment of the bonds, and the 8th section makes that clear. It says:

"The sums due or to become due to the company for unpaid purchase money of lands heretofore sold, amounting to about ($1,200,000) one million two hundred thousand dollars, shall be applied towards the payment of the said land grant bonds now outstanding according to the provisions of the mortgage securing the same."

Section 5 says that the $1,200,000 is given to us as security for any interest we may have to pay, but, by section 8, it is declared that that amount shall be applied to the liquidation of the land grant bonds. Therefore, we have no collateral security whatever from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, we have nothing but their own name for the amount of interest which we guarantee. That, as I said before, is $26,250,000, and if we are obliged to pay all that we guarantee in the end, it will amount, with interest, to nearly 50 million dollars. Hon. gentlemen may think, as the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) seemed to think, that it does not matter what the country has got to pay, so long as there is a statement on the face of the proposition that disallowance is to be done away with, and that we ought willingly to vote whatever the Government ask. Sir, we have a right to be prudent in this matter, we have a right to see what engagement we are committing the country to before we give our assent to this arrangement. Now, how do we stand? We are getting 14,400,000 acres of land, the hon. gentleman says. But that land is not clear, it is mortgaged. All that land stands mortgaged to-day for $4,463,000. I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that before that $4,463,000 is paid, many a year will roll by. We have got to judge of the future to some extent by what has taken place in the past. They have never yet taken $4,000,000 out of the lands of the North-West, and I predict it will be many a year before they will do it. The hon. gentleman said it was $3,463,000, but he left out a million of land grant bonds which we hold as security for the company performing its obligation west of the Rockies, and this $4,463,000, forms a first charge upon these lands which are now handed over to us, so that after the land has paid nearly $5,000,000, then we get the balance towards the principal of the bonds we are now going to guarantee. As for the $26,000,000, or with interest, $49,000,000, according as you take the simple sum or the sum with interest added from year to year, you have no security whatever. Sir, I do not think that proposition should be allowed to go through Parliament without an amendment. The company have, it is true, pledged the tolls which they at first offered to the Government as security to the bondholders of the road, for the interest due these bondholders; but there is nothing to prevent that company giving us a security upon the road itself and upon its tolls, and upon the revenues and franchises, so that we might take precedence and preference to the stockholders. As it stands now, we have no security upon the road whatever. The stockholders own the road, and the stockholders can make away with it, notwithstanding our guarantee which we give them. We have no hold upon them, and the least that the people of Canada have a right to expect from its parliamentary representatives is that they see that all the franchises, and plant, and railway property that the Canadian Pacific Railway possesses, shall, at any rate, be pledged to secure the Government against any loss that may occur from this indemnity. It is true that it will only be a second security, but it will come in ahead of the stockholders, and it will be something. I see, myself, how it is going to be. I see that the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) and many others like him, will go through the perfunctory work of moving some amendment in committee which they are afraid to move before going into committee. I see this agreement will be adopted as it has been entered into by the Government. But, Sir, we can warn the hon. gentleman now as we did in times gone by, that his fancy predictions will fail, as they have failed heretofore. We warn him now that he is submitting to Parliament an agreement duly signed, sealed and delivered, he is taking Parliament by the throat and saying: Agree to that, or nothing. He is binding this country to an enormous contingent liability, running up nearly to 50,000,000, and he has not asked from the Canadian Pacific Railway, for whom we are assuming this liability, any security whatever. He can get security for the asking, but he does not ask it. If the Canadian Pacific Railway Company intend to indemnify us, to pay us back, they can have no objection to giving us a second mortgage upon the railway, and its plant and franchises. The liability we are assuming to-night is a very large one, the obligations we are taking upon ourselves for the people are enormous, and I trust that every hon. gentleman, I care not on what side he sits, will calmly reflect upon the enormous extent of these obligations, and will endeavor, by his voice and his vote, as far as he can, to secure to us, at the very best, all the security the Canadian Pacific Railway can give, even if it is only a second mortgage upon its plant and franchises.

Mr. DAVIN. I do not intend at this time of night to trespass long upon the attention of this House, but I may be permitted to say a few words with reference to the speech of my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies), and briefly speak of the question as it affects the North-West. I confess, Sir, in listening to the speech of my hon. friend, that I had to make an effort to recall what the amendment was that he was supporting, because it was very difficult for me to realise that so stormy a speech was required to support an amendment which is merely a regret, for it concludes by expressing a regret that the Government has not decided to take guarantees that the Canadian Pacific Railway would build branch lines; and if we divide on this, we shall divide upon the question as to whether we should express regret or not. Now, Sir, when my hon. friend from Queen's accuses my hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Daly) of not having the courage of his conviction in coming forward with an amendment, before going into committee, so that the names may appear on the division list, it seems to me that the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition with such distinction has himself been somewhat timid in affirming the amendment he has placed before this House. Sir, it is quite clear that the real truth in this, that the Opposition agree that the policy of the Government, as their press throughout the country has declared, is in this respect a very good one. In other words they agree with the policy of the Government—

Mr. DAVIES. Not the disallowance policy.

Mr. DAVIN. Is it not abandoned? Certainly, most of the hon. gentleman's speech might have been made if the Government were persisting in disallowance, and persisting in supporting the monopoly. He thundered against the hon. Finance Minister. Why? Not for what the hon. gentleman is doing now, but for something the hon. gentleman said under a different set of circumstances, and a few years ago. Really, Sir, it was a pity to see so much nervous force wasted, and so much eloquence thrown away. It is to be regretted—because I like my hon. friend for Queen's. I have indeed an affection for him; he is an old acquaintance of mine; and for that reason I should always like that he might be as strong in argument as he is invariably in tone. If he ever becomes as strong in argument as he is always in tone, he will be one of the most cogent debaters that ever appeared in Parliament. Now, the position of the members from Manitoba and the North-West has been somewhat canvassed here to-night, particularly by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson). Now, I am not the person to deny my hon. friend from Marquette any credit that he properly deserves, for having fought, to the best of his lights, for his views in this House and out of it. My hon. friend from Marquette quoted a passage from an article in a paper published in the North-West Territories, and he attributed the sentiments to me. That article appeared, I believe, in the Leader newspaper. It was not written by me.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Which Leader?

Mr. DAVIN. The paper that is published in Regina. The hopeless ignorance on North-West matters exhibited by some hon. gentlemen is positively discouraging. However, they will learn by-and-bye.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I have heard of it in the Public Accounts.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I believe it is in the Public Accounts, and if any hon. gentleman who takes an interest in its appearing in the Public Accounts—so I am informed by the manager of that paper—will look into the reason for it, they will see that it gives very good value for any sum that may appear to its debit in the Public Accounts—at least, so I am told. I may say here in passing that I do not write the leaders of that paper and for the sentiments expressed I am not responsible; but I will say this, that the view taken is a view I would defend and enforce, namely, when I came down here, never having heard from a single constituent of mine that he took the least interest in this question, having come down as a supporter of the right hon. gentleman who leads the Conservative party and the Government, and having many things to carry and effect for my constituents, I say that although I voluntarily put my opinion in regard to disallowance in my address, I would have been recreant to my duty and my constituents, if, when I came here, not knowing that they took the least interest in disallowance, a question that did not affect the Territories, because the members for Manitoba who were urging their views never said one word about the general question of monopoly—I say if I had at that time not taken the course I did I would have been a traitor to my constituents, because I did not know that the right hon. gentleman had the strong backing he had, and I thought it was of far greater importance, and I think so now, than any question of disallowance that the right hon. gentleman and his able colleagues should be able to carry out their general policy for the Dominion of Canada than that hon. gentlemen of the Opposition, if any little disaster occurred, should take a hand at mixing and muddling public affairs as they had done in other years. Afterwards, when I saw the Government had a good majority, what did I do? I did not vote. I did not pair. I saw it stated in the papers—it was stated in the Leader that I paired. Immediately my attention was called to it, I wrote up and said I did not pair. I abstained from voting, because I thought then that was the only course for me to pursue. We had had conferences together and decided on a certain course for those members to pursue who came from the North-West. That personal attitude is a small matter, but it has this phase to it to which I will call the attention of the House. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) very properly dwelt on the efforts made by him and his colleagues from Manitoba to change the Government's policy in this respect, because the attitude of the Government in this matter from beginning to end, is, as I will show, one of policy. No one who is fit to pronounce an opinion on the subject doubts that technically the Government were within their rights in the course they took, and the only question which can be discussed is whether their policy was right or wrong. We took the view, I took the view, that their policy was not the best policy to pursue. What did I do then? I stood by my party. If I may recall to the mind of the leader of the Opposition, who I know is a student of the best and greatest minds in politics, the powerful utterances of Edmund Burke in regard to political connections, he will know very well that that great man, one of the purest minds that ever applied itself to politics, points out the advantages to the community of the binding force of those connections on every honorable man, and nothing but the very greatest questions, questions affecting the interests of the country at large, can justify any man in breaking the bonds of an honorable connection of that sort.

Mr. LAURIER. You did it.

Mr. DAVIN. No; I did not. I will now call the attention of the House for a moment to what we did. The Minister of Finance, who is always such a power in this House, I had the honor of meeting in London, where he treated me with the greatest kindness, and I believe it is in his honor to say that he always treats all Canadians with equal kindness, whatever may be the party to which they belong. I told him my views on this question, I pressed my views on the hon. gentleman; I pressed my view on other members of the Cabinet. I will now ask what then was the position of the Government? The members of the Government were not living out in those Territories. It was a question which might occur to any man coming from the Territories or Manitoba to ask: I am looking at this question, but probably I am looking at it in a half light, from the point of view of the Territories or Manitoba; if so I actually may not be taking a just view. But the Government were bound to look at the question of disallowance and monopoly from the point of view of the Dominion at large. What did they tell us? They have told us in this House that looking at it from the point of view of the Dominion at large, they considered that the policy of disallowing the railway charters of Manitoba was the true policy. Taking that view, what course had they to pursue but the course they took? What other course could they take? We are bound to believe what they tell us, that one of the most cogent arguments that could possibly be used had its effect—the argument of the abounding harvest we had last year, which showed the Government and showed the world at large that one railway could never serve that great territory. I consider that was really the clinching argument that decided the minds of the Government. I will ask the attention of the House for a few moments to the merits of the question, because it is really not a question that we are actually in battle about, because the conscience of the Reform party throughout the country has gone with the arrangement that the Government is making in this matter. They have got rid, not of the disallowance for which the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) was struggling, and for which I in my way was struggling—for I never concealed my opinion, but in fact stated in a very plain way to the head of the Government what my view on this subject was, that while my friends in Manitoba were contending for disallowance we in the North-West were not deeply interested in disallowance unless we had also monopoly got rid of; but the Government decided to get rid of monopoly and disallowance at the same time. The hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition dwelt in his argument on the fact that in the older part of the Province of Manitoba, and in the Province of British Columbia, the Canadian Pacific Railway cannot have a monopoly. I must frankly say at once, that I entirely agree with him there. The Canadian Pacific Railway can have no right of monopoly at all under its charter, or in any construction that can be put upon any bargain that has been made with it, over the portions of Canada I have referred to. That at least is my view, whatever it is worth; but what about the monopoly for the North-West Territories? Will any man tell me that the guarantee that has been given by the Government for the relinquishing of that monopoly to the Canadian Pacific Railway, is not a good bargain for Canada and for the Territories? Remember that the Territories have given last year 14,000,000 bushels of grain, and that from year to year they will go on expanding at a ratio far greater than the most sanguine member of this House anticipates and far greater than could dawn from the sanguine mood the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) attributes to the Minister of Finance. Under these circumstances that monopoly would be a far greater advantage to the Canadian Pacific Railway, than any equivalent that is given them under this arrangement. I think there is an inability in the minds of some hon. members to realise the magnitude and importance of the North-West to Canada. The hon. the Finance Minister has spoken at other times on the advance in our credit. He has spoken of the fact that at present we can borrow at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Why is that? Partly it may be due to the fact that certain changes have taken place in the money markets of the world, but undoubtedly one of the reasons is this that since the time we had to go to the money markets of Europe and pay 5 and 6 per cent., we have got possession of the North-West, and with the accession of the North-West, and with the growth of that country our credit has every year improved. Therefore I ask the attention of this House to a view that must be pressed upon them, if they will do their duty to the Dominion of Canada and to the North-West Territories, and the view is this; that our North-West is a place where a statesman has to make the greatest and most fruitful blow for Canada. The Canadian Pacific Railway must have had great expectations from that monopoly in the North-West Territories, and I say that the abandonment of that monopoly might fairly be set against any advantage that under this arrangement the company gets. I do not speak with any official authority, but I am not surprised if I am rightly informed, that the Canadian Pacific Railway hesitated long, and required a good deal of pressure before they would agree to that arrangement. I will deal with the reference to one part of what might be called the attack of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) on the Minister of Finance. It is a thing worth referring to, because if his view of the case were correct it would involve the honor of one of the most prominent men in the Conservative party, and in the Dominion of Canada. He argued that that utterance of the Minister of Finance was tantamount to a decisive promise that henceforward the policy of disallow-ance would not be adopted. What did the Minister of Finance say: He said:

"I am glad to be able to state to the House that although true to that policy, the Government refuses to give assent to the construction of lines within the Province of Manitoba to connect with the American railways to the south inasmuch as the confidence presented by the operation of the line so far as it has gone, and such is the conclusion arrived at by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that it is entirely in the ability of the through line of the Canadian Pacific Railway to take care of itself, and by the inherent power of its own advantages to maintain its position notwithstanding any objection to which it may be subjected. We are now in a position to review and to consider the policy of the late Government, and the policy of the present Government as to the continued necessity for any long period of time of protecting the Canadian Pacific Railway against competition in the Province of Manitoba, and I am glad to be able to state to the House that such is the confidence of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, of the power of the Canadian Pacific Railway to protect itself, that when the line is constructed north of Lake Superior the Government feel it will not be incumbent upon them to preserve the position that they have hitherto felt bound to preserve."

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. Hon. gentlemen say "hear, hear." Will any honest man, reading those lines say, that they mean a promise on the part of the Finance Minister that that policy will be discontinued?

An hon. MEMBER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIN. No, a thousand times no. The only fair construction that can be put upon those words, is that the hon. gentleman and his colleagues at that time felt that after the line was completed north of Lake Superior it would be in a position to hold its own, it would be in a position to face competition, and with safety to the country, safety to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and safety to the interests involved that the policy of disallowance might be discontinued. There is no position that a statesman can take more truly statesmanlike and more truly great than the position taken by the Finance Minister. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) comes with that sort of rhetoric which is sometimes very successful before a jury and that with untrained minds has a certain cogency. But, Sir, the statesman that would bind himself to go on, under changing conditions always in the same way, would be the greatest curse that ever oppressed a country. The hon. gentleman, if he found that the conditions of the country were not as he anticipated them to be, if he found that they would not justify the course that he intended to take, it was a bold and courageous and statesmanlike policy to say: We must defer taking this course. Though I differed from the Government on their policy of disallowance, yet in regard to the principle on which they acted I have not any hesitation in saying that taking the view of the situation that they did, and the view of the interests of Canada that they took, they took a broad and statesmanlike course. I shall not trespass on the House further. I wanted merely to correct a few misapprehensions and reply to one or two things that had been stated. I will say that since disallowance and monopoly have been done away with, that a new life has struck the North-West. Although I am only in this House for two years still I have had considerable experience of parliamentary proceedings, having sat so many years in the gallery of the English House of Commons, and I have seen amendments like that constructed, which are simply fishing amendments, which have no meaning. What policy does it propound? Does it say you will not consent to anything unless a certain course is taken? No; we are asked to divide solemnly on a regret. It is like organising Her Majesty's fleet to waft a sigh. You are going to divide this House of Commons in order to declare solemnly that you do not agree with the hon. gentlemen's regret. He says he regrets that the Government has not adopted a certain course. Why, Sir, the Government could not probably have got that course adopted unless they gave a still bigger guarantee. Suppose the Government came down here asking that the House should guarantee the interest on $25,000,000 instead of $15,000,000, and were to say that next year—and I would like it to be done—a branch line should be built here and a branch line there, the size of the sum would be attacked by the Opposition. As a North-West man I heard with some surprise—I forget whether from a North-West member or not—a complaint that some of this money would be spent in Toronto and some in Montreal. Now, Sir, I will show you how large-minded and how liberal our broad prairies and our free western air make us. It is to us a matter of no regret that any money of that sort shall be spent in Montreal or Toronto. We do not care where the money is spent provided the Dominion of Canada at large is advantaged by it; we regard ourselves as part of the Dominion of Canada. Sir, I never heard words of which I was more proud than words which fell from farmers at meetings held in the North-West some months ago in answer to some one who said that we are paying heavily on our lumber, on our coal, and what not; and those farmers got up and said: We are also getting great advantages from our connection with eastern Canada, and we are determined to feel that we are part and parcel of the Dominion of Canada, and ready to bear whatever burdens may properly fall on us. That, Sir, is the true course. I hate the sectional sentiment that makes any man think his own little place or his own little Province the centre of the universe. For God's sake, let us escape from the miserable thralldom of this sectionalism. Let us act on the view that we are all Canadians, and are bound to make this Canada of ours a noble land full of a great national life. Let me say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that branch lines are being built, and they will be built all the more now that the monopoly clause is gone. That young country will go on under the sympathetic care of the Government; but whether under this Government or another it will go on by its own inherent energy which will not be kept down; and I can assure you that the day is not distant when the North-West will repay Canada fifty-fold for any expenditures such as those the hon. member for North Wollington (Mr. McMullen) referred to. It is greatly to be regretted that these narrow calculations should be made. Any man, come from what part of Canada he may, who will calculate what the North-West has already done in the way of recouping Canada, what has been given for Dominion lands, what has been paid in customs duties—and that cannot be exactly got at because our customs duties are paid at Montreal and Quebec—and what we shall pay by-and-bye when we shall have five or six million people in that country, will find that Canada will be amply repaid. Why, Sir, at the present moment a vast trade is done between the North-West and Montreal; and do not let any man from Ontario or Quebec imagine that we for one second will listen with any patience to the proposition that the North-West is in any way indebted to the rest of Canada. The fact is this: it is the rest of Canada that is indebted to the North-West. We have given you a backbone. We have put you in a position to go before the world with the certainty of a great future, and hence it is that your credit stands so well. I say that seriously; it is a proposition that will bear the utmost scrutiny. Now, Sir, I cannot vote for the amendment of the hon. leader of the Opposition, because part of it contains propositions that the Government have endorsed, and it closes with a simple regret that the Government have not done so and so. Why, Sir, whatever course the Government took—if they were to propose branch lines, do we not know that the hon. leader of the Opposition would go into his room and prepare another amendment, saying that it was a pity the Government had not gone in for little canals in the North-West? And if they went in for some small canals, some other idea would occur to the hon. member to express his regret about. But the fact is, Sir, I am a material creature. I am not airy enough, I am not volatile enough to be able to divide on a regret or go into battle about a sigh. I consider that this is altogether too fine and spiritual an issue for a material and practical person like me to be able to divide upon with the leader of the Opposition. I have so much admiration for him and for his silvery eloquence that I sometimes almost wish that I could divide with him; but I must say he will have to bring forward amendments of a more practical nature before he can find my voice on his side.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I hope hon. gentlemen will give me just a few minutes. I beg to announce myself as a fourth party in this House, for this time at all events. The first party are allowed to say as much as they choose; so are the second party; the third party says what he likes, and I claim as much for the fourth party. I have been very much amused with the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), who has proved, at least, by his readiness to support any new position which the Government may take, that he is a practical politician. While he was speaking, he brought to my mind a historical parallel, the only one that strikes me very forcibly as applicable to himself, and that is Black Sam in Mrs. Stowe's celebrated novel. You are aware that when twitted with inconsistency for having taken two different courses within 12 hours, Black Sam says: "Oh, I thought Missus wanted to catch Eliza, and so I determined she should be cotched. That ere was conscience; but when I found that she wanted Eliza not to be cotched, I determined she should'n't be cotched, and that ere was doubly conscience, because the fellow that gets the most is always standing on her side of fence." The hon. member for Selkirk was hardly consistent in his strictures on the hon. member for Marquette, for he should have remembered that when about twelve months ago the hon. member for Marquette moved a resolution in this House declaring that the policy of disallowance should now be abandoned, he asked the hon. member for Selkirk across the floor to second his resolution, and that hon. gentleman refused to do so, so that your humble servant from a distant Province had to second the resolution in order to get it before the House. Now, I am one of those who have always held that if the monopoly given to the Canadian Pacific Railway were abolished, that company was certainly entitled to a fair consideration for giving it up, and that whatever the monopoly was worth to them they were entitled to be paid, and I hold the same views still. But in the resolution before the House, I believe that they are getting too much. Let us look at their claim. The hon. the Finance Minister gave away the whole case this afternoon, when he said that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were utterly incapable of carrying the traffic out of the country. Now surely, the contract is not all on one side. When the Government gave the company a monopoly for 20 years, it was certainly the distinct understanding that they would do the necessary work of the country. That must have been the implied obligation on their part; and when the hon. the Minister of Finance tells us to-day that the company are utterly unable to their work, it is certainly his place to ask them to allow another road to be built, which will do the work that they are unable to do. Their inability to do the work of the country certainly goes a long way to deprive them of any claim to compensation for taking away the monopoly. Then again the sum allowed the company is altogether too much compared to the security given. We are asked to assume, for practically it amounts to that, an obligation of $29,500,000. The hon. the Minister of Finance has stated correctly that the interest, which we are asked to guarantee, amounts to $26,250,000, and we have only a second mortgage on the property, for there is a first mortgage amounting to $3,263,000, which brings up the whole amount to $29,500,000, which we are asked to guarantee. Now, the hon. the Minister of Finance has proved to his own satisfaction, at least, that all that money can be got from the land, and that we are perfectly safe in giving a guarantee because every dollar will be recouped. I have great admiration for the Finance Minister, and there are few things I admire more than his prophetic utterances. He has made a great many since I have had the honor of a seat in this House, and he always makes them with full confidence. True, not one of them has ever been fulfilled, but that makes no difference, and he comes up smiling and makes his next prophesy with the same confidence as he did the others, and his followers applaud and hope he will have better luck next time. The hon. gentleman's prophesies we may be excused for taking with a little grain of salt. We remember the prophecy the First Minister made some years ago, that by a certain time there would be $60,000,000 derived from the sale of lands in the North-West. Most of that time has passed, and the prophecy is as far from fulfilment as ever. The hon. the Finance Minister remembers that some years ago he prophesied that between certain days he named, there would be $58,000,000 in the public treasury, as the result of the sale of lands in the North-West. Well, the time has very nearly gone by, and if we deduct the expenses of survey and management in the North-West, we will find that we have not one dollar to-day in the treasury to show for the land. Now, what right have we to suppose that those lands in the North-West, which we are asked to take for security, will yield anything like that amount guaranteed. As has been shown this afternoon, the guarantee is too large, and the consideration far too much when we consider what the monopoly really amounts to. It has been shown most conclusively that the monopoly never was intended to apply except in the North-West. It was not to apply to Manitoba or to any of the older Provinces, so that in considering the compensation to be given we have simply to deal with the North-West, and I submit that the sum asked is entirely too much. This appears much stronger when we consider the change that has been made in the route of the railway. I need not tell this House that the line was intended to be run on the old route surveyed by Mr. Sandford Fleming. The route, as originally surveyed, was to run from Winnipeg to the Rocky Mountains, through the fertile parts of Manitoba and the North-West. For nearly 1,200 miles the land was all first-class to fair farming land; if we can credit the evidence of travellers and the evidence which is being given before the committee in the Senate. The road was to have been built over this route, and if the country was to be considered at all, it was by that route the road should run. It is in the memory of the House that, in 1882, an innocent looking little Bill was brought in, after the contract had been let, to allow the Governor in Council, if the Government saw fit, to change the route of the road. It was then said by the hon. the Minister of Finance that he did not expect the line would ever be changed; however, the Government took power to change it, just as they did the other day to borrow an enormous sum of money, as they saw fit. They changed it, and where does it run? Any one conversant with the geography of the country, knows that the great American desert dips down into it, and that now instead of running over a fertile tract of country it runs straight through the desert. What was the reason for this change? The Canadian Pacific Railway simply desired to get a shorter road to the Pacific. They abandoned the idea of building the road to develop the North-West and of getting traffic from the North-West, and thought only of the traffic from Asia. I submit that when that change was made the railway was no longer constructed in the interest of the country. I do not blame the company for making that change. It was a matter in which they were the best judges as to what would pay them the best, but I think the Government, in the interests of the country, were very much to blame in sacrificing the interests of the country by agreeing to that change. See how the matter stands now. From Winnipeg to Qu'Appello, and a short distance beyond, it is good fertile land for a distance something within 400 miles. Of course the land is of a variable character. Sometimes you find land on which good crops could be raised, and sometimes you cannot. But after that you get into this arid waste, and I say it would be simply cruel, and I say it without fear of contradiction, to advise any man to settle in that part of the country. I assert that from Moose Jaw to the Rocky Mountains there is not a spot where any man could settle and make a living by farming. The distance is over 500 miles. It is true that near the mountains, where the moisture does fall, in what is known as the ranching country, where I have been informed by friends who have been in the business, there is everything in the soil and the climate which is required for raising good crops, but unfortunately, being in such a high altitude, the summer frosts are so frequent that agriculture is not successful there. It is a strange thing that 400 or 500 miles further north, it is perfectly safe to farm, and I can only account for that by the fact that the mountains are lower there, and the warm breezes from the Pacific ameliorate the climate and prevent summer frosts. This railway only accommodates about 400 miles of that great North-West. The Government have allowed the company, at their own request, to change the route and simply to give accommodation to that section instead of to 1,200 miles of country where the territory will have to be settled, and where a road must be built. In fact, we will have to pay for that now. The Manitoba and North-Western is being built on a land grant, and this Session I see that we have been asked to allow them to reduce to over one-half what they were compelled to do, that is, to build 20 miles instead of 50 miles each year. As the Finance Minister has stated to-day, no company can build a road simply on a land grant, and the result will be that the country will have to pay for building a road which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company agreed to build, and was paid for building, and was expected to build. For all these reasons, I say that this resolution asks too much. The company are entitled to something, no doubt, and I am in favor of their having every dollar which they should have, but I think they are asking too much, and, therefore, I cannot vote for the resolution. As to the amendment, so far as I recollect it, it asserts that too much is given to the company, but it goes on to demand that the money shall be expended in Manitoba in building branch lines.

Mr. DAVIN. Not to demand—it only expresses a regret.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Well, I do not regret that it has not been done. I say that the company is either entitled to consideration or it is not. If it is not, then the amendment should have said so, and have done with it. If it is entitled to consideration, it should have the right itself to say how the money should be spent. I shall, therefore, vote against both the motion and the amendment.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). My usual modesty has prevented me from addressing the House before, but I find that it is a duty that I owe to myself and my constituents that I should, even at this late hour, trespass upon the indulgence of the House in order to explain my position in regard to the vote I gave last year and the vote I intend to give to-night, and to bring an important matter before the notice of this House. Last year, at the time of the election, my constituents did not pledge me as to what course I would take upon the question of disallowance. They had confidence in me that I would fairly represent them, and that, as I stated in my address, I would stand by them first, if necessary, against the Government. Last year I did what I thought right in this matter, and, if I thought the interest of the Government was against the interest of the North-West, I would vote against the Government now. But, when I found last Session that the question of disallowance was to be brought before Parliament, I took some trouble to make myself acquainted with all the details connected with the matter. I was not a merchant and had never had any connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in regard to paying for freight over their line. But, when the member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) put his motion on the paper, I made myself acquainted with the question, in order that I might be able to defend my vote before my constituents, which I trust I have done. Before the disallowance resolution was brought up in the House, the members from the North-West and from Manitoba and from British Columbia organised themselves into a committee to consider how they best would represent the interests of their constituencies. We had invited Mr. Van Horne to appear before us and to bring to us the tariff of the rates charged by his road, and to produce also, if he could, the rates charged on other roads. Mr. Van Horne did not arrive here before the time came for bringing up the resolutions of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson). I asked that hon. gentleman to allow those resolutions to stand over until we could meet Mr. Van Horne and see what conclusion could be arrived at. The hon. gentleman kindly consented to that, on condition that we should see the First Minister and arrange that the motion might be allowed to remain on the Order Paper. We met Mr. Van Horne, and also the General Manager of the road, and we discussed the question of freights with them, because I understood it was the question of the rates for freight on the Canadian Pacific Railway which was complained of. We discussed the question most thoroughly, with Mr. Van Horne and the manager, and they showed us that the charge on the Canadian Pacific Railway was not excessive as compared with other roads, and that, after the first hundred miles, freight was carried at a lower rate than by any other road. Not being a railroad man, I was not able to contradict them, but at that time you will remember that a delegation from Winnipeg came down here to represent the views of Manitoba and of Winnipeg in reference to disallowance. We had the pleasure of meeting those gentlemen. There were five or six of them. There was Mr. Ashdown, a very large and wealthy merchant in that country, Mr. Brock, a clever business man, Mr. Robinson, and the present Provincial Treasurer, and some one or two others, all able men, well able to present their case. I heard those gentlemen present their case, I listened with a great deal of attention, because I was bound to get all the information I could from them so that I might give a proper decision in that matter. Well, Sir, I did make a proposition to Mr. Van Horne when he was meeting with us, because he knew more about rates than I did. I was not able to compete with him in argument, and I did suggest to him that we would meet him in company with these Winnipeg men, but he said it was no use that whenever a Winnipeg man came down to a conference he was usually on the other side of the question. I also proposed to them to meet Mr. Van Horne, and we would meet the two rival competitors, and hear the arguments on both sides and come to a conclusion. I may say that Mr. Ashdown refused the interview as well. Well, Sir, we met on two or three occasions, and I may add that I always considered myself an intruder upon this Winnipeg delegation, because they never invited me to assist them in what they desired to accomplish. I was present at several meetings with them, but it was upon invitation of the members for Manitoba. Well, when we met these gentlemen and discussed the matter with them, I found that their whole object and game was to advance the interests of Winnipeg more particularly than any other part. I found that when we did happen to meet a day or two afterwards with Mr. Van Horne, and when Mr. Ashdown and Mr. Van Horne undertook to discuss the question of rates, Mr. Ashdown claimed that the railway should carry freight from Montreal to Winnipeg, and then unload it and reship it to western points at the same rate that he was carrying direct from Montreal to western points. He was endeavoring to get a concession for Winnipeg that was against the interest of my constituents at least, and after listening to the arguments of those men I concluded that what Winnipeg wanted was a monopoly of the trade of the whole north-western country, which Mr. Van Horne, in my presence, absolutely refused to give. He said he would not give a concession to Winnipeg as against any other western point. I listened to these men carefully, and our last meeting as will be remembered by some of the western members here, took place in the tower room in this building. We had a meeting which these gentlemen addressed, and after they were done speaking I was puzzled to know what they really wanted, because in some of our conversations Mr. Ashdown put forth the idea that Manitoba had suffered during the hard times from a trade depression caused by bad crops, frost, and one thing and another, which had caused a depression of money circulating in that country. He said that if they could get another railway,—and the Grand Trunk was the road he referred to,—if they could get that road to come into Winnipeg, it would cause a large circulation of money, a million and a quarter dollars, he said, by which the Province could tide over the depression until such times as the road was built, and that the immigrants coming in on that railway to Winnipeg and bringing certain sums of money with them, would help to carry the Province over until a good harvest came on. Well, after listening to that argument, I asked the question of these gentlemen in the tower room, as the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) was going to get up to reply, I rose to ask a question on the matter of rates. I said to those gentlemen: "I wish to ask you one question, is it a matter of rates that you complain of, or is it a matter of getting a railway to Winnipeg?" Mr. Robinson—he was the man, I may name him—said it was not a matter of rates at all, it was a matter of getting another railway to Winnipeg. Well, I said, then and there, that I was justified in voting against the resolution of the hon. member for Marquette, because my constituents were interested in that question, and these men were asking that the standing of the Canadian Pacific Railway should be affected by that vote. They knew very well that the Canadian Pacific Railway had been to a large extent backed up by the Government in building that road through that great country. There was no section in the whole North-West that was receiving a greater benefit from it than the city of Winnipeg. They wanted to get their end accomplished, no matter how other people were served. I was expecting the Canadian Pacific Railway to build an extension of railway through a portion of the country that I represent, and after thinking the matter over carefully, I considered it was in the interest of my constituents for me to interfere with any project that was not injuring the credit of the Canadian Pacific Railway, from whom we were expecting to get railway extension, and whose officers we met every day, and with whom we were receiving no competition in the resolutions then before the House. I may say further that up to that time, there had not been grain enough raised in the country to half employ the Canadian Pacific Railway. I contend that they built the railway two or three years in advance of the time specified, and I maintain that to undertake to bring in competition and interfere with the contract would have been a violation of the terms of agreement, and would have interfered with the credit of the company in the mother country where they expected to get money. I therefore considered that it was not in the interest of my constituents to support the resolution of the hon. member for Marquette. Now, I would refer to a remark made by the hon. member for Marquette to-night. It is true—and I want this to be distinctly understood—that at the meeting of the Conservative Association last fall, as was stated by my hon. friend, I did make a remark that I would object to being a party to striking a blow at Confederation, and I repeat that here to-night. The circumstances did not justify those gentlemen in the agitation they were carrying on. Sir, since 1884, I have had continued application from agitators in Manitoba to take part in an agitation in the North-West, and I never listened to them. I say this, I care not if there was a Reform Government in power in this country, if I were a member of this House, and if any section of the people undertook by any other means than constitutional means, to carry out their views in defiance of the Federal Government I should vote against that Act. That was the spirit which animated me last year, and I reiterate it here to-night. I do not think it is proper for any faction of men in Canada to get up and defy the federal power. I do not think it is good policy, and as long as I have the honor to occupy a seat here I will not sustain any party in doing it, even against the Government that I am opposed to. Now, after considering well all the circumstances in connection with this matter last year, I voted as I did in support of the Government on the disallowance question. I voted for that because it was not bringing any grist to my mill; I voted for that because I considered it was not in the interest of my constituents, and I am proud to think that every action of mine from that day until this evening has been in keeping with, and in pursuance of the policy of bringing about the very result of doing away with this monopoly as these resolutions propose to do to-night. I must express my deep gratitude to hon. gentlemen, on the Government side of the House, for the course they pursued in not forcing the Government to grant disallowance to old Manitoba alone. If such had been done, what would have been the result? Monopoly would still have prevailed in my constituency in the North-West; but by proceeding in the course that has been followed and by standing by the Government, the present result has been brought about, because circumstances did not demand increased railway facilities until last harvest. Before I left Ottawa for home last Session, I heard glowing accounts of the prospects of a bountiful harvest; these accounts were given in every letter I received from the people there, and on the morning when the train reached Winnipeg and I pulled up the blinds in the car I beheld splendid fields of growing wheat. From that early hour in the morning until twilight I saw nothing but field after field of the most promising harvest. It astonished me; I had never seen anything like it in my life. The reports sent by every man were of the most glowing and hopeful character. Seeing the prospect ahead I arranged with the agricultural societies of my district to hold a series of shows in the autumn in the several districts commencing at Moosomin and proceeding west, holding nine shows in all. When I had arrived at that conclusion I wrote to the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Agriculture, asking them for free passes for newspaper men from the eastern Provinces. I also wrote to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and by return mail I received information that free passes would be given to responsible newspaper men who might be induced to visit the shows. I called a meeting of the people, not of my own town but of different parts, and organised a committee, and we invited a number of pressmen from each of the Provinces, irrespective of their political leanings, whether Reform or Conservative, to visit our shows. I told them in my communication that I could provide free passes going and coming, and the condition was that they should give a true and correct account of the country, nothing more or less. Thirteen different editors sent reporters of their journals, three from New Brunswick, three from Nova Scotia, two from Prince Edward Island, and the balance from Quebec and Ontario. We had reporters there from the Halifax Chronicle and Halifax Herald, and from very many different journals. We met them at Moosomin. My object was to bring these journalists to see the country. I saw we were going to have a splendid crop, and that on account of Manitoba being an old settled Province, the section of country that I represented was not likely to be brought so prominently before the world as it should be. They saw the splendid field referred to by my hon. friend—4,000 bushels of grain in September in Mr. Niff's granary. They saw hundreds of acres of barley, they saw most magnificent crops, of which I had no conception before the harvest. They saw the cattle. They visited the butcher stalls the previous evening, and when they were shown the beef of prairie fed cattle they thought the statements were falsehoods; but when they saw the cattle on the grounds, every one first class, they were convinced. Mr. Trewman, of New Brunswick, a reliable man and a first-class farmer, wrote home that common prairie grass fed cattle were equal to the best stall fed cattle of the eastern Provinces. We visited all the shows; it was difficult to tell which was the best, some excelling in one particular and others in another. At Whitewood we had working oxen which were 8 feet 1 inch in girth. There were sun-flowers that were 14 inches wide and that would feed a flock of chickens a week. There were turnips weighing each 25 pounds, raised on the stubble without manure. One exhibitor showed potatoes, 23 of which filled a bushel, and another man near Wolsely said that he had a field of potatoes each weighing on an average half a pound. I felt, after visiting these shows, that the time had come when the wheels of progress of our country should not be clogged. I sat down—because I was astonished at the greatness and grandeur of the country, and the exhibits made—and wrote the First Minister, and told him of the greatness of the North-West, and what a magnificent harvest we had. I sent him the reports from the newspapers, for they were written by impartial judges. These reports, which were written by picked men whose opinions carried weight, had a strong influence in assisting in monopoly being wiped out. When the shows were over I wrote to the First Minister a letter of eight pages. I told him that if there were a dozen competing railways into Winnipeg the stock of each of those railways would be worth more in the money market of England than was the stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with half enough to do, as had been the case in the past. I said the time had come when monopolies should be wiped out, not only in old Manitoba but throughout the country. I have never boasted of what I have done to bring about that result; I do not claim to have any influence more than other members. There is another matter which I want to refer to and I am going to be brief, as I do not want to detain the House at this late period.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I intend to speak as long as I want to, and you need not say "hear, hear" or "no, no." I have as good a right to speak as anybody else. A member of the Government pledged a portion of my constituents that he would use every effort in his power to secure the construction to completion of the Canadian Pacific South-Western Railway, and if there is any pledge that I am morally bound to stand by, that is my pledge to the people of South-Eastern Assiniboia. Last Session I presented a petition for a railway from 500 settlers in the south-eastern portion of the district, asking for a railway. They went there among the first settlers in 1882 and 1883, believing that there would be an extension of the Canadian Pacific Railway beyond Deloraine. This is a very important matter, and I want to call the attention of the House to it, because where a human being is suffering an injustice he should not be allowed to suffer it any longer than can be helped. When the country was first occupied there were railway tracks dotted out on the maps all over, and those men went there in good faith under the promise of having a railway. I went to the Dominion lands office in 1882 and asked for maps and plans of the country, and I was advised to go to southern Manitoba or southern Assiniboia. I said: I would not go there because there happened to be a few dots on the map indicating where a railway might be built. I have been within the sound of a railway whistle all my life and I will remain there; and so I stuck along the line of railway. Some of the men had an ambition to be good farmers, and they went into that country because it is good, and got their land under the promise that a railway would go there in the near future. They have lived and worked hard there for five years, but still there is no railway accommodation for those men. They live in a country where it costs a man $10, over and above the price obtained for his load, to market it with a team of oxen, and so it is impossible for them to raise wheat in that country. I promised the people that I would try and get them the railway. I may say that the late lamented Hon. Thomas White wrote a strong letter to those settlers, in which he told them that the Government would use every influence they possibly could to get this line built. I may say here that every letter I have received from my constituents since the death of that hon. gentleman, has expressed the deepest regret for his sudden and lamentable death. What is the good of our producing grain in that country, the fertility of which has been pointed out by the member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly), if they cannot get it to market? It is true they may be poor men, but a poor man has feelings. Those men are there with their wives and families, and if there is a heart-rending scene it is to see them toiling there, after five years of hard labor, and toil with patience and endurance, without their hopes being realised. I do maintain that, in all fairness, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should spend a portion of this money in extending that line. I do not care, what road is built so long as they will extend the line that will run 50 miles below where it runs to now. Last year, when the time of the charter had elapsed for completing that railroad, the member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) and myself, in the Railway Committee protested against renewing the charter, unless they told us they would go on with the railroad. Mr. Abbott, too, I understand, is a director of the company, and who is the leader in the Senate, came before that Committee and pledged his honor as a man, that the company would build 50 miles in time for the harvest this year, and that they would build the balance next year. Inasmuch as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company made that promise by one of their directors, who is also one of the cleverest and ablest men in the country, and that the people had faith and went on with their ploughing the land in the hope of what might be realised, I say that they are honorably bound to see that that promise is carried out. It is not only the bounden duty of the company to build the road, but of the Government to see that they do it. I intend to vote with the Government in the expectation that they will see that this road is built. The amendment of the Opposition asked that all this money, without distinction, should be expended on branch lines. I think this is unfair. I do not want that. I want to see the road thoroughly equipped and enabled to carry the product of that country, but I say that the expenditure will be of no very great use to my constituents unless they give a portion of that money to the extension of railways in South-Eastern Assiniboia. I claim that my premises are correct, and my vote last year sustaining the Government, has been the means of keeping disallowance in abeyance until the magnificent harvests of this year. I do not pretend to say that it is because of my influence, or any other member's influence, but that the magnificent harvest has been a very important factor in doing away with monopoly in Manitoba and the North-West Territories. I believe that the course I have pursued will be approved of by my constituents in bringing about the result that has been brought about. In committee I shall support the amendment of the member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly.)

Some hon. MEMBERS. Question.

Mr. SPEAKER. Call in the members.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have something to say on this subject.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have a very important proposition and I think I should be heard. I have not taken up the time of the House very much to-day in reference to this matter.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will obey the Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. The members are called in. I am very sorry, but the hon. gentleman has an opportunity to speak again.

Mr. MITCHELL. I know that, but you gave no time when the other gentleman sat down, to allow an hon. member to get up and speak.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is the second time I have been snubbed in a very peculiar manner by the Speaker.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Laurier:

Amendment negatived.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am informed that the hon. member for East Middlesex, (Mr. Marshall) and the hon. member for South Essex (Mr. Brien) paired, and the latter has voted.

Mr. TROW. We made a change for Mr. Armstrong.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Armstrong stated in the House that he was against the amendment.

Mr. TROW. I do not think the pair on the opposite side is entered in the book. The parties have not spoken to me about it.

Mr. SMALL. I think the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) and myself made the arrangement that the pair should be Mr. Marshall and Mr. Brien.

Mr. TROW. The hon. gentleman must be mistaken; he did not mention the matter to me. The hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland) mentioned it to me, and I said I would do my best to find a pair, and I thought of Mr. Armstrong.

On main motion,

Mr. MITCHELL. I suppose I am now in order in speaking to this motion, and in doing so, I shall occupy but a very few moments. I dissent from the proposition made by the Government in relation to this matter, inasmuch as it does not go far enough. I dissent from the views expressed by the majority of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, because they object to what, in my opinion, is a measure in the interest of the country. The view I entertain about this matter is this: I think the corporation now under the consideration of the House have shown an energy, and ability, and a determination, such as few men or groups of men could have possibly shown in the same circumstances, and they have done a work for this country which will rebound to the advancement and to the increasing of the population of this country. They have performed a work for Canada such as few men would have undertaken, and fewer still would have carried to so successful a result. They have been aided by the Parliament of this country on former occasions, on one occasion to the extent of $30,000,000; and a great many people in Canada and in the neighboring republic, and some of the members of this House doubted very much whether that money would ever be repaid. But it was promptly paid when the company realised on their securities; and now, when they are asked to give up a valuable privilege for the sake of peace in the North-West, for the sake of getting the Government out of a difficulty, for the sake of settling difficulties in the North-West, which were preventing population from flowing into it, I think, when the Government decided to grant them aid, they should have gone to the extent of aiding them effectively without practically increasing the liability of the country. What have the Government done? They have agreed to guarantee the interest on $15,000,000 for 50 years. There is no doubt that that is a very considerable privilege if these gentlemen are enabled to raise $15,000,000 on the guarantee of the Government; but, Sir, they have given up a great privilege when they have given up the monopoly privilege in the North-West; and they have done it, I believe, to the satisfaction of the Government without haggling or dickering very much over it. As I understand the condition of things in the money market of England, although I do not pretend to speak with a great deal of authority or information, the guarantee of the interest limits the range of purchasers of that $15,000,000 of stock to a very great extent. I believe that all the trust estates, all the chancery funds, all the funds in the hands of executors, will be practically excluded from investment in these securities. That class of investors are precluded from investing in anything of which the interest only is guaranteed. Now, as the Government have taken over all the lands, surely they may be considered a sufficient security for this principal money. Those lands are taken for the express purpose of securing the principal money; and if the Government have any confidence in the future of that country—and I believe it will be the heart of Canada, and that if Canada is to have a future, it depends on the settling up of the North-West and the development of the fertile resources which it contains—surely the Government will be amply secured by the lands for the principal of that money. After having taken the lands into their hands, they had better go the whole way and enable those gentlemen to secure a larger number of investors than they can with only the interest guaranteed, and thus enable the country to realise to the extent of $1,500,000 beyond what they will be able to realise under the arrangement as it stands. I say the country would realise the benefit from that. Some may question that statement; but, Sir, every benefit that company derive, every additional million of dollars they realise, whatever the security may be, comes to Canada, for we are bound to carry out that enterprise whatever it costs. The Government deserve great credit for the aid they have given so far, and I trust, that notwithstanding that this resolution has been submitted, that they may yet consider the propriety of doing the right thing, and enable the company and the country to secure as favorable results as are possible. Sir, there are no risks. If the Government are safe in guaranteeing the interest on $15,000,000 for 50 years, surely the value of the lands and the earnings of the railway will be a sufficient security for the principal as well as interest. That is all. I have prepared a resolution embodying my views; I do not expect to carry it, but I have felt it my duty to place it before the House:

That all the words after the word "That" be struck out, in order to add the following instead thereof: it is the opinion of this House, that inasmuch as the effect of the Government resolution is only to guarantee the interest on the fifteen millions referred to in such resolution; and as the Government propose to take over the fourteen millions of acres of land of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in order to secure the principal of the said sum; and as the absence of the guarantee of principal as well as interest largely restricts the limit of purchasers of said bonds by the exclusion of trust funds, and thereby lessens the value of such guarantee to the extent of about one million and a quarter of dollars, it would be in the interest of the country as well as of the company to remove that objection by guaranteeing the principal as well as the interest, and thereby enhance the marketable value of such securities.

Amendment negatived.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Perry) was not in the House when the motion was put. The hon. member for Essex is recorded in the Whips' book as being paired with the hon. member for Toronto.

Mr. PERRY. I was in the House and in my seat when the motion was put.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I saw the hon. member come into the House.

Mr. PERRY. I was in my seat when the motion was put, and left it for a moment when an hon. member began to sing.

Mr. TROW. In reference to the statement that I made at the previous vote, I am aware that Mr. Marshall was paired but not with Dr. Brien. I forgot who was present because I had not the papers, and I mentioned Dr. Borden on that occasion, in order to get Mr. Marshall, a gentleman who, I knew, was away. I was not in the House when Mr. Armstrong was speaking, or I would have been the last man to pair him in that way. I did say on the impulse of the moment that Mr. Armstrong was away and paired him with Dr. Brien.

House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section c,

Mr. WELDON (St. John). As far as I understand it, the lands are mortgaged to pay the principal only, but the Government are responsible for the payment of the interest. If the company make a default in the payment of the interest, would the mortgagees have the right to enter on the lands to secure their trust?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It is not so provided here.

Mr. THOMPSON. The provision will be in the mortgage. The provision in the resolution is that the mortgage shall be approved by the Governor in Council.

On section b,

Mr. EDGAR. I think on this section the whole question arises as to what the real security is which the Government is going to obtain from the company against their guarantee of interest; and I, for my part, am entirely unable to satisfy myself from the explanations which have been given so far as to what the security is which the Government will have. As far as I am concerned, if the security the Government takes under this arrangement, or can take, is clearly sufficient, the whole arrangement is one that I must approve of; because, as far as the principal is concerned, the Government assumes no liability whatever. That is a matter for the purchasers of the bonds, and I have no doubt that the land will be sufficient security for the bonds, as they are not to mature for fifty years. The whole matter, therefore, comes to a business discussion as to what security the Government of Canada is to have against the payment of $525,000 annually upon this guarantee. The Finance Minister told us that the first security we had was the net revenue of the company over and above its fixed charges, and he told us that the net revenue of the company for the last year, as shown in their annual report, was $253,000. But that is entirely inadequate, even if we had control of that net revenue, which we have not, to meet $525,000. The Minister of Finance spoke very hopefully indeed of the future prospects of the railway as to its net revenue, and perhaps he is right, but certainly the net revenue has been going down in the last few years in a most extraordinary degree, as far as I can judge from the reports which I have examined very carefully. I find that, in 1883, the net revenue amounted to $1,115,000. In 1884, it went up to $1,126,000. In 1885, according to the condensed balance sheet attached to the annual report of that year, and after all fixed charges had been first deducted, which I understand to be not only the charges on the first mortgage bonds but also all the interest and all the bonds of the leased railways, it left a net surplus, according to the report, of $3,781,000. Very well. It has gone down since construction was ceasing on the railway, as soon as the charges ceased which the railway made against itself and the contractors, which swelled its profits, and it began to come down to hard-pan, in 1886 the profits came down to $635,000; and, as we have seen by the statement of the Minister of Finance, they went down last year still further, to about a quarter of a million. The Finance Minister told us, however, that the profits would increase, that it was all to be couleur de rose, because the first quarter of the year showed an increase over the first quarter of the last year. I think it is better to look back over previous years, and see the tendency, than it is to take one quarter of a year to which reference has been made. Fairly and reasonably looking at the prospects and finding that we have to pay $525,000 out of this $253,000, we do not see a very brilliant prospect. I cannot see where the immediate increase in earnings is to be as great as the Finance Minister states, but, supposing the surplus was to increase and was to go up to about the amount of interest the country has to pay, what security have we that we are to receive that? Provision may be made in the mortgage, and when we as sureties have to pay money for our principal, we may be subrogated in their rights, but I do not see how that will give us any claims except as a simple contract creditor against the railway. We will stand in the position of an ordinary creditor against that net surplus, against that which would otherwise be a dividend on the shares, and we have not yet seen any way in which the Government propose to secure themselves in that respect. Then as to the postal subsidies. It appears from the report of the Minister of Railways that the company is willing to put in the postal subsidies payable by the Government to the company as security against our guarantee, but when they come to talk business and to draw an agreement between the Government and the company, they left postal subsidies out utterly and entirely. Now, I think that is most unaccountable. If it is intended that the postal subsidies shall be made security for the Government against this guarantee, why, when the business arrangement—the official documents which we have before us—came to be drawn up between the company and the Government, have they entirely left out all reference to these postal subsidies? I think it is a most extraordinary thing, and requires a great deal of explanation. Here we have the resolutions brought down, and we find all reference, also, to the postal subsidies left out of them. I think I know why. I think the reason is obvious,—it is that the holders of the first preference bonds, the thirty-five millions have an absolute legal claim against that postal subsidy, and I think the Government have discovered it. I think the Minister of Railways did not know it when he made that report to the Government, and I think he has discovered it since, and when they came to put that into form and shape in that agreement, the company refused to put this in. The Minister of Finance also left them out of his proposals to-day. I think there is very good reasons for his having left them out, because he could not put them in. As I understand the matter, the first mortgage bonds come in and control these postal subsidies completely, and it would be a breach of faith against the holders of the bonds to attempt to take away the postal subsidies from them, because these are tolls and revenues of the railway company, and they were pledged and hypothecated by Act of Parliament, and by the mortgage bonds over again. I think the first reference to the tolls and revenues of the company, is in a letter that Sir George Stephen wrote in 1885, asking for a temporary loan of $5,000,000 for the company from the Government. He distinctly and in plain words proposed that this temporary loan should be made to the company on the security of the postal subsidy, payable by the Government to the company. And so I believe it was arranged, and that loan was paid off almost at once, by the issue which was authorised in 1885, of $35,000,000 of first mortgage bonds, so that the postal subsidies became relieved from that charge, which was made in favor of the Government upon them, in respect to the $5,000,000 loan, and came then under the operation of the Act which was assented to on the 20th July, 1885, and which authorised the pledging to the trustees for the bondholders of the first mortgage bonds of the entire property “real and personal, now owned or hereafter to be acquired, by the railway, including its main line, with its tolls and revenues”; and among these tolls and revenues were undoubtedly these postal subsidies. Then the bond on its face, which was issued by these purchasers for value, also states that it is secured by the whole line of railway, its tolls and revenues. Then the mortgage itself, which I had an opportunity of seeing, and which secures these bonds, also specifically and clearly covers the tolls and revenues, and also “all income, rents, profits and sums of money arising or to arise from said railway, or extensions and branches thereof, and in any way connected with or relating to the said railway or property.” Well, if that does not cover the postal subsidies, I cannot conceive any language that possibly could. So we have that as an absolutely good reason why the postal subsidies were left out of the bargain between the railway company and the Government, and also left out of these resolutions. So as far as I understand it, the Government has not that security and cannot get it. I do not think that the Government, after Parliament has assented to the creation of these mortgages, and to the pledging of the tolls and revenues, would have a right to retain in their hands these postal subsidies which have been earned by the railway, and which are payable to bondholders. I do not think the Government would have a right to retain those as against the bondholders, even if there is default in the payment of interest on those bonds which we guarantee—if we have to make the advance, at least if we have, I would like to hear it explained on what theory we could do so. Then there is another more apparent than real security which the Government seems to have brought, in some sort of way, under this proposed agreement; that is, they seem to have the arrears of the principal and the interest on all uncompleted sales as distinguished from the unsold lands which are to be transferred to trustees, simply and exclusively for securing the principal of the bonds. But to secure the interest which the Government advances, they seem to have some sort of a lien proposed to be given upon principal and interest, payable on sales which have already been made and are uncompleted. Now, that view seems absolutely worthless and illusory for this reason: These are all covered by land bonds in excess of all the arrears of principal and interest, to the extent of $2,263,000; that is, the land bonds which are a first charge upon the land held, and which have been sold, and upon which there are arrears exceeding the whole amount of the arrears upon these uncompleted sales by $2,263,000. That is according to the statement made in the report of the Minister of Railways, in which he says:

“The lands are now subject to mortgage to secure outstanding bonds amounting to about $3,463,000; but sums are due to the company for unpaid purchase money or lands heretofore sold, to the amount of $1,200,000 which the company are willing to apply towards the payment of the bonds.”

That, as will be seen, leaves a deficiency over and above all these arrears upon bonds which are chargeable to the land, of \$1,263,000. So that that guarantee is absolutely a great deal worse than nothing. Then we come to what I suppose is considered the most tangible security that the Government get, that is, as I understand it, the interest which the Government may become liable to pay out to the company, at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, upon the net proceeds of the sale of the 14 millions odd of land by trustees. An important question to understand at first with reference to that is this: Who pays the charges of management? Provision is made in this arrangement that trustees should be appointed who shall take charge of these lands, and make sales of them, and pay over the proceeds to the Government. We know that a large land department like this cannot be managed without very great expense, and I think it is perfectly clear where that expense is chargeable; it is not chargeable against the Canadian Pacific Railway, because although the language of the resolutions is not very clear on that point, something else throws light upon it. The language of the resolution says the proceeds of the sales and lands shall be paid, but it says nothing about the management.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does it not say that the company pays it over?

Mr. EDGAR. It says the money shall be paid over by the trustees.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Together with any other sum the company pays over.

Mr. EDGAR. You might infer something of that kind. The whole point, however, is made clear in the agreement between the Minister of Railways and the Government, which says it shall be a condition of the mortgage that the net proceeds of the sales shall from time to time be paid over to the Government. The trustees will take charge and hand the proceeds over, after paying all expenses of management.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is not a word of that there—that after the trustees have paid anything.

Mr. EDGAR. What can net proceeds mean?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They mean money paid by the company as net proceeds to the sale of the land to the trustees.

Mr. EDGAR. I cannot understand it so, and no court would interpret it so. They have to get the lands by deed into their hands. They are to sell them, and the condition is that the net proceeds of the sale of the lands be paid over to the Government by the trustees. They charge, as any trustee in law is entitled to charge, the cost of the management and the trust against the estate.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That has nothing to do with the expenditure for sales by the company. That is perfectly clear by the resolution.

Mr. EDGAR. How can the company sell the lands when they are not to have a title to them?

Mr. THOMPSON. The title is passed to the trustees by the company, but it is not for the trustees to manage. It is only in case of default that the trustees may enter on the lands and sell them. In the meantime the Canadian Pacific Railway Company sell the lands. The moneys are paid over to the trustees and the trustees pass the title when the payments are completed, and it is a condition of the mortgage that the trustees shall be obliged to pay the receipts—after deducting their own remuneration, which is to be fixed—to the Government.

Mr. EDGAR. Does the Minister Justice of mean to contend that there is not to be an immediate conveyance of the lands?

Mr. THOMPSON. The company immediately passes the whole title to the trustees, but the trustees do not enter on the management or sale of them. The company will do precisely as they are doing now. The effect of the agreement is that purchasers are to get a title when they complete the purchase in full, and the payments of purchase money in advance of sale are to be paid into hands of the trustees, and when the purchase money is fully paid the trustees pass the title, the money being paid to the Government. The trustees do not manage the land.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). At what prices will the land be sold?

Mr. THOMPSON. At prices to be agreed upon.

Mr. EDGAR. When anything is left unstated in the resolution it is announced to us that it is to be put in the mortgage.

Mr. THOMPSON. There must naturally be conditions in the mortgage that cannot be inserted here.

Mr. EDGAR. If that be the meaning or intention of the resolution I do not think such is the evidence on the papers before us. However, I am very glad to hear that such is the intention of the Government, and I expect to see it distinctly provided for in the mortgage.

Mr. THOMPSON. There are many conditions not here, but they will form part of the mortgage.

Mr. EDGAR. I am very glad that the expenses of the management of the lands will be borne by the company.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. EDGAR. More than that: the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will have little or no interest in those lands.

Mr. EDGAR.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They have a very decided interest.

Mr. EDGAR. Yes, but only in any surplus, if there is a surplus. However, they have not nearly as much interest as trustees and bondholders, and therefore I can hardly understand how any trustees for any mortgaged lands should allow the company making the mortgage to have entire control of the disposal of the securities which are held for the trust.

Mr. THOMPSON. Within certain limits.

Mr. EDGAR. This should be introduced in some measure before the House because it is one of the most vital parts of the whole scheme. One reason why it was of very great importance that the question of the management of the land should be understood was this: that I find in the report of 9th May, of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the expenditures of their land department during the past year, 1887, was $73,000 more than the entire receipts of their land department. I am not taking sales, which I fancy were in connection with land purchased in British Columbia, on the site of the town of Vancouver, and things of that kind, but under the ordinary heading of land department we find this distinct statement, showing that after the net and gross proceeds of sales of land, and the charges of management, it left a balance of $73,280 against the company on the sale of lands. That is an alarming condition of things in one year. If the Government, or the company, or the trustees are not more successful in realising for their land than they happened to be last year we will not only have very little money for the principal of the bonds, but we will have nothing whatever to meet the $525,000 which we have to pay every year no matter whether the lands are sold or not. These unsold lands which are security for the principal, and to the Government to a certain extent for the interest, are subject to certain charges. But before I refer to that I can go back one year further and see what the proceeds of the sales of land were by the Canadian Pacific Railway. I find that while in 1887 there was a deficiency of $73,000 in the management, in 1886 55,936 acres were sold, but the startling information is given that there were cancelled sales amounting to 280,286 acres. About five times as many land sales were cancelled in 1886 as were made. We must hope there will be some little improvement as this is the only security the Government seem to have for the interest. By sub-section g of this agreement the unsold lands are subject to the land grant bonds of $3,463,000, and of course it is anticipated that that will be somewhat reduced by the uncompleted sales. But it is rather an uncertain matter, when that reduction will be made as those are uncompleted sales and are in arrears, and are very often cancelled, as we see by the history of the company. That $3,463,000 is the existing liability upon those unsold lands, which has to be met as to the principal, out of the first sales and the interest upon which is to be paid immediately.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. How many acres were cancelled in 1886?

Mr. EDGAR. 280,286.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. How many in 1887?

Mr. EDGAR. I have not the particulars as to the acres, but only the deficiency in cash as I stated.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Well, there were 21,762. That cancelling in 1886 was, I presume, the arrangement with the North-West Land Company, in which you are aware there was a large quantity of land taken back.

Mr. EDGAR. Still the deficiency is enormous. Upon this 14,000,000 acres of unsold land which we get, the Government have got to face an immediate liability of outstanding land bonds to the extent of $3,463,000. That principal is to be met out of the first sales because they are a first charge.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Don't keep us here until daylight please. We have had it over and over again and it is a mere repetition.

Mr. EDGAR. It may be a repetition, but it is a very important matter, and it is a matter which should be discussed by this House when we are assuming an obligation of $26,000,000 as we are doing here to-night.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We have assumed the obligation.

Mr. EDGAR. With all deference to the Minister of Finance I may say that I would not bring it up unless it were a matter of great importance, and I am trying to present the position the country is in to the House. I do not trouble the House unless I have something of importance to say.

Mr. BOWELL. You think so.

Mr. EDGAR. Perhaps the very important matter I once brought up relating to the blind shares are not in the eyes of the hon. gentleman who interrupted me.

Mr. BOWELL. Nor the sum you received when you sold the charter out west to the Grand Trunk Railway and all the men had to suffer by it. Nor the $18 you paid for a bed in Haldimand when there.

Mr. WATSON. Do not complicate the question please.

Mr. EDGAR. We have also an annual charge for interest on this \$3,463,000 to be met, and I do not know whether that is at four or at five per cent. If it is five per cent. it is \$173,000, and if it is four per cent. it is \$138,000. If we do not get any more money for some years to come than we have been getting of late years from the sale of those lands, we certainly will not be able to get this interest, much less than to pay \$3,463,000 principal on outstanding bonds. It will be a great many years, I think, on the most reasonable calculation, before the trustees will be able to hand any of the proceeds of the sales of the land to the Government, so that the Government may be able to recoup itself out of the $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest. There is another thing to be remembered and that is that those lands before long will become subject to taxation. It is important when we are arranging to-night a guarantee for 50 years, and according to the terms of the original charter, as the Minister of Justice has told us to-night, the titles in the lands are immediately to be conveyed to the trustees, so that taxes on these lands will run from 20 years hence at any rate, and there will in that respect be no very light charge, which will reduce the interest coming to the country. Now, I suppose, as a matter of fact, that the consideration which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company expect to receive for making the concession which we admit they must be paid for—their right to the monopoly in the Territories at any rate, whatever may be disputed as to their rights in the Provinces—is the difference between what they could get for the \$15,000,000 of bonds which they would give up on their unsold lands without guarantee, and the price they expect to get from those bonds with the Government guarantee. It may be many millions, I do not know how many, but the company may have made the calculation. That, I suppose, is all the consideration they are really asking or getting, if the contention of the hon. Finance Minister is that we are being secured entirely in the guarantee, and that the company are themselves going to pay all the interest out of revenue. Very well, if they are honestly doing so, I would like to know why they cannot say so, and make provision now, so that it can be clearly understood, for a second mortgage bond on the line of the company and the franchises of the company, their tolls and revenues which will be held to secure the Government, and in that way avoid all dispute as to the nature of the security. If the company and the Government mean the same thing, that is, that we are to pay nothing on this guarantee, but that the railway company are to pay it all, why should not a second mortgage be given by the company to the Government, which could rank, if necessary, not only after the \$35,000,000 of existing bonds, but after the other fixed charges of the company, all the leased lines and all the bonds which the company have guaranteed. Then the Government would be secured before the shareholders of the company would get any dividends beyond the $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. guaranteed by the Government. That, it is contended, is what the company are willing to do; and if that were provided in this agreement, now that we have decided on the principle of the affair, there would be little further dispute across the House, and the Government will be secured in the guarantee.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am very sorry the hon. gentleman could not have been in the House this afternoon when I went into all of these questions and dealt with them fully.

Mr. EDGAR. I was in the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If he was, I think I have reason to complain very much, at three o'clock in the morning, of his going over the whole ground and asking explanations which he must have heard very fully and explicitly. The only excuse the hon. gentleman could have for keeping us here for an hour at this time in the morning, in listening to a repetition of statements which have been made over and over again with quite as much ability and force as the hon. gentleman has displayed, I think is entirely taken away. The hon. gentleman knows that he has not undertaken, for a single moment, to answer the grounds which I gave for holding our security to be ample and complete. The speech the hon. gentleman has made I regard as a most valuable one; and, were it not that it is inconvenient for me to be here at three o'clock in the morning, I would listen with delight to that speech. Never since the Canadian Pacific Railway question came before this House has a speech been made of greater value to the Government than the speech the hon. gentleman has just delivered. What does it amount to? Let him go back and contrast it with the speeches made by himself and his leader and all the men who have spoken, year after year, in their puny, futile efforts to obstruct the greatest enterprise ever undertaken in the interest of Canada, and what will he find? He will find this Government held up to public execration, because of the enormous subsidy we gave to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in granting 25,000,000 acres of land, and yet he has taken from two to three o'clock in the morning, to prove that by giving them those lands, we gave them nothing, because the lands would not pay for the administration of them. I say the hon. gentleman has this morning given the answer to all those wild, reckless statements made throughout the whole of this discussion, as to the enormous consideration that was given to this company. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) told him, and told him correctly, in his place to-night, that he could go to the Bank of Montreal and by paying $13,500,000 could get an annuity that would meet the entire outlay that these resolutions impose on the Government if we had to pay every dollar of it. I ask if, instead of a guarantee upon an ample and undoubted security that will protect this country from the necessity of ever paying a farthing, we had given the whole money according to the hon. gentleman, we would have given infinitely less than he and those who have opposed this measure from its inception have admitted we had a right to give for the construction of this work. If the hon. gentleman was here this afternoon, he heard me say that the sale of lands in the inception of the work cannot yield any material result, but he heard me also demonstrate the value of those lands by an illustration that is familiar to every hon. member of this House. I stated that while the sale of lands during the construction of the Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway were not sufficient to pay the way of the company and they went into default and broke down and had to sell all their securities for a song, the people who came in and took those lands realised an enormous fortune from their sale. Why? Just because, as in this case of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, they could not sell their lands, because they were in competition with free grants given by the Government—and that as those free grant lands were settled in the vicinity of the railway, the railway lands would become of great value and give a great return to the company. And the hon. gentleman knowing that, knows there is no answer to it, he knows the thing is apparent, he knows that it has been demonstrated over and over again in precisely similar cases; yet he goes into the question of how much land has been sold and what the net revenue was during the past year. The object has not been to sell lands, but to advertise the free grant Government lands in order to give increased value to the railway lands. I can only say as to the security that is thus shown to be placed in the hands of the Government, is as it has been stated by hon. gentlemen on that side of the House, over and over again, that there was no question as to these lands realising amply to cover the security of the bonds.

Mr. EDGAR. Ultimately they will.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then the hon. gentleman has wasted his hour's speech, which was devoted to showing that the administration of the lands would swallow up all the money. That was the whole tenor of the hon. gentleman's speech. Our contention, on the other hand, is that the sale of these lands will steadily increase, that the money they will bring will discharge the entire indebtedness which, at no distant date, will be handed over to the trustees by the company who have the entire charge of the administration of the lands on their shoulders; that the net proceeds will extinguish, at no distant date, the entire indebtedness of the land grant bonds; and that the Government will have in the Treasury the \$15,000,000, upon which they will afterwards have to pay interest at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. during the currency of these bonds, which is the next 50 years. The only point made by the hon. gentleman opposite is the fact that the Government would have to pay $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. upon the money they receive. But the hon. gentleman himself has admitted that it is of great importance to the country to get rid of the monopoly; he has admitted that the company are entitled to ample payment for the discharge of the monopoly; and yet, when we have shown the committee that we have extinguished the monopoly, hon. gentlemen opposite seem to be exceedingly annoyed because we have removed forever this ground of attack. They cavil at the Government for having been able to accomplish this without enabling the Opposition to show that we have paid a large sum of money for it. The difficulty is not in the terms of this arrangement. It is in the fact that the material to foment rebellion has been taken away from hon. gentlemen opposite.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. member for South Oxford, I say, in his place in this House, did all in his power, this very Session, to foment a rebellion in the North-West. He lent the sanction of his high authority in this House, and there is no gentleman on that side who speaks with higher authority, when he declared there was ground for rebellion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Certainly there was.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What have you to say to this Government who have removed all that and given to the country peace instead of war, who have taken away any possibility of any difficulty? What have you to say when that has been accomplished on terms like these? I say that if hon. gentlemen opposite were sincere in their anxiety to relieve Manitoba and the North-West from the effect of this disallowance, if they were interested in relieving this country from the dangers that they declared threatened it, their conduct to-day is thoroughly at variance with their professions in the past, and it looks as if the trouble with hon. gentlemen opposite is that the last, the only cry with which they have been able to agitate this country has been taken away from them by the resolutions now upon the Table. The hon. gentleman referred to the management of the lands, and he talked about a second mortgage. Why, we have a second mortgage. To suppose the company will make default of one dollar in payment of this $525,000, he must, in order to give plausibility to his imagination, leave out of sight the history of every railway on this continent, whether in the United States or this country, and ignore the experience of the past in reference to this railway enterprise, in order to throw a doubt upon the ability of this company to meet from their net surplus earnings the entire charge. The hon. gentleman knows that three years ago the whole earnings of the company were $8,000,000, that two years ago their earnings were $10,000,000, and that one year ago they were $11,000,000. And the hon. gentleman need not rest upon the mere word or upon any imagination of mine, for I gave him the evidence. I showed that the net earnings of last year and of the first three months of this year were such as to ensure a return of no less than $1,000,000 this year over and above all fixed charges. The hon. gentleman knows that, now, in the infancy of this great work, because the line is not completed, because it requires this money in order to get the means to handle traffic, that it is in the interest of the country and in the interest of the company that they should be furnished with those means. The hon. gentleman has to ignore all that in order to throw the slightest doubt upon the ability of the company, from their net earnings, to meet fully this insignificant charge, for insignificant it is compared with the enormous character of the work and the resources of the company. But suppose he does ignore all that, does not the hon. gentleman know that the moment there is a default of one dollar, the Government come in front of the $65,000,000 of stock of the company? Does he not know that those stockholders to the extent of $65,000,000 cannot divide a farthing among them, if the company does not meet promptly, at every demand, the entire interest charge? He denies that we have a second mortgage. Does not the hon. gentleman know that we come next to the first mortgage, and that the company cannot put a dollar of additional security on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that only $35,000,000, for all this enormous work and this immense property is the entire amount that stands in front of the Government?

Mr. EDGAR. The fixed charges are there, and if capitalised, they would be $100,000,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have disposed of the fixed charges. I have shown the hon. gentleman that the company will meet their fixed charges, and have a handsome surplus this year—a surplus which, beyond a shadow of doubt—will go on increasing year by year. We need only look at the history of the road and at the history of other similar roads on this continent, to see this. All that stands in front of the Government is the claim on the Canadian Pacific Railway by the original bondholders, for they are not preference bondholders, they hold simply the first mortgage bonds—all that stands in front of the Government claim, in case the company makes a dollar of default, is that $35,000,000 of the whole of this immense property. What value would a second mortgage on the road be? We have it now. We are in front of the stockholders, who cannot get a farthing if default is made, nor can they divide one farthing among them until the uttermost farthing of interest on the bonds is paid, and they cannot put any additional liability over the $35,000,000 on the property without the assent of Parliament.

Mr. EDGAR. Is it intended that the $15,000,000 and the interest on the $15,000,000 shall also be a mortgage upon the line as well as the lands? If it is, my argument is wrong.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have told the hon. gentleman what it is exactly. The resolution and the agreement speak for themselves. But what I say is this: We are in the position of second mortgagors for this reason.

Mr. EDGAR. We are ordinary creditors.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, we are not. The Government of Canada represent the Parliament of Canada in this arrangement, and they cannot put a dollar additional claim or security on that work unless they can get the sanction of this Parliament to do so and therefore it requires no second mortgage in order to give us all the security we can possibly require. The hon. gentleman heard my statement, and I do not think, in reference to the view he takes as to the first mortgage bonds, he should have raised the question again. He says that he heard my statement, which was that, while the mortgage to the original bondholders gave them the security of the tolls as well as on the revenue of the road and on the road itself, I explained that the tolls would not accrue in the legal sense in which the bondholders could claim them until they were earned over and above the current debt of the company to the Government at that time, and consequently that, if default were made of a dollar the Government would not be called upon to pay any money for any service performed by the company until it had settled the charge which the Government might have against it. That is the statement which I made, and the hon. gentleman should have accepted it.

Mr. EDGAR. I should like to see where it is in the resolution.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman does not suppose that the Government are going to pay any person who owes money to them for any service performed until that debt has been satisfied. Could any public contractor ask to have money paid over to him if he were in debt to the Government? The hon. gentleman knows that he could not. It would be the balance that would be paid to him after discharging the amount he owed to the Government, and so it is with this company. They will only be entitled to the balance. They will have to pay their debt to the Government before they can receive anything from the Government. As my hon. friend the Minister of Justice says, it is a set off. No question can be raised as to the justice or the propriety or the legality of the Government not being required to pay one farthing of that interest except when they had deducted what was payable to the company, and all that would enure would be the balance. I think I have answered everything the hon. member said that bears on the question, and I am only sorry that, after the lengthened discussion and the iteration that we have had on this subject all day, the hon. gentleman should have at this hour in the morning seen fit to have it gone all over again.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think the hon. gentleman is in a position to complain in regard to the lengthening of this discussion. In the heat of his argument he has made use of certain expressions which are very likely to call for some reply from this side of the House. If we question his figures, we have good reason to do so. We have heard before, both from the hon. gentleman himself and from the First Minister, calculations which were made with as much accuracy as those which were given to the House to-day and on Tuesday last, calculations by which it was a clear and well proven case that $70,000,000 in the one case, and $58,000,000 in the other were inevitably certain to go into the coffers of the country from the sales of lands in the North-West by the year 1890. We know exactly how much value is to be attached to these statements now; we know how likely we are to have $58,000,000 from the sales of land in our coffers by the 1st January, 1890; and therefore we are justified in entertaining the gravest doubts as to whether one word of the calculations we have heard to-day will be verified now or at any other time. As to what the hon. gentleman was good enough to say in regard to our encouraging rebellion in the North-West, I assert that he and his colleagues are responsible alike to man and to God for all the blood which was shed in the two rebellions in that country, which were brought about by their gross misconduct, and it was only because they did not listen to our advice that they so narrowly escaped provoking a third and a worse rebellion than either, as they would have done if they had not at the last moment—not because they were convinced of the impolicy of their course, but because they were confronted by an indignant people, who were determined to put the railway through coute que coute—in consequence of the threats made by the people of Manitoba—brought down these resolutions to-day. What have we to say of men who dared to address Her Majesty a few months ago, and to tell her that it would be a suicidal thing for the people of Canada not to pursue the policy of disallowance, and to permit the American roads to make a connection with the people of Winnipeg, and who now come down and say that it is our duty, without cavil, comment or criticism, to pass a set of complicated resolutions which I venture to say the hon. Minister does not very well understand himself, though his colleague the Minister of Justice may? I desire to know whether the Minister means us to understand that we can, in defiance of the rights of the first bondholders, appropriate to our own use any postal subsidies or other sums due by the Government of Canada to the company; and I ask this particularly of the Minister of Justice. I make this enquiry because I am convinced that, if it is found that that is the case, there will very shortly be very serious remonstrances addressed to the Government of this country on the part of the holders of this $35,000,000 of bonds. I am not sufficiently well skilled in the mysteries of the statute which my hon. friend (Mr. Edgar) has quoted to say how far the Government of the country may by Act of Parliament interfere with what these bondholders conceive to be their rights, but I can tell the Minister of Finance this, that if I correctly understand him, and if it is his policy and the policy of the Government to appropriate these postal revenues for the payment of this particular debt, if it should go into default, it will be taken very ill indeed by the bondholders in England, and a serious shock may result to Canadian credit, which the hon. gentleman may find very inconvenient when he proceeds to London to float the loan which he has taken authority to do. I should like to know if the Minister of Justice confirms the view which as I understand—and I am open to correction on that point—the Minister of Finance has enunciated, that the Minister now claims that the Government can appropriate to the payment of this 3½ per cent., if the company goes into default, the postal revenues we are to pay to the company, and which I can tell him the holders of the bonds now existing suppose to be pledged to them. I ask for an answer to that from the Minister of Justice.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not suppose it is intended to interfere, by statute or otherwise, with the rights the bondholders have in regard to the securities on the road by which their bonds are secured. I understood the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) to say that the company had conveyed the future tolls and earnings of the road, they did so as far as they could, but they could only have power to convey the tolls and earnings they were entitled to convey, and certainly they could not avoid the right of set-off which any of their customers may have. They might, in the same way, convey all the tolls they are to receive for carrying freight for the Grand Trunk or any other company, but the trustees could not in consequence demand the gross tolls, therefore the right of set-off exists on the part of the Government as against this company, just as it exists on the part of any other company as against them, and the consequence must be subject to the right of set-off as it exists between all persons.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then do I understand — because this is a matter of the greatest moment to these bondholders — or, rather, I do understand, from the Minister of Justice that, in the event of default of the payment of this $525,000, the Government will apply the sums due for postal and other services in payment of the default.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is their right.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, I may say to the Minister of Finance that I think that statement will be a surprise, and a very disagreeable surprise, to the holders of these bonds. However, it is extremely desirable that we should understand exactly where we are in that matter.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Nobody is more interested in this very measure than these bondholders, and nobody is going to derive greater benefit and security from it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I doubt very much whether they entertain that opinion. I think when the answer made by the Minister of Justice comes to be fully known, the Minister of Finance will find that the bondholders to whom I have referred do not entertain that opinion. I am not, of course, in a position to dispute the hon. gentleman's law on the subject: I assume it is correct. But I am in a position to assure the Minister of Finance, and the Government generally, that the bondholders are likely to receive that statement with a very considerable alarm, and he will do well to consider how far the injury which may be done —

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think that contingency will ever arise.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman on that point, either. The contingency may not arise, I trust it will not arise; but I do not feel that we have any absolute warrant for supposing that it will not arise, nor most assuredly do I believe that we have any absolute warrant, looking at the position of the company as respects these lands, for supposing that we can depend on receiving, from the sale of the lands for a good many years to come, enough to meet these liabilities. I want, however, to enquire of the Minister of Justice whether this mortgage, which is so often referred to here, has actually been drawn up and agreed to between himself and the legal authorities of the company?

Mr. THOMPSON. It has been drawn and partially agreed upon, but not completed. It has not received the approval of the Government yet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think, looking at the importance of the matter, that we ought to have that laid on the Table, as it is the basis of our security, and a perusal of it would remove, I presume, a great many of these difficulties.

Mr. WELDON (St John). I do not differ from my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, so long as the company fulfil their obligations. The object of taking the mortgage is to provide for a contingency of security in case there is a failure of obligation. Now, the peculiarity about this matter is: that while the lands are given for security for the principal, we look to other property for the purpose of being recouped in the payment of interest. If there were at any time default, and the trustees took possession of the railway, we then have no right to get anything at all; and the instant the trustees take possession they have a right to obtain the postal subsidies, an equitable right which may be enforced against the Government, and no set-off would arise. As long as the company fulfil their obligations, the question is immaterial, but the instant they should make default, not so much in the payment of money in regard to this mortgage, but in default of the first mortgage, then the trustees taking possession of the road, which, no doubt, they have the power to do, under the provisions usually made in mortgages, they would become entitled to these tolls and revenues, and no set off would arise. There is this curious anomaly under this mortgage, that the property which is a security for the mortgage, is simply to secure the principal, while we have to look to other sources where we have no security, for the purpose of being recouped for the payment of interest.

Mr. THOMPSON. No doubt the hon. gentleman is correct that, on default, in regard to the bonds on the railway, the road will pass into the hands either of trustees or a receiver. No question, as he says, at all could arise in relation to this off-set until there was default, not only in respect to this guarantee, this interest on the $5,000,000, but likewise default in respect to interest on the charges on the railway. We are under no contract to give postal subsidies. The trustees would have to earn, or the receiver, on behalf of the company, would have to earn these postal subsidies under the conditions and under the right of set-off that may be provided in any contract that may be made. The hon. gentleman seems to be under the impression that there is now some fixed obligation in regard to postal subsidies lasting all time to come. The subsidies are running without any definite term.

Mr. WELDON (St John). I admit that my hon. friend might be right theoretically, but when we come to the practical working, and you allow that to go towards paying the debt, it would almost be a breach of trust. But if that contingency should arise, what position will the parties be in? The Minister of Justice says: We will make no arrangements with you unless you set-off. But I think the Government are hardly prepared to do it, because the trustees will say: We will carry the mail, and we will require these postal subsidies to be given us. We will do the work and we want to do it. In that case the Government would be bound to send the mails forward by that route. As I said before, the difficulty is this: that it differs from any other mortgage that I ever saw. The trustees hold certain properties for the security of the principal, but for the interest look to a property that is not secured. While it is true, as the Minister of Finance says, assuming it is correct, that they could not take up any more obligation without the consent of Parliament, yet they might involve themselves in liabilities to simple contract creditors, and the Government, under those circumstances, could only come in and share with them, unless the Government chose to exercise that very doubtful right which might exist in such a case under the prerogative of the Crown.

Mr. LAURIER. The Minister of Justice made a statement upon which we had better have a complete understanding. If I understood him aright, he stated a moment ago that, in case the company made default, in case the Government had to pay the interest which the company had failed to pay, then the postal subsidies might be appropriated by the Government to discharge the obligation which they had just made with that company, as a set-off; that is to say, that the amount paid by the Government and the amount due by the Government to the company, would be a set-off to enforce what we call in French, compensation, that is to say, the two things would annul one another. If that is the statement made by the Minister of Justice it seems to me it is at variance with the statute which already exists. I would understand the doctrine of the Minister of Justice under ordinary circumstances, but he cannot forget that all the earnings, if I recollect the statement well, $35,000,000 of the earnings of the road, are already pledged to the bondholders of the $35,000,000 which are issued by the company.

Mr. THOMPSON. So far as they had power to pledge them. They had not the power to take away the right of set-off to other people.

Mr. LAURIER. I cannot see that doctrine at all.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman will see it if he will reflect for a moment on the illustration I gave him of the dealings of the company with other railways. The company must necessarily exchange freights, say with the Grand Trunk Railway. Suppose, at the end of the year, the Canadian Pacific Railway has a bill against the Grand Trunk Railway for $20,000, is it possible that, under that mortgage, they can claim that amount when the Grand Trunk Railway has a set-off of $13,000 against the company?

Mr. LAURIER. The illustration does not apply. Let a case be taken such as is constantly taking place. Instead of exchanging cash in every transaction, there is credit given by the one company to the other. Can it be said that all the earnings of the road which are already pledged can be taken as a set-off?

Mr. THOMPSON. I would suggest this: that the mortgage and statute only cover the lines of railways which were in existence and operated by the company then.

Mr. LAURIER. No. It includes everything acquired by the company. It is idle to continue the discussion further. I cannot agree with the construction of the Minister of Justice in regard to the law; but the point brought out is that the Government believe they have a right to step in before the bondholders and make a set-off against the claims of the company.

Mr. EDGAR. Is the postal subsidy pledged?

Mr. THOMPSON. We are not giving up any right of set-off.

Mr. EDGAR. Is it proposed to obtain any pledge or hypothecation of the postal revenue? In the $5,000,000 transaction in 1885, the company gave this specifically.

Mr. THOMPSON. The mortgage will be merely a conveyance of the land.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the hon. the Finance Minister a trustee of the bondholders?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; of the original bondholders. I do not intend to raise any trouble on this point.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Although the Minister of Finance is trustee of the bondholders he is not holder of the bonds; and he may have to like it whether he wishes it or not. These bonds cover not merely the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway but the branches as well.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, all except the Algoma Branch.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. All I can say is that the bondholders, the great proportion of whom are foreigners, considered themselves under the statute passed by the Parliament of Canada as entitled to participate in this matter, and I would very strongly recommend the Minister of Finance, who is occupying the double position of trustee to them and also fills the position of Finance Minister, to make enquiry as to how this is regarded. If the bondholders do so regard it I think it will be extremely important in the interests of Canada that a future collision should be avoided, and that the question should be fully understood.

Mr. EDGAR. I shall be very glad on behalf of the country if the view expressed by the Minister of Justice is correct and is carried out, as it will offer further security to the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. I shall be very sorry if that is the case, because it will discourage us in England in regard to the holders of the original bonds. It is very clear that we should have the mortgage submitted on the Table of the House so as to see its exact terms.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I should like the Minister of Justice to say whether he will avail himself of the right of set-off in regard to postal service.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is a question for the future entirely.

Mr. LAURIER. The Minister of Justice of that day will be very glad to avail himself of the opinion of the present Minister of Justice if he can have it.

Mr. MITCHELL. After listening to some very obtuse explanations, am I to understand that the Minister of Justice has said that the Government have the right, if they so choose to exercise it, of doing what the hon. gentlemen are contending about?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is what the Minister of Justice has said.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, then I understand the Government on this matter.

An hon. MEMBER. What do you understand?

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand they have got a claim to exercise the power, and, of course, if they have the right they will do so, if it is in the public interest.

On section h.

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish to add a few words to that section which will not alter the sense. The words are:

Nothing herein shall affect or diminish the rights or remedies of any holder of any of the said land grant bonds now in the hands of the public

Mr. LAURIER. It seems to me that there is something which requires explanation here. In section d it is provided that if the company make default we can be recouped out of the money which may still be due to the company out of uncompleted sales. If I understand this aright this money is already pledged to the present creditors of the issue of the land grant bonds.

Mr. THOMPSON. What section do you refer to?

Mr. LAURIER. Section g.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is so. Section g pledges the uncompleted sales to the extinguishment of the outstanding land grant bonds. The purchase moneys which are provided in section d are these hereafter to be made.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Would they not be, under any circumstances?

Mr. THOMPSON. The principal would, and not the interest.

Mr. LAURIER. Sales to be made hereafter are to be made by the trustees?

Mr. THOMPSON. The land will be in the hand of the company and the sale is really affected by it. The trustees approve the transfer. While the purchase money is accruing, the company is receiving the interest. The objection of section d is if they should be in default they would be able to pay over the principal moneys which become due, and the interest as well.

Mr. LAURIER. If I understand aright section d only refers to the 14,000,000 acres, which are pledged to the capital bond, and nothing else.

Mr. THOMPSON moved the insertion of sub-section i. He said: The object of it is to enable other forms to be issued that might not be covered by the word "bond," such as inscribed stock or debenture stock.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Should not that be approved by the Governor in Council.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We will do that. They propose to have power to use registered bonds or inscribed stock, because that is a much more attractive security to a large class of investors than debentures which might be destroyed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I might ask the hon. Minister whether the claim he now puts forward of the Government's right to maintain moneys for postal subsidies also covers transport service?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, it covers everything; every service that they may do for us.

Mr. DALY. I beg to move the following as sub-section g:—

Provided further that it shall be a condition to the above provisions being carried out, that the Canadian Pacific Railway shall expend a portion of the proceeds of the sale of the bonds referred to herein in the immediate construction and equipment of the projected branch lines of the said railway in South-Western Manitoba and the North-West Territories.

I move this section, seconded by my hon. friend the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Perley). I am not going to take up the time of the committee further than to say how sincere I am in moving it, and I trust, sincerely, that the Government will accede to my request to allow that amendment to be added.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I regret to say that it would be impossible to accept the motion of my hon. friend, and I cannot but feel that it is an unreasonable motion. Both my hon. friends have been vehement advocates of the extinguishment of the policy of disallowance, on the ground that if it passed other people in addition to the Canadian Pacific Railway would come into this section of the country and provide railway facilities. The object that we have in giving this guarantee, and in making this arrangement, is that the money should be expended in order to enable the Canadian Pacific Railway, in such a thoroughly efficient condition, as to be able to handle all the traffic on that line. I have no doubt that the resolutions which are now on the Table will compel the company to do what my hon. friend requires; that is to extend these branch lines where the development and settlement of the country makes it absolutely in the interests of the company that railways should be extended; and for the additional reason that now they will be in a position that they will have no option but to extend the branch lines, because the monopoly being removed, they will be exposed to competition, and other parties may come in and make these extensions if they do not do it themselves. I look on the passage of these resolutions as the best guarantee for the extension of branch lines that could possibly be given. I do not know any mode in which a more complete guarantee could be given. As this is a matter of agreement, and as it would throw open the whole question to introduce this matter which has not been the subject of agreement, I must ask my hon. friends to leave that matter now, relying on the assurance that the Government will do everything in their power to promote the extension of branch lines, using all the influence they possess with the company towards that end, and that if the company do not extend branch lines, others will be free to go into the country and extend them; and I think it would only jeopardise these resolutions if we should put anything into them that has not been a subject of agreement.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But the agreement between the Government and Sir George Stephen absolutely provides how this money shall be expended, and it is not to be expended on branch lines. Now, I understand the hon. Minister to say that, at least, some of this money will be expended on branch lines.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not at all. I said we required this money to carry out our original policy, that is, to keep the traffic on our own lines and in our own country, and therefore this money is to be expended in providing such additional elevator accommodation and rolling stock as will secure that end. But my hon. friend will see that the object in having these facilities for increased traffic, which will enable the company to handle the traffic of the North-West, will very greatly improve their financial position in every respect, and will enable them better to extend their branch lines than any other course that could be adopted; and, therefore, the company will have an interest to do so, while the people will have the assurance that the removal of the monopoly will secure them, because they have always said that if the monopoly were removed there was no doubt that the country would get all the facilities it required. The company must either construct branch lines themselves, or allow the finest section of country to be supplied with branch lines by others.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understood that we were to have a completed road without this guarantee of money at all, and I think we have a direct interest in the construction of branch lines under this arrangement. If they are constructed out of this fund and constructed at once, what will be the effect? The effect will be to enhance the value of the lands, in which we shall have a decided interest. Therefore, the motion seems to be an eminently right and proper one. I must say I do not understand this schedule. It provides that the money shall be expended as follows:—

"1. On account of capital expenditure on main line between Quebec and Vancouver, in buildings of various kinds, snow sheds, sidings, permanent bridges, filling trestles, reducing grades and curves and other improvements and facilities, and on vouchers and pay rolls $5,498,000

"2. For rolling stock, locomotives, box cars, passenger cars, flat cars, tool cars, snow ploughs, &c., $5,250,000.

"3. For required improvements on the main line, elevators, bridges, locomotive shops, filling trestles, sidings, docks, lake and coast steamers; the residue, whatever it may be, estimated at $4,252,000."

There is this significant note:

"The expenditure on item 3 may be increased, and for that purpose the expenditure on either of the other items may be diminished."

In No. 3 there is a repetition of several articles, apparently to cover up what is new, "docks, lake and coast steamers." It seems to me that under this third item this money might be wholly denied to local traffic and devoted to the development of their steamship line on the Pacific. Elevators, bridges, locomotive shops, filling trestles, and sidings are all included in the first item, and what remains in the third clause is, "docks, lake and coast steamers;" and they have power to increase the expenditure under this third item to any amount; so that they need not expend any of the money on the main line at all. I think we are interested in having at least a portion of this money expended on branch lines, because it would develop the country and make the land valuable. That was one of the strong reasons I had for supporting that resolution, and I am glad that the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) though he voted against it before, is prepared to vote for it now.

Mr. EDGAR. Perhaps the hon. Finance Minister can tell us what he understands by schedule A, because I understand it a little differently from my hon. friend who has just spoken. I understand the first part to refer to past expenses, to the floating debt.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is so.

Mr. EDGAR. And No. 3 is for future expenses?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. EDGAR. If so, there must be a misprint in the first part; "and on vouchers" should be evidently printed "as per vouchers."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No. The main line is between Quebec and Vancouver, and it must be all expended on capital account between those points.

Mr. MITCHELL. It strikes me that the hon. member for Selkirk is very inconsistent in the attitude he has assumed in submitting this amendment. When the amendment of my hon. friend was submitted, it appears he voted against it.

Mr. DALY. Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Very properly too.

Mr. MITCHELL. There may be a difference of opinion about that, with all due respect to the Minister of Finance

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think so.

Mr. MITCHELL. But I think there are other portions of the country besides the North-West. I think that this liability and the interest in which it is created is one attaching to the whole of Canada; and although the first item says between Quebec and Vancouver, the further provisions give the company power, where the necessities of the case require, that a portion of the expenditure shall be taken from one and placed to the other, to do so. I think it is right they should have this power. I do not think the hon. member for Selkirk has the right to come in and attempt to specify the branch lines which must be built in that country by the company. That is a matter for the company to decide, and which they will decide according to the necessities of the country. I do not think we should tie the company by the resolution proposed by the hon. member for Selkirk.

Mr. DALY. I am very willing to be lectured by the hon. gentleman as to the course I have taken in this matter. I was perfectly justified in the vote I have given; and if the last part of the last clause of the amendment of the leader of the Opposition had stood alone I should have voted for it. But there is a great deal of extraneous matter in the amendment which I could not consistently vote for, in connection with the position I took on the question of disallowance last year. In reading over this agreement signed by the Minister of Railways and Sir George Stephen, I noticed exactly what the hon. gentleman for South Brant has noticed, and it occurred to me that when the Government were giving this company $15,000,000, it would have been only just to the people in my constituency, who were promised by the Canadian Pacific Railway these branch lines, and there is a declaration in our Statute-book that we should build fifty miles of railway in that part of the North-West, that a stipulation to this effect should have been exacted from the company. The people out there are suffering from the want of railways, and it would be but an act of justice to my constituents, under the circumstances, to have provided in clause 3 that a portion of the money should be expended on branch lines. As the hon. member for South Brant has said, the effect of those lines being built there would be to increase the value of lands $3 or $4 an acre, and that would recoup the Canadian Pacific Railway for any expenditure under that head.

Mr. WATSON. I have great pleasure in supporting the amendment of the hon. member for Selkirk.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Of course.

Mr. WATSON. I generally do support proper legislation. It seems to be that the legislation introduced by the hon. the Minister of Finance is altogether in the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the interests of the general public and of a suffering community are never considered at all. I know the sufferings of the settlers in this particular section of the Province of Manitoba, and have great pleasure in supporting, as the Finance Minister might suppose, my hon. friend's amendment. As a rule I generally advocate the interests of the people in preference to the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think the amendment of my hon. friend is a proper one, and for that reason I support it; and for the same reason I supported the amendment of the leader of the Opposition. By the second clause it appears to me that the company can spend the money where and for almost anything they please. There is nothing to prevent them spending it in getting rolling stock to be used on the roads of the United States of which they have obtained control.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Exactly.

Mr. WATSON. I think it is in the interest of Canada that the money should be employed in developing our Canadian North-West in preference to any foreign country, and for that reason I feel that this amendment should be carried.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope my hon. friend from Selkirk will withdraw his amendment, as if pressed it will go a long way towards stultifying himself as completely as the hon. member for Marquette has stultified himself. After professing to be a very earnest advocate of doing away with the policy of disallowance, when the Government have prepared an arrangement by which that policy is to be removed, that hon. gentleman endeavors to defeat it. He has shown that his object was not to do away with disallowance at all, but to embarrass the Government; and that in order to do so he was prepared to defeat the policy of removing disallowance. The hon. gentleman knows well that had the resolution, for which he voted to-night, carried, the policy of disallowance would not have been abrogated, the monopoly would have remained on the Statute-book, and he would have had to go back and meet his indignant constituents to answer to the charge that he had prevented disallowance from being abolished. That is the position of the hon. member for Marquette; and my hon. friends, the members for Selkirk and Assiniboia, are in danger of being in that position. They have been perfectly consistent in voting down the proposition moved for the express purpose of embarrassing the Government and defeating any attempt to carry out this arrangement, by which alone the Government could hope to take that monopoly off the Statute-book; they have also stated they are very anxious to have branch lines, and if a motion for such should come up in Parliament, and we were free to advocate it, we would take every means in our power to secure the extension of branch lines, but when that is attached to a resolution crippling the Canadian Pacific Railway by making them less able to build branch lines than they otherwise would be, and maintaining this policy of disallowance, we have to vote against it. The same principle that obliged those hon. gentlemen to vote against the proposition of the leader of the Opposition precludes from pressing this resolution, which if passed would defeat the policy of the Government. This is a contract, and if we cannot obtain the support of Parliament to it, the resolution will go, and the monopoly will remain on the statute. The monopoly remains on the Statute-book, and, consequently, I think my hon. friends will see, under those circumstances, that it is not wise for them to press this resolution. I think they should withdraw it, with the assurance that the Government will do everything in their power to promote the construction of these branch lines, which they know to be vital to the development of the North-West, in regard to which they have given abundant evidence of their interest.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson), has been consistent in the course which he has always asserted, and which he has asserted to-day, and which we have asserted on this side of the House, that there was no monopoly in the Province of Manitoba, and that it was only forced on that Province by the undue stretching of the prerogative by the Government of the day. If the resolution had carried, what would have been the position? It would have been that, while the majority of the House would have asserted that there was no monopoly in the Province of Manitoba, still there was a monopoly in the North-West Territories, which would have been dealt with by any Government that might have been in power, and for which there was compensation due to the company. My hon. friend from Selkirk (Mr. Daly) did not choose to vote for the amendment which I moved, though it embraced what he has proposed now, and which I am glad to see he is going to stick to; but I can assure him that we will give him what little assistance we can on this side of the House, though I am afraid his amendment will not be carried.

Mr. DALY. I wish to correct the hon. gentleman (Mr. Laurier) when he says that no monopoly existed in Manitoba. He forgets that monopoly existed in the added territory of Manitoba. I represent a portion of that added territory and so does the hon. member for Marquette. The mistake he made was in not making a difference between disallowance and monopoly. The monopoly certainly applied to the new portion of the Province of Manitoba.

Mr. WATSON. I have been lectured by the Finance Minister before, and I can assure him that his words of castigation fall off me very much like water off a duck. I can stand it, at any rate.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. WATSON moved that the following be added as subsection j:

That, as a condition of the proposed settlement, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall relinquish all claims to the right of exemption from taxation on all lands held by said company as set forth in section 16 of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract.

I will just say that it is of the most importance that that section should be added to the resolution. There are several municipalities in the Province of Manitoba, in fact I may say that every municipality in that Province is subject to great hard-hip in consequence of these exemptions.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think you went fully into this subject in your speech to-day.

Mr. WATSON. I may have done so, but I have a perfect right to repeat it if I choose.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think it is in good taste to repeat at this time of the morning.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. WATSON. I do not require a lesson from the hon. gentleman, but I simply desire to say that I think it is in the interest of Manitoba to have this question settled in the settlement which is being made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. As I pointed out before, the different municipalities on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway are suffering from these exemptions, and so are those on the land which has been sold to the North-West Land Company.

Amendment negatived.

Resolutions reported and concurred in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER introduced Bill (No. 132) respecting a certain agreement between the Government of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Bill read the first time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 4.25 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, 12th May, 1888.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FRAUDS ON FARMERS.

Mr. BROWN moved:

That the Select Committee appointed to enquire into the fraudulent practices which have prevailed, and still prevail, in various parts of the Dominion, by which farmers have been and are induced to give their promissory notes and securities to a very large amount in the aggregate, for seed, agricultural implements, and other goods and merchandise, by various pretexts, be empowered to examine on oath, or affirmation, where affirmation is allowed by law, such witnesses as may appear before the said Committee.

Motion agreed to.

THE MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to bring under the notice of the Postmaster General some matters connected with the mail service in the county of Northumberland. Fifty years ago the mails were carried by a one-horse shay between Newcastle and Fredericton; sometimes it was carried by a two-horse shay. Now I find, although there are railways the whole distance, and I think there are twenty post offices on the route, an advertisement has been issued within the past few days inviting tenders for carrying mails in the way they were carried before railways were constructed.

Mr. McLELAN. The notice was issued without my knowledge. I have received a report from the inspector on the matter, which I am now considering, and I will come to a conclusion in a day or two.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad the notice was issued without the hon. gentleman's knowledge.

Mr. WELDON (St. John's). I call the attention of the Postmaster General to the mail service between Grand Falls and Edmundston, where a railway now runs. The mails carried by stage arrive 24 hours behind the train.

Mr. McLELAN. The carriage of mails over these new railways is under consideration. Some little time has to elapse before arrangements can be made, and we require to ascertain whether the trains are running regularly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand the hon. gentleman will give the matter consideration and will give us his conclusions in a few days, and in ample time before the Session closes, and that he will make use of the railways in the transmission of the mails.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to call the attention of the Postmaster General to the fact that an Order of the House was passed last Session for a return concerning the removal or dismissal of David Wellbank, mail carrier, and that such return has not been brought down.

Mr. McLELAN. I will make enquiry into it.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 132) respecting a certain agreement between the Government of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.—(Sir Charles Tupper.)

THE PUBLIC DEBT.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved second reading of resolution (p. 1136) respecting the raising, by way of loan, of such sum as may be required for the purpose of paying the floating indebtedness of the Dominion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before concurrence is taken in the report I should like to say a word or two. I see the Minister of Finance was good enough to express a regret that I was not present at the time he made his statement with regard to this loan. I share the regret. I have just within the last few minutes, succeeded in reading through the speech which the hon. gentleman delivered on that occasion, and I must say, if the hon. gentleman will pardon me, that I have risen from the perusal with feelings of considerable astonishment and considerable amusement. I always like to see an experiment properly and carefully conducted, and I have a sneaking kind of regard for the hon. the Finance Minister. There is a boldness and a dash about his proceedings which are very often lacking in the proceedings of his colleagues, and certainly of his predecessors, and these characteristics have rarely been more conspicuous than on the present occasion. After reading the hon. gentleman's speech carefully, I came to the conclusion that he has been practicing a huge joke on his supporters, and that he was really desirous of seeing what they could be induced to swallow.

Mr. MITCHELL He seemed quite serious though.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, I am sure. The hon. gentleman has great command of muscle, in addition to many other valuable qualities. I think, however, he was rather hard on his supporters, considering all they have had to go through during the past few weeks, considering that they have had to do a great many unpleasant things, and to contradict themselves very grossly, and also in the case of not a few of them to put their seats in very serious peril, in following his various utterances with that implicit obedience which the hon. gentleman is apt to exact from his followers. It was rather too bad to laugh at them, as the hon. gentleman evidently did when he introduced those resolutions we have now under discussion. I cannot say that the doctrine he announced is altogether new. In fact I think there is good precedent for it. I think I recollect, in a book which ought to be familiar to all members of this House, that on a certain occasion debtors who owed fourscore were told to take their bill and write down fifty, but there was this difference: the steward there referred to had the power to abrogate the debt. The hon. gentleman, in this instance, has not that power. The hon. gentleman lays down two cardinal propositions in this document I have in my hand. First of all, I take it, that his major proposition, if I may so describe it, is that the moment you give your note of hand to a fellow you cease to bother yourself about any debt you may owe to him. In the second place, and this is rather more important, the hon. gentleman defines the actual liability of the people of Canada, not by the amount which we owe, but by the annual charge on the revenue which it entails. I do not know that I am disposed altogether to object to that mode of stating the question, but we will see how it works out. My time has been very brief for considering this speech, and if there be any errors in it, as it is only the unrevised copy, I trust that the hon. gentleman will excuse me and correct me. The results that I have arrived at differ slightly from the hon. gentleman. Now, Sir, he will follow me if he so chooses. Our annual charge in 1878 was \$7,238,000 for interest and expenses of management. The rate of interest the hon. gentleman states, and I presume he is correctly reported, was then $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. Now, the hon. gentleman proceeds later on to capitalise our present debt, and I propose to apply the same rule as he does to see how it works out. We had, Sir, as the House will observe, an annual charge for interest and expenses of management in 1878 of \$7,238,000. If you capitalise that at $4\frac{1}{2}$, which the hon. gentleman declares was the then rate of interest, you will find that our debt capitalised in 1878 would have amounted to \$152,476,841. In 1888-89, the present year, our annual charges are \$10,250,000; our rate of interest, according to the hon. gentleman, is $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and the consequence is, if we apply this identical rule he lays down, to which I do not object, although it is his rule and not mine, our present debt capitalised at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., amounts to \$315,307,692. It is only fair that my hon. friend should remember, that the amount of difference between the debt capitalised in 1878 and 1889 would amount to exactly \$162,832,851. That is just as logical a way of stating the case, as the way the hon. gentleman has stated it, when he declared that the liability is not to be measured by the amount we owe, but by the annual charge on the revenue. We will capitalise it, and it follows clearly and distinctly that if capitalised, our debt at the present rate of annual charge is \$162,832,851 greater than in 1878. If you like to apply that doctrine further, take the fixed charges of debt and subsidies in 1878. They amounted, all told, to \$11,755,000, and the rate of interest is, say, $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. If you capitalise the debt it will be \$247,473,685, and if you take our present fixed charges, which amount to \$16,250,000, and if you follow the hon. gentleman's ruling and capitalise that at a rate of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., you find that our present fixed charges, capitalised at that rate, would represent a total indebtedness of \$500,000,000, or an increase in ten years of \$252,526,310. If you go a step further, and if you capitalise our necessary taxes in 1878, allowing that they amount to \$19,000,000, you would get an indebtedness of \$400,000,000. Take necessary taxes to-day which amount to \$30,000,000 and capitalise them at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and they amount to \$923,076,923. On the hon. gentleman's own showing, and applying his own mode of reasoning, which I do not intend to dispute, although I do not endorse it either, the difference between our position in 1878 and 1889 amounts to \$523,076,923. The hon. gentleman will see that this is just as good an argument as the one he has submitted here. It may be open, no doubt, to the charge that it savors a little of the reductio ad absurdum. I submit, Sir, with all due deference to the hon. gentleman that, on his own principles, he cannot gainsay one of those figures or facts. There is no doubt our necessary taxes were \$19,000,000 in 1875. He puts himself the rate of interest at $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent then. He puts the rate of interest at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. now. He places our necessary taxes now at \$30,000,000, and he cannot gainsay that capitalised on his own principles it would amount to \$923,076,923, and that we are so much worse off now than we were a few years ago. I contend, Sir, that this is just as logical a deduction from the proposition he laid down, as the deduction he has made. It is the rule reversed it is true, but it is a poor rule that will not work both ways, although this way of working it will not perhaps be as convenient to the hon. gentleman. He undertakes to tell us what the rate of interest will be in twenty years hence. That is a bold statement. No human being can tell what the position of Europe will be twenty years hence, and no one can tell what the value of money will be. Men who are entitled to the highest respect are of opinion that Europe is on the eve of a tremendous war. If a tremendous war should break out, and should be but a prelude to other wars, as has been the case over and over again, it is extremely doubtful whether the great fall in interest which has taken place in late years may not be checked, and whether we may not have to borrow at a higher instead of a lower rate in the market than we are able to do to-day. I trust, for our sake, that that will not be the case; but the hon. gentleman surely cannot deny that that is a possibility; and as a great portion of our debt does not mature, according to his statement, for twenty years, we should be very indiscreet in heaping up liabilities on the assumption that everything will go on as prosperously as it has done in the last few years. But, Sir, I was very sorry to find the hon. Minister, in existing circumstances, using language in his speech which goes to show that in his opinion Canada has no hope or chance of paying off or reducing her debt. I am sorry that that statement has gone abroad on the authority of the Minister of Finance, even though there may be too much ground to fear that he is correct. At any rate, it is an unfortunate thing to parade at the very moment when we know the people of the United States have been using enormous exertions to clear off their indebtedness—when it is probable that the same hour and day that sees us renewing this large indebtedness of ours will see the United States absolutely without a single dollar of indebtedness. I think, therefore, that it was an ill-judged thing to parade the fact that in his opinion there was very little chance of our reducing our debt, but that we shall probably, on the contrary, have to increase it considerably. As to the observation the hon. gentleman made that we had good assets to show for this indebtedness, we have certainly assets, but I do not know what kind he describes as good. I do not believe that among all our canals and railways there is a single one which is paying interest on its cost, or even a fraction of it. If there be, I should be glad to know it. It is not the Intercolonial Railway; it is not the great majority of our canals; I have examined the Public Accounts, and I know of none, and I can think of none which at this moment will pay even its working expenses; and I doubt if those are the kinds of assets which it is desirable to parade to the world. The hon. gentleman goes on further to say that in dealing with the savings banks he has come to the conclusion to reduce the rate of interest. Well, Sir, I congratulate the hon. gentleman on having had the good sense at last, after much struggling, to adopt the policy which has been recommended from this side of the House for several years. In this case also his course is rather at variance with what his predecessors argued and did. But I think the hon. gentleman is correct, and I shall uphold him. At the same time, what is to be said of the arguments advanced to us so often by his colleagues and supporters? We were told, Sir, that this rate of interest was kept up for the special benefit and advantage of the poor of Canada, who had been no doubt heavily oppressed by the hon. gentleman's tariff, and might, therefore, claim some right to be considered in these matters. Now, Sir, I know very well, and the returns brought down to this House show clearly, that the great bulk of the deposits, as to amount, if not as to number, are not held by poor people or by people who can be described as needy at all, but by people of considerable means. I always have thought that it was a mistake on the part of the Government to compete against the banks and to offer to borrow money at a higher interest than the current market rate. I say that the hon. gentleman is right, but again he puts himself into contradiction with his supporters, and again he has adopted the policy recommended on this side of the House. That, Sir, however, is to his credit. The only pity is that it was not adopted earlier and practiced by those who preceded him, although it is better that it is done even now. Then, Sir, all through these remarks the hon. gentleman calls attention to the fall in the rate of interest, as if the hon. gentleman was entitled to considerable credit, because all over the civilised world in the last few years there has been a very marked reduction in the rate of interest. Well, Sir, I am very glad, for the sake of the people of Canada, that we have had a reduction in the rate of interest; but perhaps I may be permitted to quote to the hon. gentleman some remarks which caught my eye sometime ago, as to the share which the hon. gentleman and other persons similarly situated, on the other side of the House, may have had in this matter. I find that, a long time ago, a gentleman dealing with questions of a somewhat similar character, took occasion to observe as follows:—

"The wheel is now revolving, and we are only the fly on the wheel, we cannot delay it."

The name of the person who made that statement was John A. Macdonald, and it was made on the 21st day of September, 1864, at a certain dinner at Halifax. I cannot for a moment suppose that the John Alexander Macdonald, who is stated to have made that remark, could be the hon. gentleman of the same name who took part in a little incident a few days ago. He was the hon. gentleman's countryman and namesake, no doubt, perhaps a godfather to him. At any rate, whatever he was, he was truly the only and original fly on the wheel. I regret, Sir, that my inadvertency in quoting a statement of the hon. gentleman should have led to a misunderstanding between myself and him and some of his colleagues. I remember some years afterwards quoting this remark of his, and I am now calling attention to the fact that this aforesaid John A. Macdonald, whoever he may be, said that himself and his colleagues were the only original flies on the wheel.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is convicting himself as a plagiarist, because I have always given him credit, when he used that simile, of being original; but we now find that it was stolen, without being credited either.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Certainly, certainly; and with that spirit of justice which has always distinguished me, I now put the laurel crown on the right head, regretting that it is a little balder than it was when the speech from which I am now quoting was made, and therefore more in need of laurel crowns. The truth is that the income of the people of Canada has been considerably reduced. There is no doubt that large classes of people are receiving smaller incomes to-day than they did a few years ago; there is no doubt that the fall in the rate of interest would slightly alleviate that misfortune; but what sort of statesmanship, what sort of policy is this? Here, by a special dispensation of Providence, as one may say, over which the hon. gentleman and his colleagues certainly had no control, by an extraordinary fall in the rate of interest all over the world, our burdens were in a fair way, no thanks to them, however, of being reduced, and the hon. gentleman comes along and absorbs it all, and makes it an excuse for imposing other burdens on the people that there has been a fall in the rate of interest. That has been his argument; and the hon. gentleman did not, so far as I can see, show why he demanded so large a sum. If I am correct in my reading of the statement, he had already the power to borrow $11,000,000, and he now wants $25,000,000. That makes $36,000,000 in all. He, I presume, intends to apply $3,000,000 of that to the redemption of debts due.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Anything that falls due of course will be paid out of the $3,000,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is about $1,000,000 of deficit expected, according to the statement of the hon. gentleman. He asks for $6,000,000 for Public Works, and he has $5,000,000 floating debt, which, if I understood him correctly, he will pay out of the proceeds of the loan.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And there are about $4,000,000 of railway subsidies, which may be expected to mature within the next year or two, making in all about $19,000,000. Well, I would not object to the hon. gentleman taking a reasonable margin, but I must say that between $19,000,000 and $36,000,000 there is a very wide gap, and that the House has some fair ground to suppose that there must be some other reason for a demand of this kind than those the hon. gentleman finds it convenient to give. No doubt it is true we have not infrequently allowed large sums of this kind to remain at the disposal of the Government, but not, I think, as large a sum as that which he now proposes, which amounts to about $17,000,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, I will give the hon. gentleman a very good precedent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have not examined that subject minutely, and it would require me to go through a lot of details before I could do so, but evidently there is a large gap there. Then there was another point which the hon. gentleman made, and which I fail to understand, although possibly he may be correct in that respect. The hon. gentleman stated, I think, that he required legislative authority to lower the rate of interest on the savings banks deposits.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What clause or what statute contains that provision? I do not at the moment recollect that we did anything more than take power to pay on those deposits a rate of interest not exceeding four per cent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; it is not less than four per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, if it is not less than four per cent., of course the hon. gentleman is justified in taking legislative authority to reduce the rate. My recollection may be wrong, as I had only time to peruse the hon. gentleman's speech within a few moments, and I was under the impression that we had the power to reduce the rate of our own proper motion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; the clause in the Bill in the Statute requires it to be not less than four per cent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If that be the case, I have nothing more to say on that point. I only regret I am unable to share in the very roseate view the hon. gentleman gave us, and I will point out to him that the calculation on which he relies will apply with as much force to the mode of capitalising the debt, which I lay before the House, as to that which he lays before the House; and I regret that the hon. gentleman, in his speech, should have made use of calculations of that kind, because I doubt, if they should happen to make their way to the other side of the Atlantic, whether they will receive there that unbounded approbation which, I am given to understand, they received here on the occasion of the hon. gentleman's last speech, at the hands of supporters.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am very sorry the hon. gentleman was not here when I brought this subject to the notice of the House; and I was so anxious the hon. gentleman should be here that I not only mentioned to him my intention of bringing the matter up the next day, but also indicated to him the line I proposed to take, in order that he might be quite prepared to discuss this question with that financial ability which always distinguishes the hon. gentleman. I must say this, after listening to the very extraordinary calculations he has submitted to the House, that if I have taken liberties with the supporters of the Government in submitting the calculations I did, I think the hon. gentleman will not be in a position to challenge me with taking liberties of that kind after addressing to his supporters the remarkable calculations he has made.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They are yours, not mine.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is an old adage that figures cannot lie, but I can only say, after listening to the hon. gentleman, that that adage should no longer exist, because if any figures can be said to be of a completely misleading character, they are certainly the figures the hon. gentleman has used. The statement which I have submitted to the House was based upon a careful actuarial calculation. The hon. gentleman, if he has done me the honor of reading my speech, will do me the justice to say that I did not approach this subject, in the slightest degree, from a party standpoint. He will search in vain in any remarks I offered to the House for the slightest suggestion that the action of the Government, or the party with which I have the honor to be connected, had anything to do with bringing about the improved condition of the credit of the country. And if I had not desired to avoid and been careful to avoid raising any party feeling on a question in which we are all equally interested, the question of the credit of the country, I could have claimed for the policy of my right hon. friend (Sir John A. Macdonald) and his administration a very large share in the financial credit Canada now enjoys. I did not do so; I did not make the slightest reference to what had brought about the change, but simply stated that it is as well known to the hon. gentleman as it is to myself that, fortunately for Canada, our credit has gradually appreciated from 1877 down to the present time. The hon. gentleman is no doubt right in saying that money has become cheaper, and that that has had a very large share in the rate at which we can float loans on the market; but it does not account entirely for the improvement seen in the financial position of Canada, and I will show the hon. gentleman why. The best financial standard in the world, my hon. friend will agree with me, is the credit of England. If there is a country in the world, concerning which there exists no doubt whatever as to any liability that it may incur being paid, that country is England. She stands at the head of all the world in financial credit; and in 1877 the difference between the credit of Canada and the credit of England was $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The Government of England could borrow money at $1\frac{1}{2}$ cheaper than we could, and the hon. gentleman will remember that our credit had then been steadily appreciating. Let us go back 20 years. Take the credit of old Canada, take Nova Scotia or any one of the Provinces of which the Union is composed, and compare it with the credit of Canada to-day, and you will find that steadily, from the date of Confederation, the credit of Canada has appreciated. But at the time we are speaking of, ten years ago, measured by the most undoubted standard of credit in the world, the credit of England, we were $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. below that credit, and we were obliged to pay $1\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. more than England was obliged to pay for money borrowed. When my hon. predecessor, Sir Leonard Tilley, was here, our credit had appreciated, and instead of our credit being $1\frac{1}{2}$ below, it was only one per cent. below that of England. That appreciation of the credit of Canada has gone on until to-day, we are in the proud position of knowing that our credit is only a half per cent. below that of England. That is a statement of the most gratifying encouraging character, because it is not a sudden change and has not arisen from any peculiar state of things. I will make comparison with the Australian colonies. My hon. friend knows that, a few years ago, the credit of Canada was a great deal below that of almost all the Australian colonies, to-day it is above that of the highest and best of the Australian colonies. Why? Because the financiers in the great money market of the world, where they make a careful and exhaustive study of the ability of foreign countries to pay, the credit of Canada has steadily improved, until to-day the credit of England is at the outside only a half per cent. better than that of Canada. All I undertook to do was to speak from the standpoint of the financial position of the country and not from any party standpoint, and I pointed out the importance of maintaining our credit, in the interest of every Canadian. I admitted the statement of the hon. gentleman that we had a great increase in the indebtedness of Canada from 1877 to the present time, but I stated that, in connection with that indebtedness the burden upon the people was not so great in reality as nominally it appeared to be. My hon. friend will not dispute that. He will not dispute that, if you incur a debt at a certain rate of interest, and you borrow the money to pay that off at a reduced rate of interest, the actual cost to the people is not as great as it would appear to be. It is true that I stated that our debt, with the exception of something between \$5,000,000 and \$6,000,000, which was caused by the unfortunate outbreak in the North-West, was represented by assets, but I did not say that those were assets paying interest to the Government, but that they were assets which were conducive to the progress and the prosperity of Canada. That was a perfectly legitimate statement, and my hon. friend will remember also that of those assets \$19,000,000 of cash is deposited in the sinking fund of Canada. Surely that is a good asset. Then, take the Intercolonial Railway. The hon. gentleman says very truly that it does not pay the working expenses, much less anything towards the interest on the money invested. I admit that, but I say it is a good asset. In Nova Scotia before the Union with Canada, we borrowed money at 6 per cent. In fact, we had to pay a little more than 6 per cent., because our 6 per cent. bonds would not realise par. That money was borrowed in order to build railways, which never returned a farthing of interest, and you had there no revenue from that investment, but the trade and the business of Nova Scotia was so increased by the increased facilities thus given that the Treasury obtained all the 6 per cent. interest, and we were better off than we were before the debt was incurred, although we got no return from the railways themselves. It is the same in regard to the Intercolonial Railway which, I am sorry to say, for the last year or two, has not been paying even working expenses; but you cannot measure the value of that railway without taking into consideration what it has accomplished for the country, the extent to which it has developed trade and commerce, the extent to which it has developed the business and the industries of the country which it serves, and that is shown by the enormous increase in the gross receipts and in the tonnage and the number of passengers carried. Thus indirectly, that is a good asset. It is the same thing in reference to the canals. They do not pay the interest on the investment directly, as my hon. friend knows; they hardly pay enough to keep them in an efficient state of repair; but they form a channel of communication for Canadian products from Quebec to the head of Lake Superior, and they even have their influence beyond that. They bring the products of the great North-West down to Montreal and Quebec, and so they afford an internal line of communication through Canada, the value of which can hardly be estimated, though they do not pay interest on the amount which has been expended on them. Still, I think that is a good asset. I submitted a detailed statement showing that, measured by the amount of what it would cost us to pay off the debt when we had the opportunity of doing so, the debt of \$227,000,000 was susceptible of a deduction of \$53,000,000. I placed the actuarial calculations before the hon. gentleman, and I am willing, in regard to that matter, to go before a committee of this House and to produce the evidence of the best actuaries in Canada to show that there is not a flaw in that calculation. If the hon. gentleman will accept my challenge, I will let him name his own committee of three persons, and he may be the chairman, and I will be prepared to show that these calculations are correct. I think it was my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) who said I had reduced the charge of \$150,000,000 payable in England to \$114,000,000, and that I had forgotten that it was twenty years before we could be relieved from the 4 per cent. interest. My hon. friend was wrong. In reducing that amount, I have had careful actuarial calculations made, by which I charge against the reduction the fact that we have to pay the 4 per cent. for twenty years, and I discount that in the calculation. I understand that the 4 per cent. is to be paid for twenty years, and that it will be that time before we can receive the benefit of the reduction to $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., but, if the hon. gentleman will look at the difference between $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. and $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., he will see that the reduction from \$150,000,000 to \$114,000,000 would not represent anything like the saving effected. It is after the most careful actuarial calculation that we have found that the net result so reduces this amount, allowing for the twenty years of the 4 per cents. The hon. gentleman has challenged my right to do this—and I admit that he has some justification for doing so—on the ground that it is impossible to say what may occur; that a war might arise in Europe, or other matters might arise to increase the price of money. I admit his right to raise that point, but it is impossible to deal with the future, and I think we must judge the future by the past. If Canada can raise its credit, as it has done, from the first loan which we placed on the London market to the present, step by step, while incurring the enormous expenditure for the great public works we have grappled with; if we have been able to bring our credit so close to the credit of England, which, as the hon. gentleman knows, is the great standard of credit in the world, is it not a fair assumption that we will be able to obtain, on as favorable terms, what we desire in the future? I agree with the hon. gentleman that, if, as he seems to imagine, this was to induce us to branch out into great expenditure on public works, something might be said in opposition to it, but I think the time has come when we should exercise the greatest possible economy, and my object now is to show that we have incurred an amount of indebtedness which is quite sufficient for our resources, and I desire especially to strengthen our credit in the money market of the world. I have no hesitation in saying that I believe there is no place where a financial calculation can be properly estimated better than in London, and I am prepared to stand or fall by the accuracy of the calculations I have made and the manner in which I am convinced they will commend themselves to the men who are best able to test their accuracy. The hon. gentleman says we may have a war. Well, Sir, a war is very likely, but a war would, in all probability, enhance our credit; because the moment there is an European war, the capitalists of Europe, feeling the insecurity of investment which may be affected by that war, would look for such securities as would be afforded by Canada, remote from the scene of action. There is no reason to suppose there will be any war that will affect Canada itself; but a war, instead of being a disturbing element and threatening our credit, would, in all probability, enhance it, just as it usually enhances the credit of great powers like England, which are supposed not to be susceptible of having their financial condition materially affected by a contingency of that kind. Therefore, I do not regard even a contingency of that kind, which is not at all impossible, as likely materially to affect us. I say that if our credit has steadily improved while we were making these large expenditures, now that they have been made, and that the country has the means of continuous development as a result of them, I think our credit ought to improve as steadily, at all events, as it has done during the period when we were incurring these expenditures. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman has said it was very unfortunate I intimated that we did not intend to pay our indebtedness. I did not intimate anything of the kind. I say that the credit of Canada depends upon her ability to maintain that credit and to pay. What I did say, was this: that in making a calculation of this kind, we were warranted in treating it as a loan in perpetuity. When the hon. gentleman borrowed in England four millions sterling, and undertook to pay it in 30 years, he had not the slightest intention of saddling Canada with the load that would have been involved if, at the end of 30 years, she had been obliged to pay off that loan. The hon. gentleman intended to do, as his predecessors had done, and as his successors have been obliged to do—he intended, when the loan matured, to replace it with another loan upon the best terms that he could: and inasmuch as these loans involved a charge of interest necessarily in consequence of the then condition of our credit, of $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., there was every reason to suppose that when they fell due, we would replace them with money borrowed, at the worst, at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. I think we may fairly take into calculation, in estimating the debt of the country, the burthen that it imposes upon the country. Now, the hon. gentleman has referred to my asking rather a large amount for the loan. Well, I was very sorry, when I was pressed hard yesterday by hon. gentlemen behind him, who did not understand that question at all as well as he understands it, and who have not had the same experience—I was very sorry he was not in his place in the House, because I believed that his presence would at once have relieved me from any pressure respecting the amount of margin that I was taking in asking for borrowing powers to the extent of \$25,000,000, when we had unused borrowing powers to the extent of something like \$11,000,000—I am speaking in round numbers. As I stated to the House, and the hon. gentleman will confirm my statement, the margin of borrowing power does not necessarily imply that you are obliged to put that upon the market; it merely gives the Government power to be used as the public interest may demand, in borrowing such a sum, and at such a time, as may best serve the public interest. I want no better illustration of that principle than the fact that when my hon. friend was Finance Minister of Canada, he obtained authority from this Parliament to borrow \$3,000,000 sterling, and he only borrowed \$4,000,000; he therefore took a margin double the amount that he proposed to put upon the market. I merely give that as an illustration, as a single instance of what has occurred all along. When Sir Leonard Tilley was here, and from time to time, asked borrowing powers from Parliament, he did not at all confine himself to the margin which he was authorised to use.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman will excuse me in pointing out that at that time there were distinct liabilities ahead, absorbing all that sum and more.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am speaking of whether at the time you ask borrowing powers, it necessarily follows that you are to use them. I say no. You are to use what you require, perhaps it is not even what you require, but it is the amount that can be most advantageously placed upon the market at the time. When the hon. gentleman went home he found that it was the wisest course, in the public interest, to float only one-half of what Parliament had authorised him to do, and the $10,000,000 of additional borrowing powers remained unused at that time. Now, I do not raise the question here, but my hon. friend knows perfectly well that the question of a sinking fund is a very important and interesting question. He knows that while I am not prepared to go into that discussion at the present moment, owing to the peculiar position in which, as I have personally stated to him, that person stands, it is desirable the Government should have a margin to enable them to deal with the question as circumstances may require. I do not think it will be necessary to say more on that point. I may say this, however, that all I said with reference to loans in perpetuity, was for the purpose of explaining that, as that had been the practice, and as, in a new country like Canada, that must necessarily continue to be the practice for a considerable period, I was warranted in treating this question in the same way as Imperial consols are treated. But as for not paying—why, what is the fact this year? We have already paid $11,654,308 of the public indebtedness, and this very year I shall be paying off $1,729,409 of our capital indebtedness, and that out of revenue. So my hon. friend and hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, will see that, although I intimated the possibility, I may say, perhaps, the probability of a deficit at the end of the present fiscal year, there would be no deficit, but there would be a handsome surplus if we were not paying off the capital debt. The entire deficit, and much more than the entire deficit, will be covered by the annual payment of capital that we shall pay out of current revenues during the present year. With reference to the reduction of interest in the savings banks, the hon. gentleman knows that I never hesitated to say that I was only too happy when I could receive a suggestion that I could use in the public interest, from gentlemen on the other side of the House. The hon. gentleman knows that I have not often had an opportunity, but I am the more anxious to avail myself of it, when I do have one, in which I think that, by following their example or by adopting their precepts, I can do anything to promote the public interest. Hon. gentlemen have long maintained that we paid too high a rate of interest to depositors in the savings banks. I think my hon. predecessor was quite right, nay, he would not have been justified in paying them any less while it was costing Canada as much to borrow money outside as we have to pay to depositors in the savings banks. I am asking this authority from the House, in order that as we obtain money cheaper, we shall not be obliged, while we give the best security that can be given to the depositors, to pay a higher rate of interest than we are able to obtain money for elsewhere. I think we are bound, in the public interest, to adopt that course. There is no change of policy. We are paying 4 per cent. for money now, and there is a prospect of being able to obtain it on easier terms, and we ought to put ourselves in a position to avail ourselves of that privilege whether we borrow money in this country or in a foreign market.

Resolution concurred in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER introduced Bill (No. 133) to authorise the raising, by way of loan, certain sums of money for the public service.

Bill read the first and second times, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Finance Minister was making some time ago a comparison, if I understood him, with the rate of interest in England. The rate in England may be placed at $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. now, or it will be as soon as the Goschen conversion scheme is carried out, and the hon. gentleman proposes to give $3\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. for our Canadian loan, being a difference of $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent., instead of $\frac{1}{2}$. The conversion scheme has been in the air for many years, certainly for the last five or six years, that is the turning of the 3's into $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cents, and therefore the 3's have remained stationary. Had this not been the case, they would have gone up just as the American 4's have advanced. When I made my last loan I obtained as good terms as the United States secured, and that is a better comparison even than Australia.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that House resolve itself into committee on Bill (No 132) respecting a certain agreement between the Government of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee)

On section 1.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I desire to know from the Government, as we are putting this bill through contrary to precedent and custom, whether they will be prepared to lay on the Table of the House the mortgage, within the next three or four days. The Minister said it was ready and in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's solicitors.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We will take the very earliest opportunity of placing a copy of the mortgage on the Table.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can we rely on that being done before the end of next week?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Oh, yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Because we should see it before we rise.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have turned over a good deal the remarks made last night by the Minister of Justice, by the First Minister, and also by the Minister of Finance, on the question of the position of the bondholders, the holders of the $35,000,000 of bonds. It is very much in the public interest that there should be no misconception on the part of the persons who have invested in those bonds, and who stand to us in a totally different relation, as the Minister knows, from the ordinary shareholders. I cannot help feeling that what we are doing in this matter, without the consent of the bondholders, is, so far at all events as regards part of the security, to make the holders of the first mortgage practically the holders of the second mortgage. As the bondholders now stand they are the first mortgagees on everything that the company earns, and so soon as the working expenses are defrayed, the claim of the first mortgagees inures. I can see no way out of the proposition now made but that so far as regards sums which are to be paid by Government for postal or other subsidies, the Government cut out the bondholders to that extent. It may be argued, I know, that the money which is proposed to be obtained will go to increase the general security of the bondholders, as it will be expended on the line. There is something in that as a matter of equity no doubt, but neither equity nor law allows you to interfere, without the consent of the original mortgagees, with their security, and I am seriously afraid lest this matter will be taken up and used to the detriment, it may be, of the company, and at all events of the Government of Canada, if it continues to be assumed, as we understood it was last night, that the Government have the right to retain as a set-off or in any other way the postal earnings and the earnings which would accrue from the transport of troops and other purposes. As to the law in the matter I am not in a position to discuss that question; but I think the plain common sense of the case is, that the rights of the first mortgagees are more or less interfered with by what is proposed to be done.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The position taken by the Minister of Justice last night was, that he did not desire in any way to affect the rights of the bondholders. He expressed his opinion as a rule of law, that there was not any right or security held by those bondholders that prevented the Government in case the Canadian Pacific Railway owed the Government, of setting off that claim by any counter claim that the railway might have over postal or other earnings. That is either law or it is not law. The Minister of Justice has expressed, without doubt, his opinion that that is the right which the Government has, and if the Government has such a right by law there is no danger to the bondholders. If the Minister of Justice is wrong in his opinion that can be easily ascertained. The Government certainly do not desire in any way to affect the security held by those bondholders, and that is the illustration given by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, that the revenues must mean what is coming to the bondholders after an adjustment of the debit and credit accounts. Whether it is with the Canadian Pacific Railway or another railway, or any other creditor, under the ordinary principle of set off, one can be set off against the other and the balance is the revenue which belongs to the bondholders. That, I think, is the position. I do not think, however, that the question will have any practical bearing, for I am quite satisfied beyond a doubt that the Canadian Pacific Railway will meet the interest. They cannot afford not to pay the interest. They cannot afford to be in default anyway whatever, and we have immense resources which shall be increasing from year to year. There is, I was going to say, no possibility of any failure, the land now will be selling much more rapidly than it has hitherto. The proceeds of the purchase money will be lodged with the Government, and the Government is obliged to pay $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on such deposits, and that $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. will be applied to the payment of the interest under guarantee. First there is a general claim against the Canadian Pacific Railway for the guarantee, then there is the claim which the Government will have to have a set off for, in case the Canadian Pacific Railway should owe the Government anything on that guarantee, and, lastly, there is the interest—the annually increasing interest—on the sales as they are made, all of which three sources of revenue will, beyond a doubt, remove any chance of the Government being responsible for any portion of the guarantee, in case of the possible contingency of a failure to meet the guarantee.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Have any of the existing bondholders made any representation to the Government about this?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. None at all.

Mr. MITCHELL. I must say that I quite agree with the hon. the Premier in one thing, that I do not think from the reasons he has given in the increasing population of the country, the increasing value of the lands, and the increasing business of the road, that the question is likely to arise as a practical question, creating a doubt of the payment of interest. When the hon. gentleman speaks with so much confidence in relation to that matter it appears to me it would have been wiser for the Government, if they had settled that question the other way and not to have raised doubts in the minds of the bondholders, that any question can possibly arise affecting the security which they firmly believe they possess. I have seen some of these gentlemen holding securities and they have expressed very grave doubts about whether it is just to them that what they have believed to have been mortgaged to them as security on that road, should at the option of the Government be taken from them, and used in the way of paying any liabilities that may be incurred towards the Government of the country in connection with the measure now before the House. While I believe that I do not think this is likely to arise, yet I know there is this anxiety in the mind of some of the bondholders. I venture to say the general class of bondholders have not had an opportunity of considering this question, and that 99 out of 100 of them do not know that such question has been raised here, because a large number of bondholders are in England, and it is there that any sensitive feeling in relation to this matter would have a detrimental effect on the securities of our country. The hon. the Minister of Justice having given his opinion to that effect, and having stated last night the constructions put upon their rights in relation to that matter, I made a synopsis from what I understood from the very ambiguous discussion which took place and to which the hon. the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Finance also assented; that the Government claim, what they now stated they do claim, their right to exercise the power of retaining those mail subsidies and paying any deficiency of interest. Such an opinion as that going abroad in England, that great centre of commerce and finance of which the Minister of Finance speaks so highly, cannot have otherwise than a detrimental effect. I regret that the Government could not have seen their way to declare, that they did not propose retaining any portion of those subsidies, and which subsidies have been mortgaged and pledged, in my opinion, at least, for the former securities that were issued. The member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) has asked the question, whether or not any of the bondholders have made a protest to the Government in relation to this matter. I can quite understand that the bondholders have not made that protest because they have not had time to consider it, or, indeed, they may not have even heard of this Bill. Indeed there is a question of doubt as to the construction of some of those resolutions, which has given occasion to an immense amount of discussion in this House. It can scarcely be expected in so short a time after those resolutions were submitted, that the bondholders, particularly those in England, could have had time to make remonstrances or protests against what they believed to be depriving them of the security they think they have the right to possess. I know that some of the bondholders in this country very seriously object to any such construction being placed upon the security which they claim they possess. I trust it will not affect our securities abroad, because if the Minister of Justice should happen to be wrong in the law, it would practically be regarded as confiscation of security which those gentlemen rely on to secure the payment of both principal and interest.

Mr. LAURIER. I am disposed to agree in a large measure with what has been said by the Prime Minister. I am fully confident, as the company now exists, that all liabilities of the company will be honorably discharged. The hon. gentleman implied that the present strength of the company was the best guarantee to the bondholders. No doubt the company so far have discharged their liabilities in a practical manner, and the present managers and officers of the company are men who prove themselves to be able, and honorable at the same time. And their personal honor and ability is certainly quite a guarantee to all their creditors, prospective and existing. But fifty years is a long period, and we do not know what will be the standing of the company after a certain number of years. If the company were to remain such as it is now, I confess I would share altogether in what has been said by the hon. gentleman; but we must provide for the possibility of changes, or of mistakes being made, and if they should not be made, then would arise the very contingency that we discussed last evening, what creditors, whether the Government or the shareholders, would have the first claim. It seems to me a pity that we cannot reach a conclusion on that point. Whatever may be the technical right of the Government, I think that for the honor and credit of the country we should adopt a broad construction, and say that, at all events, the bondholders must have advanced their money under the belief that all the tolls of the company were mortgaged to them in satisfaction of the moneys they had advanced, and I do not see that we can adopt any other construction.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Unless the Government have a clear right at law, not a mere technical right, to make this set off, of course they will not do it; but if they have a clear right at law, beyond a doubt the Government have no right to surrender their claim without coming to Parliament and getting the consent of Parliament. If I remember aright the words in the mortgage are, "all the tolls and revenues." These words are very wide. They must mean the net tolls, the net revenues. If all the revenues are to be secured they must be handed over irrespective of the working expenses. The word revenues cannot mean the gross revenues; it must mean the net revenues. In any adjustment of accounts between the Government and the company, that must be borne in mind.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The Government may have a strict legal right, but there is an equitable right to be considered. It is true it is the net revenues that are pledged; but would the Government have a right in equity, after having authorised the company to pledge those net revenues, to come in and claim them as against a subsequent debt?

Mr. EDGAR. The Government, if they undertake to retain these revenues, are representing Parliament of course; and Parliament has pledged itself in language as strong as it could use, that the whole of these moneys, including all the postal subsidies that go to the company, are net revenues going to bondholders. The Government are obliged by the action of Parliament, and are not in the same position as an ordinary creditor negotiating with an ordinary debtor. However, we are discussing this matter from a legal point of view, and in an indefinite sort of way. What we would like to know, I think, is what view the Canadian Pacific Railway Company take of this question. We have heard the view of the hon. Minister of Justice, and I see sitting beside him an hon. gentleman who is on the board of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and, perhaps, he could tell us what the view of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on this question is. I appeal to him whether the hon. Minister of Railways was correct when he reported to the Government in these words:

"The company are willing that all postal subsidies and other moneys payable to them by the Government of Canada may be set off against any interest which the Government of Canada may be called on to pay, and these moneys will, at no remote period, be sufficient of themselves to cover the interest guaranteed."

Was the Minister of Railways correct when he made that report to the Government? If he was correct, have the company changed their mind? Are the company not willing to put it in that shape? We have had no clear statement as to what is the opinion of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on that point, and, perhaps, the hon. gentleman sitting beside the hon. Minister of Justice can tell us.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. Premier stated that the Government had certain legal rights, and if the construction put upon those legal rights by the hon. Minister of Justice was right, they would not be warranted in making any arrangement different from those legal rights. But, Sir, we are now practically making an agreement between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Parliament of the country; and as this question has arisen, it seems to me that it is the duty of the Government to deal with it, and to deal with it now. The right hon. Premier stated that this could not mean the gross receipts of the road, which I admit, but that it must mean the net receipts. Now, what are the net receipts of the road? Are the earnings of $1,000,000 or $2,000,000 which come from passengers and freight, and the postal subsidies, to be considered as net earnings after the gross working expenses are paid? Can the Government deduct a sum from those net earnings, and then say that what remains are the net earnings. Because that is the reasoning of the right hon. gentleman, and it does appear to me that his reasoning is fallacious. It is this Parliament which has the right to say whether or not the Government shall be permitted to enforce the claim they are setting up by this arrangement. When a doubt exists as to the construction which the Government may put on an arrangement entered into with the Canadian Pacific Railway, it is the duty of Parliament to explain that, so as to leave no room for doubt. Why do the Government desire to impair the securities not of the Canadian Pacific Railway alone but of the whole country, by leaving a doubt,—and that there is a doubt is evident from the various opinions expressed in this House, and I know that doubt exists in the minds of the bondholders of the company,—and by permitting a measure of this kind to pass without removing that doubt, great injury may be done to the credit of the country? Why should they attempt to force the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to the wall by lessening the character of this security? I am not here speaking for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but for the credit of Canada, and I think that the Government should at once announce to this House that they do not propose to hold any portion of those postal subsidies, which have already been hypothecated to the people who advanced $35,000,000 on the earnings of the road.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It appears to me that the hon. member for Northumberland has not exactly appreciated the position of the question.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think I have.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If we were proposing by this Bill to legislate that we should take these postal subsidies, his argument would have force. But we are not. We are leaving the law just as it is. Now, the rights of the original bondholders are based upon an Act of this Parliament, and as we are not proposing to touch that matter by legislation at all, we are doing nothing that can impair in the slightest degree any legal right they possess. There is therefore no necessity, as my right hon. friend has said, for raising this question at all. If, under the charter which Parliament gave to those bondholders, they have not a legal right, it is not in the power of the Government to give up to them or to anybody else what belongs to Canada. It would require an Act of Parliament to do that. We are leaving the law as it stands on the Statute-book and are not proposing to impair a jot or tittle of bondholders' rights by any legislation. I put out of sight the fact that the whole $15,000,000 is going to inure to the direct advantage of the bondholders; I put out of sight the fact that $35,000,000 upon that property is a very small sum, and that the bondholders have the most ample security for receiving, under the mortgage which has been made an Act of Parliament, the full return of their interest from year to year. But we are not proposing to touch the matter by legislation. Supposing the Minister of Justice be wrong or right in any contention he may make, we have not the power to touch one jot or tittle of any legal right the bondholders may enjoy. Were we proposing to enact that we could do this, the question might fairly arise whether Parliament ought to do that, and we should then settle what the legal rights of the bondholders are. But we are not proposing to alter the law in the slightest degree, or to impair in the slightest degree the securities we have given the bondholders by Act of Parliament.

Mr. EDGAR.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman does not quite comprehend the argument I have made, and in place of my failing to understand, it is he who fails to comprehend the position. I am quite sensible that we are not proposing by this Bill to alter any existing legislation, but, by a certain ambiguous expression in those resolutions—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not in the resolutions.

Mr. MITCHELL. In the Bill.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not even in the Bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, in the correspondence connected with it, in the report to council of the Minister of Railways.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is matter of opinion.

Mr. MITCHELL. And in the fact that the Government have been asked distinctly to state whether they claim the right to appropriate these postal subsidies, which right they practically admit they do claim. That being the case and the postal subsidy having been, according to the opinion of the bondholders and the general opinion of this country, and I believe the opinion of the legislature, hypothecated to the bondholders of that $35,000,000, the course of the Government raises the doubt whether these subsidies will be affected by this legislation or not.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We did not touch the question.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman says they did not touch the security. Well, he has the opportunity, whilst doubts are being raised on both sides, of settling those doubts by declaring, or, if necessary, putting it in the Bill, that no portion of these postal securities will be claimed by the Government for the payment of interest. That is what ought to be done, and that is what I have been urging the Government to do. The bondholders understand that the postal subsidies are hypothecated to them as security for their bonds, and if they find that by legislation we have impugned the character of that security—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We have not touched it.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman has stated through his officers that the construction he puts upon it is that the postal subsidies are open to be taken by the Government to make up a deficiency of interest, and if that does not mean impugning the character of that security, then I do not understand anything about it. I thought it was my duty to lay this point before the hon. gentleman in view of the doubts which have been expressed on all sides, and certainly by every hon. gentleman who has spoken on this side.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It seems to me that the object of the Government should be not to do anything that would interfere with the credit of the country or affect the character of their bonds; and, therefore, if any question arises at all on this point, it should be dealt with specifically. It strikes me that the Act by which we have declared that those tolls and revenues, all rents and profits, which practically means deducting net working expenses, shall be applied for the purposes of those bonds, is practically an agreement on the part of this Government that in any subsequent arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway they will leave that intact; and, therefore, if the Government have a legal right to set against that, and I do not say they have not, they should not exercise it, because to do so would be clearly acting against equity and good faith.

Mr. EDGAR. With reference to the first clause a very important question arises. The clause reads:

"The agreement set forth in the schedule is hereby approved and ratified, and the Government is hereby authorised to perform and carry out the conditions thereof according to the terms thereof."

I do not suppose the Government intend by that language to enact Private Bill legislation for the Canadian Pacific Railway. That is not connected with this transaction between the Government and the railway. As I understand, it is only intended to ratify the terms of the resolutions which were passed at the last Session. It appears to do more than that, because it does not ratify the resolutions simply but it ratifies an agreement which was signed by the Government and the railway, and that agreement contains a good many more terms than the resolutions which we passed at the last session, and some of those terms relate, as far as I can understand, entirely to some domestic matters of legislation between the railway company and leased lines, or at least to matters which should be the subject of Private Bill legislation in regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company just as to any other railway company, and of which no notice has been given according to the rules of the House. I would ask the Minister of Public Works, who is chairman of the Railway Committee, whether he thinks that we can allow Private Bill legislation to go through in favor of any railway in this way. Clause 11 of this agreement is of that character entirely, and it says:

"Whenever a railway company which has leased its line to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for more than sixty years has power by law to make any arrangement concerning its line, or any branch thereof, with another company, then the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall, during the currency of the lease, have power to make the same arrangement, and to do whatever is necessary to carry it out."

Now, what under the sun can that have to do with the guarantee of these bonds? I am not sure that the language of this first section would or would not make that law. It says that the agreement shall—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Do you see any objection to putting that in?

Mr. EDGAR. I think it requires some explanation. We do not know what these leased lines are, or what their powers are. In Private Bill legislation, notice would have to be given for this, but here is an attempt to put in Private Bill legislation without any notice and without any explanation. If the members of the Government can explain what the powers of these leased lines are, and what object is to be attained by conferring these powers on the Canadian Pacific Railway, then we would know what we were doing?

Mr. THOMPSON. I think the hon. member is mistaken in supposing that this is Private Bill legislation. It is part of the agreement under which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has given up the monopoly clause. One of the considerations is that they shall have this power in regard to the leased lines, and that is a power which nearly every railway company has, and it was contained in the Bill of 1880. I may say that I propose to move that this section 11 shall be made a clause of the Bill.

On section 7,

Mr. EDGAR. With reference to that proposed new clause, reserving the remedy of the holder of the outstanding land grant bonds, can the Government say at what period those bonds mature for the principal, and at what rates of interest?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think they were 5 per cent. bonds, and twenty years.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

THE MONTREAL HARBOR.

Resolution reported from Committee of Whole on the subject of the release and discharge of certain liabilities of the Harbor Commission of Montreal was received, read the second time and concurred in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER, introduced Bill (No. 134) to make further provision respecting the construction of the Ship Channel between Montreal and Quebec.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and second times and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As I understand, from this time out, we become responsible for keeping this channel in order?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The matter may have been stated, but, unfortunately, I was not present. What is the annual or possible charge that may be incurred thereby?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The question was put the other day and I had not the answer at the moment before me, so I telegraphed to Mr. Kennedy, chief engineer of the Harbor Trust of Montreal, and his answer, which is dated the 9th inst., is as follows:—

"Absolutely no cost for maintenance except at one small place at Upper Light Ship, Lake St. Peter, and another near Champlain Village where the sand filling in requires insignificant cost to remove every two or three years. Experience of the past shows that as a whole the channel does not fill up, that cost of maintenance is practically nothing."

Mr. MITCHELL. That pretty much agrees with the statement I made, and what my experience taught me was likely to result.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). Why do the Government take over the appliances at an enormous cost if they will not require them hereafter?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They were bought with money advanced to the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal, and as we are now assuming the debt, and this represents a portion of the debt, they must be taken over by the Government; but when the works are completed, probably within a year, we will be in a position to dispose of so much of the plant as may not be required either at that work or other works.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). The hon. gentleman expects to realise a large amount from the sale?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The plant cost about $600,000; I suppose if we realise one-third the cost, we shall be very fortunate.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

GRAVING DOCK AT LEVIS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved second reading of resolution on the subject of the discharge of certain liabilities of the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec in connection with the graving dock at Lévis, and the assuming of the same as a public work of the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The proposal under this resolution is a somewhat different one from that respecting the assumption of the Montreal and Lake St. Peter debt. We were able to agree with the Government that the assumption of the debt for deepening Lake St. Peter might fairly be regarded in the nature of a work in the general interests of the Dominion, because it was intended to promote the navigation of the St. Lawrence and to enable vessels of great draft of water to come to Montreal to carry away the products of the west. In this case it is a matter of a local nature, and according to my judgment it cannot be treated in the same way. The first proposal calls upon us to assume the cost of the construction of the dry dock at the port of Quebec and to maintain it in future as a public work. With respect to this proposal there is this to say: there are other works of a similar character in the Dominion which the Government should have treated in the same way as they propose to treat the Quebec dock under the present resolution. A few years ago there was an agitation in Halifax for the construction of a dry dock, and we had several interviews with the Minister of Finance on the subject. The hon. gentleman stated to the committee, of which I happened to be a member, that so far as his own opinion went the dock of Quebec should be assumed as a public work by the Dominion, the same should be done in regard to Victoria dock, and the Halifax dock should also be constructed as a public work in the same manner and operated by the Dominion. The hon. gentleman was, of course, careful to say that that was only his opinion and he did not commit the Government to that policy; but he led us to hope that from the influence he possessed with the Government, of which he is such a prominent member, any opinion expressed by him would be favorably entertained. As time passed on the views of the hon. gentleman seemed not to find favor with his colleagues and we were led to believe that it would be impossible to carry out that policy. We then changed our mode of approaching the question and communicated with the Government to ascertain whether they would not advance us the money on same terms and conditions as they had advanced money to the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec for the construction of that dock. That appeared to be a reasonable proposition, that if the Government had seen their way to advance money to Harbor Commissioners for the construction of that dock and the other tidal dock, the citizens of Halifax had a fair right to expect that the Government would give them the benefit of their credit and grant the amount for the construction of a dry dock in Halifax. However, after some negotiation and correspondence the Government, I am sorry to say, refused to advance the money in that way as had been done in the case of the Harbor Commissioners in Quebec. We, therefore, were obliged to adopt other measures to enable us to carry on the construction of that dock, and the city of Halifax guaranteed $10,000 a year for 20 years, the Government of the Dominion at the same time agreeing to guarantee an equal amount. My contention is this: that if the Government are assuming this dock as a public work and relieving the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec of all responsibility in future in connection with that undertaking, they should now assume the $10,000 which the city of Halifax has undertaken to guarantee for 20 years in order to secure the construction of the dry dock there. That work is going on at the present moment; it is being constructed by an English Company under the guarantee of $10,000 from the Imperial Government, as well as $10,000 each from the Dominion Government and the city of Halifax, and although some delays have occurred, the work, I believe, is now fairly under way and in the course of another year no doubt will be successfully completed. Still there remains a charge on the revenues of the city of Halifax for the next 20 years of $10,000 per annum, amounting to the large sum of $200,000, which I think, according to the policy adopted by the Government here in regard to this measure, the Government are bound to assume. They are bound to assume that sum and relieve the citizens of Halifax from this charge that the citizens have undertaken in order to obtain a dock of the same kind as has been built at Quebec. I press that point strongly on the Government, and I think that the Government will see the equity of that claim. I think the Government must see that if we are going to make one a public work in the interest of the Dominion, that they should not expect that the city of Halifax would be called upon to assess themselves for this $200,000 for the completion of the work of a similar nature there. The next proposal under this arrangement is that the Government are to relieve the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec of $493,000 of the money which they have expended out of the money advanced by the Dominion for the tidal docks at Quebec. This, remember, with the $204,450 of accrued interest makes $1,536,160 which we are called upon by those resolutions to assume on behalf of the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec. That is not the worst view of the case. The hon. gentleman told us the other night that up to the present moment there has been spent on the tidal docks in Quebec $3,241,000. He also informed the House that there was remaining to be spent out of grants, $734,000, making a total of $3,975,000. Out of this sum, we assume, by the resolution now before the House, $493,000, leaving a balance of $3,482,000 which will be at the debit of the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec, when this balance is expended. This is the gravest part of the whole position, because looking at the revenue of the Harbor of Quebec, and looking at what has been done in the past with regard to it, we have every reason to apprehend that we shall never derive one cent of interest for that $3,500,000 of advances which we have made them. There appears no reasonable probability that the tidal dock, and the Harbor of Quebec, will ever enable the Harbor Commissioners to make any payment on account of this three and a half millions which still remains at their debit. I have been told by members from Quebec, and it is a matter generally known, that that expenditure going on in the Harbor of Quebec at the tidal dock has been a gross and absolute waste of the public money. That it has been expended there without reference to the value of the work itself, that it has been made largely in the interest of political parties, that the money has been wasted, that properties have been acquired for which there was no necessity, that contracts have been given out in an improper manner, and, indeed, I am given to understand that more serious charges than that were made by a gentleman holding a very high official position in Quebec, and it was intimated to him a short time after, that if he did not retract such a statement he would leave himself open to criminal accusation. The hon. gentleman never withdrew that statement, and the people connected with the expenditure of that money never ventured to carry the case any further. It would show that my information is correct, that the opinion is generally entertained, as to the misappropriation and squandering of the public money at Quebec, as it has been notorious all over the country, and it is known to hon. members of this House. Those two sums of money are very large when they are put together, and call upon us to hesitate before we assume such a responsibility or commit ourselves. I have no objection whatever to the Province, or the people of Quebec, having their own share of the public expenditure of this country, but I think it has been shown in this House, on previous occasions, that there have been grants made to the people of the Province of Quebec, under pressure, in order to obtain the passage of measures through this House in another direction, which have not been accorded to the people of the other Provinces either east or west. I remember, not many years ago, when the resolutions were before this House with respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway, that it was well understood they could only be secured by large concessions to the Province of Quebec. I remember well, Sir, how for days and weeks "No. 8" held the fort against the Government. We know well, Sir, that it was only by these large concessions which were made at that time to the Province of Quebec, that the measures which the Government had before the House respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway were ultimately agreed to. We remember that on that occasion a resolution was moved by the hon. the leader of the Opposition of that day, calling upon this House to express the opinion that large sums of money should not be voted to the Province of Quebec, without a similar appropriation, under similar circumstances, for the other Provinces of the Dominion, and we remember how that resolution was voted down by hon. gentlemen supporting the Government of that day then also led by the gentleman who now leads the Government in this House. We know well also that the present position of affairs, is somewhat analogous to the position at the date to which I refer. We have pretty good information to lead us to the conclusion, that had it not been that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were coming to this House for further favors, in the nature of the guarantee which it has just passed this House, that it is very probable the Lake St. Peter debt would not be assumed, and the vote which we are now called upon to ratify would not have been before the House to-day. I know, Sir, that it was an arrangement in that way, by which support from one side could be given to secure guarantees or benefits for the other part of this Dominion. And I think there is a general impression throughout this House and the country that that arrangement has gone about far enough. Let us go back a little and trace the history of these earlier transactions. In 1884, when it was necessary to secure the adhesion of the Quebec members to the vote which was at that time before the House, we remember that this House was called on to assume obligations amounting to $2,394,000. Of this amount $954,000 was voted for the 159 miles of railway from Quebec to Montreal, forming a connecting link between the Atlantic and the Pacific, as it was stated, and $1,440,000 for that portion of the road between Montreal and Ottawa, a distance of 120 miles. Then, $211,000 was voted for the construction of a line from Beauce Junction to the international boundary line; and, in addition, $960,000 was voted for the extension of the Pacific Railway from its terminus at St. Martin's Junction near Montreal to the harbor at Quebec; and although the whole of that money was not appropriated under the terms of the arrangement, the larger portion of it was. Then, we had a further sum voted, and the larger portion of it spent in the Province of Quebec for a line of railway connecting the cities of Montreal and Quebec with the Harbor of Halifax, called the Short Line Railway; and I believe it is well known that the money that was not spent in Maine was spent in the Province of Quebec. Well, Sir, in 1885 we had a further sum of $1,500,000 appropriated for the purchase of the North Shore line running between Montreal and Quebec. All these different items make up a very large amount; and while I do not pretend to have any feeling of jealousy towards the people of the Province of Quebec, I think they can hardly come to this House year after year to receive such large grants out of the revenue without themselves affirming the principle that the other Provinces of the Dominion are at least entitled to a pro rata appropriation for public works. I think that is a principle that should be admitted and will be admitted by every hon. member of this House. Now, taking those various amounts together, the amounts voted in 1884 for the Pope Line, so-called, and the amount voted in 1885 for the North Shore line, and the amounts now called for by the resolutions before the House, they make up about $12,000,000 which the Province of Quebec in one form or another has received since 1884 from this Legislature. Under these circumstances, I think that the discussion which took place here in 1884 may be fairly repeated. At that time the hon. Mr. Blake referring to the policy of the Administration, said:

"They are adopting a very great change in policy; each step, in my opinion, having a tendency against the spirit of our Constitution. Now, a third proposal is made, namely, that there should be payment to a Province in respect of past expenditure on certain of its provincial railways. I maintain that this is a principle now brought forward for the first time, and which, if it is to be applied at all, must have an application more extensive than that proposed to be given to it. I maintain it is not just to apply that principle to one Province and not to the other Provinces. I maintain that the claims and rights of the other Provinces ought to be recognised when this new policy is inaugurated. We know what the truth is in this matter. We know perfectly well, it is quite notorious to us, that the finances of the Province of Quebec are in a distressed condition. The statement has been made by both parties in the Province, by successive First Ministers and successive Treasurers, and it is evidenced in the very memorial which is upon the Table, as it has been evidenced by prior memorials, that further assistance is needed in order to establish equilibrium in the finances of that Province."

Then he goes on to show how the various Provinces have been brought to this condition of affairs, the Province of Quebec probably, by a larger expenditure proportionately than any of the other Provinces. He says:

"It is clear that the Province of Quebec at present, on the statement of its provincial officers, a statement made with authority, vouched upon the statement of the provincial politicians on both sides, is in a condition which demands the serious consideration of the Confederation. But she is not alone in that condition. You will find statements made from the Province of Nova Scotia, for example, and those who have endeavored to analyse, I know with difficulty, with very great aptitude to err for want of information, those who have attempted to analyse the expenditures of that Province will, I think, find that there has not been a very great deal to complain of in the way of extravagance. At least that was the result of such cursory investigation as from time to time I have been able to make into the expenditures of that Province, and I am not singling out any Government from another—there has been alternation of Governments—I do not find that there has been much extravagance, or that the expenditures have been in excess, to a large amount, if at all, of the demands of that Province."

He then cites the position in Nova Scotia, and says:

"I do not suppose my hon. friends from the Province of Quebec will ask more, or those sitting on the other side, though they might view my proposition differently from what I view it, I do not think they will dissent from the spirit in which I now address myself to them, namely, that it is fair and reasonable, under these circumstances, when a new policy of this kind is being proposed, to consider what its real basis is, to consider what the real condition of the other Provinces is, relatively to that basis and otherwise, and see whether what is being proposed as it stands, and without effecting proper remedies for the application generally of the new principle you propose, can be called just. I say, Sir, that for my part I should desire, and it is one of the things which is most important for us to consider, next to the constitutional question—I should desire that we should address ourselves very early and very earnestly to the solution of the question, by the adoption of some plan whereby once for all the question of the provincial subsidies should be placed on a permanent and lasting basis."

He went on further to argue in that same direction; and to show that while the Province of Quebec was undoubtedly in an embarrassed position, owing to its large expenditure on public works, the other Provinces of the Dominion were equally straitened in their financial resources. And he wound a long and very able statement of the whole case by moving a resolution to the following effect:—

"But this House feels bound to express the opinion that Canada, when (as proposed by the said resolution) recouping of the Provinces for part of the past local expenditure on railways, should have regard to the past local expenditure in other Provinces on railways, almost all of which have been declared to be for the general advantage of Canada; and this House regrets that the Government, while proposing a measure of relief to one Province, has not taken steps with a view to a fair and proportionate measure of relief, in respect of local expenditure, in the other Provinces."

The resolution was of course voted down because the Government then as now, had a large majority in the House, and the resolution of my hon. friend did not meet their approval. In order to secure the passage of the Act granting a large amount of money to the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Government had to secure the adhesion of Quebec influence; they had to make concessions to the Province of Quebec, which concessions have been continued up to the present moment, and the last act in the farce is about being played here. We are going now to assume this large expenditure on behalf of Quebec, while the other Provinces of the Dominion have not their just proportion, so far as regards the expenditures which they have made in the public interest. Look at these amounts, which aggregate about $12,000,000, that have been expended, and apply to that expenditure our proportion in the Province of Nova Scotia. We have public works there, which are as much in the interest of the Dominion at large as those in the city of Quebec, and those railways which run along the St. Lawrence, or those other lines which were subsidised by the Government this year. I have referred to the dry dock. Can any hon. gentleman deny the proposition that the Government ought to assume the amount which the city of Halifax were compelled to guarantee for the construction of a dry dock? Is there any reason why the Government should build a dry dock at British Columbia and assume the debt for the construction of the dry dock and its future management in the city of Quebec, and not relieve Halifax from this obligation of $10,000 for twenty years, which they have been called on to assume. It was only when the Government refused to place them in the position in which they placed the city of Quebec, it was only when the Government refused to make it a public work, that the citizens of Halifax undertook this obligation, which they had every reason to believe from their intercourse with the hon. the Minister of Finance, the Government would assume. The Government, however, subsequently refused to lend them the money on the same terms as those granted to the Harbor Commissioners of the city of Quebec, and the citizens of Halifax were called on to assess themselves $10,000 a year for twenty years to obtain this dry dock. I call on the Government to assume that amount. They have as good a right to assume it as they had to assume the debts in the Province of Quebec. Then there are other public works in Nova Scotia. There was a railway built from the deep water terminus at Halifax to Richmond across to Dartmouth, which was the subject of negotiation for a long time, and was finally built when the municipality agreed to guarantee 4 per cent. on $100,000 a year for twenty years, to enable that line to be constructed. That line has been constructed and in operation for a couple of years, and the interest is steadily growing. I notice lately that the Government have made a demand on the municipality of Dartmouth for $8,000 for the two years interest, arising under the guarantee for the construction of that line. I ask the Government if this House is to be called on year after year to assume these railways in the Province of Quebec, and all these public works to the extent of $12,000,000 a year, is there any ground of fair comparison, which will justify the Government asking the municipality of Dartmouth to bear the burden of $4,000 per year for building a road which is part of the Intercolonial Railway? I think this must have escaped the hon. gentleman's attention when he brought down these resolutions to relieve the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal, and the city of Quebec from such a large expense, or he never would have allowed his own Province to have been put in such an unenviable position; and he would never have allowed the inhabitants of that part of the country I represent to be called on to pay for railway advantages, although the railway in question is part of the Intercolonial Railway system. I can understand that in other Provinces of the Dominion equally strong claims may be made, and I have no doubt we will hear their views before this debate closes. They will have my hearty sympathy in securing a fair proportion, in proportion to the expenditure which has been made under such peculiar and exceptional circumstances. Then again, a few years ago, we required in the city of Halifax a small siding from the Intercolonial Railway, to the cotton factory at Halifax. It is part of the system of the Government to increase traffic from the coal mines at Pictou, and I thought it would be a great advantage to the Intercolonial Railway to have this additional accommodation whereby they could have their coal cars in rear of the city. Here again the Government called upon the people of Halifax, and they had to pay $9,000 to extend the Intercolonial Railway in this direction. Again, we have very large demands upon us in various parts of the Province for aid to public works which are equally important as those which have received the assistance of this Parliament in the Province of Quebec. A road has been chartered called the Hants Central Railway.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would it not be better to reserve that speech until the railway propositions come before the House?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I prefer making my statement now. We have a road called the Hants Central Railway, running from Truro to Windsor through a fine agricultural section of Nova Scotia. The company required a subsidy of $200,000 or $250,000 to pay for a bridge across the Shubenacadie River. I cannot understand why the Government refuse to pay the amount in order to bridge that river under the circumstances, when every little railway in the Province of Quebec receives immediate attention and obtains a large grant. This road would connect the Intercolonial Railway with the western part of the Province, would increase the traffic of the Intercolonial Railway, and would be of great advantage to the people of Nova Scotia. Then, again, we have a road running from Musquodoboit to Pictou, which the Minister of Finance in his election campaign, or in interviews with his friends in the city of Halifax, promised to grant a subsidy to.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). This is the first time that —

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have said so again and again.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman asked me before where he made that statement in a public speech, and I replied that I was not aware that he did so, because the statement was made in interviews, and I venture to say that the hon. gentleman will not deny that, to gentlemen in Halifax belonging to his own political side, he promised that subsidy.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I say most emphatically that there is not a word of truth in the statement. I say that I never promised a subsidy to the road, but I said to the gentlemen who saw me that I would state their case, as they presented it to me, to the Privy Council, but that I stated that a subsidy would be granted is absolutely untrue.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman's answer in the negative will suit me as well as his answer in the affirmative, because I know that the friends of the hon. gentleman represented that they had his assurance that the road would be built, and they are men who generally have regard for their own utterances and their statements. They are business men and prominent men in the Province; and these men have over and over again, to my knowledge, stated that they had the promise from the hon. gentleman.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not one of them will make that statement in my presence.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). At all events, they made it in the hon. gentleman's absence, and that is a matter which the hon. gentleman will have to settle with his friends. The statement was made on a very important occasion when the hon. gentleman did us the honor of paying a visit to Halifax. Then, we have another road, which is called the Nictaux and Atlantic road, which is not constructed for lack of the subsidy which was promised by this Government, but which, because the county of Lunenburg returned an opposition member, has been refused up to this moment. The Minister of Railways—and I regret that he is not here now—wrote a letter to the member for Lunenburg at that time, stating that the Government would bring in a measure at the next Session proposing to subsidise that road; and as, I suppose, the then member for Lunenburg had experience of the value of the promises of the Minister of Railways and of the Government, he was not prepared to receive that promise alone, but he got a letter from him and was not even content by having that letter from the Minister of Railways, but he obtained the endorsement of the First Minister to that effect. That letter was made use of by the hon. gentleman who represented Lunenburg at that time, but, in consequence of the county having returned a member to oppose the present Administration, the Government granted only a small sum, about half the amount that was required and had been promised, and they have refused to go on with the work, and it is lying over at the present time. I say that is a work in the interest of the country, that it is a work which, if Nova Scotia had her fair share of the appropriations which are passed by this House, as the Province of Quebec has, would not compel that Province to come to the Government year after year for assistance, but would enable it to carry on its works without further assistance. Then there is another road which runs from Annapolis to Liverpool and Shelburne. It is about 100 miles long, and for the construction of that road we would require about $320,000. If we had our share of that appropriation, we should be able to construct that road, and so provide communication with the western part of Nova Scotia, if we did not find that the fair share which we should have is being absorbed in other parts of the Dominion. That road would open up a fine section of the Province, and would give the people on the Atlantic coast the facility to get connection by rail with the Intercolonial Railway, whereas at present they have only connection by water. That is a road of the greatest importance to the Province. There is another road, the Inverness and Richmond Railway, which is connected with the Cape Breton Railway, and would develop a fine part of the Island of Cape Breton, a very valuable agricultural district, which would be connected in that way with the main line. I mention this to show that, if we had our fair share of the distribution of the revenues of the country we should be able to construct all these roads, and our Province would receive the advantage of these roads which would open up new sections of the country which are of great value. Then again, the Province granted about $600,000 as a subsidy to the Eastern Extension Railway. That railway has been taken over by the Government and forms part at present of the Intercolonial Railway system of the Dominion. Why should the Province of Nova Scotia be called upon to bear the burden of $600,000 for the construction of a road which is owned by the Dominion at large, and which the Dominion at large has the benefit of? This House has been asked to vote $2,500,000 in Cape Breton to form a connecting link with this road. The Province of Nova Scotia gave $600,000 for that road, and, under the policy of the Government, that amount should be returned to the Province. Then again, you have to consider the interests of the counties of Antigonish, Guysboro' and Pictou. They paid for the right of way of this Eastern Extension road which now forms part of the Intercolonial system. I think the taxpayers of those three counties are justly entitled to come to the Government and ask for a return of the money which they were called upon to pay for the construction of the road which now belongs to the Government. In all these cases, if the principle was applied to the Province of Nova Scotia—and I am quite willing it should be applied to the other Provinces as well, because I am here only speaking for my own Province, with branches of the subject with which I am most familiar—if that principle was applied to Nova Scotia, we should then be able to construct all these public works in the interest of our country, and open it up east and west with railways which the people are so anxious to obtain. It is in this view of the case that I object to the assumption of these debts in the Harbor of Quebec, and assuming control of the dry dock, and the debt for constructing it, and the debt for the tidal dock, and the large amount which that dock represents. Every hon. member of this House feels that we shall never be able to receive one cent from it, either for principal or interest. You may look at the $3,500,000 expended in the Harbor of Quebec for these tidal docks, as a gift; you might as well write it off your books at once. Hon. gentlemen know that with that $3,500,000, they may be kept on from year to year, possibly until another deal, or a final deal, is required with another Canadian Pacific Railway Company, when Quebec influence may again prevail, and when that large amount may be assumed by the Government of the Dominion. It is under such circumstances as these that I venture to protest most strongly against the assumption of these large amounts continuously and persistently on behalf of the Province of Quebec, without the other Provinces of the Dominion—and although I am speaking for my own in particular now, I do not wish to limit the principle to my own Province—I say that my own Province and the other Provinces of the Dominion ought to share alike in the public expenditure, as indicated in the resolution of Mr. Blake last year, when these railway propositions were before the House. I venture to appeal not only to the Government, but to this House and to the country, as to the justness of the proposal which we submit. I think it is unfair and unjust that the citizens of Halifax should be called upon to bear $10,000 a year of annual assessment, when the people of the city and harbor of Quebec have their dry docks assumed and controlled by the Dominion Government as public works. If they had accepted the proposal, if they had given us the money under certain circumstances, on the same conditions which were granted to the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec, we could have constructed our own dock at a much less cost, even if they had refused to make it a public work. But refusing to make it a public work, and refusing to guarantee the money, refusing to put us in the same position in which they put the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec, I repeat is an act of injustice which I think the people of Halifax and the people of Nova Scotia generally will resent. Then, again, with regard to that small piece of the Intercolonial Railway on the Dartmouth line—is it fair that the taxpayers should have to pay $4,000 a year, a small municipality like that, when you assume a long line of railway, running from here to Quebec, with other lines of railway down through that Province, for no other reason than because the people of Quebec have a more persistent and united influence than the people of Nova Scotia or the people of other Provinces have. They are able to exert that influence in a united manner, as one man, and that one man coming to the Government demands to receive concessions which are withheld from the other Provinces. I protest against this unfairness to the other Provinces, and I call upon the Government to take such a step as will place the public expenditure of this country in a fair and just manner, so that all the various Provinces may receive their fair proportion of the expenditure.

Mr. KENNY. The first clause of the resolution now under the consideration of the House provides that the graving dock built at Levis opposite Quebec, shall become a public work, and that the corporation of the Quebec Harbor Commissioners shall be released and discharged from all obligations connected therewith. That reminds me, Sir, that at the port of Halifax we are now building a graving dock, to the character and value and importance of which I desire to call the attention of the House. It has been constructed by a joint stock company, and is subsidised by a vote of $10,000 for 20 years from the city of Halifax, and the same amount from the Imperial Government and the same amount from the Dominion Government. The dock will be completed in 12 months. It will be one of the largest docks in the world, and I think, without exception, the largest dock in America. Owing to the changes in the plan of that dock, which it became necessary for the company to make in consequence of the recommendation of the Dominion engineer, and the engineer of the city of Halifax, owing, also, to the fact that the site which it was supposed would have been obtained for the sum of $25,000 has cost $60,000, the outlay has been much greater than it was at first anticipated. The company, under these circumstances, made an appeal to the Imperial Government, and I have it on the best authority that the Imperial Government has made an advance—I do not exactly know in what form—of $100,000 to enable this company to complete the dock. Since I came to Ottawa, I have asked the Dominion Government to grant the dock company a rebate or refund of the duties which they paid on articles imported whilst that dock was under construction, and I take this opportunity of urging that matter upon the consideration of the Government. It has been stated to me by those connected with the company, that this is very essential to its completion. Having thus placed before the House the value and the importance of the dock, I will contrast it with the Quebec dock. The Quebec dock will no doubt be of value. I hope it will give some return for the outlay which it is now thought, in the public interest, should be made upon it. But it cannot be of the same value as the Halifax dock, owing to the difference in its size. Besides, the Quebec dock can only be used during six months of the year; the Halifax dock, as hon. gentlemen know, can be used during the whole year. Therefore, I think that our dock has a stronger claim upon the consideration of the Dominion Government, and I hope that the Government will relieve the city of Halifax of the outlay which it is making upon that dock. I should be glad if possible, to see it made a public work, and I expect that the Dominion Government will treat the city of Halifax in this matter as considerately as it treats the city of Quebec. All I ask is that in this matter common justice will be accorded to all. So much for the dock. Now, my hon. colleague has referred to other matters which do not exactly pertain to the resolution which is under discussion; and when his attention was called to the digression, he mentioned that he desired, with the permission of the House, to make those remarks, and he continued his speech, and made his annual statement. The hon. gentleman treated us to exactly the same speech last year; at least the tone and style were so familiar that I think I have heard it, if not in this House certainly elsewhere. My hon. colleague has frequently found fault with the Government for its extravagance. Now, he says it is not sufficiently extravagant. His idea of retrenchment is to spend more money. Accusations have been thrown across the House to us by hon. gentlemen opposite that the support which the Dominion Government obtains in the Province of Nova Scotia was gained by promises of railways. It seems that the Government did not promise enough during the elections in Nova Scotia, for I do not think any references were then made to several matters to which my hon. colleague call the attention of the Government. I am quite prepared to say this: that if the Government followed the advice of my hon. friend he would be the first to accuse them of trying to buy the people of Nova Scotia. That will not deter me from supporting him in any claim which I consider a just one which he may make, and I do say that the cotton siding to which he refers, and of which I have a very intimate knowledge, and the Dartmouth railway are matters which deserve the attention of the Dominion Government. As regards the other railways and matters to which the hon. gentleman has referred, they were so fully discussed last year, and answered by the Minister, that I feel it is unnecessary to deal with them further, and I hope that on this dock question, it having been so prominently brought before the notice of the Government, they will recognise the claim which the dock company has for a rebate of the duty paid on articles imported which are essential to the construction of the dock. When the dock is finished I hope the Government will relieve the city of Halifax of all obligation in connection with it, as they are now relieving the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec. As regards the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec I may say that in Halifax we hesitated to put the harbor in commission, because we feared it might impose additional taxation on our shipping; but our friends in Quebec were wiser in their generation than we were, they took the risk and incurred the obligation, and now they come to Parliament and ask to be relieved of it. As regards the claims of Halifax on the consideration of the Dominion Government, I will give a few figures to show its importance and trade. The amount of customs duty which the Minister of Customs received last year from Halifax amounted to about $1,700,000, as against $300,000 collected at the port of Quebec. This will show that the value of a public work like the graving dock will be infinitely greater in Halifax than in Quebec, and I hope its value will be recognised by the Government.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) has urged the claims of the graving dock at Halifax, which he said would be of greater benefit than the graving dock at Quebec, because the harbor of Halifax is open the year round. Of course the hon. gentleman excepts those periods when the harbor is frozen over. Then there is a graving dock in British Columbia, which, I believe, is also subsidised by the Government. I represent a constituency which has as important a harbor as either Quebec or Halifax and we have this advantage, that I believe it is the only port north of Cape Hatteras which is never encumbered by ice. Our claims as a port in that respect are superior to those of either Halifax or Quebec. While this amount is being paid for the benefit of Quebec Harbor, I claim that a similar expenditure should be made on works of public advantage in other portions of the Dominion. In many respects we are at a disadvantage as compared with the port of Montreal. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) has pointed out the large amount of customs collected at his port; I believe a similar amount is collected at St. John, but the hon. gentleman will admit that we indirectly pay a large amount of duty on goods entered at Montreal, because in several lines of trade the merchants are placed at an advantage and are able to send goods to the Lower Provinces and successfully compete, to some extent, with the merchants of Halifax and St. John. The port of St. John was not put into commission for similar reasons to those given in regard to Halifax. The port of St. John is in commission in a certain sense, because under the charter the port is conveyed to the city, and the civic authorities are practically the Harbor Commission, and not only do they control the harbor but it is their property. It has been argued that St. John receives such a large amount for the breakwater the people should be satisfied. Since Confederation, 20 years, we received $422,000 for the breakwater, and during that period $58,000 has been expended in dredging. While the breakwater has been useful for the purpose for which it was intended, as a shelter for the small class of vessels navigating the Bay of Fundy, I am very much inclined to believe, but I do not speak with certainty, a large portion of the expense occurred through defects in the plans and faulty construction. Be that as it may, there is a more important matter connected with the harbor, and that is the work of dredging. We have a just claim on the Dominion Government to see that steps are taken for thoroughly dredging our harbor, as lying at the mouth of a great river running through the alluvial soil of the upper part of New Brunswick, a large amount of debris is brought down by the spring freshets, and this is rapidly destroying our harbor. This is more important because in a short time the city of St. John will be within 24 hours of Montreal, probably 18 hours, and then it will be the first ocean port in the Lower Provinces touched by the Short Line.

Mr. GILLMOR. Except St. Andrew's.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Yes, I admit that St. Andrew's will be reached a little before St. John. We have also a road which has been opened under the assistance of the Dominion and Quebec Governments, running from River du Loup to the boundary of New Brunswick, and which also opens another outlet, which has its termination in St. John. In view of those facts, and in order to carry out the principle on which those roads have been built, it seems to me the harbor should be put in such a position as to enable ships to come there, it being the first outlet of those railways which have been supported by the Government. Such a large amount of shipping comes there that it is of the greatest importance the harbor should accommodate them. From 1868 to 1885, while the number of vessels in Quebec was 14,000, with 13,000,000 of tons, I find that in the port of St. John the number of vessels during the same period was 24,000 with about 8,000,000 of tons. Of course the tonnage was not so large as that in Quebec, but the number of vessels frequenting the port was greater. We have now a large number of steamers, and we think we will be able, with the assistance of the Short Line, to get a share of the trade west. I, therefore, cannot too strongly urge upon the Government, that they should give us the assistance that we are fairly entitled to, for the purpose of putting our harbor in such a position as to accommodate and invite vessels to enter it. I find, on looking over the report of the Minister of Public Works, that for the last fiscal year, 1886 and 1887, there was expended for harbors and piers, $742,000, of which New Brunswick received only $33,435, and Quebec, $196,512. Besides that we find that in Quebec, under a special vote of Parliament for that year, there was expended on the channel between Quebec and Montreal, $191,000. Quebec harbor works, $432,472; Levis graving dock, $20,000, and Three Rivers harbor, $203. I do not object to any expenditure which will increase the trade of Quebec or any of the other Provinces, but I feel that I have a right to urge the claims of the harbor in the constituency which I have the honor to represent—the commercial capital of the Province of New Brunswick. It was promised us that if we went into Confederation, St. John would become the Liverpool of America, and it was held forward as the great inducement by which her people were asked to join the Union, that great trade would centre in her harbor and city. That has not been realised. We can only hope that the facilities that will be offered to us, if we get that assistance which we are fairly entitled to, as I claim under the federal compact, will give us such assistance as will increase the accommodation for vessels entering our harbor. With regard to the harbor, I may say that in February, 1887, the Government seemed to have awoke to the importance of the place, for the chief engineer of Public Works was sent down to survey the harbor with a view to increasing the accommodation. He spent between the 1st and 22nd of February of that year, very busily attending to that duty, but his engagements have been so great since that we have not heard the result of his labors; and, if I am correctly informed, no report has been made to the Public Works Department, or if it has been made that report has never been made before the House although it has been asked for. I do not wish to take up any more time at this late period of the Session. I feel that I am only asking for an act of justice towards the constituency of St. John, and I claim that the position in which we are placed, imposes a duty and an obligation on the Dominion to give us that assistance which is afforded to other parts of the Dominion, and which the situation and the importance of our port not only in regard to the Province but in regard to the Dominion entitles us to. I believe that the harbor is of that public character and public importance, that will enable the Government to see their way clear, to give us that just portion of assistance which we are entitled to, and which on behalf of the city I claim is our due.

Mr. ELLIS With regard to the general question involved in both propositions, that is the Montreal proposition and that with respect to the harbor of Quebec, I am unable to draw in my mind any special difference as to the result of the two. It appears to me they both lead to the same thing, and that is that eventually all the harbors of the Dominion will have to be free. In the speech of the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) the other night, there was a menace in his tones, and a glitter in his eye, which suggested that this was only the beginning of the demands on the part of Montreal; that these demands would be followed in the future by other demands, and that it was a mere question of time as to when the port of Montreal would be made free. He was backed up in that to a large extent by the suggestions of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), who is really a representative of the city of Montreal too, and I observe that the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) was of pretty much the same opinion in regard to the port of Quebec. Their remarks have been followed up in the same direction by the hon. members for Halifax, and for the first time we have found them agreeing to a greater extent than they ever agreed in this House before. Then my hon. colleague from the city and county of St. John (Mr. Weldon) comes forward and makes what seems to be a fair statement, and what is no doubt a fair statement, with regard to the claims of the port of St. John. Every harbor in the Dominion whether it be a lake harbor, or an ocean harbor, is a harbor that accommodates as much trade in the Dominion as comes to it; and if you can get that trade cheaper it is for the benefit of the people to enjoy it. In the end it all means that you are taking off a special tax on one part of the country and putting it on as a general tax on the other. If you do this for Montreal or Quebec, it is only fair and just that the same principle should apply to the whole Dominion over. That is, at any rate, the result of the logic which the hon. the Minister of Finance and the hon. the Minister of Public Works have put before the House. Let me say one or two words with regard to the St. John Harbor. That harbor is owned by the city, inasmuch as all the tolls and revenues from the harbor go to the city, and it is managed with no expense except the expense of a harbor master. A committee of citizens manage it. Notwithstanding the remarks of my hon. friends here, my friend from Shelburne (Gen. Laurie) and the other hon. gentleman, who are both Halifax gentlemen on this occasion, I may say that I have seen 40 or 50 square-rigged vessels in the harbor. If you can find 40 or 50 square-rigged vessels in a harbor where there is no water, you will see a sight of a remarkable character indeed.

An hon. MEMBER. That was before Confederation.

Mr. ELLIS. They were there, and the water is there also. There is in St. John a party of citizens who are extremely desirous to have the harbor put in commission, and whenever a harbor improvement agitation is raised in that city, this question for a commission comes to the front. The main argument on which it is based, I do not hesitate to say, and I say it without any fear of contradiction, is this: that if you put the harbor in commission, you will be able to get a great deal of money out of the Government, because the commission cannot spend their own money or require the city corporation to spend any, and it will be got from the Government. The argument is constantly presented to me as a journalist and a public man that I should forego my own views, because if we would consent to that the Dominion Government would make the expenditure, and we would ultimately get rid of the responsibility of it. I have never been able to adopt that as a view of public morality that I can support. A short time ago some of the representatives of the Province of New Brunswick interviewed the hon. Minister of Public Works, and asked him to give us some assistance. We have never demanded from the Dominion Government that they should construct unnecessary works; all we have asked is that they should help to put the harbor in a position to meet any growing trade that might come there. In addition to managing and controlling the harbor, we, in St. John, have spent something like $200,000 within a comparatively recent period to build wharves, which have become public wharves. The answer of the hon. Minister of Public Works has suggested that we might get an expenditure if we accepted a harbor commission. But I warn the hon. gentleman of the danger he runs in making that suggestion. I would suggest that he should get the report of his officer who was sent down to St. John before the late election; and if he could give us some assistance, it would be better to do that than put the harbor under a commission, unless he is prepared to place all the harbors of the Dominion under the same system. I dissent entirely from the proposition before the House, with regard to the harbor of Quebec. I dissented from, though I did not speak on, the Montreal proposition. I think it is sufficient for the Dominion to give a certain amount of assistance to those harbor works, as they do to other public works; but to put upon the whole country the cost of local works in particular places, is unjust to the whole country.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) If there is any lesson to be learned at all from the debate which has just taken place, and the vote we are now asked to pass, I think it is the great danger that exists in the initiatory steps that are generally taken on a small scale to impose a burden on this country for the benefit of one particular part of it. In this matter we are called to assume, as I understand, the total cost of construction and interest on the Levis Graving Dock, amounting to $1,042,454. In addition, we have to assume $493,706 of the debt for the construction of the tidal dock at the mouth of the St. Charles River; in other words we are asked to vote to the city of Quebec $1,536,160. If that was all that was included in the vote before the House, it would not, perhaps, be very serious; but it is just as well for us to understand where we stand in this business, and what will be the logical consequence of wiping out this indebtedness. So far as the Levis Graving Dock debt is concerned, it stands on a special basis. The amount required to wipe out the cost of the St. Charles River tidal dock is a mere flea-bite compared with what the hon. gentlemen will have to ask in a year or two. When that work was constructed in 1873 we were told that a guarantee of $1,200,000 would be amply sufficient for the purpose, and that advance was made on the bonds of the Quebec Harbor Commission; and we were to have provision in the statutes for securing the Government against any possible loss of interest or sinking fund. The provisions were well enough on paper, but as a matter of fact they have proved to be absolutely valueless. The hon. gentleman having got that principle adopted by the House in 1873, he came in 1880 and asked for $250,000 more to complete the work; and in 1883 he asked for $375,000 for the construction of a cross-wall. I have watched the debates on the subject, and with the exception of the hon. gentleman, and the hon. Minister of Public Works, and a few others, hardly anybody knew anything about these works. He came back in 1884 and asked for $300,000 more; in 1886, he asked for $750,000 more; and in 1887 he asked for $1,200,000. There has hardly been a year since he first induced Parliament to assume the liability of the construction of these docks that the hon. gentleman has not asked for a half or two-thirds or the whole of a million dollars, and he has always got it; and the same thing has gone on to this day, and we do not know whether we are at the end of these expenditures or not. I have talked with some gentlemen from Quebec on this subject, and they have told me that these docks are really of very little importance—that the large proportion of the money has been expended for political purposes, and that the docks, when finished, will be of very little use to the city of Quebec. Though $734,000 remains which has not yet been expended, I have no doubt the hon. gentleman will expend that; and judging from the past, he will be here again as sure as the sun rises to-morrow. And suppose they spend all the money, what will it amount to? It will amount to this: that this country will have guaranteed within an ace of $4,000,000 for the St. Charles Tidal Dock, irrespective of $1,000,000 which was voted for the Levis Graving Dock. The hon. gentleman knows that he might as well ask Parliament to assume the whole debt at once, as he is certain to do it a year or two hence. The commissioners will never pay the interest, they have never intended to pay it, and Parliament might as well know it; and when Parliament is asked to wipe out one-half of this debt, that is only a stop that will make it certain that Parliament will be asked in a year or two hence to wipe out the balance. We are practically giving the commission $4,000,000. We have paid the money already, we cannot get it back, and the securities are worth about the paper on which they are written. The commissioners never have paid any interest or sinking fund, not one dollar.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Oh, yes; on the original loan they paid $750,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Yes, of the $1,200,000 voted, $750,000 was taken to pay off outstanding bonds of the Quebec Harbor Commission.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; they are paying the interest of $36,000, and are paying regularly up to the present time.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I say that of the $1,200,000 we advanced in 1873, $750,000 were taken to pay the then outstanding debentures of the Quebec Harbor Commissioners, and the commissioners looked upon this as a real debt on which they ought, morally as well as legally, pay interest. But outside of the interest on that $750,000, the Quebec Harbor Commissioners never have paid and never intend to pay a dollar of interest. I talked to some gentlemen of Quebec, and they laughed at the very idea of paying any interest on that debt. It is well to ascertain what is the real amount we are assuming. I say it comes to this: Last year we authorised the Government to expend $1,200,000, of which there is yet $734,000 unexpended. That will be expended next year, and the total expenditure on the St. Charles wet docks will then amount to $4,000,000. I think that the mistake was made in the first instance. As soon as the thin end of the wedge is got in by one of these cities, and the Government gives its guarantee for the payment of a large sum of money, to be invested in some local work, the chances are, in nine cases out of ten, that the Government will in the long run have to assume the whole debt. That has been the case with reference to the Quebec Harbor debt. We have already assumed the cost of constructing the St. Charles Dock, which imposes a charge on the Dominion of $3,262,000 and we are now assuming by formal resolution another $500,000, so that we may as well make it a round $4,000,000, for we will have to pay that in the long run. We are assuming the cost of the Lake St. Peter improvements, $3,750,000, the St. Charles Tidal Dock at Quebec, $3,975,000, and the Lévis Graving Dock, $1,000,000, making nearly $8,500,000, in all. In the face of this expenditure, the arguments of my hon. friend from the Maritime Provinces must be acknowledged to have some weight. We cannot go on laying out $8,000,000, or $9,000,000 of public money in the cities of Quebec and Montreal for harbor improvements, without recognising in some way the necessity of improving the large harbors in the Maritime Provinces. As far as the assumption of the debt for improving Lake St. Peter is concerned, there may be arguments used to justify the Government in assuming that, as the channel is a matter of national importance, but there was nothing to justify the pledging of the credit of the country to the construction of a tidal dock at the mouth of the St. Charles river, Quebec. That is a purely local work with which we should have nothing to do, and a large amount of the money voted for it has been expended in electoral corruption, and to-day Quebec is not much better off from the construction of the dock than she was before, as I am informed by gentlemen who are interested in that city. Having laid out this money in these different works, it is, of course, to be expected that similar claims will be made from the other Provinces. We have St. John and Halifax putting forward their claims, which, having recognised the claim of Quebec and Montreal, the Government will find it hard to resist. What is to become of the Provinces that have no special claims of this kind. I suppose they will have no recognition whatever. We have been going on spending money in subsidising railways and building Government railways in the different Provinces of the Dominion, with the exception of Prince Edward Island. We have expended $71,000,000 on the Canadian Pacific Railway, $47,000,000 on the Intercolonial Railway, and I am afraid to say how much in subsidising railways in the Provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and the little Island of Prince Edward stands alone, although she pays her quota in taxes. The Island should be placed in the same position as Cape Breton, whose railway was built at the general expense. We are building a railway running from New Glasgow to New Oxford, a railway which was not required at all, except for the convenience and political assistance of the Finance Minister and his friends. The Government have built a parallel line of railway to the town of Pictou, which may be of some advantage to that town, but it is a disadvantage to the general interest of the public, because it forms a competing line with the existing line to Fisher's Landing. Railways have been subsidised all through New Brunswick and Quebec, and the one exception to all the Provinces is Prince Edward Island. The Government of that Province have made a demand on this Government that we should be placed on the same footing as the rest of the Dominion, and that our railways should be assumed by the whole Dominion. I am not now going to discuss the matter; but in face of the enormous charge which the Government are now putting upon the public, it will be impossible for them to resist the just claims of the people of Prince Edward Island to consideration.

Mr. WELSH. I did not intend to offer any remarks on this matter, but as it seems the custom in the House that when the senior member for Halifax gets up to speak, he must be replied to by the junior member, so when the hon. member for Queen's addresses the House I will follow him. I quite agree with the remarks of my hon. friend. It appears to me that the Government, in the first place, have spent their money without good security, and that now the Quebec Dock Company are bankrupt, and come to us to assume the debt. Instead of being a source of strength to the country, this company are adding to our net debt $5,000,000. I quite agree with my hon. friend that those large railway expenses, carried on in the Provinces at the general expense are a heavy burden. Well, Prince Edward Island has a railroad, but she has paid for it. I think she has been treated very badly, and that the Government in justice should return to her the $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 that railway cost. The hon. the Minister of Finance told us that when the Supplementary Estimates came down, we would see that the Island was not forgotten.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. WELSH. I hope that is the case, but I have been waiting quietly for those Estimates a long time, and you know the old saying that hope deferred makes the heart sick. I hope they will give us some satisfaction in these Estimates. While the members from St. John and Halifax are quite right in making their claims, I know that in Prince Edward Island we are in a more difficult position than they are. In Halifax they have their harbor open all the year round, while during the winter we are shut up, and I think we deserve more consideration than they do. I shall reserve what I have to say further on this subject until we are on the Estimates.

Mr. GILLMOR. I would make a suggestion to the hon. gentleman, and that is that our present system is robbing the Provinces of any self-reliance. They all come here for relief, and, if this goes on a little longer, we might as well have had a Legislative Union as a Federal Union, because the Government are taking charge of all public works, as it suits them, in the different Provinces, and the explanation is that they are for the general advantage of Canada, but the expenditure is divided amongst the different Provinces. I do not know where the evil is to end, if it is an evil; but it is certain that the Government cannot meet all the claims which are made upon them at once. We must wait and take our turn. The charge is fixed, and, as years roll by, it is clear that some must inevitably wait longer than others, and of course it must be expected that those who represent opposition constituencies will have to wait longer than those who are more favored. Still, I would bring under the notice of the Government the constituency that I represent, and I would call their attention to what they already know, that the port of St. Andrew's is coming into notoriety very rapidly. It is the highest part of the Atlantic coast to Montreal and to all the west, and, although we have great natural advantages, some little expenditure will be needed to make the harbor accessible to those vessels for which other harbors are clamoring. I think that, from the increase of trade, in all the harbors that have been mentioned and from all the facilities they have to accommodate vessels, they do not need assistance as much as we do. I do not hear of any damage occurring to vessels from want of space in those harbors, and I think the money which is voted to them would be as well in the Treasury and better in the pockets of the people than it would be in expenditure on those harbors. They say that there was a revenue of $800,000 from the harbor of Quebec, $1,000,000 from Halifax, and $1,000,000 from St. John. The revenue was that from St. John twenty years ago, and I think the Government should not be too lavish in their expenditure of public money in regard to certain harbors. Of course, there may be an argument in favor of public expenditure on these works, and, for my part, I think the only expenditure referred to in these resolutions which is justified, is the expenditure for the opening of the St. Peter's channel, as a work to be paid for out of the Dominion Treasury. As to Montreal, St. John, and Halifax, I say that the localities, being the centres of wealth, being placed where they are by nature for their own advantage, must have the cream of the trade, and you find in those places that their merchant princes are erecting palaces, but it is unfair to the millions of the people of Canada to say that certain work is for the general advantage in those cities. Of course, if I succeeded in running my saw mill, that is in one sense for the general advantage of Canada, because all that constitutes the wealth of the people or of the individuals who form the population of the country is for the general advantage. Still, I think the Government ought to be careful in their expenditure. I must say that I did not enjoy the statement of the Minister of Finance that he thought it was time to cry "halt." I do not want to see "halt" cried before you come to my county. If you have started out on this benevolent mission, I think you must deal out justice to every locality, and you should not stop short in New Brunswick before you have done justice to every part of the Province. There is a railway that runs through my county, 84 miles in length, and I think that railway is as much for the general advantage as any other railway that has been aided, and that railway is suffering under financial depression in regard to building it and to running it. Last year you loaned $17,000 to a road in Albert County, N.B., it would take twice that amount to pay the claims on the road I have referred to, and I think you are doing a great injustice to Canada with these claims. People flock here with these claims. We cannot take charge of all the works in Canada and pay them out of the Dominion Treasury. If this goes on much further, the Prime Minister's view in favor of Legislative Union would be the best, and then we might dispense with the Local Legislatures and save that expense.

Resolution reported, and concurred in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER introduced Bill (No. 135) relating to certain advances made to the Quebec Harbor Commissioners.

Bill read the first and second times, and considered in committee and reported.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved second reading of Bill (No. 121) to amend Chapter 33 of the Revised Statutes of Canada respecting the Duties of Customs.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You have finally come to the conclusion that it is not necessary to attach to this a schedule showing that the articles heretofore made free, are on the free list?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No. The Minister of Justice says there is no doubt.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They are now on the free list, and they must stay there till they are taken off.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, quite so.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved second reading of Bill (No. 126) to amend Chapter 124 of the Revised Statutes of Canada respecting Insurance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But it is not printed or distributed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, but I thought we might take it up, seeing that both sides of the House seemed to be perfectly satisfied with the statement that the effect of this

Mr. GILLMOB.

Bill is simply to place insurance companies having charters from Local Legislatures in the same position as foreign companies, that is, to enable them to do a fire and life insurance business by making the necessary deposits and complying with the requirements of the Dominion Statute. If these chartered companies receive the sanction of the Governor in Council, and make the necessary deposits, they have the same power to do business here that the American companies have.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does that affect marine as well as life and fire companies?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Now, is there not some risk that these charters may contain provisions more or less at variance with the general Insurance Act.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will observe that the first thing that is done when an application comes from any one of these parties, is to refer it to the Superintendent of Insurance to report upon, and if there is found to be any defect or any difficulty, they are refused. If they are found to be in conformity with other general enactments and the principles that are adopted here, and the company is one whose security is considered ample, then it is allowed, by making the necessary deposit, to transact business throughout Canada in the same way as foreign companies.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is, we give the Government, to a considerable extent, dispensing powers. Now, some of these companies, no doubt respectable companies, will come to the Government, and it will happen occasionally that there will be some variation in their charters, and if these happen to be influentially supported, if gentlemen who have a considerable interest in maintaining the present Government, press strongly upon the hon. Finance Minister of the day that a little trifling deviation should be waved, it appears to me there will be no security at all, but that the Act may be infringed upon, first in one point and then in another, and that we will have considerable trouble in this matter. I think that in addition to requiring a deposit, they should be required to conform to the general provisions of the Insurance Act which was drawn up with a good deal of trouble, and which cannot be departed from without giving rise to a great many complaints on the part of the various companies that do business under it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I cannot answer to what may occur when the hon. gentleman himself is on this side of the House, but I can assure him that while the present Government retain power, there will be no possibility of this Act being abused in the way in which he refers. The hon. gentleman knows how thoroughly we recognise our responsibility to Parliament, and that any action of that kind would expose us to the animadversion of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But I recollect a certain dogma laid down by the hon. gentlemen opposite, which was to the effect that anything that Parliament sanctioned of course became law, that it was no longer illegal. I think the hon. gentlemen should guard against such a possibility as I have referred to. I am quite sure, from my own experience, that application will be made, either to him or to his successors, as the case may be, on the part of some persons interested in these companies, to permit certain deviations which may not in themselves appear to be of very great importance. In that way there would be very considerable fear that our general Act would be set at naught.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would suggest that these words be added to the clause: "The privilege of obtaining a Dominion license upon making the necessary deposit with the Receiver General, and in other respects complying with the provisions of the Insurance Act."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that would cover it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) may have had some certain companies in his mind. Applications will come from Ontario and Quebec more than from the other Provinces.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My attention was drawn to this question from British Columbia.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Speaking for Nova Scotia, I may say that we are very careful to have our charters correctly drawn, and the conditions are more stringent than in other Provinces. A fire insurance company cannot take risks except to a certain amount, according to the capital and resources of the company. I have no objection to the insertion of the clause, but I can see no difficulty in operating the Act.

Mr. EDGAR. I suppose the effect of this clause, with respect to provincial companies making deposits, will be to bring those companies under the jurisdiction of the Dominion with regard to business and inspection.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. EDGAR. Has it been considered what the effect will be in a case of this kind: Take a provincial company in Ontario doing business under the inspection of the Ontario Insurance Department, and it makes a deposit here and becomes entitled to do business throughout the Dominion, under whose jurisdiction will it be?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That point had not occurred to me, and I will take the second reading of the Bill and consider the point, which is an important one.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

POST OFFICE SAVINGS BANKS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved second reading of Bill (No. 127) relating to the interests payable on deposits in the Post Office and Government Savings Banks.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Does the Government contemplate making any reduction in the rate of interest.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is simply an enabling Act, and the question of the reduction of interest will, of course, depend considerably upon the rate at which the Government are able to borrow money. We cannot continue to pay depositors sums very much in excess of what the money cost the Government.

Mr. HESSON. It would be a very unfortunate thing, when we remember that the money in the Post Office Savings Bank is invested there by our own people and is not sent to a foreign country, if we should reduce the rate of interest. A trifling expense may be necessary to manage the savings bank business, but when it is remembered that the depositors belong very largely to the class of farmers, mechanics and working people, I think it would be a great mistake to effect any economy in that direction. I trust no step in that direction will be contemplated by the Government. If it is necessary to obtain loans in the British market, I presume they can be effected without reducing the rate of interest paid on the investments of the working people of Canada in the Post Office and Government Savings Banks.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. SPROULE. It would be a great pity if the necessities of the country should demand that the rate of interest must be lowered upon money that is invested in the Post Office Savings Bank. If we look at the large number of poor people who have small amounts in those banks, I think we will understand the necessity of enabling them to receive the very largest amount of interest the country can afford to pay. They are not in the position to make investments, owing to the small amount of money they command. I have a return of the number of persons having money in those banks, and I find that last year there were 90,159 depositors, the average amount invested by each being $216. If those people had more money to invest they would be able to realise higher interest, and it is only in consideration of the fact that the security is ample that they invest in these banks. A country can always borrow money on more advantageous terms than private individuals, therefore the rate of interest we pay as a country should be no criterion to govern the rate of interest we should give these poor people, and if a private individual goes to borrow money he is compelled to pay a higher rate than that paid by the Government. I say, therefore, we should endeavor to secure not only the present rate of interest paid to those poor people investing in the Post Office Savings Bank, but endeavor to increase it. I hope the Government will reconsider the matter, and will come to the decision that the interest paid on the deposits in the Government savings banks shall not be decreased.

On section 2,

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I have not seen the provisions of this Bill, but I should like to enquire, whether it is proposed when a reduction of interest takes place in the Post Office Savings Bank, that notice should be given to the depositors, for any particular length of time. Do the Government reserve the right to reduce the interest without notice?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is nothing in this Bill that would oblige us to give another notice. I can assure my hon. friend that the point he raised is an important one, and that due notice shall be given before any action is taken.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. About how long?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. About two or three months, I suppose.

An hon. MEMBER. A month would be enough.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENTS.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved second reading of Bill (No. 122) to amend chapter 34 of the Revised Statutes of Canada respecting the Inland Revenue.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 4,

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) You add the words "on other products," what does that refer to?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It was felt that it should also cover the product of spirits, the same as it does with regard to tobacco.

On section 5,

Mr. COSTIGAN. This section is in regard to the change we made in the passing of this Act, for the maturing of spirits. Hon. members who took part in the discussion at that time will remember that when provision was made for the maturing of spirits a good many members of the House thought that it was giving a greater advantage to the distillers; and that the means by which the spirits were to be matured would result in giving the old distillers a monopoly, and it would discourage the start of new distilleries. In order to meet that objection, the section was changed at that time, giving the privilege to new distillers to manufacture one-third of their product and sell it, an advantage that the old distillers would not have. We find that though no undue advantage has been taken of that provision, it is necessary to change it, because it would leave the whole policy of the Government liable to be frustrated if anybody chose to take such an advantage of it. A new distiller might come in and extend his operations so as to manufacture enough for the whole requirements of the Dominion, and send out one-third of the whole product, no matter what that product might be, and in that way supply the whole country with raw spirits. That would be contrary to the policy which has been adopted by this House, that only matured spirits should be sent out for consumption. The rights of the distillers who started under that clause and acted in good faith under it, will be afforded the protection they had before.

On section 7,

Mr. COSTIGAN. Under the law as it now stands, spirits are given in bond to manufacturers of methylated spirits throughout the country. It has been found by evidence brought before the department, that what was intended for the encouragement of the legitimate trade of the country, has to a considerable extent been abused. Therefore, while it is not the object of the Bill to prevent the manufacture of methylated spirits, it would have that effect very likely, because we provide against the manufacture of methylated spirits as they are now manufactured, because no spirits for that purpose will be given in bond free of duty to the manufacturers of that article. The object of giving them free of duty in the past was with the view of furnishing methylated spirits to the other industries of the country at the cheapest possible rate. It is not the intention, nor will it be the effect of the Bill, to prejudice the industries depending on the supply of methylated spirits, because the department will be able to supply a substitute for them without increased cost to the industries requiring them.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Do the Government intend to manufacture them?

Mr. COSTIGAN. We have not been in the habit of doing it in the past. In the United States the Government do not allow methylated spirits to be manufactured from spirits without the duty being paid upon them. I think this whole matter will regulate itself in a year or two, and that it will not be necessary for the Government to manufacture or distribute this article beyond that period.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

SECOND READINGS, &c.

Bill (No. 119) to amend "The Bank Act," chapter 120 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.—(Mr. Thompson.)

Bill (No. 120) further to amend "The Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act," chapter 135 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.—(M. Thompson.)

Bill (No. 118) to amend the Weights and Measures Act, chapter 104 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, as respects the contents of packages of salt.—(Mr. Costigan.)

SUPREME AND EXCHEQUER COURTS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. THOMPSON moved for leave to withdraw Bill (No. 110) further to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act.
Mr. COSTIGAN.

Act. He said: The House will remember that that was the Bill which I proposed to suit the present circumstances, but it was too late for the term, and the court has adjourned till the 10th June, and, therefore, there is no reason for proceeding with it.

Motion agreed to, Order discharged, and Bill withdrawn.

EXTENSION OF LAWS TO MANITOBA.

Mr. THOMPSON moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 41) respecting the application of certain laws therein mentioned to the Province of Manitoba.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee

(In the Committee.)

Mr. EDGAR. This is a very important Bill. Have the Judges of Manitoba made any representations in regard to it?

Mr. THOMPSON. There have been two or three judgments delivered, which have shown the necessity for this Bill, and on the last occasion, a decision was given by Chief Justice Taylor in which he expressly called attention to the necessity of passing this Act.

Mr. EDGAR. I see that there is another Bill (No. 100) which seems to apply the criminal law of England as it existed in 1867 to the whole of Canada, while this Bill refers only to the 15th July, 1870. It seems to me that if the other Bill becomes law it would be entirely inconsistent with the provisions of this Bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will let this Bill stand until I see whether I will go on with Bill No. 100 or not. I see the necessity for making the two Bills harmonise.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 113) to amend the Summary Convictions Act.—(Mr. Thompson.)

STEAMBOAT INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of Bill (No. 99) to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. The object of the Bill is to give some relief to a class of small vessels which are being used on the minor waters, and most largely on some parts of the St. Lawrence.

On section 2,

Mr. FOSTER. The idea of exempting steam yachts of ten tons and under from inspection arises from the fact that the engines and boilers used in them are important, sometimes being mere steam pipes. The chairman of the Board of Steamboat Inspectors was favorable to having them exempted up to ten tons, but in conversation with one of the inspectors, it was thought best not to go to ten tons. Three tons will take in a class about which there is no danger.

On section 4,

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to substitute the following in place of the 4th clause:—

"The Minister of Marine and Fisheries, upon report of the inspector of boilers and machinery in whose district the steamboat is to run, may grant a permit to a fourth class engineer or other applicant sufficiently qualified by his knowledge of steam machinery and his experience as engineer, authorising him to act as engineer on a steamboat carrying passengers, and not exceeding 20 tons gross tonnage, and within specified limits in the minor waters of Canada, which limits shall be designated in the permit."

This brings it under the supervision of the local inspector in whose district the steamer is to run.

Mr. EDGAR. The objection which I was going to take to that clause as it stood in the Bill, I think has been removed by the suggested amendment of the hon. Minister. Under the clause as it stood in the Bill, I think it would have been possible to have given this certificate to a person who had merely a theoretical or book knowledge. In the proposed 4th clause there is a provision which I hope is distinct enough, that there must be some practical experience by the person who receives this certificate.

Bill reported.

ADJOURNMENT—FISHERIES PROTECTION.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I desire to ask the Minister of Marine what arrangements will be carried out with respect to the protection of the fisheries; whether the same number of vessels will be employed and the same arrangements made for this year as were made for the past two years?

Mr. FOSTER. The arrangements this year will be much the same as those carried out last year.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the same number of vessels be employed?

Mr. FOSTER. About the same number.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then the expense will be about the same as last year?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 6:25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 14th May, 1888.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MESSAGE FROM HIS EXCELLENCY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

LANSDOWNE.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion, for the year ending 30th June, 1889; and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

OTTAWA, 7th May, 1888.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the Message and Estimates be referred to Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. MARSHALL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to make an explanation. I find that during the vote the other night on the Canadian Pacific Railway resolutions, I was paired by the hon. member for South

Perth (Mr. Trow) with the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Brien), in the presence of the hon. member for North Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), and I left the House understanding that I was paired with him.

Mr. TROW. I may say, in reference to that, that I met the hon. gentleman at the door as I was coming in. I had heard previously to that from my friend the member for Prince Edward county (Mr. Platt) that the member for Hastings (Mr. Corby) required a pair. My friend the whip on the other side will remember the circumstances of the case. I just passed the gentleman hurriedly and I thought the pair was for Mr. Corby. I said so to the member for Toronto (Mr. Small) afterwards. After that the member for East Middlesex (Mr. Marshall) left the House, and I did not consider it was a pair. I mentioned particularly to him that another gentleman had spoken of Mr. Corby.

MANITOBA RAILWAY LEGISLATION.

Mr. WATSON. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call the attention of the Government to the importance of having a meeting of the Railways and Canals Committee. There are several Bills of importance affecting Manitoba and the North-West which were asked to stand over until the Canadian Pacific Railway resolutions would pass, and it is important those Bills should be called this Session. I would like to know if it is the intention to have a meeting of the Railways and Canals Committee?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was understood at the time that those Bills could not be taken up, until the law about the North-West and Manitoba for disallowance should be passed. Therefore, as the law has not been passed those Bills have to remain, because, in passing them now, it would be against the law as it stands. That is the reason those Bills have been postponed.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

Mr. THOMPSON moved third reading of Bill (No. 89) to amend the Dominion Elections Act, chap. 8 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

Mr. BARRON moved, in amendment:

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of amending the same by inserting therein the following as clauses two and three:—

2. In the case of a vacancy happening in the House of Commons by the death of any member, or by a member accepting any office, or by a member resigning his seat, or by reason of the seat of any member being declared void under "The Dominion Controverted Elections Act" (except as in the next succeeding section is provided for), then, and in every such case, the day for the nomination of candidates shall, in the electoral districts of the Province of British Columbia, and in the electoral district of Algoma, in the Province of Ontario, and in those of Gaspé and Chicoutimi and Saguenay, in the Province of Quebec, be within thirty days after the day when the Speaker or any two members shall have, according to law, addressed his or their warrant, as the case may be, to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for the issue of a new writ to fill the vacancy, and shall, in the other electoral districts of Canada, be with twenty days after the day when the Speaker or any two members shall, as aforesaid, have so addressed his or their warrant.

3. When a new writ for an election has to issue upon the order of the House of Commons, then, and in every such case, the day for the nomination of candidates shall, in the electoral districts of the Province of British Columbia, and in the electoral district of Algoma, in the Province of Ontario, and in those of Gaspé and Chicoutimi and Saguenay, in the Province of Quebec, be within thirty days after the day when the House of Commons shall have ordered the writ so to issue, and in the other electoral districts of Canada shall be within twenty days after the day when the House of Commons shall have so ordered the writ to issue.

He said: As some hon. gentlemen are present to-day who were not here when I spoke the other day, I think perhaps it would be just as well that I should say a few words now in support of this motion. I gave instances the other day to show the necessity, in the interests of the people, of taking away from the Executive the power of bringing on elections just when they please. I gave two very flagrant cases in which constituencies were kept unrepresented for four or five months. The motion I make, if adopted by the House, would take away that power from the Executive. The main argument of the hon. Minister of Justice against my proposition was that if the law provided for a fixed time within which an election must be brought on, it was quite possible that an election might be declared void by reason of the impossibility of the proceedings being gone through within the statutory period. It seems to me that that argument cannot prevail, because section 15 of the present Act already provides for such a contingency, and that section will still remain law if my motion is carried. Now, Mr. Speaker, the delays, it seems, are not due to any action of yours. The statute provides that just as soon as you are advised of a vacancy having occurred, you shall forthwith direct your warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and the delays occur after the warrant reaches him. Singularly enough, although the statute uses the word "forthwith" in regard to your proceedings, no such positive word is used in regard to the proceedings of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. I think it would be in the interest of the people generally that we should have some such law as I propose. There can be no doubt that the people believe that the Executive do not bring on elections solely with the interests of the people in view, but that they bring them on sometimes hastily, and sometimes with great delay, in order to gain some party advantage. It cannot be said that that is a right thing to do, and I think the time has come when we should have some such law as is proposed in my motion.

Mr. THOMPSON. I regret I cannot accept the hon. gentleman's amendment, and I am sure he will excuse me from, at this late day, going into further discussion of the matter, as we have had already the debate on it in the Committee of the whole House, and the hon. gentleman's object, I presume, in bringing it to our attention this afternoon is to have a division recorded. I regret I cannot concur with him that the section he has read removes the objections I pointed out before. It applies to the difficulties which may now arise as to the delays which may transpire between the issuing of the writ and its receipt by the returning officer, or any further delays that may arise after it reaches the returning officer in consequence of the inclemencies of the weather or the climate or other difficulties. I pointed out to the House that the amendment would interpose a number of fresh difficulties between the issuing of the warrant and the actual issue of the writ. However, I do not propose to enter into a discussion of these points. I do not mean to say that the principle which the hon. gentleman asks to have introduced into the law, may not with propriety at some future time be adopted, but that would require a careful revision of the Act, and a great deal of further provision as to details than his amendment now involves. His amendment, in several particulars, which I presume he does not expect me to point out, requires careful alteration.

Mr. DAVIN. I agree with the principle of the hon. gentleman's amendment, but I hope that he will not press it now, because really we cannot discuss it.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Barron :

Amendment negatived.

Main motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time, and passed.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 135) relating to certain advances made to the Quebec Harbor Commissioners.—(Sir Charles Tupper.)

Bill (No. 99) to amend the Steamboat Inspection Act.—(Mr. Foster.)

GAMING IN STOCKS AND MERCHANDISE.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 95) respecting gaming in stocks and merchandise (from the Senate).—(Mr. Thompson.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I do not object to the principle of the Bill, but, in view of the conflicting opinions of eminent professional gentlemen, it is very important that it should not interfere with legitimate transactions, and should only remedy the evil complained of.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have considered very carefully the opinions given and the objections raised by some persons who are bond fide operators in transactions of merchandise and stocks, and the objections of some who would like to be considered so, but who are precisely of the class the Bill intends to punish. I may say that the Bill has received the endorsement of operators engaged in legitimate business in Montreal and Toronto. A certain portion, however, of the brokers in Montreal engaged in legitimate business, have pressed strongly, chiefly in view of the opinions to which the hon. member for St. John has referred, to have a few words added to the first clause of the Bill; and although my own view is that the words which they desire to have added are nothing more than expressing again in a different form that which is already expressed in the first section, I have no objection, in order to meet the feeling of uneasiness which prevails among some of them, to comply with their wish; and I am advised that the addition of the following words will meet the objections they raise:—

That the foregoing provisions of this Act shall not apply to cases where the broker of a purchaser shall receive delivery as above of the article sold, notwithstanding that such broker shall retain or pledge the same as security for the advance of the purchase money or any part thereof.

Some of the brokers feel uneasiness on this ground: They say that they make purchases on behalf of clients, and that they expect the vendor to deliver the stocks which they so purchase, but it is necessary for them occasionally, in the interest of their clients, to pledge the stocks which are the subjects of the contract with a bank or with another broker as a guarantee for the purchase money which is to be deposited; and, under these circumstances, they fear that they may fall strictly within the provisions of the Bill, though I do not think they would do so; but, in order to remove any doubts on the subject, I propose to add this clause.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have been spoken to by several of the brokers in Montreal, and I think the Minister of Justice has fairly represented their sentiments on that subject. Of course the regular brokers are against the bucket-shops; they want to see them stopped, but they are afraid that this Bill will stop 90 per cent. of the business of the regular exchange, and the amendment which the Minister proposes is one which, I am told by several of the leading brokers, will ease their minds as to the supposed interference with the regular business.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be so, but it seems to me that, according to that view, we will stop illegitimate gambling and will recognise legitimate gambling, because a great deal of this business is simply legitimate gambling, with a certain amount put up. I agree with my hon. friend (Mr. Mitchell) that what we desire to do is to put down the bucket-shops, and the only question which suggests itself to my mind is whether we do not leave a wide door open for the evasion of this Act. I am not sure that it is in the public interest to facilitate the purchase of stocks on small margins in any case, and, if we could do it, I am not sure that it would not be just as much in the public interest to stop that kind of gambling in stocks on margins of 5 or 10 per cent. as to put down the bucket-shops.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The amendment may meet the objections of the brokers of Montreal, but there is another clause which may go further, affecting those who are purchasing an article of commerce on speculation. The Minister will see that questions have been put to certain eminent legal gentlemen, and that the opinion has been given that purchasing grain or iron or any other articles on a margin would come within the meaning of this Act. That is a practice which is so common in the mercantile world that I cannot suppose the Government intend to deal with that as a criminal offence. If the hon. gentleman would state the view of the Government on this matter, it might relieve the minds of those who think that this will interfere with such legitimate operations as I have referred to.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Bill will not interfere with those who purchase or sell iron, grain or other merchandise on speculation, but only with those who neither purchase nor sell these articles, but simply speculate on the rise and fall of the price. It is the intention that there must be a delivery implied in the agreement.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Of course this Bill was introduced in the Senate by a gentleman who is known to possess great ability as a counsel, and it is introduced here by the Minister of Justice. Still, it strikes me that the opinions of counsel should have very great weight, and when there is such a difference of opinion we should be very careful not to pass any Bill which might interfere with transactions which are legitimate in contradistinction to those which are illegitimate. No doubt the object of the Bill is laudable, so far as it will interfere with a practice which we should properly check, but, as far as I have been able to read its clauses, I am inclined to think that the Bill will have very much the effect which these gentlemen think. Mr. Moss, Mr. Osler and Mr. Blake, all eminent men, have given opinions that this Bill goes beyond what I believe is the intention of the Government who have brought it forward. If that is so, we should be very cautious that we do not pass a measure which might lead to interference with legitimate business or to any confusion in regard to it.

Mr. EDGAR. It seems to me that this amendment meets the objections which have been taken to the Bill. I would go a long way to support the course of the Government in this matter, on account of the very great practical evils which we have seen existing in my own Province of Ontario in consequence of these bucket-shops. In almost every small town in Ontario, there are scores of people who have been ruined, and there are many families that have been left utterly destitute by the gambling in stocks carried on in these institutions, which are operated principally from Toronto and Montreal. I know of one case in Toronto where a bucket-shop expended no less than $30,000 a year on its private telegraphic messages, and that must represent a proportionate loss to the investors. Nothing but very stringent legislation can possibly put a stop to that, and from all that I can hear the legitimate brokers and bankers are in favor of this Bill. In the third section, however, there is one provision which I think might operate unfairly. I believe it is the custom of the telegraph companies to rent instruments, or "tickers," to anyone who applies for them. They belong to the telegraph companies and are used for legitimate transactions in stocks. I see that, by clause 3, all bucket shops are declared to be common gaming-houses, and the instruments used for the conveyance of messages, in these houses are declared to be implements used in gambling, and are to be forfeited. I think that provision, when it applies to the property of the Great North-Western or the Canadian Pacific Railway Telegraph Company, two responsible companies which do not promote gambling or make their living by gambling, is too severe, and that their property should be protected from the operation of the Act.

Mr. LISTER. I think that provision is just what it ought to be. If you are to suppress the bucket-shops, it is necessary that the methods by which the business is carried on should as far as possible be destroyed. When the telegraph companies know that the business is illegal, and that their instruments will be confiscated if they are used in those bucket-shops, then, if they put them in, they should be confiscated. I know that in Ontario, Cox & Co. opened small offices in nearly every small town in the Province, and we know that the instruments used there were rented from the Great North-Western Telegraph Company for a considerable amount of money. Everyone knew that these transactions were not bona fide which took place in those offices. Everyone knew that those offices were places for the assemblage of young men without a dollar of their own, who went there with the hope of getting money in that way; and I know that in my own town this bucket-shop system induced a spirit of gambling such as never had existed before. I believe that these institutions have done enormous injury, and that the Government are doing what is right in grappling with the question. In that they will have the approval of everyone; and if these institutions could not get an arrangement with the telegraph company, their business could not be conducted in the ordinary way, and that would be one of the most effective modes of putting a stop to this nefarious business, for I can call it by no other term.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it is to be regretted that the Bill, which was well considered before it came to us from the Senate, could not have been passed in the shape it came here. I think the complaints against it were not well founded, and that the efforts that have been made to influence members of the House against the Bill, and to enlist the press against it, should be looked upon with a good deal of suspicion. Every channel has been utilised for the purpose of defeating that Bill; yet I think that any person who has given a moment's consideration will admit its importance. The evil aimed at is one of those which are leaching the life-blood out of the people. In every town and city in Canada where these shops have been opened, hundreds, and I think I may say thousands, of people have been brought to ruin by means of them. Not only private individuals, but banks and moneyed institutions, in fact, almost every corporation that has gone down, owes its fall, directly or indirectly, to gambling in stocks. Now, if we can put down this form of gambling I think it would be a great good to the country. I think there is nothing in the Bill, as sent to us from the Senate, that would interfere with what ought to be recognised as legitimate business transactions; therefore I think it is a pity that it does not pass in the shape in which it came to us.

Mr. DAVIN. When I rose a moment ago it was to protest against the method of passing Bills through this House. Hon. gentlemen on the Government side speak so low that we cannot hear them, and hon. gentlemen on the Opposition side speak so low that we cannot hear them, and on both sides hon. gentlemen seem to consider that the House is contained within a narrow circle described around your chair. Now, I may say in regard to this measure, that I shall vote with the Government for this reason—I assume that they have well considered the principle involved in it; and I may also say that my constituents are not at all interested in this question. But I will say that, in a larger sense, this Bill belongs to a class of legislation that I am entirely opposed to. It is trying to advise people to do right. It is like other modes of legislation.

Mr. SCRIVER. It is compelling them to do right.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, I entirely object to legislation compelling people to do right. As I say, I shall vote with the Government because I assume that they have considered the question thoroughly, but, on the face of it, I am opposed to this sort of legislation.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think it is evident that the object of this Bill, so far as it relates to gambling in stocks, meets with the hearty approval of this House, but so far as it may apply to transactions affecting the general commerce of the country, is another question altogether. Now, I would like to ask the Minister if he is aware of any such law prevailing in any other part of the commercial world; because it appears to me that it is not only arbitrary but inquisitorial. If a person, having some means at his disposal, sees an opportunity of making a speculation—it might be in wheat, it might be in sugar or iron, or any fair article of purchase and sale, and he is induced to make a purchase of that article to make money out of it—I cannot see why the House should step in and restrict the freedom of action between one merchant and another. It appears to me that it will not only be inquisitorial, but it might lead to very disagreeable results. Frequently when a person makes a purchase, whatever it might be, any outsider might say that it was for speculative purposes, and bring him under the operation of this law, and put him to a good deal of inconvenience, and possibly to some expense. I think that in all these cases, strong grounds should be given for interfering with the liberty of commerce, and the right of merchants to buy and sell according to their own views and methods, such articles as are usually transferred from one to another, be it on speculation or be it otherwise.

Mr. THOMPSON. We do not propose, by this Bill, to interfere with the freedom of commerce at all, and we exempt from it every transaction which can result in business of a commercial nature. As I said before, every transaction which has for one of its features the delivery of the goods purchased, is exempted from the operation of the Bill. In answer to the hon. gentleman who asks where similar legislation has been had, I may say that among other places I can mention Ohio, and Illinois; and at present an Act almost in the same terms, is being proceeded with in the Legislature of New York, at Albany. I do not think that it will in any way be found to interfere with commerce. It is purely and simply aimed at gaming transactions. I admit that in dealing with that kind of gaming, and the holding of lotteries and everything of that kind, it is necessary to have severe and sweeping legislation. It might be objected, if we were legislating against gaming for the first time, that we were interfering against many transactions which are not considered immoral, by preventing the staking of money on games in private houses, &c.; and if we were introducing legislation to prevent lotteries, it might be contended that it would be oppressive in operation as regards lotteries which are conducted as bazaars for charitable purposes. All legislation of that kind must necessarily be sweeping in its character, and would be oppressive if carried out in the strictest and extreme sense. But if we fall short of that, and endeavor to describe minutely that which appears to us at the moment to be the immorality which we intend to prevent, we shall find it impossible to arrive at legislation which cannot be evaded by those who desire to conduct operations of this kind without being in the nature of commercial transactions. But I cannot imagine that this Bill will operate unfavorably as regards any kind of commercial transactions. I acquiesce fully in one of the opinions that has been expressed, that, if the transaction is one from which delivery would result, as the natural and legal consequence, it is not a transaction that would be interfered with by this Bill; but if the contract is one of which delivery forms no part at all, but which is simply between a pretended purchaser and a pretended seller of certain stocks, as to their rise or fall in a distant market, within a given number of days, these acts are aimed at by this Bill, and I can confirm to the fullest extent what hon. gentlemen opposite have said as regard their evil effects. It is known to every observer that in cities and towns there has been a general spread, within the last two or three years, of gaming establishments of this kind, which are doing far more injury to the country, and are doing a greater business, than many other establishments which are aimed at by our criminal legislation. I know from experience, and from applications which have been before me, that numbers of persons belonging to respectable classes in the community, are in our different penitentiaries now in consequence of bucket-shop transactions, which led them on to embezzlement and frauds of different kinds. It is considered, therefore, in the interest of public morality that legislation of this kind should be adopted, and I do think this can be safely adopted, unless it is exercised in an arbitrary and oppressive manner, which has not been our experience with regard to laws against gaming, against pool-selling and against lotteries and transactions of that description.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I should like to ask the Minister of Justice whether, in his opinion, it would be wrong for a man, if he felt disposed to speculate in wheat, iron or other articles, to put up a margin, say, of 15 or 20 cents. According to the opinion given by these eminent gentlemen, whose names are attached to this document, it will be made a criminal offence. According to my view of commercial transactions, I think it is perfectly legitimate for any merchant or speculator to purchase 10,000 bushels of grain, if, according to his view, the article is going to advance, and put up 10 or 15 cents a bushel. I can hardly see how that can be gambling, because in all parts of the world bulky articles of commerce are bought and sold on advances, with the better information one man possesses over another. If this Bill were adopted it would destroy all competition; it would destroy all speculation, from the value of one man's information over his neighbor's. If, for instance, I collect information in regard to the condition of the crops and the stock of wheat on hand, or the stock of sugar on hand or future prospects, and I form my conclusion that at a certain time there must be an advance. If I go into the market and make purchases in advance and put up a margin, I fail to see the propriety of any legislation like this interfering between the legitimate operations of that nature as between buyer and seller. Still, we are told by these high legal authorities that that will constitute a criminal offence. If that is what the Bill proposes aiming at the hon. gentleman may as well admit it, and the merchants of the country will then be on their guard; but, failing that, I think it is impossible for the hon. gentleman to put down such practices. His course will only lead to inquisitorial actions, because every man who makes a purchase from his neighbor which is to be delivered next week, and such transactions are of every day occurrence, will come within the operation of the Act. I cannot understand the object of proposing such legislation. It is highly reprehensible and it is an interference with the freedom of commerce, and should not be adopted.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister of Justice, in the course of his remarks in support of the Bill, made an extraordinary statement, viz., that this Bill would affect any case where there is not an actual delivery of goods. In not one case perhaps in 10,000 of actual transactions on the stock exchange is there an actual delivery of goods. The effect of this open market is to cause a speculative feeling in the community, and that is a benefit to all the farmers and to every one engaged in business. One of the reasons why an American city is, perhaps, in advance of a Canadian city is the want of a speculative market and speculative feeling in the people of our community. The law which the hon. gentleman proposes to pass is like a good deal of the legislation of that character during recent years, in the direction of moral restraint; but hon. gentlemen do not consider that when they are trying to do good they may be doing injury. You go into American cities and you see everything sold on margin; money is borrowed on margin; the party does not need to have a friend or a credit at the bank; he has a certain amount of money in his pocket and with that he goes into the stock exchange, deposits his margin and engages in transactions to the extent of his means. That feeling in the community creates a market, creates commerce. We talk about the advantages of the St. Lawrence route to Americans in sending their breadstuffs and products, which have been bought in Chicago, to the seaboard. If the owner sends it by the American route there is a speculative market on the route, while it is in transit to the ocean, and he can sell the produce at any time by dropping $\frac{1}{4}$ or $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. If he sends it along the St. Lawrence there is no speculative feeling, and he cannot sell the produce if he desires it, and, of course, he prefers to send it by the route where he can sell it in transitu. I know nothing about bucket-shops, and have never before heard of their existence throughout the community, but if they are as wrong as the hon. gentleman describes them to be, surely they can be reached by the common law. Surely it is not necessary to pass such legislation as is proposed for the purpose of punishing a few persons who transgress the law. You cannot make them act rightly by passing an Act of Parliament like this. You cannot have a speculative feeling in the community without some one making losses; you cannot, to use the Napoleonic phrase, have omelets without smashing the eggs. Someone must go to the wall, some injury must be committed to individuals and parties in the community; but it is questionable whether the injury done to the community as a whole is equal to the benefit done. What is more wanted in this community than anything else is the speculative feeling which exists among the American people, and legislation of this kind is directly against it; it may be in the direction of morals and good government, but it is in the direction of doing a direct injury to the country we live in.

Mr. CURRAN. It must be supposed that the gentlemen who are engaged in the legitimate transactions of brokers really understand something about their own interests. This Bill has been submitted to the careful study of the leading minds in the city of Montreal and elsewhere where brokers do most congregate, and they are most anxious that this Bill should pass. They seem to think, and they no doubt have good reasons for believing, that this legislation will not have any of the injurious effects which the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat, stated would be produced by such legislation. I have no doubt that speculation is a good thing, if it be legitimate speculation, but the stock exchange of Montreal, the board of trade, the leading mercantile people of that great centre have not only approved of this Bill but have passed resolutions endorsing it, and most assuredly no such action would have been taken without due deliberation, and if the effect was to be that which has been just mentioned by the hon. gentleman, those resolutions would not have been adopted. I am under the impression, and I have consulted several hon. gentlemen from the Province of Quebec connected with the legal profession, that there is perhaps one hardship in this Bill so far as our practice is concerned in the Province of Quebec. We find that the proof of good faith in the transaction which takes place must be established by the accused. That is, perhaps, an absolute necessity in view of the legislation we are passing, and the end we desire to attain. I am not going to complain upon that point, and since that rule is being adopted which is contrary to the rule of common law, and that the Government has to some extent provided by this Bill that the negative has to be proved. The practice with us always has been that before a magistrate no other evidence is received than that establishing a prima facie case, just as before a grand jury, and under that practice the person accused of this misdemeanor would be brought before a magistrate and sent to the grand jury. That prima facie case would be established before a grand jury, and he should have to wait until he reached the petit jury before he should be able to put in any evidence on his own behalf.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). And then he could not be a witness.

Mr. CURRAN. He could not be a witness then. I have been informed that this practice does not obtain in some of the other Provinces, but I know that my experience always has been—and I am borne out by my confrères in this House from every section of the Province of Quebec—that that rule has always obtained in the Province of Quebec. Some say it is discretionary with the magistrate, whether he should accept evidence of that kind or not, but I do not believe there is any such discretion. Either the accused has the right, or he has not the right to be heard before the committing magistrate, and to give his testimony to establish his innocence of the charge brought against him. If there be any doubt whatever on the mind of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, I think that such doubt should be removed, and a clause introduced into this Act which would enable the person accused of this offence to make his proof before the committing magistrate, and to establish the good faith of the transaction. I think that this suggestion will strike my hon. friend as being reasonable. I agree with everything that has been said with regard to the desirability of putting down the practices that have prevailed so much to the detriment of our community. They are more to the detriment of our community than any good that can result from the peculiar transactions which my hon. friend beside me seems to fear are in danger. I desire merely to throw a safeguard around the person of the accused under this law, which is a very severe piece of legislation. I believe it should be carried out in the spirit that would show, that there is not only no desire for oppression, but that there is no door open to any oppression under it.

Mr. LISTER. The Minister of Justice will see that there is nothing in the Act enabling the party accused to give evidence on his own behalf. One can readily understand that in a prosecution of this kind, a prima facie case can be made out on the testimony of a person who suspects that those practices take place. The whole crime rests on the evidence of intent, and the only person to give evidence would be the man accused or the person from whom he purchased. I, therefore, think that a broker ought to be a competent witness in his own behalf. In the Province of Ontario the accused can be witnesses on their own behalf, in some cases, notably, for assault or battery. If the charge against the person is simply assault or battery, he is allowed to be a witness in his own behalf, or, if on a trial for a higher offence of the same kind, the court is satisfied that it amounted to nothing more than an assault, the court has power to allow the accused to be a witness. This is the only instance in which I know a person is allowed to be a witness for himself. Where the crime is presumed, as in this case, I think it is only fair that the accused should have the right to go into the witness box and testify on his own behalf.

Mr. BROWN. I am sure that the universal opinion is in favor of legislation which aims at the destruction of those practices which have caused so much misery and ruin in the country. Any legislation of that kind is a good thing, and it will receive the support of the people of Canada. I think, however, there should be some change in the Bill as it now stands with regard to the confiscation of the instruments used. For instance, a legitimate broker in the ordinary prosecution of his work might ultimately become guilty of practices known as "bucket-shop deals." That man may have been a respectable broker when those instruments were placed in his office by the telegraph companies, and it is pretty hard that, if the person becomes guilty of practices under the operation of this law, which he was not guilty of when the instrument was put in, that it should be confiscated. If, of course, there is a regular bucket-shop established, the telegraph companies have no right to put instruments there, because they are doing it with their eyes open, but in the case where it may be eventually found that a respectable broker may afterwards become engaged in bucket-shop transactions, I think it would be unfair to confiscate the instruments. We might as well say that a letter-carrier, who bore a letter inciting to crime of some kind, was guilty of a crime himself. Those instruments are simply placed as records of operations. I do not think they should be allowed into bucket-shops to facilitate gambling, but as my friend the member for Ontario (Mr. Elgar) has stated, they may be given to legitimate brokers who, in the course of their business, may descend to those practices. I hope the Minister of Justice may see his way to eliminate from the Bill the words relating to the confiscation of telegraph instruments.

Mr. CHARLTON. I hope, Sir, that the Minister of Justice will not be deterred by the criticisms that have been offered here to-day, from pressing his Bill. I believe that the hon. gentleman has, most clearly, with him in this matter, the moral and religious sense of this country. This is a Bill moving in the right direction, and if there is danger of its trenching on the operations of the regular stock exchange, the greater the extent it trenches on the operations of those, the better, in my opinion, for the country. The hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), a few moments ago, pointed out to the House the advantages resulting from speculative operations on the stock markets. He made the astounding assertion that those stock operations—gambling operations I would say—were to the benefit of the farmers. Now, if there is a great curse to the farmers of America, it is this practice of gambling in grain. On account of it the law of supply and demand does not bear on the market at all. There may be a great surplus, or there may be a deficiency in the country, but the question as to the price of grain is regulated, not by the law of supply and demand, but by the manipulation of a gang of gamblers called "bulls" and "bears," and they either put up or down the price of commodities as they may be able to manipulate the market. These operations are the curse of America, and they are the curse of every civilised country in Christendom. One of the outcomes of this kind of operation is such a man as Jay Gould, who has accumulated a fortune of $80,000,000; by a system—and I say it advisedly and designedly—not one particle better, than theft and highway robbery. The plea that an interference with this class of business is a damage to the community is a plea that no man conversant with the operations of the stock exchanges will believe for one moment. Let a man go into the wheat pit of Chicago, or the stock exchange of New York, and he will find a perfect pandemonium; the usual laws of trade have no influence or effect upon the operations conducted there. The system results in damage, not only to the farming community, but to nine out of every ten men who are engaged, directly or indirectly, in these operations. No man ventures into Wall-street, unless he is in the pool, without getting stripped of his money; and the same thing occurs in Chicago. As the hon. Minister of Justice properly says, there are in our penitentiaries to-day men who have been sent there for crimes committed, the first step towards which consisted of the operations of gambling which are fostered by these bucket-shops, and in a still greater degree by the regular stock exchanges. I hope the hon. Minister will not abate one jot of this Bill. It is a measure which has the support of the moral and religious sentiment of this country. It is a step in the right direction.

Mr. THOMPSON. I may say, in reply to the observations of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) and the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), that they have misunderstood me. I did not say that every transaction would come under this Bill unless there was an actual delivery; and I think the hon. member for Halifax, in pressing his objections to this Bill, has in view legitimate transactions which would be legitimate under this Bill, but which he fears would be affected by it, because he says it will apply to transactions in respect of which there is a fair amount of security given, and according to the terms of which there may not be delivery for weeks. The hon. gentleman suggests a case like this. He or another gentleman engaged in mercantile business has the advantage of early information in relation to the crops in a distant part of the country, and if he goes into the market and deals in wheat in anticipation of its rise or fall, consequent on that information he would come under the provisions of this Bill, because delivery might not be possible for months, or perhaps a year to come.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Not at all.

Mr. THOMPSON. Well, if the hon. gentleman states to me a transaction of buying or selling in which there is a stipulation that there shall be no delivery—

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Not a stipulation—a possibility.

Mr. THOMPSON. If there is no stipulation, delivery is a natural result of buying and selling.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman let me explain what I mean? A merchant makes a purchase of goods which are to be delivered at a future date. When the time arrives, it may not be possible to deliver the goods.

Mr. THOMPSON. I can quite imagine that there may be perfectly legitimate transactions of that kind; but the difficulty is that if you made transactions of that kind legitimate, everything which is purely speculative and gambling could be legalised as well. The hon. gentleman will agree with me fully, I think, that it is desirable to suppress operations in bucket-shops, which are pure gambling.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Certainly.

Mr. THOMPSON. And I submit that the only test we can adopt is that which is adopted in this Bill, that is, that delivery either actually follows or is the legal result of the contract made. If delivery is to be dispensed with, and there is simply to be a money forfeit as part of the transaction, then it is purely speculative in its character; and this is no new principle to adopt. The transactions which are of a wagering description are against the common law, and have been prohibited in some of the codes in the United States for upwards of half a century. We know the familiar principle that an insurance policy which is a wager policy is void; and the hon. member for South Lanark would sustain it, I presume, because it encourages a spirit of speculation. But there is a limit beyond which speculation becomes simply vice and profligacy and a temptation to everybody to get riches quickly, even if they do not get them honestly. Now, I may say to the hon. member for Halifax, who I know is perfectly sincere in suggesting the difficulties he has mentioned, that this matter has been very fully considered by those who are far more competent than I am to judge of the effect it will have on ordinary business transactions. I have, for instance, before me, a letter from the secretary of the Board of Trade of Montreal, addressed to Mr. Abbott, who introduced the Bill in the other House, in which he says:

"I beg to inform you that the Council of this Board has instructed me to express to you its hearty endorsement of the principle of the Bill introduced by you in the Senate, intitled: 'An Act respecting gaming in stocks and merchandise,' and also, that the Council would be glad to take any further action in support thereof that may, now or hereafter, to you appear desirable."

I have a letter from Mr. Parent, the secretary of the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, who says:

"At a general meeting of the Chamber of Commerce of the district of Montreal, held yesterday, the following resolution was adopted unanimously: 'Moved by Mr. A. G. Hamelin, seconded by Mr. Thomas Gauthier, that this chamber sees with pleasure the initiative taken by the Hon. J. J. O. Abbott, for the abolition of bucket-shops, and recommends fully the passage of the Bill now before the Federal Parliament.'"

A gentleman connected with the Imperial Bank of Canada writes:

"I note with much pleasure that the bucket-shop Bill is being proceeded with satisfactorily in the face of strong opposition. There can be no question with regard to the necessity that exists for legislation on the subject. Hundreds and thousands of Canadians have been taken advantage of in the past by the manipulations of expert and unprincipled manipulators of the 'ticker,' while it is difficult to discover, or to hear of one speculator, who has been successful.

"Quite recently this bank was a sufferer owing to forgery committed by one John K. Herres, of Berlin, Ontario. I am sending you a paper containing a short account of his crime, in which you will observe that the temptation to commit the crime referred to presented itself owing to his losses incurred through a broker's bucket-shop.

"You and other members of Parliament will, no doubt, have influence brought to bear upon you to drop the Bill now before the Senate, but, in the interests of the country at large, I hope that the firm stand taken by the Government on this question will be maintained."

A member of the New York Stock Exchange, and a prominent banker and broker, writes:

"I am glad to see that you have taken the matter of bucket-shops in hand. Do you clearly understand our mode of doing business? We members of the New York Stock Exchange who do business on margin, receive the certificate for the stock we buy, every share, and pay for it in full. For instance, we buy 100 Western Union Telegraph stock at 80; we receive the certificate, which we may put in our name if we please, and pay $8,000 in money for it, if it is bought on margin say of $1,000—for a customer we advance the other $7,000. This is always done in transactions on the New York Stock Exchange. In bucket-shops it is never done. They pretend to buy of the customer, and sell to him, so to make what the customer loses, and of course it is their interest to have the customer lose. Any legislation to suppress bucket-shops will not, I presume, hurt the legitimate dealings in stocks, whether for speculation, temporary or permanent investment, as practiced in the New York Stock Exchange. I have been a member here 21 years, and think perhaps I am a judge, but the facilities for gambling which these shops offer to everybody, clerk or otherwise, who can furnish $5, is worse than faro gambling. On the very block where your office is in Montreal is one of the most notorious bucket-shops, but from the sign they pretend to be importers."

Here is another from a New York broker, who is a member of the stock exchange:—

"Kindly accept my thanks for the Bill in re the bucket-shops, which I fully and heartily endorse, and had I been aware the Hon. Mr. Abbott had such a measure in view when I was in Ottawa, I would cheerfully have furnished him with a few additional points, which would have strengthened the Bill. We have a similar Bill before the Legislature in Albany, and think there is every likelihood of its becoming a law."

Here is a letter from the secretary of the Board of Trade of Toronto:

"The attention of the council at its meeting held yesterday, was directed to the opposition being offered to your Bill for the suppression of bucket shops, and power was given the president to name a deputation to proceed to Ottawa for the purpose of furthering this measure if you should deem it necessary. Can I obtain any further information for you or in any way assist in bringing about the passage of this most desirable measure? This board is prepared to act promptly the moment you advise of the necessity for action. Awaiting your esteemed favor."

One of these gentlemen in New York sent an extract from a newspaper which contains a brief history of the legislation of this kind, and a full copy of the opinion of the District Attorney, Mr. Fellows, of New York, on this subject. I will only read a short extract from the narrative, and a short extract or two from the letter: The narrative says:

"The Revised Statutes of the State of New York have for more than half a century provided that wager contracts are unlawful, with certain exceptions. The transactions of the bucket-shops are no more nor less than bets on the future price of stocks. They are wager contracts on contingent events, which, by the Revised Statutes, are unlawful. The present Bill aims to add this old provision of the Revised Statutes with certain words of specification to section 343 of the Criminal Code, so that the specific offence of betting on stocks shall be covered distinctly by the Code."

Mr. District Attorney Fellows says:

"The most common kind of bucket-shop is equipped with a telegraph instrument—either a stock-ticker or Morse instrument—from which quotations in stocks or produce are from time to time taken and written on a large blackboard in presence of the customers of the shop. Wagers are then made on the fluctuations in the quotations as they are recorded on the blackboard, and various devices are resorted to by the proprietors and their customers to make the transaction appear a bond fide contract for the sale and delivery of stocks or produce, whereas, in fact, none of the parties engaged in such transactions have any intention other than to wager on the quotation that may appear from time to time on the board. Tributary to these blackboard shops are what are known as bucket-shop commission houses. These places, which are scattered all over the city, are provided with a stock ticker and connected with the blackboard shop by a telephone or telegraph instrument. An agent of the main shop receives the money from the person who desires to bet and sends an order to the main house by the instruments referred to."

Further on, he adds:

"The allurements with which customers are drawn to these places, while false and deceitful, are sufficient to attract the multitude of those who hope to make quick profits on small investments. Shopkeepers with small incomes, young men employed as clerks and salesmen and women who believe they are engaged in legitimate speculation form a large part of their customers. The number of people in this city who have been ruined by dealing in these places is large and constantly increasing, and the cases are not a few of persons acting in a reduciary capacity who have squandered trust estates in one or more bucket-shops in this city. Indeed, instances are multiplying in this office of persons who have been led by these places into the commission of crime."

There is much more to the same effect, which I will not detain the House by reading. With regard to what the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Curran) has said, as to the necessity for allowing the accused to rebut the prima facie case before the magistrate, I do not hesitate to say that ought to be the law as regards every charge of crime; and I am equally positive in my view that it is the law with regard to every species of crime, that the magistrate who is asked to commit a prisoner for trial on an indictable offence, is bound to receive any kind of testimony which the accused may offer in his defence.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Not bound; may allow him to do it if he chooses.

Mr. THOMPSON. In view of the authorities which I have always supposed to be law he is absolutely bound, and the commitment may be set aside if he refuses it.

Mr. LISTER. The statute provides that he may take the statement.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, he is bound to take the statement. He is bound to offer the accused an opportunity of making the statement. Irrespective of that statute, if the accused brings a witness, he is bound to take his evidence.

Mr. LAURIER. Do you go to that extent?

Mr. THOMPSON. I do.

Mr. LISTER. He is bound to receive it, not as evidence for the defence, but as the evidence of people cognisant of the fact.

Mr. THOMPSON. Quite so; and with the view of seeing whether there ought to be a commitment or not. It is quite true he is not to put himself in the position of a jury and try the case; and if, after hearing that testimony, it results in a conflict, it is a matter for the jury to decide, and he must commit for trial; but it is not a proper exercise of the power of magistrate at all to refuse to hear the witnesses who are called, and who may give a totally different color to the transaction.

Mr. MITCHELL. I presume there would be no objection to putting a clause in the Bill that the person accused may be permitted to give testimony in explanation of the charge.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am disposed to yield to that suggestion. With regard to telegraph instruments, I see the force of what was stated by the hon. gentleman opposite, and by the hon. member for Hamilton, but I do not think any hardship or oppression can result from keeping those words in. The fact is that the telegraph companies derive enormous profits from these bucket-shops. The prices which they get for supplying messages and receiving messages are enormous, and the instruments, which are liable to confiscation under this Bill, are of a very trifling value, only about $6. If we can induce the telegraph companies to aid the operation of the law by exercising vigilance as to the kind of establishments in which they allow their instruments to be used, we will have a most efficient means of preventing the violation of the law.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). We are unanimous in feeling that these bucket-shops should be suppressed, as they are a source of great misery, but we have to see that we do not interfere with legitimate transactions. The amendments suggested by my hon. friend will certainly obviate one of the objections which has been raised by the council, and which is as follows:—

"If A, a grain dealer, telegraphs to B, broker, to buy 10,000 bushels of May wheat, and sends an accepted cheque for ten per cent. margin, his intention being to sell the wheat when the price rises three points but not actually to receive such wheat, and merely making a bargain for the purchase of it, I take it that he is brought within the criminal clauses of the Act and the broker, aware of the intention of the customer, aids and abets in the act and is, therefore, liable."

That is the opinion of Mr. Blake, and it is not merely his opinion, but I find it is the opinion of all the other gentlemen who have given their views, and it seems to me that is a legitimate transaction. That is where the difficulty is. No doubt these bucket-shops, with the blackboards exposed, and so on, should be suppressed, but the legitimate trade should not be interfered with. The Minister of Justice has acceded to the suggestions of the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Curran), which certainly has great weight, in reference to the position in which an innocent party might be placed. Some years ago the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) brought in a Bill in reference to the sale of stocks. The matter was very much discussed at the time, and it was thought then that the Bill might interfere with the regular stock exchange. The result was that the Bill was not passed and did not become law. While I think that the principle of this Bill should be carried out, and that this action is a very proper one, still it should be carefully seen that it does not go beyond bounds and does not become a means of oppression.

Mr. HAGGART. If I did not misunderstand the Minister of Justice, when he said that this Bill would require the delivery of the article, he said, you may make a contract for future delivery and at the time when the contract expires you can settle it in any manner you choose. I cannot understand how any person who enters into any contract for actual or future delivery, and it is future delivery which these bucket-shop men confine themselves to, can be punished at all under this Act. If the law is extended so that it does not require a delivery, so that you can enter into a legal contract for a future delivery, what punishment can you award to anyone who is speculating for a future delivery? All he has to do is to enter into a contract that the article shall be delivered at any future time, and then he can settle it in any way he likes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to enquire of the Minister of Justice whether the object sought to be attained, as set forth in the preamble, would not be reached if he confined himself to dealing in stocks. From what I have seen in reference to the mischievous institutions which are known as bucket-shops, my impression is that they are nothing more or less than hells carried on in the day time, that they are gambling places of the worst kind; but the hon. gentleman is fixing very severe penalties, not only on the keepers of these institutions, who, no doubt, in many cases deserve what he proposes to inflict, but on all persons who are led in to deal in matters of this kind, and that is very far-reaching in its character. My own impression is that if these people were deprived of the right to make transactions in stocks of any incorporated or unincorporated company or undertaking, the hon. gentleman would effect all he desires to effect; and there is ground for fearing that the language of this Act is so wide as to interfere with transactions which are more or less legitimate, and which the Minister does not intend to bring within the purview of the criminal law. I do not myself like to create very severe penalties even for such reprehensible transactions as betting. There are other transactions which probably deserve more punishment than betting. I am very much disposed to put down these bucket-shops, as they are called, but I think that could be done just as well by eliminating the words to which my hon. friends from Halifax and St. John have taken exception. I am aware that it is quite possible to gamble in pork, and wheat, and other things of that kind, but I do not think any great damage would result to the community from that comparable to that which results from the gambling in stocks which now goes on. I simply make the suggestion for the consideration of the Minister of Justice, who is responsible for this Bill in this House, and I think he would gain his object by confining his provisions to the one class of cases.

Mr. THOMPSON. I would accept the suggestion of the hon. gentleman in a moment if it were not that my information on the subject is entirely different from that of the hon. gentleman. No doubt the speculation in stocks is the principal evil in the United States, but in Canada I believe that the very worst kind of speculation is in articles of merchandise, such as pork, beef, wheat, iron and other articles of that kind. Speculation in stocks is not so popular in Canada, possibly because the people in the United States understand the position of stocks there, while the people who gamble in this way in Canada are not so well acquainted with them, but the class who frequent these establishments in Canada are supposed to be, and no doubt are to a great extent, familiar with those articles of merchandise to which I have referred, and a far greater proportion of the speculation in this country is in relation to the rise and fall of prices in merchandise. Of course I have the greatest respect for the professional authority of the gentlemen who have given their opinions on this subject, but I think, if we had the opportunity of discussing the provisions of this Bill, and the construction to be put upon them, the answers might have been framed somewhat differently. For instance, I find this answer:

"If A, a grain dealer, telegraphs to B, a broker, to buy him 10,00 bushels of May wheat and sends an accepted cheque for 10 per cent. margin, his intention being to sell the wheat when the price rises three points, but not actually to receive such wheat, and merely making a bargain for the purchase of it, I take it that he is brought within the criminal clauses of the Act."

I think the writer has misunderstood the provisions of the Bill, and I think that is apparent from his answer, although I say it with a good deal of deference to the opinion given by these gentlemen. But, when he says that the intention of the dealer was to sell the wheat, it is clear that it would be absolutely impossible that he could sell it if he never received delivery.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Not at all.

Mr. THOMPSON. Absolutely impossible. The hon. gentleman is talking about delivery in its ordinary sense, of coming into the possession of the man who makes the bargain, but, in the construction of an Act of Parliament, we have to take it in its legal sense, and it is as much delivered to him if it is delivered to his agent or his vendee 3,000 miles away as if it were resting in his own cellar or his own barn. So, if a contract is one that results either in delivery to the agent or the vendee of the purchaser, it is a contract which is not within the provisions of this Bill, because it is one from which delivery has resulted or will naturally result.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. Minister will see that the statement here was that the dealer was to sell the wheat again when the price rose three points. He never had the intention to receive the wheat. When he put up his margin, it was with the idea that he should purchase that quantity of wheat on speculation, and that when the wheat rose one, or two, or three points, he would sell it. He would never receive it.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is a perfectly legitimate transaction. The Act says that he must have the ownership of it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). But he never was the owner of it.

Mr. THOMPSON. He must have been the owner when it was his under control so that he could sell it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The broker would never have received it, and there is only a transaction between them to that extent. The communications which have been received by the Minister of Justice were all in regard to what are called bucket-shops. We are all in accord with the hon. gentlemen on that point, but at the time those communications were written, which was about the 12th April, the Bill had just been introduced. Since that time, ample opportunity has been given of studying the effects of the measure, and I suppose at that time the writers did not see the length to which this might go. Consequently, they submitted certain questions to these eminent legal gentlemen, who have answered in the way we have heard.

Mr. THOMPSON. These questions were not submitted by brokers.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). No matter who submitted them.

Mr. THOMPSON. The reason I made that suggestion was for the purpose of showing him that although these letters were dated between the 5th and 20th April, these gentlemen have not receded from that position since. The bucket shop people have put these questions with a view of exciting the apprehensions of the legitimate brokers, and the only response they have got from the brokers is a request that we should put in an amendment like this.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It makes no difference from what source the enquiry came. I presume it came from the opponents of the Bill, but that does not affect the question at all. The questions were placed before these legal gentlemen, and they answered in distinct terms that any ordinary transaction with an honest intention to make it a proper and legitimate commercial transaction, might be brought within the scope of this Bill. I will give an illustration. I may own a ship, and I may charter it to a party to arrive two or three months hence. This is a very common occurrence. When she arrives the person who has chartered her, instead of carrying out his charter, may offer to give me a certain compensation and allow me to keep my ship, and I could not receive it under the operation of this Act.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Well, it is a legitimate transaction, and brokers frequently charter ships on speculation, relying on the condition of the market in the future to place her, so that they may secure themselves. The idea of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), that speculations in the natural products are offensive to Christian morality and religion, I think, with all due deference to my hon. friend, is very far-fetched. My hon. friend, I think, himself, if he saw a good speculation in the future, would not be the last to avail himself of it, and to put up his margin, like all the rest of the commercial world, in pork, or wheat, or anything else. I repeat that I fear the Bill may go farther than is contemplated. Of course if it was confined to transactions in stocks, that would be perfectly right, but further than that I respectfully submit it should not go.

Mr. SCRIVER. I do not agree with the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) in saying that it is of no consequence from whom these enquiries proceed. I think it is of great consequence. So far as we know, we have reason to believe that these enquiries from legal men have proceeded solely from the proprietors of bucket-shops; and as the Minister of Justice has stated, although a considerable time has elapsed since the communications which he read, were addressed to the Hon. Mr. Abbott, it is also a considerable time since the Bill passed through the Senate; and the leading brokers of the Dominion, in all the principal cities, have, no doubt, taken communication of this Bill, and have communicated their views in the way the Minister of Justice has said, by suggesting a single amendment. Nor can I agree with my hon. friend in saying that transactions in grain or in provisions may be different, if they are purely betting transactions, from transactions upon stocks. I cannot see any difference between betting that a thousand bushels of wheat will be worth, two weeks hence, ten cents more than it is now, and betting that the stock on a certain railway will be worth ten cents more a share, two weeks hence, than it is now. For myself, so far as the immorality or the result of the transactions is concerned, they are quite analogous.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to ask the hon. Minister, when so severe a penalty as five years imprisonment is possible, whether he does not think that the introduction of the words "oral or written" leaves the door open for a put-up job to levy blackmail in certain cases—that is in section c, where a person "makes, or signs, or authorises to be made or signed, any contract or agreement, oral or written." It does appear to me that might leave a man a good deal at the mercy of mischievous scoundrels who might combine together to subject him to prosecution under this Act, in threatening such heavy penalties, that he might be obliged to ransom himself where his intention was perfectly innocent.

On section 4,

Mr. THOMPSON. To meet the suggestion of the hon. member for South Oxford, I propose to add the following:—"In any transaction under this act the person accused shall be a competent witness on his own behalf."

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

TERRITORIES REAL PROPERTY ACT.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 104) further to amend chapter 51 of the Revised Statutes of Canada "The Territories Real Property Act."—(Mr. Thompson.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. THOMPSON. The first two sections of the Bill and some we shall meet further on, are rendered necessary by the fact that in the Province of Manitoba it has been decided that an equity of redemption, in real estate which is mortgaged, is not real property transmissible under this Act, and does not follow the procedure referred to in the Territories Real Property Act. It is proposed to state that land means any interest in land, and that the land shall go to the personal representative of the deceased.

On section 5,

Mr. THOMPSON. It has been found very desirable to appoint an inspector of the land offices. There are four registry offices in the North-West Territories, which are, of course, scattered over an immense distance. The duties of the registrars are complicated and difficult under "The Territories Real Property Act," and it is very desirable indeed that there should be uniformity in the practice, and that there should be some authority to whom they can refer. In addition it is necessary there should be a person qualified and authorised to act as a deputy in case of a vacancy taking place in any one of those registrarships. It is not sufficient that the registrars should be in a position to appoint a deputy, but it is further necessary that the person appointed should be a qualified person; and it is therefore proposed that there should be an inspector of the land titles office. The office is not an entirely new one, as when the Act was coming into force I suggested to my late colleague, the Minister of Interior, the necessity, in introducing so suddenly an Act so elaborate and complicated as this Act, of having some person to visit the different land offices and instruct the registrars in their duties, and he employed a professional gentleman for that purpose. The adoption of this provision of the present Bill will entail a cost of about $1,500 a year for salary, in addition to a travelling allowance of $3.50 a day during the days when he will necessarily travel; but, considering the important interests involved, both as regards the property holders themselves and the public who are interested—because we insure every certificate of title we issue—it will not be money thrown away, and I think those hon. gentlemen who represent the Territories more especially will concur with me in thinking that the services of the gentleman who has performed those duties in the past have been practically useful. I propose to strike out of the third line the words "no person shall be appointed inspector of the lands title office unless he is a barrister or attorney, of at least three years' standing, in one of the Provinces or Territories of Canada." I do not think legal qualifications will be absolutely essential. It may be that some person who has been found to be expert in the performance of his duties as a registrar, may be considered to be as competent a person as a gentleman who has had a legal training and the short legal experience called for by this section.

Mr. LAURIER. I am not sure that the last suggestion made by the Minister of Justice is altogether a good one. The system of registration in force in the Territories, which I believe is a very good system, is somewhat complicated, and I quite approve of the suggestion of the Minister of Justice to have an inspector, because, unless those officers are very well kept, they may be the cause of a good deal of confusion and loss to parties interested. It is not only necessary that the offices should be well kept, but that there should be proper superintendence, and I would go still further and exact from the inspector a minute and accurate report as to the state of the offices. Unless it is provided that the holder of the office shall possess special technical knowledge in regard to the registration system, it is doubtful whether he could properly discharge the duties.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has this appointment of inspector arisen out of the working of the Act in the North-West, or otherwise? I do not remember any such system being in force or found to be necessary, although the Act has been in operation and working very well for a great many years.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am not sure that there is an inspector in the Australian colonies, but there is a Registrar General in each of the colonies, who exercises the control which it is proposed the inspector in the North-West shall exercise. In connection with the Torrens Act in Ontario there is a Master of Titles in Toronto. If it is the view of the committee that the legal qualification should be retained, I will not press my point.

Mr. LAURIER. It is the Torrens' system you have adopted in the North-West, but unless the affairs of the offices are accurately regulated, and there is a strict superintendence exercised, most damaging results may happen to parties interested.

Mr. DAVIN. The North-West members would prefer having this qualification in. I think myself our judgment on that subject ought to control.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would, if those gentlemen supplied the money to carry out those things, but they do not.

Mr. EDGAR. Can you give us any idea of the volume of business done? On this would largely depend what the inspector would have to do.

Mr. THOMPSON. The volume of business has not been great. I am aware that questions, even though not of a complicated character, are disposed of differently, in the different offices; the officers are unwilling to change their practice without the controlling authority of some person who has the right to direct them. We think it would secure uniformity to have an inspector visit those offices occasionally.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman intend that this inspector is to be one of the registrars?

Mr. THOMPSON. No; he is to be a different officer from the registrars.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What time will the inspector be engaged?

Mr. THOMPSON. I think it will take him about two-thirds of the year.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Surely it will not take him that long. When he lays down one rule of uniformity it will have to be carried out by the registrars.

Mr. THOMPSON. It will be his duty to decide difficult questions in different offices. At present a large number of them come to Ottawa, and it is found to be very inconvenient.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman say what salary he will pay?

Mr. THOMPSON. My own opinion is that about $1,500 a year would secure a competent person. Of course we will allow him travelling expenses.

Mr. LAURIER. Do you require him to report yearly?

Mr. THOMPSON. Oh, yes, more frequently than that; quarterly at least.

Mr. LAURIER. To some extent you give him judicial powers. He should give in his decision and report.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think he should be required to report quarterly.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It will be an additional charge, at any rate, on our revenues.

On section 8,

Mr. THOMPSON. An office fee of $10 is charged to every homesteader when he obtains an entry for a quarter section of land, which is always represented as being the fee necessary to procure him a title to his land in fee simple on the performance of the duties prescribed by the Dominion Lands Act; and it has always been the custom of the department to give to a purchaser of land direct from the Crown letters patent for the same without the payment of any fee or charge whatever other than the price of the land. The object of sub-section 2 of this section is to provide for the issue of such certificate of title free of charge where there are no registered encumbrances affecting the land. Sub-sections 3 and 4 were to render unnecessary the issue of patents to the Hudson's Bay Company for their lands, thereby saving an immense amount of useless work to the Department of the Interior. It is proposed simply to recognise, as a grant from the Crown in the same way as if letters patent were issued, the notification to the company already provided for by the Dominion Lands Act. Sub-section 5 is intended to provide for the conveyance of lands in large areas to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and other railway corporations, entitled to Dominion lands, by notification to the registrar and without the issue of letters patent.

On section 9,

Mr. THOMPSON. The tariff at present in force provides that a person to whom a patent had issued before the Real Property Act came into force may register his Crown deed upon payment of $1. The object of this amendment is to make it unnecessary, since there is no risk to the Crown in the registration of such a deed where the lands are not encumbered, that the percentage provided for by clause 133 of the Act, with a view to the creation of an assurance fund, should be paid.

On section 10,

Mr. THOMPSON. Section 94 of the Act makes all the necessary provisions in regard to the delivery to the registrar by the sheriff of a copy of any writ or process affecting land, and the provisions of sub-section "c" of section 46 of that Act are therefore unnecessary. Moreover, they entail an unnecessary expense of at least one dollar to every person bringing his land under the operation of the Act. The law requires that a certificate shall be furnished from the proper officer, showing that there are no taxes in arrear against the land.

On section 11,

Mr. THOMPSON. This is in relation to a release of a mortgage, and provides that a certificate on the back of the mortgage or a copy of it is sufficient to discharge the mortgage.

On section 12,

Mr. THOMPSON. This abolishes the requirement of the mention in the certificate of the intermediate conveyances. I think the registration of the intermediate conveyances on the face of the certificate is undesirable. It may be that, owing to the change of title being accomplished by possession, or by descent, or by a judgment of a court, the mention of the intermediate conveyances would not on its face show the consecutive change of tenure; and besides, there may be objections in law or equity to those conveyances. It is in accordance with the Torrens' system that the certificate should be simple and should result in the transfer of land as quickly as the transfer of a share in a bank.

On section 13,

Mr. THOMPSON. By this amendment it is proposed to make it compulsory for the registrar to enter in his register the memorandum of any process affecting land which may have been delivered to him by the sheriff. If the land has already been brought under the operation of the Act, the entry must be made by the registrar immediately upon the delivery to him of the process affecting the land; but if not, then such entry is to be made as soon as the title has been registered.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

RELIEF OF ELEANORA ELIZABETH TUDOR.

Mr. SMALL moved second reading of Bill (No. 128) for the relief of Eleonora Elizabeth Tudor (from the Senate).

De St. Georges,

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

SECOND READINGS.

The following Bills were read the second time, on the same division :—

Bill (No. 129) for the relief of Andrew Maxwell Irving (from the Senate).—(Mr. Small).

Bill (No. 130) for the relief of Catharine Morrison (from the Senate).—(Mr. Small).

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think that it is very unfortunate that our system of government requires that these Bills should be brought before this House. We have a law on our statutes preventing the introduction into this country of obscene literature and other works of an improper character; yet, under the sanction of Parliament, such literature is distributed to the members of this House. I do think that the time has arrived when it would be well that these proceedings should be avoided, if possible. I have always consistently and persistently voted against these divorce resolutions, and I voted against them in the interest of society. I do not regard these resolutions in the same way as do some of my hon. friends who vote with me. Looking at the influence these measures have on society at large, looking to the effect that similar measures have had on society across the border, where the marriage tie has frequently become nothing more than licensed adultery, the time has arrived when hon. gentlemen in this House, even those who cannot accept the view which I hold against divorce per se, might be brought to consider the proposal whether the time has not arrived when it would be better, in the interests of the country at large, that we should be able to establish a divorce court to dispose of these questions. We have a divorce court in the Lower Provinces, in the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, where those unfortunate disclosures, when such questions are submitted to them, are treated in a more private manner. They are not made the subject of public comment, they are not distributed to the members of the Legislatures, they do not reach the employes of the Legislatures, from the oldest to the youngest; and it occurs to me that the time has arrived when gentlemen who hold the same views as I do on the same grounds, and those who hold them on very different grounds, should be brought to consider the propriety of agreeing to the establishment of some court, and thus spare us the exhibitions made here from year to year. I make this statement to protect my own view, because I believe there is sufficient good, sound, honest feeling in this country at large to protect the public from the distribution of literature in connection with these transactions such as has been distributed during the last three or four weeks.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Jones) very properly exclaims against the distribution of obscene literature. I must say that I have not seen any of it. The hon. gentleman may have. We may remember the story of the lady who said to Dr. Johnson, when his dictionary came out, that she congratulated him very much on his book, particularly because there were no bad words in it. Dr. Johnson said, "Madam, I am afraid you have been looking for them." I am afraid that my hon. friend's experience of this literature may, perhaps, have arisen from the same source. I may say, however, that I am opposed to a divorce court. I think it would be a great misfortune for Canada to have that established, where these cases become a matter of regular daily discussion. The hon. gentleman has said that it would prevent the publication of evidence of this kind, but these courts are open, as they ought to be, and the evidence is taken, and is published, as we can see very easily by looking into any of the English papers. Some of the most disgusting kind of evidence is published in the legal reports and the legal columns of the Times and other newspapers. It is only in very exceptional cases that the evidence in Canada is taken except privately, and I may say that that practice is not to be encouraged, because secret tribunals are always objectionable, and between the two evils we should choose the least. That trials affecting the character and the reputation and the property of parties should be left to private tribunals, is, I think, an abuse of our legal system, and is contrary to the liberty of the subject and to a proper check upon the tribunals themselves. Between the two evils of having the evidence published and having secret trials, I would prefer, notwithstanding the objection the hon. gentleman has taken to it, the publication of the evidence, to the institution of secret tribunals. I prefer our system here, which offers very considerable impediments to the granting of divorces, to the systems which prevail elsewhere. We have not very many of these cases. Of course, as our population increases, we have more divorce cases, but they are very few and far between as compared with those which would certainly crowd our court if it were once established. That has been the experience of England, and of those who once strongly supported the establishment of that court, and the transfer of the trial of these divorces from the Legislature to the court, very many have seriously repented their advocacy of that measure, because the number of divorces, the corruption of society and the number of collusive trials are increasing to the annually increasing degradation of the public mind.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I differ with the hon. gentleman. I think the arguments he has used to-night are the strongest I have yet heard in favor of the establishment of a divorce court. We are asked here to grant divorces, as we pass any Act of Parliament, and the hon. gentleman says that we grant these without reading the evidence. Can anything be conceived more pitiable than the fact of this Parliament passing a vote on a serious case of this kind, where the matrimonial bond is to be dissolved, without, as the leader of the Government states, anybody reading the evidence in regard to it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say so.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman suggested that one hon. gentleman who had read the evidence had done something which was improper, and he took credit to himself for voting without reading the evidence. If the leader of the Government has done that, what may be expected from the rank and file. I was led to the conclusion, which I have expressed, very largely by the discussion in the other Chamber on the case which we have just voted upon. I read the speech of the leader of the Government in the Senate, and I found that he argued that the Senate was not to be bound by any of the rules adopted by the House of Lords before the Divorce Court was established in England; that there was no legal rule guiding their decisions to which any ordinary member could look, or under which he could act pro or con; that every man could use his own judgment and do what was right in his own eyes; that the decision was to be an arbitrary decision in every case; in fact, that the man or the woman who canvassed the hardest in the lobby was the one who would win. After reading that, I judged that there was no rule guiding the Senate, and I came to the conclusion that a rule should be adopted and that a tribunal should be established which would be guided by fixed principles, in the hands of judges, so that in this very important matter we might know what we are doing. I know that there is a large section, a religious section of our people, who are opposed to the granting of divorces altogether, but it must be evident to them that at present divorces are granted year after year, not because facts show in the greater number of cases that these should be granted, but because the parties on one side or the other have evoked a certain amount of sympathy; that they are granted, not because of the evidence taken, but simply because those who are promoting the Bill are more or less active. I think it would be far better that we should leave these questions to trained judges and trained lawyers. Draw the line as closely as you like, but leave it to these trained men to carry it out. If that system were adopted, we would not see the absurdities which I have seen during the short time that I have been in this House, and which we witness year after year. I venture the assertion now that there are not a dozen gentlemen here who have read the evidence in this case from end to end; I doubt if there are half a dozen; and yet we are voting pro and con on the question of whether this divorce Bill shall be passed or not. If we had any principle laid down on which a divorce should be granted, if we had it decided that it should be on the ground of adultery or for any other cause, we could vote almost in the dark, because we would be certain that the Bill would not pass the other Chamber without the promoter having established a case; but the leader of the Government in the Senate has laid it down, with the assent of legal lights on both sides, that they are bound by no principles whatever in regard to these matters, that they are a law unto themselves, that they are not bound by the precedents of the House of Lords or of the Divorce Court in England, or by any other precedent, but that they can act just as it strikes them in regard to each case, so that, if the promoter is represented by able counsel, she gains her case, and if she is represented by counsel not quite so able, she loses it. A more lamentable state of affairs cannot be conceived of, and the picture which the hon. gentleman draws of what takes place on the other side of the border is bright compared to what takes place here. The only redeeming feature is, that we have so few of these cases, and I do not think the tribunal before which they come has any reason to congratulate itself on that, because it is due to the morality of our people.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I just want to say one word in explanation. I stated that I was against divorces per se, and I do not think that I argued in favor of having any secret tribunal, but I instanced the fact that in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia we had a court which conducted these cases without any publicity being given to them. I agree with the hon. gentleman that nothing of that kind should be carried on in a secret tribunal.

Mr. SCRIVER. I am very sorry to hear the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) make an imputation concerning our neighbors across the line, to which I think he would not have given expression if he had weighed his words a little more carefully. When he spoke of the marriage tie between the people of the United States as licensed adultery, I think he used an expression which is not warranted by the facts. I suppose it is a lamentable fact that divorces in some of the States are procured with great facility; but I do not believe there is an hon. gentleman in this House who would disagree with me when I assert that the great majority of those who are living in the marriage relation in the United States, regard that tie as sacredly as any member of this House.

Mr. MULOCK. I am unable to agree with the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies). He objects to the practice which, he says, has prevailed in this House; but I am not aware of any divorces having been granted by the Parliament of Canada under conditions that would not have been recognised by the divorce courts in England. I think when any one doubts the ability of this House to deal with the questions of fact involved in an application for divorce, he is also called upon, if consistent, to condemn the system of trial by jury generally. Surely the House can supply as good a jury as is called together anywhere in the country, to try any question of fact under the judicial system prevailing in the Provinces. The only possible objection, in my mind, that can be advanced—and I do not think it is a sound one—against the present system, is that it is an expensive one. Even if that objection were well founded, it would not altogether justify a departure from this practice. But I maintain that a divorce through this House does not cost more than it would under any ordinary action at law. The expenses are not heavy; therefore, I think the statement that is sometimes made that divorces in Canada are only within reach of the rich, is not well founded. I think the facility with which divorces are granted in England and in other countries, does go a long way to interfere with the sacredness of the marriage tie. But, at all events, in the Province of Ontario, people joining together in the holy bonds of matrimony, feel that it is a life contract, and this makes them careful to do nothing that would justify either of them applying to be relieved from the contract. There is no reason that justifies, in my opinion, the establishment of a divorce court for the Province of Ontario. Divorce courts do exist in certain other of the Provinces. If it is sought to harmonise legislation, that may be a reason for all these cases being brought before Parliament, but it does not supply a reason, I think, for adopting the suggestion made by my hon. friend from Queen's.

REPRESENTATION OF RUSSELL.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER informed the House that he had received the certificate of the Returning Officer at the last election for the Electoral District of the County of Russell, that William Cameron Edwards, Esq., was duly elected for the said Electoral District.

Sir HECTOR LANGENIN moved:

That it be resolved that in admitting William Cameron Edwards, Esq., elected to represent the Electoral District of the County of Russell, to take his seat upon the production of the certificate of the Returning Officer, the House still recommends a strict adherence to the practice of requiring the production of the usual return.

Motion agreed to.

TERRITORIES REAL PROPERTY ACT AMENDMENTS.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (104) further to amend Chapter 51 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, "The Territories Real Property Act."

(In the Committee.)

On section 14,

Mr. THOMPSON. The only change is made in the 38th line of the Bill by the insertion of the words "and the registrar shall thereupon if the title has been registered, or so soon as the title has been registered under the provisions of this Act." The policy of the Act is to enable encumbrances to be recorded prior to bringing the lands under the Act, and it is the duty of the registrar to note the lien so created, and to register against the land.

On section 16,

Mr. THOMPSON. This is a new provision intended to regulate the sub-division of lots. We know that the system of land transfer is based on the rectangular system of survey, and the object of this section is to prevent lots, once placed on the register, from being sub-divided and conveyed by vague descriptions and monuments, maps being deposited drawn on a certain scale showing certain particulars.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In sections where a sale is made they will have to exhibit the map and plan of the whole section.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, and of the manner in which it is to be divided.

On section 17,

Mr. THOMPSON. The alteration there is merely verbal. Sub section 2, is changed in accordance with other amendments that we passed this afternoon.

On section 18,

Mr. THOMPSON. The object is to give an appeal to the Supreme Court of the North-West Territories from the decision of a judge. I mentioned this afternoon that there was a want of uniformity in the administration of the Act, and that want of uniformity has been quite as apparent in regard to the decisions of the judges there, as in the practice of the registrars.

Committee rose and reported.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

William Cameron EDWARDS, Esquire, Member for the Electoral District of Russell, introduced by Mr. Laurier and Mr. Armstrong.

INSPECTOR OF LAND TITLES OFFICE.

House resolved itself into Committee to consider certain proposed resolutions respecting the salary of the inspector of land titles office to be appointed in connection with the carrying into effect of "The Territories Real Property Act."—(Mr. Thompson.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think the salary of this officer should be fixed, so that we may know what the salary is going to be.

Mr. THOMPSON. When the vote is taken for the North-West I will mention the sum proposed to be fixed, and if that meets with the concurrence of the House the salary will be fixed at that sum.

Committee rose and reported, and resolutions read the first and second time, and concurred in.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 104) further to amend chapter 51 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, "The Territories Real Property Act."

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. member for West Assiniboia has given notice of some amendments. As regards the first I think the amendment by which he proposes to insert the words "or territories" after the words "provinces" is unnecessary, because, by the Interpretation Act, province is declared to include the North-West Territories. As to the other amendments, I have no objection to them.

Committee rose and reported.

THE INSURANCE ACT.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into committee on Bill (No. 126) to amend chapter 124 of the Revised Statutes respecting Insurance. He said: My hon. friend from West Toronto raised the question as to the position companies would be in, which have Ontario charters and which came under the provisions of this Act. I have looked into that matter, and I find that a remedy is provided in the Ontario Act. Section 3 in the Insurance Act of Ontario, which went into force on the 13th of January, 1887, and is still in force, provides as follows:—

"The provisions of this Act shall not apply to a company licensed by the Dominion of Canada, except as to sections 114 to 120 inclusive, which shall apply to all fire insurance companies transacting business in Ontario."

These relate to the statutory condition of fire policies, which are binding on all fire companies now licensed in the Dominion. Section 43 of the Ontario Act is as follows:—

"A company which has made a deposit under the Act shall be entitled to withdraw the deposit on the sanction of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, whenever it is made to appear to the satisfaction of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council that the company is carrying on its business of insurance under a license of the Dominion of Canada."

As soon, therefore, as a Dominion license is granted to an Ontario fire company, it will cease to be subject to the inspection or to be in any way under the control of the officers of the Ontario Government; and if it has made a deposit with the Ontario Government, it will be at liberty to withdraw it. This removes all difficulty and danger of conflict between the two. The Ontario Act provides that in that case they come under the inspection of the Dominion Government and are entitled to withdraw their deposit from Ontario.

Mr. EDGAR. So the Finance Minister contends that it is optional in each case?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so.

Mr. EDGAR. And, if it is exercised by the Dominion, either by license or in any other way, it takes it out of the control of the Provincial Government?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. By the consent of the Provincial authority?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, under the Provincial Act.

Mr. MULLOCK. I have not seen the Bill of the Finance Minister, but, when he introduced it, I understood him to mention that it referred to fire and life insurance companies in the same connection. I do not know whether the Bill proposes to deal with what I have in my mind, but I think it is a very unsound policy to have these two classes of insurance combined, and I think the money which is collected by life insurance companies should not be endangered by being embarked in fire insurance. If the Bill does not deal with that question, I hope the Government will take the matter up, and at some future stage attempt to deal with that subject. There is nothing that we are assuming jurisdiction over, and giving, to some extent, sanction to, which is more important than the matter of life insurance. We can easily see that the whole maintenance of a man's family might be swept away by the failure of an insurance company, and the two risks of fire and life are so distinct that I do not think there can be any justification for our giving sanction to allowing life insurance funds, which should be placed only on such securities as trustees would be justified in accepting, to be made responsible for fire losses.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The object of this Bill is simply to apply to companies having provincial charters the same provisions which are made in regard to American companies doing business in Canada, that is, to enable them, by making a deposit with the Federal Government, to carry on their business. But the point which my hon. friend has made is a very important one, and will receive attention.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think our present law provides that the funds for these two insurances shall be kept distinct, and I think that a great deal of the duty of the Superintendent of Insurance is to make sure that these two insurances shall be kept distinct and that none of the funds which are received for life insurance shall be applied for fire losses. I speak from recollection, and I think the Minister of Finance stated that this Bill would be subjected to the provisions, in all respects of the general Act.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is provided in this Bill.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As these proceedings are informal in a sense, I suppose it is understood that, if any discussion is required on the third reading, it will proceed as if we were in committee?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so.

Committee reported.

SUMMARY CONVICTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 113) to amend the Summary Convictions Act.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MULOCK. Would the Minister of Justice explain the object of this Bill?

Mr. THOMPSON. The changes in sections 29 and 30 provide that a constable may serve a subpoena out of the county of the magistrate who issues it. In the second place, that a witness refusing to obey the summons may be arrested and detained before the magistrate until the time of trial, or he must give security that he will appear at the trial. Third, the magistrate has power to fine and imprison a witness so refusing, for contempt, as well as to oblige him to pay costs. These provisions are principally taken from the Speedy Trials Act, and it is proposed to give the same procedure to magistrates.

Mr. DAVIES. I do not object to the change in the 29th section, but I ask the hon. gentleman to consider whether we are doing wisely in passing that 30th section. Now, that 30th section is more far-reaching and more important than hon. members imagine. The magistrate now has power, if his summons is disobeyed, or if he thinks the witness will not obey the summons, in certain circumstances, to issue a warrant and to arrest the man and bring him to court; and we here give him summary power, which generally belongs to courts of record alone, to punish for contempt. But you say that he may summarily determine that there has been contempt, although the summons may not have been personally served; and I would suggest to the hon. gentleman whether he is not giving too great a power to the magistrates.

Mr. THOMPSON. I consent to make the change in accordance with the hon. gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. MULOCK. If the magistrates determine to keep the witness in custody, would it not be right to entitle the witness to an immediate examination, and then to be discharged from custody? Once in custody he can be kept in custody after giving his evidence, because the case may be adjourned, and he may still be required as a witness, and his imprisonment goes on until the case is disposed of before the magistrate. Would it not be right to allow an opportunity to purge himself from contempt?

Mr. THOMPSON. I consent to the change.

On section 7,

Mr. THOMPSON. In the section 76 there is this provision:

"Unless it is otherwise provided, any special Act under which a conviction takes place, or an order is made by a justice."

I propose to strike out the following:—

"Or unless some other court of appeal having jurisdiction in the premises, is provided by an Act of the legislature of the Province within which such conviction takes place."

It seems to be clear that the Legislature of a Province cannot make provision for the court of appeal, for this is purely criminal procedure.

Mr. BARRON. There is an important provision in the Ontario Act allowing each party to go into the case de novo. This is found to work very well, for by the evidence taken before the magistrate it has sometimes happened that justice has not been done. It would be very desirable to allow parties to go into the case de novo before a county court judge.

Mr. THOMPSON. I understand that to be the practice now.

Committee reported, and Bill read the third time and passed.

THE RAILWAY ACT.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 24) to amend and consolidate the Railway Act.

(In the Committee.)

On section 4,

Mr. EDGAR. Will the Minister explain why this is absolutely necessary?

Mr. THOMPSON. The section is of a corresponding number in the old Act, and it contains substantially the same provisions excepting this: that the portions of the Act which are made applicable to all railways are numbered and that Act is divided into three parts. We have therefore recast the section and we have inserted as new words "offences and penalties." Otherwise the clause is just the same.

Mr. EDGAR. It was called part 3 of the Act before.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes; I may state briefly now that sections 31 to 83 have reference to the organisation of the company, the conduct of directors, the making of calls, and various provisions of that kind.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Are not all railways incorporated under the legislative authority of Canada under the Act?

Mr. THOMPSON. Only since the passing of the Railway Act, I presume.

Mr. EDGAR. This would seem to apply to companies to which these provisions are not applicable—that is provincial companies.

Mr. THOMPSON. Certain of them are. A railway is now under the authority of the Parliament of Canada, by virtue of its having been so declared, or otherwise, but that company would not have under its charter those provisions relating to the organisation, or calls, or conduct of the directors, and so forth. It is to enable the company to get under the operation of those sections.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The second section would appear to do that.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think this section is inconsistent.

Mr. LAURIER. It is evidently the intention that it should be optional, and that certain parties in the land should be subject to the law of the land, if they choose to be so. The law should be made for everybody equally.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is made for everybody equally, who comes under its provisions by getting legislation after the Act has passed. Those companies have now their systems, and we cannot without revising all their charters force them under the provisions of this Act. The object of this is when they so rearrange their economy, that they can apply to come under the Act and ask to be brought under its special provisions.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Would this enable them to supersede any special Act?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

On section 8,

Mr. SHANLY. I should like to see it provided that the Minister of Justice should form one of the quorum. Parties will always be heard by counsel, and when points of law are brought up, I think it right that the judicial mind of the committee should be there. Three members of the Privy Council form the committee, and any two form a quorum. What I would suggest is that of those two the Minister of Justice should always be one.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is this objection to that, that in the absence of the Minister of Justice, it might be impossible to obtain a decision on a very simple matter.

Mr. MITCHELL. When questions of law came up the committee would desire to postpone their decision until the Minister of Justice could be present.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If my memory serves me, the committee in former times numbered four. Very extensive powers are given to this Railway Committee, and I think it ought to consist of five with three for a quorum, as I understand their decision is to be final.

Mr. SHANLY. I quite agree with my hon. friend that if their decision is to be final the committee should be increased to five with three as a quorum.

Mr. EDGAR. This Act very largely extends the powers of the Railway Committee; I fancy that is the real object of putting this Act through this Session. The Railway Committee before consisted of at least four members, and now it is reduced to three. I think we should certainly have a larger body or an appeal or both, considering the extraordinary interests involved. It would be retrogressive legislation to place such enlarged powers in the hands of a smaller body without appeal. I agree with the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly) that the number should be increased to five, perhaps with an appeal.

Mr. WILSON (St. John)

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It does not limit the number to three.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But it leaves the power in the hands of two, and those two may not include the Minister of Justice, and there is no appeal. One could easily conceive cases in which the decision of two members would be rather unsatisfactory.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We will make the number four, with a quorum of three.

Mr. SHANLY. I still think it important that the Minister of Justice should always form one of the quorum.

Mr. EDGAR. The difficulty is that there is only one Minister of Justice, and the whole business might be obstructed if he were absent. It would be better to have an appeal, I think.

On section 11,

Mr. EDGAR. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Justice will point out to the committee in what particulars the powers of the Railway Committee are increased by this section? Some of them may be additional powers. If they are, we certainly ought to consider them.

Mr. THOMPSON. Sub-section a is new, for the reason that this Bill for the first time provides that one company may have right of way through the lands of another company. Sub-section b is equivalent to sub-section 16 of section 6 of the former Act. Sub-section c is equivalent to sub-section 15 of section 6 of the former Act.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why do you make it "the construction of branch lines exceeding one quarter of a mile in length." They might require a branch line a little shorter.

Mr. THOMPSON. This is not dealing with the powers of a company, but with the control of the railway company. If the branch line is less than a quarter of a mile, the company can construct it without coming to the Railway Committee.

Mr. EDGAR. I think that companies had the power before of making branch lines six miles in length.

Mr. THOMPSON. No; these powers are subject to the control of the Railway Committee. Sub-section d has its equivalent in section 13 of the old Act.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In what exact respects does sub-section d differ from sub-section a?

Mr. THOMPSON. Sub-section d provides for the crossing of the tracks, and sub-section a provides for right of way over lands owned by another railway company, and not the mere intersection of the road-bed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman mean by a that the Railway Committee would have power to allow another railway to plant itself immediately adjacent to railway No. 1?

Mr. THOMPSON. No, not to replace it on the track.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But they have got a limit of some 66 feet allowed them. Would that clause a allow a railway company to run within 25 or 30 feet of the other track?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On the ground originally granted to the first one.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, and it would enable the company to enter the station ground or the shunting yard of another company which cannot be done now. All that is based on the principle that we should have some system of enabling one railway to get over the lands of another railway company—not in all cases, but subject to the control of the Railway Committee. If that should not be done, and it cannot be done under the present Act, the obstruction is such that in some cases railways cannot be built. All that is needed to prevent another railway coming into proximity is for the existing railway company to purchase lands alongside in such a way as to obstruct the new railway.

Mr. EDGAR. They can only purchase lands for railway purposes.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is easy for them to make it appear that they are for railway purposes. Sub-section e has its equivalent in section 7, sub-section 2 of the old Act. Sub-section f is new: "the use by one company of the tracks or station grounds of another company." Sub-section g, "the construction of works in navigable waters," has its equivalent in sections 91, 92, 93 and 94 of the old Act. Sub-section i is the equivalent of section 48, and j is the equivalent of section 74. Sub-sections k and l have their equivalent in section 16, sub-sections 9, 10, 11, 12. Sub-section l, "the adjustment of such tolls and rates between companies," has its equivalent in section 56, sub-sections 1 and 2. Sub-section m "running powers or haulage" is new. Sub-section n, "traffic arrangement" has its equivalent in section 56, sub-section 2. The other sub-sections are new.

Mr. EDGAR. With reference to these sub-sections a and f, and also having regard to section 102 of the Act, which also is allowed to stand, it appears that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council have taken powers to themselves without appeal, to do what never could be done in Canada before, namely, to allow one railway company whom they may choose to favor—if they should happen to show any favor—to expropriate the station grounds, the right of way, and in fact all the property of the existing company, without any regard even to compensation under this Act. If there were compensation provided, that would be a little matter compared to the entire destruction of the franchise, which might be worked by the arbitrary exercise of this power. I am speaking of the two clauses of section 11, a and f, both of which are new, and when those are read in connection with clause 102, there is a complete system devised of destroying the franchises, if the Government were so disposed, of one railway company in favor of another. There is no use disguising the fact that the company which is aimed at by this legislation is the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. THOMPSON. No, it is not.

Mr. EDGAR. That is the company which owns the largest properties from one end of the country to the other, and a new company, the Canadian Pacific Railway, or other companies which are proposing to construct new lines, will be able, if they can persuade the Privy Council Committee to do it, to expropriate the valuable properties of the Grand Trunk Railway all over the country for the benefit of rival railways, and there is no appeal. I will admit that if a proper appeal to some independent tribunal, not influenced by, we will say, political considerations—some judicial tribunal like the Supreme Court—were given, legislation of this kind might, perhaps, be justifiable; but as it is proposed here, it is arbitrary, unprecedented and entirely unjustified.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman has only, after all, stated that in taking power to do right, we are taking power to do wrong. All reasonable men admit that power must be conferred, notwithstanding that it may be abused.

Mr. EDGAR. With limitations.

Mr. THOMPSON. In every country where any extensive railway system prevails, it is found necessary to allow that the property rights of one railway company should be at times interfered with by another railway company. This provision is no more aimed at the Grand Trunk Railway than at the Canadian Pacific Railway. It gives no more rights against the Grand Trunk Railway than it gives against the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is simply to prevent obstructions, which would absolutely prohibit the passing of lines of railway across the property of other companies.

Mr. EDGAR. They always could cross.

Mr. THOMPSON. They could cross the track but not the lands, and if, for the mere purpose of obstruction, one railway company may buy an acre of land at a point at which another railway proposes to cross, there is an end of that other railway ever reaching its termination. Is that right or wrong? The hon. gentleman says it is unprecedented. Not only do these powers exist in the United States, not only do they exist in the interstate commission, but they are exercised there without appeal, and they are far wider because they enable, not merely the crossing of a railway, but the absolute expropriation of even the track of a railway in some cases.

Mr. EDGAR. How about England? They cannot be found in England.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am not able to inform the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman will not say that in England one railway company can prevent the construction of another, as it can in this country by buying a piece of land or expropriating it for another purpose. I have heard the solicitor of the Grand Trunk Railway along with others, who suggested an amendment to this Bill. The solicitor of the Grand Trunk Railway said this Bill was going very far to enable one company to expropriate the property of another, but, he has asked that we should be careful to provide that the ordinary principles of compensation shall be established, and I have agreed to do that.

Mr. EDGAR. What about an appeal?

Mr. THOMPSON. A railway company should have no more appeal than I should have, if my property were taken. We propose in this Bill on every question that comes before the arbitrators to give an appeal, but no more than the ordinary appeal should be had.

Mr. EDGAR. Only on points of law.

Mr. THOMPSON. No. On all questions of compensation which can possibly be reviewed.

Mr. EDGAR. What tribunal.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will explain that as we go along. We are putting railway companies on the same footing as regards compensation as other property owners.

Mr. SHANLY. The Committee of the Privy Council decide what lands should be taken, but you refer the cost to the ordinary means of compensation for the valuation of that land with power of appeal.

Mr. EDGAR. Yes.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not think these powers are any greater than those which are taken in the United States, and in England also. I think that the Railway Commissioners in England have powers quite as extensive as these, but I think we have been reduced to rather a peculiar position in Canada by reason of the fact that we have not followed out the legislation contained in this Bill, as it has been followed out in England and the United States, and have not provided the tribunal necessary to give effect to the legislation; and now we have legislation of this very strong kind, as I think I may call it, committed into the hands of the Privy Council, in other words, committed to gentlemen who are simply politicians. I think that is a very improper state of affairs.

Mr. MITCHELL. It appears to me that there is an immense power taken by the Government under this Bill. I do not say that it is not necessary that some person should have the authority described in the Bill as vested in the Privy Council. I am not prepared to say, with some of my friends on this side of the House, that one railway company should not have a right to take the lands of another railway company under a great necessity. The Grand Trunk Company, the pioneers of railway enterprise in Canada, may have an entrance to certain cities, to Montreal and to Toronto, and I am not prepared to say that no other railway should have the right to get into those places, which might be the case if the opportunity was previously taken by another railway. I think that is what my hon. friend desires to provide against, and I think it is reasonable that such a provision should be put in the Railway Act. The only thing I regret is that this proposal gives to the Railway Committee of the Government, in which I have no great amount of confidence, the power to grasp by the throat one railway company or the other, because, if they do that in a despotic manner, they may compel them, when a general election comes on, to step out and vote as they dictate. Still, I do not see how we are to get over that. I am afraid we will have to give that power to them, but I have spoken before in regard to the danger which there is to the liberties of the people in leaving such power in the hands of these two great railway corporations which are now dominating the people, and the danger will be intensified by such legislation as this. Still I do not see how we are to get over that. Of course, if we could put in a government which would exercise the power fairly, that would be another thing, but I am afraid that the power proposed to be given is a dangerous one. Yet I do not see how we are to avoid it.

Mr. EDGAR. No matter what Government might be in power, I do not think it should be clothed with such a despotic authority as this amounts to. I think it is just as well to leave questions of this kind to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council as the first tribunal, and, if all parties are satisfied with their decision, and a fair provision is made for compensation, that is all right; but, if they provide unfairly in regard to a matter affecting a vast amount of property, why should they be the only tribunal in Canada from which there is no appeal? In all other matters affecting value there are appeals from the decision of the court of first instance, and why should there not be in this case? Why should it be said that the three members of the Committee of the Privy Council are infallible when the decisions of the judges of the Supreme Court and of all the judges of the land can be appealed from? I contend, and I shall continue to contend, that an appeal should be allowed from the decision of this committee.

Mr. THOMPSON. I understand that the hon. gentleman agrees that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council should decide the matter in the first instance, and that is all which is referred to in this clause, and I therefore, move that it be adopted.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But there is another clause.

Mr. THOMPSON. We cannot take two clauses at once.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The same thing would apply to the members of any government whatever. There is no doubt that members of a government are subjected to pressure which cannot be put on any judges in the land, and least of all on the judges of the Supreme Court, and cases have arisen, are always arising, and will continue to arise, when extraordinary pressure may be put on the members of the Committee of the Privy Council in favor of a particular railway. I think that every principle of justice and equity demands that there should be an appeal to the Supreme Court. If the Minister of Justice will concede that, there will be no need of any further discussion on the subject.

Mr. McNEILL. There is a difficulty also as to the appeal, because the judges in England with, I think, one dissentient voice, have declared that they cannot decide on matters of that kind, such as haulage and right of way over tracks and so on. Those are cases in which they have decided that they are not competent to deal with them, and therefore it would be better to have a special tribunal appointed for the purpose. I think it would be better to have an appeal from the tribunal of politicians who have to deal with this matter, but it is unfortunate that we have not a tribunal specially competent to deal with those subjects.

Mr. EDGAR. It is for the Parliament of Canada to say what it is competent for the Supreme Court to deal with.

Mr. McNEILL. It is not a question as to our competence to say what the court has a right to deal with, but as to what they are able to deal with. We may take a horse to the spring but we cannot make him drink. I fancy that it was for the same reason that a special tribunal was provided in the United States.

Mr. EDGAR. So far as that is concerned, in this very Bill, a little further on, in clauses which, I think, have been cast already, it is provided that the Supreme Court shall have cognisance of any matters of law which the Railway Committee think fit to refer to them. It says: "The Supreme Court of Canada shall hear and determine a question or questions of law arising thereon, and remit the matter to the Railway Committee with the opinions of the court thereon." In addition to that clause, it would be necessary to extend that to questions coming under these clauses which provide that the Railway Committee shall adjudicate upon the right of one company to obtain the lands of another, in order to meet the difficulties which have been raised.

Mr. THOMPSON. In due time the hon. gentleman will be asked to take that up and then he can make what proposal he wishes as regards the Bill.

Mr. EDGAR. It is understood these clauses shall be considered as we come to them?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is in the power of the committee to reconsider any clause it has passed.

Mr. LISTER. The other day I spoke to the Minister of Justice about the Bill I introduced respecting the crossing of tracks, streets, drains and water mains. I would ask him whether he has considered the matter, and whether this is not the proper place to insert legislation.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do propose to take up some of the clauses of the hon. gentleman's Bill before we get through.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. I would suggest to substitute the following instead of clause g: "any highway or street, ditch or sewer, water, gas or other pipes and mains over or through lands owned or occupied by the company."

Mr. THOMPSON. There is no objection to that.

Mr. EDGAR. If by any chance the Government have left out an occasion to bully or worry a railway in the other sections, they have got it into section g, because under that they have jurisdiction to decide "any matter, act, or thing which, by this or the special Act, is sanctioned or required to be done or prohibited."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That does not embrace anything that is not already covered by what has been sanctioned, required to be done, or prohibited, by this or the special Act; so that it does not widen it at all.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). If Parliament decides to give the Railway Committee these functions, we must expect to give them very large powers.

Mr. SHANLY. I am strongly of opinion that there should be at least an appeal from the Committee of the Privy Council to the whole Council. After the words "final" in section 20, I would be in favor of inserting:

"Provided always that either party may petition the Governor in Council, and the Governor in Council may, in their discretion hear the parties and change or vary any such orders as they, in their judgment, may deem fit and proper."

Section 20 was reconsidered.

Mr. SHANLY moved in amendment the addition of the following words to section 20:—

"Provided always that either party may petition the Governor in Council and the Governor in Council may in their discretion rescind, change, or vary such order as they in their judgment may deem just and proper."

Mr. LAURIER. This is an important clause of the Bill; but I should prefer that the appeal should be taken not to a political body but to a judicial power, say the Supreme Court. It has been stated that the Supreme Court would not be, perhaps, the most competent body to deal with such a question, that the judges would not be so competent as special men. That may be so. But hon. gentlemen will agree also that the judges, being outside of the arena of politics, would be more competent than men actually in politics. The Minister of Justice stated that all powers are liable to be abused, and that is the reason why there is a check on parties vested with authority. We are proposing to give to two men, actually in politics and, therefore, liable to political influences, very great power. It is proposed to take an appeal from their decision to the Privy Council itself; I agree that is an improvement; but the men to whom the appeal is taken are still liable to be influenced and prejudiced by party considerations which might bias their judgment. Would it not, under these circumstances, be wiser to take an appeal to men removed from political influences? We are giving the very greatest power to this committee to deal with powerful corporations, and is it not, therefore, wise to remove the tribunal as far as possible from the arena of politics?

Mr. THOMPSON. If the suggestion of the hon. gentleman were carried out, it would be necessary to completely reorganise the Supreme Court and all its system of procedure.

Mr. LAURIER. Would it not be necessary also to reorganise the Privy Council?

Mr. THOMPSON. No; the Privy Council stands as it has been constituted by Parliament and the people. Until the composition of the body is changed by the body that created it, it is hardly worth while to discuss its composition. I desire to call the attention to the inaptness of a court of appeal for the purpose of reviewing decisions of the Privy Council on a matter like this. The parties are heard in a summary way before the Railway Committee. Witnesses are sometimes not examined. The parties very often agree as to the facts and only disagree as to certain matters of detail and certain questions of value. In some instances it is absolutely necessary that experts should be sent over the ground, in other instances members of the Railway Committee have visited the locality, and from those elements their decision is eventually made. If the matter goes before the Supreme Court there may not be a shred of evidence taken, and it has not by its procedure means of examining witnesses. There would be nothing on which to base a decision in such an event. The Supreme Court would need to be constituted a court of first instance, which it is not now, and its judges made judges on questions in regard to which experts alone can properly decide. I am generally speaking in favor of appeal, and for that reason I do not object to the proposal of the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly); but in no country where there is a tribunal to regulate matters of this kind, is an appeal given to any legal tribunal in the shape of a court of appeal. In the United States all these matters are entrusted to three gentlemen, one being a lawyer, and two of them, and they may not include the lawyer, form a quorum, and their decision is absolutely final, as much so as the statute of the United States. There it has been found absolutely necessary to establish a system like that in order to get promptness. The complaint made, when this question was last discussed, was mainly in regard to delays occurring before the Privy Council. This can only be avoided by having a small quorum and prompt action; but if the matter has to go before a court of appeal on every question of crossing and the placing of gates at crossings, a decision will not be reached for one, two or three years. The adoption of this system would lead to disorganisation of the whole system, and compel us to establish another tribunal, and a very arbitrary one, instead of the present tribunal, which is answerable to Parliament.

Mr. LAURIER. There is force in the answer made by the Minister of Justice to my contention. I am far from asserting or from believing that the Supreme Court of Canada would be the very best tribunal to deal with such questions, but I submit that under our existing system the Supreme Court, with all its imperfections, is the body that would be likely to give most satisfaction. No doubt a special tribunal is more competent to deal with such questions, but until we have such I have no hesitation in saying that if we have to choose between an appeal to the Privy Council and an appeal to the Supreme Court, the balance of reasoning is altogether on the side of the Supreme Court.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would add to what my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, has said, in reply to the leader of the Opposition, that the practice of the past does not support the fear that the hon. gentleman seems to have of the decisions of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. I was for many years Minister of Railways and we had a great many very fierce controversies before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. My hon. friend the present Minister of Railways has had also a great many very strong controversies between contending parties, on questions of very great moment and very great importance. I do not remember, at this moment, one decision within the last ten years that has been brought before this Parliament by either the one party or the other. The decisions arrived at, have, I believe, been such as commended themselves to the parties, and in fact they disproved the impression that they were given on political considerations, or any other considerations outside those of justice and fair play. The decisions have always been accepted, and they have not been brought before Parliament as undoubtedly would have been the case, if there had been any reason to suppose that they were not fair and just decisions. When you consider that you have on this committee the Minister of Railways, a gentleman whose mind and attention is given specially to the consideration of those subjects, that you have him assisted by able engineers whose business it is to weigh and consider those questions in all their bearings, and that you have in addition to that, on this committee the Minister of Justice, to see that everything touching the law is kept right, I doubt very much—in addition to the delay by which would almost render it impracticable to go to the courts—if you would obtain more satisfactory results to any of the parties concerned by any other system.

Mr. LAURIER. I might point out that I do not think that what the hon. gentleman has stated is good argument. It reflects great credit and great honor upon the former Minister of Railways, since he was able to give decisions which were not subject to controversy. But perhaps we will not always have the services of the former Minister of Railways, and perhaps his successor may not be so fortunate in giving such decisions.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. For many years my successor has given them.

Mr. LAURIER. If I understand the Minister aright they are taking very new and very extraordinary powers. They are greatly reducing the scope of the Railway Committee, and those two clauses a and f are deviations from the former practice, and from the former law, and they give powers which would enable the Railway Committee of the Privy Council almost to confiscate one railway for the benefit of another, with a very insufficient compensation in many cases. I do not say that that power will be abused, but this legislation will give them that power.

Mr. THOMPSON. Compensation is a subject of appeal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. By what clause?

Mr. THOMPSON. It will be provided for.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is not in the Bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. No, I am going to provide for it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does that affect the whole question?

Mr. THOMPSON. The evidence is to be taken in writing and filed with the registrar of the court, so that either party can insert an appeal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me, in some of these cases that it would be nearly possible to confiscate one company by allowing another company to enter in and take possession and use its tracks, stations and station lands.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is a case in which the company ought not to get the right.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, I know, "ought not," but I think the companies will feel very much more secure if they had an appeal to a judicial body to decide that.

Mr. EDGAR. I do not think the difficulties which were suggested by the Minister of Justice in the way of an appeal to the Supreme Court are so great as he seems to fear. No one suggested that there should be an appeal in the case of gates and crossings, and minor matters of that kind, and it was only where one railway corporation was assuming to take the lands and station grounds of any other that appeal is asked for. The Minister of Justice has told us that provision will be made for compensation, with a right of appeal to the courts in the ordinary course in this instance as well as in others. As I understand the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly) covers appeals from the Railway Committee to the whole Privy Council, in all matters, large and small.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. EDGAR. I think that is a very important step in advance and I should be glad to support it.

Mr. SHANLY. I beg to ask if it is the practice, if it has been the practice heretofore, and will continue to be the practice, of taking the evidence given before the Privy Council in writing.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is the practice.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that evidence taken on oath?

Mr. THOMPSON. No.

Mr. LISTER. What I have to say now does not come under this section, but I might as well say it as at any other time. Is it the intention of the Government to include in this Bill a section, making it penal on the part of any railway company to give passes to members of the Senate and House of Commons. As a matter of fact a very large number of the members of this House hold passes from the railway companies. If they hold them because those railways have been subsidised by the people of the country then there should be no distinction shown amongst the members, but if they are given to members for the purpose of influencing them in their votes then they should not be allowed to have them. If members are entitled to passes because they are members of the House, all should have the right to travel over the railways free, irrespective of party. I think this is a proper matter to bring before the attention of the Government, and that they should either make it penal for companies to issue passes to members of the Senate or House of Commons, or if it is thought that the country is entitled to this privilege, then every member of both Houses should receive passes.

Mr. EDGAR. I observe that the Royal Commission on Railways had that matter under consideration, and that they recommended that the granting of free passes by railway companies, not only to members of Parliament but to everybody else, should be abolished, saving and excepting the reservations in the United States Interstate Commerce Act, and excepting members of the Federal or Provincial Governments, travelling over federal or provincial railways respectively. As far as I can see, this is one of the recommendations of the Railway Commission with which the Government do not propose to deal in this Bill. If they are dealing with it at all I should say it would be exceedingly appropriate to make it penal for railway companies who are seeking legislation at the hands of this Parliament to offer free passes to the members of this House.

Mr. LISTER. I know one member from the Province of Manitoba who has not received a pass at all, nor has he received a half fare certificate, while other members from that Province have received full free passes. I do not think those companies should place the members of this House in any such position. If the members are entitled to those passes they should receive them, and I will support a measure here making it penal on the part of the company to grant any member of Parliament a pass.

Mr. AMYOT. I think the principle is admitted in many countries that the railways subsidised by the state, should grant free passes to the members of the Legislature. It is in the public interest that every member may go over the country and ascertain for himself in what state are the public works, and in what condition are the railroads and so on. That is in the public interest. In the second place it is in the public interest that those free passes be granted to all so as not to be the means of corruption when the Bills concerning certain railways come before the House. It is no use trying to deceive the public, for all the members are glad to have free passes. We do not go into politics in this country because we are rich. We know very well that some members have given votes, under certain circumstances, with reluctance, I will not say this year, because of the free passes which they had received or which were offered to them. I think it would be better to take a firm stand on the matter, and as all railways which have been declared to be under federal jurisdiction have received subsidies from the state, and as it is in the public interest that members should have the right to travel all over the country, we should say that on the presentation of a certificate stating that they are members of the House of Commons or the Senate they should be entitled to free passes. This is done in France; I think the same thing is understood in England; and in the United States, although there is no law to that effect, it is well understood that all members of Congress should have the right to go over the railroads free. Therefore, I think it would be right for us to take a bold stand which will avoid corruption. Therefore, I am ready to take the responsibility of proposing a clause, to this effect:

Every member of the Senate or of the House of Commons will be entitled to a free passage upon any railway declared to be under federal jurisdiction upon exhibition of a certificate signed by the Clerk of the Senate or the House of Commons, respectively, establishing the identity of such member.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am not disposed to go as far as my hon. friend; but I think that we all agree that if any free passes are to be given to members of this House over railways controlled by the Government, they should be distributed indiscriminately. That question was before the House last year, and I think it was then well understood that on such occasion as a recess, if passes were to be given they should be given to all the members. At the last Easter recess, when I had occasion to return to Nova Scotia, I was aware that passes were given to members of that Province who would go to the clerks of the department and ask for them. I did not care to put myself in that position; I preferred to go to the ticket office and pay $25 for my fare to Nova Scotia and return. I thought it was a position a member of this House should not be placed in, and I travelled over the railway with other gentlemen going and coming who had free passes. I only say that if passes are given at all, they should be given to all and not to the few who go to the offices for them.

Mr. THOMPSON. I presume the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) only intends to give notice of his amendment, as it is not pertinent to the clause we are now discussing. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) asked if the evidence is to be taken under oath. There has been hitherto no power to take it under oath, but one of the clauses of this Bill provides for that—sub-section e of section 13.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If it is taken under oath, I presume it will be put on record.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

On section 90,

Mr. INNES. I understood that the hon. Minister was to reconsider clauses g and h of clause 90.

Mr. THOMPSON. I did agree to consider them fully with the view of providing for compensation, and I have made a note to explain the sections, which I think answer that purpose. I will be prepared to show to the hon. gentleman before we finish that I provided amply for his case. The company has, in the first place, to place the road or whatever it may be, in as nearly as possible the same condition after the work is done as that in which it was before. It is provided that they must make compensation.

Mr. INNES. It is sometimes very difficult for a municipality to get compensation. It is more difficult than it is for a private individual.

Mr. THOMPSON. In looking at the clause dealing with compensation, I think I have met the hon. gentleman's wishes fully. It has been asked, in some places, that the municipality should receive compensation, not for the cost of making a new road or anything of that kind, because that has all to be done by the railway company, but for the mere fact of the grade of the road having been changed. It may be necessary to change the highway or to put an overhead bridge where there was formerly a level highway. Under those circumstances, it has been asked, in one instance, that the municipality should be compensated. I do not think that would be a safe principle to introduce. We ought to compel the railway company to restore the road to, as nearly as possible, the same condition in which it was before. We ought to make them pay compensation for all the loss and expense they have caused, but I do not see that a municipality, township, or city ought to be paid a sum of money by reason of the road being made of a steeper grade than before. With respect to highways, the municipality must be treated as trustees of the general public, and no inconvenience is occasioned except the inconvenience to the general public, to which it has to submit in the carrying out of the public work.

Mr. INNES. The railway might make the grades so that the road would be practically impassable.

Mr. THOMPSON. All that is to be under the control of the Railway Committee.

Mr. LISTER. I have an amendment to propose, which I may as well propose now. I move the following amendment:—

It will not be lawful for a railway company chartered by Parliament to grant any complimentary passes over the road or any part thereof, to any member of the Senate or House of Commons; or if any member of the Senate or House of Commons travels on any such pass over any such road, his seat shall ipso facto become vacant, as if he were naturally dead.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. LISTER. I give notice that I will again move that amendment on the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. I propose to insert 20 per cent in the 4th sub-section of section 93. I propose in section 102 instead of "No company shall take possession of," to make it read: "Any company may."

Mr. WELDON. I would suggest that the words "When the public interest require" should be added.

Mr. MULOCK. I propose that an appeal be granted from the exercise of the power under this clause. Under this clause, it is possible for the committee, subject to the appeal referred to, to allow one company to take possession of the railway of another. It is now proposed that a railway company may, with the sanction of the Government, take possession of and use and occupy the lands of any other company. I think these are very extensive powers and that there should be a qualification, and I think that should be:

"So as, however, not to interfere with the working of the senior company."

Mr. THOMPSON. It would not do to frustrate the operation of that clause by allowing one company to assert that the taking of its land by another would interfere with the working of the railway.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not think it will be right to vest in the Committee of the Privy Council the power to transfer all the lands of one company to another company, and the words of this section are quite large enough to do this. Of course, that is not aimed at, but I would ask the Minister to provide some safeguard in that case.

Mr. EDGAR. Of course the Minister does not intend to enlarge the provisions of section 11, but only to carry them out.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, to carry them out.

Mr. EDGAR. But these provisions are much larger. I suggest that the clause should be amended by saying that the company may, for the purposes named in sub-section a and sub-section f of section 11, take possession. Of course that is what is intended.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I would suggest that the following words should be inserted after the word "give":

If the lands proposed to be taken are necessary and if the public interest requires them to be so taken.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does not that carry on the face of it the suggestion that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council would enable one company to infringe on the rights of another without necessity? I think you must assume that this is all subject to the necessities of the case and to the public interest.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). No; this would make the company apply to Parliament and show that there was a public necessity, and it should be clearly shown that it was only in case of public necessity that the lands could be taken by one company from another.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They must show that to the satisfaction of the Railway Committee.

Mr. MULOCK. But why should we give a larger authority to the Government than it is necessary to have exercised?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If these provisions are put in, it will be the Railway Committee who will have to construe them.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not know what these words are, for I did not hear them. They may not meet the case, but I do not think the Government should have power absolutely to transfer the property of one company to another company. The Government may make a mistake.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They will not have that power, because the question of compensation is to be a matter of appeal.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the use of arguing against the words? No doubt the Minister thinks that what he says is correct, but this section has a plain meaning, and no wider power could be given to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council than what is contained in it. Subject to appeal, they may give any land belonging to one company to another company, and they should have their power limited, and the company in possession should not have the working of its road impaired by the exercise of these expropriating powers.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What would you suggest?

Mr. EDGAR. I proposed a limitation in these clauses a and f of section 11 which would limit the powers to the station grounds, and places of that kind.

Mr. MULOCK. I would suggest that this clause should stand over. There should be some principle to guide us, and that should be that, if the rights of one company have to defer to the rights of another, the rights of the company in possession should be considered first of all, and the invading company ought not to exercise rights against the interests of the invaded company without reasonable grounds for the interference.

Mr. THOMPSON. We will let the clause stand for the present.

On section 156,

Mr. MULOCK. Have you taken out of this reprinted Bill the power of a railway company to appoint an arbitrator?

Mr. THOMPSON. No.

Mr. MULOCK. I think it ought to come out. When the Railway Committee selects its arbitrator, and the proprietor has selected his, I do not think that either party should have an advantage. Under the present law the proprietor can give a notice of desistment at any stage if he thinks the award is going against him. He can cancel the whole work up to that moment, and start again. Both ought to be on the same footing.

Mr. THOMPSON. They may ascertain in the meantime that they do not require the property.

Mr. MULOCK. Quite so. If they desist on that ground, well and good; but the company should not be allowed to desist merely to get rid of the arbitrator and to begin again.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. LAURIER. This is giving very large power. If, by some accident, an award is made by the arbitrators, then the sum offered by the company shall be compensation to be paid by the company, and, therefore, the owner of the land is altogether without recourse. He was not satisfied with the sum tendered to him by the company; the matter has been referred to the arbitrators, they fail to make an award, and he is forced to accept the amount. I do not think that is fair.

Mr. THOMPSON. The matter must be ended at some time, and the object of this is to fix a limit. The company, in the first place, makes an offer, the proprietor, being dissatisfied, with that, claims an arbitration. The time is fixed, and unless the award is made by that time, it is equivalent to saying they will not change the offer. They know that before they begin.

Mr. LAURIER. The amount might be deposited in court by the company.

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask the Minister to go back to clause 158, the desistment clause. I would suggest that the desistment should be only where the company does not desire the lands.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will consider that when we get to it again.

On section 182,

Mr. SHANLY. This clause provides for the Council having power to order swing bridges to be constructed in any particular place; but it does not seem to be fair that bridges that have long been in use, should be subjected to any such change as that. I would suggest that the following be added to this clause:—

"Provided, however, that so much of this clause as relates to the substitution of swing bridges for fixed bridges, shall not apply to any railway bridge heretofore built and now in use."

I know the Committee of the Privy Council do not want to multiply swing bridges; but still it might be very unfair that bridges that have long existed, should now have to be changed.

Mr. THOMPSON. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that swing bridges ought not to be ordered where they can possibly be avoided; but I think that when the public interest of the community, as regards navigation, requires that they shall be ordered, there should be no distinction made between those which exist and those which are to be constructed hereafter.

On section 189,

Mr. SHANLY. I think this clause is rather arbitrary, and I would suggest that we add the words: "it shall not be competent for the Railway Committee to extend the time for the completion of said work, upon proper cause being shown."

Mr. THOMPSON. I have no objection.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Why should there be a longer time for the completion of this work, if the Railway Committee should think it necessary? Certainly the Railway Committee will, in the first place, set the proper time, and then it is the duty of the company to make the necessary repairs, so as to lessen any risk or danger. I think we should leave the clause as it stands, it is better for all parties concerned; the railway company knowing well the necessity of making the repairs at the time suggested by the Railway Committee, will proceed to make those repairs. The clause is better as it is.

Mr. SHANLY. In view of the extensive powers given it is not extending their powers very much to say that under certain circumstances an extension of time may be granted.

Mr. MULOCK. I agree with the reasoning of the member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly); but the Government have exercised powers they did not possess under the Act. For very good reasons the Grand Trunk Railway Company were ordered to erect gates at Simcoe and York streets, Toronto. The work had to be done on 1st January, but it has not been carried out. Those streets lead from the Union station to the centre of the city and are crossed every day by thousands; many trains pass on the different tracks and life is endangered. The member for West Toronto (Mr. Denison) called the attention of the Government to the delay at the commencement of the Session, and the Government were unable to advance any reason why the work had not been completed. Did the Government grant an extension of time?

Mr. THOMPSON. No.

M. MULOCK. Have the Government taken steps to enforce penalty?

Mr. THOMPSON. I cannot answer that question at the moment without making enquiry.

Mr. SHANLY. In section 192 it is provided that every bridge over a railway shall be of a height of not less than seven feet from the top of the cars. The cars belonging to our own railway companies may allow this distance, but refrigerator cars of American roads may reduce it by a foot and a-half. Is the railway subject to a penalty? It would be better to recast the clause and fix the height from the rails.

Mr. THOMPSON. The section is for the protection of workmen on board the cars. It is better to leave it as it is, in view of the provision by which that requirement may be dispensed with in any case where trains are operated with air brakes, or where any protection of that kind is used.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew) In regard to section 194 I propose to move an amendment with a view to restore the law to what it was prior to 1868. In 1883 I moved a similar amendment to the one I now propose, and it was carried through this House, but certain changes were made in the Senate which minimised its effect. I move that clause 194 be struck out and the following substituted:

Fences shall be erected and maintained on each side of the railway of the height and strength of an ordinary division fence, with openings or gates or bars or sliding or hurdle gates of sufficient width for the purposes thereof, with proper fastenings at farm crossings of the railway, and also cattle-guards at all highway crossings, suitable and sufficient to prevent cattle and other animals from getting on the railway. 2. A hurdle gate has proper fastenings if it is fifteen inches longer than the opening and is supported at each end by two upright posts.

Mr. THOMPSON. This will oblige every railway company to fence its whole track on both sides of the line for the safety of a single cow.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). No, I think the hon. gentleman is not right in that contention. It compels a company to fence without notice having been given, or to take the consequences whatever they may be of their neglect to fence. I think it is the duty of railway companies, in view of the concessions that are necessarily given to them, to protect their tracks, not only against the destruction of the property of other people but so as to render them as little danger as possible to destruction of life. I do not think that any notice ought to be required to be given as is provided in this Act to the railway company, of what seems to me to be their manifest duty. If a railway company choose to take a risk in not erecting fences, then it will be subject to the penalties for not doing so.

Mr. THOMPSON. It has been the policy of the Government to encourage the building of railways in unsettled portions of the country. In unsettled portions of the country, it has never been considered necessary to construct fences, excepting in the class of cases mentioned in section 195 of this Bill, where the land is occupied, and the construction that has been put upon that is, that land is occupied, if it is in the possession of the owner, or any person by his consent, even for the purpose of pasturage. The first clause of sections 194 and 195 provide this:

The company shall make and maintain for the accommodation of the owners or occupiers of any section or lot of land adjoining the railway,—
Fences for separating the lands required for the use of the railway from such adjoining section or lot of land, of a height of not less than four feet and of sufficient strength, with openings or gates, or bars, or sliding or hurdle gates, of sufficient width for the purposes thereof, with proper fastenings therein, at farm crossings of the railway;
Cattle guards at all highway crossings, suitable and sufficient to prevent cattle and other animals from getting on the railway;

If the motion of the hon. gentleman from North Renfrew were carried it would mean that a company might have to fence four or five thousand miles of railway in places where cows were most unlikely to get on the track. This amendment would simply give the right of way over the whole country to stray horses and cattle. No matter whether they may be running at large on the highway, or lying down on the railway track to the risk of life and property, in a way that ought to lead the owners to the severest kind of punishment, the owners have no punishment at all, but the railway companies must incur this enormous expense. What provision has the hon. gentleman in the case of cattle coming along the highway? He proposes to allow municipalities to pass by-laws so that cattle can run at large as they please. There is no possibility of fencing on a highway crossing, and that is the place where cattle are most likely to lie down at night, because it is dry and free from insects. The public would have no protection whatever as regards that, and the cattle would be allowed to run at large. I think the provision in this Bill is a very fair one; that whenever the land is occupied or becomes occupied the railway company shall fence. To provide that the company shall fence thousands of miles of railway where the land is unoccupied just because a cow may happen to be abroad that night some miles away, is unjust indeed to the railway company and to the public.

Mr. SHANLY. I quite agree with the hon. the minister of Justice that the first clause in the amendment that my hon. friend from North Renfrew (Mr. White) makes here would compel the Canadian Pacific Railway, for instance, to fence all the way round Lake Superior on both sides. It would not only be harsh, but it would be absolutely useless. Again, in the last part of his motion he interferes with the existing law. As I remember the old law, cattle were not allowed to roam at large within half a mile of any road.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). That is a provision in this Act which I do not propose to alter.

Mr. SHANLY. The last clause of my hon. friend's motion would clash with that.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I do not think so.

Mr. SHANLY. Certainly, because cattle might roam anywhere, and you could not keep them away without some means of fencing.

Mr. LAURIER. I quite agree with the amendment moved by the hon. the member for Renfrew (Mr. White). It is most opportune, and in my judgment there can be no hesitation at all in accepting it. There is no doubt it would involve the railway companies in some hardship. If the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, for instance, were compelled under this to fence 4,000 or 5,000 miles it might be a hardship, but at the same time the hardship would be less upon the railway company, than the possible hardship which may happen to a poor settler who may lose his horse or his cow and has no means of buying another. We encourage the settlement of wild lands, but we must remember that the settler we send into the wilderness generally comes with scanty means. He has a horse or a cow which is most valuable to him, and that is killed on the railway. He has no recourse against the railway, it is a dead loss to him, and his means are such that he cannot without great inconvenience to himself and his family replace it. I think the hardship is less upon the railway company than on the settler. But I do not believe that the railway company could be compelled to fence so many miles of railway. There is no doubt that under the principle of the law the Canadian Pacific Railway would be compelled to fence around Lake Superior, but they might very well take the risk there of not putting any fences at all and no danger will accrue. When they come to a country where the land is fit for settlement, then they should take the precaution of having those fences put up. It is within the experience of everyone of us that such accidents have taken place, just for want of those very provisions which are contained in the hon. gentleman's amendment. Many a poor man has been injured starting out in life, and has had to endure several years of hardship in consequence of such accidents. This is an amendment which has passed this House already and which I again hope will pass it. After it does pass I hope it will be more fortunate than the last time, and that it will carry in the second Chamber.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). My hon. friend the Minister of Justice calls this ex post facto legislation, and says it is a hardship that should not be introduced into our law. If he goes back to the law of 1868 he will see that those propositions are the laws that existed at that time, and they are almost an exact transcript of the law as it existed prior to 1868. Section 195 of this Bill proposes:

The company shall make such fences, gates and cattle guards within the following times, that is to say:

(a). If such adjoining section or lot of land is occupied at the time of the construction of the railway opposite thereto, within three months after such construction;

(b). If such adjoining section or lot of land is not occupied at the time of the construction of the railway opposite thereto, within three months after it is occupied;

Why should a railway company be allowed to run for three months over a man's land without fences?

(c). If the company is required, in writing, by the occupant of any such adjoining section or lot of land so to do, within six months after any part thereof is taken possession of for the use of the railway.

Why should that be granted? What is unreasonable in the proposition?

Until such fences and cattle-guards are duly made and completed, and if after they are so made and completed they are not duly maintained, the company shall be liable for all damages done by its trains and engines to cattle, horses and other animals on the railway.

I would just like to point out to my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, when he says that it would be necessary for a railway company to fence the whole extent of their line, that I do not think that is at all necessary. In the 194th section you provide that those fences shall be erected. If the company choose to take the risk as my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) says, of not fencing the track in such portions of the country as they consider would not be necessary, they certainly will not put up the fences there, but where there are cattle in certain portions of the country roaming at large it seems to me that it is the manifest duty of the company to fence. It is because I believe so that I have submitted these propositions.

Mr. O'BRIEN. If the Bill should be carried in the shape as introduced by the Minister of Justice, it would mean that all the settlers in the northern part of Central Ontario would have to leave the country, as it would be absolutely impossible for them to make any improvement, or get along if the law is as now suggested. Everybody who knows anything about the country knows that the settlers are of necessity compelled to allow their cattle to run at large. They have no choice; they must either have no cattle at all or let them run at large; and the idea of comparing their hardship to a great company that we have endowed with a great many millions of dollars in doing what simple justice requires them to do, with the injustice and hardship to a settler who may lose his all owing to their negligence, is to make a comparison which I am sure this House will not sustain. We had a fight on this subject before, in which the hon. Minister will remember the sense of the House was very much against him; and I hope he will accept this amendment and save further discussion, because I can assure him that his Bill will not be allowed to pass in its present form.

Mr. EDGAR. The question of the danger to the settler has been pointed out very forcibly by the hon. gentlemen who have spoken; but it appears to me that there is also great danger to the lives of the passengers of the railway in leaving the land unfenced. If the cattle are not fenced in, they will get on the tracks, and be liable to throw off the trains. Therefore I think it is in the interest of the travelling public, as well as of the settlers themselves, that they should be fenced off the tracks.

Mr. THOMPSON. I should look on the insertion of the proposed clause as a very great outrage in the way of railway legislation, and I should think it well to consider very seriously whether it would be worth while to go on with the Bill. I hear hon. gentlemen treat the building of thousands of miles of fence as a matter of not the slightest consideration to a wealthy railway company. I do not know whether these railway companies are wealthy or not; but whether they are or not, I think that we should not take their wealth for the construction of unnecessary fences. The Bill provides that the owners of cattle shall keep them within certain restrictions; but this proposition is to compel the railway company, for the purpose of allowing cattle to run at large in an almost unsettled township, to build fences through the whole of that unsettled country. I think the hardship to the poor settlers is a matter of absolute insignificance in comparison with the enormous burden which this would inflict on the railway companies. The question arises whether it would not be better to insert a clause providing that if the settler gives notice to the company stating how many cattle he has, the company should pay for them. But to require a railway company to build a mile of fencing to save the price of a cow would be paying a very extravagant price to the poor settler.

Mr. LAURIER. I am glad the hon. Minister has made that argument. I think he has given the answer, as there is another alternative to building the fences. If the company choose to dispense with the fence, they can pay for the cows.

Mr. THOMPSON. I should like them to pay for the cows before they get on the track. That alternative is as good as the other.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The hon. Minister of Justice is evidently ignorant of the condition of the country through which the railway is built. There is a stretch of 100 miles of country in which the people must let their cattle run at large; and does the hon. Minister of Justice tell me that because the railway company is not to build a fence, the settlers through 100 miles of country should not allow their cattle to run at large?

Mr. THOMPSON. I say they should not be allowed to run at large within a certain distance of a railway.

Mr. O'BRIEN. It is impossible that they can prevent that. The cattle are one of the means of livelihood which the people must have. As a matter of fact, the railway is fenced, and under this law the company might take their fences down. In that country there are many lots which are not occupied and will never be occupied; and for the hon. Minister to tell me that the people must keep their cattle in only shows either very little regard for the interest of the settlers or very great ignorance of their condition.

Mr. WATSON. It appears to me that this legislation, like a good deal of other railway legislation that we have had in this House, is entirely in the interest of the railway companies. I know of cases in which the settlers have been injured to such an extent by the railways as to have been almost broken up as farmers. I know of one particular instance in which a farmer who owned seven cattle had them all killed by a railway. He sued the company in the Division Court and got judgment for the whole seven cattle; but the company appealed to a higher court where the man was not able to follow them, and he got nothing. That is only one of many cases that occur in Manitoba; and I think that if the company do not fence their track, they should take the responsibility of paying for the cattle killed on it. With regard to the road allowance, I certainly think the settlers will see that their cattle do not get on it, and the railway companies will not be liable for cattle killed on the public highways. I certainly think the proposition made by the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White) is a very fair one. It does not provide that the company shall fence every mile of the railway track; it simply provides that if they do not fence it, they shall be responsible for damages.

Mr. SHANLY. It should be remembered that the danger of allowing cattle to run at large is not only to the cattle and the settlers, but to the lives of the travelling public as well.

Mr. MULLOCK. I sympathise very largely with the view taken by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien). Anyone at all familiar with the country knows very well that the settlement is very sparse, that many tracts are rocky, and that grazing is only found in patches; and it would be beyond the means of the settlers to fence in, say 200 or 300 acres, simply to get the little patches of pasture. If you carry out to its fullest extent the argument advanced by the hon. member for Muskoka, it means that the settlers must leave the country as soon as the railway comes. I am not prepared to accede to that doctrine. The settlers were there first; they had their rights, and when the railways come in, we must have regard to the existing rights of the settlers. I entirely sympathise with the hon. member for Muskoka, and if the hon. Minister thinks the matter over, I think he will provide a remedy.

Mr. McNEILL. Does it really amount to this, as the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly) says, that we are legislating that the settlers shall not allow their cattle to run at large throughout the country? Because, if that is what it comes to, it is well that we should understand it. Some of us represent settlers who are obliged, as my hon. friend for Muskoka has said, to leave their cattle running at large. If this legislation should pass, they will not be allowed to do so, for it will virtually amount, as hon. gentlemen opposite have said, to their having to clear out in order to make way for the railway. So far as the argument is concerned that it is unfair to make a railway company erect miles of fencing where there are only a few cattle, that has been disposed of by the statement of my hon. friend opposite, who says companies need not fence if they think it is not worth their while to do so. But it is right that these settlers who have their cattle destroyed, should have compensation for the destruction of their cattle by the railway company, and that the railway company should not be allowed to run over cattle and human beings as they please. We know it is hard enough for ourselves sometimes, even in settled parts of the country, to keep clear of the railway, and I thought that all of us must feel that in a case of this kind it is necessary for the sake of poor settlers that the exceptional powers of railway companies should be curtailed, and these corporations should not be allowed to ride rough-shod over the people.

Mr. THOMPSON. The proposition is that the companies shall not be required to fence at all if they are willing to take the risk of killing cows, and the cows are not to be restrained from running at large within any distance of any railway, so that we shall have no restraint to safeguard the lives of the people who pass over the track.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman says that cattle should not be allowed to roam within a certain distance of a railway. That is proper; but how is that to be enforced in sections where there are no fences? Will you compel a settler to put up fences so as to prevent his cattle from coming within half-a-mile of the railway?

Mr. LANDERKIN. If the people are prevented from allowing their cattle to run along the highway, in order to save the lives of people who travel on the train, does it not seem a little odd that the companies are to be allowed to construct any kind of fence they please, which cattle can get through from the fields and go on the track.

Mr. THOMPSON. I would make the companies punishable for that, of course.

Mr. LANDERKIN. In many places through Ontario the fences are in total decay, and the animals have no difficulty in getting through. There you allow the companies to make any kind of fence. In most instances you find the accidents arising from cattle getting on the track through the railway company's fences instead of from the highway. Therefore, while you are compelling the settlers to keep their cattle off, you allow the companies to let the cattle on.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not care how stringent the regulation is made to compel the companies to keep up fences, if difficulties arise from keeping the fences in an inefficient condition, the enactment of this provision will not remedy the matter. We must make a stringent provision. As to dispensing with the prohibition against cattle running at large, the duty devolves upon Parliament, irrespective of the farmers or the railway, to see that neither human life nor property is endangered.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. the Minister of Justice has stated that under the amendment the company would have to pay simply the loss of the cattle.

Mr. THOMPSON. There is more than that; I was quoting the argument of other members.

Mr. WATSON. The amendment is far-fetched because the company would be interested in fencing the track for the purpose of saving their own property. They cannot endanger the life of the public without endangering their own property.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). As regards sections 194 and 195, I think the hon. the Minister of Justice must have been arguing for the whole of the 3rd clause.

Mr. THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Because as regards these two clauses, what I propose to provide is simply that the company be compelled to put up fences without notice. As I understand the common law, it requires that the owner of cattle shall occupy the property or land from which the cattle stray. I propose by the 195th section to remedy that, but as regards 194 and 195 they do not affect railway companies at all in the way the hon. Minister of Justice has described. The 194th section requires the railway company to fence without notice; 195 provides the penalties that will be imposed for not doing so; and the penalty is exactly the same as in the Act we are now considering, except that the words "after the expiry of the said delay" are struck out. The 196th section reads: "If after the expiry of such delay, such fences, gates and cattle guards are not duly made and completed." The two sections, 195 and 194, will not involve the railway company in the difficulties to which the hon. gentleman referred. I propose that railway companies shall not require notice of any kind and shall be required to fence the road according as it is built, and I cannot see why a company should be at liberty to run a railway through a man's land for three months after it is occupied. If I understand the common law a man must be properly occupying his land; and if he owns one hundred acres of forest land and chooses to put his cattle on it for the purpose of grazing, he is properly occupying it. And that it is of no consequence to the railway company whether the land is cultivated or is in forest.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Supposing it is only a wood lot, and the man does not occupy it, but allows his neighbor to go on it?

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I am not lawyer enough to say whether that would entail upon the company the damages for the loss of the cattle straying on that land and killed there or not.

Mr. THOMPSON. I understand that it has been so held.

Amendment carried: Yeas, 43; nays 9.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew), moved that the following be substituted for section 195:—

(195.) Until such fences and cattle-guards are duly made and completed, and if after they are so made and completed they are not duly maintained, the company shall be liable for all damages done by its trains and engines to cattle, horses and other animals on the railway.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Does that mean that they are to be liable for cattle belonging to anybody?

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I propose this section which I have taken from the Railway Act of the old Province of Canada.

Mr. FISHER. Does the hon. gentleman mean that the railways shall not be compelled to make their fences as they build the railway?

Mr. WHITE. No, but until they do they will be liable for any damages.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to go further, at all events in the old settled parts of the country, and to make it law that they shall fence their lands as they lay their track. I know that, when they are constructing their road, and construction trains are running, there has been great hardship caused to farmers whose land they have taken possession of, or bought for railway purposes, because they have not built their fences when they had been running their construction trains, and I do not think it is any hardship that they should be forced to build their fences as they lay their rails. Of course until they do lay their rails there is no danger, but when they lay them the danger to the cattle commences, and I think when any land through which they pass is occupied or cleared, they should be forced to build fences there if not in other places.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I think the section which has just been carried provides that they shall be liable for damages.

Mr. FISHER. They are liable for all the damage they create, but in old settled parts of the country that does not meet the difficulty, and they should be compelled to build these fences to protect the people whose cattle they may hurt and the people themselves who may go on the railway.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew).

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew) I do not see how the hon. gentleman could compel the companies to build the fences unless he took them into court. Of course, if they do not build their fences, they are liable to damages, but how are you to compel them to build? I will give an instance which occurred in my part of the country in order to show how dilatory these railway companies are. An agreement was made between the proprietor of a large tract of land and the railway company that, as soon as they laid the track, they should put up the fences. There was no difficulty between them, but that was a condition when the price of the land was agreed upon. Some four or five years elapsed before they put up their fences. Every year the proprietor said, Why do you not put up the fences? and they replied that they would put them up, but they had to pay damages to the amount of $400 or $500. Unless he had gone into court, I do not know how the company could have been made to carry out their agreement.

Mr. FISHER. They could be made to do that just in the same way as in regard to division fences between neighbors. By the law of the Province of Quebec, if I wish to have a fence built between me and my neighbor, I have only to give him legal notice, and, if my neighbor does not build the fence, I have a right to build it and sue him for the cost, and it would be the same way in this matter. This gentleman to whom my hon. friend refers could have built his fence, and just such a fence as he chose to build reasonably, and could have made the company pay for it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think my hon. friend should provide for certain cases. Sometimes a fence is torn down or unintentionally injured, or people put their cattle within the enclosure, and I think there should be some penalty imposed on those who allow their cattle to get inside. I know that in some cases they turn their cattle in or let them inside the enclosure.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I am afraid my hon. friend must live in a peculiar community of people. I know that, in my own county, the people are anxious to keep the cattle off the track because in not one case out of fifty have they been able to collect anything from the railway company, though the cattle have actually been killed.

Amendment carried.

Mr. McMILLAN. In the Province of Ontario, there is no necessity for passing a by-law. According to the Municipal Act, all cattle are allowed to run at large until the township passes a by-law to prevent it.

Mr. THOMPSON. This, I take it, would practically do away with that principle of the Act which prevents cattle running at large within a certain distance of the railway. It would put that matter under the control of the municipality. It really does seem to me that the House, even with the strong desire it has shown to protect settlers and farmers, should hesitate to abolish a principle like that, in view of the public interests involved as regards safety. As I said before we have not only to consider the interest of farmers and settlers, not only the interest of the railway companies, but we have to consider that this is a provision adopted exclusively for the benefit of the travelling public. It seems to me that this section is so unreasonable that, although the owner of a property adjoining the railway does not think it worth his while to put side fences along his lot, the railway company is compelled to fence the front of it. That seems to me a very unreasonable proposition, but it is involved in the principle we have adopted, and involved in the 196th section proposed. I think the hon. gentleman had better not press this point.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I draw the attention of the Minister to the provision in 272, which is to the effect that no horse, sheep, swine or other cattle shall be permitted to be at large upon any highway within half a mile of the intersection of such highway with any railway at railway level. Now, what I pointed out the other night, was this, that in certain portions of my county where, as has been mentioned by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) there are farmers who are not very wealthy, and whose lands are not very fertile, and whose principle dependence is upon their cattle, there is one instance that occurs to my mind at the present moment in which over ten miles of the highway runs parallel with, and at a considerable distance from, the railway, so that cattle might be allowed to run over nine miles of that road without interfering with the provision of the law in section 272. I also drew the attention of the House the other night to the fact that there are two or three highway crossings, in the township to which I refer now, of the railway upon which there are no cattle-guards at all. Now, how is the railway to be compelled to put in those cattle-guards?

Mr. SHANLY. The Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Yes, they have the power, but I am sure the poor farmers of that section of the country are not going to come before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to fight a great railway corporation such as that which owns the railway running through my county. What I propose by this section that I am submitting for the consideration of the House, is that if cattle run at large under the authority of a by-law, or under the authority of the municipality, if they go upon the track, other than from the highway—because they can be impounded if they are found within half a mile of the railway crossing on the highway—the company shall be liable for any damages that may occur.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is to say, even if they go off the owner's lot by his not having put up side fences?

Mr. HALL. It seems to me that this is giving power going far beyond anything that this committee should adopt. I think it should be considered that a fair compromise has been made in the clause we have already adopted, protecting the settler. But this would certainly be an innovation on the ordinary law of the country, open the door to what I am afraid would be a very serious matter for the railway companies, and would really be a danger to the travelling public. I should hope the hon. member would be satisfied with the success he has already had in the two clauses he has secured, and not attempt to introduce a clause which would be so directly in violation of the ordinary law of the country.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I do not feel clear upon this clause; it certainly will be inconsistent with the other clause to which reference has been made. That clause 172 has never been acted upon in the part of the country where I live, and it could hardly be acted upon practically. It is a clause which has been passed in the interest of the railway companies, but which, under the existing circumstances of the country, has always been, and will continue to be, a dead letter. The railway companies have never attempted to enforce it. I never heard of a railway company putting an animal in pound caught upon the track. I do not myself see much object in the present clause, because certainly cattle ought not to be allowed upon the track, and certainly the company ought not to be liable in that case, if they killed the cattle.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I am not quite sure but that this provision is somewhat too drastic, and under the circumstances I will withdraw it.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to move, in amendment, as sub-section to 195, the following:—

If an adjoining section or lot of land through or by which a railway passes, is occupied at the time of the construction of the railway opposite thereto, the company shall make such fences, gates and cattle-guards as they lay their rails.

This is in connection with what I said a few minutes ago, that I do not consider it to be sufficient that the railway companies should simply be liable for the damage. In the thickly settled country through which railways frequently pass farmers who occupy land have their fields frequently cut up by the lines, and they are much inconvenienced by fences being taken down and rails removed when the construction trains commence to run. While it is provided that the railway company should be liable for damages, farmers hesitate to commence proceedings, because their damage is comparatively slight.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I am inclined to think that this would prevent a farmer driving his cattle, on a farm crossing, from one part of his land to the other. He would then be within the enclosure of the railway. I should like to hear the opinion of the Minister of Justice on that point.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think it is open to that construction. A farmer has the right to do so and it is the purpose of a farm crossing to enable him to drive his cattle across.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Minister of Justice has had his attention called to the wording of this section. It seems to me that the penalty imposed is very light, in comparison with the penalty that may possibly come to him. Under the Act only $20 penalty is imposed for leaving the gate open, but at the same time he is exposed to consequent damages which might amount to $30,000, or more than he might be worth altogether. I quite understand the penalty should be heavy in the public interest, but it seems to me that the two penalties are inconsistent. If a farmer can be made responsible for the accidental opening of a gate to the extent of more than his worldly goods, on account of contingent accident, it seems to me harsh that such a penalty should be imposed.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The penalty seems to me to be too heavy for the accidental opening of a gate. I suggest that the word "wilfully," who "wilfully leaves a gate open," be inserted.

Mr. THOMPSON. There is no objection to that.

On section 216,

Mr. EDGAR. Would the Minister tell us what is new in this section?

Mr. THOMPSON. The section is all new, but the same subject was dealt with in section 85.

On section 220,

Mr. AMYOT. I think these by-laws should be printed in French, in the Province of Quebec, at any rate.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will add words, providing that in the Province of Quebec they shall be in both English and French.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I should like to enquire whether any provision is made in this Bill to regulate the size of the meshes of the covering of smoke stacks to prevent the escape of sparks.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The courts have decided that the company are bound to have proper appliances.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There are several new clauses in the Bill which appear to have been adopted in pursuance of the report of the Railway Commission. I would like the hon. Minister of Justice to state, in a few words, just what improvements have been made in the law by these clauses which have been added. He is aware that there has been a great deal of dissatisfaction in several parts of the country owing to discriminating rates between towns. I presume that the object of these clauses has been to obviate that difficulty somewhat, and I would like him to state what advantage has been gained in that respect. For instance, would a person in making a shipment from Seaforth, Woodstock or Brantford over any one line of railway be entitled to the same rate per mile as a person shipping from another town for the same distance? I observe that one of the clauses says:

No company, in fixing any toll or rate, shall, under like condition and circumstances, make any unjust or partial discrimination between different localities; but no discrimination between localities which, by reason of competition by water or railway, it is necessary to make to secure traffic, shall be deemed to be unjust or partial.

I suppose that will leave the making of rates to Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and similar places, as much more favorable as the company may decide in their interests than to any inland port or ports that is not a railway centre. Have we really overcome the difficulty in any measure by the new clauses which have been added?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think so; certainly. It is provided:

The tolls fixed for large quantities or long distances may be proportionately less than the tolls fixed for small quantities or short distances, if such tolls are under the same circumstances charged equally to all persons.

That appears to me to cover the case entirely. While it preserves the principle of the long haul and the short haul, it declares that under the same circumstances all persons shall be charged the same rates. I do not think you can have it more explicit than that.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understand that is from any one town the same rates shall be charged to all persons in that town.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not at all. It does not say one town.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Will the rates be the same to two towns at equal distance?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. McNEILL. What is the meaning of "under the same circumstances," in that section?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The same distance, the same quantity of goods, &c.

Mr. AMYOT moved:

That every member of the Senate or House of Commons shall be entitled to free passage upon any railway under the Federal jurisdiction upon exhibition of a certificate signed by the Clerk of the Senate or of the House of Commons respectively establishing the identity of such member.

This amendment if adopted will prevent railway companies from attempting to corrupt members by the offer of railway passes. Better have a law that will apply to every one, and not have railway companies coming down with offers of tickets to obtain votes. I do not complain on the score of not having free passes, because I get them in any case, but I say that members should not be assailed with offers of free railway tickets; and as the State pays for these roads, the members should have the right of travelling over them and using them at different points.

Mr. MADILL. Any men so weak-minded that they cannot withstand the influence of a pass should not have passes.

Mr. AMYOT. The hon. gentleman cannot deny that railway companies were offering free tickets to members. That is an insult to Parliament and it should be avoided.

On section 228,

Mr. MULOCK. These sections provide for tolls such as receive the sanction of the General Governor in Council; but where railways have not submitted their tolls, they are entitled to collect for services rendered as common carriers. They should not be allowed to evade the principle of the law by simply withholding their tariff and then charging excessive rates as common carriers. I propose to add therefore to this section:

Nor shall any company levy or collect any money for services as a common carrier except subject to the provisions of this Act.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will agree to that amendment.

Mr. MULOCK. In section 230, provision is made for certain fixed tolls and I think there is a danger of the interests of the people being overlooked through want of knowledge or inadvertence on the part of the Government in approving of the tolls. When a railway submits its tolls to the Governor in Council, I suppose it sends in a schedule of tolls which involves the supposition that the Government has a knowledge of all the businesses of the country, but there is no one to represent each branch of business or the customers or patrons of the railway, and thus the Government have nothing before them except the schedule of the railway, and the railway representatives themselves. Thus, while the Government may be desirous of approving of only fair tolls, yet, looking into their Orders in Council of the past as I have done, I think they have invariably adopted as a whole the schedules sent in by the railway companies, and in many cases they have adopted schedules which were not only unjust but almost confiscatory. I may say that I have received a letter in reference to this matter from a stockdealer. It is dated 8th May, 1888. He says:

"You are well aware that the farmers and stockdealers are charged for shipping stock on the different roads in some case at a most ridiculous rate."

And then he mentions one case in which he shipped seven sheep from one place to another, only sixty miles distant, and was charged at car rates, $18. I find that a carload of sheep means 120 or 130 sheep, and this man was charged for seven sheep the same price as it would cost to send 120 or 130 sheep. We know that many single animals are transferred from point to point in the Province for purposes that the Government should encourage. For instance, they are sent to shows and exhibited there, and they are shipped also, not more than one or two animals at a time, for breeding purposes. Ordinary cattle which are sold are sent in carloads, but if cattle are sent for breeding purposes they have as a rule to go alone, but in such a case the shipper may have to pay for half a car. I know a case in point, where a man had to pay for a small calf, because it happened to be a male animal, the same price as he would have had to pay for a 4,000 lb. bull. That is very unjust.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. How do you propose to remedy it?

Mr. MULOCK. By an amendment to section 230, as follows:—

Provided always that in the case of any animal shipped to an exhibition for exhibition purposes, and return, and in the case of an animal shipped to any point for breeding purposes, the Railway Committee shall be entitled, notwithstanding any such Order in Council, to reduce the amount of the toll for the carriage of such animal under the circumstances aforesaid, when it appears to the said Committee that the amount fixed by the By-law is unjust or unreasonable, and the amount so taxed by the Committee shall be the only amount which the company shall be entitled to, and the balance shall be retained by the said Committee.

That is that where the amount collected is unreasonable or unjust, the Railway Committee may order its return to the shipper.

Mr. THOMPSON. This law enables us to revise the tolls from time to time, but this amendment proposes to ask us to make special rates for one animal. It will be wholly impossible to make special rates for single animals.

Mr. MULOCK. All stockbreeders are interested in this matter. The amount the railway companies are enabled to collect on the single animals in the aggregate does not amount to very much to the companies, but it seriously interferes with the breeders.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman proposes that, as the value increases, the cost of carriage should decrease. As I understand, he proposes that the amount for which he would carry a common ox should be much larger than the amount to be charged for an animal which would take a high prize at a show. Take the case of a horse which is used for breeding purposes. Instead of that being charged at a less price, there should be a larger price paid for an animal of that kind than for a common animal. The hon. gentleman is reversing the whole thing.

Mr. MULLOCK. The hon. gentleman has lived so far away from the atmosphere of the Canadian farmer that he has forgotten whatever he knew in reference to farming interests. If he would remain a little more in Canada, he might not be so ignorant of the effect of the proposition which I have made, and he would know that this amendment proposes to deal with the case of individual cattle shipped for exhibition or breeding purposes, because otherwise they go in car loads.

Mr. BOWELL. Not always.

Mr. MULLOCK. Almost always.

Mr. BOWELL. If you want to send a draught horse from one farmer to another, you will send it singly.

Mr. MULLOCK. As a rule, ordinary stock are taken in car loads.

Mr. BOWELL. Any one who has brought a single horse anywhere, as I brought one to this town, must know that he would have to pay in the ordinary way. I had to pay for a car.

Mr. MULLOCK. Perhaps Ministers of the Crown may be able to pay for a car for their horses.

Mr. BOWELL. Oh, we are talking sense just now, and not nonsense.

Mr. MULLOCK. I am talking sense.

Mr. BOWELL. You are trying to insult everyone you speak to.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can hardly imagine that the hon. gentleman is serious in the amendment he proposes. Does he suggest that, for every calf which is sent to an exhibition there is to be a special meeting of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and witnesses are to be called and evidence received as to the weight and value of the animal? It is simply trifling with the committee.

Mr. SPROULE. I think there is some force in what the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) has said. I know that I brought a horse down to Ottawa at a cost of $14 and I took him back and paid only $10. Inside the last couple of months I shipped two head of cattle about 100 miles for which I paid $20. The trouble is this: Whatever the rate may be, if it was so much per hundred it would be all right; but when they carry an animal that will weigh 300 or 400 pounds and put him down at 2,400 or 4,000 pounds, then the rate becomes unreasonable.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I think these hon. gentlemen should remember that in almost every case where a single animal, or two animals, are shipped from one point to another, a car is required to be sent with them, and necessarily the rates for each of these animals would be greater than the rate for each animal were a full car load shipped. Besides, my experience is that the railway companies, in transferring animals to exhibitions or for breeding purposes, have transferred them at much lower rates than for any other purpose, at lower rates even than those fixed by the Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think there is something in this. At one time I purchased a horse, and had him taken a distance of sixty miles, and had to pay for the carriage 2,400 pounds. Now, I think the farmers have some claim to consideration. We buy an animal for breeding purposes, and we wish to transport him, he can be put in the corner of a car along with other freight. It is not fair that we should be charged such enormous sums.

Mr. THOMPSON. We have that power now by the very section you propose to amend. We have the right to revise and lower from time to time.

Mr. MULLOCK. But that does not meet the case, because the charge has been levied. You have approved of a by-law which you propose to revise, but so long as that by-law is in force, the rates collected remain the property of the company.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think the true remedy is to amend the law under which that toll is created by lowering the tariff; but having sanctioned the toll, we cannot ask them to give up the tolls they have legally collected.

Mr. MULLOCK. It would be impossible for the committee to approve of a tariff that will be just all round, because they cannot have the knowledge that will enable them to do so. The railway company will get you to approve any tariff that will operate unjustly upon a certain class of people. You have done it over and over again, and you will do it again. All I ask is that when you have sanctioned the collection of a rate which is unjust and unreasonable, you should undo the mischief done thereby.

Mr. THOMPSON. We ought to pay it ourselves, perhaps.

Mr. MULLOCK. I did not ask any such ridiculous thing. The Minister of Justice knows that I have not addressed him in any such spirit. I do not propose such an unfair thing, and if he wants to get this Bill discussed in a proper spirit, I will ask him to be kind enough not to answer me in that spirit. We are trying to prepare a Bill in the common interest of all. If the Minister chooses to sneer at the interest I represent, it is his privilege to do so.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not know why the hon. member loses his temper about it. All I said was, it would be much more reasonable and sensible to say that those who had committed the mistake should pay the toll back than those who had collected it under their law. But the hon. gentleman's proposition strikes me as silly in the extreme, and I cannot see how any one can read that clause and keep a straight face.

Mr. MARSHALL. I can ship cattle now under the old law as cheaply as this will enable me to do. I have shipped cattle and calves altogether by space, and not by weight at all. As the law stands, it is our own fault if the railway takes the advantage of us.

Mr. DENISON. It says here that these regulations shall be changed from time to time by Order in Council, and they can at any time, by representation to the Privy Council, have such changes made without putting them in the Act.

On section 242,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I wish to ask a question with reference to recovery. You would ship, we will say, by the Grand Trunk, the Grand Trunk to deliver to another company, some goods. The goods are damaged by one of the railways at some point, and you make application to the company you shipped by, and they say: We delivered them all right to the next company. The next company says: They were not in proper order when they came to us; and so between the two companies the person is buffeted backward and forward and gets no compensation. What redress is there for him under this railway law? 243, I see, makes the second company that refuses or neglects to receive, convey, or deliver any goods delivered by the first company responsible to the first company, but I cannot see that it makes them liable for any damage that may have occurred to the goods in transit. This has been brought under my notice from a party shipping a car load of apples to Winnipeg. They became damaged en route, and he was unable to obtain damages from the railway company.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It has been held that if a company undertook to carry goods to Winnipeg they would be responsible for them no matter what line they passed over.

Mr. MULOCK. In regard to section 245 I cannot bring the point I desire to make more clearly before the committee than by reading an extract from a local journal, the Newmarket Era. I do not vouch for the correctness of the statement, as I have had no opportunity of seeing the editor and ascertaining how far he verifies it. The extract is as follows:—

"ANOTHER MAN KILLED.—On Friday night last another lamentable accident occurred on the Northern Railway, near Longford, which resulted in the death of another employé on the road named Thomas Scanlon, nephew of Mrs. P. Kitto, of Newmarket, and brother of Mr. Richard Scanlon, baker, of Aurora. The cause of the accident was the same as that which resulted in the death of the brakeman, only a couple of months ago, who was run over at Holland Landing, and demands a remedy at the hands of the Government. Mr. Scanlon attempted to set the brake on a flat car, when the end of the shaft came out of the socket and he was thrown between the cars. Only the caboose passed over him, but it mangled both legs almost off near his body and he died after 4 hours of suffering. He was about 28 years of age and expected to be married next month. He was a very active, intelligent and obliging man, and a general favorite among those with whom he worked. He had been on the road 5 or 6 years and was the next man to be promoted. His remains were interred by sorrowing relatives some two or three miles above Bradford on Monday last, near his parent's residence."

Apart from the ordinary law, which to some extent limits the liability of employés in some cases, there is a custom requiring employés to contract themselves out of their rights in case of accident. Will the Minister of Justice be prepared to receive an amendment to deal with such a case?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes; but it should not be moved this evening, but submitted only, and I will take it into consideration.

Committee reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2.05 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 15th May, 1888.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

ONTARIO AND SAULT STE. MARIE RAILWAY.

Mr. HDGAR asked, Whether an application has been made to the Government by the Ontario and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company for a subsidy; and whether the Government has yet decided to aid the construction of that line?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Such an application has been made, but I am not in a position to give an answer to the second portion of the question.

THE DREDGE CAPE BRETON.

Mr. TUPPER (Picton) asked, Is it the intention of the Government to provide for a steam dredge in the place of the dredge Cape Breton which was lost last fall?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not the intention of the Government to buy another steam dredge, at all events for the present; but most likely the steam dredge that has been lost will be replaced by a hired one.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

Mr. CURRAN (for Mr. GIROUARD), asked, Have the Government received an application from the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada for assistance in doubling their line of railway between Montreal and Toronto; and is it the intention of the Government to bring the same before this House during the present Session?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Such an application has been received, but I am not in a position to answer the second portion of the question.

TUNNEL FROM SARNIA TO PORT HURON.

Mr. HESSON (for Mr. PATTERSON, Essex), asked, Have the Government received an application from the St. Clair Railway Bridge and Tunnel Company for assistance in the construction of a tunnel for railway purposes from Sarnia to Port Huron, in Michigan; and if so, is it intended to bring the same before this House during the present Session?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Such an application has been made, but I cannot answer the second portion of the question at present.

EXCISEMAN AT PICTON.

Mr. PLATT asked, What is the gross amount of revenue collected by Mr. A. F. McCuaig, exciseman at Picton, since his appointment? What was Mr. McCuaig's salary when appointed, and what is his salary now? When was the increase made?

Mr. FOSTER. The gross amount of revenue collected by Mr. McCuaig, exciseman at Picton, for 1886-87 was $5,816; for 1887-88 the returns are not in. His salary at the time of his appointment was $200. He afterwards claimed the minimum salary of a third class clerk, $400, and he has received it.

PUBLIC WORKS IN PRINCE EDWARD COUNTY.

Mr. PLATT asked, Is it the intention of the Government to place in the Supplementary Estimates any sum or sums of money for any or all of the following purposes: To construct post office and customs office at Picton; to dredge Picton harbor; to construct harbor of refuge at Wellington; to build bridge across the Bay of Quinté at Belleville?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not the intention of the Government to lay other Supplementary Estimates before the House than those that are now before it.

SUBSIDY TO THE LAKE ST JOHN RAILWAY

Mr. COUTURE. (Translation). Asked whether it is the intention of the Government to grant a subsidy to the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company for its branch line from Lake St. John to St. Alphonse?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation). Mr. Speaker, I have the honor to inform the hon. member that I am not now in a position to answer his question.

RATIFICATION OF TRANSFER—LAKE ST. JOHN RAILWAY.

Mr. COUTURE (Translation.) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to ratify, during this Session, the transfer made by the Saguenay and Lake St. John Railway Company to the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, of the sum of ninety-six thousand dollars voted last Session? If not, why?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I have the honor to inform the hon. member that question is not yet decided.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) Will it be during the Session?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) It is not decided for the present moment.

BUOYS IN THE RIVER SAGUENAY.

Mr. COUTURE asked, Who received the contract for placing, maintaining and removing the buoys in the River Saguenay, awarded on or about the 5th May, 1888? What is the amount of the said contract? Who were the parties who tendered, and what was the amount of the tender in each case?

Mr. FOSTER. The contract for placing, maintaining and removing the buoys in the River Saguenay, and for receiving, storing and delivering supplies at the light stations, has been awarded to Mr. Ainsworth Sturton, of Chicoutimi. The amount of the contract is $250 per annum. The other parties who tendered, and the amounts of their tenders, are as follows:—William Warren, $350; Louis Dufaur, $600; Thomas Tremblay, $850; Joseph L. Tremblay, $950; François St. Pierre, $1,000; Honoré Savard, $1,250 for the last year, $800 for the second year, and $800 for the third year; Alexander Blair, $1,300 per annum.

OBSTRUCTIONS TO SHIPPING.

Gen. LAURIE asked, Whether the attention of the Government have been called to the danger and obstructions to shipping stated to have been caused in the West Atlantic Ocean, by the abandonment and subsequent breaking up of the large raft of timber and logs which was taken, in December last, from the Bay of Fundy in tow for New York, and whether it is the intention to prescribe such regulations for any future experiment of this kind as will ensure that such ventures shall not be undertaken in a manner that will constitute a serious danger to the common navigation of the high seas?

Mr. FOSTER. The attention of the Government has not been directly called to the danger of obstructions to the shipping from the causes stated in the hon. gentleman's question. It is the intention of the Government to consider, during the recess, whether any legislation is necessary in order to prevent the going of these rafts to sea. At present we have no law which would cover such a case.

ENQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Mr. LAURIER. Will the Government lay before the House the correspondence with regard to two items which I find in the Supplementary Estimates? Item, page 3, construction of dam above and below Dunnville weirs; item 40, page 8, to pay one-half the cost of the construction of a bridge across Grand River, at the village of York, the County Council of Haldimand paying the other half.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will see and have these papers brought down.

Mr. MULOCK. Can the hon. gentleman bring down the papers connected with the items on page 7 of the Supplementary Estimates? The items are: Oakville harbor, $2,300; Meaford, $5,000; Thornbury, $3,000; Collingwood, $5,000; Penetanguishene, $10,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. You mean the correspondence that has passed between the Government and those parties?

Mr. MULOCK. Yes; the correspondence and the scheme in each case for expenditure. I presume there are reports from the officers of the department as to the expenditure. I mean whatever papers bear upon the question.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think I will be able to bring the papers and give the information the hon. gentleman requires, when we take up these items.

Mr. MULOCK. If they were laid upon the Table beforehand, an examination might render any debate unnecessary, and thus promote the despatch of business.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will try and meet the hon. gentleman's wishes.

THE FISHERY QUESTION.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I would like to ask the First Minister if the Government will be prepared, before Parliament prorogues, to announce what policy they intend pursuing with reference to the Fishery Treaty in the event of the treaty not being accepted by the American Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The House will be informed before prorogation on the subject.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 126) respecting Insurance, chapter 124 of the Revised Statutes.—(Sir Charles Tupper.)

Bill (No. 104) to amend chapter 51 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, "The Territories Real Property Act."—(Mr. Thompson.)

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved second reading of Bill (No. 116) to amend the Civil Service Act, chapter 17 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. CHAPLEAU. That clause is now perfectly useless, as it referred to the classification of civil servants who were in the service when the Act came into force. That classification is now complete.

On section 2,

Mr. CHAPLEAU. That clause has been rendered necessary by a certain number of fraudulent practices that have happened in the course of the examinations, the detection of which is rendered rather difficult, because the means to detect them are not at the disposal of the examiners. These would probably be repeated if a severe punishment were not imposed upon the offender. This clause is only to punish these frauds, either of personating another, which has happened once or twice, or of getting the papers from other candidates and copying them, or of fraudulently obtaining examination papers before the examination takes place. If there is a case of larceny at all, I think that is one, because a man may be stealing the situation of another, either by personating the other man, or by getting, purchasing or stealing the printed papers or forms of questions prepared for the examination.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not exactly see the point of the last paragraph of clause 2. I can quite understand that, if somebody is on trial for what I agree with my hon. friend is a grievous offence, there should be power to summon anyone to answer, and the party who summons should have the power of a magistrate, but to proceed in that way on mere suspicion would give a very large and dangerous power.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The powers given are only those which are granted to a magistrate when he is preparing an examination, under the Summary Convictions Act. They are not the same powers as are given to a court sitting in trial. I think there is a similarity in the two cases and that a similar remedy should be given, so as to procure the attendance of witnesses and the proper answers when proper questions are put.

Mr. LAURIER. But a magistrate never uses these powers under the Summary Convictions Act unless there is an accused before him, and the object of summoning witnesses is to establish whether the accused is guilty or innocent; but here it appears that there is to be an inquisition to discover whether there has been an offence committed, and, if a person is summoned in that way, he may not be able to answer without criminating himself.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. How can the attendance be obtained? In the case of an investigation by a magistrate, when it is made in regard to a felony or crime, the magistrate has a right to issue a summons, and, if that is not answered, he has the right to punish the offender.

Mr. LAURIER. Under the circumstances, it would be more natural to make this offence a misdemeanor, and to say that the person accused might be brought before the magistrate or the examiner, but it seems to me that it would be very dangerous in practice to allow any inquisition to be made except when there is a person accused.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The offence is practically made a misdemeanor by the Act. In this case it was necessary to make this provision, because there is no accuser. Necessarily the accuser is the examiner, and he cannot give the information himself. This possibly might be added: that he believes that such an offence has been committed, and on that he is to summon such witnesses as he thinks are required to make out the charge. This could not be exactly at the beginning of the proceedings, because there is no other prosecutor than the public prosecutor who is the examiner. I do not see that any harm can result from this provision, and I think the clause is necessary for the enforcement of the Act.

Mr. MULOCK. I would call the attention of the Secretary of State to the fact that under the fourth section the party accused is compellable to answer, and, if he refuses to answer any question put to him in relation to any charge, he is liable to be summarily dealt with by the presiding officer by fine and imprisonment, unless he gives to that officer what the officer may deem to be a just excuse.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If it was an answer which would criminate himself, that would be a just excuse.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to know if the presiding officer is to take that view of it, because, although in the other section the penalty, under summary conviction, is liability to imprisonment for six months and so on, I think the crime of personation at an examination is more than a misdemeanor, and really amounts to a forgery. I think a person who personates another has to sign a false declaration, and under our criminal law I think that would be called forgery, and therefore he would be guilty of a felony punishable by imprisonment. If you are to put duress upon a person who is so charged, you practically compel a person who is charged with felony to give evidence or to be committed. Generally speaking, if such a person is to be admitted as a witness under the criminal code, let it be so enacted, but this should not be made an exceptional case. I entirely sympathise with the object of the hon. gentleman to prevent these frauds, but there is no guarantee that the officer who is clothed with this summary power will consider the excuse in the same light as that which the hon. Minister has stated, and he may say, under his summary power, I enforce the penalty against you, and I do not consider the excuse that you might criminate yourself a good excuse, and, therefore, I choose to exercise the power to punish you summarily.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. But is not the fear of criminating one's self a lawful excuse for not answering anywhere an investigation for an offence made? Perhaps we might meet the views of the hon. gentleman by substituting the word "lawful." I have no objection to say "just and lawful excuse." We cannot say that a party who says he will not answer because he might criminate himself, is not making a lawful excuse.

Mr. MULOCK. Quite so, but I wish to impress upon the Minister that the chairman may be absolutely innocent of all knowledge of criminal law. A magistrate is appointed to administer criminal law because of his supposed fitness, but the chairman of an examining committee is not appointed for any such reason. We are attaching to this office of chairman, powers that he may be wholly incapable of exercising, and we cannot expect to find what the Secretary of State says would be a perfectly valid reason for the candidate refusing to answer the question. I think it would be wise that if he should reconsider that before vesting such powers in the chairman, I would prefer, in the case of refusing to answer, what the ordinary machinery of the law be invoked, and if he is then declared to have committed an offence, that he should be punished before a magistrate in the ordinary way.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I quite agree with what has been stated by the hon. gentleman. I suppose it will not be denied that when gentlemen are appointed to the position of justice of the peace, notwithstanding what we have heard on that subject, their general fitness for the position is taken into consideration. It is possible that the chairman may be eminently fitted for the discharge of the duties of examiner, but entirely unfitted to discharge any judicial duties. I think it would be dangerous to clothe the chairman of the examining board with any such powers as is here proposed to be given him.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There is a presumption that every magistrate knows the law, and I believe there is a presumption that the chairman of the board of examiners is as well qualified as an ordinary magistrate.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). But this man is not a magistrate.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. He is given the power of a magistrate by this Act, and certainly there is a presumption that he knows the law sufficiently to understand whether a lawful excuse is given when a man says that he does not want to answer for fear of criminating himself.

Mr. THOMPSON. The object of this section is to provide machinery for making an examination before any person can be definitely charged before a magistrate. It does seem to me to be proper.

Mr. LAURIER. It is quite proper.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is somewhat inquisitorial, of course; but so are all proceedings which take place before boards, for instance, to examine into the causes of fire. The chairman of the board will not be in a position to refuse any person, but it seems to me that he is fully as competent to hold an investigation of this kind as an ordinary justice of the peace. If he is not, let us make him a justice of the peace, and then he will be fitted.

Mr. MULOCK. Very well, make him a justice of the peace.

Mr. LAURIER. The Minister of Justice has stated the case exactly as it is. You make an offence of a certain act which may be done by a candidate at an examination. So far I quite agree with the principle of the act that it should be made an offence punishable by law; but you go further, and you say that the moment the board is constituted and such an offence has been committed, then they have power to make an inquisition to discover the culprit, to summon witnesses, and compel them to give evidence as to who is the author of the offence. This is altogether repugnant to the spirit of our law, and to the spirit of the British criminal law; and once you make it an offence, I see no reason why you should treat it differently from other offences. In this light, I think the spirit of the act is very objectionable.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not think the powers mentioned in this clause should be given. In the first place the power to be exercised by the members of the board are powers that are not permitted to be exercised by any magistrate. A magistrate cannot proceed with a case without having an information laid before him by a complainant; this must be done before he can proceed in the regular way. Under this clause, if a member of the board believes that an offence has been committed, or that some irregularity with regard to the examination has taken place, he has all power in his own hand, and he can immediately summon before him every pupil for examination. The Minister says it would be no good reason for refusing to reply to a question that the person would criminate himself. Suppose a person is under examination and declines to answer on the ground that it would criminate himself; then information might immediately be lodged, and an action brought against him in the ordinary courts.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. This examination is reported to the Secretary of State, before any information can be laid regularly before a magistrate. I understand very well the objection raised by the leader of the Opposition, and I fully agree with him that it is a novelty in our law; but I think the novelty is justified by the position of the parties. It is true we hold a preliminary investigation to know whether there is an offence which should be reported afterwards and prosecuted. For this purpose we give to an officer named in the law the powers of a magistrate for the moment. We do not do anything which is very extraordinary. Parliament has the right to grant certain powers to any person, and here we give those powers to persons who are supposed to understand the law, and as well as any magistrate. We give him the power to compel persons to appear before him to give information, in the case under investigation, and if this person refuses to answer, then the magistrate reports the case to the Secretary of State for prosecution, if there is reason to prosecute.

Mr. MULOCK. Would it not be safer that in every case the chairman should be a duly qualified magistrate?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I was thinking of that a moment ago.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think some little consideration should be given to the class of persons who are likely to be affected by this clause. I suppose the great bulk of the pupils who appear before these examiners are young men from the ages of 16 and 17 to 21 and 22; and the examiners before whom they are to appear are commonly known as college dons. Now, I must say that when I had some experience with college dons, if they had been granted such powers as the hon. gentleman proposes to grant them here, mighty summary justice would have been administered to the collegians who were brought before them. Speaking from my own recollection, I say that while college dons are, as a general thing, very good examiners, they are very unfit persons to be entrusted with judicial or inquisitorial powers—particularly unfit. For that reason I should object myself to seeing the chairman of a board of examiners clothed with inquisitorial power to examine an oath, and to punish in case of contempt. My experience of that class generally is that they are very respectable, eminently respectable, and all the rest of it, but at the same time they are extremely arbitrary, and disposed to stretch whatever authority is given them to the extreme point. How far the suggestion of my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) could be carried out, I do not know, but I think it would greatly hamper the Secretary of State, in the choice of proper examiners.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I do not think this House can confer this power; it rests with the Local Government.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The power of appointing a justice of the peace is with this Government. I do not think there is much danger in assuming that this Government, in giving a commission of justice of the peace to the chairman of the board of examiners, can make as good a selection as any government. I do not refer particularly to the present Governments. Such officers can be entrusted with the powers of a justice of the peace with full safety to the public and to those interested. The power will not extend to inflicting punishment for offences, but only to make investigations.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then what is the meaning of the last words, which say that the chairman, or the acting chairman, shall be invested with all the powers conferred in like cases?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is power to compel witnesses to appear and answer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He can commit for contempt.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Quite likely.

On section 3,

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I propose to add at the end of the section these words: "Nothing herein shall affect persons who have been previously promoted to the rank of deputy head."

On section 4,

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The only change proposed is this: By the law, as it is now, officers in the lower grades, that is to say, the mail carriers, porters, messengers, and so on, may have had their salaries increased from $300, at which they commence, to $450 or $500, which is the maximum, after a certain number of years service. When those, after having been submitted to a qualifying examination, enter the service, I really think it is a cruel thing to reduce them, when they had rendered four, five, or six years of service.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not understand really what is the meaning of this sub-section:

The optional subjects in the next preceding sub-section mentioned shall be book-keeping, shorthand, translation and type-writing.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. There were before six different optional subjects by the regulations, and we reduced it by statute to four, and we name them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does proficiency in each of those subjects entitle a party to $50 a year extra?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes; $50 a year extra on their appointment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They may receive $200 more if they are proficient in all these subjects?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If they are proficient in all these points they would receive $200 more on appointment.

On section 5,

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The 5th section is only to make examinations once a year.

Mr. MULOCK. Would you introduce into the Bill the words "only once a year"?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have no objection.

On section 6,

Mr. CHAPLEAU. That is only striking out the words "or in both," which had no sense.

Mr. LAURIER. It does seem to me that they had some sense, since, if the candidate passes a good examination in one language, he is qualified, or he might be examined in both languages.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It would exactly mean, if he wants to be examined in translation, that that is an optional subject, and he gets $50 more for that on his appointment.

On section 8,

Mr. CHAPLEAU. That section provides that:

Such examination shall be in such subjects as are determined, from time to time, for each department by the Governor in Council, and in such subjects as, by report of the deputy head of the department in which the promotion is to be made, concurred in by the head of the department, are submitted to the board as best adapted to test the fitness of the candidates for the vacant office.

The regulations provide that an officer is not promoted from one class except to the next following class. That is to say, he cannot be promoted by favor from a third class into a first class. He has to pass through a second class. He would not have the right to be examined for a first class when he was only a third class clerk. The rule is that young fellows arriving from the benches of the school cannot be appointed over men who have been a long time in the service.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) As we understand it, you omit from the existing law as it now stands, that part of the law which declares that examinations shall be:

"Open to any person who holds a position below that to which the promotion is to be made in either division of the service of the department in which the vacancy to be filled by promotion exists."

It seems reasonable on the face of it, but there must be some reason for the omission.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. As I said, it is provided for by the regulations in the Civil Service, and we thought it was not necessary to put it in the Act. A person can be promoted, who passes an examination only from the class below, to the next class superior. The regulations require that those called for promotion examination to a first-class clerkship will be of the second class.

Mr. LAURIER. In other words, you say the regulations provide what the law provides here.

Mr. McNEILL. Is there any other provision in the Act that enables a man to go for promotion when these words are struck out?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Of course there is.

Mr. McNEILL. It is merely to prevent a third class clerk passing to the first class?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes, or a second class to a chief clerkship.

Mr. MULOCK. It is provided in this amended section that the promotion examination may be dispensed with, on the report of the deputy head, in the case of certain persons who are supposed to have sufficient training already. Among others are mentioned the graduates of the Royal Military College. I would suggest that the words should be added: "or any university in Canada."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. As I understand the law, graduates of the Royal Military College are only exempt from examination when they seek promotion in the line of their profession, as in the Militia Department.

Mr. MULOCK. Although their education in the college may be largely military, it is literary as well. If you look at the curriculum of the military college, you will find that a very large portion of their work is just such as is done in any first class educational institution in Canada, and if you grant this privilege to the graduates of that college, the graduates of every well-conducted university are entitled to the same privilege. It is simply ridiculous, in my opinion, to require the graduates of any Canadian university to submit, as a matter of course, to the promotion examination. This clause does not entitle anyone to an absolute exemption; it must be on a favorable report, and I ask that graduates of the universities should be included in this favored class.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If I understand the law rightly, the exemption, so far as the Royal Military College cadets are concerned, applies to the examination qualifying them to enter into the Civil Service; but there is no exemption under the law from promotion examinations.

Mr. MULOCK. Read the section; there is no doubt it applies to them.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The promotion examination is only dispensed with when the officers are seeking promotion in the line of their profession. In the Department of Customs, for instance, if a military college graduate sought promotion, he would have to be examined.

Mr. MULOCK. I move to add after the words "Royal Military College," the words "or any university in Canada."

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I certainly think those words might be added. Every graduate of a university ought to be as well qualified as any young person who passes the Civil Service examinations, and to include university graduates would be recognising their status.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend is also laboring under a mistake. This only concerns promotion in the line of their profession, and not otherwise.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand that if a lawyer is appointed in the Department of Justice, he requires no examination, but if he is appointed in the Department of Militia, or any other department, then he requires to be examined.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Quite so.

Mr. MULOCK. The universities turn out men with technical knowledge. Every well equipped university, for instance, has a faculty of law, the graduates of which might be appointed to the Department of Justice, although not barristers or attorneys. Yet, even when they may be getting promotion in their professional line, you require them to pass an examination.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. To tell the truth, I never understood why this special provision regarding the graduates of the Royal Military College was introduced here, unless it was introduced under the supposition that they would not be required to pass the qualifying examination. I would have no objection to saying that graduates of every university should be exempt from examination for entering the service.

Mr. MULOCK. Perhaps the hon. the Secretary of State will add a clause allowing graduates to enter without examination, and introduce the words I have suggested after the words "Royal Military College."

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Graduates of the Royal Military College and of the universities will be exempted from the qualifying examination, because their certificates entitle them to enter without examination, but this does not apply to promotion in the service.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I would suggest that the words "military or civil" be put before engineers, and not after.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The clause as amended reads as follows: Graduates of the Royal Military College and of any university in Canada shall be exempt from qualifying examination. In the case of barristers, attorneys, military or civil engineers, officers of artillery in the Militia Department, architects, draughtsmen, land surveyors, &c., striking out the words "graduate of the Royal Military College."

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The 11th section, the 47th, will have to be recast. The second part of it should remain as it is now, that is: that all temporary employes shall not be paid more than at the rate of $400 a year; but the first part of the clause, as it is in the statute, should be struck out, because there is another clause which refers to the officers who have been employed from 1882.

Mr. LAURIER. You take power to appoint these officers?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes, we take power to appoint to the permanent service officers who were employed in the temporary service before 1882. It was by mistake that in the amendment and consolidation of the Civil Service Act, that clause was taken out. It was in the Act before 1885 that temporary clerks who had been employed before 1882 might be transferred without a qualifying examination. By this clause we claim the power to transfer them without examination, and to appoint them at the salary they have been receiving during the last two years of their service. I have taken the average of the two years of their service in order to prevent certain things that might happen. No government is perfect, and some chief of a department might yield to solicitation and increase the salary, in view of an appointment, if this provision were not inserted.

Mr. LAURIER. I think this is very objectionable. It is departing from the principle of the Act, which is that no one should be appointed unless he has proved his ability by an examination. In the case of certain servants who have been employed for six years as temporary clerks but have become permanent clerks, they are now to be put on the permanent list without examination. What reason can there be for that?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend has voted for that before.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not think I have voted for it, but I have tolerated many things for which I am very sorry. Because it was done once, I do not think that is any reason why it should be done again, and I think we should continue to uphold the good parts of the Act. There is a double objection here. In the first place, no temporary officers should be kept on the civil list. If those officers are wanted, power should be taken to employ them in the ordinary way.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We are doing that as much as possible.

Mr. LAURIER. I think you are acting too quickly. There are certain officers who you say are required, and you take authority from Parliament and ask for power to appoint them without examination. I cannot see any reason for that.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I already said that they had that right by law from 1882 to 1885, and that it was through an oversight that it was taken away from them. It was not just that it should be taken away from them, and this is only restoring the law as it existed between 1882 and 1885.

Mr. LAURIER. I think the hon. gentleman's oversights are better than his deliberations.

Mr. McNEILL. I quite agree with the principle of the amendment which has now been introduced to this clause, and I should only like to see it carried further. So far as I understand this amendment, it amounts to this: that service and proved fitness will be taken in lieu of examination. These gentlemen are to be allowed to enter the permanent service without examination simply because they have proved themselves to be fit during their tenure of office in the temporary service. I think it would be quite right to extend this principle further, and I propose to add these words to this section 11:

The provisions of the Civil Service Act, so far as they render promotion in the Civil Service contingent in any degree upon examination as provided in the said Act, shall not apply to any civil servant who entered the Civil Service before the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two; and any civil servant who entered the service prior to that date shall be eligible for promotion in every respect as though such provisions as to examination had never been enacted.

I do not think it is necessary to take up the time of the House in pressing the reasons in support of this amendment. I think it must commend itself to the sense and justice of every hon. member. These gentlemen entered the service by reason of certain prospects which were held out to them in the service. They might have entered other walks of life, but, because of certain prospects which were held out to them, they entered the Civil Service. I do not think it is necessary to ask any hon. gentleman to agree with me, because I am sure that everyone will agree with me, when I say that one prospect above all others which was held out to them and led them to adopt the Civil Service in preference to other walks in life, was the prospect of promotion, which would carry with it greater emoluments. These gentlemen who entered the service before 1882 entered it in good faith, believing that, if certain conditions were fulfilled, they would receive these promotions. The conditions were very well understood. There was no misapprehension in regard to the matter that, if a civil servant was diligent, and if he was of good conduct, and if he proved himself efficient in the discharge of the duties of the service, his promotion would follow as a matter of course. The Act which was introduced in 1882 changed all that, and these gentlemen, without any fault of their own, found themselves suddenly debarred from their promotion unless they were able to answer certain curious questions, peculiar questions, strange questions, which were propounded to them by certain inquisitors; unless they could answer these questions in a manner satisfactory to those inquisitors, they were debarred from their promotion. I think it requires no argument to show that this practically amounted to a breach of faith with these men. It does not matter how long a man has served, how efficient he has been, or how good his conduct has been, unless he can pass this newly devised test, he is to be precluded from obtaining the emoluments which were held out to him at the time he entered the service. A good deal more might be said on the subject, but I do not desire to delay the House at this stage of the Session, and I think the amendment will commend itself to the common justice of every hon. member, and I therefore move it.

Mr. DENISON. I desire to say a word on behalf of this motion. I know of a case in Toronto which I think is a very hard one. A man was appointed to the custom house there eighteen or twenty years ago as a tide-waiter, and long ago he received the maximum wages allowed to tide-waiters, of $600. Now a law is passed which compels him to pass an examination before he can be made a landing waiter, the duties of which he has been performing ever since he was first appointed at the port. Now it seems to me very unfair that a man who is competent to do the duty of a landing waiter, and who has been doing it for 18 years, should not be appointed to the position which he has actually filled because this Act steps in and says that because he was not appointed nominally to that office, he is debarred from ever rising any higher, or from receiving the salary of a landing waiter, the work of which he has been doing for so many years.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to add my testimony to the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has preceded me. It seems to me that great injustice is often done to men who entered the service before these examinations were instituted. I know of many persons in the service who are, perhaps, as efficient public servants, if not more so, than men who have passed the examinations, whereas men are placed over their heads because they have received their certificates, but who positively are not as competent to fill the positions. I speak feelingly on this subject, because I know of men whose services in the Department are of a great value, but who cannot receive promotion under this law, although they are entitled to it.

Mr. CASEY. I have pleasure in endorsing the amendment and the remarks of my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill). It is not often that one has an opportunity of endorsing the remarks of an hon. gentleman on the other side of the House.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). You have plenty of opportunities, if you would only embrace them.

Mr. CASEY. I quite agree with his contention that it is unfair to those members of the Civil Service who entered before the present Act was passed, to compel them to pass an examination before getting their promotion. There are some departments, of course, such as the Department of Inland Revenue and the corps of surveyors, in which a strictly departmental and technical examination should be permitted, so as to test the fitness of the person asking for promotion. But I agree with my hon. friend in holding that in the rest of the departments, the sort of examination that has been held does not test in any sense the fitness for promotion of the applicant. I do not make any accusations against the Government in regard to the manner in which these examinations have been conducted; I may, perhaps, bring that question up hereafter. At present I may say, however, that I have been informed that parties applying to be admitted to these examinations have been refused permission to go up for examination because they were not in sympathy with the Government of the day, while on the other hand, those who were in sympathy were allowed to go up for examination. This might occur under any government; I do not charge it as a special fault against this Government. I say the power to prevent civil servants from going to these departmental examinations, and consequently to prevent them from getting promotion, should not be vested in the Minister of any department. I would go further even than the hon. member for Bruce, and I would urge that not only in respect to those members of the service who entered before 1882, but in respect to those who have entered since, these examinations should be abolished. I do not believe they are a useful or practical part of the Civil Service Act; I do not believe they show in any degree whether a person applying for promotion is fit for it, and for that reason I should be willing to support an amendment for abolishing all examinations for promotion except in the branches to which I have referred to, the Inland Revenue Department and the corps of surveyors. I believe you might, in those branches, have a departmental examination to test the applicant's fitness for promotion; but in all the other departments I should be glad to see departmental examinations for promotions abolished altogether.

Mr. SHANLY. I hope that the amendment moved by the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) will meet with the general acceptance of this House. My hon. friend from West Toronto (Mr. Denison) has cited an instance which clearly shows the extreme injustice that may be wrought by the present system. I think I could mention scores of similar instances all over this Dominion. I think all over the country civil servants can be found who entered the service with a good education, and who may have been able, at that time, to answer all such questions as are now put to the boys who enter the service. These men have thoroughly learned their business, and have become first-class departmental officers, but in doing so they may have, perhaps, forgotten their school-boy lore; and now a boy who is fresh from school, and who can answer all these fancy questions, is put above the heads of these men who have borne the burden and heat of the day; and, who advancing in years, are told: You must stay where you are, and let this boy go above you. And it should be remembered that this same boy who going in now fresh from school will, while he is learning his business and making himself equally qualified with the man over whose head he is put, in turn forget all his school-boy lore, and his ability to answer the fancy questions required by the examination, by the time he becomes as able as the man over whose head he is placed. I most sincerely hope that this great injustice will be remedied, and that the amendment of the hon. member for North Bruce will be accepted by this House. I think it perfectly proper, however, that on entering the service there should be a strict examination, because, we should know that those who enter the service can at least read, write and figure decently well. I do not agree with my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Casey), because I think that without the Civil Service Act, the same evil that formerly existed would be perpetuated, and people appointed, for political or some other reasons, who are absolutely deficient in the very rudiments of education, and consequently altogether unfit for their positions.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not think too much importance should be attached to remarks of the hon. member, suggesting that a departmental officer has got to go back to his school-boy lore before he can get promotion; because if the provision we passed a short time ago means anything, it means that the deputy heads of departments shall frame such questions as relate to information practically needed in the department. That clause says: "Such examinations shall be in such subjects as are determined from time to time for each department by the Governor General in Council," and they shall be concurred in by the head of the department. Now, I take it, that the deputy head will suggest practical questions in his department, and these are to be concurred in by the head of the department. If the principle holds good you have an equal right to apply it to every man who entered the Civil Service after 1882, and even a greater right, than to those who entered before that time, because we have the guarantee that those who entered afterwards passed the qualifying examination, whereas the other men may not have done so. If the examinations are conducted on the practical work of the department, as the Bill now contemplates, the deputy head would put such questions as would bring out the information needed to prove the candidate's qualification or otherwise, for the place to which he seeks promotion.

Mr. McNEILL. If the examinations are to be confined purely to matters connected with the practical working of the department, there is an examination going on day by day, week by week, and month by month, very much better than any examination which two or three men could institute during one or two hours. I wonder what business man would promote a clerk in his employ, not by what he knows himself of his fitness and ability to perform the duties required of him, but by what persons who came in and asked half a dozen questions in the course of a forenoon, told him. With respect to the remarks of the hon. member for South Renfrew (Mr. White), I, perhaps, may be allowed to read half a dozen lines, and to cite a case of special hardship, as showing how this kind of examination really works in practice. The letter I hold in my hand is from the post-master at Toronto. He says:

"You are at liberty to state that you have learned from me that the best clerk in the Toronto post office, which is the one in which the most business is now done in the Dominion, is kept back by his inability to conquer the difficulties of fancy arithmetic. He has twice submitted himself to examination in vain, and will not try it again. Mr. Dewé, chief office inspector, would, I am sure, endorse my statement, that he is perhaps the best post office clerk in Canada."

This refers to an examination for promotion; and this is just how this system works in practice. We find some of the very best men in the service, the men who teach those men who subsequently come into the service how to perform their duties are unable to obtain promotion. It is not only so far as those who entered the service prior to 1882 are concerned that this is most unjust, but I will go quite the length of the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Casey) and say promotion examinations ought to be abolished, but my amendment does not go so far. You set up an irresponsible machine behind which any officer of the department who desires to keep back a man from promotion can shelter himself, instead of shouldering the responsibility of keeping the man back.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I am perfectly sure that the hon. gentleman does not desire to go the length of the amendment he has proposed. It would not only subvert the section or part of the section which he wishes removed, but it would completely subvert the Civil Service Act. We would be glad if the deputy heads of departments were left entirely free to choose their candidates for promotion. The Government, as a Government, cannot object to having all the patronage given to them; but we thought it would be well for the service and for the protection of efficient officers that those officials should be subjected to promotion examinations. Hon. gentlemen have not objected to promotion examinations on subjects connected with the duties of the office, and in that case, after such an examination, the deputy would recommend the candidate he pleased and the Minister would appoint whom he pleased. Complaints have been made, and what have been termed shocking cases have been instanced, where good officers unfortunately could not be promoted because they failed on some points of their examination. I have heard those complaints, and a great many more of them than hon. gentlemen have heard. I have sympathised with those officers, and I have tried to remedy the evil, because there was certainly an evil existing; an excess of good may sometimes be an evil. The subjects in which those officers are examined are part of the ordinary subjects of knowledge, such as history, translation and composition, which are subjects of the qualifying examination. On those subjects one becomes rusty after awhile, and I understand there have been some cases of great hardship in which officers, well qualified otherwise to perform the duties of those offices, have been prevented from obtaining promotion. I should be very much surprised if any one could quote numerous cases in which young men have taken the place of old officers in the public service in consequence of this fact. I know some cases of hardship have occurred, and my sympathies were aroused in favor of the candidates, and a remedy has been applied to the law in this respect by giving subjects connected with the duties of the office, subjects not chosen by the board of examiners, but by the deputy heads of the departments and according to the duties the officer would be required to perform. But we have done more than that. The list of subjects of general knowledge is selected, not by the board of civil examiners—because, in some cases, they are gentlemen accustomed to examinations of school dons, as they have been called by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and they propose questions that may be very easy to them but very difficult to the candidates—but selected by the deputy heads themselves. I have adopted a similar course in regard to arithmetic, which every one will admit is of great value to civil servants, but on which subject many have failed, because it was not specially required in the branch in which they were employed, and they could not acquire it sufficiently during the few weeks they had to prepare themselves. I have adopted similar measures in regard to composition, in which I know some failures have occurred. Any man, should, however, know how to write a letter before he receives promotion. The hon. gentleman who spoke a moment ago suggested that men should not be examined in arithmetic unless it were required, or in composition unless it were required, and that the subjects should be according to the vacancy to be filled. But in carrying out the regulations care has been taken that no hardships will fall upon deserving officers, and if some mistakes by accident occur in the future I hope they will be very few, and that we will satisfactorily carry out this principle, which is a good one in itself, namely, that of conducting promotion examinations for promotion in the public service. I thought my hon. friend would have limited himself to saying that promotion examination would be only on the subjects connected with the duties of the office. That I would understand, though I would not accept it, because I think that officers who are to be promoted should keep up a certain current knowledge of the subjects upon which they are examined upon. If the hon. gentleman would see now what are the subjects for promotion examination outside the duties of the office, he would not have moved the present amendment. If the House should accept the amendment, the old system will return, that the Government will have the patronage in their hands; and, in the interest of all, we do not desire to have that patronage.

Mr. CASEY. I am very sorry that the hon. the Secretary of State has made this a Government measure. I think that on a question of this nature he might have been content to take the advice of the House and let the House vote without making it a Government question, and without declaring that the Government are distinctly against the amendment of my hon. friend from Bruce (Mr. McNeill). I think that, with his comparatively short experience in this House and in the management of his office, he might have been content to take the opinion of the House, and not to make it a Government question, by which he compels a certain number of members to vote against the amendment, who, if they followed their own convictions, would vote for it. The hon. the Secretary of State says that the carrying of this amendment would destroy the whole system of the Civil Service as arranged by the Bill of 1882. Long before the hon. gentleman ever paid any attention to the question of Civil Service reform, I discussed the matter in this House and had the opinion of this House upon it. I have the satisfaction of being able to say that the commission appointed by my right hon. friend the Premier in 1880 or 1881, I am not quite sure which year, agreed in all respects with the views that I had laid before this House, and with the views formulated by the committee of which I was chairman. I have the satisfaction of knowing that the commission reported that the recommendations of the committee of the House of which I was chairman, had aided them very much in considering the question, that they agreed with us in all points. Yet the hon. the Secretary of State, coming in as a new member of the House, and not having anything previously to do with the Civil Service, introduced in 1882 a crude and ill-construed Bill, which did not agree in any particular with the recommendations of the commission appointed by the Government of which he had newly become a member. Now the hon. gentleman gets up and tells us that the amendment knocks out the principles of that Bill, and that it would destroy all the safeguards of the Civil Service, and would allow the promotion of men who are not fit to be promoted.

He is quite mistaken in thinking that the House will agree with him in that view. He has already had evidence that some of the most respected members of his own party, who have considered the question, do not agree with him in that view. The hon. gentleman has done wrong to take the stand he has. He says that this promotion is intended to be a check on the exercise of patronage. I do not believe it. If it were a check on the exercise of patronage the hon. Minister would not try to maintain it. Our party have tried, as a party, to abolish patronage altogether, and the hon. gentleman has always voted against us. We have tried vainly, year after year, to impose checks on the exercise of patronage within the service, and the hon. gentleman has opposed us year after year. Whenever we have tried to impose any effectual check on the exercise of patronage the hon. gentleman has opposed us. If he sustains the existing provisions of the law, it is because he finds it is not an effectual check on the exercise of patronage. My outside information exactly agrees with the logical deduction I must draw from the conduct of the hon. gentleman in regard to this question of patronage. That information is, that the existing law is no check at all on the exercise of patronage. In the first place, a man who passes an examination for promotion has no right or claim to be promoted in consequence of having passed that examination. That is the whole object of the provisions of the law as it now stands. A man whom the Minister of any department wants to promote gets promotion whether he passes an examination or not. I have had information from a great number of persons whom I cannot name, because it would subject them to the vengeance of the Minister under whom they serve, and who have told me that they had applied for leave to go before the commissioners and pass this examination, and they had been refused that permission. Can the hon. the Secretary of State stand before this House with any appearance of fair play and urge that this examination is any check at all upon his dealings, or the dealings of any other Minister, with the employés who are under him, when the fact remains (and could be substantiated were it not for the risk of naming certain persons) that men whom they do not wish to promote have been forbidden leave to attend the examinations. This knocks the whole ground from under the contention of the hon. Minister. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) says that, in the first place, the hon. the Secretary of State has agreed to leave this matter to the Deputy Minister. He did not tell us that any examinations had been held which were conducted under this rule. The Minister says that if we knew the questions that had been put we would not make so much fuss about those examinations. Why has he not submitted some of those departmental examination papers to us? I venture to say that outside the Department of the Interior, where surveyors are employed, there has not been a single examination paper for promotion submitted to the House since the Bill of 1882 passed. There may have been papers connected with some of the duties of the office, but the examinations have turned on matters not at all connected with the duties of the Department. If the hon. Minister can disprove that statement he has every opportunity of doing so. He has the papers in his own hands, and he can show us them before this Bill is passed through the House. My hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) says the Deputy Ministers would only examine on matters connected with their departments. That is a question of experience, and experience hitherto has shown us that examinations have not been conducted on that basis at all, but that they have been conducted as my hon. friend from South Grenville (Mr. Shanly) says, so that the older members of the service, who naturally ought to be promoted, are at a disadvantage, and that the examination is not conducted on matters which they ought practically to know. The hon. the Secretary of State has urged that the subjects would be optional, that the examination would not be tied down to certain lines, and that the deputies would make the examination on what lines they chose. That is one of the very worst points in the whole law. If we do not settle the class of subjects on which these examinations are to be conducted, we leave in the hands of the Minister of any department the power of fixing the examinations, so that his own personal or political friends shall get through and no one else shall get through. The subjects of these examinations, if you are to have them at all, should be absolutely fixed. But I go the whole way with the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), that we should not have these examinations at all. That in regard to all departmental matters the examination is going on from day to day, and that the Deputy Minister or the officer in charge of any particular applicant for promotion, knows better than any examiner you could have the qualifications of the applicant for promotion. Therefore, as a Civil Service reformer, as one who wishes to see the Civil Service made a profession, in which efficiency and industry will lead to promotion and extra pay, I oppose this system of examination in toto, and urge the introduction of a system under which the officer directly in charge of the particular applicant for promotion shall be consulted, and his advice followed. For that reason I heartily support the amendment of the hon. member for North Bruce.

Mr. CURRAN. I beg to move in amendment to the amendment:

That all the words after "1882" be struck out, and the following substituted in place thereof: Except in so far as regards the duties of the office to which such civil servant may desire to be promoted.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Chapleau proposes:

Sub-section two of section forty-seven is hereby repealed, and the following substituted therefor:—

2. Temporary clerks employed continuously since the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two, may be appointed permanently, if otherwise qualified, at a salary equal to their average pay during the two years previous to such permanent appointment, but in no case exceeding the maximum salary of a third-class clerk.

Mr. LAURIER. The effect of this amendment is that a temporary clerk employed continuously since 1882 shall be appointed permanently without examination?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I object to that, unless you can show some good reason for it. I object to the principle of the amendment of the hon. member for North Bruce, and I intend to support the hon. Secretary of State; but it appears to me that the hon. Minister accepts so much of the principle of the hon. gentleman's amendment that he will have to accept the whole of it.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The reason is that from 1882 to 1885 they were exempted, and when the Act of 1885 was brought in, this clause, by an oversight, was omitted from the Bill, and thus temporary clerks who had been employed since 1882, were subject to examination as new men entering the service.

Mr. CASEY. I think the hon. Secretary of State has really given away the whole principle of this Bill. He is very vigorous in arguing in favor of examinations for promotion; and now he proposes to put on the permanent list, ahead of all those who have passed the qualifying examination since 1882, men who have passed no examination at all. If an examination is useful anywhere, it is for entrance. Yet the hon. gentleman bases his opposition to the amendment of the hon. member for North Bruce on the ground that he believes in the efficacy of examinations as a test of fitness.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. When the original Bill was passed, this clause formed a portion of it. It was felt that those persons who had been employed in the various departments, not as civil servants, but as temporary clerks, and who for their able performance of their duties were continued from year to year, ought not to be subjected to an examination. The consequence of such a provision would have been that in some of the departments we would have lost in the lower ranks some most valuable men. This provision, which was adopted in 1882, was continued until the revision of the Act, and it was by the merest accident that the words were omitted. I know temporary clerks in the Department of the Interior who have been there since the time of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), and they have been continued because of their valuable services, and it would be a great loss to the department to lose those men, because, although valuable officers, they cannot go through the general educational examination which the Act very properly lays down for those who enter the service afterwards. The insertion of this provision in this Bill is simply to correct the mistake made in the Act of 1885. It is not promotion at all.

Mr. LAURIER. It seems to me that the reasoning of the hon. the First Minister simply shows that there has been an abuse added to another abuse. First of all, it was a mistake that a permanent officer who, as the hon. gentleman says, is a very good officer and whose services are indispensable, should have been kept on the temporary list six or seven years. Power should have been taken to appoint him permanently.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is what this clause does.

Mr. LAURIER. No, you have kept this officer six or seven years, and have never submitted his case. Now, you say these officers must be exempt from examination. The Secretary of State believes they should be appointed permanently without examination, and the hon. member for Bruce says, following this abuse to its logical conclusion: Very well, if you appoint them without examination, you should promote them without examination.

Mr. CURRAN. Those who were there before 1882.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. the Secretary of State is ready to admit them for permanent employment without examination, but he will not promote them without examination. The hon. member for Bruce says, not only should they be appointed without examination, but they should be promoted without examination; and against this conclusion the hon. the Secretary of State rebels. He cannot pursue a bad principle so far as the hon. member for Bruce does. I do not think we should admit the bad principle at all, and my hon. friend has not given a reason why these men should be exempted from the Civil Service examination. The only reason stated by the hon. the First Minister was that by the Act of 1882, they were exempted from the Civil Service examination; and by the Act of 1885, through a mere oversight, that privilege was taken away. But why, in 1882, were these temporary officers not submitted to examination as well as other candidates for permanent employment?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. One reason is that the right acquired by Act of Parliament was taken away from these officers by an oversight. There is another reason. The first examination is to decide whether a man is fit or not to enter the service; but after he has been in the service for years, and has shown, by that practical test, his fitness, there is no necessity in his case for a qualifying examination. Again, he would have, after passing a qualifying examination, to rank as third class clerk, and thus be reduced in rank, even if he had proved his fitness for a higher rank by six years' service. With regard to promotion examinations the case is different. Every officer is on the same footing, and in order to give an equal chance to all those who want to compete, and make a selection among the number of equal good men, they are subjected to this examination.

Mr. McNEILL. The question which my hon. friend the Secretary of State has put is a very pertinent one. What the examination is intended for, is to discover whether a candidate is qualified or not. If we know that he is qualified, there is no need for an examination. The hon. the First Minister has told us that we cannot only tell without examination that he is qualified, but that we can tell that he is a very good officer whose services are indispensable. That sufficiently disposes of the question. If the examination be simply a test to find out whether a man is qualified or not, and if we know, in the case of those who are not permanent, that they are qualified, without examination, so, in reference to those who are permanent, we can tell without examination whether or not they are qualified for promotion. The question as to whether a man should be examined at all or not, to my mind, resolves itself into what the hon. the Secretary of State has said. We have to discover whether he is qualified or not. The examination by books and questions upon paper and viva voce is one of the most fallacious tests possible as to qualification.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then eliminate it from the Act altogether.

Mr. McNEILL. Personally I would go that far as to promotion examinations, but not as to entrance examinations, because, although the test is very imperfect, we must have some test, and we take that as the only test we can have. But in the case of promotion, we have a far better test, the one referred to by the hon. the First Minister, who tells us it is absolute.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The promotion examination is not to find out whether a man is a good man, but to find out among a number of good men which is the fittest.

Mr. McNEILL. That is to say, you are going to substitute this absolutely fallacious test, as it is proved to be the world over, a test, which, at all events, is an exceedingly imperfect test, for the best test, which is that of experience. Will hon. gentlemen venture to say that the deputy heads and those who are seeing these men discharge their duties day after day, do not know whether a man is qualified or not, or which, among several, is best qualified?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope we will get on with this Bill or it will disappoint all our hopes of proroguing within reasonable time. The arguments of the hon. member for Bruce are exceedingly fallacious. I explained that before the Civil Service Act was passed, a number of temporary clerks were employed to perform the duties of third class clerks, and that after it was ascertained they could perform these duties, it was considered hard to subject them to examination. But the promotion examination is a different thing. The fact that a man has shown he is fit to be a third class clerk is no proof, and the deputy heads cannot know, that he possesses the qualifications which would enable him to perform satisfactorily the duties of a higher rank in which he has never been employed. The fact that he has for years performed the duties of a third class clerk entitles him to be continued in that position, but the requirements of a second class or first class clerk are altogether different from those of a mere copyist or writer in the third class.

Mr. CASEY. The right hon. the Premier has avowed boldly what most of us have only whispered to our own consciences. He says that we should not discuss this Bill, that we should not perform the duties we are sent here to perform, because it might result in postponing prorogation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say that. I said we might come to a conclusion.

Mr. CASEY. A great many of us have been allowing matters which should have been discussed to pass through for that reason, but we did not expect that it would be announced as a principle of action by the leader of the Government. We have always known that it has been the policy of Governments to bring down their measures at a late period of the Session, and then to urge that they should be passed without much discussion because of the approach of prorogation; but I have never before heard that announced as a declared policy in the House by the leader of the Government. He says that, although it might be possible to admit a man to the service on evidence of his fitness, it is necessary, in order that he should discharge the duties of a higher grade, that he should have his fitness tested by an examination. The hon. gentleman has rather given himself away by making that remark, because he is as well aware as any other member of the House, and probably better, that in many cases there is no difference in the duties discharged by a third class clerk and those discharged by a second class clerk.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. CASEY. The right hon. gentleman says "hear, hear," but we have all known of men being promoted from the third class to, and reaching the maximum of the second class, when they were discharging the same duties, and the only difference was the difference in pay. The Secretary of State draws a distinction without a difference. He says that these temporary clerks of whom he speaks could not be admitted into the service without having passed the examination, and yet, because they may have been in the service for six years back, they should be appointed permanent clerks. That is where the hon. gentleman misrepresents the question. These temporary clerks have never been in the service. They are not members of the Civil Service, and these temporary clerks whom he proposes to admit are exactly in the same position as any new applicant of 16 or 17 years of age, who asks to be admitted now. They have never been in the Civil Service, and yet, because they have been outside employés, he proposes to admit them as permanent clerks. He is simply taking the power to admit men who have been temporary clerks and not members of the service at all, without examination, to the disadvantage of those who have passed the examination.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It seems that we are discussing two clauses at the same time.

Mr. CASEY. If the hon. gentleman will allow me to retain the floor till I get through, I shall be obliged to him. We are discussing the proposition to admit members of the Civil Service without an entrance examination, thus knocking away, as the Secretary of State said in reference to the amendment of the member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), the real basis of the, his own, Civil Service Act, and the only safeguard which it provides in regard to the service; and, at the same time, we are discussing the proposal of my hon. friend from Bruce (Mr. McNeill) to knock away the artificial and pretended and useless safeguard against the promotion of members of the Civil Service after they have entered the service. I think the two matters are cognate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the committee report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Committee rose and reported progress.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

Sault Ste. Marie Canal $997,650

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that the appropriation in 1887-88 was $1,000,000, and the expense from July 1 to December 1, 1887, was $2,350; the revote, Mr. CASEY.

consequently, is $997,650. It was understood that amount would be required to carry on the Sault Ste. Marie canal. The expenditure thus far has been made in a preliminary examination, because the surveys were made some years ago, as the House will recollect, and this preliminary examination is to verify the surveys and to prepare for pushing on this work vigorously, as it is intended to do by this vote.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Is this part of any general scheme to deepen the St. Lawrence canals?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, the Sault Ste. Marie canal has no connection with the St. Lawrence canals. As my hon. friend from Queen's, P. E. I., is aware at present we have no communication with Lake Superior except through a canal which belongs to the United States, and I may say that the traffic through that canal is greater to-day than it is through the Suez canal. The traffic has enormously increased recently, and from past appearances, with the continuous development of the North-West, and the absolute necessity for bringing the products of the North-West down to the sea by water from Prince Arthur's Landing and Fort William, it is considered absolutely necessary that there should be additional canal communication. My own impression is that at an early day we will have all the traffic it will be possible for both of these canals to accommodate.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). You expect it will pay then?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; I think it will give an ample return, although probably that will depend altogether upon the policy that the Government adopts with reference to charges. My hon. friend from Halifax no doubt is aware that the Sault Ste. Marie canal is a free canal, and consequently it would be, perhaps, not so easy to collect tolls as it would be if the usual charges were made in the Sault Ste. Marie canal.

Mr. MITCHELL. If I recollect aright, when this vote was taken, one of the great objects we had in view was to have an independent line of communication over our own territory. I think that was very desirable at that time, as it is now, no matter how friendly may be the relations between this country and the United States.

Mr. COOK. Will the hon. gentleman state what depth it will be on the mitre sill?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We expect 16 feet on the mitre sill, and the locks to be 540 feet in length.

Mr. BARRON. Is the hon. gentleman aware that the Americans are also going to enlarge their canal in anticipation of a large trade?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that so impressed are our American neighbors, that they have begun the construction of a second canal. I met with a gentleman who was specially engaged in promoting the construction of a second canal and he said he hoped nothing would induce us to slacken our measures for constructing our canal, as he was quite satisfied there would be abundant traffic for all at no distant day.

Mr. COOK. Do I understand this sum will be sufficient to complete the work?

Mr. DAWSON. I may mention that I have just received a return showing the amount of traffic that passed through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal last summer.

Mr. COOK. What will be the length of the canal from the river up to Lake Superior?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. About two miles, I think, is the length.

Mr. DAWSON. I am glad to see so much interest being taken in this great work, which is to connect the two great seas of Lake Huron and Lake Superior, both in the district which I have the honor to represent. The Americans are now constructing a second canal on their side to take the place of the old canal, so that they have really only one canal on the American side at present, and it is quite insufficient for the traffic. The canal does not allow vessels to pass through so fast as there is need. Last summer, in one day, as many as 801 vessels, representing over 30,000 tons, passed through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal. The traffic through the canal is very clearly shown by the following statement:—

I am very happy to hear this work is to go on. This canal should have been built twenty years ago; it is more than thirty years since it was surveyed; but from what we have heard to-night the work is now to be gone on with and prosecuted to completion, a result which will give great satisfaction to the shipping interest throughout the Dominion.

Mr. LISTER. So far as this canal is concerned and the statement of the hon. gentleman that the commerce of the country requires another canal constructed, I have to say that from all information I have been able to gather, and I have had ample means of information from shippers and others, there is no necessity whatever for the construction of a canal on the Canadian side. The hon. gentleman has stated that the tonnage passing through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal was equal to the tonnage passing through the Suez Canal. As regards that statement, I have referred to the Statistical Abstract Record for last year, and I find that the number of tons passing through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal was 4,219,000 and through the Suez Canal 6,000,000 tons. The hon. Minister has not informed the House as to how much of the tonnage passing through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal is American tonnage and how much Canadian tonnage. When the hon. gentleman says that the canal may be profitable, he states what is absolutely not the fact. The American canal gives the same facility to Canadian as to American vessels under the arrangement entered into between Canada and the United States. No charge whatever is made for Canadian vessels passing through it, nor is any charge made to Canadian vessels, and so if a canal was constructed on the Canadian side we could not possibly obtain a revenue from it. As to the contention that such a canal was necessary for defensive purposes, that could not be supported by any reasoning whatever. If there was any trouble between Americans and Canadians it would be utterly impossible for the Canadian Government to hold a Sault Ste. Marie canal if constructed by them. It would necessarily follow that the Canadian canal would be closed, and perhaps the American canal would be closed also; but the hon. gentleman owes it to the House to show that the commercial necessities require that another canal should be constructed in the face of the fact that we have had no complaints from shippers that the conveniences of the American canal are insufficient for the wants of the country, and the further fact that the American Government are constructing another lock through which Canadian vessels will have the right to pass on the same terms as American vessels. The Government are asking Parliament to vote $997,650 for this work, and I venture to say that that amount will no more than half pay for the construction of the proposed canal. The Government are undertaking a work that will cost at least double what they are asking Parliament to vote; they are undertaking a work not demanded by the commercial necessities of this country; they are undertaking a work when the bill is already filled by the American Government and when we have a right to use the American canal; and the Finance Minister has shown no reason, especially in view of the financial condition of the country, in the face of a deficit next year of a million dollars, why this country should undertake the construction of the proposed canal at the present time. So long as we own the Welland Canal we know we shall have the right to exact terms from the United States Government that will permit our vessels to pass through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, and the second canal that will be constructed hereafter. The Welland Canal is as important to them as the Sault Ste. Marie Canal is important to us, and for the use of the one they give us the use of the other. There is no more necessity for the construction of this canal than there is for a jug to have two handles, except for the purpose of spending the money of an overtaxed people. I protest against this expenditure, as far as I can protest, and I repeat that the Government have no justification whatever for undertaking this work, except for the purpose of securing a seat for the hon. member for Algoma. There can be no other reason; it is not wanted, it is not required for any necessities of commerce, it has not been shown here to-day that our shipping is delayed on account of the canal being overworked, and I have been told by men who pass through the canal every two or three weeks that a canal on the Canadian side is not required; and yet in the face of the present financial condition of the country the Government are undertaking a work which will cost from $1,500,000 to $2,000,000. The Government have not informed the committee that they have taken the precaution to have this ground examined carefully by engineers and ascertain whether the canal be practicable, and whether they have ascertained approximately the cost of the proposed work based upon estimates made by engineers. The committee is asked blindly to vote $1,000,000 for a work that is not wanted in this country, for a work from which we will derive no advantage whatever, nor is it one that commercial necessity requires.

Mr. DAWSON. I think the hon. gentleman who censures the Government for going on with the work has given the very best reason why they should go on with it. He has pointed to the other side and said the Americans are building another canal. Why are they building another canal? Because it is required, as one canal is not equal to the traffic. But I must tell the hon. gentleman that they are doing more than that, they have projected a third canal in another locality, such is the enormous increase of traffic which they anticipate. The trade has risen from 1,000,000 tons three or four years ago to 6,000,000 tons of freight now, and no canal in the world can accommodate that traffic in the six months of summer. So the Americans are now building another canal, and they have already laid out the ground and projected a third canal. In order to keep up with the Americans we must build a canal on our side of the river. The hon. gentleman said the canal was going to be built in order that the member for Algoma may have a seat. The member for Algoma had a seat long before the hon. gentleman and long before any canal was proposed, and I think he will probably have a seat in this House when the hon. gentleman is not here.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman has told us that the American Government are now constructing another canal, and that it is their intention to construct still another lock. In the face of those facts how can it be necessary for the Canadian Government to proceed with the construction of a fourth lock? The hon. gentleman has told us that this canal was not promised for the purpose of keeping him in his seat. I ask him if he did not, from one end of Algoma to the other, during the last election, hold out the promise that the Government would construct another canal if they were successful in the election? And was it not in view of the election that they placed $1,000,000 in the Estimates, which they dropped out last year, it was supposed forever, at least for years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We did not drop it.

Mr. LISTER. Was it not stated during the recess that the Sault Ste. Marie Canal was not to go on?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. LISTER. It was stated again and again during the recess that this canal was not to go on; and I say that the hon. member for Algoma held it out as an inducement to the electors to sustain him, that they would get this canal if the present Administration were sustained in office. I can tell the hon. gentleman, furthermore, that although I have not had the honor of a seat in this House as long as he has, if I live I think I shall have, because I do not think all the power of this Government could put me out. During the last election the hon. Minister of Justice, and the late lamented Hon. Thomas White came into my county for the purpose of defeating me, and they increased my majority by 240.

Mr. DAWSON. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken in supposing that the Sault Ste. Marie Canal was made an issue in the last election in Algoma, or that any promises were made in connection with it. The Sault Ste. Marie Canal has been contemplated for the last thirty years in Algoma, and last year it was barely mentioned.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think the hon. Minister should answer the pertinent question put to him by my hon. friend at my right (Mr. Lister)—a question in which the whole House is interested. Before we enter into this enormous contract, the hon. gentleman should state if he can what the work is likely to cost. Anybody who takes the trouble to read the report of the Minister of Public Works as to the cost of canals in this country can form some conception as to what this one is likely to cost. I do not think the hon. gentleman should ask us to vote $1,000,000 even if he can justify the construction of the work, unless he can show that proper surveys have been made, and that that sum will complete it. If the Government are going to ask the House to blindly vote $1,000,000 for a work which may cost two or three times that sum, then they must have lost their heads; and we have had enough experience in voting enormous sums of public money in this House without proper information. Hon. gentlemen talk about the immense traffic that is going to pass through this canal. I have no doubt that it is very great; but what difference can it make to those whose vessels pass through the canal there, whether it is built by American or by Canadian money? If the Americans have spent a large amount of money in building canals at that point, there is no need of our building a fourth one. The new American canal to be built there, with a length of 800 feet, a width of 100 feet, and with 21 feet of water on the sills, is estimated to cost $1,700,000; and my hon. friend tells me that it is only a lock. We all know that the estimate will be exceeded. In these large public works the estimates are always exceeded; and if the American lock is going to cost that amount of money, ours is likely to cost quite as much. Although the traffic at that point is very great, the traffic of vessels owned by Canada is very small. The report of the Minister of Public Works states that of 38,742 vessels that passed through the canals there, but 6,000 were Canadian vessels. That is the proportion which the shipping of Canada bears to the shipping of the United States. I, for one, feel that we should be doing wrong to ourselves and the country if we voted this $1,000,000 blindly. I do not think the hon. Minister has taken us sufficiently into his confidence, or that he has even done himself justice, in asking us to vote this money without giving us more information as to the surveys, the reports from engineers, and the probable cost of the work. This country is not in a position to go on expending money to the same extent that it has done during the past five years; I think the better minds on both sides have come to the conclusion that it is time to call a halt; and I think that we should satisfy ourselves that these great public works are essential before we undertake them. I can see no reason at all why we should incur this enormous expenditure merely to have a canal on the Canadian side when sufficient accommodation is given on the American side. The Americans did not build another Welland Canal, and the fact that they use, and must use, that is a sufficient guarantee evidence that we shall have the use of their canals.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think it is evident that the House is not in possession of sufficient information to vote this amount of money to-night. Before asking this House to pledge the credit of the country to the construction of such an important public work, the hon. Minister should have submitted to us a plan and some authentic estimates as to its ultimate cost. I am informed, on good authority, that the American canal will accommodate more than five times the traffic passing there now. I am told that it is the finest and largest canal in the world, that it will take three steamers in the lock at one time. As to the cost of the work, there is no doubt that this vote is but a commencement. If the Government are placing the sum in the Estimates, as they did on a former occasion, merely to satisfy the promises made by the hon. member for Algoma, it would not, perhaps, be attended with very serious results; but I am informed that although the lock is not very long, its approaches on each side are very shallow, with a rocky bottom, and it will take an immense expenditure to blast out those shallows before the canal can be used. I am told that, at certain seasons of the year, there is not more than five feet of water. This work will probably involve an ultimate expenditure of not one, but four or five millions; and I think the hon. gentleman should hesitate before he asks the House to commit itself to such an expenditure if he is not in possession of information as to its probable cost. If he is in possession of this information, he should take the House into his confidence and let us know the extent of the obligation he is asking us to assume. As the canals there at present are sufficient for the traffic, I think this is a most unjustifiable appropriation of public money under our present circumstances. In the present condition of the country it does appear to me from the best information I have been able to obtain, that the Government should not ask this House to vote such a large sum of money, which will probably not be near the cost of this great undertaking. Hon. gentlemen have conceded that the approaches to the canal would cost a great deal more than the canal itself. I have been told that when surveys were made there for the construction of a bridge, that after two feet of digging they came to solid rock. All that rock will therefore have to be removed, and it will involve an immense outlay. From reliable information which I have, I believe that the canal will cost not less than $4,000,000.

Mr. SHANLY. I would ask the hon. gentleman where he gets his information as to the shallowness of the water in the approaches? It may be just as the hon. gentleman has said, but I wish to know where he obtained the information, as I was not aware there were such shallow approaches.

Mr. PURCELL. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) has got some of his information from me, and what I said to him is correct. I do not suppose there is an hon. gentleman in this House who knows more about that part of the country than I do. I have had a great deal of work to do there, and I have taken a great deal of supplies through that place, and know it thoroughly. I should be very sorry to give any wrong information on the subject, and I have merely stated what I know to be facts in regard to the canal there. The American canal is on a softer bottom than the Canadian canal, and the former lies on the side of the river where it is easily cut through. Our canal, if it is built on the other side of the river, has to be cut through a rocky bottom. I know this from my experience, as I tested that place when we were about to tender for the construction of a bridge there; and as the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) said we did not go more than about four feet when we struck the hard rock; on the Canadian side of the river it is hard rock within about four feet from the surface. I believe that it will cost more than a million dollars to build that canal. As long as I have been acquainted with this country I never knew the case of an appropriation being made, where the first appropriation ever carried out the work and finished it. Speaking honestly, I do not think that three times the amount now asked for will complete this undertaking. The sum might complete the locks, but, from what I know of the place, I think there would be a mile on one side and more than half a mile on the other side to be excavated, before you can get water deep enough to float the vessels after you build the lock. The excavation is not very hard there, but it could not be taken out with dredges, and would have to be done in the ordinary way by putting in coffer-dams. The cost of the approaches on both sides would, in my opinion, be far more than the cost of the locks themselves. I may say that the canal which is built there now is a most expensive canal, and is one of the best canals in the world. I have seen three steamers locked in it at once, and I must say that I do not think the canal that is there has more than three times the capacity of what is required. Unless the Government wants that we should have a canal apart from the American canal, and that we should have a canal of our own independent of the Americans, it is the only reason why I see that this undertaking can be necessary. If you consider it necessary that we should have a canal of our own, as we have railroads of our own, it is the only reason why this work should be undertaken. I presume the Government intend to build this canal, and if they do intend they will probably carry it out, but if we live for four or five years we will see whether $3,000,000 will build that canal or not. I think the approaches to the canal, to get the deep water that is required, will cost more than double the cost of the locks. If I am not mistaken there are 27 feet of water in the American canal, and to make this canal perfect it ought to be able to accommodate ships which can cross the Atlantic Ocean.

A hon. MEMBER. How many feet in the approaches?

Mr. PURCELL. I think there is nearly a mile on one side, although I never measured the distance exactly. I saw it sounded myself when we were building the bridges and we tested the depth of the ground over the lock.

An hon. MEMBER. How many feet have to be taken out?

Mr. PURCELL. There would be an average between 16, 18 and 20 feet. I think that the excavation to the lock would cost more than the lock itself. We took the first locomotives through this place that ever were taken across Lake Superior.

Mr. DAWSON. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) has been completely misinformed as to the freshets and as to the water. There are no freshets in Lake Superior, and there is no high and no low water, as there is in other places. The high water does not differ from the low water more than 6 inches, and at the extreme more than 9 inches, so that the height of the water and the depth of the water are always uniform. Immediately at the entrance of this canal there is a bay where schooners from the American side used to come over and lay up for the winter. The water is deep there down to within a very short distance of the entrance of the canal. It is deep also at the outlet of where the canal will be. Surveys have been made and soundings taken there, and I have no doubt that, on reference to the Department of Railways and Canals, all the plans and soundings can be seen. There is, therefore, no use making conjectures in this House on what has been established by actual fact and actual measurement. There is one little circumstance which I will draw attention to with regard to this canal. It has been said that the canals on the other side are more than sufficient for the traffic, but the Americans themselves do not consider so. I know that the big lock on the American side takes three steamers at a time, and I have seen four steamers in that lock, but whether that is an advantage or not, or whether time is gained by putting four steamers in the lock, is a question for people accustomed to canals to settle. Very eminent engineers have given their opinion that it is not. We must remember a former occasion when a canal would have been of advantage, and when the existence of the country might have depended upon it, that the American canal was shut against us. The locks on the American side were shut down then, and we were told that no Canadian vessel could be allowed to go through those locks. When a military expedition was going through to the North-West long ago, it had to land on the Canadian side and the supplies had to be taken by waggon over the old portage road. There they engaged steamers drawing twelve feet of water, and just at the point where the entrance to the lock is to be put, a little wharf was built up, and those steamers had no difficulty in coming in and loading to their full capacity. It was long and tedious work to get the supplies and military stores over that portage road, and not until the work was about completed did the Americans come over and say to us: You can use the canal now. Their intention, however, was at first evidently to block that expedition. I think it is but reasonable that a canal should be constructed by this country between these two great inland seas.

Mr. PURCELL. In regard to the possible stoppage of our traffic by the Americans, I take no stock in that, for I know nothing about it, and in that I am satisfied to agree with my hon. friend from Algoma (Mr. Dawson). I am only stating the circumstances in regard to the work which has been done there.

Mr. COOK. I did not suppose that any hon. gentleman would attempt to defend this scheme on the ground of any difficulty that might arise with the United States. It was one of the great cries of the Government, when they were building the Canadian Pacific Railway north of Lake Superior, that it would be used largely for military purposes. If any difficulty should arise between the United States and Canada, this canal would be of no use whatever. In the event of war between the United States and Canada, our vessels could not approach the canal, and we would have to fall back on the Canadian Pacific Railway if we wanted to take supplies west of Lake Superior. I do not rise to speak against this project so much as against the manner in which it has been brought before the House. We have had instances in the past where schemes of this nature have been brought to the attention of the House, and large sums of money have been put in the Estimates, and money has been expended, and no very great object has been obtained. We have the instance of the Trent Valley Canal, for which our friends opposite asked for a vote of this House, and the money was expended, which did some good in the way of navigation in the interior, but they have never yet brought down an estimate to Parliament of the total cost of that work. This will be of the same nature. Then, we have had the celebrated projected Baie Verte canal. We had a sum of several millions of dollars for that in the Estimates for years, and then abandoned. If the Government follow that example in this case, I hope, at all events, they will expend the money on the works. If they are going to build the canal, let them say so; let them be frank and fair, and furnish the House and the country with the plans and specifications and the estimated cost of the work, and let the House and the country know what they are about. To ask us to vote blindfold, to vote like children, is, I think, treating the members of this House with a great deal of contempt. I hope, if this does pass, as no doubt it will, it will not pass without a division.

Mr. CHARLTON. In discussing this project of building a second canal at Sault Ste. Marie, two points have always struck me as requiring to be taken into consideration by the Government and as being points which should weigh very heavily against the proposal. The first point is that the canal is not necessary in times of peace, because the present canal is amply sufficient for all the commerce there.

Mr. SHANLY. Not the present canal.

Mr. CHARLTON. The canal which is now being constructed will be ample for all the commerce of that lake. The second point is that, in case of war, if we build a canal of our own, either we will control both canals or the Americans will control both canals, for whichever controls the canal on one side will control the canal on both sides. Therefore, this is not necessary either in time of peace or in time of war, because whichever power controls one side of the river will control both sides of the river, and therefore the expenditure of this money is useless. In regard to the use of this for any possible North-West rebellion, we will never again have any such use for it, because we now have a military railroad which we could use in case of another rebellion, if we were sending troops and munitions of war to the North-West for any purpose whatever. I think that, especially in view of the present state of finances, there is not sufficient necessity for the construction of that canal to warrant the expenditure of this large sum of money.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The House has been placed in possession of information in regard to this canal from two sources. The first was from the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson), who I presume is not a practical man, who is not practically acquainted with this work. I presume that, like most of us, he has a theoretical knowledge of the subject, and that, desiring to have a canal built in his district, he is anxious to persuade the House and the Government that it is a laudable thing to do, but I presume that he has not a technical or professional knowledge of the subject which would commend his opinion to the favorable consideration of the House. I do not say that with any disrespect to the views of the hon. gentleman, but we know that members of this House, when they are advocating the schemes in which their constituents are interested, are inclined, and very naturally so, to give as favorable a view as possible. On the other side we had the practical man on this subject. I suppose, if you went throughout the whole Dominion, you could not get the opinion of a person more competent to give a reliable professional opinion and a practical opinion on such a matter as this than the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Purcell), who has given his views here to-night; and he tells us that the construction of the lock would be the smallest item of the expenditure. He has told us that for a mile on one side, or for a mile or a mile and a half on the other side, to make the entrances, you would have to blast out or remove rocks to a depth probably of 16 feet. I think this House should pause in the face of such a statement as that before committing the country to an expenditure which the hon. gentleman stated, with his knowledge and belief and his practical experience, will amount to three or four millions of dollars. I think the House should pay heed to such an opinion as that. I do not myself place any further value on any opinion of that kind than to say that, if we have a canal there, which I have been assured is capable of accommodating all the trade of that section, we should not from a merely sentimental view, when the finances of the country are in the position they are to-day, further burden the taxpayers with such an unnecessary expenditure; but, from the views which have been expressed by the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Purcell), although hon. gentlemen opposite may sustain the proposition of the Government, I think they must feel a conscientious conviction that the statement which he has made is likely to be realised, and that, if we enter upon this work, we are entering upon an expenditure which will be enormous before the work is completed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This House has voted this money several times. Long ago the question of the construction of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal was brought before the House, and the House promptly provided the necessary means. A year ago there was a vote passed by the House. Where have the hon. gentlemen got their new information from? This vote was not opposed a year ago, why should it be opposed now?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). They did not understand it properly.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then the hon. gentleman has got his inspiration within half an hour.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Yes, I admit that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And he undertakes to stand up here and talk learnedly to this House about the construction of a canal upon information that he has obtained within half an hour! Does he not know that years ago, the first canal engineer of this country made an elaborate survey of this work, and made calculations and plans and everything connected with it, estimating the cost of this work at less than three-fourths of a million dollars? It is true, this proposal embraces the extension of that work, it embraces a deeper canal, and therefore the expenditure is necessarily increased. The Government are not going blindly into the question at all. The Government took it up years ago, after careful and exhaustive surveys had been made under the direction of one of the ablest canal engineers, not only in Canada, but in the world, for I have no hesitation in saying that John Page's name stands, throughout the world, wherever canal navigation or works of this character are involved, as one of the first authorities to be found in any country. He had the confidence of the leader of the late Government, who was Minister of Public Works, and under whom he served, as he has served under me when I was Minister of Public Works and Minister of Railways and Canals. Therefore, I say, for hon. gentlemen who only got their promptings half an hour ago, to stand up here and undertake to discuss this question, after years of examination and investigation by Mr. Page, is, I think, a little presumptuous. Why, Sir, Canada has the greatest system of inland navigation in the civilised world. Where will you find in any country on the globe, anything to compare with the inland navigation from the Straits of Belle Isle to Prince Arthur's Landing; and yet, Sir, on the whole of that great line of inland navigation, at that little point of Sault Ste. Marie, you are liable at any moment to be stopped and to be told: Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther. Notwithstanding all our enormous expenditure on our canal communication, on the River St. Lawrence, on the canals from Lachine up to the foot of the Welland, you are liable at any moment to be told by a foreign country: You cannot enter the great Lake Superior in a vessel; you must stop here, because this canal is ours. Is it a mere imaginary idea that such a thing shall occur? No, Sir, every member of the House knows that on a most momentous occasion when we considered it of vital consequence to go through the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, we were told we could not go. I have no idea that such a thing is likely to occur again, but even if it does not, a canal at Sault Ste. Marie is required as an independent line of communication from the Straits of Belle Isle to Prince Arthur's Landing. With the enormous resources of that great North-West pouring down upon us, I say the time has come, at this comparatively small expense, when we should not be in the humiliating position in which we found ourselves before, and in which we are liable to find ourselves to-morrow. I believe, under these circumstances, the House will be prepared, and the country will be prepared, to approve of an expenditure to remove the difficulty which we encountered on a former occasion, and to make it impossible that such a contingency shall occur again. I am not very much surprised at the statement of the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Purcell). Everybody knows that the moment a contract is scented in the air, contractors are the last men in the world to minify the cost of constructing the work. Everybody knows that the hon. member for Glengarry, by his ability and his sagacity as a contractor, has made a great fortune, and it is not at all unlikely that if a contract were let he would be one of the first men to tender for this work, and the last thing in the world he would be inclined to do, would be to minify the difficulty connected with it, or to intimate to the people that it was a very small affair, and an easy thing to construct this work which probably he, or parties connected with him, would tender for to-morrow if the contract was offered. I want to know whether it is not quite as likely that the hon. gentleman sees difficulties that cautious contractors always see. The hon. member for Halifax sneers at the information of the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson). Sir, if he had lived up at the head of Lake Superior, if he had the deep and personal interest, and the means of informing himself on this subject, that the hon. member for Algoma has had, he would not talk so flippantly here about three or four millions, or try to throw contempt upon the estimates of one of the first engineers in the world, upon whose estimates these appropriations are based. I have stated that after Mr. Page had made a careful examination and a thorough survey of this work, he reported the cost at less than $750,000, and that estimate is increased because it is proposed to build a larger and a more useful work. The hon. gentleman says that the present canal accommodation will do three times the present traffic that is done now. I want to know why our American neighbors, who are so astute, think it necessary to waste money in building a second canal in the same locality, if there is not traffic enough for the one which they have already got. Why, Sir, it is because they are wise in their generation, it is because they see that mighty North-West, and they see the products that are pouring down to the east through this canal; and looking at the enormously rapid and increasing development of the traffic, they come to the conclusion that to provide for the near future, it is absolutely necessary to have additional canal communication. I trust, Sir, that it is not necessary at this late period in the Session, to weary the House by statements of this kind upon a question that has been before the House again and again. More than ten years ago money was voted for the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, it was voted again last year, and it is now placed in the Estimates with the view of taking the work up and carrying it forward.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The warmth exhibited by the hon. the Minister of Finance is proof that he finds he has a bad case in hand. I have had a long political experience with the hon. gentleman, and I have always observed that when he finds himself hard pressed, when he finds that he cannot answer a fair argument from a political opponent, he always adopts the principle of the boy who got a thrashing from his captain, and who turned round and abused him. The hon. gentleman says that I only obtained my information with respect to this canal very recently. That is quite correct. But, Sir, if the hon. gentleman had a case in court, would he not prove it by bringing in a witness, and if that witness was a reliable one, would not the judge and jury be guided by the evidence which he gave? Now, we have the evidence of a gentleman here, whom the hon. gentleman himself admits is most familiar with the public works of this country, and who, he says, scents a contract from afar. Sir, the hon. gentleman has been connected—I will not say connected himself—but the hon. gentleman is quite familiar with all these contracts which are scented from afar, and the House has had ample experience of the way the hon. gentleman and his department have dealt with the Onderdonk, and other contracts of that kind, which have been a scandal to this country. The hon. gentleman says I “presume” to speak on a subject like this. Why, Sir, it is presumption on the part of this hon. gentleman to attempt to lecture any hon. gentleman in this House. The hon. gentleman has not disputed one statement made by the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Purcell); he has not been able to say that the Government have information to bring down as to the cost of the canal. The whole thing is a sham from beginning to end. Look at the appropriation! The hon. gentleman puts down $997,650 in order to convey the impression to the House and the country that the Government have made an estimate so accurate that they will be able to complete the work for that sum.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will excuse me if I draw his attention to the fact that this sum is a revote of the amount remaining of $1,000,000 which was voted last year.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It does not make the least odds whether it was so or not.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I say no.

An hon. MEMBER. You are putting your foot into it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman will put both feet into it, and I want to keep his feet out of it; he does not open his mouth without putting his foot into it. I say the hon. Finance Minister has been unable to disprove one statement made by the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Purcell), he has not been able to show that the canal can be built for the sum of money placed in the Estimates, while we have here the evidence of a practical man as to the ultimate cost of the work. And when the hon. gentleman rises to lecture me and say I was speaking persiflage I roll back such an accusation. I have a right to speak on public questions as much as the hon. gentleman has, and he has no right to lecture me or any other hon. gentleman when we are discussing public questions. It is simply because he finds himself in a position which he cannot defend, when such testimony is brought forward which he cannot refute or explain away, he is driven to the expediency of endeavoring to overcome it in another way. I believe hon. gentlemen believe with me that we are entering upon a huge expenditure, that we are commencing an undertaking which the hon. gentleman has distinctly described as of very large proportions. The hon. gentleman says I sneered at the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson). I made use of no language towards that hon. gentleman which was disrespectful or such as I would not desire to use towards any hon. member of the House. I said distinctly that one would not suppose the hon. gentleman to have those professional qualifications which would enable him to judge accurately in regard to this work.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is just what the hon. gentleman has.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I say this, that the committee have before them the evidence of a man who knows all about this matter, who knows the locality well, and the country will prefer to accept such evidence in the place of the statements made by the hon. gentleman. Why does not the hon. gentleman submit statements which he professes to have? The Government are asking the committee to vote a large sum without any estimate or surveys, but merely on the statement coming from the hon. gentleman, which like many statements made on previous occasions regarding public expenditures will be received with very grave suspicion.

Mr. SHANLY. May I ask the hon. gentleman why he has said so positively that the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) has no practical and professional knowledge on such a matter as this? I have had the pleasure of knowing that gentleman for a great number of years, and I have always considered him a very eminent practical engineer.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Finance Minister rose in his place to give the committee information in regard to the money that was asked, and how has he treated the committee? He has told the committee that there were accurate surveys made with regard to the canal some years ago by a very eminent engineer, and that the estimates submitted by the engineer had been brought down the preceding year. He asks the committee to vote the money without submitting plans or estimates.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Did the hon. gentleman ever hear of plans for any public work being submitted to the House?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What were they?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) A number of them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What were they?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman is only trifling with the committee.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name one.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Hon. members on the back benches had better wait till they hear what I have to say. When the hon. gentleman asks us to vote such a large sum and refuses to submit the estimates signed by Mr. Page showing how much he thought this canal would cost, the hon. gentleman knows—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has not asked for the estimates signed by Mr. Page.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have never heard of it till to-night.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Did you not vote the one million of money last year?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I did not vote it, it slipped through like many other millions. How are the members treated? If they rise to obtain information there is a sneer and a laugh, and a remark is made that it is towards the end of the Session and we had better get the business through. If they do not rise they are met next Session with the statement that they did not object and they were estopped. We have a right to have information as to the estimated cost of this great public work, for which we are now asked to vote $1,000,000 to begin with. Our constituents will expect it; the over-burdened taxpayers look to the Opposition to get information before they allow these large sums in the Estimates to pass. What did the hon. gentleman say? He said the survey was made years ago. He says that Mr. Page thought it was desirable to have a canal. But to-day we have gone into an expenditure of millions to build the Canadian Pacific Railway around Lake Superior, and the reasons which prompted hon. members to support the construction of the canal a year ago, do not exist now. The hon. gentleman himself in answer to a statement made here, took up the argument that we were in times past at the mercy of the United States in regard to using their canal; but he has changed his position, and he has the manliness and honesty to tell us that he does not anticipate a renewal of that state of affairs. He does not anticipate our being prevented from using the American canal, and yet that is the argument used to-night. But the hon. gentleman has cut the ground from under the feet of those who used the argument, by stating, in a frank way, that we will not be stopped by the United States from the use of their canal. That argument is gone, and the other argument, that the estimate has been made and not produced, is answered by the fact that the hon. gentleman dare not bring down the estimate, and has not brought it down. A few years ago Parliament voted $1,000,000 to construct the tidal dock at St. Charles River; over $3,000,000 have been expended on it, and it is proposed to expend $1,000,000 more. The hon. gentleman knows that is the way we have been going on year after year, till we are on the verge of bankruptcy in this Dominion.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I say yes; this has gone on until we had a debt which if we had been told ten years ago we would owe that amount now, the people would have stood aghast at it. We have gone on rolling it up, and we of the Opposition think it is time to halt, and we are determined we will not vote these sums without at least obtaining reasonable information as to the estimated cost, so that we shall know what we are doing. We have only the information given by the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Purcell), who has a perfect knowledge of the surroundings there. He has told us that the construction of the canal may be completed for one million. To make that canal of any use, and to deepen the shallow waters at the mouth of it, will cost you $2,000,000 more. Is the House going to vote that blindly? Hon. members on the back benches and the member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) notably, seemed to be very anxious to shut off discussion and to vote this sum without our knowing what it is for. I say that the hon. gentleman is forgetting himself when he asks this side of the House to vote blindly this large sum of money, and when he calls on gentlemen to sit down, when they ask for that legitimate information without which no member of the committee should vote. I myself will take the responsibility of dividing the House on this question unless the hon. Minister gives us the necessary information. I say that he is insulting the committee and insulting members on both sides of the House by withholding it. It is all very fine for him to play with the common sense of the House, and to talk in the way he has done now, about this great public work. He knows very well that the reasons which induced many men to support that canal years ago do not exist now. You spent millions of money in building the Canadian Pacific Railway road around Lake Superior, and you do not anticipate to be deprived of the use of the canal there in the future. It seems to me to be throwing away millions of money for nothing.

Mr. HESSON. As the hon. member for North Perth has been alluded to I wish to say a few words. I did not intend to take any part in the discussion whatever, but I may point out that the discussion has largely been contributed to by gentlemen from the eastern portions of the Province who know very little, or nothing at all about the locality. We from the western portion of the Dominion have listened with patience, and I am sure with great respect to the hon. gentlemen when they were dealing with matters appertaining to their own Provinces, and we presumed that they knew more about the interests of their own Provinces than we did. The hon. gentlemen from the Lower Provinces are undertaking now to dictate to members from the west as to what we require, and sneer at gentlemen on the back benches who happen to dissent from the opinions of hon. gentlemen on the opposite side. We are now referred to as sitting on the back benches, but if we have not the position on the front benches which my hon. friend has, it is because we have not so much cheek, and that we do not uselessly occupy the time of the House, although we represent just as good and as important constituencies as the hon. gentleman who has taken his seat. If that hon. gentleman thinks we are voting blindly on this side of the House, he is very much mistaken, for he is probably measuring us by his own friends. Every gentleman in this House who was here last year knew that this sum was in the Estimates, and if he voted in ignorance it was the fault of the hon. gentlemen opposite. He must have seen it himself last year, and I do not think he will ask us to furnish him with eyes to see and ears to hear.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Tell us what you know about the estimate.

Mr. HESSON. It is exactly what was in the estimate formerly. There was a vote of a million before; part of that was spent, and we are now asked for a revote of the balance. This great work may cost more or it may cost less. The hon. gentleman asked that the Minister should present to this House to-night the estimate prepared by the engineer. Why did he not ask for that years ago? He was in the House and he did not discharge his duty if he let it pass unchallenged.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Read the debate and you will see.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman must have looked over this matter in silence for a number of years. I believe that on this side of the House we have the interests of the country at heart as much at least as hon. gentlemen opposite and we are just as likely to be called upon to pay our portion of the taxes as they are. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that I have as good a right to speak for my constituents as he has for his. I am satisfied that there is not a single constituency in the west which would have the slightest hesitation in agreeing to this vote, and which would not say that the Government would be recreant of their duty if they failed for one million or two millions or three millions to construct that great national work. As a Canadian proud of my country I would not again have the insult thrown upon Canada that was hurled at us on a former occasion, when we had to go on our hands and knees for the right to go through those American canals. I believe it would be a disgrace to the Canadian people if they did not undertake the responsibility to construct a work of this kind for ourselves. We have no better evidence of the fact that it is necessary for us to build this canal, than what has been stated by gentlemen on the opposite side. If the Americans, keen and far seeing as they are, and anxious for the development of that great country in the future, should find it necessary to construct that great public work, why should gentlemen on the other side of the House who have never been up there, and who do not know an inch of the ground, say that there is sufficient accommodation there at present. If gentlemen on that side of the House choose to dictate to the Americans as to the necessity for such a canal, they are taking too much responsibility on themselves. I for one as a Canadian, am prepared to take my full measure of responsibility to carry out this work, and if $1,000,000 is not sufficient I have no hesitation in saying that the Canadians are satisfied they will have that work accomplished. Whether it is this year or next year the canal will be built. The hon. member from Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Davies) did not hear me complain when the Government put in the Estimates $150,000 to give a steamer to the island he represents. Year by year the hon. gentleman stood in this House and complained of the way in which that island was neglected. I have never chosen to say a single word about the expenditures on the great harbors of the Eastern Provinces. I presume that if this great work is carried out the harbors of the lower provinces will all share in the great benefits it will confer on the country at large, and I think that Canadians may be allowed to know what Canada wants, once in a while, and not be made to feel that they are not able to protect their own interests. I, as a Canadian, protest against any such course. If I am forced to sit on the back benches I am not ashamed of it, but I do not wish to be referred to in an insulting way as a member from the back benches, by a gentleman who has more cheek than brains.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I shall not imitate the conduct of the hon. gentleman, nor shall I use the insulting language he has used. The reference I made was because of the fact, that when my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Jones) was on his feet addressing himself to the important matter before the House, the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) indulged in the conduct which he generally indulges in, and with other members kept up a running fire of insulting expressions, shouting "sit down," and using language which no gentleman should use. The hon. member acknowledges he does not know what he is voting for. He acknowledges he will vote one million, two millions, three millions or any other number of millions for this work, irrespective of consequences.

Mr. HESSON. You are misrepresenting me.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). He is the last man in the House who should use insulting expressions to us on this side when we are trying to get information on a matter of great importance to the country. I asked him if he knew what the estimate is and he does not know. I asked him if he read the debate of last year, and if he had read the debate he would have seen that the Government said they were considering the question, and that the Opposition, therefore, left the matter in their hands then. The only reference I made to the hon. gentleman as occupying the seat he does on the back benches, was that while he was writing his letters, and while another gentleman was discussing the matter he kept up a fire of unseemly and ungentlemanly interruptions and I was determined that this conduct should not go unreprimanded.

Mr. HESSON. As to the interruption which the hon. gentleman refers to, I may say that he had been four or five times speaking on the question, and he did not present to this House any reason why this vote should not be passed. He seemed to think that the experience of a gentleman in this House, who is a contractor, was more to be relied on than that of the most eminent engineer in the country.

An hon. MEMBER. He never said that.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman said so, and members on that side of the House repeated it over and over again, that because a contractor in this House chooses to say that that work would be an expensive work and would cost more than the estimate, it is not a work that should be proceeded with. We on this side of the House prefer to believe the opinions of eminent gentlemen who are entrusted with carrying out that work. We have here gentlemen who have experience as engineers in the country, and who are not contractors in the sense my friend is on the other side of the House, and we prefer to take their opinions to his.

The CHAIRMAN. Hon. gentlemen would do well to return to the discussion of the question.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Although I am a member from the Eastern Provinces and open to the objection made by the member for Perth (Mr. Hesson), yet I think we would be derelict in our duty if we should allow money belonging to this Dominion to be expended in any part of Canada without having the proper information as regards the work on which it is to be expended. It is not only the duty of the members of the Opposition to ask for that information, but it is the duty of the members who support the Government as well, and before they vote they should know what they are voting for. What information have we got on this subject? The hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) has given us the same speech as he gave us last year, but he has not ventured to tell what the canal would cost. He has not ventured to impugn the statement of the member for Glengarry (Mr. Purcell), who is a practical man, but who is sneered at by the member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson), because he is a contractor. The member for Glengarry has stated in practical terms what he knows of this place, and he does not indulge in strong language and use high-falutin terms about Canadians going it blind and spending any amount of money, but tells us exactly what he has seen and knows by practical experience, and his statement has not been impugned in the slightest degree. The hon. member for Perth asks why we did not ask for returns. But it is the duty of the Government to give the information which every hon. member is bound to have before being asked to vote away the public money of the country. Last year the vote was granted on the statement of the hon. member for Algoma, and what passed in concurrence when the hon. Minister of Finance was asked to explain the vote? The following is the report in Hansard :—

"Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have tenders been asked for this work?"

"Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not yet."

"Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have any reports of engineers been received?"

"Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Elaborate reports were made some time ago, on two occasions, and Mr. Page is now considering the whole question. Very full plans and estimates are in the department, and Mr. Page is considering the whole matter."

If Mr. Page has been considering the whole thing since last Session, we have the right when asked to vote this amount, to know what his views are, and his estimates of the probable cost. The hon. member for North Perth says he is prepared to vote this money or even $2,000,000. He is prepared to go it blind, placing implicit faith in the Government; but all I have to say is that his duty to his constituents rather was to see that before he gives any vote, he should have that information by which he can justify that vote to them.

Mr. COCKBURN. I regret that in the heat of the debate, some hon. gentlemen are apt to forget the words they uttered a few minutes before. I observe that the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) told us that last year this matter slipped through without his observing it, and that if he had only known it was before the House, he would have most violently opposed it. A few minutes afterwards he tells us that he had studied this debate, and twitted the hon. member for Perth with not having done so, and alluded to some points which had taken place in the debate last year, of which he had just assured us he was totally ignorant. I do not wish to refresh an hon. member's mind so shortly after he has spoken, but, at the same time, I must object to the doleful position in which we are constantly placed before the country. We are told this evening that the country is on the verge of bankruptcy; yet only this evening I have read that our 3½ per cents were quoted at 109. When the brokers, and moneyed men of Paris, London, Antwerp and Vienna, give 9 per cent. premium for our 3½ per cent. securities, I think that hon. gentlemen opposite rather allow their party feeling to carry them too far when they represent this country as being on the verge of ruin and unable to complete the connection of the grandest water system the world has ever known. I have noticed in the debate that the ground taken for the change of opinion this year is that we have built the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that there is no fear whatever of the Americans ever preventing us from utilising and completing our grand water system. Now, as far as I recollect, it is only a few months ago when we were threatened with this very same calamity, because it must be fresh in the minds of hon. members opposite that had it not been for the prudence of the President of the United States we might simply have been in the position of being stopped at the entrance of the Sault Canal by the execution of the non-intercourse bill. I wish to point out to hon. members that there is a necessity for this vote for the construction of this great work, independent altogether of the consideration that we have no other means of making water connection with the great North-West. I think that if the hon. members on the other side, especially those from the Maritime Provinces, had visited this district and studied it as carefully as they have their own, they would appreciate the absolute necessity which exists for completing the canal; and when we have a responsible Minister of the Crown telling us that minute estimates have been made of this work, and we are confronted only by the estimate given by a gentleman whose business it is to undertake contracts, and who, I say it in all humility, is not very exact in his figures, if I may judge by the returns he made with reference to election expenses, I think we ought to accept the statement of the Minister. It is not fair to confront a haphazard expression, given perhaps an hour before, with the regular detailed statement handed to the Government by an authorised engineer.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Where is that?

Mr. COCKBURN. Hon. gentlemen opposite have never asked for that statement until this night. The vote has been on the book for the last nine or ten years. It was last year $1,000,000, and all that has been expended is about $200,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Where is it for the last nine or ten years?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was voted in 1871.

Mr. LISTER. There was an election in 1872.

Mr. COCKBURN. That had nothing to do with it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We do not expect one next year.

Mr. COCKBURN. With the growth of the great western country, this canal that we saw was a growing necessity in 1871, has now become an absolute necessity, and it behooves us to proceed at once with the work, and not to try and delay a work of this kind on the mere opinion given by a gentleman who tells us he has been at the canal and sounded it here and there and looked around it, and has come to the conclusion that he would not build it under $4,000,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the hon. the Minister of Finance will allow me to make a suggestion which if adopted would very much facilitate the business of the Estimates, I would ask him to allow this item to stand and bring the information asked for to-morrow. That is the best and the proper way of dealing with an important subject like this before Parliament. I may also say that I have already expressed my opinion on this Sault Canal. I am in favor of completing it even if it should cost $2,000,000. I am in favor of completing it for this reason, that we know there stands on the Statute-book of the United States a statute giving the President authority at any time he likes to stop the transit of our vessels, and to stop communication with our north-west country. A condition of things may arise which, while not an actual state of war, might be such an interruption of commerce as would seriously interfere with the prosecution of our trade with the North-West. We are squandering money most recklessly in other ways, and I think the expenditure of whatever may be necessary, to a reasonable extent, within our resources, to make the connection of our great water system we are bound to expend.

It is one of the things which, if perhaps not strictly agreed to in the British North America Act, was in contemplation when we agreed to build the Intercolonial Railway; it was then contemplated that in due course the improvement and extension of the canals to the westward should be carried out. It is for that reason and because it is in the interests of the country, that we should have an independent system of our own and not be in a position in which the Americans might threaten us with the closing of our canals. I may say that I do not think the hon. Minister of Finance has been prudent in his manner towards hon. gentlemen on this side. He has chosen to speak to them in a dictatorial way, which was uncalled for, because they were simply performing their duty. The hon. gentleman may think I am lecturing him. I am not. I am here as an independent man, not voting from party grounds, but voting in such a way as my sense and judgment and conscience tell me is right. The hon. gentleman knows I am in favor of this canal, because I gave my assent to it and supported it years ago, and I am prepared to continue to support it now. The hon. gentleman must not take the ground, at all events, so far as I am concerned, that because a vote passes once and lies unused, therefore hon. gentlemen must be expected to vote the same thing over again. I have heard the hon. gentleman take that ground before on a very recent occasion, and he has taken it again to-night. I protest against that being an answer to the reasonable or the unreasonable grounds of opposition taken by the gentlemen who have preceded me in this debate. Sir, we are entitled, when an important question like this is under the consideration of the House, to every information which it is in the power of the Government to give us; and we are not to be foreclosed because we have not moved for papers in connection with it. The Government are the servants of Parliament, and the people will hold us responsible if we do not question, and closely question, the correctness of every vote submitted to Parliament. I think, after the statements which have been made by the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Purcell) and the hon. member for Algoma, (Mr. Dawson), so diverse in their character, the hon. gentleman will see the propriety, as a matter of policy, of allowing the vote to stand over until to-morrow or until we next go into Supply, and then coming down with the detailed information which is asked by the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If I had the slightest idea that this vote would have been questioned, I would have called on the Department of Canals for detailed information respecting it. The House is aware that in consequence of the absence of my friend, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, who is prevented from discharging this duty himself by illness, it has necessarily and unexpectedly been thrown upon myself. But the vote having passed a year ago, after a very full statement by my hon. friend from Algoma, he being an eminent engineer himself—and there being no indication that the vote would be opposed by any hon. member, I did not take the precaution which I would otherwise have taken to have obtained the fullest statements from the Chief Engineer of Canals. I have no hesitation in adopting the suggestion made to allow the item to stand until I can obtain the fullest information regarding it, which I know every hon. gentleman is entitled to on a question of this kind, and which would have been anticipated if I had thought there was going to be the slightest objection to it.

Mr. WELSH. The hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) brought up the subject of $150,000 for a steamer for Prince Edward Island.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will have an opportunity to speak about that when we come to that subject.

Mr. WELSH. Well, the hon. member for North Perth should not have brought it up, because he knew very well that that should have been voted ten or twelve years ago; and a deputation went to London because that money was not voted.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will my hon. friend allow me to say that the hon. member for North Perth only brought it up to express his approval of it.

Mr. WELSH. I will not allow the hon. member for North Perth to bring up a matter like that, which he ought to have been ashamed to mention, because he knows there has been considerable trouble between the Government of the Dominion and the Government of Prince Edward Island about it. I think it was bad taste in him to bring it up. But as the hon. Minister of Finance says there will be a time to make further remarks on that subject, I will not say any more now.

Mr. DAWSON. I wish to read—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope the hon. member for Algoma will not pursue this question just now, as we have postponed the item.

Mr. DAWSON. I wish simply to read a short extract.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Postpone the reading until the item comes up again.

Lachine Canal..... $88,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Perhaps the hon. gentleman will state, just once for all, whether this involves the deepening of the whole system, and what these different votes are required for?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is a part of the system. The hon. gentleman is aware that it would take a very large sum of money to deepen the St. Lawrence Canals to the depth to which the Lachine canal has already been deepened. But that work is being gradually prosecuted on a system to enable vessels drawing 12 feet of water to go from the harbor of Montreal to the upper lakes. This is a revote, and it is required to complete this work, which is estimated to be done by the 1st July, 1889. The total expenditure chargeable to capital, to 30th June, 1886, was $6,254,670; the expenditure for 1886-87 was $28,772.52, and from the 1st July, 1887, to the 31st December, $9,884; making a total expenditure of $6,293,327. The estimate, as revised by Mr. Page, for the entire work of the enlargement of the Lachine Canal, was $7,550,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman did not quite catch what I wanted to know. There is a scheme for the enlargement of all of the St. Lawrence canals to a depth of 14 feet, and I suppose the Estimates show what the total cost of carrying out that scheme will be.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. About $11,500,000.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Are there not serious obstructions in the St. Lawrence at certain points, which will have to be removed before you can obtain 14 feet of water?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; but their removal is all included in the same estimate.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). At one time I think it was the policy of this country to deepen the canals to 14 feet, with the expectation that the commerce of the country would extend up to the lakes; but I understood that there was a change in public opinion in that respect, and that it was considered that 12 feet would be sufficient above Montreal.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The proposal is to make it 12 feet first, but with the mitre sills so arranged that at any time the two additional feet can be obtained.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Is there not a change of opinion upon that subject? I have conversed with several parties, eminently well qualified to form an opinion on that subject, who have told me that the views which at one time were held as to the policy of deepening the canal are not in favor to-day to the same extent that they were some years ago, and that it was now held to be a better policy to limit the canals to 12 feet, in order to avoid the heavy expenditure which must arise in deepening the various channels of the river itself as well as enlarging the canals and making Montreal the headquarters of navigation. They say that 12 feet of water is considered ample for that purpose, because it was not considered that shipping to a large extent would ever require to use these canals.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will see that the first intention was to deepen to 12 feet, but in such a way that we can obtain the 2 additional feet if found desirable afterwards. As I have stated, there is a deduction in this work of $550,000, which would be required to deepen it to 14 feet, or 2 feet beyond the 12 feet. But that is proposed to be deferred.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Unless the Government have a settled policy on this subject and look to deepening the channel of the St. Lawrence as well, it would appear to me that it is rather a waste of money to increase the depth of the canals beyond their present capacity. If it is the settled policy of the country to have a depth of water extending from Montreal up, that will take 14 feet, then I can understand the vote, but in the meantime, unless the Government have arrived at such a decision, it would be waste of money to deepen the canals to 14 feet, when the other channels will not carry a vessel over 12 feet.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have endeavored to explain to the hon. gentleman that the proposal is to deepen to 12 feet, but to make the locks and mitre sills in such a way that the 2 additional feet can be obtained, provided it is found desirable to extend them to 14 feet.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman asks us to vote a sum of money for the Welland Canal to deepen it to 14 feet.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Welland Canal is already finished at 14 feet.

Mr. COOK. Is the work going on at Blue Rapids?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We will come to that in due course. If we do not, my hon. friend can ask me afterwards and I will take a note and obtain the information.

Cornwall Canal..... $724,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The vote for 1888-89 is brought from 1886-87. The appropriation for 1887-88 was $273,000. The amount available for 1887-88 is $273,000. The expenditure from 1st July, 1887, to 31st December, 1887, was $49,061. There is a revote of $224,000, and that leaves from the original amount available for this work $224,000, and a new vote of $500,000, making a total vote of $724,000 required to complete to 1st July, 1889.

Mr. MITCHELL. In connection with that vote, I may say that I have heard very serious complaints on the part of the people engaged in the navigation of Cornwall Canal that the amount of water which is allowed to be drawn off the canal for manufacturing purposes, materially interferes with the depth of water that is necessary for the vessels, both steamers and barges passing through. I would like to know whether the Government will take a note of this, and see that it is not continued?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Page is now engaged investigating that very subject.

Williamsburg—Towards enlarging the Farran's Point Division $100,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The chief engineer's estimate was $500,000 for a depth of 14 feet. The construction of a new lift lock and enlargement of the prism of the canal at Farran's Points cost $500,000; at the Rapide Plat Division the expenditure was $1,250,000 to obtain 14 feet navigation, and at the Galops Division, $900,000; making a total of $2,650,000. The total expenditure on the Williamsburg Canal, chargeable to enlargement on the 1st January, 1888, was $421,901.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What is the proposed expenditure for the 14 feet?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. $2,650,000 including Farran's Point, Rapide Plat and the Galops Division.

St. Lawrence River and Canals $300,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The chief engineer's estimate for 12 feet draught, lowering the bed of the river through the flat rock shoals above the head of the Galops Canal, lights, buoys, &c., $512,000; dredging and removing boulders at Willard's Shoal between Rapide Plat and Farran's Point Canals, $13,000; Lake St. Francis, dredging at three different places, including lights, beacons, buoys, &c., $45,000; deepening and enlarging the channel at the head of Beauharnois Canal, $430,000; deepening and improving the channel through Lake St. Louis, $520,000; total estimate for 12 feet depth, $1,520,000; additional for 14 feet depth, $1,480,000. The estimated cost for 14 feet navigation will be $3,000,000. The expenditure up to the 30th June, 1886, was $603,781.57; for the year 1886-87 it was $71,437.31, from the 1st July, 1887, to the 31st December of that year, $37,996, making a total expenditure to the 31st December, 1887, of $716,214.88. The estimated expenditure from 1st January, 1888, to 30th June of this year is $18,004, making a total of $734,000. That leaves an amount required to complete of $2,266,000. The appropriation for 1887-88 is $40,000; expenditure 1st July to 31st December, 1887, $37,996; expenditure from 1st January to 30th June, 1888, $18,004, making a total of $55,000. New vote, 1888-89, $30,000. This gives the information as to what the total cost will be, but the committee will see that the work is proceeding gradually and we are taking a comparatively small appropriation, though we are proceeding steadily with the work.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am afraid I could not derive much information from the statement of the Minister, probably because it was given too much in detail.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that I propose to reduce the next vote from $100,000 to $30,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thought the maintenance of lights and buoys was always in the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is connected with the work of deepening the canal.

St. Lawrence River—Lake St. Louis $100,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I propose to reduce that to $30,000.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I understand that these amounts are on works which are estimated to cost $5,000,000 in the future for reducing the depth to 14 feet. What would be the cost at 12 feet?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was estimated that to deepen the channel to twelve feet draught, would cost $1,520,000. For the two feet additional, it would cost $1,480,000 more, or $3,000,000 in all.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Was the estimate which the hon. gentleman gave for the completion of the St. Lawrence Canals, at $12,000,000, for a depth of twelve feet or fourteen feet?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Fourteen feet.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the estimate if you keep it at 12 feet?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That would reduce it very largely. I cannot state exactly the difference at present, but I will give the hon. gentleman the amounts at the two depths.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Does that include the deepening of the river?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, it is all embraced in the same surveys.

Murray Canal, towards completing the present works. $75,000

Mr. PLATT. When does the hon. gentleman expect that that work will be completed, and at what cost?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The total expenditure up to the 31st December, 1887, was $181,166.22. The new vote of $75,000 is required to be expended towards the construction of this canal. A further sum of about $360,000 will be required to complete the work.

Mr. PLATT. When do you expect the contract to be completed?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The estimated expenditure from 1st January to 30th June, 1888, is $40,000, making a total expenditure to that date of $27,166, and the total estimated cost of the work is $1,260,645, which leaves $433,459 to complete.

Mr. PLATT. Is it likely that that amount will complete the work? It does not look like it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman can judge from the amounts which have been expended. The amount expended up to the 1st July of this year will be $27,000 and the balance required to complete is $433,000. That is in the light of the work that has been done and the estimates which the chief engineer has made, showing that about two-thirds of the work is done.

Mr. PLATT. This is outside of building the approaches. Is there not a separate contract for that?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I think this expenditure covers everything.

Mr. COOK. Have the Government any statistics as to the number of vessels that have passed through this canal? I believe it has been in operation.

Mr. LISTER. It is not a quarter finished.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. According to the engineer's estimate, it must be about two-thirds finished.

Welland Canal (revote) $34,400

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This revote is required to complete the aqueduct under contract with Mr. Beemer, and to settle with the contractors for section 34.

Deepening Welland Canal to 14 feet throughout (revote) $190,000

Mr. BARRON. I understood the Finance Minister to say that the Welland Canal was already deepened to 14 feet, and I see that is stated in the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, page 86.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The expenditure for the deepening of the Welland Canal to 14 feet throughout up to the 31st December, 1887, was $1,126,229.18. The hon. gentleman is aware that at first there was 12 feet of navigation obtained, and then that the Government proposed to obtain the 14 feet, and for that there was a vote, of which this is a revote to the extent of $190,000. This revote is required for deepening to 14 feet, and to settle with the contractors. The work is principally done.

Trent River navigation—for construction of locks, and the improvement of navigation between Lakefield and Balsam Lake..... $88,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Of this sum, $23,000 is a revote. This amount is required to complete the work now under contract between Lakefield and Balsam Lake. There was expended on that work in all, up to the end of December, 1887, $599,861.16. The estimated cost of the whole work of the Trent River navigation was $688,000, all of which was spent except $8,138 to complete, which is the amount now asked for.

Mr. LISTER. Does this $88,000 complete the work? This Trent River navigation canal has been going on ever since I can remember.

Mr. BARRON. Will the hon. gentleman state where these improvements have been made?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. On the Fenelon Falls Canal there has been paid $106,500; the Buckhorn canal, amount paid $81,500; the Burleigh and Lovesick Canal, $226,200; lock gates for these canals, $4,000; Young's Point dam, $12,600; Lakefield dam, $18,000; lock gates at Fenelon Falls, $9,600; road bridges at Buckhorn and Fenelon Falls, $13,200.

Mr. PLATT. What is the estimated cost of the whole Trent Valley works?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The estimated cost of the whole system undertaken is $688,000.

Mr. LISTER. But these works will not complete the undertaking.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Of course, the hon. gentleman knows that the Trent River navigation is a very expensive undertaking. All that has been undertaken are the works I have mentioned, but of course they will not procure a through line of navigation.

Mr. COOK. Is it the intention of the Government to have a through line of navigation?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think, if I remember aright, that a commission was appointed for the purpose of examining that whole line and reporting. I think that was the decision arrived at when I was here a year ago; and I do not think that report has yet been completed.

Mr. COOK. Surveys were made some time ago.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, long ago.

Mr. COOK. Just before the last election surveys were made through the county of East Simcoe.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I imagine that was the commission appointed to report upon the whole question.

Mr. COOK. I have heard a good deal about the political complexion of this Trent Valley Canal in years past, but it never reached East Simcoe until the last general elections; I had a little taste of it then.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Has the canal got to East Simcoe?

Mr. COOK. No, but the forerunner, the engineer, the political part got there, and they boomed it for all it was worth. Now, I would like to call upon the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Corby) to speak. He is a new member, and his constituency is largely interested in this enterprise. So are the people in the constituency of North Hastings. All the constituencies on the line have been carried by this question for a number of years back, but in the last election the people got their eyes open, and they returned some Liberals. I do not see the hon. member for West Peterboro, (Mr. Stevenson) in his place; he is deeply interested in this matter. The Minister of Customs is deeply interested in this matter, or his constituency is, and I do not see him in his place. I am surprised at the smallness of the vote of $88,000. I suppose the Finance Minister has not forgotten the deputations that waited upon the Government in times past in reference to this matter. He surely does not forget the deputation of 150 gentlemen that he entertained with a speech in the Railway Committee room. He has not forgotten the promises that were made to these gentlemen that a through route would be built as expeditiously as possible. I think it is treating the constituencies along the line of this route badly, to vote such a small sum. Only an increase of $50,000. Last year $90,000, of which $28,000 was expended. I thought at least the Government would give $250,000 to expend this year. I believe this is a work that should be completed. I believe that if they ever intended this canal for the purposes which they pretended it was for, they should have completed it at once. They should have put more money in the Estimates and kept at it, but I fear we young men will grow old and grey before we will have the benefit of this communication to send down our produce. I remember that at every election for the last nine years, since 1873, when they defeated the Mackenzie Government, these hon. gentlemen told the people in the front counties of the great blessings which the opening up of these navigable waters was going to give them. They have only done a very small portion of the work, and are not giving them an outlet at all, as promised. I am surprised at the Government endeavoring to traffic with the people in this way. I told my constituents last year that the Government were not sincere in their attempt to build that road, that it was nothing but a political dodge, and all along the line wherever that canal was to go, I am glad to say the people were not hoodwinked. My constituents were not hoodwinked; they gave me a better vote than they ever did before. They saw through the thin mask of hon. gentlemen opposite. Even in North Simcoe the cry was used at a distance of 60 miles from this route, in the town of Barrie, where the hon. member from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) stated to his constituents that it would go right up there, and that they were coming down the Nottawassaga River, instead of the surveyed route from Lake Simcoe to Mottchedosh Bay via Orillia. I must enter my solemn protest against the conduct of the Government with reference to the construction of this canal, by not putting a larger sum in the Estimates than they have done.

Mr. BARRON. I have heard the explanations of the Finance Minister as to how the $88,000 is made up. That expenditure will be absolutely wasted unless the Government excavate the waters of Cameron Lake north of Fenelon Falls. I drew the attention of the Minister of Public Works at the beginning of the Session to this fact, in order that a sum might be placed in the Estimates to make the necessary excavation, because it is utterly impossible for the lakes along the Trent waters to be used unless that portion of the navigation is excavated. Cameron Lake is like a basin. At one edge it goes into Fenelon River, and except in cases of freshets it is utterly impossible for a vessel, steamboat or barge of any draft to get into Cameron Lake; and hon. gentlemen will see that the whole line of water communication will be absolutely useless unless proper excavations are made there. It is at this place that the railway bridge crosses the river, which forms another impediment. So all this money will be wasted unless something is done; this is absolutely necessary for the purpose of making the entire system of waters navigable. As regards the commission: I desire to draw the attention of the Finance Minister to this fact, that although the commissioners are appointed for the purpose of taking evidence in this matter, they appear to have no power whatever. It is true they can summon witnesses; but they have not the power to pay those witnesses, and at the present time they do not seem to understand exactly what they are doing. So much is that the case that private individuals have to go to the expense of obtaining expert evidence on the subject of the Trent Valley Canal. A few gentlemen have combined together and, at their own expense, with assistance obtained from municipalities, have summoned witnesses for the purpose of giving evidence before this commission. I hold that if the Government think it is necessary to appoint a commission to find out that which they have professed for years and years to know, they should give power to the commissioners to summon what evidence is necessary to bring before them, and pay the expenses of experts who are going to be brought before them from New York and other American cities to give the evidence which we think is necessary to prove that the canal when constructed will be in the interests of the country. I can re-echo everything stated by my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Cook), but I do not wish to say anything further, except to draw the attention of the Finance Minister to the fact that the expenditure of $88,000 will be absolutely useless unless the work I have spoken of is carried out, and also to draw his attention to what I think is the feeling through the country, and that is that these commissioners appointed for the purpose of taking evidence should have their powers enlarged, and should have power to summon witnesses from a distance and guarantee their expenses, and not throw the onus of placing proper evidence before the commission upon the shoulders of private individuals and municipalities interested in the construction of the work.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will draw the attention of the Minister of Railways to the statements made by my hon. friend, but I draw his attention to the fact that this sum is to complete the work now under contract between Lakefield and Balsam Lake. I have no doubt that if it be found necessary, as the hon. gentleman says it is, to make further expenditure in order to make more useful the work which has already opened up a very considerable section of country, measures will be taken to do so.

Mr. LISTER. The work under discussion is no doubt a very important work per se; it is also a very important work as affecting the elections in ten or eleven counties. So long as I can remember, the Trent Valley Canal has been under discussion, and the Government many years ago undertook the construction of the work in question. The work no doubt is important, inasmuch as the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron), and other hon. members have, year after year, in the most earnest manner, urged the speedy completion of the work; we are, therefore, bound to believe, from the statements they have made and from the zeal they have exhibited in urging on the Government the completion of this great work, that it is, as a matter of fact, a great work in the interests of the country at large and particularly in the interests of the people who live in that section. It, therefore, becomes the bounden duty of the Government to complete the work at the earliest possible moment, in order that the benefit of this great work may ensure to the people who live there. I have been in this House six years, and year to year I have heard the hon. gentlemen I have named urge on the Government the completion of the work, and I am amazed to-night on looking at the Estimates to see the excessively small sum which the Government have placed in the Estimates. If I am correctly informed it will cost nearly $15,000,000 to complete this work, yet the Minister of Finance comes down and asks us to vote a paltry $83,000. What will be gained by that? It will be sufficient to dig a hole here and there which will never afterwards be seen. Is it the intention of the Government to trifle in this manner with eleven constituencies? Have they been trifling with them in the past in voting paltry sums? If the work is of the magnitude and importance represented by hon. members, it is the duty of the Government to come down and vote a substantial sum to complete the work at once, in order that the people living along the line of the canal may have the benefit of the work; but instead of doing so, they come down with an estimate for $88,000. The Government have asserted that this work is a public necessity, and such being the case it is the duty of the Government to complete it with all possible speed. Have the Government done so? For over twenty years Parliament has been voting paltry sums year after year, trifling with the people of those counties and sending out engineers just before the elections, spending a few thousands of dollars here and there and wasting the money of the country. It is the duty of the Government to finish the work. If it is important let the Government vote $10,000,000 to complete it, but do not trifle with the people along the line of the canal. It is unworthy of the Government just before an election to do as they have done in the past, namely, when an election was far off, to vote $50,000 or $60,000, but when an election was closed at hand they raised the vote and led the people to hope that the work would be speedily done, and not only so, but they sent engineers into the locality and led the people to believe that they would finish the work rapidly. If the people of those counties had a grain of common sense in their composition they ought to know that the Government had trifled with them and never intended to complete the work, but simply meant to try and bribe the constituencies. If the people were true to themselves they would act on the opinion which they must form of the course of the Government, which was a policy of delay. It is unworthy the Government, and it is their duty to go on with the work. The hon. Minister of Finance says that this work will cost a large sum, but he does not tell the committee how much it will cost to complete it as undertaken.

Mr. SHANLY. Would my hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Lister) vote the item of $15,000,000 if it was in the Estimates?

Mr. LISTER. If it is a work of national importance, it is the duty of the Government to finish it in the speediest way possible, and not to trifle with the constituencies along the line there. My friend from Hastings knows it is an important work, and it is his duty to urge on the Government to vote a substantial sum, and not to trifle with the electors in the way they appear to do here. I hope the people of the country will understand that the Government have no sincere intention of proceeding with this work at all. Grand and magnificent and important as it is, and feasible as it is, because it must be feasible, or else the Government would not be spending the money they are from year to year. Being feasible, and being important in the interests of the whole country, it is the bounden duty of the Government to complete that work without further delay.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am quite certain that whatever doubt the committee may have had before the hon. gentleman spoke as to the prudence of the course which is being taken by the Government, it has all been removed during the time he was on his feet. The Government have undertaken, at an expenditure of some $688,000, to open up 150 miles I suppose - the hon. gentleman is more familiar with the distances there than I am—of a very good line of water communication through a very interesting and important section of the country. Finding that there were very great differences of opinion as to the amount that would be required to carry the work to completion, they have adopted what I think the committee will agree is a very reasonable and wise course before proceeding with any further large expenditures on this. They are endeavoring to find what amount of money would be required to complete this work, and in the meantime to ascertain what amount would be involved in carrying this line of water communication to completion. If there is any truth in the estimate the hon. gentleman has made, that this work would cost $12,000,000 or $15,000,000, I think the committee will see that we are very wise in pausing, and resting on our oars and to a certain extent completing the work we undertook while we ascertained definitely what the expenditure would be. I am sure that the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) has removed, by the statements he has made, any doubts on the minds of members of the committee on both sides of this House, as to the wisdom of the course we have pursued. When the committee reports, of course the Government will take the matter into their very serious consideration, and decide what it is the duty of the Government to do in relation to the cost of the work and the value of it when completed.

Mr. COOK. I am very much surprised to hear the remarks that have fallen from the Minister of Finance. He states there has been a diversity of opinion as to the cost of the work. It is perfectly absurd and ridiculous for a Minister of the Crown to make a statement of that sort, that after nine years and having engineers upon the ground the whole of the time, and spending $600,000, the Minister should get up in his place, and say that there is such a diversity of opinion that the Government are wise in their generation by going slowly on with this work. The thing is perfectly absurd and bears upon the face of it the political complexion that I have already stated it has. How long were the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in discovering a line through to the Pacific Ocean? How long did it take to discover the necessary amount that would be required for canals on the River St. Lawrence? It did not take them very long. I remember very well a deputation that waited upon the Government a few years ago, and the present Minister of Finance then stated that he expected their report immediately, that the work was nearly completed, that they had not quite got the amount that it would fully cost, but that they would soon have it. Now after a lapse of three years the Government state that they are not yet in possession of those facts. I think it is trifling with the country, trifling with this House and trifling with the people upon the line on which this canal is to be built, to make a statement such as the Minister of Finance has made here to-night.

Mr. BARRON. The complaint the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) has made, is that while the Government professed to be always ready and willing to build this canal as a canal, all they are now doing is improving the water connection known as Trent River waters. The hon. gentleman must know that throughout the country they have created the impression, that from the very outset of the discussion on this important public matter, they have always intended to go on with this as a canal.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This portion already done is so much towards the canal.

Mr. BARRON. Yes, but you always professed and always said you were going to build the canal. What the people complain of is that while you have always expressed this, especially before elections, that now you are appointing a commission to find out what you have given the people to understand you have already been in possession of. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that if the commission reports against the feasibility of that canal he will not go on with it? If he does he will deceive the people at large, because the people at large have always believed the Government were sincere in their professions, when they said they would build that canal. In 1872 the Premier himself in a speech made at Peterboro' said a sum had been placed in the Estimates for the purpose of going on with this canal, and the hon. the Minister of Public Works is reported by the hon. member for West Peterboro' (Mr. Stevenson) to have stated that this present summer the work would have been gone on with between Peterboro' and Lakefield as a canal and not as an improvement of the Trent Valley waters. I doubt very much, that the improvement of the Trent waters alone, will justify that great expenditure of $500,000 or $600,000. Unless the work is to be gone on with as a canal from end to end, that work should not be taken up at all. I understood the member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) to complain that the Government have been deceiving the people of the Midland counties interested in the canal before the election, and now all they say that they ever intended was the improvement of the Trent waters.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, no.

Mr. BARRON. Well, all you have done so far is the improvement of those waters. I again ask the Minister of Finance if the commission reports against the feasibility of that canal will he go on with the work? If he does not, I can tell him that the people will be greatly dissatisfied, because they believed him to be in possession years past of the information which he now says he wants to find out by means of this commission.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I never knew until to-night that it would cost $15,000,000. Until the member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) spoke I never knew that it would cost that sum.

An hon. MEMBER. You ought to know.

Mr. BARRON. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that he would take the statement made here to-night by the member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister)?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. BARRON. Wait till I finish. The member for Lambton was merely speaking on supposition at the time he mentioned those figures. The hon. the Minister of Finance has the report of an engineer to say that it will not cost more than $3,000,000. He has the report lately of Mr. Rubidge that it would cost $10,000,000. I can tell him that at a large public meeting held in the town of Lindsay, at which people from all sections of the country along the line of canal were present, they said that if it did cost that they were justified in asking the Government to go on with the expenditure. I believe the Government ought to do so, because they professed all along, and led the people to believe, that they were sincere in their intention to build the canal from end to end. I can tell them that the benefit to the people along that route would justify the expenditure of $10,000,000—an estimate which although made by their own engineer is believed by other engineers to be largely excessive of the amount really required for that purpose.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope so.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Coming from the County of Victoria, I happened to be at that meeting which the hon. gentleman speaks about, and I happen to know something about the people in that part of the country. They were under the impression that that waterway could be built for a reasonable amount of money, and believing that, they were very anxious that the Government should expend that money. But if it is going to cost an immense sum of money, I think those people are patriotic enough to say to the Government: Hold your hand, do not spend the money on that waterway, because there is no necessity for it. We in Canada are not anxious that the Government should spend a large amount of money if there is no adequate return for it. What we want to know is whether the Trent Valley Canal is going to be a great national work. If it is not, then the Government would not be justified in spending a large amount of money on it. If it is to be a great national work, I think the Government are right in having a commission to enquire into it, in order to ascertain, first, whether the waterway is necessary to the people of Canada or not, and in the second place, whether it would pay in competition with railways; and as to that the commission would enquire not only in Canada, but in the United States and in Europe. The Government should use every endeavor in their power to ascertain whether it is really advisable to go on with the scheme or not—not whether they should expend a large amount of money to benefit North Victoria and perhaps other constituencies, but whether it is a proper expenditure considering the whole of Canada; and I think that it is the proper way to look at the matter. If the expenditure on the Trent Canal is for the benefit of the whole of Canada, then the whole of Canada should contribute to it. If it is merely for the purpose of carrying elections in certain districts, it should be condemned. The work should be considered not from the local standpoint of the hon. member for North Victoria, or from any little petty considerations, but from the standpoint of the whole of Canada. If it is a necessary work like the Welland canal or the St. Lawrence Canals, then by all means let the whole money be expended. But if it is only to benefit a few little villages or districts contiguous to the canal, then I say the Government were right to stay their hand and enquire whether the expenditure would be for the benefit of the whole of Canada or not. Although it may be said that a considerable amount has already been uselessly expended, that is no argument for expending more; it is for the Government to ascertain whether the work is for the benefit of the whole country or not. Although I come from the county of Victoria, I would be very sorry to ask the Government to spend $15,000,000 or any such large sum to benefit that part of the country alone. It would be better for the $1,500,000 or $2,000,000 to be lost to the country than to go on and spend a large amount more in building that enormous system. I think the Government have acted wisely in appointing the commission to ascertain whether it is for the benefit of Canada that this work should go on. If they say it is, let it go on; if they find that it is not for the benefit of the whole of Canada, then I say let the matter drop.

Mr. LISTER. I have listened with pleasure to the hon. member for South Victoria (Mr. Hudspeth). He is perfectly familiar with this question from beginning to end; and after listening to his speech, I agree with him that this work is not a national necessity, and that a great deal of the money spent on the work has been uselessly thrown away, and that the Government should stay their hand.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not hear that.

Mr. LISTER. Yes. If the work is a useless work, then the Government should stop this expenditure. From the hon. gentleman's speech, we can be satisfied that this is not a work that should be completed, and such being the case it would be worse than folly—it would be suicidal extravagance—for the Government to go on spending more money upon it. The hon. Minister of Finance stated that my estimated cost of the work was $15,000,000. If I remember rightly, last Session, when this question of the Trent River navigation was before the House, the hon. Minister of Finance was urged to give the House an idea of the cost of these works when completed, and if my memory serves me, the hon. gentleman estimated that it would cost $10,000,000, and knowing the hon. gentleman as well as I do through the press, for I have not an intimate knowledge of him, I thought it quite safe to add 50 per cent. to his estimate. It is not creditable to the Government that the hon. Minister of Finance should have come before Parliament and made the statement that they have spent nearly $600,000 of the money of the people of this country on this work without first satisfying themselves that it was feasible. The hon. gentleman tells us that it is necessary to appoint a commission to make an investigation to see whether this work can be completed or not. I hold that it was the duty of the Government, before they spent a dollar of the public money, to have satisfied themselves that the work was feasible, and that it was in the interest of the country that it should be completed. But I fear that this is just using the money of the people for the purpose of securing a few votes in this House, as the hon. member for South Victoria has told us. If it is used for that purpose, he says, it ought to be stopped. The hon. gentleman is honest, at all events, in that statement, and I am sure the statement he makes finds an echo in the minds of every member of this House. Every hon. gentleman here knows that the Government have been using this expenditure as a lever to carry eight or nine constituencies, and that being the case it should be stopped. I say to those hon. gentlemen in whose interest this expenditure has been made, that they ought to spend their own money to secure their elections, and not the money of the people.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is a very improper doctrine, that people should use their own money to carry elections.

Mr. LISTER. Hon. gentlemen opposite have used their own money, notably the Postmaster General, who says he spent $1,500 of his own money, and I do not know how much of the public money he spent. But if you are going to spend money at elections—and it is improper to spend any—you should spend your own money and not that of the public.

Mr. BARRON. I wish to answer one or two remarks made by the hon. member for South Victoria (Mr. Hudspeth). I was at the meeting at which the hon. gentleman spoke, and he must know that it was the consensus of opinion there that this was a national undertaking. Now, I think, when the hon. gentleman knew that, he should have stated it here to-night, instead of throwing out a doubt and asking whether it was or not a national highway. It would have been better for him, in the interests of his constituents and of the people who came to that meeting, to have stated for the information of the House that they all agreed it was a national undertaking which the Government should build as soon as possible. The hon. gentleman must know that the sum of $10,000,000 was mentioned there as the likely cost of this road. The sum of $3,000,000 was also mentioned, but the sum of $10,000,000 was mentioned as the possible cost of this canal, and he knows that the meeting was unanimous in favor of the canal being built. Why did he not tell the House that that was the feeling of the meeting? Instead of casting doubt on the project, did he not advocate the completion of that work? The hon. gentleman was honest, as the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) has stated, in doubting the way in which these moneys have been expended. They have been expended for election purposes. I disapprove of such expenditure also. The hon. gentleman spoke at that meeting strongly in favor of the completion of this canal, and I was astonished to find him to-night throwing doubts as to the wisdom of going on with the work and as to its being a national undertaking instead of urging its construction with all his power. I have stated before, and I state again, that this matter has been approached by gentlemen on both sides in politics and considered by them irrespective of politics, and I must say that, inasmuch as the Government have received the support in this scheme of gentlemen on both sides of politics, the building of the canal should be gone on with as speedily as possible; and instead of putting in a miserable sum for the completion of the water-way, the Government should put in a large amount for the completion of this work. I reiterate that the Government will not be able to shelter themselves behind the report of this commission, because they were aware, before they appointed the commission, of all the facts necessary to be known before undertaking to build this canal. This is not a new project. Ever since 1837 it has been written and talked about. We have the report of an eminent engineer and the reports of other engineers on this great project, and a vast amount of information given from time to time by engineers, from which the Government could have got sufficient data to go on with this great work.

Mr. HUDSPETH. It do not suppose it interests this House to know what difference may exist between the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Barron) and myself. The meeting to which he refers, which was called for the purpose of asking the county council to vote a thousand dollars for the purposes of the commission, in order to obtain witnesses who would lay before the commission all the facts. It had nothing to do with the desirability or otherwise of the canal. I made no speech in the town of Lindsay in favor of this canal system. What I simply said was that I believed the Government to be honest in their endeavors to ascertain whether this was in the interests of the public and the whole country or not, and I thought the giving of a thousand dollars by the county council of the county of Victoria was a very small matter, and I urged upon them to give this money, which they did. The council of the county of Peterboro granted a similar sum, and other municipalities along the route of the Trent Valley system granted money for the purpose of bringing witnesses to testify before the commission whether the scheme was practicable or desirable or not. The town of Lindsay, the south riding of Victoria county, has a very particular interest in this canal, and if it was seen that the scheme was desirable and in the necessity of the whole country I would be very glad to see it carried out; but what I do say is, that I thought every information that could possibly be brought before the Government ought to be brought, and I thought they had taken the right step in granting this commission, in order to ascertain from all parties, not only in this country but in the countries in Europe, whether the scheme would be practicable or not. As I understood the hon. gentleman, when the scheme was first proposed a relatively small amount of money was asked to build this system, and it gradually grew and grew until it obtained mammoth proportions, and Mr. Rubidge—I have seen his report, but I never read it very carefully—reported to the Government, as I understood, that it would cost a very large amount, something like thirteen or fourteen or fifteen millions of dollars, but in the first place the amount asked for was not nearly half of that amount. Looking at the matter practically, I think the country would pause before spending $15,000,000 upon a scheme which it was supposed in the first place was to cost $3,000,000 or $4,000,000.

Mr. BARRON. Where did the hon. gentleman get his $15,000,000?

Mr. HUDSPETH. It was stated at that meeting.

Mr. BARRON. The estimate which was spoken of as Mr. Rubidge's estimate was $10,000,000.

Mr. HUDSPETH. When we find that a work is going to cost $10,000,000 according to a surveyor's estimate, we may generally come to the conclusion that it will cost 50 per cent. more, and that would be $15,000,000. So far as the county of Victoria is concerned, both north and south, I would like to see a large amount of money expended there so long as that is in the interest of the whole Dominion of Canada, but I will not advocate the expenditure of any money in my own constituency or in any adjoining constituency if it is not in the interest of the whole Dominion. I think the Government acted wisely, after they ascertained that this work was to cost double the amount which was originally estimated, in appointing a commission to find out what the cost would be. The question was raised whether the Government should pay the witnesses who came here to give evidence, and I thought it would open the door to a great many frauds, that persons would come from all parts of the country who would be anxious to give evidence, and that it would be a very difficult question for the Government to solve, to say that all persons who came here to give evidence should be paid their travelling expenses, and I therefore thought it would be better for the county of Victoria to give $1,000, and for the county of Peterboro' to give the same, and for the other constituencies which were interested to contribute towards the expense of getting witnesses before the commission, so as to find in the first place whether that waterway was necessary, and whether it could compete with railways, whether the evidence which could be obtained from the United States or from Europe could be applied to the solution of the difficulty, and whether that water-way would be of advantage to the whole Dominion of Canada. If it could be shown that such a scheme would be in the interest of the whole Dominion, and not simply in the interest of the township of Fenelon or any other township in North Victoria or elsewhere, that would be a different thing, but I think the Government were right in staying their hands and it would be better, after paying $500,000 or any other sum, to drop the whole thing, if the Government found that it was not to be of benefit to the whole Dominion of Canada, than it would be to proceed with it if it were to be useless. That is the position which I took and which I have always taken.

Mr. DAVIN. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the North-West members are entirely in accord with him.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And I suppose will contribute in proportion to what they receive. I think it is seven years since the first vote for this work appeared in our Estimates; that is, the first vote of recent times, because this was projected, I think, about fifty years ago, and about that time a good deal of money was spent upon this project. I would ask the Minister of Finance whether, when in the seventh year the Government proposed to spend $88,000, they have any estimate of the probable cost of this work?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This estimate is to complete the contracts. We were carrying on certain works which were undertaken and which would have the effect of opening up fifty miles or more of very interesting country at a comparatively small cost. It was hoped that the estimates on which the work was originally commenced were reliable: we hoped to obtain a navigation of about 5 feet depth, which would answer for barges, for three million dollars or thereabouts; but, as the work progressed, it was found it would probably entail more expense than was contemplated, and, as my hon. friend is aware, the Government decided a year ago not to proceed with any new works, but simply to complete those which had been undertaken, until they had definitely ascertained, with all the exactitude that they could, what amount would probably be required to complete the work, and what relation that expenditure would have to the value of the work which would probably be done by the canal. This is simply a small amount required to complete the works already undertaken at Fenelon Falls, Buckhorn, Burleigh and Lovesick Canals, lock gates for Burleigh and Lovesick Canals, Young's Point Dam, Lakefield Dam; lock gate, Fenelon Falls; road bridges at Buckhorn, Burleigh and Fenelon Falls, which make a total of $688,000. The amount now asked, $88,000, is to complete the work which is now under contract. When the commission report, the Government will take up the whole question, and next Session they will be prepared to state whether they think they should go on with the work or whether they would not be justified in taking another course.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has not the Government another report?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No. Of course, before the work was undertaken, there were elaborate surveys made, but, as the works progressed, a doubt arose as to whether there had not been a considerable under estimate of the work required, and we thought it wise, before putting any new works under contract, which would entail a large expenditure, to have a careful investigation made by a commission. The report has not yet been received, but no doubt it will be in the hands of the Government before next Session, and then the Government will be in a position to state what their position is.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I remember the report the hon. gentleman refers to, but I understood the reason for the Government issuing the commission was that they had received another report.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And that showed an enormous increase?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wanted to know what the amount was which that indicated?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not able to answer the question now, but the engineer who was in charge of the work and was quite familiar with it did, no doubt, report a very large increase over the original estimate, which led us to suspend any further works in the meantime.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose the hon. gentleman could state the amount approximately?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I cannot. As the hon. gentleman knows, I am acting on behalf of the Minister of Railways and Canals.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will obtain that statement.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will get the statement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know what the total length of this navigation is supposed to be from lake to lake from the point on the Georgian Bay to the Bay of Quinté.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will get that.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The report is printed and before the House and any member can get a copy of it. It shows the whole matter from beginning to end.

Mr. CASEY. If this work is going to cost anything like the amount that has been stated, 10 millions or 15 millions, the amount of $33,000 that is put in the Estimates, is a very trifling sum, and it must be put there purely for electioneering purposes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, it is to complete existing contracts, made long since.

Mr. CSAEY. Not to complete the work?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, to complete all the work that is undertaken.

Mr. CASEY. All the works undertaken, but not to complete the canal?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Oh, no.

Mr. CASEY. It has been stated that the work would cost 15 millions and I have not heard that statement denied. If the work is to cost 15 millions, the item of $88,000 must be purely for electioneering purposes. If it is not to cost 15 millions, we ought to know how much it will cost. This thing has been before the House ever since I have been in the House, and that is 15 years. It has been used as an electioneering dodge at every election. The Minister of Finance has not told us how much it is going to cost, or whether it is ever going to be completed. If he is going to finish navigation between the Bay of Quinté and the Georgian Bay, he ought to tell us how much it is going to cost. This vote commits us to carry on the work to completion. If we pass this vote, we are committed to carry on this scheme of making a system of navigation from the Bay of Quinté to the Georgian Bay, and we ought to know how much it is going to cost.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We shall have to pay existing contracts, even though we were going to stop. This is to complete existing contracts, and must be paid in any case.

Mr. CASEY. But the hon. gentleman has not told us, as he should do, in connection with this vote, how much it is going to cost to complete the system of navigation?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He does not know.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister confesses he does not know how much it is going to cost. Well, of course, I suppose this vote must pass, but I think the hon. Minister of Finance ought to tell us, before it passes, how much it is going to cost to complete the system of navigation.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I wish I could.

Mr. CASEY. Well, perhaps if he had consulted with the engineers of the department, if he had had surveys made, if he had taken the steps that a Minister of Finance ought to have taken before asking this House to vote this sum, he would be able to tell us how much the completion of this system is going to cost.

Ste. Anne's Canal $24,640

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This amount is required to complete the work of deepening the channel for about 4,700 and 100 feet wide at the bottom, and 10 feet deep at low water. This sum is a revote.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How did it come to be delayed? It has been spread over several years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am unable to say what caused the delay, but this is the amount required to complete the work. The amount paid on this contract to 21st December, 1887, was $236,800.

Grenville Canal..... $7,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is a revote. The sum of $7,000 is required for the settlement of a claim connected with the enlargement. The work has all been done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is the contractor?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The contractor was Mr. James Goodwin. It is the estate of the late Mr. Goodwin, and the matter has not been finally settled and is now under arbitration.

Tay Canal..... $78,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This amount is required to settle matters connected with the construction of the canal; the work has been done.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Are the works in connection with the canals always carried out by contract?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Always by public tender and contract.

Mr. CASEY. Who has the contract for the work?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A. F. Manning & Co.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What will be the total cost?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. $358,364.

Culbute Canal $21,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is to settle claims for land damages in connection with lock and retaining dams. It is a revote.

Mr. CASEY. When will this work be finished?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is finished now.

Welland Canal $58,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In regard to the item of $15,000 for weirs and dam at Dunnville, is that for repairing the old dam, or is it for the construction of a new dam?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is required to face the dam with stone and lower the walls of the dam. The work is under contract. The sudden and heavy floods that occasionally take place on Grand River render it desirable that this work should be done.

Chambly Canal $39,200

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this work for the permanent deepening of the canal or simply for cleaning the floor?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is for deepening the upper entrance of the canal between lock No. 1 and the Grand Trunk Railway bridge.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What depth of water is it expected to have?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I suppose nine feet.

Towards overhauling foundation of St. Ours Lock. $50,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe that last year a comparatively small vote was asked, only $5,000; this year the hon. gentleman demands $50,000. It appears as if there had been some error on the part of the department when that first vote was demanded.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No. $5,000 was voted towards overhauling the foundation of the lock in 1887-88, and after this being done it was found that they would have to take down the lock walls on both sides, lower the bottom two feet and rebuild the same in the winter of 1888-89. That is what the vote is now asked for. The probable cost of the whole will be $75,000.

To settle claim of Thomas Stephenson as per agreement $2,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman explain what the agreement was with Mr. Thomas Stephenson by which he gets the sum of $2,000?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The agreement was made between the Government valuator, Mr. Wood, and Mr. Stephenson, for damage caused to his mills and farm by the rising of the water in the Buckhorn Dam.

Mr. BARRON. Were there any other claims besides that one of Mr. Stephenson? It is singular he should have been settled with and no one else.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not aware of there being any other claim, and there is none in the Estimates.

Mr. JONES (Halifax).

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Was it settled by arbitration?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was settled by the valuator.

To build a dam at Bobcaygeon $15,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is to construct a dam there. It will be placed in a better condition than the existing one.

Mr. BARRON. I know that we have a great deal of trouble by reason of the leakage of this dam. Not only is the trouble to lumbermen driving their logs, but I, being connected with navigation of steamboats there, have been put to considerable trouble by the leakage.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is to reconstruct the dam.

Clearing out the channel between Lakesfield and Balsam Lake $8,500

Mr. BARRON. I would like the Finance Minister to draw the attention of the department to the obstruction I mentioned to him some time ago north of Fenelon Falls, between the points mentioned in the vote. If that obstruction is not cleared the entire system would be useless.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I presume that will be included in the work the vote is asked for.

Surveys and Inspections of Railways $15,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see you have added to this $5,000. What do you propose to do with this surveying and inspection? Is it to make a general examination of all the railways that are now under the Dominion authority, because that is a very large job?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This sum is to provide for the expense of inspecting railways to which subsidies have been voted, and also the expense of inspecting railway crossings over highways—all of those points which are required to be carried out by the railway commission.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that last year we expended $1,072 in making a survey of the Prince Edward Island subway. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman has a great deal of useful information to communicate to us touching that subway, and I should like to know what his private—no, I cannot ask what his private opinion is, but what his official opinion is about that work, for which we have spent $1,072 in obtaining information.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid I shall have to refer my hon. friend to the distinguished senator who has taken a great interest in this matter, and who has sanguine views of the future of the work. I believe the surveys have satisfied that hon. gentleman that the construction of this subway is practicable, at a not inordinate cost, considering the nature of the work.

Mr. MITCHELL. I want to state that if the hon. gentleman is going to base the calculations of the Government on what an hon. senator says, who is not responsible to Parliament or the people, for the expenditure of money, I do not believe this House ought to vote any sums based on the opinion of an hon. senator. And I want to say further that I do not think these calculations, which we sometimes hear about things that may be done, ought to be accepted as a basis of action for this committee in our votes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Perhaps it was rather badinage on my part to refer to the very sanguine views that Senator Howlan entertains on this subject; but I may say that a great many gentlemen who have taken up projects that were at first regarded as visionary have gradually worked them into such prominence as to attract considerable attention. The expenditures in connection with the surveys have not been extravagant; and when the Government of Prince Edward Island brought to the notice of Her Majesty's Government the fact of our being obliged to maintain continuous steam communication with Prince Edward Island, and the fact that eminent engineers had stated that this work was quite practicable, the Government thought they would be quite warranted in expending the small sum that has been expended for the purpose of taking soundings and getting information, which Mr. Howlan stated were necessary to obtain definite statements from competent engineers. I am not myself as sanguine as to the practicability of that work as some others may be, but at the same time I do not think it would be wise to hastily come to the conclusion that the thing is impracticable until it is subjected to the examination of able and distinguished engineers.

Mr. MITCHELL. If it does not cost more than $1,000, I have no objection; but when the hon. gentleman speaks of enterprises which were first regarded as visionary, and afterwards proved valuable, I do not know what he points at—perhaps the Chignecto Railway. I know of a case in which Nova Scotia committed as great a folly in constructing the Shubenacadie Canal for conveying ships to the interior of the Province. The scheme was to start at the harbor of Dartmouth, where there was an inclined plane on which the ships were to be hauled, and from which they were to go into the canal. I heard there was just one little yacht that was hauled up there, but beyond that the whole scheme has proved a perfect failure, and a most disastrous failure, and I am afraid the Chignecto Ship Railway will be just the same.

Mr. WELSH. I do not want to kick up a row about this $1,000 for these surveys, but I could have given all the information obtained by them for 10 cents. I know the whole place. If they had only looked at the soundings marked on Bayfield's chart, they would have obtained all the information that this survey has given. I am like the Minister of Finance—I am not going to pronounce on this scheme as not being feasible, but I have my own opinion on the matter. The hon. senator at the other end of the building, who has taken a great interest in this matter, and gone to a great deal of trouble over it, proposes that the tunnel should consist of an iron tube. I asked him if anything of this kind had been attempted in any other part of the world. He said, yes, in England. I made some enquiries and I found that there was one in operation under the Thames in London, near London bridge, and I believe they are constructing one or two more in England.

Building on Wellington-street. $100,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is a revote of $100,000 from last year. This will be required to go on with the work this year, and we expect it will be completed by the end of the year. It will require an additional sum of $80,000 next year to complete, and the total amount, including the land, will be $707,000.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Last year the hon. gentleman said the cost would not exceed $600,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That did not include the site, nor the furniture and so on.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The enquiry was made last year, and the hon. gentleman said the total cost would be $600,000. Now he says it is $700,000, and I suppose that is only an estimate, for there will probably be extras, which he is not in a position to give exactly.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will give the details, if the hon. gentleman wishes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many officials will this accommodate?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The intention is to put in the basement the archives. On the first floor, we will put the Department of the Interior. On the second floor, the Department of Agriculture and Statistics. On the third floor, the Department of Indian Affairs, and a portion of that floor will be vacant, but will be used for some other department. The 4th floor under the attics will be for the model rooms. The rooms vacated in the other buildings will give more rooms to the other departments where the offices are very crowded.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman can avoid crowding the offices by not appointing so many clerks. I suppose when this new building is filled with clerks there will be a demand for another building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman knows that the eastern and western blocks were built, not for the wants of Confederation but for the two Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, and the only addition to those was the addition made under the Government of Mr. Mackenzie in the western block. Since Confederation the number of departments and officers have increased considerably, and we had to find room elsewhere for many of them; for example, we had to put the Department of Indian Affairs in another building, and there is another building where we had to put some of the Post Office clerks. As soon as the new building is completed, the places which have been rented will be given up.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). This explanation is all very well, but, if you consider the extent of the accommodation required for the conducting of a large business, such as exist in many parts of the world, a business more extensive than that under the direction of the Government, this expenditure is perfectly absurd. I have no doubt anyone would undertake by contract to run all these departments for fifty per cent. less than they now cost.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What plan has the hon. gentleman adopted in laying out this building? Has he adopted the system of long rooms?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, there will be two long rooms, where the bulk of the clerks can be kept under supervision.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It does appear to me that this amount of $707,000 is an enormous sum to pay for that building. Where does the hon. gentleman get the stone from for that building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was obtained from New Brunswick.

Mr. MITCHELL. And it is a very good selection too. It comes from the town in which I was born, and it is the best stone on the continent. I am giving it a free advertisement now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I believe the stone is very good, as far as I am a judge, but it is a long distance to bring stone from.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is no further than I came myself.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman can move himself, which is more than these ponderous masses can do. I should like to know the cost of transport of this stone from Miramichi here.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We asked for tenders for the work, and we took the lowest tender.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Who is the contractor?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Mr. Charlebois.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A particular friend of the Minister of Finance, I believe.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The contractor was bound to furnish the stone according to a sample which was exhibited for that purpose. The chief engineer had to have the quarries examined in order to see whether there was enough stone in a quarry for that building to prevent the risk of the stone coming to an end in that quarry, and thus, perhaps, having two different colors of stone in the building. Finally this stone was found to be suitable and good stone, and those who understand these matters—of course I am only a layman in matters of this kind—all say that the stone which has been selected is a very good one, and the hon. gentleman must see from the appearance of the building that it is a very good one.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Was not the original advertisement for stone which was to come from the county of Albert?

Mr. COCKBURN. So favorable has been the impression created by the appearance of this stone that a deputation came from the rising city of Hamilton to inspect it and see if it would not be the best for them to use in building their court house, and the result was that they decided to import that stone all the way to Hamilton for the purpose of erecting their court house.

Mr. BROWN. My hon. friend is wrong in one point. It was not the court house, but the city of Hamilton is putting up a new city hall at a cost of $150,000, and after examining ten or fifteen specimens of stone from all parts of the Dominion, the experts decided that this was the best stone that could be obtained, and consequently we are putting up our building from that stone.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What did the Government charge the contractor for bringing that stone over the Intercolonial Railway?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot state the amount. It was paid by the contractor.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). But it was paid to the Government.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was paid to the Railway Department.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Was it a special rate that was made?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think so. I will enquire about it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It certainly appears to me that this amount of $707,000 is an enormous sum to pay for that building, and it seems clear that a very large extra cost was incurred by the contractors having to bring that stone up here from Miramichi. I should have thought that there were other qualities of stone which could have been found and could have been laid down very much cheaper, though, of course, there may be qualities in this stone which might pay for the difference in the cost of transport. I should like the Minister to find out what was paid to the Government for bringing this stone up here.

Mr. MITCHELL. I feel it due to my county to give the hon. gentleman the information for which he asks. They did not select the stone in that county until they had failed in obtaining it in the Province of Quebec and also in Albert county, and until they found that there was not enough in any other part of the county of the same quality with which to complete that building. They had, therefore, to fall back upon this county, and I want again to advertise the stone which is to be found there which, like the member for the county, is of very good quality.

An hon. MEMBER. Very gritty.

Mr. MITCHELL. Not so gritty as you are, but a little inclined that way. There is enough stone there to build every public and private edifice in the Dominion of Canada.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. COOK. They have very good stone in the county of Peel. In the city of Toronto they are using the stone from that county in their public buildings, and I think it is quite equal to the stone from the Province of New Brunswick.

Mr. BROWN. Nothing like it.

Mr. COOK. I should like to hear from the member for Peel on this question.

Port Arthur Harbor and Kaministiquia River..... $125,700

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The sums which have been expended before were divided. There was an amount of $94,000 for the Kaministiquia River, and $223,000 for the Port Arthur breakwaters and matters of that kind. This sum of $125,700 is to make provision for works for the protection of the ships at Port Arthur and in the Kaministiquia River. We have to continue the deepening of the River Kaministiquia, that is to say, we want to have a second cut in order to widen the channel and to make the navigation as perfect as possible.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How far does the hon. gentleman say he will carry the piers at Port Arthur?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is 1,600 feet, more or less.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that straight out seaward or is it in the form of an L.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is a protection from the north-east, I should say; and by the reports I have, when the extension is built, then the harbor will be the safest we have on all the lakes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It will be purely artificial, will it not?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, artificial to that extent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If I remember right, the harbor is protected on the north-east by Thunder Cape.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, and in the other direction in order to form the large basin.

Mr. COOK. What proportion of this is for the Kaministiquia?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We have, out of the vote of last year, $45,000, on the 1st December last which will go to pay a portion of the contract for the extension of the pier or breakwater at Port Arthur. The total amount for the River Kaministiquia, if we complete all the works, will be $125,000. Out of that, we expect to take, probably, $30,000 for this year.

Cape Tormentine Harbor..... $85,000

Mr. WELSH. Before that passes I want to say a word. We have got very good harbors in Prince Edward Island, we have a very good harbor at Summerside, and a very good harbor at Charlottetown; and on the opposite side, on the New Brunswick shore, there is a good harbor at Shediac. In Nova Scotia there is a good harbor at Pictou, a good harbor at Georgetown and a good harbor at Pugwash, which is the other side of Cape Tormentine. It seems the Government has undertaken to fight against nature and to build unnatural harbors. Now, at the very place where they are building this breakwater navigation is more difficult than anywhere else in the gulf. They can complete a harbor for steamers drawing, perhaps, 12 feet of water, where they are going to complete the pier. It is the only place where they are going to complete a pier, but on the other side it seems to me they are going to make an artificial harbor on the Cape Traverse side. I have grave doubts whether they will ever make a proper harbor there; if they do, it will be at great expense. Now, if you are at all interested in Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, take a map of Prince Edward Island and just look at its situation, and then look at the situation of Shediac and at Cape Tormentine, Pugwash and Pictou, on the other side, and ask yourself what occasion was there for all this expenditure being made in building artificial harbors? What is the call for it? If they could be used for winter traffic, I would not say one word. If there was any possibility that a steamship could be made that would keep up winter communication between these places, I would not say one word against it. I suppose the Government is committed to this matter, and it is useless to say anything about it; but had I been consulted in the first place, I would have advised the Government to save the money and lay it out where it can be of some use to the people of Prince Edward Island. If one-half of this money were applied to making good harbors and improving the good harbors we have around the island, it would do much more good. However, as the Government is committed to it, I am not going to say anything more.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think we should have some explanation with reference to this vote. As has been stated by my hon. friend, who has just resumed his seat, all along the coast of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, we have numerous safe harbors, and the Government now, having so much money to dispose of, are going to create an artificial harbor or pier there, in connection with the railway owned or presided over by the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood), or in which he is interested. I presume, if we could get at the bottom of the transaction, the raison d'être for the transaction is that the hon. member for Westmoreland and another hon. gentleman in the other branch of the legislature, having a short piece of railway running from the Aulac Junction, or one of the junctions there, down to this point, to assist these very enterprising gentlemen, the Government step forward now and put this large sum of money in the Estimates. It is not that the country requires it, it is not that New Brunswick requires it, it is not that Prince Edward Island requires it, but the hon. member for Westmoreland and his associates and their railway require it, and the Government are giving it to them.

Mr. WELSH. I notice here that it is a revote of $35,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; the appropriation is $100,000.

Mr. WELSH. And $15,000 has been paid?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What is the length of the pier?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. 1,200 feet. The total probable cost will be $185,000.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What traffic is it intended to accommodate?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is the communication with the terminus on the New Brunswick side of the ferry.

Mr. KIRK. Do you mean it is in the interest of Prince Edward Island?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. KIRK. It appears to me in that case the hon. gentlemen who represent Prince Edward Island are not in favor of the expenditure of the money. I do not see why the Government should expend it, especially in face of the fact that in Nova Scotia we have numerous places where the people are suffering for the want of the expenditure of a little money.

Mr. WELSH. We are suffering in Prince Edward Island very much for the want of some money to improve our piers, our wharves and harbors; but I never heard of any one in Prince Edward Island agitating for this communication. As I said before, if the Finance Minister will take up the map of Prince Edward Island and a map of New Scotia and New Brunswick, and then look at the harbors opposite to each other along the shore, he will see that there is no necessity for building these artificial harbors. Even suppose you build this pier and this harbor at Cape Tormentine, then you have to build a pier and harbor at Cape Traverse, which is exposed to the north-east gale, and as fast as they build a wharf there, it will fill up with sand, you will have to build a breakwater and lay out an immense sum of money at Cape Traverse, before you can make this communication. If you have a pier built and a harbor on both sides, what is the advantage of it? It may benefit people on the centre part of the island. The Government are going to a great expense in these visionary schemes. They are entailing a heavy cost on the country, and if there is any benefit from it—I am not going to crack up the railway—it will benefit a certain number of people and the Sackville railway and people about Baie Verte. But as regards a general benefit to the people of Prince Edward Island, I do not think they have ever applied for it, but I am not going to object to it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If this work were not under contract I would recommend the Minister of Public Works to strike it from the Estimates. What is the fact? We have an hon. gentleman pretending to represent Queen's, P. E. I., standing up in this House denouncing a railway to Cape Tormentine and supporting the insinuations of the hon. member for Halifax.

Mr. WELSH. I rise to a point of order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will find that in the words he has just uttered he has attacked this railway running up to Cape Tormentine and giving countenance to the insinuation thrown out by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), that the road was built in the interests of the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) and was not required, that it is a waste of public money. What is the fact? The fact is that every person in Prince Edward Island, every member from Prince Edward Island, petitioned the Government to build the railway to Cape Tormentine. The leader of the late Government instituted elaborate surveys at various points. He took up the question of communication with the island as a question of vital importance, as every one knows it was under the arrangement we made with Prince Edward Island when Prince Edward Island came into the union, to do everything we could to perfect communication by steam with the island. When the hon. member for East York was leading the Government he appointed an able engineer and spent a large sum of public money in ascertaining how he could best meet the wishes of the members for Prince Edward Island, who unanimously petitioned for the construction of a road to Cape Tormentine as a project vital to the island; they pointed out that for six months in the year they had no means of communicating with the island except by Cape Tormentine and when they got to that point there were twenty or thirty miles to be travelled with sleighs through storms in order to obtain communication with the Intercolonial Railway. The report of the engineer, after examining all the localities and seeking to meet the views and needs of the island, was that it was absolutely necessary to have a railway constructed to Cape Tormentine, and tonight the Government is denounced for assisting in the construction of that railway, which we were told was absolutely necessary for the comfort and convenience of all the people of the island; I say the Government are attacked not only for assisting in the construction of that work shown to be necessary, but the report of the engineer appointed by the late Government, adopted as that report was by the present Government, has been carried out and everything done in connection with it, yet we are attacked to-night. I say if the work is not under contract I would ask my hon. friend to strike out the estimate for a work that no private company would do. The hon. gentleman is right in saying that there is no natural harbor at that point of communication; but the railway requires to have its terminus there, because for six months in the year it is the only point at which the inhabitants of the island can communicate with the mainland. We have a right to expect different treatment from those for whom public money is being expended to promote their comfort and convenience. The Government acting in response to the invitation of all members of the island acted as I here said and yet this statement is made by the hon. member for Queen's in the House and sent broadcast throughout the country, at a time when they are carrying out the plans initiated by the late Government and are accomplishing that which the people of Prince Edward Island unanimously demanded, that we are expending public money for political purposes and to serve the interests of a member of this House. There is no member of this House to whom the people of Prince Edward Island are more indebted than the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood). Why? Because he has embarked his own money in constructing this road that conduces to the comfort and convenience and best interests of that island, and instead of being assailed for what he has done he should be commended, and the people should thank him and thank the Government for the assistance they were giving to do that which no private company could do, the road being carried to that point so as to afford communication in summer as well as in winter.

Mr. WELSH. I never objected to those railways. I approve of the railway to Cape Tormentine. No man suffered more before the railways were built than I did. Why did the hon. gentleman pick me up in this way? I was talking about piers.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Because you attacked the railways.

Mr. WELSH. I did not. I said the people would benefit by it—the people at Baie Verte would benefit by it—but I said if we built piers and ran a steamer through the winter to keep up continuous communication, I would approve of that more. If there is one place where you cannot run a steamer near shore it was there. In summer we have plenty of communication; the trouble is in winter. What good will a pier be in a place when a steamer cannot get within three miles of it? I say it is a necessity to have the railway to Tormentine and I am proud of the work the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) has done in building that road from Sackville to the Cape and the Government will have to take that road off the hon. gentleman's hands and run it as a Government work. The Minister of Finance must not pick me up and misrepresent me as running down the railway for which we have been petitioning. I approve of them—I never did anything else. Why did the hon. gentleman impute these motives to me? I never said anything of the kind about railways, and I do not want any words put in my mouth that I did not say. I spoke of piers, and of an artificial harbor that was useless in the winter. I did not speak of railways that were useless in the winter. I know the benefit of them and approve of them. The Government adopted their plan; let them try it and see whether it will satisfy the people of the island. As to railways I am astonished at what the Finance Minister says; he must have misunderstood what I said.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can assure the hon. gentleman that if the reporter took down his words he will find that my statement is correct, although he may not have considered that he attacked the railways as well as the piers.

Mr. WELSH. The words I used were these: You take a map of the island, and take the harbors of the island and the harbors of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. They are a great benefit to the island. You must keep up communication between Summerside and Shediac. It would be accommodation, I said, for the railways. Will it not be for their benefit? Of course it will. Will it not be for the benefit of the people living in the vicinity of the railroad? Will it not be for the benefit of the people of Cape Traverse? Of course it will. That is what I said, and that is what you will find out I did say. However, we will have a look at it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not pretend to say anything about the railroads, because I am not quite familiar with the country. I think I recollect that in the time of Mr. Mackenzie, we came to the conclusion that the hon. gentleman has come to, that steam communication on that strait eight miles wide was practically impossible.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am afraid that is the case. I do not think the Northern Light, nor any other steamer has ever succeeded in making a passage there in winter.

Mr. WELSH. No one ever tried her.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What I mean to say is that in our time, as well as the hon. gentleman's time, it was conceded that you cannot keep up steam connection across that strait eight miles wide.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid not in winter.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In summer I understand that was a matter of very little moment.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In summer the steamer will not require an hour to make the communication between railway and railway. There is a railway from Charlottetown to Cape Traverse, and a railway from Cape Traverse to the Intercolonial. There is a ferry of nine miles between the two and in summer it is perfectly practicable, in such a manner as my hon. friend asked the House to provide, that Prince Edward Island will be connected with the mainland by half an hour's ferry.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It has never been used or attempted to be used as a communication during the summer time.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Because there have been no facilities.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Why should we build an artificial harbor when a man can go just as well to Shediac. If he wants to go to Montreal or west, he joins the Intercolonial at Shediac and at the other end he goes by Charlottetown and Pictou. He can go from those points much more conveniently than he can from Cape Tormentine. Why should we spend $185,000 on a pier there? It seems to me that it is a waste of money. My hon. friend in front of me speaks of Cape Traverse, which he knows very well, and he says if you carry out a corresponding work there, it must involve a large sum of money.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I must differ with my colleagues on this matter. It has been the object of the people of Prince Edward Island to make communication between the island and the mainland as connected as possible. In the winter season we have to run our ice boats at this very place. It is one of the objects we have in contemplation that a summer ferry be made between those two piers, and that our mails and passengers will cross there and not between Shediac and Charlottetown. This is a hope we have been looking to, and for that reason I agree with the hon. Minister in this regard. I also approve of the expenditure that is made on the two railways. It is only an act of justice to Prince Edward Island to make this expenditure, and they cannot be completed unless we have a summer ferry here. I see now that it is advertised in some of the western papers that a steamer runs across the straits of Mackinaw through ice, which is quite as difficult to get through as the ice between Cape Traverse and Cape Tormentine.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Well, we do not know what science and engineering skill may do in the future, and it may yet come that we will have winter communication.

Mr. WELSH. It seems to me that my hon. friend from King's (Mr. Robertson) has misunderstood me. I said I was not going to be against this vote, and I will support it. I want to agree with my hon. friend that this ferry will shorten the sea voyage from three hours to one hour.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Or half an hour.

Mr. WELSH. Well, we will say an hour. If you leave Charlottetown in the morning and go by Pictou or Shediac you just arrive at St. John or Halifax the same time as you will by this route. You have a shorter sea route, but you have a longer railway. I will certainly support this vote, as the people of Prince Edward Island do not get so much from the Government and when we do get anything like this I am not fool enough to vote against it. I will support it of course.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It just comes to what I stated at the beginning, that this road was built by enterprising gentlemen from subsidies from this House and the Local Legislature.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). The road was undertaken and built to a considerable extent before any Dominion subsidy was given.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That does not make any difference.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I was living in Sackville at the time the road was undertaken. It was one of the few roads in New Brunswick in which a large amount of private capital was invested, and years went by before the Dominion subsidy was obtained for that road. The hon. gentleman is unjust to the member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) in what he says.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I do not wish to be unjust to the member for Westmoreland. The reason given by the member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) for carrying out the idea that they were not entitled to a subsidy after they built the road —

An hon. MEMBER. They had to finish the road.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Well, the road was under way, and a person has no right to come to this House and ask for a subsidy when a road is undertaken and contracted for. A subsidy is only to start a road. This road was undertaken and built, and I have no doubt it was managed successfully by those gentlemen and was useful to the locality. It was useful as a mean of communication between Prince Edward Island, Cape Traverse, and Cape Tormentine in the winter season, but the Government were not required to build a pier at a cost of $185,000 for the benefit of that road; because this work is for the benefit of that road and those connected with it. What is this money all expended for? Under the most favorable circumstances to shorten the passage between the island and the provinces two hours, and as has been mentioned by my hon. friend from St. John persons cannot reach St. John or Halifax any quicker than by the other route. It does seem a most ridiculous waste of public money.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The people of Prince Edward Island were put to a great deal of trouble on account of the shiftings we had between the east and west end of the island, and the consequent delay of the mails. If we can succeed in having the one road for winter and summer it will be a great advantage to Prince Edward Island.

Mr. WELSH. Certainly I agree with the hon. member for King's (Mr. Robertson) in that.

Public Buildings, Nova Scotia..... $31,000

Mr. EISENHAEUER. It will be remembered by the hon. Minister that provision was made two years ago for a public building at Lunenburg, while provision was made for one at Annapolis only a year ago; and yet I find a further appropriation of $19,500 for the latter, while no appropriation is made for a building at Lunenburg. I had an interview with the hon. Minister about this matter, and he made a promise that he would recommend an appropriation, but I find that no appropriation has been made. The late member (Mr. Kaulbach) during the election campaign, gave the people to understand that he had the solemn pledges of the Minister of Public Works and of the Government that a further sum would be voted the following year, and the building erected; but if that was the case, they have gone back on their promise. I had some conversation about this matter with the hon. Postmaster General, and he seemed to lay down the principle that there was not sufficient money collected at Lunenburg to warrant the Government in erecting a building there. But I find that the net post office receipts at Annapolis are $864, and the net post office receipts at Lunenburg, $846. The receipts from customs at Lunenburg last year were $14,000, while at Annapolis the receipts were only about $8,000. I also find an appropriation for Sydney post office, where the net receipts amount to $895, very little more than the net receipts at Lunenburg. I think it must be evident to every hon. member that that is not the reason why there is no appropriation this year, and I think the Government should give me some reason that I can give to my constituents why they have overlooked this matter. Are we to take it that the reason is that which was given by the hon. Finance Minister last Session in regard to the railway subsidy, when he said that the people did not deserve any subsidy, because they had not sent Mr. Kaulbach back?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not say that.

Mr. EISENHAEUER. I would like the hon. Minister to give some reason why he left this item out.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman says he came and spoke to me about a public building at Lunenburg. I think he is perfectly right. I recollect that he came to me, and we had a pleasant talk together about the matter, and I told him what he had just stated, that I would submit the matter to my colleagues. I did so, and the result is what we see here. I cannot say more than that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think I can tell more about it; I have been there myself, and I can tell how it is. I can tell the hon. member for Lunenburg that he will be very fortunate if he gets anything; but if he turns around and supports the Administration for a while, he will probably get something.

Mr. LISTER. That is a very disgraceful state of affairs. There is no question that the Government are using the patronage which they have in the way of building post offices and customs houses, merely for the purpose of bribing and debauching the electors of this country. When we are told that the town of Annapolis has public buildings which it will cost almost as much as the total revenue of the place to keep and take care of; when we are told that Cayuga, in the county of Haldimand, had a vote in the Estimates for public buildings previous to the last election there; when we are told that the town of Strathroy previous to the last election, for the purpose of carrying the constituency for Mr. Roome, had dangling before it the promise of a building, and hints as to where the site would be selected, as to what people should receive the contracts, and so on—I say it is disgraceful on the part of the Government. These public buildings should be given to places entitled to receive them from the extent of the business done. There should be some principle laid down, which would be binding on the Government to give these public buildings to towns of a certain population, or to towns whose post offices or customs house yield a specified revenue. In doing that, you would be doing what is fair to the whole community. But to give a post office to a town, simply because the county has sent a representative to support the Government, as an inducement to the people to swerve from their political allegiance and support the Government, is disgraceful in the extreme; it is debauching the electors, and doing an injury to the people of this country that is inconceivable. In the Provinces of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and other Provinces of the Dominion, we find towns with a comparatively small number of inhabitants receiving public buildings, while large towns in the western Provinces have received no consideration at all, simply because the counties in which they are situated are true to their political faith, and send gentlemen here to oppose the Government of the day. Before the election, the Government put in the Estimates a sum for the purchase of a site for a post office in the town of Goderich, and the people were given to understand that if they would support the Government they would receive public aid. They did support the Government, and the post office is going on; but if the late representative had been in the House, nothing of the kind would have been done. If it was not entitled to it in 1882, it was not entitled to it in 1887: and the only conclusion is that the Government are using these votes for the purpose of buying up the constituencies and debauching the people.

Mr. RYKERT. Very easily bought.

Mr. LISTER. You know as well as I do that the votes for these public buildings are dangled before the electors for that purpose. We know that in Haldimand the great issue was whether a bridge would be built or not. The hon. gentleman who now represents that county told the people that if he was elected they would get that bridge. He was elected, and we find a vote in the Estimates for the bridge. I am not saying that it is not wanted; but I say it is unfair and improper on the part of the Government to refuse to give public advantages of that kind if they are in the public interest. The public interest should be the only ground upon which those votes are given. The money is not yours to spend, it is not yours to bribe the country with. It is mine as much as yours, and if the town in which I, or any other hon. gentleman lives is entitled to a public building, it should have that building regardless altogether of the political complexion of the people.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I understand the Government purchased the land in the town of Lunenburg for a public building. If they did not intend to put up a public building there, that was an unnecessary expenditure. It is a small piece of business, simply because the people of Lunenburg exercised the right of returning a member to this Parliament to represent their views, that they should be treated in this way and that the Government should take this revenge. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to think, and seem to act as if the money and the country belonged to them, and not as if they had merely the disposal of it in the interests of the people. I have nothing to say against Annapolis, but, on the contrary, I am glad that it will receive this building. I may mention, however, that Lunenburg is also an important town. The number of vessels that entered the port of Annapolis and departed from it last year were 71 and the tonnage 16,110. The number of vessels leaving the port of Lunenburg was 327 and the tonnage 40,614. I merely mention this to show that Lunenburg is a much more important place than Annapolis; and I say nothing against Annapolis getting its proportion, but while the Government are giving that to Annapolis they should treat Lunenburg with equal justice. The Government should deal with public matters in a public spirit and not in a narrow spirit that now characterises their dealings.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). A stranger would infer from what has been said that Annapolis is a very insignificant place compared with Lunenburg. But we have vessels leaving Annapolis for all parts of the world: steamers running to London loaded with freight, vessels going to the West Indies and all parts of the world, so that Annapolis is not such a very insignificant portion of Nova Scotia.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). No one ever said anything against Annapolis, but I was only arguing that if Annapolis—

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). You say it by inference, and I do not wish that that inference should go on public record uncontradicted.

Mr. LAURIER. No one complains of the grant made to Annapolis, but my hon. friend asks why a similar favor is not extended to Lunenburg, which is on a par with Annapolis. One is granted a public building and the other is refused, although in the latter the land was bought for that purpose. My hon. friend asked the Minister of Public Works what the reason was, and the hon. the Minister gave an answer which was simply trifling with the House, and the conclusion we must come to is that there is no rule for the granting of money for public buildings except the desire to secure political support. There ought to be some uniform rule adopted which would apply to all places, whether they return Conservative or Liberal. The hon. gentleman who represents Shelburne (Gen. Lauric) stated, in reply to some strictures, that if a supporter of the Ministry were returned the demands of the people would be reasonably treated. We must infer from that that, if not, their demands would not be reasonably treated. We should have some public rule which would apply in all cases, and this matter should not be left to the caprice of the Government and be made an instrument to reward a political supporter.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would ask the Minister of Public Works whether or not this amount was actually paid? I remember the appropriation to which the hon. gentleman referred, but was the land bought for the post office at Lunenburg?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not remember at this moment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am under the impression that the lot was bought.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. Minister stated across the House that the lot was bought, and he gave the name of the person from whom it was bought.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman will see, where he undertakes to buy a piece of land for a public work, the members of this House have a right to enquire why the work is not gone on with, and he will see that the Ministry will lie under a very grave imputation, if they have bought a piece of land for that purpose, and then have taken no further steps in regard to the building. One of two conclusions must be adopted, either that they made the purchase without any ground for making it, and in that case it was a gross waste of the public money, or that, when they bought it, they intended to put a public building upon it. What is the reason why they have not? The hon. Minister did not give any reason at all for that.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I complied with the promise I made to the hon. gentleman to submit this matter to my colleagues. I did so, and the result is what we see, that there is no vote for Lunenburg. I may add that, this year as in other years, all the demands or petitions which have been made to me for public works have been laid before my colleagues, together with the amounts that would be required to carry them out; but that is no reason why, because I lay these matters before them, they should be supposed to assent to these demands or requests. When the estimates which I laid before my colleagues came out of the Privy Council, I must say that this list was much shorter than it was when it went in; and that did not apply to one county or another; to counties represented by Liberals more than those represented by Conservatives. I think if the leader of the Opposition had looked at the Supplementary Estimates he might have seen there a city not represented by a Conservative, but by a Liberal, the city of St. Hyacinthe, and he would have seen that we have placed a sum of money in the Estimates to buy a site there and to go on with the work, and then there is also the county of Laprairie represented by a Liberal, and there is another sum of money for a public building there. The Privy Council thought that these two places were entitled to their attention, and so they put in those votes. I think that the imputation made by the hon. gentleman against the Government on that head is not well founded. In this case, as in many other cases, the Council have not been able to recommend this year the vote of large sums of money such as I and they would have wished to vote, if the finances of the country would have allowed it, but we could not do it. We have curtailed the expenditure very largely, and I was very sorry that we had to do it. I knew that a large number of these matters which we were asked to vote money for were very useful, but we had to postpone them.

Mr. LAURIER. I congratulate the hon. gentleman on the fact, as he states, that two counties which are represented by Liberals are receiving some share of the favors of the Government. I only regret that I cannot congratulate the hon. gentleman further, in regard to Lunenburg.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is a beginning.

Mr. LAURIER. You have already, for two years or more, had this land in your possession. You do not intend to seed it or plant it, I suppose. I understand from the hon. gentleman that he submitted this matter to his colleagues. I can only regret that his colleagues did not share in the same sense of justice.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman said he could not state from whom the land was bought. I may tell him that, as I am told, it was bought from Mrs. Creighton, the aunt of Mr. Kaulbach, the late member, at double the value.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is very unfair. The hon. gentleman knows that this question comes up without any notice. He should have told me that he would bring the matter before the House, and then I would have had the data before me, but it is an impossibility for me to answer every complaint of that kind without knowing anything about it and no papers to guide me.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman says that the list which he submitted to the Privy Council was very much curtailed. It seems to me a rather singular coincidence that all the votes which are given to the Province of Nova Scotia are given to the constituencies represented by Conservatives, except a small amount for the city of Halifax which is necessary in regard to the public buildings, and that I am sure is not put there on my account. Under the head of harbors and rivers in Nova Scotia, we find that all the sums of money which are voted there, with the exception of $1,000 for Yarmouth, which is voted for the removal of wrecks and matters of that kind, are given to the counties which are represented by friends of the Administration, and not a cent is given to counties represented by Liberal members. Take the county of Guysborough, which has long been true to its Liberal principles, and I hope will long continue to be true to them, and there has not been a cent of public money spent there for I do not know how many years.

Mr. KIRK. For fifteen years, I suppose—six years any way.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). No public money has been spent there for a long time, and that notwithstanding the fact that a county like that requires harbors and piers as much as any other county. It will hardly do for the Minister of Public Works to say that there is no attempt at fairness of discussion in this matter, because the public accounts show that we have no expenditure made in our Liberal counties, although we pay to the revenue as much as other counties do.

Mr. KIRK. I would like to know on what principle the Government appropriate moneys for public buildings. I cannot see where they have any principle at all. In the Province of Nova Scotia I find some counties represented by supporters of the Government that have public buildings in two or three separate towns, while there are other counties and other towns which have as large business, as large a population as they have that have no public buildings at all, and in which there has not been a dollar of public money expended for the last six years. I want to know if that is fair. It is true, as the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) has said, that the Government expend the money entirely in the interest of their party and not in the interests of the people. That is true, and it is also true that in the whole of the Estimates which have been submitted to Parliament this year, there is not a dollar appropriated for counties in Nova Scotia represented by Liberal members in this House. Why is that? Why should it be that these counties should be deprived of their rights, because they think it proper to exercise them as free men in electing whom they please to represent them in this Parliament? If there is not something wrong in such a state of affairs, I do not know what wrong is. The county of Guysboro' that I have the honor to represent in this House has applied for several public works. They have applied for aid for the construction of a public building in the town of Guysboro' and they have been pressing that application, but not a dollar has ever been voted for that purpose. Guysboro' is just as much entitled to a public building as the town of Annapolis, or the town of North Sydney, or the town of South Sydney, or any other towns that have public buildings. Why should it be overlooked? Then, again, the county of Guysboro' has petitioned year after year for a small amount for one particular breakwater in New Harbor; they have been pressing that year after year, the people have subscribed money to assist in building the breakwater, but not a dollar will the Government give. I want to know why it is, or upon what principle the Government have appropriated the money belonging to the whole people? Is it because of the political necessities of the Government, or of the wants of the public? I believe it is in the political interest of the Government, and not in the public interest at all.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). South Sydney post office, custom house, &c., $10,000, will that finish?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The chief architect tells me that the probable cost of the building will be about $20,000.

Public buildings, New Brunswick,..... $17,900

Mr. ELLIS. Dalhousie post office, $12,000, I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works what the Dalhousie post office is to cost?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The site and the construction of the building will be $19,000.

Mr. ELLIS. Dalhousie is highly favored. It gets $17,000 for a branch railway that was completed some time ago. Now, there are 900 people in the town of Dalhousie who are served by the post office, and the whole parish takes in probably 2,200 or 2,300 people. It seems to me to be a very expensive post office for Dalhousie.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2.10 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 16th May, 1888.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

REPRESENTATION OF MONTMAGNY.

Mr. LAURIER. I will call the attention of the House to the petition presented some time ago by the hon. member for Provencher with reference to the hon. member for Montmagny.

Mr. ROYAL. Dropped.

DIVORCE CASES.

Mr. SMALL moved that the second part of rule 65 be suspended in regard to the following Bills from the Senate: No. 128, for the relief of Eleonora Tudor; No. 129, for the relief of Andrew M. Irving; and No. 130, for the relief of Catherine Morrison, and that the said Bills be placed on the Orders of this day for consideration in Committee of the whole House at the usual hour for the consideration of Private Bills.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No doubt the motion will be carried on division, but I suggest that the Bills should be put on the Order to-morrow, so that the members of the House may know what is coming up. The Clerk of the House tells us that the Order of the Day to-morrow does not include Private Bills after 8 o'clock, but I suppose we might have the Order of the Day changed for to-morrow. In any case, there is Friday, and there is plenty of time. I think my hon. friend had better change his motion to to-morrow.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It will have to be made a special Order for to-morrow.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is still Friday and Saturday, and at the end of the Session the hon. gentleman knows that the Rules are not much in the way.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Unless this is made a special Order for to-morrow, it will not appear on the paper to-morrow, but will go over until Friday.

Mr. EDGAR. And then any member objecting could prevent its going through.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes.

Mr. SMALL. I move that this be made a special Order for to-morrow at 8 o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

THE LABOR COMMISSION.

Mr. WELDON (St. John) asked, How many persons have been appointed as members of the Labor Commission, and how many persons are at present members of the Commission? What salary or remuneration is allowed to each Commissioner, and what amount for travelling expenses and contingencies?

Mr. BOWELL. Fifteen persons were appointed as members of the Labor Commission; one of them, Mr. Côté, is a member without salary. The Commission finished the taking of evidence on the 12th instant. The salary or remuneration allowed to each member was $10 a day, besides actual travelling expenses, and $3.50 per diem to cover hotel and living expenses.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 116) to amend the Civil Service Act.—(Mr. Chapleau.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

The CHAIRMAN. This section is proposed to be re-cast as follows:—

Sub-section 2 of section 47 is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Temporary clerks employed continuously since the first day of July, 1882, may be appointed permanently, if otherwise qualified, at a salary equal to their average pay during the two years previous to such permanent appointment, but in no case exceeding the actual salary of a third class clerk.

Mr. DAVIES. That is the same clause we were at yesterday. It appears to me that it is not acting fairly with the large number of young men who have prepared themselves for examination and have successfully passed examinations, and are now entitled to receive appointments in the Civil Service. There are, I believe, some five or six hundred of these young men scattered throughout Canada, but you come in and with a stroke of the pen you enact that a large amount of temporary clerks who have not passed, and presumably cannot pass, that examination, shall be eligible for appointment for permanent positions as third class clerks, and so exclude five or six hundred young men who have gone to the trouble and expense of preparing themselves for these vacancies. Sir, when you passed these young men, if you were not making fools of them, they had a right to assume that as positions became vacant in the Civil Service, and were being filled up, they would be filled up from their ranks. Instead of that, you take some favorites who have been employed temporarily since 1882, who have never passed any entrance examination at all, and you give them the preference over those men who have prepared themselves. I say it is a most unfair clause, calculated to work very unfairly towards young men who have prepared themselves, and I shall oppose it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before dealing with this question, I wish to make one observation. We sat very late last night, and at a very late hour a prominent supporter of the Administration came to me and said: "Mr. Mitchell, we have about 350 votes to pass, and at this rate we shall not get through by Saturday night." Now, if the Government desire to get through the business that is to be done by Saturday night, I wish to say that the proper course for them to adopt is to drop out a lot of useless Bills, such as this one under consideration now, and let us come down to the practical business of voting the supplies, because I presume that is what they want to do. I think the suggestion is one that will meet with the approval of some members of the Ministry, at all events, who have some common sense about them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. There are some of them who have common sense, and I am glad to be able to say it. I think it would be in the interest of this House for the Government to adopt my suggestion, if they wish to get through the business by Saturday night, and I may say it is the only way they will get through. Going on with Bills like this, upon which we spent nearly the whole of yesterday afternoon, and it is likely to occupy a considerable time this afternoon, is not the way to get through within a reasonable time. I think if the Government will strike out a lot of these useless measures which are not called for, and not occupy the time of the House with them at this advanced season of the Session, Bills that ought to be left over for more mature deliberation when we shall have time to deal with them, I think it will be in the interest of the House, and will promote the interest of the Government. I make this suggestion in order to facilitate business, and enable the Session to draw to a close. I can tell the hon. gentlemen that, if they do not do something of that kind, there is not the slightest chance of getting through by the time the hon. gentlemen said they wished to finish.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This Bill is one the consideration of which we have nearly finished, only two clauses remain to be passed; so I do not think the remarks of my hon. friend will apply to this Bill. We have made a great deal of progress with it, let us finish it, and after that the hon. gentleman will know, by the proceedings of the Government, what Bills they intend to push and what other Bills they may drop. But I think it is too much to ask the House to drop this Bill now, when we have considered it to that extent. I think the Bill will be a good one, as it is being amended, and I have no doubt that my hon. friend will help us to carry it through, and then we will see what other measures we shall go on with.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the hon. gentleman be prepared, before the House separates at six o'clock, to intimate which of the numerous Bills the Government have on their paper they are prepared to strike off, and let us see whether we can get through the business by Saturday night or not? If they do that, I think there will be some disposition on the part of the party I represent, at all events—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. Hon. gentlemen may laugh, but I can tell them that the party I represent is not an unimportant one in determining when the Session shall come to a close. If they wish to meet the wishes of the House, let us know what it is they propose to do, so that we will then be able to judge whether we will allow any and how many of the iniquities which they propose to the House, to go through or not.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am sure there is no one in this House that would be disposed to minimise the importance or the influence of the third party. At all events, my hon. friend knows that I am not the one to underrate the importance of what he says in the remarks he has just made to the House. I am not in a position now to give him an answer, but when the First Minister is here, I will consult with him, and will state myself what will be the course.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would make just one observation. I understood that the hon. gentleman meant to take up Supply upon the House assembling this afternoon. That was the understanding between the Minister of Finance and myself. Now, I do not want to delay the business of the House over a matter of this kind, but I must point out to the Minister of Public Works that it is not convenient to come to these understandings and then go into other measures.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I did not understand it so. Of course, I may be mistaken. Before coming from the Council to the House, we came to the conclusion that we should go on with certain Bills, and then we would take up Supply. That was the understanding. But perhaps the hon. gentleman misunderstood what my hon. friend the Minister of Finance said about it; or perhaps my hon. friend did not express himself with sufficient clearness to convey the idea which he had in his mind. But I am sure the hon. gentleman does not suppose for a moment—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Understand I am not imputing any bad faith at all. I merely call attention to what the hon. gentleman knows, that it is very desirable that we should know exactly what is to be taken up.

Mr. SHANLY. I wish to make a few remarks with regard to one particular word that was used by the hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Davies). He alluded to these young men who have passed the examination as being entitled to Government appointments. Now, I wish it to be put on record that I take entire exception to that word "entitled." These young men who have passed the examination come up of their own free will and accord. I suppose there is not a member of the House who has not applications from people in his constituency enquiring about the Civil Service Act. I myself have had communications from perhaps two dozen of my constituents, but I have invariably told them that passing this examination does not entitle a man to an appointment, it simply qualifies him, and there is a great difference between a man qualifying himself to fill a situation that may turn up, and a man being entitled to a position. I wish particularly to have this point, which I have often inculcated among my own people, placed on record, in order that people should not be led to suppose that because they pass the Civil Service examination they are entitled to the consideration of the Government and a position in the service.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman has obtained a wrong impression of my views. I did not say that all who passed the Civil Service examination were entitled to appointments, very far from it, and if I said so I did not intend to convey that opinion. What I intended to impress on the committee was this: that the 500 or 600 men who have passed the Civil Service examination have a right to assume that appointments will be made from their ranks. A misapprehension as to the meaning of the clause now before the House appears to prevail. That misapprehension arose from the debate which took place on an amendment moved by the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. McNeill)—the amendment relating to a class of appointments made in the Civil Service before 1882. The present amendment of the Secretary of State has nothing to do with that amendment, but it relates to appointments made in the Civil Service of a temporary character since 1882.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The words might be inserted, "appointed before but employed since 1882."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The clause says "employed continuously since 1st July, 1882."

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Then they must have been appointed before.

Mr. BOWELL. My hon. friend's object is to allow those who were in the employ of the Government in the departments previous to 1st July, 1882, who have been continuously employed since but have never been appointed—by appointed we mean appointed by Order in Council—to be appointed now upon the certificate of their qualifications from their superior officer. Now, my hon. friend proposes to go further. Where he gives that power to appoint, he also provides that they shall be entitled to promotion without examination. I do not know that I differ to any extent from the position of the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies). If that concession is to be made to those who were in the service temporarily and afterwards appointed, then it seems to me the same privilege should be extended to those appointed afterwards. If you do not do this you at once give the privilege and the right of promotion to a man who never passed an examination, and you debar the man who has passed an examination, because he entered the service only one day afterwards, that is on 2nd July, from the same privilege.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand that those clerks who were appointed temporarily before 1882, and employed continuously since now, become third class clerks and are entitled without examination to an advance of $50 a year.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Most decidedly; they are permanent clerks.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) And how many are there?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not suppose there are 20, because those who have been employed continuously since 1882 have gradually come into the permanent service. There are a few old servants, some of whom have been ten, twelve or fourteen years in the service, and it has been very hard to pass them to $400 under the present Civil Service Act; some were receiving $2.50 a day, as they had done during ten years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I take it that a good deal of the trouble has arisen from the rather vicious practice pursued for a long time, very probably even under the regime of my hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie) to some extent, that when you want to give a man an appointment a little better than a third class clerk you very often place him at $2 a day, which means about $730 a year, and he is kept as a temporary clerk, instead of being made a third class clerk in the ordinary fashion and given $400 or $500 a year. I have some doubts as to whether so small a number as 20, unless the hon. gentleman has enquired into the matter, are affected by this change; I suspect the number will be found to be considerably larger. Owing to the practice to which I have alluded a great many of those gentlemen remained in the position of temporary clerks, but in any case it appears to me that this shows in a very strong light the utter inadequacy of the Civil Service examination of the character we now hold. If we are going to do any good by this system we must make the competitive examinations and give the men certain rights. To allow 600 or 1,000 men throughout the country to qualify, and then cause them at the same time to understand that they can only get appointments by political influence, renders the Civil Service examination an utter farce.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I cannot conceive how we can agree that a third class or temporary clerk not capable of passing the examination, should be entitled to $50 a year increase.

Mr. BOWELL. That only applies to the inside service.

On paragraph 2,

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know whether this paragraph does not permit the Secretary of State to grant a larger salary than $400. If a man passes in optional subjects I suppose he could be given $600?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. What length of time constitutes a temporary appointment? How long can a man be in the service and be considered only a temporary clerk?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. So long as he is not permanent.

Mr. MULOCK. Then a temporary clerk may be a permanent clerk in fact?

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Some of them are.

Mr. MULOCK. There is no limitation to an appointment that may be called a temporary one. Appointees may be continued in the service as long as the Government may wish to keep them?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We have to re-appoint them every six months by Order in Council.

Mr. McNEILL moved in amendment;

The provisions of "The Civil Service Act" so far as they render promotion in the Civil Service contingent in any degree upon examination as provided in the said Act, shall not apply to any civil servant who entered the Civil Service before the first day of July, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-two; and any civil servant who entered the service prior to that date shall be eligible for promotion in every respect as though such provisions as to examination had never been enacted.

Mr. COUGHLIN (for Mr. CURRAN) moved in amendment to the amendment:—

That all the words after "1882" be struck out and the following substituted in the place thereof: "Except in so far as regard the duty of the office to which such civil servants may desire to be promoted."

Mr. McNEILL. I may say that I am willing to accept the amendment to the amendment.

Amendment to amendment agreed to.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) moved:

That no person shall be temporarily appointed, or continued in the Civil Service of Canada for a longer period than two years unless he has been permanently appointed.

He said: I have heard the Minister say that a number of young men have been appointed temporarily, and that they remained there from one to ten years, then the Government of the day is pressed to put them on the permanent staff. My object is to prevent the nomination of those supernumerary clerks in the departments and to confine the appointment to the regular service, so that when more assistance is required at least within two years, those people, if they are there and competent, and having passed the examination, can be appointed permanently.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I am very sorry my hon. friend was not here yesterday and he would have known that it was not the intention of the Government to do what he is saying now. It is not the intention to appoint all the temporary clerks permanent, but when the needs and the wants of the service requires that such an officer should be made permanent, then he will be made permanent without having recourse to the difficulties we should otherwise meet. We will make permanent those of the temporary clerks that we require.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). My hon. friend does not quite apprehend my argument. He says that it is not contemplated to appoint those supernumerary clerks.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Not at present.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). According to my view they should be appointed and placed on the permanent staff or their services dispensed with. Some of them he says have been there for eight or ten years. Surely if they have been there that time they are entitled to some acknowledgment for their services.

Mr. MULOCK. Why make temporary appointments? Is it because there are not enough candidates to select from who pass the examination? If there are to-day some 2,000 candidates who pass the preliminary examination it appears to me the temporary clerks ought to be selected from those.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We must select them from the list of the candidates who have passed the examination. The law says so.

Mr. BOWELL. If you make them all permanent, it would add three or four thousand dollars to the superannuation list every six months.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If the hon. gentleman wants to put his amendment in the Bill, let him put his name on it, because it is the existing law.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon. friend misapprehends the purport of this amendment. At present there are men in the service who have been employed as temporary clerks for years, since before 1882. Those men are reappointed by Order in Council every six months. My hon. friend's amendment is that after a man has been employed as a temporary clerk for two years, it will not be at the option of the Government to keep him as a temporary clerk, but either his services must be dispensed with, or he must be put on the permanent list. The idea is a good one, that you should not keep a man five or six years as a temporary clerk.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. Secretary of State says that if the hon. member for Halifax will put up his name to the amendment, he will let it go into the Bill, but he does not want to let it go into a Bill for which he is responsible. What trash that is for a Minister of State to talk! Why, Sir, it is the veriest rot that ever was spoken. The hon. gentleman should understand his position better than that. If he is passing a Bill through this House, he knows that he is bound to accept any amendment which is according to the sentiment of the House, and it is useless for him to talk about the hon. gentleman putting his name to an amendment to a Bill for which he (the Secretary of State) is responsible. It is the discussion of questions like this that takes up the time of the House, and prevents getting an adjournment.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have only to thank the hon. gentleman for the politeness of his language.

Mr. MITCHELL. All I can say is that my language is quite as good as the hon. gentleman's, and I think my common sense is a mighty sight better.

Mr. BOWELL. Let us see what the practical operation of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Halifax would be. If it is adopted, I take it that every person who is in the employ of the Government for two years—it does not say continuously—will have to be put on the roll permanently or his services will have to be dispensed with. What would he do in the case of men who are appointed year after year at seaport towns? I have in my mind at present a man who died a few months ago, who was continuously in the employ of the Government during the summer season in Quebec for 50 years. Would this amendment compel the Customs Department to put him and scores of others similarly situated on the permanent list, or dismiss them? In Montreal, for instance, twenty or thirty men are put on every summer, sometimes more, sometimes less, in proportion to the amount of shipping and commerce. Many of these scarcely do anything in the winter, but in the spring they are re-appointed.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman will see that during the winter their services are dispensed with. My object is to prevent the departments here being crowded with supernumeraries who are not required, with the object of putting them on the permanent staff as soon as possible. Surely the hon. Minister will admit that if a person has been employed for two years, he should be made a permanent employé, or be dismissed.

Mr. BOWELL. There are in Halifax men who receive $1.25 or $1.50 a day in the summer, and who in the winter are kept on at 50 cents a day, although there is not much for them to do. They have been so employed for years, and they would come within this amendment.

Mr. JONES. I will change my amendment to make it apply to the inside service.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This amendment would work injuriously in more ways than one. For example: in the engineering branch of my department, a number of engineers are temporarily employed, and they are kept there from year to year. The reason we do not put them on the permanent list is, that occasionally, for two or three or four years, we may not have work for them, and they find employment elsewhere, so that the country is not charged with the expense of these men when there is nothing for them to do. We have a number of architects employed in the same way in the chief architect's branch; and if we had to dispense with their services at the end of two years, we should have to obtain others who would not be so familiar with the work. For example, Mr. Ewart, who is the first architect under Mr. Fuller, the chief architect, has been twenty years in the service, although he is not on the permanent list.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). He should be.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think so; but his case is an exception. He deserves great consideration from the department, for I must say he is a very good officer. If he were put on the permanent list, we should have to put a number of other officers on at a time when we have not much work for them. Therefore, if an amendment is to be made, I think it should be limited to persons in the service who are not employed for technical work, so that it will accord with the remainder of the measure.

Mr. MULOCK. I agree largely with what has been said by the hon. Minister of Customs and the hon. Minister of Public Works. I think the Government should have some power of expansion and contraction with its employés. There are certain services which at times are more pressing than at other times and there should be some latitude allowed to the Ministers. It may be that a man is kept on for fifty years, yet his appointment is a temporary one. In a sense it is a permanent one; it is permanent as long as the work is there for him to do. He is appointed, for instance, during the period of navigation, and stops work during the winter, and the next year he is taken on if there is work. His appointment is as permanent as the work itself, but I think it will be a mistake to say he should be made absolutely permanent by Order in Council, and thus made a charge upon the resources of the country, even should his services no longer be required. The test of his permanency is, are his services necessary?

Mr. SPROULE. There is another very important objection to this amendment. A temporary clerk may be employed for any length of time without an increase of salary, and the work he is expected to do is only ordinary work. Should this amendment be carried and these men be put on the permanent list, they will be entitled to the statutory increase of $50 per year, and when they reach the maximum of their class, they will want promotion. It means creating large additional expense.

Mr. DAVIES. (P.E.I.) It means that, or their dismissal.

Mr. WELSH. I think some discretion should be left to the Government, and I would be sorry to see the amendment pass.

Mr. BOWELL. I would like to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to a case which has suggested itself to me since I took my seat. After every census is taken, it is necessary in the Agriculture Department to appoint a large number of hands, and it generally takes two or three years before the statistics are completed. According as that work ceases, the commissioner discharges these extra hands.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I do not wish to delay the committee, and as there are objections to the amendment I will withdraw it, but the principle is the right one.

On section 12,

Mr. CHAPLEAU. This clause is to prevent the Government from paying any additional salary or remuneration or compensation for any work done by any officers in the service except on bringing the claim to Parliament and having it voted as a bill of indemnity in the service.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The existing law seems to arrange for that, because it provides that no additional salary or remuneration of any kind shall be paid to any civil servant unless the same has been voted in the Estimates.

Mr. THOMPSON. The insertion of these words "in the Estimates" invites everybody to apply.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The first part of the fourth clause in the present law provides that when an officer fulfils the duties of another officer of higher rank during three months, he is entitled to the difference in salary. This is struck out.

On section 15,

Mr. BOWELL. There is no provision in the schedule for the grading of packers in the Customs Department. In some places, such as Toronto and Montreal, where there are a dozen packers, one should be appointed to oversee the whole, with a maximum salary of $600, while the others have $500. At present we cannot appoint a chief packer to look after the others.

On the preamble,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. the Secretary of State argued yesterday that the adoption of the principle contained in the amendment of the hon. member for Bruce would be a fatal blow at the principle underlying the Civil Service Act. I thought his arguments were conclusive, and was prepared to vote against the amendment. Under the law, as it stands, it is provided that when a vacancy occurs in a higher class, the head of the department shall select from the list of successful candidates for promotion the person considered best fitted for the office, and in making his selection he should have reference to any special duties to be performed and special fitness, &c. That is a good principle, and I believe it should work well. The hon. the Secretary of State yesterday said it would never do to repeal it. Now you have repealed that, so far as concerns the officers appointed before 1882. They are no longer to be required to pass any examination at all, except the purely formal ones relating to the department in which they are. What is the sense of keeping the clause at all? The hon. gentleman has changed his mind, and he should explain why the principle, which he thought yesterday was subversive of the Act, should be accepted to-day.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. BOWELL moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 92) to amend chapter 32 of the Revised Statutes respecting the Customs be concurred in. He said: The first amendment made by the Senate is to substitute 15 for 10 in the clause providing for the increase of duty in case of an undervaluation. Under the old law, if an article were undervalued 20 per cent., it carried with it a penalty of 50 per cent. of the whole duty. The amount which I proposed was that, if an article was undervalued 10 per cent., it should carry a penalty of 10 per cent. of the duty, and so on proportionately to the undervaluation. The Senate have come to the conclusion that 10 per cent. was too low a rate, and they have inserted the word 15. The result is to the importer that an undervaluation of 15 per cent. carries a penalty of 15 per cent., and an undervaluation of

Mr. BOWELL.

20 per cent. carries a penalty of 20 per cent., and so on, so that an undervaluation would have to reach 50 per cent. in order to carry the same penalty which was provided under the old law.

Mr. MULLOCK. What penalty is provided if the undervaluation is less than 15 per cent.?

Mr. BOWELL. None.

Mr. MULLOCK. That is given as a margin?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes. If there was an undervaluation of 14½ per cent. there would be no penalty in addition to the duty.

Mr. MULLOCK. The Senate has given 50 per cent. more latitude for undervaluation than that the Minister proposed.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; that was a suggestion which was given by the Board of Trade in Montreal.

Mr. MITCHELL. Was that the result of the conference between the Board of Trade of Montreal and the gentleman who was sent down there from the department to see them?

Mr. BOWELL. I had consented to that arrangement before Mr. Parmelee went to Montreal at all. He was there on other business, and I gave instructions that he should see the committee of the Board of Trade and find out from them what objections they had, so as to see how far we could meet their views.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then I understand that the Board of Trade is the legislative body in this country, and not this Parliament? That is what it comes to.

Mr. BOWELL. I cannot agree in that view. I think it is necessary for the Government to obtain all the information they can from the people who are interested in the working of any law of this kind, and that is the principle upon which I have acted during the ten years that I have had charge of the Customs Department. In order to show the hon. gentleman that the Montreal Board of Trade is not the legislative body, I may tell him that they made a number of suggestions which I did not deem it advisable, either in the interest of the importer or in the interest of the revenue to accept; and when it was explained to them what the effect of some of their proposed amendments would be, they admitted that they were wrong and the Customs Department was right.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to ask the Minister if the visit of Mr. Parmelee to Montreal was before or after this Bill passed this House.

Mr. BOWELL. It was after.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think it would have been better to have obtained the views of the Board of Trade before the Bill was passed. I had a rather warm controversy the other evening in consequence of something which was said by the Minister of Finance to me when I was not addressing him in any way, and certain comments were made upon that in the newspapers which were entirely untrue. I simply desired, as I said, to have the further consideration of the Customs Bill postponed, in order that the commercial interests of Montreal, Toronto, Quebec and other great centres might have an opportunity to discuss the provisions before the Bill passed; but I was told in the most peremptory way that the Bill must go on. I thought it was not asking very much, as I told the Minister of Public Works who was then leading the House, after the way in which we had facilitated on this side the promotion of public business, to ask the Government to allow the Bill to stand for further consideration from Friday until Tuesday, but I was peremptorily told that the Government would not consent to that, and the Minister of Finance interjected a most impertinent remark on that occasion, although I was not speaking to him at all. He said, as far as I remember,

"Your impertinent threat, Sir, precludes the Government from meeting your wishes." I was not talking to the Minister of Finance, but to his leader, the Minister of Public Works, who, I must say, has always treated me very courteously, and I thought the remark which was made by the Finance Minister on that occasion was very impertinent and entirely uncalled for.

Mr. BOWELL. I was in communication with the Board of Trade before the Bill was passed through this House. All these matters were under consideration before the assistant commissioner visited Montreal, not in connection with this matter, but in connection with a large seizure there, which I desired to have investigated before it was finally decided; but I considered that, being in Montreal at the time, he might see these gentlemen and explain to them that some of the propositions they had made would result more adversely to them than in their favor. If it had not been for that seizure, Mr. Parmelee would not have gone to Montreal at all. The next line applies to section 29, in which the following words are added "manufactured articles, composed wholly or in part of polished steel, &c." The present law provides that persons importing hardware cannot claim anything for damage arising from rust or salt water except on Russian polished iron and Canada plate. We propose to add to that exception all polished cutlery, or polished steel, which will enable the importer, in cases where damage has occurred—it does not occur very often to this kind of article—to put in a claim for damage and have a rebate upon the duty. The third amendment relates to the clause which provides for the examination of goods. Under the old clause some of the packages were sent to the merchant's warehouse, and certain packages were retained in the appraiser's department. Under the old law the customs officer had the power to go to the merchant's warehouse a month afterwards, if he chose, and claim an examination of the goods which were in the warehouse. The law further provided that the merchants were not to open the packages, under liability to a penalty, until the appraisers had finally disposed of those packages which were left in the warehouse. This clause confines the right of the appraisers to visit the warehouse to three days; after that the merchant can open his goods and dispose of them as he pleases, unless fraud is found to have been practiced. These concessions are in the interest of trade, and they do not in any way affect the revenue. I would therefore move their adoption.

Amendments concurred in.

SAFETY OF SHIPS.

Order for second reading of Bill (No. 112) to amend the Revised Statutes, chapter 77, respecting the Safety of Ships, read.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). If the Minister will allow me, I will suggest to him that, as this is a very important Bill—

Mr. FOSTER. I was going to say that I have determined to move for the discharge of this order. The reason is not that I do not think that some legislation is necessary, but that, after having the Bill printed and distributed, a large number of very valuable suggestions came in, both from ship owners and from mariners, and I came to the conclusion, after considering the matter very carefully, that the Bill did not meet the case as regards the ship owners, nor did it sufficiently provide for the protection of life and property. I propose, during the summer, to take up the whole matter and prepare a more comprehensive Bill, which I think will be more satisfactory all round. I therefore move that the order be discharged.

Motion agreed to.

REPRESENTATION OF THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved second reading of Bill (No. 76) to amend the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 50, respecting the North-West Territories. He said: I explained the object of the Bill when it was introduced. I may say, it is to carry out to completion the legislation which has previously taken place. It will, perhaps, be remembered by the old members of Parliament that a constitution was given to the North-West Territories under the auspices of the present member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) who was then Minister of the Interior.

Mr. MACKENZIE. He was not in the Government then.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I thought it was his Bill. It was, at all events, a measure introduced while my hon. friend for East York was at the head of the Government. It provided that there should be a Lieutenant Governor, assisted by a nominated council; that the Lieutenant Governor and his council should sit together, and the Lieutenant should have a vote with his council, and have a casting vote. The Bill also provided that when the Lieutenant Governor ascertained that within a reasonable area there was a population of a thousand souls, he might give them an elected member. Under that clause the Lieutenant Governor did, from time to time, lay out constituencies, which constituencies elected members. The Act also provided that when there were twenty-one elected members, the nominated councillors should cease to exist, and that there should be a Legislative Assembly, consisting of twenty-one elected members; that the Lieutenant Governor should no longer sit with them and act with them as one of the body, but should assume more the position of a Lieutenant Governor of a Province, and that they should have the full power of legislating while he had the power of rejecting, or reserving, or assenting to their measures. The constitution has been in existence for some time, and on the whole has been satisfactory, but the time has come when the nominated members must cease. The population has increased in such a degree that they have fully a right to 21 members. This measure provides for 22 constituencies. I may say I have consulted the members of this House who represent the North-West, and after going into the matter with them the schedule attached to the Bill now under consideration sets out the 22 constituencies. The original Act provided that the term should be two years for the elective members. After full consideration, and after consultation with those hon. gentlemen, it has been thought well to extend the term one year more and make the term for three years, as two years is a very short period. We all remember that when first elected it appeared strange for the first session to enter into the business of general legislation.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Yes, but that North-West country changes very fast.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The question was whether we should leave it to be two years or to extend it to the term in most of the other Provinces, four years, and we thought on the whole it would be well to adopt a compromise and to extend the term to three years, the first session being a session when the members would begin to learn the business, and the second and third sessions when they would be useful members of the Legislature. In consequence of the rapid or expected rapid increase—

Mr. LAURIER. Oh, oh.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman says "oh, oh." I repeat that in consequence of the expected rapid increase in the North West, perhaps three years would be better than four, so that the rapid population coming in for the next three years might have an opportunity of voting. No doubt hon. gentlemen opposite have examined the clauses of the Bill, and I do not desire to go over them very closely, as this can be done more conveniently in committee. I may say, however, that it has been thought well to place a clause in the Bill similar to the clause in the British North America Act, which provides that no measure for the expenditure of public money can be taken up by the Legislature without a message from the Executive. Under that provision we would really have a one-man power—that of the Lieutenant Governor.

Mr. MITCHELL. Just as we have got here.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The one-man power has been exercised so beneficently that it has received the undivided support of the third party. The North-West Act provided that when there were 21 elective members the Governor should cease to be a portion of the Council and become Lieutenant Governor proper and withdraw from the Council, but there is no provision in the Act by which there is any executive or responsible government, or by which the system that obtains in the Provinces should be carried out. The true theory, as I think, of the territorial system, so long as it continues, both here and in the United States, is that Government proceeds from here. That is the principle on which that original Act was based, and until the territory evolves from its present condition into that of a full grown Province we should, owing to its sparse population and the fact that considerable assistance must be given from the central power, the Parliament of this Dominion, and there must be ex necessitate very considerable aid given to that country, responsible government in its accepted sphere would be premature. But this Bill provides that the Lieutenant Governor, as I have already stated, must give his assent to money grants, and there is a clause which has been omitted from the printed Bill, but which I will ask the House in committee to add, which provides that the Lieutenant Governor shall select from among the elected members three persons to be an advisory committee on matters of finance. When they have settled upon the appropriation of the fund to the territory the statement will go down by message from the Lieutenant Governor; but it cannot go down unless it is carried by the assistance of the advisory committee.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Can the three members of the advisory committee override the Governor?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes. The Lieutenant Governor will have a vote and also a casting vote in case of a tie. The object of the Government has been to alter the original Act as little as possible; and as this will be the first election by the people of representatives to a representative assembly, holding all the characteristics of a legislative body as in other Provinces, we desire that it should be left to them, either at their first or subsequent Session, as they think proper, to suggest such amendments or improvements in the system as their experience may dictate. We adhere to the present lines as much as possible. I will give one instance. We have not provided for vote by ballot. There is a considerable difference of opinion I find on that point at present. The present Council have asked for vote by ballot. We have no objection to have vote by ballot there, but I should like to have the positive, well-considered decision of the Legislative Assembly on that point. There is no power existing there that can exercise undue influence over voters.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Some hon. gentlemen say "oh, oh!" I think if they will look at Manitoba and the North-West, they will find that so far as the central Government is concerned, no influence can possibly be used.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is not the general impression.
Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. At all events there is no Lieutenant Governor similar to the Governors we have in the Provinces, and no Council with a Lieutenant Governor to exercise any authority over the people. However, that is mere badinage. The practical difficulty is that the settlers are scattered over half a continent, in small groups, and by a very rough and ready system the votes have been collected in those places. If there is going to be a charge upon the infant treasury of the North-West to furnish ballot boxes and to send them along the trains, leaving those boxes at different places along the whole continent, why the expense would be enormous, and it would swallow up the whole of their very sparse revenues at this moment. However, that is for their consideration. Hon. gentlemen suggest that the system of voting by ballot would be a good system, and they assume, as a matter of course, that all the expense would fall on the general treasury. There is no reason why it should fall on the general treasury. The Territories must pay the expenses of their own elections like the Provinces. We have, however, as the member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) knows, in aid of the local treasury, paid the councillors out of the Dominion funds, and that principle is continued. Under the North-West Act it is provided that the Government may pay to each councillor for his annual attendance a sum not exceeding $1,000. In the resolution which you will see on the paper, it is provided that elective members shall get $500 for each Session, and that there is a new provision in this Bill that there shall be legal experts, who shall not exceed three in number, who will sit with the elected members, but who will have no right to vote. The object of that clause, which is a novel one, is to give the Assembly the advantage of having some men to advise them as to the drafting of Bills, as to what the law really is, and if any amendments are submitted as to how the amendments are to be prepared. The language of the Bill is: "legal experts." It is, however, I may say, the intention of the Government to select those legal experts from the present judiciary there. Judge Richardson at Regina, who is the senior judge, and in all but title the chief justice, has from the very beginning of this Council been nominated a member of the Council, and he has been of the greatest assistance to that body. In fact, I believe that the very able and well considered system of legislation that has been adopted there, so far as the legal phrases go at all events, is very much due to him.

Mr. MACKENZIE. He is the Attorney General of the Territories in fact?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; I think he was sent up there by my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Mackenzie). He has proved himself to be a most valuable man, so valuable that from a stipendiary magistrate he has been appointed to the position of senior judge. The members of the Council in all probability will not contain any legal men among them. They may or they may not, but hitherto there has been no legal men elected to the Council, and the chances are that there will not be legal men elected. It was suggested that there might perhaps be a law clerk appointed to assist the new Assembly, but the objection to that is that it would be very difficult to get a man fit to hold that office who would be of any real value to the Legislative Assembly. The fact that a man is a lawyer and perhaps a good lawyer gives no assurance that he is an adept at legal phraseology as a parliamentary draftsman. Judge Richardson is one and I may say Judge McLeod is another, and they both have been members of the Council and have been thoroughly trained in that regard. Those two judges would be quite sufficient, but it has been thought well to appoint a third. I may mention that if this Bill passes it is the intention of the Government to ask the Governor in Council that Judge Rouleau should also be appointed. The appointment of those gentlemen is only to last during the term of the Legislature for which they are appointed. I do not suppose that can last very long, but I wish to point out further that the appointment of a law clerk will not be satisfactory. You cannot get a man who is thoroughly competent to assume that duty, unless you give him a large salary, and you cannot get a man to leave any of the Provinces and give up his position, unless you give him a very large salary. In fact, I do not know any man that would be suitable, because it requires great training to be a good parliamentary draftsman. Therefore this scheme has been adopted, and I think it will present itself to the favor of the House. I do not know that there are any other clauses that I need specially discuss just now, but when we go into committee on the Bill the various clauses can be discussed.

Mr. LAURIER. I am very sorry that I cannot look upon this measure as being a measure of reform. It has the pretension of being an extension of popular rights, and so far it sounds well, but in reality there is no extension whatever, except in name, of rights which can be at all useful to the people. The only pretension of the Act—in fact it is the basis of the Act—is to provide a Local Legislature for the Territories. So far that is perfectly satisfactory, but no provision whatever is made for an Executive Council which would be responsible to the Legislature. It is within the experience of every Canadian that a Local Legislature, which has not at the same time the power of controlling the Executive, cannot and did not ever work satisfactorily. We have had experience of such legislatures in Upper Canada and also in Lower Canada, and under such a system it is always in the power of a Governor to baulk the will of the people and set it aside. The hon. gentleman has stated that it is intended that the central governing power should emanate from the Government; and this system is to carry out that intention. The Dominion Government will be the colonial office of those Territories; in fact, the Dominion Government will govern the Territories by the agency of the Lieutenant-Governor, who is an officer appointed by them and responsible only to them. When this Bill was introduced, my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who is admitted on every side of the House to be an authority on such matters, took exception to what he characterised as a fatal omission in the provisions of the Bill. The hon. Prime Minister answered that there was no demand for an Executive Council or for responsible government in the Territories. I will refresh his memory with the words he used on that occasion:

“In the first place, I must tell the hon. gentleman that in the North-West they have a most holy horror of responsible government. The representations are, I may say, without any exception, against the premature introduction of responsible government. If the hon. gentleman were in the position of the Minister of the Interior, he would find that the one cry is: Do not at all at present give us a Government of that kind.”

Now, as far as I can construe the opinion of the people of the North-West, that is altogether the reverse of what the hon. gentleman said it was. Instead of having a holy horror of responsible government, it is the very thing they are asking for. We have not ample means of communication with those Territories, and their press is not such as to give us much idea of the opinion prevailing there; but here is a memorial of the North-West Council, laid on the Table of the House by the hon. gentleman himself, in which they ask, as one of the features of their constitution:

“That the Lieutenant Governor carry on his executive functions by and with the advice of an Executive Council of three, who shall be from time to time chosen and summoned by the Lieutenant Governor and sworn in as Privy Councillors, and who shall hold seats in the North-West Council.”

They are asking the very thing which the hon. gentleman said was regarded with holy horror by the people of the Territories; and these people, coming as most of them do from the older Provinces of Canada, and knowing something of their former history, cannot but entertain the idea here set forth, because the hon. Prime Minister must remember that the system of government which he now provides for the Territories never gave any satisfaction in his Province or in the lower Provinces, and, of course, the same causes must produce the same effects. So far, I think the measure is deficient. I notice also that no executive power is to be given to the Legislature, but it is to have absolutely the same powers as those now enjoyed by the North-West Council, and nothing more; at least, I fail to perceive in the Bill any evidence of a disposition to give increased powers to the new Legislature. Now, the powers at present enjoyed by the North-West Council are of a very limited character indeed. At present they have only three different powers under the statute: to make ordinances with regard to education, to make ordinances with regard to the administration of justice, and to make ordinances with regard to the calling of juries; all their other powers are such as are conferred upon them by the Governor in Council. The Governor in Council is authorised by the Act to extend their powers, that is, to give them such other powers as are conferred on the Provinces by the British North America Act. These powers are rather numerous, and the Governor in Council can select from them those which he thinks ought to be conferred on that body. The hon. gentleman must see that this is very unsatisfactory legislation. In such a country, though the population does not increase as rapidly as was hoped, we must still expect some increase, and changes may be required pretty rapidly. As the hon. gentleman stated, the time has come when the constitution which has been given to the Territories should be modified and defined in such a manner as he said, that is, by giving them a purely elective Legislature instead of a nominated body. At the same time it seems to me that they ought to be given, if not all, at least a great many of the powers which are given to the Local Legislatures under the constitution. I am surprised, for instance, that no authority exists in the law for giving to the Territories municipal powers, which is the very first thing that should be done. They may have been granted to them by the Governor in Council—I am not aware of it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, yes.

Mr. LAURIER. If they have it is very proper. I do not know how far the provisions which the hon. gentleman proposes to introduce with regard to an advisory board and legal experts may work satisfactorily. This is altogether a new experiment. I do not know that it has ever been tried anywhere else; but it seems to me that responsible government of some kind such as they are now asking, would be the best system to adopt. With regard to voting by ballot, the hon. gentleman said there could be no undue influence in those Territories. Why, Sir, it seems to me there is no part of Canada which is so liable to undue influence. The hon. gentleman stated that the Territories would have to be governed from Ottawa. That is the very undue influence which I dread in those Territories—that of the hon. gentleman and his Government. The Lieutenant Governor is their agent; the land agents are their agents; they have a crowd of agents there, and I do not think I am wrong in saying that the power of these agents was unduly felt during the last election.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it a pity that the hon. the First Minister should have introduced his Bill so very late in the Session. There is no doubt that the questions raised are of great importance, and it is very difficult at so late a time as this to give them the consideration they require. I should be glad if the hon. the First Minister would agree not to take the third reading of this Bill until as late a period as he can, so as to give my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) an opportunity of expressing his opinion of it. Of course, he cannot take the third reading to-day but I would suggest to him that it would be better to defer the third reading until Friday. I suppose he will have no objection to that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not the slightest.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to know if this covers the whole of the Provinces, which return members to this Parliament.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, it covers all the North-West.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is the three Provinces, Assiniboia, Saskatchewan and Alberta, if I recollect aright.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, it is a very big territory for these parties to exercise authority of any sort over.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice, whatever else is or is not likely to increase by leaps and bounds, the charges for the expenses of Government in the North-West Territories are likely to so increase.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In what way?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I judge from the returns. I notice that they were $102,000 for the present year, and the hon. gentleman proposes to take $142,000 for the future year.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You mean the expenditure voted here?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes; and I should like to know what, if any, revenues these local councils, or Legislative Assemblies, whatever you like to call them, will be called upon to administer. There is one serious difficulty in the way of giving these parties legislative powers. If we are to provide the funds from the Dominion for them to expend, there is no doubt that there will be no check, or a very imperfect check indeed, placed upon them in the way of securing prudence and economy in their expenditure. For that reason, I should like to know whether they have any power of taxation for their own purposes?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They have the power of direct taxation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They can tax by direct taxation just as one of our general assemblies can?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They are going to have, I presume, municipal institutions similar to those which exists in the older Provinces.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They may have them. In some places they adopted municipal institutions, but in other places they have refused to do so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They have a school system and tax in some parts, but I do not know whether they have adopted the municipal system outside of possibly such places as Calgary and one or two others.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Calgary is a municipality, with a mayor and corporation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes; there they would tax the town people just as an ordinary village or town in Ontario or elsewhere would. Have these people got any revenues, so to speak, that they are likely to obtain by direct taxation? Where they have municipalities the probability is that the municipalities will absorb all the sums that can be raised by direct taxation out of the people just as they do in the older Provinces.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In older Provinces, they have Crown lands and some other modes of supplementing their revenue, which, I presume, will be totally wanting here, inasmuch as we are the landlords.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then, as I understand it, these people will, with the exception of some very small licenses, have no funds except such as they may receive by direct taxation. That is the position?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And wherever there exists a municipality there will be extreme reluctance to pay direct taxation to the Local Government, as well as to the municipal body. So that I take it, practically, with the exception of what funds they may get from Ottawa, these people will have no funds to dispose of. Is that the case?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is very much the case. The revenues that are at the disposal of the Council, and will be at the disposal of the Legislature, are very small. There is an amount received for permits, there are auctioneers' and other licenses, there are fees from practitioners at the Bar, and things of that kind, which certainly do not amount to much. The members of the Legislature have been paid out of the central treasury, and the main improvements, such as bridges, roads, and so on, have been also paid from here; and I think, on the whole, liberal grants have been given, from time to time, for the improvement and development of the country. The hon. gentleman mentions that there is an increased vote in the Estimates for this year. There ought to be an increased vote. As the population increases, the demands will increase, and necessitate increased pecuniary supplies to be got from some source. The powers are being largely increased from time to time. I am not sure that these powers have been brought down to the House, but I fancy they have been reported regularly in the various reports from the North-West; but the powers are nearly co-extensive with those of a Provincial Legislature, and once the power is conferred I do not think there is any means of taking it away. At all events there is no disposition to take them away, and I quite agree with the hon. the leader of the Opposition that the sooner these powers, which have been granted by proclamation, are embodied in the statutes the better. The expenditure for the opening of that country is guided here. It does not come within the purview or control of a Local Government or Legislature any more than in any votes here it would come within the control of a Provincial Legislature. Votes for public buildings in any Province of the Dominion are under the control of the Department of Public Works.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What I meant to have enquired was, as these people have, as it appears to me, very small funds of their own, does the hon. gentleman intend to allow them to dispose of all or a considerable part of this vote of $140,000, or is he going to supervise that, as we are the parties who furnish the money?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course the vote is here and the responsibility is here, and that money will be appropriated on the responsibility of the general Government.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This Local Legislature, as I understand, will not receive a lump sum to divide at their pleasure?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No. I may say that the hon. member for Bothwell, in his remarks on the introduction of the Bill, suggested in consequence of the paucity of the fund at the disposal of the Local Legislature, that something like a subsidy or grant for general purposes should be given. That is worthy of consideration. I am not at all sure, inasmuch as these people contribute to the revenue by consuming dutiable goods, that there ought not to be a sum placed at their disposal to be used at their discretion, in the same way as the subsidies which are granted to the various Provinces may be dealt with by the Provincial Governments. However, we do not propose to ask Parliament for a vote this Session for that purpose, and there is not any provision made for it in this measure or the resolution upon the Table. The hon. the leader of the Opposition said that this Bill is one nominally extending all the powers of self-government. I have already explained that it is exactly on the line laid down by the present measure. It is not intended to be in any way a perfect constitution. It cannot by any possibility be so. Hitherto the North-West has had a hybrid constitution, partly nominated and partly elected. That kind of government has always failed in the long run, and now that we propose to have a purely elective body, it has been thought better, as a matter of caution and prudence, to allow them to assume the responsibility of making the suggestions for the future development of their constitutional system. My hon. friend opposite disputed my statement that they had in the North-West a holy horror of responsible government. I did not speak simply from the statement that was made by the North-West Council, in the paper which has been laid on the Table, that it should be an Executive Council. That statement shows that there should be a legal expert among them. The point taken is that there should be some restriction of their powers. The whole body now is either elective or nominated by the Governor, and is an executive body. The Governor sat with them, and they voted upon every subject, whether matters of administration or of legislation, and the Governor could be out-voted; and at the same time they had the whole control of the administration and legislation of the North-West. The request of the Council simply amounted to a cutting down and diminishing of their powers, and the proposition which I now make is greatly in advance of the measure which is now law. By that measure it is provided that the Lieutenant Governor shall be the sole executive, that he shall sit alone, that the Assembly may pass what laws they desire, but that he is to have full power to veto, to assent to, or to reserve any of those measures as he believes it right for him to do. He is under no control of any kind, and I think this Bill makes a step in a liberal direction, and that is in providing for an advisory committee in all matters of finance to assist the Lieutenant Governor, and not only to assist but to control him in regard to money levied on and collected from the people there.

Mr. MACDOWALL. The hon. leader of the Opposition has spoken of the desire of the people of the North-West Territories to have responsible government; but I think he is rather mistaken in regard to the feeling of the people in those Territories in that respect. I know that in the constituency I represent, which is within four square miles of the entire area of Great Britain and Ireland, the people sent me a petition requesting that responsible government be not granted at present. The right hon. gentleman proposes that the Lieutenant Governor shall be assisted by an executive of three. Under the old régime, he was assisted by the whole Council, and I think that if, in place of three, the number were increased, it would be better, because I think that, if the number were limited to three, the various interests of the Territories would not be so well represented. The largest population is, of course, along the line of the railway, and probably the part of the Territories which lies away from the railway line would not have representation in the executive. I look upon it as one of the most valuable matters in regard to the North-West Council that, by means of their representatives, the people can make their wants known; and I do not think that they will ever believe that their wants are properly attended to if a small executive is appointed, in which the various districts may not be represented. I hope that the hon. gentleman will at least take in another member and make the number four, so that the four districts which are represented in this House may be represented also in the executive of the North-West Council. As to what has been said in regard to the appointment of judges as legal experts in that Council, I am thoroughly in accord with the right hon. gentleman. I was a member of the North-West Council myself for some time, and I found, during the time I was there, that all the members were indebted to the knowledge and the kindness of the judges, who were then nominated members, for their valuable assistance. I believe the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Perley), who was a member of that Council afterwards, will agree with me that they gave very valuable assistance to the Council, and in no way whatever blocked the carrying out of the public sentiment which the elected members represented in that Council. As to the extension of powers to the North-West Council, to which the hon. gentleman has alluded, the North-West Council have enormous powers at present. There are some powers which they do not possess, such as the power to charter railways, and I think at present it is just as well that they should not have that power, because, if they had that power, I do not see how they would be able to exercise any great control over the companies which they might charter. At the same time hon. members must recollect that this Parliament during the last eight years has chartered railways running through the North-West. They have shouldered the responsibility themselves, and I take it that this Parliament is in duty bound to relieve the people in the North-West of the disabilities which they are under from want of railway communication. Therefore, I think it is not well that the North-West Council should have this power granted to them until they are in full possession of power to carry out such works, and that cannot be until this Parliament has done more than it has already done to open up the North-West. If that were done the country would be repaid in a very short time for any investment it might make in that direction. In regard to the question as to the duties of the Council and the revenue and expenditure, it is true that the revenue received from the North-West is necessarily very small, because, without direct taxation, they had very little to draw a revenue from. They had auctioneers' licenses; and an amount of 50 cents a gallon, which some people imagine to be an iniquitous tax, on permits for liquor. With some other small matters, these constitute all the revenue which they have to receive. The total revenue of that Council, when I was a member of it, was not more than $10,000. I do not think they can do much with such a revenue as that. I think it is necessary, therefore, that they should have a subsidy from the Dominion Government. I believe every one must admit that the objects on which they have expended their money are good objects. They have been mainly educational and for the improvement of roads and bridges. We know that it is necessary to have roads and bridges in order to carry on the work of the country, and I am sure that no one will object to the amount which has been expended on education, because that is one of the best objects on which money could be expended. I believe that we have in the North-West one of the best school systems which exist in Canada, and I hope that the amount expended in that way will be increased every year. I think it is a great sign of the improvement of the country when money is expended on education, and also when money is expended on roads and bridges, it shows that there is an increase in the population which requires greater facilities, as it does when there is an increase in connection with schools. As to the powers of the Council, I would simply say that they are rather larger than the hon. gentleman the leader of the Opposition imagines. They have had, for some years, the powers to incorporate municipalities, and in many districts along the railway municipalities have already been formed. In the district which I represent, there is only one municipality incorporated just now, and that is the town of Prince Albert, which is, I believe, one of the most flourishing municipalities in the North-West. The people of that municipality were parties to signing the petition which I presented to this House opposing responsible government, on the ground that it might increase their taxation. They have managed their own affairs well, but they are afraid that, with a small representation in the Council, and with their large area, they may be taxed, and that other districts of the North-West may receive the benefit of that taxation in a greater degree than they themselves would. I believe that the powers of the North-West Council given in this Bill, together with what they have, will be quite sufficient for the Territories for the next three years. I hope that during the next three years the country will have increased so much in population and importance, that there will be a necessity for instituting a Legislative Assembly, with full powers of Local Government; but at the present time I think it would be premature. There is, however, one section in this Bill to which I must take exception, and when it gets into committee, I shall take the opportunity of moving an amendment—I refer to section 17, with regard to intoxicants. I regret extremely that the question of intoxicants has not been dealt with in this Bill, because I think the North-West Territories are placed and are left in a most anomalous position. They are just now placed under a most arbitrary law with regard to intoxicants, which has effect only in that part of the country that had not representation in the Parliament that made the law. I consider that this is to some extent, unconstitutional, and that the sooner it is remedied the better. As one of the first representatives of the North-West, I raise my voice against it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Won't you have free liquor?

Mr. MACDOWALL. No, Sir John; let it be under proper restraint, and my amendment will be to this effect when we reach the proper stage.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I wish to say only a word or two, because my hon. friend and colleague has covered nearly all the ground that it is necessary to cover. I must say that I am pleased to see that hon. gentlemen on the Opposition side are disposed to take an active part in the discussion of this Bill, because I want to see the matter fully dealt with, not from any party standpoint, but from the standpoint of the greatest good to that part of the country. I had the honor of being a member of the North-West Council a few years ago, and I was a member when we memorialised the Dominion Government with reference to responsible government; and I may as well say that during the last session of the North-West Council, a similar resolution was passed and sent down here asking for a full-fledged responsible government. Well, Sir, the people of the North-West were opposed then, and they are opposed now, to responsible government. As the right hon. leader of the Government has said, only a small portion of the country was represented in that Council; a thousand adults in a thousand square miles elected a member, and the result was that a very small portion of the whole North-West was represented in the Council. These gentlemen did undertake to offer some advice, and very properly so, to this House, with reference to the form of government that we should have, and they did recommend that we should have a form of responsible government. But, Sir, after I came down here last Session, and again after I came down this Session, when it was thought that this matter would come up, many letters that I had from my constituents protested against the form of responsible government, unless this Parliament was disposed to grant a sufficient sum of money to run that government, and to meet all the requirements of legislation and everything of that kind, without bringing direct taxation upon the people. If this Parliament will grant us a sufficient sum of money so that we shall not have to resort to direct taxation, of course we will accept responsible government. But I believe the present system, with some slight amendments, is the system that will suit the great majority of the people up there the best. It is true they have spoken of what they called the one-man power.

Mr. MITCHELL. We complain of that here.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). Well, your complaint has not amounted to much. You will remember that until a couple of years ago the people of that country were governed, and of necessity they had to be governed, by one man, because there was only a person here and there in the country until two or three years ago. Then the North-West Council was increased because the population increased, and there was a greater number of representatives in that Council; and from that time down to the present I may say there has been no conflict between the Council and Mr. Dewdney, the present Lieutenant Governor. I may say that on all occasions he has endeavored to meet the wishes of the people, so far as it was in his power to do so. The Government have given us a large grant, which has been used for local purposes. The North-West Council administered the school money. The money was voted for that purpose, and the Lieutenant Governor handed the grant, as it were, over to the Council. He said: You make an ordinance for the expenditure of this money, and it will be all right. Very well, we make an ordinance, and I had the honor of being a member of a committee which framed that ordinance, and it received the assent of the Governor in Council; so that the money is now being expended under an ordinance which has been made by the people's representatives in that Council. More than that, we have made municipal ordinances; and I can tell hon. gentlemen here that in a small portion of the district that I represent, there are four well organised municipalities, working as well and as orderly as any municipalities in the Dominion of Canada. I have had some experience in municipal affairs, in New Brunswick, where I was councillor for seven years, and I can say that the municipality in the district that was known as the Qu'Appelle district, is as well ordered and as well regulated as any municipality that I am acquainted with. The other part of the district has, under the same ordinance, the power to organise municipalities, but the people refrain from doing so, because they do not want to get into a system of direct taxation, which they would be under the necessity of doing. Now, Sir, what we want is this: We want this Council to have full power over the money that is granted for roads and bridges. I think the school money that is granted is entirely satisfactory. The Government here are building large bridges and attending to the public works of that country, and that is satisfactory. But the people of the North-West desire that their members should have control of the money granted for roads and bridges; they want to expend it where they think it is proper, and they wish it to be taken from the control of the Lieutenant Governor. I may say, also, that the North-West Council wish to have the ballot. I have had considerable talk with the Government with reference to that matter, and I understand that they will give power to the Council to regulate their own local elections hereafter, that will be satisfactory. As regards the revenue, the only revenue we have is from liquor, billiard and a few minor licenses, as my hon. friend here has said; but the license fee is a paltry one, which, with other local items of revenue, does not amount to much. Therefore we will require a very respectable subsidy to be given to that Council to expend. Any subsidy that has heretofore been given has been placed in the hands of Lieutenant Governor Dewdney. A small pittance, ten or fifteen thousand dollars, was granted last year to build roads and bridges. That is a very small amount, and it should be very largely increased—any one can understand that. But that will be a matter to discuss hereafter. The Government, I think, are disposed to give us a very fair bill. I may say with reference to the license system, that I see there is a clause in the Bill which deals with that. I may say that I have presented a petition, as will be remembered by every hon. member of this House, signed by nearly 3,000 people in the Territories, asking that at this election for the North-West Council, they may have an opportunity of voting on the liquor question. That is to say they should vote whether they desire to have prohibition or a high license. If there is no provision inserted and no regulation made so that the people can have an opportunity of voting, it will create very great dissatisfaction all over the country. The people have asked that by petition, and it is a widespread opinion that they should have a chance of pronouncing their opinion in favor of prohibition or a license system. The present system of handling liquor is entirely unsatisfactory, and some steps should be taken by the Government to give the people either prohibition or license, for we have neither now.

Mr. LAURIER. What system now prevails?

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). A respectable person, if properly recommended to the Lieutenant Governor, can get a permit by paying half a dollar per gallon, and that permit will cover one, two, three or more gallons; in fact, I saw the Lieutenant Governor myself two or three years ago, when I was a member of the Council, where I brought this matter up, and he told me he had power to give a permit for one gill or a thousand gallons. I must say that Governor Dewdney administered his duties in that respect most admirably. He refrained from giving permits to some persons, and they found fault with him; he refused to give permits to hotel men, nevertheless there is liquor all over the country. Liquor is smuggled in; and if a man has a permit for two gallons he probably brings in four. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have a license to sell light wines and beer, and there is very great fault found with that privilege. There is a provision in the Bill that any vehicle shall be seized and sold. I do not know whether the Government intend to seize the Canadian Pacific Railway cars going through the country—it will be quite an institution to handle. I repeat that the people in the North-West are very anxious to have a vote taken on the liquor question at the time of the election of the Council, in order to ascertain whether they favor prohibition or license. Anything short of that will not be satisfactory to any class of the people, either to those who wish a license system adopted or those who favor entire prohibition. This matter will come up when the Bill is in committee, but the system with some little amendment can be made entirely satisfactory to the people. The people do not want responsible government unless they have sufficient money to administer it without resorting to direct taxation.

Mr. WATSON. There appears to be a difference of opinion as to what the people of the North-West really want, but this House should be guided by the representations made by a body such as the North-West Council. That body has asked Parliament to give the North-West responsible government, and their petition should be listened to. The Council have also asked for the ballot. That should be granted at the time of the first election of North-West members, and after that if the Government decide to do away with the ballot well and good, but in the first instance the ballot should be given. I am in a position to state that there is no portion of the Dominion of Canada where greater undue influence is brought to bear upon the people than in the North-West Territories.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then it must be pretty bad there.

Mr. WATSON. It is bad. I can assure this House that at the last general election of representatives to this House influences were brought to bear that were actually shameful, because while the people were not asked to sell their votes and receive money for them, they were told that unless they did support the Government candidate they would not get common justice. In a portion of the territory which I visited during that election, the people were told that unless they accepted the Government candidate, they would not have a chance to get a second homestead, and further they would not get an extension of the time for paying for their pre-emption.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I distinctly state that through all my campaigning I never heard such a threat used or insinuation made. I do not believe one word of it.

Mr. WATSON. I know those threats were made—electors told me that they were afraid to record their votes as they would like to do for the Liberal candidate. The electors told me that themselves. I will give further evidence to show the influence of a circular letter issued in Prince Albert district on that occasion. We are all aware that a certain number of settlers in the Prince Albert district had claims against the Government, and they appointed a solicitor to look after their interest by the name of Mr. W. V. McLise. A few days previous to the election he addressed circulars to those who had claims against the Dominion Government. It is marked "confidential," and is as follows:—

"Confidential.

"DEAR SIR,—I deem it to be part of my duty, as solicitor for your rebellion losses, to inform you in reference to the Federal elections, that on Friday last I telegraphed my agents in Ottawa, who are attending to your interests there, the following message:

"Please wire me what seems the general result of election so far." Yesterday I received by telegram the following reply:

"Government majority so far is 13. 204 constituencies have so far elected members; there remains 11 more to be held. It may be assumed that the Government will receive at least half of these."

"Now, in conclusion I will remind you that by section 51 of the Representation Act each voter casts openly and his vote goes one for or against the Government in the poll-book. By section 61 of the same Act the poll books must be forwarded to Ottawa after the election here. As it is certain that the Government is not defeated the losses will be paid this next Session, yours I trust with the rest.

"Your obedient servant,

"W. V. McLISE."

I, therefore, claim that undue influence was brought to bear on those people from the fact that there was open voting, that the poll books would be sent down to the Ottawa Government and they would know how the people voted, and upon that would depend whether their claims were paid or not. I believe the ballot system should be extended to the North-West Territories, and when the Bill is in committee I will move to that effect. The Hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Macdowall) said that the people of his district were opposed to full responsible government for the North-West. That was simply because they were afraid they would not have sufficient control of that body. I do not see how they would not have sufficient influence in the Local Legislature on account of the small representation they possess in this House. I believe the people of the North-West are quite capable of electing representatives who are fully able to control public affairs without the advisory board provided by this Bill. I believe they are sufficiently intelligent to elect men to the Local Legislature who would be able to advise His Honor the Lieutenant Governor as to how the money should be spent. I hold that in the interests of that country this House should grant a sum of money to the North-West Territories for the purpose of furnishing them with as much per capita as is given to the different Provinces, and thus give them the full powers of a Local Legislature. I believe that the people would wish that. In fact these gentlemen who have spoken have advocated for, and against further power being granted to the Legislature. It seems to me that the Governor, who ever he may be, can select three men as his advisers and they will control how this money should be spent, so that the representatives of the people have little or no say in it, or if they do have a say, they have no power.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I beg your pardon.

Mr. WATSON. The three men selected as the advisers of His Excellency would control the manner in which that money is to be spent.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Those three members are to be members of the elected body, and who will be selected just as the Governor General has selected us.

Mr. WATSON. They are appointed by the appointee of this Government, and the three men who are selected can overrule the rest of the Council. As far as the matter of economy is concerned, I think that if we take the statistics we will find that the North-West Council has been most extravagant in the administration of its affairs under the present system. I have figures here to prove this, but I shall not bother the House with them now. I believe that the Territories would be much better governed, by a Local Legislature having full powers the same as any other Province in Canada.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

Committee rose.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Speaker leaves the Chair I would like to make a suggestion to the First Minister. I think it would be desirable that he should intimate to the House what Bills he proposes to drop, and those which he intends to go on with. If they hope to close the Session within a few days it would very much facilitate business, if we knew exactly what work we have to do.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite right. I shall be able by three o'clock to-morrow to inform the House what measures we propose to drop.

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again in Committee on Bill (No. 76) to amend the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 52, respecting the North-West Territories.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is merely a re-enactment of the clause in the original Bill. It provides 22 councillors instead of 21. It also provides for the legal experts. Sub-section 3 makes the duration of the legislative Assembly 3 years instead of 2.

On section 4,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a re-enactment providing that the Legislative Assembly shall meet at least once in every year. The only alterations in the clause in the late Act is that we take out the power of veto,—the power of rejecting Bills.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. By the way has the Lieutenant Governor the right to dissolve this Legislative Assembly?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have no such provision.

Mr. WATSON.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They sit for three years whether or not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, for three years.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I would like to ask if it is the understanding that the North-West Council will have the power to establish the ballot?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes. They have the power to regulate their own elections. They have it now.

On section 7,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is an alteration of the voting power.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why should we not confer on these people the blessing of having an Indian suffrage which we have ourselves?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Whenever the Legislature of the North-West ask for it I suppose we will give it.

Mr. LAURIER. They have been asking for responsible government?

Mr. MITCHELL. If I recollect, when we were passing the Franchise Bill, the right hon. gentleman was very anxious to extend the suffrage to the Indians for members of this Parliament. We are creating a constitution for a local Parliament, and we must remember that a very large proportion of the population of that country consists of Indians, and if they are intelligent enough to vote for members of this Assembly, they ought to be intelligent enough to vote for members of a Local Legislature.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). They do not vote for this Assembly.

Mr. MITCHELL. If they do not, we need not thank the right hon. Premier or the hon. gentleman who supports him. It was because of the public opinion which was brought to bear on this Parliament that that was stopped. But it seems that the hon. First Minister has changed his views in regard to giving Indian votes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not at all. If the hon. gentleman looks at the Act, he will see that the Indians of the North-West were excepted. There are Indians and Indians, some wild and some tame. However, we will not go into that discussion.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is pretty hard to draw the distinction. I have met some Indians in the North-West who are quite as intelligent and quite as capable of judging of their own interests and of the difference between right and wrong as a good many Indians whom the hon. gentleman enfranchised.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This section provides that a person is not entitled to vote until he has resided for twelve months in the North West Territories and three months in the electoral district in which he votes.

Mr. WATSON. Would it not be well to provide that enfranchised Indians must be out of the treaty for a certain time before they are allowed to vote? The Manitoba Legislature have thought it necessary to make the time three years.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would not like to impose that limit, otherwise I might become liable to the hostile remarks of the third party. The Indian, when enfranchised, is a white man to all intents and purposes, and if he has lived in the Territories for twelve months and in the electoral district for three months, I do not see why he should not have the right to vote. Suppose an Indian from the Six Nations at Brantford goes up and settles in the North-West, why should he not have a vote as well as a white man? Indians are not being enfranchised in the North-West at all, as the hon. gentleman knows.

Mr. WATSON. We do not know how soon they may be. We know that many Indians in Manitoba have become entitled to vote under the Provincial law, and I think the Indians in Manitoba are probably just as intelligent as the Indians in the North-West Territories; yet the Legislature of Manitoba, which knows these Indians, does not believe they should be entitled to vote, owing to their lack of intelligence and knowledge of the public questions of the day, until they have been enfranchised for three years.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I think the hon. gentleman should blush when he asks any Parliament to adopt the franchise of Manitoba, which has disfranchised the most intelligent people in that Province.

Mr. WATSON. I take it that the people of Manitoba know their own business best, as to who are entitled to vote. Before this passes, I wish to move the following as subsection 1 of section 7:—

Whenever a poll has been granted, the same shall be opened at the hour of 9 o'clock in the forenoon, and kept open until 5 o'clock in the afternoon of the day fixed for holding it, and the votes at the several polling stations shall be given on that day, and by ballot.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That would render it impossible to have an election at all next summer.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I am rather astonished at the position taken by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson). He reproved my hon. friend from East Assiniboia for what he said by stating that the people of Manitoba knew what was best for themselves; and yet the hon. gentleman, before six o'clock, had the presumption to say that he knew better what was wanted by the people of the North-West Territories than the gentlemen who were elected to represent them last year.

Mr. WATSON. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman approves of open voting, because but for that he would not likely be in the House to-day. The hon. gentleman obtained a small majority by means of a certain circular, and I am not surprised at his wanting open voting. But the ballot has been adopted in every Province and by the Dominion in Dominion elections, and I wish to see that principle extend to the North-West. The people themselves have asked for the ballot through the North-West Council, and knowing the injustice which was done to them in the last election by their not having it, I feel it my duty to move that they should get it.

Mr. MACDOWALL. So far as I am concerned, I do not object in the least to the ballot. Possibly, if we had had the ballot in the North-West, I should have had a larger majority than I had, and I believe that if the tactics adopted in opposing me had been more truthful, probably I should have had a majority of 600 or 700, instead of a majority which was more than double that which the hon. gentleman had under the ballot. Therefore, I am perfectly justified in taking the stand I do.

Amendment negatived on division: Yeas, 35; Nays, 63.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The second clause is an alteration to the law. It provides for the deposit of a sum of money by any candidate, just as in the Provinces, of $100. It is found there, as elsewhere, that when there is no such security for bond fides on the part of candidates, all kinds of men are proposed, to the great detriment of the public.

Mr. WILSON. Is it intended by this clause that only a person who is entitled to vote in an electoral division can be a candidate, or may a non-resident be a candidate?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am glad the hon. member has drawn my attention to this. I will amend the clause so as to make it read: "Any British subject, by birth or naturalisation, shall be eligible for nomination or election."

Mr. MULOCK. I think we ought not to require that deposit of $100 in the North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is more money there than anywhere else.

Mr. MULOCK. It is questionable whether it is a wise provision to be in any Act. At all events, I think the minimum amount of votes that would lead to forfeiture is too great. It means a fine of $100 on a candidate for not being sufficiently popular.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is half the sum we are obliged to deposit.

Mr. MULOCK. It is too much. I do not think we should put this embargo on the candidatures of men in the North-West. All you want is evidence that a candidate is in good faith. I would suggest to make the minimum number of votes a quarter instead of a half. Supposing a successful candidate gets 500 votes the man who got 125 votes would lose his deposit under this clause, and yet the fact that he got that number is good evidence of his bond fide.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The argument of my hon. friend would go to repeal our present law. That is the law in all the Provinces, and the deposit required is $200. It was thought $100 would be quite sufficient for the purpose, and I do not think we should alter the proportion. It is of some importance that our laws should be as much as possible assimilated.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman is slightly in error. In Ontario there is a deposit of $50 required, but there is no forfeiture. Now, this election is for a Legislature which has not the dignity of a Local Legislature proper. I think that the sum should be less. I understand that the only object is to obtain bond fide candidates?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. Then, if the candidate gets a quarter as many votes as those given to the successful candidate, I think he must be supposed to be a bona fide candidate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is the same in the Dominion elections. It is with the same object.

Mr. MULOCK. But now we are providing for local representation. This is not in reference to the Dominion Parliament, and I think that the precedent set by the great Province of Ontario, if it were adopted, would not be productive of any evil.

Mr. BOWELL. There have been some there who have lost their deposit.

Mr. MULOCK. Name one.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They lose their deposit in Ontario.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not think so, but I speak subject to correction.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I thought so.

Mr. MULOCK. If the hon. gentleman will not accept the suggestion, I will move that, instead of $100, the deposit shall be $50.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I do not think the only object to be attained is in reference to the candidate himself. An election always causes a great deal of cost to the people, and the object of having a deposit is to prevent a dispute when a case arises in which a candidate has nothing to deposit.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). There are many farmers who have not so much money to spare, and I think the amount should be $50. I have known five candidates to run for one constituency. While I should like to see a deposit provided for, I think $50 is quite sufficient, because farmers have not very much money to spare in that way.

Mr. DAVIS (Alberta). I think that anyone who cannot put up $100 for a candidature for the North-West Council should be left at home.

Mr. WATSON. If there is a popular man in a constituency, who might otherwise be elected, he should not be compelled to put up that amount of money.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If he is a popular man, it will be put up for him.

Mr. WATSON. I do not think that is a proper system. If the candidate is a good man, he should not be called upon to put up such an amount, because that might deprive the constituency of obtaining the services of the most popular candidate. I think $50 would be quite sufficient.

Mr. MULOCK. I am surprised that hon. gentlemen here, who are supposed to represent the interests of the North West, should upon this occasion take such a position as to seek to stifle the expression of the views of the people of the North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman may laugh or seek to stifle the expression of that opinion, but I think the people of the North-West know the value of the men they have there. For us to say that every candidate for the North-West Council is to put up a deposit of $100, is, as my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson) has said, to place the candidate in a position of losing his deposit if he does not poll the proper proportion of votes. He has to take his chance. This is a restriction upon the choice of the people. It is provided that this shall be a condition before a man can become a candidate, and it is pro tanto limiting the choice of the people. It is simply that these hon. gentlemen have decided that no one is competent to represent the people in the North-West Council unless he possesses $100. Why do they not go further, and say, as was once proposed by a member from British Columbia, that the deposit shall be $500, which shall go to the successful candidate? That would only be going a little further than the present suggestion. Hon. gentlemen opposite have not attempted to advance a single argument in favor of this proposal, but they say they have decided upon this arbitrary sum.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You are speaking against your own amendment.

Mr. MULOCK. I am not doing anything of the kind. In Ontario you cannot see any case in which the law has been defeated by any bogus candidature, and it is very unlikely that such a thing will happen in the North-West if you require a deposit of $50. But the hon. gentleman has no right to say that I want to prevent the $50 deposit. I know that whatever is proposed on the other side is likely to be carried. This has ceased to be a deliberative assembly, and, therefore, I know that my proposition will be voted down as usual.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think myself there is a good deal to be said against allowing anyone who chooses to put a community to the expense of an election, but I do not think that a money penalty is the proper plan to be adopted in such a case. I think that anyone who can get a certain number of his fellow-citizens to nominate him should be allowed to come forward, and particularly in regard to a case of this kind in the North-West Territories, where the Council is very much like the municipal councils elsewhere. I think that twenty-five or some other number of electors should be allowed to nominate a candidate as they please, and I am clear that this would be as effective a barrier against useless nominations as the imposition of the deposit of even $50.

Mr. MACDOWALL. Supposing 25 voters were to nominate a candidate and he should get 200 votes where there were 2,000 electors, the constituency would be put to a great deal of trouble and expense although the candidate would only get one-tenth of the total vote.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is entirely an innovation. Hon. gentlemen are always quoting England. I should like to know when it was proposed in the English Parliament that any man standing as a member of Parliament should be fined in a certain sum if he did not poll a certain number of votes. It is an innovation, and a very bad innovation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was an innovation introduced by the Government of the hon. member for East York, of which the hon. gentleman was a member, requiring a deposit, by the candidate. However, as the hon. gentleman has lived a great many years since then, perhaps he has seen reason to change his mind.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, I have. I do not recollect the fact, but if so I think we did make a mistake, and the result has shown it.

Mr. WATSON. In the case of a man running for mayor of a city there is no deposit required, and I do not think we should adopt a different principle here.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I was in favor of a small deposit, but I got a letter from one of my constituents who desired to have the deposit raised to $200 so as to keep other parties from offering, and the moment I heard that, I changed my mind. But I still think a small deposit would be better, because I know that in certain elections in the North-West, men have run who had no business to be candidates, and materially affected the elections.

On section 9,

Mr. WATSON. I do not know whether the North-West members have considered this clause, but I think there should be a majority of the elected members present to form a quorum, because they have not a right to vote, and you might have a very small vote on a very important question. I think there should always be a majority of the elected members to form a quorum.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I believe there will generally be a majority of elected members attending the Council. If they do not attend the Council, I imagine there is no use of their being elected.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The only object for putting the clause in is to have a majority as soon as possible, and as often as possible, and to prevent the breaking up of the sitting for want of a majority. I think when we provide that a majority of the whole Council, which will be 25, can form a quorum, the Council can sit, whether the other nominated members are there or not. In this House, although we have 215 members, I think 19 members and the Speaker form a quorum. I do not think we ought to keep too large a majority. As my hon. friend has just said, the majority will, in 999 cases out of a 1,000, be there.

On section 12,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move that we insert a clause between 12 and 13, to be called 11½, as follows:—

The Government shall select from among the elected members of the Legislative Assembly, four persons to act as an advisory council in matters of finance, who shall severally hold office during pleasure; and the Lieutenant Governor shall preside at all sittings of such advisory council and have a right to vote as a member thereof, and shall have also a casting vote in case of a tie.

I will explain this when the Speaker is in the Chair.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If I understand this correctly, the Lieutenant Governor and one faithful adherent would always control this council of four.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think in such a case the council should certainly be enlarged to five, because under this arrangement the Lieutenant Governor might, for form's sake, appoint a couple of opponents, but himself and one aide de camp would rule the roost altogether.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is supposed that the Lieutenant Governor will be anxious not to come into collision with the legislative body over which he presides. I take it that every Lieutenant Governor will try to get on as well as possible. One of my hon. friends opposite, I think the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall), suggested four instead of three. I have no objection to make it four.

Mr. WATSON. I suggest that that clause should be changed, and that these three or four members of the advisory board should be elected by the members of the Council. I think certainly the members here from the North-West will agree with my suggestion. If there is to be an advisory board, they should be elected by the votes of that Legislature.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman will see that it is of very great importance that the Governor in Council should be in accord with his advisory Council. If this advisory Council in their recommendations in matters of finance, does not meet the views of the Legislative Assembly, the Assembly has the best means in the world of expressing their ideas that it is not a proper advisory Council, by simply refusing to assent to the financial propositions made. Now, I do not think that my hon. friends from the North-West will throw such an apple of discord into the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. WATSON. The First Minister states that it is of the utmost importance that these three men should be in accord with the Governor in Council. Now, I think that is a wrong principle altogether. It is simply a one-man power; it is intended for that, and it will be that, if this Act is carried into force. It is absurd to suppose that the people are going to be satisfied with a man who may use arbitrary powers, and select three men who may act against the general interest of the whole North-West. I say that the Local Legislature should have power to elect the three members who will advise the Lieutenant Governor. But the First Minister says: No, it is of the utmost importance that those men should be in accord with the Lieutenant Governor. That is simply one-man power.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman has just heard from those who have the most right to speak for the people of the North-West, that the people did not want responsible government.

Mr. WATSON. But what does the North-West Council say?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Including the nominated ministers?

Mr. WATSON. Yes, exactly. They represent to the Government and advise the Government here to give full representative government to the North-West. Under the proposed arrangement the Government here will be able to control the whole arrangements in the North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You could not have a better body.

Mr. WATSON. This will be the case because the Lieutenant Governor and the advisory board will consult the Government here and follow their advice.

Mr. MACDOWALL. The hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) has spoken several times and has informed the House that the members from the North-West do not represent the views of the people there, and he has tried to impress on the House that he alone of all representatives from the North-West submits the correct views of the opinions held by the people there. For my part I do not object to the hon. gentleman thinking so if he would only represent the true views of the people. I have endeavored to do so by presenting a petition sent here, showing that the people of the North-West do not wish to have responsible government.

Mr. WATSON. What about the petition from the North-West Council?

Mr. MACDOWALL. The district I represent has only one representative on the North-West Council. He voted against responsible government, and the district has sustained his vote. I, therefore, believe I am representing the true feelings of the people there. Then the hon. gentleman went on to try and prove that I did not represent the feelings of the people of the North-West, and he read a circular letter from W. V. MacLise, which was addressed to certain half-breeds there, and he thought he would be able to prove that I brought undue influence to bear.

Mr. WATSON. I did not say you did.

Mr. MACDOWALL. The hon. gentleman endeavored to convey the impression that I had brought undue influence to bear on the half-breeds to induce them to vote for me. I happen to have a letter dated 29th March, 1887, from the same W. V. MacLise. It was addressed to Mr. Burbidge, who was then Deputy Minister of Justice, and the writer says:

"PRINCE ALBERT, N.-W.T., CANADA, 29th March, 1887.

"SIR,—Reference has been made to the fact that I have written a circular letter to certain electors here, in some of the eastern papers, mentioning the fact that I am Crown prosecutor, &c., and as it takes a month to hear from here by letter, I should prefer that the hon. the Minister, if called upon to make any statement regarding the matter and desirous to know what the facts were, should be previously informed. The facts are as stated hereunder:

"In my ordinary business as a practitioner I was retained by about 150 claimants to act as their solicitor in obtaining compensation for losses in consequence of the rebellion in 1885, and as such proved those claims before the Commission who sat here last spring, and will not cease to be their solicitor until their claims are respectively adjusted. When the elections were over in the east the promoters and managers of the Globe (Toronto) and Free Press (Winnipeg) newspapers endeavored by a series of telegrams to the Reformers here to deceive the electors of this district as to the result of such elections. As such solicitor I took a line of action indicated in the letter they have intercepted and partly published, one copy of which I enclose. It is a letter from solicitor to client and nothing more—unless a sort of bombshell amongst Grit lies.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"W. V. MACLISE."

This letter was dated from Prince Albert on 29th March, 1887, and addressed to Mr. Burbidge the late Deputy Minister of Justice.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is it an official letter to the department?

Mr. MACDOWALL. It is not an official letter at all. He gives this note:

"(Confidential.)

"PRINCE ALBERT, Tuesday, 2nd March, 1887.

"DEAR SIR,—I deem it to be part of my duty as solicitor for your rebellion losses to inform you in reference to the Federal elections that on Friday last I telegraphed my agents in Ottawa, who are attending to your interests there, the following message:

"Please wire me what seems the real result of elections so far."

"And yesterday I received by telegram the following reply:

"Government majority so far is 12. 204 constituencies have so far elected members; there remain 11 more to be held. It may be assumed that the Government will receive at last half of these."

"Now, in conclusion, I will remind you that by section 51 of the Representation Act each vote is cast openly and his vote goes one for or against the Government in the poll books; and by section 61 of same Act the poll books must be forwarded to Ottawa after the election here. As it is certain that the Government is not defeated, the losses will be paid this next Session—yours I trust with the rest.

"Your obedient servant,

"WILLIAM V. MACLISE."

Mr. MULLOCK. Who signed the telegram to him?

Mr. MACDOWALL. He does not say—his Ottawa agents.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Was the letter written to the department?

Mr. MACDOWALL. The hon. gentleman has asked me if the letter was written to the department. I have already said that the letter was written to Mr. Burbidge. It is all right so long as it got in my hands and I am able to read it here. It is from Mr. MacIise, and it shows clearly the position the Grit party assumed at the election at that time. You would hardly believe what they did: you would have had to have been present at their meetings to know it. They talked rank treason. And what is more—hon. gentleman know whether they told the truth or not when on the very night of the election, which was held on the 15th March, I think, they stated that Mr. Blake had a majority of 6. Do you suppose they were stating the truth?

An hon. MEMBER. Was that treason?

Mr. MACDOWALL. An hon. gentleman asks was that treason. I say it was treason to the truth if nothing else.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman by what process he came into possession of a letter to the department.

Mr. THOMPSON. I handed it to the hon. gentleman about 10 minutes ago.

An hon. MEMBER. It has not strengthened his case.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I think it has strengthened my case. The simple fact is this: that Mr. MacIise was a solicitor, that he wrote to his clients a letter which he thought was in the interests of his clients, but I am not responsible for the view that any solicitor in my district holds. If I am responsible for that, probably the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) is responsible for the views that his opponents hold.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Have the claims been paid?

Mr. MACDOWALL. None of those claims have been paid, and none of the men voted for me, so that it really had no effect.

An hon. MEMBER. Is that treason?

Mr. MACDOWALL. I shall tell the hon. gentleman what the treason was. I believe that anything that is contrary to the views I have heard expressed by the hon. the leader of the Opposition, as well as by the right hon. the leader of the Government, as to the true position of a law-abiding Canadian, must be treason more or less to the constitution. The secretary of the Grit Association in Toronto (Mr. Preston), I believe, sent Mr. Lemieux and Mr. Campeau up from Montreal to my constituency, and those gentlemen held meetings among the French half-breeds of Batoche. I can assure the House that those gentlemen simply talked rank treason. They talked treason against the present constitution of the country, for they told the people to hold themselves in readiness to overthrow that constitution when they were called upon. Would you not call that treason? At all events I would call it treason.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if Mr. MacIise was not one of his supporters?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Do not answer.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I am very sorry that this has descended to a political discussion, and I hope that every member in this House will assist to give us the best law for the North-West. I think that the Government may be trusted to appoint a good man as Lieutenant Governor for the North-West Territories, and I have no doubt that the ends of justice will be served. I have every confidence in the Government to do that, and I do not believe the Government will pursue any course detrimental to the interests of the North-West.

Mr. MACDOWALL.

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) if he would be kind enough to allow this public document to be laid on the Table? It is a public document, and I might tell the Minister of Justice that it belongs to me as much as it belongs to him, and that it belongs to every member in this House and to the country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It will appear in Hansard I have no doubt.

Mr. MULOCK. But I wish to see it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You cannot see it now.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. the First Minister can refuse it if he likes. He can be as tyrannical as he likes, but I propose to insist on my rights and on the rights of this House and this country to see that public document. We are willing to assist him in the progress of the debate and the work of the House, but we are not prepared on his whim to allow matters to proceed just as he in his pleasure may think fit. That document is ours as much as it is his. He has the trust of it for the country. The hon. the First Minister shakes his head. He may shake his head as much as he likes, but I want to know how does it come that public records are to be placed in the hands of one member of this House and not in the hands of another? How is it public documents are available for some members of the House and not for others?

An hon. MEMBER. You would steal it.

Mr. MULOCK. Well, let us have a chance of looking at it anyway. I do not know we are likely to do any great harm by looking at the document. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who read that document, was not Mr. MacIise one of his supporters during the campaign he has referred to?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Do not answer.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman's silence gives consent. He refuses to answer, because he knows very well that the writer of that letter was his active man in the election, and if I am correctly informed, and I speak subject to correction, this gentleman was his agent in the election. Was he not?

Mr. MACDOWALL. The hon. gentleman is altogether wrong. I believe the writer of the letter did vote for me, and I value his vote as highly as that of any other elector, but the gentleman was not my agent and he did not represent me in any way whatever.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman will not contradict the statement that the writer of the letter was an active worker for him?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MULOCK. Hon. gentlemen opposite have allowed this letter to be read. They have allowed the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) to give his charges against this party, and now they will try to stifle any attempt to reply to anything he says. This is what they consider British fair play. This is the party of loyalty and the party that is so glad to see justice done. This is how they are stifling public discussion in the country. The writer of that letter, I am credibly informed, was one of the hon. gentleman's active supporters in this campaign. Does he deny it?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Do not answer.

Mr. MULOCK. Why not answer? Was he never at one of your public meetings?

Mr. MACDOWALL. He was at one of Mr. Laird's meetings.

Mr. MULOCK. He was at one of your public meetings, and anyone who can put two and two together can see that the hon. member, through himself or his friend, inspired the wording of that letter in order to coerce these men. The First Minister may laugh; probably he is so innocent that he cannot see through those things. What about the seed grain? What about issuing licenses for seed grain in other constituencies, and having the applicants for that seed grain going to the candidate to get an order on the Government for the seed grain which was to grow food for him? Is that not coercion, and is that not intimidation of the worst kind? I maintain that there could be no greater interference with the rights of the people. You may talk of treason, but it is the rankest of treason for the Government to interfere with the free will of the people, and now the Government refuse to give this House the possession of a public document. I do not hold the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) responsible. I acquit him of responsibility, because he has done it in the presence of his chief here, and he was told to withhold from the public a public document which was read in the Parliament of the people. The whole Government have now to take the responsibility of trying to suppress this document, which they brought to-night for certain purposes. Now that it has done, to a certain extent, mischief, they are afraid to show it to the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is a new way to suppress a document to read it.

An hon. MEMBER. There is more in that document.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As to laying it on the Table, I shall tell my hon. friend to satisfy him, that it shall be laid on the Table to-morrow.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I want to know if the hon. gentleman had any reference to me about giving orders for seed grain?

Mr. MULLOCK. No, I did not refer to you.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). Well, that is all right.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Chairman, I ask your ruling on a point of order. I ask whether an hon. gentleman in this House is allowed to read a public document without laying it on the Table?

The CHAIRMAN. I was not present. Who read the document?

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) read the document.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the rule is not applicable to ordinary members of the House, but only to members of the Government.

Mr. LAURIER. A member of the Government has said in this House that he supplied that document to the gentleman who read it. This is the way in which the Government evades the Rules of the House then?

Mr. THOMPSON. I handed the paper to the hon. member who used it and who read it. I desire it shall be published in Hansard. It shall be laid on the Table and every member of the House shall have a certified copy of the original afterwards, but until it goes into Hansard I do not propose to lay it on the Table.

Mr. LAURIER. That is simply evading the Rules of the House, and I hold that, in all justice and fairness, it should be laid on the Table of the House now.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the course pursued by the Government is a most extraordinary one. If they desire to promote the progress of business, I think they could do it very much by laying that paper on the Table. Is there any reason why it should not be laid on the Table? The hon. member for Assiniboia has professed to read it. I presume the hon. gentleman is inspired by too much honor to have read it unfairly, and I presume that he read what was in it; and as you, Mr. Chairman, have decided that documents which are read in Parliament can only be demanding to be laid on the Table when they are read by a member of the Government, I say this is a document read by a member of the Government, because the hon. Minister of Justice gave it to the hon. gentleman to be read. If that is not practically being read by a member of the Government, I should like to know what is? Why should the Government desire to conceal anything in this matter? Is there any secret reason? We are told that it will be laid on the Table to-morrow. Is it to be to-morrow all the time in reference to public business? Why should it not be laid on the Table to-day, while the subject is being discussed, so that every hon. member can see it? I think it is nothing short of a quibble for hon. gentlemen to say that they will publish it in Hansard to-morrow, and keep it back when we desire to have it in the discussion of this important Bill. Sir, we had better postpone this Bill until to-morrow, or until Hansard comes in. Was it for political effect that that document was read and immediately handed back to the hon. Minister of Justice? I do not know any other reason why it was sent back by my hon. friend to the hon. Minister of Justice, who gets up and tells us that he will not lay it on the Table now. Sir, it is an arbitrary exercise of the voting power which the Government possess; but although they possess that, they do not possess the power of muzzling men who are determined that their rights shall be respected; and it is one of our rights to have that document laid on the Table, so that we may judge as to whether or not it was fairly and rightly read. The suspicion created by this refusal is that there is something in this document which the Government are afraid to publish and that the public ought to know.

Mr. EDGAR. I believe you have decided, Mr. Chairman, that a document read by a private member may not be laid on the Table, but that a document read by a member of the Government must be laid on the Table. Now, the hon. Minister of Justice got up and stated that he had handed that letter to the hon. member a few minutes before to be read. Therefore, I say it was read by the hon. Minister of Justice, according to his own statement, and I ask your ruling whether he should not now lay it on the Table.

Mr. THOMPSON. I submit that the question is decided, and the hon. gentleman is out of order in raising it again.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand that the document was not cited by the hon. Minister of Justice, but was introduced by a private member.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not going to dispute your ruling, but I will point out to the House that this is a quibble and an evasion of a well-understood principle. It is obviously for the convenience of debate that when any document belonging to the Government, who are trustees of the people and are not entitled to treat public documents as belonging to themselves privately, is quoted in this House, whether by a Minister or a private member, any member of the House should be allowed to inspect it. It is a most preposterous thing that members of the Government should supply supporters of theirs with public documents, and then refuse to allow them to be inspected by other members. They may have the technical rule of the law on their side, but it is a disgraceful and a cowardly evasion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think that language is called for.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is very applicable, though.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman should not interrupt me. I do not think the language is at all called for. This cannot, in the strict sense of the word, be called a public document. What is the fact? This man, as counsel or solicitor for a number of people up there, thought it his duty to write this letter. Then, when he hears that charges may be brought against him—and I understand that charges were brought against him in the press—for having written this letter, he writes an explanatory letter to the Department of Justice, showing that he wrote that letter in the interests of his clients. The charge has been brought against my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowell) that this letter was used by him, or with his cognisance, for electioneering purposes. My hon. friend denied it most explicitly, and the hon. Minister of Justice handed him that letter to show that the charge brought against him by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) was unfounded. He read it, and I have no doubt he read it correctly. There can be no object in concealing that paper. The fact of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice handing it to the hon. gentleman shows that there was no desire for concealment; on the contrary, it was for the purpose of having it published that he handed it to my hon. friend. The House has heard it read to-night, and I have stated that it will be laid on the Table to-morrow and let us get on. The hon. member for South Oxford says the technical rule is in our favor. If it be so there is an end of it; the decision is in our favor and it must be upheld, because it is the correct decision.

Mr. LAURIER. I would not question the decision of the Chair, but according to the rules of equity and justice it is not a correct decision. I leave it to the hon. gentleman himself. The hon. Minister of Justice could not read that letter himself without placing it on the Table of the House, and will we be told that he could evade the rule by placing it in the hands of a private member? The hon. gentleman says it is not a public document. What is a public document? As I understand, this gentleman, as an agent of the Government, a Crown prosecutor at Prince Albert, and paid in that capacity, thinks it his duty to write to the hon. Minister of Justice explaining some conduct of his.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He is afraid of being punished for having written that letter.

Mr. LAURIER. Then it is an archive of the Government, and it is brought here for the purpose of being used in this House. If it is not a public document I should like to know what it is. That letter goes to show how important it is that they should have the ballot system.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think if the hon. First Minister desires to expedite the passage of this Bill he will yield to the desire which has been expressed to have that letter placed on the Table at once. The argument of the hon. First Minister was not so much against placing the letter there as against placing it there at this time. The hon. gentleman says, let us have our own time and we will place the letter on the Table; that is to say, he will not place it there to-night, as he should do, according to parliamentary rules, but he is going to exercise the authority he possesses, and place it there to-morrow. Now, it is hardly treating the House fairly; it is a captious way of dealing with an important question. The hon. gentleman has raised a question of principle, and it is that question we are debating. I have not the slightest doubt that the hon. member read that letter correctly, and that we will gain no further information by its being placed on the Table; but at the same time there is an important principle involved which I think this House should maintain, and that is that the letter should be placed here on the Table, and that the Government should not exercise their discretion as to whether they should lay it on the Table or not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman says there is a principle involved. The principle is this: that the House should have full communication of all official documents that have been quoted. But the House is not in session, the House is not sitting at this moment. We are in committee, and documents can only properly be laid on the Table when the Speaker is in the Chair; that is the rule, and no hon. gentleman for a moment ventures to assert or even insinuate that the document has not been read in full. Do let us go on, and at the proper time, Mr. Speaker being in the Chair, the paper will be laid on the Table. You cannot have it now, because it is contrary to the ruling of the Chair and parliamentary practice.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I find in the Journals of the House (7th April, 1880,) that when Mr. Cockburn, in an important debate, read extracts from certain official papers, Mr. Mackenzie, member for the electoral district of Lambton, raised the point of order that official papers, when cited by an hon. member, ought to be laid on the Table of the House, and the Speaker ruled that the point of order was well taken, and that the papers cited by the hon. members for Essex and Northumberland should be placed in the possession of the House.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman says that this document is not in a sense a public document, and then goes on to explain that it was a letter written by an employé of the Government to the Government, explaining his conduct as a public officer.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, not as public officer.

Mr. MULOCK. He was afraid that he was going to be discharged or punished for having taken some part in the election, and wrote an official letter explaining his conduct as a public officer, and it is this document that the hon. the Minister of Justice stated across the floor, unreservedly and unqualifiedly, was of public record. Now the First Minister differs from the hon. the Minister of Justice, and also states circumstances that show the correctness of the attitude of the hon. the Minister of Justice. The suppression of this document certainly is suspicious. The hon. gentleman who read it did not read it all. And I will tell you wherein he did not read it all. He did not read the name of the person to whom the telegram was directed, nor the name of the person who sent the telegram in reply. Who was the Ottawa agent that was communicated with by Maclise? And who sent the reply to him? Who was that gentleman? And what was the date of the telegram to the Ottawa agent? And what was the date of the telegram in reply?

Mr. THOMPSON. The evasion is altogether on the other side of the House. The circumstances are these: Before dinner the hon. member for Marquette read an article from the Toronto Globe containing this circular, which is appended to Mr. Maclise's letter.

Mr. WATSON. It was from a Winnipeg paper.

Mr. THOMPSON. A Winnipeg paper. As published at the time the article was intended to convey the impression that Maclise had written that circular in the service of the Government, countenanced by the Government, and as an officer of the Government, because he held the office of Crown prosecutor. The hon. member for Marquette before dinner read the circular of Mr. Maclise, and intimated that the hon. member from Prince Albert owed his election to this House to the influence and coercion which that hon. gentleman and Mr. Maclise on his behalf had exercised in the constituency. After this letter appeared in the Winnipeg papers, and was quoted in some of the papers east of Winnipeg, Mr. Maclise felt that the imputation being that he had written and circulated it as a servant of the Government and while he held the office of Crown prosecutor, he would be called to question for having made such a use of his position, wrote a letter for the purpose of showing that he had acted in the interest of his own clients, who, all through the North-West, were threatened with the loss of the claims they had against the Government unless they voted against the Government of Sir John Macdonald, which, they were told, had already been ejected from power. It was in order to remove that impression from the minds of his own clients that Mr. MacIise wrote that letter, and it was circulated without the slightest knowledge of my department or the slightest connivance of myself. After dinner, having the letter, I placed it in the hands of the hon. member from Prince Albert, not knowing whether he was aware of the circumstances which the letter explained. I was making no evasion whatever. If I had thought it necessary to read the letter, I would have read it myself and taken the responsibility. But I thought it right that the hon. gentleman should be informed of the circumstances under which Mr. MacIise sent the circular, and I placed the letter in his hands for the purpose of giving him that information. It was a matter of indifference to me whether the hon. gentleman read the letter to the House or not. The letter was entirely on the hon. member's own business, and related to his own explanation in reply to the charge of the hon. member for Marquette, and I did not hand it to him for the purpose of evading any rule of the House or of getting on the pages of Hansard a document which I was not bound to lay on the Table. I leave to the hon. gentleman who read the letter to say whether he read it in full or withheld any part of it. I do not believe that he withheld a syllable. I think the House is ready to accept the hon. gentleman's statement to the fullest extent, and this shout about the evasion of the rule is raised to cover up the retreat of the hon. member for Marquette after the insinuation made by him before dinner.

Mr. EDGAR. I would like, after the statement made by the hon. Minister of Justice as to the circumstances under which that document came before this House, through his hands and from his department, to know whether your ruling, Sir, should not be changed?

The CHAIRMAN. The ruling is equally applicable under the circumstances as stated.

Mr. LAURIER. I am quite willing to accept the statement of the hon. the Minister of Justice, but at the same time I hold that, under the circumstances, the Government should not have entrenched themselves behind a document, and then refuse to produce it.

Mr. THOMPSON. There is no evasion; it will be laid on the Table before the Bill reaches the final stage.

Mr. LAURIER. While I accept the hon. gentleman's statement, the fact remains that we have not the letter.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not suppose the Minister of Justice or the First Minister wishes to have a second discussion brought up on this question to-morrow. Now the object of laying this paper on the Table is to have the question disposed of at once. Had it been laid on the Table the discussion would have been over, and the Bill would have passed.

Mr. WATSON. Although I did not wish to provoke a discussion, I am pleased that it should have arisen and that the truthfulness of that letter has been substantiated by a letter from Mr. MacIise himself and by the hon. the Minister of Justice, because it was contended that, by placing such a circular in circulation, the Government tried to make the people believe that unless they supported the powers that be, they would not be entitled to their just rights, and thus tried to bring influence to bear on the general public of the North-West to vote for this Government. There is no doubt in the mind of anyone that the intention of Mr. MacIise was to advance the interest of this Government in the Saskatchewan District. The First Minister apparently felt that the electors would support the Government candidate if they thought the Government was sustained. I find that the First Minister sent a telegram to his friend the member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) stating that the Government were sustained, and no doubt he expected that for that reason the people would vote for that hon. gentleman.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. WATSON. They say "hear, hear," which shows that they approve of that policy. I think it is to be regretted that anyone representing a popular vote in a constituency should not have equal rights with anybody opposed to him who happens to support the Ministry of the day. I find that the following telegram was sent:—

"To N. F. DAVIN.

"OTTAWA, 3rd March.

"It is reported here that the Grits are still endeavoring to deceive the people of the North West by stating that the Government has not been sustained at the polls. It is everywhere conceded that 53 supporters of the Ministry have been elected in Ontario, 14 in Nova Scotia, 9 in New Brunswick, 4 in Manitoba, and one in British Columbia, while of the 65 members from the Province of Quebec we are certain to be supported by 37 and probably 38. In all there are already 118 Ministerialists and 86 Opposition, a majority of 31. We confidently expect to carry the eleven remaining constituencies, which will make our majority 43, but supposing we failed to carry any seat in which a Grit is running our majority would still be 21.

"JOHN A. MACDONALD."

Mr. HICKEY. Was not that true?

Mr. WATSON. It may be true, but I say it was sent to that member with the intention that it should affect the electors and induce them to vote for him as a supporter of the Government. That carries out what I say, that the ballot should be put in force in the North-West. The Government are in a position at present to use undue influence with the early settlers in the North-West, because those settlers have to get their claims decided by the Government of the day.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. What has the hon. gentleman to say as to the telegram which was sent by Mr. Blake to British Columbia?

Mr. MULOCK. Read it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have not got it here.

Mr. MACDOWALL. Mr. Preston, of the Liberal Association of Ontario, telegraphed up that Mr. Blake had a majority of six, and it was necessary for us to find out from our friends what was the true state of the case, and so we got that telegram from the leader of the Government, and it proved to be true. I will leave it to the hon. gentleman to say whether that can be said of the telegram which he received from Mr. Preston.

Mr. WATSON. It is clear that the hon. the First Minister sent the same telegram to the member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) as he did to the member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin).

Mr. MACDOWALL. He was asked to give the information.

Mr. WATSON. No doubt they asked him for that telegram, because they thought it might have the effect of changing some few votes in their interest. I do not care what telegram Mr. Blake may have sent or Mr. Preston may have sent. What I was insisting upon was that the people should be allowed to record their votes by ballot irrespective of any pressure on the part of the Government. I say now, as I said before, that in East Assiniboia the son of the Premier was shown there as the son of a crofter, and it was stated: "If you elect Mr. Perley it will be helping the crofters."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I may tell the hon. gentleman that my grandfather was a crofter.

Mr. WATSON. It will be seen that every possible means was used to influence the electors. They even went back to the right hon. gentleman's grandfather in order to influence a vote.

Mr. EDGAR. The objection which we took to the publication of that letter just before the election was not as to whether the Government had succeeded or not. Everyone has a perfect right to state his views in regard to that. What we objected to was that the writer stated that the voting was open, when the voting would appear on the poll-book, and that would be sent down to Ottawa; and that the land claims of these voters would be decided upon that. I think the House would hardly believe that any Government officials would before an election have distributed such a letter to intimidate the voters, but it appears that that was a genuine document, and if anything was required to show how the elections in the North-West were conducted, it is shown by the fathering of that document by the Government. After all, the promises which were made did not amount to much, because, according to the hon. member for Alberta, none of those claims were paid, and why were they not paid? Because, according to the hon. member, the parties voted against him.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I never gave any such reason. I trust, the hon. gentleman, when he quotes me again, will quote me correctly. As I understand, the Government had nothing whatever to do with the settlement or payment of these claims. A commission was appointed, and that commission enquired into the claims and decided simply as justice dictated to them the way in which they should be settled.

Mr. LISTER. What were the books wanted at Ottawa for? I must say that I am glad to hear now where the Premier really was born. He has stated to Irishmen that his grandfather was an Irishman, and to Welshmen he has stated that he was a Welshman, and now he says that his grandfather was a Scotch crofter. The hon. gentleman has referred to Mr. Blake's telegram, and, if he had been elected under that, he would have been a Grit to-day.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I deny that.

Mr. LISTER. He is one of those who are Conservatives for revenue. I say it is a most disingenuous thing for the Minister of Justice and the First Minister to have kept back as they have done the contents of that letter. I notice that there were several other papers appended to the document while the hon. gentleman was reading it, and I should like to ask him whether he read those. He is silent. He is afraid to answer.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I am not afraid to answer. I stated before that I read everything that was there, and I do not think it necessary to state that for the third time.

Mr. LISTER. Upon what possible principle is it that the Government refuse to produce the letter? Now, the hon. gentleman leading the Government is a great man on telegrams. It appears that he telegraphed up to this gentleman that the Government had a majority, and that they would have a much larger majority. Sir, I remember that that hon. gentleman telegraphed once before, a telegram that has become historical. "Send me another ten thousand, last time of asking."

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the course pursued by the Minister of Justice is unparalleled in my experience of parliamentary legislation. I think it is a matter of fair play to this House that when a document has been used for party purposes, or personal purposes, or for the purpose of the legislation under the consideration of the House, that the party using that document should lay it upon the Table of the House. The Premier says that he will give it to the House to-morrow; the Minister of Justice says he will give it at the next stage of the Bill. Now, if there is not some covert reason for keeping that document back, of which this committee should be put in possession, why are they so anxious to get on with the business, with the

Mr. WATSON.

Premier even entreating us to get on with the Bill. Some hon. gentleman on the other side spoke of delays arising from this side. The delays in this case have arisen from the other side of the House, from the disingenuous way in which the right hon. gentleman and his friends are suppressing a public document, which has been used for some purpose in this House, and are preventing the gentlemen on this side of the House from having an opportunity of seeing it. I will occupy no further time in discussing this matter, but I will let the country judge as to whether there has been any motive for suppressing that letter. I will not impute a motive to any of them, but I will say that the circumstances are very suspicious, and I will place upon them the responsibility before the country of pursuing the course they have adopted.

Mr. LANDERKIN. In this matter there is a vital principle at stake. It is the question whether the ordinary Rules of the House are going to be observed by the Government, and whether in a matter, of debate, the Government are going to extend one rule to those who support them and another to those who oppose them. After the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowell) read the letter, I sent over a page and asked to let me see it, as I was very anxious to see the letter, and he sent me word that he had sent it to the Minister of Justice.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I did not send you word.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I then sent over to the Minister of Justice and asked if he would have the kindness to allow me to see the letter after he had read it; and he returned the answer to the page, "I will not." I believe that the hon. gentleman has been on the bench, I believe that he is distinguished for some courtesy, and that was the official statement of the Minister of Justice—not in writing, the page gave me the answer. I wonder the Minister of Justice did not shudder when he spoke in such terms as that to a page, returning such a contemptuous answer to an hon. member of the House. Now, there is a principle of the highest importance at stake. Are the Government to come before the people of this country and say that they will pursue a course so cowardly, I will say so contemptible, I will say so unworthy of any Government—

The CHAIRMAN. Order, that is going too far.

Mr. LANDERKIN. When the Government give the letter to one member and refuse it to another, I ask you if there is any word in the English language that will more fitly characterise their conduct than the word "cowardly"? I have no hesitation in designating it by that word, I regard it to be that. The hon. member for Saskatchewan read the letter, and we believe, from the action of the Minister of Justice, that he has not read all of this letter; we believe that if he had done so, he would have had no hesitation in allowing it to be laid on the Table. There should be the same rule meted out to every member in the conduct of debate. This letter that was read was issued by one who was in the employ of the Government, a Crown prosecutor, and he says they have claims and that the poll books should be returned and would be examined in Ottawa—one of the worst forms of coercion that the Government could possibly adopt, and something that this House should stamp out, emanating as it does from the Department of Justice to the people where an election was being held. If that is the way the Minister of Justice holds the scales of justice, God help the country, I say.

Mr. McMULLEN. I must express my regret that the production of this letter should have been refused at this particular stage of the Session. If I know anything of the feelings of hon. members on this side of the House, it is that we should proceed as rapidly as possible with the business before us. It is exceedingly unfortunate that the Minister of Justice should so far have stepped out of his way to help an hon. member as to place in his hands documents of a private character, belonging to his department. I know that since this House met, orders have been voted for returns, including copies of telegrams that members on this side of the House want to use in the course of discussion, in connection with items in which they are interested, of interest both to the House and country, and up to this time those returns have not been brought down. But the hon. gentleman, a friend of the Minister of Justice, goes to him at a moment when he thinks that he can, by the use of private documents, correct his own position, and the Minister of Justice at once hands out to him a document that he is permitted to read before this House, to use in his own interest, and then, when another private member wishes to have the same privileges accorded to him, the Minister of Justice returns the very curt answer: "I will not." Now, if this is the mode in which hon. gentlemen intend to adopt for the expedition of business, with the expectation that the close of the Session will be reached speedily, I think it is an exceedingly unwise course. If the Government are disposed to give the Opposition the privilege of examining that document, why should they not place it upon the Table? Now, I should like very much to see this discussion brought to a close, but I must say that, in my humble opinion, a very imprudent act has been committed by the Minister of Justice, in bringing up, at this late period, a question that has caused a good deal of discussion, and that possibly may last for some time. I think if the Minister of Justice was willing to place the document before the House, we might get on with the business much more rapidly. If he does not do so, and we are forced, as a matter of justice, to defend the rights of a member on this side, to enjoy the same privileges as hon. members supporting the Government, then we may sit here all night, and by to-morrow we will have made no progress.

On section 13,

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). Will the advisory board consult with the Lieutenant Governor as to the expenditure of money?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In all matters of finance.

On section 18,

Mr. LAURIER. I wish to consider the question which arises with respect to dual representation. I suppose it is not his intention that members of this House should be members of the North-West Council.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That point has not been raised.

Mr. LAURIER. I raise it now. I apprehend it is not intended, nor do I think it is desirable that members of this House should be members of that Council or that Council should be members of this House. We should, I think, preserve the same principle we adopted long ago of having no dual representation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think that is the principle. I think the principle is, that when the Legislature of any Province prevents any member of the Dominion Parliament from being elected to the Provincial Legislature, any member of the Provincial Legislature is ineligible for election to this Parliament.

Mr. LAURIER. I will read a section from the old election law:

"No person who on the day of nomination at any election for the House of Commons is a member of any Legislative Council or any Legislative Assembly of any Province now included or which shall hereafter be included in the Dominion of Canada shall be a legal member of the House of Commons."

It is true you are not establishing a Province, but you are establishing a Legislature in a Territory. I contend that, unless you have some such provision inserted in this Act, a member of that Council might be a member of this House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That would be so.

Mr. LAURIER. Is that the object of the hon. gentleman?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The point never occurred to me. There was no such provision in the old Act?

Mr. LAURIER. I call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will consider it before the third reading.

On section 17, sub-section 2,

Mr. MACDOWALL. I desire to call attention to the fact that every vehicle in which intoxicating liquor is carried is liable to seizure. On the Canadian Pacific Railway line they have refreshment cars; I want to know whether the farmers' cart and the railway train are in the same position or not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The object of the clause is very well known to the hon. gentleman. Spirits or intoxicating liquors are brought across the line by carts and teams of different kinds. If they are caught the liquors are seized and destroyed; and in order to put an end to this kind of thing, it is provided that the vehicle and team are liable to seizure, and this will have a great effect against smuggling. The same principle prevails throughout the customs law. Whenever any goods are seized the vehicle in which they are smuggled is likewise seized. This is a check on smuggling, and the bringing into the North-West of forty-rod whiskey from across the line; and I know the hon. gentleman will say it is a very just provision.

Mr. MACDOWALL. Although this may prevail in the customs law, I am afraid it is a kind of law that only applies to the North-West. I believe that the feeling of the people there is in favor of abolishing the system prevailing in the North-West just now, because it interferes with the liberty of the subject in a manner in which it is not interfered with in any other part of Canada, in that it is exceedingly arbitrary. A mounted policeman can enter a house to search for liquor, merely on suspicion, or almost without suspicion. If liquor is found there the man in whose premises it is found has to prove that it was brought into the Territory under a permit, and he has to produce that permit, and prove that it is the permit on which the liquor in question was imported. I believe a great many of the troubles arising in the North-West are caused by this liquor law. It is generally contended by advocates of temperance that crime and trouble are occasioned by the use of alcoholic liquors, but a great deal of the crime and trouble in the North-West is caused by the fact that the people are prevented from having that liberty which is accorded to every Canadian in every other part of the country, except, perhaps, Keewatin. I hope soon to see the liquor law amended. I should like to move an amendment to this Bill, but I am afraid, in the present temper of the House, I should not meet very much success. I would, therefore, say that when the new North-West Council are elected I trust they will advocate the placing of the settlement of this question in the hands of the people of the North-West, because they are sufficiently intelligent to be able to decide what is best in their own interests.

Mr. WATSON. Speaking in the interests of the North-West, I consider it is extremely important that this law should be enforced and enforced strictly. The Indians are the wards of the Government, and every means in the power of the Government should be used to prevent liquor from going into the Territories, because part finds its way to the Indians. This clause might operate in a very arbitrary manner on innocent parties. Liquor is frequently taken into the Territories packed in goods and even in a sack of flour, and with our present system of carrying freight in carts and by teams, innocent freighters might have their teams and carts confiscated because they were carrying contraband goods, of which they had no knowledge.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman must know that this clause is just the same as under the old Act, and no more rigid than the customs law, which provides that vehicles carrying contraband goods are seized. Many vessels are seized, the owners of which are quite ignorant of the fact that their vessel has been made the means of carrying smuggled goods. The best mode of appealing in those cases is to the Customs Department, and if there is evidence of innocence on the part of the owner of the property, the vessel or vehicle is always released. This is a very important clause in the interests of sobriety and temperance. The hon. gentleman can, I think, trust the department with not allowing innocent men to be punished. It is all very well to say that an innocent trader may have his horses and waggon seized, but if he is a man of common sense he will, when this law passes, ascertain whether he is carrying intoxicating liquors or not on board his cart. If by any unfortunate accident it should be found that he unintentionally had carried liquor, his vehicle will be released. This rule always has been carried out.

Mr. EDGAR. I think the House would very much incline to support the Government in the direction indicated by the First Minister just now. I cannot help drawing the attention of the House to the statement which was made by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Perley) before six o'clock, about the sale of liquor in the North-West. As I understand it the hon. gentleman said that one of the great evils they complained of in the North-West was the giving of a permit to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to sell liquor on the railway, and that that was a great and growing evil. I think it is very important for us to know something more about that from the Government. Is it possible that the Canadian Pacific Railway, as a corporation, is given a permit to import and to sell liquor in the North-West Territories? Although the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has a great many powers under its charter, I have never seen that they were licensed to buy and sell liquor in the North-West or anywhere else. I cannot conceive it possible that such a thing is done. What will be the result if it is the case? A great corporate body like the Canadian Pacific Railway Company given that power, they must transmit it to their servants and employés, and one class of servants is as much entitled to do that business for them as the other. When you consider that from one end of the country to the other every employé of the Canadian Pacific Railway is entitled, under that permit, to deal in liquors, you will see the extent of the abuse. It surely cannot be so, and the hon. gentleman must be mistaken. I suppose that, on the recommendation of the Canadian Pacific Railway, at certain places along the line, some reputable and respectable and responsible person is allowed to have those permits. As the matter was raised by one of the hon. members from the North-West, I think it is of sufficient importance to have an explanation from the Government as to how it is.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The system of permits is established by the original Act, and permits have been issued ever since. As an hon. member who knows the facts and who comes from that portion of the country has stated, I believe that the issue of permits has been carried on with great discretion and great care, and that the consequence of that care and discretion is that there is such an absence of intoxicants in that country, and that smuggling is so very great. If the permit system had been used without discretion, and if permits had been granted promiscuously, there would not be the amount of smuggling there is.

Mr. WATSON.

Mr. EDGAR. There may be an exception in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the Canadian Pacific Railway has broken the law they are liable to be punished as well as any person else, or any other railway company. I do not myself know whether there has been anything sold in the way of intoxicants on the Canadian Pacific Railway. I believe from what I am informed that wine and beer is being sold to the passengers crossing the continent. I have been told that is the case, but whether by permit or not I do not know. The hon. gentleman will see that, perhaps, there is a good deal of excuse for any such practice obtaining, because if people are obliged to keep to cold water crossing from Toronto to Vancouver, they would be very apt to go south of the line. I cannot speak as to that from personal knowledge.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia) I wish to give an explanation as to what the hon. member has said. I did not say that there were intoxicating liquors sold, but I said that wine and beer were sold on the dining cars, not at stations but during meal hours along the line, and I believe that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has a license for that purpose. They get a permit from the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories to sell passing through the Territories. I think that we ought to discuss this liquor question a little here, because the people all over the North-West Territories would like to have some change made in it. There is fault found that the Canadian Pacific Railway should have license for wine and beer, whilst hotels in the country cannot have it; and that if a gentleman is coming from Ottawa, Toronto or Montreal, England, or anywhere else, he ought to be subject to the same restraint in respect to liquor that a man in that country is subject to. I think there is good sense in that. Whilst the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was building across that country, and the Indians, were wild on the plains, it was a matter of importance to have a law to keep the liquor away from the Indians and there is no doubt the law has served a good purpose, both during the construction of the road and in respect to the Indians. That country is now civilised. It has a system of local government, and law and order are established, and the people think they ought to have the right to say whether they should have entire prohibition or a proper and well regulated license system. That is the opinion of all parties, both of persons who like liquor occasionally and those who do not like it at all. They think the time has arrived when the Government ought to take some steps to get the opinion of the people on this matter, and all parties are willing to abide by the vote whether it be for liquor or no liquor as the case may be. I think the time has come when the Government should make some provisions of that kind, because the people have the impression that the Government will take the recommendation of the newly elected Council in reference to this matter, and if that is so, it will make a terrible election in that country. It will make one of the bitterest contests in an election campaign that ever was known in Canada if the idea goes abroad that the Government will take the advice of the new Council with reference to the liquor system in future of the North-West Territories. I think it would be well on the day of the election, if we had two more candidates in the shape of "license" and "prohibition." It will not cost a cent and the people will carry out the result of that vote whatever it may be. If a man goes into a poll and votes for Mr. A. let him make a mark, and let the returning officer say: "Do you vote for prohibition or liquor? Let a mark be made opposite which he may vote for and then we shall have the voice of the people on this question. There is great dissatisfaction in that country at the liquor system. There are a great many people who come there and think they ought to have beer, and if a man who enjoys those luxuries, as he may call them, cannot pass through the country without having it on the Canadian Pacific Railway the people think it is a denial of justice to them that they should be subject to this restraint. I wish the Government would settle this matter now, so that it would be settled before the present election. If it is there will be no strife and we will get good men. It will not be the liquor crowd in one place and the prohibition men in another place, that will elect the candidate. By this means which I have pointed out, you will get the voice of the people as to prohibition or high license and the result will be a great benefit to the country.

Mr. COOK. Before dinner the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat stated that when permits were granted by the Lieutenant Governor for a quantity of liquor, the persons receiving the permits usually smuggled in double the quantity. I think the Government should take action in this matter, and I think that action should be to abolish the system of granting permits by the Lieutenant Governor or anybody else to traffic in liquor, and they should put a prohibitory law into force in the North-West Territories. The very fact of the hon. gentleman's statement shows that a great deal of liquor is brought into the country illicitly, because of the authority of the Lieutenant Governor to issue permits.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I do not say that that is the case in every instance; I say that it is often the case that a man brings in more than he has a permit for.

Mr. COOK. There are respectable men everywhere, and you will find them in the North-West. It was the intention when this Act was passed that the country should be under prohibition, and that the permit system should be used only to a very limited extent; but that system has been abused very much indeed, and I think the Government should now pass a prohibitory liquor law for the Territories.

Mr. DAVIS (Alberta). I take exception to the remarks the hon. gentleman has just made. I think he knows very little about the North-West. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman ever takes a drink himself, or whether he is strictly cold water, but that makes no difference. When he gets up and talks about what the people of the North-West should do, I think he should first find out what the feelings of the people of the North-West are. I represent the district of Alberta, where I have lived for nineteen years. We are supposed to be a total prohibition country. Of course, we can, by applying to the Lieutenant Governor and paying half a dollar a gallon, get a permit for two gallons. You must remember that the North-West Territories are enclosed by different countries. There is British Columbia on our west, the United States on our south, and Manitoba on our east, where free whiskey flows in every direction. Now, I would like to know why the people of the North-West Territories are to be deprived of the same liberties that the rest of the people of Canada enjoy. I would like to see a clause in this Bill to give the people of the North-West Territories a chance to say whether they will have total prohibition or high license, whether they will have liquor or not. The permit system is neither one thing nor the other; in fact, it is a delusion, and an encouragement to people to make money out of smuggling whiskey and selling it. I can show you twenty-five saloons in the town of Calgary where you can buy a drink for 25 cents just as you can in Ottawa. I think we should have the right to derive a revenue from these places. I believe in making every man who wants to sell whiskey in the North-West pay $1,000 for a license. In that way you can control the trade; but at present you can neither control nor stop it. I would like to see an amendment made to this 17th section such as my hon. friend from Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) had this evening.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this clause, that the present system is unsatisfactory, and that the permit system, which is absolutely necessary to a certain extent, ought to be amended so as to prevent the evils which have been described. I quite agree with my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Perley) in everything he has said, except in his proposition that, at the same time that an election takes place for members to the Legislative Assembly, a vote should be taken as to whether there should be prohibition or high license in the North-West Territories. The trouble has been in this country, as well as elsewhere, that politics have been mixed up a good deal with the moral question, and I should be very sorry to see it recognised at any political election that there should be also the moral question: Are you in favor of prohibition or high license? I think the two subjects, one referring to politics and the other to morals, should be kept quite separate. As I have already stated several times, the object of the Government has been to make as few changes as possible. This election will be the first election of members to the North-West Assembly without the mixture of any Crown nominees. When that body meets, it will be invited—it will be its duty without any invitation—to consider that question as well as all other questions affecting the interests of the North-West Territories. The people there, I am sure, are fully alive to the importance of their first real election of a Legislature for themselves, and they will choose men fully charged to consider the question of prohibition and the question of high license, as well as all other questions connected with the welfare of that country. Therefore I have abstained from dealing with that subject until we have received something like an authoritative statement of what the wishes of the representatives of the people to be elected under this law are.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). Will the recommendation of that Council, with respect to the liquor question, be acted upon by the Government in another year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It depends upon what that recommendation is. It will be submitted to Parliament for its judgment. The legislation of that body will be laid before Parliament at its next Session, whenever they pass any laws on that or any other subject, and the action of this House upon it will be invited.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Am I to understand from what has been stated that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have power to get a permit from the Lieutenant Governor to sell liquors on their trains?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot speak positively. I do not know that as a fact, as the question has never been brought before me; but I understand they have a permit to give wine and beer in the dining car at meal time to those who are travelling across the continent.

Committee rose and reported progress.

House resolved itself into committee to consider resolution (p. 1174) respecting the indemnity and travelling expenses to be paid to elected members of the Legislative Assembly of the North-West Territories, and salaries to be paid to officers thereof and others.

Resolution considered in Committee; reported, and referred to committee on Bill (No. 76) respecting the North-West Territories.

House again resolved itself into committee.

Bill reported.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT.

House again resolved into committee on Bill (No. 24) to amend and consolidate the Railway Act.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. THOMPSON. I propose to go back to section 194, which relates to fencing. It was not the wish of the committee, I am sure, that the clause should be made so stringent as to necessitate the fencing of railways in wholly unorganised and unsettled parts of the country, such as the North-West Territories, and I move to prefix these words to the section:

When a municipal corporation for any township has been organised and the whole or any portion has been sub-divided into lots for settlement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the Minister got the consent of the member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) to this amendment?

Mr. THOMPSON. I think that carries out the views of members who were in favor of that proposal, and at the same time does not make it too stringent.

Mr. EDGAR. I quite concur in the idea that it is hardly fair to ask the railway to fence where there are no settlers, and that would be the effect of the amendments which were carried the other evening, but, if there are no settlers, there will not be any cattle, and, therefore, there could not be any cattle killed.

Mr. THOMPSON. But that amendment made it obligatory on the company to fence.

Mr. EDGAR. It made them liable for damages.

Mr. THOMPSON. There is a severe penalty under which they were liable if they did not fence.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I know that in New Brunswick, on what are known as ranche lands, some people farm right up to the railway, and are willing to relieve the company from damage. I think, if the owners request the company in writing not to fence the lands, they should not be under any obligation to fence. I know many cases where the parties have requested the company not to fence.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). In moving my amendment, I had no desire to impose any unnecessary conditions upon the railway companies which are showing so much enterprise and doing so much good in this country, and I think the amendment suggested by the Minister of Justice will accomplish what I endeavored to attain, and at the same time will reduce the impositions upon the railway companies within narrower limits than I submitted the other night, and, if the committee is agreeable, I am quite willing to let it go in that way.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire also to refer to section 200. Sections 200 and 201 were re-drafted from the old Act, but the concluding words of section 201 really belong to section 200:

Persons for whose use farm crossings are furnished, shall keep the gates on each side of the railway closed when not in use, and no person whose cattle are killed by any train, owing to the non-observance of this section, shall have any right of action in respect of the cattle being so killed.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). As I understand this, if any cattle are killed it exonerates the company from all responsibility. It matters not whether the party owning the crossing leaves the gate open or not, if by any neglect a railway employé leaves them open the farmer is refused compensation for the loss of the cattle.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman will see that the Act necessarily imposes the duty on the person for whose use and benefit the farm crossing is made, to keep the gates closed; and the natural result of that is that if he fails to perform his duty, he shall not have right of action for his cattle if they are killed in consequence. The Act distinctly imposes that duty on him and I take it the result at common law would be, that he would be held guilty of contributory negligence, and therefore not entitled to recover.

Mr. EDGAR. What my hon. friend means is, supposing the gates are opened by an employé of the company, the clause would still exonerate the company from liability. But I fancy the doctrine of contributory negligence would cover that case.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I move that the following be added as a sub-section to section 250:—

2. Any person being on a train, and liable to pay a fare, who fraudulently evades payment thereof by giving a false answer, or by travelling beyond the place to which he has paid, or by leaving the train without paying, shall be liable to a penalty of not less than five dollars nor more than twenty dollars, to be recovered under the provisions of the Summary Convictions Act:

3. No person shall loiter or remain without right within any car or station house of any railway company, or upon a platform or ground adjoining any station, after being requested to leave the same by any conductor, station master, or other officer of the company, and any person refusing to leave after such request, shall be liable to a penalty of not less than two dollars and not more than ten dollars, to be recovered in like manner;

4. Every railway company shall cause to be posted up in a conspicuous place at the stations on their line a printed copy of the foregoing sub-section;

5. All fines and penalties imposed and recovered under this section shall be paid to the railway company upon whose railway or ground the offence has been committed.

I may say this is taken from the Railway Act of Maine, and my attention has been called to it. Parties go on a train and try to evade payment, or try to go further than they have paid for. In regard to loitering, people connected with railways have spoken to me on the subject, and complain that parties loiter around the station who have no business to be there, and become a nuisance. I have adopted this section from the Railway Act of the State of Maine, which is a very good Act, and I think the same provision exists in several other States. At present there is no power to prevent parties from hanging around the station. There is a provision that this sub-section shall be printed and posted up in a conspicuous place in every station.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems to me that would be a very arbitrary rule, because it may be applied, if the station master was so disposed, offensively against parties who are waiting for a train.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Those persons have a right to be there.

Mr. SPROULE. What would constitute a right?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Any person who has had any experience in regard to railways, has seen people loitering about the station and interfering with the officials. A station is not a public place, and, therefore, they are trespassers. It is only persons who have business with the company who have any right to be there. I am acquainted with a railway partly in Maine and partly in New Brunswick, and it has branches in the State of Maine. In the State of Maine the clause is in operation, and the company has experienced great difficulties in consequence of a different state of things prevailing on the New Brunswick side. I think also in other States there are similar provisions in the law to enable the railway companies to have control over their stations.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose a person offensive to the station master should be at the station, he might be ordered off the premises, and if he refused he might be brought up and fined, on the ground that he had no right there. What would constitute a right? He will not be doing any business with the station master or the company, but he might be merely expecting a friend to arrive by train.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The fact that he was expecting a friend by train would give him a right, a legal right I think.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not think so. I do not understand that a railway company does not own its own property the same as any other property owner. They choose to throw their stations open for the sake of doing business; at the same time they have the full rights of any property owner and can order a person off the premises. Under the proposed motion the most ignorant messenger or any one could order a person to withdraw on his construction as to whether a man had the right to be there or not.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Make it station master or conductor.

Mr. MULOCK. I would not give that right to any man. As to loitering, every man who goes to a train loiters. I hope the Minister of Justice will not allow such an amendment to be inserted in the Bill.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do not think the fines should go to the railway company, but to the municipalities in which the crime was committed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid the adoption of this amendment will lead to much unpleasantness. The hon. gentleman knows that at all our country stations there are many people who make a practice of going to the station to see trains arrive and depart, a practice which is, perhaps, a little inconvenient sometimes to passengers who have legitimate business at the station. While there is a certain amount of inconvenience arising, it would lead to ignorant officials displaying a little authority and producing more unpleasantness than advantage gained.

Amendment withdrawn.

On section 158,

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to call attention to this desistment clause, and I move the following section:—

In any case where the notice given improperly describes the land or materials intended to be taken, or if the company decides not to take the land or material mentioned in the notice, it may abandon the notice and all the proceedings therein, but they shall be liable to the person notified for all damage incurred by him in consequence of such notice, and the method of determining such costs shall be in the same manner as costs after the award, and the company may give him or any other person notice for land or material notwithstanding the abandonment of the former notice.

That confined the right to desistment in cases of lands being improperly described.

Mr. MULOCK. I appreciate the spirit of the amendment, but it is still capable of being abused. Suppose a railway company desires to expropriate a piece of land through a farm, and for some reason they imagine that the arbitration is running against the company, they may desist, and they may say we propose, instead of taking the land described in the notice, to take land a few inches on one side or the other. Such, of course, will bring them under the word "improperly." The company should know their business before they give their notices, and if having given notice there is any award, and if more is needed they should be required to enter upon a new arbitration for such additional land. Hence a company by a little management might escape any award by showing that they wanted land slightly different.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is impossible to frame a clause so as to prevent attempts to evade it, but I think we meet the point by the provisions given for reviewing the award of arbitrators and the facilities given for appeal. I intend to propose clauses requiring all the evidence to be taken in writing and filed with the officers of the court and to give the court complete control in regard to every matter before the arbitrators. Thus, if desistment be colorable and for the purpose of evading this provision, the company would be frustrated in their attempt. The committee, in doing away with this clause, would prevent the correction of a mere mistake or change, such as this. Along a certain line of country the company conclude they will require station grounds at a certain place. They give the notice and an arbitrator is appointed. It is true the proprietor is put to some expense, but the company finds, from the information they get subsequently, that it is desirable to have the station further on. I think, from the mere fact of having given a notice, and having put the proprietor to some little expense, which the company is willing to pay, they should not be obliged to take the land also.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the Minister think it would be right for the company to exercise this privilege to desist, merely for the sake of getting rid of their arbitrator?

Mr. THOMPSON. No.

Mr. MULOCK. Why not meet the case by allowing them to amend their description during the arbitration, or say that in cases such as desistment, they must appoint the same arbitrator? This would prevent the company from improperly desisting.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. This would hardly do as they might not go on with the arbitration for a year afterwards.

Mr. MULOCK. If they desist for the sake of correcting the description, why not say they may correct the description during the arbitration, the same as under a proceeding of law? Give them the power of amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON. That would hardly meet the case if they want to desist altogether and not take the lands.

Mr. MULOCK. If they want to desist altogether give them the power, but if they want to desist without good reasons I think the ordinary powers of amendment that are exercised now in all proceedings in court, should apply here, and there should be power to correct the description. This would prevent abuse.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. At the option of the company.

Mr. MULOCK. Give them power to make that amendment, but do not allow them to desist to escape from the arbitrator they have appointed.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think there is very much danger of frivolous alterations.

Mr. MULOCK. I have seen the evil arise, and companies desisting to escape from the arbitrator.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not see how it could be met. I think we had better let this clause pass and let the hon. member frame what he thinks to be a suitable amendment. We can then take it up again as a sub-section.

Mr. MULOCK. Thank you. I will do that.

On section 37,

Mr. THOMPSON. I desire to make an amendment in this section to meet the case which is mentioned by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Lovitt). The section provides that the warden of the township shall be ex officio director, and in some cases the special Act provides that instead of that being the case, the municipality should have the right to elect the director and take somebody other than the warden. An opinion has been given in the case that he referred me to where the warden and the person elected both took their seats on the board, and this was not intended by the Act. I propose to add those words in the section:

Unless in such special Act provision is made for the representation of such corporation on the board thereof.

On section 245,

Mr. THOMPSON. In this section, which we passed the other evening, there are several provisions for the company being compelled to use all proper appliances for the working of the railway. I move to add the following:—

And shall as well be liable to pay to all such persons as may be injured by non-compliance with this provision, or to their representatives, such damages as they may be legally entitled to notwithstanding any agreement to the contrary with regard to such persons.

Mr. EDGAR. To what will that apply ?

Mr. THOMPSON. This prevents persons contracting themselves out of their rights, that is all.

On section 83,

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. My attention has been called by a gentleman in Toronto, who knows a great deal about the transfer of shares, to the fact that directors should have power to sell, not only shares declared to be forfeited, but also unissued shares. A company may have an authorised capital of $5,000,000 and only $2,500,000 subscribed, and there may be $1,000,000 more authorised to be issued, which the directors have no power to sell under this clause. There was such a power in the old Act, but this clause changes it. I propose to add the following words :—

The directors may sell, either by public auction or sale, and in such manner and on such terms as to them seem meet, any shares so declared to be forfeited, or any unissued shares, and may pledge such forfeited or unissued shares or both for the payment of loans and advances.

And at the end of the clause I propose to add :

Provided that authority for such purpose and for the issue of such stock be first given at a special general meeting of the shareholders called for the purpose.

That is to prevent the contractors selling forfeited or unauthorised shares without authority.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. SHANLY. I wish to suggest to add to the third sub-section of section 243 the following :—

Provided, however, that nothing in this Act contained shall affect any contract between any railway company and person sending traffic by said railway by which such person agrees that, in consideration of a lower rate of freight charged, the company shall not be responsible as aforesaid.

Mr. LISTER. I would oppose that. Surely the Minister of Justice will not consent to it.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not see any objection to that. In the first place, I think that is the meaning of the clause as it stands. It is a clause compelling the trains to run at regular hours for the conveyance of passengers and goods, on the payment of the right tolls or fares, and that relates to the ordinary transactions of the company. The question has been raised, as the hon. gentleman knows, in the Province of Ontario, whether that applies to a special rate or not.

Mr. LISTER. It has been decided that it does apply to a special rate.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think Chief Justice Cameron considered that it did not apply to any special rate, and that he could not be bound by the decision previously given, because he thought it was given in error. This case does arise sometimes. A man having a perishable cargo, such as fruit or vegetables, which will not bear the ordinary rate because of the perishable nature, obtains a lower rate on the condition that the company shall not be liable for the loss caused by delay. In some of these cases a person is taken free of charge who has custody of those goods, and it seems to be hard to inflict the whole liability of the loss on the company.

Mr. LISTER. Words might be added to the section so as to provide especially for perishable property. I know of a case which happened on the Grand Trunk Railway recently, when they undertook to ship an engine from one point to another, and the contract provided specially that they should not be responsible for loss. Though the engine was destroyed through their negligence, they disputed the responsibility because of the special contract. I can understand that, when the freight is of a perishable nature, the company should be allowed to protect itself in the way the hon. gentleman speaks of, but where it is ordinary freight which the company contract to carry they should be held responsible for loss.

Mr. THOMPSON. But suppose the owner agrees to these conditions because he obtains a special rate ?

Mr. MULOCK. We are doing away with special rates.

Mr. THOMPSON. Not altogether. A very similar question arose before the House of Lords, and it was decided that the special contract was binding. In England a condition to be binding must be a reasonable condition, and that has been held to be a reasonable condition.

Mr. MULOCK. The weak point in this is that the Governor in Council will approve of a schedule of rates which will probably be higher than the company will ever collect. The rates they will levy will, I suppose, be lower than those in the schedule, and that will be called a special contract, so that they can contract themselves out of all liabilities in the future as they have done in the past.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. So they should.

Mr. MULOCK. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to say "rubbish."

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I did not say "rubbish."

Mr. MULOCK. I thought you did. I think it would be well to vary that clause.

Mr. THOMPSON. We might substitute the word "special" for "lower."

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Special contracts are made by steamboats and all carriers of every description, and, in England, contracts made with a company are held to be binding. If the party chooses to get the benefit of the lower rate, he has to take the responsibility.

Mr. SHANLY. It is a quid pro quo.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Yes, it is a quid pro quo.

Mr. LISTER. I do not think my hon. friend sees that the company will have a fixed rate, and everyone who wants to ship will have to make a contract by which the company will carry for less than that rate. Consequently, everyone who ships will be shipping by what they will call a special rate.

Mr. MULOCK. What is a special rate ? Under this Act there can be no discrimination. You cannot allow one rate to one man and another rate to another man under the same conditions, but I think that the clause which is now proposed puts the whole railway law back to the same position in which it has been for many years past, which practically affords no redress. Every shipper by steamboat knows that there is no contract in commercial life to-day which is more one sided than the contracts with steamboats to which my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Weldon) has referred. It is a standing grievance and it has come before my notice year after year. There is scarcely a loss which happens by sea of goods which were intended to be imported into Canada, in which there is any recovery of damage, simply because of this special clause.

Mr. DENISON. I think, if there is a fraction of reduction in the rates charged, the company could claim that that was a special rate. I think the clause had better be allowed to remain as it is.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. THOMPSON. I propose this as section 102 :

A company may, for the purpose of constructing or operating its railway, take possession of, use, or occupy lands of another company, with the approval of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, which approval said committee may give if they think it reasonable, but, in regard to any such application, the Railway Committee may make such provisions as to them appear just and in the public interest, and all the provisions of the law applicable to the taking of lands and the compensation therefor shall apply to these lands.

Mr. EDGAR. I thought it was agreed that you should limit the application of that to the former provisions which were within the powers of the Council.

Mr. THOMPSON. I attempted to do it the other night by defining it, but I think it was made more vague than it is now.

Mr. EDGAR. Then put in the compensation and leave out the limit. The Minister the other evening had drawn the clause, and it was carried.

Mr. THOMPSON. No, it was objected to, and I allowed it to stand. However I have no objection to put them in.

Mr. MULOCK. The way they work it is this: There is no finality to the rights of a company with regard to its own property. The Railway Committee to-day may say that one company may acquire certain lands of another company. Then the arbitration takes place, and thereupon the lands claimed pass to the other company. Then if the company that lost its lands happens to have sufficient influence with the Railway Committee, it may turn round and say that they want those lands back again, they want to grab the lands of another company, and so they come to the Railway Committee again and the committee makes the change; and so the thing may go on, and whenever a company happens to have the most influence, whichever company can get, for the time being, a decision from the Railway Committee in favor of its acquiring the lands of another, thereby acquires them upon going through the form of an arbitration. Under this clause it is possible for that Railway Committee to enable a railway company to expropriate all the lands of another company with the sanction of the committee; all that has to be done is to pay for them. Under this clause one company may absorb another. It is the most extensive power that could be used by any set of men, and I do not think you ought to endanger property by placing it in the power of any railway committee to say: You owned this property at one time, we now declare this property shall go to another person. The Minister of Justice may say the Railway Committee is not likely to sanction such an expropriation, but I do not think any set of men should be entrusted with power that ought not to be exercised. I think there should be some limitation for the protection of the company in possession.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think there can be no limitation further than the provisions adopted in this section. The mistake the hon. gentleman makes in his argument is in supposing that the Railway Committee is going to decide these matters on mere influence, and his argument is founded on the principle that it is unsafe to confer powers on anybody which may be improperly exercised. It would be just as reasonable for him to object to conferring jurisdiction on a court, on the ground that the court may decide in favor of the wrong party. It would be just as cogent for him to argue that we should not trust the arbitrators' decision on the value of the land, because they might decide the wrong amount. Now, these powers must, in the public interest, be given to somebody. At present no individual has a right of property, so final or absolute that it may not be expropriated by a railway company. Is there any reason why property which has been acquired by a railway company should be any more sacred than the right of an individual? Experience has shown everywhere that it is absolutely necessary that some one should occasionally have these powers. I admit they are very great powers. They must be entrusted to some tribunal to control, and we have thought that the Railway Committee is, for the present, the best tribunal to have such powers; if not, we must vest these powers in some other body of a like kind, as in the United States, where they are vested in three individuals and are absolutely incapable of review.

Mr. MULOCK. Would you object to putting in some words like these: "but so as not to materially interfere with the working of the company?"

Mr. THOMPSON. That would be very vague. For instance, one railway company desires to cross a lot which is occasionally used as a shunting ground by another company. It may be that a suitable shunting yard can be got in another place, but that the cost of the change is $10,000 or $15,000. Now, it would materially interfere with the operation of the other company when it does so to such an extent. But that is a matter capable of compensation, and the committee should not lose its jurisdiction in that case. It seems to me that wherever a matter is capable of compensation, the power should be capable of being exercised; and that where it is not, it is a case in which the Railway Committee clearly would exceed their duty if they ventured to authorise the expropriation.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. We must credit the Railway Committee with some common sense and common fairness, to see that no material injury is done to the company whose lands are sought.

Mr. SHANLY. I beg to move an addition to section 255. This section is designed to protect the travelling public against the danger of smoking and carrying explosives. I do not think it goes quite far enough, as I happen to have some experience of the great recklessness of men who are employed in carrying explosives. I have known a man who was in charge of explosives, to put a small quantity into his carpet bag and travel in a second class passenger car. I propose to add after the word "left" in the 17th line, the following:—

Or who shall carry or take on any railway train, such material as is mentioned above for the purpose of having the same carried by the said railway train.

It is to prevent any person from smuggling, as it were, such dangerous articles in his carpet bag, and I think it provides for greater safety.

Mr. EDGAR. It says no person shall carry.

Mr. THOMPSON. It says that no person shall carry, but it does not provide a penalty.

On section 277,

Mr. THOMPSON. At the end of line 11, we end with the word "but" and strike out the words "nothing in" and "and contained." It is done that this shall not affect the powers or rights which any company in Canada now possesses by virtue of any special Act. We add the word "Canada" after the words "United States of America."

Mr. MULOCK. Why not make it uniform?

Mr. THOMPSON. They have that right now. The original Railway Act was passed long ago and we have since given certain companies the power to hold stock in other companies. If we pass the prohibitory enactment at the present time it makes it unlawful for them to hold those securities. I propose to make it uniform and to apply to all, except those companies which already have those special rights.

Mr. MULOCK. You do not interfere with contracts already entered into.

Mr. THOMPSON. No.

Mr. MULOCK. I know of a case where a company has extensive powers, and if they are allowed to have those powers they might use them.

Mr. SHANLY. We gave a charter of that kind this Session.

Mr. MULOCK. I think you did an unwise thing. Unless you limit the exercise of that power to all companies, you might as well strike it out.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). You cannot take away the powers the companies have under a special Act.

Mr. EDGAR. I would like to call the attention of the committee to section 293, which I think is exceedingly unfair and severe. We have, in section 217, already given the railway companies power to inflict penalties not exceeding $40 upon any of their employes for breaking any of their regulations; and that is a sort of domestic arrangement which the company can carry out themselves. But here is a clause aimed at the officers and servants of the company, which provides that for breach of by-laws, rules or regulations, they shall be subject to punishment by fine or imprisonment or both, the fine not to exceed $400 or the imprisonment five years; and it is not necessary that the rule or regulation should even be served on them.

Mr. MULOCK. Will any court give the punishment in such a case?

Mr. EDGAR. We should not provide for it if the courts will not. This portion of the section should certainly be struck out: "or which has been posted up or open to his inspection in some place where his work or duties, or any of them, are to be performed." It is unheard of that a person should be liable to such penalties even when no damage is done. I do not know how that provision could have got into the statute, because I think it is exceedingly severe and unreasonable, and that the limitation of the fine and the imprisonment should be reduced.

Mr. MULOCK. I cannot agree with my hon. friend at all. There is no case that I have any recollection of in which any servant of a railway company has been unduly punished. On the contrary, they have escaped punishment in some cases where the most serious consequences have been the result of their disobedience of orders. Every employe of a railway company knows or ought to know that it is his duty to read the general regulations applicable to his conduct, and it ought not to be necessary to serve him personally with a copy of these rules as a person is served with a writ. The clause leaves it entirely in the discretion of the court to impose a nominal fine or a nominal sentence, and I am in favor of the most stringent regulations in order to enforce absolute obedience.

Mr. COCKBURN. I am in favor of the most stringent regulations being imposed on the servants of the railways, inasmuch as they hold, so to speak, our lives in their hands. At the same time, I cannot help thinking it unfair to demand the infliction of punishment on a railway servant simply because he did not happen to see some notice that might be posted up or open to his inspection. A placard of that kind might have been posted up and torn down. I think it is right, when a man enters the service of any company, that the regulations of the company should be handed to him. That is all I want done. If a man enters my service, I should acquaint him with the regulations under which he enters upon it, and every employe of the railroad should have handed to him a copy of the regulations by which he is to be guided, so that he will not have to find out in some dark corner some regulations which may have been passed and to which his attention has never been drawn, and for the infraction of which he is to be subjected to a penalty. I do not object to the penalties, because these men who hold the lives of people in their hands should be punished for non-observance of the regulations, but care should be taken to enable them to be fully acquainted with the regulations.

Mr. EDGAR. I move that the word I have quoted be struck out.

Mr. LISTER. I do not think that will impose any hardship on the company. The Grand Trunk Railway hand the men copies of the regulations.

Mr. MULOCK.

Mr. SPROULE. It will have this effect: that the servants of the company will confine their attention exclusively to the regulations handed them in connection with their own special business; but there are other duties to which these employes have to attend, and there are other regulations which it would be well for them to learn, and these they learn when the general regulations are posted up at every station. If you take this provision out of the law, a great many of them will not take any trouble to learn any regulations which do not specially apply to their own particular work, and will not make themselves acquainted with any regulations concerning which they have not been served with a particular notice.

Mr. MULOCK. I agree in the spirit of the remarks of the hon. member for Centro Toronto, but I think his suggestion will defeat the whole provision of this clause. Take the Grand Trunk Railway. There are about 5,000 hands employed on that road. Are you going to have a person going from end to end of the line serving notices and making affidavits and memo. of service, so as to be ready to prove a case against any of these men? If you can prove that the notice was posted up and accessible to the employes, you cast upon them the onus of knowing what these notices are. To prove personal service will impose on the company an obligation that they will not be able to perform. This section has been on the statute for years, and we have not yet heard of any case of hardship arising under it.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. An order is sent out from Mr. Hickson's office to the employes to do a certain thing. It is impossible to deliver that order to each of the whole 5,000, and it is posted up at all the stations along the line. The only way a general manager has of communicating with his employes is by posting up these notices.

Mr. EDGAR. Are not the employes paid every week, and what difficulty can there be in handing them on pay-day a copy of the regulations relating to their departments? The working men are entitled to that. Merely sticking up a general notice in some part of the work, is no notice to an employe of the complicated obligations under which he acts, and for the violation of which he is to be punished so severely. He is in the position of a galley slave. Even if he be not punished with the full force of the law, why insist on this provision?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The provision to post up notices should be retained. The chances are that in nine cases out of ten, it will be shown that the employes actually read the notice. I do not think any hardship can arise under this. It is the duty of the railway employe to acquaint himself with the regulations from day to day. With regard to the other amendment, it should be confined to cases where there has been actual loss of life or damage to property.

Mr. McNEILL. This is a very stringent clause, and we should give the employes every possible advantage and chance. There ought to be no difficulty in furnishing notices to the men. Trains are running over the lines daily, and at different stations copies of these notices can be left. It is very well to talk of 5,000 men, but you must take the different localities and you will find that there are not many men employed in each. Looking at the thing in gross, the number seems very large, but looking at it in detail, I do not see why there should be any difficulty at all. If you impose heavy penalties on the men, you ought to take every possible care that these men have received notice.

Mr. DESJARDINS. Does the hon. Minister of Justice know of any hardship or abuse under the law as it is?

Mr. THOMPSON. I have not heard of a single prosecution under it. The law appears to be harsh, but that it has been so long in operation without any particular hardship having arisen under it, is a strong argument in its favor. I think the fact that it has been in operation so long and has not operated harshly is strongly in its favor, but the strongest argument is that which has been brought forward by the hon. member for York. As to the impossibility of proving this years after, that can always be proved by the books of the company.

Mr. EDGAR. How could you prove that a man got his wages?

Mr. THOMPSON. By the receipts.

Mr. MULOCK. As a rule, they do not take receipts for wages.

Mr. THOMPSON. I should prefer to have the notice hung up in the place of business to giving a book containing the regulations, probably of three or four years before, which in all probability the man would not have the ability to study.

Mr. EDGAR. The company are bound to put up the regulations now.

Mr. SHANLY. I do not think this clause should be changed at all. It has stood upon the Statute-book for years, and has worked well. I think it is absolutely imperative that the rules and regulations should be posted up where everyone can see them. The regular rule which exists is that every foreman of a gang, every engine driver, and every man who has men under him, has the rules; but, in addition to that, every laboring man who has not the book in his pocket should have the opportunity of reading the posted rules and regulations. I think the clause ought to stand.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think this matter should receive the consideration of hon. members. It is true, as the member for North York (Mr. Mulock) says, there may be a difficulty in regard to the employes when they enter the service of the company as to the by-laws. I do not, however, apprehend the difficulties which he seems to apprehend in regard to the employes being supplied with the by-laws of the company. At each station they could be supplied with any new by-laws as they were issued, so that each employe would have an opportunity of studying and learning his duties, and so would be able to do his duty with a better regard to the protection of human life, as well as to the company itself, than if these regulations were merely posted up. I do not see that there will be any such difficulty as the Minister of Justice speaks of in regard to proving this, because, if it was the duty of some one man to deliver these, he could be called upon to prove it. A man may be employed to-day and sent on the road almost immediately, without any opportunity of learning the various by-laws and regulations and what is required of him, and he may be fined very heavily for some breach of those regulations. We know that the railway companies have the power in their own hands to punish their employes if they do not perform their duties efficiently. Perhaps it is because of this control which they possess that we have had no convictions under this law. Is it proper, however, for this Legislature to put a law upon the Statute-book which will do a violence to many thousands of laboring men in the country? If there have been no convictions, there is no necessity for the law, as the companies have the power to manage the men without this law, and it is a harsh law to place on the Statute-book. I hope the Minister of Justice will see his way clear to adopt the amendment that the by-laws shall be placed in the hands of the employes. Further on in the Bill a great injustice is done to the men. If there has been no damage done, no risk incurred, still, if any of the servants of the company has violated any of these by-laws or orders of the company, he is liable to a fine amounting to 30 days' pay, and not less than 15 days' pay.

Mr. MULOCK. We are not on that section.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). These two clauses will act very harshly and will do an injustice to the employes. It has not been shown that they are necessary for the protection of property or human life at all, and I think it is right that the proposition which has been made by various members to relax this stringent law should be carried out.

Mr. EDGAR. The Minister of Justice and other members have referred to the difficulty that might take place in requiring the company to serve the copies of the regulations on all the employes. If that is a real difficulty, we will have to go back and repeal clause 221, which provides for that very thing.

Mr. THOMPSON. That only relates to the duty of the officers as towards the company, and if the company failed to supply them with the regulations, they of course would fail to enforce the $10 penalty against these officers, but this is an indictable offence, and relates entirely to the public.

Mr. MULOCK. Section 295 is the material section dealing with wilful negligence and disobedience of orders. I do not agree with section 296, which I think is unnecessary and might go out. Section 295 provides that, where there has been wilful or negligent disobedience of orders and where there has been risk to life or property, the penalty shall ensue. Section 296 is of a different character altogether, and I should recommend that it should be dropped.

Amendment to strike out the following words from section 295, in line 12, after the word "him," negative on division:—

Which has been posted up or opened to his inspection in some place where his work or his duties, or any of them are to be performed.

Mr. EDGAR. I suppose it must have been a mistake that there was left out of this clause after the word "company" in the third line, the words "lawfully made and in force."

Mr. THOMPSON. I have no objection to add that.

Mr. MULOCK. I move that section 296 be dropped.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. EDGAR. I do not see why any person who is not an employe should be put in a much worse position, in one respect, than those who are. In section 295, all officers are guilty who "wilfully or negligently violate;" and here people are guilty whether they do it negligently or not. The words "wilfully or negligently" ought to be put in.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have no objection.

On section 368,

Mr. MULOCK. I suppose the Minister of Justice is aware of the decision of Justice Street, with regard to the Act of 1833, declaring these local works for the general advantage of Canada. I think he recently held that where a company was incorporated by provincial charter, and thereafter brought under Dominion jurisdiction by the legislation of 1883, the company no longer has the power of expropriation. I think the question may yet arise whether railways incorporated by the Parliament of Canada have the right of expropriation.

Mr. THOMPSON. I did not see that decision.

On section 310,

Mr. THOMPSON. After the passage of the two sections we have just adopted, there were enactments in the Province of Quebec and in the Province of Ontario, conferring borrowing powers on some of the provincial companies that were brought under the jurisdiction of this Parliament, and there is no doubt that they require validation. Some of the powers have been enacted on and mortgages given.

Mr. EDGAR. But this gave legislative power to the Governor General in Council?

Mr. THOMPSON. To proclaim them.

Mr. DENISON. In the absence of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), I wish to bring before the Committee Bill (No. 5) for the better protection of railway employés. I have had some alterations made so that the sections can come in as section 263a of the Railway Act, with various sub-sections. Sub-section number 2 is with respect to the packing of frogs. In this connection I desire to read a paragraph respecting an accident with frogs which occurred at Barrie, in the very constituency represented by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). The paragraph states:

"BARRIE, May 14.—A young man named William Elate, while engaged in shunting in the Grand Trunk Railway yard, at Allendale, this afternoon, got his foot caught in a frog and was run over and instantly killed. He is a single man, of about 23 years of age. His parents live in Manitoba."

This is further evidence, if such were required, that something should be done regarding the packing of frogs. I move the adoption of the following:—

The expression "packing" means a packing of wood or metal or some other equally substantial and solid material of not less than two inches in thickness, and which, where by this Act any space is required to be filled in, shall extend to within one and a-half inches of the crown of the rails in use on any such railway, shall be neatly fitted so as to come against the web of such rails, and shall be well and solidly fastened to the ties on which such rails are laid.

On every railway at all times after the coming into force of this Act, the space between the rails in each railway frog extending from the point thereof backward to where the heads of such rails are not less than five inches apart and the space between each wing rail and railway frog, and between each guard rail and any other rail fixed and used alongside thereof, and between all wing rails where no other rail intervenes, shall (save only where such space between the heads of any such wing rail and railway frog as aforesaid, or between any such guard rail and other rail fixed and used alongside thereof as aforesaid, or between the heads of any such wing rails where no other rail intervenes as aforesaid, is either less than one and three-quarters of an inch or more than five inches in width) be filled in with packing.

Mr. SHANLY. The filling of frogs should be kept entirely distinct from the filling of wing rails, and I, therefore, move in amendment the following:—

That as regards frogs, the space behind and in front of every railway, frog or crossing and between the fixed rails of any switch where such spaces are less than five inches in width, shall be filled with packing up to the underside of the head of the rail.

Mr. DENISON. I do not accept the amendment, because it is intended to save the employés a little work.

Mr. SHANLY. And it may save passengers from very serious accidents.

Mr. LISTER. Will the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly) explain how his amendment differs from the sub-section proposed?

Mr. DENISON. As I understand the amendment of the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly), it is the same as the provision proposed by the member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) in reference to the frogs, saving as to winter rule. He proposes that the frogs can be taken up in the winter time and the snow swept from end to end, with a broom, I suppose. It is only a question of a little extra work for the employés.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. SHANLY. I beg to move as follows:—

The space between any wing rail and any railway frog, and between the guard rail and the track rail alongside of it, shall be filled with packing at their splayed ends so that the whole splay shall be so filled with it where the width of the space between the rails is less than five inches; such packing not to reach higher than to the underside of the head of the rail, and provided that it may be in the discretion of the

Mr. THOMPSON.

Privy Council to allow such filling to be left out from the month of December to the month of April, both months inclusive.

He said: This has been taken from the statute of Ontario and has been found to work very well there. The only difference is that I leave it to the discretion of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council to say whether the packing can be taken out in the winter.

Mr. HICKEY. I should say that the wing rail is more dangerous than the frog, for if a man gets his foot between the wing rail and the main rail he is held there. If a man gets his foot in the frog he can take it out.

Mr. SHANLY. The foot would need to be very small to get between the wing rail.

Mr. EDGAR. I am of opinion that the danger will be just as great in the winter as in the summer time.

Mr. MULOCK. This is suspending the provisions of the Act for four months. I think the time could be made shorter than that.

Mr. SHANLY. It leaves it optional with the Railway Committee of the Privy Council.

Mr. MULOCK. The option would be sure to be availed of.

Mr. McNEILL. It seems difficult for members of this House who are not experts to deal with a question of this kind. Looking at it simply as one who is not an expert it seems to me that the packing might be made movable, so that the difficulty in the cleaning out of the snow could be got rid of by removing this packing. It is for the House to say whether it is worth while to run the additional risk during four months in the winter, to save the railways the trouble of removing a little snow and ice.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It seems to me that the danger at the wing rails is not so great as at the frogs and fixed rails. But the hon. member for Grenville has stated that if the snow and ice is allowed to accumulate at the wing rails, there will be risk of derailing the trains. When he has pointed this out, I think it is better to adopt the course his experience has suggested, and leave the Railway Committee to grant the permission.

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish to make a suggestion with regard to running boards. The House heard a good deal of discussion when Bill No. 5 was up for a second reading, and I think it was understood at that time that it would be unwise to adopt immediately the provision it contained. There is every disposition, I am sure, to make every possible provision for the protection of railway employés who have to use running boards; but there was this practical difficulty suggested, that it would perhaps be unwise in Canada to adopt now a provision for a running board 30 inches in width, because many American railways have narrower foot boards. I do not say that the House should refrain from adopting a provision of that kind unless we are prepared to put something in its place. Therefore, I propose to insert in section 10, which confers powers on the Railway Committee, this sub-section instead of sub-section c:

To make regulations with respect to the method of passing from one car to another, either inside or overhead, for the safety of railway employés passing from one car to another, and for the coupling of cars.

This will enable us to adopt that provision and any other appliances, as soon as it can be done with safety.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I certainly feel that this is hardly what we might expect at the hands of the Minister of Justice. It is certainly delaying the matter indefinitely. That is not what the employés of the railroads are demanding at the hands of the Government. If we take into consideration the number of lives which are lost, the serious injury which is done, and the hardships which are endured by a class of men whose calling is a dangerous one at the best, it is hardly fair that the Government are not prepared to make any provision in the way of a running board for Canada or other means to protect the lives of the men employed on the railways. He says we cannot make a running board of a certain width, 30 inches, because some of the railways in the United States have not as wide running boards. I ask you if that is a reasonable excuse? The running boards on the cars in the United States are as a rule much wider than those on the cars in Canada; but even if they were not, and it were necessary that a broader running board should be placed on the cars for the protection of the men employed in Canada, we should require the cars to be made with a wider running board. It is useless for the hon. gentleman to say that because one car happens to have a wider running board than another, accidents are more likely to happen. That is not the case. If a number of the cars have a broad running board, there is less danger to the employés than there is when they are all narrow. With regard to the frogs, it is an absolute necessity that they should be filled in, although I am afraid the amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for Grenville will almost nullify any good effect that might have resulted from the packing of those frogs. I regret exceedingly this committee should have felt justified in accepting this proposition. Looking forward to the use of automatic brakes upon these cars is a fallacy, and the assertion that that is a sort of Rip Van Winkle legislation, shows that the party who made that remark did not fully understand what he was talking about. You may have all the automatic brakes you can place on those cars, the men will still be obliged to go on the top of the cars. Almost every day these automatic brakes go astray, and if you have a train of thirty or forty cars heavily laden, and your automatic brakes will not work, you have no means of controlling them unless you have some men placed so that if they go astray they can at once set the brakes with their hands. The assertion that you will be able to do away with these brakemen is arrant nonsense; for so long as we have cars made as they are, these unfortunate men will be compelled to run from one end of the car to the other. Hon. gentlemen talk about the great parliament of engineers devising some scheme for overcoming all the difficulties, but every one knows full well that for years attempts have been made to grapple with this difficulty, and so far without success, and let the parliament of engineers be as wise as it may, we will have the same difficulties to overcome in the future as we have had in the past. The hon. Minister of Justice said that we should defer dealing with this, and let the Government take power to attend to it. But we know full well that the Government will be influenced by the railway corporations, and we might as well have no clause at all as have a clause of this kind. We should not leave these men, who are compelled to take their lives in their hands in performing their daily work, at the mercy of the Government, leaving it to the Government to bring in a measure to protect them whenever the people on the other side of the line may happen to take a step in that direction. Are we to suffer our people to be destroyed because the Americans have not advanced as rapidly as they should? Now that we have the opportunity of placing on the Statute-book a provision in the interest of railway employés, it is our bounden duty to do so; and if we adopt a two and a half or a three feet running board, and that is found beneficial, the people of the United States will follow our example. If we compel the railway companies to have their running boards project a certain distance from each end of the car, and it is found beneficial, the people of the United States will follow suit. Look at the cars of our own railway trains, and you will find in some of them the end of the running board broken off, so that the brakemen have frequently to step, while the car is in motion, a distance of three feet or three and a half feet. If we can overcome that difficulty, why should we delay doing so? 200 or 300 people are killed every year in Canada on account of the neglect of this House in not compelling railway companies to look more carefully after their men. The number of men who lose their lives on account of the running boards is much greater than those destroyed on account of the frogs. It is not in the interest of the railway men that the Government should take power to act when they feel disposed, and I would strongly urge upon the Government to at once take a different course and protect the lives of these men.

Mr. HESSON. I am sure we are all in sympathy on this question, which is one of very great importance indeed. I think the brakemen are entitled to all the facilities that can be given them in the difficult work they are pursuing—a work which is dangerous under the best of circumstances. I think there is a difficulty still to be overcome in reference to the difference in the heights of the cars, but I am glad to say there is now a brake which is used on the Lehigh Valley Railroad, called the electric brake, the power being produced from the engine. This brake can be applied to each freight and baggage car, and no matter if even the train breaks it can be made up immediately. The cost is slight, but $6 on each car, and $75 on each engine, while the cost of using the automatic air brake is $300 an engine and $75 a car. If these brakes on the Lehigh Valley Road are a success, they can be made a success here. There is a Mr. Fuller, a director of the Grand Trunk Railway, who sent me all the particulars in regard to that, and I placed them in the hands of the hon. Minister of Railways and of the Chief Engineer and asked them to give attention to them. I think it is a matter of the greatest importance to our railway men, especially to the brakemen who undertake that dangerous duty on the top of the car. There is a difficulty in regard to one suggestion the hon. gentleman has made as to the width of the running board. If the brakeman thinks he is about to tread on a board 30 inches wide, while it may be only 18 or 20 inches wide on the next car, which is the present ordinary width, there would be greater danger to him than if the width were not increased. There is another difficulty caused by the difference in the height of the cars. Sometimes a brakeman comes to a car 2 feet higher than the one he is on, and he has to get to that in the dark without knowing the difference in the height, and that is very dangerous. I think many improvements might be made. I think the hand rails should be adopted, and I think the appliance for that purpose which the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Wilson) showed here on the Table of the House some time ago would be a very valuable improvement. I suggest to the Government the adoption of this electric brake, which has been so very successful on the Lehigh Valley Railway.

Mr. SHANLY. I think this amendment ought to pass. It is very unwise to legislate absolutely as to what you must do in the way of mechanics. The true plan is to give the Government power to adopt the very best thing, because what may be the best thing to-day may not be the best thing next year. There are constant improvements going on, and I think the true policy is that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council should have the power to see that the railways, from time to time, adopt whatever is in the public interest.

Mr. DENISON moved in amendment that the following words be added:—

The oil cups or other appliances used for oiling the valves of every locomotive in use upon any railway shall be such that no employé shall be required to go outside the cab of the locomotive while the same is in motion for the purpose of oiling such valves.

Mr. THOMPSON. There is no provision for oil cups, but I am informed by gentlemen who know that this cannot be adopted at present.

Mr. SHANLY. That again looks as if you were legislating for the benefit of patentees or for some syndicate which has been purchasing patents. I do not know of any engines now where the fireman is compelled to go out of the cab to oil the valves. They either oil the valves from within the cab, or by the automatic process, so that there is no necessity for this amendment.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think the hon. gentleman is laboring under a mistake. The system of compelling the fireman or the engineer to pass out along the running board and go to the front part of the locomotive, and oil the cylinders from outside, has been in vogue for a number of years. On the Canada Southern, now the Michigan Central, nearly all the locomotives were so built that they had to be treated in that way, and a number of men were killed on account of being compelled to oil the cylinders from this cup which was placed outside. The hon. gentleman need not trouble himself in regard to patentees, because the patents are generally for the purpose of saving the expense of oil to the company and the oiling has to be done in the ordinary way. I think the cylinders should be oiled from the cab, and, if the Minister would incorporate such a provision in his Bill, that the oiling shall be done from within instead of outside, in accordance with what my hon. friend says is now the usual course, I shall be quite satisfied. All that the amendment asks is that the men shall not be compelled to go outside and along the running board. What I complain of is the men having to go along six or eight inch boards at all hours of the night and in storms and every kind of weather, to pass forward to the cylinder in front, where they have no support, because one hand is holding the oil can and with the other they have to raise the cap in order to pour in the oil, so that they have nothing to hold on to. That being the case, and many lives having been destroyed on that account, if it is true that nearly all the cylinders are now oiled from the cab, it is very easy to put that provision into the Bill, and I hope the Minister will accept the amendment.

Mr. SHANLY. I am afraid my hon. friend is a little behind the times, or that the railway that passes through his section is behind the times, because there is no railway of any note now that does not oil either from the cab or by the automatic oilers outside. It is a surprise to me if the Michigan Central is so far behind the times. I think it would be a mistake to make such a cast-iron provision as that which is proposed. Let us have the best which is possible at all times.

Mr. DENISON. If the engines are now oiled in this way, I can see no objection to the amendment being adopted, and if they are not so oiled, the companies should be compelled to adopt that plan.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The hon. gentleman is mistaken in saying that the Michigan Central is behind the times.

Mr. SHANLY. You said so, I did not.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). He says that the other railways have automatic oilers. It was in vogue for a length of time, and a great number of men were killed, and representation after representation was made to me by the employés of that road, and so urgent were their demands that I had to have an interview with the principal officers of the road to induce them to yield to the men, and to put on the oil from the can instead of these oil cups.

Mr. THOMPSON. If the hon. member will excuse me, I think there is no objection to the section as it now reads:

Mr. DENISON.

Oil cups or other appliances used for oiling valves on any locomotive used on any railway, shall be such that no employé shall be obliged to go outside of the cab while the same is in motion, for the purpose of oiling the valves.

Another point the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) has raised, can be met by a sub-section to section 13, as follows:—

Whenever, after due notice of application therefor, the Railway Committee shall decide that it is necessary in the interest of any municipality that means of drainage shall be provided, or lines of water pipe or other pipe should be laid, or streets made, through, along, across or under, any works or lands of the company, it may, after hearing the parties, direct how and on what terms such drainage may be effected, or water pipes, or other pipes, laid, or streets made, and thereupon it shall be lawful for such municipality to construct such works necessary to carry out such direction, but only under the supervision of such official as the Railway Committee may appoint, and the cost of constructing such work, the cost of supervision and the continued maintenance of the same, shall be paid by such municipality, unless the Railway Committee direct that the company bear some proportion thereof, in which case the company shall bear such proportion as the Railway Committee may decide.

The hon. member for Quebec suggested that a clerk of the peace was not a suitable officer with whom to deposit plans, books of reference, and soon, and we will strike out the words "clerk of the peace" in those sections where they occur, and insert therefor "registrar of deeds."

Mr. MULLOCK. This Act does not apply to Government roads, and I think this provision about the packing of frogs should apply to all roads.

Mr. THOMPSON. It will not do to amend this Bill by making an amendment to the Government Railway Act. This precaution about frog packing will be adopted on the Government railways.

Bill reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved:

That this House meet to-day and also on Friday and Saturday next at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and that Government measures shall have precedence over all other measures.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not propose to object to this motion, although it requires notice, but I think we must have distinct understanding that if we are to meet at 1 o'clock the House will not sit past 1 o'clock in the morning. It cannot be the desire of the Government to deprive the members of an opportunity to consider the Estimates, and if the House sits till 1 o'clock and continues till two, three or four on the following morning on successive days, it becomes physically impossible to consider the Estimates at all. Members cannot remain here for 12 or 14 hours consecutively. If that motion is adopted it must be on the understanding, to which I hope the hon. gentleman will not object, that the House does not sit past 1 o'clock in the morning.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We are as much disposed as are hon. gentlemen opposite to leave the House at a reasonable hour, but perhaps without making a promise, I may say we will do our best in the matter. We may find on Friday night that we can do much by remaining an extra hour so as to finish on Saturday.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think that is possible at all. My position is simply this: the House should not as a mere matter of decency keep such hours as to make it physically impossible that members can be present to consider the Estimates. Members cannot begin at one and continue for even two successive days to stay for 14 hours to get through the business—the thing cannot be done. I need not tell the hon. gentleman that we do not want to prolong the Session; I need not tell him that if there was the slightest disposition to detain the House unnecessarily, it is the easiest thing in the world to do so on the Estimates. I want this matter to be distinctly understood. Nothing will be lost by agreeing to a proposal of this kind.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have no doubt we will lose nothing by an understanding of this kind, and we may come to that understanding. We rely on hon. gentlemen opposite to help us carry the business through as rapidly as we can decently do so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not in the least degree desirous of postponing in the least degree the business, but if this arrangement were not arrived at, it would be physically impossible for members to do their duty by the Estimates.

Motion agreed to.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2.10 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 17th May, 1888.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

DEBATES TRANSLATORS.

Mr. DESJARDINS moved the adoption of the third report of the Committee on the Official Debates of the House of Commons. He said: Notice of this motion has been given. The object of the report is to recommend the appointment of Messrs. Montpetit, Boisvert and McLeod as permanent translators, at a salary of $1,000 each. It is recommended that the salary of Messrs. Montpetit and Boisvert should be counted from the beginning of the Session, and that of Mr. McLeod from the 20th April, last. Mr. McLeod is appointed specially to translate from French into English, and the three translators have proved themselves to be very efficient in their work.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Have they been appointed on the same terms as those who were dismissed?

Mr. DESJARDINS. They are appointed to replace them.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Is it understood that they are not to meddle with politics at all?

Mr. DESJARDINS. They are under the control of the Speaker.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I understood that one or two of them were writing for Tory newspapers.

Mr. DESJARDINS. They are under the control of the Speaker.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to oppose the adoption of the report of the Debates Committee; but before it is adopted, I wish to move, seconded by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), the following amendment:

That the said report be not now concurred in, but that it be referred back to the said committee with instructions to enquire whether it would not be right and expedient that an indemnity should be granted to Messrs. A. E. Poirier, Kémi Tremblay and Ernest Tremblay, who were dismissed from office.

I need not, Sir, return to the discussion raised by those dismissals, the House having approved of your decision; but as a matter of justice to those gentlemen, who had come here to discharge their duties, and especially as no complaint has been made as to the quality of their work, I think it would be fair that the committee should recommend to grant them an indemnity, which the committee could determine and report to this House.

Mr. AMYOT. I think these young gentlemen have received a very severe punishment from this House, and that now we ought to deal with them as we would deal with other officers. They were not aware that their services would be dispensed with. They may have refused some other paying work because they wanted to be here at the disposal of the House during the sitting of the House. They were taken by surprise in regard to their dismissal, and they were here waiting for the decision of the House. If they were ordinary employés of ordinary citizens, no one would think of dismissing them without giving them an indemnity. I am not discussing the justice of the decision of the House as far as they are concerned, but, now that they have received their punishment, I think we should give them an indemnity, so that they should not suffer any harm for the time which elapsed at the beginning of the Session, which they spent here. Surely nobody would refuse to reimburse their travelling expenses. They had to be here like the other translators. They had to pay their expenses up and down, and their board during the time they were here, and I think they should be indemnified for it.

Mr. LAURIER. I am sorry the Government have nothing to say on what I consider a very proper motion. Whatever may have been the fault of these young men, it is well known they are no more guilty than many others in the service, but I will not enter into a discussion on that point. It is to be remembered that the complaint against these gentlemen was made during the last Session, and no action was taken for some five or six months, and consequently they believed their services would be retained, especially since they had given an explanation. They came here at the opening of the Session, expecting they would be employed as usual in the post to which they had been appointed. Therefore, in being dismissed summarily, they lost the opportunity which they might have had of seeking for other employment during the recess. When they came here the first thing they knew they were informed that their services were dispensed with. Under such circumstances it seems to me that since the House has visited them with punishment which seems to have been considered sufficient, that punishment should not extend beyond the dismissal, and that, as a matter of justice, they should receive some compensation for the services they performed, and for the expenses that they incurred.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it is exceedingly unadvisable—and I think the hon. gentleman will agree with me—to revive a discussion on this matter.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not wish to do so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I understand the hon. gentleman waives that point. I will not say one word as to the justice or injustice of the claim made in this resolution, but I think it is an inopportune one, and had better be dropped. If the report is sent back to the committee, it will prevent the men who have been employed since, from being paid. That report cannot possibly get through if it is sent back; and I think it would be better that, early next Session, the hon. gentleman should press this motion before Parliament, if he desires. But at present, it answers no good purpose, and will, perhaps, prevent the men who have been doing the work, from getting their pay.

Mr. LAURIER. Since the First Minister has made a suggestion, that this matter can be brought up again at the opening of next Session, I would advise my hon. friend to withdraw his motion.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. (Translation.) After the utterances of the hon. Premier, and owing to the late stage of the Session, I am ready to withdraw my motion.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec Centre). I think there is one point deserving attention, in view of the hon. First Minister's suggestion. I understand these translators had commenced their work, and it was only after the Session had begun that they were informed their services were no longer required.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will not make any promises, but we will consider it before the next Session. It is quite open to the hon. gentleman to move next Session in the matter.

Mr. AMYOT. I wish to say that the work actually done by the translators is very well done indeed. We have men in that office who are most competent, and the salary of $1,000 a year is not sufficient for men of their merit. I think the Government should devise some means of employing them during the recess so as to increase their salary, and thereby avoid spending large sums paid for doing translating outside. They would then secure to the House the services of very competent men, and prevent them from engaging in politics.

Main motion agreed to.

CLERKS IN THE OFFICE OF HIGH COMMISSIONER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:

Resolved, That the provisions of "The Civil Service Act" and of "The Civil Service Superannuation Act" shall apply to the officers and clerks employed in the office of the High Commissioner for Canada in the United Kingdom, under the authority of the Governor in Council.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will not this have the effect of rendering all these gentlemen pensioners upon us, whereas at present they are not so? They entered their offices under no such stipulation. It may be that hereafter it will not be found expedient to continue that particular office, and in that case I fancy we would have to provide for a number of gentlemen whom, as matters stand, we could dispense with, at any rate, by a moderate gratuity. It seems to me rather inexpedient to take this step. There is a great deal of feeling all over the country over the superannuation list that has already swollen to nearly a quarter of a million a year, and I do not like the idea of unnecessarily adding to it. These gentlemen, probably, could not be employed in Canada, a good many of them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no doubt something in what the hon. gentleman has said, but I think the time has come when it is very desirable these officers should have the same position as the other officers in the Civil Service. I may say here from personal knowledge—and there is an hon. gentleman sitting on the left of the Speaker who, if he were here, could corroborate me in saying that it would be difficult to find in the public service of Canada, gentlemen more deserving, and better qualified, or more assiduous in the performance of their duties. I may also mention that the salaries paid at the present moment are less than the salaries paid in that office in the year 1883-84. There has been no increase in the charge on the public service in that direction; and the $50 additional that would be added to their salaries by their being under the Civil Service Act, it will only bring the amount of salaries to the point where they were in 1883-84. I do not think it is at all likely that the contingency will ever arise which the hon. gentleman has mentioned, because I believe the experience of the House and of the country has been that the institution of the office of High Commissioner in London has been a very valuable one in the public interest, and that from the day that appointment was first made, down to the present time, the country has had good value for the money spent in connection with that office. I am quite sure that if the hon. gentleman will investigate what has been done in that department, he will consider it is not at all likely that the office will be dispensed with in future, or that the arrangement that has been so undoubtedly beneficial to Canada, will be changed. But in that contingency I can tell him that there is not an officer in that office who could not be transferred to Canada, and who would not be able to take his place in any department of the public service at Ottawa with great advantage to the service. They are men of unexceptional character in every possible way, they are devoted to their duties, and it is not at all an infrequent thing to find the whole staff there until sunset, and sometimes many of them are employed in the evening. They show the most cheerful readiness in the discharge of their duties.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Might I suggest that if we bring them under the Civil Service Act that will be all changed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think so; at all events, it would be very ungracious to reward devotion to public service by assuming that such would be the result.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have heard the explanations of the Finance Minister, and while I have no doubt that the office of High Commissioner has in the past in many particulars been of service to the country, it has not been an unmixed benefit. It has cost a good deal of money, and, judging from the proposition before the House, it is likely to cost a good deal more before we have done with it. The suggestion made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), that there is a possibility of its being done away with in the remote, if not in the immediate future, is quite a possibility. It is quite on the cards; we may get sick of a High Commissioner running back and forwards between London and Canada, and while he is supposed to be doing the duties of High Commissioner he is practically in this country attending to political objects and political purposes. I, for one, am opposed to placing any more pensioners on the Civil Service list, for that is what it will amount to. Those gentlemen of whom the hon. gentleman has spoken so highly, no doubt perform their duties very well; I know nothing about them, and I have had no opportunity of judging as some others may have had; but no matter how well they perform their duties, they receive the pay agreed upon, and a good deal more. I recollect that some few days ago when the expenditure of the High Commissioner's office, as contained in the Estimates, was before the Committee of Supply, I added together items amounting to $3,200 which one of those gentlemen, Mr. Chipman, receives. The hon. gentleman says that the salaries of that office are not so high as they were some years ago. I do not know what they were then, but they are high enough now. We should not establish in a country beyond the seas a system of superannuation of officers who can perfectly well be done without. I have heard of no difficulty in regard to those gentlemen; I do not believe they will resign their positions if they are not placed on the Civil Service list; I know nothing about those officers, except from the very flattering account given by the Finance Minister, such an account as he always gives when he wishes the salaries of his employés increased or their position advanced and improved. Whatever other hon. members may do I feel it necessary to oppose this Bill.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If I am allowed to say a few words in reply to the hon. gentleman, I hope I may be able to induce him not to oppose this Bill. The hon. gentleman has stated that the High Commissioner for Canada has devoted his time to party politics in Canada. I may say, and I say it unhesitatingly, that from the first hour I was appointed High Commissioner for Canada down to the time I resigned that office, that is when I vacated my seat in Parliament in 1884, upon my acceptance of the position of High Commissioner, down to the hour I resigned my office, and although I visited Canada on two or three occasions, I steadily and sedulously refused to take the slightest part in party political affairs. My mission to this country on those two occasions was in connection with the Colonial and Indian Exhibition, and the subsequent steps taken in regard to the establishment of an Imperial Institute. My visit was to the various Provinces, and on that occasion I received the hearty support and co-operation of the various Provincial Governments—those to which I was opposed—just as heartily as I did from the central Government with which I was in accord politically. I mention this to the hon. gentleman, because, during my stay in Canada, I was on more than one occasion invited to take part in political meetings, and I refused to do so on the ground that it was not in the public interest that the High Commissioner should take part in such meetings. That was the course I pursued invariably. I acted, of course, in such a manner as to carry out the instructions of the Government as High Commissioner and in sustaining their policy with the Imperial Government or with parties on the other side of the Atlantic as a High Commissioner would be expected to do; but so far as party politics in Canada are concerned I took no part in them, and I adopted that course advisedly from the very feeling which the hon. gentleman seems to hold, and which I share with him, that it is not desirable that a person in that position should be engaged in party politics. Of course when I resigned my office and was called back to take a seat in the Cabinet, the hon. gentleman would not expect me—although still supervising the duties of the office in London, from my personal knowledge and acquaintance with matters and for the public convenience—to avoid taking such action as I felt desirable to take in support of the Government. The second point made by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) is one which deserves some explanation. It is in regard to the amount drawn by Mr. Chipman, who is accountant and assistant secretary in the High Commissioner's office, in whose name a number of items appear, but in regard to which I will give the hon. gentleman an explanation that will satisfy him as to the entire correctness and propriety of every one of those charges. The first item is to be found at page 37 of the Auditor General's report, $250. This is salary as private secretary to Minister of Finance, February to June, 1887, five months at $50 per month, as authorised by Order in Council, No. 510. I have explained to the House that charged as I was not only with the duties of Minister of Finance, but asked by the Government to supervise the duties in connection with the office of High Commissioner, it was absolutely necessary I should have a private secretary equally familiar with the duties here and the duties in the office in London. The hon. gentleman will, therefore, agree as to the propriety of that charge. I may mention incidentally that I scarcely expected the question of expenditure to be raised, when I am prepared to show the House that by performing as far as I was able the duties of the office of Finance Minister and of High Commissioner for Canada, I have effected a saving of $28,000 of money appropriated by Parliament for those services. The second charge in respect to Mr. Chipman is found at page 45 of the Auditor General's report, $43.06. These are travelling expenses, as authorised by Order in Council governing payments to public officers for such service. The next is at page 45, $3.50. These were official cab fares, as per details and vouchers supplied to the Auditor General. All these accounts have been paid by the Auditor General, after the most careful examination and after having the vouchers submitted. On page 105 there is an item of $330.95. These are petty cash disbursements as accountant of Colonial and Indian Exhibition. They consist of freight charges, telegrams, postages, railway and 'bus fares of the exhibition staff. This is not a personal charge, and details with vouchers were duly supplied to the Auditor General. At pages 99 and 109 there are items amounting to $2,199.97. This is salary as assistant secretary and accountant in office of the High Commissioner for Canada, $1,799.97 from Immigration and $400 from Archives. Page 119, $170.33. Travelling expenses as authorized by Order in Council governing such payments to public officers, and for which vouchers have been supplied. Page 119, $146. Advance on account of contingencies of the office of the High Commissioner for Canada. At the beginning of each financial year the accountant of the London office is, in accordance with an arrangement between the Minister of Agriculture and the Auditor, supplied with an advance of £30, for the payment of telegrams and cables, messengers, railway and 'bus fares, postage, freight, &c. This practice has been in force for some years. It is not a personal charge, and a detailed statement with vouchers was duly forwarded to the Minister of Agriculture for submission to the Auditor General. Page 119, $40.55. Income tax as authorized to the staff of the London office. The foregoing items appear in different parts of the Auditor General's report. It may be mentioned that during the financial year 1886-87 Mr. Chipman served the Government in the following capacities:—assistant secretary and accountant, office of the High Commissioner for Canada, accountant Colonial and Indian Exhibition, and as private secretary to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. MITCHELL. How much does it amount to in all?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think it is right that the hon. gentleman should ask me, when I have shown that those expenses were for the public service put down necessarily to a particular name, because of the offices he held and the duties he was charged with. The hon. gentleman ought not to ask me what it amounts to altogether, because only $250 of the whole of the sums named in any way benefited the gentleman, and that was his salary as private secretary. I will hand the hon. gentleman the memorandum, so that he can see for himself the accuracy of the statement.

Mr. LAURIER. It is a policy admitted by all that we should have a High Commissioner in London. So far there is no intention on either side of the House to question the policy admitted some years ago, but there is in connection with the establishment of the office, and the manner in which it has been carried out, a remark that has often suggested itself to the public of Canada. It is admitted on all sides that this office should be removed from the arena of politics, and the hon. the Finance Minister has himself admitted the fact when he took good care just now to tell the House, that from the moment he has been appointed to the high office of High Commissioner he had carefully abstained from interfering in active politics, and that when he visited the continent after the appointment he guarded himself carefully, so as to be altogether removed from the feverish atmosphere of party politics. So far I commend his action, and so far his action would receive the hearty sanction of all parties in this country. But it must strike the hon. gentleman that he has not faithfully adhered to his own conviction and to his own principle. He has not adhered to what he preached some time ago as "fixed principles," because when the hon. gentleman came here the last time or the time before it, he at once engaged in party politics. He came here to run an election for the Government, and he became a member of the Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; I ceased to be High Commissioner for Canada.

Mr. LAURIER. That is all very obscure in my mind. He has ceased to be High Commissioner he says, but who has been his successor in office? If the hon. gentleman has ceased to be the High Commissioner, how is it that there is no High Commissioner at London? Now, that office is necessary or it is not necessary. If it is a necessary office, then it requires a head, and the head should be at his office. If it is not necessary, then let us abolish it, and let the hon. gentleman give all his time, and valuable time I admit, and everybody admits, to his party and his country. We entirely object that we should have the dual system of having the office of a High Commissioner in London and no High Commissioner at all. The hon. gentleman will not make the House believe that he has ceased to be High Commissioner. He may have perhaps in fact and in reality in a certain manner, but certainly he has not ceased actually, because if he had ceased to be High Commissioner I presume the Government would have appointed one in his place. I say that this position in regard to this office is intolerable, but I hope that we are now seeing the end of it, and that we shall return to the former practice.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). No one can doubt that the hon. gentleman has discharged his public duty in connection with the High Commissionership with great ability and to the general satisfaction of the country. I myself happened to be on a visit in England at a very important time, and I heard in England of the great services which the hon. gentleman had rendered at a very critical moment to the interests of Canada in connection with the quarantining of cattle at Liverpool. The hon. gentleman on that occasion did I believe render a valuable service to his country, but the position in which the hon. gentleman has placed this appointment has tended to lead the public mind in this country to the conclusion that the office can be now dispensed with because that office has been vacant for several years, while the hon. gentleman who formerly filled it has discharged his public duty in this Parliament and to this country. I do not pretend to say that the hon. gentleman has not the right to resign his position there and take another position in this House, but I do say this, that the hon. gentleman, when he resigned that position, should have exercised his influence with the Government to place another person in the position which he vacated. It is perfectly useless for the Government or for hon. gentlemen to try to make this country believe that the office of High Commissioner is necessary when it is not filled, and the manner in which the duties have been discharged would convey the impression to the country generally that the hon. gentleman had been merely kept in that position for party purposes. I do not mean to say that the hon. gentleman is expecting to return there immediately, but it would look very much like as if he were performing his position here for a time, and rumor has it that the hon. gentleman intends to return very shortly to occupy the position of High Commissioner again. I have no doubt, if he does return, he will fill that office with his usual ability. I do not think, however, that the high office should be held hanging in the balance as it were for years and years, just to suit the convenience of the Government, or any hon. gentleman who may desire to take it. Let the office be filled, or vacated, or let the country understand that the appointment is to be made to it at once. Then we will ascertain the position in which we stand. The hon. gentleman says he never interfered with political life during the time he held the High Commissionership. I am afraid that my hon. friend has a short memory, or that he sometimes at least has a very convenient memory. My hon. friend will remember that at a very critical time in the position of the Government, he left his position in London and came out to Nova Scotia. He visited Antigonish and he "arranged an arrange," which has become a familiar term in Nova Scotia, in connection with a transaction some years ago which is doubtless familiar to the older members of this House. I repeat he "arranged an arrangement" by which the present distinguished Minister of Justice was taken from the bench in Nova Scotia and transferred to this Parliament. The hon. gentleman on that occasion did not remember how loudly he denounced a similar transaction in Ontario, when a judge was taken from the bench to lead the Government in that Province. He took the Minister of Justice from his position as a judge in Nova Scotia, and carried out this arrangement to a conclusion by which we are indebted to the presence of the hon. Minister of Justice in this House to-day. I think the hon. gentleman will not venture to deny that, because it is familiar to everyone in my Province and in his Province, and we know that but for that arrangement at that time the hon. the Minister of Justice would not be here to-day. Therefore, I think the hon. gentleman can hardly say that he has kept aloof from politics during the time he was High Commissioner. Now, to return to this Bill. There is, I admit, something in what the hon. gentleman has said, I think he has a very good staff about him in London, and when I was there I found them very obliging and very anxious to do everything they could for Canadians visiting London. If possible I think the salaries should be fixed so that there would be no discussion of these details in this House. I believe Mr. Chipman is a very deserving and hardworking man, and I dare say the explanations the hon. gentleman has given will be satisfactory to the House. But I would suggest that these expenditures should be entered in such a way so that they would not appear as payments made to him. But I repeat that the hon. gentleman should either resume his position in London or the Government should appoint some one else to fill it.

Mr. TROW. I notice that Mr. Chipman received nearly $2,000 from the Immigration Department. What is that for?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may explain to my hon. friend that the salaries of all the officers in the High Commissioner's office are charged to immigration; they belong to that department, and that is the entire salary of that officer from that department.

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot allow this addition to the public expenditure to pass without raising my voice against it. A very short time ago a deputation waited on the First Minister and strongly urged that the system of superannuation should be done away with altogether. I think the country is alive to the fact that it is quite unnecessary. The civil servants of this country draw very respectable salaries, and they should be able to invest their surplus means like other people and provide for themselves; and I think that this superannuation expenditure, instead of being increased, should be wiped out. When the office of High Commissioner was before the House a short time ago, the hon. First Minister stated that the Finance Minister performed the duties of the double position of High Commissioner and Finance Minister, and only drew the salary of Finance Minister, and that the country was indebted to him for doing so. I have gone through the items in the Auditor General's report, and I find that the amount voted last year for contingencies of the High Commissioner was $2,500, and in the first six months of his term he spent $2,748.48, or a little in excess of the amount voted for the whole year. He has drawn for travelling expenses, as Finance Minister, $943.43, and for cab hire, $170.73; he has drawn as salary as High Commissioner, $5,639.92, and as salary as Finance Minister, $3,010.78; he has drawn on account of expenses connected with the Colonial Exhibition, $900; he has drawn on account of immigration, $187; and he drew his indemnity last year; making a total amount of $14,557.34 which he drew during the financial year ending the 30th of June last. The First Minister led the House to believe that he was only getting $7,000 a year as Finance Minister, but I find that he has drawn very nearly double that amount.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In reference to the remarks made by the hon. leader of the Opposition and the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), I may say that I recognise great force in what they have said, and in the position which has been taken in this House on various occasions in reference to the dual offices. The office of High Commissioner and the office of Finance Minister are both very important offices, and it could only be under very exceptional circumstances that the House could approve of the duties being discharged by one and the same individual, whatever saving might be effected to the country. I feel the full force of the objections raised, and I beg to state on behalf of the Government that the state of affairs to which they refer has arisen from entirely exceptional circumstances. In the judgment of my right hon. friend the leader of the Government, it was desirable that I should resume a position in the Government as Finance Minister, and I was called upon to resign the office of High Commissioner and take the position I now hold. What would naturally follow that act under ordinary circumstances would be the appointment of some other gentleman to the position of High Commissioner; but it so happened that there were a number of very important questions in regard to which I had been in communication with Her Majesty's Government in the capacity of High Commissioner, and my right hon. friend felt that under the peculiar circumstances it would be better for me to continue to supervise the duties of that office, not as a permanent arrangement, but for a comparatively short period, than to appoint a new officer who would not have the advantage of the same personal acquaintance with those questions, and not be able to deal with them in the same way.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). How long is the present arrangement to continue?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If my hon. friend will have patience, the difficulties on that score will be very speedily removed; I say that in very strict confidence to him. Now, I may say to my hon. friend from North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) that not one shilling has been drawn by me, either as salary or contingencies for the office of High Commissioner of Canada, by any direct or indirect action, from the hour I resigned the office down to the present time. The hon. gentleman has been misled by confusing payments made for an anterior period which do not apply to the present time. If the hon. gentleman will go to the office of the Auditor General, I will ask that officer to give him the fullest evidence that from the hour I resigned the office of High Commissioner down to the present time, not one farthing of the $2,000 voted for contingencies for the High Commissioner, has been drawn; nor could it be with so vigilant an officer as we have for Auditor General, even if there was a disposition to do it. The hon. gentleman knows that I had occasion to go to London as Finance Minister during recess, and to spend several months there, and although I supervised the duties of the office of High Commissioner during that time, no charge was made. If the hon. gentleman will compare the travelling expenses which he has referred to with those of any other Minister, he will find that they are exceedingly moderate. The amounts voted and the payments made for salaries and contingencies since 1883-84 were as follows:—

Year.	Amt. voted.	Amt. paid.	Amt. saved.
1883-84	$14,000	$ 5,045.00	$ 8,955.00
1884-85	14,000	12,000.00	2,000.00
1885-86	12,000	12,000.00
1886-87	12,000	6,849.60	5,150.40
1887-88	12,000	12,000.00
	$64,000	$35,894.60	$28,105.40

So that the saving effected during those years while I was connected with the office, have been no less than $28,105.40.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would not have drawn the attention of the House to this matter had not the hon. the First Minister attempted to lead the House to believe that the salary of the High Commissioner was only $7,000; or at least that he only drew the salary of Finance Minister, and that his salary as High Commissioner was saved to the country. I am glad to find that the hon. the Minister of Finance admits that my statement is correct. The only item I will now draw the attention of the House to is the item of contingencies for which we voted $2,000 last year. But although the hon. gentleman only occupied the position some six months, I find that estimate has been exceeded.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER introduced Bill (No. 136) to amend chapter 16 of the Revised Statutes, respecting the High Commissioner for Canada in the United Kingdom.

Bill read the first and second times, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. LAURIER. Who compose the staff?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Colmer, the secretary to the office of High Commissioner; Mr. Chipman, accountant; Mr. Just, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Howard and Mr. Luko, third class clerks. There are two messengers who are not proposed to be included in the civil service, but are simply employed.

Mr. LAURIER. Under this section you are taking very large powers. You are giving the Governor in Council power to increase the staff at will. I do not believe that in this case public officers should be appointed without the previous consent of the House, which consent is exacted in all other cases.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No doubt the hon. gentleman is quite right in principle; but we cannot treat these officers in the same way as you can others in the Civil Service. I have given the hon. gentleman the evidence that, so far as these officers are concerned, even with the addition of the $50 from the 1st July last, the expenditure will not be increased beyond what it was in 1883. The hon. gentleman knows that the Government must come to the House more especially under this Bill than now. At the present these officers are connected with the immigration staff, and paid out of the immigration fund, and the object of this Bill is to bring under the supervision of this House, every addition to the salary of these officers.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman has not answered the objection. We have not such great confidence in the Government as to give them this unlimited power of appointment.

Mr. LAURIER. We are going to put these officers on the same footing as other officers in the employ of the Government, and, under such circumstances, we should follow the practice of being informed in advance how many officers should be employed, and their positions and salary.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will see that there will be two chief clerks and four third class clerks.

Mr. LAURIER. You have the power to make the number eight or ten or any number you choose. Have you not power to appoint ten officers under that provision?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You would not have any money to pay them. You cannot pay them any longer out of the immigration funds. You must get a vote of Parliament for the purpose.

Mr. MITCHELL. That would not trouble you at all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A series of Governor General's warrants would settle the difficulty.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not see why there should be any special suspicion in regard to the Department of the High Commissioner, because this language is used in regard to every other department. Of course we know that the Governor in Council may appoint as many officers as he likes, but they must work gratuitously until Parliament votes their salaries. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) says that Parliament will vote whatever the Government propose. We cannot help Parliament having sufficient confidence in us to vote what we propose.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman is not initiating this very vicious practice—I will do him the justice to say that—but he is simply following a very bad example.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Which the hon. gentleman religiously carried out.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There is one point in regard to this to which I desire to call attention. These officers in the High Commissioner's office are exempt from examination under the Civil Service Act.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That, as I explained, is also a necessity.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). If my hon friend will allow me to finish, I was about to say that this applies to their appointment in London, but, supposing they came out here, would they also be exempt?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, they would be dealt with under the Civil Service Act.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That should be provided for.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If they were transferred it would be different. They are only exempt as officers in the High Commissioner's office, and that exemption ceases the moment they are called upon to act here.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The Bill does not say so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That follows as a matter of course, because the exemption would be gone.

On section 3,

Mr. COOK. Are the present officials all natives of Canada?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The secretary, Mr. Colmer, is a gentleman of exceptional ability and has shown great devotion to his duties, as I think my hon. friend (Mr. Cook) knows, because he had an opportunity, I think, of making the personal acquaintance of Mr. Colmer. That gentleman went over from Canada with my distinguished predecessor, Sir Alexander Galt, when he was first appointed High Commissioner. Mr. Colmer was then living in Montreal. Then there is Mr. Chipman, who is a Canadian, who was born in this country and has always lived here, except when he was away in connection with his duties in that office. Mr. Howard is also a Canadian, and I think there are three of the third class clerks who are not.

Bill reported.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. LAURIER. To-morrow.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Very well.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I should like to know, Mr. Speaker, if the Orders of the Day have been called?

Mr. SPEAKER. No.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then how does this Bill come up at all for the third reading?

Mr. MITCHELL.

Mr. LAURIER. It is not to be read a third time now.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It comes on the resolution.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems that the irregularity which attaches to the dual office of High Commissioner must extend to all the matters connected with that office, and I suppose we must let it slide.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to ask where is that mortgage which was promised us in reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway? It was agreed that it should be laid upon the Table.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I asked my hon. friend the Minister of Justice to expedite that as much as possible, but he informs me that the pressure on his department has been so great that it has not been possible to have that finally executed. I hope, however, that it will be possible to get it finished so as to lay it on the Table.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would remind the hon. gentleman that that was a positive pledge, that we should have that laid upon the Table before we separated, and it was on that account that the Bill was allowed to leave the House without a good deal of further debate.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is quite true.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So I presume it will be laid upon the Table for our information, even if it is only in manuscript.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Every effort will be made.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There was another document which the Minister of Justice promised, and that was the letter in regard to which we had some discussion last night. Where is that?

Mr. THOMPSON. I am sorry that I was not in the House when the reference was made to the mortgage, or I would have asked my colleague not to make a binding promise to lay that on the Table so soon. The delay is not in consequence of time required to draw the mortgage, so much as to consider a number of details which require very careful consideration and adjustment before they are finally approved by the Governor in Council. I will endeavor to bring that down before the close of the Session.

FISHERY REPORTS.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Militia when he will bring down the papers in reference to the superannuation of Sergeant Valiquette? He promised to have those papers submitted to the House some days ago, and it will be necessary to have them submitted before that motion is assented to. I would also enquire again from the hon. Minister of Marine what has become of his reports? In a day or two, no doubt, we are to be called upon to consider the estimates for the fishery branch of his department, and I shall feel it my duty to challenge every vote in that department, and divide the House upon it, if there is no other way in which I can show the feeling we have as to the extraordinary want of attention in his department in bringing down the reports. It is unpardonable, and it is impossible to consider these items properly unless we have these reports.

Mr. FOSTER. I have already made two explanations in regard to that report and I have nothing further to explain. It is not on account of any laxity or dilatoriness on the part of any of the officers of my department. This is a report which comes up to the end of the year. The inspectors make up their reports to the end of the year, that is to the 31st December. We do not get those reports, at the earliest, until the middle of January. Then they are compiled in the Department, and the compilations are very long and intricate. This year these reports were in the hands of the printers as early as they were last year, or as they have been generally, and the department has not been one iota guilty of delaying the report. The hon. gentleman is quite aware of the peculiar state in which our printing stands at the present time, the contract having been renewed for a year or until the printing bureau is built. I cannot get any proof from the printers. I have not had any proof for three weeks. In consequence of my report finishing with the calendar year, it gets into the hands of the printers after all the other reports are in. The reports of the other departments get ahead of my report, and there are departments that get their reports in early which have not yet received from the printers those reports for distribution. I cannot get mine from the printers; I cannot do the work myself, and the officers of my department cannot do it. I know that it is too bad that this delay should take place, and I am very sorry for it, but I will not take the fault on myself, because it is not my fault or the fault of the officers of the department.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Would it not be better for the hon. Minister to change the date of the issue of his report, and instead of making it the calendar year, make it to accord with the parliamentary year. Let us have the book at the proper time. I do not wish to find fault unnecessarily, but the hon. gentleman will see that the book coming down to-day, we will have to go into the discussion of these estimates without having had an opportunity of examining it.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend forgets that the fishing season commences at the beginning of the summer or the end of the spring, and to have the report issued in the middle or in the first month of the fishing season, would be awkward and unsatisfactory.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The fishing season does not differ from the crop season.

Mr. TROW. The excuse given by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for the delay in the printing of his department, is certainly not founded, because there is a tacit understanding between the Government and the present contractor that his contract shall not expire, at all events, till next October, if not till December. He is going on with the work as usual, and has been for the last year.

Mr. FOSTER. Not as usual.

Mr. TROW. There is no reason why his report should not be printed as early as any other report.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend disputes the assertion that I make in my place, that is all right.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is exceedingly unfortunate that the Government business is conducted in such a fashion at this. There is no possibility of discussing these estimates intelligently or intelligibly unless we know what has been done with the money that has been spent during the last year. Whether the fault is with the printer or the Government, we find ourselves in this extraordinary position of things, that perhaps on the very next item, we shall be called upon to discuss appropriations involving a large sum of money, absolutely without any information before the House.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is not correct, because the explanations have been made of the expenditure in the Fisheries Department for the last calendar year.

BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I promised yesterday to state what measures would be proceeded with, and what would stand over. In the first place, the third reading of the Act to amend and consolidate the Railway Act, will be taken. The Bill (No. 88) to abolish Forfeitures for Treason and Felony, the Minister of Justice says does not press, and in consequence of the lateness of the Session, he will allow it to stand over until next Session, when he will introduce it early in the Session. We will go on with Bill (No. 38) to amend the Act respecting Patents of Invention; also with the resolution to provide for the appointment of a Deputy Commissioner of Patents of Invention. Bill (No. 100) respecting the application to Canada of the Criminal Law of England, will stand over, by consent of the Minister of Justice, until next Session. We will proceed with the resolution respecting the salaries of Judges of Provincial Courts, also with Bill (No. 17) to amend the Electoral Franchise Act; also Bill (No. 123) to amend the Criminal Procedure Act. We will not go on with Bill (No. 124) to amend the Copyright Act, which will stand over until next Session. We will proceed with the Bill (No. 125) to amend the North-West Territories Representation Act; also with Bill (No. 131) to amend the Dominion Lands Act.

THE RAILWAY ACT.

Mr. THOMPSON moved third reading of Bill (No. 24) to amend and consolidate the Railway Act.

Mr. LISTER moved in amendment that the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to committee with instructions to add the following clause as section 311:—

No railway company incorporated under any Act of the Parliament of Canada, shall grant a complimentary pass to any member of the Senate or Commons of Canada.

Motion negatived on division.

Mr. EDGAR. In reference to clause 295 of this Bill, I propose to offer an amendment. By that clause very severe penalties are imposed upon officers and servants of a railway company for breach of the by-laws and rules and regulations of the company. The penalties extend to $400 fine and to imprisonment for five years. When we look at the nature of the crime or misdemeanor which is referred to in the clause, we see that the violation of these rules and regulations of the company which causes injury to any person or party, or exposes any person or party to a risk greater than would have been incurred without such violation, even although no actual injury resulted, is a misdemeanor for which very severe punishment in this section is provided. It is safe on the whole to allow a very severe penalty, although I do not think if the House was fixing one for the first time they would agree to such a heavy penalty as this. Certainly we should take care that we are not making the employes of the railway liable to those heavy penalties, without making it perfectly clear that they have notice and information in regard to those regulations. While it is perfectly true that ignorance of the laws of the land does not excuse anyone, it is also true that ignorance of the by-laws and regulations of the railway company should excuse the employes. We should, however, take care that they have the information placed in their hands, and they should be notified in a proper way before they are made liable to those severe fines and penalties. The clause provides that a copy of the rules or regulations must be delivered to the employe, or it must have been posted up in the premises where he is employed. So, under the clause as it stands, it is not necessary to give the means of actual knowledge of the offence to an employe, but simply to post up the regulations, which, I suppose, in the case of some of the large companies, will amount to almost a volume, in some remote part of the works of the company, where any of the employe's duties may take him at any time. When that has been done he is supposed to know the whole contents, and be liable to be sent to the penitentiary for five years for a breach of those regulations, even if no injury occurs from the breach. I do not think that is fair; and I propose, not to reduce the penalties, not to alter the nature of the crime, but simply to provide by altering the word "or" into "and" so that in addition to delivering those copies to the employés, notices should also be posted up in the places where they work. It was argued on a former occasion in committee on this Bill that it was not fair to call upon the companies to deliver copies of the regulations to their servants, that it would be too much trouble to the companies, and that it was the business of the railway employé to go and find out the regulations and read them on the wall in some remote part of the premises. That cannot be so, because under another section of this Bill it is already provided that all those by-laws and regulations of the company shall, so far as they relate to the conduct or service of employés of the company, be given to every officer, servant and employé affected. I therefore move:

That this Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to Committee of the Whole for the purpose of amending section 295 therein, by striking out the word "or," which occurs in the sixth line, and inserting "and" in place thereof.

Mr. THOMPSON. This matter was very fully considered in committee last night, and there was no disposition to force too stringent a rule with respect to the violation of the by-laws and regulations; but I feel bound to present to the House this afternoon the reasons which justify, I think, the retention of the clause. In the first place, the section has been in the Railway Act ever since a Railway Act was adopted by this Parliament, and in all probability before that and when the enactment was the enactment of the Provincial Parliament. It has never in any one instance been found to be oppressive in the slightest degree. It is purely for the protection of the travelling public, and it is necessary, in the interests of the travelling public and for their safety, that no officer of the company should wilfully neglect or disobey regulations made by the company, the Minister or the Railway Committee for the safety of life and property on the road. It is only in respect to officers of that kind that the penalties can be inflicted, and then only for wilful or negligent disobedience of orders. While it is true that the penalties may be severe, notwithstanding that no injury might occur, under the circumstances it is absolutely necessary to have severe penalties. The penalty actually inflicted may be but a very light one; on the other hand, it may be a severe one, although no actual injury ensued, because it may have been a wilful disobedience of orders in consequence of which the safety of life and property along the road was jeopardised. The procedure is the very best and most liberal in the interests of the officers that can be devised. The offence is a misdemeanor; the offender has to be indicted and to be convicted by a petit jury, before punishment can be inflicted. Under the circumstances the provision is well guarded. I think, generally speaking, it is in the interests of the officials that notices should be posted up, because many of them are cautions and indications in regard to the daily work of the officers, and if we require in addition, before an employé can be held responsible for wilful or neglectful disobedience of orders, that the company should prove the serving of the orders upon him, the possibility of ever putting the clause into operation will be very remote indeed.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I do not imagine that the argument advanced by the Minister of Justice is sufficient to induce this House to do that which would be an injustice to any employé of any railway. I think that the statement made by him, that although this clause had been on the Statute-book for a number of years and that it is not in force or has not been enforced up to the present time, is no reason why it should be any longer on the Statute-book. It certainly is a very severe clause. It is a clause that might in the case of some railways be used with a good deal of injustice to those who are compelled to follow the calling of an employé on the railroad. What is more, I think the reason why this clause ought to be amended in the way my friend said is this: that we find, if we look through the clause, that it is not necessary on the part of the company to see that their employés have the notices placed in their possession. The company merely posts them up upon some portions of the building around the station, and the attention of the employés not having been called to such alterations or change in the article, the employé may not know his duty, which he would know if it were placed in his hands. Under the present law it will be held that he has negligently done his duty on account of not being constantly looking for the regulations and by-laws. I say this is a gross injustice to the employé. If the Government had consented to amend the Bill so as to place those by-laws in the hands of the employés there would have been some excuse for this remaining as it is, and it would give a certain amount of protection to the employés, which they do not possess now. I do not suppose that the Government desire to do injustice either to the employé or to the railway company. The desire of this Parliament ought to be to try and treat fairly and justly all alike, but it will be felt by those who are the employees of these companies, that the Parliament of Canada is dealing out to the different classes different kinds of legislation. They will feel that there is one legislation for the classes and another for the masses. Therefore, I feel it would be to their interests, as well as to the interests of the employés, that they should consent to this amendment being incorporated in the Bill.

Mr. EDGAR.

Mr. McNEILL. I think there is a great deal of force in the argument raised by the hon. gentleman on the other side of the House. So much was I impressed with the force of it that I supported the proposal last night, but after thinking over it, it occurs to me that there was a great deal of weight in the objection that had been urged against it, as to the very great difficulty of serving by the company on each of the employés all the regulations which might from time to time be put in force. I thought that all we desired would be secured if this clause itself were served upon the employés, so that in that way their attention might be called to the danger in which they stood, and that they should be so warned to read the notices which were posted up. I think it would be sufficient if this clause were posted up with all the other regulations that were necessary, and if it were personally served on the employés, calling their attention to the peril in which they stood if they did not comply with the regulations which were posted up, and which it was within their power to read if they pleased. I do not think there can be any possible objection to that, for I think it would be a simple matter to serve a notice of this kind.

Mr. LAURIER. It seems to me that my friend the Minister of Justice did not rightly comprehend the amendment which has been made by the member for Ontario (Mr. Edgar). I quite agree with him that the amendment does not at all controvert the principle, and I agree with him further that there should be a most severe penalty inflicted on the employé who wilfully, or indeed even negligently, breaks a rule which is devised for the safety of the travelling public. No one can object to that, and as far as that goes the penalty in the Bill is not a severe one. At the same time, the hon. gentleman I am sure would not inflict such a penalty upon an officer who had no opportunity to see the rule against which he had contravened. The object of the clause, and the object of this amendment as well, is the safety of the public, and the clause is just in the same spirit in which the amendment is framed. This amendment is calculated to make it doubly sure that the company will see that the employes are properly notified, not only technically by the posting of the notices, but also directly by handing to the employe all the rules which he has to obey. It is no hardship to inflict this obligation upon the company, and to force the company whenever they issue a new rule to have it not only posted on the walls of the office, and call upon the employes there to go and read it, but to hand every employe a copy of those rules, so that he may know them.

Mr. McNEILL. That would mean all the rules heretofore published. Why not hand the employe a copy of this clause? I think that would be sufficient.

Mr. LAURIER. Let the employe be handed such rules as he has to obey. The company would have to give a copy of the rules to each of their employes, but as the provision is at present instead of doing that they have a book in the office as we all know, which may be as thick as the statute we have in our hands. Do you expect that each employe will in his turn read all those rules? No, it cannot be expected. But place in his hands a copy of a book which contains the rules; and this can be done whenever a new man is appointed. When the employe comes to be paid he can be handed a copy of the rules at the same time, and if he has been notified of what is expected of him, and if he breaks the rule, let the punishment be as severe as it can be against him.

Mr. CURRAN. I have listened with pleasure to the remarks of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, and more particularly with reference to the first object aimed at in this clause, wherein he states that he thoroughly agrees with the Bill, inasmuch as "wilfully" and "negligently" are both cases in which the public should be protected. In that, of course, he is not in unison with what other gentlemen on that side of the House, who have already spoken, have said. I must say that I also agree with him in regard to the alteration that has been made by the suggested amendment. The fact is, I think that my hon. friend the Minister of Justice apprehends that greater difficulty will be caused than actually can be caused in cases of this kind. We know that railway companies are organised in a peculiar way, and that each branch is superintended by a foreman. Now, it would be the duty of the foreman in each case to hand to each man working under him a copy of any rules and by-laws that may be passed in a general way. He would take note of the time of the delivery of this book containing those rules and regulations; that he had handed over such a copy of the rules and regulations, and in like manner any subsequent rule or by-law, to each of the persons in his charge; taking a note of the time of delivery. I can hardly conceive that the difficulty of making proof of service would be so great as my hon. friend the Minister of Justice anticipates. Under these circumstances, I am satisfied that the law would be just as easily enforced, the public would be as well protected, and even the semblance of complaints would be removed from those in whose interest this amendment is being urged. It is in the highest degree desirable that no class of the community should have even a sentimental grievance, and in this case I think the change of the word from "or" to "and" would satisfy all parties, and would not impair the efficiency of the law or the protection to which the public are entitled.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think it would take away entirely the slight measure of protection which the public have now. It is all very well for us to debate this matter from a sentimental point of view, and to consider how reasonable and how fortunate it is, if we can please, by a few amendments, the sentimental views of classes who, perhaps, are a potent influence in this country. But, Sir, the travelling public, who exercise no influence in the passage of this Bill, ought to be heard likewise, and we ought to consider, not the sentimental grievances or the sentimental wants of a particular class, but the interests of those who pass over these roads year after year, with no possible protection to their lives and property except what this Legislature gives them. Now, I venture to say that with such an amendment it would be almost an absolute impossibility to secure a conviction for the grossest wilful disobedience of regulations entailing the risk of a large number of lives. The hon. member who leads the Opposition suggests that a copy of the rules and regulations should be given every month to the persons who come to receive their wages. He probably knows that many of these officers change almost weekly in various places, and that the employes of some of these companies number thousands. One company was mentioned last night as having at least 5,000 employes, and if every one of these had to be given a copy of the regulations every month, the company would have to distribute 60,000 a year. And it is not a mere question of serving a copy of by-laws on an employe, but a question of proving the contents of those by-laws and the correctness of the copies produced in court in case of a trial for an offence under this Act; and everybody knows that when it comes to a question of proving that the copy delivered was an exact copy of the by-laws, all chances of conviction vanish into thin air; especially as we have to deal with the cases of 5,000 every month, or perhaps every week. The objection is not only a sentimental one, but it is absolutely without any practical force whatever. The provision of the clause requires, as I said, before an indictment and conviction, that there must be proof that the officer has disobeyed wilfully or negligently; and down to this hour no conviction has taken place. The clause, acting as a menace, has given some protection to the public, and has not been required to be enforced.

Mr. LISTER. There is a great deal of force in what the Minister of Justice says; but with regard to his statement of the difficulty a railway company might have in furnishing to each of its employes a copy of the rules and regulations, I will point out to him that it is not necessary that 60,000 copies should be given to the men every year. We all know that the companies have their rules and regulations printed and bound in small book form; and if there is any change made in them—and my information is that changes are not frequent—all that would be necessary would be to give the officers copies of any additional rules when these are adopted by the company. So that there would be no great hardship thrown on the companies, and the men would be certainly informed what their duties are and what the consequences would be of non-fulfilment. It is all very well to say that the public ought to be protected. That is correct; but you ought not to protect the public by doing an injustice to the large body of men who are working on the railways of this country. It is their right to know what the laws governing them are, and the only way you can be certain that they do know or ought to know is by bringing those rules and regulations distinctly under their notice. If there is no such provision, they may see the rules or they may not; but if they are given these rules, and do not acquire a perfect knowledge of them, they ought to be held liable for the consequences. I think the amendment proposed by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) ought to be accepted by the House.

Mr. MULOCK. I think it is quite possible to meet this case both in justice to the railway companies, in justice to the employes, and in justice to the travelling public. When a person is employed on a railway, he knows, from the nature of his duties, that he has to be on the alert, and to inform himself as to what is required of him. What is required of him by this section is not something merely in the interest of the company, but in the interest of the whole public. Now, it might be possible to impose a duty on the railway company as well, which will meet the case. I have drafted a clause which, perhaps, the hon. gentleman, the Minister of Justice, will view favorably. It is as follows:—

The company shall at all times keep posted up in conspicuous places, convenient to where the work or duties of any employees are to be performed, and accessible to such employes, copies of all by-laws, rules and regulations of the company, touching the duties of such employes; and every such employe shall be entitled to demand to receive from the company for his own use a copy of every such by-law, rule or regulation.

Under that, when a man enters the service of the railway, he is told that he has certain duties to perform. There is within his reach a copy of the by-laws, which he may peruse if he desires to do so; but as it is not likely he would have the time or the convenient opportunity to do so, I would place it within his power to demand for his own use, copies, and if the railway company makes default in supplying copies of these rules and regulations, it shall be subjected to severe penalties, under the penal clauses of the Act. Thus we have a penalty on a company for not placing in the possession of the employe those rules which ought to guide him in the discharge of his duties, and we also have the obligation on the part of the employe to obey those rules. If, under this Act, this amendment is adopted the employe has at once the right to obtain a copy of these rules and regulations, and having that right, it is not too much to call on him to ask for the copies. If he declines to do so, I do not think we can excuse him for not taking that much trouble. Where there is a general manager or a small executive and a vast army of employes, we must call upon all to contribute a little towards the common end in view.

Mr. EDGAR. The objection I see to that is this: that it throws upon the employe not only the liability to know what these rules and regulations are, but also the liability to hunt them up himself.

Mr. MULOCK. To ask for them.

Mr. EDGAR. Well, that is an additional responsibility thrown on the employe. More than that, the objection has been raised that it is too much to ask the company to deliver these to the employe. This does not get over that difficulty, as it still requires the company to hand them to all the employes when they ask for them; and if it is to be of any use they should all ask for them. The responsibility should be thrown simply on the company to furnish their employes, who are not so very numerous, with these copies, and to post them up besides.

Mr. THOMPSON. I would call the attention of the hon. member for North York to the provision already contained in the Bill on this subject. According to section 221, "a printed copy of so much of any by-law, rule or order as relates to the conduct of any employe of the company, shall be given to every such employe." So that it is the duty of the company to give the notice, and the employe cannot be punished unless it has been given to him. As regards the suggestion of the hon. member for Bruce, with regard to the propriety of bringing by-laws to the notice of the employes, I think that before any by-law is assented to it should be made a condition that it should be posted up. It would not be desirable that we should debate again on the third reading of the Bill all these amendments which were proposed in committee, and be obliged to go back into committee. I would be glad to give the most patient and careful consideration to the Bill again, but we have really reached a stage of the Session when it is almost impossible to delay any longer.

Mr. MULOCK. Is there anything in the Bill requiring the company to post up the notices?

Mr. THOMPSON. An employe cannot be punished unless the notice has been posted up in a conspicuous place.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It is to be regretted that this Bill was not introduced at an earlier stage. When the Bill was in committee I was inclined to favor the clause as it stood. I thought the penalty, where there was no actual loss of life or property, was too severe. If that was eliminated, I would propose to leave the clause as it stands. It is rather hard upon the employes that because a notice is put up, they should be amenable to a penalty. The hon. the Minister of Justice said it was difficult to serve a large number of employes with notices, but they are scattered over all the different stations, and each station master should see that the men under his supervision were served with these copies. I have changed my view, and I think that before making any railway employe liable to a heavy penalty it should be shown that he was notified of the by-law.

Mr. McNEILL. Would it not be quite fair to call the attention of the employe to the danger in which he stood, and to the by-law within his reach?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The practice of railway companies is to serve all the by-laws on the employes.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is not only a practice but it is the law, and there are heavy penalties if the companies do not do it.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. member for North Norfolk has not voted.

Mr. CHARLTON. I paired with the hon. member for South Norfolk.

Bill read the third time and passed.

PATENTS OF INVENTION.

Mr. CARLING moved second reading of Bill (No. 38) to amend the Acts respecting patents of invention.

Motion agreed to; Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. EDGAR. I suppose the hon. gentleman intends to give the commissioner of patents, whom he is going to appoint, charge of the copyright branch as well as the trade marks branch, because I do not think it is likely that when there is a Deputy Minister of Agriculture and Patents, as is proposed there shall be, the administration of the copyright law and the trade marks law will remain with him.

Mr. CARLING. The patent branch of the department has grown so much that it is necessary to have someone of legal knowledge to look after it. The number of patents issued by the department some ten years ago was 1,258, now it is 2,850, and the receipts now are $76,000, which pay the expenses of all the officers of the department. As there are a great many legal points which come up connected with the issue of patents, it is important that someone with legal knowledge should be at the head of that branch.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Is this the position to which it is understood the late Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is to be transferred from the one he so unworthily filled before?

Mr. CARLING. It is thought necessary to have a gentleman with legal knowledge, but who will be appointed I am not able to say.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is pretty well understood that Mr. Pope is to have the position.

Mr. CARLING. He may or he may not.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That is a partial admission, at all events. He is to be taken from the office where he disgraced himself, where he violated his oath of office, either of his own accord or by the direction of the Government or some members of the Government, and put himself in a criminal position, although the real criminals were on the Treasury benches, and he is to be rewarded by the passing of an Act for his particular benefit and under which he will have a larger salary. I cannot for myself allow such an Act to pass without expressing the very strong views which I entertain in regard to it, and I must oppose such a provision, unless I felt that the office was to be filled by someone in whom the public could have confidence, as certainly they cannot have confidence in Mr. Pope in any office that he might occupy.

Mr. EDGAR. The Minister of Agriculture tells us that the deputy is to be a professional man, a member of the legal profession, I suppose, but there is nothing in this clause to assure that he should have that qualification. Is it intended that he shall have this qualification?

Mr. CARLING. That is the intention.

Mr. EDGAR. Why is it not put in the Act? I should also like to ask whether this officer is to deal with copyrights in addition to patents, or whether copyrights are to be left to the Deputy Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. CARLING. I think I have already mentioned to the hon. gentleman that this appointment is confined to the patent branch.

Mr. EDGAR. And has nothing to do with copyrights?

Mr. CARLING. No.

Mr. EDGAR. That remains with the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. CARLING. It remains with the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to ask if this is the department to which a gentleman of the name of Pope has been transferred, and if so, if that is the gentleman who managed to keep my return from being filed for three weeks, so that my opponent should have an opportunity of entering a protest against me?

Mr. CARLING. I do not know that Mr. Pope kept back any return. Mr. Pope is now in the Department of Agriculture, and he is certainly an excellent officer.

Mr. MITCHELL. I did not ask the hon. gentleman to state whether Mr. Pope kept back the return, but I asked if this was the same Mr. Pope. I do not think it is to the credit of this Government that a man who was arraigned before this Parliament and was found guilty, should be put by the Government in an important position of this kind, involving millions of dollars. It may fall into his hands to deal with these questions of patents, and there are many cases in which people would pay hundreds of thousands of dollars to have their patent confirmed or to have the application of others rejected, and it is in a position of that kind that Mr. Pope has been put, a man who has been convicted by Parliament as Clerk of the Crown in Chancery of perverting the position he occupied in regard to the seats of members in this House. I think it is a disgrace to this Government to put such a man in that position, and it certainly will not create confidence in the country in regard to this Government if such a man as that is put there, for what purpose I do not know, though the Government may.

Mr. COOK. The return for East Simcoe was held back, and the return for North Simcoe was gazetted immediately after it was received in the office of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. As to East Simcoe, I know that they were hunting for evidence up to the very day when the time for presenting the petition would lapse. They had not sufficient evidence to unseat the candidate, and this gentleman, I suppose by the advice of some hon. gentlemen of the Government, kept the return until their friends in the county of East Simcoe could get evidence to unseat the successful candidate. If it had been necessary to file a petition on the other side, if it had not been for a disagreement in the Tory ranks, and if it had not been that I did not care about settling the Tory differences there, I would have filed a cross petition, and could have shown that they spent from $15,000 to $20,000 in that election. I know that in one township they expended $3,000. I did not feel inclined to do that, because I rather desired to allow the Tories to skin their own skunk, and I did not propose to do it for them. I was seriously injured by this man in regard to my election, and, as has been stated, he perjured himself in regard to this, and it is most objectionable that such a man should be appointed to occupy a position where matters involving thousands of dollars will come before him, in regard to which he will have to adjudicate, because, if he will disregard his oath in matters of this kind, there is no guarantee that he will not accept money in regard to these other matters.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I was surprised, though perhaps I should not have been surprised, at the remarks made by the Minister of Agriculture. He says that Mr. Pope is a very efficient officer. He occupied a position prior to the one he is now occupying, and no doubt the Government found him a very efficient officer, and also a very useful officer in their interests; and, for the course that he pursued, for his conduct toward a portion of the members of this House, we find the Minister of Agriculture making arrangements, not only to pay him the salary which he formerly received, but to increase his allowance as a public servant; and yet the Minister of Agriculture coolly asks the members on this side of the House, who were treated in that way by that officer, to cease opposing the promotion of this officer to a better position than he occupied before. The Minister of Agriculture knows very well why some of these returns were delayed one, two and three weeks. He knows that the return for the east riding of Elgin was delayed for a long time, and he knows why. Other members of the Government, as well as the hon. gentleman, know full well why that return was delayed. The reason was to give every opportunity to search the riding from one end to the other in order to find something, if possible, by which they could unseat me. I do not mind fighting my battles in the riding in a fair fight, but, when not only the Government but also the civil servants of the Government come down to my county, I think it is time to prevent those civil servants from fighting the battles of any party. Do the Government mean to say now that they did not know that these returns came in, and that this man was doing the work in the manner in which he was doing it? I venture to say that no member of the Government will get up and deny that statement. Still we are called upon to give this man a better position. If ever there was a disgraceful transaction in any free country, it was that transaction of which Mr. Pope was guilty in his position as Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. There is not language too strong to condemn the man. Yet what do we find this Government doing to reward the unmanly act that he committed?

Mr. McNEILL. I rise to a point of order. I think this discussion is not in order. The Minister has stated that there was no intention to appoint this man; that he might not be appointed. The question is whether a discussion of this kind is in order.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is thoroughly understood that this is a job to reward Mr. Pope for one of the most disgraceful acts that was ever perpetrated by any civilised Government, and we are not going to allow that most dishonorable man to be rewarded for that most dishonorable act, without putting on record our opinion of the man and of the men who are rewarding him.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). If I am out of order, I can very easily put myself in order. No doubt the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. McNeill), with his sensitive feelings, and the peculiarly nice nature that belongs to him, with the finer type and finer development of the human race which characterises him, no doubt it grates upon his feelings when we are telling nothing but the simple truth about one of the officers of the Government. I say without any hesitation, that I believe that every man in the hearing of my voice—and no doubt they all hear me—will agree with me that a transaction of this kind is to be condemned by every member of this House. I appeal to hon. gentlemen opposite to consider it well. Suppose, in the near future, and it will be in the near future, that they were placed in the minority, how would they feel to have a Clerk of the Crown in Chancery act towards them as he has acted towards the members on this side of the House? Many hon. gentlemen know the inconvenience, the annoyance and perplexity of an election trial. I have gone through it; and although a thorough investigation was made, lasting from day to day, not a tittle of evidence could be found against me. Yet, Sir, on account of the conduct of this man, I had to go through all this annoyance and trouble, and when I attempt to place my grievances before the Chairman, who is fair, who is upright and just in giving his decision, I am told that I am out of order. I cannot allow things of this kind to go on without raising my voice against them. I say, if the Government do perpetrate, as they are about to perpetrate, this wrong upon hon. members on this side of the House, it will be an act to their lasting disgrace. Sir, I am bitterly opposed to this man being promoted. I say he is not competent for the office in which he will be placed. There is another place where he ought to be, and the sooner he is put there the better it will be for the morality of the people of this country.

The CHAIRMAN. Carried.

Mr. McMULLEN. Last Session—

The CHAIRMAN. Under the circumstances I shall persist in ruling that the motion is carried. It was distinctly declared so before any hon. gentleman arose.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then it was carried very violently. The hon. member beside me was standing up when you declared it carried.

The CHAIRMAN. If that is the case, certainly I did wrong. But I saw no one standing up.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There was no hon. gentleman standing up.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) was standing up.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. member for Northumberland and I rose together. I am quite sure, Mr. Chairman, that you wish to do what is perfectly fair in this matter, we have had abundant evidence of that. All I can say is, that everybody knows there is no use in trying to head off a discussion on this matter. It has got to come, and it may just as well be had now as on the third reading of the Bill. But as a matter of fact, my hon. friend beside me had risen at the exact moment I rose.

The CHAIRMAN. I certainly should not have made that declaration if I had been aware that any hon. gentleman had risen to speak. I may say that perhaps I was a little more prompt in declaring the motion carried, for the reason that we have to go back into committee again on this same question in consequence of another resolution which has to come up, so that hon. gentlemen would have lost the opportunity of speaking.

Mr. MITCHELL. I rose at the moment in order to endorse the statements made by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson). I want to say, however, that it is well to remember that when a motion is declared carried, whether from the Chair you occupy or from the chair occupied by the Speaker of this House, it does not necessarily follow that the discussion is closed. That is done for the sake of the dispatch of business; you ought not to be strict in shutting off hon. gentlemen who desire to speak, because the Chairman does not happen to perceive them rising.

Mr. McMULLEN. The First Minister will remember that last year when the question of increasing the salary of this man was before the House, it was done at the very closing hours of the Session. On that occasion the Opposition took pointed exception to the increase of salary and to the position in which this gentleman was placed, owing to the injustice which he had done us in the general election, because it was proposing an increased remuneration to this man, and putting him in a position beyond the reach of the House, in a position somewhat similar to that of a judge. Now, if there is anything that is sacred to the people of this country, and to every candidate who offers himself for election, it is the right to be treated with even-handed justice, no matter whether he is a Conservative or a Reformer. In the last general election, undoubtedly an advantage was taken of us. In my own section, every Conservative member elected was gazetted one or two weeks, and in some cases three weeks, before I was gazetted. I made strict enquiries with regard to the time the returns were sent in, and I found that the returning officer performed his duty and made the returns at the proper time. Now, for a person to say that my election should be held back two or three weeks and not gazetted, while the Conservative members all around me were gazetted from one to three weeks before I was, to say that was a mere accident, to say there was no intent on the part of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, is to say what no one believes. No man could accept that as an excuse for the irregularities that took place. Now, Mr. Chairman, if we allow actions of that kind to pass without entering our solemn protests, why, we may have another election, and at every election, little arrangements of this kind will be concocted and carried out to our detriment. It is our duty to resent such things, and to lead the Government to understand that if these technical advantages are going to be taken with us, by men in the honorable position of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, by gazetting certain men early and holding back the gazetting of others, so that the advantage of protest may remain in the hands of the Conservative party, and that they may have a longer time to file petitions than we have, then I say it is a piece of gross injustice to which we are not going calmly to submit. Every time this question is before the House I think a majority, at least on this side, have entered their protest against that gross injustice, and against granting any increase of salary to this man, or putting him in a position beyond the reach of any Government. He will be virtually placed in a similar position to a judge. Hon. gentlemen cannot expect that we will submit quietly to such a course as this, by which a gross injustice has been done, and we wish to impress on the House and the country that if these things are perpetrated we will resent them, and that if officers perform their duties in a one-sided fashion they may expect to bring down upon their heads the criticism and condemnation which they justly deserve.

Committee rose and reported.

House resolved itself into committee to consider a proposed resolution (p. 125) to provide for the appointment of a deputy commissioner of patents and inventions.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. CARLING moved second reading of Bill (No. 38) to amend the Act respecting patents of inventions.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and considered in committee and reported.

THE CRIMINAL PROCEDURE ACT.

Mr. THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 123) to amend the Criminal Procedure Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This Bill, I suppose, is intended to prevent, what does appear to be an injustice, the taking of a man from one Province to another Province to try him. I presume the fact that the editor of the Empire is one of the victims has not disinclined the Government to carry out this reform in the law.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman will relieve me from any such imputation when he is aware that nearly all the papers in Canada disclosed the fact that I promised the year before to introduce this Bill.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman has promised a great many things the year before, but he has not carried them out the year after. The Bill is an excellent one, and I am very glad to see it introduced. The only addition I should desire is a provision that an editor, after a trial is closed, shall not be committed to gaol for commenting on the judges who presided at the trial.

Mr. DESJARDINS. When a newspaper has established an office in one of the Provinces, so as to make it a centre for distribution, the offence of which he is alleged to be guilty, should be tried in the district where that office is located.

Mr. LAURIER. There is force in that objection. There is no reason why we should depart from the general rule that an offence should be tried where it is committed, and I do not understand why a newspaper should not be tried where it is published. The doctrine prevailing hitherto, and against which this Bill is intended to apply, was that the newspaper editor could be tried in any part of the Dominion. Now, you say, by this Bill, he shall be tried in the Province where the paper is published. Should not the Bill go a little further and set out that the offence should be tried wherever it is committed?

Mr. THOMPSON. The whole object of the Bill is to establish a different principle in regard to newspapers from that which prevails in regard to any other class of publication, and the justification of that principle must be based on the exceptional character of a newspaper. The reason why the newspaper editor may be brought to any part of Canada for trial is that the publication, in a legal sense, is committed wherever his paper goes, and that therefore an editor, who in the Province of Nova Scotia publishes a libel, and sends his paper to the Province of British Columbia, may be brought there for trial, because there his paper, in a legal sense, is published. But considering that newspapers have a general circulation, and that that must necessarily be more extensive over the country than any other medium of communication, it is considered fair that they should not be held to the strict sense of the term "publication," but that the place where the paper is in the popular sense published—that is wherever the paper is printed or wherever the editor resides—shall be the place of trial. I think that is fair on the general principle as regards publication, but if we are to hold that any place where a newspaper has an agency, is to be considered its place of publication, and that the publisher may be brought there for trial, we would be giving no relief to the newspaper editor at all; especially to the large organs, which are, perhaps, the more deserving of protection because they are best conducted, and which have agencies all over the country.

Mr. LAURIER. Would not this Bill, if it becomes law, expose the newspaper to very queer consequences? Now the name of the Empire has just been cited, and the Empire is, as I understand, in the meshes of the law. According to this Bill, the editor of the Empire which is published in Toronto, can be brought to Algoma or to any other part of Ontario for trial.

Mr. THOMPSON. No.

Mr. LAURIER. I think the clause cannot be read otherwise. It says:

Every proprietor, publisher, editor or other person charged with the publication in a newspaper of any defamatory libel, shall be dealt with, indicted, tried and punished in the Province in which he resides, or in which such newspaper is printed.

Then the editor can be tried anywhere in the Province as I understand. Is not that the principle of the Bill?

Mr. THOMPSON. The place of trial must be within the Province, but when we come to that the Criminal Procedure Act provides what part of the Province he shall be tried in. The object is to prevent a person being brought from one Province to another.

Mr. LAURIER. If you bring this Act within the general law that would be all right and I have nothing more to say.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know before we pass this Bill, does it in any way affect cases actually pending?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not at all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I presume the general provisions of the law would not cause the Act to do as I stated, but I was not quite certain from the phraseology.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

DOMINION LANDS ACT—CROFTER IMMIGRATION.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved second reading of Bill (No. 131) further to amend the Dominion Lands Act (from the Senate).

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the purport of this Bill?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I may say that this measure has been introduced at the instance of Her Majesty's Government. The hon. gentleman may have seen in the public press that a vote of £10,000 sterling had been made by Her Majesty's Government in aid of emigration, and there is also a sum to be added to this State aid. The fund is to be managed by commissioners, and those commissioners are to have the powers given to persons and companies under our general Act.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So, in fact, you may take a mortgage exclusive of the homestead provision. Is that the purport of it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is making those four commissioners a company which can loan money on mortgage; the same as is provided for other companies under our law.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The object is a good one I believe, although the sum appears to be exceedingly small, except it is to be as a mere tentative experiment. Ten thousand pounds will not go very far in relieving the congestion in the crofters settlements in the Highlands, if I know anything about them. Is there any limitation as to the rate of interest or is it left to private agreement?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is left to our law. Six per cent. is the maximum under the Dominion Lands Act.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I rather assume that in the case of those persons who are chiefly English, the actual rate will be considerably less.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no doubt.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But the hon. gentleman has no information about that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot say that I have no information. I gave my papers to my hon. friend who has carried them to the Upper House and they are not returned. We need not have the third reading until to-morrow.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not wish to delay the Bill but I should like to know this for my own information.

Mr. LAURIER.

Does the hon. gentleman remember what number of families are to be brought under this scheme?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is left, I suppose, a good deal to themselves.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I fancy so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The reason why I asked that is that I think our Government will do well, if they are anyway concerned in making land grants, to make sure that a sufficient sum shall be granted to start those poor people fairly. It would be more for the interests of the people of Canada that 100 families should be started well, than that 200 or 300 families should be started so imperfectly and with such a small amount of capital at their disposal, that they would be likely to fail. I dare say that in many parts of the North-West the crofters would prove extremely valuable settlers.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I take blame to myself for not having the papers, but I will have them to-morrow. The subject is an experiment and one which ought to be encouraged. The hon. gentleman is correct in his ideas that those crofters would make valuable settlers. The crofters who have been sent out here by Lady Cathcart have been very successful.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Those are all about the Moosomin Station?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, somewhere there. Their condition is in the highest degree satisfactory. The arrangement is that each head of those crofter families shall get a quarter section like other settlers. There is to be a house put up for them, and they are to be set on their way in the world as Lady Cathcart did in respect to her crofters, and security will be taken for eventual payment. I believe there is to be no interest charged for the first two years, and at the end of two years, if they are successful, there will be a moderate rate of interest charged, according to my recollection, but I cannot state positively not having the papers before me.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will make one suggestion to the hon. gentleman. I have seen those crofters, and I have formed a favorable opinion myself of their capacity and aptitude. At any rate, I thought the younger men would undoubtedly become valuable settlers. Looking at the habits and qualities of those crofters, I believe that if the Government would make a point of seeing that they were settled tolerably close together, it would greatly add to their probable chances of success. The Government have received from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company six or seven million acres of land, and my suggestion is that for the sake of this experiment, the checker board principle by which a mile is interposed between the settlers should be done away with. The experiment is worth trying for its own sake.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The suggestion is certainly worthy of consideration.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I shall ask the hon. gentleman at the third reading of the Bill, whether he has considered it and intends to act upon it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I shall perhaps be able to answer that question to-morrow.

Committee rose and reported.

SUPPLY—THE BRESAYLOR HALF-BREEDS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. EDGAR. More than a week ago I gave notice to the Government that on going into Supply I would bring before the House the grievances of the settlers at Bresaylor in the North-West Territories. I will as briefly as I possibly can lay before the House the serious grievances and the deep wrongs which I think have been inflicted on these people, and will show the House what great distress they are suffering from the treatment they have received. The story is a tragic and touching one, and I sincerely hope that bringing it before the House will be the means of obtaining for those people tardy justice at the hands of the Government. The Bresaylor settlement is situated on the north branch of the Saskatchewan, about 25 miles above Battleford, and the settlers there are mostly Scotch half-breeds of a very high order of intelligence and respectability. They were originally farmers at Headingly near Winnipeg. They had the intelligence to sell out their farm lands when the boom in Manitoba was at its height, and they went up to their new settlement in 1883 and 1884, taking with them a very considerable amount of money. Numbers of them were possessed of property worth $5,000, and Mr. Charles Bremner, who seems to have been a leader among them, was possessed of about $20,000 worth of property, as he had a large store and was engaged in considerable trading with the Indians. To show the House what position these people are in to-day, I will read a short extract from a letter which was written by a leading citizen of Battleford on the 12th of March last, while this House was in session. Referring to them, he says:

"These people are starving, and to use Mr. Bremner's words to me to-day, he said: 'I would a thousand times rather die than to go through what I have this winter—family half clothed and not half fed.' It is really too bad, and if trouble comes of it the Government are to blame."

And again:

"The settlement people are living on one another, and only bannock at that. They have killed all the animals they had, and are now so discouraged and disheartened that many would prefer death in almost any other shape than starving."

The writer of this letter is a well known and always loyal citizen of the town of Battleford. Now, I would just enquire briefly why things are in the present condition. When the rebellion broke out, these settlers were living on their lands. Some settlers near them went into the fort at Battleford, and these settlers were advised by a missionary priest, the Rev. Father Cocbin, who was a resident among them, to send a messenger down to the fort, to ask the commandant whether they should go in or not; and the priest wrote a letter for them, which was sent to the commandant. No answer was received by them. The commandant says an answer was returned by him, but the messenger was intercepted by the Indians and never reached the settlers. There were two Indian reservations lying between this Bresaylor settlement and Battleford—Thunder Child's reservation and the Moosomin reservation; and Poundmaker's reserve was seven or eight miles from them in a southerly direction. That being the case, the settlers did not think much harm would happen to them, and delayed going into Battleford until they were captured, as the evidence shows, by a couple of hundred Indians from Poundmaker's reserve, their goods being largely plundered and they themselves being taken away to Poundmaker's reserve. It was a pity they delayed going into Battleford as they did, but there they were, and they were taken away, no doubt in order to prevent them fighting with the police and the volunteers who were at Battleford. It does not seem to have been contemplated by the Indians who took them that they would be allies in their fight against the Canadian Government. But they were taken there and allowed to remain there, as a sort of half prisoners. There were fourteen or fifteen families of them altogether. They were allowed to retain their own arms; and after they consented to go with the Indians, without fighting, their property was no longer disturbed, and they were allowed to take with them four or five cart loads of valuable furs. I do not wish to go into all the details, but I would say that these half-breeds allege that on two occasions, they sent communications from Poundmaker's reserve to the fort of Battleford and never got a reply. When they heard that the Indians were likely to be attacked, they sent a messenger to say that they would put up a white flag on their canvas tents, which were separate from the other tents, and that they were not going to take any part in the fight. They put up their white flag, but it appears that some of the cannon shots of the volunteers came among their tents, and they then withdrew with their families off the field altogether. It does seem that two or three of them, when they were fired at by Col. Otter's forces, took rifles, and engaged in the fight with Poundmaker, in self defence, as the Indians threatened to kill them if they did not fight and the volunteers were shooting at them. They, however, restrained the Indians in many ways and many times from committing excesses. I have gone through the large volume which was laid on the Table early in the Session, and could establish that claim if necessary, but I do not think it is necessary. The commission which considered the claims for rebellion losses disallowed the claims of the settlers on the ground that they were parties to their own losses, or, in other words, that they had not been loyal and took part in the rebellion. Well, I have read the evidence of these claims, which is not very long, and certainly it leads me to the opinion that while there were suspicious circumstances such as those I have given, there was a very complete answer made to the charge of disloyalty in that evidence; and I think that while the commissioners had some ground to go upon in their general conclusion, still, on the whole, they came to a wrong decision. Since then, a petition has been sent in to the Government by these settlers. It was dated the 25th August, last year, and was presented up there to the Minister of Interior on the 25th August by the settlers. This petition is a rather long document, and I will confine myself to stating its substance. The petitioners show that they were made prisoners by the Indians and forced into the Indian camp, that since the rebellion the Government has indemnified all the settlers except them for the losses they sustained; that, on the supposition that they joined the Indians of their own free will and acted as rebels, indemnity was unjustly withheld from them, and they strongly protest against such a course because they are British subjects and should be considered innocent until proved guilty. They say they can establish fully, if given opportunity, the genuineness of their loyalty on that occasion. They allege that:

"Towards the 18th of April, a few days before the battle at Out Knife Creek, we sent during the night one Samuel Denison, with instructions to proceed to the barracks and inform Capt. Morris that we were prisoners of the Indians; that if they were to come to fight not to shoot at us; that our camp would be at one side and could be easily recognised by our square canvas tents, while the Indians had tepees; that if a favorable occasion offered during the battle we would join the troops and fight the Indians."

"On the following day the Indians taking notice of Denison's disappearance, became suspicious about our intentions. They held a council and decided that we should remove our tents to the centre of the camp. On our refusing to comply with this order they rode around in a threatening attitude, yelling and firing, Indian fashion. We showed that we were determined to fight them rather than comply, and seeing that we could not be intimidated we were finally allowed to remain where we were encamped."

"On hearing the firing of the cannon on the morning of the battle, Charles Bremner put up a white flag to indicate to the troops the position of our camp. The Indians wanted us to pull it down, but we resisted, and to avoid a possible conflict we had to assure them that it meant nothing."

"Notwithstanding our message to Captain Morris through our messenger Denison, firing was kept up at our camp by the troops during the battle. Incensed at what was considered a breach of faith or an unpardonable distrust, a few amongst us—two or three—decided to take part in the fight against the troops, saying: 'Since the police do not take any notice of our letters and messages we are not to remain exposed to be killed by both the Indians and the police."

"Your petitioners are ready to substantiate these facts before a court of enquiry, and we feel that if such an opportunity is offered to us we will be able to dispel all doubts about the loyalty of our intentions, and prove besides that our firm attitude and our influence over the Indians has been instrumental in saving lives and in preventing cruelties of any kind on prisoners and on the bodies of the soldiers left on the battle field."

They pray, therefore, to be indemnified for their losses on account of the rebellion. There are none who are better able to judge of the honesty of these people's claims and their loyalty than the settlers of the town of Battleford, and in support of the petition of these half-breed settlers, there is an endorsement on this petition to the Minister of Interior:

"We, the inhabitants of Battleford, take the liberty of recommending to your favorable consideration the within petition of the Bresaylor settlement."

"Though we looked with some distrust at the doings of the petitioners during the rebellion we firmly believe them to have been led astray owing to the intense excitement and general distrust then prevailing, and we do not hesitate to admit that subsequent developments and a better understanding have dispelled the erroneous impressions we had formed on their loyalty. Though some still retain the belief that a few amongst them took part and acted as rebels, we are fully convinced that the greatest number never ceased to be loyal in mind and in action."

"That the facts as stated in the within petition are in substance true, and that the granting of the conclusion of their petition would be an act of justice to which they are entitled, and your petitioners will never cease to pray."

This endorsement is signed by some thirty of the resident settlers of the town of Battleford. Among them I see the name of a former member of this House, Mr. Richard, who was member for Megantic, John Hogg, Presbyterian minister at Battleford, the Rev. A. H. Bigonese, Roman Catholic missionary, and Father Cochin, also a Roman Catholic missionary, who was there the whole time, and who shows that these settlers, from the time they were taken prisoners until the time they were taken to Battleford, were loyal to the Government. And I also find the evidence of the Rev. J. S. Pritchard, a Church of England minister at Battleford. If that alone were presented to the Government, I think it would make a case for a reconsideration of the claims of these men. But there is a very great deal more in it than that. These petitions were evidently referred by the Government to Mr. Young, the secretary of the commission, who examined into the losses, and I have here an enormous mass, amounting to 162 pages, of a report which has been made to the Government by Mr. Young on the subject of that petition. The whole effect of this report is to justify the finding of the commissioners on the ground of evidence obtained from a number of other sources, which was not before the commissioners when they made their award. However, perhaps the Government may have been right in asking for that information, but, although that has been obtained from the Department of Justice, from the Mounted Police Department, and from several other sources of information, and the extracts which have been made seem to support the finding of the commission and are against the claims of the settlers, I think I could undertake to point out to the Minister of Justice, if it were necessary to do so, that even from that very report which was made to him, he can find perfect answers to almost everyone of the charges made against the settlers or against the half-breeds. I do not intend to take up the time of the House in discussing or arguing that question, because I do not propose to put the case upon that ground entirely. In the claim which has been put in by these half-breeds, there is the claim of Mr. Charles Bremner, which is a specific claim for $4,000 or $5,000 worth of valuable furs. That was thrown out by the commissioners in the same way as the claims which were made for injuries to property when that was first plundered by the Indians. I contend that this claim for the furs of the half-breeds rests upon a very different footing and a higher footing than other claims, and it is to that I particularly call the attention of the House. These men came in at the close of the rebellion and surrendered themselves or came to Battleford, at about the same time as Poundmaker came in. They brought in four cart loads of furs belonging to Charles Bremner, which were worth from $4,000 to $5,000. What I state now is not contradicted by any document whatever. I would like to read to the House briefly some statements in regard to those furs which have been made under oath. I would first read the statement made by Louis Caplette, of the Bresaylor settlement, dated the 9th November, 1885, and therefore a very short time after these occurrences. He says:

"At the time of the arrest of Charles Bremner referred to in his affidavit, I was his clerk, and in possession of the furs as set forth in schedule A of his affidavit this day sworn, and I know the contents of the four cart loads of furs referred to in his affidavit. The said schedule A referred to in his said affidavit is a true and correct statement of the furs then owned by the said Bremner. About that time, the soldiers commenced pillaging the furs, and I went to the military authorities to ask for protection. These authorities took possession of the furs and placed the same in the police barracks at Battleford."

That refers to the occasion when brought into the fort by the half-breeds themselves. He goes on to say:

"I have seen the furs several times at the barracks since then, but I have noticed the pile of furs upon each visit growing less, and the authorities refuse to deliver them up. I believe the furs are worth the amounts set forth in the said schedule A."

Then I would refer to the evidence given by Charles Bremner himself before the commission. He says:

"The furs were at my place in the carts, and went with us to the Indian camp, but the Indians did not take possession of them. Middleton gave orders to put the furs in a safe place. I have not seen it since. I enquired for it but have not recovered it."

Then he says:

"The furs were in my carts, and I brought them with me along with the Indians. I cannot say what became of the goods, but my furs were brought in here—"

That is Battleford—

"At the time of Poundmaker's surrender, and were delivered to the police here then."

Then he says:

"The furs in exhibit B are the furs I lost. I cannot say if I had counted them all. I had counted what was packed. I made out my lists from memory as soon as released, when I went to Winnipeg, and I have not recovered any of them. Personally I cannot say who took them."

Then he gives an account of how he got these furs from the Indians. Louis Caplette gave very much the same evidence on the 8th of June, 1885, when he was examined before the commission, and there is no dispute whatever about that part of the matter. There is no dispute that these furs were brought in by Bremner, and were placed, by General Middleton's order, in the custody of the police at Battleford. I wish to read to the House a statement which has been very recently made by Charles Bremner on the 10th March, 1888, and has been sent to me. He says:

"In connection with my claim for losses and my petition to Hon. Thos. White, I beg to submit the following:—In the winter of 1884 and 1885, I was trading with the Indians and had accumulated a lot of furs, the amount claimed by me was about $7,500. After the surrender of Poundmaker, I was with all the half-breeds of our settlement to camp, near the barracks, having the fur in my possession, was arrested and placed in guard-room. In the evening General Middleton came to our camp in company with Col. Otter. The soldiers for some little time had been trying to take furs from us by force and had succeeded in carrying off a few. Caplette here asked General Middleton if his soldiers had authority to take the fur. Middleton said no, and asked to whom the fur belonged; being told, he said he would send two or three men to protect; a short time after three men came with a team and removed all the fur to the barracks without our permission. We were taken to Regina, tried for treason, not proven guilty and let off on our own recognisances. On returning to Battleford, I at once went to Col. Morris, of the N.W.M.P., and asked for my fur. He replied that he had had a telegram from General Middleton telling him to give the balance of the fur he had left to certain parties mentioned in his telegram, and that most of the fur was gone. I afterwards went to Winnipeg and engaged lawyer, of Archibald, Howell & Co. We went to see Hon. Caron about my fur, but he did not give me any satisfaction, saying it was outside his department. Mr. Howell asked to whom would we go for information and the Minister replied to go to General Middleton. We went to see Middleton but he said he knew nothing about the fur and said that he had never commanded that Bremner or his party should be arrested, and in reply to a reference to his telegram to Col. Morris, he denied having ever sent him a telegram on the subject. We left Middleton in that manner without any satisfaction.

"On returning from Winnipeg I went again to see Morris and asked for the balance of my fur, he said it was all gone, and on my referring to Middleton's denial of having sent a telegram to Morris re furs, Morris again asserted that Middleton had sent the telegram and he could prove it. This was said in the presence of Louis Caplette.

"I put in a claim for the furs but have not received any compensation for them so far nor for any other losses."

Now, the statements of Charles Bremner with reference to the furs which were claimed by him, are absolutely unanswered, and are perfectly conclusive; and show that these men came into the barracks, their furs were taken possession of by agents of the Government, and they were held by the agents of the Government as trustees for these men. I do not care whether these men were rebels ten times over, this was their private property, and it was taken possession of by the mounted police, under General Middleton's directions, and they have not got any portion of these furs yet, nor have they been paid a single dollar on account of these claims, and they are starving for want of that money. That point is absolutely clear, and I think it is a disgrace to the country that it should be so. These men may be rebels, but do not steal their furs. The question with reference to these furs was raised twice in this House last Session by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) when the House was in Committee of Supply, and he mentioned the names of high dignitaries of the Government as being charged with having received possession, personally, of these furs; he mentioned the name of General Middleton, he mentioned the name of Mr. Bedson, and he mentioned the name of Hayter Reed, as being charged by reliable parties with having taken those furs, that somebody has taken, and that have disappeared. Now, I say that after that statement was made by an hon. gentleman from his place in this House, it is a most extraordinary thing that we have heard nothing more from the Government; it is a most extraordinary thing that, in order to clear the honor of these gentlemen from that foul stain, they have not demanded an investigation and made the whole thing public. I hope that after to-day, at any rate, we will have an investigation. It is absolutely proved that these furs were brought into the possession of the Government, and the claims of those people should be opened up; and I say that on that account, without going into anything else, the decision of the commissioners was wrong, and should be opened up. Then, I say it is the duty of the Government to pay these people for the value of their furs; more than that, it is the duty of the Government, after what has been charged by these people, to trace up these furs, and see where they have gone. More than that, Mr. Speaker, I do not care who the guilty parties are, it is the duty of the Government to bring them to justice, even if it should send somebody to the penitentiary. Now, we see by this statement which I read from Charles Bremner that General Middleton denied to him having taken these furs, and that he also denied the statement which appears to have been made by Capt. Morris, that he had some telegrams from General Middleton. Very well, I hope that is true, and if it is true, how easy it is to prove it. Now, the hon. member for Bothwell, as I say, mentioned the names of two other Government officials as having really taken these furs; those were the names of Mr. Bedson and Hayter Reed. I hope they are free from blame, but I think after what has been said, the matter should be investigated. It is only fair to them and to the Government that the House should know what I am sure can be proved if the enquiry is properly and fairly opened. I believe it can be proved by credible persons that on the 5th July, 1885, the following letter was received by Quartermaster Warden, in the police barracks at Battleford. The letter was dated at Fort Pitt, 4th July, 1885, and it is addressed "Dear Warden":

"Gen. Middleton has instructed and authorised me to send you the present letter, desiring that you put up bales of furs for the under-mentioned: Two bales for General Middleton, one for S. L. Bedson, and one for myself. Please select the best, and pack them down, as we will be down there to-morrow by boat.

(Signed) "HAYTER REED,
"Assistant Commissioner of Indians."

Now, this letter was shown after it was received to several parties, and a copy of it was obtained, and I have read what purports to be a copy of it, and what I believe is a true copy of it. Now, these bales were packed up in accordance with the directions, and the furs were chiefly, as I said, Charles Bremner's. On the 6th July, the boat arrived down the river with General Middleton and Mr. Hayter Reed on it. I do not know whether Mr. Bedson was there or not. Mr. Reed, I am instructed, saw the furs as they were packed, but wanted some better ones, and had in addition to these, some boxes filled with choice furs, bear skins and so on, and these bales were sent with the boxes to the boat and they disappeared. Now, that is all I know about where these furs went to; but I take the responsibility in my place in the House of saying that I believe this statement and that letter can be proved when the enquiry is made, for I should be very sorry to make a statement to this House which could not be proven. Now the delays have been very great in this matter. Mr. Bremner's affidavit, which I read, showing that he had these furs, and that they were given into the possession of the officials of the Government, was made as long ago as November, 1835, and this poor man and his family are starving to-day, without a dollar in the world, according to the letter which I read in the beginning of my remarks. Yet, with the evidence in the hands of their officer, and with the delays from that time onward, the Government had full notice of this from time to time, and the delays have been unaccountable and cruel. As Government officials took charge of those furs the honor of the Government of Canada is pledged to finding out who stole them and where they are and what became of them; and not only finding out where they are, but finding out who plundered them. This matter having been brought before Parliament, it cannot permit people, no matter how high in office they may be, to rob even the poorest people in Canada. These people are far off and are ignorant and friendless, and it is a cruel wrong that people who have been plundered in this way, and when the case is as plain as day, should be ignored as they have been ignored for years past. For the honor of the volunteers of the country who went to the North-West this matter should be cleared up; the volunteers who so bravely went there and took part in suppressing that rebellion should have that matter cleared up in order to vindicate their own honor. There are gallant members of this House, generals and colonels, and you also, Mr. Speaker, who were also in the North-West, and you should see for your honor that a charge of this kind against the force should be cleared up. I would be the last person to say anything against the volunteers at Battleford, and I will not say anything against them. I must admit that when Col. Otter made his attack on the Indians on Poundmaker's reserve, it was a great mistake. I do not say it was a mistake of military tactics, but it is an unheard-of thing, even in the United States, for troops to attack Indians when on their reserve. Now that this has become a matter of history it is right that a statement should be made in Parliament that we repudiate such attacks in the future. I have nothing to say against Col. Otter himself. I have admired him as a Canadian soldier ever since I was a private in the ranks of the Queen's Own with him, when he was a private too, and I trusted Col. Otter enough to send up there as a private under him in the Queen's Own at Battleford, one of my own sons. So that nothing that I say is against Col. Otter as a soldier; but I make this statement, that it is impolitic and wicked to attack Indians when on their reserve. And more than that. These half-breeds who remained with Indians when on their reserve, must have known they were out of the reach of having to fight with the volunteers or with the police, because they knew that an Indian reserve is a sacred asylum, a city of refuge, where no Indian is attacked in the United States; and if they went there they would be keeping the Indians away and they would be doing good service to the country. This is not and cannot be made a party question. It is a matter on which I felt that, as the facts were placed in my hands, my responsibility as holding a seat in this House rendered it necessary I should bring it before Parliament, and not only rendered it necessary, but I never value a seat in Parliament more than when I have the privilege of bringing such a case as this before the Government and ask them to redress the wrongs done to poor people. It is the duty of the Government—I leave it to them to say what they are going to do about it—to investigate this matter further, to pay these men the value of their furs, to follow up the offenders who took the furs and punish the guilty parties no matter where the punishment may fall.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think the hon. member has no doubt been moved by very commendable feelings in bringing this matter to the notice of the House; at the same time, I think that the view which he expressed with respect to the strength of the evidence in support of the claims is altogether an exaggerated one. I will not insinuate for a moment, as he closed his remarks with a disclaimer of any political feelings, that that exaggeration is due to political bias. The hon. gentleman has undoubtedly been actuated by strong sympathy in favor of the petitioners whom he understands are poor, whom he is inclined to think are oppressed, and he has forgotten some very important characteristics in connection with the investigation which has taken place with regard to these claims. In offering one or two observations in reply to the hon. gentleman I do so precisely in the spirit in which he desired the matter to be considered by the House as entirely separate from any political or party question, as one to be dealt with altogether from the point of view connected with the administration of the affairs of the Department of the Interior. The only thing I have to complain of in connection with the presentation of a case like this to the House is that when claimants in any part of the country assert a demand against the Government, there is too much disposition on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, at once to consider the Government in the wrong, and to consider that the Government is actuated by some kind of prejudice against claimants, instead of being, as they have been in this case, desirous simply that perfect justice should be done to the claimants, and actuated by a desire, at the same time, to protect in every fair and proper manner the Treasury from improper and unjust claims. In the discharge of that duty the Government had to deal, as the hon. gentleman is aware, with an immense number and an enormous amount of claims arising out of the late rebellion in the North-West. They had to deal with claims made, by those who were immediately injured by the rebellion itself. Those claims it was impossible for the Government to investigate in the ordinary departmental way, and they adopted the best mode possible, the mode of issuing a Royal Commission which would take evidence on the spot, hear the claims, see the witnesses and report to the Government. The constitution of that commission has never been assailed in any way so far as I know to this moment, the commission was constituted in a manner to merit the support of all parties and to secure the confidence of the claimants themselves. Among others the claimants from the little settlement of Bresaylor were presented to that commission. The commission laid down a rule, the justice of which, I suppose, will hardly be disputed, that parties who had aided in the rebellion were not entitled to any compensation from the public Treasury for the losses which resulted from disturbances which they had created or assisted to carry on. To have adopted any other principle would simply have been offering a premium to persons to disturb the public peace and create riot in the hope of being able perhaps to obtain some advantage by the successful results of the disturbance, and if the disturbance failed to be successful, they would at all events have their losses indemnified out of the public treasury. Bresaylor is a small settlement about 25 miles west of Battleford, between Battle and Saskatchewan Rivers. The settlement, as the hon. gentleman has stated, is composed of a number of families who removed some years ago to that place from different parts of Manitoba. During the rebellion of 1885 these settlers at Bresaylor were urged, as a matter of precaution, to go to Battleford. One reason why they were urged to go to Battleford was that they would be better protected there than they could possibly be at a distant settlement, and in so small a settlement as theirs was. In the second place it was thought they should be at Battleford where there was a considerable force of police, because there was not the best assurance in the world that the settlement was a loyal one. The apprehensions that existed on that latter point turned out to be pretty correct. The settlement was not wholly disloyal, but it was not wholly loyal, and instead of its being a fact, as the hon. gentleman has supposed—his mind being influenced by the strong impressions of sympathy which he has in favor of those people who at present he says are afflicted—instead of its being a fact that they did not receive an invitation to go to Battleford, a large portion of the settlement acted upon it and went to Battleford. Not only was that so, but some of those who went to Battleford engaged actively in the loyal forces which were preserving the peace of the country. Some of them enrolled in the home guards and assisted in the defence of the place. As to these loyal settlers who went to Battleford for protection and for assisting in the defence of the country, there were claims as well. In consequence of their deserting their homes at Bresaylor their houses were destroyed, their furniture was burned, and all their property was pillaged. The result was that their claims, under these undoubted circumstances, were allowed by the commissioners, and have been paid. The other portion of the settlement; and it is the claims of that portion which the hon. member has brought to the attention of the House this afternoon, refused to remain at Bresaylor or to go to Battleford, and they went into camp for awhile at the place of Charles Bremner who was with them. While they were encamped at Charles Bremner's place they had a consultation with the hostile Indians and with rebel emissaries from Batoche, and as a result of those consultations they removed, with all their animals and movable property, to the Indian camp, in or about which they remained until the surrender of the Indians to General Middleton. Poundmaker, in his letter of 19th May, 1885, speaks of these very persons as some of his men and asked that they should be dealt kindly with, as being part of his force. They had this advantage in going into the rebel camp—their houses were not burned, they continued to control their animals and property, they were armed, and so far from being prisoners or semi-prisoners, as the hon. member supposes, they were armed all the time in the Indian camp, and had perfect freedom there. But there was more than that. They accompanied the rebel scouts from time to time, armed and mounted,

They were found accompanying the rebel scouts, armed and mounted, miles from the camp, and they assisted—those persons who were supposed to be in a state of imprisonment—in the capture of loyal prisoners, on whom they fired while in pursuit. They also captured and seized Government and private property. Some of them on their own admission took part in the battle of Cut Knife Creek and were fully recognised at some 30 paces distant as firing on the troops. They were present in the Indian council tent when letters were received and read from Riel, they followed the dancing tent of the Indians and they had to submit to the usual discipline and regulations of the warpath, and that is the only measure of restraint they were under, for they were just the same as the Indians on the warpath. After the surrender to General Middleton, these people were found to be in possession of stolen property and animals, belonging to their loyal neighbors who went to Battleford, and in one case a Government rifle, the property of a man who was killed on duty, was found in their possession. They were themselves responsible for the loss they had sustained. They went into the rebel forces for the purpose of minimising those losses; they were culpable in regard to the pillage and destruction which the rebellion caused in that country, and it seems to me that the commissioners were perfectly justified in applying to them the rule that rebellion should not be made profitable, as the evidence clearly brought them within the operation of that rule. Their claims for losses, alleged to have been severe in consequence of the rebellion, have been consequently rejected by the commissioners. No claim was allowed except on the strongest evidence and the commissioners felt, in carrying out their instructions, it was their duty to be liberal wherever it was possible to be so and to be just. Let me show what the contention of these men is with regard to this, as arising from the evidence. Their contention is that they were loyal, that they were unwilling prisoners in the hands of the rebels; that while prisoners their property and animals were stolen from them by the Indians, and that they were left destitute. They said they did not come to Battleford like their loyal neighbors because of the dangers of the road, because their horses were not at home, because they were surrounded by hostile Indians and subsequently forced to go to the camp. These contentions were all fully considered by the commissioners in deciding on the evidence of the claimants.

Mr. EDGAR. Perhaps the Minister will allow me to say one word. I do not want to interrupt him, except that he will observe that I carefully said I was not going into discussing that, and I am sure that if I had discussed it I could correct a great many of the statements which the hon. Minister is reading to the House, from the evidence itself. I do not rest the case upon that, but upon the matter of the furs.

Mr. THOMPSON. I did understand the hon. gentleman to discuss it. I have no doubt that he, with his mind influenced in favor of these claimants, would point out particulars in the evidence on which we would suppose a different result should have been arrived at. I am stating, of course, as a matter of deduction from the evidence, what I conceive to be that which the evidence establishes. If I do not understand the hon. gentleman as putting this claim on the ground that these people were entitled to compensation because they did not participate in the rebellion; if I am to understand the hon. gentleman that they were fairly within the operation of the rule, which excluded persons who participated in the rebellion from claiming for rebel losses, I shall not say anything further with reference to their action in the rebellion.

Mr. EDGAR. I contended that the commissioners had certain grounds for making the report they did. The Minister knows that the evidence he was reading from was not taken before the commission, and I have gone through the whole of that evidence most carefully—but it was taken from other sources, and other departments, and reported after this late petition came before the Government. Even in that evidence, from which the hon. gentleman is quoting, I see there is a great deal that throws doubt upon the disloyalty of these men. They may have been somewhat disloyal, and, perhaps, the commissioners were right in their finding from that point of view; but as to that I contend, that, upon the petition of the residents of Battleford taking up the reconsideration of their claims, it would have been reasonable for the Government to open those claims anew. I came to the question of the furs afterwards; whether they were rebels or not is another question.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am speaking to the general question of these claims. Then the hon. gentleman and I understand each other to this extent, that there was evidence before the commissioners from which they fairly came to the conclusion which they did. I was about to state what that evidence consisted of, but it is not worth while to press that point, as the hon. member concedes it. The question then arises, how far are the representations in the petition from the residents at Battleford entitled to weight as against the evidence which shows that these people participated in the rebellion? I have to say this at the outset, that it is not a question as to how far the evidence casts the stain of rebellion on these claimants. They were taken, most of them, in flagrante delicto; there can be no doubt that they were seen under arms, that the property of loyal men, their neighbors, was seen upon them, and that they engaged in the field and had Government arms in their possession. All these points are beyond question. But it is true that a number of residents at Battleford afterwards presented a petition to the Government representing that they had misunderstood the position of these men, and recommending their claims to the consideration of the Government. That petition was signed, as the hon. gentleman says, by about 30 persons. We all know the facility with which signatures can be obtained to petitions in favor of claimants, and the people of Battleford, pitying the circumstances of these people, would readily give them their signatures. If we need any further evidence on that point, it is afforded by the fact that thirteen of the persons who signed that petition were not in the country at all when the disturbances occurred. It further transpires that of the whole number of signatures to that petition only one was from an individual who could by any possibility have had personal knowledge of the facts which the petition was based on. The hon. gentleman has called our attention to some names which ought to give great weight to representations of that kind. One of them was that of a missionary, who I think, he said, was in the vicinity of the settlement at the time, and would have knowledge of the facts. That is so, and he is the only individual who had knowledge of the circumstances at all. The rest of the signatures might as well have been replaced by those of citizens of Toronto or Montreal, as far as any knowledge of the facts was concerned. But the hon. gentleman called attention to the fact that this petition was signed by the Rev. Mr. Hogg, the Rev. Mr. Pritchard, and Mr. Richard, who was, I believe, at one time a member of this House; and he thought that the signatures of these three gentlemen gave weight to the statements in the petition. These three gentlemen, whose opinion is certainly of weight, all came into the country after the rebellion was over. Now, let me call the attention of the House for a moment, in corroboration of the evidence with regard to the position of these men in relation to the rebellion, to some facts which were stated in the Saskatchewan Herald of the 1st of June, 1885:

"The army of half-breeds from the upper settlement who lately lived in Poundmaker's camp posing as prisoners came into town on Tuesday with their flocks, herds, household effects and families. The appearance of the procession as it crossed the bridge gave the lie to their story of captivity, because on almost every waggon were some articles of furniture, such as bedsteads, tables, chairs, and sewing machines—proof conclusive that they had been allowed plenty of time to prepare for their entrance into bondage. They wore a very jaunty air as they rode into town, with nothing of the bearing we would expect in men just regaining liberty. They were put into camp a little west of the barracks, and a search of their outfits instituted by the police. In every outfit and nearly every waggon, were found quantities of Government property, consisting largely of arms and ammunition. The latter were chiefly taken from the teamsters captured a short time ago, but in every one of the outfits were found many articles of personal property belonging to other settlers who were bearing arms in defence of their country. Indeed, most of the waggons, horses, and cattle were also recognised and claimed by them; and when asked by the authorities where they got them, the reply generally was: 'I bought it from an Indian,' or, 'I found him.' The caravan was also gone through for arms and ammunition and a large quantity taken, embracing every variety of arm, mostly of a superior quality. It was never believed that they were in reality prisoners, and Poundmaker set the matter at rest by saying they came into camp of their own accord, at the request of Delorme and Trotter, and that Baptiste Sayer was one of the captains. Most of the men of the party have been arrested on various charges, principally appropriating property belonging to others, and are being daily examined before Inspector Dickens, sitting as a justice of the peace. The deposition of their cases will be found in another column."

Then, the evidence shows—I forbear, however, going minutely into it, in consequence of the admission the hon. member makes—active participation in the rebellion, and disguise while under arms for the purpose of concealing their identity. I admit, however, that in the case of the claims of people who are poor and in a distant part of the country, the avenues of justice and mercy ought never to be closed; and at any time that the hon. gentleman can bring to the notice of the Government facts which should induce a different conclusion from that arrived at by the commission, they ought to be considered. The Government have made a most careful and thorough inquiry into all the transactions since the petition was presented and the endorsement from Battleford came to hand. The result has been to confirm to the fullest extent the finding of the commission, and to corroborate by an overwhelming mass of testimony the evidence given before the commission, on which it based its conclusion. I do not mean to say that this conclusion is absolutely final. I state it simply as the conclusion the department has been forced to as the result of an enquiry made in consequence of that petition. The hon. gentleman will see that there has certainly been no want of attention on the part of the Government to the claims the settlers of Bresaylor have presented. With respect to the claim for furs, that has been presented simply in the shape of a demand on the part of Mr. Bremner, and the facts connected with the presentation of his claim, justify the finding of the commissioners with regard to it. Mr. Bremner was a very prominent and active rebel in the field. I do not think the evidence is at all so clear and satisfactory with regard to his furs and the quantity of them, as the hon. member has stated. It appears that he presented claims of various kinds. In the first place, he presented a claim for furs of the value of $4,530; when he next presented it, the amount was $6,070; and when he presented it the third time, the amount had swollen to $20,358.

Mr. EDGAR. The hon. gentleman is wrong about that. That was his total claim. One claim for furs was $4,300, and the other, $5,000. The rest is for property and cattle.

Mr. THOMPSON. These claims were all filed at different dates. They may have included other things than furs. But, among the items which go to make up these rejected claims, is one for furs. The first schedule represents them as worth $4,374. The second schedule represents them as worth $5,364. In the first place, the commissioners had evidence before them that the prices were excessive; in the second place, they had evidence before them that the number of skins claimed exceeded even those which were in the stores at Hudson's Bay posts of considerable size; and, in the third place, they ascertained by the evidence that there was no fur trade at the settlement, where Mr. Bremner was, which could have possibly furnished such a store of furs as he claimed to have. The contention is, in reference to these furs, that they were the produce of his trade at Bresaylor and at another point during the winters of 1884 and 1885; when the rebellion broke out, he and his neighbors went into camp near his store, where he loaded these furs into carts, that he went to the Indian camp, that he took these furs along, and retained possession of them from that date until the date of the surrender to Gen. Middleton at Battleford. I want to call the attention of the House to a significant circumstance, as throwing some discredit upon his claim and upon his evidence. It is this: that while he claims for large rebellion losses, in addition to the furs, he bases that claim on the ground that the Indians pillaged and robbed him; and yet, although he was pillaged and robbed by the Indians, he packed up and took into their camp, as he says, a large quantity of furs, to the value of upwards of $5,000. In the language of the Saskatchewan Herald, "he was making abundant preparation to be captured." After the surrender, he said that he noticed his furs were being interfered with, when he complained to the general, who ordered them to be put into the police barracks for safety; and that at different times his clerks and others visited the barracks, and found at each visit that the furs were decreasing in numbers, and he has not since been able to recover them. The commission rejected his claim for losses, because they decided that, upon the evidence, Charles Bremner himself was proved to be a party to his losses, and responsible for all he had really lost during the rebellion, that he was present in the Indian camp, armed, with liberty of action, and that he frequently assisted the rebel scouts in their expeditions into the settlements; that he was present, armed and mounted, at the chase of Ross and capture of Fontaine, both loyal scouts, and also at the capture of the Government teamsters; and that, at the surrender, a Government rifle was found in his possession, which, he said, he, when a prisoner, had purchased in the Indian camp; that this rifle had been in use by Constable Elliott who was killed a few days before while on patrol duty from the barracks. In the first claim, Bremner does not claim for the loss of any goods, animals, or household property, lost at Bresaylor, but only for the furs and the value of one horse and $395, the value of some goods, lost by Antonius Falcone, his agent. In his third schedule, he increases his furs in value by about $1,000, and adds $15,000, not previously mentioned, for animals, goods, and household property. It came out in evidence before the commission that not only was Bremner armed and with freedom in the Indian camp, but that he also had absolute control of his furs, carts, and tents, and of his goods and provisions as well, and that while in the camp, he and James Bremner purchased stolen Government rifles from the rebels. I mention these circumstances, which it appears to me are to his discredit, simply on the question of credit. Now, I do not agree with the hon. gentleman that a foul stain has rested upon the persons whose names were, I think, rashly mentioned to the House two years ago in connection with the loss of these furs. I think we should discourage the assailing of men in high positions, who had hitherto borne good characters, on the statement of a person who was not only disloyal, who was not only found with stolen Government goods in his possession, but who was found armed with the rifle of a recently slain public servant; and I think to have assailed men in high position, on the statement of a person who made, as this person undoubtedly did make, claims grossly exaggerated against the Government, only reflected discredit upon those who rashly did so. Now, the delay has not been so great as the hon. gentleman thinks it was. It is true that these claims were presented in 1885. The Government were unable to dispose of them, and they had to be referred for investigation to a commission; and I think it was only about a year ago that the commission made any report at all. It is true that representations have been made since with regard to the losses of the furs. The hon. member reminded me that the hon. member for Bothwell called our attention to this matter two years ago. He did so in this way—and the circumstances will recur to the hon. gentleman's recollection when I mention them: In discussing the penitentiary estimates, the hon. member for Bothwell asked me across the House if I knew that the warden of the Manitoba penitentiary had stolen somebody's furs, and I think he mentioned General Middleton's name in that connection. I had never heard of the furs or of the claims, and that was the first intimation I had of Mr. Bedson's name being connected with the matter. I said I did not, and last Session, before this commission had reported, at any rate before there was an opportunity of examining the evidence, the same question was repeated across the House in a rather more exaggerated form, and the charge of theft was distinctly levelled against these officers, who are not here and have no opportunity of answering any imputation of that kind. I want to sum up what I have said. It is this: That while I should not take the responsibility of saying that there can be no further enquiry as to the claims of the Bresaylor people—I am leaving the question of the fur claims for the moment out of consideration—I do say this: That the result arrived at by the commission is a fair and proper one in view of the evidence before it; that the Government gave all proper consideration to the petition which came for relief; that they gave a careful and painstaking investigation into the truth of the statements then made, that the result of that investigation is a confirmation of the conclusion at which the commissioners arrived, and that there is nothing in the evidence which could lead us to arrive at a different conclusion now. As regards the furs, I think the claim for them stands on a different footing. I do not, for a moment, put against the claim for furs which may have been deposited with officers of the Government, the mere fact that they belonged to persons who were implicated in the rebellion. I know, from the personal intercourse with my late colleague the Minister of the Interior, that a very short time before I had to be absent from this city, previous to the sitting of the House, he was pursuing a careful investigation with the view of arriving at a conclusion which would be strictly just. Unfortunately, I am not in a position to state to the House, owing to the lamentable circumstance of his death, the conclusion he arrived at, or even to know from himself the stage which the enquiry had reached. I ask the House, therefore, to understand that, as regards that claim, the enquiry has not been concluded and will be pursued.

Mr. THOMPSON.

Mr. LAURIER. There are two different aspects to the question which has been brought up by my hon. friend beside me. First of all, there is the case of the Bresaylor settlers, and then there is the peculiar case of Mr. Bremner, whose claim stands by itself. As to the settlers in general of the Bresaylor settlement, the hon. gentleman has stated, and I am not disposed at this moment to contradict his statement, that the claims were investigated by the commission, and that so far as he could see the conclusion reached was a fair and exact conclusion. I must say at once that, comparing the statements made, it must be evident there is room for discussion; it must be evident that it is not beyond possibility of doubt that these men were not rebels in the full sense of the word. He must take into consideration, in the first place, that I have always protested, not only after the event but before the event, that these men were not rebels. That, at all events, appears to be true; for, when they were invited to go to Battleford, they preferred to remain where they were. The reason which induced them to act as they did came from a statement made by the council themselves, advising them to remain at home and protect their own property. They had reason to fear, and the result proved that their fears were justified, that, if they left their property, it would be destroyed by the rebels or the Indians; and it is in evidence, as has been already stated by the hon. gentleman, that the property of those who took part at Battleford was destroyed. It was very natural for men, who had reason to fear that their property would be destroyed if they left it, to remain at home to guard it. But, afterwards, they are found with the band of Poundmaker. Here there is a conflicting statement. One statement is that they were there of their own accord, and the other is that they were taken prisoners by the Indians. Even if the first statement is correct, that cannot be made an act of rebellion, because those Indians were on their own reserve, and as long as they remained on their own reserve, none of their acts could be construed as an act of rebellion. The hon. gentleman has quoted from the Saskatchewan Herald. I find a statement in that paper which does not convey the impression that these men were rebels, but, on the contrary, that they acted in a manner which goes to their credit. We have the evidence of a scout named Fontaine who was taken prisoner, and he says that he was threatened with death by the Indians and was only preserved by the half-breeds. He says:

"Fontaine was taken to the Indian camp, where he says the Stoneyes clamored for his life. The half-breeds protested, telling the Indians if they shot Fontaine they would have to shoot them as well."

These facts should go in their favor, and, moreover, I would lay down this rule at present upon which I think the Government should act. I agree with the rule adopted by the commissioners that no one should be entitled to compensation who had been an actual rebel, though I have always taken the ground that those who took part were excused, to a certain extent, by the neglect of their claims by the Government; but still everyone must admit that they committed a crime against the laws of the country, and, if that is so, they cannot complain; but I think it would be good policy, when there is a doubt as to whether the claimant for compensation has been a rebel or not, to give him the benefit of the doubt. I think the Government should be lenient in that matter, and should take a generous view of the case, and, wherever it is possible, to take that view as it is here, whenever there is a doubt whether persons were actual participants in the rebellion or not, the Government should be generous and should extend a merciful consideration to them. There must necessarily be a good deal of bitter sentiment among these people, and the best way to cure that and to bring them to their dutiful allegiance is to extend the best consideration to them which is possible. The Government and the country are sufficiently rich to extend generous consideration to a people whom the Government have admitted they have so long neglected. As far as Charles Bremner is concerned, it seems to me that his claim has been rejected for reasons altogether of a frivolous character. First of all, it was stated that he was a party to the rebellion. Suppose that was so. Then another reason is that his claims varied between one statement and another. But this point has been well explained by my hon. friend. The difference is very small, it simply varies from $4,000 to $5,000. He simply varied his figures, not as to the whole claim, but as to the amount lost in regard to cattle and property and so on. Let this claim be set aside. Still, when it is proved that he took certain property with him and that, in order to protect that property which he had with him, that is the furs, the general in command ordered those furs to be taken to the barracks, it is clear that the country must account for that property. It is evident that these furs were ordered by the general in command to be placed in the police barracks for safety, and that this man has not received those furs to this day. It matters very little whether they were worth $4,000 or $5,000 or more. My hon. friend was quite justified in saying that the honor of the country is bound that this man should have the furs returned to him. Under these circumstances, it is not satisfactory to hear, as we have heard from the Minister of Justice, that the Government are not at present prepared to consider the question. I do not desire to place any blame on the officers whose names have been mentioned, but I do not admit, as the hon. gentleman has stated, that this is not the place to bring the charge and mention the names of the officers, because they are not here to defend themselves. This is the great court of enquiry, because this is the place where public opinion can be called to the fact, and this is the very place of all others where the charge should be made. There has been a charge made that a wrong has been committed, and the country is bound to account to this man for this property, poor and destitute as he is, and for that reason, if for no other, that the goods were really taken charge of by the commanding officer at that time, I am sure that, on the other side, as well as on this side of the House, everyone will feel that it would be a disgrace and a dishonor and a shameful act if the property of that poor man is not accounted for in some way to him. It does not do to say: You have no right to accuse this or that man. I do not accuse anybody, but I say the Government should see that ample justice should be done to this man, and that the property which was confided to the Government should be restored to him.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If no other gentleman has anything to say on this subject, I shall bring forward another question of which I gave notice several weeks ago, and which I have not yet been able to reach. But as it is now but ten minutes to six o'clock, I doubt whether it will be worth while to go on with it, as I could hardly finish it in ten minutes, and perhaps we had better call it six o'clock.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 128) for the relief of Eleonora Elizabeth Tudor (from the Senate) on a division.—(Mr. Small.)

Bill (No. 129) for the relief of Andrew Maxwell Irving (from the Senate) on a division.—(Mr. Small.)

Bill (No. 130) for the relief of Catharine Morrison (from the Senate) on a division.—(Mr. Small.)

REPRESENTATION OF RUSSELL.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that the Clerk of the House had received from the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery certificate of the election and return of William Cameron Edwards, Esquire, Member for the Electoral District of Russell.

ST. CATHARINES AND NIAGARA CENTRAL RY.

Mr. BOYLE moved :

That the rules and orders be suspended with regard to Bill (No. 61) to amend the Act of the present Session intitled: "An Act to amend the Act relating to the St. Catharines and Niagara Central Railway Company," and that leave be given to introduce said Bill.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Explain.

Mr. BOYLE. It will be remembered by members of the House who are members of the Railway Committee that some three weeks ago a Bill was before that Committee to amend the Act of the St. Catharines and Niagara Central Railway Company. This railway was first projected to run in a south-westerly direction through the villages of Bismarck, Smithville and Caledonia, and the company obtained a charter from the Ontario Legislature. This charter was afterwards amended so as to permit of the construction of the line from St. Catharines to Toronto, through or near the city of Hamilton; and, after that, legislation was obtained from this House, declaring that this railway would be for the general advantage of Canada, and a subsidy was granted last Session to the extent of $38,000 for the promotion of the said railway. Certain shareholders who subscribed to the original project, and who were directly interested in it, came before the House this Session and asked that, inasmuch as the line for which they had subscribed had been practically abandoned and never commenced, as their money or capital was diverted to another project, either this House should order the original project to be continued and carried out, or they, as shareholders, should be relieved from any further charge thereon. This proposition was considered by the Railway Committee and without a dissenting voice an amendment was made in the form of clause 7 of this Bill, which I will read :

All original stockholders of the said company who have not assented to the present route as now in process of construction, including the proposed route by way of Burlington Beach to Toronto, shall only be liable in respect to their respective stock therein when the said railway company shall have constructed five miles of the main line of their railway from St. Catharines to Smithville with the bona fide intention of completing the same, provided such shareholders shall within three months of the passing of this Act elect in writing to be bound by this section.

This clause, I say, was adopted unanimously by the Railway Committee and the Bill, with this amendment, was adopted unanimously by this House. When the matter came before the Senate, that body took exception to another clause in the Bill, which they thought was of a retroactive character. The Senate, therefore, added a clause to the Bill, in these words :

Nothing in this Act contained shall affect any litigation heretofore had or now pending.

This Bill came back to this House, and was finally passed in this shape last Friday. It is now found, I believe, that this will affect not only all other matters connected with the railway enterprise but the rights of individual shareholders who have been protected by the amendment, and they now ask this House to modify that clause so that it shall apply only to clause 3 and not to clause 7 of the Bill, by adopting an amendment in these words :

Section 8 of the Bill of the present Session, intituled: "An Act to amend the Act respecting the St. Catharines and Niagara Central Railway Company," is hereby amended by inserting after the words "nothing in" the words "section 3 of."

I may say that Hon. Mr. Abbott, leader of the Senate, has been consulted in regard to this matter and has expressed no objection to the change now asked.

Motion agreed to, and Bill (No. 137) respecting the St. Catharines and Niagara Central Railway Company, was read the first and second times.

Mr. BOYLE moved that the House resolve itself into Committee.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MITCHELL. It seems to me a rather extraordinary course to pursue to go into Committee on this Bill without sending it to the Railway Committee. Perhaps the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) will explain what is intended to be accomplished by the Bill.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. When this Bill was before the Railway Committee, as the hon. member (Mr. Boyle) has said, it was referred to a sub-committee to settle a clause to save the rights of certain shareholders who had taken stock in this railway on the condition that it followed a certain route. That route has since been changed, and those farmers and others along the route who took stock do not want to be bound to pay their stock. Their solicitor came down here and appeared before the sub-committee, as did also the solicitor of the railway company and it was agreed that those persons who did not approve of the change of route should be relieved from the necessity of paying up their stock. The clause was drawn by the two parties who were present. In that form the Bill was sent to the Senate, but that body added a clause providing that nothing in this Act shall affect pending litigation. It so happens that there is litigation pending with respect to these shareholders, whom it was agreed should be relieved, and the effect of inserting the words, "Nothing in section 3 of this Act shall affect pending litigation," is that the litigation against the shareholders will be affected by this Act. Those shareholders who do not want the change of route will be relieved in accordance with the agreement entered into by the two parties before the sub-committee of the Railway Committee. It is to carry out the intention and agreement arrived at.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am sorry to say that the hon. member's explanation makes the thing more complex than ever. I find a very important parliamentary question arises here, as to affecting existing litigation. The object of this Bill is to remove that safety valve that provides that existing litigation shall not be affected.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. That was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. That appears to me to be a very important principle, and ought not to be dealt hastily with in this Parliament. The hon. gentleman has certainly not given a very lucid explanation.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I have given you the explanation exactly. It is to affect existing litigation, but it was done by agreement between this railway company and the parties interested.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do you want it to affect litigation or not?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I want it to affect litigation commenced against those shareholders, because the railway company said if we get this power we will give up those suits and claims against those shareholders, but that agreement between the parties has been nullified by the clause which has been added in the Senate. It was an agreement made in the Railway Committee by the railway company, that they should abandon their litigation against those persons if they obtained this Act.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then that is a case for the Railway Committee, and my hon. friend's explanation is not satisfactory. It clearly shows that a question is involved in the passage of this Bill, which this Parliament and every other parliament always sets its face against, namely, that they will not allow any legislation to pass through which affects existing litigation. As I understand my hon. friend says that the clause added in the Senate is, that this Bill shall not affect existing litigation. My hon. friend tells this committee that the object of the Bill is to remove the effect of the clause added in the Senate, which prevents existing litigation being interfered with.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It is because the committee have agreed to it. We find that the clause added in the Senate would affect some suits that are pending against the railway under clause 3 of the Act. We want to protect the rights of the litigants, who are the shareholders and who are to be relieved from the effect of subscribing for their stock, according to the agreement made by the solicitor for the shareholders and by the solicitor for the company. The matter was only called to our attention today by the member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) who asked that this Act should be brought in, to carry out that agreement that was made in the presence of the Railway Committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. My hon. friend will see what the effect of legislation such as this is. Here is a Bill probably before the Railway Committee for weeks;—

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. It has passed the Railway Committee; it has been reported to this House; it is sent to the Senate and amended in a certain clause as they thought necessary in their wisdom to amend it, because they are a very wise set of people.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. They did not understand this clause.

Mr. MITCHELL. They have amended the legislation so as to protect any existing litigants who have litigation pending in the courts of law. It does appear to me that if ever there was a case in which a Bill should be sent to the Railway Committee this is the one. We do not know that the people interested in the matter know that this Bill is brought before the House. You come down at the last moment to amend a Bill that has passed both branches of the Legislature, and it does appear to me it would be a very improper course for us to pursue. If we are going to adopt this method of legislating, it simply wipes out all the Rules of the House.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. We only wish to put this Bill in the same state as it was in when it left the House. We are asking that this clause (added after much consideration to the Bill) should be put back again, and that the Bill should be put in the same state as it was when it left this House, and in which it was when it was reported from the Railway Committee. The clause added by the Senate changed the clause as passed by the Railway Committee after much consideration, and we are asking you now to put that clause back in the shape it left this House. Surely that is carrying out what the Railway Committee wanted and that is carrying out the intention of the House, although it does affect litigation, but that is what the company agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Where is the evidence?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. As one of the sub-committee I tell you that it is so. The hon. member for Monck (Mr. Boyle) was a member of the sub-committee, and the member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) was another. We met together to-day, when we had our attention called to the fact that that clause which was passed by us, had been nullified by the fact of the amendment added in the Senate. We went to the leader of the Senate and he told us that if any person had stated this to him that he would not have added that clause, and he told us to bring in a Bill to add a new clause to this section 3.

Mr. BOYLE. In addition to the explanation given by the member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) there is another clause to which the Senate objected, and their amendment was made for the purpose of covering that clause, but it reaches a little too far and covered the compromise amendment in the Bill, which is just referred to. The clause objected to in the Senate was clause 3, which is as follows:

The provisions of "The Railway Act," from section four to section 39, both inclusive, being part of the said Act shall apply to the said St. Catharines and Niagara Central Railway, and in so far as they are applicable to the undertaking, and except to the extent to which they are inconsistent with the provisions of the said Acts of the Legislature of the Province of Ontario above recited, shall be read and construed therewith in the same manner as though forming part thereof, and expressly incorporated therewith—and it is hereby declared that the said provisions of "The Railway Act," from section 4 to section 39, both inclusive, have been to the extent aforesaid applicable to the said railway from and after the passing of the said Act of the Parliament of Canada, passed in the session held in the fiftieth and fifty-first years of Her Majesty's reign, intituled: "An Act respecting the St. Catharines and Niagara Central Railway Company."

To prevent that going further, and to prevent the retroactive effect having a mischievous character they added:

Nothing in this Act contained shall affect any litigation heretofore had or now pending.

We see that that clause will cover the compromise amendment to which I have just referred. I am sure the member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) as well as myself, would like to see justice done.

Mr. MITCHELL. I feel I have done my duty in calling attention to the extraordinary character of the legislation. If the hon. the member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) has neglected his duty in going to the Senate Committee.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I have nothing whatever to do with the Bill.

Mr. BOYLE. He has no more to do with it than you have yourself.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I am merely doing it because of a public duty, and I was asked by the member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) to see that the compromise carried out in presence of both parties to the Bill, should be protected by law.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have done my duty and shall say nothing more about it.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—THE CASE OF WALTER JONES.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago I placed on the Votes and Proceedings of the House a notice that when the motion that you should leave the Chair and that the House should resolve itself into Committee of Supply was made, I proposed to move as follows:—

That on or about the 4th day of October, 1887, Mr. Justice Boyd held a court for the trial of the contested election for the county of Haldimand;

That the said judge declared the said election to be void, and that certain persons, including one Walter Jones, had been guilty of corrupt practices at the said election;

That the said proceedings were very widely reported in the public press, along with the fact that the said Walter Jones had been found guilty of corrupt practices;

That the said Mr. Justice Boyd duly reported the said facts to the Speaker of the House of Commons, on the 15th day of October, 1887;

That the Speaker thereupon issued his writ for a new election for the said county, and that the Government appointed a returning officer to hold the said election, at a very early date after the issue of the said writ;

That the said new election took place on the 12th day of November, 1887;

That on the 15th day of October the Government of the Dominion appointed one Robert Glenny and the said Walter Jones, reported by the said Judge Boyd as guilty of corrupt practices, to act as commissioners and valuers to decide on the rights of the occupants and the value of the improvements made by them in regard to divers voters, resident in the county of Haldimand, on certain lands belonging to the Indians of that region;

That on the 28th day of October, fourteen days before the date of the said election, the Department of Indian Affairs caused an official circular to be addressed to the several occupants of the said lands in the words following:—

"DEPARTMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,

"OTTAWA, 28th October, 1887.

"DEAR SIR,—Mr. Robert Glenny and Mr. Walter Jones have been appointed by this department to examine the Indian lands in the village of Cayuga, west of the Grand River, and to value the lands and the improvements thereon. The Government have decided to sell these lands this autumn, and the squatters in possession, and who show they are legally entitled to the benefit of such improvements as have been made on such parts thereof as they respectively occupy, on investigation of their claim thereto being made, will be given the opportunity of purchasing on such terms as the Government may, on report of the said commissioners to be made in each case, consider proper. Your name appears on the list of squatters sent in by the said commissioners. If you desire to purchase the land you occupy, make written application therefor at once to the said commissioners, Messrs. Glenny and Jones, stating what lands you occupy. If your title to the improvements is found to be correct, you will then have the option of purchasing such land as you occupy. All land not applied for, or the improvements on which the squatter does not appear to have a good claim, will be offered for sale at auction or otherwise as soon as the investigation is closed.

"I am, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

(Signed) "R. SINCLAIR,

"For Deputy of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs."

That, by clause 94, chapter 8 of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada, it is provided that: "If, on the trial of any election petition, any candidate is proved to have personally engaged any person at the election to which said petition relates, as a canvasser or agent in relation to the election, knowing that such person, so engaged, has, within eight years previous to such engagement, been found guilty of any corrupt practice by any competent legal tribunal, or by the report of any judge, or other tribunal for the trial of election petitions, the election of such candidate, if he has been elected, shall be void."

That the said election was held on the 12th day of November, 1887, and the candidate who supported the Government was elected by a majority of twelve votes. That the conduct of the Government in appointing the said Walter Jones, after he had been proved guilty of corrupt practices, to a position of trust and influence, in which he would be able to exert influence over a number of the electors of the said county of Haldimand, was in direct defiance of the spirit and intention of said clause 94 of said chapter 8, and was, in the highest degree, reprehensible, and calculated to encourage and promote corrupt practices at the said and other elections, and deserves the severe censure of the House.

Now, Sir, I am not going to spend a great deal of time over this, the more so that the facts are incontrovertible. Nobody in this House or out of it can deny the fact of Mr. Justice Boyd's report, and that Mr. Walter Jones was in that report declared guilty of corrupt practices; nobody can deny the authenticity of this circular letter of the Department of Indian Affairs; nor, Sir, can they question the accuracy of the clause in the statute which I have read, and which states that where a candidate employs a person who has been found guilty of corrupt practices within eight years after the time he was so proved guilty, his election shall be void. Sir, I feel a sort of reluctance to comment on the facts here disclosed; it appears like gilding refined gold or painting the lily. This transaction, Sir, as defined within the four corners of this motion, is perfectly complete in itself—totus, teres, atque rotundus—

"With every feature of a knave complete,
If it be honest, 'tis a dev'lish cheat."

Now, Sir, I must say a few words as to the extraordinary combination of improper proceedings which are disclosed by these facts. First of all, I say that this is a case of very gross intimidation exercised by the Government towards a number of the electors of Haldimand, who by accidental circumstances were absolutely in their power. You have to consider the date of this circular; it is dated the 28th day of October, just 14 days before the election in that county. You must remember that these persons were almost all very poor, as I am informed, and that their whole property, such as it was, was placed by this circular absolutely and entirely at the disposal of the two commissioners, Mr. Robert Glenny and Mr. Walter Jones, whom the Government appointed. Then, Sir, it is worthy of notice that this circular comes from the Indian Department, who are trustees of the Indians and are bound to get the best price they can for the property belonging to the Indians. Now, Sir, this is a very curious way to do it. They appoint two commissioners, one of whom was recently proved guilty of corrupt practices at an election, and they subject this man, as well as the people with whom he deals, to the strongest possible temptation to gain the good-will of these electors, by undervaluing the property to please them, if only they will vote the right way. Now, it must be remembered that everybody was aware, and Mr. Walter Jones perhaps better than anybody else, that the election was likely to be very close. As a matter of fact, some half dozen votes thrown either way would have changed the fate of that election. On the defiance of public opinion, which is evidenced by these proceedings of the Government, it is perhaps not worth while to dwell. They may be perfectly right in despising the public opinion of the people of Canada. Looking at their past conduct and antecedents, I can hardly take it upon myself to say that they are not justified in saying that there is no public opinion in Canada that is worth one straw for political purposes. But still, you have staring them in the face the statute which declares explicitly that if an ordinary candidate employs within eight years a man who has been proved guilty of corruption, the election shall be void; and the Government of Canada, knowing the existence of that statute, on the very day that he is returned by Mr. Boyd to you, Sir, as guilty of corrupt practices, signified their appreciation of the statute by deliberately placing him in a position which would give him almost unlimited power to influence the decision of a very closely contested election. Now, there are several lines of defence possible to these hon. gentlemen, and I am curious to see which they will adopt. There is the line of defence they may adopt, that the department did not know of this, that the department are not bound, I suppose, to read the newspapers and to see Mr. Justice Boyd's report, and that it was a mere coincidence that, on the 15th October, 1887, the identical day on which this report was sent in, the Department of Indians Affairs chose to select Mr. Walter Jones, proved guilty of corrupt practices, to fill the position of valuator of certain lands occupied by certain voters in the county of Haldimand. It was pure accident no doubt that induced the Department of Indians Affairs, on the 28th October, fourteen days before the election which was then known to be about to take place, to issue to these thirty or forty men, squatting on these Indian lands, a circular by which they were informed that their whole properties were placed at the absolute disposal, because that is what it amounts to, of these two commissioners. Perhaps, I will be told that Mr. Jones, in spite of the trifling accident that he was convicted of corrupt practices, was a highly respectable man, who had filled many offices of trust, and peradventure, had been recommended for this post by some prominent Liberal politician. I cannot say; possibly that was the case, and possibly the circular also was conceived in the usual form. Or they may make a more hypocritical defence. They may plead that they are very sorry, but these things will happen. They may plead that it is impossible always to be on the alert; and now that the end is obtained, now that the election is decided in favor of their candidate, I dare say they will be willing enough to pledge themselves never to do it again—or hardly ever—except in a political emergency; and, perhaps, they will be willing to put in a clause—and I think some such clause was suggested on the other side—that hereafter persons guilty of corrupt practices should be ineligible to hold any office at the hands of the Government. Then there is, lastly, the defence which has been adopted before in another place. It may be called Mr. Wm. M. Tweed's line of defence. The hon. gentlemen may ask us what we are going to do about it? They may call in their majority and vote us down; or, they may combine one or more of these several lines of defence. I make them a present of the whole three. They may decide which one or how many of them they would like to take; but I ask the House, on both sides, if there is any hon. gentleman here, on either side, who entertains the slightest doubt, that a gross outrage was committed in this case, and that it was a most improper thing for the Government to deliberately appoint to a position of this kind a man who had been proved guilty of corrupt practices. I ask was it not a most corrupt act that they should place him in a position which made him, to all intents and purposes, for the time being, practically dictator of these unfortunate squatters, whose property was entirely dependent on the report that he and his brother commissioner chose to make? It is perfectly clear that the spirit of the Act has been most grossly disregarded, if not the letter, by the very guardians, the very men, who, by virtue of their office, are bound to see that the law is enforced. Nobody who knows the situation, nobody who knows the position in which these poor men were placed, can doubt that by such a letter or circular being addressed to them, they were subjected to intimidation; and in view of the extremely small majority by which that election was carried, nobody can doubt that it was owing to that circular and to the corrupt appointment of this very man, Mr. Walter Jones, to the position of valuator of these lands, that the election was due. Now I should like to know what possible defence honest men outside of the House would think could be made of these things? I recollect that, not many months ago, a reverend gentleman, the Rev. Principal Grant, dealing with some of the facts which had been disclosed with respect to the doings of hon. gentlemen opposite, had the occasion to say that he, for his part, defied anybody to defend such things, and that you might as well defend Sodom. Now, I am curious, as a mere matter of experiment, to know whether among all the worthy and hon. gentlemen opposite, we can find as many as would have saved the original Sodom, who are willing to join with us in condemning this atrocious violation of all constitutional usage and constitutional precedent, and with that view I desire to place this motion in your hands, Sir, to-night.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am very well aware that hon. gentlemen upon both sides of this House are exceedingly anxious that the Session should come to as early a close as possible, and, therefore, I shall not make my remarks very long, and shall follow in that respect the example which has been set by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). At the same time, while he showed that he had a desire to see the Session close at an early date, I think he has, in regard to the quality of the subject which he undertook to discuss before the House, shown that he believes discretion to be the better part of valor, for it was quite evident that there was not much in the case to say a great deal upon. Hon. gentlemen on this side of the House have come to recognise the fact that hon. gentlemen opposite have elected a leader in the person of the hon. gentleman who sits to the right of the hon. member for South Oxford; but I am not aware whether the hon. member for South Oxford, in bringing up this matter, and various other matters that he has brought before the House, in acting, as it were, as the scavenger of the party to which he belongs, is endeavoring to usurp the place of the leader of the Opposition, or whether he is doing a kind of work which the leader of the Opposition does not care to do, knowing, as we do, the fine tastes and gentlemanly conduct of that hon. member. Hon. gentlemen opposite have a very large number of leaders among them. There are many gentlemen there who aspire to prominent places in the ranks of that party, but I think it is rather unkind on the part of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) to take away the one ewe lamb of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen). I never expected to find the hon. member for South Oxford in rivalry with the hon. member for North Wellington as to who should be the chief scavenger of the party, but, on this side of the House, we have no fault to find with that, if it suits his taste. We are perfectly in accord with his practice in this matter, but we may be allowed to express our sympathy with the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), who has hitherto, I am bound to say, so assiduously and so successfully pursued that course in his place in this House. I hope the hon. member for South Oxford will be more successful, with that peculiar genius which the Globe said he possessed in this new sphere, than he has been in the financial circles of this country. I am not without hope, that in future we may find him dealing with those important matters of cab-hire, tooth-picks, and wooden spoons, and that we shall find his aristocratic turbinated bones passing over the odors of those second-hand carpets to which the hon. member for North Wellington occasionally refers, and over which the feet of vice-regal ladies have so often trodden. However, at last the hon. gentleman has found a reason why the county of Haldimand has slipped from his grasp. It is a new reason which I have not heard given before, though I have heard reasons without number. It was said in the first place that the county was lost on account of corruption. Well, they had a trial on that ground, and they tried to prove that corruption was the reason. They had me on the grid-iron there for eight days, and they could not prove anything at all in regard to corruption. Then we had it stated in a newspaper that the county was lost because the Government had the election take place on a Saturday, and that 400 Seventh-Day Baptists could not vote on that account. That would be a very good reason but for the fact that there was not a single Seventh-Day Baptist in the constituency, and so that reason went to the dogs. Then it was stated that it was because of the reconstruction of the constituency. That would be a good reason if it were not that the re-arrangement took away certain municipalities which, together, would have given me a majority of 50 or 60. The next statement was that the result was owing to a grant of $28,000 to the Indians, who happened to live in the county, a few days before the election. No doubt that would have been a good reason but for the fact that this bad and corrupt Government had not given any such sum to the Indians, and that I never knew anything about the Indians there having any claim on the Government until after the election. Now, the hon. gentleman has found a new reason, and I think I can show that he places it on the ground that I have obtained this seat owing to the performance of my duty. I hope I shall always owe my seat to the performance of my duty. The hon. gentleman said that he felt some delicacy in bringing this matter forward, and I think there are two or three reasons why he should feel that delicacy. In the first place he should feel that delicacy because he had not a single charge to make that these gentlemen influenced in any way the electors of the constituency, and, in the second place, because this refers to the administration of an hon. gentleman who was then in charge of the Indian Department, and whose death has recently taken place, and has caused sorrow and regret from one end of this country to the other. There is another reason why the hon. gentleman should feel delicacy in regard to this matter, as in regard to other matters which he has brought forward, and that is that the protest in regard to the county of Haldimand is now before the Supreme Court of this country. I trust the hon. gentleman has too much sense to imagine that by throwing these slanders against me in this House he can prejudice my case before any Supreme Court of this country. If he thinks that, he is very much misjudging the calibre of the judges who dispense justice in Canada. Now, I may be allowed to digress for a moment, and to deal with the subject which the hon. gentleman has, on three occasions, referred to in this House, and which he has referred to in very uncomplimentary terms, and that is in reference to the returning officer who was selected to do duty at one polling place. I think I might crave the indulgence of the House in regard to this, because, at the time the subject was discussed, the whole of the facts were not in the possession of the Minister of Justice or in my possession. That is why I ask to be allowed to refer to a past debate in connection with this matter. I should not attempt to refer to it, if it were not connected with a private individual in my constituency. This was brought up here by the hon. gentleman under cover of his privilege as a member of Parliament, and he used language which he would not attempt to use in the presence of the man he attacks in this House as an ex-convict. Now, then let me say that last year the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) in his place, made certain attacks upon an hon. gentleman in the Upper House, and upon a certain judge in that county. What did he do? He found out afterwards that his information was false, and like the man that he is, he offered an humble apology for the statements he had made, and declared that he would embrace the first public opportunity of expressing his opinion of the information he had. The man who informed my hon. friend from West Elgin with regard to these matters, is the same individual who informed my hon. friend from South Oxford in regard to this matter; and when I have explained this matter to the House, if the hon. gentleman is possessed of those finer feelings which aristocratic birth and liberal culture should give him, he should stand up in this House and express his regret for many of the statements he has made. But when I suggested to one of my friends the other day that, perhaps, he would do so, my friend said: "Oh, no; the member for South Oxford never does anything of that kind. His tastes are rather blunt in that direction, so you need not expect he will make any apology." But, Sir, I have not lost hope entirely in the hon. gentleman yet. I do not think that the constant failure of the people of this country to appreciate the hon. gentleman's peculiar genius, has so hardened him that he will not do justice to an opponent when occasion offers itself. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman has said a great deal in one of his addresses in connection with the returning officer of the county of Haldimand, and has sought to place a stigma upon that gentleman's character in this House. All that I can say is that that gentleman needs no defence of mine in this House or in this country. He is a man of the highest professional attainments, he is a municipal officer who has served long and faithfully the township in which he lives; he is a man who holds the entire confidence of political friends and foes; and he is a gentleman of whom the hon. member, removed from his cover as a member of this House, would not attack in the way he has attacked him here. We were told that when the hon. member for South Oxford became the real leader of the party, or words to that effect, he would take up an aggressive policy, a heroic policy, and that that heroic policy was to sweep the Government of my right hon. friend from power. Well, Sir, we have had a specimen of that heroism, we have had a specimen of the heroism of an hon. gentleman, decorated by Her Majesty, a gentleman who has had all the advantages of culture and of a higher education, using that heroism, standing up here under his cover as a member of Parliament, and attacking at a distance of 300 miles a solitary private individual who has only one leg. Sir, that is heroism. Now, I want to refer for a few minutes to the answer which my hon. friend the Minister of Justice gave to the hon. gentleman when he asked, with regard to one Mr. Young, who was returning officer in the election in the county of Haldimand. My hon. friend gave him three answers. In the first place he said that the Government had no knowledge that this Mr. Young had been convicted of stealing; in the second place he answered that he was a respectable man in his district, and had occupied positions of responsibility and trust; thirdly, he gave him the answer that the gentleman had been recommended for the post by a prominent Liberal politician. Notwithstanding the affidavits that the hon. gentleman has brought to this House, notwithstanding the certificates he has read, I stand in my place to-night, with the evidence in my possession, and say that as a matter of fact the Minister of Justice was right in every single answer that he gave. In the first place, the hon. gentleman read a certificate of a gaoler and of a sheriff, that the Mr. Young in question had been convicted of theft. How did he get that certificate, Sir? He did not tell us in this House that it was accompanied by a certificate from one Charles Wesley Coulter, a gentleman whom I know in the county of Haldimand; and I suppose that certificate was sent him by Charles Wesley Coulter as well—I need not suppose anything about it, because I have the facts of the case since, not from a friend of mine in that county, but from the sheriff and the gaoler of the county of Brant, who were acquainted with this matter, and whose names were signed to the documents which my hon. friend read with such a flourish in this House. In the first place let me say to him that Mr. Coulter went to the gaol of the county of Brant and asked to see the register in which those commitments were kept. He discussed that commitment with the gaoler and with the sheriff, and they allowed him also to copy the certificate, and they signed it, supposing it to be correct; and I have their statements now that the statements made in that certificate were not correct, as written by Charles Wesley Coulter, and sent to the hon. gentleman. Now, let me read the certificate of Alfred Kitchen, the gaoler:

"I, Alfred Kitchen, governor of the gaol of the county of Brant, hereby certify that I signed a certificate with reference to the conviction of the said Charles Young, and his sentence to six months in the common gaol of the said county. He was not convicted for the 'larceny of wheat,' but according to the 'register of the gaol for the county of Brant,' 'for receiving.' If I signed a former certificate at variance with this it was done inadvertently. The certificate was drawn by Mr. Coulter after an examination by him of the said 'register of the gaol for the county of Brant,' and I had confidence that it was correct and properly made out from the said register. I have made no affidavit in this matter.

"ALFRED KITCHEN,

"Gaoler."

I am sorry for the sake of my hon. friend and Mr. Coulter that his confidence was misplaced. Now, we have another certificate from Mr. Rubridge, of Brantford, registrar of the High Court of Justice, and he bears out exactly the statements made by the gaoler:

"Office of the Local Registrar of the High Court of Justice for the county of Brant, and Clerk of Assize for the said county of Brant.

"In the matter of Charles Young, of the township of Oneida, in the county of Haldimand, a deputy returning officer at an election for member of the House of Commons of Canada.

"BRANTFORD, 7th May, 1888.

"I, Walter Rubridge, of the city of Brantford, in the county of Brant, Esq., local registrar of the High Court of Justice for the said county, and clerk of Assize for the said county, do hereby certify:

"I have read the certificate of the sheriff of the county of Brant, and of the gaoler of the said county, as reported in Hansard of date 19th April, 1888, which certificate is in these words:

"BRANTFORD, 4th April, 1888.

"This is to certify that from the regular gaol books kept for the county of Brant, it appears that one Charles Young, of the county of Haldimand, farmer, was sentenced by Her Majesty's regular Court of Assize on the 2nd day of May, A.D. 1879, for the offence of stealing wheat, to six months' imprisonment in the common gaol of the county of Brant, and duly served his term of imprisonment in accordance with the said sentence, and at, and during the said period he was sentenced by the County Judges Criminal Court to a similar period of imprisonment on another charge, both sentences being concurrent.

"(Sgd.) H. J. SCARFE,

Sheriff of the County of Brant.

"(Sgd.) ALFRED KITCHEN,

"Gaoler."

"2. I have been for many years clerk of Assize of the county of Brant, and I was acting as such clerk at the Brant Spring Assizes, which commenced on Tuesday the 29th day of April, 1879, before the Honorable George William Burton, the presiding judge.

"At the said Assize an indictment was preferred against one Charles Young for larceny and receiving a quantity of wheat, the property of one Elijah Walker. A true bill was found on the said indictment, by the grand jury, on the same 29th day of April, 1879, and the said Charles Young pleaded to said indictment, 'not guilty,' on the same day. Thereupon the Crown abandoned the first count of the indictment against the said Charles Young for the larceny charged against him, and he was consequently discharged, as to that alleged offence, and he withdrew his plea of not guilty, as to the other offence of receiving the quantity of wheat mentioned in the said indictment.

"I make this certificate on reading the records of my office, which are carefully kept, and I say no further or other charge or indictment appears by my books and other official records in my office against the said Charles Young, except what in this my certificate appears.

"The certificate of the sheriff of the county of Brant and the gaoler of the county of Brant, so far as it varies from this, my certificate, in stating that the said Charles Young was convicted at the said Assizes for the offence of stealing wheat, is incorrect.

"W. RUBRIDGE,

"Local Registrar, H.C.J., and Clerk of Assize, Co. Brant, Ont."

But my hon. friend will say that there is a distinction; he will say that the charge of receiving stolen goods was equally immoral with stealing the goods. Well, Sir, let me tell him this, that this Mr. Young, as I am informed, to save a friend, committed an indiscretion, and pleaded guilty to the charge of having received stolen goods, and that is why a punishment was inflicted upon him.

An hon. MEMBER. That is too thin.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Hon. gentlemen with their keen, cool, legal judgment, of course will say that it is just as bad, every bit. Well, Sir, I do not say that they would be guilty of doing the same thing. I think they would let the friend take it every time, rather than suffer anything for anyone else. Then as to the next statement that this man had occupied a place of trust in the municipality in which he lived. My hon. friend contradicted that by an affidavit of some party whom, he said, resided in the township of Oneida. He may reside there, I do not know the name, but if he does reside there, I am informed he is not on the list of voters in that county. Either one of two things is true: either he has not been there very long, or else he has not been a very prominent citizen, or he would have been upon the list of voters of that municipality. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that the man he is attacking in this House was deputy returning officer in the township of Oneida in 1881, that he was deputy returning officer in 1886, being years after he was committed to gaol, that he was appointed collector of taxes in 1882, and he has occupied other offices of trust in that county. I will place in the hands of the reporters a statutory declaration from a respectable gentleman in that district, who has examined the books of the township council, and who declares the facts I have laid before the House to be absolutely true. The declaration is as follows:—

DOMINION OF CANADA, } In the matter of Charles Young, of the town-
COUNTY OF HALDIMAND. } ship of Oneida in the county of Haldimand, a
To wit: } deputy returning officer at the Dominion Election held in November, 1887.

"I, Henry B. Sawle, of the village of Caledonia, county of Haldimand, editor, do solemnly declare that I did on the seventh day of May, A.D. 1888, examine the minute-book and by-laws of the municipality of the said township of Oneida at the municipal clerk's office, and I find entries therein which show that Charles Young was appointed a deputy returning officer by the council of the said township on the 23rd day of December, 1881, and again on the 19th day of December, 1885, for the municipal elections held in the said township in January in the years 1882 and 1886 respectively; and I also find entries in the said minute-book and by-laws which show that the said Charles Young was appointed on the 18th day of January, 1882, by the municipal council of the said township of Oneida the collector of the taxes of the said township of Oneida. And I further solemnly declare that the said Charles Young so appointed as aforesaid, is the same Charles Young who acted as the deputy returning officer for polling sub-division No. 4 in the township of Oneida at the Dominion election held in the county aforesaid on the 22nd day of February, 1887, and again on the 12th day of November, 1887. I am, and for a long time have been, personally acquainted with the said Charles Young.

"And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of 'An Act passed for the suppression of extra-judicial oaths.'

"COLIN G. SNIDER,
"A Commissioner in H. J. C., &c."

Then, hon. gentlemen opposite grew merry and facetious when the Minister of Justice declared that Mr. Young had been recommended for the post by a prominent Liberal politician. Here is the affidavit of the returning officer of the county of Haldimand, and this is what he says. As I read it it will be seen how it bears out the statement of the Minister of Justice. It also gives a thorough history of the whole matter :

DOMINION OF CANADA, } In the matter of Charles Young, of the COUNTY OF HALDIMAND, } township of Oneida, in the county of Haldi-
To Wit: } dimand.

"I, John Langrill, of the village of Jarvis, in the county of Haldimand, physician, do solemnly declare :

"1. That I was the returning officer at the elections of a member to represent the county of Haldimand, in the House of Commons of Canada, held in the month of February, 1837, and in the month of November, 1887.

"2. I employed Andrew Caldwell of the village of Jarvis, aforesaid, machine agent, as my messenger to post up the necessary proclamations, previous to the election held on the 22nd day of February, 1887, and I instructed him to ascertain while passing through the various polling sub-divisions the names of the deputy returning officers who acted at the previous election held in September, 1886, and where the deputies were not available I instructed him to procure me the name of some other person competent and willing to act.

"3. With very few exceptions I obtained the services of the same deputies that served in September, 1886. One of these exceptions was in No. 4 polling sub-division township of Oneida. For this sub-division the said Caldwell gave me the name of Charles Young. I also received a written application from Charles Young for the appointment and his appointment was recommended by reliable persons residing in Caledonia village, in the vicinity of said polling sub-division No. 4, township of Oneida. I had no other application for the appointment of deputy for this sub-division and I was afterwards informed that the person who was formerly the deputy returning officer at this sub-division acted as Young's poll clerk, whether by previous arrangement or not, I do not know. I had no previous acquaintance with the said Charles Young, and in fact, until his name was given me by the said Caldwell, I had never heard of him, but I knew the persons who recommended him, and relied on them. I never heard that the said Charles Young had ever been accused of, or tried or punished for any criminal offence, until Charles Wesley Colter told me so in the judge's chambers after the February election aforesaid was over, and at the termination of the recount.

"4. The said Charles Young discharged his duties as deputy returning officer in February, 1887, in a satisfactory manner, and I had no reason to find any fault with him. He was in fact one of the best and most intelligent deputies in the county.

"5. On the second day after the February, 1887, election was held the said Charles W. Colter left a message at my office, in my absence, that he desired me to get possession of the ballot boxes at once as he had information that they were to be tampered with. On being told that all were in or would be that day, he appeared satisfied, but when I asked him at a later hour that day to give me the name or names of the persons suspected he refused to do so, saying it might be only a vague rumor difficult to trace. Because of this conversation I asked the said Colter, in the chamber of the judge of the county court, at Cayuga, in the presence of the judge and of counsel, after Mr. Colter had examined all the ballot packages and every ballot-paper during the recount, and after having been present at the opening of the ballot-boxes at the 'summing up' if he had found anything wrong or anything to justify the accusation he had made to me as above mentioned, Mr. Colter replied, 'No, the ballots are all right.' He then went on to say that Charles Young was the deputy he had suspected and he supposed his reason for suspecting him was because he had served a term of imprisonment for stealing. This was the first I ever heard of the imprisonment of the said Charles Young.

"6. I subsequently and soon after had a conversation with Mr. Colter in Mr. James Mitchell's office in the Court House at Cayuga, when Mr. Colter again mentioned the fact that Young had some eight or nine years ago been in gaol.

"7. I did not then or at any other time intimate that I would not appoint Young again. Nor did the said Colter or anyone else ever, either at the conversation referred to or at any other time, directly or indirectly, request me not to re-appoint the said Charles Young, or make even the slightest objection to my doing so, although during the contest, prior to the election held in November, 1887, I frequently met the said Charles Wesley Colter in various places in this county while I was discharging my duties as returning officer, preparing for the said last mentioned election. It is not true that I appointed the said Charles Young the second time under formal remonstrance or any other kind of remonstrance. After the trial of the protest of the election held in February, 1887, I had a conversation with William Parker, of the township of Walpole, who is the secretary of the Reform Association for this county and one of Mr. Colter's most active organisers. He then told me he had heard the evidence given at the said trial and having heard it he was convinced that all the deputy returning officers had honestly tried to do their duty fairly. At this conversation among the names of the deputy returning officers mentioned by the said Parker was the name of Charles Young aforesaid.

Mr. MONTAGUE.

"8. After I was appointed returning officer for the election held in November, 1887, I received a written application from the said Charles Young to be again appointed deputy returning officer for polling sub-division No. 4, Oneida. No other person applied or was recommended for this division. In order then to enquire into the character and habits of Charles Young, I went to see James Mitchell, Esq., of Cayuga, local registrar of the High Court of Justice, and formerly clerk of the Division Court, because I learned that Charles Young had for a long time been bailiff for the said James Mitchell, and that Mr. Mitchell knew him as well as any person could. The said James Mitchell is and always has been an influential Reformer, and was strongly in sympathy with the said Charles W. Colter politically. Mr. Mitchell forcibly and distinctly condemned Mr. Colter's conduct in making the accusations and insinuations he had against Mr. Young, and he said he had found Young honest and trustworthy and had placed implicit confidence in him. I made further enquiries and found that Young had not been punished for stealing, but I was informed by persons interested in the case, the facts were that a brother-in-law of Young's and another a former hired man of Young's, stole some wheat and hid it in Young's barn. Young knew nothing of it until a bailiff with a search warrant came to search the barn, and then at the brother-in-law's solicitation and to shield them, Young claimed that the wheat was his property. This being subsequently proved to be the stolen wheat Young was convicted of concealing it, knowing it to be stolen.

"9. The said Charles Young, I am informed and believe, acted as deputy returning officer, at the time the electors of Haldimand voted on the Scott Act in 1835, and also at several municipal elections in the said township of Oneida since his imprisonment. He is a good penman and having lost a leg and having only a small farm to support his family from, he is frequently employed in small offices of this nature. Under all these circumstances and nothing improper having been done by Charles Young at the previous election, I considered him a proper person to appoint and knew of no one else to appoint for that sub-division, and I acted conscientiously and to the best of my ability in securing proper and efficient deputies throughout the whole county. And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the "Act for the suppression of extra-judicial Oaths."

"JOHN ALEX. LANGRILL.

"Declared before me at Jarvis in the county of Haldimand this fourth day of May, 1838.

"C. E. BOURNE,

"A Commissioner in H. C. J., &c."

I think the statement made by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice is completely vindicated as to the fact that Mr. Young had been recommended for the post by a prominent Liberal politician. Let me say, in conclusion upon this subject, that so far as Mr. Young is concerned, I have no need to say very much to-night. I think the facts which I have placed before the House go to show that the statements and insinuations made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) with respect to this man are not justified in this instance. Let me say that it is true, no one denies it, that he committed an indiscretion; but no one attempts to show that he does not at the present time lead an honest and perfectly trustworthy life, and I think hon. gentlemen opposite who are fair-minded and candid will agree with me in saying that the indiscretion committed ten years ago might well have been left undisturbed beneath ten years of honesty, ten years of trustworthy conduct, ten years of integrity, ten years of industry. I think hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House will agree with me when I state that fact, and will be of the opinion that the hon. gentleman has altogether gone out of his way in dragging before this House a private individual who has had no opportunity to defend himself and who is held to be a respectable man in the community in which he lives. Now, what is the charge that the hon. gentleman brings against the Government in connection with the valuation of Indian lands? He might in making that motion have pursued that one-legged heroic policy still further, and he might have said that those persons did influence the election on that occasion. But he does not say so. Why? For this reason: The very charge made against the Government on this occasion was a charge made in the bill of particulars that was filed against me in the protest lodged against me in Haldimand. What did they do in regard to that charge? Did they attempt to prove it? No; after they had scoured the neighborhood they failed to find one jot or tittle of evidence to sustain the charge; and having brought it in to court and having failed to establish one single iota of the charge, the hon. gentleman, the scavenger of his party, is employed to come here and bring it before Parliament where no legal investigation can take place, where no evidence can be offered and where no judicial decision can be obtained.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The person who is addressing the House has twice used the word "scavenger." I do not care what either he or any of his friends or supporters may say or think, but I think it is your duty, Sir, as Speaker, to rule whether such language is parliamentary.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman wishes my ruling, I am ready to give it, but I object to be told in that tone that it is my duty to do such and such a thing. On the point of order, I think the expression is rather unparliamentary, and it will be better for the hon. gentleman to withdraw it and not to use it again.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If the hon. gentleman does not desire to be placed in the position in which he might be a success, I leave him where he is a failure. I will only say that I beg to withdraw the statement. Now then let me say, in the first place, that the hon. gentleman makes an insinuation in the motion he has proposed against the settlers who are settled upon those lands in the county of Haldimand. He makes an insinuation that those men are corrupt and venal. Let me see why he is doing this. He is urged by a gentleman who was his candidate in the county of Haldimand to do so. He attempts to find a reason for that gentleman's defeat; but I feel sure that knowing the hon. gentleman as they do, having a record of his utterances in this House during the last fifteen or twenty years, my friends in the county of Haldimand who are settled on those lands, and who are charged with being corrupt, will not feel badly at the insinuation made by the hon. gentleman. If I mistake not the hon. gentleman has, upon various occasions, disagreed with the people of this country. If I mistake not he has on other occasions said the people of this country were corrupt. I think I heard him last Session, standing in his place in this House, say that the whole Province of Nova Scotia was corrupt, that the whole Province of Nova Scotia had offered itself for sale. He has still further to-night, with that broad expansive view he takes of the public affairs of this country, said that there is no public opinion in this country that is honest or that is pure. Let us see what he said in the past. He has quarrelled with the people before; he has expressed want of confidence in them time and again. While he has expressed want of confidence in the people, they have time and time again voted their want of confidence in him. So it is equal play. Let us see what the hon. gentleman said. He said, in the first place, they were corrupt; he said afterwards they were lazy. He did not use the word lazy, but he said, and it is in Hansard, that they had a notorious aversion to manual labor. That is his classical and rounded style of saying a man is lazy. Then again he has said they were foolish. He said again, and worst of all, that the people are ignorant. So the people of the country whose confidence the hon. gentleman seeks are foolish people, ignorant people, lazy people and corrupt people; but bad as they are I have pleasure in saying, Sir, they have rejected the courting of the hon. gentleman upon various occasions. So far as regards those men against whom these charges are levied, though they be poor people in the eyes of the hon. gentleman, who it would appear was born with a golden spoon in his mouth, they are not corrupt, they are as honest as the hon. gentleman is, and just as far beyond being purchased by this Government or by any other Government. Let us look back for a moment at the history of this matter. These lands years ago were settled upon by the people who are now occupying them. It is true they were poor people then, many of them are poor people still; but no one can say anything against those people. Constantly they have asked the Government to value those lands. The hon. gentleman has said that it was purely an accidental circumstance that those people were at the mercy of the Government. Sir, it was no such thing. The hon. gentleman and his friends were in power for five years in this country, and they had a member in that constituency who was a supporter of their Administration. It was his duty, and their duty to settle that matter long ago, and it was their negligence, long before I had anything to do with the county, that left it over to myself and the present Government to endeavor to arrange it at the present time. In the first place the hon. gentleman tells us that this was done just previous to the elections, and that Mr. Jones was appointed just previous to the elections. I hold in my hands a letter of myself and Senator McCallum to whom the people for many years had gone, urging that he should ask the Government of this country to settle those matters. It is written on 26th May, 1887, months before the election was thought of, and months before we had anything to do with the second election contest, and it urged the Government to exercise its power to render the settlers every justice in their power, in order that this matter, irritating and long standing as it was, should be removed altogether from troubling the Government and the settlers. I read that portion of the letter which refers particularly to the Cayuga lands. The hon. gentleman may read the whole correspondence, if he likes.

"HOUSE OF COMMONS,

OTTAWA, 26th May, 1887."

"With regard to the land at Cayuga we have to say that it is a somewhat different position, and requires different handling by your department. The land has been occupied for years by squatters who have made improvements by clearing, cultivation and the erection of little houses. They are anxious to improve still further, but do not want to do so seeing that they have no security that either their present rights or rights created by any further expenditure will be protected, or recognised.

"As you will see the question is a most delicate one, the interests of a number of occupants being involved, and these occupants desire nothing more than the recognition of whatever rights they possess and we have no doubt that you are equally desirous that they shall lose nothing by any action of the department. What we would respectfully urge is that with a view to allow them in all fairness to have the first right to purchase the homes, which they have with no inconsiderable expense and labor improved, and at the same time to have the matter settled and quieted for all time, we would respectfully suggest that the department make a valuation of these lands in Cayuga, and that the occupants be given the first right to purchase the same, such valuation of course being made with a due regard to all the circumstances of the case. We know that the people interested are anxious to have the matter closed up, and we respectfully urge that it is equally in the public interest to have them settled. Please advise us of your opinion with regard to the matters herein mentioned."

All I can say is, that acting conscientiously in the discharge of my duty, and assisted by a member of the Upper House I endeavored to have this long standing difficulty arranged in the interests of the settlers, in the interests of the Indians, and in the interests of the Government of this country. Those two men were appointed valuers of those Indian lands. I was urging the department all summer to have this matter attended to, and the absence of the late Hon. Mr. White, who was then in charge of the Department of Indian Affairs, I have no doubt delayed it somewhat. Right from the time I began until the present time, I have been co-operating with the Indian Department, in order to have those matters arranged. If Mr. White's death had not occurred, the whole matter would, I have no doubt, been closed ere this. As it is I hope it may be all settled shortly after the Session. Now, Sir, we are told that Mr. Jones could have acted corruptly in regard to this matter. That he did act corruptly, the hon. gentleman does not state in the motion, but he states it in the address which he made to the House, and he endeavors for a moment to fasten the charge upon the Government upon a clause of the statute which he quotes to this House. What does he charge? He charges that this Government should be condemned for supporting corruption, for endeavoring to corrupt the electors. And pray, how does he endeavor to prove it; on what statute does he place it under, when he brings it before the House? I am not a lawyer or the son of a lawyer. My hon. friend did study law once—I am informed he studied it, Sir, with very indifferent success—but as far as his position in this case is concerned, it would have been better if he had continued to study law and not to have gone into those kindly financial pursuits, in which he is employed with that special and peculiar genius which the Toronto Globe attributed to him long ago. His motion says:

“That, by clause 94, Chapter 8 of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada, it is provided that: ‘If, on the trial of any election petition, any candidate is proved to have personally engaged any person at the election to which said petition relates, as a canvasser or agent in relation to the election, knowing that such person, so engaged, has, within eight years previous to such engagement, been found guilty of any corrupt practice by any competent legal tribunal, or by the report of any judge, or other tribunal for the trial of election petitions, the election of such candidate, if he has been elected, shall be void.’”

Now, Sir, that has a lot to do with the Government of this country. Just about as much I think as the statute which regulates line fences. I cannot see that it has anything to do with the Government of this country at all. Under this clause, if I had employed Mr. Jones as an agent, my seat would have been voided, but so far as that clause relates to the Government of the country the hon. gentleman's elementary knowledge of law, must show that has nothing whatever to do with it. I ask the hon. gentleman the question: If that is not legally wrong, was it morally wrong? The moral part of this pretension might have been urged when Mr. Jones was appointed, and before his conduct was before the people. It might have been urged at the time this gentleman was appointed, but it cannot be urged now, since that gentleman has performed his duties satisfactorily to the settlers in that district, and in such a manner that the hon. gentleman's friends, after searching for evidence against him, could not show, and cannot show, that in one single instance he had used his position as valuator of those Indian lands, for the purpose of promoting my election, or of promoting the interests of this Government. I say that if it is not legally wrong, the hon. gentleman has come too late with his moral charge against the Government, or against its officers, because this man has done his work and done it well in the interests of the settlers and in the interests of the country. The hon. gentleman said that I might adopt some particular line of defence, or that the members of the Government might. I wish for a moment to adopt a line of defence that he suggests, and it is a very good line of defence. He charges that this man is a corrupt man; he charges he had no right to be appointed; and because of the act for which he was reported, the hon. gentleman claims he was not a proper person to appoint. The people of that township have pronounced upon Mr. Walter Jones; they have elected him a number of times a municipal officer, and I claim, Sir, that it is the best test of honesty and integrity when a man can get elected to a position of trust among the people who see him every day coming in and going out, and who know him best and who appreciate him most. I trust, Sir, it is not a piece of jealousy which causes the hon. gentleman to attack this man in his own constituency. The hon. gentleman would respect him more, perhaps, if from end to end of the county he had gone for the purpose of obtaining rest for the soles of his municipal feet. I say that this gentleman is highly respected in the place in which he lives, and is universally trusted among the people who know him, and, therefore, I have no reason to go on making a defence in regard to him in this House. The hon. gentleman objects to this appointment and says it is utterly corrupt. That valuation of Indian lands went on.

Mr. MONTAGUE.

The valuator's report is now in the hands of the Government; and notwithstanding the objections which were urged by the hon. gentleman acting as I endeavored to do here in the interests of my constituents, I shall endeavor to push that matter forward until those men receive justice at the hands of the Government, and until the Government have that irritating question, to those settlers upon those lands, finally settled. I am surprised for a moment that the hon. gentleman has referred to it as a matter of corrupt intent. I know that the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is an exceedingly pure individual, I know that he is very pure, but I must say to him that the sound of purity, and the sound of political honesty coming from his lips must have sounded exceedingly strange to some gentlemen with whom he is associated. I know that the hon. gentleman's memory is short. It is short with regard to these matters, but he will excuse me for a moment if I say something which will recall to his mind a series of events which have happened in this party of purity, to which the hon. gentleman belongs, and of which he is the sub leader. Does he remember 1874? Surely he cannot have forgotten the accents of my hon. friend who sits behind him when he said: “I bet you now it cost me $13,000.” Surely he could not have forgotten his dearest friend, Major Walker, who rolled it up to the tune of $25,000; surely he cannot have forgotten his friend from the Niagara peninsula who paid $11,000 for missionary expenses, with a large amount of raspberry syrup thrown in. Surely he cannot have forgotten the member of his Cabinet who put up a large sum of money for the purpose of relieving poor, needy individuals, and his other equally pure friends, whose name are legion.

Mr. COOK. “Send us another $10,000.”

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes, $10,000 and $13,000 would be $23,000, and there is no doubt the hon. gentleman means to correct me in my figures in regard to his election. The hon. gentleman says another ten thousand, because he has said that in a matter of an election campaign he did not take much account of a few thousand dollars. The hon. member for South Oxford has a very short memory in regard to these matters. Does he remember when he sat on this side of the House that there were twenty-eight men behind him who had bought constituencies? Does he remember that every one in four who supported him when in power was elected by the influence of money? He could be excused for not knowing this on the ground of a short memory, since it was fourteen years ago, but he cannot be excused when he pretends to forget the history of Yarmouth, Shelburne, East Northumberland, Prince Edward, Halton, Kent, Russell, L'Assomption and East Simcoe, in the last campaign.

Mr. COOK. What about Kingston?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Well, I do not know. My right hon. friend from Kingston is here without a second election, and I understand he has not bought off his pursuers either. An hon. friend suggests Glengarry, but I shall not mention that, because it would soil and ruffle the kindly and gentle spirit of the hon. member for South Oxford, who is so pure, and especially since in his ears still, I have no doubt, is vibrating the sound of going among the branches of the mulberry trees. The hon. gentleman from South Oxford has had no election trials himself, and I think there is a very good reason for that. In constituencies at all close, it is the other fellow who has had the election trial. And besides his party have not trusted the hon. gentleman in those constituencies in which narrow majorities are the order of the day. Where they have trusted him the results have not been encouraging. He tells us about all the corruption that existed in the county of Haldimand. When I went there almost every crime in the calendar was charged against myself and my friends—every crime almost, except suicide, and it was asserted that I was going to commit suicide; but it proved to be homicide, and I believe this House will vote that it was justifiable homicide. If my hon. friend desires to find impurity and corruption, let him search among the ranks of his own party, and if he cannot find it elsewhere, he can find it in the county of Haldimand. The hon. gentleman has been given information from that county. He has been given information with regard to the abuse and vilification which was directed towards every man who had anything to do with the contest and was my friend? Does he say anything of the coercion of hotel-keepers by the agents of the Mowat Administration, by which they were compelled not to vote for me on pain of losing their licenses? Does he know why it was that by the agency of servants of the Ontario Government men were drugged and dragged from the polls, in order not to vote for me? Does he know that his friends encouraged perjury in order to defeat me? And finally, if it were not for the presence of ladies in the gallery, I should say that worst of all, they dragged an old woman to the polls and compelled the returning officer to give her a ballot to vote against me, and then had the hardihood to stand up before Mr. Justice Street, and demand that I should be unseated, because a woman had voted at the election. I would ask my hon. friend, when he talks about these things in Haldimand, whether he has had this information from the gentleman who has been posting him. If there is one thing the hon. gentleman should not do, it is to claim purity for his party; the five years rule of the hon. gentleman and his party in this House was a cemetery, in which their acts of legislation, &c., were the tombstones that marked the graves of broken promises and unredeemed pledges. The people of Canada might forget the blundering incapacity of those men when on the Treasury benches; they might forget their vilification of and attacks upon their opponents; they might forget their utter want of policy; but they never can forget, no matter how amiable or forgiving, the hypocrisy of those men in standing up in their high places and claiming to be the political purists of this country. Now, Sir, I come to another matter. The hon. gentleman does not like the name of land valuers; what is the reason? Well, Sir, his party have had land valuers engaged in elections for them in days that are gone. Does the hon. gentleman remember that when an election took place once in the county of Grey, one Lewis was sent up there on a telegram from the brother-in-law of the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake). This is the telegram:

“ December 25, 1871.

“ ADAM OLIVIER, ESQ., M.P.P.

“ Where is Lewis? He is wanted in Proton at once; most important.
“ J. K. KERR.”

Just previous to the election this man Lewis, a supporter of these gentlemen, a land valuator in the employ of the Ontario Government, of which the hon. member for West Durham was the head, was sent up there into a township owned by the Ontario Government, where these people were settled, who owed their very existence to the Government. This man was sent up there by the Hon. Archibald Mackellar, one of the members of the Government, who gave him his directions in his bed-chamber at midnight, to write “satisfactory” across the claim of every man who refused to vote against the Government. It is in memory of these land valuers in the past that my hon. friend finds fault on general principles with these land valuers in Haldimand. But the hon. gentleman will say he is not personally responsible for this act. He is, however, himself acquainted with election contests in this country. He was a member of a Government in this country; and he will, perhaps, remember himself having had a meeting with a president of a bank in this country. I do not say that it was at all a corrupt meeting, or with a corrupt intent; perhaps it was only a matter of mere coincidence that it was just previous to an election. That bank president swears that he had a meeting with the hon. gentleman, and that they discussed the question of the deposits in the Ontario Bank. I will not say that the bargain was a venal or corrupt bargain; but I will say that many a man has been hanged in this country on circumstantial evidence which was less strong than the evidence in that case. What did he do? I will not say that he formed an agreement, but the supposition is that he formed an agreement with the president of that bank; and what did we find? We found a little while afterwards that the president of that bank sent a letter to the managers of the bank, in which he asks them to support the Government of which the hon. gentleman was a member, for this very good and sufficient reason among others:

“ Because if they are sustained, our bank, and other Ontario banks, and through them the country, will have the use of the Government surplus until required.”

Then, Sir, what did the managers of the various branches of that bank do? Here is a sample sent out by a Mr. Holland, a bank manager under Mr. Simpson, with whom the hon. gentleman had his interview just a few days before an election, the election in 1874:

“ To customers.—My Dear Sir,—We are largely interested in the success of the present Government, as their continuance in office will add largely to the success and prosperity of the bank.”

What do we find following that? The normal amount of the Government deposits, which should have gone to the Ontario Bank at the time when the hon. gentleman had this coincidental, perhaps accidental meeting, with the president of that bank, was 22 per cent., and after the Government had been sustained, by another strange rule of coincidence, the deposits went up to the tune of 40, 44 and 48 per cent. If Mr. Jones, against whom not a tittle of evidence can be brought to show that he did one single ungentlemanly, unkindly or illegal act is to be charged by my hon. friend with corruption, how much more might I charge the hon. gentleman with corruption, with the facts before an election and after an election in my possession. Then, there was an election in Algoma a number of years ago, and land valuers were sent up there by the Mowat Administration; and it is, no doubt, because of the lively memory my hon. friend has of these men, that he dreads the land valuator when he stalks through the country. Here is a telegram sent by one Burden, a land valuator of the Mowat Administration, a telegram not couched in English or even in Volapuk, a telegram not couched in a language intelligible to any one save the gentleman who signed and the gentleman who received it. It was no doubt pure, and I prove that statement by the fact that it went between two Liberals. If it had gone between two Tories I would suppose it was corrupt motives which induced the hidden language in which it was couched to be used:

“ Hon. T. B. PARDEE, Toronto:

“ Absolutely necessary that we should have funds for pressing emergencies.

“ We can secure local press for $500 half cash, half after election. It is most important that this should be done at once.

“ BURDEN.”

Here is another one:

“ Hon. T. B. PARDEE, Toronto:

“ Outlook so far splendid. Hugh at Rainy River. Stipendiary gone to Fort Francis. He and friends say we must have $1,500 for legitimate expenses. Can you send, and to whom.

“ AUBREY WHITE.”

I do not suppose the stipendiary referred to was stipendiary magistrate under the Mowat Government. Now, I say when these gentlemen hear anything with regard to land valuers, they recollect the events which occurred in the history of their own party, and with a good deal of reason they suspect the land valuator, no matter where he goes abroad in the land.

The right hon. the First Minister is charged with having acted very wrongly and corruptly in appointing this gentleman who had been reported as guilty of corruption, to office. Let us read the history of appointments under the hon. gentleman himself. Pure as he is, dignified as he is in public matters, he made appointments which were a disgrace to the country and to his Government, and will be a disgrace to our political history. Does the hon. gentleman remember John Walker, of London, the man who spent $25,000 against the present Minister of Agriculture, the man who had been disqualified in the courts, the man whom the judge said he could have as well believed he had been dipped in Lake Erie and came out dry as that he had not been guilty of corruption. Well, the Mowat Government of Ontario appointed that man to one of the most prominent offices in the county of Middlesex at present. Did that appointment meet with the approval of the people? I have the resolution moved, not by Conservatives, not by enemies of the Mowat Government, but by Reformers in the township of Adelaide, in which I happened to have the good fortune to be born, moved and carried unanimously at a municipal mass meeting:

"Moved by T. V. Gurry, seconded by Wm. Brook, and carried unanimously: 'That this meeting avails itself of this the first opportunity of expressing its indignation at the appointment of John Walker, the arch-briber of this Dominion, to the position of registrar, as it has brought censure on this fair Province and stultified the profession of purity by giving a premium to bribery.'"

That is the opinion of the people of Middlesex with regard to the briber appointed by Mr. Mowat to an office of importance in the Province of Ontario. Why was Walker appointed? There is no other answer than this: Because, by a free expenditure of money, he had purchased a constituency; because he had practically operated these principles of purity, which the hon. gentleman from South Oxford admires so much. But the hon. gentleman will say that he is not responsible for the conduct of Mr. Mowat. Well, if he is not, he is responsible for the conduct, at least, of the ex-Finance Minister and his Government. Does he not remember the election trial in London, when Dr. Hagarty was reported by the judge, as I find on page 176 of the votes and proceedings for 1875, guilty of nine different specific charges of bribery? And what do we find? We find that within a few years, the hon. member for South Oxford and his colleagues appointed that man, guilty of nine charges of direct bribery, to a responsible position in connection with the Indians of the North West-Territories. What do we find in the case of Mr. Jones? We find that he is charged with having spent a dollar. The judge held he was no agent of mine, and my counsel said, though we can disprove this charge absolutely, we will not go into it because it is not essential with our case now. He is charged with having spent a dollar, and, therefore, is a most venal and corrupt man, in the opinion of the hon. gentleman, and to appoint him a land valuator was a scandalous act, which deserves the righteous condemnation of the hon. member for South Oxford; Dr. Hagarty, however, the friend of the hon. gentleman, who was convicted of spending $600, and of corruptly treating hundreds of electors; not to speak of the large number of women to whom he had paid money for the purpose of influencing their husband's votes, was appointed by my hon. friend, as a good, pure, Liberal politician, to an office of permanence and large emoluments in the North-West-Territories. If that is not honesty and consistency, there is no use in endeavoring to find that jewel in the ranks of the hon. gentlemen opposite. Let me say to the hon. gentleman that I regret he has brought this matter up. He has brought it up simply because he has been prompted to do so by his friend, by a man who, for the purpose of securing his own ends, was willing to stigmatise and damage the character of every private individual in the county of Haldimand or elsewhere.

Mr. MONTAGUE.

I fear no result in that county from his attacks. The hon. gentleman was there, and addressed public meetings, and canvassed against me, and my majority was increased 1,000 per cent. When an election comes on there again, I invite him to come and discuss public questions with me, though I must be very feeble in his presence. I invited him not only to go there and assist his friends, but if South Oxford, strong as it is now in Liberal professions and votes, should, under the mysterious influence of the hon. gentleman's peculiar genius, which he uses over a county, be wafted over to the Conservative side, I should be glad to have the hon. gentleman come there as a candidate for the Liberal party himself, for I confess, though my majority has been largely increased, I am tired of having small majorities. Sir, I thank you and the House for the kind attention given me, and I cannot better close than by expressing again my regret that I have been compelled, at this late hour of the Session, to detain the House.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. gentleman has had, I am informed, the contents of the library carted to his room during the past two weeks, and we have had the result in the speech he has made to-night. I cannot understand very well why the hon. member should make a personal attack upon me. I do not know whether he has any personal venom against me. I was not in his riding during the contest. I did nothing in regard to his election, and I do not understand why he should criticise me in the very discourteous and unparliamentary way in which he did. But I measure the hon. gentleman by what he has said. Water can never rise above its own level, and you must measure the hon. gentleman by the language which he uses, and, according to that, his standard is not a very high one. The contest in Haldimand was far from being an ordinary contest. There are many things which came into that contest which were very disreputable. The hon. gentleman says that this man has only one leg. I think that a Conservative who has shown so much activity in favor of a candidate as this man has will have a new leg procured for him, even if it is only a wooden one; and by the time the next election comes round, they will provide him with a cork leg, in order to enable him to perform the duties which he performed in the last contest. The hon. gentleman admitted that this man Young had been convicted, but he said that he did not steal wheat but was only charged with receiving stolen wheat. I look upon the one case as about the same as the other, but I think the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) sails in about the same boat as that man. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), by the motion which he has made and the proof he has brought forward, has charged the Government, in consequence of their action in regard to Indian lands and the coercion they have used, with virtually stealing the votes of the Indians; so the hon. member has practically received the stolen votes; and so he and this man are in the same boat. The man who received the stolen wheat is not more guilty than the man who received the stolen votes. I have no desire to follow the hon. gentleman throughout the rambling address he has delivered. He went back to the history of the Proton scandal, and he stirred up a number of little things in regard to the supposed scandals which hon. gentlemen have built up in the course of many years. One thing is certain. We never had any such a big scandal as the Pacific Railway scandal. We never had a scandal which involved the expenditure of $360,000 in the way in which the money was spent then. We have never been able to build a monument of a scandal in our party as those gentlemen have done. I do not think it is well to go back to those matters. If we did go back, we might point out the huge effort which was made by the hon. gentleman's party in the Province of Ontario to upset the whole Local Government. We might point to the bribery gang which was headed by a man named Wilkinson. We have lost sight of him for some time, but no doubt, if we went to the North-West, we would find that he is honored by the Government with some appointment there, and no doubt he is drawing Government pay to-day. Then, during the last election, we had valuers sent out along the Rideau Canal and the Trent Valley Canal to value lands which were supposed to be interfered with by the waters of those canals, and sums have been awarded on this account, no doubt in order to get these people into line in support of that party. We cannot forget the history, which is not very old, of the Minister of Finance and the Postmaster General, in the Province of Nova Scotia where there were very large sums promised during the last election, if that Province sent the present hon. gentleman into power; and we have the best evidence of that in the Supplementary Estimates, in which we are asked to vote a large amount of money which is to go to railways there, as part of the promise which was made on that occasion. In the county of Haldimand, the influences that were brought to bear on the Indians were another part of the policy carried on by hon. gentlemen opposite. They accuse us of corruption in some instances, but the great difference between them and us is that, when they bribe the people, it is with the people's own money. Whenever any charge has been made against us, we have only been charged with using our own money. A man is a double thief who uses the property which is entrusted to him by the people as compared with the man who uses his own money, so those hon. gentlemen stand doubly condemned. As I said before, I could not understand the attack made on me by the hon. gentleman. I have sat in this House a little longer than he has, and I have never attacked him, or mentioned his name in any discussion. I always endeavor to treat any hon. gentleman on the other side with the same courtesy that I would treat any hon. member on this side, with the same courtesy that I think members of Parliament are entitled to. I have never sat in this House owing to a narrow majority of 12, or a majority of one, but I have had a majority of 368 in a badly gerrymandered riding. I take the standard of the hon. gentleman according to the language he used, and, as I said before, you cannot expect any better from a man than he really is; you cannot expect water to rise above its own level. I would not have said anything on this question if the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague) had not made a personal attack upon me, which I think was entirely uncalled for.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Before that question is put, I desire to refer to a certain statement which was made in respect of certain affidavits which were laid by me before this House, and I will ask the indulgence of the House to refer to that matter, or, if necessary, I will have the adjournment moved. As to Mr. ex-convict Charles Young, the statement which I have in my hand is that the man served his term of imprisonment on a sentence which was passed upon him at the regular Court of Assize on the 2nd May, 1879, for the offence of stealing wheat; and that during the said period he was sentenced by the County Judges, Criminal Court to a similar period of imprisonment on another charge, both sentences being concurrent. I do not suppose that anyone would imagine that the judge sent Young to gaol for this term if he was innocent; but, even if that were the case, it is not possible to imagine that two distinct sentences would be passed upon this man unless he was clearly, distinctly and unmistakably guilty of what was charged against him. In addition to that, I have here a new affidavit, signed by Mr. Thomas Bridger, of the county of Haldimand, in which Mr. Bridger states that, on a certain day, the 18th January, 1882, this Mr. Charles Young was appointed a collector for the township of Oneida, but that, on the 25th February, 1882, Mr. Charles Young was dismissed because, in his own township, he could not find security for accounting for the taxes if he were made collector. That is the very best evidence that can be produced as to the opinion held by his fellow countrymen by the municipality in which he lives, of this person, Mr. Young. That is all I have to say on the subject of the guilt or innocence of Mr. Charles Young, ex-convict, deputy returning officer, except this, that if it be correct, as stated, that he is one of the most respectable persons in that county, it completely removes the surprise I would otherwise have felt that that county had returned its present representative.

House divided on amendment of Sir Richard Cartwright:

(In the Committee.)

Public Buildings, Quebec..... $95,400

Mr. LAURIER. Aylmer post office, $7,000—is this sum to complete?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We have bought a site very cheap, for $800. Tenders have been called for, and we think this sum will suffice to erect a building.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec Centre). Quebec custom house, $4,000—it seems to me this is a very small sum.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is for the purchase of land only. Afterwards a larger sum will be required.

Mr. LANGEЛИER (Quebec Centre). I see there was a similar vote last year. Has that been expended on this work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There are men at the present moment working at it. The hon. gentleman knows that loose rock has tumbled down from the cliff.

Mr. LANGEЛИER (Quebec Centre). I remember that last year between the nomination day and the polling, which occurred in the middle of the winter, it was found that there was great danger, and a large number of men were set to work. I would like to know for what purpose they were employed. This was in the month of February, and there is usually not much danger of the rocks tumbling down in the winter. Between the nomination and the polling day some 150 men were found to be necessary to prevent the rock from rolling down, I suppose, on the voters who were to vote for the Opposition.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They are employed for that purpose.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. For what purpose?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. To prevent the voters from being killed.

Mr. LAURIER. Is any system followed with regard to that work? Is it done with a view simply of preventing the rocks from falling?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman knows there is loose earth and boulders on the cliff which, from time to time, fall down on the heads of the people and the houses below. We try to remove as few as we can, unless there is danger of their falling, because the work is costly, and we remove them only when there is need. There is another place where boulders are threatening to tumble down, exactly in the very place where men are now working.

Mr. LANGEЛИER (Quebec Centre). Is it intended, out of that sum, to pay the damages which have been caused recently? Not later than last year, a mass of rocks, some ten tons, came rolling down from the cliff below the citadel, and came in contact with a wooden house, which it pushed further out in to Champlain street. If this house had been of stone, no doubt the inmates would have been killed. Is it proposed by the Government to pay for these damages? If the Government admit their liability to remove boulders, how can they escape the responsibility for damages caused by rocks falling? Snow slides occur in winter causing very serious damage. If it is admitted that the Government are liable to remove boulders or loose rocks, I repeat that I do not see how they can escape the responsibility of paying damages caused by rocks falling down in front of the citadel.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In two cases, I think, we paid damages, but we did not admit that we were strictly bound in law to do so. One case was that of a horse killed three or four years ago. We do not admit that we are liable to pay for any damage done; we consider individual cases as they occur.

Mr. AMYOT. I beg to call the attention of the Government to the following facts, contained in a letter I received to-day, dated Quebec, 15th May:

"I have been requested by Mr. William Venner to write to you about a house belonging to him and situate in Little Champlain street, in this city, facing the Queen's wharf. On the first day of May instant several large rocks fell from the cliff in rear of this house and demolished about one-third of the westerly gable end wall. Mr. Venner has been informed that the military authorities of the Dominion Government are answerable for the damage done to the same, and he hopes you will use your influence and urge upon them the immediate necessity of having his house properly repaired and made tenable. He has leased this house by deed passed before me, to one Quinn, who is now in occupation of the same."

Mr. LANGEЛИER (Quebec Centre.)

I hope the Government, if they are responsible for stone coming down, the rocks being Government property, will see that the damage is repaired at once.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course, if the case is laid before the Government it will be taken into consideration. We will ascertain the facts, and the case will then no doubt be placed in the hands of the Minister of Justice for advice.

Mr. LAURIER. What will be the total cost of the Coaticook post office and inland revenue office?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The total cost will be $25,000 or $26,000.

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) I do not see anything in the Estimates about the St. Michel wharf, but I avail myself of this opportunity to point out the necessity of prosecuting and completing the repairs which have been begun to that wharf. I am happy to acknowledge that the hon. Minister of Public Works has been lucky in his choice of the superintendent of those works, and that the result secured is greatly in the interest of the country. He has appointed a superintendent as practical and experienced as honest and saving. With a comparatively small expenditure he made an almost new wharf out of an old and dilapidated one. With about $2,000 a work has been built there which, under ordinary circumstances, would have cost seven or eight thousand dollars. I hope the hon. Minister will prosecute those works, and will have sufficiently broad views to forget the differences of opinion which may exist between the present Federal member and the Government, and that public weal alone will guide him. I hope he will continue to do justice to that parish till the circumstances allow him to settle the main question, that is to say the capital due for the wharf.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) The political differences which exist between the member for that county and the Government have already lessened, and perhaps other differences may also lessen. As regards that wharf, I have reason to believe that a company has been formed, or is about to be formed, for the purpose of building a wharf further west—at about half a mile; that wharf will be much shorter than the present one, and I think it will require much less repairs. My intention is to maintain the present wharf as long as possible.

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) I know where this new wharf is going to be built and it might happen to be more advantageous for certain reasons. If this change is made the Government might use the stone and wood of the present wharf in the building of the new one. In this way the indebtedness incurred for the old wharf could easily be settled, the parish, and the Local and Federal Governments all contributing to its payment. I do not wish to discuss this point to-night. I have already dealt with it in this House, and the hon. Minister is perfectly well acquainted with it. He is aware that to-day this parish, which has borrowed from the Government a certain amount for the purpose of building this wharf, upon the pledge given by the public men of that time that she would never be called upon to refund it, should not, as a matter of justice, be obliged to pay the capital and interest. As I have already shown this House, the parish of St. Michel could not pay that amount without being at least almost, if not completely, ruined. If this reimbursement was asked for, the Government would not keep the pledge given by such men as Mr. Morin, Mr. Chabot, and all the public men of that time. They would act very unfairly towards that parish by compelling her to pay, alone, for the building and repairs of a wharf which is useful to all the large ships, to the whole shipping interest, which serves as a harbor of refuge in stormy weather, and has already saved thousands of dollars to the shipping interest, a wharf which is useful not merely to that parish, but to the whole surrounding district. There is in this matter a question of justice, and I am confident that, looking at it in this light, the hon. Minister will use his influence to protect the rights of the interested parties. He may rest assured that that part of the country will be grateful to him, and, at the same time, he will act in a manner creditable to the Government.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What will be the total cost of the Hull post office and inland revenue office?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $28,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the amount of inland revenue collected there?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have not the amount of inland revenue, but I find the money orders issued amount to $26,000, savings banks deposits $25,000, post office revenue $2,284. The population is now about 10,000, in 1881 it was nearly 7,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A point that is worthy of consideration is this: The revenue from the post office is $2,284 gross, from that you must deduct $1,000 salary, leaving a net revenue of $1,284. We have expended $28,000 on a building, which would produce a revenue of very nearly $1,200, so that, allowing for the salary, not to say fuel allowance and caretaker, the whole revenue of the post office at least will be absorbed and there will not be one cent left. That is surely an improvident way to conduct public affairs. In cases where there is a considerable revenue collected there is fair ground for expending a moderate amount in the construction of public buildings; but unless I am very much mistaken the inland revenue at Hull is very little and the post office is the principal revenue, and so the Minister will see that the interest on the money expended on the public building plus the annual salary of the postmaster will use up the entire revenue of the post office and probably more too.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Hull is a growing place and I have no doubt that the revenue from the different sources there will not only cover the expense but will be more than that. It being the city opposite to the capital of Canada and one of the cities of the Province of Quebec we thought we might give a better building than we would to a smaller place. We have adopted a new rule about this and that is to give a good building at less expense in the future.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the new rule I would like to know?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Instead of $30,000 to try to limit it to about $20,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. For towns of what size?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Sometimes it would be less than $16,000, but as a rule not to exceed $20,000.

Mr. LAURIER. I am glad to learn we have a rule in this matter. I thought there was no rule at all and that this was judged of by exigencies. I do not say political exigencies, but I say exigencies only.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the rule apparently is that due discrimination is observed in looking after good supporters. That appears to be a very prominent rule for building a post office.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The leader of the Opposition will admit that while we have had a number of those buildings in counties represented by Conservatives, we have not limited the post offices to those counties, and that we have recognised the wants of other counties. I think it is only fair to say so.

Mr. LAURIER. Yes, it is fair to say so. I am glad to say that two Liberal counties are to be endowed with post offices. That is not very much, but we are thankful for so much, and I am glad to say it.

Joliette Post Office..... $10,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What will be the total cost of this?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. About $21,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the population?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The population must be about 5,000 now. In 1831 it was 3,260.

Mr. LAURIER. It is not more than 4,000 now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Apparently the population is 3,215, by our census, and it may have increased, although that does not necessarily follow.

Mr. LAURIER. It has increased.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps it has, the hon. gentleman ought to know better than I do. This building seems to be for a post office pure and simple.

Mr. BOWELL. I think if you look into last year's Estimates you will find that it is also for the collection of inland revenue. I remember it being distinctly stated by the Minister of Inland Revenue that the collection of tobacco revenue there was very considerable.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is nothing in the item before us to indicate that it is anything but a post office, and generally the Minister of Public Works is pretty full and accurate in his statements.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In this case it is for post office, &c., which means that the inland revenue must be there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the revenue in the "et cetera"?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot tell you.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The revenue from the post office alone would be barely $1,100. I must say that expending $21,000 to provide house room and accommodation for an annual revenue of $1,100 is a way of managing affairs that no business man would very much approve of. It practically means that the whole revenue of this office, and something more to allow for insurance—for although we are our own insurers we ought to make a charge for it—will go for repairs and expenses of maintenance. Every one of those public buildings requires a caretaker, and you have the result that the whole revenue derived from this office would be consumed in providing house room, and salary. That is not business, and it prevents us from seeing to a certain extent what the post office costs us. Because those matters afterwards are charged not to the post office expenditure, but to the Department of Public Works.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Every one of those additional buildings means so much additional charge all the time. I will not detain the hon. gentleman on this point but I shall request the Minister to obtain information as to whether this covers the inland revenue building, and what amount of revenue is obtained both in the case of Hull and Joliette. The hon. gentleman will do that I presume?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, I will take a note of it.

Montreal Post Office, electric lighting $2,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is the same thing as last year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this an annual charge, or for doing work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The chief mechanical engineer states this is to be applied in making necessary extensions and alterations in the electric lighting apparatus of the Montreal post office.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who supplies the electric light in the Montreal post office?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is a contract with the Gazette Printing Company of Montreal. The contract, as stated two years ago, was for five years; from the 23rd of October, 1885, so that it would be over in a short time. The price was $2,750 a year. The cost of lighting with gas previous to that, for the year ending 30th June, 1884, was $3,419, and to the 30th June, 1885, $4,003. We thought it would be a considerable saving every year to have this electric light.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What number of lights are supplied for that? I suppose you have the contract there.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have not the contract here now. I had it last year, though.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Was that contract made by the Government with the Gazette Company by tender or without tender?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was without tender. The Montreal Gazette Company's building being just in rear of the post office, it was very convenient for the post office to obtain the electric light from them, as we could have it without incurring a large expense for stock. But the post office, having a large number of officers, who do a large amount of night work, requires perhaps more light than we have here, and the question is now under consideration whether we should not provide our own apparatus; and I think it will end in that. The fact is that the Gazette Company made this arrangement more to accommodate the Government than anything else. It is not the arc light, but the Edison light, as the officers could not bear the arc light, which is very trying to the eyes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe that in 1886-87, we paid to A. J. Lawson $1,089, to other parties $100, to the Edison Company $2,241, to E. Chanteloup for electric light fittings $487, making about $3,800 for electric light and fittings in the Montreal post office, for which the hon. gentleman has concluded a contract at the rate of $2,700 a year. Prima facie, that would look something like improvidence on the part of the Montreal post office. The hon. gentleman told us that there was a saving of $600 or $700, but when you come to spend about $4,000 in addition to $2,700 a year, the saving vanishes, and there is a heavy debit on the other side.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There are certain expenses for introducing the light into the building; but the chief mechanical engineer of the department has told me that there was certainly a saving as well as a great deal less danger from fire and a better atmosphere in the building, so that the clerks felt better and could work longer.

Mr. LAURIER. As I understand, the Montreal Gazette Company only supply the motive power.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They have also supplied a large portion of the apparatus.

Mr. LAURIER. That is necessary to convey the electric current, I suppose. Before you had that contract with the Gazette Company, how did you get the motive power?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Before we contracted with them we only had the gas.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Mr. LAURIER. There is no saving at all, then. As I understand, the price of lighting the building under the old system was $3,000. Now it will amount to $2,700, and my hon. friend has just shown an additional charge of $4,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. When I say $3,000 in 1885 for the gas, that is what we had to pay the gas company. We had the expense inside as usual.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). The incandescent lamps only last a certain number of hours, and they cost from 75 cents to $1.50 each, according to the size, and they have to be frequently renewed. I understand that the Government supply these lamps; they are not supplied by the Montreal Gazette Company.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We have to pay for them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the life of these lamps is about 1,000 hours, so that they would be used up in a year, and there would be at least $1,000 a year for them. So that there would be certainly no economy in this change. I am inclined to agree with the Minister that as a matter of health and convenience the incandescent light is very much better than the gas, but he cannot claim economy for it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If we cannot have economy in the expenditure we have it in the health of the officers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should think the hon. gentleman could have competition for the supply of power in Montreal.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The matter is now being investigated, and the Montreal Gazette Company will not stand in the way of any change we may wish to make.

Quebec Custom House..... $4,000

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Is this for repairs? It seems a very large sum?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes. There is some painting, plastering, &c., to be done.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Is it intended by the Government to have the city water introduced into the custom house?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We wish to have it, but we have not yet come to an understanding with the body which the hon. gentleman presides over; but most likely, having the head of that department here, we may come to some understanding.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). If I am not mistaken, the corporation has been prepared to supply the custom house with water at the same rate as ordinary citizens.

Quebec immigration building..... $5,000

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Is that to complete the immigration building on the Louise embankment?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; $42,836 is the total cost.

Rivière du Loup post office, &c..... $2,000

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Is that the whole cost?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, it will cost about $20,000.

St. Jérôme public building..... $4,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the cost of this?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $20,000. It is for the post office and inland revenue office. The population of the place is about 8,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the hon. gentleman is under a mistake, unless the population of St. Jérôme has grown with great rapidity, because I see by the census St. Jérôme had a population of 2,200 in 1881. You will have the result here that the gross revenue will fall several hundred dollars short of defraying the salaries and the interest on the capital sum expended in building. That is a most extraordinary way of doing business. I see the Brampton public building is put down at $7,000. It is put down as a public building pure and simple. Does that mean a post office or what?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Post office, custom house, inland revenue, money order and savings bank.

Mr. BOWELL. The revenue from Brampton is about $15,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know that Brampton is a very important place, and has, I think, a population of 6,000 or 7,000. I see now a vote for the Cayuga post office, $7,000. The population of that place is I think about 800, and the net revenue was about $800, and here is a vote demanded which, with the usual excrescences, will swell up until it will be larger than all the revenue we can get from that post. I think this is, perhaps, the worst case we have yet had. The same expenditure is asked for this village of 700 or 800 souls which is asked for these other places containing several times the population.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The building will cost $13,500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman's estimates have grown. I put the question to him, as he will remember, across the floor some few weeks ago, and I was then told that the total expenditure will be about $7,800.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount of the contract for the building was $7,871, but we have the furniture, heating, fencing and other matters to provide for, and that is the estimate.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then the case is rather worse than I thought. Here is a place, with a net revenue, all told, of rather less than $800, and $13,500 will have to be expended there to put up this building. Does that include the land?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It includes everything.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This amount is to be paid to provide house room for conducting a business of $800 net. If you add the interest on that, and the fuel, and probably a caretaker, you get a very delightful result. This shows the wonderful economy and the wonderful care with which the public affairs are administered. I do not blame the hon. Minister so much in regard to this. I suppose he tries to keep the expenditure within reasonable limits, but it does seem to be a perfect scandal that such an amount as $13,500 of the capital money of this country is to be expended, besides a considerable sum which will be inflicted on the people for maintenance for all time, in regard to such a place as this, because you have to put on a sum for insurance—for sometimes these places are burnt down—and you have a charge for repairs, a charge for the caretaker, and a charge for fuel. It is a most extravagant mode of carrying on the public affairs, and this is probably the worst case that we have yet had in the Province of Ontario. It is certainly worse than any of the cases that I have alluded to before.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I would like to ask the Minister whether it is the policy of the Government to build post offices in all places of the size of the village of Cayuga? Supposing there is no object for the expenditure of money except for some special reason, simply on account of the service which is to be rendered to the country, I desire to know if it is the policy of the Government to build post offices in places of that size? I agree with the hon. member for South Oxford. It appears to me that a gross injustice is being done to the country. If you are going to establish a system of influencing the electorate by building post offices and other public buildings in small places like this, not for the purpose of economy or in the public interest, but simply to influence the electorate, so that they will cast their votes for the Government where they otherwise would not, we want to have the information. If it be the policy of the Government to build post offices in places of that kind, I have a very strong claim to press upon them. If they will build post offices in certain places in my county, they might possibly induce the electors to record their votes for the Government. If they will expend a sufficient amount of money in the county of Elgin as they propose to do in the county of Haldimand, perhaps they might find the same consideration given to them in Elgin as they have in Haldimand; though I have more faith and confidence in the integrity, the honesty and the uprightness of the people of the county of Elgin than to think that they would yield to any such temptation which might be offered to them by the Government. I think that, if there be one black act on the part of the Government which is worse than another, it is this expenditure for the Cayuga public building. If there was any necessity for it, I could understand it, but, if you take the interest upon the original capital which will be required for this building, and the expenditures that will necessarily be incurred afterwards on that account, you will find that it is going to be a loss to the country, although, as we have seen to-night, and as we may see for the next two years, the Government may have one supporter from that county. I think they are paying well for it. I want to know whether the Minister is going to establish as the policy of the Government that expenditures of this kind should take place in small towns, regardless of the requirements of those towns, in order to gain political advantages for themselves over their opponents?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman must see that, as a rule, these buildings are erected in the larger centres of the different counties. We cannot do everything in one year or in two or three years, but by degrees. When the question comes up as to building a post office somewhere, we have to look at all the circumstances and see whether the place requires it, whether the public service requires it, and then we have to come to Parliament and ask for the money.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I would ask the Minister to point out to me the great need for this building, the great advantages to be obtained, and how the public service is to be promoted by the construction of this post office building at Cayuga? Will the hon. gentleman bring forward the representations which have been made to him to show why he made up his mind to erect this post office building there? He speaks about the centre of the county. Will he say what representations have been made to him in reference to this? Surely he might give some reason why this expenditure should be made.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I would like to ask the Minister, in view of the fact that this building is to be erected at Cayuga, why it is that he has not done anything for a town with five times the business and five times the revenue? I refer to the town in which I live, Orillia. I know that it has been repeatedly presented on the Government, and that petitions have been presented for a post office building there, and I think it is very unfair to the county of Simcoe and to that town of Orillia, which is a flourishing and a progressive place as any place in the Dominion of Canada, which has a population of 4,000 or 5,000 people and a revenue paid in of over $6,000, with an allowance for rent and interest of over $400, that it should be left out while this small place is being considered. I know that an application was made and I think it is exceeding unjust that it was not granted.

Mr. COOK. The reason is that they elected an opponent of the Government. In the days when the leader of the Government and, I believe, the Minister of Justice, were going through the country in the "Jamaica" car, they called at the town of Orillia and held a meeting, and they promised the people, so it was stated at the last election, that a post office should be erected. There was a procession formed and they went through the streets of the town of Orillia. The Premier inspected the post office, and was reported to have exclaimed: "Why, this is not a building fit for a town of this size; you certainly require a fine post office, and you shall have one." Orillia has a population of about 6,000, and is one of the best built towns of Ontario. It has probably the most intelligent citizens, of its size, in the Province of Ontario. The result of the last elections shows that, because at one time it was almost wholly Tory, and at the last election it only gave a majority of three to the Conservative candidate, who lives in that town, and who is a large property holder. That accounts, I think, for the absence of any amount in the Estimates. Now, Mr. Quinn, the candidate in the last election, I believe paid a visit to Ottawa, and he interviewed the Minister of Public Works, and I understand he also interviewed the Prime Minister, and it is stated that he got a promise. When he returned to Orillia he made that statement, but the people were a little suspicious, his expenses being paid out of the town fund, the people were a little suspicious that he was down here looking after his own business; he has a timber limit in the North-West, and he was looking after the renewal of this timber limit and getting things into proper shape—it was so stated. Then another deputation of two gentlemen came to Ottawa and interviewed the Government again, with what result I do not know. They were more discreet than Mr. Quinn, and did not make it known through the newspapers. Well I find a report in a newspaper in the town of Barrie some distance from Orillia. Barrie is the shiretown of North Simcoe. The article reads:

"Mr. James Quinn, the twice defeated Conservative candidate for East Simcoe, returned home from Ottawa last week (his expenses being borne by Midland) where he had been interviewing various members of the Government to ascertain how it was that no appropriation was made for the Orillia post office. Sir Hector assured Mr. Quinn that the matter had been overlooked, and promised that the Supplementary Estimates would make things all right. The deputation then pushed for the claims of Orillia as a port of entry. Mr. Quinn had a private interview with Sir John, and was told (with a knowing wink, of course) to send down statistics, and Sir Hector would attend to it. But all these interviews took place before it was learned that Mr. Cook's appeal to the Supreme Court would be successful. So, it is not likely anything more will be done until a short time before the next general elections. Mr. Quinn did not say what Midland was after; but it is presumed that village wants a grant for an esplanade. These little claims of Orillia and Midland are interesting as showing what were the bribes Quinn and his friends were holding out during the last election: a new post office, built by the people of Canada for Orillia, and also a port of entry, and something else for Midland. Mr. Quinn had better take the great big piece of timber out of his own eyes the next time, and he will more easily see the little piece of splinter in Mr. Cook's eyes."

Now, I put a question on the notice paper some time ago, asking if the Government proposed to put a sum of money in the Supplementary Estimates for the construction of this post office in Orillia, and also what was to be done with Penetanguishene and Midland, but got no response. I am glad to see that the Minister has put a sum in the Supplementary Estimates for Penetanguishene, but he has neglected Midland.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We cannot do everything at once.

Mr. COOK. The work at Midland has been commenced and it would not take very much to complete it. However, I propose to discuss that question when we come to that item.

Mr. O'BRIEN.

I am extremely obliged to my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), who is also a constituent of mine, for mentioning this matter. I am glad to get his able assistance, and I am going to assist him in getting something for his harbor in Parry Sound when the time comes. I think Parry Sound has been badly treated. I am sure the influence of my hon. friend ought to be very weighty, as he is largely interested, or at all events, his friends are, in Orillia, and I am sure he would like to see the progressive town of Orillia beautified with a magnificent public building such as they have got at Barrie. Barrie is not a much larger place than Orillia; it has been almost stationary the last two years. I spoke the other day of the blight Sir John had placed upon it in 1887. Orillia at that time was a small place, but she is going ahead rapidly. I do not know whether the Minister of Public Works has been there. I was out of the country, and when I returned they told me that these hon. gentlemen had honored my constituents with a visit at Orillia. I was very glad of that, because I thought the result would be as it has turned out, because Orillia gave me a larger vote than ever before; so that the promised post office, if intended for political effect, did not amount to anything after all. Now, I can assure the Minister of Public Works that it is no more than just that buildings should be erected in the town of Orillia. Is there any truth in the statement that Mr. Quinn obtained from the Minister a promise that an amount would be put in the Supplementary Estimates for the erection of this building? The Government should not discriminate against certain places in the matter of public buildings simply because the electors return representatives opposed to them in Parliament. It is an unworthy motive; the Government have no right to do so, the money belongs to the people, and the Liberals contribute more than the Conservatives, because they are more prosperous as a rule. The Government have educated their supporters to this principle: If you support us we will support you—you scratch my back and I will scratch yours. They have made the people improvident and led them to look to the Government for support, but afterwards they often leave the poor fellows out in the cold, when their influence is gone, just as the poor Grits are left. I want the Minister to let me know if there is any truth in the statement to which I have referred, because the deputation from Orillia made certain statements on their return, and if they were not the facts they should be exposed. Perhaps this matter has escaped the Minister's memory, and there is even time yet for an amount to be placed in the Supplementary Estimates, because, although there were supposed to be no more money grants, notice was given last night of a large number of grants to railways. The Minister of Justice has taken his seat, and I do not know whether he made any promises in his public utterances there or not; I rather think he did not. The leader of the Government did not do so openly, because it is always best to do it by a wink and a nod. I ask the Minister of Public Works if this matter escaped his memory for the second and third time?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Nothing has escaped my memory in that direction. I remember a deputation came here, and they were received as well as I could receive them; they seemed to be pleased with what I told them, and they made a great impression on my mind in the direction of that proposed building. Now the hon. gentleman has continued to make an impression on my mind in the same direction, and with the help of my friend on my right, most likely I will be very soon convinced that something should be done in that direction. But badinage apart, this matter was brought forward, but we are not in a position to ask Parliament to vote money for a great many buildings for which we would like to see sums in the Estimates. We cannot do everything in a year, and the hon. gentleman says himself that though Penetanguishene is not in a county represented by a Conservative, it should not be forgotten. We do not look to that matter, but we consider the wants of the country. We may be mistaken; it is human nature to err, but we commit errors as seldom as possible. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Cook) had better take what I tell him as an encouragement.

Mr. COOK. I am much obliged to the Minister and I understand he received the deputation very kindly and had a considerable interview with them, and sent them away rejoicing. If they went away glad they must have obtained a promise from the hon. gentleman.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We never make promises, because we cannot do so without having the authority of Council. When a deputation comes to me I listen to what the members have to say, and I make remarks or objections in order to ascertain exactly the position of affairs; and I then say to the deputation, that there is a great deal in what you say and I will report to my colleagues, and if the revenues of the country will allow us I should be glad to have the work carried out. But we cannot make promises either for a public building or for works in a harbor; it would be wrong to pledge the Government without the consent of Council.

Mr. COOK. I commend the hon. gentleman for being discreet and for not committing himself. I believe every word he has said. From what I know of the hon. gentleman I believe that is just what he would do. I know he is a very discreet public servant, and never makes a promise without endeavoring to fulfil it. But what has he to say about his leader? Has he the right to make promises without consulting Council? When he was at Orillia he told the people the public building was not satisfactory, that it was a disgrace, and they should have a new one. He made the promise at that time. I am sorry he is not in his place now, because I am inclined to think it must have escaped his memory. I desire to ask the Minister of Public Works whether he will use his endeavors to have an amount placed in the Estimates next year.

Mr. BARRON. Will the Minister state the circumstances which he considered in deciding whether this or that town is entitled to a post office? It seems to me that the member for East Elgin (Mr. Wilson) made out a very strong case in behalf of St. Thomas.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The new building is erected.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). It was for Aylmer.

Mr. BARRON. The only answer the Minister gave to the strong argument advanced was that the Government in deciding whether this place or that place should have a post office, took into consideration all the circumstances. What are those circumstances? Will the Minister state them? Very likely they will be sufficient to justify me in coming to this Government and stating that the circumstances in my riding are such as to entitle me to ask the Government to have a post office at Fenelon Falls, which has twice the population of Cayuga.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I am very sorry that we did not discover at an earlier stage of the proceedings that the principle has been laid down that a village of 800 population was entitled to a $13,000 post office. It seems to me, however, that these post offices are unequally distributed. The manufacturing town of Dundas in which I live, has always stood well by this Government, and the friends of the hon. gentleman who represents it made three trips to Ottawa in order to induce the Government to give them a public building of that class, and to put their post and inland revenue office in that town. But those expectations on the part of the hon. gentleman's friends were not fulfilled. It does seem to me that it is not using his friends well that the town of Dundas, which has a population of 4,000, and which has always stood well by the Government which he supports, should be set aside and a mere village of 800 or 900 people should get a $13,000 post office. It is true the hon. gentleman spent something like a couple of thousand dollars in fixing up a post office for us in that town some time ago. We have a very comfortable post office there now, but we did not reach that stage until it became necessary to lease a building from an active friend of the Government, and a friend that always worked very hard and faithfully on their behalf. The people of the town have a feeling that had it not been to square accounts with that gentleman that we would not even have got this much for the post office. I do regret exceedingly that we did not discover at an earlier stage that the Government intended to adopt the principle of giving a $13,000 post office to a town of 800 or 900 population, because I think their friends in the town of Dundas would have felt that they would have had a strong claim, with their 4,000 of a population, to have something respectable in the way of a post office. We would be glad to take a $13,000 post office, even though our town is larger than the village of Cayuga.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works to tell us what were the circumstances that induced him to make this expenditure for the town of Cayuga? If he will explain the theory upon which he arrived at the conclusion to make that expenditure, then we will be put in a position to know if other places which are similarly situated may have reason to apply to the Government for those public buildings? If he explains that to me I am willing to go on with the Estimates. I want to know how he arrives at this conclusion?

Mr. PLATT. I suppose that we might as well say what we have to say on this subject at once, as I have no desire to waste the time of the House. I cannot refrain from thinking that the rule which has been laid down by the Minister of Public Works as to the construction of public buildings, has more exceptions than almost any rule I know of. The hon. gentleman has told us that he cannot do everything in a single year, and the Minister of Finance has said that he cannot do all those things at once. There are a great many places that I know of that the Government have done nothing for in any year, and a great many places of more importance than the towns they have given public buildings to. I have no desire to make special claims on the Government for any town in my particular county, but I think under the present circumstances I can lay some claims to the consideration of the Government of the day. We have waited some time to get something done for the town of Picton in which I live. Our friends on the opposite side of the House, not long since, showed an extreme solicitude for the town of Picton and half-a-dozen of them came up there to express their extreme regret that the town of Picton and the county of Prince Edward, had been so long neglected and that the only thing that remained for our county to do, was to send a representative supporting the Government and their claims would be no longer lost sight of. It was pressed week after week in the Government press of that county, and even the Government press of the surrounding counties were continually explaining to the people of Prince Edward, that the reason they had been neglected for a quarter of a century was, that they would persist in sending somebody here to oppose the Government. It so happens that the people of Prince Edward have been pursuing this course for a very long time. I simply responded to those arguments by stating that it was a more heinous charge than I had ever brought against the Government, and that I did not think they would neglect any portion of the country because that portion of the country happened to have an opinion of its own on public questions. My friend from Huron (Mr. Porter) claimed for the Government of the day that they were not of the character that had been represented, and that they were willing to do justice to all parts of the country no matter what opinions a particular part expressed. The general opinion during the late elections was that the county had been neglected. My opponents told on the public platform that for a quarter of a century very few dollars of public money had been expended there while certain of the neighboring towns of less size had received large sums of public money. My own friends thought that the people had been neglected, and both the supporters of the Government and those opposed to the present Administration were of the unanimous opinion that the county had been neglected. I had the support of my hon. friend from Huron (Mr. Porter) in saying that the Government did not deal out their gifts to the different counties according to the opinions expressed at the polls, but in accordance with even-handed justice. I think that the friends on the opposite side who showed so much solicitude for my county during the elections should press our claims on the Government for further consideration. We know that it very largely depended on the town of Picton as to the result of the election, and it was claimed that the town was going to carry against me by a very large majority, because there was a belief expressed that if a Government supporter was elected the public buildings would be erected. But my friend from Huron (Mr. Porter) came and told them that it would make no difference with the Government of the day as to the political complexion of the representative, and the people gave me in that Conservative town a magnificent majority of 28. Still, I have the right to rely on the assistance of hon. gentlemen opposite, who were so interested in my county at that particular time, to insist on the Government the fact, that the old town of Picton, which has paid taxes for twenty-five years, has never received any benefit from the public funds. I think that the claims of Prince Edward county should be no longer neglected. It is a deserving county, and the town is a deserving one, and I hope my friends will see that the Minister of Public Works will not fail to carry out the rule he has laid down and do justice to the town of Picton. I shall be most happy to give him any information that he requires from this side of the House; but, after what has been said by my opponents at home and in this House regarding our claims, I do not consider it necessary at this time to press for public aid. In fact, I am a little modest in pressing for public aid at any time. I am of opinion that the Government should themselves find out what sections of the country are in need of public aid and should give it only to those; and I regret that the sentiment prevails to any extent in this country that public aid is given for the purpose of gaining political support. I still refuse to believe that such a state of things exists in this country. I trust for the honor of our country that such a state of things will never obtain in it; but if we look over the list of counties which have received grants during the last few years, and consider the character of their representatives, a large degree of color is given to the charge that the Government are influenced in their grants of public aid by the political color of those constituencies. I think that is as serious a charge as can be brought against the Government. I trust that the expenditure of money will be made in those sections where it is most needed, and without regard to their political complexion.

Mr. MITCHELL I think the Minister who is in charge of the department whose votes are now going through, is generally credited on both sides with being a fair and reasonable man. He has heard the grievances stated on this side of the House, and he possesses a mind which will appreciate the force and value of the statements which have been made, in determining the course to be pursued in the future. I must say that I have always found him reasonable and fair, and after what he has heard to-night, I think he will perhaps give a little more consideration to the gentlemen who have stated their grievances with moderation, and with a feeling with what was due to themselves and the constituencies they represent. I would suggest that as the discussion has been pretty full, we had better take the vote and get on with the business.

Mr. McMULLEN. In the county which I represent, there are no less than three towns, each with 2,500 inhabitants. The receipts in the town where I live are over $3,000, and I believe the receipts of Harriston are nearly equal. If the Government are going to establish a principle on which to build post offices, I think we should know what that principle is. My impression is that when a town reaches a certain population and the receipts amount to a certain sum, the Government ought to consider whether they will erect a post office there or not. If the Government are going to adopt the policy of erecting post offices only in constituencies where supporters of themselves are elected, no matter whether the receipts are such as to justify the expenditure or not, it is well that the public should know it. In the county of Wellington there is only one town in which they have erected a post office, that is the town of Guelph, which has 10,000 or 12,000 inhabitants, and where the receipts are very large. There are several towns in Wellington where the population and the annual receipts are both greater than those of the town of Cayuga, and I would like to know on what principle the Government propose to build a post office in Cayuga when they overlook the necessities of other towns which have greater need of accommodation?

Mr. PORTER. I must apologise for speaking at all on this matter, but the hon. gentleman referred to me as having taken part in the election, and the remarks he made I take as complimentary. He said that I did not represent the Government as granting those favors on account of political support, but as dealing justly, and I think that is a proposition which I may maintain either on the public platform or in the House of Commons. I believe the Government do that. I believe their conduct has shown that they have considered all the circumstances, and have attempted to do justice. I was the more disposed to take that position because of the circumstances of the section I have the honor to represent. In my election there was not a single word of public buildings or of any favors to be obtained by the community if I was elected; and if there are items in the Estimates for public works in the town of Goderich, the necessity of those works was urged on the Government by a gentleman who was a very strong opponent of mine, who was, in fact, the principal agent of the gentleman who opposed me in the last election. This gentleman is mayor of the town, and is well acquainted with its wants; and he came to Ottawa and urged on the Minister of Public Works that those buildings should be constructed, as they were actually necessary in the public interest. Every person acquainted with the beautiful town of Goderich, the county town of a very large and important county, and acquainted with the condition of the post office, will admit at once that the arguments of that gentleman were undoubtedly well founded; and his having persuaded the Minister to listen to his arguments simply shows that the Government, when the facts and figures are placed before them, are willing to deal justly with every claimant, no matter whether he is a supporter or a strong opponent, as the mayor of Goderich was.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like the hon. gentleman who has just sat down to state if he considers it an honest, wise or just expenditure of public money to put a vote of $13,500 in these Estimates for the purpose of providing accommodation for a business which does not net $800 a year? That is the question we are deciding. No reply has been given either by the hon. Minister or any other hon. gentleman on that side. It is perfectly clear why it was done, it was done for no other purpose than to bribe the electors of Cayuga to vote for the Government candidate. Now, I will not waste any more time over it.

Government Printing Bureau..... $115,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here is $180,000 asked for the Government printing bureau. Turn to the miscellaneous, and you find that $165,000 in addition to our considerable vote of last year, was demanded for plant required for the Government printing office; $500,000 are going into this, in my opinion, very necessary useless job. It is a disgrace that in the present state of Government finances, at a time when we have a deficit of $1,000,000, $500,000 are to be expended in the current year or the year gone by for this purpose. It seems to me as if the intention of the Government was to waste the money of the country with both hands and to very little purpose. This may give a little patronage but it does not appear to me any possible good can result. So long as this lasts, we will be saddled with a sum enormously in excess of what our former arrangements cost us.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What is estimated will be the ultimate cost of the building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $184,000.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). How is this building being constructed?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. By contract with Mr. John E. Askwith.

Mr. TROW. I am inclined to think this will be a bad investment on the part of the Government for the reason that the work will cost much more than it does at present.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There is one item which we have passed to which I should like to refer. I see that for the Hamilton drill hall there is an amount of $6,000. That seems to me to be a very large sum to be voted for a drill hall. When I presided over the Department of Militia, we took a vote for the drill hall in St. John, N.B., and I think the amount was $11,000 or $12,000, and I think that is a very suitable building.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This amount is for the completion of the hall. When it is completed, including the $21,000 now asked, it will cost $65,000 or $66,000.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That is an enormous sum to spend for a drill hall. In Halifax we have a drill hall which cost, I think, about $11,000 or $12,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does that include the cost of repairs after a certain meeting which was held there?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). No, I do not think so. I think this vote is sufficient to build a hall to accommodate all the military of the Dominion. It is so disproportionate to the expenditure in other places that I think the Government should give some explanation in regard to it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The requirements are laid before my department, then the chief architect makes a plan, and, of course, if it is a large building he states the reasons. In this case, the walls are of brick with stone dressing and stone foundation. The total length is 250 feet, and the breadth 116 feet, exclusive of a detached residence for the caretaker. As soon as the wooden building is destroyed, we will make one of brick.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My impression is, as I have heard from some of the officers of the volunteers, that the wooden building is to be preferred for military purposes to the brick. The difference in cost is enormous.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I may say on behalf of the people of Hamilton, that this is a very fine building. As the Minister has stated, it is a brick building with stone facings. The military force in Hamilton is rather large, and requires a good deal of accommodation. It must be remembered that the old building was burned down, and that this building was arranged for just before the general election, and I supposed at that time the Government felt very liberal towards a city like Hamilton, and they made this provision, and they have been very successful. At the same time, I must say that it is a very fine building.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where is the Kingston examining warehouse, for which there is a revote of $10,000, to be situated?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is not decided.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The post office and custom house in Kingston have a considerable space between them, and I think this might be erected there.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Minister of Customs tells me that that is the place where it is intended to be erected.

Mr. BARRON. Has the contract been let for the Lindsay post office, customs house, &c., for which there is a vote asked of $7,000?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, I do not think so.

Mr. McMULLEN. When we were discussing the post office at Cayuga, I had not the returns in my hand which I now have. I find that the returns for certain places in my county and adjoining counties show that Listowel, which is on the border of my riding, has net receipts of $2,208; Harriston, a large town, with a population of nearly 2,500, has net receipts of $2,305; Mount Forest, with a population of about 2,500, has net receipts of $2,113. In none of these places is there a post office building, and there is no proposal to have a post office building, while in Cayuga, with net receipts of $800, there is to be a large expenditure for a public building.

Mr. COOK. I see there is an expenditure of $8,500 for the Barrie post office. Has that money been all expended?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not on this item.

Mr. COOK. I see that, last year, $6,683 was expended on that post office which will make a total of $15,834. Will that be the total expenditure?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The vote last year was to complete.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think this should be discussed on this item.

Mr. COOK. I was not in possession of the revenue of the Orillia post office when I spoke before on that question; but I have ascertained by reference to the Postmaster General's report that the net revenue of the post office last year amounted to $5,220. I am sure the revenue of Barrie and Lindsay on the other side would not be much more. Orillia is the distributing point for all the post offices in that section of the country.

Mr. BARRON. Has the contract been let for the Lindsay post office?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No. When it is let it will be by tender.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Napanee post office and custom house, $7,000—is that contract let for Napanee?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, the contractor is Mr. George Newlands. That is a more costly building than the other. It will cost about $33,000 or $34,000. Prescott post office, $15,000—we have purchased a site from Mr. R. Mc Carthy for $3,500, but we have not yet received tenders. Public buildings, Ottawa, $5,000—when a large amount is required for repairs, we must have a special vote.

Public Buildings, Manitoba $105,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Manitoba penitentiary, $75,000—what is the total cost of this to be, including this $75,000?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Up to December, 1887, $382,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then apart from this $65,000, how much remains unexpended?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $75,000 must be added to that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister will see that brings the expenditure on that Manitoba penitentiary up to close on to $500,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me that is an enormous sum for a penitentiary to accommodate 120 convicts.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is the most expensive of all these buildings. I suppose the reason is because it is isolated from large centres.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am afraid there is the same waste of money here which apparently went on in the provisioning and providing for the convicts, as to which we received a very unsatisfactory explanation. I have seen the building, and, unless it has been very much enlarged, I cannot conceive how $500,000 has been laid out upon it. Is that by contract or by penitentiary labor?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Both.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then am I to understand that over and above $500,000 cash, the labor of the convicts is put in, whatever that may be worth?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Everything is included in this.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. $500,000 cash and the labor of the convicts thrown in gratis?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, I think so. The cost of their labor is taken into consideration.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Their labor is not worth as much as that of free artisans, but it is an enormous figure.

Repairs, Furniture, Heating, &c $148,500

Mr. McMULLEN. I think this is a good time to consider the question of the expenditure at Rideau Hall. The amount expended for contingencies is equal to $50,000 a year. We are now making a change in our Governor General and the question can now be considered. There is an enormous expenditure connected with that establishment. I am not prepared to say that the amount is greater this year than formerly, but we should make an entire change. I do not think it is necessary for the country to contribute $8,000 for fire and light. If we keep the establishment in proper repair, the Governor General whoever he may be, should pay the expenses connected with fire and light, and matters of that kind. This system has gone on for years, and we should not allow the item to pass without ascertaining whether it is the intention of the Government to continue the same course in matters of expenditure connected with Rideau Hall under the regime of the Governor General who will shortly arrive as has been done in the case of the last two occupants of the position! We pay the Governor General $50,000 a year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

If we provide him with a comfortable house, which he has, I do not think we should be asked to pay the enormous sum we are paying every year in addition. His salary and staff expenditures cost about $115,000 a year; last year it was $113,000. The incidentals are a little over $29,000. I think it is time that some change should be made in the manner of carrying on that establishment, and I should like to hear from the Minister whether the Government are preparing to carry on the same course with the Governor General that is coming as they have with the Governor General who is now leaving. This is a proper time to discuss the whole question before the new man arrives. My impression is that it is fully time in the interests of the people and the public expenditure when we should lay down some system. If it is the intention of the Government to continue to find a number of such things there as the vegetable garden, the flower garden and other things around the establishment, we should vote a certain amount annually and let it be understood that we will not exceed it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. So long as the Governor General is at Rideau Hall in the present building, the expenditure must go on. That building is an old one and it costs a great deal more to maintain than would a new building. Last year a number of members seemed to think it would be better to erect a new building, and I had estimates prepared, but after seeing the figure I thought the House would not be prepared to erect a new house for the present, and, therefore, we have to go on and keep this building in proper order. The Governor General as the representative of the Queen must have a proper residence. The hon. gentleman cannot expect His Excellency to take $8,000 a year out of his salary to pay for light and fuel for the building—it could never be thought of. He has his salary, and I think he expends it freely while representing the Queen in this country. I do not think the expenditure can be much reduced. If the hon. gentleman has looked at the figures for the last three years he must see that there has been a reduction of several thousands of dollars; but I cannot promise that there will not be a larger amount next year, for it altogether depends on the requirements of the building. If a new roof is required it must be put on, if a gable threatens to come down it must be rebuilt, and the interior must be kept in proper condition, so that the Dominion of Canada may not be ashamed of the residence that is given to the Governor General. I do not think this is an amount that the people would ask to be reduced unless it could be shown that the money was squandered, and I do not think there is anything of that kind. The expense is a necessity, and, though a large expense, I do not think we can curtail it much.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There is no doubt that the country must be prepared to furnish a suitable residence for the Governor General, and I do not think we could expect that the Governor General would pay for heating and gas out of his salary. But it appears to me, looking at the public accounts, that there must be a certain amount of waste. In speaking in this way we make no reflection on the people who are occupying Rideau Hall; they probably know nothing about it, but they have people about them who think that all this is furnished at the Government expense, and they are really not so careful as they otherwise would be. When examining the public accounts the other day I found that 400 tons of coal and 300 cords of wood were burnt at Rideau Hall, which seems to be a very large quantity, and one can hardly understand how it could be disposed of. The number of people employed round there is very large, especially considering that carpenters are working there all the year around. These amounts do not aggregate so much, but the same principle is involved. I think this country will be prepared not only to furnish the Governor General with a comfortable residence and keep it in proper repair, but they desire that he should be in every respect comfortable; at the same time, I cannot help expressing the opinion that there are more people engaged about the grounds and Rideau Hall than is necessary for the purpose of making the occupants there comfortable and taking care of the property. It is the duty of the Minister of Public Works and his department to do this, and I think it is a matter he might fairly consider and see whether a reduction could not be devised.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Immediately after last Session I took care to have statements of all the expenditure there prepared, and after the Governor General had left I visited the building myself and went through it from cellar to garret to see it with my own eyes and be able to state to the House my opinion about it. After going through the whole building and having a statement of the number of people employed by the Government there, I found we could not have a less number than the number we have this year, reducing it by two or three men whom I thought we could get rid of, but altogether I do not think we can reduce it further.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). This amount does not include the annual vote for furniture.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The furniture gets worn out and of course we have to re-cover it. We cannot cover one piece of furniture and leave the others in the old way. In the same way a portion of the paper may get spoiled and of course we have to repair the room. It is a large expense I know, but with all the care possible I do not think we can reduce it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is understood we pay for all expenses of furniture, and plate, and glass, and things of that kind?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do you furnish the building all over?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. FISHER. There are two divisions in this expenditure which ought to be borne in mind. The one is on the building and the necessary investment there. The other is the expenditure which really is part of the household economy of the tenants of that building. It seems to me that it is quite time a change was made in regard to this latter expenditure. I quite agree with the Minister that while we have such an old building as that, we cannot expect that the expenditure will be largely decreased, in keeping it in repair, and I have no doubt the Minister is trying to do the work as economically as possible. I desire to see an absolute change in what I might call the internal economy of the household. The change would not mean that we should ask the Governor General to pay the expenses we are now paying out of his ordinary salary, but a definite sum should be set aside for the purpose as an allowance to the Governor General, and then the Governor General and his household would be responsible for the expenditure of the money. As it is now, the expenditure is entirely in the hands of the department, and I would submit that it is impossible for even so careful and zealous a man as the Minister of Public Works to control it. It is a difficult position to place the Minister in, that he must be expected to look after the internal economy of such a household as that of the Governor General, but I believe it is right and just that the people of this country should expect that some official in the household of the Governor General should look after a proper and economical administration of the household. I do not see any other way it is possible to obtain that result, unless it is a change in the mode which I have referred to: that a certain fixed sum shall be given to the Governor General for the purposes of his household expenditure. Then the proper administration should be left to the household, and they should be held responsible for it. As it is, unfortunately, it is the duty of the department to look after those employes at Rideau Hall. I can well understand the Minister does not wish to interfere in the household economy of the Governor General, and it would be a very difficult position to ask him to assume. If the sum is fixed, and handed over to the household there would be some proper official in the household who would be responsible for the expenditure. I believe that in that way the work could be done more economically than it is.

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to draw the attention of the Minister to the fact that we paid $6,453 last year for painting. I would like to know from the knowledge he has of that building, if that amount of painting will be required on the arrival of the new Governor General. I notice also that we spent something over $1,000 on carpets, and that some three or four hundred yards of carpets were laid down last year. What is his view with regard to the probable expense that will have to be gone to, to put the building into a position to receive the new Governor General. I notice that when the last man came there was considerable improvement gone to, and that we had to overhaul the whole place and to change the carpets and furniture and all that kind of thing. The probabilities are that next year we will have a larger sum than we have now, for the new Governor General will have new ideas with regard to the character of the furniture and fittings that he will require. If we are going to spend a very large amount on the arrival of the new man, my impression is that we had items of expenditure last year which might have been saved, in a view of going into this expenditure when the new Governor arrives. I find that last year it cost $80 a day to keep that place in a position fit to be occupied by the Governor General, and I think there is no necessity for the number of men that are employed about that place. I admit that the gentleman we had under examination, Mr. Hutchinson, is an upright man and tries to do the best he can, but he was surrounded by a number of men there whom he could not well control. He also admitted, when he was before the Public Accounts Committee, that on some occasions men were sent there without his knowing anything about them. Possibly they were those who impressed on the Government that they should be employed and were sent there.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman should not make that insinuation against us. That is not so. The hon. gentleman should not suppose that because we are his opponents, and in the Government, that we employ every one who comes to us. He should suppose that we are doing our duty, unless he has proof to the contrary. Mr. Hutchinson may know nothing about this because he is not called upon to decide what is done. If the hon. gentleman had put me the question I would have answered him at once. The system now is that an officer of the department, and an officer of the household go around three or four times a year in order to ascertain what repairs are required. A list is made and signed by them, and then submitted to me, and I decide whether the work should be done after a proper estimate is made. When that is assented to, then the men that are required are sent, and Mr. Hutchinson may perfectly well be ignorant of what the decision has been arrived at in the department.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to know from the Minister of Public Works if he thinks it necessary to have four professional gardeners at Rideau Hall. There is a vegetable gardener and an assistant, and a flower gardener and an assistant gardener. Does he really think that it is necessary to have four professional men all the time at Rideau Hall, who are paid $2 a day, Sunday included?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The men that are there are constantly employed during the period of the year, for which they are appointed.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). A good deal of this expenditure is in connection with the repairs to the building. Did I understand the Minister to say he had considered the question, as to an entirely new building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). On the same grounds?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; the idea was if we were to erect a new building it would have been on Major's Hill, towards Nepean Point.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understood that idea had been abandoned. The Minister probably has formed some estimate of what the cost of that new building would be. I would like to know what estimate was formed in reference to that and also as to what we could dispose of the present property for, so that we would be in a position to judge whether it would be true economy to effect the change?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We could not obtain, of course, what the property cost us. I cannot say at all how we could sell it, because it would be a difficult property to sell, unless perhaps it could be used as a summer hotel or perhaps a public institution. But the estimate was over $400,000, because we shall require not only the residence or castle, as we might call it, but the out-buildings, fences, drives, &c.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would ask the hon. gentleman to inform us on one or two points when we meet again. In the first place, it seems to me that it is rather hard that the Dominion should be called on to provide $3,500 a year to keep up Major Hill park for the benefit of the citizens of Ottawa. I do not think that is a proper expenditure at all. It appears to me that the place might be properly enough leased to the city of Ottawa; but the people of Canada should not be called on to provide a recreation ground for the citizens of Ottawa. I should like the hon. gentleman to state when we meet again whether the Government proposes, and if so, why they propose, to continue that policy. The other point is this: He has often heard, and I think he is well aware, that this particular building in which we are carrying on our session to-night—this pit—is about as unwholesome a building as it is possible for any building to be; and I would like to know if the Government are considering the propriety of throwing out in some part of this building a room which will be tolerably healthy and which will be arranged on reasonable hygienic principles.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This last matter has been discussed already. We cannot make an addition to this building without destroying its appearance; but the hon. gentleman is aware that next to the west block there is a large space facing on the square which has not been built upon, and we might probably utilise that for the construction of a House of Commons, which might communicate with the present Parliament building by a sort of arcade or colonnade, which would bring the three buildings together. The House of Commons would then be alone, with certain offices belonging to it, and it would have all the ventilation and all the light possible on all sides. That is an idea. Of course it would cost a large sum of money, but for the comfort of the representatives of the people we should have it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is not a question of comfort. Every man who has studied the hygiene of these buildings knows well that a room like this, where the sun never comes, and where it is impossible to have proper ventilation, is a very unwholesome building in which to spend so many hours as we are now spending.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). My hon. friend has properly called attention to this vote for Major Hill park. However indefensible that expenditure may be—and I agree with him that it is utterly indefensible—it has certainly this in its favor, that it is not a new vote. But I see that we are to be called on to vote a new item of $5,000 for the paving of Wellington street. That is a new departure entirely, and I may say that when that item comes up, I intend not only to discuss it, but to divide the House on it in concurrence.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman must remember that the papers on this subject were laid on the Table two or three years ago, and approved by Parliament. Wellington street is under the surveillance of the Government from the bridges to Bank street, and must be kept up by us. That is a bargain, and I hope the hon. gentleman will not move against the vote.

Mr. MITCHELL. And with all due deference to my neighbors, a very good bargain too; because a more disgraceful street before the Government made that arrangement I never saw in my life. I think it was an arrangement that might be justified by the necessity of the case.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1.15 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 18th May, 1888.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

REPRESENTATION OF KENT (ONT.)

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honor to inform the House that I have received the certificate from the returning officer of the election of Archibald Campbell, Esq., for the Electoral District of the County of Kent, in the Province of Ontario.

TRADE COMBINATIONS.

Mr. WALLACE moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 138) for the prevention and suppression of combinations formed in restraint of trade. He said: The House will remember that I presented recently the report of the committee appointed to investigate this subject. That report has shown what, I think, is a surprise to the House, and it certainly was a surprise to the committee, as it will also be to the people of the country. The extent of combinations formed in order to enhance prices and restrict production, and keep out others from engaging in the same occupation and business constitutes a serious evil which calls for legislation. We find by the evidence produced before this committee that coal combines exist in the principal cities of Canada, that these combines are most tyrannical, arbitrary and exclusive in their character; that they enhance prices to the consumer; that they prevent competition; and that under the cloak of law or under pretence of being attached, as in Toronto, to the Toronto Board of Trade, they have been doing acts which are entirely illegal, giving oaths and statutory declarations, and compelling their employes to take those oaths, and in many ways violating the laws, and doing all this under the oath of secrecy and pledges not to divulge the doings of these associations. In the city of Ottawa we find an example of the American trust system imported into this country, in the case of the Ottawa Coal Company. We see there an example of the arbitrary way in which these combinations have increased prices, and they have done this under the influence of these coal organisations. In Ottawa until recently, coal was $8.50 a ton, and to-day the very best quality of the same coal that was brought into Ottawa this spring, is selling for $5 30, or a reduction of $3.20 per ton. I think the influence of this investigation has done a good deal to remove the evils of combinations by acquainting people with the acts of these companies; but I think a more severe and permanent remedy is required, and I have therefore introduced a Bill dealing with those companies. I am aware that the period of the Session is late and it may be difficult to give a Bill of this important character as full and mature consideration as it deserves. But, Sir, the committee had a great deal of work to do. We held 26 meetings and investigated matters very thoroughly, and it was impossible to get through with our examination of the cases that were brought before us at an earlier period. Then the preparation of the Bill occupied a few days, so that it brings us now to nearly the end of the Session. I will briefly explain the provisions of this Bill. The first clause enacts:

"Every person who combines, agrees or arranges with any other person, or with any railway, steamship, or steamboat or transportation company (a) for granting to any person who is a party to such combination, agreement or arrangement, any facility for the purchase, sale, transportation or supply of any article or commodity which is an object of trade, which facility is, by such combination, agreement or arrangement not to be granted to any other person who is not a party thereto; (b) For denying to any person who is not a party to such combination, agreement or arrangement, any facility for any such purchase, sale, transportation or supply, and which, by the provisions thereof, is to be granted to any person who is a party thereto; (c) For unreasonably enhancing the market price of any article or commodity which is an object of trade; (d) For unduly restraining the traffic in any such article or commodity; (e) For limiting, lessening or preventing the production, manufacture, sale or transportation of any such article or commodity; (f) For preventing or restricting competition in the production, manufacture, sale or transportation of any such article or commodity—is guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable, on conviction, to a penalty not exceeding $1,000, and not less than $200, or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding twelve months, and not less than three months, or to both."

The next clause provides that any company that is incorporated by the laws of the Dominion of Canada, and that has been found guilty of misdemeanors of this kind, shall forfeit its charter. The third and last clause provides that,—

"Nothing in this Bill shall interfere with chapter 131 on the Revised Statutes of Canada respecting Trade Unions."

These are the three clauses of the Bill which I submit to the House for its consideration. The evidence taken by the committee justifies prompt and decisive action, because we find that not only in the case of the coal trade, which I have already mentioned, but in every other branch of trade, people are following the evil example that has been set in this instance; and the results have been so satisfactory to those engaged in the combination that if the evil is not checked we may expect that a large number of other branches of business will be affected by similar combinations. We see in the United States, and particularly in the State of New York, that investigations of a similar character are going on, or have been held, and Bills have been introduced. But in those States of the Union the combinations are so powerful and they have exerted such a great influence on the Legislatures, that it has been found impossible to pass an Act sufficiently stringent to suppress them. These matters in Canada to-day are yet in their infancy, and I think this is the time when they should be strangled, when it can be done more easily than at a future time. For that reason I press this Bill on the consideration of the House and the country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD I am sure the House, without reference to party, and the country will feel deeply grateful to the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), for instituting this enquiry, and I have no reason to doubt but that the thanks of the House are also due to the committee for making that report. We can only judge what the report is and what the evidence is from the information we have casually gathered. I quite agree with my hon. friend that it is well we should deal with this subject now, at least as soon as we can properly do it with due consideration, and with the means for forming a deliberate judgment on this important question. My hon. friend has stated that the fact of the committee sitting and the evidence that has been produced have already had a beneficial effect in reducing the prices of one of the most important articles of commerce. I have no doubt that this report, the introduction of this Bill, the publication of the evidence, will also have a most beneficial effect. I do not suppose my hon. friend thinks it would be possible that the House should read the evidence, digest the report and come to a final conclusion as to the merits of the Bill in the expiring moments of the Session; but he will have attained, and the committee will have attained, I think, all they can reasonably expect to attain, that is, the attention of the country will be called to the evidence laid before the House, and the Bill which is proposed to become law can be fairly considered, and those who are most affected by it can also have an opportunity of considering the measure and being heard in Parliament. I have great pleasure in supporting the interest of the Bill, but I do not think the House can go any further with it during the present Session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it is tolerably clear that the House cannot proceed further with this Bill, and I am inclined to believe that service has been rendered by this committee in calling the attention of the country to the natural fruits of the absurd system of protection under which we are at present living. A great deal of good will be done in the way of opening the minds of the people to see what comes of delivering the power of taxation to a few favored individuals at the expense of the general benefit of the community, and, therefore, I am inclined to agree with the First Minister in thinking that good will come of this. That, however, I think, will be the only good that will come of it.

Mr. HESSON. One of the greatest combinations investigated by the committee was one in which there was no protection, and that was in coal. Since the tax has been taken off, advantage has been taken to a greater extent than ever before by the combination, and prices increased.

Mr. GUILLET. In reply to the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), I would say that one of the strongest combinations we found to exist was the stove combination, and some of the most odious features were found to have originated during the administration of the hon. gentleman, from 1875 to 1879; and although they existed through all that period no effort was made by the hon. gentlemen then in power to control that combination or suppress it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman is referring to stoves: stoves are exceedingly protected.

Mr. McMULLEN. I must express regret that the House has not been able to deal with the question during the present Session. It is a very great pity that the evidence could not have been placed in such a shape as to be available now. I believe the report of the committee will do good; at the same time it is hardly right that we should separate without dealing with these combinations instead of allowing them to enjoy the sweets of their gain for six or nine months more before we meet again. However, it is in line with the promise which the Finance Minister made to the combine, when he promised the manufacturers of this country at the beginning of the Session that there would be no alteration in the tariff and they could enjoy their sweets for nine months more.

Motion agreed to; and Bill read the first time.

GRANTS TO RAILWAYS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to-morrow, to consider the following proposed Resolutions:—

1. That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant the subsidies hereinafter mentioned to the railway companies and towards the construction of the railways also hereinafter mentioned, that is to say:

To the Ottawa and Parry Sound Railway Company, for 22 miles of their railway from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway to Eganville, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 49 Victoria, Chapter 10, for a railway from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway to Eganville, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $70,400.

To the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, for 46 miles of their railway from Bridgewater to the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, in the Province of Nova Scotia, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $147,200.

To the Montreal and Champlain Junction Railway Company, for 3 miles of their railway from the end of the present subsidised section to Messina Springs, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $9,600.

To the Mississippi Valley Railway Company, for the section of their railway from a point on the Atlantic and North-West Railway near the Village of Magog, to Ayer's Flat Station on the Mississippi Valley Railway, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 50-51 Victoria, Chapter 24, a subsidy of $32,000.

To the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company, for bridging the several channels of the Ottawa River at Culbute and West thereof, a subsidy of $31,500, to be paid out monthly as the work progresses upon the certificate of the Chief Engineer of Government Railways, in the proportion which the value of the work executed bears to the value of the whole work undertaken, and for three miles of their railway extending from a point three miles east of Pembroke to Pembroke, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $9,600, provided that the entire work subsidised upon this railway shall be completed within four years from the passing of this Act, the subsidy granted by this Act not to exceed in the whole $41,100.

To the Port Arthur, Duluth and Western Railway Company for 84½ miles of their railway from Port Arthur towards Crooked Lake, in lieu of the subsidies granted by 48-49 Victoria, Chapter 59, and 49 Victoria, Chapter 10, for the construction of a railway from Murillo Station to Crooked Lake, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $271,200.

To the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, for 30 miles of their railway from Lake St. John towards Chicoutimi, or from Chicoutimi towards Lake St. John, being a transfer made at the request of the Saguenay and Lake St. John Railway Company of the subsidy granted to them by 50-51 Victoria, Chapter 24, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $96,000.

To the Tamisouata Railway Company, for 20 miles of their Branch Railway from Edmundston towards the St. Francis River, in the Province of Quebec, in lieu of the subsidy granted to them by 50-51 Victoria, Chapter 24, a subsidy of $100,000.

To the Quebec Central Railway Company, for the construction and completion of a line of railway from St. Francis Station to a point on the Atlantic and North-West Railway near Moose Head Lake, 90 miles, in lieu of the balance of the subsidy, unearned, granted by 47 Victoria, Chapter 8, a subsidy not exceeding $23,345 per annum for twenty years, or a guarantee of a like sum for a like period as interest on the bonds of the Company.

To the Central Railway Company of New Brunswick, a grant as subsidy (the road to be first laid with new steel rails weighing not less than 56 lbs. per lineal yard, and after an Order in Council has been passed authorising their transfer to the Company) of 4,652 tons of used iron rails and fastenings loaned to the St. Martin's and Upham Railway Company, now forming part of the Central Railway, which rails and fastenings stand in the Public Accounts as an asset of $93,612.54.

To the Elgin, Petitcodiac and Havelock Railway Company of New Brunswick, a grant as subsidy (the road to be first laid with new steel rails weighing not less than 56 lbs. per lineal yard, and after an Order in Council has been passed authorising their transfer to the Company) of 2,201 tons of used iron rails and fastenings loaned to the Elgin Branch Railway, now forming part of the Elgin, Petitcodiac and Havelock Railway, which rails and fastenings stand in the Public Accounts as an asset for $44,252.82.

To the Kent Northern Railway Company of New Brunswick, a grant as subsidy (the road to be first laid with new steel rails weighing not less than 56 lbs. per lineal yard, and after an Order in Council has been passed authorising their transfer to the Company) of 2,549 tons of used iron rails and fastenings loaned to this Company, which rails and fastenings stand in the Public Accounts as an asset for $58,334.27.

Mr. McMULLEN.

To the Halifax Cotton Company, of Nova Scotia, a grant as subsidy (the road to be first laid with new steel rails weighing not less than 56 lbs. per lineal yard, and after an Order in Council has been passed, authorising their transfer to the Company) of 233 tons of used iron rails and fastenings loaned to the Company, which rails and fastenings stand in the Public Accounts as an asset for $4,335.

To the Steel Company of Canada, in Nova Scotia, a grant as subsidy (the road to be first laid with new steel rails weighing not less than 56 lbs. per lineal yard, and after an Order in Council has been passed authorising their transfer to the Company) of 597 tons of used iron rails and fastenings loaned to the Company, and which rails stand in the Public Accounts as an asset for $11,964.66.

To the Albert Railway Company of New Brunswick, a grant as subsidy (the section of road to be first laid with new steel rails weighing not less than 56 lbs. per lineal yard, and after an Order in Council has been passed authorising their transfer to the Company) of 726 tons of used iron rails and fastenings loaned to the Company, and which rails and fastenings stand in the Public Accounts as an asset for $14,665.45.

To the Chatham Branch Railway of New Brunswick, a grant as subsidy (the road to be first laid with new steel rails weighing not less than 56 lbs. per yard, and after an Order in Council has been passed authorising their transfer to the Company) of 958 tons of used iron rails and fastenings loaned to this Company, which rails and fastenings stand in the Public Accounts as an asset for $14,439.84.

2. Resolved,—All the lines, for the construction of which subsidies are granted, shall be commenced within two years from the first day of August next, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years, to be fixed by Order in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions and specifications, and upon conditions to be approved by the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in an agreement to be made in each case by the Company with the Government, and which the Government is hereby empowered to make; the location also of every such line of railway subject to the approval of the Governor in Council; and all the said subsidies respectively, payable in cash, shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada by instalments, on the completion of each section of the railway of not less than ten miles, proportionate to the value of the portion so completed in comparison with that of the whole work undertaken, to be established by the report of the said Minister or upon completion of the work subsidised.

He said: I desire to move that the resolution respecting grants for railways be placed on the Order Paper for to-day. I can only do so with the unanimous consent of the House as I am only entitled to move the resolution to-morrow; but under existing circumstances I ask the House to allow me to move the motion.

Mr. LAURIER. I must take exception at once to the suggestion. We cannot proceed with the resolution to-day, and I must ask that it stand till to-morrow.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am in the hands of the House.

Mr. LAURIER. It is very objectionable that such an important matter should be brought in so late in the Session. I suppose that cannot be avoided now, but we should have on the Table of the House the correspondence which must have been exchanged with the companies which are to be favored in this way. It has generally been done, although I think it was not done last Session.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then I will move that the House resolve itself into committee to-morrow, and I desire to say that I have the assent of the Crown to introduce the motion. I would ask the House to allow me to add another resolution to those already on the paper, which, by an unfortunate oversight, was omitted, and which, I am quite sure, the House will readily allow me to correct. I received a letter from the hon. Minister for Northumberland—the hon. member for Northumberland I mean—coming events cast their shadows before them—pointing out the mistake I had made, and calling my attention to the fact that a loan of rails for the Chatham Branch Railway, New Brunswick, had been omitted. I sent to the Railway Department and found that the resolution had been prepared, but by some strange oversight had not been included in those handed to me to place on the Notice Paper. I ask permission to add a resolution covering this subsidy amounting to $24,439.84.

Motion agreed to.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 76) to amend the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter 50, respecting the North-West Territories.

THE HIGH COMMISSIONER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved third reading of Bill (No. 136) to amend chapter 16 of the Revised Statutes respecting the High Commissioner for Canada in the United Kingdom.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think we should understand now, because there has been plenty of time for the Government to make up their minds with regard to the High Commissionership. Will the High Commissioner be appointed within a reasonable time—say within six weeks; and that is quite long enough, I should think, for so important an office to remain vacant any longer? It is now vacant for eighteen months, or will be with the six weeks added. I think we ought to know this, when we are passing a Bill for the High Commissioner.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot give the ordinary answer, to-morrow, but the High Commissioner will be appointed in a few weeks.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Who is he to be?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose that is a secret.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

PATENTS OF INVENTION.

Mr. CARLING moved third reading of Bill (No. 38) to amend the Act respecting Patents of Invention.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I understand the object of this Bill is to create a new office, and that the probabilities are that the Government will feel, as they have already stated, that the interests of that office can be trusted in the hands of the late Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. I feel it would not be in the public interest that a course of that kind should be pursued. We all know that that gentleman has occupied the position of Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for some length of time. During the last election campaign, and when the election was over, it was felt by the Government of the day, prior to the returns all coming in, that their position might be very critical, and that some means would be necessary whereby, if they were not sustained by a sufficient majority, other means would be resorted to, to deprive the electorate of the Dominion of a certain number of the representatives chosen by the people, and that their seats might be jeopardized so as to enable the Government to have a working majority. It is useless for the Government to say that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery performed his duty. I am quite satisfied, from what has taken place, that there must have been some influence brought to bear on this man to induce him to act in the manner which he did, on that occasion. We have found that either by accident or otherwise a very large number of the elected Reform members were prevented from being gazetted for a long time, so as to give the Government of the day an opportunity of devising some means to prevent the return of the people's choice. I was one of those whose return was delayed for about three or four weeks, and the object for delaying the return is unaccountable to me, unless it was that my majority was not so great as it was in some other constituencies. I had only fifty-four majority, and perhaps they thought that by some means or other they would be enabled to have a recount, or a protest, so as to prevent me taking my seat. The Government ought not to have pursued that course, because I had on that occasion the pleasure of having the whole of the combination company in my riding. They were there with their brass bands and drums, and from every platform they preached that the country was in an entirely different position to what it really was. Their object evidently was, if possible, to try and prevent your humble servant from being returned in that constituency. They left no opportunity unavailed of to bring about this result, and by all means legitimately, and I do not know but illegitimately too, they tried to defeat me before the election took place. They ought to have been quite satisfied with all this, and after the people had recorded a majority of votes for me, they should have allowed the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to gazette me at a proper time after the return was made. Perhaps some members of the Government may know more about this than they wish to tell, and perhaps some of them were in communication with my opponent in that contest. The next day, or the day after the election took place, I discovered that my opponent had gone from St. Thomas to the city of London on some business, and what that business was I for a long time was unable to find out. As time passed on and as my return was not gazetted, rumor said there was an intention on the part of my opponents to contest my seat, and by every possibility to try to prevent me from taking my place in this Parliament. Even up to the time that I left for the opening of the House I had not been gazetted. Time and again my friends asked me what was the reason of this long delay. I was unable to give them any information in reference to that, unless the belief which I expressed that the Government delayed my return so as to enable my opponents to protest my seat. My opponent, too, prior to the expiration of the time for protest, in answer to a question put to him, said it was not his intention to protest the election, but yet the gazetting was delayed until the very last minute. On the Friday night before the expiration of the time, I saw two individuals, the local representative and a defeated candidate, about the lobbies here. On Saturday morning they left, and at the very last minute the deposit was made and the protest entered against me. What were those men here for? Perhaps hon. gentlemen opposite will be able to explain to me what took place while they were in Ottawa. However, notwithstanding a firm declaration on the part of my opponent that there would be no protest, it was entered, and entered so late that I was unable to enter a cross-petition. The trial came on, and as I felt that my conduct in the election was proper in every respect, though I could not say what some of my friends might have done through indiscretion but with no wrong intent, I was declared elected and entitled to retain my seat. I had all the anxiety of that trial, and I am now in a position to say that had the gazetting not been delayed as long as it was, and had those two individuals not come down here, there would have been no protest entered. I would say this of my opponent, that he felt that it would be suicidal, so far as he was concerned, to enter a protest; but I suppose he was urged on; even up to the time of the trial he persisted in saying that he did not desire that a protest should be entered. In view of these facts, I ask, is it not reasonable for me to feel that this postponement is to reward a man who did me a personal wrong? But I do not blame him so much as I do those who induced him to do it. He was only the instrument in their hands; and those who instigated him should be held responsible. If he is guilty of wrongdoing, the Government, if they induce him to do it, are to blame, and not he. But what I complain of is that the Government should seek to create a position for a man who was guilty of such conduct, who violated the oath he had taken to do his duty faithfully and impartially. I feel, therefore, that it would be wrong in the public interest for this man to hold the position of Deputy Commissioner of Patents, and I beg to move in amendment thereto:

That all the words after the word "That" be struck out in order to add the following:—

It is not expedient that a deputy commissioner be appointed, and that in any event the appointment of Mr. Richard Pope, the late Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, to this office, can only be regarded as done for the purpose of rewarding the said Richard Pope for a gross and deliberate violation of duty in the office he formerly filled, and that such an appointment, if made, will not be calculated to inspire confidence in the honest administration of the department in which the said Pope is employed.

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL, Esq., Member for the Electoral District of Kent, Ontario, introduced by Sir Richard Cartwright and Mr. Langelier (Montmorency).

PATENTS OF INVENTION.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I am delighted to be interrupted by the introduction of my hon. friend from Kent. I believe that every effort was made in the recent election to prevent our having the pleasure of his presence here during the remainder of this Session; and, Sir, no doubt he would have the same ground as I have for objecting to the appointment now proposed to be made. But, Sir, we find, when the country is appealed to, the voice of the people declaring that they have no confidence in the present Government on account of their many acts of wrong-doing and corruption, and their neglect to look after the interests of the country as they ought.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Wilson, (Elgin):

Amendment negatived.

Mr. TROW. I notice the hon. member for St. John has not voted.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I have paired with the hon. the Minister of Finance.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for King's, N.S., voted, although he was paired with the hon. member for Albert, N.B.

Mr. BORDEN. I allowed the names in my immediate vicinity to be called without voting. Subsequently I saw the hon. member for Albert in his place and voted. I sent him a note informing him of the fact, and I presumed he would vote, being in the House.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I happened to come in too late, thinking I was paired.

Mr. BORDEN. Then I would ask that my name be struck off.

Bill read the third time, and passed.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved third reading of Bill (No. 131) further to amend the Dominion Lands Act (from the Senate). He said: I promised the hon. member for South Oxford to give him some general idea of the scheme for the Crofters' settlement. The scheme is generally this: That the Imperial Government are to advance £10,000 on condition that £2,000 are raised from other sources. 1. That three or four trustees or commissioners should be appointed as a board to represent: (1) the Imperial Government, (2) the Canadian Government, (3) the private subscribers, and (4) the important land companies, whose gratuitous co-operation and assistance has been promised, subject only to reimbursement of actual authorised outlay, and that this board shall be entrusted with the responsibility of carrying out the scheme in accordance with the intention of the Government. 2. That the board shall be empowered to obtain such clerical or other assistance (possibly two paid emigration agents, one in the old country and one in Canada) as may be necessary in the selection and final settlement of the emigrants. 3. That in the event of the families being selected and arrangements made for their reaching the port of embarkation, the emigration officers of the Canadian Pacific Railway will take charge of the emigrants at Glasgow or elsewhere, carrying them to their final destination in the North-West Territories for a fixed low rate of passage money. 4. That, in order to meet the cost of emigration and to comply with the provisions of "The Dominion Lands Act, 1886," a sum not exceeding £120 shall be advanced by the Imperial Government and one-sixth by private subscription, and expended in accordance with a scheme drawn up and approved by the Minister of the Interior in terms of section 38 of the aforesaid Act. 5. That the board constituted as above will undertake, by means of their agents, to settle the emigrants on the Government land, to provide temporarily for their wants, and to collect the instalments of capital and interest from them in the manner hereinafter mentioned, they having the benefit of the knowledge and experience both of the Canadian Government land agents, and of the gratuitous co-operation of the officers of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Hudson Bay Company, and the Canadian North-West Land Company. 6. That the Canadian Government will give free grat lands of 160 acres to each family, and also render every assistance through the High Commissioner in London, and through their immigration agents in Canada, in connection with the selection of the land for the emigrants, and their preliminary settlement. The Canadian Government will require that the emigrants selected shall be formally approved by an officer on their behalf. 7. That the money grants shall be for a period of twelve years, bearing no interest during the first four years, but the before-mentioned board will collect the principal and interest from the settlers during the last eight years by an annuity which, on an advance of £120, would amount to £20 17s. 8d. per annum. This is equivalent to an average interest of about £4 6s. per annum during the whole period of twelve years. 8. That the foregoing board will take, by way of security for the sum of £120, or lesser sum, so advanced, a mortgage on the 160 acres of free grant lands of the Dominion Government, including a lien on the chattels, the mortgage being secured in favor of the board by legal agreement. 9. That, if thought desirable, the Canadian Legislature will be requested to facilitate the passing of an Act in connection with the constitution, powers and duties of the aforesaid board. This is the Act which is before the House.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the Canadian Government give any money?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. About £12,000 are put at the disposal of the commissioners—£10,000 by the Imperial Government, and £2,000 by private parties.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not less than £2,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am glad to see that the poor immigrants are to have four years to look about them before being called on to pay. I think that is an admirable provision in all such schemes. The hon. gentleman will remember that I specially called his attention to the desirability of settling these people close together. By that I did not mean that Canadian settlers need be excluded from among them, but that the system of interposing a block of a square mile between each other square in that particular locality where they settle should be dispensed with by the Government. Perhaps the hon. gentleman has had time to consider the suggestion, and can say whether he will see that it is carried out or not. I believe it would be greatly to the advantage of the settlement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not quite prepared to say that. When the Government agreed that a Canadian commissioner should be appointed on the board, his services being quite gratuitous, and the whole scheme not involving any expense whatever to the Dominion Treasury, it was agreed that the late Minister of Interior should be the commissioner. I fancy his successor will be the commissioner, and I will bring before him the hon. gentleman's suggestion. I have no doubt that this scheme will be laid before all the commissioners, and the Government will be only too ready to agree to any claim such as the hon. gentleman suggests, if they recommend it as being in the interests of the crofters.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. For fear of being misunderstood, as I notice I was by my hon. friend the other evening, I would repeat that my object is not to exclude Canadian settlers from the crofters' settlement. It may well be that the intermixture will be advantageous. All I desire is to prevent, what I would regard as a misfortune for this settlement, the interposition of large blocks of vacant land held on speculation by parties for the purpose of profiting by the improvements made around them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite understand the proposition of the hon. gentleman. It will, of course, be advisable, if possible, to have an admixture of other settlers. For instance, if there were some Ontario farmers settled among them, they would teach them a great deal in the way of farming, because crofters are not supposed to be very good farmers. I am not aware of the mode of settlement the crofters proper had under the auspices of Lady Cathcart.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have visited that settlement, a part of which is close to Moose Mountain, and I found many of these men did well. I am inclined to think almost all are likely to do well, once they overcome the initial difficulty, but they made complaints on the very point which I have brought up; and the hon. the First Minister will easily understand that the difficulties of obtaining a proper school accommodation in particular, which, like all Scotch people, they are very desirous of having, were greatly increased by the fact that such a large area had to be brought into a single school section, and in that country, in winter time particularly, it is dangerous to send children a distance of two or three miles to school.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

THE SUPREME AND EXCHEQUER COURTS ACT.

Mr. THOMPSON moved consideration of amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 120) further to amend "The Supreme and Exchequer Courts Act," chapter 135 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. He said: There is only one amendment: to enable the registrar to have control of the library of the Supreme Court, as he has hitherto had, instead of having to purchase books from the Stationery Department.

Amendment concurred in.

MARITIME COURT OF ONTARIO.

Mr. THOMPSON moved that Bill (No. 40) to extend the jurisdiction of the Maritime Court of Ontario, standing in the name of Mr. Charlton on the Public Bills and Orders, be transferred to Government Orders and be read the second time. He said: The first clause is an important one, and I think should be adopted, with a slight alteration. As to the other clauses, they may be left over, with the exception of the last.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. EDGAR. Will not the general provision giving the court jurisdiction in rem clash with the law which already exists?

Mr. THOMPSON. I think it will; I think it would amend it to that extent.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

ELECTORAL FRANCHISE.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved second reading of Bill (No. 117) to amend the Electoral Franchise Act, chapter 5 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. He said: When I introduced this Bill the other day, I was confident that it would receive the universal assent of the House, as I was sure that its provisions were in favor of economy, uniformity, and simplicity of proceeding in the working of the Franchise Act. Unfortunately my provisions have not been realised. I see that amendments are threatened to be proposed which touch the very principle itself of the franchise; and I have been informed that a discussion on the principle of the Act itself might arise, and take up a great deal of time; and, at this late hour of the Session, I do not think it is desirable that such a prolonged discussion should take place. I must say that when I thought of the good memory of my hon. friends opposite, I was afraid they would remember the speeches that they delivered in 1885, and I shuddered at the recollection of the length of time the debate then lasted. Accordingly, I think I may be allowed, in order to show my desire to bring this Session speedily to a close, to withdraw some of the clauses of the Bill, and ask the permission of the House, when we get into Committee of the Whole, to enact only the fourteenth clause; while the other portions of the Bill I will bring up again next Session. The fourteenth clause provides that a revision of the list shall be dispensed with during the year 1888.

Mr. LAURIER. What the hon. gentleman has just said proves once more the necessity of a vigorous opposition in this House. We have here saved the country from being inflicted another year with this Bill. As I have already said, we will get the entire repeal of this Act piecemeal. Twice already the hon. gentleman has moved the suspension of this Bill, and I only hope he will continue in the same line.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I do not wish the hon. gentleman to understand that the Government withdraws the measure: we only adjourn it until next year, and early in the next Session I shall present the measure again to the House. I am sure that meditation will bring wisdom to my hon. friends, and that they will then adopt the Bill as it stands to-day.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). In that way they will adjourn it sine die—we will take it so, at all events. The last clause the hon. gentleman asks us to enact, I think, might be obviated if he would provide that wherever an election may take place during the year, say for the local House, the last revised list should be used for that election. Now the hon. gentleman will see, as we observed before, that in the event of an election taking place during the coming year, that election is run on the list prepared for 1885. I submit it is an extraordinary proposition that we should be running an election in 1889 on an 1885 list, and, therefore, even as a temporary measure, I think the hon. gentleman will do well to provide that the latest revised list in the county in which the election is held, should be used for that election. We do not know where the election may be held; it is as fair for one side as the other, there is no party gain or loss in it, but it is simply maintaining the principle that up to the last moment those who are fairly entitled to vote should all exercise the privilege which belongs to all free men of selecting a man to represent their views. I think the Government ought to yield to this proposition, instead of omitting the revision for another year.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend is not generous. That is completely changing the principle of the Bill itself. As I am generous enough to sacrifice the body of my Bill, I should be allowed to preserve the soul of it, at least.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think there is either soul or conscience about the concern. But be that as it may, there are two ways in which the rights of the electors might be preserved fairly. One is the mode suggested by my hon. friend, which has the great advantage that it would cost nothing, and would meet all possible cases. The other is this: There are a certain number, although a small number, of protests now pending of elections to the House of Commons, and wherever elections are protested, and wherever there is a possibility of an election, owing to an election petition being presented there, the Government should cause a revision to be made. I will tell the Secretary of State why. It is known to me, and I believe there are gentlemen in this House who can testify from their own experience, that between the lists of 1885 on which the present elections are conducted, and the present lists, there is a difference of many hundred votes in single counties. I believe that in one of the recent elections it was found that in one single polling sub-division containing 200 votes, there were no less than 57 persons who became disqualified in the present year as compared with 1886. That is, perhaps, an unusually large proportion. My own calculation has been from my own experience that from 5 to 10 per cent. of the voters are usually disqualified by a change of residence, by death, or by becoming ineligible in some way, in the space of twelve months, and the consequence is that when you allow about three years to elapse, you have something like 20 per cent. of those who are qualified to vote at an election, disfranchised under the present mode. That appears to be a proposition which is fair in itself, and ought to commend itself to the Government, unless they prefer to accept the proposition of my hon. friend behind me, which, as I said, has the merit of being very cheap, and of meeting all possible cases. My own would only meet, it is true, those cases in which the courts might decide that new elections would have to be held.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I am very sorry we cannot accept that proposition. The second proposition would be very costly, and would give rise to a great deal of inconvenience and expense in many cases where elections may have to be held.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There are only half-a-dozen protests now pending.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I am sure very few of the protested elections will be determined otherwise than by retaining the members in their seats, and I hope we have now done with the protests. We have the pleasure now of seeing one of our friends (Mr. Pope) who, unfortunately, has been sick for a long time, appear here as young and well as he ever was, and I hope he will continue so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The suggestion offered from this side of the House would not involve any great expense, because I referred simply to cases of protests now pending, which would not number more than half-a-dozen.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Suppose there were eight protests going on, they would mean eight revisions, which would cost a considerable amount.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would be the means of obtaining the full opinion of the people. Any election which now takes place does not by 20 per cent. represent the actual number of persons entitled to vote.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman is mistaken, as statistics which have been taken show. In the cities the change is considerable, but the average for all the constituencies is not 5 per cent., and the average of the rural constituencies is not more than 2½ per cent. a year.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not think the average majority of candidates elected is 5 per cent. of the whole electors.

Mr. LAURIER. But whether the average be as small as stated or not, is not the principle absolutely wrong that you should not have an expression of the opinion of the people of the country. The only way to secure the true opinion is to take the provincial list.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman says he has endeavored to make the law uniform, and while he has eliminated certain clauses he has left the soul of it. I suppose the spirit of the Bill is to work in the interest of the Government. There is evidently no principle in it, because universal suffrage was given to Prince Edward Island, and different suffrages to other parts of the Dominion, a feature which strikes at the principle of uniformity.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is not in the Bill.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. Secretary of State said the object of the Bill was to make the law uniform. We understand that the Government is about to be reconstructed, and some hon. members will be called upon to appeal to the people under that arrangement. I suppose the Government are desirous of maintaining whatever advantage they possess under the old Franchise Act, with their own nominees or revising barristers. If the Government have confidence in the country, as they tell us every day they have, they should be willing to take the electors into their confidence and give the fullest opportunity of expressing their wishes. I know in some constituencies the vote will be materially changed, I do not say it will be changed in one way or the other, but it will be very largely increased, and I suppose the Government in many cases will receive the advantage of it whatever it may be. I would again urge on the hon. gentleman to accept the proposition I made and utilise the latest list, which will fairly represent the electors of the country.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The hon. Secretary of State has stated that the increase in the rural districts is exceedingly small. In one rural constituency in New Brunswick it is stated there are 2,000 names to be placed on the list.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

NORTH-WEST REPRESENTATION ACT.

Mr. THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 125) to amend the North-West Representation Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. WATSON. I think it is important we should adopt some uniform system of voting for the Dominion elections in the North-West Territories, and I beg to move:

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of inserting provisions for the taking of the votes at the elections in the North-West Territories by ballot.

I do not think it is necessary to occupy much time, but I do say that the North-West should be allowed the ballot. We can understand that from the fact that the North-West Mounted Police, the Dominion Lands Agents, the Indian Agents, and a great number of people that are subject to influence by the Dominion Government in the Dominion elections in the North-West, are voters, that there should be voting by ballot there.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Watson:

REPORT.

Criminal Statistics for the year 1886.—(Mr. Carling.)

SUPPLY—THE LOBSTER FISHERIES.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. KIRK. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and of the Government, to a matter which affects seriously a large portion of the people of the Maritime Provinces. I have reference to the recent Order in Council for the restriction of the time for fishing for and canning lobsters. I am aware that there have been complaints, which I have no doubt reached the Minister of Marine, and those complaints have existed for a number of years, that the Order in Council regulating the lobster season in the Straits of Northumberland and the northern parts of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island had the effect of destroying the lobster fisheries in those waters, that the time for fishing was too long, and the consequence was that fishing has been injured and the lobster fishing industry in those districts were suffering very much. I am not aware that such complaints came from the southern part of Nova Scotia, but I have heard of complaints from that side of Nova Scotia of quite a different character. The complaints that I have been accustomed to hear from the fishermen were that, since 1879, they were restricted too much, and they had not sufficient time for prosecuting their calling. Since 1879 the regulations of the Government in regard to fishing for lobsters in the southern part of Nova Scotia, and that portion of New Brunswick in the Bay of Fundy, extended from the 1st of April to the 1st of August, and lobsters could only be canned during that season on the southern side of Nova Scotia, but on the northern side, in the Straits of Northumberland, the fishing season extended from the 20th April to the 20th of August. It was claimed that in the Straits of Northumberland the season was too long, and that lobsters should not be allowed to be taken so late in the season as August. It was claimed, and I believe properly claimed, that lobsters should not be taken in those waters later than from the 10th of July to the end of August, because during that season of the year the shells were soft and the fish was not in a condition to be canned. On the southern coast of Nova Scotia it was thought that the season was too long, and that lobsters should not be allowed to be taken after the middle of July. The 1st of April is as early as fishermen can get their traps out, and they should be allowed to put them out as early as the season will permit. In Guysboro' county and along the whole coast of Cape Breton it is often the middle of May before they can get their traps out to fish, and therefore the season was not a long one even when they were permitted to fish to the 1st of August. The result of the complaints made to the department, which were heard by everyone throughout the Maritime Provinces, at any rate by the members representing fishing constituencies, was that the matter was brought up in Parliament last year by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies); and after a short discussion, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries stated that a commission would be appointed to enquire into the whole matter and report to the Government, and that upon the report of that commission the Government would act. The commission were appointed, and I am sure every member of the House must have thought that they would collect information from various parties interested, and that their report would be thoroughly reliable. They proceeded with their work, and we have their report before us. But what do I find? I find that in the Maritime Provinces 77 witnesses were examined—26 in Nova Scotia, 25 in New Brunswick, and 26 in Prince Edward Island—besides some in Quebec and other places; but of the 77 examined in the Maritime Provinces not one or two is represented by the report as being a fisherman, but all were packers or overseers engaged in the packing business. However, the evidence taken by these men, so far as the southerly coast of Nova Scotia is concerned, goes to show that there was no falling off in the fisheries there, but that the lobsters are as large and as plentiful as they ever were; and there is no evidence to show that the season is too long or that the lobster fisheries are being destroyed. In the county of Guysboro' we have some fourteen or, perhaps, sixteen canning establishments; yet I find that the commissioners only visited one place in that county. It seems that these gentlemen were having a good time, and only travelled where the regular lines of steam communication would take them. The place they touched at in Guysboro' was Canso, a very important point, and they took the evidence of three witnesses connected with the canning establishments there. The evidence of these gentlemen goes to show that the lobsters are as plentiful in that district as they ever were, and that they are no smaller in size than they were when they commenced canning some twenty years ago. I make a few extracts:

"Mr. Leonard Schreider, lobster packer, Canso. Has been in the business three years but fished one year 14 years ago. Don't see much difference in the size of fish between 14 years since and now. Certainly can't see much difference in the past two years."

"Mr. White, lobster packer, Canso. No closure for any term of years is necessary at Canso. There is no visible change in the size or quantity of the lobster. Formerly and now 5 lbs. weight of raw unboiled fish made 16 ounces of meat. As to shortening the fishing season, different localities would require different regulations. August to him, as far as it goes, is probably the best month. Does not approve of leasing, it would not be practicable."

"Mr. William Frazer, of Burnham and Morrell, Caribou, N.S. Has been in business for six years at Caribou and St. John. Would recommend as the best fishing season to commence as early as might be, and fish to 10th July; then a recess to 10th August; and resume fishing till the end of September. Would not be in favor of closure for a term of years. Attributes the falling off in lobsters to a wrong fishing time. In June and July one-half the fish taken are in spaw; but after 10th August not two in 1,000."

Messrs. F. B. Hamblin & Co., lobster packers, of Pictou, N.S., who are very extensive packers, having factories both in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, say that they believe that if a close season is observed during the latter half of July and the whole of August, it is practically impossible to destroy the lobster fisheries, even if the fishermen are allowed to fish during the whole of the rest of the year. They say:

Mr. Kirk.

"To fish for six weeks only would not pay the cost of running it. Business cannot be done without three months' fishing. Mr. Hamblin's candid opinion is that if the lobsters are protected during the spawning time, they cannot be extinguished. Such protection would be ample to preserve the fishery. There should be sectional dates of fishing for different sections. In Mr. Hamblin's opinion ten days of variation in sectional date of close season is sufficient to cover the industry throughout Canada."

"Mr. George Rowlings, fishery overseer of Musquodoboit Harbor. Has been overseer only one year. Visits the factories six or seven times in the year, and estimates that it takes three and four lobsters to fill a can. His district is from Dartmouth to Ecum Secum, about 130 miles, and his remarks apply to that district."

"Messrs. Robert Simpson & Co., of Halifax, N.S. Respecting lobster fishery they would have the regulations retained just as they are, excepting that they would shorten the fishing season, and make it close on 1st July. In Prospect and Sambro, lobsters are as large as ever, also at Salmon River and Spray Bay. They handle lobsters taken in 30 fathoms. It takes 3½ to 4 average lobsters to fill a one-pound can. Simpson & Co. handle the fish of several factories—about 30—and furnish supplies to nine factories."

I have been told by gentlemen connected with the Fishery Department that it takes seven or eight lobsters to fill a one-pound can; but I find by this evidence, that on the whole southern coast of Nova Scotia the average given is from three to five:

"Messrs. E. D. & S. Staynor, lobster packers, Halifax, N.S. Own four factories; seemed reluctant to admit that lobsters were falling off in size and numbers. He believed that if the present law of 9 inches were in force, it would answer every purpose."

"Mr. J. E. Townsend, lobster packer, Halifax, N.S. He and Mr. Stairs drafted a memorial to the Minister asking for a commission to enquire into the lobster fishery. Can't answer as a question, whether lobsters are increasing or decreasing in size and number, but more factories are annually started. Decrease in size is premonitory to falling off in numbers. Times are poor. So I asked the Government to grant a couple of months extra, August and September, to apply to this year, but did not get it."

"Mr. Isaac Waters, packer and shipper, Halifax, N.S. Has been engaged in the business 23 years, and is now interested in the trade. His principal business is done along the coast, and although the lobsters are getting smaller, does not think they can be said to be exterminated. Fishing in the month of July does the mischief, and some firms he does business with will not put their hands on the fish they take in July."

They will not put their hands to the fish that are taken during the season in which it is not proper to fish, and during the month of July they are larger than in the month of August:

"Mr. H. B. Oann, lobster packer, Yarmouth, N.S. It takes 2½ to 5 lobsters, according to the catch, to fill a one-pound can. Can't say that lobsters are getting scarcer, in fact rather more were packed this year with increased number of traps."

As regards shortening of the season, would not be contented to close on 1st July. Would not want to throw off until 15th July.

"Broadford Cornell, lobster fisherman, Barrington. Has fished lobsters 5 years. They are about the same size as they were 5 years ago, but not quite as plentiful."

"Mr. John M. Shaud, lobster packer, Barrington, Shelburne county, has been in the lobster business 33 years, and packing on the Shelburne coast 16 years. When first came there it took 3½ lobsters to fill a can and it now takes about the same."

Therefore, you will see in Shelburne lobsters are not getting scarcer or smaller:

"Elijah Nickerson, lobster packer, Shelburne county, N.S. Lobsters are as large now as they were 5 years ago, and thinks they are as plentiful as they were then."

Now, I do not think it is necessary for me to read any more of the evidence in this report. I have only quoted the evidence taken so far as Nova Scotia is concerned. What I maintain is that, so far as the southern portion of Nova Scotia is concerned, the lobsters are as plentiful as they were when the lobster packing began some 20 years ago. This is fully borne out by the testimony of those witnesses which was taken before the commission last summer. I have, however, other evidence from fishermen. The evidence in this report has been, with one exception, altogether from packers. I have evidence, however, from fishermen and from gentlemen who are interested in packing besides the packers. I have a letter here from a gentleman whose experience extends from Halifax to Cape Breton, and he gives a schedule of sizes showing the average size of the lobsters from 1883 down to last year; and he points out that there is a small falling off. He points out that it took four and a half lobsters, on an average, in 1883, to fill a can, while it takes now in some places five and a half, and in some places four and a half to fill a can. Then I have other letters from fishermen, one of whom says: "The lobsters in 1887 were larger in general than they were ever before." Another, a fisherman in the county of Guysboro', says: "I have been fishing lobsters for upwards of 18 years, and to the best of my knowledge they have not diminished in size." Another says: "Lobsters were larger during the last year than they have ever been. We caught lobsters in 1887 weighing 8 lbs." I may say that I asked these gentlemen for their opinion with regard to the lobsters. I wrote to them telling them that it was stated here by some of the officers of the department that in the fall of the year lobsters were not fit to be caught, and that it took from seven to twelve to fill a can. One of my correspondents said: "I have never seen lobsters like them in my life. We cannot catch them in our traps. Neither can we take them in our hand traps. They are as large this year as they ever were. In 1887 the lobsters were fully larger than they ever were." Now, this is the evidence of fishermen, and the hon. the Minister will see that, so far as the southern portion of Nova Scotia is concerned, the lobsters are not diminishing either in quantity or size, and, therefore, there can be no good reason why a month should be taken from these people. Now, I presented petitions here from fishermen to the House, which, of course, have gone into the hands of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He will find by those petitions that these people do not complain so much of the spring fishing season being shortened, although they claim that it would be no injury to the fisheries whatever if the fishing season was extended to the 15th of July. They maintain that the fish are fully as good and as healthy up to the 15th July as at any season of the year. They admit that after the 15th July, down, perhaps, to the middle of September, there ought to be a close season, but that after the middle of September, lobsters are quite as full and as profitable to be taken as at any season of the year. I have the opinion of one gentleman, of whom I enquired the condition of these fish in the fall of the year, with the view of knowing what I should do with regard to pressing the matter of fall fishing. This gentleman has been in the business for a long time, and his experience extends from Halifax to Cape Breton. He says:

"Lobsters are in good condition, say from the 15th September, as at any time in the year. I know nothing of the northern shore of Nova Scotia. Our average during the fall months was as good, if not better than in June and July."

Now, there is nothing in the contention that lobsters are not as full and profitable to catch in the fall of the year as they are in the spring; and the only season of the year in which they should not be caught is from the middle of July to the middle of September. I am of the opinion that they should not be taken during these two months, but after that I maintain it is proper to catch them; and I agree with Mr. Hamblin, that if the close season is observed during these two months you may allow the fishermen to take as many as they like before and after, and then that it will be practically impossible to destroy the fish. I do not wish to say anything with regard to the lobster fisheries in the Straits of Northumberland. Those who are interested in the fisheries there can attend to that business. I am speaking more particularly in regard to the fisheries on the southern coast of Nova Scotia, and I think I have given sufficient evidence to satisfy any reasonable man that, as far as that portion of Nova Scotia is concerned, the lobsters are as plentiful and as large as they ever were. I want to know why it is that the Government refuse to allow the fishermen to exercise their calling in the fall of the year. I believe the reason why those fisheries have been so much exhausted in the Straits of Northumberland is the regulation of the Government which permitted them to fish so long in the season of the year when the lobsters should not be caught, in the spawning season, when the shells were not filled, when they were soft shells, and at that season it would take twice as many lobsters to fill a can as it would when the shells were full.

Mr. WELSH. Three times.

Mr. KIRK. Well, three times if you like, but I wanted to be within bounds. It takes, at all events, that quantity more in the months of July, August and the first part of September to fill a can as it does at any other time in the year. I believe it is because the Government permitted fishing up to the middle of August, and also because they yielded to the pressure which was brought to bear by the packers to allow fishing up to the end of August, that the fishing in the Northumberland Straits has become exhausted. But, in the southern part of Nova Scotia, that practice has not been carried on, and, therefore, our lobster fisheries have been preserved, and for that reason I do not think it is necessary in that part of the Province to restrict the time of fishing to the extent proposed. I do not know anything about the views of the packers in regard to fall fishing. None of them have addressed me on the subject. But I do know the views of the fishermen, and they think it is quite proper to fish in the fall. They believe that, if the fish are protected during the two months from the middle of July to the middle of September, they might fish as much as they like afterwards. I think the Minister should allow them to fish for two months in the fall of the year. Such a provision is absolutely necessary in the interests of the fishermen. A large number of them have given up the other fisheries altogether, and have turned their whole attention to lobster fishing. The same boat and the same gear which are used for fishing for lobsters does not suit for the prosecution of the other fisheries, and as a rule the fishermen are not able to keep on land a double supply of plant in order to prosecute both kinds of fishing. Therefore, when you stop them from fishing lobsters, they are stopped from fishing altogether. They cannot afford to buy the boats required for other fishing, and so they are thrown out of employment. I would ask, if the Minister thinks lobster fishing is so profitable, that these men, by prosecuting it for two months, can subsist on the result of the two months' labor and remain idle for the other ten months of the year? It is absurd to suppose that these men can support themselves and their families on two months' fishing in the course of the year. I find that in the Legislature of Nova Scotia, during its recent session, the House unanimously passed a resolution recommending the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to allow two months' fishing in the fall of the year; to allow fishing up to the middle of July, then to make a close season until the middle of September, and then to allow two months' fishing after that. No doubt that resolution has been forwarded and is now in the hands of the Minister. I think the facts which I have given and the evidence which I have read from the report of the commissioners ought to induce the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to open up the fishing season, on the southern coast of Nova Scotia, at least for two months in the fall of the year. I hope the Minister will give this matter his earnest attention, and will give these people a chance to make a living. I am not sure but it would be better for these people, even if it were true that the fisheries were fished out altogether or were becoming exhausted, to have them exhausted and completely destroyed, so that the fishermen might be induced to turn their attention to some other business, but at present they are prevented by the Government regulations from prosecuting their lawful calling, and denied the right to make a living for themselves and families.

Gen. LAURIE. The hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk) has gone very fully into this matter, and has read very full extracts from the report of the commissioners. I think he has shown by his remarks the necessity there was for issuing this commission and taking this evidence. That has shown what the value of the fisheries to our people is, and also how easily and how readily they have been destroyed by a neglect to observe the habits of the fish. I do not desire to detain the House, but I want to add a small contribution to what the hon. gentleman has stated. While there is likely to be a great destruction of the fish, on the other hand, if the rules which have been laid down by the Department of Fisheries are complied with in reference to the protection of the fish, there is reason to believe that good results would follow. I have a letter from Mr. Freeman Payzant, of Lockeport, Nova Scotia, in which he says :

"I am also of opinion that the present law, if enforced, provides ample protection to this valuable fish. In our immediate vicinity, the law is strictly observed; in consequence, our lobsters have not diminished in numbers, nor do they decrease in size. This is not the case when the law is entirely disregarded, as it has been in the whole of the Gulf of St. Lawrence."

Of course this is only his own view :

"We had a factory on the north side of Antigonish county, where we packed five years, utterly disregarding the restriction (and others doing the same). We abandoned this place three years ago. Lobsters got too small to pack."

Whilst I think that the restrictions imposed are very desirable, I would venture to hope that the Minister may see his way to make such a concession to the residents on our south coast as they have asked for, by somewhat extending the time during which fishing may be permitted. Those fishermen are as much interested in the preservation of the fish as anyone can be, because, as the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk) has told us, their living depends on the maintenance of the fishery, and they desire simply that they may be permitted to fish for a fortnight longer, having satisfied themselves that that would not interfere with the breeding of the fish, and would not result in taking soft shell fish. On the south-west coast of Nova Scotia, the principal business of lobster catching depends on sending fresh lobsters to the United States and not on supplying the canneries, and, therefore, this is more in the interest of the fishermen than of the packers. We have a consensus of opinion on this point. I have handed to the Minister petitions from 350 fishermen from Shelburne county, asking that the time for fishing be extended from the 1st to the 15th July. I also hold in my hand two letters from lobster packers, asking me to urge this matter upon him. Therefore, as the subject has been brought up, I take this opportunity of introducing it in order that it may receive consideration.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk) ought to have intimated to me that he intended to bring this subject up, and I should then have been prepared to give a more comprehensive and better statement than I am now able to make from memory of what has taken place during the year.

Mr. KIRK. If the Minister will allow me, more than six weeks ago I was in his office and told the Deputy Minister that on the first occasion I could get when the House was moved into Committee of Supply, I intended to bring the matter up. He said he was glad I told him that, because he would inform the Minister, and the Minister would be placed in possession of all the facts that he could give to the House.

Mr. FOSTER. The Deputy Minister is not the Minister, and my hon. friend knows that it is quite uncertain, even if I got notice six weeks ago, that I could remember it in the multiplicity of business. However, I shall make a few observations with reference to this matter from my general knowledge of the question. The hon. gentleman has made one statement in which I do not think the House will agree with him, when he says that rather than that the lobster fishermen should be deprived of their business, the lobster fisheries should be allowed to become exhausted. Now, I do not believe that is the sentiment of this House or the country. An industry which, within the last year, amounted to over 17,000,000 cans of lobsters alone, besides the live lobsters that were taken, a trade employing thousands of people, is too large an industry to be allowed to be sacrificed. I believe the public sentiment of the country is now becoming nearly ripe for some fairly strong preventive measures for the preservation of the lobster industry and the lobster fisheries. In the first place it must be assumed that the Department of Fisheries, or the Minister at its head, has no object in view except to do the best he can, from the information at his disposal, to preserve the interests of the lobster fishermen, the lobster packers, and all others engaged upon that industry, so far as consistent with the preservation of the very source of their industry, the lobsters themselves. Now, if you take the history of the lobster business in the eastern States of the United States, if you take the history of the lobster business in Norway, and wherever else it has been prosecuted, you will find this result: that from over-fishing the lobster fishery has constantly decreased, and that there has come a period when it became essentially necessary, in order to preserve it, that strong measures should be taken to prevent over-fishing, even though the lobster canner, even though the lobster fishermen, had to suffer in consequence of that restriction. In the United States to-day it is generally admitted that the lobster fishery is pretty nearly exhausted, and, consequently, the people are now looking for another supply. They are now drawing their lobsters from other countries, and a great many citizens of the United States are engaged in the work of supplying lobsters for the United States market from our own shores. Well, as a result of over-fishing under the regulations which from time to time have been in force, everybody who has studied this question, everybody who has practical experience in it, has come to the conclusion that it is high time that something more should be done in order to preserve that industry, if it is to be preserved at all. I readily admit with my hon. friend that there are different circumstances upon different parts of our coast. If you take the Gulf coast, if you take Prince Edward Island, and other parts of the northern coast of Nova Scotia, you will find the lobster industry in a far more depleted state, in a far more exhausted condition, than it is on the coast of Nova Scotia from its western extremity up around to Cape North. If my hon. friend will take the report of the fishery overseers and of the fishery inspectors, from the different Provinces, and will look through them for the last six or seven years, he will find a constantly increasing note of warning, and he will see that stringent methods are necessary in order to preserve this industry. Well, this culminated last year, as my hon. friend has said, and I promised that a commission should be appointed to investigate the whole question, and procure such additional information as we could obtain. That commission was appointed and did its work. It is not for me to say whether that work was done perfectly or imperfectly. I believe that a fair average amount of evidence was collected, and that the evidence, take it all in all, points strongly in the direction of restrictive measures. My hon. friend has one opinion with reference to what should be the close season, and almost every person has an opinion of his own as to what that season should be. Almost every fisherman you ask has a different opinion from his neighbor, according to the locality and a point of view from which he regards the question, and it is impossible to reconcile these different opinions. Now, Sir, four men were appointed on that commission. They studied the question during last summer; they had already studied the question for years; they were persons who had been engaged in the lobster fisheries and had an intimate knowledge of it. After they had gathered the evidence, which has been printed, in consequence of the general impression they obtained from their years of previous experience, and the general impression gathered during their trip last summer, they recommended unanimously the close season which has been adopted by the Government. Now, I think that is one very strong proof that this is as fair a close period as can be had. My hon. friend says that the evidence was chiefly obtained from packers. Well, if his statement is correct—and I think in the main his statement is correct—more packers have been interviewed, and their evidence taken, than fishermen. My instructions to the commissioners were to take their evidence from the best persons they could get to give information. The evidence has been taken, and as the packers' evidence predominates, you will fairly conclude that they would give evidence as favorable to the continuance of their business as they possibly could. Yet, when you read the whole of that evidence, taken from the different Provinces, you will find the mass of it tending in the direction of increased restriction, stronger regulations and a shortening of the time. I may say that the department has gone not only on the result of the commission, but it has also gone upon information which had come to it year after year. The opinion of the officers of the department is in the same direction and is stronger in favor of a close season or of suspending fishing for a number of years than is the report of the commission, or even the evidence which was gathered by the commission, and it was upon both of these that the regulations were ultimately founded. My hon. friend believes in fall fishing. Of all the mass of evidence which is in the department, while there are certain witnesses who believe that fall fishing should be allowed, the great mass of evidence is against fall fishing. The packers themselves, some of the most responsible of them, have not only written me but have stated to me that in their opinion fall fishing would be injurious. Fall fishing was once allowed under the regulations in this country, and it was found to work destructively. From the time the lobsters shed their shells until six or eight weeks afterwards, the period is indefinite, it may be a longer or shorter time, they are not in a fit condition, so far as their flesh is concerned, for canning or eating purposes. They are then in their most hungry condition. They catch readily at bait and they can be caught with much more ease, and, therefore, more indiscriminately and in larger numbers than later in the season. I say the weight of evidence in the department to-day is decidedly against the granting of fall fishing. The hon. gentleman has said that we have shortened up the season on the south part of Nova Scotia. It is true we have shortened it on one end, but we have widened it on the other end, and whereas previously no lobsters could be taken before 1st April, now lobsters can be taken from 1st January until 1st July. The hon. gentleman may say that does not amount to much. I say it amounts to a great deal, more to certain localities than to others. If you take Digby, Yarmouth, Shelburne and Halifax you find that the live lobster trade is continually increasing, and is becoming the most profitable branch of the trade. It is the least destructive to our fishing. The lobsters are taken chiefly, I believe, for the United States market, and the United States will not allow any lobsters of less than 10½ inches to be imported into their country, so that none but fully-grown mature lobsters are taken, whilst the canneries sweep in everything, and the result is that the canneries are the most destructive to the lobsters themselves. Well, I say we have given on the south coast of Nova Scotia the privilege of taking lobsters for shipment or for canning from 1st January until 1st July. My hon. friend says there are localities where this cannot be availed of. That may be true. Localities differ; it is impossible to make a separate regulation for every locality in which differences can be pleaded. We must have as far as possible broad lines of distinction and as far as possible uniformity of the law. Multiplied difficulties arise in the carrying out of the regulations and in the enforcement of the law, if those differences are allowed for every locality which can plead its local circumstances. The interest of the fisherman has been pleaded, and it is for the interests of the fisherman that the department is chiefly acting. Unless the supply is kept up the fishermen's interest is not conserved. He may for the time reap his reward, but if he reaps it only by the depletion and ultimate destruction of the fisheries he is taking action that will very seriously injure the industry, which ought to be kept a perennial and constant industry in our country. I do not say that the regulations are cast iron; they are not. Unfortunately the fishing regulations never have been cast iron in this country, and the result in regard to the regulations and the enforcement of the regulations of our fisheries has been that they have not had the force of statutory laws, and by the pressure of circumstances and the pressure of opinion and sentiment they have been changed from time to time until the idea of fixity has almost departed from our fishery regulations. These, as I say, are not cast iron rules. The department has not finished its investigation; the department is earnestly at work trying to get at what are the facts of the case from the mass of conflicting evidence we have from all quarters. If it is found that these regulations are not the best, the department can change them, and I am prepared to change them. If it is found they do not cure the difficulties and something more is necessary in respect to a close season, that something more will have to be resorted to. There is this against a short close season: it does not prevent the destruction of fish. Give three months of fishing and the people will fish with greater moderation than if the time is only two months as the period during which the operations are to be carried on. By using increased activity, by using a larger number of traps it is possible to destroy more fish during the two months than if the season were three months, when there would be less activity and eagerness shown by the men in the pursuit of their vocation. I say it is impossible to please every locality, it is impossible to please every body of people. As far as possible the department wishes to do what is best for the fishermen, considering also what is best for the promoters of the industry, and if changes are shown to be necessary in this respect, changes will cheerfully be made, and what is considered best, after mature deliberation and the gathering of evidence, will always be cheerfully done by the department for this or any other part of the public service.

Mr. PERRY. I am very glad the hon. gentleman for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk) has brought this subject before Parliament and the Department of Fisheries. I must acknowledge, I am happy to acknowledge, that the Government or the Department of Fisheries have taken a step in the right direction. I think when they endeavor to protect the lobster fishery, and do it properly and impartially, they are doing what the country expects them to do; they are doing what the people of Prince Edward Island, who have a very deep interest in the lobster fisheries, expect them to do, and they give this Government credit for doing it. I hold in my hand the evidence of several parties deeply interested in lobster fishing and packing in Prince Edward Island. I am not going to speak for Nova Scotia fishermen, who are well represented by the hon. member for Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk) and other hon. members who represent the coast counties, I merely speak for Prince Edward Island. I have a knowledge of the lobster fisheries from my own personal observation, although

I am not personally interested in those fisheries. I have gone to those fisheries, made enquiries, seen the men catch the fish, seen the boats come in; I know how the traps are made, when lobsters should not be caught and other points, and so I can speak impartially. I find that every one of the twenty odd fishermen who gave evidence before the commission are satisfied with the amount of restriction placed upon those fisheries by the department. The only grumbling is in regard to this: that the close season on the south side of the Island does not meet the requirements of the people. For instance, Mr. Holman, of Summerside, wrote to me and said:

"I have $20,000 invested in the lobster fisheries on the south side of Prince Edward Island, and under the present regulations I have only about one month's fishing."

It takes one week to put down the traps and another week to take up the traps, and so there is only about a month's fishing. The department should take this into consideration, whether it is fair, just and proper that $20,000 belonging to a very enterprising man in Prince Edward Island should be thrown overboard in order to carry out the restrictions which have been placed upon the fisheries by the department. It cannot be denied that the lobster fishing is declining fast. I remember well when three or four fish would fill a can, and now it will take from seven to eight. That is an evidence that it must be decreasing. The only way to keep the lobster fishery as it is, or to improve upon it, is to have certain proper restrictions and to carry them out. Let me read to you what Mr. Morrow says, a man who is deeply interested in the lobster industry:

"Mr. Frederick Morrow, of Souris, is owner of two factories, one at Souris, and one at Black Bank, both in King's County. Both factories are running this year, since 26th May, and Black Bank will run till 20th August. Commenced lobster packing in 1880. The two factories employ outside and inside 60 men and 22 women, to whom $7,000 will be paid this season in wages, or equal to about $120 per man. Mr. Morrow thinks the present regulations are all right for the north side of Prince Edward Island, but it would be better for the south side of Prince Edward Island, running from Cape Beart to West Point, to commence on 20th April, then shut down on 15th July, and re-open on 15th August, and fish until closed by the weather. May and June are the best fishing months.

That is Mr. Morrow's opinion and no doubt when he expends some $7,000 or $8,000 a year in wages alone he must be deeply interested in those fisheries, and we must come to the conclusion that he knows something about the question. Mr. Rogers in giving his evidence says:

"Interested in two lobster factories at Egmont Bay, Prince county, employing 45 men, at an average of $30 per month per man; and 12 women at 10 per month, thus expending $5,880 in wages alone, besides the other necessary supplies, bringing it up to $6,000. His view is that different seasons should be for north and south of Prince Edward Island. On the north lobsters strike in early and on the south strike in later. For the south he would suggest that fishing might commence about 25th May; close down on the 1st July; re-open 1st August; and finally close on 20th September."

Both gentlemen agreed that the lobster strikes the shore on the north side as soon as the ice breaks, but on the south side the lobsters only make their appearance about the last of June, and it would be useless for the fishermen to have their traps out on the 1st of April. I suppose the lobsters are like other fish. They have their natural inclinations, and they are at one end of the coast at a certain time, and upon another end of the coast at another time. Although the lobster does not travel fast he travels sure. Mr. Holman in giving his evidence, says:

"Has been interested in the lobster industry for some years both as owner of factories and as supplier of others. He now owns eleven factories, of which six are on the south of the Island and five are on the north. Employs about 220 men, at an average wages of $36 per month, and 90 women at $20 per month; thus expending $25,560 in labor, besides supplies. Is favorable to different seasons for north and south of Prince Edward Island. For the south it would be better to commence fishing as now on the 20th April; omit the month of July; recommence 1st August and continue fishing for the whole month of September, although it would be inconvenient as to taking up and resetting the traps in the recess in July. On the north he would retain the present season. Is not hostile to closing for a term of years in view that such closure would bring the lobsters up to the legal standard, that is to say, would not object provided sites of existing factories are protected during such closure.

This shows that Mr. Holman who has a large experience in fishing, and who has large capital invested in this industry in Prince Edward Island, is satisfied that the lobsters in Prince Edward Island are decreasing, and decreasing fast, because he says he would not have the slightest objection to see the lobster fishery stopped for three years. I am satisfied, as I said before, that the department did right in appointing this commission to investigate this matter, and if they can see their way to have a commission appointed this year to make a full report it would be very desirable. I contend that one year is a very short time for gentlemen to travel along the shores of the Dominion of Canada, where those fisheries are in existence, and to make such an intelligent report as would be of any service. Next year they would be in a better position to do so, and in fact it takes two years of experience to come to any conclusion on this subject. There is no use throwing cold water on this industry. It is one of the largest branches of industry in the Lower Provinces, and you see that thousands of men and women, and even children, are employed in it, making a living. You find a large amount of capital invested in it, and those fishermen contribute more to the revenue of the country than any farmer. I believe that a fisherman expends 100 per cent. more than a farmer does. Therefore, the fisherman has a right to be protected. The men who supply him have a right to be protected, and the fish which enables him to pursue this industry a fortiori must be protected. I was sorry to hear my friend from Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk) say it would be better to have those fisheries ruined. I say no. I say protect those fisheries, and protect them as they ought to be protected. I am not prepared to condemn the Minister of Marine for the manner in which he has protected those fisheries. I think he has done very well, and I like to give him credit when he deserves it, for, the dear knows, he deserves castigation enough in some other directions. In this direction, however, I am satisfied to give him his due credit. If he can only see his way to make an extension of the time for fishing on the south side of Prince Edward Island to the last July, I think all parties interested in the fisheries would be satisfied, and if he cannot see his way, I hope and trust he will be enabled to say: I have done the best I could. I repeat again that the people of Prince Edward Island—not only the fishermen, but the farmers, who by those fisheries have a channel opened to them for a larger consumption of their products—are deeply interested in those fisheries, and they will give the Minister credit for endeavoring to protect those fisheries as well as he possibly can. I hope he may see his way clear to change the Order in Council, and to extend the time on the south side of Prince Edward Island. As far as the north side is concerned it is all right.

Mr. WELSH. I have listened with pleasure to the speech of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries and I quite agree with him in every point he made. As far as Prince Edward Island is concerned, I think that if the fisheries are carried on a few years more in a similar manner to that in which they have been carried on in the past, that they will be destroyed altogether, and I can speak from personal observation. The Government have before them the report of the commission appointed to examine into this matter last year, and I have full confidence that the Government will consider that report and act upon it. I have my own private opinion, that if the fishery was stopped in Prince Edward Island for three years it would be the best cure, and after that the fishing should be carried on under certain restrictions and rules. I leave that matter altogether in the hands of the Government. I do not agree with my friend from Guysboro' (Mr. Kirk) who says that even if the whole fishery should be destroyed it would be better to keep it on, than to let these people who are now engaged in the industry be idle. On the whole I agree with my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in the remarks he made, and I will leave the matter in the hands of the Government, confident that they will use their best judgment and preserve this important industry for the people of the Dominion. I have got another matter, Mr. Speaker, which I wish to bring before the House.

Mr. KIRK. Before the hon. gentleman passes from this question I would like to say one word.

Mr. WELSH. I am just going to finish now. I have been waiting a long while and this matter is pestering my mind.

Mr. KIRK. I do not think it is right to bring up another question before you finish this one.

Mr. WELSH. How long will you take then?

Mr. KIRK. There may be some other gentlemen anxious to speak on this question before another subject is taken up. I am charged with saying that the lobster fishing should be destroyed altogether rather than that the present regulations should be continued. I said nothing of that kind at all. I approved of the regulation of the Minister so far as Prince Edward Island and the north shore of Nova Scotia are concerned. What I stated was that it would be better to allow the lobster fisheries to be destroyed altogether than to keep the fishermen of the Dominion waiting and starving and trying to catch a few fish. It would be better, so that they could turn their attention to something else at which they could make a living, because as the regulations are now they are eking out a miserable existence. I pointed out that the regulations allowed the fishermen of Prince Edward Island to fish from 1879 to this year until the 20th of August, a month later than they should be allowed. Years ago I told the Minister, at least half a dozen times on the floor of this House, that he was allowing the packers in the Gulf to destroy the fisheries by allowing them to fish when the lobsters were in spawn and were casting their shells. The hon. Minister admits that they should not be caught at such a time, and yet he allowed that to be done. That is the reason why Prince Edward Island finds its fisheries in their present condition, and why the Minister finds it necessary to make his regulations so strict as they are. If he had listened to the warnings I gave him, there would have been no necessity for such stringent regulations. I have the testimony of one of the largest packers in the Dominion of Canada on that point. Mr. F. B. Hamblin, who is a packer on the north shore in the Gulf and in Prince Edward Island, says this in a letter written in 1883:

"Having been in the lobster packing business in this Province for over thirty years, I am prepared to show that the present law is doing more to destroy the lobster than would be done by all the factories combined, were there no law to regulate the season for catching. It is my opinion that one factory will destroy more fish in one month than the fish are spawning, than ten could possibly do in the other three months which constitute the season. Add to this the fact that during this month the fish are so poor that not a penny is made by the packer.

"In conclusion let me say that the present law, in my opinion, is not only destroying the fish as nothing else could, but also driving capital out of the business, as under the present law few packers would be found in the business if they could realise 50 per cent. on the cost of plant."

That is what I have been telling the Minister of Marine and Fisheries for years. Although packers were permitted to pack up to the 20th of August in some years—I do not know whether it is the case in every year—owing to pressure from the packers, the Minister extended the time and allowed them to fish later, and that is what has destroyed the lobster fisheries in the Gulf and around Prince Edward Island. The same thing, however, does not apply to the fisheries of the south shore of Nova Scotia, as I have pointed out. I have given ample evidence, from the report of the commissioners, to prove that the fisheries on the southern shore are as good to-day as when they began to pack lobsters. The hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island who spoke, says it takes eight or nine lobsters to fill a pound can in Prince Edward Island. That is not the case on the southern coast of Nova Scotia, where the evidence is that it takes from two to five and a-half. The reason of that is that the fishermen were only allowed to take fish down to the first of August; and some of them closed their factories before that date, because they found that the lobsters taken during the latter end of July were not equal in quality to those taken earlier. Now, Sir, I maintain that if the fishermen were allowed to fish until the middle of July, and then again for a couple of months from the middle of September, and if no lobsters were allowed to be caught or canned of a smaller size than nine inches, it would be practically impossible to destroy the lobster industry. The hon. Minister says that the lobsters taken in the fall of the year are not fit to be taken or to be canned. The testimony we have in the report does not go to sustain that contention. No evidence was sought by the commission on that point, and only one packer, so far as I have seen, gave evidence on that subject, and he points out that the lobsters taken in the latter part of September or in the fall are quite as good as those taken at any other time. This gentleman, who has had very large experience, extending over many years, from Halifax to Cape Breton, states that during the year they canned in the fall as well as in the spring, which they did previous to 1879, no more lobsters were required in the fall to fill a can than in the spring. On that point, Mr. Haddow, of New Brunswick, gave testimony, which seems to have been volunteered. The commissioners do not seem to have required any testimony on that point. They seem to have made up their minds before they began their enquiry that there should be no fishing in the fall of the year. Mr. Haddow volunteered his testimony as follows:—

"Needs a month's recess, say 20th July to 20th August; finds the fish fuller and larger in September, heavier and easier to pack."

This is the only evidence on that point, and yet the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries gives it as his opinion that the lobsters are not as full in the fall as in the spring. I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman say that the rule is not a cast iron one, and that his only desire is to make such regulations as will suit the fishermen, with due consideration for the preservation of the fish. There was, however, no necessity for him to assure us of that. If I had thought he had any other desire than to do what is right, I would not have spoken on the subject. After the testimony I have read to-day, the hon. gentleman cannot but be satisfied that, basing his judgment upon the evidence submitted by the commission, so far as the south part of Nova Scotia and Cape Breton is concerned, the fisheries have not been exhausted, and there is no necessity for restricting further the time for catching lobsters. Now, that he knows the facts, I hope he will extend the time and allow the fishermen to have six weeks or two months, if possible, in the fall of the year. I am well aware of the fact that the lobster packers do not desire to open up in the fall of the year. Not because they believe that would destroy the fishing industry, but because after they have shut down their establishments in the spring, and their hands have all separated and gone home, it is not easy for them to open up again in the fall, and they would rather have all their fishing done at one time. For that reason, we have the influence of the packers solid against fall fishing, but I say, if you go in the southern coast of Nova Scotia, you will find the fishermen all along the shore from Halifax to Cape North, favorable to fall fishing. I am well aware that to allow lobsters to be caught from the 1st January instead of the first April would be an advantage to the fishermen on the western coast of Nova Scotia, those who catch the lobsters for exportation, but it is no advantage to the packers, because they cannot put their traps out earlier in the season than April. Although the law does allow the fishermen to put their traps out in the eastern part of Nova Scotia and in Cape Breton as early as the 1st of April, I would venture to say that this year not one trap has been put out the 1st of April. When they can put their traps out, it takes a week or a fortnight to get them ready; so that if they can commence to put them out the 1st of May, it is the middle of May before they can commence to fish, and they are reduced to six weeks fishing, which is too short a time for the fishermen to earn a living for their families. I sincerely hope the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries will withdraw this Order in Council, so far as the southern part of Nova Scotia is concerned, and give six or eight weeks fishing in the fall.

NORTHERN LIGHT—CAPT. FINLAYSON'S SALARY.

Mr. WELSH. My opinion is the same now as before the hon. gentleman spoke, and the Government have before them the commissioners' report on the lobster fisheries, and if the facts are as the hon. gentleman has stated, the Government are informed of them. I will leave the matter in the hands of the Government to use their discretion in deciding what is best to be done. This matter has been pestering in my mind for some time, and I did intend to take up some time of the House in explaining it. But as we are so close to the end of the Session, I will abbreviate as much as possible my remarks if hon. gentlemen will give me their attention for a few minutes. I am much milder now than I was at the commencement of the Session, and have good reasons for it. I was determined to pitch in a little plainly to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but as a few days ago he said if I would wait a little while the Government would make me a present of the Northern Light, that has been an inducement for me to keep quiet. I accept the promise he then made, no doubt with the consent of the Government, and I hope it will not be like the Indian gift, and that he will not take it back again. The fact of the matter is this: The Government of the day, in 1876 or 1877, appointed Captain Finlayson to the command of the Northern Light.

Mr. LOVITT. I rise to a point of Order. We are discussing the lobster fishery and not the Northern Light.

Mr. WELSH. I am not aware that there is any resolution before the House in connection with the lobster fisheries. If there is, I will resume my seat. I hope my hon. friend will not interrupt me so long as I am in order. In 1877, Captain Finlayson was appointed to the command of the Northern Light at a salary of $900. He is a sober, industrious, competent man, has a first class certificate, and a man with whom his greatest enemies cannot find fault.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Does he vote Grit?

Mr. WELSH. I do not know. I never heard him express an opinion on political matters, and do not know if he ever voted. He was continued in 1877-78-79 and 80, at $900, and in 1881 he got his Irish promotion. His salary was then reduced to $600. This man has to go to sea in December, January, February, March and April, when navigation on the river St. Lawrence is most dangerous and difficult. He has to weather snow storms, gales of wind, and obstructions on account of ice, and then, in May, he is discharged and sent home to support a wife and half a dozen children, or perhaps a dozen children, on $40 a month. I would not complain of this so much if it was the rule of the service; but I have obtained the papers, and I find there is not another master in the Government service that is so poorly paid. I find that the captain of the Napoleon receives $1,000, the captain of the Druid, $1,000, the captain of the Newfield, $1,400, the captain of the Lansdowne $800, and the only man who is treated in this way in the service of the Dominion is the captain of the Northern Light, who occupies one of the most important posts in the gift of the Government, who commands one of the most important steamers in the possession of the Government, a steamer which, for her size, has the greatest power of any belonging to the Government, and which requires the greatest care to navigate. This man goes to sea in the winter, and he has more responsibility in that way than any other master in the marine service of the Dominion, and this man is specially selected for that purpose. In the summer, his steamer is under repair, and he is sent home, and a number of men are employed to make the repairs. Who ought to superintend the making of those repairs? The hon. gentleman says it should be the marine agent. It is impossible for the marine agent to superintend those repairs properly unless he can be in two or three places at once. There is not a master in the service of the Dominion, in the surveying service, in the service of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, or anywhere else, who can be compared for his labor to this man. For the whole of the winter they are at home comfortable, and they get their full pay, while this man has to work during that season. I have already read the statement in regard to the wages which the captain received, but I will read something further. This is the first notice that the captain of the Northern Light received as to his service being dispensed with:

Mr. KIRK.

“DEPARTMENT OF MARINE AND FISHERIES,

“OTTAWA, 17th June, 1881.

“SIR,—I have to inform you that Captain Finlayson's services are to be dispensed with, and I telegraphed you yesterday that they would cease on the 18th instant. You will accordingly pay him up to the 18th instant included, and also pay him a gratuity of one month's salary.”

That is the notice which he gets after being four years in the Government service. We heard the Minister of Finance yesterday talking about superannuation, talking about bringing in the clerks in the High Commissioner's office in London, and putting them on the superannuation list, and we know that the clerks in Ottawa are placed on the superannuation list, and I should like to know why captains in the Dominion service should not stand in the same position and receive a superannuation. This is a peculiar kind of allowance to make to a man who has served for seven or eight or ten years, his wages having been cut down from $900 to $600, a man who gave up a good appointment to take this position. Then he applied to the department as follows:—

“22nd June, 1881.

“SIR,—I have to acknowledge receipt of your letter on the 17th stating that my services as master of the Northern Light would not be required after the 18th instant. I would take it as a very great kindness if you will write me and let me know the reason that I am discharged. Although the Minister is on the Island, he is very sick, so I cannot see him.”

Therefore it was clear that this notice was given by some deputy. The answer to that was:

“SIR,—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 22nd ultimo, enquiring as to the reason for your discharge; and in reply I am to inform you that the Acting Minister was of opinion that it was unnecessary to keep you on as master when your services were not required during the summer.”

That is signed by William Smith, Deputy Minister. Then, immediately after, having discharged Captain Finlayson, they asked him to take command of the Northern Light again, and stated that if he would do so, they would pay him wages of $75 a month. That is paying him on another basis again. It seems he accepted that under certain conditions, and, on the 9th November, 1881, this letter was written:

“I am to inform you that Captain Finlayson is to be appointed master of the Northern Light, Captain M. P. McElhinney, first mate and clerk, and Mr. Henry W. Mutch, second mate, as already advised. The first and second engineers are already engaged. I have to request you to engage the necessary firemen and such men as are required, and send the vessel to Pictou on the first fine day offering. You can also engage a person to act as cook and steward. On the arrival of the vessel in Pictou, all hands are to be discharged with the exception of the captain, the two mates, and the two engineers, and cook and steward.”

Then, on the 20th September, 1882, the marine agent at Charlottetown writes to the Deputy Minister:

"Sir,—Will you kindly inform me as to the terms of agreement between the Department and Captain Allan Finlayson, as to wages.

"I am, &c.,

"ARTEMAS LORD, Agent."

The Deputy Minister replies on the 27th September:

"SIR,—I have to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 20th instant, requesting to be informed as to the terms of the agreement between the department and Captain Allan Finlayson as to wages; and in reply, I have to refer you to my telegram of 3rd November last in which you are instructed to enquire of Captain Finlayson if he would accept the command of the Northern Light, and that the wages were to be $75 per month. These wages were to be paid while Captain Finlayson was employed, and he was to receive half pay when not employed."

Then, on the 11th October, the agent of marine writes to the Deputy Minister:

"Captain Finlayson is now being paid $40 per month as half pay, which means $80 when employed. Pardon my again referring to this matter, but I wish to be put right as I understand the agreement in May does away with the instructions per telegram of 3rd November, 1881."

Then on the 18th October, 1882, the Deputy Minister writes to the marine agent:

"I have to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 11th instant, in reference to the wages to be allowed Captain Finlayson, and in reply I am to inform you that Captain Finlayson is to be paid at the rate of $40 per month when employed, and to receive $40 when not employed. This arrangement is to date from June last."

So here is another variation in the terms. I want hon. gentlemen to follow me in this so as to see that I am right. Then, on the 12th October, 1885, the Deputy Minister writes:

"With reference to the salary paid by you to Captain Finlayson for last year, I have to request you to inform me why full wages have been paid when the vessel is laid up. I have to refer you to my letter of the 27th September, 1882, stating that Captain Finlayson was to receive $75 per month, and half pay when not actively employed."

He refers to a letter which was corrected apparently by the subsequent statement that he was to get $80 a month. I should like to know what is the consistency of that department? On the 16th October, 1885, the agent writes to the Deputy Minister:

"I am in receipt of the department's letter of the 12th instant, calling upon me to report why full wages have been paid Captain Finlayson when the vessel is laid up. I beg to state as follows: Spring 1884, when steamer went to Pictou for repairs, I received the following telegram:—

"OTTAWA, 3rd May, 1884.

"A. LORD,

"Agent Marine and Fisheries.

"Send steamer Pictou, discharge crew except captain, engineer and oiler. Let Coker know when ready for inspection. Do not place on slip until authorised.

"WILLIAM SMITH."

"The ship did not return to Charlottetown until 11th October, 1884, when the captain was fully employed getting ready for winter work. After winter's service was over, ship went to Pictou, put on slip, and returned to Charlottetown 19th May, 1885. As there was considerable work and repairs to do to the ship above water, I requested Captain Finlayson to stay by the ship and see the work done properly, as, with the increased work of my agency, both inside and outside the office, I had not time to give to the ship. Captain Finlayson has been about the ship the whole of the past summer, averaging from three to four days in each week, and I was of the opinion he was justly entitled to full pay. I may be wrong, but the workmen required some one of standing to see that they did their work properly, and did not slight fastenings, &c., or idle away their time, and I consider Captain Finlayson has earned the extra pay he received."

This is from the agent of marine, a gentleman who has been a large shipbuilder, and who is a very competent man. The only fault he has in my eye is that he is such an out-and-out Conservative, but he is a proper man for the position, he holds, being a thoroughly competent man. This extract, which I did not see before, agrees with my view, and shows what a difference there was when the captain was not there to look after them, but a posse comitatus was put on the boat to spend the Government money without anyone to look after them. Is there an hon. gentleman on the floor of this House, who will sanction and approve of such conduct? I say no, with all due deference to my hon. friend I am confident that the Minister of Marine and the Government will for the credit of the country, for the credit of the service, put a sum in the Estimates to pay this man, and put him on the same standing as the other masters in the Dominion service. I am an old sailor myself, and I should like to see a superannuation fund provided for these men, some of them, probably, twenty or thirty years in the Government service, having large families, and when they go to their graves, they leave them nothing. What man on $600 a year can support a wife and a dozen children, and bring them up and educate them? I am astonished at my hon. friend—but I know he has had no experience in that line. Well, now, about the agent. Sir, I am very happy to bear testimony to that gentleman's ability, and there is another gentleman here whose name I see mentioned in these papers, to whose ability I have pleasure in bearing testimony, that is Captain McElhinney. I am not intimately acquainted with him, but I know him by sight. I have seen him about the Northern Light, and I know of the services that he performed for the Marine Department at Cape Traverse in the ice boat, changing the bad system that existed there until the Government sent him down to introduce a new system. I understand this gentleman has been sent to Great Britain and Europe to see about the Northern Light service; perhaps I may be here when the vote for that service comes on, and I may say a few words upon it. I think the Government could not have found a more competent man in the whole Dominion to send out on this service. The acknowledgment I got was a letter dated at Ottawa on the 2nd July, 1886:

"I have to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 19th ultimo, requesting instructions as to amount of wages to be paid Captain Finlayson, commander of the Northern Light during the summer months; and in reply I have to inform you that Captain Finlayson is only to receive half pay when the steamer is not actively employed."

Then there was a petition sent up to the Government by some of the leading men, and some of them no great shakos, perhaps, like myself. The captain wrote a letter to the Government requesting that he might be put on a proper footing, and here is the petition appended to it:

"We the undersigned would respectfully recommend the application of Captain Finlayson to your favorable consideration, and would urge that this request for higher wages be granted. (Signed) Peake Bros. & Co., Longworth & Co., William Welsh, Simon W. Orabbe, John Hughes, Almon Lang, R. Blake, L. C. Owen, G. W. Wakeford, Neil McLeod, M. Blake, Wm. Campbell, W. W. Sullivan, T. N. Haviland, Donald Ferguson."

That went on, and there has been no decision since. Well, I came up here last year and spoke to the Minister of Marine about the matter, and there must have been a very serious misunderstanding between us, for if I am not mistaken he told me that he was very pressed for business but he would consider the matter, but he said he thought I had put it in a very fair light, and that as soon as the House adjourned he would give the matter consideration and see the evil remedied. Very well, I went down and met the captain, and told him the result. I told him that it would be all right, that the Minister of Marine was an honest man, and a fair man, and would be just in the matter, and that the captain would be put on a proper footing, on the same footing on which he was at first engaged. I never heard anything to the contrary until I came up. The Minister of Marine then said to me: "Welsh, I will tell you what to do, you write a letter to the department so as to call my attention to the fact before you leave." I wrote the following letter, dated the 7th May, 1887:—

"Hon. G. E. FOSTER, Minister of Marine.

"DEAR SIR,—Referring to the petition of Captain Finlayson, of the steamer Northern Light for an increase of salary, I beg to call your attention to the fact that he has been about 11 years in the service of the department, that his salary has been $80 per month, but that at times when the boat was laid up, he has been reduced to half pay, and is prevented from obtaining any other employment, having to hold himself at the command of the department. That Captain Finlayson's command is a very responsible one in the Gulf during the winter navigation, and when the boat is laid up, that the master should be constantly on board, during repairs and looking after the ship. It is generally supposed that the master of a ship should have more wages than any other officer, but in this instance the engineer has a larger salary than the captain. Of the pay of the engineer I do not complain. Captain Finlayson is the only master (I believe) in the employ of the department who has been treated in this manner, having his salary subject to reduction while the boat is laid up. I would earnestly request your early consideration of the matter, in justice to the department and Captain Finlayson."

Now, I do not know that it is necessary for me to occupy the time of the House any further about this matter. Some gentleman has sent me a memorandum, I don't know who it is. He says: "This will make you lose your $150,000 for Prince Edward Island, if you keep us any longer." Now, I have a great mind to keep you for two hours, and I just dare any hon. gentleman—remember this, I just dare any hon. gentleman on the floor of the House to get up and move a resolution to withdraw the grant, and I promise you we will have a vote on it. Now, I am going to leave this matter in the hands of the leader of the Government and of his colleagues. I am satisfied that if they look into the matter they will do justice.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has gone into this matter very thoroughly, and I do not think he will ask me to take up as much time as he has done in replying. But what I lack in speaking of it, I will undertake to do in thinking over it very carefully. I am sorry the hon. gentleman misunderstood me when in the kindness of my heart and owing to his seductive manner, I promised him that I would carefully look into the matter. He misunderstood me. I do not think that he knowingly misrepresented me. I think it may be that I expressed myself a little too kindly with reference to this matter. The salary that Captain Finlayson has is the salary that he was getting when I came to the department. I knew that he had received that salary in the past, and it has been running until now. I had great confidence in my predecessor, and I thought that it should go on as he had arranged it. There is this to say about it: Captain Finlayson undertakes the service about the middle of December and he runs the ship for three, four or five weeks, and then lays up until April, when he runs the vessel three or four weeks more, and he has nothing more to do until the next December. That, I suppose, is the reason why his salary was placed at $80 per month and $40 per month when off service. He has been receiving $960 a year for several years. The hon. gentleman has mentioned the captain of the Lansdowne as receiving $800. That captain goes on service in April and remains there until the last of December, and a very arduous service it is. So Captain Finlayson, from 1882 up to this time, received a good deal more than the captain of the Lansdowne. In regard to the captain of the Northern Light not having been given in charge of repairs, I rather think that although a man may be a very good captain, he may not be always the best person to superintend the repairs on a vessel; so when the vessel was repaired last year, I authorised Mr. Lord, our agent, to look after the matter, which he did through a foreman who had charge of the work. However, when the hon. gentleman gets away in his Northern Light and is sailing about the Island and when the new steel vessel is ready and Captain Finlayson takes command, perhaps he will find his position more pleasant than it is at present. That new vessel will be one that will be used in summer as well as winter. The hon. gentleman has discharged his duty to Captain Finlayson by bringing this matter before the House.

DUTIES ON FLOUR, CORNMEAL, &c.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to submit to the House a motion, which I have been in the habit of submitting for Mr. WELSH.

some years past, when the opportunity has occurred, and I submit it on this occasion as on former occasions. I am not going to make a speech, but I feel it to be my duty to carry out the pledge made to my constituents to endeavor, as far as in my power lies, to impress on Parliament the necessity of taking the duties off wheat, corn, flour, corn meal, and coal. As long ago as 1882, when I was elected by acclamation, I stated, after my election, that I agreed with the policy of the Administration in its two leading features: its policy in regard to railways and the National Policy proposed at that day, with the exception of those features and some excessive taxation on manufactured goods. I need not discuss the question and go over the arguments I have adduced to the House on former occasions, but I will simply state that I believe it is in the interests of the country, in the interests of the workingmen, the mechanics, and laborers, farmers, merchants, and all classes, that the food of the people and the heating material should be relieved, as far as possible, from any taxation. I move:

That in the opinion of this House it would conduce to the comfort and well-being of the people of Canada, and especially of the working classes, if all import duties were removed from flour, cornmeal, corn for feed or milling purposes, wheat and coal.

Mr. AMYOT. In my opinion we must either have protection or reciprocity, and as this would be half protection I think it is no measure at all, and I will vote against it.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Mitchell:

Amendment negatived.

Mr. TROW. I notice the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) did not vote.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I paired with my colleague, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny).

Mr. KIRK. When my name was called I had forgotten for the moment that I had paired up to six o'clock with the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron), who was unavoidably absent. I ask to have my name struck off the list.

Mr. MITCHELL. What I ask is if the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) is counted in the vote?

Mr. DALY. I paired with the hon. member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier).

FAREWELL ADDRESS TO HIS EXCELLENCY.

A MESSAGE was received from the Senate, with an Address to His Excellency the Governor General, as follows:

To His Excellency The Most Honorable Sir Henry Charles Keith Petty-Fitzmaurice, Marquis of Lansdowne, in the County of Somerset, Earl of Wycombe, of Chipping-Wycombe, in the County of Bucks, Viscount Caln and Calnstone, in the County of Wilts, and Lord Wycombe, Baron of Chipping-Wycombe, in the County of Bucks, in the Peerage of Great Britain; Earl of Kerry and Earl of Shelburne, Viscount Clanmaurice and Fitzmaurice, Baron of Kerry, Lixnaw and Dunkerron, in the Peerage of Ireland; Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George; Governor General of Canada.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:

We, Her Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Senate and of Canada, in Parliament assembled, desire respectfully to assure Your Excellency of the sincere regret of ourselves and of the Canadian people, at the termination of Your Excellency's official connection with Canada, and at the approaching departure of yourself and your distinguished consort.

We also beg to assure Your Excellency that the Canadian people have regarded with high appreciation your presiding care over the affairs of this Dominion, as Her Majesty's representative; and gratefully recognise Your Excellency's active interest in the constitutional and material progress of this country.

We shall remember with gratification that Your Excellency has been happily enabled to fulfil the hope expressed in the earliest of your public addresses, that you might be the first Governor General to cross the entire breadth of the Dominion by the Canadian Pacific Railway; and we shall always refer with pleasure to Your Excellency's eloquent utterances on that occasion, bearing witness to the importance of that great work, as opening up to the influences of civilisation our vast unsettled and fertile Territories; and as creating a new highway, upon British territory, between the eastern and western portions of the British Empire.

Our recognition of the important services which Your Excellency has rendered to this country would be imperfect were we to omit the acknowledgment of the deep and practical interest which Your Excellency has taken in the literature, art and science of the Dominion, its educational institutions and learned societies; and in all the more ennobling elements of civilisation which teach us rightly to develop and use the vast resources with which we have been endowed. The aid and concurrence, in this particular, of Her Excellency the Marchioness of Lansdowne has been marked and beneficial; and Her Excellency's name will long be associated in the minds of our people, with all that is dignified in a public career, all that is gracious in private life.

In assuming at the command of Her Gracious Majesty, the high position of Governor General of Her Majesty's Dominions in British North America, Your Excellency brought with you historic traditions connecting your name with the fortunes of this continent in the past century. And we venture to hope that in Your Excellency, Canada has secured a friend who, enjoying the confidence of the Crown, and participating in the counsels of Imperial statesmen, will aid in guiding our destiny, and guarding our interests.

Our regret at Your Excellency's departure is tempered by the reflection that Your Excellency goes to occupy a more brilliant position, and a wider field for your high administrative abilities than this country affords. And in undertaking at the command of the Empress of India, to represent as Her Viceroy, Her authority over Her Oriental subjects, Your Excellency will be continuing the traditional care of your House for their elevation and advancement.

In bidding farewell to Your Excellency we beg to assure you and Her Excellency the Marchioness of Lansdowne, that you are followed by our warmest wishes for your welfare and that of your family.

And we beg Your Excellency to convey to Her Most Gracious Majesty the assurance of our unaltered devotion, and of our loyal wishes for the stability of the Throne, and the safety and prosperity of the Empire.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that said Message and Address be taken into consideration to-morrow.

Motion agreed to.

(In the Committee).

Arisaig, Bayfield and McNair's Cove (Cape George)
Piers, Repairs $4,500

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will this amount complete the work on the Bayfield pier? I see the hon. Minister of Justice has taken good care of his county, and I have no doubt it is a very desirable expenditure. It would be well to know whether this is going to be completed and what amount is to be expended. I see that $38,202 have been spent on that pier already. Is this amount now going to complete it, and how is the work being done? Is it being done by contract?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is an item in the Supplementary Estimates that will complete the work.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Is the Bayfield wharf for marine or commercial purposes?

Mr. THOMPSON. There has been a wharf there for some time. It was supported for a while by the Provincial Government and by a company. It has now been transferred to the Dominion Government and this is to replace the part which has been carried away.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will that complete the work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. LOVITT. Will the hon. gentleman tell me if he is going to work immediately to remove those rocks at Yarmouth, so that we may not have the trouble for a revote?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What is being done at the Digby pier?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $40,000 were voted for the purpose of erecting a new pier last Session, but the difficulties about selecting a site were such that we saw that unless some repairs were made to the old pier there would be no accommodation and the trade and the public would suffer. Under those circumstances essential repairs were made to the old pier, amounting to about $7,000, and we believe that that will last sufficiently to serve the trade for three years, perhaps four, while we are building a new pier. We will not begin with a new pier this year and we will likely ask Parliament next Session to revote the amount. In the meantime it will not be expended.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I happened to be at Digby last autumn and there did not appear to me much to show on the old pier for an expenditure of $7,000. I do not mean to say, however, that the work is not there. At that time the pier was very inconvenient, and I would impress on the hon. gentleman that no time should be lost in arriving at a determination with regard to where the new pier is to be. The sooner you get to work on the new pier the better. If the hon. gentleman could see the old pier as it is I think he would come to the conclusion that a new one should be built immediately.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I know the present pier is not a very desirable one, but in the meantime we had to give some accommodation to the public and to the trade. The proposed pier was to be built either at the point on the same side as the old pier or below the creek or the river, in order to obtain a better landing and a shorter pier to the necessary depth of water.

Harbors and Rivers, Prince Edward Island $10,000

Mr. PERRY. Will the hon. Minister be kind enough to tell the House what the work is at Cascumpec, for which a vote of $2,000 is taken?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is not a new work; it has been prosecuted for two or three years. It is to continue the opening of the projected channel 100 feet wide and 14 feet deep at low water, through the inner bar of sandstone about 150 feet long, over which there is now 10 or 11 feet of water. As the work has all to be done under water, it cannot be proceeded with very speedily, but we are making substantial progress, and probably in another year we shall obtain the depth we require.

Mr. PERRY. I see that there is only $3,000 appropriated for the repairing of breakwaters and piers in Prince Edward Island.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In the Supplementary Estimates there is another vote for $3,000.

Mr. PERRY. That makes only $6,000, and it is not sufficient. There are 26 wharves and piers on the Island, which cost about $60,000, and if the Government think they are going to repair them with $5,000 or $6,000, they are mistaken. These breakwaters received a large amount of damage last fall. The wharf at the West Point is altogether broken up. I drew the attention of the Government to this last year. Mr. Perley in his report states that the wharf at the West Point is of much benefit and importance, and since the Dominion Government took it over from the Local Government, they have not spent one dollar on it. That wharf cost $4,000 or $5,000, and to let it go down piece by piece is an injustice to the people. They have no other way to ship their produce to Chatham or Shediac. I suppose the Government are waiting for the people to put their hands in their pockets to repair it themselves. I would like to ask the hon. Minister how much was collected last year in wharfage dues from the wharves on the Island? Under the Local Government we collected over $6,000, and I am told that the tolls have been increased under the Dominion Government, so that I suppose the amount must now be greater. Hence the Government are not expending as much on these wharves as the revenue they are receiving. We know that the coast of Prince Edward Island is very much cut into by harbors, and these wharves, if they are kept up, are of great benefit to the people. I thought, when they were taken over by the Dominion, that they would be kept up, but I find that they are not. From year to year a good deal of money is expended on them, but in what way? By giving the work to private parties without tender. The inspector goes down and gives this one a job and that one a job for $50 or $60, and the money goes to partisans, I am sorry to say. Not that I object to Conservatives having the handling of the money if value is given for it, but it is not. It is unfair and unjust that these jobs should be given without public tender. I hope the Minister will not allow these works to go down, but will see that they are kept up.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know what is the exact number of wharves in Prince Edward Island which we are responsible for?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think the number named by the hon. member is correct—between twenty-four and twenty-six.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Is the income mentioned from these wharves correct?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say, as that is not in my department. These wharves have wharfingers who are paid out of the tolls, so that there is not much revenue coming to the Treasury. Last year the amount voted was $2,000. This year we have made it three times as much. That shows that we wish to do what is right, and that the intention is to repair these wharves in the best way possible. If more money is required next year, we will ask Parliament for more, and if Parliament gives us the money, we will expend it. But this year I think we shall be able to get on with $6,000.

Mr. PERRY.

Mr. PERRY. I will read, if the committee will allow me, a list of the wharves on the Island, with the amounts expended on them:

	Amount Expended.
Kier's Shore Pier	$ 5,091
South Rustico Pier	657
Campbell's Cove Breakwater.....	100
Annandale Pier	2,474
Lewis Point.....	2,250
North Cardigan	2,732
Georgetown	2,254
Lambert's	486
St. Mary's Bay	1,336
Mink River.....	293
South River	1,021
Pinette	1,814
Belfast.....	4,355
Port Selkirk	2,947
China Point	3,486
Vernon River.....	908
Pownal	3,429
Hickey's	1,255
Nine-Mile Creek	482
Victoria Harbor, Crapaud	4,267
Hurd's Point	2,000
McGee's Pier	2,721
Higgin's Shore	4,226
West Point Pier	4,226
Total	$ 53,222

Now, besides this we must bear in mind that we have the Tignish breakwater, the Miminegash breakwater, the Malpeque breakwater, which are not included in this list, and these suffered a good deal of damage last fall, to repair which it will cost over $1,000 each. So that the hon. the Minister will have only $2,000 in his hands to repair these piers of which I have spoken. That is a very small amount to put them in an efficient state. I trust the Minister, if he cannot bring down provision this year, will have ample provision next year for this purpose.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). My hon. friend is rather unreasonable in expecting that these ports are to be treated differently from other ports. He must remember that Prince Edward Island does not support the present Administration, and therefore cannot expect, under the practice of the present Government, to receive much attention at their hands. The Government are always well able to take care of their own constituencies. The hon. member for Cumberland has four railways in his county and a short line thrown in, and now he is having an agricultural farm in his own county, so that after he leaves us, there will be nothing left to be done by his successor. The hon. the Minister of Justice has taken care of his county.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In justice to his county.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There are other counties in Nova Scotia like Guysboro' which have no allowance. The counties of Queen's and Shelburne never got anything until, by an accident, they were represented on the other side, and they are not likely to be represented so again, I am glad to know. I think, however, the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island has a good claim for his demand. $6,000 is a very small amount to keep these wharves in repair, especially expended as it will be wholly on political considerations rather than as the public requirements demand.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Really my hon. friend forgets the drains on the Government. Had he been here last night, he would have noticed that we have to pay $8,500 to keep a private park for the citizens of Ottawa; $13,500 to provide a post office for the village of Cayuga with a population of 800 souls and a net annual postal revenue of $800; $100,000 for four post offices of nearly equal magnitude. Under these circumstances my hon. friend must not be so unreasonable as to expect that the Government are going to give $3,000 for 100,000 people at the far end of the Dominion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. $10,000. Do not minify it; and $3,000 more in other places.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. $12,000. As much as was given to Cayuga post office, to be given to Prince Edward Island. That is terribly extravagant! I wonder how the Minister of Finance can allow such expenditure. My hon. friend must understand these things! The Government wants money; bye-elections have to be carried; and the hon. gentleman will see that the money cannot be forthcoming for Prince Edward Island.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is supposing that the twenty-six wharves are out of repair. The only thing out of repair is the representation of the Island.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman let us know the tariff? We know pretty well what the tariff is in Ontario to carry a doubtful county. What does he think the tariff may be in Prince Edward Island?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know what it is in South Oxford.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think South Oxford has a share in any of these estimates, and I am sure it is not likely to have any.

Harbors and Rivers, New Brunswick..... $8,750

Mr. ELLIS. What do you propose to do on the Tobique River?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I suppose some of this is for the Tobique River. It is to continue the improvement of the navigable channel of the River St. John and also of the River Tobique.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why does the Government confine itself to improvements and the removal of boulders in the River St. John? Is it because the Minister of Inland Revenue represents the upper section of that river where these expenses are to be made? Has he forgotten the Miramichi, which is a very important river, and the place where the magnificent stone is got from? I admit it has had a considerable traffic for the development of the stone quarries, but that rests on the merits of the stone itself.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is no reason except this: that I had not seen any boulders there. I have seen only rock and the beautiful stone of which the hon. gentleman speaks, and my attention has not been called to the necessity of removing any boulders. This is the first time I have heard that the River Miramichi requires these improvements.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do not plead that in the future, for I give notice that it wants improvement very much. If not too late, I would ask the hon. gentleman to bring down in the Supplementary Estimates an amount for this purpose.

It being six o'clock, the Committee rose and reported progress, and the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

STANSTEAD, SHEFFORD AND CHAMBLY RAILWAY.

Mr. FISHER. Unfortunately, when the Senate passed the Bill relating to the Stanstead, Shefford and Chambly Railway Company, there were three words incorporated by mistake into the name of the company with which that company wished to amalgamate, and I, therefore, move that all rules respecting Private Bills be suspended, and that I may have leave to introduce Bill (No. 139) respecting the Act of the present Session respecting the Stanstead, Shefford and Chambly Railway Company.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first and second times, considered in committee, and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Harbors and Rivers, Quebec..... $89,250

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. (Translation.) I would like to enquire whether the hon. Minister of Public Works has taken into consideration the petition which was sent to his department, by the people of St. Barthelemy and other parishes of the county of Berthier, praying that piers should be built in order to prevent the dangers attending the breaking-up of ice on the St. Lawrence. The county of Berthier is not alone interested in that matter. The counties of Maskinongé and St. Maurice stand in the same position. Every spring great damages are caused there by the breaking-up of ice on the St. Lawrence, and measures calculated to protect those three counties should be adopted. The Government have already done something; they built two piers in the town of Berthier, but the people of the parishes which suffer to the same extent, are exposed to the same dangers, would like to secure the same protection. In the early part of this Session I have called the hon. Minister's attention to this matter, and asked him whether a sum would be placed in the Estimates this year for those works. The hon. Minister advised me to wait till the Estimates would be brought down, adding that I could then judge for myself. I have followed his advice, and I find that neither in the first nor in the Supplementary Estimates is a sum placed for the county of Berthier or for the counties of Maskinongé and St. Maurice. It seems to me that equal justice should be done to all parts of the country; and if the Government can devote $20,000 to building piers in Sorel, they could certainly devote half that sum or one-third of it to the protection of the people living on the north shore.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman is right and wrong. He is right in so far as those works may be required; on the other hand he is wrong, because we cannot attend to everything at a time. Moreover, as regards the places he has just mentioned, I was unable to decide what should be done and how much I might ask my colleagues for those works, without having the necessary informations, not informations like those given in a petition or in the representations just made by a member, but informations given by officers of my department, by engineers, informations which I could take as a basis to submit an estimate to the Council and afterwards to Parliament. We will consider that question during the recess, in order to decide what we can do, and what we must do. As regards Sorel, the object was not merely to afford protection against floods, but it was especially to prevent towns from being entirely destroyed by the ice, besides a number of steamboats and other boats which seek refuge in the Richelieu river. The hon. member may rest assured that I shall not fail to mind that question. I took a note of it.

Mr. MULOCK. There is matter I would like to bring to the attention of the Government. Although it is late in the Session I do so with the confident hope that they will correct an error that they have fallen into, and for the purpose of the present discussion I will assume it was an error.

I do not intend to offer any observations, but simply to point out to the Administration a grievance which I think the Minister of Public Works should correct in the interest of justice. He is aware that last year a number of officials in his employment were dismissed from office, and if I may be allowed to read to him a couple of affidavits that have been placed in my hands setting forth what these declarants allege to be the facts attendant upon their dismissal, I think he will deem it in the interest of justice to enquire into their cases and do what justice requires.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it relevant to the item now before the House?

Mr. MULOCK. It is relevant, I think. I will read the affidavits and the chairman can decide the point. I will read the affidavit of James O'Reilly:

"James O'Reilly, of the City of Montreal, in the Province of Quebec, laborer, do solemnly declare:

"1. I am an Irish Roman Catholic.

"2. I am married and have two children.

"3. I was employed continuously on the Lachine Canal during the summer months of each year for four or five years previous to 1887.

"While so employed the canal superintendent never found any fault with me.

"4. I considered my position as a permanent one, and I returned to work as a matter of course each year at the opening of navigation.

"5. I did not take an active part in the election contest in Montreal Centre between Mr. Curran and Mr. Oloran, but I supported Mr. Oloran and I said that Mr. Curran's conduct with regard to the Home Rule resolutions was unmanly.

"On the 29th of April, 1887, I met Mr. Conway, the canal superintendent, on the street, and he told me the works would open on the following Monday. He then asked me if I had not heard rumors to the effect that certain of the men employed on the canal had voted and worked against Curran in the late election. I said I had heard rumors to that effect. He said: 'Why did you not tell me of it?' I asked him if he had not heard them himself, and he said he had. He then said:

"I have six or seven names of men who worked against Curran in the election that I am instructed from Ottawa to suspend, and your name is among them. You will have to go and see Curran when he comes down here on Monday and get a letter from him."

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This matter is connected with canals and has nothing to do with the present item. The hon. gentleman will have several opportunities before these Estimates are through to explain the errors that he says have been committed, when we come to the Estimates on canals. The matter has nothing to do with this item. I had nothing to do with this matter, it belongs to the Department of my hon. colleague the Minister of Railways and Canals.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the point of order is well taken.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. My hon. friend will have an opportunity when the item for railways and canals comes up.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not wish to press the matter against the ruling of the Chairman, but late as the Session is, I do protest, without desiring to enter into controversy, against any rapid judgment against me by the Chairman, or by anybody else in this House. The Chairman simply determines, without hearing from me, that this point is well taken—perhaps he is right, perhaps he is wrong. But I submit that it is unseemly on the part of any official—and for the purposes of this discussion the Chairman is an official of this House—I protest on the ground of his unseemly conduct—

The CHAIRMAN. Order. I ask the hon. gentleman to take his seat.

Mr. MULOCK. For what purpose?

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman is out of order.

Mr. MULOCK. I submit—

Mr. LISTER. You can't bulldoze us that way.

Mr. MULOCK. I submit that members of the House have a right to be heard. I am willing to sustain the Chair. I am willing, more than the majority are in this House, to uphold the dignity of the Chair and the dignity of the House. I consider the Chairman is the custodian; but, although my respect for the Chairman is so great, I am not going to abdicate my own rights. I am not going to admit that any man in this House has the right ex parte to determine upon the rights of others. I do not propose to criticise the conduct of the Chairman further than to refer to what has happened. Before I had finished my argument, after the Minister of Public Works had come to him privately and spoken to him, as I was addressing the committee, the Chairman interrupted me and delivered judgment without argument, and without hearing my explanation. Is that the course that is expected of him, who is to sit as arbiter between us all? There is a function that every Chairman and every Speaker has to discharge.

The CHAIRMAN. I must ask the hon. gentleman to resume his seat. I asked the hon. gentleman in the beginning of his remarks if the affidavit which he proposed to read was relevant to the item before the committee. Instead of replying to me he commenced to read it. I saw at once it had no reference to harbors or rivers, or to any item that is before the committee, but to canals, the responsible Minister of which department is not present in the House. I thought it highly improper that the hon. gentleman should, upon this occasion, take up the time of the House in reading an affidavit or discussing a matter which had no relation to any item before the committee. Another opportunity will arise, frequent opportunities may arise, either when the House is moved into Committee of Supply, or when we reach the item of canals, for the hon. gentleman to bring this item up, and the Minister of that department will be in his place. It was not with any purpose of restraining the hon. gentleman from bringing up this matter that I sustained the point of order, but it was simply that the time of the committee might not be wasted by irrelevant matter. I must persist in the ruling which I made, and request the hon. gentleman to defer his remarks until the proper occasion arises.

Mr. MULOCK. I know that you have the best motives, and I do not desire to come into collision with you, but permit me to say that these last remarks of yours do not apply to the motion now before the Chair, which is a motion that the committee arise.

The CHAIRMAN. I have heard no such motion.

Mr. MULOCK. The motion was made by the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) if I can believe my own senses.

Mr. LISTER. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. And therefore it is out of order for any man, even the Chairman, as it has happened now, to interrupt a member when he is addressing the committee. I think the time has arrived when we should understand whether we are in committee or in the House, and what the Rules of the House are. Last night I heard the Speaker of this House say that it was not his duty to prevent unseemly or unparliamentary language in this House; and this very Session that same Speaker, within the knowledge of every hon. gentleman in this House—

The CHAIRMAN. I must call the hon. member again to order. He has no right to reflect upon the conduct of the Speaker.

Mr. BOWELL. The Speaker did not say so either.

Mr. MULOCK. Did not say what?

Mr. BOWELL. What you said.

Mr. MULOCK. The Speaker last night did say that there was no duty imposed upon him to prevent unparliamentary language in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. I must ask the hon. gentleman not to reflect upon the conduct of the Speaker.

Mr. MULOCK. He prevented them using language which he thought was unparliamentary. However, Mr. Chairman, if the Minister of Public Works, if the committee, if the whole majority in this House, endeavor in their various ways to prevent this question, that I desired simply to submit for the consideration of the committee, and which I said I proposed to submit without observation, from being ventilated, they can of course resort to their majority and to technicalities and prevent it. I am aware that it is unpalatable for hon. gentlemen opposite to have this question brought up, it is unpalatable to the First Minister, because he openly declared that he had no sympathy with the people for whom I am pleading. I do not propose to discuss this question, but simply to give a narrative of the facts. However, since, Mr. Chairman, you have so ruled, I will not press the matter at this stage, but I venture to prophesy that the despatch of business would have been accelerated if the Minister of Public Works had not been so astute as to endeavor to suppress a discussion of this question at this stage. It is probable, it is possible, it is perhaps more than possible, that he will hear more of it before we are through, and perhaps the Session will not be brought to that speedy termination which it would have been if I had been permitted to bring this matter before the attention of the committee in a proper and constitutional way at this proper time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am sure there is no desire, although the hon. gentleman may think there is, on the part of any hon. member in this House, certainly not on the part of the Minister of Public Works, to prevent the hon. gentleman making a speech, reading any papers he thinks it his duty to lay before Parliament, to ventilate any subject he thinks of public interest. If any such attempt were made, I would join the hon. gentleman in asserting his rights. The Minister of Public Works simply stated that he gathered from the speech of the hon. gentleman that he was referring to a subject connected with canals, and as that subject was not before the committee, he asked it to stand over until some question relating to canals was up and then the hon. gentleman would have an opportunity to bring this matter forward. No doubt my hon. friend will, instead of delaying the Session, help us to prorogue the House.

Mr. MULOCK. I wish to do so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am quite sure the hon. gentleman will do so. When the question of canals is brought up, I shall, as leader of the House, see that the hon. gentleman has a full opportunity to bring up this question and read all the papers. In the meantime as this is a question connected with harbors and rivers, and not canals, the hon. gentleman himself will see that it would be more appropriate to bring it up at the regular time and regular place, when some question connected with canals is before the committee.

Mr. MULOCK. I think it is quite pertinent to the matter now before this committee, and I will proceed with it.

The CHAIRMAN. I will permit it simply for the sake of saving time. At the same time it is quite irregular and not pertinent to the matter now before the committee.

Mr. MULOCK. I will continue to read the affidavit :

"In the meantime I will put men on temporarily in your place, and if you get a letter from him you can come back to work." I said "I will do nothing of the kind. Rather than go and beg a letter from him I will lose my place." He said "No, no; I consider you one of the best men I have on the canal. Go and get the letter." He then told me I had poisoned my mind with reading "that G—d— Post and the other papers," but added "you must not blame me for this. I had nothing to do with it, as I had my instructions from Ottawa."

"8. I would not, and did not, humble myself by going and begging Curran for a letter, and I have not been employed on the canal since.

"9. Neither Mr. Curran nor anyone else, as far as I am aware, has ever taken any steps to have me reinstated in my position on the canal, nor have I ever been notified to go back there.

"10. I am advised, and believe, that seven men were discharged or suspended at the same time and for the same cause that I was. The names of these are Edward Tobin, one Holden, Michael Egan and one Frawley. The others were not on my part of the works, and I do not know their names.

"11. I was informed by a Government official here that the names of all the canal men who had supported Mr. Cloran in the election were sent to Ottawa by some of Mr. Curran's committee, with a view to their being suspended. And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the 'Act respecting extra-judicial oaths.' Four marginal notes are good—twenty-eight words erased are null.

"Declared before me at the city of Montreal, in the district of Montreal, this 9th day of May, A.D. 1888. } his JAMES x O'REILLY, mark.

"D. BARRY, Commissioner for Ontario."

Another affidavit is by Edward Tobin, of the city of Montreal, Province of Quebec, laborer. It is as follows :—

"I, Edward Tobin, of the city of Montreal, in the Province of Quebec, laborer, do solemnly declare as follows :—

"1. I am an Irish Roman Catholic.

"2. I am married and have eight children, the oldest of them being nineteen.

"3. On 1st May, 1874, I was first employed on the Lachine canal and I remained in that employment continuously from the opening to the closing of navigation in each year until last year.

"4. During all the time that I was employed on the canal, no fault was ever found with me.

"5. I considered my position as a permanent one, and I returned to work as a matter of course on the first of May in each year, being the day on which the work always commenced on the canal.

"6. Some years the men employed on the canal were notified a few days before the first of May to be in readiness to come back to work; but most years we all came back as a matter of course without waiting for such a notification.

"7. On the 1st of May, 1887, I went back to work as usual. The superintendent, Conway, was not about when I began work, but he shortly afterwards came up to me and said: "Ned, I've got orders from headquarters not to employ you until you see Mr. Curran." I said, "No, I'll not go and see Mr. Curran. Before I'd go and see him and apologise to him for opposing him I'd eat that mud on the street." He said, "Well, I've nothing to do with it; those are my orders."

"8. I did not go and see Curran or anyone else to ask to be reinstated in the position from which I had been unjustly removed merely for exercising my rights as a free man, and I have not since been employed on the canal.

"9. Neither Mr. Curran nor anyone else, as far as I am aware, has ever taken any steps to have me reinstated in my position on the canal, nor have I ever been notified to return.

"10. James O'Reilly, one Holden and one Frawley were also discharged from the canal works at the same time and for the same reason that I was.

"11. I am advised and believe that Michael Egan, also employed on the canal works, was reprimanded by Conway for opposing Curran in the election.

"12. During the winter of 1886-87, I was employed in the Grand Trunk Railway yard, and on the first of May I abandoned that employment in order to attend to my duties on the canal works.

"13. I did not take an active part in the Curran-Cloran election, though I supported Cloran and advised my fellow workmen in the Grand Trunk yard to do so also.

"14. On one occasion I attended a meeting called by some of Mr. Curran's supporters and called out "How about Home Rule?" during one of the speeches, as I believed that Mr. Curran had betrayed his nationality in pursuing the course he did on the Home Rule question. I heard it commonly reported that my so doing was one of the causes of my suspension.

"15. I am and always have been a Liberal, and my political convictions were well known to Mr. Conway, as I have never tried to conceal them.

"16. It was currently reported among the workmen that a list of the canal employes who had supported Mr. Cloran was sent to Ottawa by Mr. Curran's committee, with a view to having them discharged; or at least forcing them to humble themselves and apologise.

"And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true and by virtue of the "Act respecting extra-judicial oaths."

"Declared before me at the City of Montreal in the District of Montreal this 9th day of May, A.D. 1888. } E. TOBIN.

"D. BARRY, Commissioner for Ontario."

I do not propose to make a charge against the Administration at all, or to take up any time, but simply to call the attention of the Administration to this state of the facts. Those men were employed for years upon the canal at Montreal, and whilst it might be argued technically that they are temporary employes still they had been continued in employment from year to year, entering upon their duties when navigation began, and, of course, having nothing to do when the navigation closed, but coming on as a matter of course each year. That they discharged their duties faithfully to the country; that there was no reason so far as we can discover, unless it be a political one, for their discharge; that they appeared to take some part in the election of 1887 against the Government candidate, Mr. Curran, and were discharged from their positions as Government employes; that the Government agent, Mr. Conway, stated in discharging them, he was not acting upon his own responsibility but upon orders received from Ottawa, evidently meaning from the Administration, and that the Government at Ottawa was put in motion by Mr. Curran's committee. Under those circumstances I ask the Government to investigate this case and to do justice. These affidavits disclose the fact that those men are unable to get justice through the member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran). Without further comment, and giving the Government the whole of the nine months vacation to do justice, I place this case in their hands, notifying them that next Session if they do not see their way to deal with the case in the way they ought to, and which I believe is to reinstate those men, I shall feel it my duty to comment upon their conduct.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total expenditure on this work on the Du Lièvre River and what has been done with this money?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The total cost would be $82,000.

Mr. WELSH. As you are about to pass a vote for a pier, I wish to say that I am not going to object to that vote, but I happened to be out of the House when the Prince Edward Island piers were under consideration and I want to say something in reference to them. I often wonder how the piers in Prince Edward Island have got into such a bad state of repair, and I wonder more particularly because I understood them to be under the administration of the hon. Minister of Public Works. Last year I had cause to bring the matter to his notice, and I mentioned a couple of piers, which were attended to and put in proper order. If I had not done so they would have been in a state of dilapidation yet, and they would have cost three times the money to repair them now that they did before. I received a letter the other day from a wharfinger about those piers, and he mentions: "There is a great deal of stuff to ship in the spring; and last fall I laid out some $30 to make it fit for the people to ship them. Mr. William Smith, at Ottawa, was dissatisfied with me for so doing." I was surprised at this, but when I made enquiries I found those piers were under the Department of Marine. When a representation is made that those wharves want repairs, it is sent to the Marine Department and the Marine Department pigeon-hole it. I do not wonder at the wharves being in a bad state of repair when the Minister of Public Works does not get notice of it, until perhaps six months after communication is made to the Marine Department. I suggest that those piers be put in the hands of the Minister of Public Works, for two departments have charge of them now and I find that is very awkward. I notice that there are $6,000 to be spent among 30 piers or about $200 each, when some of those piers would require $1,000 to put them in order. In this way the public service receives an injury, and I hope the Government will consider this matter. I believe it would be better if the Marine Department would receive the revenues, and that the repairs should be done altogether by the Department of Public Works, without leaving it to the Marine Department to make a report to the Department of Public Works. Better still, why not have an official who will go around those wharves and make his report direct to the Public Works Department? It is certain that something ought to be done. The Government may rest assured that the people of Prince Edward Island feel this thing keenly. It is a great surprise that when wharves are built at the public expense the people have to go seven or eight miles out of their way to get at them. In conclusion I state again that I believe the Government should place all those wharves and piers under the direction of the Public Works Department.

Mr. SCRIVER. Before this item is declared carried, I desire to express the disappointment which I feel at seeing no appropriation in the Estimates proper or the Supplementary Estimates towards the construction of a very much needed work in the county which I have the honor to represent; I refer to the proposed improvements at the mouth of La Guerre River and the Teafield in the parishes of St. Anicet and St. Barbe. The hon. Minister of Public Works will remember that an officer from his department made a survey and plans of the proposed work last season; and when a deputation waited on the hon. Minister last winter, they were received not only with great courtesy, but in a manner which, notwithstanding the judicious reticence which I suppose a Minister always maintains under such circumstances, led me to believe that he was favorably impressed in regard to the proposed work, and would probably recommend to his colleagues the placing of a sum in the Estimates for it. In view of all this, I feel very great disappointment at the lack of any such appropriation. I trust, however, that the hon. Minister of Public Works will not forget that his attention has been called to this work. It is one very much needed indeed for the protection of the inhabitants in that quarter. Damage was caused, as he knows, by the overflow of water from Lake St. Francis, a state of things probably not foreseen when the dam at Valleyfield, at the head of the Beauharnois Canal, was constructed. While on my feet, I may be allowed to say a word in reference to another work—one not connected with the Department of Public Works, but with the Railway Department; I refer to the extension of the embankment at the head of the Beauharnois Canal, which was brought to the attention of the hon. Minister during the illness of his colleague the hon. Minister of Railways, and which he very kindly promised to bring to the attention of that gentleman. I also notice with regret that no appropriation has been made for that work; but I do sincerely trust that by next year an appropriation will be made for both of the works to which I refer.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That matter was not lost sight of, but I could not make the appropriation this year. However, I will remember what the hon. gentleman has just said.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much does the work at Ste. Adelaide de Pabos cost, for which a vote of $7,500 is taken?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The chief engineer estimates the whole cost to be $15,000, so that we shall require about $2,500 more. It is for the construction of a breakwater.

Harbors and Rivers, Ontario..... $101,650

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is to be done with this vote of $10,000 for Goderich?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is for the continuation of the works that we have been carrying on. This sum is required to complete the works for which contracts have been let for the improvement of the mouth of the harbor and its approaches. The hon. gentleman knows that from one side of the lake the silt or sand comes and accumulates at the mouth. We have been trying to prevent this by extending one of the piers; but that has not always succeeded, and we have been obliged nearly every year to dredge the bar that forms at the entrance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this a dredging vote properly?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is for the removal of 70,000 cubic yards of material at the entrance of the channel, making an opening of 125 feet wide through the bank between the new channel of the river and the harbor, and to provide stop-locks, &c., for turning the water of the river into the harbor.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose what the hon. gentleman wants to do is to use the freshest water of the Maitland River to scour the harbor.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There used to be some complaint about the difficulty of making the harbor in certain winds. Has this vote any reference to that?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The north west pier has been extended. As I say, the river is to be diverted by cutting the bank, so that when a large quantity of water comes down in the spring we think it will scour the channel between the two piers, and thus keep the harbor tolerably well open, so that the dredging in the spring will be a comparatively small work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In connection with this Goderich harbor, there is a sort of outport eight or ten miles distant, called Bayfield, to which I directed the attention of the hon. gentleman several times when I had the honor of representing South Huron. I should like to know whether the Bayfield harbor has been put in such a condition that vessels can use it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will help me to recollect that harbor?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is not in any way connected with this item, but the hon. gentleman will remember that after certain expenditure it was blocked up again, and I should like him to inform me later on what has become of the harbor.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Is that the harbour where the Capreol family had a large interest?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I never heard it. It is about 12 miles to the south of Goderich in the county of South Huron. The hon. gentleman voted about $4,000 to put it in order some three years ago, but owing to some errors in the work it became completely choked up again.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will take a note of it, and give the answer probably to-morrow.

Mr. PLATT. I would like to draw the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that he has neglected one important harbor in the Bay of Quinté, at the town of Picton. I think the hon. gentleman should explain the reason why the dredge, which he promised in 1881 would be sent there, has not yet arrived. I remember when he told the people of Picton that the dredge was on its way, but it has not yet arrived. The harbor is in such a condition as to require dredging. I trust the hon. gentleman, when in that locality next year, will visit Picton harbor, and see what can be done there. I do not ask that so much in the interest of the town in which I reside, as from the fact that the improvement of harbors for better navigation is in the interest of the general public. Everybody who visited Picton during the late election said that the harbor needed dredging, yet I find nothing in the Estimates for that purpose. Can the hon. gentleman give any information as to the report of the engineers concerning the construction of a harbor of refuge at Wellington, Lake Ontario? The hon. gentleman will remember that he sent an engineer to the village of Wellington, on the western part of Prince Edward County two years ago, and his report I have not been able to get. I hold a return which was brought down last year, which gives the report of the chief engineer, Mr. Perley, but since then another engineer visited that place and took soundings. The report we have is one concerning the building of a breakwater and not of a harbor of refuge. I do not know if the scheme is feasible, but the hon. gentleman said the harbor would be constructed under certain conditions. This is a project which, if carried out, will be in the interest of all the mariners of the lake. Does the hon. gentleman remember whether the report of the last engineer was favorable or not? The people have been led to believe that something would be done, and now they are beginning to despair, and say these promises are only tricks before elections. A delegation waited on the hon. gentleman some two years ago concerning this matter, and since then the engineer visited that place, and I would like to know what the engineer reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is impossible for me to remember what the engineer has reported two years ago, but I will try and give the hon. gentleman the information to-morrow morning.

Mr. PLATT. I wonder it did not appear in that return.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. What others have said about Wellington and the possibility of having a harbor of refuge there, I am not responsible for. I am only responsible for what I said myself.

Mr. PLATT. I thought there might be some mistake in leaving out of the return the report of the last engineer who visited there, because I find in the return of Wellington harbor a magnificent map of the harbor of Port Rowan. There must have been some mistake made in the department.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would like to point out to the hon. Minister the very great necessity of the work at McGregor's Creek and Little Bear Creek. I am very glad, indeed, that the Government have thought fit to appropriate that amount of money for it. It will be of very great importance to the people, and ought to be proceeded with at once. I trust the hon. gentleman proposes at an early day to have Little Bear Creek dredged. There are now on the banks of that stream from $50,000 to $100,000 worth of logs of square timber, cord wood and ties, which it is impossible to get out until the creek is cleared, and that timber will be spoiled if the work is not done before another year. The reason the creek requires dredging now is that owing to the nature of the soil and to the fact that the dirt was not thrown sufficiently far from the stream, a portion has fallen back into the creek, thereby causing shoals which obstruct navigation. It is of great importance this work should be proceeded with. I trust the hon. gentleman will see that it is proceeded with without delay, and thereby save the large amount of property that is lying there waiting for shipment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is intended to be done at Owen Sound?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The entrance to the harbor requires widening, and there is a piece of swamp that has to be removed and dredged out. The purchase of land and that work will require about $40,000. The locality will contribute $20,000. That will be put to the credit of the Minister of Public Works, who, with the money which has been voted, will go on with the work, trusting that Parliament will give us next year the balance of $7,000 or $8,000 more which will be required to complete the work. Thus we will have a good harbor and a large harbor.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the pier at Portsmouth, in regard to which a vote of $4,000 is asked for repairs, owned at present by the Government.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. COOK. I see there is a sum of $2,600 for Midland Harbor unexpended. I should like to ask if that has been expended or not.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, it has been expended.

Mr. COOK. Has the harbor been completed?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. COOK. What amount is required to complete it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not sure, but I think there is something in the Supplementary Estimates for that.

Mr. COOK. No, there is not. There is something for Penetanguishene.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course sometimes when these matters are discussed I may be mistaken, but the hon. gentleman is right, I find now that it is for Penetanguishene.

Mr. COOK. This matter of the Midland harbor was made a subject of an electioneering dodge in the riding of East Simcoe at the last election, and it was used for all it was worth. There has been a large amount of money expended on the harbor of Midland and deservedly so, but no provision has been made to complete that work. After the protest had been filed and brought to a successful termination, in regard to the sitting candidate, it was stated that now that a new election would take place the probabilities were that the Government would secure a supporter from that riding, and they would put in the Estimates what was required to complete the work. Several deputations have waited on the Government in regard to that matter, and the Government are reported to have given a promise that this work would be completed. When the result of the election trial before the Supreme Court was made known, the reeve of that town is reported to have said: "How unfortunate it is for our harbor, because now we will not get any money for it." I would like to know if the Government do not intend to put any sum in the Estimates for that work on the ground of political motives? I enter my protest against any action of that kind. I do not suppose that will amount to very much with the Government. It may be that the Minister of Public Works should not be accused of making this a political question; but it seems very strange that his friends throughout that section should base the result of the election upon a matter relating to public expenditure at that port. It looks very much as if the department intended to do something of this sort, when they did not put a sum in the Estimates to complete the work. If the work had not been commenced, I would not have said anything about it at present; but, while condemning the course the Government have taken in regard to that harbor, I must congratulate them upon doing something for the town of Penetanguishene by improving its harbor, which is another town in the riding which I have the honor to represent. I see they have placed a sum of $10,000 in the Supplementary Estimates for that work, which is estimated to cost $40,000. I understand that the town is to furnish a sum equal to that voted by the Government. Is that so?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, they are to furnish $10,000.

Mr. COOK. Can the work be completed for $20,000?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say positively.

Mr. COOK. Does the Grand Trunk Railway furnish another $10,000?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, I think they provide their contribution by furnishing material at a low rate.

Mr. COOK. Does the Minister expect that the work will be completed for $20,000? The report of the Penetanguishene Herald newspaper says it will cost $40,000. There was a vote taken on the by-law in that town, and it was carried almost unanimously. I am glad to see the Government are doing this, and no doubt that is through my influence. I hope the Minister, if he has made a mistake in regard to Midland harbor, or has overlooked it, will still do something more there. The work ought to be completed. I should like to know if the inspector who was there, Mr. Herdon, is still employed?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, when his work was completed, he was discharged.

Mr. COOK. Before I sit down, I may return the compliment paid to me by my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien). Yesterday, he kindly interceded with the Government on behalf of a post office in the town of Orillia, which is in my riding, and he condemned the Government, as I did, for not doing something for that town. I want to point out that the Government have not done anything for the harbor at Parry Sound, which is in the hon. gentleman's constituency, and I call the attention of the Government to that. Parry Sound is a very important place; a large quantity of lumber is shipped from there, and vessels with very heavy draught use that harbor. I would like to read an article which appeared in a Parry Sound newspaper on this subject, which is as follows:—

"Although over $100,000 has been placed in the Estimates for the coming year by the Dominion Government for the improvement of the harbors of Ontario in addition to the sum of $165,000 appropriated last year for the same purpose, and although we have repeatedly pointed out to our member, Mr. O'Brien, the unfairness of these divisions and have urged him to see that our harbor obtained its just share of the public expenditure, yet, either he has been unable or unwilling to secure for us the small grant necessary to put the harbor and channels leading into it in a proper state for the convenience of the shipping trade. Owen Sound gets another pull of $15,000 for its harbor, on which more money has been already expended than on any other port on the Georgian Bay; Collingwood gets another $10,000, and a further vote of $4,000. Midland harbor gets $2,600 to complete; Thornbury has had $2,500; Hilton $3,000; Little Current, $3,500; Seguinadah, $7,000, and about the only harbor on the bay which has been passed over is Parry Sound. If it had not been for the liberality of the Ontario Government our inside channel would have been practically closed up this summer owing to low water, and if the derricks, beacons, and buoys are allowed to take care of themselves as they have in the past, it will soon be almost impossible for captains of vessels not well acquainted with our channels to navigate its waters. It is a shame and a disgrace that our interests are so persistently ignored at Ottawa."

I do not wish to say anything further. I wished to return the compliment that my hon. friend paid me last night, and I wished to draw his attention to the fact that this constituency has been entirely neglected in this matter.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I am happy to be able to tell the hon. gentleman that his solicitude for the Parry Sound harbor is altogether thrown away, because Parry Sound happened to be, I think, about the only really good and natural harbor on the Georgian Bay. It does not require to be dredged; it has these advantages that some day will make it a place of very great importance. The only drawback to Parry Sound harbor is the fact that brother lumbermen of the hon. gentleman have been in the habit of dumping their sawdust into it, and thereby interfering with some portions of it. With regard to the channel the Ontario Government have that in hand, and as long as they are working at it, we cannot expect the Dominion Government to contribute anything.

Mr. COOK. The hon. gentleman's constituents know now that he has not exercised any influence in behalf of their harbor.

Mr. MASSON. I do not like a remark in the newspaper paragraph the hon. gentleman has read, to pass unchallenged. That paragraph, I suppose, must be taken as vouched for by the hon. gentleman who has read it. It states that Owen Sound harbor has received more than any harbor on the Georgian Bay. The statement is not true, but if it were, it would only be right, because it is the best harbor on the Georgian Bay, and does by far the largest trade in Ontario. It ranks, in tonnage, second only to the harbor of Toronto, which surpasses it in inland trade, and Kingston alone surpasses it in foreign trade. But so far from Owen Sound receiving a larger amount than other harbors on Georgian Bay, it has not received one-half what Collingwood has received, and other harbors doing the same competing trade along the Georgian Bay and Lake Huron shore, and some of them have received, comparatively, ten times as much as Owen Sound. The amount received by Owen Sound already, and including the present vote, is $95,000, while Collingwood has received over $200,000.

Mr. COOK. I did not complain about the amount of money that was expended in Owen Sound harbor, nor did the article complain of the money that was expended in other places, but it said that they were entitled to have it there as well as anywhere else. I believe the hon. gentleman is correct when he says that some other harbors on the Georgian Bay got ten times as much as Owen Sound, because I remember that, in 1878, the hon. member for North Simcoe, in addressing his constituents at Collingwood, said that I, who was then supporting the Mackenzie Administration, had only got the paltry sum of $10,000 in the Estimates, and that I should have got $100,000. "You elect me," he said to them, "and when the Conservatives come into power I will see there is $100,000 placed in the Estimates for your harbor," and he has carried out his promise. The principle adopted by this Government is to distribute the public money for political purposes, and they promise money for harbors all along the line, wherever it will exercise a political influence in their favor, but in the case of Penetanguishene, where an absolute promise was made before the last election, they could not very well escape from carrying out the promises made.

Mr. WARD. I desire to say a word in reference to a remark by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Cook) in reference to the absence of an item in the Estimates for the Midland harbor. During this Session, as the hon. gentleman knows, I have taken a considerable interest in the promotion of the works at Midland, and a large deputation came down from that town and waited upon the Minister of Public Works. They were courteously received by that hon. gentleman, and informed that a certain amount would be given provided the town of Midland also gave a certain amount for the harbor. That is the system adopted, I believe, in the case of harbor improvements, and if that amount had been provided by the town of Midland, I have no doubt that a large amount would have appeared in the Estimates this Session for that harbor. I know the importance of the work at Midland, and I am sure that when the people there pass a by-law to provide a certain amount for the improvement of the harbor, the Government will also give something, and the work will go on.

Mr. McNEILL. I just wish to correct a misapprehension under which my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) is laboring, when he speaks of the best harbors in Georgian Bay. I only wish him to pay a visit to North Bruce, I will show him two of the best harbors on the Georgian Bay. So far as my hon. friend from North Grey (Mr. Masson) is concerned, I will just say to him, when he states that Owen Sound is the best harbor on the Georgian Bay, that we do not count Owen Sound as a harbor at all. But if he comes to Bruce we will show him Colpoy's Bay and Tobermory, which are the two best harbors on the Georgian Bay. It is right that hon. members in this House should understand what the facts are.

Dredging—Harbors and Rivers generally..... $185,250

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. New dredging plant, $27,250—perhaps the hon. Minister can inform me about what is the cost of a new dredge and the requisite barges for service on the lakes, either Lake Erie or Lake Ontario?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The St. Lawrence, hopper dredge, cost $116,000; Canada, $42,000; New Dominion, $8,000; Cape Breton, $19,000; George Mackenzie, $15,000; Prince Edward, $23,000; Queen of Canada, $15,000; Nipissing, $15,000; Challenge, $31,000; Ontario, $20,000; Sir John, $20,000; Sir Hector, $15,000. These include scows.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose such a dredge as would be suitable for service in harbors of the great lakes could be obtained for about $15,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. From $15,000 to $20,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. About what is the prime cost per diem of one of the steam dredges?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. My impression is it is from $60 to $70 a day; larger dredges would cost more. We have been obliged to hire private dredges at different times, when the Government dredges were employed elsewhere, and the prices have varied from $75 to $100 a day.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Over and above the cost of fuel and labor the owners would require a respectable amount of profit on the prime cost of the vessel. I shall be glad if the hon. gentleman will bring down a statement covering this point, because I was about to make a suggestion with regard to the upper lakes where there are very many harbors which the Government could hardly be expected to keep open entirely at the public cost, but where, if it was understood that dredges could be obtained from the department for two or three days at a time, the municipalities and the persons interested would be very often quite willing to pay for them. If that were done, or if it were known that that would be done, a large amount of money would be saved to the Government in the long run. It has frequently come to my notice that two or three hours' dredging at the proper time would prevent very formidable obstructions from forming in rivers and harbors, and the reason why so many applications are made and so much money spent is because it is practically impossible to obtain a dredge; but if some arrangement was entered into by the department, and if it was understood that the department at the prime cost of $20, $30, $40 or $50 a day, would allow on application one of their dredges to be used at those various harbors, the people would be quite willing to pay the cost and would not come to Parliament for a grant. A large amount of money would be saved if the department could keep a general service dredge available for a considerable part of the season.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The department has several times loaned dredges to private individuals and corporations, and also to the Government of Prince Edward Island. That Government asked for the use of a dredge and said they would pay the cost. Having a dredge at our disposal I assented, and we loaned them the dredge at a certain rate, taking care that our own officers remained on board. That has been done several times, but it is not every day we can loan a dredge in that way, because there are works to be prosecuted which require the vessels. For example, I was speaking of the mouth of one of the harbors on Lake Huron. We could not expect the corporation to do the work of dredging because it is really a harbor of refuge, and so the Government have to do the work. Then there are certain shoals formed in the waterways of the country, and, of course, we have to look after the dredging of them. When dredging work is to be done near private wharves, the private parties often ask the Government for the use of the dredge and pay $40 or $50 a day, and we accede to the request and the cost is paid in advance. In this way a considerable expenditure has been saved; but as I have already stated we have such a large territory that it is very seldom we have a spare dredge. The suggestion is a good one, and I will take note of it in case the present system might be improved.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would ask the hon. gentleman to bring down at a subsequent stage a statement of the rates per diem at which the dredge could be obtained on our great lakes. I quite see that if we can have only a moderate number of dredges it will be impossible to have one at the service of the public all the time, but it would be well to have an understanding that when a dredge was available it could be obtained at a certain rate. I do not think it is generally known that the department is willing to allow dredges to be used in that way, because the question has been put to me several times and I have not been able to answer it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman will see the difficulty at once. There are private dredge owners who are ready to say it is not fair for the Government to compete with them. We have our dredges there, and if private companies or corporations have dredges there also, we should not come into competition with them. There is a good deal in that:

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, there is a good deal in that, but what I am proposing to do is distinctly in the public interest, because the hon. gentleman knows very well that this is emphatically a case in which a stitch in time would save nine. Numerous cases have occurred in which the Government by loaning their dredges to be used by private parties for two or three days may save them $5,000 or $6,000 in removing obstructions a little while after. My remark was simply intended to apply to those harbors in which the Government at various times expended money, and which may be regarded as public works. I do not know at this moment what private dredges there may be on Lake Ontario. My information leads me to think that on Lake Ontario, at any rate, they are very scarce indeed. I hardly think that on our side there are any except those under the control of the Government. There may be some on the other lakes.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, there are.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I see an item here of $27,250 for dredging plant. We were told during the discussion on the Lake St. Peter debt that one of the advantages we were going to derive from that transaction was that we would receive $600,000 worth of dredging plant. I would like to know, what does the hon. gentleman propose to do with that dredging plant when he receives it from the Harbor Commissioners? It appears to me that the hon. gentleman with that material at his disposal, ought to be able to avoid the necessity of asking this House for any expenditure on dredging plant. To avoid speaking again, and although it may not be in the proper place, I would also ask the hon. gentleman in reference to the item for dredging in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, what place he proposes dredging during the coming season in Nova Scotia?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount asked for new dredging plant is for repairing the Canada, one of the dredges, also for repairs and improvements to the New Dominion, the Challenge, the Nipissing, the British Columbia and George Mackenzie.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am glad to observe that the Sir Hector never gets out of order.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think not. He always takes care of himself. The hon. gentleman wants to know what dredging we intend to do in Nova Scotia. That is impossible for me to say. After the reports of the engineers are collected and when the Session is over I will see what amount of money we have, and I will take the most pressing work.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Mr. KIRK. How many dredges are there in the Maritime Provinces?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think there are five.

Mr. ELLIS. I would ask the Minister of Public Works, inasmuch as the harbors are so deep and contain so much water in other places, if he cannot allow the whole expenditure to New Brunswick, and particularly whether he cannot give us a large share of it for the harbor of St. John. I see that the grant for Digby pier is dropped; and I wish to state that the travelling public of St. John are greatly interested in the prosecution of this work.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We have done some dredging in the harbor of St. John, but the hon. gentleman knows that the harbor, as far as I can recollect, is the property of the city of St. John, and that, therefore, if they are required to dredge their wharves it cannot be at the public expense.

Mr. ELLIS. It is a public harbor.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The harbor proper; yes. The hon. gentleman knows that in the harbor proper we made a large breakwater at Negro Point, and that this work was done without parsimony on the part of the Government. We tried to make it a substantial work and I think it is one. If it is shown to my department that some dredging is required in the harbor of St. John, in the public interest, we will attend to it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It seems to me that it is in the public interest. It is true the harbor is the property of the corporation, but they only hold it in trust for the benefit of the public, on the same principle that the Harbor Commissioners hold the harbors of Montreal and Quebec for the public benefit. In view of the public works going on in the country, it seems to me that some attention should be paid to the harbor at St. John. The refuse coming from the rivers blocks up the harbor, and it would be in the interest of the public generally that it should be dredged; a large amount of vessels come there from all parts. It seems to me that we have a fair claim to have that harbor attended to and not to allow it to get into the state it is now.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will see that the matter is attended to.

Mr. EISENHAUER. In reply to the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) the Minister of Public Works stated that he was not able to say definitely where this dredging would be done. I wish to remind the hon. gentleman that I brought to his notice that it was very necessary to do some dredging in the harbor of Lunenburg before the winter. A very large fleet of vessels, comprising some 60 or 70 sail, are laid up there for the winter, and when a storm comes on those vessels are constantly fouling, and serious damage occurs for want of proper accommodation. I would like to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the urgency of the matter and I trust that something will be done before the winter season.

Mr. KIRK. The hon. Minister will remember that some of the people of my county have been pressing for dredging in the St. Mary's River for a long time; and as he has added $10,000 to the vote, probably he has made up his mind that it is about time there should be some dredging there. I understand that a petition was presented to him during this Session asking for a grant. I believe my opponents begin to feel—I think they felt all along—that it was useless to send petitions through me, and this year they have sent them through my opponent, the defeated candidate. I hope that the pressure from him will be sufficient to obtain a grant this year, as it is very necessary to have some dredging done there. The hon. Minister will remember that a dredge was sent there just while the election of 1882 was going on. It worked for a few days, but it was very shortly found that it was not a suitable dredge, and it was withdrawn; it happened to be too large, and would not work. A great deal of lumber and timber is shipped through that river, and the lumbermen are obliged to ship it in small vessels in consequence of the low water in some places. These men are laboring under a great disadvantage in not being able to use large vessels, and I hope the hon. Minister will not overlook the representations made to him by his friends.

Gen. LAURIE. As allusion has been made to the necessity of dredging in other harbors, I may be allowed to call attention to petitions which have been laid before the Minister for dredging at Barrington harbor and Lockeport. Lockeport, like Lunenburg, has a very large fleet of vessels, and exports an enormous amount of the produce of the industries of our people. The channel through Barrington is also much used by steamers, and it is most desirable that the harbor should be deepened.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. member for Shelburne will now see the way in which the Government aid those who support them.

An hon. MEMBER. The same old song.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Yes, and there is a good deal of music in it. I hope the hon. Minister of Public Works, although he has disregarded the constant applications and remonstrances of the people of that district, will now, even at this late hour, regard their application through their present member, and make those expenditures in the public interest to which that county was entitled to many years ago. The hon. member will now see, as we have already seen from the votes placed in the Estimates, how highly the Government appreciate the change in public opinion in that constituency.

Mr. LOVITT. I think it is hardly fair for hon. gentlemen to accuse the Government of not dredging harbors in constituencies which are represented by opponents. Although I was opposed to the Government, they kindly granted me a dredge for Yarmouth harbor. I do not think it is well to be too hard on them.

Gen. LAURIE. I am glad to see that the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) recognises at last that I did not make any promises of Government aid in order to gain my election, and I am obliged to him for the support he gives me in urging this work for my county.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask how the vote of $15,000 for dredging in Manitoba is to be expended?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say just now. It depends on the reports from my engineers and the applications that may be made. When those are before me, I will divide the money at my disposal according to the needs of the localities.

Mr. WATSON. I should like to ask the cost of the tug Princess which was purchased at Selkirk and taken up to Lake Manitoba.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think I gave the figure last year.

Mr. WATSON. I do not think so. The tug was almost rebuilt on White Mud River during the last season. It was only taken up last year from Lake Winnipeg to Lake Manitoba.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If the hon. gentleman had told me he would bring that up, I would have got the information. If he will be kind enough to put in writing what he wants I will try and get it.

Mr. WATSON. A vote of $6,000 was taken last year for the North Saskatchewan River. No revote is taken this year. Has that money been spent?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It must have been expended for the object for which it was voted.

Bridges—Ottawa city, over the River Ottawa, the Slides, the Rideau Canal, and approaches thereto $8,300

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Under what circumstances does the hon. gentleman ask the general Government to pay for a bridge over the Ottawa River?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is in accordance with the arrangement which was made two or three years ago with the city of Ottawa, and which was laid before the House at the time and sanctioned by the House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the arrangement?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The city of Ottawa returned to the Government the property known as the Major's Hill Park. Then there was the income tax put on the officers of the different departments. There was litigation going on in the different courts against a number of the officers with respect to this income tax, and the matter was to be appealed to England. The Government thought, under the circumstances, they should stop this litigation, as of course ultimately the income tax would have fallen on the public Treasury. Besides, the city of Ottawa claimed that, as the Federal Government had large properties here, and as the police of the city and the waterworks were at the charge of the city altogether, and the Government contributed nothing for keeping up the streets or for the other expenses of the corporation, they should pay a contribution. Under these circumstances the Government took under their charge a double bridge over the Rideau Canal, from the lower town to Wellington street and also that portion of Wellington street, opposite the Government grounds, from the bridge to Bank street. Then we had two bridges over the slides near the Ottawa. Those were also put under the charge of the Government, inasmuch as they had to be built and maintained on account of the slides built by the Government. I think that was the reason why these properties came under the control of the Government.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think the reasons given by the hon. gentleman will hardly be satisfactory to this House or the country. In the first place Major's Hill belongs to the Government and not to the city of Ottawa.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman might remember that, under his Government, whilst he was a Minister of the Crown, that property was granted to the city on condition that it would be returned to the Government whenever required for the purposes of the Government, therefore the property had passed altogether into the hands of the city, and would not have come back to the Government unless we erected, for example, a castle for the Governor or used the property for public buildings; and we thought that property should come back to us, inasmuch as it was an eyesore, not being kept in proper condition alongside of these buildings.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Just so; the Government of which I was a member thought it right that the city of Ottawa, if they wished to ornament their public places, should do so at the expense of the citizens, and the property was transferred conditionally to the city of Ottawa; the understanding being that in the event of its being required for public purposes at any time by the general Government, possession of it would be resumed by them. It was handed over to the city with the object of avoiding what the hon. gentleman is calling on us to do, that is, expending a large sum of money on it. What right have the taxpayers of this country to pay for ornamenting these grounds? The hon. gentleman says we are obliged to keep them up. Why, we were not obliged to do so unless we resumed possession of them, and therefore I say the Government taking back this property and imposing a charge for keeping it in order, is an unjustifiable proceeding. The hon. gentleman assigns as another reason that it was because the courts had decided that the civil service should not pay an income tax. We have nothing to do with that either. The civil service have their own positions and salaries, and we have nothing to do with the income tax. What have we to do with the bridges of the city of Ottawa? Is the hon. gentleman going to introduce a policy under which every part of the country may apply to this House for grants to build bridges? In the Supplementary Estimates, there is another amount for a bridge across the Rideau. What have we to do with that? If that principle is to be adopted, every town in the Dominion may justly ask for assistance to span their rivers wherever a bridge is required. The whole tendency here is to centralise the expenditure in Ottawa. We expend enough public money in this city without having to pay for police protection. Besides we have a police force of our own for the protection of the buildings, and I do not see why we should rely on the city for protection at all. We see the Government cutting down other proper expenditure. We see the vote for $10,000, which has always been given for Dominion exhibitions, withdrawn, when it was found that the exhibition was to be held in the chief city of the Province of Nova Scotia. That was a small business considering the large amounts we are spending daily here and in other places; and we know that if the exhibition were to be held in Ontario and Quebec, there would be no plea of economy to justify the withdrawal of that $10,000. The people in the Maritime Provinces, who expected to have a permanent exhibition there, will be greatly disappointed; yet while the Government in a fit of economy are going to withdraw this grant, they can ask for a large sum to build bridges over the Ottawa River, and keep the park in order, and are going to ask for a further sum for the street in front of the building. I think the House and the country will be very much dissatisfied when they learn that the Government have assumed these obligations, when they compare them with the actions of their predecessors.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My recollection is that the courts decided against the right of the municipalities to tax the incomes of Dominion officials. I know that I had a suit in reference to that matter, and that the municipality were defeated. Further, I think it is a most outrageous piece of impertinence on the part of the municipality or the citizens of Ottawa to attempt to tax Dominion property, or even to advance any claims that they have such a right. One-half of this city and one-half of the population of this city is due to the fact that it was selected to become the Dominion capital in preference to other competitors. I suppose that there is not less than one and a quarter or one and a half millions of dollars expended in this city every year in consequence of its being the capital, and it is, I think, the most preposterous piece of impertinence for these people to pretend that they have any ground whatever for taxing our property. They owe, not ten times, but a thousand times more to the Dominion for the expenditure made within their bounds than the Dominion Legislature or the Dominion officials can be said to owe to them in any shape or way. I was not aware that these agreements had been entered into, or I should certainly have protested against them, because I think the municipality of Ottawa has been paid a thousand times over for the expenditure which it may have made.

Mr. JONES (Halifax).

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This matter was explained to the House at the time, and the House voted the money and it is rather late now to protest against it. It was accepted by both sides of the House at that time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not remember it. Of course, we have been in the habit of seeing these items run through very rapidly at the end of the Session, so that we may not possibly take cognisance of some of them.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course, I do not blame the hon. gentleman for not having been aware that this was passed, but, at the same time, it was adopted by the House. In regard to the Dominion exhibition, I may say to my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Jones) that we did not think the Government should vote that amount this year. I may say, however, that, if the sum had been granted this year, there was another applicant for the grant besides Halifax. Manitoba and the North-West, which had never had an exhibition aided by the Dominion Government, were applying, whereas there had been an exhibition in Halifax before; so I am afraid that the hon. gentleman may find that he was making a mistake in complaining on this subject.

Mr. COOK. I think grants of that kind should be entirely suspended, and that the Provinces should look after those matters themselves. In Ontario we have an Industrial exhibition in Toronto, which is displacing the Provincial exhibition. I do not see that there is any necessity whatever for a Dominion exhibition. I think the Provinces are quite able to look after those matters themselves, and that the Dominion Government should husband the little resources they have left.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I should like to ask if the principle which has been adopted in regard to Ottawa is to be followed in regard to Quebec. I corroborate the statement of the Minister of Public Works that the arrangement entered into with the city of Ottawa was brought before this House, but I understand that it was on the principle that, because there is a large amount of property belonging to the Government at Ottawa which does not pay any taxation to the city, the city should be recouped for what it loses in that way. If that principle is good in regard to the city of Ottawa, it should be applied to the city of Quebec to a much larger extent. I believe there is a much larger amount of property in Quebec belonging to the Government which does not pay any taxation than there is in Ottawa. At Ottawa, the Government not only keep a public park for the advantage of the citizens, but they also maintain the street in front of the Parliament buildings. In Quebec, every private citizen is compelled to maintain the sidewalks in front of his property. The Dominion Government have an immense amount of property there, and they have never given one cent towards the construction or maintenance of those sidewalks, and they have not recouped the city for the amount it has expended on them. They have properties there which they are obliged to protect against fire, and, as everyone knows, there was a great conflagration last year in the citadel. Our fire brigade was called upon to stop the fire, and the greater portion of our fire appliances was destroyed or damaged in putting down that fire. But, after the fire was over, not a cent was paid to the city of Quebec by the Federal Government. Not only that, but I have heard the Minister of Public Works state that the Government derived a great benefit from the waterworks of the city of Ottawa. I think we are paying rather dearly for that benefit. I see that we are to pay $16,000 for the use of the water. In Quebec, after a great deal of wrangling with the Government they agreed to pay $3,000 for the water, which is used by the citadel and the cartridge factory and the laboratory. The number of men in the citadel itself is very large, and we do not get as much as is paid even in Halifax. I think in Halifax they are getting from the Federal Government between $6,000 and $8,000 a year for supplying the citadel with water. In Quebec we cannot get one cent from the Federal Government for the sidewalks which we are obliged to construct outside of the Government property. The city has been threatened with actions for damages on account of the bad state of the sidewalks in front of Government property, and they have built the sidewalks, and have not been able to get any money back from the Government for them. I must say that we have been better treated by the Local Government—I do not mean only the present Local Government, but its predecessors also. The various Local Governments in Quebec have been always willing to build the sidewalks in front of their own buildings, in fact to do the same as is done by private citizens. The Minister of Public Works knows that it is the law in Quebec that private citizens shall make their own sidewalks, and I call attention to this point in the hope that the Government may reverse the decision to which they seem to have arrived, not to pay anything for the fulfilment of the obligation which rests on private citizens to maintain the sidewalks in front of their own property.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I was not aware of what the hon. gentleman states in regard to the sidewalks. I do not think it ever came before me.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec Centre). No, most of the Government properties in Quebec are military properties, and for some years I believe they have been taken out of the Public Works Department and put in the charge of the Militia Department, and it is since that was done that this expense has been incurred by the city.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I must say that I think the sidewalks should have been constructed by the Government in Quebec as they have been elsewhere. That is a matter which is really for the convenience of the building itself, and I think that should have been done. As to these bridges, which have been referred to in the city of Ottawa, the hon. gentleman must remember that they are required on account of the canal and the slides. We have done the same thing elsewhere. Wherever a river has been dammed for public purposes, and has thus increased in width, the Government have contributed to the extra cost of the bridge, and here, the bridges being required for the public convenience, the Government have thought that it was only fair to maintain them, on account of their being required for the canal and for the slides.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec Centre). Has the Government undertaken to maintain the Suspension Bridge over the falls between Ottawa and Hull?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That bridge never belonged to the city. It was built by the Province of Canada and was never a local bridge.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec Centre). But I understand the bridge is going to be built. On the same principle would the Government be disposed to build a bridge over the St. Lawrence at Quebec?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is a wide question. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will postpone it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It seems the Government make this expenditure on the principle that the public buildings are under charge of the Dominion police. That principle will apply to every municipality in the country where there are public buildings. Dominion officials in St. John, Halifax and Toronto all escape taxation, and if that is the principle upon which they are going to give Ottawa, so highly favored already with Dominion expenditure, this further privilege, then every other municipality will have the same right. If the Government think that Dominion officials ought to be taxed and assessed like other citizens, upon their income, the Government should put all other cities on the same footing, and say that Dominion officials should pay the same taxes as other individuals upon their income. I think some years ago there was an enormous drain put down in Wellington street in this city at the expense of the Dominion, but when we ask them to do something for St. John they will not pay a cent.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There was a sufficient drain for the city, but the Government required a separate drain on account of the new building. We had to make a large basement and make it perfectly dry, on account of the archives that were to be deposited there; therefore the Government required a deeper drain, and had to pay for it.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I disagree with the argument advanced by the Minister of Public Works. I would like to know what right we have to extend to the city of Ottawa one kind of treatment and another kind of treatment to other cities and towns throughout the country? The other day we passed an item of over $8,000 for the purpose of keeping up a park for the city of Ottawa, that the civil servants of the Government who do not pay taxes, may have some place where they may loiter around and take their ease. Now, I say the people have just grounds of complaint against the Government for acting in this manner towards the city of Ottawa, and giving it advantages which it does not give to other cities. Not satisfied with that, the Government must pave the streets for Ottawa. If we feel that we ought to do something for the people of Ottawa, let us put an item in the Estimates and give it to them, and not give it to them in the indirect manner we are doing now. I say it is not a proper thing, it is not a just thing, to tax the rest of the country for the benefit of Ottawa, and I do not see upon what principle the Government can defend it.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not wish to prolong the discussion with reference to the appropriation to improve the park in the city of Ottawa. I think there are members in the House who will have a distinct recollection that an agreement in full and in detail was submitted to the House some years ago after negotiations, if I may so term them, had taken place with the city officials of Ottawa, when it was agreed that the Dominion should assume the management of Major's Hill Park, and they should also take over the street from Dufferin bridge to the extent of the property which belongs to the Dominion, and keep it in repair. It was also decided that some other compensation should be made in reference to the bridges, Dufferin bridge and the bridge crossing the Ottawa at the Chaudière Falls. If my recollection serves me right, the leader of the Opposition at that time, after a full discussion of the subject, approved of the arrangements that had been made. I am not discussing now whether that was proper or not.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What year was that?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not remember the year, but I think a consultation of the Debates will show that the statement I am making is correct. My recollection is that the leader of the Opposition at that time, after discussing the matter across the House, approved of the arrangement for this reason: that whether good or bad, from the fact that the Government of the Dominion held so much property that was not taxable, and for the reasons given by the Minister of Public Works, they should contribute a certain sum to the maintenance of these roads, to assist the corporation in lieu of that which the corporation was deprived of, by the exemption from taxation of civil servants.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Why not treat other places in the same way?

Mr. BOWELL. I am not aware there is any other capital of the Dominion in the Dominion. I am not aware that the Dominion has any similar buildings in any part of the country. I know there are properties owned by the Dominion in every city and nearly every town, but I do not think they are at all analogous to the buildings in the city of Ottawa. However, I did not rise with the intention of defending the original agreement or of entering into that question at all; I merely rose to state this fact, that this is the first time any objection has been taken to these appropriations made under the agreement which was submitted to Parliament at the time.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Last year objection was taken to it.

Mr. BOWELL. Perhaps the hon. gentleman is right. Questions may have been asked, but the principle upon which those appropriations were made was not attacked in the manner it has been attacked to-night. It may be a question in the future whether that agreement shall be continued, and it will be for Parliament to determine the question; but I have simply to repeat, and I am confident my statement is correct, that when the arrangement was made and submitted to Parliament, and it was accepted without opposition, the appropriations made in the Estimates at that time were accepted by both sides of the House.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Admitting for the sake of argument that the hon. gentleman is right regarding the bridges and Wellington street, what reason can the Government assign for assuming the cession of Major's Hill?

Mr. BOWELL. Major's Hill is the property of the Dominion, and did not belong to the city of Ottawa. The Government thought it better, the property being at the capital and belonging to the Dominion, that they should take it and keep it in proper repair, just as they do Jacques Cartier Square.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I want to know the reason why the Government undertook that expenditure? If Ottawa thought there was too much property not paying taxes, the Government clearly had power to dispose of that property, which at one time was thought of by their predecessors. I remember the question was discussed by the Government which preceded the present Administration as to whether they should dispose of that property. Then the principle, so far as paying taxes is concerned, would have been disposed of; but in preference to taking that step, the Government authorised the city to take it under their own care and expend their own money on it under the condition that it was to be taken back at such time as the Government might require it. Then, when the present Government came into power, they cancelled the arrangement, and if they cancelled our arrangement, I suppose when we get into power we cancel theirs, and I hope the day will come when we will be able to cancel that outrageous agreement and put a stop to it. I suppose when a change of Government occurs, whoever may be called upon to deal with this question will not tolerate such an agreement to be continued at the present time, by which that park is handed over for the benefit of the citizens of Ottawa. I notice that a large sum has been spent there on Langevin avenue. I do not object to having a Langevin avenue here or elsewhere, but I do object to the city of Ottawa being improved at the expense of the taxpayers of the country.

Mr. BOWELL. You have Mackenzie avenue down there.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is a very good name, but there is no such intention in regard to it.

Telegraph Lines..... $17,500

Mr. JONES (Halifax). As I understand we pay all the expense of maintaining the light at Cape Race, I think in—structions should be given to the operator to report all vessels that pass and signal to them. I understand it is not done at the present time, and I think instructions should be given that it should be done. The report might be sent to the ports for which a vessel is sailing; the expense will be trifling because the message will pass over the Government line.
Mr. BOWELL.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the line extend as far as Belle Isle?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, it is going in that direction. We have a small sum annually to extend the line until we reach the limits of the Province of Quebec.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How far are you at the present time from Belle Isle?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I suppose 280 miles.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you pay for the maintenance?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes. There are two or three operators on the line and they are paid small salaries.

Mr. KIRK. I desire to know from the Government if it is their intention to extend the short line telegraph line to Sherbrooke, and to the harbors on the southern coast of Guysboro' county. The telegraph line follows the shore from Halifax to Sherbrooke, when it is extended up into the county and runs inland for a distance of 50 miles. I should like the Minister to consider the advisability of extending the line from Sherbrooke east along the shore. It is a dangerous coast, and a good deal of shipping passes that point. I think it is very much in the interest of shipping and commerce generally that the line should be continued, from Sherbrooke to Port Hillford, a distance of about 20 miles.

Experimental Farms—buildings, fencing, &c $70,000

Mr. FISHER. Can the Minister of Agriculture give us an explanation with regard to what has been done on those farms?

Mr. CARLING. Dwelling houses and stables have been erected, and fencing has been constructed on the experimental farm here.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What did the dwelling house cost?

Mr. CARLING. I think the contract price was about $7,000.

Mr. FISHER. How much for the director's house?

Mr. CARLING. I believe the Minister of Public Works will be able to state. I think the contract price is something between $9,000 and $10,000.

Mr. FISHER. What did the other houses cost?

Mr. CARLING. $3,500 each, I think.

Mr. FISHER. Before this vote passes I think we ought to have a little more definite information about those matters. We were asked last year to vote $80,000, and we are now asked to vote $70,000 more for buildings on the experimental farm.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in thinking I refer to the experimental farm here. This is for the buildings on all of the experimental farms.

Mr. FISHER. Do I understand the Minister to say that all the money we voted last year has been spent?

Mr. CARLING. I think not.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This $69,975 we are asking for will cover the whole expense.

Mr. FISHER. Can the Minister of Public Works give us a statement of what amount will be required altogether for the director's house, for the other houses and the barns, and also for the fencing? I understood from the Minister of Agriculture the fencing is included in the vote.

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The residence of the superintendent will cost $7,800, which I suppose will include heating; the barns and stabling $17,200 complete; and the whole of the residences for the staff amounts to $18,140. The fencing will amount to $4,000 or $5,000 at 15 or 16 cents a foot.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Do you propose to commence operations on the farm in Cumberland county at once?

Mr. CARLING. Operations have been commenced on the farm in Nova Scotia. The superintendent, Col. Blair, is now there and is making preparations to commence the spring work.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Are you going to put up your buildings at once?

Mr. CARLING. There is a house sufficiently good on the land for the superintendent. Some other buildings will be started this summer.

Mr. FISHER. Is it intended to put up any more buildings on the farm than those already started?

Mr. CARLING. I think not to any extent.

Mr. MARA. I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether he has yet commenced the buildings in British Columbia or engaged the farm?

Mr. CARLING. It has not yet been engaged, but we expect to commence operations this year, in the way of fencing and preparing the buildings.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask how the hon. Minister has come to overlook the Province of New Brunswick altogether?

Mr. CARLING. When the Bill was brought down here, it provided that one station should be selected for the three Maritime Provinces, and the site selected is considered the most central and most favorable.

Mr. MITCHELL. It appears to me, as Nova Scotia gets nearly everything going in the Lower Provinces, and particularly the county of Cumberland, that the hon. Minister might have looked around to see if he could not find some other place for these buildings. If he had asked me—of course they never consult me—I could have pointed out a dozen very desirable and very eligible places in New Brunswick, where I am sure the people would have appreciated this large expenditure of money for such a public improvement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wish to enquire of the Minister of Agriculture whether it is true that he has purchased a part of the Bell Farm in Manitoba for an experimental farm?

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Surely the Government had land enough of their own without purchasing land which they had already sold to other people. What sum did the hon. gentleman pay?

Mr. CARLING. I think the price paid was $12 an acre.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, it does appear to me that to pay $12 an acre for land in Manitoba, where we must have a superabundance of land of our own, is a very extraordinary proceeding, and looks very much like a waste of public funds.

Mr. FISHER. I am very glad to get these figures from the Minister of Agriculture, and to find out that this expenditure has not been greater than it is. I do not wish to criticise, especially at this late period of the Session, but I think the hon. Minister will have to make a few more arrangements for the proper carrying on of the work which I trust will be initiated there very soon. I would also say that I think it rather fortunate that some of the houses built there have a very small amount of underpinning or cellar, and I fear that the hon. Minister will, in a short time, have to change them.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the committee would allow me to go back to the item regarding dredging, which is passed, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Public Works as to what he intends doing in relation to removing the bar at the entrance of the Miramichi harbor, and whether any intention exists of performing a portion of that work during the coming season?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Probably the hon. gentleman was not here when I stated, with regard to these different votes, that the places where the dredging was to take place could not now be determined, because the list is now being made of the places requiring dredging, and as to what the cost will be in each case. I do not know whether the Miramichi river will require more money than other places, but my attention will now be given to that harbor, since the hon. gentleman has brought it to my notice.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do you not think it would have been much more in order, and more satisfactory to gentlemen who put questions, if the hon. gentleman had come prepared to tell us where he intended to make these expenditures? I am afraid that the county of Northumberland, which does not send a member who is at the beck and nod of the Premier, will come out very short.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Serve him right.

Mr. MITCHELL. That may be the way you view it, but I do not think that is the way public affairs ought to be administered. I do not wish to protract this matter, but I would be very glad if the Minister would let me know tomorrow whether he is going to do anything to improve the Miramichi harbor this season?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would also desire to know from the Minister of Agriculture what his reason is for purchasing land in the North-West at $12 an acre when we presumably have plenty of land of our own?

Mr. CARLING. I explained that a short time ago, when the subject was under discussion. The different sites offered were well considered by Professor Saunders, who, after examining all the different localities, reported to the Government that this was altogether the best site, being on the line of railway, which was a matter of considerable importance. To get Government land, we should have had to go a distance from the railway, which would have been inconvenient.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). In the discussion which took place on the Pacific Railway guarantee, the extreme limit of value assigned even by the Government to lands in the North-West was $3 an acre, and they quoted several times the opinion given on this side of the House years ago that these lands were worth $3 an acre. Now there should be some very strong reasons assigned by the hon. the Minister of Agriculture for the purchase of land at $12 per acre, when we know there is such a large amount of land owned there by the Government. How many acres is the farm?

Mr. CARLING. 600 acres.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Was there not in the immediate vicinity land equally good. Was there not another 600 acres on the land?

Mr. CARLING. I think not, and this is convenient to the village of Indian Head. It has a variety of soil, is well watered and is considered cheap for the situation.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What did the Bell Farm Company give for it?

Mr. CARLING. I understand they gave $6 an acre; and to bring it to its present state of cultivation, it cost them as much as we paid them for it. The report of Professor Saunders is that it is a very cheap farm.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). They spent $6 per acre more to bring it to a high state of cultivation, and then when they could not make it pay, they get the Government to take it off their hands and recoup them for their expenses, notwithstanding the fact that the Government have land of their own in that direction equally as good.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I happen to know that, at this moment, in the immediate vicinity of Winnipeg, there are large quantities of land offered at much lower rates, and I believe that if the Bell Farm or any lands in that vicinity had been put up to auction, they would not have realised one-half or perhaps a quarter the sum the hon. gentleman has given. All over the North-West, it would be extremely difficult to sell land at anything like the rates the hon. gentleman has given, and I take it for granted, because the hon. gentleman has not said there are, that there are no buildings or houses upon these lands.

Mr. CARLING. There are some, but not of any particular value.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a very extraordinary price to have to pay in the North-West for 600 acres.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I happen to know a little about that section of the country, as the farm is within a few miles of where I reside, and I must say the section of land which the Government selected is one of the best sections, to my personal knowledge, in the whole country. The hon. the Minister of Agriculture will remember that last Session, when he first spoke about locating those farms in different sections, I requested him to be very careful in the location of the farm. I told him that notwithstanding I lived at Wolsely, and what little property I have is there, and however anxious I might be to have that farm located at Wolsely, by all means not to locate it there or anywhere except the best place he could find. Last fall Professor Saunders went up the country to locate the farm. Mr. Bedford and Mr. Mackay, both practical and successful farmers, more than commonly successful, examined the land, to my personal knowledge, because I accompanied them through the district from Moosomin to Moose Jaw. They drove from station to station over it, and there was a committee of citizens at each particular station appointed to view certain sections of the land which they considered good sections, and they selected finally the land at the Bell Farm, a mile this side of the station. Two ravines run through it, there is a fine water supply, and there are some three or four buildings, but they may not be of much use. The whole section is broken, and to break it must have cost $5 an acre. That would be of great advantage to the Government, besides the land is good land, well adapted for the purpose in every respect. I heard people say the company paid $9 an acre for it to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and I know that the section is a most admirable one, and had I owned it myself I would have not taken $12 for it. I think the choice is a good one; and notwithstanding I would have liked to have the farm in my own town, I think the Government made a wise choice.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is one advantage in paying $12 an acre, and that is that it fixed the price of land in the North-West. I am not going to find fault with the price. I have property in the North-West for which I paid cash a good many years ago.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Would you take $12 an acre?

Mr. CARLING.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have been offered and refused within six weeks $10 an acre for it, and every acre I sold, I sold for $15 an acre.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where is it?

Mr. MITCHELL. It is on Portage Creek, about six miles north of Portage la Prairie. I do not find fault with the price paid for the land, but I think that with 100,000 acres which the Government occupy, it is rather a reflection on the land that the Government have to go outside of their possessions to buy land for that farm. I have always heard the Bell Farm spoken of as a favorite spot, from its location, its topographical character, water facilities and other advantages, and I do not think I would cavil very much at the price paid, looking to my own experience.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I do not think that from the eastern boundary of the Territory of Assiniboia to Qu'Appelle Station, you can find land along the railway that is open for entry or that the Government own. It is all taken up and homesteaded. It was considered important also, from a business standpoint, that this land should be near some railway station. Everyone knows that in those circumstances the land is already taken up, so that they could not get land of their own because the land is homesteaded by different parties.

Mr. WATSON. I should like to ask the Minister why they decided to locate the experimental farm at Brandon?

The CHAIRMAN. The vote for the experimental farm was passed some time ago. We returned to another item at the request of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), and I have permitted the debate to go on so far, but I think we should observe some rules of order, even in committee.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think my hon. friend might be allowed to put his question.

Mr. WATSON. I simply want to ask why the farm was located at Brandon?

Mr. CARLING. We had a number of sites offered to us in the Province, and, after very careful consideration, this was thought to be the best for the experimental farm in Manitoba, considering that it was near the town of Brandon, that it was well watered, that it had all the appliances required for an experimental farm, and was near the line of railway, which we considered a very important matter, that it was easy of access to the public, and was in all respects suited for an experimental farm. I think the hon. gentleman himself told me that we had selected the best site in the Province, with the exception of one at Portage la Prairie, which is within the constituency he represents. I think the hon. gentleman will admit that this is a good selection.

Mr. WATSON. It is true that this site is alongside one railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway, but it is only one railway, while, if the Government had selected the site at Portage la Prairie, they would have given to the travelling public the advantage of two railways, because that is where the Manitoba and North-Western branches from the Canadian Pacific Railway. At Brandon, all the travelling public cannot see the experimental farm, whereas, at Portage la Prairie, everyone would have been able to see it. I know the land which has been selected, and I suppose it is good for the purpose, but I do not consider it is the best farm that could have been selected for that purpose. Of course, if the object in view is to allow the general public to see the farm, it would have been much more central and much more accessible to the general travelling public at Portage la Prairie.

Ocean and River Service..... $207,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose in a sense this may be considered in connection with the item above. I would wish first to ask the Minister of Finance whether we are to understand that the item which has heretofore been authorised by statute for mail subsidies and steamship subventions is to disappear altogether? I notice that there is no reference to it in the Supplementary Estimates.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is the amount paid to the Allan Line?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Government have notified the Allan Steamship Company of the termination of that contract next spring, and that is done with a view to leave the Government perfectly free to be in a position to secure, if possible, a fast line of steam communication between Great Britain and Canada, something more in accordance with the rapid means of mail and passenger transit which exists elsewhere.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then, how do you propose to authorise yourselves to pay the Allans anything? The reason I ask is that apparently here the statute has expired. Nothing appears to be authorised by Statute in these Estimates, as the hon. gentleman will see, and in the Supplementary Estimates he has not brought down a farthing for that purpose.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Being authorised by statute, I supposed it can be paid.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It does not say so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I observe that it is not carried out for 1888-89, but if the statute authorises that payment, until the notice is given under the contract on the part of one party or the other, it must be paid.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is put down as a decrease.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is true, but I think that is simply to show that it is not intended to be permanently continued. We do not propose to continue the service after the 1st July, 1889, but I see the point to which attention has been called, and I will make a note of it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I hope the Government will not go to the great expense which I see some parties are advocating with reference to a very fast line of steamers, which must necessarily involve a very heavy outlay for two reasons. One reason is the expense, and the other is that such a line would be useful only for mails and passengers, and would prevent the carriage of freight, which is a very important matter in connection with the railways of the country. If, by a moderate increase in the subsidy, the Government could obtain a six days' service between the old world and this side of the water, that would be a great improvement, but anything involving a twenty-knot service would require an enormous subsidy, because steamers of that capacity can only be run at a very heavy expense and take very little cargo. Those fast steamers which run from New York only take from 600 to 800 tons of cargo, while such vessels as the Parisian, which may be called 15 knot boats, carry about 2,500 tons of cargo, which goes over the Government railways. I hope the Government will not lose sight of this when the arrangement is made for a new contract.

Maintenance and Repairs of Government Steamers, $130,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). With reference to the maintenance of Dominion steamers, I would like to ask the Minister of Marine whether the supplies are obtained by contract or are distributed about promiscuously, so to speak. Last year I commented on the amount which was paid for coal, which was considerably in excess of the price paid by private individuals. I naturally presumed that the credit of the Government was as good as that of any private individual, and that they should secure their coal on as reasonable terms. Perhaps the Minister might inform me how the supplies are obtained and at what rate?

Mr. FOSTER. All this coal is supplied by contract. Tenders were asked for a supply of coal at different places. We have contracts at Picton, at the Joggins, at Parrsboro', at Cow Bay and at Sydney. Our vessels take coal wherever they need it, even though it may be a little higher per ton than at other places, the slight extra coal being more than made up by the saving in time and expense on board ship.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What do you pay in Halifax?

Mr. FOSTER. We do not take any at Halifax. We get coal at Sydney, but we have a deposit of coal at Halifax.

Rewards for saving life and life-boat service..... $10,000

Mr. FOSTER. There is an increase of $2,000 in this item, for this reason: We have about 20 stations where there is a life-boat service. Heretofore only a part of them have been organised, and now the rest are being organised. By being organised I mean having some person to take charge of them, with an organised crew composed of volunteers. We do not pay the volunteers for the whole year, as we do not take their whole time. They have so many drills to perform each year, and we pay them for each drill. There is a responsible officer over them to conduct their drill, to whom we pay a certain sum.

Mr. PLATT. The Minister speaks of them as a volunteer crew, although I understand that they enlist under certain terms, and sign enlistment papers and a regular agreement whereby they pledge themselves, under certain penalties, to obey their officer and perform their drill. That can hardly be called a volunteer crew.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend may object to the name. I do not know that I could give any better one. Of course, they only drill a certain number of days each year, and they are paid for the times they drill. It would be impossible, under those conditions, to put them under penalties to be present each time. They are selected by the captain, and they are generally those persons who live near by, and may be called upon at any time of danger, and for their regular drill. It does happen sometimes that a person goes away and someone else has to be taken.

Mr. PLATT. I want to ascertain whether these men who are enlisted or enrolled on the captain's books, are invariably the same men who drill and are paid for drilling. I know that, in many instances, it is not convenient for a volunteer to go out to drill, and the captain takes in another person from the shore who performs the drill and receives the pay. I do not know that there is any great harm in it, but the more closely a crew is kept in practice, the more efficient they will become in the drill. I think every exertion should be put forth that the same men should be drilled each time, in order that we may have efficient crews. Now, I see there was a large appropriation last year for watches and opera glasses, I suppose for gratuitous rewards for saving life. Can the Minister tell us in what way he ascertains that a man merits a reward? Sometimes a large number of men are engaged in a rescue. In what way does he obtain his evidence?

Mr. FOSTER. The evidence, I think, is carefully and fairly taken. For instance, if a foreign vessel takes care of a ship-wrecked crew, if one of our vessels is wrecked or in danger, and the crew taken on board another vessel and are cared for a certain time, these things are reported to the Board of Trade at the nearest port, and the Board of Trade takes the evidence and sends it to the department here.

Mr. PLATT. I refer more particularly to the crews on the inland waters. Wrecks are likely to occur where they have not the advantages you speak of.

Mr. FOSTER. If such a thing occurs on the inland waters, an investigation is made. We have regular forms upon which a report is made. The captain or the officers of the vessels that have been wrecked, and who have been saved, fill up a form and send in their statement with reference to it, stating that they were wrecked, how they were taken care of, and all other such information. We are very careful in the examination of these cases, and I think probably no rewards have been given that were not well earned.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think my hon. friend cannot be reproached with undue extravagance in the matter of watches, for he seems to have purchased thirty-four watches for distribution for $364, which is a little over $10 per watch. Now, I am no friend of extravagance certainly, but I think a watch that is to be presented by the Dominion of Canada to a person for saving life, might be worth a little more than $10.

Mr. FOSTER. They are sometimes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems to me rather a shabby sort of recognition.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not only watches that are given; besides, the reward depends upon the merit. I sent away a watch the other day which would have satisfied the desire of my hon. friend, I think, if he had seen it, because the case was a very meritorious one. There are other cases where we wish to mark the sense of the department, and that the danger has not been very great, and in these cases a watch costing $10 is a very pleasing recognition, and is always very gratefully received.

Mr. PLATT. Ten dollar watches are practically as good in these cases as twenty-five dollar watches; it is better to increase the number of watches rather than to increase the price. On very many occasions a number of people assist at the wrecks, and some of them are overlooked in the matter of rewards, and a great deal of hard feeling consequently arises. That is why I drew the Minister's attention to the fact that where a large number of people are engaged at a rescue their efforts should be recognised. There was a case at Weller's Bay when several men were overlooked, and they will not be as ready to assist in case of danger at another time. I would like to ask the Minister how many boat-houses have been built during the year? Have more been built than the two mentioned in the Public Accounts?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot say exactly. I think about six or seven during the course of the year.

Mr. PLATT. How are these buildings erected—are they built by contract?

Mr. FOSTER. They are built by contract in some cases. In other cases we send our own foreman to the place, and he buys the material and superintends the erection of the building. If we consider the tenders are too high, we send our foreman down to do the work. We have done that in several cases, and have saved a considerable sum of money, the work being done at prices lower than the tenders sent in.

Mr. PLATT. I see an item: building boat-house, J. S. McCuaig, $339. Was he considered the contractor or foreman of the Government in that respect; in what way did Mr. McCuaig assist?

Mr. FOSTER. He superintended the building of the light house, and he gave his whole time to it while it was being built. He bought the material and sent the bills to the department, and after being examined they were paid.

Mr. FOSTER.

He was given a certain percentage upon the cost of the building for superintending its erection.

Mr. PLATT. That is to say the more the building cost the more he would receive?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly; it was a percentage on the amount.

Mr. PLATT. That is not a very great inducement to build cheaply.

Mr. FOSTER. It was built very cheaply and very well.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not want to find fault with any stroke of economy, for they are scarce enough, but I desire to make a suggestion with regard to this matter of watches. The custom in England is to give medals where crews have been engaged in saving life. I should think, unless the hon. gentleman has struck a vein in a matter of watches, and is able to get them extraordinarily good and extraordinarily cheap, in a good many of these cases it would be better to give medals rather than to give watches to the crews. I know that the medals given in England by the Royal Humane Society, and I think by the Life-Boat Society, are very much prized by the seamen. I am aware that those medals have been handed down as heirlooms for a generation or two. I think it would be a better way of rewarding merit, if men succeeded in saving life.

Mr. FOSTER. The men appreciate something that they can use, and would rather have watches than medals. We get watches with as good works for $10 as for $25 or $30, and they are substantial timekeepers, although there is not the amount of finish and case on them, as with expensive watches.

Mr. PLATT. Are the instructions to the captains and crews, as laid down in the hon. gentleman's report, furnished to each member of the crew?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes; they have been provided this year for the first time.

Mr. PLATT. I must congratulate the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on the measures he has put forth, and I think successfully put forth, to increase the efficiency of the life-saving service. It is very gratifying to perceive that the work has been undertaken in a proper spirit and that good results have been obtained.

Mr. BRIEN. Is it the intention of the Minister to organise a crew on Pelee Island, where the life-boat is and has been for some time?

Mr. FOSTER. A boat-house is being built or has been built there.

Investigation into wrecks, &c. $1,500

Mr. JONES (Halifax). With respect to this item, I desire to ask the Minister of Marine, or the Minister of Justice, whether the Government could not undertake some system whereby investigations into wrecks would be rendered more effective than they are at the present time. Under the present law if a vessel has been cast away, as is sometimes the case, and the underwriters have every reason to believe that there has been foul play and the vessel has been wilfully cast away, they are very unwilling to take legal proceedings against the parties, because, in the event of failure to convict, the offender turns round and enters a suit for defamation of character against the company or individual in whose name the suit is commenced. In all cases of that kind it should be the duty of the Government to make those investigations, because they stand in a very different position from the position of underwriters when they make an arrest. I am aware of several instances where proceedings have been taken. In one or two instances the parties were convicted; in other cases the complainants failed to prove the case, and they had to compromise a suit for defamation of character. I think such proceedings should be undertaken by the Government, in the interest of commerce, and not initiated by private individuals. If this course were pursued, there would not be so many accidents along the coasts and on the high seas.

Mr. FOSTER. We are guided by the Act which we have on the Statute-books. In certain cases the Government do make investigations. By Order in Council they appoint persons to make the investigation and report to the Government. It is done in all cases where the case is an important one or where there are special charges made in regard to the management of the vessel, and the Government is specially asked to look into the matter. In those cases the Government appoint a commission, hold an investigation and bear the expense.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman says where there is an important case of the loss of a vessel an investigation is made. The loss of a schooner might not be considered a very important one, but it is just as important, so far as the underwriters are concerned. The frequency of the losses and the immunity from conviction lead to a repetition of the offence. I think the Government should make the investigation. They say that the duty rests with the underwriters. That is just what I want to point out to the Government, and that is where the difficulty comes in. The Government should step in and bring offenders to justice in that case the same as in other cases, and not to leave the prosecution for the underwriters, when if they failed to succeed in a case, they are threatened with an action at law. I hope the hon. gentleman will consider that. I know it is the law now, but I think it should be remedied.

Montreal and Quebec River and Water Police $40,000

Mr. LANDERKIN. On this vote I would ask, who is the captain of the water police at Quebec?

Mr. FOSTER. Benjamin Trudel.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is it the intention of the hon. Minister to retain him in the service?

Mr. FOSTER. It is; for the present.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is the hon. gentleman aware that he was convicted of perjury after trial by jury?

Mr. FOSTER. I am aware that there was a trial and a conviction in the first place, in which there was an appeal and the conviction was voided.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The jury found him guilty of perjury and he got off on a technicality, but the moral conviction is there. It was entirely on a legal technicality that he got off, because the evidence was at variance with the indictment. If the indictment had followed the evidence which was adduced in the case, the conviction would have stood, but the court decided on that technical point, and not on the merits of the case. If the conviction had been on the merits of the case, and the jury had come to a wrong decision the matter would be in a different position. But when a man is convicted of perjury, and although he may escape the punishment technically, it seems to me a great outrage that the Government should appoint him to such a position. Then, with regard to another matter, I do not see why the Government of the whole Dominion should be saddled with the expense of the harbor police at Montreal and Quebec. In St. John and Halifax we have got to rely on our own police for the protection of the people, but in Montreal and Quebec we find that this charge is put on the Government. It is true there are special fees which are exacted on shipping for that purpose, but this is a charge to some extent on the revenues of the Dominion, and I do not see on what principle it can be defended, unless the Government take charge of all such police forces. In the harbor of St. John there are more vessels than in Quebec. There are not such a number of large vessels it is true, but there are many large vessels there, and there is a considerable floating population in the summer, and all through the year, which is different from Quebec. The Dominion allows nothing for the harbor police there, and the expense is borne by the citizens. I do not see upon what principle this charge should be made on the Dominion Government, neither do I see upon what principle a man is appointed head of the Quebec police who stands upon the records as having been convicted by a jury of perjury after a fair impartial trial.

Mr. FOSTER. I acknowledge for the moment it is an anomaly that Montreal and Quebec should be provided with police in this way, but there seems to have been good reasons for it at the time the Act was passed, and we have been working under that Act since Confederation. There is a fee which is paid by the shipping for this purpose, and if my hon. friend will look at the report he will find that, from 1870 to 1887, the average cost to the public, outside of the fees that have been collected, has only been about $2,000 per year.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It was $17,000 last year.

Mr. FOSTER. Take the whole expenditure from 1870 to 1887 and deduct what came in from fees, and it will be found that it cost the country only about $2,000 a year to maintain the force. With reference to the port of Montreal especially, there is some agitation now to have the charge of the harbor taken over by the city police, and that the shipping be released from that fee. Mr. Trudel has been our officer in Quebec for a number of years, and he has always proved himself a good officer. I am not a lawyer nor have I had time to look at the evidence in his case. I simply take it that the court pronounced that Mr. Trudel was not guilty of the charge. With regard to the moral crime I have not looked into that matter.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). There is no doubt but that it is on a technical point he got clear. I think the Minister of Justice will support me in the position that so far as the merits of the case were concerned the jury found him guilty. The judges of the court of appeal did not pass upon that but simply upon the question that the evidence varied from the charge in the indictment. We all know that a party is given the benefit of a legal objection, such as this man has availed himself, and got clear through the astuteness of his counsel. The moral position in which he stands before the community is, that a jury—the proper tribunal to investigate those facts—found him guilty of perjury. There are instances in the books where men who had been convicted of a crime, and when there was not the slightest doubt of their guilt, have escaped on a technicality. Any lawyer will know this, and not only a lawyer, but I think the hon. Minister himself will know that this is the fact. The moral guilt remains the same, however. It seems to me that the Government should not appoint him as one of their paid officers to that position, and his appointment seems to me to be on a par with what they did when they allowed a man found guilty of corrupt practices to be appointed to a position on the eve of an election, and when they permitted a convict to be appointed as a returning officer.

Mr. THOMPSON. I cannot confirm what the hon. gentleman has said as I have not studied the evidence.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). He was let off on a technical objection.

Mr. THOMPSON. I understand the conviction was against him, but there was no evidence that he used the language with which he was charged, and the conviction was for giving testimony that he was not charged with. He was charged with one thing as far as I know and convicted of another. It may be, in the evidence there is something morally wrong but I have not studied it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The charge was that he stated a certain fact to the effect that the money was received from one person, and the evidence showed that it was received from another, but the fact remains that the statement he made and which he swore to, was untrue.

Mr. THOMPSON. Not having been charged with having made that statement he had no opportunity to defend it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The whole thing was fully gone into with regard to the evidence on the charge in the indictment, and the whole matter was fully investigated, and my hon. friend knows that it turned entirely upon a technicality.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not know anything of the kind. It is not technical if a man is charged with arson, and the jury convicted him of larceny.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I only judge of the report I saw in the papers.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. Minister of Marine is aware that this item which we are now discussing is an item that was there, previous to what we call the present union of all the Provinces. When Ontario and Quebec were united, they paid these amounts, and I suppose it was fair enough. But ever since Confederation it has been a subject of complaint from the people of the other Provinces, that we should be called upon to pay the expense of maintaining the harbor police of Montreal and Quebec. Now, by an Act recently passed, we have assumed the debts of the Montreal and Quebec Harbor Commissioners, and I think the time has arrived when this item should be taken from the Estimates. I find that last year the total expenditure on this account for Montreal was $17,413, and for Quebec $22,935, making $40,349; the receipts were: at Montreal, $10,450, and at Quebec, $12,483, making $22,934, showing a deficiency of $17,414. Now, it appears to me unfair, after we have assumed these large obligations for the benefit of Montreal and Quebec, that this country should be burdened with this deficiency. I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman say that there is a prospect of Montreal taking over the police, but I am afraid that he will find that if the citizens of Montreal see that they are likely to incur such an expenditure as these returns show, they will be very unwilling to assume the responsibility. Therefore I think the time is opportune for removing this item from the Estimates, and I give notice that on concurrence I intend moving that it be struck out.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the hon. gentleman quite misunderstands the nature of this charge. The question of taking over the Lake St. Peter debt has nothing whatever to do with the question of harbor police. He complains that it is a hardship that the people of the Dominion should pay for the maintenance of the harbor police in the cities of Quebec and Montreal. He forgets that the source from which that payment is made consists of collections from the shipping for whose benefit the harbor police are maintained. The hon. gentleman has quoted statistics to show that there has been a deficiency last year of $17,000. He is right this far, that I do not think we should be called on to vote a deficiency year after year. But, as I explained on a former occasion, it depends entirely on the number of ships visiting these harbors whether or not there will be a deficiency. When the department under my administration found that the tonnage dues were not sufficient to meet the expenditure, we brought in a Bill to increase them a little beyond what was actually required, so as to even up the cost with the tax. That continued for three or four years, when we found that we had to bring in another Bill to decrease them, when the average trade of shipping warranted it, so that we might not collect more than was necessary to maintain the force. That is a fair way to manage it, and I have no doubt that now that the attention of the Minister is called to this large deficiency that he will remedy it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What have we to do with it at all?

Mr. MITCHELL. We have everything to do with it. It is for the benefit of the shipping, and I do not suppose you want the cities of Montreal and Quebec to maintain a police force for that purpose.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). We do it in Halifax and St. John.

Mr. MITCHELL. You may do it in those ports of Halifax and St. John, where the tonnage is not at all commensurate with that of these large and important ports. One reason why we have maintained this system is that we found it in practice when we went into Confederation, and it has been fairly successful in accomplishing the object for which it was originally established, that of maintaining order on the vessels. If my hon. friend had been in Quebec on certain occasions during my administration of the department, and had witnessed some of the scenes enacted there, he would have seen how necessary it was to have a police maintained for the protection of the shipping; and what right have the cities of Montreal and Quebec to keep up a force for that purpose? No, it is right that the present system should be continued; but I am sure that the Minister of Marine will next year feel bound to bring in a Bill increasing the tax on shipping sufficiently to cover the deficiency which has been pointed out.

Mr. LOVITT. I object totally to the principle the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) lays down. Why should we not as well ask the Government to provide a police force to guard strangers who come into a city? There is no real difference between doing that and protecting ships that come into a harbor. I think his idea is preposterous. You might as well say that the Government should have a police to protect the floating population in a city. I am surprised to hear him make such a statement.

Mr. MITCHELL. If my hon. friend will recall some of the occurrences that took place at Quebec when the crimps defied the city police, tore men out of their fore-castle beds, and threatened to shoot them if they would not desert.

Mr. LOVITT. I was there.

Mr. MITCHELL. If he was, I would like to know whether he would not, for the sake of this trifling sum, prefer seeing order maintained there to having these scenes of violence and outrage. My hon. friend asks why we should not establish a police to protect strangers coming into a city. It is the property as well as the persons of the ship owners that are protected in this case, and why should the ship owners not pay for that protection. It is done in almost every port and why not here?

Mr. LOVITT. I have seen in the city of St. John the same things that the hon. gentleman relates as happening in Quebec.

Mr. MITCHELL. I doubt if you ever saw crimps going on board vessels, taking possession of them, and making the crew desert under penalty of being shot, and in one case actually shot a sailor for refusing to desert.

Mr. LOVITT. I have seen it dozens of times.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). My hon. friend says this tax should be regulated so as to meet the expense, but why should not the citizens of Montreal regulate that tax?

Mr. MITCHELL. They have not the power.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Give them the power. They have the power of appointing policemen.

Mr. MITCHELL. They have no power of raising a tax off shipping.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is their duty not only to protect life but to protect property, and they appoint the policemen to protect property. The hon. gentleman cannot point to any maritime port in the world where the charge is not borne by the port.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will give my hon. friend an illustration to show that it is impossible to carry out his idea. A vessel arrives in the port of Quebec and anchors two-thirds of the way across the river in the vicinity of Lévis. The crew mutiny. The captain hoists a signal, and the police put off and take possession.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Why cannot the city police do that?

Mr. MITCHELL. Because they have not jurisdiction.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Give them jurisdiction.

Mr. MITCHELL. Better make the laws before you find fault with the existing system; do not abolish a system that works well before you change the law and provide for a new one.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). If at Black Rock or at Douglstown a mutiny arose, would not the police be sent from Chatham.

Mr. MITCHELL. The case is not parallel, because Lévis and Quebec, which are on opposite sides of the river, are not in the same county, while Chatham and Douglstown are.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec Centre). There is more than that. Frequently the river police go a long distance from the city, not only outside what may be considered the city proper, but as far as Patrick's Hole off the Island of Orleans and Cap Rouge, nine miles above Quebec.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Give the city police power to go there.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec Centre). It cannot be expected that the city police of Quebec will do police duty nine miles away.

Mr. ELLIS. It is absurd that a rich city like Montreal, into which all the wealth of the Dominion flows, should not be compelled to support its own police. If the people of Quebec are not able to protect the ships that come to their port against the citizens of that place, they had better disband their organisation altogether. The hon. gentleman says that the citizens of Quebec—crimps—make trouble on board ships. Well, that occurs in our own port, and our city is compelled three or four times a year to send the police out into the Bay of Fundy. What we are discussing now is the opportunity of getting rid of this charge which the country should not bear; but if the laws do not reach a case like this they can be made to reach it.

Mr. MITCHELL. My hon. friend fails to notice this distinction: that the city of St. John and the county of St. John are on both sides of the harbor; but that in the case of Lévis and Quebec there is one county on one side and another on the other, and it is no part of the duty of the citizens of Quebec to guard the river on the Lévis side, nor have the city police jurisdiction. Should trouble occur on board a vessel lying on the Lévis side, the city of Quebec officers cannot go there because they have no jurisdiction.

Mr. LOVITT. We are not finding fault with the river police, but to say they cannot go to Lévis is absurd; they need not go. The people of Lévis are a French population who give no trouble.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The hon. gentleman has not said whether it is the intention of the Government to retain the captain of the water police in the service?

Mr. FOSTER. When the first finding of the jury was given, I commenced an investigation into the matter, but an appeal was immediately taken, and I did nothing until I could see the result of the appeal.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The Minister must be aware of the state of police affairs in Montreal, and the revelations that took place there last fall. It is highly important, therefore, that the chief of the staff should be a man whose reputation is not smirched by a charge so serious to his reputation.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). A question has been raised as to jurisdiction. On that point I do not pretend to offer an opinion, but, as there may be something in it, and I should be sorry to take any action which might in the meantime prevent protection being given to property there, I will not move this Session, trusting that the Government will drop the item next Session, and, if they do not, I will take action upon it next Session.

Removal of obstructions in navigable rivers, including removal of wreck of Ottawa in River St. Lawrence..... $14,000

Mr. MITCHELL. How is it that the same sum is voted this year as last year? Was that amount expended in the removal last year of the wreck of the Ottawa?

Mr. FOSTER. $10,000 is a revote for that purpose, and the other $4,000 is the usual amount for the removal of wrecks.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is no portion which is a revote.

Mr. FOSTER. I think $10,000 of this is a revote.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then the hon. gentleman's estimates are not correctly drawn, because in all other cases, the revote is stated in a separate column, but it is not in this.

Mr. FOSTER. There should be a statement of the revote here. The amount of the contract for the removal of that obstruction was, I think, $12,000. By this time, probably more than two-thirds of the wreck have been removed, and the contractor hopes to have the whole removed this season. The essence of the contract is that the contractor should not be paid until the whole is removed, but some small advances have been made.

Mr. MITCHELL. Under the contract, does the contractor get the wreck materials, or do the Government get the benefit of that?

Mr. FOSTER. The contractor gets the wreck materials.

Maintenance and repairs to lights, fog whistles, buoys and beacons, and humane establishments. $329,000

Mr. EISENHauer. I brought to the notice of the Minister of Marine the great necessity there is for an alarm buoy to be placed at the eastern entrance to Lunenburg. A petition was presented to his department three years ago, and during the two Sessions I have been here, I have been endeavoring to press this matter on his attention, but nothing has been done. The largest portion of the fishing fleet there come in and out by the eastern entrance. The channel is very narrow there, and there is a very large sunken reef at the east point, and there are a number of sunken shoals laying off Cross Island. Our fishermen seem to think that they are so well acquainted with those shoals that they can come in there even in very thick weather. Some vessels have been wrecked there during the past few years, and their cargoes lost. I think the department should pay some attention to this matter. As the hon. gentleman knows, the port of Lunenburg is now a very important port. It has nearly 100 sail of fishing vessels, besides about twenty vessels in the West India trade. There is a fog-alarm on Cross Island, but after that is passed there is nothing else to guide vessels through this dangerous passage, and I hope the Minister will pay some attention to this matter. I understand that he has some buoys of this description under construction, and I hope he will see that one of them is placed at this dangerous spot during the present season.

Completion and construction of lighthouses and fog-alarms $40,000

Mr. FOSTER. I propose to reduce this item by $10,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman has been good enough to send me a list of the amounts to be expended under this item. They are as follows:—

Range lights at Byng Inlet, Georgian Bay, Ontario...	$ 400
Beacon or range lights, on or near Stag Island, River St. Clair, Ontario	400
Range lights at the Lime Kiln Crossing, Detroit River, Ontario	2,000
Fog-alarm at Pelee Point light, Lake Erie.....	10,000

I should like to enquire of the Minister of Marine how it comes that the fog-alarm at Pelee Point costs so large a sum as $10,000? Other fog-alarms are put down at $3,000.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not the cost of the fog-alarm itself, but it is the place on which it has to be put. We have a light-house there, and this is upon a pier at a very difficult point, and that will require large repairs. This is in the track of the large traffic between Lake Erie and the upper lakes, and it is a very dangerous point, and there has been a great demand for a fog-alarm there. I have taken advantage of the repairs this year to make the pier a little larger and to place the fog-alarm upon it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The rest of this statement is as follows:—

Beacon light on wharf at Ste. Anne de Beaupré, below Quebec, Quebec.....	$ 200
Fog-alarm at Bicquette Light Station, Rimouski County, Quebec.....	2,000
Lighthouse on Norton's Point, Bathurst Harbor, Gloucester Co., N.B.....	600
Lighthouse on Folly Point, Westmoreland County...	1,000
Beacon light on pier at Anderson's Hollow, Bay of Fundy, Albert County, N. B.....	200
Steam fog-alarm at Meagher's Beach, N. S.....	3,000
Automatic buoy for Bantam Rock, off Baccaro Point, N.S.....	1,250
Automatic buoy for the coast of Nova Scotia.	1,250
Two bell buoys to be located on the coast of Nova Scotia.....	2,000
Beacon light at Belliveau's Cove, Digby Co., N. S...	200
Light at Cold Spring Head, Cumberland Co., N.S....	1,500
Light and fog-alarm at Bonilla Point, B.C.....	4,000

Total..... $30,000

Mr. LOVITT. The Minister will remember a petition which was presented to him for a light on Elwin's Island, Yarmouth county, which was very numerously signed, and in fact was signed by his own officer Captain Scott. The hon. gentleman promised last season that he would go down himself to see it, but he did not. It is a very dangerous place and, if he is proposing to reduce this vote by $10,000, I think he might give us a light there. I see there is a light to be put at Anderson's Hollow in the Bay of Fundy. Certainly it is not as much required there as it is on Elwin's Island.

Mr. EISENHAUER.

Mr. FOSTER. There is an estimate in another place of $10,000 for a special work in the Lower Traverse, in the River St. Lawrence. $40,000 is the usual vote that has been taken for years for the construction of light-houses. With reference to that island, I passed through the channel last summer. There is a light-house at Pease Island about two miles from the northern shore of Ellenwood Island. There are two passages there, I believe, which are fairly well defined; I suppose the difficulty is in foggy weather, and I think we shall have to build a light-house there at some future time.

Mr. COOK. I believe the hon. Minister last year promised the then member for Halton that he would erect a beacon light at Point Baril, on the north shore of the Georgian Bay.

Mr. FOSTER. I promised this to the then member for Halton. He came to me several times with reference to a light-house at Point Baril, and I proposed to him to undertake the building of it himself, and I would put a certain amount in the Estimates for it. I gave him the plan, but somehow he failed to go on and build it, and the scheme fell through in that way. I think if he had carried it out, it would have been built economically. It is not my fault that it was not carried out.

Mr. COOK. It is a very important point, and there are steamers lying there all the time. It is a difficult place to approach, and very rocky.

Mr. GORDON. I would like to ask the Minister if the sum intended for British Columbia includes the erection of a lighthouse at the point which lies opposite Cape Flattery?

Mr. FOSTER. The lighthouse and fog-alarm for which this sum is put in the Estimates are meant for that point, and the Boards of Trade, the shipping interests and the member from Vancouver Island have represented to me the importance of that work.

Mr. GORDON. I am very thankful that the hon. gentleman recognises that point as one of the most important on the coast. I am glad to see that his department is looking after the interests of the Province.

Mr. LOVITT. I would like to call the attention of the Minister to complaints that have been made about the fog-alarm at Yarmouth Cape, that it cannot be heard.

Mr. FOSTER. We had some correspondence about it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Has the Minister come to a conclusion about putting up a light-house at Baril Point. It is the most important point on the whole of that coast. I understand that the Minister and the lumbermen had made an arrangement between themselves for the building of that light, and I am sorry that it has not been carried out. I would also ask the Minister to send his officers to inspect the light in the mouth of French River, as there is a great defect in it. The timber needs to be cut down.

Mr. FOSTER. The department has the matter now under charge.

Signal Service..... $6,000

Mr. FOSTER. This is the signal service which is carried out on the coast of the river and the Gulf of St. Lawrence as far as Newfoundland, at posts where vessels are signalled and reported to the head office at Quebec, so that it is known in Quebec and Montreal when vessels come and when they go, and what is the state of the weather, ice, &c.

Maintaining buoys, &c., in the St. Lawrence River below Montreal..... $7,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That will have to be doubled now.

Mr. FOSTER. It is the same vote.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The Harbor Commissioners paid part of that under their old arrangement, and we only paid a portion of it. Where is the balance to come from?

Mr. FOSTER. We gave them so much, and they attended to the whole service.

Salaries and Disbursements of Fishery Overseers and Wardens $225,500

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think you will have to let that stand until we get the report from the department.

Mr. FOSTER. It will be impossible to get the report before the House rises. I have explained the reasons to the House.

Mr. COOK. I have some remarks to offer in connection with a fishery overseer on Georgian Bay. I believe it is not the custom of the Government, and especially of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, to allow their officials to become public agents and election heelers. There is a gentleman who at one time lived in the village of Victoria Harbor, who at the last election, and at all elections since I have known him, has taken a very deep interest in political matters. I would not find fault with him for exercising his franchise or assisting his party at elections, but I do find fault with him when he used the influence he possesses as a Government official to promote party purposes. I find fault when I know that he promised electors in different parts of the county bordering upon the shores where his jurisdiction extends, that if they would support the Conservative candidate he would give them permits to fish at any time they desired. Is the hon. Minister in possession of that fact?

Mr. FOSTER. I am not.

Mr. COOK. A local newspaper publishes an article which I will read:

"Considerable dissatisfaction is felt in some places along the shore of the Georgian Bay on account of the fishery inspector, Mr. F. G. M. Fraser, giving certain parties permission to net fish during the close season. Of course, the fishermen see the wisdom of Mr. Fraser's action easily and support him, but lots of sober-minded men and fishermen to whom the privilege has not been granted express a different opinion—and express it pretty strongly too. It seems strange that when there is posted up in every fishing town, village or hamlet in the Dominion, proclamations forbidding under most severe penalties the capture of pickerel between the 15th of April and 15th of May, and of maekinongé and bass, between the 15th of April and 15th of June, the inspector should be empowered to extend a verbal permission to whoever he pleases, to break this law and to set their nets without let or hindrance. All fish that may be caught in the seine are therefore the lawful property of the fisherman, although the spawning season has now fully set in and the amount of young fish destroyed in their embryonic state will be incalculable, no restriction will be put upon the number thus destroyed. There are many who say that Mr. Fraser is exceeding his power when he allows this course to be pursued; but we have every reason for saying such is not the case. The Government is to blame, for giving him this privilege. Having it, he has a perfect right to use it. But what will be the consequence of this enormous slaughter of fish-spawn. Will it not be felt in the future when our natural heritage becomes worthless through a too liberal policy? One of the most important matters the nation has to deal with is the conservation of our fisheries."

Did the hon. gentleman give that privilege to the fishery overseer, Fraser, as stated in that article?

Mr. FOSTER. I understand the charge is that Mr. Fraser gives permits to whosoever he pleases to fish during the close season. Neither Mr. Fraser or any other officer has such an authorisation from the department. I do not believe he has done it; but now that the matter has been brought to my attention by the hon. gentleman, I will look into it.

Mr. COOK. I know he made those pledges, because some of the parties to whom he made the promise—that if they would support the Conservative candidate at the last general election, he would grant them this privilege—refused to accept the conditions on which he proposed they should obtain it. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he proposes to allow such a condition of things to exist?

Mr. O'BRIEN. While I know that officer to be a very ardent politician, I do not believe, as a matter of fact, he did anything of the sort. I do not believe the statement. I know the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Cook) would not make, on his own authority, any statement unless he knew it to be true, but not having heard the charge before, I venture to say, knowing Mr. Fraser, that it is without foundation. He is a most efficient officer.

Mr. COOK. The hon. gentleman says he has taken an active part in politics.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The hon. gentleman will not tell me that a man receiving a salary of $100 a year is to be debarred from taking any part in politics. I venture to say Mr. Fraser did not do what he is charged with doing in that matter.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I am glad to hear the member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) declare that the small salary of $100 should not debar any man from taking active part in politics, because I wish to call the attention of the Minister to a case. There was a man in my constituency who was fishery warden at a small salary, who has been dismissed. He, like Mr. Fraser, was an active politician, but his views differed from those of the Government; but as regards using any official position it is certain that he did nothing of the kind, and he did only what he thought was right. In 1885 a letter was written to him by the inspector. It is in these terms:

"Sir,—Information from very reliable sources has reached the Minister that you are openly and covertly using the influence your position as a paid officer of the Government gives you, as a political canvasser and strong partisan for the party opposing the Government whose officer you are.

"Strong influence is being brought to secure your dismissal, and if you still use your official influence against the Government, you can hardly be surprised if your dismissal follows."

Mr. O'BRIEN. That was official influence.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Cook) complains of is official influence being used. But the hon. member for Muskoka said Mr. Fraser was an ardent politician.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I deny that he used his official influence.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I am taking the statement ardent politician, and is it to be supposed that a man with a salary of $100 or $150 a year is to close his mouth with respect to politics. As to the hon. gentleman talking about official position, I cannot understand that a man with a small salary can have any official influence; for the statement is perfectly absurd, unless it is in the direction pointed out by the hon. member for East Simcoe—where an official breaks the law by giving permits to fish during the close season. There was not the slightest chance in the case I mentioned to use official influence, and in fact he took very little part in the election. During 1887 he took part in the election. On the 20th of June he received the following letter:—

"Sir,—I have the honor, by direction of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General has been pleased to dispense with your services as official overseer in St. John county, N. B."

He then wrote to ascertain for what reason he had been dismissed, and he received the following letter:—

"Sir,—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 5th inst., and in reply to state that I am commanded to inform you the change of fishery officer at St. Martin's was made in the public interest and for the betterment of the service."

This gentleman who was dismissed was commended by the department and by the inspector for the efficient manner in which he discharged his duties, and he was stated to be one of the best fishery wardens in New Brunswick. No doubt he was dismissed because he chose to vote for myself and my colleague in the election of 1887, and a man was put in office who has never made a single report or done anything whatever in looking after the fisheries, but he happens to be a brother of one of my strong opponents. In this case I consider a gross injustice and unfairness has been done towards this officer, who, I believe, has now in his possession a report of the department stating that he was an efficient officer. I understand that the present man, although I say it subject to correction, has done nothing except to receive his salary.

Mr. SPROULE. If this rule laid down by the hon. gentleman is held good, there are officers in my part of the country that might have been dismissed some time ago. Although they are active politicians since their appointment to the office in 1874 or 1876, no persons have paid any attention to it whatever, and they have enjoyed the same privileges as other members of the community who have the privilege to exercise the franchise.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). A man ought not to be dismissed for that.

Mr. SPROULE. Although they have been strong partisans, put in their place by the Mackenzie Government, and have taken an active part in the elections, no person has ever complained of it nor do I complain of it now. I do complain that the money paid to those fishery inspectors in different parts of the country is like money thrown away. They are appointed to look after small streams through the country, and I know that fishing is carried on there with nets in season and out of season. We usually see those men once a year when they put up a notice telling the people what is the fishery season, and the penalties for fishing in the close season, but that is the last we see of them during the year. They draw their salaries and they do not protect the fish, nor do I think there is any special reason for protecting them. It seems to me that if there was no fishery officer within 100 miles, the fish would be protected as well as they are now by those officers, who receive their salary and do nothing for it.

Mr. COOK. I never found fault with this gentleman canvassing. He has always taken an active part in politics, but I say that the Government has dismissed a man for simply exercising his franchise in the constituency of my hon. friend for St. John (Mr. Weldon). I draw the attention of the Government to the fact that this man Fraser has not only been canvassing, which I do not wish to charge him with, but he has violated the law by issuing permits to fish in the close season.

Mr. FOSTER. Was it with authority?

Mr. COOK. The hon. gentleman says he has no authority.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman must not say what I did not say. I did not say anything of the kind. I said that no fishery officer has discretionary power given to him to give verbal permits during the close season. Permits are sometimes given, and close seasons extended but by the orders from the department. That is different from the giving discretionary powers to an officer.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). They are applied generally.

Mr. FOSTER. Generally; as far as a district is concerned. They may apply to a certain river and not to all.

Mr. COOK. I do not know on what authority those special permits were given by the officer.

Mr. FOSTER. Is the hon. gentleman certain from his own knowledge that such has been done?

Mr. COOK. I only know from this article.

Mr. FOSTER. I complain that a man who has always proved himself a good officer as far as the department is concerned should be condemned by my hon. friend from Mr. WELDON (St. John).

St. John (Mr. Weldon). My hon. friend from St. John took an assertion of the member for East Simcoe that permits were said to have been given by this man as proof of the fact.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I said I would assume the statement of the hon. member for Muskoka.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend said more. He turned round and said: Here is a man who has been giving away permits.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). That is the case if the statement was true.

Mr. FOSTER. The first principle of law should have guarded my hon. friend from St. John from making such a statement without proof.

Mr. COOK. I ask the hon. Minister if he gave this officer any special authority?

Mr. FOSTER. I have no knowledge of any special authority, but I have about 800 fishery officers, and I should have to look the matter over before I expressed an opinion on that question.

Mr. COOK. As regards the political complexion of it, I can assure the hon. gentleman that this man is a politician, but I do not want to make any charge against him on this ground. I was told at the last election that he was using those permits as a means to secure votes. I find an article here in a newspaper which is about as truthful as anything that will emanate from any department, or from the hon. gentleman himself.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The Minister is wrong in saying that I took the statement of my hon. friend from East Simcoe. I stated if what the hon. gentleman said was true, this man was not only acting as a politician but he was using the authority of the Government or otherwise to violate the law. It is stated that Mr. Skillen was dismissed in the interests of the public. I should like to know why he was dismissed in the interests of the public and on what grounds?

Mr. FOSTER. A fishery officer is not a permanent officer and many of those officers are dismissed from year to year. A man may be a very good officer and yet there may exist very good reasons why changes should be made.

Mr. COOK. I expect the hon. gentleman will investigate this matter.

Mr. FOSTER. I told you that I would do so.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I want to know the reasons why in June, 1887, after the elections, Skillen was dismissed right in the middle of the season, when he had a certificate that he was a good officer.

Mr. PLATT. Before you pass from Ontario, I wish to ask some explanation from the Minister as to the instructions he gives his officers in the Province of Ontario, especially in regard to inland waters—waters that are not navigable—and about which there is a question of the jurisdiction between the Dominion and the Provinces. Great difficulty has arisen in those smaller lakes in Ontario, as to the control over them by the fishery inspectors of the Dominion. I understand that during the close season the Dominion officers have control, but during the open season there is a difficulty as to whether the officers have control as to the method of fishing, as to how they should issue license, and as to the principle of riparian rights. I think the hon. gentleman answered a similar question last year, and that they are refusing to grant licenses in those smaller waters. Still a difficulty has arisen, because Dominion officials, whether by authority or not, do attempt to exercise authority on some of the smaller lakes of Ontario.

Mr. FOSTER. The matter is now being attended to by the department. We do not allow our officers to issue any licenses or take any fees on waters which are clearly provincial waters, and we are now making out a list of those waters which clearly fall under the jurisdiction of the Local Government and we intend to withdraw our officers largely, if not entirely, from those waters. There may be a number which are debatable, and as to those I intend to have a conference with the Ontario authorities, when I hope the matter will be decided amicably, and some arrangement will be come to so that there will be no clashing and no duplication of officers.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to bring a fisherman's grievance to the attention of the Minister, not to charge him with anything in connection with it, but merely to seek his influence on behalf of the fishermen. He knows that a large number of the fishermen in the Province of Ontario are poor, and the fishing is generally done by a system of gilling nets. In the construction of those nets three kinds of twine are used. The fishermen, being poor and liable to have their nets destroyed, employ the close season and winter months in constructing their own nets, and their wives and families could employ their time profitably in that way. But recently some change has taken place in customs resolutions by which a duty is imposed on one class of twine while it is not on others. The finer class has been made to rank as thread, and has been made liable to a duty of 20 per cent., so that the price of the gilling twine used by the fishermen has largely increased. The three classes are denominated as sturn twine, salmon twine and white-fish twine. The white-fish twine is that which the fishermen use, and while the net can be brought in duty free, the twine of which it is made is taxed, so that there is this anomaly that the manufactured article is admitted free while a duty is imposed on the raw material. I trust that the influence of the Minister of Fisheries will be used with the Department of Customs to have this anomaly removed.

Committee rose and reported progress.

FIRST READING, &c.

Bill (No. 139) respecting the Stanstead, Shefford and Chambly Railway Company.—(Mr. Fisher.)

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1.05 a. m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, 19th May, 1888.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at One o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BILLS WITHDRAWN.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that the orders of the House for Bill (No. 68) to incorporate the Alberta Railway and Coal Company; Bill (No. 81) to incorporate the Ontario, Manitoba and Western Railway Company; and Bill (No. 85) to incorporate the Emerson and North-Western Railway Company, be discharged and the Bills withdrawn, and the fees remitted less cost of printing and translation.

Mr. EDGAR. At this stage of the Session there is no other course left except to take this step, but I really think the Government and the chairman of the Railway Committee should explain why it has become necessary to allow these Bills, some of which are very important Bills and desirable in the public interest, to have been delayed so long without having been considered by the Railway Committee, and in fact without a meeting of the Railway Committee being called for the purpose of considering them. I suppose the Government felt a difficulty in allowing some of these charters to be granted because the arrangement by which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were to abandon their monopoly rights had not been formally carried out by this House. But since the House has passed upon that subject, there has been plenty of time for the Government to have taken action in this matter. I think this is the second Session that the Bill for the railways from Winnipeg to Lake Superior has been thrown over in this way. The House is entitled to some explanation in regard to the matter.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is aware that when these Bills came before the Railway Committee it was deemed desirable they should be deferred, on the statement I made that the Government wished to consider them. Having considered them, the Government were convinced that they could not proceed with these Bills for the same reason that we refused to proceed with similar Bills the previous year, because the lines would interfere with the contract made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The hon. gentleman says: Yes, that is no doubt so.

Mr. EDGAR. I did not admit it was so as regards the railway from Winnipeg east.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Then a measure was laid before the House respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and their contract for the purpose of settling that difficulty and having the monopoly clause in their contract disappear, leaving the Government free for the future. That Bill passed this House. But the hon. gentleman says now that that Bill has passed, what objection should there be to passing these railway Bills under consideration. The Bill has not yet passed, it has come back from the Senate and there are amendments to the Bill; and until it becomes law, the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company still holds good. Under these circumstances the Government do not think they are free to proceed with these Bills. The time left between now and the end of the Session is too short to have the Canadian Pacific Railway Bill sanctioned and these railway Bills taken up and considered. Therefore I made this motion. It is the only course left, and if those gentlemen wish to bring back their Bill, they will have an opportunity next Session.

Mr. EDGAR. With the permission of the House I would say, that the hon. gentleman's explanation does not satisfy my mind, because the third reading of those railway Bills could have been held over to the close of the Session.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). My friend deserves the thank of the House for having brought this matter under consideration. Those people made their application in all good faith. They anticipated they would have been able to get the Bill through, and they were informed that there would be an agreement between the Parliament of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway, which would enable them to get charters this Session. Some of them have made arrangements in the old country for raising the funds for the construction of those roads, and although we have made provision to settle the difficulty between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Dominion, allowing railways to be built there, the Government by the course they are now adopting gives the advantage to the Canadian Pacific Railway for another year. I ask you, Sir, is it a fair thing? Is it a proper course to pursue, and is it a proper thing to treat the people of the North-West in this manner? The financial arrangements are made for the construction of these roads, and yet we are still leaving in the hands of the Canadian Pacific Railway for another year before we grant any charter for the construction of those roads. I say it is unfair to the people of the North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman objects to this motion of my hon. friend, he can easily withdraw it.

Mr. EDGAR. That is not fair. We do not object to the motion.

Motion agreed to, and Bills withdrawn.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY MORTGAGE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman opposite will remember that we were promised the mortgage in this Canadian Pacific Railway matter. The Minister of Justice, if I remember aright, said he would make all possible exertions to bring it down. I want to know if it is ready yet?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is not ready, and it cannot be brought down. It is not a question of the actual work of preparing it, but it involves the consideration of some most important safeguards, and those have to be sanctioned by the Governor in Council, and require careful consideration. It requires much more consideration and care than we possibly could be able to give it now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am willing to accept the hon. gentleman's explanation, but I must remind the Government that this was distinctly promised before the Bill was passed through.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And in very good faith.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am aware that such a document would necessarily be one that would require a good deal of consideration, and I accept the statement. I think in a matter of this kind, that the document should have been prepared simultaneously with the passage of the Bill, because it seems to me you ought to have your agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway so far perfected, that there could be no possible chance of any dispute or any difficulty arising between the two contracting parties.

MEMBERS' INDEMNITY.

Mr. TROW. It may be out of place for me to ask a question, but I do so merely to get information for hon. members on both sides of this House. I understand from the account that there is a misunderstanding in reference to the sessional allowance of members. In the absence of some members for weeks at a time, we find that they have been paid during this Session of Parliament and other Sessions, by making a reduction of $8 a day for the days they were absent out of their total indemnity. It appears that members who were only a few days present received their whole $1,000 with mileage, and were given credit for the whole Session refunding $8 a day for the days they were absent. The question arises whether that is the rule, and if that rule is to be adhered to there are members who wish to know whether they should receive only $10 a day during the time they have been present, or whether they would receive their whole sessional allowance and refund the $8 for each day they were absent. A few years ago we find that one member who was unseated during the Session received his sessional allowance for two Sessions, although he was only here part of one Session. He received nearly $2,000 while he was only here one-third of the Session. There should, I think, be some established rule understood by all the members.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The law prescribes what members of Parliament are to get for their sessional allowance, and what deductions are to be made. There can be no doubt, as the statute is quite clear and beyond any ambiguity. I am not at all aware of the special circumstances the hon. gentleman has reference to now, but we will enquire and let the hon. gentleman know to-morrow.

Mr. LAURIER. The difficulty is this: the statute provides that if the Session lasts for 30 days the Session allowance is to be $10, and if the Session lasts more than 30 days the allowance is to be $1,000. There are some members who have been elected just a few days ago. Some persons contend that they are entitled only to the thirty day allowance for the days they sat in the House. I would claim they are entitled to $1,000, deducting $8 a day for each day they have not sat in the House. The statute, if I construe it aright, is that if the Session lasts more than thirty days the sessional allowance will be $1,000, and that if a man sits, one, two, three, ten or thirty days, and if the Session is more than thirty days, then the sessional allowance is $1,000 less the number of days he has not sat. This was the principle that was maintained in the case of the hon. member for Northumberland, who received not only one but two allowances.

Mr. MITCHELL. What Northumberland does the hon. gentleman mean?

Mr. LAURIER. It is not you. There are more Northumberlands than one, and you are not the one I referred to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the hon. gentleman be a little more specific in future where such a serious charge is made.

FAREWELL ADDRESS TO HIS EXCELLENCY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As the House knows, the Senate has adopted an Address to His Excellency the Governor General on the occasion of his regretted departure from Canada to assume distinguished duties in another part of the Empire. The Address passed by the Senate (p. 1561) is expressed in such appropriate language, and in such eloquent terms, that it would be exceedingly presumptuous for me to add any expressions of my own in addition to the language used by the Senate. I do not think I am called upon to make one single remark in addition, and I now move, seconded by my hon. friend Mr. Laurier:

That this House concurs in the Address from the Senate to His Excellency the Governor General, on the occasion of his approaching departure, and expressing sincere regret at the termination of His Excellency's official connection with Canada.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, in seconding this Address, I will follow the example of the right hon. First Minister and content myself, at this stage of the Session, with adding no remark whatever. As the hon. gentleman has said, the address speaks for itself, and the sentiments which it conveys are not, I am sure, the mere formal, conventional expression of perfunctory lip courtesy, but they are the deep expression of the feelings which the Canadian people at large entertain towards His Excellency and towards the illustrious lady who has exhibited during her sojourn amongst us, all those noble womanly domestic qualities which are ever dear to the British and the Canadian heart.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved, seconded by Mr. Laurier:

That a Message be sent to the Senate, acquainting their Honors that this House has agreed to the said Address by filling up the blank with the word "Commons."

Motion agreed to.

ELECTORAL FRANCHISE ACT.

Mr. CHAPLEAU moved third reading of Bill (No. 117) to amend the Electoral Franchise Act, chap. 5 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

Mr. LAURIER moved in amendment :

That the said Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole in order to amend the same, so as to provide that a revision of the lists take place in all electoral divisions where the election of the sitting members is controverted.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Laurier.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. AMYOT. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Godbout) and the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Fiset) have not voted.

Mr. Fiset. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I was asked to pair off with the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Guilbault), and I thought I could not refuse to do so.

Bill read the third time and passed.

THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 132) respecting a certain agreement between the Government of Canada and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. EDGAR. What are the amendments ?

Mr. THOMPSON. It appears that the company has not, by any of its legislation heretofore, obtained the power to make the mortgage which is required by the agreement, and the first amendment is simply to insert after the word "money," in page 1, line 27, the following words: "Which bonds the company is hereby empowered to issue." The second amendment is to declare that they have power to secure the mortgage. The third amendment simply repeats the section of the agreement in relation to the Emerson branch.

Mr. EDGAR. It seems to me this clause simply covers the agreement entered into between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway, except the additional power of issuing the bonds, which should have been in the Bill originally.

Amendments concurred in.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

House resolved itself into Committee to consider certain proposed resolutions respecting subsidies to be granted to certain railway companies, and toward the construction of certain railways mentioned.—(Sir Charles Tupper.)

(In the Committee.)

To the Ottawa and Parry Sound Railway Company, for 22 miles of their railway from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway to Eganville, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 49 Victoria, chapter 10, for a railway from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway to Eganville, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $70,400.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this Ottawa and Parry Sound Railway in operation ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Ottawa and Parry Sound Railway was chartered during the present Session by Bill No. 175, from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway, in or near the village of Renfrew, to the village of Eganville, thence to a point on the Georgian Bay, at or near the village of Parry Sound, about 132 miles, and the section of the Canadian Pacific Railway to Eganville, 22 miles, the most eastern section of the road, and the object of the resolution is to insure the subsidy granted to the railway between these points two years ago, 22 miles at $3,200 per mile, or in the whole $96,000 to the Ottawa Parry Sound Railway Company. In fact, the amount is less in this resolution than that which has already been voted. It is simply to enable the company to bring Ottawa and Montreal in direct railway communication with the Georgian Bay on Lake Huron, by a very direct route. It is to carry out the resolution of two years ago, and the amount asked is less than the amount then voted.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the Government have some information as to the feasibility of the line of road proposed up the valley of the Bonnechere to Parry Sound. The Government must be aware that some time ago that was the line proposed for the connection of the Canada Central with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that, on account of the reports by the engineer in charge of the road, the Government found that owing to the gradients on that line it was impossible to build the road, and eventually changed the location of the line to Pembroke. I suppose that this company have some information by which they may be able to build the line through there, other than that with which the Government were furnished some years ago.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. colleague, the Minister of Railways, who is not able to be in his place in the House, informs me that he has looked carefully into this, and is satisfied it is a perfectly feasible route, and one that will best answer the purposes for which it is intended.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We are not making an additional charge, and, therefore, though not to be understood as in any wise approving or consenting to the policy, I am not going to dwell particularly on the sum granted, but the point I want to understand is this: what guarantees have the Government that this particular railway, for illustration sake, has means to go on with this work? Now, we have had several discussions as to the extreme inexpediency of granting what are known as bogus charters, or charters, at any rate, which men get hold of for the purpose of selling, and some very disgraceful transactions are known to have occurred with reference to charters which have been. I think unadvisably, granted by this House. I think my hon. friend beside me suggested, and I think I suggested myself, that where subsidies are given, the Government should take precaution to make certain that the parties were able to build the roads. And I think that the best plan would be to provide that a considerable deposit, in proportion to the size of the railway, should be placed in the hands of the Government, to be forfeited in the case of a company that came here, got a charter, obtained a subsidy, and did not proceed with the work. I should like to know if the Government have any information as to the solvency of this company?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman must remember that none of these parties can do anything or can get a dollar of money from the Government unless they make a contract with the Government. The responsibility of making that contract, as my hon. friend says, is no doubt a very serious one, involving that the parties must show that they have the means of carrying the work through. I believe my hon. friend the Minister of Railways has taken good care in all the contracts he has made to see that the parties had the requisite ability to carry out their work; but, in any case, not a dollar of public money can be obtained by them unless the work is performed under a contract entered into with the Minister of Railways.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No doubt that is true, but it does not meet one point which is of public importance, and that is that the control of a charter like this, carrying with it the grant of a considerable amount of public money, should not be allowed to go into the hands of persons who may make merchandise of it, who may sell it, and I know no means by which that can be prevented better than by requiring a deposit to be made, and forfeiting that if the parties do not go on with the work.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I quite recognise the importance of the point taken by the hon. gentleman, and no doubt that would be a very good way, if it were not for one reason. The object of most of these grants is to help companies that have not sufficient private capital, and to assist them in carrying out important works. If the parties were obliged to raise the amount and to deposit it and to lose the advantage of a considerable sum of money, it might embarrass parties who otherwise could go on and complete works which we consider in the interests of the country. The suggestion of the hon. gentleman is well worthy of consideration, and I agree with him that every possible means should be taken to prevent trafficking in railway charters. The object is to assist deserving enterprises, but not to allow speculators to traffic in these charters.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Would it not be well to provide in the Bill that these companies shall only obtain a charter on condition that they shall not sell it. Make that a condition precedent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That also might be a matter well worthy the consideration of the Railway Committee.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like to call the attention of the chairman of the Railway Committee, the Minister of Public Works, to this point. My hon. friend from South Oxford has called attention to the fact that, during the sittings of the Railway Committee, I called attention to the tendency there was in this country to traffic in railway charters, and that I had suggested that the committee should take steps to hedge the granting of charters in such a way that merely speculative charters not be obtained.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. MITCHELL. That suggestion met with the approval of the committee, and I suggested that the chairman should take some steps in that direction. He stated then that steps would be taken before the close of the Session to prepare a set of regulations to meet the case. No doubt, owing to the pressure of business it has not been possible for him to do that, and no doubt also, on my part, I have been guilty of neglect in not again calling attention to that matter, and this has led to its being overlooked; but I would suggest that during the recess the hon. gentleman should have prepared such rules and regulations as might guide the committee in granting these charters. That might save a great deal of time to the committee, and would also prevent a great deal of scandal in regard to such matters as have taken place in the past, but which I hope may not occur again.

To the Nova Scotia Central Railway Company, for 46 miles of their railway from Bridgewater to the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, in the Province of Nova Scotia, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, not exceeding in the whole $147,200.

Mr. EISENHAUER. I see that this road, as the resolution reads, is from Bridgewater.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It should be from Lunenburg. That is a misprint. It should read:

From Lunenburg to the Windsor and Annapolis Railway, for 46 miles of their railway in the Province of Nova Scotia.

That will remove all ambiguity, as the appropriation last year was for the whole road.

Mr. EISENHAUER. I understand that, in subsidising part of this road last year, it was intended that the money should be expended in the county of Annapolis. I am gratified to find that, at last, the Government have fulfilled the pledges which they made in reference to this road. In the Session of 1886, the Government subsidised 31 or 32 railways, and strenuous efforts were made by the late member for Lunenburg, Mr. Kaulbach, to obtain a subsidy for this railway; and I find by the discussion which took place on that occasion, that several members referred to a memorial which was sent in, signed by fifteen members of this House, praying for aid to this road. In 1887, when the matter was brought up, the Minister of Railways stated that this was the first intimation he had heard of this road. I must say that I think that was very unfair to the late member for Lunenburg, if what he stated in the county was true, that he had made these representations.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sure that must be a misprint. It is impossible that the Minister of Railways could have said that.

Mr. EISENHAUER. I do not think so. I think some hon. members here heard him make that statement.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then it was an entire misapprehension. I am informed that what the Minister of Railways said was that it was the first he had heard of it during that Session, that is, during the Session of 1887.

Mr. EISENHAUER. Not only was the pledge given then, but there was a letter which was written by the Minister of Railways and was used in the county, and very strenuous efforts were made by the hon. member for Annapolis and myself to have the pledge carried out. The best we could do was to get a subsidy for half of this road, and when I complained of the way in which we were treated, a threat was made that, if I did not keep quiet, the whole vote would be struck out. I think that was very unfair. A great deal of work has been done on that road, and I am sure that the road is entitled to much more consideration than those 30 odd railways which were subsidised a few years ago. It is very unfair to the company, who have spent a great deal of money in consequence, and it has retarded the construction.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is quite right in stating that in 1886 the Minister of Railways stated that this road would be provided for; but, at all events, the Government would submit to Parliament at a future day the means for providing for this road. There is no doubt about that; and when the Government subsequently were asked to fulfil that promise, they were assured, the parties interested were assured that that promise would be carried out. A year ago we provided a subsidy for a part of the road because we thought that would answer the purpose, and we would let the balance lie over until this Session in order to provide for the rest of it. But when the company came to act under their subsidy, as the hon. gentleman has stated, they found that they could not make their financial arrangements unless they had a positive assurance that the Government would submit to Parliament at this Session an application for the balance, and this is in fulfilment of the pledge given to that company during the recess, and which enabled them to make their arrangements, and to complete the other part of the road. Consequently, I have put this in general terms over the same line of railway. It makes the subsidy as originally promised.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). When was the last Order in Council passed?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not able to state that. When the company represented to the Government that they could not take advantage of the subsidy that had been given to them, unless they had a positive assurance that at this Session the balance would be provided, the Order in Council was passed, but I was not in the country myself at the time, and therefore I am not able to state to the hon. gentleman the date it was issued.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). With the hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) I am glad this vote has been brought down, though I believe it has been brought down from different motives from those given by the Minister of Finance. Last year, it will be remembered, we took exception to a vote for a part of the road, because it prevented the completion of financial arrangements in New York to get a sum of money to carry on the whole work. Shortly after that, however, there was a very important event transpired in the county of Annapolis—the seat of the hon. gentleman for Annapolis was contested, and that hon. gentleman, acting with the friends of the railway in that county and in Lunenburg, proposed that this might be made the means of obtaining an additional subsidy for this road, provided that the petition against him was withdrawn. To that condition the petitioner and the gentlemen in the county of Annapolis, who were interested in this road, agreed, and withheld the protest against the hon. member for Annapolis, who visited Ottawa and who secured the passage of a Minute of Council, of which the people of Annapolis were made aware, and of which the vote now before the House is a confirmation. I merely mention this as being the modus operandi by which the vote was secured. It was given under these circumstances, and not, I believe, from the highest sense of public duty which should have influenced the Government to give the vote years ago. It will have the double effect of securing the member for Annapolis in his seat by allowing it to go unopposed, and it will have the effect of securing the completion of this road.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is very hard to please hon. gentlemen opposite. My hon. friend the other day pressed me to fulfil this promise and bring down this vote, and when we bring it down, he then ascribes improper motives. I was not in the country at the time, but I cannot believe there is any foundation for the statement of the hon. gentleman, that a corrupt arrangement was made. The Government were bound by their pledge on the floor of this House to provide for the balance of this road. They thought they could divide it into two years, and when the company represented that the vote taken last year would be useless, unless the Government would, in the most formal manner, pledge themselves to submit the additional appropriation, they did so, and it being here, I think everyone ought to be satisfied.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is quite clear that it was merely a coincidence.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I wish to make one statement which will show emphatically the incorrectness of the statement of the hon. member for Halifax. The Order in Council was signed quite a while after the time had expired for the parties who were urging the petition against me in the county of Annapolis, to go on with their petition; consequently, that shows there was no corrupt arrangement at all with reference to the payment of the subsidy.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman says that the Minute of Council was passed quite a while after the time had elapsed for the contest being proceeded with, but the hon. gentleman will not, I hope, for the sake of his own credit deny that there was such an arrangement in the county of Annapolis, and that the hon. gentleman made a proposal to the other side, to the parties who were anxious to secure the completion of that road, and were ready to proceed against him when they thought they might disqualify him. The hon. gentleman's proposal was not only to secure a Minute of Council, which he did secure, but that the Government should let the contract for that road immediately. That was the arrangement to which the hon. gentleman was a party, and that is the reason why the subsidy was given. While I am satisfied that the road is at last to be completed, I do not think we can congratulate ourselves that the Government have at last been driven to give this assistance to the road in order to retain the seat for the hon. member for Annapolis, instead of giving it from motives of public policy.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is a very ungracious statement to make.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I meet this assertion with an unqualified denial. I never made any such proposal to any one that has had any relation to the road whatever.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think we must get on. I propose to strike out "from Bridgewater to the Windsor and Annapolis Railway," making it apply generally to the whole line the same as the other.

To the Montreal and Champlain Junction Railway Company, for three miles of their railway from the end of the present subsidized section to Massena Springs, a subsidy not exceeding $3,700 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $9,600.

Mr. SCRIVER. I would call the attention of the Minister of Railways to what I think is an error. I do not suppose the Government propose to subsidise a railway in the United States.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No. We have done that, occasionally.

Mr. SCRIVER. You propose to do it, according to this resolution. Massena Springs is 20 miles from the boundary line in the State of New York. Moreover, the Montreal and Champlain Junction Railway ends at the boundary line and not at Massena Springs.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We will strike out the words "to Massena Springs."

To the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company, for bridging the several channels of the Ottawa River at Culbute and west thereof, a subsidy of $31,500, to be paid out monthly as the work progresses upon the certificate of the Chief Engineer of Government Railways, in the proportion which the value of the work executed bears to the value of the whole work undertaken, and for three miles of their railway extending from a point three miles east of Pembroke, to Pembroke, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $9,600, provided that the entire work subsidised upon this railway shall be completed within four years from the passing of this Act, the subsidy granted by this Act not to exceed in the whole $41,100.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the estimated cost of the bridges?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The amount we propose to give is 15 per cent. of the cost.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is to say, that about $200,000 is considered to be the cost.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, in round figures.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Does the expression here, "bridging the several channels of the Ottawa at Culbute and west thereof," cover the bridging of the whole of the channels between the Province of Quebec, north of Allumette Island, and the Province of Ontario. The Minister of Finance will probably remember that there are a number of channels there; first, the Culbute channel, to which special reference is made. Allumette Island intervenes in the next channel, and is about five miles in width, and there are two or three other channels.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is to cover the whole.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). And the amount paid will be in proportion to the cost of the whole of these bridges?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that the resolution provides that the subsidy shall be extended over four years. The present Act gives the company only until 1st September, 1889, to complete the road. Is the insertion of the four years the result of an application on the part of the company, or is it the general policy of the Government?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is the general policy of the Government.

Mr. HAGGART. Was not the subsidy given the year before on condition that this bridge should be built by the company?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is possible; I will give the information to the hon. gentleman. The Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway extends from Aylmer to Pontiac, a distance of 88 miles. By the Act 47 Victoria, chapter 8, this road was granted a subsidy of $3,200 per mile on an estimated distance between those points of 85 miles. The present resolution covers the difference between 85 miles and 88 miles; the distance is found absolutely to be 88 miles. Three miles at $3,200 per mile is equal to $9,600. This road, moreover, crosses the Ottawa River. The estimated cost of bridging the channels is $210,000. Owing to the heavy cost of bridge construction, it is found impossible to proceed with the erection of those bridges under the general subsidy of $3,200 per mile. The road having been built up to or near to Ottawa, 71 miles to Aylmer, the resolution proposes to give assistance in the construction of the bridges to the extent of $31,500, making the total additional subsidy $40,100.

Mr. LAURIER. The Minister of Finance probably remembers that in 1884, when this company was subsidised, it was brought to his attention that the contractor and sub-contractors had not been paid, and an engagement was made by the Government that the claims of the contractor and the sub-contractors should be fairly met out of the subsidy then granted. I am informed, and I believe my information is correct, that several claims were placed in the hands of the Government amounting to $25,000 or $26,000, and all those claims have been satisfied with the exception of four, so far as my memory goes. Those

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

creditors are: Bate & Co., $1,814; William Brown, $515 Russell, Forbes & Co., $617; A. Workman, $105. These claims have not been paid for some reason which I do not know, but so far as I am informed, they were exactly on the same footing as claims made and dealt with and paid out by the company. I have no reason to doubt that the same treatment should be extended to those creditors as to the other creditors, and they should be paid out of the subsidy

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The promise was made by the Minister of Finance when he was Minister of Railways. There was a sum set aside for meeting those claims, and a schedule of the claims was supplied by the contractor, Armstrong, to the company. I happened to be one of the trustees appointed by the company to pay those claims. My recollection of the matter is, although I am speaking from memory and I have not the papers by me, that all the claims upon the schedule furnished by the contractor to the company were satisfied. I did not catch the names of the gentlemen to whom the hon. member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Laurier) referred, and whether those claims were upon that schedule or not. I am not prepared at the present moment to say, but all claims furnished by the contractor, who had the contract from the company, were satisfied in some way or other by the company out of the money appropriated to pay those claims. I think my recollection is that the contractor, Armstrong, with whom the company dealt directly, did not consider that Perreault had any legal or legitimate claim.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. He had a claim of $172,000 or $171,000 against Armstrong.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not know anything about the claim of Perreault himself, and if he had a claim for $170,000 it may be that this claim put in is largely spurious for all I know. It appears that Armstrong did not recognise it as a claim. But it cannot be denied, I believe, that the claim was to some extent a legitimate one. I understand that these parties whose claims I have given all supplied goods to Perreault, who was a sub-contractor of Armstrong, and the goods therefore went into the construction of the road. This cannot be denied. Under such circumstances, whatever might have been the reason for Armstrong setting aside the balance of the claim of Perreault, so far as these four creditors were concerned their claims were legitimate ones.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will ask the Minister of Railways to have this matter carefully investigated. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Laurier) will forward a memorandum of these claims I will direct the special attention of the Minister to them.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I will give an explanation to the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier). There was a difficulty between Armstrong and Perreault, the latter of whom was sub-contractor for nearly the whole length of the road, and there is a suit between him and Armstrong, who was the contractor of the company. Armstrong contended that he had supplied funds sufficient to pay for all the labor given and the supplies obtained. When the Minister of Railways, through a favor not as a matter of right, said a certain sum would be paid for labor supplied for the work, a list was given in amounting to $18,000 or $20,000. The Minister of Railways, careful for the interests of the laborers and those who had furnished necessary supplies for the building of the road, placed $25,000 aside. Trustees were appointed, and I can say that the company not only paid those $25,000 reserved by the Minister, but they paid $10,000 more, so as not to have any claim directly from people who had worked on the road or furnished the contractor with supplies. The difficulty between the sub-contractor Perreault and Armstrong is still before the courts.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman says the principle admitted by the Government was that all those parties who had actually supplied the contractor were compensated.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Not the whole of them, for that would amount to $200,000. I understand 20,000 were put aside. In addition to those people there were others who supplied goods which went into the construction of the road, and according to the principle admitted at the time they had the same reason to be treated fairly as the others.

Mr. LAURIER. If the money paid to this contractor, by the company had been legitimately employed, those parties would have been paid.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid we cannot settle that matter here, but if the hon. gentleman gives me the names I will ask the Minister of Railways to carefully consider it. My hon. friend sees that a commission was agreed upon by the claimants on the one side and the company on the other, and that they paid all that was reported after a careful investigation to be due.

Mr. LAURIER. I am only answering the Secretary of State. I quite understand that the Minister cannot go there and so far it is satisfactory.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to know who furnished the statement that the hon. gentleman made to the House as to the cost of the bridges. That was, I suppose, supplied by the company's engineer.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. By the Minister of Railways.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has he satisfied himself that that would be the cost?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On the report of one of his own engineers?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, quite so, that matter has been investigated.

To the Port Arthur, Duluth and Western Railway Company for 84½ miles of their railway from Port Arthur towards Crooked Lake, in lieu of the subsidies granted by 48-49 Victoria, Chapter 58, and 49 Victoria, Chapter 10, for the construction of a railway from Murillo Station to Crooked Lake, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $271,200.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I want to correct that, by substituting Gun Flint Lake, instead of Crooked Lake.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Here is a vote of $271,200 for this railway. For what purpose and on what grounds do the Government recommend this to the House?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend will see that this was voted before, and has already been granted by the House, as, in fact, almost all those subsidies have been, with the exception of the Central Railway Company, and the Quebec Central Railway. All those votes practically have been already voted by the House, and those resolutions are merely in reference to some change in the location of the lines.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to know, because I do not remember, the innumerable grants that have been made.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is cited on the face of this resolution.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, I know, but for what purpose?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The object of this is to run a railway from Port Arthur through a very rich silver and iron mineral district, and in which at this moment a very large amount of capital is being expended in its development. It runs to the boundary in a south-westerly direction from Port Arthur. The promoters were rather ambitious in their first charter, and the object of this is to apply the same mileage rate to a much shorter line.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who are the parties.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Sir Alex. Galt is one of the principal supporters of this road and I know that he has been once or twice in England in connection with raising the required amount of capital. This makes a change in the location of the line without at all increasing the amount of money. I believe altogether this is a very much better location than the former one.

Mr. COOK. Is this the road contemplated to run through Duluth?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I dare say it will ultimately. It would be quite easy to carry the road from the end of this at the boundary, to Duluth.

Mr. COOK. I suppose it was Mr. Wilkinson, of bribery notoriety in the Local Government, that brought influence to bear on the Government to give the grant. He is largely interested in mines up there.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have never heard that before. I can assure my hon. friend it is new to me, as I do not know that gentleman has anything to do with it.

Mr. DAWSON. The object of the road is to open up a very fine agricultural and mineral district at the same time. It passes through the White Fish Valley where there is a great deal of the very finest agricultural land. It touches on the Silver Mines, Beaver Mountain, Silver Mountain, and reaches the boundary line at Gun Flint Lake, where it touches on the great iron range of Minnesota. Last year there were exported from that iron range 400,000 tons of iron ore to a place called Two Harbors, twenty-two miles to the eastward of Duluth.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did the hon. gentleman mean 400,000 tons from the Canadian side?

Mr. DAWSON. No; that was from the American side, and the same range in which they got that iron runs across to the Canadian side. The Americans were exploring on the Canadian side since last year. They had diamond drills and were successful in discovering an immense extent of this same iron ore, which is considered to be the finest ever yet discovered, and has been practically tested and proved to be the finest yet discovered for the manufacture of bessemer steel. A subsidy was granted some years ago for this line, and this is simply a renewal. As has been explained the line is somewhat shorter than the former one proposed. One of the principal promoters of the line is the gentleman who was my adversary at the last election, Mr. Burke, and Mr. Marks and all our leading people at Port Arthur are concerned in the enterprise. They have associated with them English capitalists, and they have already graded ten miles of the line and have admirable surveys made from one end to the other. The line is now sure to go on and to be carried to completion, and it will develop a fruitful and a rich section of the country.

Mr. COOK. Is Mr. Conmee, the member of the Local House, interested in this?

Mr. DAWSON. I believe he is.

Mr. COOK. Has he obtained a grant from the Local Government for this?

Mr. DAWSON. Not a dollar, but they promised one.

Mr. COOK. I expect this will only end in smoke too.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The information given by the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Dawson) is very interesting, and we were all pleased to hear it, but surely the member for Algoma, after what was stated by the Minister of Finance a few weeks ago, does not attribute this discovery to Americans who went there with diamond drills, or other such base mechanical plant. The Minister told us that this was discovered by reason of the tax that was put on iron.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think this is the same locality.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Oh, yes, it is.

Mr. SPROULE. I am sorry to see that this opposition is from Ontario members, where Ontario is getting so little.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We are not opposing; we are only making enquiries.

Mr. WATSON. I regret the Government have not seen fit to aid and assist roads in the west, which have applied for cash subsidies. This is the only road west of Lake Superior that has received a cash subsidy from the Government outside of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Other important roads have asked for cash subsidies and have been refused, notably the Hudson Bay Railway Company. I do hope that at the next Session of Parliament at least, that the Hudson Bay Railway Company may receive a cash bonus. It has been explained by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Railways before, that it is very hard for companies to construct a road on a land grant, and the Hudson Bay Railway Company find themselves in that position and have asked for a cash subsidy. I do not suppose it is necessary for me to mention the importance of that undertaking to the North-West. I hope that in a very near future the Government will see fit to assist roads in the west by cash subsidies as well as roads in the east. While land grants are valuable, still it is very hard for a company to float its scheme simply on a land grant. It appears to me that many of these cash subsidies for railroads in the east have been granted on account of concessions to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. It is felt by many people in the east that every subsidy and every concession granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should be charged to the west. I think that is a great mistake, and such an idea should not be allowed to prevail in this House.

Mr. MCKAY. I regret that the Government has not granted a subsidy to a railway in the section of country which I come from, which was applied for this Session, and also last Session. The railway I refer to is the South Ontario Pacific, which was intended to give Hamilton, Brantford, St. Catharines and a large section of country in western Ontario, access to the Canadian Pacific Railway. The municipalities in that part of the country have very largely aided railways for the purpose of gaining access to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and also for the purpose of securing railway competition. We now find ourselves shut off from any competition by connection with that railway. Although the Government have not seen proper to grant us any aid this year, we hope they will give our claims fair consideration in the future. We are asking nothing more than is just, and we feel that the claims of that part of the country for railway accommodation are very great. Other parts of the Dominion have been given the same advantage that we are asking for, and I hope the Government will take our claims into consideration.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend, and every member of this committee will see, by looking over the resolutions, that the Government have adhered as stringently as they possibly could to the policy adopted this year of granting no additional subsidies. Only two exceptions have been made, and they rest on very exceptional circumstances. One has already been referred to, that of the line from the Windsor and Annapolis Railway to Lunenburg. The grant to this railway is in pursuance of a positive pledge made on Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

the floor of this House two years ago. That, of course, hon. gentlemen will see we could not recede from. The other grant, which also stands on an exceptional basis, is to provide for a line from Lévis, opposite Quebec, to the Short Line Railway, known as the Atlantic and North-Western Railway, which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are under contract to carry down to the ports of St. John and Halifax, so as to provide connection in our country between our winter port and the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The present vote is an extension of the grant formerly made to that company. With the exception of those two grants, which rest on exceptional circumstances, there is absolutely nothing in these resolutions to extend what the House has already appropriated; and I can only assure my hon. friend who has just addressed the House that it was with the deepest regret that the Government were obliged to turn a deaf ear to the representations made by the very large deputation which came from that section of the country which he speaks of, and stated in very strong and forcible language the great importance of giving assistance to the railway communication to which he has referred; but they felt the same reluctance in a number of other cases, notably in my own Province. It was represented and very forcibly, that the Counties of Shelburne and Queen's were the only counties in the Province of Nova Scotia which were absolutely left without any railway connection with the other portions of the country; and although we felt the strong claims which they had to consideration, yet this year, in conformity with the statement I made to the House, while our policy was not changed, it was absolutely necessary to call a halt, and not increase the public burdens in this direction at present. Therefore we have been obliged to postpone a number of important claims from the different Provinces—Quebec, New Brunswick, Ontario and I may say the North-West. The hon. gentleman who had just referred to the question of the Hudson Bay Railway, is aware that Parliament has appropriated a very large land grant for that work; but I quite recognise the truth of the statement the hon. gentleman has made, that in the first instance it is almost impossible to construct a railway out of a land grant. The reason for this vote to which he has taken exception, in contrast with what has been done in the North-West, is that the land along the line of this railway from Port Arthur to the boundary do not belong to us, but to the Province of Ontario, and, therefore, we could not assist it in any other way than in the way the House determined two years ago to assist it, namely, by a money subsidy. I trust that at a future Session the Government will be in a position to give much more liberal consideration to those great and important projects to which the hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House have drawn attention, than is possible on the present occasion. These resolutions embrace a number of roads for which practically all this money has been voted before, except the two companies to which I have alluded.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I am afraid that this subsidy will not be sufficient to secure the construction of that portion of the railway to Chicoutimi. The amount is only $96,000, and the distance is 62 miles from the present terminus at Lake St. John to Chicoutimi. It would seem that this resolution is not quite correct. The subsidy granted last year was not granted to the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company; but it was granted to a local company for a line from the terminus of the Lake St. John Railway at Lake St. John to Chicoutimi. I think I may say without fear of contradiction that that company was formed for no other purpose than to make some money out of the subsidy. They never could conceive the idea of building such a branch as an independent line. Last year the Lake St. John Railway Company tried to get a subsidy, but they were opposed by this local company; and, unfortunately for the Lake St. John Company, there were some persons in the local company who had a good deal of influence over the Government. The local company went to the Lake St. John Company and said: If you want to get the subsidy give us $20,000, and we will consent to the transfer of the subsidy to your company. That sum was so extravagant, compared to the total amount of the subsidy, that the Lake St. John Railway Company positively refused. At last the company yielded to a certain extent, and they had to promise $6,000 to that hoodling company, for it was nothing else, the president of which was the late Tory member for Chicoutimi and Saguenay, and the directors of which were all friends of the Government, expecting to derive some benefit out of their influence with the Government. They got that $6,000, so that practically the Lake St. John Railway Company are getting the subsidy less that amount. I think, therefore, that the subsidy should have been increased by so much, which, through no fault of their own, the Lake St. John Railway Company have to pay to the local company.

Mr. AMYOT. I would suggest that the word Chicoutimi be changed. The terminus is not Chicoutimi, but the railroad passes through Chicoutimi and goes to Ha Ha Bay.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That will not affect the location, because it says "towards Chicoutimi or from Chicoutimi."

Mr. LANGELIER. It does not matter much this year, because the company will have to come back again to get an increased subsidy, for it cannot with this amount reach Chicoutimi.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This subsidy will not prevent the parties coming back if they find it necessary.

To the Temisconata Railway Company, for 20 miles of their branch railway from Edmundston towards the St. Francis River, in the Province of Quebec, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 50-51 Victoria, Chapter 24, a subsidy of $100,000.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). There is a mistake in the resolution. It should be "St. John River" instead of "St. Francis River."

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It should be St. John.

To the Quebec Central Railway Company, for the construction and completion of a line of railway from Saint Francis station to a point on the Atlantic and North-West Railway, near Moose Head Lake, 90 miles, in lieu of the balance of the subsidy, unearned, granted by 47 Victoria, Chapter 8, a subsidy not exceeding $23,345 per annum for twenty years, or a guarantee of a like sum for a like period as interest on the bonds of the company.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Strike out $23,345 and substitute $21,191.54 and add at the end: "such annual subsidy for twenty years, representing a grant in cash of $288,000." Also change "Moose Head Lake" to "Moose River."

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Have the Government ascertained that that subsidy will be sufficient to enable the company to build the railway? I think they asked $500,000 last year to build it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think there is any doubt of their being able to build it with this subsidy.

To the Central Railway Company of New Brunswick, a grant as subsidy (the road to be first laid with new steel rails weighing not less than 56 lbs. per lineal yard, and after an Order in Council has been passed authorising their transfer to the company) of 4,052 tons of used iron rails and fastenings loaned to the St. Martin's and Upham Railway Company, now forming part of the Central Railway, which rails and fastenings stand in the Public Accounts as an asset of $33,612 54.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to call the attention of the hon. the Finance Minister to the necessity of seeing, when bargains of this kind are made, that the railway should be run. This St. Martin's and Upham Railway does not run in winter at all, nor does the Kent Northern. I will not find fault with the latter because the proprietor did as well as he could, but the St. Martin's and Upham road ceases to run in winter entirely. The Caraquette road closed up last winter at a very awkward time, when a number of the merchants of St. John were trying to make shipments of fish to the West Indies, as an experiment.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will see that this resolution will go a long way towards accomplishing the object he has in view, because the company go to the expense of railing their track with new steel rails, and until they do that they cannot obtain any advantage from this resolution. This will render the company much more likely to continue to keep their road open than formerly. I do not think there was any condition made, when these rails were originally lent, of the kind the hon. gentleman refers to, but it would have been a very proper condition.

Mr. ELLIS. With regard to the Caraquette road, I think the Dominion has given it about $180,000 so far, and that road was shut up all winter, so much so that it became a matter of enquiry in the Legislature.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That was very wrong.

To the Elgin Petitcodiac and Havelock Railway Company of New Brunswick, a grant as subsidy (the road to be first laid with new steel rails weighing not less than 56 lbs. per lineal yard, and after an Order in Council has been passed authorising their transfer to the Company) of 2,201 tons of used iron rails and fastenings loaned to the Elgin Branch Railway, now forming part of the Elgin, Petitcodiac and Havelock Railway, which rails and fastenings stand in the Public Accounts as an asset for $4,252 82.

To the Kent Northern Railway Company of New Brunswick, a grant as subsidy (the road to be first laid with new steel rails weighing not less than 56 lbs. per lineal yard, and after an Order in Council has been passed authorising their transfer to the company) of 2,549 tons of used iron rails and fastenings loaned to this company, which rails and fastenings stand in the Public Accounts as an asset for $58,334 27.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Will there be any time fixed for making this change?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, but they cannot obtain possession of the old rails until the track is laid with new steel rails, so that they get no benefit until they make the change.

To the Halifax Cotton Company, of Nova Scotia, a grant as subsidy (the road to be first laid with new steel rails weighing not less than 56 lbs. per lineal yard, and after an Order in Council has been passed authorising their transfer to the company) of 233 tons of used iron rails and fastenings loaned to the company, which rails and fastenings stand in the Public Accounts as an asset for $1,335.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I would like to ask the Minister of Finance to explain this. An amount of $69,000 was paid by the city of Halifax for constructing that siding, and it appears to me that, if any grant is to be made, it should be made pro rata to the city of Halifax. I have no objection to the granting of the amount, but I think it should not be granted to the Cotton Company when the city actually paid for the siding. Then, I presume that the Cotton Company have no control over the branch as against the public, but it is open to the public?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I presume so—certainly.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I know that an impression prevailed that the company could control it in some way, but I understand that is not the case, and it should be so stated.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This does not change the position at all. Whenever they put the new steel rails, whoever the owners of the road may be will receive the old rails.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The road belongs to the Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think so.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is a part of the Intercolonial Railway, and I think the Government should return this amount to the city of Halifax, as the road belongs to the Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think so.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It must belong either to the Government or to the company.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We let them have the rails and we run the road, but I do not understand that this road belongs to the Government, because, if that were so, this would be entirely unnecessary, as the rails would be ours.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I understand that a part of the cost was paid by the company and there was some expenditure by the Government, and $9,000 was paid by the city of Halifax.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That was an assistance which was given to the company.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). If you are going to make a rebate, the taxpayers of Halifax ought to have a share.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The citizens of Halifax simply gave, as we gave, some assistance to the company to build the road.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Yes, but if you are making a return, the citizens of Halifax are entitled to a share.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We are not making any return, but simply enabling the company to change the old rails for steel rails.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). But it is a Government road.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think so. If it were so, this resolution would be entirely unnecessary.

To the Steel Company of Canada, in Nova Scotia, a grant as subsidy (the road to be first laid with new steel rails weighing not less than 56 lbs. per lineal yard, and after an Order in Council has been passed authorising their transfer to the company) of 597 tons of used iron rails and fastenings loaned to the company, and which rails stand in the Public Accounts as an asset for $11,964.66.

To the Albert Railway Company of New Brunswick, a grant as subsidy (the section of road to be first laid with new steel rails weighing not less than 56 lbs. per lineal yard, and after an Order in Council has been passed authorising their transfer to the company) of 726 tons of used iron rails and fastenings loaned to the company, and which rails and fastenings stand in the Public Accounts as an asset for $14,665.45.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think that is in the hands of a receiver at present, and is taken out of the hands of the company.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That will not affect it. If the receiver puts down new steel rails, we will have to give the iron rails to the receiver.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It is the same in regard to the Chatham branch.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so.

To the Chatham Branch Railway of New Brunswick, a grant as subsidy (the road to be first laid with new steel rails weighing not less than 56 lbs. per yard, and after an Order in Council has been passed authorising their transfer to the company) of 958 tons of used iron rails and fastenings loaned to this company, which rails and fastenings stand in the Public Accounts as an asset for $24,439.84.

Mr. MITCHELL. I may state to the Minister—not that I can very accurately speak of it, but from general information—that the chief proprietor of that road has already laid a very considerable portion of it with steel rails, two or three years ago, and I suppose it will be understood that that is a compliance with this provision if he completes it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If he puts new steel rails there, he will have a right to the old rails.

Mr. MITCHELL. I know that he laid down the new steel rails. The old rails were so bad that he had to lay these new rails, but what I want to know is, if the new rails were laid two or three years ago or one year ago, if they are good steel rails, whether that will be considered a compliance with the terms of the resolution.

Mr. JONES (Halifax).

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think so.

On resolution 2,

All the lines, for construction of which subsidies are granted, shall be commenced within two years from the first day of August next, and be completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years, to be fixed by Order in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions and specifications, and upon conditions to be approved by the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in an agreement to be made in each case by the company with the Government, and which the Government is hereby empowered to make; the location also of every such line of railway shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council; and all said subsidies respectively, payable in cash, shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada by instalments, on the completion of each section of the railway of not less than ten miles, proportionate to the value of the portion so completed in comparison with that of the whole work undertaken, to be established by the report of the said Minister or upon completion of the work subsidised.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I should like to ask in what condition the Short Line Railway is, when it will be opened, and what the savings will be in distance between Montreal and St. John and between Montreal and Halifax, because it has been stated that, owing to changes in the route, the saving will not be so great as by the route originally contemplated. I would also like to ask in what position the negotiations are in reference to the Western Counties Railway, as to filling up the gap between Annapolis and Digby. Perhaps the Minister might tell the House at what time the operations there will be commenced.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman did not give me notice of these questions, because I would have been in a position to give more precise information than I can now. I should be afraid from memory to estimate the saving in distance by the Short Line Railway, but I think I can get the figures from the engineer, and at a future stage, probably to-night, I may be able to answer the hon. gentleman. I may say that I understand that it is anticipated that, in September, the road will be opened to St. John, and the other portion of the road from Harvey Junction to Moncton will be immediately proceeded with and completed within the time stated in the contract. I will, however, get the exact distance from the chief engineer of railways, and make a statement to-night what that distance will be. I regret to say that the information has been somewhat unsatisfactory with reference to the arrangements that Mr. Plunkett was making in England within the last few days. A hitch has occurred. I was informed by Messrs. Baring that the matter had been arranged, and that a very powerful syndicate had engaged to underwrite the bonds, that the money was all forthcoming, and that the matter was settled. But some legal question has arisen between Mr. Plunkett and the parties with whom he was making the arrangement, so that I believe the matter is not at this moment in so secure a position as I was led to understand by a communication from the Messrs. Baring a short time ago.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am very sorry to hear that any hitch has occurred; but, in the event of satisfactory arrangements being concluded, is the hon. gentleman in a position to say what course the Government will pursue with respect to undertaking that work? The Minister of Railways informed us last Session that, in the event of negotiations failing with private parties, the Government would immediately proceed to undertake the work themselves. A considerable time has now elapsed. We supposed, from the information we had of Mr. Plunkett's negotiations, that he would be able to carry through this consolidation scheme, and I regret very much that there has been any failure in that respect. But if such should unfortunately prove to be the case, and he should not succeed, will the Government then undertake the work? Will they allow it to remain any longer, or will they not proceed, as was intimated by the Minister of Railways last Session, to have that gap completed without more delay?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is aware that the House has authorised the Government to put in that gap themselves, and they attach the greatest importance to that gap being completed at an early day. I have no doubt that unless satisfactory arrangements can be made promptly to carry out that 15 miles that is required to connect the Windsor and Annapolis Railway with the Western Counties Railway, and give us direct communication between Halifax and Yarmouth, the Government will promptly undertake the work.

Resolutions reported and concurred in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER introduced Bill (No. 149) to authorise the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

Bill read the first and second times, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I want to add after the words "completion of each section of the railway" the words "to the satisfaction of the Minister of Railways."

Mr. MACKENZIE. Why not say to the satisfaction of the department?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think we had better say the Minister, because the Minister must have a report from his engineer; so it amounts to the same thing.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY—PAUPER IMMIGRATION.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am not going to make a motion, but I have a few words to say before we separate on a question which I have twice brought to the notice of the Minister of Agriculture, a question that is attracting a good deal of attention in my Province at any rate, and especially in the chief cities. Hon. gentlemen will, I dare say, recollect that I interrogated the Minister of Agriculture some weeks ago, almost a month ago, on the question whether the Government had seen fit to take precautions to prevent unfit persons from settling in Canada, in view of the large immigration which was expected. After that I brought the subject a second time under his consideration with respect to certain resolutions passed by the city council of Toronto, who declared on their authority as municipal officers that a considerable number of such persons had in the past been made chargeable on the public rates. I do not know whether the Minister's attention has been directed to the subject, but since that time there has been a considerable number of complaints in the newspapers pointing out that a large number, or, at all events, an appreciable percentage of these persons who were coming out, were persons who had been apparently shipped to this country by divers charitable institutions and municipal bodies in England, for the purpose of getting rid of weakly and infirm persons who were apt to become a charge on their parish rates. Now, I happen to know that is a practice which has been had recourse to more or less by English parish authorities on several occasions, and I know also that the American authorities have had to take rather severe steps to prevent that country from being made a sort of dumping ground, as it was properly called, for the refuse of the European population. I entertain myself, and a good many other gentlemen entertain, rather strong views as to the expediency of preventing that, and I take this opportunity of pointing out to the Minister, and also to his colleagues, that they must be held responsible if, in the present immigration which is now coming to Canada, any percentage of those persons, such as I have described, are allowed to land on our shores, without steps being taken either to punish those who land them or send those persons back to the land from whence they came. There appears to be a likelihood that this evil to which I have alluded may assume considerable proportions. I have received private despatches from one or two quarters, in which the parties intimate that the statements made in some of the newspapers, notably in the Mail newspaper, are not exaggerated, and that a certain percentage, how large I cannot say, but that a certain number of persons, who are unfit to become good or useful settlers, are now being landed in Canada; and, therefore, I desire to take this occasion of pointing out that the Government has been warned once, twice and thrice over against the risk, and that apparently the Government have not taken, and are not taking, any efficient steps to prevent that class of persons being brought into this country; and I would add this, that I have myself over and over again interrogated persons who were brought to this country by the representations of different immigration agents. I am unwilling to believe that the regularly authorised agents of the country could have made such representations as those poor persons alleged to have been made to them, but I have no doubt whatever that a great many of the agents of the railways and steamship companies are utterly unscrupulous in inducing persons to come to this country either as assisted immigrants or in any other way. They care nothing whether those persons are fit or unfit to become settlers of Canada, and I am inclined to believe that in the future the evil will increase unless tolerably stringent steps are taken by the Government to make it very unprofitable and very unpleasant for any steamship company or any association whatever to be concerned in bringing that class of people here; and, further, I am strongly of the opinion that many of those persons should be returned to the country from which they came at the expense of the parties who landed them on our shores, and particularly the steamboat companies. I have many times, as I have said, conversed with those persons who came here, and I think that inducements were held, which were impossible of fulfilment, and they are brought here sometimes under circumstances of extreme hardship, and very often have to make their way back again. That is the lesser of the two evils, and I would far rather that such persons should find their way back again than remain here. There is another point to be considered, and it is this: that a very considerable number of our own people are leaving this country, and when you bring this class of persons here you, to a considerable extent, contribute to drive out persons who form a much more valuable class of the population, our own people. I think before we part the Government should give us some assurance that effective steps will be taken in this matter. If the Minister of Agriculture will examine some of the reports made, which appear to be credible, and which to a certain extent were confirmed by the statements made, as I have said, by private parties in communications made to me, the hon. gentlemen will agree that there is a risk that this may become a rather serious evil, and that the Government should take steps to render this kind of thing impossible for the future.

Mr. CARLING. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the Government are quite alive to the necessity of preventing pauper immigration coming into this country, and, as I stated before when the Estimates were under discussion, steps had been taken by communicating with our agents in England, Ireland and Scotland, and also with the steamboat companies and their agents, and protesting in the strongest manner against any pauper emigrants being brought to Canada. With regard to the statements that have been made by my hon. friend as to pauper immigrants being dumped into the city of Toronto, I may say that a statement of that kind was sent to the department and also to the Immigration Committee. The Immigration Committee as well as the Department of Agriculture wrote back to the city of Toronto asking for particulars, and up to the present time we have not received any reply. We wanted to ascertain where those immigrants came from, and exactly how many there were, and when they were dumped in Toronto, so that we could make enquiries to where they had come from, and protest against their being brought into the country. I can only assure my hon. friend that I am quite alive to the necessity of preventing unsuitable immigrants coming to the country, and I am sure the Government will take every step possible to prevent such immigrants arriving here.

Mr. TROW. I am under the impression, Sir, that this matter has been somewhat exaggerated. We all know that during the winter season a number of people from the rural districts who cannot get employment congregate in our cities and towns, and that the result is they become objects of charity. I know from the papers published in the old country, which I consider very good authority, that all those who were sent out here by benevolent and charitable institutions are thoroughly inspected, before they leave these homes, by medical men, and that a very small proportion, not more than one-seventh of those that are in those homes, are sent out here. It is, I believe, the best class as a rule that are sent out. In the city of Stratford, in which I reside, it is a pleasant sight to see those little waifs walking around and taking an airing under their respective teachers at certain hours in the day. We can see that in many instances they have a more healthy appearance even than our own children. I believe that the matter has been exceedingly exaggerated. Our country requires population, and if we can get children reared to the ages of 10 or 12 years, brought out from the old country, it is very desirable that we should have them. I deprecate the policy of individuals, and of the Government, in endeavoring to check those from emigrating, for we require immigration as our lands are totally useless without settlers. The moment they come here they add something to the revenue of this country. They must add to it being consumers, and in a very short time they become producers, and thus add to the wealth of this great nation as we do ourselves. If we had a million of such waifs spread over the Dominion—in Manitoba and the North-West, in the Lake St. John region, and in many other portions of Quebec, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia, and Ontario, where there are plenty of lands for settlement, it would be much better for the country. It would be much more preferable, instead of checking immigration of that description, that we should have thousands come out here of the proper class.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend wholly misunderstand me and probably did not listen to what I was saying.

Mr. TROW. Yes, I did.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I was not referring to the immigration of children from those homes at all. It may be good or it may be bad, and I have nothing to say about it. I was referring to a totally distinct and most undesirable class of immigration, and I know, whether the hon. gentleman does or not, that a considerable number of pauper and infirm immigrants, who would be a charge on the parish rates at home, have been brought to this country.

Mr. CARLING.

I know, if my hon. friend does not, that in England the parochial authorities have attempted, and are attempting, to send a considerable number of that class here, and I know, if my hon. friend does not know, that they have been charged in my own city of Kingston to a very considerable extent on the benevolence of the inhabitants. I am informed that the case is the same in Toronto and other towns. I speak only of what I know, and I have seen a number of immigrants brought out here who ought never to have been sent out as settlers to Canada; people who were not fit to be settlers, and who could only be charges on the country. I know perfectly well from experience of the old country in former times, and from what I know is taking place there now, that the English parochial authorities are constantly disposed to get rid of those burdens and to shift them on other countries. The immigration expenses out here have become so very trifling that it is far cheaper for the parochial authorities in the old country to pay the passages for those people than to keep them for a single half year in the poor-house at home. There is a risk here, and I think that the Minister of Finance, who has paid attention to the subject, knows that there is a risk. As to the absolute percentage I cannot speak, but the thing has been done, is being done, and in my judgment—but that is only a matter of opinion—is likely to be much more extensively done, unless you take pains to prevent it. But the children in what are called the Barnardo and other homes are a totally distinct class, and I have not made any reference to them, because I do not know anything about them. It may be and perhaps is the case, although it is disputed, that the greater portion of those poor little waifs—who certainly do deserve compassion if any human beings do—are brought out at a sufficiently early age to become valuable citizens. What I refer to is the pauper immigrant who cannot be made and never will be made a very good settler.

Mr. SPROULE. As a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Colonisation I may say that this subject has engaged our attention at considerable length. The only two districts in Canada from which complaints about immigrants came were the cities of Toronto and Montreal. Upon investigation it was found that every single one of those parties complained of in the city of Montreal, was employed at remunerative wages and was doing well. So far the complaint was not by any means well founded, and I believe it was disproven. The committee sent back to Toronto for information to find out how many immigrants were complained of, their nationality and every information about them, but up to the last sitting of the committee such information was not received and we have no information as regards Toronto to let us know whether the evil was great or small, or to enable us to remedy it. At all events those were the only two places in Canada from which complaints came.

Gen. LAURIE. As I have had a good deal to do with assisting and bringing emigrants to this country and advising people to come out here, I may perhaps contribute a word to this discussion. The immigrant from England is advised to come out here in the spring and he is told that this is the time when there is plenty of work. Spring in England and here are not exactly at the same time, and the emigrant starts under the impression that he will arrive in this country when the spring work is going on. He arrives in March. The farmer does not want a large amount of labor then, and as the immigrant is landed in a town he is forced to remain there and the people feel that he is a burden upon them. They would rather he did not come. They complain that he is an unsuitable and undesirable immigrant because the unfortunate man is unable to get work. Over and over again the immigration agent at Halifax has written to me in March and April, asking me if I could find work for immigrants. The steamships can only bring a certain number at each passage, and those who arrive early cannot get work; the immigration agent does his best to place them, but in spite of every effort a certain number remain idle on his hands. But now the case is different. He writes:

"A short time since I could not get the places to put people into, but now I cannot get people to fill the places."

There is the secret. The immigrants come before the work is ready for them in the agricultural districts, and necessarily they are left in the towns until that work opens up. Then there is more than enough work for them

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I do not want to prolong this discussion, but as chairman of the Committee on Immigration and Colonisation, I may be pardoned if I say a word or two with reference to what has fallen from the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). I agree with him that it is the duty of the department to use every effort in their power to prevent the immigration of the pauper inhabitants of workhouses. This subject, as the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) has stated, was brought to the attention of the committee by a resolution passed by the City Council of Toronto, and that resolution was supported before the committee by Mr. Jury on behalf of the Knights of Labor. But both the resolution and the statements made by Mr. Jury were indefinite as to the kind of people who were seeking employment in Toronto. We were unable to ascertain from the statements made before the committee whether those people who were willing to work during the winter for $3 a week were immigrants who had come out during the past season, or natives of Canada, or persons who had resided in the country a considerable length of time. I do not propose to refer to the other matter to which the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) has referred, because that is not, as I understand it, the objection which the hon. member for South Oxford makes. His objection is that pauper immigrants ought not to be allowed to come to the country. I entirely agree with him, and the Committee on Immigration and Colonisation took the same view, and if the Government adopt steps to prevent the immigration of these pauper immigrants, I think they will be doing a good work for the country. I do not think, however, that an able-bodied immigrant coming from the other side of the water, who is able and willing to work, ought to be prevented from coming to Canada because he happens to have no means. It is the infirm and those who are unable to help themselves, and who are likely to be made a charge upon the charitable institutions of this country, who ought to be prevented from coming here if possible, and I think that might be done by the department making representations through the High Commissioner to the parochial authorities in the old country. A complaint also came to the committee from Montreal, indirectly through Mr. Jury, that certain Belgians had been induced to come to this country, as they supposed under the authority of the Government of Canada, by a Mr. Wattela, who had used paper on which he had printed the heading of the department of immigration in Canada, and who had made contracts with them to come to Canada, promising them a certain rate of wages. Those immigrants came to Montreal, and the complaint made was that the agreement which Mr. Wattela had made with them had not been carried out, that work was not found for them at the rates agreed upon when they left their own country. That was something which the Government had no control over, and which it was impossible for them to provide against. But on investigation it was found that although they were disappointed in the engagement they had made with Mr. Wattela, they had all found employment shortly after their arrival in Montreal. So that the complaints made to the committee were very limited in number, and the evidence given before the committee went to show that the evil did not exist to so great an extent as was repremented, or there would have been stronger representations than those that were made. But if the evil exists, I think the department ought to adopt such measures as will prevent that class of immigrants to whom the hon. member for South Oxford refers, from coming into the country.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. member for South Oxford said that he knew of his own knowledge that a number of these parties had been brought to Kingston, and were now a charge on that locality. We have an immigration agent at Kingston, a very excellent man, who makes a report to us every month of the number and class of immigrants who arrive there, and we have not received from him any report that any such as the hon. member describes have been dumped down there. But if the hon. member is aware of his own knowledge that a number of such parties have been brought to Kingston, I shall be exceedingly obliged if he will let the department have the information—the names of the parties, where they came from, how many, and who brought them to the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will cause a communication to be made to the hon. gentleman; but I did not refer to this season's operations, but to the assistance which had been given by charitable societies and persons in Kingston to that class of persons. It was what one might call the débris of last year's operations that I referred to, not this year's. And I do not know that they were brought to Kingston. They trooped back, I suppose, as is commonly the case.

Mr. CARLING. I would like to obtain information about those persons who become a charge on the municipalities; but I believe that in many cases they are people who go to the large cities from the country. I know that in the city of London, which I represent, and in other cities are to be found people who have become indigent and paupers and have drifted there from the country, and I fancy that when the returns are obtained it will be found that a large number are from rural districts. However, I shall be glad if the hon. gentleman can give the department information as to those parties he mentions, either as to this year or last year. I can assure the hon. member that the Government are taking every precaution to prevent anything like a pauper immigration being brought to this country.

Mr. LAURIER. I think there can be no doubt that in certain parts of Europe the municipal authorities have been in the habit of sending to this country paupers who have been a charge on them. They are to be found both in the United States and in this country. Whoever has been in Quebec could not but feel sad at the condition of these people, and could not but realise at once that they were not fit to be immigrants at all, and could be of no service to the community, but, on the contrary, a charge upon it. The hon. gentleman says that he will take steps to prevent this; but what steps will he take? As I understand, he will instruct his agents in Europe to protest against these people being sent out here.

Mr. CARLING. The Government have power under proclamation to prevent these people landing, and if we find through our agents at Halifax or at Quebec that any large number of them are being brought to the country, we shall issue a proclamation to prevent them landing.

Mr. LAURIER. I was going to remark that the United States authorities would not hesitate, in certain instances, to avail themselves of a similar power.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether any steps have been taken to get Mr. Baker to return to Qu'Appelle, and whether he is really now as much needed up there as the hon. gentleman supposed he was, when we were discussing this subject before? The hon. gentleman knows that the election in Russell is over, and there is not the same urgent necessity for his presence in Russell that there was three weeks ago, and I am sure the House will be interested in knowing whether Mr. Baker has been instructed by the hon. gentleman to return to his post of ordinary duty, seeing the extra work is ended.

Mr. CARLING. I may state to my hon. friend, who takes such an interest in Mr. Baker's welfare, that Mr. Baker had a perfect right to ask for leave of absence, and it is not usual to refuse leave when asked for, especially as Mr. Baker is a very good officer.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No doubt, he is a very good officer.

Mr. CARLING. He is a very good officer, and a highly respectable man—a man who at one time represented a constituency in the Local Legislature. I believe he is now at Qu'Appelle attending to his duties, after having visited his friends in the county of Russell.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman has not dealt with Mr. Baker exactly in the same way, in consequence of his exercise of his perfect right, as he dealt with the French translators, who were endeavoring to exercise their perfect right.

Mr. CARLING. I am not aware that Mr. Baker has taken upon himself to abuse any member of Parliament or vilify his character.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). It is not my intention to prolong the discussion, nor would I have made any remarks whatever had it not been for the remarks made by the hon. member for East Grey. That hon. gentleman virtually ignores the statements of those who have made complaints in reference to immigrants in Montreal, when he said the complaints made were totally disproved.

Mr. SPROULE. I said with regard to parties not being employed; I did not say with regard to the difference between the wages they expected to get and the wages they got.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Well, with regard to the parties not being employed, I totally differ from the hon. gentleman as to the proof which he believes to be substantially correct. We have letters and statements from parties living there that these people were not employed and were in need, and that they had been totally, or nearly so, neglected. Now, what proof have we to the contrary? We have two letters, one from Mr. Daly, immigration agent, and the other from the other immigration agent in Montreal. I should say that the opinions of parties not interested should have as much weight with the House as those of the agents, who are interested in showing that they attended to their work and whose interest it is to make as favorable a report as possible. I do not wish to say a word against immigration, but I say that the course suggested by the hon. member for South Oxford is the proper one for the Government to pursue. They should exercise vigilance to see that those immigrants who come here should be of the right kind; and I hope that in the future the Government will see that we have a better class coming to this country than many of those who have already been sent out.

Mr. SPROULE. If there is anything like authentic information to be had, we have reason to believe that we have it. The hon. gentleman discredits the Government agent who wrote the report, giving the names of these men, where employed, and what wages they were getting, and who showed that the lowest wages were $1 a day, and the highest $2.50 per day. I do not see what better information we could have. We have further the evidence of another gentleman, who, I believe, is a reputable man, to the same effect.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Before you leave the Chair, Sir, I would like to ask the Government how item 12, "for grounds around public buildings at Ottawa, $9,500," is spent? Is that for the purpose of keeping up the conservatory?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is expended in keeping the grounds and the conservatory and the gardens around the buildings in good order.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What does the conservatory cost?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say just now, as I have not my memoranda here. There are two men employed there, and, of course, during the summer, two or three more to look after the gardens.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I mention this because the other day I visited that institution, and asked the caretaker if he would give me a flower. In reply, he said he had received instructions not to give out any flowers, that they were used exclusively for the Ministers' tables. I would like to know just how much we have to pay for the Ministers' flowers.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would call the attention of the Government to the fact that during this Session there have been ninety-nine Orders of the House granted for returns. I have endeavored to get a few returns that I ordered very early in the Session, one as early as the 27th February. That return is not brought down yet, and there are two others. Three returns have been brought down. The Minister of Agriculture brought down one a short time ago. But I would call the attention of the Government to this point: If we are to discharge our duties as an Opposition, we must be furnished with the necessary information to enable us to examine into the public expenditure. There are several returns that I have asked for in regard to matters which I was very anxious to examine into which have not been brought down, and it is impossible for members on this side of the House to discharge their duties if they are not furnished with the returns which are necessary to enable them to investigate the public expenditure. I find that during this Session there have been ninety-nine returns ordered, and up to this date only thirty-nine have been laid before the House. That is virtually about one in three, and sixty returns have not been brought down. I do not think members make motions for the mere fun of making them. They certainly have some object in asking for a return. I suppose it is impossible to expect, at this late stage of the Session, that we should get these returns; but, if this system is going to be continued next Session, it must cripple the members of the Opposition in discharging their duty to the country, and the country expects us to discharge our duty as well as it expects hon. gentlemen opposite to discharge theirs.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Whenever the House orders returns, the Order of the House is sent to the department to which the matter belongs, and there they prepare the papers as fast as they can. Some of these returns involve a great deal of work—some of them the work of months. I do not know what special returns the hon. gentleman speaks of, but I believe that the departments work as well as they can in getting up the returns for the House. I agree with the hon. gentleman that they ought to be prepared as fast as possible and sent down to the House; and I may say further that I think, whenever they are ready, they should be sent to the Clerk of the House during the recess, so that they may be accessible to members who desire to look them up.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I might be permitted to suggest that possibly the Government are a little too careless in allowing returns to go without considering whether they can be granted within a reasonable time and without informing members whether they can be got during the Session. Sometimes hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House move for returns, without at all intending to inflict a great amount of work on the departments; and the Ministers and those who have happened to be in the Ministry know that some of these will involve a great deal of labor and a great deal of expense, and I think it would be better for the Government to consider these motions for returns a little more carefully than they have been in the habit of doing before they are granted. The policy apparently has been to grant these returns as a matter of course, without stating whether they can be brought down during the Session or not. It is clear that one-third of all the returns ordered during the Session is a very small proportion to be brought down. I think that, this Session, scarcely one half of the returns moved for in previous Sessions have been ordered, but scarcely one-half of those ordered have been brought down.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not think the Government ought to answer the enquiry of the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Landerkin) with a laugh.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With a laugh?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes, the hon. gentleman has forgotten that he laughed, but that is the only reply we have yet had from the Government benches in reference to the grounds. My hon. friend made an enquiry so as to bring the expenditure on these grounds under the attention of the House and the country. The observation which was made to him by the caretaker shows that this expenditure has been incurred for the special benefit of Ministers. We have salaries voted for the payment of Ministers, and we vote the travelling expenses of the Ministers which, when they are travelling on public business, are paid for out of the public treasury; then we have a large sum paid for the cab-hire of Ministers which has been supposed to be a personal charge upon the Ministers themselves formerly, but has been charged against the public treasury when Ministers were seeking their own comfort rather than the public interest; but, when the Ministers have taken charge of the greenhouse here, and the flowers which are intended for the adornment of the grounds, and when they give special instructions that those flowers are intended for the adornment of the tables of Ministers when they are giving dinner parties, I think the public ought to know it; they ought to know whether this is in accordance with the line drawn by the Speaker in reference to my hon. friend when he was taking some ladies to the gallery the other day or not. The general impression in years gone by has been that Ministers stood on the same footing as any other hon. member of the House. I believe the expenditure on these grounds amounts to many thousands of dollars a year, and I would like to know whether, after all, it would not be better and cheaper in the public interest to pay the Ministers $2,000 or $3,000 a year more and get rid of this particular charge which is made in their interest and on their behalf. Of course it is all right that hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches should have an opportunity of discharging their public duties with efficiency and with dignity, and with that ability which so eminently distinguishes so large a number of them, especially the ability which they exhibit in regard to the masterly inactivity which has attended upon their proposed legislation. But I think the charge has been made by my hon. friend and the statement which was made to him, as he says, that the greenhouse is the exclusive preserve of the Ministers of the Crown—that it is intended for their exclusive use and benefit, that it is to provide flowers to adorn their dinner tables when they invite their guests, and entertain them in order to promote that personal cordiality which ought to exist between Ministers and those who support them, in order to smooth down the differences which sometimes occur, and of which we saw one example this Session when there was almost a disruption created between the First Minister and the Minister of Finance, when we saw the First Minister compelled to eat humble pie and to change his policy in the face of Parliament—suggests that perhaps more flowers may be necessary to smooth over these difficulties and to add to the comfort and pleasure of the hon. gentlemen and those who support them. We ought to know what the facts are, and we ought to have some information from the hon. gentleman before we adjourn. I suppose they are anxious to get away. I am sure I am.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You have only just come.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think they might take this opportunity of telling the House what the situation is, and what are the special claims of Ministers upon this portion of the public expenditure?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I suppose we must accept this as the masterly review of the Session by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). It is a sort of omnibus speech, for he refers to a great many subjects. In regard to the flowers, of which an hon. member was deprived, as he says, because they were wanted for some Minister's table, all I can say is that, if my colleagues have been getting flowers from the conservatory, I am very badly used, for I have not had my share. Then the hon. gentleman talks about cab-hire. I have a pretty good lill for cab-hire. I am an old man, and my house is a good distance away, and I am afraid that, as long as I hold my present office, the Canadian taxpayer must consent to pay for those cabs. The hon. member for South Oxford says he thinks there is a good deal of laxity in the granting of motions for returns. I suppose the hon. gentleman looks back to his own experience as a Minister, and I think he remembers that was a fault of his Government, if it be a fault, and of every Government. It is a delicate thing to refuse a motion for a return, and my experience has been that whenever a motion for a return has been refused there has been a great deal of grumbling, and the Government are charged—at all events, when we were in Opposition—I have heard it often charged against the Government: Oh, it is an attempt to suppress or conceal matters, when returns have been refused. But it is true that hon. members are too apt to move for returns when they are not wanted, when they can be of no use in the public interest; sometimes from curiosity, sometimes for the purpose of getting a hit at somebody else, and sometimes from utter ignorance of the quantity of work that the return involves, and the consequent expense. If the Opposition to-day would support the Government in objecting to returns that were moved for, when the mover does not explain at the time the object that the return is asked for, I think there will be fewer returns asked for, and a very considerable saving of money.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What I suggested to the hon. gentleman was this: I agree with him that it requires a very strong case to refuse a member a motion for a return, when he declares in his place in Parliament that he wants it. I suggest that the Ministers, who understand what will be involved in a particular return, should be at pains, instead of passing it as a matter of course, to explain to the member that such and such a return will take a long time and involve a considerable amount of cost. My hon. friends behind me, I know, are all reasonable men, extremely reasonable, and do not want to inflict unnecessary trouble on the departments, or unnecessary cost on the country; and if the Minister states that particular returns will be costly, I am sure my hon. friends will not press for them, unless there be a very good reason. If, after a Minister makes such a statement, then the hon. member chooses to say, I admit all that, still, I require it, then I would advise that the return be granted, as a rule, unless there is very strong ground to the contrary.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Put the responsibility on the member.

Mr. McMULLEN. The returns I asked for were in connection with colonisation companies in the North-West. Now that return was ordered more than two months ago. I wished to learn the number of colonisation companies, the amount of money they have paid out, the settlers they have brought in, and the cost of inspection. I asked, also, for a return, on the 27th February, in connection with the cost of a law suit, the Queen vs. the St. Catharine's Milling and Lumber Company. That cannot be a very expensive return.

Mr. MITCHELL. There was a lawyers' bill in it, of great length.

Mr. McMULLEN. I dare say it would be lengthy, and we want to know what the amount of those costs were.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I want to mention another matter that was brought to my attention last night, which I consider of so much importance to the farming community of this country that I must bring it before the House. A gentleman was talking to me last night about the experimental farm, over which the Minister of Agriculture presides with so much ability. It is well known to the House that the agricultural farms cost a large amount of money, which is expended with a view of directing greater attention to the cause of agriculture. It appears that last year, on the experimental farm in Ottawa, a large quantity of roots was raised—the Minister of Agriculture will testify if I am rightly informed—and the department selected men to take charge of those roots. They housed them and paid no attention to ventilation, and in the spring when they came to take the roots out, they were all rotten. And an hon. member called and said: "Why, these roots should have been ventilated, and if they had been ventilated, they would not have rotted." The man in charge said "I give you to understand, Sir, that this is an experimental farm."

Mr. SPROULE. They are getting ventilated now all right.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. Minister of Public Works did not reply to the hon. member for Grey with reference to the necessity of this green-house. For what purpose is it kept up? He says there are two or three men there. Why should the country be called upon to pay two or three men simply for keeping up a green-house? We are told at last that the flowers are not for the Ministers' tables, but, what is the necessity for the expenditure under that head?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The green-house is for the purpose of keeping plants ready for the spring. The flowers are kept there during the winter and in the spring they are transplanted. They are probably being transplanted at this moment on the gardens on these grounds. If we had no green-house, we should have to purchase the flowers every spring.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). You can buy them for one-quarter or one-half less.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is the same everywhere that there are large gardens. We have a place where the plants are removed in the fall in order to keep them during winter until spring. The hon. gentleman knows all about that in Halifax.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Since the Speaker gave up having dinners, there is no necessity for flowers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. AMYOT. I beg to communicate to the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence a small matter which is important to the parties concerned. The following letter is communicated to me:—

"OTTAWA, 7th May, 1888.

"SIR,—In reply to your letter of the 23rd ultimo, I am directed by the Minister of Militia and Defence to inform you that the names of Silas Alexander Ramsay, John D. O'Neil, Ira James Barwis and Wellington Edgar Bowell, have not been returned as entitled to certificates for land grant or scrip.

"In order that their claims may be entertained, it is necessary that this department may be furnished, through the general officer commanding the Militia, with a certificate of service from the officer under whom the above mentioned applicants served.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"HENRY PANET, Colonel,

"Deputy Minister Militia and Defence.

"JAMES WALKER, Esq.,
"Calgary, Alberta, N. W. T."

Major Walker, of Calgary, transmitted the same to me with the following letter:—

"I enclose you communication from the Militia Department, which explains itself. You will remember these men were on scouting duty, north of Calgary, and drew pay as such on pay roll signed and certified to by you. I believe as scouts in other parts of the Territory received the scrip, these men should be entitled to it also. Would you please take the matter in hand for them, and if possible furnish the Militia Department with the necessary certificate."

Mr. Speaker, I must say that when I left Calgary I received a letter from Major General Strange who had been commanding in the North-West, and he asked me to send a report of the operations of the 9th, and of the usefulness of the 9th in that part of the country where it had been scattered here and there. I sent that report, and I never saw it afterwards published or referred to. It showed part of the work done by the French battalion in the North-West, which has been suppressed. I do not know upon whom the responsibility rests—but what the 9th Battalion did there has not been made known to the country and certainly this is unfair, for both the public and the battalion have a right to know what work was done in the North-West. I expect that between the close of this Session and next Session a remedy will be introduced for that omission which is a very serious one. There was part of the report of Major General Strange suppressed, and the whole of my report concerning the 9th Battalion has been suppressed. As to these men to whom I have referred, I am sure if they are entitled to scrip and did not receive it, it was not my fault. I am only stating the facts that occurred, as it is my duty to do. Their names will be found in the many thousand vouchers which I signed when at Calgary, where I was acting as commandant of the force there, being the senior officer. I was left there without any instructions except on two points, which I need not particularise. As such commander I signed all sorts of vouchers, and the names of these men will be found there. If they are entitled to scrip, I think enquiry should be made in the matter, and they should receive the scrip as did any others who served the country during those troubles.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There can be no possible objection to enquiry being made again in reference to the names to which the hon. gentleman has just referred. The hon. gentleman must understand that the scrip was given under a statute passed by Parliament, and it was impossible for the department to go beyond the strict letter of the law which specified the special cases in which scrip should be given. I will make it a point to look into the matter again; but the return, which speaks for itself, and which the hon. gentleman has just mentioned, evidently indicates that those men would not be entitled to their scrip, otherwise there can be no possible reason why they should have been kept out of it. As to the other point to which the hon. gentleman has referred, the report of Major-General Strange, that matter has been brought up before Parliament already, and it was then shown by the report and by the answer given by the Major-General that that portion of the report which referred to the military operations had been published. There could be no reason why any portion of any report should be kept out of the general report which was published and laid on the Table of Parliament. However, this is a matter which again can be very easily ascertained by referring to the report which the Major-General has made and which was presented through me to Parliament.

Mr. AMYOT. I do not want any exception to be made in the case of those men to whom I have referred, but I simply want their case to be treated the same as other cases. If they are entitled to scrip under the statute it should be given to them, and that matter should not be affected by the question as to whether part of a report was suppressed or not, for I wish to see justice done to them. As to the fact of the suppression of part of the report of Major General Strange and the whole of my report, I do not wish to bring this matter up now, and I only mentioned it incidentally; but I hope the hon. gentleman will again look into the matter and see that justice is done, and if not I will call attention to it next Session.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Fishery overseers, N.B. $16,000

Mr. MITCHELL. I have received information from my county that a good many fishery overseers have received notices of dismissal. I should like the Minister to explain how this has occurred.

Mr. FOSTER. When I came into office and became a little acquainted with the fishery inspection and the way in which the protection of the fisheries was carried on, I began to make enquiries into the whole matter. As the result of complaints, which were very numerous and coming in from all quarters, as to inefficiency in the protection of the fisheries, I gave general instructions to the officers in the different Provinces to report all cases of inefficiency, my intention being to dismiss all inefficient men and to appoint in their place special guardians, persons who were to be employed for the time required at so much per day during that time. With respect to the county of Northumberland I found in the office a number of reports from Inspector Venning. I asked him for a confidential report upon the efficiency of the fishery protection in New Brunswick. Among these counties reported on was the county of Northumberland, and the inspector reported against a number of wardens, as they were called, who were receiving $25 or $30 a year and whom he said were altogether inefficient. They looked upon the post as a sort of sinecure and that they were entitled to the pay without doing very much for the protection of the fisheries, and the inspector recommended that they be dismissed and instead of having so many of those smaller officers, we should parcel out the district among good officers as overseers and give those officers the option of employing what special guardians they needed during the principal season during which the fisheries should be protected, at a certain rate per day. I carried out that recommendation, and the result was a number of dismissals of that kind. I have now parcelled out that part of the country in which this charge took place under overseers, and have given them authority to employ up to a certain number of special guardians during the principal portion of the season, paying them at the rate of $1.25 a day. When the principal season is over those men's services will cease. This accounts for what the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) has heard, and I may say that having adopted this system for two years, and to a large extent last year, I have not only the report of Mr. Venning, but I have reports generally from the county of Northumberland that the fishery protection has been very much better than during the preceding years, and this is attributed to the better system of protection. Not one of those officers has been dismissed for political reasons. I do not ask what the politics of any of the men are, and I have told my fishery inspectors in every Province that if they show that any fishery officer is neglectful of his duties and inefficient, if that fact is reported and the report is sustained, I will dismiss that officer and employ another.

Mr. MITCHELL. After that explanation, which is a very reasonable one, I may say that as the Minister has adopted a policy different from that which has prevailed for many years, I have nothing further to say about the matter, because his policy, if it succeeds as I hope it will succeed, will be all the better for the interest of fishery interests. The hon. gentleman has anticipated me by stating that none of these changes were made for political reasons. I am glad of that, because I should be very sorry to see politics imported into either the removal or appointment of an officer. What we want is to obtain the best officers. Previously we endeavored to obtain good men, but some of them no doubt have got old and may have become inefficient, and if the hon. gentleman requires the removal of certain of these, who may have been reported upon as inefficient, I cannot say very much against it; but I am glad to find the hon. gentleman has stated that no political reasons have inspired the removal of any of those men.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). There appear to be no less than ten fishery wardens in the county of Victoria, N.B., to whom $515 were paid. That is an entire waste of money, for I cannot understand what they have to protect.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend will see that the amount of money which is expended for the county of Victoria is a very small amount, if I mistake not. There has to be cared for, not only the head waters of the St. John, but also the Tobique River, which is a valuable salmon stream, and a large proportion of that money is expended for the protection of the Tobique River.

Mr. PRIOR. I wish to ask the hon. the Minister of Marine whether he has done anything with regard to the deep sea fisheries on the British Columbia coast. This question is a matter of great moment to British Columbia, as, from the few researches that have been made in regard to those fisheries, it has been proved that if the Government would spend some money to develop them, they would be as valuable as those on the Atlantic coast. I also wish to ask the hon. Minister if anything has been done with regard to the lobster fishery on the Pacific coast. There is no reason, it seems to me, why the lobster fishery should not assume gigantic proportions on the Pacific, as well as on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. FOSTER. As regards the lobster fishery, I may say that it was my intention if possible, to transfer live lobsters from the Atlantic coast to the coast of British Columbia. My hon. friend will remember if he has taken an interest in this subject and I know he has, that the United States Government made an attempt to transport lobsters to the Pacific coast, and that they met with a failure. I had some experiments carried on last year, so as to ascertain how long lobsters could be kept alive and under what conditions; first, during warmer weather, and afterwards during the colder season. I had arranged to send a shipment out to British Columbia in the late fall but after making the arrangements they fell through on account of the impossibility of getting a sufficient number of lobsters at that season of the year. A certain amount of expense was incurred in that experiment but the money has not been lost as we have received full information as to how long lobsters can be kept.

I intended this year to have a shipment made, but when I was in the United States the fishery commissioner at New York informed me that he intended to make an experiment in that direction this year, and I concluded that it would be wiser to allow him to make his experiment and then to adopt his methods if they were successful, and to avoid his errors if the experiment was not successful. With reference to the deep sea fisheries on the Pacific coast my hon. friend knows that I sent out a vessel the year before last, but that vessel was a little late in starting. Last year I intended to follow that up, but the vessel I had chartered and made arrangements with, went out sealing and did not get back as early as was intended, and I did not wish to meet the same difficulty on account of the lateness of the season as in the previous year. This year I intend to send our own steamer there about the middle of July, to make six or eight weeks experiments with reference to those fisheries.

Mr. LOVITT. Would the hon. Minister inform me from the result of his experiments, how long a lobster can be kept alive?

Mr. FOSTER. The experiments showed that they could be kept alive eight or ten days. A lobster was sent from Campbelltown, or near there, to Ottawa and it was alive and kicking when it came here, that was about ten days I think.

Mr. JONES (Halifax.) I wish to ask the hon. gentleman for some information about this fish-breeding. Of course the expenditure for fish-breeding, if it were successful, would be very popular, but so far as I have been able to judge from the experiments made near my own home it has not been at all the success which we all anticipated and desired. We have a hatchery near Halifax, started by the Government during the time that my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was in power. From that date up to the present moment there has not been a greater quantity of fish in that neighborhood than before. On the contrary there appears to be a falling off in the quantity. I hold in my hand a petition which I think was presented to the department by my colleague from Halifax (Mr. Kenny) from the inhabitants in that district. A copy of that address was handed to me, signed by 106 of the most respected people of that neighborhood, and I have a reply from the department saying that the petition was got up and signed by people who were not aware of the nature of it. I would remind the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that there are signatures to this petition of gentlemen of such high standing in that locality, that if he was acquainted with them he would immediately come to the conclusion that they would not have signed it unless they thought it was necessary. Some of the most prominent residents in Halifax, of both sides of politics—for politics does not enter into the question—and some of the most prominent professional men and merchants, who live at Bedford, during the summer season have signed this petition. They all come to the conclusion that the fishery in that neighborhood has been partly destroyed, and they ask that the Bedford basin shall for five years be protected from having nets set there, or any fish taken, with a view to restoring it to what it was previous to the establishment of this hatchery. As I said before I think those gentlemen who reside at Bedford would not have signed a petition of that character, if they had not the most positive information and believed that the statements made there are perfectly correct. I know so far as regards the immediate surroundings of Halifax where the young fish have been placed, that it has not had the desired effect, and that so far from the salmon fishing having been increased there it has rather fallen off. In some places there have been more fish taken, but in other places less. I dare say I shall be told by the Minister of Marine that they have reports from their own officers to the contrary, and I do not mean to insinuate that those reports from their own officers are entirely incorrect, but I will say, that if they are not exaggerated they are very sanguine reports, and these gentlemen who are in charge of those fisheries are very anxious in making their report to the department, to show that their work is successful in order to justify a continued expenditure in that direction. I wish that the Minister would express an opinion on this question, as the information I have been able to get from reliable sources is, that the hatchery has not been a success. Will the hon. gentleman inform me whether he received this petition with reference to the closing of that river? The river requires cleaning out also, and I have no doubt if this were done and if net fishing were prohibited, the result would be to put the river in the position it was some years ago. I am not blaming the hatchery altogether for it. But I am only saying that the result appears not to be such as to justify such a large expenditure under that head. I am very sorry for it, because I was instrumental in placing it there, and I am very sorry our expectations have not been realised.

Mr. FOSTER. I may say that the petition was received some three weeks ago, and I have had reports from my officers upon it; and, as the hon. gentleman intimates, those reports are not in accordance with the statements made by the petitioners. In fact, they controvert the statements made by the petitioners very materially, and state that the petition was signed under a misapprehension of the facts, and that many of those who signed it, when its real nature was brought to their notice, stated that they would not have signed it had they known its contents. However, the matter is under investigation, and I intend to look into it thoroughly. If there are any obstructions in the Sackville River which prevent the ascent of the fish for breeding purposes, I will see that they are removed. As to setting aside the basin, I would not like to say what decision shall be arrived at, because I have not yet had time to look into the reports on that subject.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I see that Mr. Rogers, the fishery inspector, received for salary and travelling expenses $2,400, and there is also a charge of $500 under the head of report in his name, and a royalty of $200 paid to him for his fish-ladder. I suggested last year whether it would not be better to purchase his patent than to pay this large amount to him year by year.

Mr. FOSTER. The salary of Mr. Rogers is as given there, and his travelling expenses are paid, and are not very large. That $500 may be an advance, which has been accounted for since. The royalty which has been paid to him for some years is $20 for each fish-way we use. It is, I believe, in the main, a very good one. I do not think, however, that it would be wise to buy for use in perpetuity a fish-way which may be very good to-day, but may be superseded by a better one to-morrow. It seemed to me that the best principle was to pay for that which was used. However, that matter is under the consideration of the department, and correspondence is being had with Mr. Rogers for a settlement of the matter. I quite understand the objection to an inspector having power to say where fish-ways should be situated, when he is interested in the use of fish-ways.

Mr. MITCHELL. I quite agree with the view of the hon. Minister that it would be very impolitic to purchase the patent of a fish-way or fish-ladder for any given sum, because, as he says, from year to year improvements will take place. Now, I do not suppose there are a great many rivers requiring fish-ways.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). A great many.

Mr. MITCHELL. If there are it is quite as well for us to pay for each one required as it is to pay a sum for the patent. I must admit that there is an objection to an inspector recommending them who is interested in getting a royalty on each one he recommends. Now, I would like to ask the Minister what has been the effect of these fish-breeding establishments so far as his more recent experience of the past year is concerned? I dare say that the hon. Minister will recollect that when this subject was under discussion last year a great deal was said as to whether these breeding establishments were useful or not. There was a very considerable opinion in this House that they were not useful. From that opinion I differed. From an experience of years I arrived at the conclusion that we had very much to learn about this fish hatching business. It is only from year to year, by close observation on the part of the men who superintend it, by the reports to the department, by the reflection of the department on those reports, and by the practical experience of the localities where they are used, that we can arrive at a conclusion as to whether the game is worth the candle or not. I believe the hatcheries are a complete success up to that stage of bringing into life the young fish, and while the natural food-bag remains. But the hon. Minister will recollect that I suggested last year that he should endeavor to get information from the practical men who superintend the hatcheries, as to whether they did not think the young fish were put into the rivers too early, at a time when they were unable to take care of themselves, and when they fall an easy prey to the trout, the perch, and other predaceous fish who frequent the waters where we breed salmon. If these fish hatcheries are going to be continued, it appears to me that there should be in connection with them a receiving pond where the young fish, which are now put into the water when they are two or two and a-half inches long, should be placed and fed until they are five or six inches long, and well able to take care of themselves. That could be done at a moderate expense. The present system is like putting a child of three or four years of age into the world to look after itself, instead of nurturing it until it is twelve or fifteen years of age. I would like to ask the Minister whether my observations of last year had any effect, or whether he has endeavored to ascertain from his officers whether there is anything in the suggestion; for, while I have my own opinion, I give way to the practical knowledge and experience of the men who are superintending these hatcheries.

Mr. FOSTER. This question is a very interesting one, and I wish we had time to discuss it more thoroughly than we have now. I have been following the subject since last year, and have had a number of practical testimonies sought for by my officers, which are embodied in the report, which I am very sorry has not yet been brought before the House, and which my hon. friend will find in the report when it is published. Those testimonies are extremely favorable in this matter. We know that we get the ova all right; we know that we take care of it all right; we know that it comes to maturity all right; and that we put it in the water and that the fish are fresh and lively. Then we lose sight of them and that is just where the critical period comes. With reference to fish hatchery operations in the United States, where probably they are carried on to a greater degree and with better success than in almost any other country, I do not think they are conducted in the way my hon. friend has suggested. It will be very difficult also to transport the fish when grown. Take 30,000,000 or 40,000,000 whitefish. It is difficult to have ponds enough to keep them in, and difficult to transport them to places where you wish to put them out. It is a question also whether, when they have grown to a certain size, their natural instinct impels them to go back to the place where they were taken out, or whether their instinct comes in the hatching itself. No doubt a large number of them are destroyed, as a large number of the naturally hatched are destroyed; and although I have tried to look into this matter thoroughly, I must say that it is difflcult to have absolute proof. I have no hesitation in saying that I believe the fish hatcheries are useful, and, properly carried on, have an influence in the propagation and keeping up of the supply of fish, but I also am of opinion that one fish spawned naturally is better than half a dozen spawned artificially. We must not at all lose sight of the fact that it is a greater advantage to facilitate the return of the fish to their natural spawning places, and that a large proportion of our efforts must be given to the taking away of the obstructions to their return and protecting the fish on their passage up the river and during the spawning season.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the hon. gentleman doubts the efficiency of the hatcheries, it is a question as to whether such a large amount should be annually expended on their maintenance. I have been told that some of the young fish from some British Columbia salmon ova, which were distributed from Mr. Wilmot's hatchery at Newcastle, Ontario, have been recognised and caught in Lake Ontario, after they had partially matured, that is of the age of three years.

Mr. FOSTER. I learn from my deputy that one was found and that is now in the fishery exhibition.

Mr. McNEILL. One difficulty that occurs to me is that if you keep the fish alone so long and accustom them not to look for their food but to have it supplied them, laying aside all other difficulties that have to be encountered, you may meet this other difficulty, that, when turned out, they would have become so much accustomed to have their food provided that they probably would come to grief.

To provide for the cost, maintenance and repairs of fishery protection steamers and vessels $100,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am sorry to see a reduction in that estimate. The hon. the Minister informed me the other day that he proposed protecting the fisheries as he did last year. Under any circumstances, whether we are to be under the modus vivendi or whether we are to be as we were before the passage of the treaty, there will be the same protection required to our fisheries, and even to a greater extent, because the Americans, having the right to go into our ports for bait and supplies, will have to pass over the three-mile limit, and we may possibly require more vessels than when they could not approach the coast at all. I hope the hon. gentleman is not going to relax in his efforts to protect our fishermen.

Mr. FOSTER. The reduction of the vote will not entail any reduction in the amount of protection. Out of last year's vote, a quantity of arms and ammunition was provided, which we have on hand. The same number of vessels will be employed this year as last, and the protection service will be carried out with the same vigor, and I hope, with increased efficiency. Last year we had Capt. Scott in charge, but I am sorry to say he is obliged to be absent in Europe on account of ill-health. Mr. Gordon, R.N., who, last year, was in command of the Acadia, will take his place.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope instructions will be given to the officers of such a nature that the annoying character of some of the seizures and the treatment of which the American Government complained will not recur again. I refer to the indiscretions of some of the officers, notably the officer commanding the Terror, with regard to hauling down the flag and that kind of business.

Mr. FOSTER. There was no trouble on that score last year.

Mr. MITCHELL. There was the year before.

Expenses in connection with the distribution of the fishing bounty and collection of the statistics..... $6,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). This seems to be a large amount, being 4 per cent. of the fishery bounties. These bounties might be paid out of the custom house and other branches of the public service at a much smaller commission. You could get any one to undertake the distribution for $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. This certainly is an unusual commission in these days when people are willing to work for small commissions in paying out or receiving cash.

Mr. MITCHELL. If I recollect rightly, the Postmaster General reduced the commission on the sale of stamps to one per cent., and it seems to me he was more economical in that way than the Minister of Fisheries. I do not advocate that a reduction should be made. I do not think the sum is too large, considering the trouble and correspondence involved, but I speak under correction. I am only sorry the Postmaster General reduced the commission on the sale of stamps as low as he did.

Mr. FOSTER. There is an immense number of claims coming in, about 40,000 cheques in the course of a year, and those claims have to be attested and examined and tabulated, and cheques have to be made out for them. The large part of the expense is caused by the work of the staff here, and from personal observation, I know they are hardly worked during the period the cheques are being got out, from the first January to the first of June. Then we pay a small fee of 15 cents for every boat and 25 cents for every vessel claim. The customs officer before whom the claims are made and who examines them and distributes the cheques I think deserves some remuneration, and I do not think that is a very large amount to pay.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). These cheques are distributed by the officers of the department, and it is part of their duty to carry out the laws passed by Parliament. I cannot understand why the House should be asked to pay them any more for that than should be paid in any other branch of the public service. While I am on that subject, I might caution the Minister of Marine in regard to this expenditure. I am in possession of certain information which leads me to the conclusion that there have been very considerable frauds on the department committed from time to time. I have seen statements made by parties interested which, from the best information I have obtained, have been entirely at variance with the facts, that vessels and crews have been drawing the bounty, and in order to comply with the law, which I think requires three months' fishing, they have made these statements when they had not been more than a fortnight fishing and had been engaged in coasting for the rest of the time. The number and the names of the crews have not been properly represented. In fact there has been a system of misrepresentation throughout, and I could give the hon. gentleman confidentially the names of some who have been parties in these transactions. I merely bring this to the notice of the department, because I am aware that they are anxious that the money should be properly applied, and that the Minister would be the first to check any improper appropriation in that way, but I am confident that misappropriation has been made, and that parties have drawn bounties they are not entitled to. I would suggest to the Minister that he should be, if possible, more careful than heretofore in examining all these returns when they are sent in, so as to be perfectly sure that they comply with the law. I do not know how this can be done, and I have not thought the matter over sufficiently to suggest a reform, because I am aware that the department is not at fault, but that it takes the returns as they come from its officers, but it is perfectly certain that the department is imposed on.

Mr. FOSTER. It is impossible to find officials of the Fishery Department at every place where these claims can be filed to look after this matter, and very often the subject has to be left in the hands of the customs officers. I have no doubt that there may be some claims, out of the very large number which are made, which may be fraudulent, and that is proved by the fact that strict and close scrutiny leads us to reject many claims when they are found not to be correct. I can assure the hon. gentleman that we are as careful as we can be.

Mr. EISENHAUER. The fishery officer at Lunenburg is nearly ninety years of age and is losing his faculties, that is, Mr. Jost, and several blunders have been made in consequence of his age and failing powers. I think a change should be made in that office, because, especially in regard to the bounties, several mistakes have been made. This is very important, because I believe a very large proportion of this bounty goes to the county of Lunenburg, and it should be properly distributed.

Superintendent of Insurance.....$5,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice under item 25, which follows this immediately, that the Minister of Finance has forgotten to carry out the suggestion I made last year, and he promised to have attended to, for the sake of convenience, to separate the various subsidies paid to the Provinces. It is made a lump sum of $4,188,454, and I mentioned to him that it would be convenient for reference to separate the amounts for each Province.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have had that done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is not done here.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sorry for that. I believe it is in print, and I will furnish the hon. gentleman with a copy, and will call the attention of the department to it, so as to have that placed in the Estimates in that way in the future.

Geological Survey.....$60,000

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. $60,000 has been the normal vote some years excepting last year and the year before. The sum voted for the general purposes mentioned of the Geological Survey has, since and including 1883, been $60,000 each year, with the exception of 1885-86, when it was $78,557.00. The extra $18,557 was for the purpose of paying up balances on account of printing and other similar services which had been accumulating for several years previously. With a view to balancing the account the appropriation was reduced by about $5,000 in 1886-87 and again in 1887-88, the current fiscal year, but, as the arrears have been wiped out, the amount of $60,000 which was voted from 1883, is again asked for this service.

Mr. MITCHELL. What is the occasion for the increase?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have already explained that, last year and the year before, it was a reduction to make up the excess required for the previous year when the vote of $78,000 was taken in consequence of our having to meet printing accounts for reports and maps and matters of that kind which has been accumulating for some years, and they were paid off by that vote, and it was to recoup the treasury that the amount was reduced $5,000 last year and the year before. The sum now asked for is the same as the old one.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the hon. gentleman think that the country gets a sufficient return for the money we pay for that purpose? I have spoken with a great many people who know something about this, and their opinion is that the money paid is not compensated by the work performed. No doubt a great many of the officers are very skilful, but a great deal of discussion took place during this Parliament and in the last Parliament on this subject, and I am sorry my hon. friend from Sherbrook (Mr. Hall) is not here, as he was chairman of a committee which made some report on that subject, but I am not aware that anything resulted from the recommendations of that committee. I should like to know whether the Government are satisfied with the way in which that department is carried on. If they are, I think the public is not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will say to the hon. gentleman that while I think the Geological Survey has been a most valuable one, and indispensable, in fact, to the country, yet I think it is capable of improvement. I may say that our lamented friend had that subject before him, and he had made up his mind to make a considerable alteration in the organisation of the staff, and particularly to devote a greater portion of the labor of the survey to economic subjects, to make it more of a practical institution giving attention to such subjects as mining, instead of exclusively to the mere scientific operations that have been carried on for years under Dr. Selwyn. The late Minister being cut off, of course, I do not know exactly what his plans were, although I have a pretty good idea of them, and I think they can be carried out.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad to hear the First Minister state that the attention of the Government has been devoted to making an improvement in the direction he indicated. We have vast mineral resources in this country, and it is of great importance that the people who are developing these resources, should be aided by any practical information they can obtain from the official documents in the possession of this department.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That will be attended to.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is any portion of this vote applied to sinking artesian wells in the North-West Territories?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I understand there are two borers at work in the North-West, but the expenditures are not made under the Geological Department.

Indians, Ontario and Quebec..... $42,739 72

Mr. DAWSON. For payment of annuities under the Robinson Treaty, $15,500—I wish to draw the attention of the department to one thing with regard to this item. The treaties made with the Indians in a large part of Ontario are not being observed, or they are being evaded in one particular. In the Robinson Treaty, and the treaties subsequently made, it was stipulated that the Indians should have the right of fishing all over the territory as they had before held it; that they were to be at liberty to hunt and fish in every direction. As one of the commissioners myself, along with the Governor of Manitoba, in making Treaty No. 3, which covers some 50,000 square miles, we were very particular in explaining to the Indians that they would still have the right of fishing in the territories which they ceded. Now, how is that being carried out? Take the Lake of the Woods, for instance. Here is a very large inland lake, over which, I believe, the Government of Ontario now assume control, and in which it has the right of granting licenses to fish. I do not know that it has granted any licenses. I think the Government of Ontario has been particularly careful about this, after it was explained to them that the Indians had rights. But what are the facts? People have gone to the Lake of the Woods with all sorts of apparatus for fishing, they have nets of all kinds, machinery of all sorts, with which they scoop out the fish. Now, this large lake and the rivers flowing into it have been sufficient to supply 4,000 Indians with fish from time immemorial. There is an Indian population of some 4,000 around that lake and along Rainy River, which flows into it. These people depend very largely on fish for subsistence, and it is the same all through the Territories, around lakes far to the east. Now, Sir, Canadians and Americans from the other side go there with all the appliances and improved methods of fishing and they scoop the fish out of the lakes and leave none for the Indians. It is the same with lakes near the Canadian Pacific Railway. There is another lake not far from Sudbury, called Whitefish Lake, about 24 miles in length and six or eight miles in width, and people have gone there with nets, or are about to go there with this improved method of fishing and they will scoop out the fish in the course of the summer and leave none for the Indians. The Indians all through that country are not very far advanced in agriculture as yet, they cannot cultivate for themselves, they do not grow enough to support themselves, and unless the fish are left them, they will, in a short time, become a burden upon the country, as the Indians in the North-West have been on account of the destruction of the buffalo. Now, if some means could be adopted of preserving the fish in these lakes, not of preventing people altogether from fishing in the ordinary way, but preventing speculators from going there and cleaning the fish completely out of the lakes, packing them in ice, and sending them all over the world. I think the Government would be doing an act of justice to the Indians. These fish are the only resource that is left to the Indians, and unless the Government step in and do something to maintain for them this means of subsistence, the consequence will be that the Government will have to provide for the Indians in some other way. The attention of the Government of Ontario was called to the fact that it was stipulated in the treaty that the Indians should have the right to fish in the inland waters. The Government, I am informed, said: We will not grant licenses to fish if you can show that the fish can be reserved for the Indians, we do not grant the privilege of setting pound nets and these other destructive appliances for fishing.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Did the treaty stipulate that the fish should be reserved exclusively for the Indians?

Mr. DAWSON. The treaty stipulates that the Indians shall have the right of fishing all over the Territories as they formerly had. Now if you permit the lakes to be depleted of fish, what becomes of the stipulation in the treaty that they were to be allowed the right of fishing as formerly? It was pointed out to them that they would have the same means of subsistence in regard to fisheries as they formerly had. What becomes of that stipulation if the white man is allowed to go wherever he likes, and to make a speculation in sweeping the fish out of the lakes and sending them to the markets of the world? I merely draw the attention to this fact of the right hon. Premier, who has always been extremely careful of the rights of the Indians. I draw the hon. gentleman's attention to this matter with a view to prevent the fisheries from being entirely destroyed and the Indians thus deprived of a food supply which should be theirs for ever.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The treaty, as the hon. gentleman says, provides that the Indians who come under it should have the right to fish in all the waters within the area surrendered. That, however, does not give them exclusive right to fish, and it appears the Indians do not object to ordinary fishing being done in those waters by other parties and they do not seek to prevent settlers from fishing there. But under the general principle applying to the protection of fisheries and for the prevention of the destruction of the fisheries, I think it is of very great importance that some steps should be taken, similar to those which the hon. gentleman has mentioned, to protect those waters from being depleted by fishermen and the fish shipped to a foreign market, thus depriving the settlers as well as the Indians, of that source of food supply. I think the Minister of Fisheries will have to look after this matter, and I shall have his attention particularly drawn to it.

Mr. DAWSON. The Indians make no objection to people fishing in the usual way with the rod and lines and even to setting nets; but they do object to terrible machines such as pound nets and nets five miles long being used.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not think the hon. gentleman can interfere. Of course, the fisheries in the waters belong to the Crown as represented by any one of the Provinces. They stand in the same position as private proprietors.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Only, of course, within our powers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In connection with the vote for Indians in Ontario and Quebec I should like to enquire of the First Minister what were the circumstances under which a considerable sum of money is stated to have been handed over to the Indians of the Brantford reserve a few months ago. If I am correctly advised, this sum of money, $28,000 or $30,000, I think it was, was handed over to those Indians without the concurrence of the Ontario Government or the Quebec Government, and it is charged practically against those Governments. I observe by the reports of the Ontario Legislature that there is a lawsuit threatened between the Ontario and Dominion Governments on that head. It cannot be correct for the Dominion Government to charge the Provinces without their consent being obtained; at all events, it would be very inexpedient to do so. I should like to know what were the reasons that induced the hon. gentleman to act either without consulting with or against the remonstrances of those Governments, especially the Ontario Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I really am altogether ignorant of the circumstance of which the hon. gentleman speaks. I will enquire about it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did not the hon. gentleman notice a debate that took place in the Ontario Legislature.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, I did not. I was not in charge of the department at the time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am speaking without definite information myself, but I noticed from a debate in that House that we were threatened with a law suit, which judging from our former experience, might cost us quite as much as the grant.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think the matter to which my hon. friend refers is the overflowing of a portion of the Indian lands by a dam which was built very many years ago on the Grand River; and there is also the case of the payment of the Mississagua Indians for a reserve, also for lands situated on the Credit, not far from Toronto. I think the hon. gentleman must have paid the Mississaguas $60,000, and the Iroquois or Six Nations $30,000 or $40,000, for their claims. The question is whether the right hon. gentleman has a right to recognise an old claim and to charge that to any of the Provinces. Of course, the Provinces claim the hon. gentleman has no such right. I do not know whether he has attempted to charge them, or whether he has recognised those as moral claims against the Dominion, or that the Dominion Government considers itself called upon to pay them. I understand that so far as the Mississaguas and Credit Indians are concerned, their claim was really paid for before the war of 1815, and the papers in the matter were burnt at the time the Americans destroyed York.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I really am unable at this moment to speak in regard to the point raised by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). I will take an early opportunity on Monday to bring the matter up.

Mr. SCRIVER. Before these items are passed I desire to congratulate the Premier upon the success of the plan which I believe originated with him, but which was carried out by his successor, the late lamented Minister of the Interior, for the settlement of the difficulty between the Indians and the occupants of the land in the township of Dundee. Perhaps the hon. gentleman is aware of the report the commission made on the subject, that the recommendations of the report have been accepted by the settlers, that they have applied to the Quebec Legislature for the necessary legislation, and that in all probability this long vexed question will be settled. However, what I desire to say particularly is that it seems to me rather a hardship, in view of the large sum that the settlers are called upon to pay, that they should also be called upon to contribute a share of the expenses connected with that commission. A suggestion was made to the late lamented Minister of the Interior that all the expenses connected with that commission should be paid by the Government. What his determination was on the subject I do not know; but I am afraid that the sum placed in the Supplementary Estimates does not provide for the expenses incurred by the settlers in the employment of counsel and so forth. If not, I shall hope that something will be done in that direction hereafter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is very satisfactory, as the hon. gentleman says, to have that long standing dispute, which caused so much irritation and trouble among the settlers in Dundee, brought to a close. It was carried out very efficiently by the late Mr. White, who went down himself and looked into the matter on the spot, and the arrangement arrived at appears to be satisfactory both to the Indians and the whites. As to the question of the expense of the commission, I am not able to answer that point.

Mr. LAURIER. Can the hon. gentleman give the committee any information in regard to the Oka Indians?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A portion of them removed two years ago to the township of Gibson. The others have not yet gone, but it is expected they will go; these Indians are going there by degrees. Some object to leave the habitation of their ancestors; but the success of the Indians in Gibson is very remarkable, they are doing very well and the Indians at Oka go up there and see their friends, and I understand there is every probability that the whole of them will remove there. They cannot, however, be hurried and compelled to go, but we hope they will go by degrees.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I desire to bring before the hon. gentleman a matter about which there is much public rumor. A large portion of the eastern part of Ontario was never surrendered by any Indian band, there are no treaties between any bands or tribes of Indians and the crown in reference to the surrender of the Indian claim to the country in all this eastern section extending from the Ottawa to the frontier of Lake Ontario and the vicinity of Kingston. It is said that certain bands of the Mississagua Indians claim the country, although ceded, and the crown has parted with the title to private parties. I should like to know from the hon. gentleman whether the hon. gentleman is entertaining any such claim or not, because, I think, there would be very little difficulty in showing that there is no band of Indians which can by any possibility have any claim to the country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Such a claim has been made, but it has not been entertained. I understand that the commissioners are arbitrators who are to meet to settle the various accounts between Quebec and Ontario. As far as we know that claim is not entertained, or looked upon with favor.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Government are not encouraging it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, not at all.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Of course the hon. gentleman knows that there never has been a surrender of the eastern portion of the country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I believe so.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The facts are these: Before the country came into the possession of the French it was in the hands of the Chippawa Indians who owned it, and the Six Nations after being armed, until Fort Frontenac was built, held possession of the country. The Mississaguas are marked in all the French maps as residing north of Lake Huron. They were not in this country at all until it became a British possession. I mention this to the hon. gentleman that now the country has been settled and surveyed he should not entertain any claim of that sort.

Mr. COOK. The Christian Island Indians have another claim. I have heard that their solicitor has been interviewing the Government with a view to endeavoring to do them justice. They claim a large portion of the land in Tiny Township and the town of Penetanguishene.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not able to answer my hon. friend on that point, but I take it they have a reserve.

Mr. COOK. Yes, they have claimed to own a large portion of the town.

It being six o'clock the Committee rose, and the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MITCHELL. I see there is an increase of $70 in salaries on account of the Indians in New Brunswick. Might I ask the Indian chief what is this for? I would rather have seen it for seed grain.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The increase is on account of the appointment of Constable Barnaby at $20 a year. Dr. O'Brien's appointment at $100. $50 of that having been provided for medical services at Big Cove, it proved to be quite insufficient.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Might I ask the hon. gentleman when it was that this practice of voting seed grain was begun?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It has gone on for years.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It was not formerly so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It has been voted for a good many years.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Was it before the Franchise Bill?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Are the reserves in British Columbia being surveyed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Surveys for the Indians have been going on for some time and will be going on for some years yet. They are over a very large extent of country, as the Indians are living in small lots in the valleys between the mountains, and those are being surveyed by degrees.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is marking out the reserves from the general domain?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, that is it. Mr. O'Reilly is doing that work, and the British Columbia Government have such confidence in him that they have approved of his services.

Mr. MITCHELL. They thanked him, but they did not pay him any money.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This work commenced some twelve years ago, and it was generally supposed that it would take some three or four years to complete.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You see the vote has been reduced several hundred dollars a year.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This survey is marking out the Indian territories, so as to distinguish it from the domain of the Crown in British Columbia. Can the hon. gentleman tell us what land has been set apart?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. O'Reilly's report will show that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). One would suppose there were a great many hundred Indian reserves, when you look at the time over which it has extended.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It will be a long time before they are surveyed.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Those lands surveyed for the use of the Indians become administered by this Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How was it before? Had the British Columbia Government control over the land?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The British Columbia Government had charge of the Indians under Imperial supervision. When the Union took place the same provision was in the agreement and the Treaty of Union, as was in the British North America Act by which the control and management of the Indians on their reserves was thrown on the Government of Canada.

Mr. MARA. Before Confederation the governor of the Crown colonies had charge of the Indians in British Columbia. I would like to ask the Minister whether he intends building the industrial schools he promised last Session? No action has been taken. The sites, I think, have not been selected, nor has anything been done towards commencing those schools.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There has been a good deal of difficulty of a religious nature in connection with these schools, as to who should have control of them, and where they should be placed; but the arrangements have been pretty nearly concluded. The suggestion is, although it is not finally settled, that there shall be one school at Kamloops, where I believe the Indians are generally Catholic, under the supervision of Bishop D'Herbomez, another at Metlakatla, and another on Vancouver Island. They will be undertaken immediately.

Indians, Manitoba and North-West Territories..... $876,750

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It would be interesting to the committee if the hon. First Minister would state the condition of the Indians in the North-West. It has been rumored lately that there has been destitution among them. He might also state what progress has been made in the schools and on the farms.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The report of the Indian Department goes into that subject fully. As to destitution, the reports are exceedingly exaggerated. The Indians, I believe, are in as comfortable a condition as Indians ever are. In some of the bands, from indolence, or disease or other causes, there are occasional instances of destitution. Whenever these occur, any of the Government officers who happen to be nearest the band, whether a land agent, or an Indian agent, or a mounted police officer, takes care that no one is allowed to starve. Their instructions are also not to spoil the Indians by feeding them, because as soon as an Indian band find that there is food in the Indian store, they will hang about it and will not go to work. So that it is only in cases where there is danger of starvation that food is given to them. But weekly, and I may say oftener than weekly, reports are received from the various bands, and all these reports concur in stating that during the past winter the Indians have thrived well, and there has been very little destitution.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I see that the hon. gentleman is taking $26,500 again for agricultural implements. Of course, the agricultural implements to which the Indians were entitled under treaty were given to them a long time ago, and these appropriations made to them from year to year are gratuities not required by treaty obligations.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The note I have from the department states that the different reserves in the North-West Territories are already well supplied with agricultural implements, tools and harness. The sum now asked is to provide against unavoidable wear and tear, and also the changed conditions of the Indians, who are now asking for implements and tools to enable them to perform labor which without them they would not undertake. I think the treaty obligation was only to furnish one set of implements.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That was all.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Indians are very careless of the implements, although they have improved considerably since they were first taken charge of by the Dominion Government. But still it would be bad economy to refuse them implements when they really show to the agent what they want, because without them they would just wander about as vagrants and beggars.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No doubt that may be so, but of course we are making a new departure. After the treaty obligations are fulfilled, you propose to continue to supply them with agricultural implements. That may be a good policy, but has the hon. gentleman had any communication through the agents with the Indians, calling their attention to the fact that we are exceeding the treaty obligations, or will the Indians look on this as a matter of right that is to be continued for all time to come?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, no. There is not the slightest necessity of giving notice to the Indians what their rights are; they know what they are just as well as my hon. friend does, and they know perfectly well that they have no legal or treaty claim to these implements.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to call the attention of the First Minister to page 290 of the Auditor General's Report where there is a charge for 21 tool chests at $58 each.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. These tool chests are furnished under treaty. The pattern is settled, of a substantial tool chest in which to keep their little property, and their agricultural implements and tools. They are constructed by public competition.

Mr. MITCHELL. The First Minister will recollect that, for the last two or three Sessions, I have had the honor to bring under his notice the manner in which tenders for contracts have been let in the North West, and, while he did not assent to the suggestion I made at that time, he will recollect that he said he thought the suggestion a good one and that, in the immediate future, it should be adopted. I would ask on what system they make these contracts now, whether they are let en bloc, as they were a few years ago, or whether the manufacturers and traders of the country are given a chance to tender. My principal objection was to the time and the manner of delivery. I contended that the contracts should be asked for delivery at certain stated points, and not that the goods should be delivered on the different reserves, because that would preclude the manufacturers and dealers here from going into the contracts. I think so still. I thought that, by delivering those goods at certain points along the line of the railway, the public would get the advantage of a cheaper rate, and it would disseminate the contracts more generally among the manufacturers of the country. My hon. friend by my side (Mr. Perley, Assiniboia) says they do that. They may do that in regard to the contractors, but the contractors agree to deliver these goods all over these points, so that the American house which has had almost a monopoly of supplying the Mounted Police and Indians, have an advantage over our own manufacturers, and I thought there should be some opportunity given to our own manufacturers to tender for different parts of these supplies, to be delivered at certain points on the railway line, instead of letting the contract en bloc.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no tender en bloc. Advertisements are issued specifying minutely the different articles required, and parties can tender for the whole or for portions of the articles contained in the advertisement, as they think they can supply them.

Mr. MITCHELL. What about the delivery?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The contract is still to deliver at the place of consumption.

Mr. MITCHELL. At the different Indian reserves?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, and not along the line of the railway. It would cost an enormous sum of money to the Government to be obliged to make a separate contract with parties to carry these supplies which would be strewed all along the line, to the different points where they would be required. Those who tender now make their own arrangements to send the different supplies from the railways to the points of consumption. At first the eastern contractors were rather unwilling to have that system adopted, but they have got into it now, and the contracts are eagerly sought after by contractors from Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa and other places. Ottawa and Montreal have several important contracts. I do not now speak specially of the Indian Department, but I know that for the Mounted Police as well as the Indian Department, there is generally a competition for these supplies, and they are all let by public competition.

Mr. MITCHELL. That does not meet the point as to the transfer. I suggested that, if three or four points along the line of railway were fixed upon, the actual delivery to these stations would be disseminated among our own people in the North-West, and our traders and merchants could tender for the supply of such articles of goods as they manufactured or dealt in. As to the system the First Minister says is in force at present, its result has been to put all this into the hands of large establishments such as I. G. Baker & Co.—a foreign company—and the Hudson Bay Company. These two companies have almost monopolised the furnishing of the great quantities of supplies for the North-West for ten years past. I think it is time that that should be changed, and that the general manufacturers, traders and merchants should have a chance to supply that country, and that our inhabitants in the North-West should have an opportunity of doing the freighting, without our paying toll to the middlemen. The Hudson Bay Company, or I. G. Baker & Co., undertake the delivery of the whole quantity to the Indian or police stations, and they sub-let that part to such persons as they like, while, if the contract were for delivery at certain points on the railway, it would be much cheaper and would disseminate the advantage among our manufacturers and our workmen without the aid of middlemen.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I see that there is an amount under the head of "destitute Indians" of $756 for 760 pairs of trousers. That is not quite a dollar a pair. I should like to ask if the cloth is bought, and if the Indians are so far advanced in industrial work that they make their own clothing. Otherwise the trousers must surely have cost more than that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, I do not think they make their own trousers. It is done by contract.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is strange that the making and the goods are separated in that way.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is correct. By some error the cloth was advertised for only, and a contract was made for that. Then there was a separate contract for the manufacture of the trousers.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I was in hopes that, perhaps, to some extent, they had been able to accomplish—of course you could not expect them to do as much as the more advanced Indians in my own constituency—so much in the industrial school that the females were able to do a great deal of this work and had made these trousers themselves. Still, I did not know that we had attained to so great an efficiency as that in these industrial schools. Are they simply for purposes of education?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend must remember that those schools have only recently been established. The women's school at Qu'Appelle was only established last year, and I think the others have only been established about three years. There are two others to be established during the coming year.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). We are progressing in that direction?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope the Premier will accept a suggestion which I make in good part. I think, if he will take the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Perley) into the Cabinet, that hon. gentleman could tell him more about it than he knows himself. He tells me that the female Indians—what do you call them, Mr. Perley, squaws?—make a good deal of their own dresses, and mitts, and socks, and so on.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I do not think the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) is quite as ignorant of the character of the females in the Indian tribes as he pretends to be.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Indian woman—female as I think my hon. friend said—ought to do something of the kind, because I observe under the head of annuity that there seems to be an enormous and rather unaccountable disproportion. For instance, in one community, there are 48 men and 112 women; in another 25 men and 150 women; in another 150 men and 348 women; in another 147 men and 260 women. Are all these Indians provided with duplicate ribs? It appears to me there is something curious in this preponderance of women, because this preponderance does not exist so among the boys and girls. These in most cases appear to be tolerably equal, but in almost all cases, on page 238, there is a very great disproportion between the men and the women. As there are no wars now among these tribes, it would be interesting to know why these disproportions exist.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My attention was never called to that before, and I am not aware what is the cause.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I notice last year the agricultural implements cost $26,000, seed $5,000, farm instructors $3,000, maintenance $16,000; and as far as I can judge from hastily looking over the crop harvested, if we had purchased outright the result of the labors of those farm instructors, we would have acquired for the use of the Indians the same amount as is produced. If those instructors are doing their duty there ought to be more than that. There appears to be an expenditure of the maximum amount of money with the minimum result. The hon. the First Minister ought to see how far these farm instructors are successfully performing their duties, for if the country is as capable of producing crops as it is represented to be, the results ought to be, after so many years trial, something more than the report shows.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I may say that on the reserves along the line of railway from Regina to Manitoba and also on the Touchwood Hill reserves, about 100 miles from the railway, the Indians are becoming very efficient in the art of agriculture. There is only one agent as a rule on each reserve. He goes out in the field in the morning, with a pair of horses supplied by the Government, and starts the plough. Then when the furrow is made, the Indians come along with their oxen and plough the land. The instructor teaches them how to sow the seed and plough and hoe and do all kinds of work, and soon the reserves will be able to maintain themselves. The first prize steers at Broadville were owned by an Indian chief, and the vegetables of all kinds there exhibited by the Indians astonished everybody. It was really wonderful that these wild men who, a few years ago, roamed about with scalp knives in their hands, could produce such result. A few days before I left home, I saw an Indian Chief who had his 20 bags of flour which he had raised himself and his team of oxen. Last year I visited Touchwood Hills, and there saw a cellar containing 3,000 bushels of potatoes, which the instructor had received from the Indians for seed this year. At all the reserves the instructors keep a certain portion from the produce of the Indian farmers for seed, and the balance the Indians store away for their own use. The women knit socks, and comforters, and different articles of that kind, which they have learned how to make from the instructors' wives. Each of those agents has a wife, a very nice lady, who takes pride in instructing the Indian women how to do knitting, and these Indian women become very expert at the work. I must say that it has been a source of great pleasure to me to see how efficient these poor people are becoming in providing a living for themselves, and this is altogether due to the careful management of these agents.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Are these Sioux Indians or Crees?

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). They are Crees. I read the report of a statement made by Dumont that the Indians on the reserves were starving and had to be supported by the half-breeds. But I can say that as regards my district, on the Piapot's, the File Hills, the Assiniboia and other reserves, that statement is entirely incorrect. Those agents are gentlemen of high moral character and good standing. I know personally most of them, and I know that the statement of Dumont is entirely unfounded. I thought it was my duty, knowing the facts of the case, to bear this testimony to the progress the Indians are making.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We are all glad to know that. Few things would give me greater pleasure than to know that the Indians of the North-West were to any degree becoming self-sustaining. I notice in the Auditor General's Report for 1886-87 that the total number of Indians in the Manitoba Superintendency and the North-West Superintendency, who receive annuities, is put down at barely 22,000. Now, if that statement is correct, as I presume it is, it follows that for the maintenance of these 22,000 Indians we expend $76,000, or at the rate of $40 per head, which is equivalent to $200 per family. This includes all expenses, and, of course, does not go directly, all of it, into the hands of the Indians, but it is an extremely heavy expenditure, and I am at a loss to understand how it comes to be so heavy, unless something has been omitted by the Auditor General; $200 a family, as an average result, is a tremendous heavy expenditure. I was under the impression myself that the number of Indians whom we had to support more or less was considerably larger.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is, I am quite sure.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I put the question to the First Minister in order that, if there be a larger number than are here set down, it should be explained.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will take a note of it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know, because I cannot help believing that to have to expend $200 per family for the Indians of the North-West, is a great deal more than this country should be called upon to do.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That includes the expenditure of the instructors and surveyors, and I think there are more Indians than that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are a large number of non-treaty Indians.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do we do nothing for them at all, when they are destitute?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are the Sioux Indians, who were refugees from the United States after the massacre of 1860. They are in destitution, and have no legal reserve except what is accorded them by the Government. There are plenty of non-treaty Indians as well. A good many Indians that were counted in the band, had some white blood in them, and they claimed to be whites in order to get the scrip. I dare say that, in some degree, will account for the difference between the number of the men and the women.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I may observe that I was by no means charging the whole sum. The actual sum expended in 1886-87 was $1,072,000. Now, according to the department, they have spent about $880,000, so that I kept largely within the sum actually expended.

Mr. McMULLEN. I endorse the views expressed by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). I think in some cases excessive prices are paid. I notice that seed barley last year cost $1.50 per bushel; seed oats cost a little over $1 per bushel; and there was a quantity of oats bought for feeding purposes that only cost 40 cents. Why should there be such a difference?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The freight.

Mr. McMULLEN. The freight should be the same on oats for feed as on those for seed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Some of the grain may have to be carried 500 or 600 miles, and some of it only 20 miles. I would say to the hon. member for South Oxford that I find in the last report of the Department of Indian Affairs, that under the treaties there are 23,811 Indians; in the Peace River district, 2,038; in the Athabaska district, 8,000; in the Mackenzie River district, 7,000; in eastern Rupert's Land, 4,016.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As I understand it, you do not do anything for the Peace River or Mackenzie River districts?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Except when they are outside the treaty, except when information comes that they are actually starving, we cannot allow them to die.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The figures of the Auditor General correspond sufficiently with the figures I have here. They show a little over $21,000. Now, in the Peace River district I hardly recollect any other sums having been spent for some years; if there were, I think they were very small. None was spent in the Mackenzie River nor in the Rupert's Land district.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There was a small amount for twine for nets, and things of that kind.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Practically speaking this heavy item of expenditure that we annually vote for Manitoba and the North-West, goes to some 22,000 or 23,000 people.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And in 1886-87 it reached as I pointed out, to over a million.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The First Minister, in giving the population of the Indians within the seven treaties, included the Indians in the Province of Ontario over the height of land westward, so that if you begin at the western boundary of Ontario and take the Indians of the North-West Territories and Manitoba, you will have a much smaller population.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is, I take it, from the head of lake Superior westward.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Of course it looks like a large amount to give, but I always think, in reference to the Indians in the North-West, that the Government should not be unduly pressed in a matter of that kind. It is a very difficult thing, indeed, to manage, and only when I have thought that there have been cases of absolute neglect on the part of the officials, did I call the attention of the Government to it—I think it is our duty to do that at all times. With reference to this amount, there is this bright side: that while it seems large per head, we have heard from the hon. member for Assiniboina that a large amount goes for farm instructors, wages, and other things, that swell this total amount; but by means of this expenditure we have reason to hope that the Indians are becoming more self-sustaining, and the expenditure will in a short time begin to decrease. Although I was prepared to show that there is a waste—I do not feel able to do it at the present time—I should not like unduly to press the Government. Of course some of the prices look very high, but when we remember what the Minister has said, that they may be altered very much on account of freight, we cannot pronounce too hasty a judgment. I was pleased to see when I was up in the North-West last fall, that the Indians seemed to be making progress, as this gentleman has said, and every Canadian must rejoice; if we can solve the Indian problem—making them good citizens and self-supporting citizens—we will have accomplished something I think that has never been done by any other nation.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I would say with regard to the Indians being self supporting that the people of Battleford have already sent down a petition to the right hon. gentleman complaining that the Indians are raising so much grain and farm produce that they are taking away the market from the white settlers. They represent that the Indians have been helped on so much that they are now in such a good position that they are able to produce grain at a cheap rate, and are able to take away the market from the white settlers. I think this shows that the officials employed by the Government are deserving the highest praise for having taught the Indians so well that they are able to compete with the white settlers.

North-West Mounted Police.....$748,426

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Clothing $70,000—what is the precise number just now?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. 45 officers, 6 medical officers, 3 veterinary surgeons, and 1,000 non-commissioned officers and men, making 1,054.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would call the attention of the First Minister and also of the Minister of Justice to this fact: the expense of sustenance for the North-West Mounted Police is, according to the Minister's statement, a good deal less than $90 a head. The expense of maintaining convicts in the Manitoba penitentiary is a little over $120 per head. I can understand no possible ground on which the rations allowed to a mounted policeman should cost less by 30 per cent. or more than the rations to a convict in the Manitoba penitentiary. The First Minister will remember that we took exception, and I think with reason, to the expenditure on the penitentiary, and if am correct in that point the disproportion is great, because in every point of view the subsistence account for a mounted policeman on active service ought to be considerably in excess of that which is necessary to maintain a convict in the Manitoba penitentiary. I desire to enquire of the First Minister if there is any chance of reducing the North-West mounted police force largely?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No. The force has an immense amount of work to do, and with the increase of whites the labor is increasing. The number of raids across the frontier is increasing immensely, and there is a regular system of patrol along the whole country. There is a great difference between the force the Canadian Government has on the frontier and that of the American Government for the same purpose. The Americans had two or three years ago 3,000 men on the frontier.

Mr. MITCHELL. Has the hon. gentleman ever experimented as to the employment of Sioux Indians in connection with the force.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have a number of them employed as scouts.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the policy of the Government with regard to arming volunteer corps in the Calgary region and elsewhere? At the time of the outbreak there were two or three corps raised among the cow boys of the ranches. Have the Government established any volunteer force there?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think there is any volunteer force at Calgary. There is a volunteer force at Winnipeg, and also I think at Prince Albert.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I desired to ascertain more particularly what the policy of the Government might be in this respect, because to a certain extent the maintenance of these 1,000 men depends on the question whether you have a sufficient number of reasonably good volunteer corps which might be summoned in case of emergency. At least it may come down to that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Active militia corps would be very useful in case of an actual outbreak, but for the every-day work, controlling the Indians, in fact overawing the Indians, seizing stolen goods, especially cattle and horses, repressing smuggling and destroying intoxicants, these 1,000 men are the only force available. A militia force could only be called upon in case of actual outbreak.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If every Indian in the North-West were put in the field, even if every man in the several treaties turned out, they would not number more than 4,000 or 5,000, and they would be very poorly armed I understand.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They have a good many Winchester rifles among them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand their weapons are getting worn out, and as the buffalo are disappearing and there is little game, they have very few arms of any value now.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I believe that is correct.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Therefore, so far as the Indians are concerned, the number of the force is very large, although in a country of such vast extent a large number of men is required.

Mr. MACDOWALL. The people of the North-West would not like to see the mounted police force reduced at all, because it has done very good work in the country. It has always been a small body of men and not an excessive body. The management of the force is very economical, and it will form the nucleus of any force raised there at any time for self defence.

Canada Gazette $5,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the reason of this increased expenditure?

Mr. BOWELL. The Queen's printer explains that $1,250 increase is due to the additional size of the Gazette caused by the larger quantity of advertising, and consequent increase of income.

Miscellaneous Printing..... $20,000

Mr. BOWELL. The next item, $5,000 increase, is on account of more printing having been required. The $15,000 formerly, did not cover the total amount of the printing, but the increase in reality is only about $2,000, or scarcely that for $2,000 is included in this sum of $20,000, which was formerly taken separately for the printing of parliamentary bills.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the income of the Canada Gazette, because I observe that in 1887 the total expense of the Canada Gazette was only $4,283, and it seems a large increase to incur in a single year.

Mr. BOWELL. The Queen's printer says that the revenue this year is between $5,000 and $6,000.

Expenses of Government in the N.W.T. $142,889

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that there is an increase of $40,000 this year for the expenses of the Government in the North-West Territories. Does this additional $40,000 cover the Regina Leader and the cost of maintaining it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does the hon. gentleman want this additional $40,000 for?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We are increasing the industrial schools, building bridges, and assisting in the material development of the country in every way. As the settlers go in there the demands are increased.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Cannot the hon. gentleman give some sort of estimate as to the mode to which he proposes to appropriate those $40,000 additional?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The money has hitherto been sent to the Lieutenant Governor, and he appropriates it under instructions from headquarters. The larger proportion of it is for laying out roads and so on, and the Governor has always submitted that to his Council, and taken their opinion as to the best means of appropriating the money.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much does the hon. gentleman expect will go to such purposes as education? That is the item I specially want to know about.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The amount expended on schools last year was $12,507. The appropriation asked for this year in consequence of the increased number of schools is $63,229.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice on page 235 of the report on Indian Affairs, that there is a large sum of money for distributing pamphlets in the North-West. Is this included in the item?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to know what it is for?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It says there for the publication of pamphlets.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are those the pamphlets which contain the very lively attack on Mr. M. C. Cameron?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Those are the pamphlets that were a defence against a very lively attack by Mr. M. C. Cameron.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If that be so, the hon. gentleman will see that if those pamphlets were issued under his instructions, he went on the principle that the best way to defend is to attack. If he has forgotten, we on this side have not forgotten that those "Facts About the North-West" contained a very sharp attack on Mr. M. C. Cameron. It is somewhat difficult to draw the line, and I do not know that I should object to a statement of "facts" being issued by a department, but they should be confined to a statement of facts when they are published at the public expense, and not converted into an attack on a political opponent. If an attack on a political opponent is to be made, this Parliament is the place to make it. The right hon. gentleman did say something in his place, although, for one reason or another, he and Mr. M. C. Cameron were not together on the floor. This pamphlet that my hon. friend refers to was published at the public expense, and unless I have entirely forgotten the tenor of it—and I do not think I have—it certainly was highly polemical as regards Mr. M. C. Cameron. Did not the hon. gentleman accuse him of something like forgery? I think he did.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, not forgery.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He accused him of a deliberate and wilful perversion of the truth in every possible way.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think a distinction must be drawn with pamphlets that are published in that way. It could be made quite as damaging, and perhaps more so, if the sharp attack I referred to could be confined to statements of facts. It is an indiscretion on the part of the officers connected with the publication of the pamphlet to proceed to attack a noted politician like Mr. M. C. Cameron. Should the wheel of fortune have revolved the other way, and should Mr. M. C. Cameron as might have been the case become Minister of the Interior, it might have been a very awkward position indeed for those officers to have found themselves in. It might have warranted considerable changes in the personnel of the department.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think the officers of the department are in any way responsible for that paper. As regards the facts all I have to say is that if the hon. gentleman himself would calmly sit down, and forget for a moment that he was a politician, and take the attack made by Mr. Cameron, and take the answer in that pamphlet, I think he would in all candor be obliged to admit that every word in the pamphlet was justified.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am afraid I would hardly be able to go that length by any manner of means. What might perhaps occur would have been that in some cases Mr. Cameron had been misinformed, as it is quite possible where a man went over such an immense amount of ground as he went over; but I think in a very large proportion of cases it will be found that there were very good grounds for the criticisms that that gentleman made. But that is not precisely the point. The point is this: it is not fair or judicious that the public money should be used to pay for publications which contain violent attacks on gentlemen on this side of the House, and that is what was done in this case.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not think we should allow this vote to pass without making an impression on the minds of hon. gentlemen opposite that the public money should not be taken for a purpose of this kind. If the statements made by Mr. Cameron were not in accordance with the facts, and the department found it necessary to defend themselves, I do not think there could be any objection to that. But in this case there was a pamphlet got up for political purposes, and references were made to Mr. Cameron that were exceedingly unfair; and I do not think it is right that an item of this kind should be smuggled into this vote for Indian affairs, or that we should be asked to consent quietly to it. I do not think it is fair that the public money should be used to strike at a man who was a member of this House and who performed his duty with great ability, and to abuse him when he is not here to defend himself.

Expenditure in connection with the Canada Temperance Act $10,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How does this come to be so large? I notice that in 1887 the total expenditure was apparently only $3,900.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There have been a great many elections, some to bring the Act into force and some to repeal it, and the expenses of both have to be paid out of the general revenue.

To compensate members of the North-West mounted police for injuries received in the discharge of duty $2,000

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I would call the attention of the Prime Minister to the case of Private J. W. Boyd, of the mounted police force, who was injured, not exactly while on duty, but while he was attending to one of the horses under the order of a superior officer. The horse struck him on the leg, and he was disabled. He was brought down to Ottawa, and placed in the hospital here, and was for some time under the charges of Sir James Grant. He was very severely injured, and applied for compensation, but I believe it was said that he was not entitled to it, as it was claimed he did not receive the injury while on duty.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman will be good enough to send me the particulars, I will have enquiries made.

Salary of Mr. Fabre and contingencies of his office $3,500

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to draw the attention of the committee to the amount which this man has drawn. He appears to be a rather expensive individual. I see by the Auditor-General's report that last year he picked out of the pockets of the people of this country altogether $6,538.56 for salary and extras. I think we should try to do without him when he costs so much.

Mr. CASEY. I think it really is scandalous that this absurd expenditure should be continued year after year. If anybody contended that Mr. Fabre was doing anything to secure emigrants from France, we should be glad to sustain him; but there has never been any pretence that he was doing anything to promote emigration in any way except by the publication of a paper called Paris-Canada, out of which he makes money as well as from his office. He is in Paris to have a good time and to make money for himself, and I can call it nothing but scandalous that we should maintain him there. I think it is time the Government should prove their desire to have French immigration by changing the agent, or else stop this expenditure.

Mr. COCKBURN. I regret to hear the position of Mr. Fabre designated as scandalous. I had the pleasure of living in Paris for two or three years, and I had an opportunity of seeing the services rendered by Mr. Fabre to many gentlemen living there. House rent in Paris is twice as dear as it is here, and if you want to buy a pound of meat you have to pay 50 cents for it, so that the salary of $3,500, a year there is not equal to $1,500 a year here. He may have received $6,000, but some of that amount is for other services. I believe that if the office is to be maintained the salary instead of being too large is too small.

Mr. CASEY. I am very glad to have an explanation at last of what Mr. Fabre really is for, seeing that the Minister does not explain. The hon. gentleman tells us that he is not there to look after emigrants, but only to make it pleasant for Canadians in Paris. I am glad that wealthy people in Paris are so well looked after by him.

Mr. COCKBURN. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will remember that there are people in Canada who speak French, whose sympathies are with Paris, and who, when they go abroad, are glad to find a representative there. He has been the means of facilitating our intercourse with France, and, at the same time, of drawing the attention of the Government to the means of developing our trade with that country; and the salary attached to that office is a very small one indeed, and such a salary as few persons of superior talent would be inclined to accept to fill that office.

Mr. MITCHELL. Are his services required at all? That is the first consideration. I do not believe they are, and I have failed to see any advantage this country has ever got from the appointment of Mr. Fabre.

An hon. MEMBER. He looked after the member for Centre Toronto.

Mr. MITCHELL. If he paid attention to the hon. member for Centre Toronto, that was very graceful on his part, and there is no better man he could look after. But outside of that, I know of no service he performed. The sooner the Government ascertains whether he is of practical benefit to the country the better; and if he is not, the sooner his services are discontinued the better.

Mr. COOK. Other gentlemen have visited Paris besides the hon. member for Centre Toronto, and have received hospitality at the hands of Mr. Fabre. I had the pleasure of meeting him at his office, and I am sure he receives very kindly all Canadians who visit Paris. I know he was with me, and I attempted to utilise him in the direction in which his services are valuable, but he failed to get me the information I desired or the individual I wished to meet. However, I do not blame Mr. Fabre for that, for he did all he could. I was proposing to be instrumental in bringing out a second immigrant, and to do my country a great service by having two immigrants instead of one for this expenditure of $7,000. But I must bear testimony to the way in which I was received by Mr. Fabre.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Fabre is a gentleman of very considerable ability and of great culture, and it is very important, in my opinion, to have a Canadian representative in a place so important as Paris, not merely in regard to France or Paris but in regard to the whole continent, for Paris is a great continental centre and is visited by strangers from all parts of the continent. It is therefore of great importance to have a gentleman of Mr. Fabre's ability, talents and culture representing Canada in Paris in order to give information there in regard to Canada. His paper has been referred to. I may say that his paper is not a money-making concern at all. But it is almost exclusively devoted to furnishing information in regard to Canada, and information of a most valuable character is diffused in this respect through its columns. It has been utilised for that purpose, not only in France but in Switzerland and Belgium, and, in fact, to a large extent all over the continent. The expenditure is not a large one, and I think the country receives very good value for it. Mr. Fabre has, to my personal knowledge, so maintained his dignity as a representative of Canada, as to acquire very considerable influence with the leading statesmen in France; and I am quite sure that the influence he exercises there in making Canada known and respected is very valuable. I am sure that gentlemen who visit Paris and have an opportunity of seeing what he is doing, and the mode in which it is done, and the position he occupies there, will not think this is an extravagant expenditure by any means.

Mr. McMULLEN. Notwithstanding what the hon. gentleman has said with regard to Mr. Fabre's influence, the result of his labors in the past has been the bringing out of one immigrant to our shores.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. At this moment 11 families with considerable means, are on their way to Canada, through the instrumentality of Mr. Fabre.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is what we might call the first fruits.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is a great thing to have a beginning.

Mr. MITCHELL. It has taken a long time and a good deal of money to get that beginning.

Mr. McMULLEN. Mr. Fabre evidently thinks himself as important a representative of the country as the hon. the Minister of Finance himself. While in London assisting at the Colonial Exhibition, Mr. Fabre drew $10 a day for living expenses, and I notice that the hon. the Minister also drew the same amount, so that Mr. Fabre thinks himself as important as the High Commissioner.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, he eats just as much.

Mr. McMULLEN. The High Commissioner was very moderate, drawing only $10 while he was attending the exhibition.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He always is.

Mr. McMULLEN. I cannot understand why Mr. Fabre should draw that much. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that Mr. Fabre is on a par with himself?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He is, in many respects, superior.

Mr. McMULLEN. He has not drawn quite as large a salary, but, according to the Auditor General's report, he has managed to draw a pretty good round sum. I do not think the people of this country can afford to have an expensive aristocrat of that stamp drawing the money of the people. If we had an agent there to whom we paid a reasonable salary it might not be objectionable, but to have a man there who is sucking the life-blood of the people is an outrageous scandal. $6,528 to keep a man in his position living in Paris on the fat of the land is decidedly objectionable.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Is this not rather a small business to be discussing the salary given to Mr. Fabre? Why he is attacked I cannot say. The majority of the people of Canada are certainly the English speaking race. We have an immigration agent in London.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do not raise race questions.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not want to be interrupted. We have agents in England, Ireland and Scotland. We have 1,250,000 people of French descent in Canada, and it is natural they should like to see one of their own race in France, trying to induce some of their compatriots to come out here. The hon. gentleman knows very well that the French Canadians desire to increase in numbers, and they are very successful in carrying out that desire, and they are naturally anxious to keep up connection with the country of their ancestors. Why should we object to one French Canadian going to Paris to use his best influence to bring out French immigrants? And although he has not been very successful in that respect, he has been successful in other and very important directions. He has been successful in inducing French capitalists to invest in Canada.

Mr. MITCHELL. Where?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We know that French capital is now eagerly seeking investment in Canada, and know that Mr. Fabre is prepared to give information to French capitalists with regard to such investment, and we know that by means of his paper he has created a great interest in Canada in France. That is very desirable, and as he is our only French Canadian agent, we might fairly allow him this sum.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The arguments advanced by the hon. Minister in defence of this appointment are, to my mind, very absurd. It was not half as strong as the argument offered by my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn). He had something substantial to offer as a reason why we should have a commissioner in France. He said, it is a very nice thing because, when I went there, I went to his office, and he treated me very kindly. He did not say that he gave him a glass of wine, but no doubt he showed him every attention. Of course it is only right that the Dominion of Canada should have a gentleman there to entertain such an hon. member as that. We all ought to shut our mouths and say nothing when this gentleman bestows favors upon such a grand member of Parliament when he is in France. Of course he distinguished himself, and Mr. Fabre took him around Paris and other places, in order to show the people there what a fine specimen Canada could send there. No doubt he rendered in that way ample service for the amount he receives as salary. The First Minister says he does a useful work, and that it is only reasonable to expect that the French in this country would desire to have a Frenchman in Paris to represent this country there, so as to induce the people to come from France to this country. We are all desirous to have them come, but Mr. Fabre has been there for many years, and I suppose has performed in the past the same service which he is performing now, and what are the results? My hon. friend from Simcoe said he had brought out one individual to Canada for all the amount which we are giving him. The Minister of Finance says he has edited a paper and sends it broadcast, and that it is doing a useful service to Canada by the dissemination of useful information. Are we not printing pamphlets and paying enormous sums of money under the head of immigration to have these pamphlets sent all over Europe in order to induce people to come; and why is it necessary to pay this individual something over $1,800 for the printing of this paper? I ask if one tangible evidence can be given of any benefit which has resulted to the Dominion of Canada by the publication of this paper in France, Belgium, Germany or any other part of the old country? The First Minister promised us a few years ago that we should have a detailed statement of the operation of this office. Where do we find any detailed statement of the results which have been produced? I say that this is for no other purpose than to give this man a lucrative office by which he can reside there in ease and comfort. He received a salary from the Quebec Government. He was sent there by them, and, after he got to France, I suppose he found it so comfortable, convenient and attractive to him that he desired to stay, and this Government have decided to keep him there. The statement of the First Minister that he has induced French capitalists to seek investments in Canada is merely an assertion without anything to substantiate it. If the hon. gentleman had been honest in his assertion—and he is not generally honest in his assertions—he would have said that it was owing to the exertions of Mr. Mercier, the Premier of the Province of Quebec, that French capitalists have been induced to come to Canada. It is not Mr. Fabre who has induced them to come. He has no time to do that. His time is taken up in looking after individuals from Canada like the member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn). He has no time to spend on other matters, and the First Minister knew full well that, in the statement he was making, he was trying to mislead the House, and he knows that this man in the past and at present is doing no service and that this vote is only a bonus given to him to enable him to remain in that country. I am surprised that the right hon. gentleman longer attempts to defend such an item, or that the Minister of Finance should say that the paper which is printed there is of any benefit to Canada. We know it is not, and, until the Minister is more honest with the House and brings in a report giving a detailed statement of what Mr. Fabre is doing there, the House would be justified in refusing any longer to pass such an item as this.

Mr. MITCHELL. When the right hon. gentleman attempts to raise a race cry in order to justify a very doubtful item, he pursues a course which is not worthy of him. There is no one who desires more than I do to have Frenchmen come to Canada and settle here. If it is desirable to have a man in Paris to induce Frenchmen and French capital to come here, let us send some man who will induce them to come, but do not let us keep a man there who has been there for about ten years, I suppose, and I do not think has controlled ten immigrants. As to French capital, I should like to know where it is. The late Mr. Senecal and the Secretary of State had something to do with inducing one of those financial institutions to come into this country. They came and spent a lot of money, and then they practically stopped their operations. Since then, I know of no French capital which has come here. The other day some discussion arose about French capital coming into this country, and the complaint was that they were treated so badly by the Dominion Cabinet that they declined to come. I am not going to take up the time at this hour and at this stage of the Session in discussing this matter, but I think the Government would do well to enquire during the current year as to what Mr. Fabre has done, and to be prepared at the next meeting of Parliament to state what services he has rendered. If they cannot do that, it will be well to consider whether they should not drop that item in future.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I desire it to be distinctly understood that I raise no objection, nor does any hon. gentleman on this side of the House raise any objection whatever to reasonable exertions being used to induce French immigrants or French capital to be brought to this country. There is a great deal to be said for that. But I have never seen a report from Mr. Fabre. I do not think any such report has ever been laid on the Table of the House. I do not remember any such report being printed in the Immigration Report presented by the Minister of Agriculture; and certainly, if we are to pay money from year to year for this purpose, we ought to have a report submitted by Mr. Fabre to show what he has done, or what he supposes himself to have done. That point, I think, the Ministers ought to insist upon. It has been raised before, and has never been attended to.

Mr. COUTURE. (Translation.) I must thank the Government for having appointed the Hon. Mr. Fabre Canadian agent in France. It is certainly but an act of justice towards the French-Canadians and the minority in this House. I am happy to see the Hon. Mr. Fabre representing the French Canadian race in France. He lives in the midst of a nation which is acknowledged as one of the greatest in the world. His work is assuredly slow, but it is sure. We already have amongst us some Frenchmen who came here through Mr. Fabre, and I see in the newspapers that a number of French families, having large means, are leaving France to come and settle in Canada. I hope the money spent for the promotion of French immigration into Canada will be beneficial to us. I thank the Government for what they have done so far, and I urge them to persevere in that patriotic course towards France and Canada.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have heard that this gentleman has not invested his money on the other side. I understand that he is a stockholder in the Texas Ranching Company. I do not know whether that is true, perhaps the Minister of Finance will be able to tell us.

To meet payments to extra clerks for services rendered in preparation of returns ordered by Parliament $5,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I hardly think this item is necessary, in view of the number of sessional clerks we have, and of the fact which, if I remember aright, was stated to us by Mr. Speaker, that he was able to detach certain of these sessional clerks of ours, to act practically as secretaries for members on both sides of the House—although I never received any. If our sessional clerks have nothing else to do, they might be made available to prepare returns. We have got a considerable number of employes here who, as I understood, are not fully employed. It would be a very fitting thing that their extra time should be taken up for just such services, unless there be a rule that a man who is in the service of the Parliament of Canada, must not do any work that is not immediately connected with Parliament. Only 99 returns were moved for, and unless they were of an extraordinary character, they cannot require the employment of a whole host of extra clerks.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is merely an estimate.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But this kind of estimate is very apt to be used.

Commercial Agencies..... $10,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is for the purpose of sending agents to foreign countries to promote trade. At this moment a gentleman has been sent to Brazil and the Argentine republic for the purpose of ascertaining how far we may be able to develop trade there. Last year a gentleman was sent to Cuba, Port Rico and the British West Indies. Previously an agent was sent to Japan. It is simply a provision that when occasion requires the Government may send out agents for the purpose of extending our trade.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The hon. gentleman would do well to see that the Canadian subjects in Cuba are placed in the same position as Americans. A British subject cannot leave that Island without permission.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would be very glad if my hon. friend would let me have as much detailed information as he can on that point, because I think we will be able to deal with it in a satisfactory manner.

Mr. MITCHELL. This sending expeditionary missionaries to foreign countries for the purpose of promoting trade, so far as my experience goes for the last 20 years, resulted in nothing. I recollect in 1865-66 the old Government of Canada sent an expedition, composed of a great many distinguished statesmen of that day—the Hon. Thomas Ryan, the Hon. Wm. McDougall and a number of others—down to the British West Indies, to Brazil, Cuba and to other southern countries for the purpose of promoting trade. They made a report, and that is the last of it. There have been expeditions going periodically ever since. We had an expedition to Australia, and an expedition to Jamaica. They may do something perhaps in Jamaica, but as to this expedition the hon. gentleman has referred to, I do not think it will amount to much. I think it will result very much in the same way as a good many others of these commercial missionary expeditions which have been sent out from year to year.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not suppose the hon. gentleman can refer to a single one of these commercial ventures which were set on foot during the last 20 years that has been a success. I do not think he can point to a single addition made to our trade with any foreign country in consequence of any commercial agent that has been sent out. The hon. gentleman knows that our lumbermen are engaged in trading with some South American countries; that some manufacturers of sewing machines have entered into trade with many countries in Europe, and with the South Americans; and matters of this sort are generally more satisfactorily conducted by those who have a special interest in opening up trade with those countries. The agents he has sent out in the past are men who have no special knowledge of the wants of the countries, of the chances there are for developing trade in any particular branch of business in this country or with any branch of business in any foreign country. Certainly the experience the hon. gentleman has had during the past 20 years ought to show him that he should leave these matters to our manufacturers, and our merchants, and our lumbermen, and to those who have a special interest in opening up trade with those countries, instead of the Government undertaking it. In every instance where the Government have undertaken it, they have proved flies on the wheel, they have failed to accomplish any purpose. The men who are engaged in trade, who have a special interest in securing the foreign market, are those who will best succeed in finding another market. They know with whom to deal. The hon. gentleman sends out his agent; he meets certain members of the Government, he does not meet the consumers, he does not meet with those who have an interest in trading with us; he merely meets with the officials and public men of the country, and has a very good time of it, and returns, and that is the end of it. If the hon. gentleman wants to find for a needy politician a position in which he can find an excuse for handing him over a few thousands, with which to spend a pleasant summer in a sort of holiday expedition, I can understand this vote. It is perfectly intelligible from that point of view, it is not intelligible from any other.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is quite mistaken in supposing that the Government desire to find employment for needy politicians, or that any portion of this vote is being used for any such purpose. Mr. Wood, who went to Australia, and who cost the country a very small sum indeed, was an intelligent man, and while he travelled through various parts of Australia, the press of that country was filled with statements calculated to bring Canada forward and to show the population of the various Australian Provinces, the advantage they would derive from closer trade relations with Canada; and I believe at this moment that if the whole of that $10,000 had been expended in that one service, it would have been amply repaid by the increased trade that has been growing up over since between Canada and the different Provinces of Australia. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that after all the best means of promoting trade is to get parties who have a direct personal interest in the extension of their trade to take hold of it. The exhibition attracted a great deal of attention, and now an exhibition is being held in Melbourne, and a large amount of space has been taken up and given to Canadian manufacturers and exhibitors. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) will agree with me that in selecting Mr. Jones, of the city of St. John, who is now visiting the Argentine republic and Brazil for the purpose of extending our export trade, we were not providing for a needy politician or a dependent on the Government. He was appointed at the unanimous request of the Chamber of Commerce of St. John, a body representing all parties, which body indicated him as a very desirable person for the work, and which appealed to the Government to investigate those markets, and laid before us evidence which they had collected in regard to the trade. They had sent out an experimental cargo, and were satisfied that if the Government would follow that up and send out an agent to place himself in communication with the Governments and various commercial bodies there, a great deal could be done. We believed the statements to be well founded, and we selected a person acceptable to all. I do not think this is a waste of money. I believe nothing is more important to Canada at this moment than to endeavor to extend our trade with remote countries in every possible way.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With near countries, not with remote countries.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Near, or remote. I want to extend our trade as far as possible, and to as great an extent as possible with every country.

Mr. MITCHELL. Since the hon. gentleman referred to me personally I can only say this, that as regards Mr. Jones, whom I know very well, he is personally a most respectable man. He is a brewer in St. John and a brother-in-law of one of the members for the county of St. John, and is a most respectable and worthy man. As to Mr. Jones doing one iota of good in developing this trade between this country and the countries to which he has gone, I believe it will end in a complete and total failure. It is something like the mission of Sir A. T. Galt to Spain, when he was accompanied by an extensive staff, with the brother-in-law of the worthy Premier as secretary of the staff. They spent a great deal of money, and what did it result in? It will be found to have resulted in scarcely any benefit whatever to this country. Then there is Mr. Wyld's expenses to Jamaica. What will that mission result in? Nothing. Mr. Wyld is a smart, clever man, who had been in business in Halifax, Nova Scotia,—a man with a good deal of acumen I admit.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And in business in the West India trade.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes. But an extension of the business of the country is not to be made by missionaries but by the mercantile class. They talk about trade with the Argentine republic and about one vessel being sent from St. John as an experiment. Why, I read in the papers the number of regular steamers running between the Argentine republic and Europe, particularly England, and I think the number was ten or twelve steamers. I have no doubt that country is a good field.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is very rapidly developing now.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, so much so that some of our people are going down there to build railways. But is the extension of trade to be promoted by sending Mr. Jones there?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope so, that is the object.
Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the High Commissioner that is to be would go there himself, with his plausible tongue and power of convincing people and of making the worst appear the better cause, as he often does to the misfortune of this country, and the befogging of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, he might accomplish some good; but the Government will never effect any good by these commercial missionaries whom they are sending out. What should be done is what the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) indicated. Business certainly should be promoted between these new countries and also between the old countries, and the utmost freedom of trade should be afforded. My hon. friend the Finance Minister had better commence at home with our neighbors across the line. The hon. gentleman frankly accepted the suggestion I made in regard to the statutory obligation the other day, which, unfortunately for this country, he was compelled—I suppose by the pressure of his colleagues and other circumstances which I need not mention—to withdraw, and he left us in a worse position than before. Before they endeavor to extend trade with remote countries let the Government take down the barriers between Canada and the United States. I will not say that these missions are undertaken for the purpose of finding employment for broken-down statesmen and politicians, because in some cases it is not so; but, perhaps, a desire to advance the private interests of an individual has had as much to do with it as anything.

Mr. McNEILL. I will instance one case in which a very important trade was developed through other agencies than mercantile men in the first instance. I refer to the trade in fresh meat between Canada and the mother country. This cattle trade, as every one who knows the circumstances of the country is aware, was developed entirely through the agency of the gentleman employed as our immigration agent in Liverpool.

Mr. MITCHELL. Pshaw!

Mr. McNEILL. He was the person who brought Canadian meat to the notice of the people of England, and it was directly through his action that that great trade was built up which is now of such great importance to the people of this country. That is a fact which, perhaps, the hon. gentleman does not know, but if he will make enquiry he will find it to be absolutely correct.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think I know as much about the live cattle trade between Canada and England as does the hon. gentleman. I tell him that no single man in Liverpool promoted that trade and has been the means of developing that immense trade—he is mistaken. The trade has been developed by our cattle men in Montreal, Toronto and all through western Ontario. Their action has developed the trade and not the service of one man in Liverpool—and I do not know to whom the hon. gentleman refers. There is no man in Liverpool to whom we are indebted for having developed this trade. Some one individual may have seen the advantages that would arise, but our people saw the advantages and acted upon them. When the English market offered a profitable market for our cattle our own merchants and experienced cattle men promoted the trade, and they have since built it up.

Mr. McNEILL. Our own merchants and enterprising men must always carry out the trade. We were speaking of persons opening up channels of trade and directing public attention to them. We are not supposing that one individual can conduct trade between Canada and the West Indies or Canada and the mother country.

Organising Printing Bureau $1,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I cannot understand for what purpose $1,000—$2,500 for 1887-88, and $1,500 for 1888-89—is required for organising a printing bureau.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That amount was required to pay the Queen's printer and superintendent for printing, travelling expenses connected with purchasing printing plant, also superintendent's salary and salary of assistant, also contingencies of the new department.

Plant required for Government Printing Office, &c...$165,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman I hope will be able to submit some statement as to how it is proposed to expend the large amount asked for printing plant, &c.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Of the $218,500 voted last year, $58,500 will be expended before the 1st of July, with lapse of revote of $75,000, $61,000 are required for plant for printing the voters list, which has already been purchased. That makes with the revote of the amount required for the purpose, $133,000. The $82,000 is an additional amount required according to the estimate of the superintendent of printing, making a total of $165,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This has nothing to do with the buildings?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Could the hon. gentleman give us it in detail?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am very sorry that I have not the details here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman cannot give us that now, I would like he would lay on the Table before concurrence, a moderately detailed statement showing what that is wanted for.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, I will do that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I see that the hon. gentleman proposes to provide for a Government bindery. It is to be hoped that the binding of the public documents will be done better than has been done for years past, for I think that the very worst binding in Christendom has been done in Canada. I have not seen any books which we have received in exchange, the binding of which is done as badly as it is here, for the binding here will hardly hold the volumes together. There is another item I wish to make an observation about. The hon. gentleman says that part of this appropriation is for the plant for printing a voters' list. I was in the hopes that the Government would abandon that project. I was in hopes that the last two or three years experience would convince them, as it has convinced the people of this country, that this system should not be persisted in. The hon. gentleman when he proposed the Bill said he wanted uniformity, but the hon. gentleman has since abandoned that principle of uniformity, and one of the hon. gentleman's colleagues has said he was in favor of manhood suffrage; a principle that many of the Provinces have adopted. Why should the country be put to the expense of printing this voters' list and incurring this large expense, when those lists are published by the various municipalities without the expense of the appointment of officers and everything of that sort? Surely when the hon. gentleman has undertaken to perfect and develop this scheme, he should allow this expenditure to stand over until this House has had an opportunity of considering and reconsidering that whole question.

Hot Springs, Banff, roads, &c..... $25,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What amount has been expended up to date for the reserve at Banff Springs?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not able to say what amount has been expended. I can give you the particulars for which this vote is to be applied. The greater part of this amount will be expended on the completion of the road to the Devil's Lake, one of the most attractive spots in the Rocky Mountain park.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is the country travelling that road?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, it is only the Opposition that are going on that road.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend wishes to get from the proper party more information about that road?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will have to build two houses there and the cost will be limited to $3,000 each. The existing roads will of course require to be kept in repair, and the distribution of the water of the hot springs extended, as the construction of the hotels in Banff render necessary. The work done in the park last year is mentioned in detail in the annual report of the Department of the Interior. Although the Estimates shows an increase over the Estimates for the previous year, there is in reality a great decrease in the sum that will be at the disposal of the department, as there was a balance of $30,829 at the credit of the department from the previous year's vote on the 30th of June last.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I have seen so many reasons for differing from the conclusions which the hon. gentleman has arrived at, and I feel so little confidence in the hon. gentleman's judgment that when he tells us that the road to the Devil's Lake is a most attractive road, I am inclined to distrust him.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You will see it yourself.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Although it may be one which the hon. gentleman is required to take, I am not any the more inclined to travel on that road because the hon. gentleman says it is a pleasant one. Let me say this: he proposed last year and he proposes this year, to spend a large amount upon a park, where not one in 50,000 of the population can ever go. He proposes to spend a large sum for the advantage and the comfort of the wealthy, and if the country was settled between this and the Rocky Mountains there might be some reason for the appropriation which the hon. gentleman is asking for. But the hon. gentleman knows that the whole North-West yet remains to be settled. It is to-day as it was ten years ago, a lone land. The population there is comparatively a mere cipher, and with the whole country unsettled, with the want of the necessary means to open up that country to the extent that is desirable, with the demands upon the public Treasury for works that are actually necessary in various portions of the Dominion, the hon. gentleman proposes to continue the expenditure upon the road to the Devil's Lake, a road upon which he expended a large sum last year, and which he is endeavoring to make attractive, to those who have the means of visiting that section of the country.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before we leave this item I would like to have the hon. Premier, who visited the Banff Springs last year, tell us what the place is like. I committed myself in supporting the Government about that Governor General's warrant when it was passed, and I had great satisfaction in doing so. I have always approved of the Government taking over that park, and I think I was the first that had ever written to the hon. gentleman in relation to that matter. I had been in the North-West and found that it was getting into the hands of private individuals, and when the discovery was first made I took the liberty to write to the hon. gentleman and was glad to see that he had taken it into the hands of the Government. I hope this money will be expended for the benefit of the masses that visit that very attractive place for personal comforts and the curing of diseases. I have heard very full accounts of what has been done there. I have been told by gentlemen who have visited it frequently that it is the best arranged and laid out park they have ever seen, and that the gentleman in charge of it has done his duty in the most efficient and scientific manner. While I do not know much of this road to the Devil's Lake—it is more for the advantage of the rich than the poor, and it is the rich who are most likely to go there—I think that the money laid out for the development of the curative springs there ought not to meet with an objection in this House while the expenditure is kept within a reasonable amount. Whether it is so kept or not, the accounts given by the persons who have visited it frequently are of the most satisfactory character.

Mr. TROW. I approve of any reasonable expenditure for beautifying that park. I do not know of any more attractive place on the continent of America. I have been at the Yellowstone park, and it is not merely $25,000 a year which the United States Government are expending upon it, but hundreds of thousands annually. It is easy to say that the poor have not access to that place. I was there five weeks last summer, and I can assure you that of the people there ten to one were poor people who had been sent there by their friends, not merely from the Province of Ontario, but from other Provinces, including one or two from Nova Scotia; and there were people there from many parts of the United States; and it is attracting more people yearly. The superintendent of the park is a thorough, practical surveyor. He has constructed one avenue nine miles in length. I have been at the Devil's Lake, where there is magnificent fishing, and where boats can be obtained from private individuals. The whole park, which is some twenty-four miles in length by twelve in width, embraces most magnificent scenery, and I hope the place will be made attractive, because the beneficial effect of the waters has been proved. You will find as many crutches there as will almost fill your dwelling, which have been left by persons recovered, and who left their crutches behind them as monuments of the curative properties of those great springs.

Collection of Orders in Council, &c..... $9,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is doing this work?

Mr. THOMPSON. This is for the printing of the collection of Orders in Council which have the force of law.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is Mr. R. C. Weldon, who was employed in that work? Is that the present member?

Mr. THOMPSON. He was employed before he became a candidate for a seat in this House.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did the hon. gentleman do in his case as was done in another case to which I called attention some time ago—bring him up here?

Mr. THOMPSON. No, the electors of Albert sent him here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe that the hon. gentleman, in his zeal for economy, brought another gentleman from the Maritime Provinces, and allowed him, besides $12 for his services, $4 or $5 a day for expenses of residence while at Ottawa. That gentleman was brought from Antigonish. I would like to know if the same was done in the case of Mr. Weldon, or if he did his work at home.

Mr. THOMPSON. There were no expenses of that kind connected with Mr. Weldon. The work he did was done at Halifax. The case of the other gentleman was like the cases of those who prepared the statutes, and all of whom were paid the expenses of living.

Salaries and expenses connected with Excise... $351,627 50

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a rather curious provision here, to increase the salary of A. F. McPherson, accountant, Toronto division, from $1,200 to $1,400, notwithstanding anything to the contrary in the Civil

Mr. MITCHELL.

Service Act. Why does the hon. gentleman want to make a precedent, which is a dangerous precedent, to say the least of it?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Unless the sum is voted it could not be paid to him under the Civil Service Act. He is an accountant and book-keeper in the distillery office of Gooderham & Worts, in Toronto, one of the most important places in the Dominion. He is a special class officer, and would be entitled to receive $1,400 under the Civil Service Act, on a special survey, but his services are so valuable where he is that the inspector does not consent to his going on a special survey.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many distilleries are under the Act at present?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Two at Toronto, one at Prescott, one at Windsor, one at Perth, a new one started at Hamilton; one at Halifax, and one at Belleville. That is all I can remember.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman asks for a considerable increase?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The first increase is in the salary of the officer I have just mentioned. The increases are: new appointments, $1,080; promotions, $1,940; increases under the Civil Service Act, $2,625; increases under regulations, $4,767; and increases during examinations, $1,010; making a total increase of $21,152, which is reduced again on the other hand by superannuations to the extent of $3,900; by deaths, to the extent of $5,900; by deductions and dismissals, $1,650; by transfers to contingencies, $750.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice that in 1886-87, a considerable sum, nearly $2,500, appears under the head of extra allowance to officers in Manitoba, to compensate for the increased cost of living. Does that still continue?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The intention is to stop it entirely.

Weights and Measures and Gas..... $87,970

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Who is the assistant inspector for the London district in the place of Mr. Boggs, and why was Mr. Boggs removed?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. Boggs was removed because of age and infirmity. Mr. Coughlin, who comes from North Middlesex, has been appointed for that district, which includes several counties, and another inspector has been appointed for Brantford who has a portion of that district also.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). As far as the assistant inspector is concerned, I think the statement made by the Minister that Mr. Boggs' infirmities rendered him unfit to perform the duties of the office, is hardly correct. I know him personally, and he is as competent, physically and mentally, now as he was when he received the appointment. Whether he is competent for the position or not, the Government certainly knew that at the time they made the appointment. Of course, he is a man of considerable age, but he was appointed to that position and discharged the duties, I suppose, as efficiently as he was capable of performing them. Very likely he had to pass an examination before assuming the duties.

Mr. COSTIGAN. No; it was before the Civil Service Act came into force.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Then he must have been appointed solely for political reasons. There was another inspector there before the present Government repealed the Weights and Measures Act. He was a very competent man, but he was dropped and Mr. Boggs was appointed in his place. Now, it appears that he was incompetent and unfit for his office, and that he did not pass any examination. But he was quite as competent to perform his duties at the latter period of his incumbency as he was at the first. I have been told that there was some other reason for this poor man's removal from that position, and that it was not incompetency. Whether that is so or not, it is not for me to say. All I say is that Mr. Boggs was always a friend of hon. gentlemen opposite, that he received his appointment on account of services which he had rendered to hon. gentlemen opposite, that he was a devoted supporter of theirs, and was found, in season and out of season, opposing every Reform candidate who presented himself for election in the riding, and I suppose it was for that reason that he was appointed. But very likely he and the inspector did not quite agree. Very likely the inspector wished to have some friend of his own appointed to the position, and so Mr. Boggs, though needing the position, and being needy, and having received the appointment, and having left another business for that, was removed and some one else was appointed. I think this was a hardship to him and is unjust to his family.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the revenue derived from this ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have not the figures here. The revenue does not meet the expenditure, but a very large improvement has taken place in the last four or five years. The deficit in 1873 was, I think, over $70,000. Two years ago it was reduced to $40,000, which is a material improvement, and it is not more unfavorable now, though the service has been extended.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the deficit last year ? That seems to be an enormous deficit of $10,000 on an expenditure of $37,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is between $30,000 and $40,000.

Culling Timber..... $54,900

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will trouble the hon. gentleman to return to the item of culling of timber. I either misunderstood him in what he stated, or he was under a misapprehension. I understood him to state that the deficit on that item was only $19,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I understood the hon. gentleman to ask me what the present receipts were.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I thought there was some misunderstanding. That is a matter which requires a little explanation. I notice that we received for culling in 1831 some $45,000, and spent in that year apparently about $51,000, and $56,000 in 1882. So that six or seven years ago our expenditure and receipts for culling were apparently very nearly equal, or at any rate the deficit was not more than from $6,000 to $8,000 or $9,000. Now the total receipts, the hon. gentleman states, were about $19,000, so that really we have only received about one-third of the amount I refer to. Now, these cullers undoubtedly ought to be paid by fees, and it appears to me that it is a very unjust charge on the people of this country that they should be asked to pay $59,000 in 1887-88 and $55,000 this year, as it is to be, when they receive only $19,000 or $20,000 for cullers' fees. I think we ought to deal very summarily with this matter. It appears to me to be a gross abuse that the people of Canada should be compelled to pay $30,000 or $40,000 a year for the benefit of these cullers in Quebec, for that is what it amounts to. I do not understand how it happens that, whereas we used to receive $10,000 and $15,000, and our expenses were $51,000, $56,000, $54,000, and then $50,000, we are now to be asked to pay $55,000 when we only get $20,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am not surprised at the complaint made by the hon. gentleman as to the condition of things in connection with that office. I think I may say that it is the intention of the Government, before next Session, to provide some such change as will relieve the Dominion of that charge entirely by some measure which will place it in the hands of the local authorities, as it is in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. There the lumbermen pay for their own culling, but this in Quebec is something which we inherited from Confederation. A number of those cullers were retired from their position, and the fees were taken by the Government. The fees are falling off, and something will have to be done, and something will be done before next Session.

Mr. MITCHELL. The fact is that the business has fallen off. Instead of Quebec having the export trade now for the shipment of square timber, the trade has become simply the shipment of deals. From year to year the export shipment of square timber has fallen off; as the forests become depleted, the mill owners and lumbermen are going more and more into the cutting of logs, and in place of shipping square timber, as was done when this institution was first established, they are shipping deals. My hon. friend knows that is the reason, and it is his duty, as Minister of the Crown, to submit a scheme whereby this cost would be minimised in some way. We have no right whatever to pay out of the revenues of the Dominion, with a large deficit every year, for the purpose of measuring timber that is shipped from the ports of Quebec or Montreal. I trust my hon. friend will carry out his proposition, and if he is not in that office when we meet next year—it is said he is not going to be, that he is going to get a more permanent one—I hope the one who will succeed him will do so.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I said it was the intention of the Government to do that.

Adulteration of Food..... $25,000

Mr. COSTIGAN. There is an increase, but I do not think the House will object to it. The total amount is very small for a service that extends over the whole Dominion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I dare say it may be. Does the hon. gentleman get any fees that compensate for the expense ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No; the expense is mainly one in the public interest.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to know what examination do these analysts pass, or in what way are they selected ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The examination now is very strict. It is made by a board of examiners of which the chief analyst, a professor in Montreal, of very high standing is one, there is another from Toronto, and the professor in the Ottawa College is a third. A candidate applying for the position of analyst or assistant analyst has to undergo a very stringent examination by these gentlemen.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Who is the analyst for the city of London now ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. There is no one appointed yet, because no one has passed the examination.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Is Mr. Saunders still filling the position he held in 1886-87 ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No, he has severed his connection with our department, and we have appointed another one. That shows how strict the examination is, because if a candidate had presented himself and had passed the examination, he would have been appointed for that position.

Mr. WILSON. When did Mr. Saunders retire from the position ?

Mr. COSTIGAN. When he was appointed to the experimental farm—I think some time last year.

Collection of Slide and Boom Dues $21,700

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to enquire of the Minister whether any arrangement has been come to or is in contemplation, with the Governments of Quebec and Ontario, as to these slide and boom dues. I have understood that they proposed to take the entire management of these matters into their own hands.

Mr. COSTIGAN. This refers more particularly, I think, to the Crown Timber Office, although it has a bearing upon this also. There was a Crown Timber Office here and in Quebec. One-third of the expenses are paid by the Dominion, one-third by the Quebec Government and one-third by the Ontario Government. I have not heard that there is any intention on the part of the Provincial Governments to interrupt the present arrangement.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does this item cover the rentals of the mill sites, and privileges, and water power at the Chaudière Falls?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. Has the hon. gentleman done anything to rectify the long-standing difficulty that has existed there? Has he collected any rent?

Mr. COSTIGAN. We collected a considerable amount this last year. The hon. gentleman will remember that I stated before the Committee of Public Accounts that I would take steps, with the consent of the Government, to place the matter in the hands of the Minister of Justice, with the view of bringing about a speedy settlement on this question, and I have done so.

Intercolonial Railway $2,900,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is an increase of $300,000 over the estimate of last year. The details of that increase are: locomotive powers—

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see the details; and perhaps it will save the hon. gentleman some trouble not to bother about details, but just explain to us generally why he needs the increase.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is owing to increased business.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The more business we do on that road the more money we lose. In addition to $2,600,000 for 1887-88, the hon. gentleman asks in the Supplementary Estimates for $477,000. What is the hon. gentleman's forecast as to the future?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am very glad to be able to tell the hon. gentleman that although the expenses were exceptionally heavy on account of the severity of last winter and the unparalleled difficulty with snow, the department hope to nearly balance the account. Although the Government asks for $300,000 more, the estimate of the department is that the account will nearly if not quite balance during the coming year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is to say, you will have $300,000 more surplus?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Instead of having a large deficit for this year, for the year to come the accounts are expected to practically balance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Let us hope so. What is the hon. gentleman's forecast as to the probable effect on traffic of the Intercolonial Railway when the new lines are in full operation? When the short line to St. John is completed across the State of Maine, we must expect of necessity that there will be a large diversion of traffic to that route. I understand the short line will be opened by the 1st of July. It will tap the Intercolonial Railway at Rivière du Loup.

Mr. COSTIGAN.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will bring a good deal of traffic on a portion of the line as well as take some off it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This matter is a good deal in nubibus, but the department has formed some idea as to what will be the probable effect of these new lines of communication with the seaboard.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No doubt it is a very important point, and it has received the consideration of the department as far as possible. It is quite impossible to make anything like an estimate; but, in general terms, I may say that while through traffic will, to a considerable extent, naturally go by the short line to St. John, N. B., the continued development of the country and expansion of the business along the line of the Intercolonial Railway, which is very great indeed, and the great reduction in the expense of operating the line resulting from the traffic that will be taken off it, we hope that the result will not be much more unfavorable than it has been in the past.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman promised to bring me a memorandum of the cost of transporting the stone brought from Miramichi to this new building.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have a memorandum.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Every person must see it is very beautiful stone, and it is much more pleasant when strangers come to Ottawa and enquire where the stone came from to be able to say it came from New Brunswick, rather than to be obliged to say, as is the case in regard to these buildings, that we had to get it from the United States. It is very gratifying to be able to show that we have in Canada the finest freestone perhaps in the world, and that it can be made available for the construction of our public buildings.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The cost of transporting the stone from New Brunswick to the Canada Atlantic Railway Station, here was a little less than 12 cents per cubic foot, there being 14 cubic feet to the ton. The distance is about 850 miles.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would be a rate of $1.68 cents a ton for a distance of 850 miles or one-fifth of a cent per ton per mile. Does the Minister consider that he could carry stone that distance at that rate and pay the expense of transport?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is a very low rate certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not see why my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) should be so inquisitive about this. This work is done for the purpose of constructing a public building, and I think he should not be so inquisitive about the cost, as to whether the railway could afford to do this at the rate or not. This is developing a great interest in the expanding of the National Policy of this country. It had the effect of opening up one of the finest quarries in the world, and there is material enough there for every public building, and every private one too, between Port Arthur and Cape Breton. He has no occasion to be so inquisitive about those details, because here we have a public railway and particularly this stone comes from Miramichi.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a good deal in what my hon. friend says, but at the same time I want to know really who paid for that stone? Did the contractor?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, the contractor.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Was it arranged with the contractor that he should get that stone at that rate?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I suppose the contractor made the bargain with the railways.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course the contractor making that bargain made it with the Government, as they are the owners of the railway; but the hon. gentleman has not answered my question whether it was physically possible, to convey this stone so as to pay the expenses at that rate?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hear that it was.

Mr. SHANLY. My hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) should remember that this is return freight. Railways would rather take return freight at low rates than have their cars come back empty.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I thought we had coal coming back?

Mr. SHANLY. I suppose they send coal too.

Mr. MITCHELL. We do not send coal on flat cars. The cars are peculiarly constructed for coal.

Mr. SHANLY. It is a low rate I admit.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does my hon. friend from South Grenville (Mr. Shanly) think as a commercial transaction that this can be done?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think we would make much money out of it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Could it be done without a loss?

Mr. SHANLY. Yes, it could, provided there were empty cars coming back. It is better to take the stone than empty cars. On no other conditions could it possibly pay.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should think not. I would like to know at what rate per ton, per mile, is coal carried on the Intercolonial?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Three-tenths of a cent per ton, per mile.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is about fifty per cent. more than the rate charged for this stone. Does that pay?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not lucrative.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I understand that the original contract was that the stone should come from Albert County, and that the contractor was allowed instead to bring it from Miramichi.

Mr. MITCHELL. I had something to do with that, and I know about it. I met the contractor one day, and I asked him why did he not go to Miramichi for the stone. I told him there was splendid stone there and that it was perhaps the best to be found in the world. Stone of a similar character is to be found at Albert County and also somewhere about Metis. I believe that the contract was closed (and I am speaking under correction) the contractor made an exposure of the quarry down at Metis and also at Albert.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The election was over then?

Mr. MITCHELL. Do not impute motives if you please. He made an exposure of the ground and found that the stone there would not be sufficient in quantity. It was purely a business matter for the contractor. After I told him about Miramichi he got a specimen of the stone there and submitted it to the Minister of Public Works, who in turn submitted it to his officer, who believed it was the best stone that could be found, and as it was abundant in quantity they decided to accept it. I know the contractor told me that he made his own bargain with the Grand Trunk in order to carry his stone from Quebec here, but what bargain he made with the Intercolonial, I do not know, but I presume he made the bargain to carry it through. Now that matter about the stone has been well ventilated, and while we are on the Intercolonial Railway, I will, with the permission of the committee, refer to a circumstance that was referred to the other night with regard to the sale of the Intercolonial. I stated on that occasion that the Government of the day had been in negotiation with a French company for the purpose of selling the Intercolonial Railway. I stated among other things that I was informed that in addition to the negotiations for the sale in this country they had a meeting at London at which three Ministers were present, the Minister of Customs, the Finance Minister and the Secretary of State, and that they met on that occasion those French capitalists with a view of discussing, as I understood, the sale of the railway. I have since learned that the discussion was confined at that particular meeting to the establishment of iron works as part of the scheme in connection with the railway, and I feel bound to make that explanation. At the same time I say this, and I think I will be able to sustain what I say, that the sale of the Intercolonial Railway was part of the system which was connected with the establishment of iron works in Nova Scotia. Although the particular discussion in relation to the Intercolonial Railway did not occur at that meeting in London, it had previously been discussed by the Minister of Railways and by the Secretary of State, and for ought I know by the Finance Minister—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, no, never.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, I say at all events, the Minister of Railways, for I can prove that, and I believe by the Secretary of State too, although I am not prepared to say I can so clearly prove that. What I pretended to say is that the statement made by me the other night, although literally not correct, was practically correct, because the sale of the railway was part of the iron scheme, and I hold in my hand a book to prove it. I had this document in my possession before I made the statement, but it happened to be in Montreal and I was not able to produce it. I hold in my hand a proposition made by Mr. Kamper representing this French syndicate for the purchase of the Intercolonial, for the construction of railways through Cape Breton, and the establishment of iron works in Nova Scotia, in Pictou or elsewhere, in such suitable places as was desirable. Mr. Kamper makes three propositions. He makes the first to Count Ducros:

"1. A proposition for the construction of three lines from Moncton to Oxford and from Sydney to Louisburg not being considered of immediate necessity, the syndicate wish, nevertheless, to indicate that they are willing to undertake their construction so soon as the Government decides upon it, and will duly consider at the proper time all questions having reference to these lines."

And then in a letter submitted to the syndicate through Mr. de Montgolfier, general manager of the St. Ciment Company:

"That the ordinary annual production would be 40 000 tons, but should business increase the work would be enlarged and made to furnish a much larger output, and that all the machinery, tools and plant generally used in rail factories and the fitting up of the same be admitted free of duty. Also that the rails needed for the construction of the different lines of the eastern division by the St. Ciment Company be also admitted free of duty, should the Syndicate be granted the contract. That the duty of $17 per ton be levied during ten years from 1887, on rails and other railway supplies of foreign manufacture."

Then we come to proposal No. 3, which is the gravamen, sustaining the statement I made:

"Proposal No. 3—The Great Eastern Railway of Canada, with the Intercolonial as a main line. The syndicate would respectfully request from the Government the following:"

Then he goes on to state the different propositions: The operating of the Intercolonial with its projected branches and the Eastern Extension to one of the extreme ports of the Atlantic; the construction and operating of a line to form a continuation of the New Brunswick line in the direction of Quebec, and the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. To whom is all this addressed?

Mr. MITCHELL. To John Henry Pope, Minister of Railways for the Dominion of Canada, and to the Government of Canada. He says:

"The three above-mentioned awards will constitute a system of railways destined to promote considerably the colonisation of the south-eastern portion of Canada, and develop to their full extent the industrial resources of Nova Scotia. It is estimated that to complete the plans and estimates of the projected lines and put the Intercolonial upon a rational and economical basis, a delay of a year would be necessary, counting from the day the agreement is signed."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Is there any reply from Mr. Pope? I am sorry to interrupt the hon. gentleman. It is quite evident that this has been sent to the Minister of Railways; but parties may project things and send them in, but is there any reply or discussion of the thing?

Mr. MITCHELL. I will read a letter signed by Mr. Kamper and sent to a friend of mine.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Was there anything sent from the Minister?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not know. I am not in the secrets of the Administration. I am making this statement in justice to myself, and I am doing it in order that the public and the Government may know that a scheme was on foot to sell the Intercolonial Railway, which forms part of the charter of this country, and in order to warn the Government not to dare to sell that road. In the meantime, I am merely confining myself to statements which are necessary to prove the correctness of the statement I made the other day.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That the proposition was made. Will my hon. friend allow me to say that I have asked the chief engineer—to whom if Mr. Pope proposed to entertain this proposal at all he would have referred it for a report as the first step—whether it was ever referred to him, and he says it never was, and he made no report upon it.

Mr. MITCHELL. You had better wait until I get to the end:

"Mr. Kamper, now at present in Canada, will deliver you this letter and enter into negotiations with the view of bringing matters to a successful issue."

This is signed by the president of the syndicate, Count Ducros. There were three schemes—the construction of the Cape Breton extension, the establishments of iron works, and the sale of the Intercolonial, to be called the Great Eastern Railway of Canada. Then we come to how he proposes to do all this. He says, with regard to the rail works:

"As stated in the annexed proposal for an annual production of 40,000 tons, the cost of these works is estimated at $1,500,000.

"The capital is ready, and the capitalists show a certain impatience at their funds remaining unproductive at a time when money can find ready investment.

"Allow me, Sir, to summarise the conditions of the proposals concerning these works:

"The output of 40,000 tons must be taken as a minimum production.

"As it is in the interest of the manufacturers to meet all demands, once the works are opened, they will, if needed, increase their capacity for production.

"It is evident that the railway companies will object to the increase in the price of the rails; they will submit to this increase only with difficulty, and may combine together in order to bring about the closing of the works; experience leads us to believe that such will be the case. For this most important reason we ask from the Government the guarantee of a minimum demand for a stated term of years. Thus the Government can easily do by giving rails instead of money when distributing subsidies to companies asking help. The Government can also require that in the future rails be furnished by Canadian manufacturers."

Mr. SHANLY. What did they propose to give for the Intercolonial Railway?

Mr. MITCHELL.

Mr. MITCHELL. They state to me that Mr. Pope told them he proposed to entertain the sale of the road on the basis of $15,000,000, but these people wanted it for nothing. Here is the report from the staff of engineers the French company sent out to Canada. Mr. Lebrun, under whose direction the commission worked, says:

"You wish me to furnish you with the conclusions of the report of my mission in Canada; I hasten to do so, awaiting the moment when I shall be prepared to give you the report itself."

Then he goes on to give a report of the management and running condition of the Intercolonial Railway, which I do not propose to read. He says:

"The Intercolonial Railway, in a traffic point of view, is divided into sections of very unequal value, the most profitable being the one located between St. John, Moncton, Halifax; the most valueless is the one designated under the name of the Eastern Extension, located between New Glasgow and Port Mulgrave."

Then he gives a statement of the earnings of the road, showing what was lost in the years 1885 and 1886, and says:

"If we compare these figures with those of other Canadian or American lines doing an equal amount of business, one is struck with the high rate of expenditure.

"The principal cause of this trouble is to be found in the unprecedented lowness of tariffs which the Government grants to traders in the Eastern Provinces. Even admitting a very large tonnage, the rates are not calculated to cover the working expenses.

"Economy could probably be introduced, in locomotive power, by utilising to a better advantage the loading of trains, and by reducing their number, which under the pressure exercised over the management by the people have been too largely increased upon certain sections.

"Lastly, a company reducing the expenses as much as possible, and capable of commanding more work from its staff, could reduce considerably the working expenses.

"But the fact is not to be concealed that it is due to the insufficiency of the tariff if the budget of expenses is so crippled; in the hands of a company which cannot afford to work at a loss, it will be necessary to raise the tariffs."

Then he says:

"However, by the calculations which will be found in the report, based upon comparisons either with neighboring companies, or commercial information, I think that we could arrive at a receipt of $2,000,000, and reduce the expenditure to a figure of $1,800,000, leaving a net gain of $200,000."

In place of the deficiency which he describes.

Mr. SHANLY. Who was to get the $200,000?

Mr. MITCHELL. The company, if they got the rail-road for nothing. You see, there is a very elaborate plan got up, which they were going to lay before the people of France to induce them to come in and buy our road. I suppose they intended to bond it, and whether the stockholders would get anything or not, they would make a great deal of money out of it. Now, since the discussion the other day, a friend of mine who happened to be in New York, sent Mr. Kamper a copy of the Herald containing a report of that discussion, and I have received this letter, which Mr. Kamper sent to my friend. It is dated at New York on Tuesday last, and is as follows:—

"Many thanks for the Herald you sent me. I have read Mr. Mitchell's telegram, but I cannot send the documents. They are in Europe, where a memo. of all the things which happened to us by the Federal Government, especially by Mr. J. H. Pope and Sir Charles Tupper, will be made and submitted to the foreign office at Berlin."

So you see we are in danger of war—

"But I am glad to tell you that in the meeting in London——"

That is the meeting that I had a good deal of trouble in squeezing out of the hon. the Secretary of State the other day——

"the Intercolonial Railway purchase was not mentioned at that meeting. It was only spoken about the iron establishment in Nova Scotia, and a certain agreement was made, which has never been fulfilled by the Government. In regard to the purchase by the Intercolonial Railway I can assure you that Mr. Pope has made to us, in the month of June, 1886, a proposition to buy this road from Montreal to Moncton, saying that the lines from Moncton to St. John and Halifax would then be given to the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Hon. Judge Church was present at that interview, and he possesses the original of the letter which Mr. Pope wrote to him the next day on that matter. The initiative in this Intercolonial Railway question came from the Minister of Railways. but I had the opportunity to speak about the same question to the other Ministers, and not one told me that this road could not be sold. On the contrary, every one gave us the best encouragement, and therefore we have sent several missions of engineers over to study the road, and our engineers had received the best official reception in Ottawa, Moncton and everywhere. We have made, after the Government sent us to Paris, all the costly profiles, plans, maps, &c., from the Cape Breton line, a careful investigation about the construction price, and we have offered the 16th October, 1885, in the name of the Comptoir d'escompte in Paris, to build the whole road from Oxford to New Glasgow, the Pictou branches, and the Cape Breton road, altogether 250 miles, for a subsidy of less than $2,000,000, and to build the western division short line for the subsidy voted, but we received the answer that our price was excessive; but now the Government spends more than $2,500,000 for the Cape Breton line alone, and the western division has made an issue of $7,000,000 with five per cent. interest guaranteed for twenty years by the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway. I am not well to write you fully, but if it can be of any use, and if Mr. Mitchell wants it, I will send him a French report about all which happened to us. We have lost three years' time, we have expended more than $50,000 for nothing, because we have believed in the truth of the Canadian Ministers. Excuse these badly written lines, I am not at all well.

" Believe me, Sir, yours very truly,
" J. KAMPER "

Now, there is the letter I received, which I think fully bears out the statement I made that the Government were in negotiation for the sale of the intercolonial Railway. I may state that in Montreal, some four weeks ago, I had occasion to visit a business office, and I was shown letters from Paris from some of those very capitalists complaining in the most bitter language of the want of faith shown to them by the Canadian Government. Of course, with that I have nothing to do. I simply mentioned this; and I am sorry, and more than that I may say that I saw the letter of the hon. the Secretary of State, written by himself, to an individual excusing the Government for having so treated Mr. Kamper, and I was surprised the other day at the warmth shown by the hon. the Secretary of State, and regret he is not here to hear this explanation. This is the first opportunity I had of bringing the matter up, and I take advantage of it for the purpose of vindicating myself and warning the Government that if they dare attempt to sell that road, a road which forms part of the contract under which we came into Confederation, they would commit a breach of faith which would justify the Province of New Brunswick, and I am not sure that Province would not be glad of the opportunity, of going out of Confederation.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I want simply to refer to one point. Mr. Kamper says a bargain was made with him in London. That statement is not true. I never saw Mr. Kamper in London, except in the presence of my colleagues, the Minister of Customs, the Secretary of State, and the Deputy Minister of Finance. In the interview with Mr. Kamper and with a number of his associates, gentlemen of very high financial standing as iron masters, who made proposals with reference to the manufacture of steel rails, I told these gentlemen in the presence of my colleagues - and that is the only interview I had with them - that I did not believe the Government would accept their proposals, but that I would lay them before the Government. I told them I considered the proposals most extravagant, and had no idea the Government would entertain them, but that if they would formulate them in writing I would lay them before my colleagues. That promise was redeemed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What the hon. gentleman now speaks of had reference simply to the proposition for establishing iron works?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so. I had no communication with those gentlemen concerning the subject, and they never mentioned the subject of the purchase or sale of the Intercolonial Railway at any meeting, and I had no negotiations with them on the subject.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But the other Ministers probably have heard something of the proposition which the hon. member for Northumberland states was made by the Secretary of State, tending or looking to the sale of the Intercolonial Railway to this syndicate. Or does the hon. member or do his colleagues say they are entirely ignorant of this proposition to sell the Intercolonial Railway? I think we have the right to know, because if the Minister of State communicates with influential capitalists touching the sale of a road like the Intercolonial Railway it must be presumed that he does so with the concurrence, at any rate, of the leader of the Government. It would be impossible that a Minister could do that without first having conferred with the Premier. Now, the Premier will observe that my hon. friend for Northumberland states he saw a letter from the Secretary of State offering to sell that road.

Mr. MITCHELL. Excusing the Government for not being able to do what was proposed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not offering to sell, but excusing the Government for not being able to carry out the sale.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have not been to Montreal since the discussion, or I would have endeavored to see if I could not get the letter.

Mr. BOWELL. I only desire to say that, after meeting those gentlemen in London, I met them in Paris in company with the Secretary of State, and no question was discussed by those gentlemen and ourselves except the establishment of iron or steel works in Nova Scotia, and they were told distinctly that their propositions were altogether too extravagant to be entertained. I never heard any question, to my recollection, concerning the purchase or sale of the Intercolonial Railway, so far as those interviews are concerned.

Mr. MITCHELL. During the administration of the Province of Quebec by the Secretary of State, we know what happened with the railway there, and I was a little afraid something of the same kind might happen to the Intercolonial Railway. That is why I take this opportunity of publicly making these statements, because I contend that New Brunswick came into Confederation upon the express stipulation - and the hon. gentleman knows that we refused to go into Confederation unless that was put in the bond - that the Intercolonial Railway would be built as a Government road. We would not take their word, we wanted it put in the charter. The Government objected, but we insisted it should be put in the charter and it is there, and they have no right to sell or give over that road in any way. I may state another fact in reference to this correspondence that was exhibited to me in Montreal, that those French bankers had written to a party in Montreal with whom they were in correspondence, complaining bitterly that the Government had gone back on their contract and agreement, and asking if faith could be had in these men.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I saw Mr. Kamper and some other gentlemen who were with him with regard to the establishment of a steel rail factory. I am sure that no such offer to give over the Intercolonial Railway was ever made by the Government or any of them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Or by any member?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As far as I know,

Windsor Branch Railway $27,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it necessary to keep those various railways all separate?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is necessary so far as this is concerned. The Windsor Branch Railway is leased, and, therefore, it is necessary to keep it separate. It is not part of the Intercolonial Railway system.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Eastern Extension Railway is surely a part of the Intercolonial Railway system.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is to all intents and purposes, and ultimately an Act will have to be passed to make it so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the Windsor Railway pay its expenses?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, and more.

Canals—repairs and working expenses $:65,720

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. About how does this compare with our tolls at present?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It pretty nearly balances.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A little I suppose on the wrong side?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this the whole, or are there side votes to be added?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think this is all, except what is in the Supplementary Estimates.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have under the head of railways and canals, chargeable to income, an amount of about $256,000. That should be added, I suppose, to this to give us a fair idea of the cost of the canal system.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then practically the $256,000 would represent a loss. If I understand, the income is about equal to this $465,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I should think so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. gentleman give the details?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have the details of everything except the income, which they have not furnished me with.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know really what is the annual loss on the canals. At present you have to look at so many different places in the Estimates that it is difficult to discover it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will give the statement on Monday.

Mr. BARRON. If it is not inconveniencing the Minister, could he tell me if a lockmaster has been appointed at Fenelon Falls?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman now, but if it is very important I will get the information for him.

Sault Ste. Marie Canal $97,650

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am anxious to put myself right with the committee on this subject. As I stated, in the absence of my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals, I could only speak from recollection as to the cost of that canal, a vote having been taken of $1,000,000 a year ago and the previous estimate being $750,000, I stated that it was intended to extend the work very considerably, and, therefore, it was necessary to increase the estimate, and I assumed that the amount of nearly a $1,000,000 in the estimate, as I found no information in regard to it in the papers furnished to me, would be sufficient. I find that was entirely erroneous. The approximate estimate to complete that work and obtain a depth of 16 feet at the lowest water, is $2,800,000, and the hon. member for Glengarry

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

(Mr. Purcell) was not so far wrong in his statement, though his information does not agree with that of the department in reference to the cost of the approaches. If a depth of 20 feet at the lowest water is to be obtained, Mr. Page's approximate estimate of the cost is $3,800,000. It is not proposed certainly to have that. The very outside depth would be 16 feet, which is 2 feet deeper than the Welland Canal and would require a vessel coming through with that draught of water to lighter at Port Colborne in order to pass through the Welland. I mentioned to Mr. Page, after the discussion we had the other night, the statements which were made, and said I would like to have a memorandum on the subject. He says:

"A person called on me this evening and mentioned that you wished to see me about the Sault Ste. Marie Canal matter. I regret being at present unable to give you anything like full or satisfactory information on the subject. In fact I only received this morning a copy of the Minute of the Privy Council intimating the depth the canal is intended to be made—16 feet at low water. It may, however, be stated that the Island of St. Mary is about 4,600 feet across, it at some places is very little over the upper water surface, at 800 feet out from the shore at the lower end the water is of the full depth required, and at from 1,300 to 1,500 feet out from the island at the upper end the channel way is of the full depth required; but about 3,000 feet above, a few places will require to be deepened a few feet. The material to be removed is principally boulders, stone, gravel, and what is called Potsdam sandstone rock."

I think that is about all the statement contains. The fact of my having been absent, and taking the estimates up with the information under my hands, and not having had any connection with the department, led me into the erroneous statement, and I assumed the $1,000,000 would complete the work. The estimate for the 16 feet is $2,800,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is a very serious matter. I hope the Government will pause before they proceed with an expenditure which is at least $3,000,000, and may very well come to $4,000,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. $3,800,000 is for 20 feet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But an estimated expenditure of $3,000,000 in a work of this character, as we all know, runs great risks of being exceeded. Now, I trust the Government, under these circumstances, will pause before they proceed. It is well known that the Americans are constructing a double lock there of enormous dimensions. It does appear to me that with the construction of a railway on the north shore giving us access at all seasons of winter and summer, to the North-West, it is really a sentimental thing for us to go and spend three millions of money, unless there is extremely grave cause for it. I do not think that it would be contended by the Minister himself that, for commercial purposes, there is any need for a canal on our side, when the Americans have already an immense canal which they are now doubling.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We propose to take the vote, and to have a careful survey made of the ground, and then the Government will be in a better position to consider the whole question.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But the Government do not propose to go on, I understand. This is now nearly the 1st of June.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. According to the way in which these things move, it does not strike me that it would be practicable to have a large expenditure made before the House meets again. But I think it is very desirable to have a complete location of the canal and the most careful estimate that can be made.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not object to that, but I do hope that the Government will not commit themselves, until the House has an opportunity of considering the question again, to an expenditure of three millions. I understand the Minister to state that nothing further will be done until a full survey has been made.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, nothing else.

Committee rose and reported progress.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would say that it is the desire of His Excellency the Governor General to prorogue the House on Tuesday. In order to be able to do so; I think we must work very hard, and I am going to move that when the House adjourns, it shall stand adjourned until 10 o'clock on Monday morning. It will take all Monday, and I dare say a portion of Tuesday, in order to enable the Governor General to prorogue on Tuesday. I would say that the programme is this: that we will meet here say on Tuesday at two o'clock, or the House will adjourn rather, at two o'clock, and proceed to the Senate Chamber, where the Senate will also have adjourned. There the Address, in English and French, will be presented by the two Speakers to His Excellency, who will, of course, answer in both languages. We shall then return here and await the summons at 3 o'clock to prorogue the House. With the permission of the House, I move that when this House adjourns it will stand adjourned until 10 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. MITCHELL. It appears to me it will be impossible for us to get through in one day. I think the adjournment should not take place till Wednesday, because there are something like 250 items to go through, and how can we get through them unless we jump the whole thing?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the House will be very anxious to allow Parliament to be prorogued as the last official act of His Excellency the Governor General, who will be obliged to leave on Wednesday. In order to carry that out we must have him prorogue on Tuesday. Therefore, I hope that the hon. members will agree to work as hard as they can on Monday and the morning of Tuesday.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will raise no objection to the meeting at 10 o'clock on Monday. I think that is a very reasonable proposition; although I may just remark that a session from ten to six, eight hours consecutive, will be rather too much. We must have a half hour's adjournment at one o'clock.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. From one to half-past one.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That will do. But I may say this: I am very desirous, and so are all my hon. friends, of facilitating as much as we can the arrangement the hon. gentleman has proposed, and it may be that, beginning at ten—practically having three days for it will amount to that—it may be that we can get through; but in view of the very considerable amount of work that has to be done, I would not like to pledge myself ahead that we could get through because there are, I think, 200 separate items in the Supplementary Estimates, and then there is concurrence to be taken on the whole Estimates.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not see how it is to be done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have gone very great lengths of late years in this matter of concurrence.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We have discussed questions very fully going through.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We will try what can be done, but it is running the thing tremendously fine.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I doubt extremely in any case whether it would be possible—you might present the Address, if you pleased, to His Excellency at two o'clock—but I doubt extremely whether it would be possible to have prorogation before night.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would be the best that could possibly be done, and I see difficulties even in the way of that.

Mr. MITCHELL. We will leave the question of whether prorogation will be in the afternoon or in the evening, until Monday, until we see how we get on. There is every disposition to facilitate the arrangement, but I do not see how we are going to rush through such an enormous amount of business in so short a time.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It seems to me concurrence should be taken on Monday on many of the items. This leaving concurrence until the last day when many members are away, is to be regretted, as the Minister knows that members often ask the Government to let matters stand.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think anything has stood for concurrence this time.

Mr. GIGAULT. Do the Government intend to proceed with the resolution respecting the salaries of certain judges?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, it is not the intention of the Government.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and, at midnight, the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 21st May, 1888.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Ten o'clock.

PRAYERS.

MONTREAL POST OFFICE—ELECTRIC LIGHT.

Mr. EDGAR asked, What is the nature of the contract between the Government and Gazette Printing Company, of Montreal, as to the lighting of the Montreal post office by electricity, in respect of the time for which the contract has to run, the amount of lights or power supplied, and the price paid for the service?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A contract was made with the Gazette Printing Company on 23rd October, 1885, for five years, to supply electric current to the Montreal post Office for 150 sixteen-candle power lamps, on Edison incandescent system, for an annual rental of $2,750. In March, 1886, it was found necessary to extend the number of lamps by 87, at a further annual rental of $637.96 making a total number of lamps now 237, and the annual rental $3,387.96.

BRIDGE AT QUEBEC.

Mr. LAURIER (for Mr. LANGELIER, Quebec Centre) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to recommend to this House some measure to aid in the construction of a bridge opposite or near to the city of Quebec, or to be empowered to construct the said bridge themselves?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not the intention of the Government at the present Session,

THE TOBIQUE VALLEY RAILWAY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant a subsidy hereinafter mentioned, towards the construction of the following railway, that is to say:—

To the Tobique Valley Railway Company, or any other railway company, for fourteen miles of railway from Perth Centre Station towards Plaister Rock Island, in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 49 Victoria, Chapter 10, for a railway from Perth Centre Station, on the New Brunswick Railway, to a point near Plaister Rock Island, and in lieu of the subsidy granted by the Act 50 and 51 Victoria, Chapter 24, to the Tobique Valley Railway Company, a subsidy of $89,000.

He said: That amount has been already voted to the Tobique Railway Company, but they have done nothing, and I believe are not likely to proceed with the work. The object of this resolution is, in case the Tobique company fails to take up the subsidy voted to them, to empower the Government to make the same arrangement with another company who may be able to carry on the work.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it the same amount?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Is there any other company in existence?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think a charter was granted to another company during the present Session.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it the same distance as the one last year?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, the same distance and the same route.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to ask what is the entire length of this railway? How many miles from the Perth station from which it is proposed to run this road?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that it is simply a re-vote of the same amount and for the same purpose precisely as was voted last year, and the conditions are exactly the same as the provisions last year. If the company do not proceed with the work within a certain time this resolution merely gives us power to make a change to some other company.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Is the line not shorter than last year?

Mr. THOMPSON. The resolution is exactly in the same words as that of last year and the distance is the same.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The only change is inserting the words "or any other company."

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the Order for third reading of Bill (No. 140) to authorise the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned be discharged and again referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BROWN. I desire, Sir, to make a few remarks in connection with this railway question. I have no doubt the House, generally, is aware that great disappointment has existed, and does exist, in a great part of Ontario, at the withholding of subsidies from several lines of railways, the promoters of which, last year and the previous year, were very much emboldened by the strong hopes held out to them to go on and incur expense in surveying, obtaining rights of way, and so on. The railway which I am more particularly interested in is one which I think claims a good deal of consideration at the hands of the Government, and I hope they may see their way to grant that assistance which we so much require. The South Ontario Pacific Railway, which is projected to run through the important cities of Brantford, Hamilton and St. Catharines, to connect those cities with our national system, traverses a tract of country which has been a great contributor to the wealth of the country, and which, in consequence, has been a large factor in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Today those important cities and the country adjacent to them are deprived of direct access to the Canadian Pacific Railway; and as those cities are large manufacturing centres, we have no means of conveying the products of our manufacturing centres to any portion of the country or to the far North-West, or the Pacific coast by a direct system of connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. The cities of Hamilton and Brantford have hitherto contributed very large sums of money towards the construction of railways. I may claim for my own city of Hamilton that it has not only led the van in encouraging all railway enterprises, but it has been a stout and cheerful supporter of any policy directed to the development of the country by railways. The wise and judicious policy of the Government in the past in subsidising railways for the development of the resources of the country has met with the support of the people, and will continue to meet with the support of the people; and no better investment could be made by the country than to assist railways intended to connect the large centres of trade with our great system of railway communication. I hope that the Government will soon be in a position to revive their wise policy of giving assistance to all proper schemes of railway; and I hope the Government will see their way speedily to recognise the importance of connecting with the Canadian Pacific Railway system perhaps the richest and most important portion of the Province of Ontario, containing the large manufacturing city of Hamilton, perhaps the first manufacturing city and the second in size in the Province. I desire to place these views of mine on record, and I hope the Government will see their way at as early a date as possible to recognise the importance of that line, which cannot be overlooked.

SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I see that by this resolution the Finance Minister asks us to agree to a subsidy of $6,000 per mile.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I do not. I simply ask to put into this resolution the words, "or any other company." I am asking for nothing. I am simply asking to amend the existing Act.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That would be very unsatisfactory. It would leave the Government carte blanche to go and arrange with any other company, and to use their influence—I will not say a corrupt influence, but it might, perhaps, be very convenient to them—for the building of this railway; and in asking this House to appropriate a sum of money, I think they should indicate what company is to get it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I presume the hon. gentleman was not in the House when I explained that the company to whom this appropriation was made, have made no progress, and, the Government are informed, are not likely to do anything. Another company has been chartered this Session for the same work, and it is proposed that if the original company do not pursue the work within the prescribed time, the Government may transfer the subsidy to the other company.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman has not explained why the House is called on to vote $6,000 a mile, double the sum voted to any other part of the Dominion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not explain that because I am not asking the House to vote a shilling. I am not changing a letter in the Act, except in case the company to whom the subsidy was voted fail to carry out the work.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). When was the Act passed ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Last Session.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). These votes are brought down at the last moment, and do not receive the attention they should.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say to my hon. friend from Hamilton (Mr. Brown) that it is unfortunate he was not in the House when I explained how it was that the Government were obliged to turn a deaf ear to the demands of the large and important deputation which came from that section of country to ask for aid to the railway to which he has referred; but as we proposed this year to call a halt, and not to grant any new subsidies, with the exception of the two to which reference has already been made, we were obliged to ask my hon. friend and the section of country he represents to leave that demand in abeyance for a future day, when I hope the Government may be in a better position to go on with those works than we are at present.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Last year I find that the railway votes were passed in committee on the 23rd of June. I had left for home at that time, and I think also most of the members from New Brunswick. The resolutions were only brought in on the 20th, the subsidies passed on the 23rd, and the House prorogued the next day. I see there is no reference to this grant in the Debates.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Well, we cannot afford to lose the day on this question, and if hon. gentlemen opposite are not willing that it should pass by common consent after my explanation of the circumstances, I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. SPEAKER. Carried.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understood that the hon. gentleman withdrew.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I said I would withdraw if hon. gentlemen were not satisfied with the explanation which has been given.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Withdraw.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Withdraw, then.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. COUTURE. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the House will observe that in the Estimates which are now before us there is an item of $96,000 for the Lake St. John Railway. I must say that this subsidy was promised in 1886 to Mgr. Dominique Racine and that the same promise has been made by several of the hon. present Ministers. In 1887 that subsidy has been voted in fulfilment of a promise made in 1886, but it was granted to a company holding a local charter, but without even a subscribed capital; in order to be granted that charter, one of the shareholders was compelled to subscribe $80,000, but I must say he was not worth 80,000 cents. The company was but an impediment to the building of the railway. Later on finding themselves under the responsibility of building the road they wished to sell their rights to the now existing company who held a charter for the main line. They at first asked for $20,000; from $20,000 they went down to $10,000, and finally they accepted $6,000. I must say that a transaction of that kind is far from being honorable, and that the result was to delay the building of that railway branch which was so greatly needed in the country. During the present Session the Government, after numerous requests from myself and from the electors of the county, authorised the transfer to the existing company of the subsidy granted to the other company. I am glad of it, and I must congratulate the Government for their action.

Those $96,000 have been spent by the present company and sixty-five miles of that branch which are greatly needed, are still to be built. I notice that subsidies are granted to many railway companies, amongst which there are some whose lines are already opened to traffic. I protest against that policy, and I believe we ought rather to favor railways like the one for which I am now interested. During the present Session I have asked for a subsidy of $239,465 to enable us to complete this railway, which will open to colonisation one of the finest sections of the country. I fear, Mr. Speaker, that Lake St. John Valley is not known enough by the hon. Ministers and the members of this House. At the beginning of the Session I received and forwarded to the Government several petitions from the county which I have the honor to represent; no less than eighteen petitions signed by more than eighteen hundred electors, amongst whom are the curates, mayors and councillors of those different parishes, all feeling confident that we would be granted what we asked for and were fully entitled to. Another petition signed by a good number of the hon. members from both sides of this House, congratulating me for my exertions in favor of a railway which will be so useful to that section of the country. Another petition with the same object was signed by the hon. members of the Senate, and I have myself addressed letters to all the hon. Ministers claiming justice for that section of the country. All have answered me, saying: that I could expect to obtain what I asked for. I have even addressed myself to the Privy Council and I was led to understand that something would be granted to that Lake St. John Railway. But, at the last hour, I find by an answer to a question put by me in this House, that nothing has been granted for that enterprise. I must say that it is painful for us, because those hard working and intelligent people who are endeavoring to progress as rapidly as possible, are thus checked for at least two or three years. I believe it is my duty to urge that the Government will reconsider their decision, and I hope that some hon. Minister will rise in this House and say that a subsidy has been granted to enable us to complete the railway at the next session, if not during the present Session. Mr. Speaker, I think it will be interesting to give a few figures as to the products of the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay and as to its resources. The following details are taken from the census of 1881. We have to-day in working order, in the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, not to mention large farms, 41 saw mills with 1,069 employes. The value of the raw material amounts to $280,108; that of the manufactured products to $657,341. The capital invested in all the various industries in the county, industries which are expected to progress rapidly, amounts to $364,606. The number of employees is 1,393; the salaries paid annually amount to $188,992. We have besides that other industries which are not included in the list I have just given. Now, I will give you some data as to the real property. There are in the county 4,498 proprietors, owning 464,329 acres of land; the number of houses is 4,514; barns and stables, 5,390; resident proprietors, 3,190; farmers, 399. The cultivated area is 76,470 acres; pasture, 55,366; gardens and orchards, 895 acres; improved lands, 132,731 acres. Mr. Speaker, we all know that the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay is almost a province by itself. The fact is easily shown by the following figures: 59,745,821 acres of land are in culture. The products of 15,189 acres of land, in 1881, were as follows:—

Wheat	155,589 bushels
Barley	47,825 "
Oats	211,216 "
Rye	13,221 "
Peas	73,555 "
Buckwheat	20,965 "

Corn.....	392 bushels.
Potatoes.....	287,238 "
Turnips.....	42,147 "
Other roots.....	3,398 "
Hayseed and clover.....	252 "
Hay.....	16,347 tons.
Linseed.....	1,761 pounds
Tobacco.....	67,437 "
Horses.....	1,812
Colts and fillies.....	838
Labouring oxen.....	2,225
Milk cows.....	9,398
Other cattle.....	8,288
Sheep.....	26,433
Hogs.....	8,390

Such were the products of the county in 1881, but I must remark that since that time they have almost doubled, and if we had a railway to carry them to market our farmers would strive to improve their lands, and their products would be twice as large as they now are. There is another important industry in the county, Mr. Speaker, and that is the home industry, the home work. I see by the last census that 131,190 yards of family cloth and flannel have been manufactured, and 46,387 yards of family linen; 82,382 pounds of wool and 20,834 of flax have been employed in manufacturing these articles. Mr. Speaker, I might mention another very prosperous industry which is a great boon to the county and the country at large; it is the dairy. In 1881, there were no butter or cheese factories in the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay. In 1898 we have 25 cheese factories and 4 butter factories under the Danish centrifugal system. The sales of butter and cheese in 1888 amounted to $23,500. I hope that in the next ten or twelve years this industry will be more than doubled by the large natural pastures we possess and the care with which this industry is carried on. There is another industry about which a good deal was said in this House by several members from the various Provinces and which is carried on successfully in the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, and that is the fishing industry. I see by the census of 1881, that the fishing trade of the country was annually handled by 75 vessels and 334 men, 1,324 barges manned by 1,987 men, 1,565 cod-laying men, and 45,512 fathoms of nets. The following are the fishing products:—

145,080	ewt. of codfish.
5,304	" dabs and whiting.
4,011	barrels of herring.
322	" of mackerel.
89	" of sardines.
229	" of halibut.
1,055	" of salmon.
174	" of trout.
39	" of whitefish.
20,270	" of other fish.
47	" of oysters.
122,402	gallons of oils of all kinds.

In view of these figures, Mr. Speaker, I think the Government were wrong in not granting more aid to this extensive country. The Government are wrong in not granting us something to develop the resources of this great country. Last year, we had nothing from the Government, no grants for railways or for public works. This year our allowance is very small and we have nothing at all for our railways. At the beginning of the present Session I took upon myself to forward to the hon. the Minister of Public Works (Sir Hector Langevin) a statement of the estimates and specifications of the works which I believe are absolutely needed in the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay. The statement reads as follows:—

" OTTAWA, 24th February, 1888.

" To Sir Hector Langevin:

" Sir,—I submit to you the estimates which I believe necessary for the counties of Chicoutimi and Saguenay:
M. COUTURE,

Hydrographic survey and marine map of Lake St. John.....	$5,000
Deepening of the Grande Décharge of Lake St. John.....	2,000
For the lengthening of St. Ann's wharf.....	4,000
Paving Chicoutimi wharf.....	1,000
Paving St. Alphonse wharf.....	1,500
Repairing the wharf at St. John's Cove.....	2,000
Wharf at Tadoussac.....	19,000
Clearing Rivière des Bergeronnes.....	800
Dredging near Chicoutimi wharf.....	2,000
Wharf, lighthouse and buoys on Lake St. John.....	20,000
Total.....	$57,300

Well, Mr. Speaker, of this amount I was greatly astonished to see, by the Estimates, that we had only the sum of $4,600, distributed as follows:—

Wharf at Tadoussac.....	$1,000
Chicoutimi, St. Alphonse, St. John's Cove and Ste. Anne du Saguenay.....	2,000
Grande Décharge of Lake St. John.....	1,600
Total.....	$4,600

I am really sorry to state that since two years the Government have granted but the sum of $4,600 for public works in two counties having an extent of nearly 900 miles and a population of 40,000 souls, an intelligent and industrious population striving to progress. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, I can say that if the Government had expended in the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay in public works and improvements the five-eighths of what was spent in other parts of the country, the population of the county would have been from 60,000 to 75,000 souls, instead of 40,000 as it actually stands. As I stated a moment ago, the soil is fertile and the county is extensive. We have in the United States thousands of French Canadians who wish to come back with us. What are they waiting for before coming? They are waiting until the country is opened, until they have roads, public highways and railways. They say, reasonably, that it is useless to go to Lake St. John and cultivate the land only to provide for local consumption, because there are no means of communication to export agricultural products. Well, when railways will be built, we shall see hundreds of poor Canadian exiles returning from the United States. I know the Government have expended a great deal of money to encourage the return of these exiles, but, in my opinion, the only course we should adopt to induce them to return is to give them colonisation roads in order to develop this great and beautiful country. The county I have the honor to represent, Mr. Speaker, is as extensive as a Province, and when we shall have fully known its importance, and when we shall have given to it an aid according to its size and to its future, Canadians will return by thousands to live in it, because the French Canadian always likes to rally round the steeple of his native country. He likes to return to the hearth of his family and live amongst his fellow countrymen. I therefore say that the only course we can adopt to recall our Canadians, is to open the northern counties, and particularly the county of Chicoutimi and Saguenay, by building railways and giving them a new market for their products. I hope, Mr. Speaker, I shall have a promise, during the present Session, from one of the hon. Ministers who are in this House at the present moment, that at next Session, the Government will see fit to grant the necessary subsidy for completing the railway now in construction, for building wharves and helping us to develop that fine country. In order to show the energy and the enterprising spirit of our population, I might say that a private individual built at his own cost a steambot now plying on Lake St. John. Other parties, feeling confident that the Government would grant a subsidy to complete the railway, have built a splendid hotel at Roberval, on the shore of Lake St. John, in order to invite tourists to visit us and at the same time to better acquaint them with the resources of the country. Well, what a deception it was for these persons. For want of a subsidy the railway from Chicoutimi to Lake St. John cannot possibly be completed, and one can see the loss which was caused to the parties who built that grand hotel I mentioned and to the party who built the steamer navigating on Lake St. John. It is almost ruinous for those engaged in these enterprises. Mr. Speaker, when we shall have a railway to Lake St. John, at Roberval, a steamboat on the lake and wharves to moor vessels, I say that in the northern part of Lake St. John there is land enough to establish from 20 to 25 parishes. Well, I am very sorry that the Government have not thought it necessary to undertake the public works I have mentioned, but I hope they will reconsider their decision, and, that, as they have granted us hardly anything this year they will feel bound to give us much more next year.

Mr. MITCHELL. Perhaps the hon. the Minister of Finance will give me his attention for two or three minutes. Of course it is late in the Session, and I may be slightly out of order in putting this question, but it is as well to have an explanation now with regard to a certain item. I was out of the House when the Estimates on the Intercolonial Railway were passed, I notice on page 46 of the Estimates, item 70, the item of construction, $7,000. In the Hansard, I find an explanation given of that vote which I do not understand, and perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain it. The hon. gentleman stated that that was on account of a claim for $20,000 which had been made for a gravel pit near Newcastle. I know of no such gravel pit.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am very much obliged to the hon. gentleman for drawing my attention to this matter. He was good enough to show me a telegram which he had received from the county. The pit is near Bathurst, and the memorandum I had incorrectly described it as near Newcastle. The claim is for $20,000 to be given to this person for his gravel pit. It is a most inordinate and extravagant claim, the Government are resisting it in every possible way, and there will not be a dollar of money paid more than is proved should be actually given. When the Government took possession of this property, they found there was a gravel pit there. It was Government property belonging to the Government of New Brunswick, and this party, ascertaining that there was gravel there, went to the Government of New Brunswick and got a grant of the property. He has been making, in the judgment of the Government, a most inordinate claim, which the Government are determined to resist in every possible way.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am very glad to hear this explanation, and I would suggest that there is a legal and a proper way for the Government to obtain any portion of the lands or gravel pits needed for the Government work. It would be well for the Government to take the ordinary legal means.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is what we propose to do.

Mr. MITCHELL. The claim is put down at $20,000; $20 would be nearer the value.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 140) to authorise the granting of subsidies in aid of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

SUMMARY CONVICTIONS ACT.

Mr. THOMPSON moved :

That the amendment made by the Senate to Bill (No. 113) to amend Chapter one hundred and seventy-eight of the Revised Statutes of Canada, "The Summary Convictions Act," be concurred in.

He said: I explained on Saturday that the amendment made in the Senate was designed to remedy a defect in the Summary Convictions Act with regard to costs. The Act contains a provision that costs shall be recovered on conviction and provides that the warrant shall require the counsel to collect the costs. It has been decided that inasmuch as no tariff of costs has been prescribed, the convictions which provide for the recovery of costs and the warrant containing the latter provision are invalid, and a number of prisoners have been released in consequence. The better arrangement will, of course, be to provide a tariff of costs. But in the meantime it will be well to adopt the amendment of the Senate and remedy the matter by providing that a tariff of magistrates' costs enforced in the provinces shall be used for the purpose of convictions under this Act. This is only a temporary provision, and I propose to make a tariff of costs next Session.

Amendment concurred in.

BILLS WITHDRAWN.

Bill (No. 124) to amend the "Copyright Act," chapter sixty-two of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

Bill (No. 88) to abolish Forfeitures for Treason and Felony, and to otherwise amend the law relating thereto.

SUPPLY—BOUNDARIES OF ONTARIO.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DAWSON. I desire to draw the attention of the House to a matter which I consider of some importance and I shall only detain the House for a few moments. Some time ago the hon. member for Bothwell placed a notice on the Order Paper which he has not gone on with. That notice contained some very strong statements which I believe—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid I must ask my hon. friend, really, as a personal favor, to forego raising a debate at this stage. The hon. gentleman may occupy five minutes, but an hour may be occupied in answering him. In that case we must give up all hope of getting through to-morrow. The hon. gentleman would take the responsibility of preventing our being able to carry out what both sides of the House desire, to prorogue to-morrow. If he raises a discussion he cannot prevent, though he becomes responsible for the whole day being lost. I hope my hon. friend will not persist.

Mr. DAWSON. I shall give in to the hon. gentleman's wishes. I only wanted to draw attention to the very incorrect statements in that notice.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am prepared to defend them.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Hire a hall.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Collection of Revenues—Customs..... $854,430

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it will be convenient, as we go on, that the Minister of Customs should state briefly to us such reasons as exist for increases or diminutions.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I suppose he will not be pressed so strongly in reference to the diminutions as in reference to the increases.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, not so strongly. At the same time, when a change takes place in a vote pro or con, it is only proper that the reasons should be stated to the committee.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BOWELL. The details are so plain in this estimate that I suppose my hon. friend simply desires to know why the increases or decreases have taken place?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There are two principal increases in the item of $270,625 for the Province of Ontario—those at Ottawa and at Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. BOWELL. The increase of $1,500 for Ottawa arises out of the necessity to appoint two additional men on the staff on account of the increased work at the railway stations, and also an addition to the Appraisers' department, where the revenue has swollen from $30,000 or $40,000 to $60,000 or $70,000. In addition to that, four outports have been established. One at Arnprior, another at Perth, another at Carleton Place, and one at Renfrew, all of which are attached to the Ottawa Port and consequently swell the appropriation for that port. The Sault Ste. Marie increase of $2,400 arises from four or five additional men who will have to be added to the staff in order to manifest and check goods and cars which are passing over the Sault Ste. Marie bridge. The hon. gentleman is aware that wherever connections of this kind are made, it is necessary to have men appointed to check all the goods which are transferred from one side to the other, which entail a large amount of additional work without any corresponding return in the way of revenue.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have you now communication direct with Minneapolis?

Mr. BOWELL. I think so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there also a direct communication from Duluth?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not think that is completed. I know flour has been sent in large quantities via the Sault over the bridge and the Canadian Pacific Railway. In regard to the amount of $223,345 for the Province of Quebec, the great increase arises in the port of Montreal, and is caused by the opening of new railway stations and the large additional work required at the wharves through the increase of tonnage and the increase of shipping. As the amount of shipping and trade increases so in proportion the extra staff has to be increased.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose the hon. gentleman means that when the Canadian Pacific Railway station is in full working order, there will be a larger number of men required there.

Mr. BOWELL. There will be when the new station is opened. We already had to put on officers at the eastern portion, and also some to look after the traffic crossing the river. The increase is on the extra staff for the summer season. As soon as navigation opens, fifteen, and sometimes twenty men have to be placed on the staff and kept there during the summer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is also an increase at St. Johns?

Mr. BOWELL. The port of Lacolle has been reduced to an outport, and the whole expense of that is charged to the port of St. Johns, of which it is now an outport; but there is no charge for Lacolle.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Under the expenditure for New Brunswick, $38,220, am I to understand that Moncton and Hillsboro' neutralise each other?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. BOWELL. Hillsboro' has been made an outport and attached to Moncton. The expenditure at the port of St. John is increased by $1,450. That is caused by the transference in a great measure of certain outports which have been attached to St. John and by slight increases of salary to some of the officers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In Nova Scotia, $109,310, Halifax seems to be the chief party to the increase.

Mr. BOWELL. The increase at the port of Halifax arises from the fact that the winter trade is increasing very rapidly, and I found it necessary, in connection with the transference of goods arriving in the winter to the railway, to put on three or four additional men. Some of those will go off the staff in the spring. Halifax is different from any other port in the Dominion. The work increases in Halifax in winter, and decreases, to a certain extent, in summer; while in most other ports the increase is in the summer and the decrease in the winter. The hon. member for Halifax is, no doubt, aware of that.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The general percentage of cost in collecting the revenue is less in Halifax, being about four, as against six in Toronto, Quebec and Montreal. I am not urging that it should be increased at all; what the Minister of Customs says is quite correct.

Mr. BOWELL. Manitoba, $30,850.—There is a decrease here, owing to a decrease in the work in Winnipeg, and it is also decreasing at Emerson. Consequently I have dispensed with some of the temporary men, and have transferred some of the permanent staff to other places.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You mean that the imports are less?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, and of course the work is less. The necessity for the large staff there formerly, arose from the fact that all the goods that were sent from here into the North-West had to pass through the United States, and consequently had to go in bonded cars, and every bonded car required looking after when it arrived, either at Emerson or at Winnipeg. Now most of the goods pass over the Canadian Pacific Railway, by way of Port Arthur, into that Province.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. British Columbia, $41,020.—Here is relatively an exceedingly large increase, nearly 25 per cent.

Mr. BOWELL. That arises from the establishment of a port at Vancouver, and as in Winnipeg at first, a larger staff was necessary, and may possibly be reduced when the volume of trade is really known. The hon. gentleman will see that in New Westminster there is a decrease of $2,200. Some of the officers there have been transferred to Vancouver, and a new collector was appointed, and a number of new officers had to be employed. I may mention that it is absolutely necessary to pay men in Vancouver and British Columbia larger salaries than are paid in the east, on account of the greater expense of living. There is also an increase in Victoria that we found to be necessary, from the looseness with which the business was looked after. During a visit made to that country by one of my officers, many irregularities were discovered in the management, and he recommended the appointment of four new landing waiters in order that more attention and a better surveillance over the goods that arrived at that port might be had; and, after reading his report, I decided that this addition should be made.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman finds the present expense of living in British Columbia is greater than in Manitoba?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, I think it is, although I believe it is gradually decreasing, as it has done in Manitoba.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. To provide for the administration of the Chinese Immigration Act, including remunerations to customs officers, $3,000.—Would the hon. gentleman explain that item; and I also want to know what the effect of recent legislation has been with respect to Chinese immigration. The question may assume a somewhat important character in connection with our relations with the United States, where, also, they have carried a somewhat stringent system of prevention of undue Chinese immigration.

Mr. BOWELL. The result of the legislation has been to decrease the immigration of these people into this country. Under the operation of the law during the present year, at the port of Victoria, 116 immigrants arrived, who paid $50 each. There were 971 registrations, 728 tickets of leave, the total collections being $7,013.50. At Emerson, three immigrants arrived, paying $359; at Winnipeg, there were three registrations and six tickets of leave, $7.50. At Port Arthur, one immigrant, and six registrations, $53; and at Montreal, one registration, 50 cents, making a total collection of $7,424.50. This sum, as the hon. gentleman is aware, is divided between the Dominion and British Columbia, and there was paid to British Columbia, under section 20 of the Chinese Act, $2,525. There was an amount refunded to C. F. Moore of $50 which had been collected from him, his wife being a Chinese woman, and it was thought afterwards advisable, by Order in Council under the Audit Act, to remit that sum to him. The expenditure in connection with the Act will be found on page 364, Auditor General's report. However, it leaves a surplus in the hands of the Government.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The number of immigrants is not very formidable, unless it be a mere vanguard. I think the hon. gentleman said there were 971 registrations. Does he mean by that that every Chinaman now in British Columbia has had to take out a ticket of license?

Mr. BOWELL. Not a ticket of license. Under the law every Chinese who was in the country at the time of the passing of the law, had to register his name in order to protect himself from the collection of the 50 cents immigrant tax. As they come in from the interior of British Columbia they register themselves, and that exempts them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, that can hardly mean there were only 971.

Mr. BOWELL. These are only the transactions of this year. Last year there was a large number registered besides.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I find that under the head of Customs Board there are several items here for special officers. Does that include their total salaries, or are they entitled to a certain portion of the seizures? I see on page 343 of the Auditor General's report, Waters, Grosse, McMichael, O'Keefe, and Bonness, who have received large sums. It says Bonness gets $600 as preventive officer, and down below, $290 more.

Mr. BOWELL. That may be for travelling expenses. These officers have a salary. Mr. Grosse, for example, has $1,200 salary. If he is sent to any part of the country to look after smugglers or to investigate anything, he is entitled to travelling expenses. If he effects a seizure, then the expenses attending that trip are deducted from the amount of the seizure before the distribution is made, and he is entitled, under the law, to a proportion of the net proceeds of that seizure.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). But if he is sent to perform a public duty, I do not see why he is entitled to any portion of the seizure.

Mr. BOWELL. The law gives it to him.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Officers sent from the department visit certain places on information received by the department. When an officer is despatched on public business he is not entitled to any remuneration in addition to his salary, his expenses, of course, being paid. I fail to see any reason why the amount should not go into the revenue.

Mr. BOWELL. That opens the whole question as to whether moieties should be given to any officers who make seizures. They all receive their salaries. I do not think it is advisable to enter into any general discussion of that system, nor do I presume the hon. gentleman desires I should do so. If any officer makes a seizure, the law entitles him to a certain amount of the net proceeds. We learn sometimes that certain irregularities exist in a certain section of the country, and we at once despatch an officer to look after them.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am very sorry the Minister of Customs has continued the system of allowing these detective officers to obtain a share of the seizures. It is a vicious system and has worked very injuriously to the country; but he has been enabled by the force and power of the majority in this House to continue the system.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not put it on the Statute-book.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Minister of Customs is not responsible; it is the law and it has for a long time been the law. It is a question for discussion as to whether the law should be modified or not, but my hon. friend has only carried out the law.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not see why the hon. gentleman should correct me; that is exactly what I stated. I regret that on the revision of the Customs Act it was not provided that for the future this system, which is so objectionable to the mercantile community, should be abolished. At that time I endeavored to get the Bill postponed until the merchants should have an opportunity of expressing their opinion. The hon. gentleman, however, pushed the Bill through the House at a very late hour in the evening, after the Bill had been only one or two days on the Table of the House.

Mr. BOWELL. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. It was a very short time, at any rate; and whatever might be the case in the cities, merchants in the remote districts had no opportunity of studying the Bill. The hon. gentleman chose by the power of votes to retain that objectionable system, which is one against which the large majority of the people have set their faces. It is vicious in principle and should be abolished. The hon. gentleman has the power of votes to push the Bill through and continue this vicious principle, which enables a few subordinates to wait and watch their opportunity of making seizures, due often to the inadvertence or ignorance of those in the trade, who thus become entangled in the meshes of the sleuth-hounds of the department.

Mr. BOWELL. I will not attempt to defend the system now; but I am prepared to defend the system at a future time and prove by statistics that this is the only way in which the revenue can be protected. I have no objection to the strong words used by the hon. gentleman if he thinks they are appropriate.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think they are very appropriate.

Mr. BOWELL. I know this, that I can prove to any gentleman either in this House or out of it, who has had anything to do with customs affairs either in this country or any other country, that it is impossible to protect the revenue unless some such system is in operation. I wish to enter my disclaimer against the strong language used; I do not think the officers should be designated by language of that kind. The hon. gentleman has a right to attribute to them any motives he pleases; but I can say this to him and the House, that in no case—and I have investigated a great many—have I found that the charges which have been placed at their door by certain of the press and by certain merchants who have been severely punished for their irregularities—I will not use any stronger language—in their importations, have been sustained as against the officials.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I desire to ask the Minister of Customs what decision was arrived at, and what penalties were imposed in the case of the Montreal Cotton Company, which I brought before the House last Session?

Mr. BOWELL. I am not in a position to answer the hon. gentleman just now.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Minister should be in a position to do so. I brought the matter up last year and the hon. gentleman postponed answering it, saying the question was premature. I suppose the case has been adjudicated upon, and I want to know the result.

Mr. BOWELL. It has been adjudicated upon.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But on different lines from penalties imposed on others under like circumstances.

Mr. BOWELL. No; but if such is the case I will let the hon. gentleman know and give him the reason.

Collection of Revenues—Public Works. $190,025

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What arrangement has been made or is going to be carried out with respect to the slides and booms covered by this item. They are really connected with the forest lands of the Provinces of Quebec or Ontario, as the case may be. It would be advisable to get rid of them, and let both revenue and repairs go to the two Provinces chiefly concerned.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is a question to be studied. I am not in a position to say yes or no at the present time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I mention it, because I have always held that this matter really belongs to the different Provinces. We obtain revenue from them, but not sufficient to pay for staff and repairs.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Some of these works are on the large rivers, such as the Ottawa, St. Maurice, and Saguenay, and we claim the power to place works on those rivers. It would be better, I think as these works are not a very heavy burden on the Dominion, that we should keep them. At all events, this is a question that has not been raised before.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The total amount expended is $70,000; what is the revenue?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The revenue is collected by the Inland Revenue Department; but I know that the works on the Ottawa river and tributaries give a large interest on the money invested there—12 or 15 per cent. On the St. Maurice and Saguenay the works do not return as high a rate of interest. Altogether, I think we have less than 6 per cent. on the investment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do the receipts pay the expenses of the staff?

Mr. BOWELL.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And 6 per cent. beside?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am speaking of the Ottawa. There we have 12 or 15 per cent., but on the St. Maurice and Saguenay it is not so. The exact amount I cannot say now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to know, and I would like the hon. gentleman to consider it. There is another item here which I want to understand exactly what our position is in relation to. Here is the Esquimault Graving Dock, and so far as I understand that work is brand new.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, it is a work that was completed last year, or not quite.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see here an item of $7,500 for the staff, and an item of $5,225 under the head of repairs. Surely a work that was completed last year can hardly need repairs to the tune of $5,000 already.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There must be always repairs to those works, and I require a certain amount for that. That work is under our control since we made arrangements with British Columbia, and it certainly will be a paying work. It is open during the 12 months of the year, while other works of the same kind are not.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The staff connected with a graving dock must necessarily be very small, because there are only a few hands, and I cannot see how it would come to $9,000. Most of the people about the dock are paid by those using it, but the expenses of the staff of engineers and of a few men to open the gates ought to be a very small item.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman tell me if there is any entry at all for the receipts of that graving dock in our Public Accounts? Possibly no receipts may have been obtained up to the 30th of June, 1887.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It began after that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does the hon. gentleman compute the annual receipts at?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If I can judge by the graving dock at Lévis, which was only opened for a short season last year, and which brought $14,000 or $15,000 during that time, I am pretty sure that the graving dock at Esquimault will bring probably $30,000 or $40,000. This is only a guess and I do not like to be bound to it, because I cannot say definitely.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do the vessels of the British fleet which make use of it pay, or is it free to them in consideration of the subscription from the Imperial Government?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They are admitted free there, but they pay certain costs that are incurred by the department.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman can hardly take the receipts of the Lévis graving dock for the last six months as a fair estimate, because he will remember they had a steamer in there for repairs all winter, and that is a circumstance which might not occur again.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. At the graving dock in Quebec sometimes a vessel will be admitted there late in the season, and will remain all winter for repairs, coming out in the spring. In Esquimault it is quite a different thing, because there the dock is open all the year round.

Telegraph lines, North-West Territories $20,000
 " " British Columbia 6,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to the telegraphs in North West Territories and British Columbia, can the hon. gentleman tell us, generally, what are the receipts?—as I can understand those must be worked at a loss, but we have now been working them for four or five years; and how are the receipts coming in? Are they paying their way?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They are not. The telegraph lines in the North-West Territories are increasing, and the hon. gentleman will remember that during the war in 1885 they were damaged very much, and they had to be patched up. It was found difficult to obtain proper timber in that distant country, and we had to take in different kinds of timber which lasted only a very short period. We have now tried, in a portion of the line, to use iron posts as a trial, and I think, although they cost more, that they will last a great deal longer than the other, and that they will be a great saving in keeping them in repair. We have been obliged to renew all the poles between Battleford and Edmonton, and to change the route, as I explained last year. That is completed and we have a much better line. The poles are good and the line is not exposed as it was. When the line was put there years ago, the poles were put in a swamp in order to have the shortest route, but we found that the shortest route after all was not the most economic. We have extended the line northerly, and we can protect it better and have better ground and keep the lines in better order. We expect that that line will not pay so much until that country is thoroughly settled.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In this prairie country where you are not troubled with rock, would it not perhaps be worth considering, in view of the constant interruptions and the cost of getting timber, whether, in certain sections, at any rate, an underground telegraph service would not be better than a pole service, or is the difference in cost so great as to make it impossible?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think it would be most expensive. I spoke to Mr. Gisborne, the chief superintendent of telegraph lines, and he thought the cost would be very heavy. In the long run it might be better, and we might try a short line to see how it would work. I am not in a position now to say what would be the difference in price.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not wish to detain the hon. gentleman now, but I think it would be worth taking it into consideration. Of course I can understand that you cannot—if there was rock there you could not cut through it except at great cost, but, as the hon. gentleman knows, there are 1,500 or 1,600 miles where the trenching would be extremely easy. There would be obvious convenience if the cost is not too great to have the wires under ground.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We will consider it during recess.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In connection with all these lines, does the Government pay for their part of the work, or do they get it free?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government service is perfectly free.

Mr. DAVIES. With regard to the lines in British Columbia, do they not belong to the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, now, under the arrangement I made since.

Telegraph Signal Service..... $10,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Would the hon. gentleman state what that is?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This vote has to pay the salary and the travelling expenses of the superintendent of the telegraph signal service, the cost of stationery in his office and other necessaries, and to meet extraordinary expenses in connection with the service. We must have a small margin in case of an emergency.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Are you going to construct a line to Sable Island?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, that would require a special vote, and we could not see our way to asking for it this year.

Mr. MITCHELL. I understood the hon. Minister to promise me last year that he would ask a vote for a telegraph line from Newcastle to Tracadie. I thought perhaps he had included it in his vote.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am afraid it was one of those votes which disappeared after my estimates went to the Privy Council. They came out with $150,000 less than I asked. I put in my estimates everything that is asked from every portion of the Dominion, because I am bound to lay them before my colleagues, and the Privy Council decides what votes shall be put in the estimates.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then I will blame the Privy Council, and not you, for I know you carry out what you promise. But I cannot help feeling that we are neglected in the county of Northumberland, in not having that telegraph line put up. I hope my hon. friend will make a mental note of it for next year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. What is the distance?

Mr. MITCHELL. About 40 miles.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have taken a note of it.

Public Works—Agency, B. O..... $5,300

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the details of this?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The agent of the department was formerly the Hon. Mr. Trutch.

Mr. MITCHELL. You might have got a better one.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. He was a very good and active agent and did his duty without a word of complaint being made against him, but we do not expect to have his services in future. I had to organise the department. The officers number four. There is the resident engineer, Mr. Gamble, an accountant, a clerk, and a messenger; and there are expenses for stationery, fuel, advertising, travelling and contingencies.

Post Office expenses..... $2,987,620

Mr. MITCHELL. I put a question to the Minister the other day as to the course the Government were to pursue in regard to carrying the mails from Chatham to Fredericton along the Miramichi river. Fifty years ago they were carried in a one-horse chaise; to-day they are carried in the same way, although there is one railway the whole way and two part of the way. Perhaps I have been neglectful of my duty in not pressing the matter earlier; but when I drew it to the attention of the Minister the other day he stated that in two or three days he would determine on a policy. I hope he will communicate to the company that he intends to utilise the railway for the mail service along the route. The railway goes through almost all the villages and there is no reason why the antiquated system for carrying the mails with a horse should not be abandoned and the railways utilised.

Mr. McLELAN. This matter was brought to my notice a year ago; and on enquiry, I was given the information that in the preceding winter the railway had been closed for a time. In three or four cases the mails in the summer were put on the railways which had been newly opened, and in the winter they had to be sent by the old horse conveyance. I was told that the railway did not continue running in the winter of 1886-87.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is not so.

Mr. McLELAN. That was the information given to me, and for that reason I thought we should not be hasty in transferring the mails from the horse and sleigh conveyance until the railway was established. That, I believe, is now established. Then comes the question of cost. I think the carrying of the mails by railway will increase the cost over the old conveyance by over $3,000; but I have taken up the matter and will be able to make a proposition in a few days, I hope, to send the mails by rail.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to say this in vindication of the gentlemen who conduct the railway. It was closed for one week in the winter before last, as some other railways were, in consequence of snow storms. But for six weeks the mails had to be carried for a considerable distance on snowshoes. The mail service during the past winter has been performed in a most satisfactory manner, and the railway has not lost more time from snow, on the average, than a great many leading main lines throughout the country; and if there was an objection to it on that ground, the same objection applied to a great many other parts of Canada. Now, if the railway undertook to carry the mail, and if, unfortunately, for a day or two the railway should be snowed up, they are bound to carry the mail on snowshoes, if they cannot in any other way; and I trust my hon. friend will see that an arrangement is come to with the railway for the purpose of carrying the mails. The question of cost is not to be considered, provided the railway will carry it at the same rate as other railways do.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Part of the mails from Grand Falls to Edmundston are carried by coach, and they arrive at Edmundston twenty hours after the passengers by mail arrive. This is a great inconvenience to the people up the River St. John, and should be remedied.

Mr. McLELAN. The matter is under consideration.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the Postmaster General the report of his officer at Kingston touching the defalcation of the deputy postmaster. The Minister's explanation some time ago was not at all satisfactory, and I supposed he would be prepared on the Estimates to give full explanation. If he has not the report and the first communication made on this subject with him, I would ask him to hold over this item until he can obtain these papers later in the day.

Mr. McLELAN. I have not the papers here. I had them and kept them until a few days ago, when a message was sent to me saying that the papers were required by the inspector.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We will take concurrence on these as soon as we get through the main Estimates, and then the hon. gentleman can get the information he desires.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That will answer my purpose. What I want to get are the first communication made to the Minister and the report.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Has there been a late ruling changing the rate of postage on seeds mailed to the United States? A correspondent writes to me that a late ruling of the department required four times the amount of postage on packages of seed coming from Canada that was paid before.

Mr. McLELAN. That is wrong. Under our agreement with the United States, we charge precisely the same rate of postage upon all merchandise going from Canada to the United States as is charged from the United States to Canada. The Americans complained that previously Americans sent their seeds to Canada in bulk, and then had them mailed from Canada in packages to different points in the United States, thus saving postage, as our rates were cheaper than theirs.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is another matter to which I desire to call the attention of the hon. the Postmaster General. I have a communication from certain inhabitants of South Huron. The inhabitants of Bayfield, Varna and other points adjacent request me to bring to the notice of the Postmaster General the fact that there is now some intention, as they are advised, of changing the mail route in that section, so as to cause the mails to be distributed from the neighboring town of Clinton. I would call his attention to this, that a great deal of the communications of the people in that section must necessarily be with London and other points in that direction. If the point of distribution is changed to Clinton, I am informed that they will not be able to get an answer to their communications to London and other points in less than three days, whereas now they receive an answer in one day.

Mr. McLELAN. There have been numerous signed petitions for postal service on the line between Varna and Clinton, and the proposition was made to start from Bayfield, go by Varna, and then by way of Hobartstown to Clinton. Then representations were made, such as the hon. gentleman has now made, that communication was desired with London, and that Brucefield should be the point for that purpose. I have, therefore, suggested that the communication shall be made with Brucefield, the station to connect with London, as well as on this other route to Clinton. There is a large portion of that country from Bayfield to Varna that has had no postal communication.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then I understand that you are not going to deprive the inhabitants of Varna and Bayfield of their present advantages?

Mr. McLELAN. No; there will be communication with Brucefield.

Mr. BERGIN. I should like to ask whether any arrangements have been made for a daily postal service along the route of the Short Line through the counties of Stormont, Dundas, Glengarry and Vaudreuil?

Mr. McLELAN. I cannot say just now, but I think we are sending a daily bag to some points on that line.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I want to understand one point which is not clear to some of us on this side. Under the ruling of the Postmaster General, has one of our own seedsmen, when sending a package of his own seeds to the United States to pay the larger rate of postage, or does he come under the old rate?

Mr. McLELAN. He pays the larger rate?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). So the effect is that our own seedsmen have to pay the postage of four times the amount?

Mr. McLELAN. Our seedsmen sending their packages to the United States pay the larger rate, but when they distribute their seeds in Canada they pay the lower rate. That applies to all merchandise going to the United States in that way.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Are they in a worse position than the seedsmen of the United States sending their seeds in here?

Mr. McLELAN. No, it is just the same.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). Was this done by Order in Council?

Mr. McLELAN. No, it is an agreement between the Postmaster General of the United States and the Postmaster General here.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). Then it does not come within the application of our ordinary statute?

Mr. McLELAN. It is under the authority of the Act of Parliament.

Dominion Lands chargeable to Income.....$181,268 25

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see there is an increase of nearly $3,000 under the head of Superintendent of Mines. Who is the Superintendent of Mines, and what are the causes of the increase?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Pearce is the Superintendent of Mines, and he and the Commissioner form the Land Board. His duties are largely increased by the increasing explorations for mineral purposes in the extreme west. His principal duties are on the east side of the Rocky Mountains, in the mineral region.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would suggest one thing to the hon. the First Minister. I have made the suggestion, I think, pretty regularly every year for the last half dozen years, but it has received the usual fate of all suggestions coming from this side of the House. Nevertheless, I think it is not unworthy of consideration. The hon. gentleman knows right well that in other countries where there are great mineral deposits, the Crown, or the State, which is perhaps the more correct phrase, has done one of two things—it has either reserved absolutely under its own control a certain number of the more valuable mines, or it has reserved to itself, as has been done, I think, in Nova Scotia, a moderate royalty with the right of increase after a certain lapse of time. It is clear that there are mineral deposits of the most enormous value in the North-West, and I have long held the opinion that it is the duty of the State to reserve a certain proportion or percentage or a certain number of mines, whichever might be found most convenient, to be absolutely the property of the people, at a later day to be worked or rented for their benefit. I am inclined to think that in that region that might be done with great future benefit, not to ourselves perhaps, but to those that will come after us twenty or thirty years hence. I am not going to prolong the discussion, but the First Minister quite understands that such benefit might come from such reservations if they were judiciously made, and I think he has had sufficient time to consider the matter and to say whether he would entertain such a proposition.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As to the question of royalties, the hon. gentleman will, perhaps, remember that that system was tried with respect to the mineral region in the North-West, but it was found to be utterly unsuccessful from the fact that in the United States they had no such system, but that they sold coal lands, for instance, at so much an acre, and, I think, the same with regard to the other minerals. The subject has engaged the attention of the Deputy Minister of the Interior for some time, and I think he will be prepared, during the present summer, to bring the whole question under the consideration of the Government. I know, generally, in conversation with the late Minister, what his ideas were, but I do not think he had formulated any plan for consideration. His sudden decease prevented that. But the whole subject, of course, is now pressing in a greater degree from the recent information received of the wealth of our mineral resources in coal, and petroleum, as well as in the precious minerals. I think that great source of wealth should not be lightly thrown away. The coal land, I think, is sold at $10 an acre. I believe it is the opinion of the scientists of the Geological Survey that, except in favored regions where coal is very accessible, the fact that coal underlies agricultural lands greatly increases the value of the farms. At all events, the selling price of soft coal area is $10 an acre, and anthracite coal, $20.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Finance Minister knows that in the United States it has been found that very mischievous results have arisen from many private parties getting control of the enormously valuable mineral lands, and that if the United States had got to do the thing over again, in the older States, at any rate, there is no doubt reservations would be made in the public interest. There are questions looming up of very great importance in connection with our land system, as the hon. gentleman knows. They have taken a strong hold on the public mind, and they may come, within a moderate space of time, to take more hold, and no doubt while we have got a perfectly new country to take care of, it would be the part of common prudence, to make such reservations as that, the State might be able to put an end to a coal combine for instance, and other things of that kind, and likewise, which is equally important, to obtain hereafter a solid revenue from those lands.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I find that, by Order in Council, all the coal lands in the reserve west of the 4th meridian, are absolutely reserved. They are about Medicine Hat.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But had you not disposed of a good deal? I think Banff Springs are within that region west of the 4th meridian.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a reservation. The anthracite coal has been sold, up in the mountains, at $20 an acre.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understand you to say everything was reserved west of the 4th meridian.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Except what had been disposed of before.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman consider this question as important for the future. I would just say that if our Geological Survey, for which we spend $60,000 a year, is worth anything, it ought to be able to locate certain coal deposits and other things of that kind, which the State would do well to reserve, and which parties would be exceedingly glad to lease on royalty. That would be a practical piece of work done by the Survey, for which everybody would be thankful.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I see the hon. gentleman has dropped from the Estimates, the appropriation for the salary of Inspector of Colonisation Companies. Is that office abolished?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no vote asked for that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Was that Mr. Stephenson?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is it the intention to dispense with that officer?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I believe his usefulness is gone, because the colonisation matters have been wound up.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is any other appointment to be given to him?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not that I am aware of.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Inspector of Ranches, salary, $600—what on earth is this officer expected to do? You can hardly get a man to give his whole time for $600 a year.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The inspector of ranches is also collector of customs at Fort McLeod. His duties as collector are not very heavy, and he is employed as inspector of ranches as well.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What are his duties?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In the first place, he has to see that the number of cattle or sheep, for a given area, is on the ranch; he has got to see that it is not overstocked nor overcropped; nor is it allowed to lie idle. The hon. gentleman knows that by the lease that is given to these ranchmen, there must be a cow for so many acres within a certain period after the lease is signed, and he has got to see that that provision is carried out, and that the ranches are not merely sold as a matter of speculation.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Forestry Commissioner's salary, $2,000—where does this officer perform his duties, and who is he?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Morgan is the forestry commissioner; he has prepared one or two valuable reports. He was paid last year out of contingencies, pending a special parliamentary provision. His salary amounts to $2,000, and his travelling expenses to $1,200.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Where has he any functions to perform?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He has to inspect the whole range of slopes in British Columbia, I take it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In British Columbia, we have no lands except railway lands.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, but we have the whole of the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains. There is heavy timber there. One great object of this forestry commissioner is to lay out a tract of forest which will be protected, in order to protect the waters of the streams flowing from the Rocky Mountains eastward. The hon. gentleman knows that the great cause of the destruction of fertility is the clearing away of forests at the head of these streams. Both in Canada and the United States there is an earnest desire to protect the forests all along the eastern slope of the mountains.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). At the present time there is more necessity for protecting the public Treasury. The hon. gentleman proposes to protect the timber at heads of streams where there is not a settler within 100 miles, and not likely to be for many years to come. The protection must be very inefficient or very expensive, if protection were needed; but I fail to understand how it can be needed at the present time. Who is this Mr. Morgan? Is he Mr. Morgan of this city?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is he Mr. Morgan of Essex?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He was a party candidate aspiring to a seat in this House, and no doubt he has given the hon. gentleman a considerable amount of trouble in that constituency, and it is desirable to get him out of the way.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It must be a matter of regret that fires are running through the south-west range, but that timber, I understand, would be under the British Columbia Government. I do not think we have much timber on this side of the Rockies.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The whole of the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains is wooded almost to the top, except where snow lies. I cannot exaggerate the importance of protecting the timber from fire and other cause of waste. At present there is not a great rush of settlers on those slopes, but with the recent mineral discoveries there is sure to be a great rush of miners, who are especially careless and who will, I think, be the cause of forest fires. This is a modest attempt to obtain the services of one man to range over that country and endeavor to prevent timber being destroyed. He is also instructed to encourage the planting of forest trees in the western portion of the country, near the foot of the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In what way to encourage—what is he to do?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. By teaching people how to plant—and the hon. gentleman knows there is a good deal of planting going on over the prairies. Mr. Morgan thoroughly understands this subject, as will be seen from his pamphlet.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is there any encouragement under our North-West laws to promote forest planting by our farming population, as is the case in the United States?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We had a clause in the Dominion Lands Act in that direction. It was, however, used by people to obtain homesteads on the condition that they plant forest trees, but the conditions were not fulfilled. In the United States it was found that this provision was fraudulently used as a means of obtaining land from the Government. They repealed it in the United States, and we, having had the same experience, repealed a similar provision here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have never had the privilege of seeing Mr. Morgan's pamphlet.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A summary was published in the general report of the Interior Department, and the report was also published separately.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Forestry has become almost a science as practiced in the old world. Where did Mr. Morgan obtain his information? Did he pick it up promiscuously, or did he go through any training, because although no doubt running as a candidate at a general election is liable to give a man a pretty good knowledge of human nature, it does not necessarily afford him a knowledge of forest planting.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I believe Mr. Morgan was an extensive farmer, and it was his hobby to study a system of planting. Many years ago he was employed, in consequence of his knowledge in that direction, to visit the United States and investigate the system of forestry pursued there. Having been educated in that way, he has since been employed as a forest ranger.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). This being a new branch of Government work deserves very careful consideration, and the members are entitled to full information respecting it. No doubt Mr. Morgan's pamphlet was distributed among hon. gentlemen opposite. I observed the other day some of these hon. gentlemen sending away a book called "The History of Canada." I sent over to the department of Agriculture for some copies, but I failed to receive a reply, although hon. gentlemen opposite were sending them away by the cart load. I presume the forestry pamphlet has been appropriated in the same way. The idea of a forestry commissioner undertaking the planting of forests in the North-West is an enterprise of a very exceptional character, and it should be fully explained by the Government. The item should be allowed to stand, and hon. members should have an opportunity of considering the whole subject before they were committed to the principle.

Mr. McMULLEN. Were it not for the fact that the Government and hon. gentlemen on this side of the House are desirous of closing the business of the Session, I would consider it my duty to take pointed exception to this item. It must be distinctly understood for the future that the items will not be allowed to pass as they have been allowed to pass this Session, and for which the country will not thank the Opposition. I hope another Session, neither to meet the wishes of the Government nor the Governor General, will prevent items being fully criticised by the Opposition.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understood the Half-breed Commission was closed, and no further expenditure would be required?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The proceedings were nearly finished, and only one commissioner, Mr. Roger Goulet, has been retained. It will take him all summer to wind up these claims.

Mr. BAKER. Would it not be well to put the items for contingencies under this heading into one amount, as they practically belong to one department?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You cannot alter that.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Aikman is agent of the department, and he has a salary, and allowance for contingencies. The Crown timber agent has also an allowance for contingencies. Is not the Crown timber agent under the agent of the department? There can be only one representative of the department in the Province.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have not the power to change that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What Crown timber have we in British Columbia? Is it on the twenty-mile belt?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, on the twenty-mile belt. There will be 3,500,000 acres of land on each side of the Rocky Mountains, and within the Province of British Columbia, which the hon. gentleman will remember has been conveyed by British Columbia to the Government of Canada.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The north-east corner of British Columbia?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, the Peace River country.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to know if the Government have come to an understanding with the Legislature of British Columbia in relation to the extent of the holding of these lands? I understand that the Legislature of British Columbia contend that on the arrangement with the Government for building the Canadian Pacific Railway that only the fees on the lands were conveyed, but that British Columbia still has absolute proprietorship.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is the contention of British Columbia, but it is controverted by the Federal Government.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is not disposed of yet?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Extra Clerks at head office, Ottawa $28,000

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In regard to those extra clerks I find that the hon. gentleman took $30,000 last year and he asks for $28,000 this year. I think that no one ought to be retained as extra clerk whose services are required as permanent. They should be transferred to the permanent list if they are so required. It seems the height of absurdity to make an annual vote of $30,000 for this purpose.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are a number of extra clerks required from time to time, and it has not been thought well to place them on the permanent list because you cannot get rid of them. Under the present system you can get rid of them whenever you want to. Some are in the draftsman's room, and they are dispensed with when they are not wanted. It is much more economical to pay them for their services when you want them, than to put them on the permanent list.

To compensate D. C. Bliss for performing additional official duty during Mr. Benson's absence for three months on account of illness $130

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We might as well raise a discussion on this item as on any other. Are the departments going to lay down the rule that when some additional duty happens to be thrown on any gentleman by the accidental absence or illness of one of the clerks, that they will pay another gentleman extra for his extra services incurred in this way? The case of Mr. Baxter is different from this, as there was no additional expense. No doubt Mr. Benson received his salary during his illness. Are you going to lay down the principle that whenever an accident of that kind occurs, that the other clerks, or one or more of them, are to be compensated? This is not the rule that prevails in any business establishment, unless some very remarkable protracted illness occurs.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite right, but the law as it now stands makes this provision. The Government, after due consideration, have come to the same conclusion as the hon. gentleman, and it is provided by the Civil Service Amendment Act passed this Session that this practice shall be no longer maintained.

Payment to J. A. J. McKenna of arrears of salary as Minister's private secretary $236 67

Mr. MITCHELL. What Minister's private secretary is he?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Minister of the Interior has a secretary, and the same Minister is also Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, and he has a private secretary for that department as well.

Railways and canals—To pay H. A. Fissiault the difference between his salary as a first-class clerk and that of chief clerk from 1st July, 1884, to 30th June, 1888 $1,100

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It appears to me that it is a most objectionable practice to allow arrears to accumulate for a period of three or four years. There is simply no end to the claims that might be advanced by gentlemen whose merits are not sufficiently recognised. One of two things is clear, either that this application ought to have been made three or four years ago, or that it ought not to be made now. I think a very special explanation ought to be given why the Minister proposes to do such a thing.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I quite concur in what the hon. gentleman says. But an Order in Council was passed proposing to make this payment, and the Auditor General objected because it was not specifically provided for by name in the Estimates, and it is to meet that objection that the item is submitted here.

Mr. TROW. It certainly must be an unwise system to date back. If this man was worthy of the increase during the four years, he ought to have had it all along, instead of remaining four years without it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This officer was promoted by Order in Council of the 3rd of September, 1885, to the rank of chief clerk. I may say, from personal knowledge and years of experience, that this gentleman is a highly deserving officer, who has discharged his duties with great ability. Being a professional man, having technical qualifications, I think he is fully deserving of the promotion; and this vote is simply to carry out the Order in Council, and to meet the objection of the Auditor General.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But you had both 1886 and 1887 to rectify that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It has been neglected, that is all.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). It is a very vicious practice to allow a thing of this kind to occur, and I think we ought to have a definite understanding that nothing of the kind should occur again. If this man was entitled to the salary he ought to have received it when the Order in Council passed; if he was not entitled to it, then he ought not to get it now. The thing appears perfectly absurd.

Payments on account of Post Office Department.....$907 52

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that two different gentlemen are paid for performing Mr. Stewart's duty during his absence, and that he also receives an increase of salary. What was Mr. Stewart doing during his absence from Ottawa?

Mr. McLELAN. He went to London, Paris and Washington to examine the system of accounts there. I think he acquired very valuable information.

Mr. MITCHELL. Has he made any report on his observations?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes, he reported to me on his return, and I am carrying out his suggestions. I propose to make very great changes after the 1st of July, and it will take some time to carry them out. Mr. Stewart is now placed at the head of all accounts of the department, and the changes which are to be made will reduce very largely the work of the department and also effect a saving.

Mr. MITCHELL. Was it in consequence of any report he made that the commission on the sale of postage stamps was reduced to 1 per cent.?

Mr. McLELAN. No, it was in following the practice of other countries, both England and the United States, and it has effected a saving of from $20,000 to $25,000.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). When shall we have his report?

Mr. McLELAN. Such portions of it as are of a general character will be in next year's report. The transactions connected with both the savings banks branch and the money order branch are very large, amounting altogether to about $35,000,000 a year. The positions occupied by Mr. Everett and Mr. Matheson are very important, and I think it but right that they should receive these increases for the work they did in Mr. Stewart's absence.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As I understand, you do not add anything, but simply pay the salary to whomsoever did Mr. Stewart's work during his absence.

Mr. McLELAN. Yes. I may say that Mr. Stewart's salary has been increased, as he has been promoted to the charge of all the accounts of the department.

Mr. MITCHELL. But he drew the whole of his salary while he was away, did he not?

Mr. McLELAN. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What is this item for, translating English into German?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. McLELAN. There are a great many German letters in the department, which reach it through the dead letter office and otherwise.

At one o'clock, the committee rose, and resumed at 1.30.

Library of Parliament—J. Lafontaine, extra messenger ... $250

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not know anything about Mr. Lafontaine, and I do not rise to object to this vote, but we have here in connection with this House two old and obliging servants, Narcisse Turgeon and Mr. Hugg, the first of whom receives $900 and the other $480. I think we should give $100 additional to Narcisse and make the other $600. I would suggest that to the authorities, and I am sure that I may appeal to this House in regard to the faithful services and great efficiency of these two officers.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think we all agree with the hon. gentleman as to the value of the services of Mr. Turgeon, who is a very good officer, and I have no doubt the assistant is also. It is the intention of the Speaker to call the attention of the Committee on the Internal Economy of the House to the case of these two officers, with a view to forwarding their interest.

Mr. TROW. I believe Mr. Hugg has been in the service of the House for sixteen years, and he is certainly deserving of attention.

Colonial and Indian Exhibition $16,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the object of this vote?

Mr. CARLING. A Governor General's warrant was issued a year ago, and an expenditure of $50,000 was provided in the Estimates last year, but the vote lapsed; and we are asking for this $16,000 to pay return freights, and other claims against the department.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is there ever going to be an end to the votes for this piece of folly?

Mr. CARLING. I think the money voted last Session will more than pay the expenses, but it lapsed on the 30th of September, and we are asking for this to meet return freights, and so on.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is this the end of it?

Mr. CARLING. I think so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this a re-vote?

Mr. CARLING. I think so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then it should be so stated.

Gratuity to Mr. Charles Foy, late Immigration Agent at Belfast..... $1,000

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I would like to have some explanation in regard to this.

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Foy was an agent at Belfast. He held the position for a number of years. He was an excellent officer, and now that on account of his health he is unable to discharge the duties, and has been retired from the service, the Government feel justified in giving him a gratuity of $1,000.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). What salary did he receive?

Mr. CARLING. $1,000 a year, with travelling expenses.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Has his place as agent at Belfast been filled by anyone else?

Mr. CARLING. Yes, it was filled over a year ago by Mr. Merrick.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Who is this Mr. Merrick?

Mr. CARLING. He is a very highly respectable gentleman, who held a seat in the Local Legislature of Ontario.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I suppose that, as that seat was, as they called it, gerrymandered, and he lost his seat, the Government thought they should compensate him and so they are going to pay $1,000 gratuity to Mr. Foy because Mr. Foy felt his health was so bad that he made way for Mr. Merrick, who lost his seat and was therefore sent to Belfast as immigration agent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As I am very familiar with the circumstances, I may state that Mr. Foy unfortunately lost his reason, and I think my hon. friend who has just spoken will agree with me that under such circumstances it was impossible to continue him in the position of immigration agent at Belfast. The gentleman who has taken his place is well known to many members of this House; he is a very able man and well qualified to discharge the duties. I do not think any of the circumstances the hon. gentleman has referred to are such as to deprive him of filling the position he is well qualified to fill. There is no doubt a great deal of advantage in connection with these local agencies in having gentlemen appointed who are acquainted with Canada and are able to give information to persons in reference to everything connected with the country. Mr. Merrick is well known to be a man of considerable ability, and I am certain, from what I have seen of the discharge of his duties, that he is discharging them efficiently.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I said nothing as to Mr. Merrick's unfitness for the position. I think he is a very competent and a very suitable man. What I complained of was that, unless we had a report to show that Mr. Foy was not fitted to continue in his office, the Government had no right to set him aside.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have explained that. In fact, Mr. Foy is in an asylum, and there is no question as to his state of health.

Mr. McNEILL. I desire briefly to call attention to a matter which I think is of very vast importance to the farming community of Canada—I refer to the vast possibilities we have in regard to the butter trade with the mother country. We all know how valuable is the trade which has recently sprung up in cheese with the mother country. Great and valuable as that trade is, there seems to be little doubt that there is an opening for a greater trade in butter, that is, if we can judge from the comparative amounts of cheese and butter imported into England. While there is some twenty or twenty-five million dollars worth of cheese imported, there is some fifty or fifty-five million dollars worth of butter imported into England. The Government of Ontario and this Government have both done great service, lately, to the farming interests, by directing attention to this matter—the Ontario Government by encouraging the establishment of creameries, and the Agricultural Department of this Government by circulating a pamphlet in reference to the manufacture of butter, which has proved a most valuable document, and which has been read, I believe, almost with avidity by the farmers who have received it. One of the great advantages which we may expect to derive from this pamphlet is that it will attract the attention of the farmers not only to a better system of manufacturing butter privately, but also to the fact that it is impossible to secure a great natural trade in butter unless it is manufactured in a wholesale way. No matter how skilful private individuals may be in manufacturing butter, they cannot all manufacture it of one color and of one quality. When it is placed in the market of different colors, it is rated very low. Now the value of Danish creamery butter in the English market to-day is from 33 to 36 cents per pound, while the value of Canadian butter in the English market is 12 cents per pound; therefore you may see that as we manufacture in Ontario now some 32 million pounds of butter, the difference in price, if it were properly manufactured and placed upon the English market, would amount to the sum of six or seven million dollars to the Ontario farmers alone. I think it is scarcely possible to exaggerate the importance of this question. The reason that I wished particularly to call attention to the matter is this: That our specialists—

The CHAIRMAN. My attention has been called to the fact that the hon. gentleman's remarks are not relevant to the item.

Mr. McNEILL. If you rule they are not, I have nothing more to say; but I think it is a little unfortunate that this question should be stifled, which is of so much importance to the farmers.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think I understood the Minister of Agriculture to say that the salary of Mr. Merrick is to be $1,000 a year.

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice in the accounts of last year that Mr. Foy had $1,400 for travelling and other expenses. Will Mr. Merrick also have that?

Mr. CARLING. I suppose he will.

Mr. McMULLEN. That virtually makes $2,400.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I was not present a few minutes ago when these items for salaries for civil servants were carried. I wish to bring to the attention of the Government the case of Mr. Ternent, who is acting as librarian to the Supreme Court. Now, he is a very intelligent and very efficient officer, but he is paid simply as a messenger. The amount is altogether inadequate, considering the duty he performs. It seems to me the Government ought to recognise his position as librarian of the Supreme Court, and give a fair compensation for the services he performs. I think all who have attended that tribunal, are of the same opinion as I am, that he is not adequately compensated for the work he has to reform.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Before my hon. friend returned to his place it was stated that the question of the remuneration of all the civil servants in this department would come before the Commission of Internal Economy immediately after the Session. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman as to the merits of Mr. Ternent. I have known him for a great many years. He is a worthy man, and a fit man for his place.

Mr. WELDON (St John). I can bear testimony to the very efficient manner in which Mr. Ternent has done his duty.

Private Montgomery Smith, No. 5 Co., 26th
Battalion, pension from 26th January, 1872, to 9th July, 1885, inclusive, 4,914 days, at 25 cents $1,228 50

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is an extremely sad case. Sergeant Montgomery Smith served during the Fenian raid. In consequence of exposure he has become a complete wreck. He is paralysed and scarcely able to speak. He resides in Lucan, North Middlesex. I do not know a more deserving case.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How do you come to prize his sufferings at two different rates? For a portion of the time he gets 50 cents, and another portion of the time 30 cents.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, I presume his first attack was inflammatory rheumatism. They pay these people a certain sum of money for a certain time in the hope they will recover; but this man got worse and worse instead of better.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to ask in reference to an item already passed, to give Mr. Pelletier, chief clerk, back pay. I wish to ask what is the particular qualification that entitles him to that position?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. A clerkship was vacant, and it was filled by Mr. Pelletier, who was well qualified.

Mr. LAURIER. In place of whom?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Mr. Morgan.

Mr. MITCHELL. Had Mr. Pelletier been in the department before he was promoted?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No, Sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. He was taken from outside.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes, Sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. And shouldered into this, the first office in the department, or nearly the first, at a large salary, without any civil service examination or anything of that kind, I suppose?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No, Sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. No civil service examination?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No, Sir.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now, I must say that I think that is a system that ought to be put an end to. The only particular recommendation that Mr. Pelletier has got for the position, as I am told, is that he is very useful during election times. Is he the same man who distinguished himself on the hustings in Ottawa county?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No, Sir. Beauharnois.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is he the gentleman who, it was alleged in the Herald, nearly bit a man's finger off, or nose off?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Wrong again.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is another Pelletier?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes. There are many other Pelletiers. There are even Legislative Councillors in Quebec of that name; but he is not one.

Mr. MITCHELL. All I have to say about this case is this: If we are to have a Civil Service Act at all—which I do not believe in—which requires people to pass an examination, we ought to adhere to it. In this case it appears to me that we are violating the principles laid down in that Act. In any case where this has been done, there should be some reason given. The Civil Service Act is used by the Government to prevent a man entering the service when they wish to do so, or the reverse. The Government should consider the propriety of changing it so as to allow people to come in on their merits, not by favoritism as they do now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister should state when he has gone outside the service to find a chief clerk, what are the special grounds for the appointment of Pelletier. It is a practical censure on the officers of the department, that when a vacancy occurred the hon. gentleman was unable to find an officer who could fill it. The Minister, indeed, is bound to state to the House what special qualifications Pelletier had which he could not find in officers in his department. It injures the whole service to bring a man into the service in this way, because it deprives those who have served diligently of the ordinary incentive to good service, a reasonable promotion from time to time. I await the hon. gentleman's explanation.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Since 1882 I have kept the expenditure of the Department of Secretary of State at its narrowest limit, and the expenditure has scarcely been increased since that time. There was no officer at the time in the department who could fulfil the duties of chief clerk, except the man who has been turned away from that office, Mr. Morgan.
Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. MITCHELL. What is the matter with Mr. Morgan?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I am not here to discuss that now. When the proper time comes I shall do it. It will be found between now and the next Session that when I appointed Mr. Pelletier chief clerk, a position which he deserves, there was no other officer in the department whom I could appoint. It will also be found that economy has been practiced in the department, because I hope to be able to dispense with a clerk, so that the expense will not be increased. I could not replace that officer by any one else in my department, and the only officer whom I could appoint has been promoted from the position of a second-class clerk to a first-class, that is Mr. Coulson.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is this the same gentleman who ran against the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron)?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes, I said so a moment ago.

Mr. MITCHELL. That probably is some explanation.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman has not given the information which the hon. member for Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) asked. The hon. gentleman says this man is a very competent officer. That may be. There are hundreds of men who might be picked out outside, any one of whom would be an efficient and able officer; but the hon. gentleman has departed from the spirit and principle of the Civil Service Examination Act. The hon. gentleman admits that Mr. Pelletier did not pass the primary examination, and further he did not pass the promotion examination. The hon. gentleman admits that both these examinations have been passed over, and that this officer has been appointed in defiance of the Civil Service Act. The hon. gentleman is the last member on the Treasury benches who should have done this. He proposed the Civil Service Examination measure; he has told the House and the country it was a necessary measure, and after doing that and insisting on the House adopting the measure as one by which the Government could be governed and their authority limited, he has himself set the law at defiance and appointed a party without such person having passed any examination whatever.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If it is a sin to make an exception to the rule the sin has been committed, and I take the full responsibility of it. It is an exception to the rule, I admit; but as my department was the only one where there was not a legal adviser, I thought such a gentleman should be appointed. The Civil Service Act says that a barrister or a lawyer can be appointed without passing any examination either for qualification or promotion. I do not say I made this appointment under that clause; but as there was no legal adviser in the department, I thought I would take this opportunity of appointing a gentleman who could fill the office. As to the gentleman's general knowledge and literary qualifications, I can refer to my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Bergeron).

Mr. LAURIER. What has become of Mr. Morgan; is he still in the service?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. He is still in the service.

Mr. LAURIER. What position does he occupy?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. First class clerk, a rank below that he formerly occupied.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then he has been degraded.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes, he has gone down a grade.

Mr. MITCHELL. Has he replaced any one?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. He has filled a vacancy that was formerly occupied by Mr. Pulford.

Mr. AMYOT. I want to hear from the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Bergeron) as to what he knows of Mr. Pelletier.

Mr. BERGERON. I will tell the hon. gentleman anything he wants to know at some meeting on the hustings, because the Minister has said all that is necessary now.

Mr. MITCHELL. I may state to the hon. gentleman that I enquired of the Government if this Mr. Pelletier was the same gentleman who opposed the present distinguished member for Beauharnois, and I was informed that it was.

Mr. BERGERON. It is, and I may say to the hon. gentleman that I never asked for the appointment of that gentleman and never recommended him to that appointment.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then I may add this, that I said that explains the milk in the cocoanut.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Secretary of State mentioned just now that Mr. Morgan had filled Mr. Pulford's place. Is that the same Mr. Pulford who is down for an amount for extra services.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. It is.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why was Mr. Pulford's place vacated.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Does the hon. gentleman want me to make a full confession?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am as little disposed to select individuals for comment as any man can be, but we have a duty to perform, and we are obliged to ask the reasons why officers are removed from their posts, and why certain appropriations are inserted in the Estimates. I cannot pass this matter over; it has been made a matter of comment in the public press.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Two years ago Mr. Pulford was appointed a first-class clerk. Some irregularities in his conduct were brought to the notice of the head of the department. He was suspended from his appointment, but for the last two years his conduct in the department has been exemplary. His services in regard to the position to which he would have been promoted, and his services in the department generally, have been such that a large amount of money has been saved by the work he performed on the Franchise Act. He took it on himself, and as it were to make up for the deficiency in his conduct before. His services were not at all pertaining to his own office, and the certificate of the Auditor General recommends that he should be paid $200. I would not have done it myself had not the Auditor General approved of it.

Mr. LAURIER. What is Mr. Pulford's position now?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. He is a second-class clerk, but I hope with the reorganisation of the office he will be first-class clerk next year.

Mr. LAURIER. He was degraded, as I understand?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. He was not degraded, but there was a vacancy which he was to be promoted to, and he was not promoted.

Mr. LAURIER. He was punished then.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Yes, by not being appointed.

Mr. LAURIER. Now he is rewarded.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. He is paid for the work he has done and for which probably another officer would have to be appointed. I might have employed a clerk, who would cost, perhaps, $1,000, and he would not have done it so well. Mr. Pulford has done it well and faithfully, and retrieved the faults he committed before.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The appointment of Mr. Pulford is perfectly intelligible. The hon. gentleman says he was guilty of misconduct and that the Government punished him. Mr. Pulford's former conduct shows that he is eminently qualified for the discharge of the duties connected with the Franchise Act, and so the Government finds it necessary to appoint a man, who was guilty of misconduct, to this very important office. It is not every one who will undertake to travel the crooked road which is sometimes marked out for him by gentlemen on the Treasury benches. This gentleman was fully qualified for that by his past conduct, and he was appointed to the important duties. The hon. gentleman, finding that Mr. Pulford is guilty of improper conduct and deserving of punishment, finds him eminently qualified for the duties in connection with the voters' lists.

Further amount required for the Franchise Act (Governor General's warrant), including expenses of bailiffs and clerks caused by the holding of preliminary revisions for 1886 at more than one place in the electoral division—the Act having authorised the holding of the revision at one place only..... $20,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want some information with respect to what the Secretary of State proposes to do with regard to this? As I understand he proposes to do all the printing of all the innumerable voters' lists throughout the Dominion, in Ottawa. He proposes to substitute numerals for post office addresses by way of economising space and printing material. If the voters' lists are sent up here, I think great delay will occur, no matter how the printing bureau may be organised, and I think that the system of putting numerals for the regular address is not advisable, and that it will lead to immense confusion.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I am glad to receive any suggestion in the way of facilitating the work which I have undertaken for the printing of these voters' lists. I think that the system I have adopted, under the suggestion and with the advice of persons who knew this matter perfectly well, will prove satisfactory before the next general election. I will take the hon. gentleman's suggestion into consideration, and between now and next Session I think I will satisfy him. As to the vote of $20,000, it is only for half of the $40,000 we asked to pay for cost of revision; we spent only half of it. As far as the $3,000 is concerned, it is part of the $18,000, $15,000 of which will be voted for in the Supplementary Estimates. A calculation was made that it would cost at least $40,000, but I have the superintendent's word that he will do it for less than $23,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a question of public policy of great importance connected with those voters' lists. As matters now stand the voters' lists throughout Canada are all based on the assessment rolls of 1885, and from 1885 to the present time three years have elapsed. It is quite certain that a large percentage of the electorate of this Dominion who are entitled to vote are at this moment disfranchised, and cannot by any possibility record their votes. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen to say that this is a trifle. Suppose such a contingency should arise—and constitutionally at least the Minister of Finance nor no other Minister can deny it may arise at any time—that it becomes necessary to appeal to the people. Peradventure, although there is not so much sign of it as I should wish, this House or the majority of it might lose confidence in the First Minister or his colleagues. It would be a crying scandal that an appeal should be made to the people to obtain their decision on an important public question, and that 20 per cent, of the people who are entitled to vote should in consequence of the non-formation of those voters' lists be disfranchised. I desire to ask the Government two questions: first of all, are we to have a voters list for the Dominion of Canada within the space of 12 months, or is it the policy of the Government to continue delaying this matter? The next question I wish to ask is this: Should we not, as a mere matter of constitutional precaution, take measures that if by any chance an appeal to the people or a dissolution of Parliament should take place, that the Government should return to what they proposed to do, and if they cannot give us the voters' list of the Dominion electorate franchise, give us the last voters' lists in the various Provinces? It seems to me that, constitutionally speaking, we are in this position: If His Excellency should have to dissolve the House to-day, or at any time within the next twelve months, we would undoubtedly have to appeal to the people under circumstances by which one-fifth of the people would be disfranchised. That is unconstitutional in the highest degree, and no one knows it better than the First Minister. The voters' lists ought to be in such a position that if dissolution takes place the true voice of the people should be had, and the true voice of the people cannot be had under the voters' lists based on the assessment roll of 1885. There is a way to remedy that, and I desire to know if the Government do not choose to give us a revised voters' list within a short space of time, are they disposed to do the other thing and give us the last accredited provincial list?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In the first place I do not think there is any chance of there being a dissolution consequent upon the present Session. The Government has already pledged itself to have a voters' list for the year 1889. Should the consequence of the next Session of Parliament, in the spring of 1889, be that there is to be a dissolution and an appeal to the people, I take it that the dissolution must be postponed until the settlement of the electoral list of 1889. The next general election will be held under the new voters' list framed under the Act passed this Session.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not understand what necessity there is for an appropriation at all. Certainly the hon. gentleman does not propose to take the voters' list already prepared, and print that as a basis for the new voters' list. That certainly would be extremely inconvenient. If the hon. gentleman desires further legislation, and that is what he suggests, it seems to me the appropriation should wait until the legislation is had. The hon. gentleman will take no action until Parliament determines what the policy in the future shall be. Then why take an appropriation for a voters' list when we must have a meeting of Parliament before any action is taken? And I venture to say that 25 per cent. of the present list will not be in the new list. It certainly seems to me that if the present policy is continued, a new voters' list would require to be prepared before any printing was done at all.

Mr. LAURIER. This item of $26,300 is to complete the cost of the revision of 1886. Can the hon. gentleman tell me now what is the total cost of that revision?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. $126,000. I have already said perhaps four or five times in the House what the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is asking. It is true, the lists will not be ready before the month of January, 1889; and the correction of these lists, even if the corrections amount to 10 or 15 per cent., at least $25,000 will be saved to the Government—and that is a very low estimate—from what would have been the cost if the lists were printed at the different newspaper offices throughout the Dominion. The lists will be distributed during the next winter, and some of the revisers, if they are willing to do it without pay, will probably correct them so as to facilitate the work in 1889; and during next Session, I hope, if a vote of Parliament turns out the present Government and puts hon. gentlemen opposite in our places, we shall be prepared to have a revision made in probably a month or six weeks. This work is being done, not for the pleasure of satisfying the vanity of a Minister who has a new idea. I do it for the public and for my hon. friends opposite, if they are going to take our places next year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Pensions payable on account of North-West outbreak, to mounted police, Prince Albert
Volunteers Police Scouts $3,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not see the hon. Minister of Militia here. Some explanations are required with respect to the distribution of pensions, which he probably would be best prepared to give.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Minister of Militia is called away in consequence of the illness of his sister, and is unable to be here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am very sorry for the cause. I raised the question as to the mode in which certain pensions had been distributed. A certain gunner, Ryan, and a sergeant, Valiquette, died. The former left a wife and daughter, who received, the widow $68, and the daughter $14 a year. Sergeant Valiquette left neither wife nor children, but he had certain collateral relatives, I think a father, two brothers and three sisters, presumably all grown up, who received in all $307 a year. It appears to me that there is no justification for that mode of distributing pensions—that either in the one case too much has been paid, or in the other case too small a sum has been given. To give to the child of a deceased soldier $14 a year, and to the father, brothers and sisters of another each $51 a year, is a thing that I cannot concur in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I regret that my hon. colleague the Minister of Militia is not here to make a full explanation; but the question was up before, when I think he did make an explanation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No. He has sent down a memorandum mentioning that this was done in accordance with the order, which is practically no explanation.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Was not this done by the commission?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I presume so. The commission reports to the Minister, and the Minister reports to the Council. I think the First Minister, the Minister of Finance and all hon. gentlemen will see that to pay $300 to the collateral relatives of a deceased soldier, and to pay a much smaller sum to the wife and child of a deceased soldier is altogether out of proportion. It may be permitted, but it is apparently very unreasonable in its result.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Apparently very unreasonable.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I regret very much that the hon. the Minister of Militia is not here, because when this matter was brought up the other day, he promised to give us some papers in connection with it, to justify the conclusions at which the Government have arrived. He has handed in some papers which are not satisfactory. In the first place, in the order regarding militia regulations, these pensions, and this one in particular, would be under the head of "sisters." First, there are pensions to widows and then to sisters:

"The sister or sisters collectively of an officer or soldier killed in action or dying of wounds received in action, within twelve months after such wounds shall have been received, without leaving widow, legitimate child, or mother, and provided she or they be an orphan or orphans, without surviving brother, and mainly dependent for support upon the officer or soldier deceased, may, under special circumstances to be determined by the Minister of Militia and Defence, be granted an allowance equal to half the rate of widow's pensions."

Now, this case, to which the hon. gentleman has drawn the attention of the House, seems so exceptional in its character that it demands an explanation. The hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence was good enough to promise an explanation; and in fulfilment of that promise, he has handed us a memorandum without any signature to it. The explanation is that the pension was granted to the father and sisters and brothers, his collateral relations, who are not entitled under the militia regulations to it. The memorandum furnished by the hon. Minister reads:

"Gunner Ryan, who was killed while on service in the North-West Territories, in 1885, left a widow and a daughter. His pay was 50 cents per day or \$182.50 a year. A pension is given to his widow amounting to $\frac{2}{3}$ of his pay, \$68.44, and to his daughter $\frac{1}{3}$ or \$14.60." That would be all right.

"Sergeant Valiquette, of the 65th Battalion, was the main support of his family, composed of his aged parents, totally incapacitated, and two boys and three girls entirely unprovided for. The pensions were calculated as follows:—Valiquette's pay was 75 cents per diem or $273.75 per annum. According to the rates fixed by Order in Council, the pension of mother and children, in such circumstances, is one-half of the widow's pension, viz.: $51.33 in this case. Therefore, Valiquette's family are in receipt of six pensions of $51.33 each, which is the lowest figure granted by general orders on such occasions."

The point is they were not entitled to anything at all. They do not come under the rules laid down by the law. There is no provision in the law for brothers and sisters and fathers. There is only provision when the sister has no brother to support her.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The children were helpless.

Mr. JONES. That is not even stated. There are two brothers and three sisters. There is no report but simply this memorandum.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Did you not read in that, that the parents were entirely helpless, and that the children were incapable of supporting themselves.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The memorandum states that two boys and three girls were unprovided for. It does not say that they were unable to provide for themselves.

Mr. MILLS. The pension exceeds the pay.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The pay was $273, and the family now are getting a pension of $307. If they lost another member of their family, they would get a still larger pension. This is an utter violation of the law, whether out of political considerations or not remains to be seen; but there is nothing in this memorandum to show there were any particular circumstances in Valiquette's case to warrant granting this pension. The ages of the children are not even given. This is a gross violation of the statute.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I agree with one part of the hon. gentleman's statement, and that is that there is no use in our prolonging our sitting on this question. I am advised that Mr. Valiquette was the sole support of his family; that these helpless children were entirely dependent upon him. Gunner Ryan left some property, and his relations were not in the same dependent position. These two cases were enquired into by a board of officers who recommended the amounts.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Where is the report?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No doubt in the department, with the great mass of other reports.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I do not believe there is any report. I do not believe the Government can show one scrap of evidence in justification of their decision. The Minister of Militia and Defence promised to bring down all that he had, and all he has brought down is this bald statement, printed without any signature. Does anyone believe that if the Minister of Militia had any report to justify such an extraordinary departure from the militia regulations, he would have failed to bring it down?

Mr. O'BRIEN. A few days ago application was made on behalf of a person who had been in "C" company, and because the application did not exactly square with the strict technicality of the Act, the Minister refused to consider it. I will oppose any grant that in the slightest degree infringes the strict regulations, for if exceptions are not made in one case, they should not be made in others.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This matter is more important than it appears on the face. Just consider the case. Here the daughter of a soldier, who dies in action, receives $14 a year, and the sister of another soldier, who also died in action, or of disease contracted while on active service, receives $51. Why should there be such a difference?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There was a difference in pay.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There was a difference of 25 cents per day in the pay. One man received 50 cents and the other 75 cents per day. If you treated the sisters precisely as the daughters, it would allow a pension of $21. My point is that these things show clearly and distinctly that very serious irregularities have occurred in adjusting the pensions. You may be justified—I wait before deciding positively—in giving this very large pension to the relatives of the deceased Sergeant Valiquette, though I think it would require very strong proofs to justify it; but how on earth can you justify paying $14 to the daughter and $21 to the sister? Allowing for the difference in the pay, if the three Miss Valiquettes had received $21, that would have been only a fair proportion to the $14 paid to the daughter of Gunner Ryan.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The widow had a pension of $68.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course the widow is always entitled, under Her Majesty's regulations, which we follow, to a larger pension than a mother or a sister, even if the latter are wholly dependent. The pension to mother and children, according to circumstances, should be one-half the widow's pension; that is, according to the Imperial regulations, which we are supposed to follow. It is on that basis they seem to have granted it, but instead of granting the amount to them taken collectively, they have granted it to each of them individually. Whereas Sergeant Valiquette's pay amounted to $273 all told, the Government have granted to his family pensions amounting to $307. Unless Sergeant Valiquette was in receipt of a much better income than a non-commissioned officer ordinarily is, that is a very extraordinary pension to grant, and the reports ought to be laid on the Table showing under what circumstances and why the commission arrived at the conclusion to grant a pension of $307 a year for the term of their natural lives to the collateral relatives of a man who was only receiving $273. I do not think you will find in the annals of the British service any case in which the pensions assigned to the relatives of the deceased are greater than the pay of the deceased soldier. Certainly this is a very remarkable case.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the circumstances mentioned by the hon. gentleman require some investigation, and I will undertake that the matter shall be fully investigated. The unavoidable absence of the Minister of Militia prevents the information being given which I have no doubt he would have been able to give. In the meantime, I do not suppose the hon. gentleman desires to cut down the allowance to the Valiquette family, but I think there is, at all events, very good ground for reviewing the pension granted in the case of Gunner Ryan. I must say it is rather an anomaly that the pension granted to the relatives of a deceased soldier should exceed his pay when he was alive. I shall undertake to have that enquired into.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think there must be some mistake in this matter, because the rules and regulations under which these pensions are given make no provision for granting pensions to brothers in any event, but only to the widow, and to the sisters if they are unprovided for. I am sure, if the Government go into the matter, they will see that a mistake has been made.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is clear from the statements which have already been made that this is in violation of the law. It is utterly impossible that the collateral relatives of a deceased soldier can be entitled to a larger sum than his pay amounted to. But that is what has been done in this case. I find by the regulations that the provision is :

"The sister or sisters collectively of an officer or soldier killed in action or dying of wounds received in action within twelve months after such wounds shall have been received, without leaving widow, legitimate child, or mother, and provided she or they be an orphan or orphans, without surviving brother, and mainly dependent for support upon the officer or soldier deceased, may, under special circumstance, to be determined by the Minister of Militia and Defence, be granted an allowance equal to half the rate of widow's pension."

That is that the whole of the sisters taken collectively are to get this half rate and not each individually; but it seems that in this case each sister was allowed the half. My hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) said these parties would be entitled to about $21, if to anything; but that would be the amount to which they would be entitled collectively, and not each individually, and it is quite clear that there has been a violation of the law. In fact, the law has been altogether disregarded, and the Minister has acted altogether in regard to his own opinions of favoritism, it may be, instead of according to the provisions of the law.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will fully enquire into it.

Militia—To provide for the retirement of two deputy adjutants general, gratuity of two years pay each, at rate of $1,700 per annum..... $6,800

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Who are these deputy adjutants general?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Colonel Jackson and Colonel Harwood. They retire after a number of years' service, and their places are not to be filled.

Barracks in British Columbia..... $4,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course this will not be sufficient to build barracks. What is this sum for?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think they are putting up wooden huts similar to those used by the Mounted Police in many places in the North-West, which will be sufficient for a good many years. I suppose this amount is what is to be expended this year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this for the huts the hon. gentleman speaks of, or is it for the purchase of a site for future barracks? How many men is it expected to accommodate?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is for battery "C," in which I think there are 100 men.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I can answer for it that you will not get 100 men suitably accommodated for that sum.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I suppose that is so, but I know the Minister of Militia is proceeding in the most economical way.

Mr. MACKENZIE. How does this come under the Militia Department? The Board of Works ought to do this.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As a general rule, if they were important buildings, the Board of Works would attend to them, but these are to be put up pro tem., as it were, in wood, and it is thought that the officer in command, who is a very clever man, Major Holmes, will be able to look after it without an officer of the Public Works Department being detailed for the service.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There is a public works officer there now who is paid for this, so you will also be paying this one, and will have two officers. Where does the importance begin or end? At what amount is the importance of a public work to be estimated?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This sum will be expended for militia purposes. Perhaps my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works will have the opportunity of putting up the buildings.

Mr. MACKENZIE. You cannot pay this out of the Department of Militia.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I asked very few questions this Session, and I think I ought to get some satisfaction when I do ask.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You may put it under the head of militia. It is a vote for militia purposes, but the expenditure of the money according to law ought to be made by the Minister of Public Works. The Minister of Militia will have to hand over this vote to the Minister of Public Works for the purpose of expending it. There will be no difficulty about that. I have no desire to refuse to answer any question put by my hon. friend.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). A year ago there was an Imperial officer, Colonel O'Brien, sent to British Columbia to report upon the defences there, and I presume to make suggestions for the protection of that part. Are the Government in possession of that report? If so, are they prepared to inform the House what they propose to do?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Colonel O'Brien was sent out by the Imperial Government to report on the best means of defending the harbor of Esquimalt, and the graving dock. I happened to be there at the time, and went over the ground with Colonel O'Brien—he and the Admiral, and myself—I not being of much assistance in the enquiry; but Colonel O'Brien pointed out the various positions that he thought would require defence. His opinion was that the work should be of the most economical nature under the new system of attack and defence, that it should be principally earth works, without any stone work or other expensive work at all. He thought these earth works, if sufficiently armed, would be a complete defence to the harbor of Esquimalt. The arrangement is, as the hon. gentleman knows, that Canada shall put up these earth works, and that the armament, which will be the most expensive portion of it, will be furnished by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Has the Government obtained a copy of Colonel O'Brien's report?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think not, but I am not quite sure. There was to be a confidential report, as I understood. It may have been communicated to the Government here.

Intercolonial Railway, chargeable to Capital. $365,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The increased accommodation at St. John consists of inspection, $7.50; buildings, $912.93; land damages, $619.38; Wall street bridge, $75; grading, $354.86; materials, $8.70. There are outstanding accounts for the same service, $521.63.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In Moncton the platform should be covered over. People exchanging trains are exposed to storms.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I presume that will be done by this vote.

Mr JONES (Halifax). Pictou Town Branch, $128,000—I notice in the report of the Minister of Railways, at page 18, he says "In the spring of 1885 the construction of the Pictou Town Branch was commenced. Its total length is 14 miles, composed partly of existing railways, and partly of new railways." In the same report he gives the expenditure as $248,000 for the Pictou Town Branch. To-day we are asked to vote $128,000 for that branch, and as there was $34,000 in the original estimate, that would make $410,000 for this 14 miles, or about $40,000 a mile. It appears to me that is a very large amount to pay, and it requires some explanation.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The total expenditure for the Pictou Town Branch for 1885-86 was $12,000.65; 1886-87, $248,123.48; to which will be added this amount for the year ending 31st January, 1887, of $189,734, making a total expenditure up to 31st January, 1887, of $449,872.47. Of that appropriation there is available $101,148.89. The total for this year, therefore, will be $128,000.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). How much did you say was the revote?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. $189,000, of which $123,000 is contained in this estimate. The total expenditure was $449,000. Of the appropriation available there was $101,000, and $88,000 were expended in connection with the appropriation.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). How much does that make it per mile?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have not the statement of the mileage under my hand, but I will be able to give it to the hon. gentleman later on.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman will turn to page 18 he will see that the Minister gives the total length as 14 miles. Does not the hon. gentleman think that an enormous cost for 14 miles?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You must remember this railway runs into the town of Pictou, and along the wharves, and through the upper portion of the town.

Mr. LAURIER. I see an item of $71,000 for the St. Charles Branch. Is that for land expropriated?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The items are as follows: Inspection, $920; building, $1,828; labor, $1,692; land and damages, $3,443; painting, $245; steam pumps $3,792; rails and fastenings, $11,400; materials, $92; snow sheds, $12,500; snow fences, $19,100; total expenditure to 1st January, 1888, $55,042. Appropriation available $10,145, leaving an expenditure in excess of appropriation of $44,896. Estimated cost of miles in progress: pontoon, $4,900; lands for Levis station, $12,000; snow sheds, balance, $9,203; total $26,003, making a grand total of $71,000 odd.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think there should be a change of name, and that it should for the future be known as the Sir Charles Branch.

Mr. McMULLEN. When the appropriation for the Pictou Branch was passed, was it not understood that the town of Pictou would give the right of way?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Unfortunately I was not here at the time the work was undertaken, and I am not able to say what occurred in that connection.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman not think that $32,000 a mile is an excessively heavy rate for the Pictou Branch? I think when the estimate was brought down a quarter of a million was stated to be the probable outlay. It is now stated that the cost will be about $150,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman will compare the expenditure of the Pictou Branch with that on the St. Charles Branch—and I think the property is about equally valuable—the result will be found to be very favorable to the Pictou Branch.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The expenditure on the St. Charles Branch was altogether outrageous.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And the expenditure on the Pictou Branch is very heavy. The country for the 14 miles is not very heavy I believe.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is a very heavy bridge across a long sheet of water before you come into Pictou.

M. JONES (Halifax). Has the work been done by contract?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. gentleman give particulars in regard to snow-shedding, for which an item of $39,000 appears?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There are 1,200 feet of iron snow-shedding at St. Flavie. There are also stretches of wooden snow-shedding as follows: 2,640 feet, 8,976 feet, 425 feet—16,500 feet at different points along the line.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are these repairs, or are they new snow-sheds?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Those snow-sheds are, to a large extent, to replace snow-sheds built in 1878.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I call the attention of the committee to this fact, that the amount of $39,000 is expended for snow-sheds to replace, to a large extent, snow-sheds built ten years ago. That is an extraordinary charge to place to capital account. I do not think it would be done in regard to any railway except a government railway.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The substitution of iron for wooden snow-shedding is a very important change.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is $13,000 here.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. $13,000 is charged for the substitution by iron.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But there are a great many more thousand feet of wood this winter, and I think that item should go to income and not to capital.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid it would not make much difference.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That I regret is the trouble. In a sense it would not make much difference to a country, but we would know what the road is costing over and above its receipts. While you keep the capital account open, and that is what my hon. friend complains of, it is a matter of the extremest difficulty to see where we stand.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The snow sheds were put up under the administration of my hon. friend from York (Mr. Mackenzie). They lasted for ten years, and they have practically all disappeared together. This sum is required to replace an expenditure made ten years ago, and it would be hard to charge that against the revenue of any particular year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not know that.

Mr. McMULLEN. Why not do in the same way as you do with rolling stock. The hon. gentleman says that if a car or an engine is bought it is charged to capital account, I think you should deal with the snow sheds as you do with the rolling stock.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The ties have a life nearly as long as the snow sheds, and you do not charge them to capital account.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is quite true. There is no doubt that correctly speaking the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) and the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) are practically correct, but suppose any of the great bridges were to disappear from any cause we could not replace it out of revenue, and inasmuch as we have a large deficiency in the revenue account, it practically comes to the same thing. The general principle is right that it would more properly become a charge on the revenue.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What is the difference between the cost of iron and wooden snow sheds?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think it is 4 to 1, but it is undoubtedly cheaper to have the iron.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Has the hon. gentleman any experience from other railroads as regards the iron sheds, because if it is merely to be covered with sheet iron I doubt if it will last any longer in our climate?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am inclined to think that an arrangement is being made in regard to which is the cheapest and best.

Indian Town Branch.....$5,000

Mr. MITCHELL. With regard to this item I wish to ask the hon. gentleman to explain?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have explained that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope there is no ballast pit in that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, there is not.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I would ask if the appropriation last year for rolling stock has all been expended? I believe he is aware that the rolling stock is not sufficient for the road especially with regard to the coal traffic. I know that complaints have been made, and I hope he will not adhere to the gondola cars.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is an item in that vote that I want explained with regard to the Indian Town Branch. I presented several claims against the railway, and one especially from Mr. George Knight. As I see the general superintendent of railways, Mr. Schreiber, here, I hope the Minister will excuse me for asking an explanation on that point. The people of the Indian Town Branch, with some exceptions, gave the right of way for nothing. Mr. George Knight gave the right of way to the railway free. It was found when they constructed the railway that a spring on Mr. Knight's farm, where he was in the habit of watering his cattle in the winter, was taken from him. Mr. Knight had to drive his cattle in consequence of this to the river, and he lost one valuable cow, and is likely to lose in the course of years a great many more. I presented a claim from Mr. George Knight to the gentleman who has charge of the railways, and I have been unable to get any satisfactory explanation. I do not wish to protract or delay the business of the Session, but as Mr. Knight has lost a valuable adjunct to his farm, and as he gave the right of way to the railway free, I ask that the Government should settle this claim, instead of compelling Mr. Knight to go to the law courts for justice.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have no hesitation at all in saying to my hon. friend that I will ask the department to deal very fairly and liberally with this party under the circumstances he has mentioned, because I think he presents a very strong claim. While on my feet I may say that I have ascertained from the chief engineer that the bridge on the Pictou Town Branch is over a mile long, and that the water in some places is of a very considerable depth, so that the hon. gentleman will see that it is a very expensive work.

St. Lawrence River and Canals..... $16,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What caused this expenditure?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The balance of the appropriation for 1887-88 being only $2,000 on the 31st December, 1887, the chief engineer states that a further sum of $16,000 is required to cover the expenditure up to the 30th June next for deepening the channel of the Galops Rapids.

Murray Canal..... $30,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That work is in progress?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

St. Anne's Canal—to pay gratuity of two months' salary to G. H. Henshaw, H. G. Stanton, and Antoine Ranger..... $513 32

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Under what circumstances, when work is closed, are we expected to pay two months' gratuity?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The circumstances are these: These gentleman had been a long time in the public service. Mr. Henshaw had been employed since 1873, and the other two since 1880; and having discharged their duties with great fidelity, the Government thought it was only right, when their services were suddenly dispensed with, that they should receive this small provision.

Rideau canal—construction of a bridge at Brass Point..... $1,347 30

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this a new work?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, it is to pay a final estimate; the appropriation was not sufficient.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Were we bound to make this?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; it is a canal bridge.

Canals—Miscellaneous..... $24,516 46

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is this vote of $14,000 for the construction of a steam dredge and scows?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The appropriation available, from the 1st July, 1886, to the 30th September, 1887, is $15,000. Expenditure, $5,239; amount lapsed to the 1st October, 1887, $9,760; expenditure from the 1st October, 1887, to 31st January, 1888, $9,067.77; special warrants issued by Order in Council, the 31st December, 1887, $7,500; over expenditure, $1,567.77. Required to complete, $6,500, also special warrants, $7,500, making $14,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does $14,000 supply a new dredge and new scows?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE. If the Government have possession of the Lake St. Peter dredges, why not take one of them?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The work there is still going on. On its completion, the plant becomes the property of the Government, and will be available for service in any part of the Dominion, or may be sold if not required.

Mr. MACKENZIE. If the royal assent was given the Act passed last Session, the plant becomes the property of the Government at once.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. MACKENZIE. There are more dredges there now than they can work.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think not; but I will enquire into it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Why pay these land damages in connection with these canals now?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It is for overflow of lands along the Rideau Canal. The high water damaged the lands, and some claims are under adjudication.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is for compensation for flooded lands. The compensation is $1,077 and legal expenses.

Mr. MACKENZIE. This is like the springs on the Northumberland railway; it is perpetual.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). These lands must have been flooded every year for the past four years, and no doubt were bought at less than the ordinary value on that account.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No; the water has been kept up at a higher level the past few years than formerly, and bitter complaints have been made on that score. Deputations came down last year to urge the Government to dredge out the bed of the old River Cataragui. There is a greater surface of water there than formerly, the trees having been cut away around the drained lands, and consequently a much higher level has to be kept up in the spring to provide water for summer navigation.

Mr. MACKENZIE. To furnish water to the manufacturers in Gaaanoque.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No, they are not on that level.

Mr. CURRAN. Whilst on this item, I would ask the permission of the committee to bring up a matter which was before the House on Friday evening last concerning myself. On that evening an hon. gentleman undertook to read a couple of affidavits in connection with some canal laborers, in which, amongst other things, I was charged with having been the cause of the dismissal of these men. I will not read over the affidavits, because the whole thing has dwindled down from a tremendous agitation to the charge that I had not interfered to get these men back; but as the Government has been attacked, I desire to read the following two affidavits on the subject:—

"I, Etienne H. Parent, of the city of Montreal, Superintending Engineer of the Lachine Canal, do solemnly declare:

"That Michael Conway, of the city of Montreal, is superintendent of the Lachine Canal under my direction as engineer. Before the opening of the canal last spring, Mr. Conway consulted me about certain laborers who had been engaged on the canal during the previous season and explained the part they had taken in the election for a member of the House of Commons for Montreal Centre, a few months previously. I advised Mr. Conway to inform those who were seeking employment to get letters of recommendation from the sitting member, Mr. Curran, as I considered it in his patronage. I had no communication with Mr. Curran on this subject, nor with the Department of Railways and Canals, at Ottawa, nor with any member of the Government. I advised Mr. Conway, as above stated, because I considered it the proper course to pursue. The member for Montreal Centre, Mr. Curran, has no responsibility whatever for my action or that of the superintendent, Mr. Conway, in this connection, having never been spoken to by me on the subject in any way.

"And I make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true and by virtue of the Act respecting Extra-Judicial Oaths.

"WILLIAM WILSON,

"A Commissioner for taking affidavits for and in the Province of Quebec."

"I, Michael Conway, of the city of Montreal, Superintendent of the Lachine Canal, do solemnly declare:

"That I know James O'Rielly and Edward Tobin, formerly temporary employes on the Lachine Canal. I have taken communication of the solemn declaration signed by them and read in the House of Commons.

James O'Rielly says he is an Irish Catholic; that is true. He says he is married and has two children; that is true. His two children are both grown up men, and I believe good citizens and treat him well. 3rd. It is true he was employed on the canal during four seasons in the summer time. 4th. Although far from being a desirable man I did not find fault with him. 5th. He had no right to consider his position a permanent one, he was merely a temporary employe to be taken on in the spring of the year if I found he suited the work. 6th. Previous to the opening of the canal in the spring of the last year he distinctly admitted that he had been very abusive of Mr. Curran during the election, and that having said so much against him he would not go to get a letter of recommendation from him. 7th. The statement under this head made by O'Rielly is for the greater part untrue. I never said he was one of the best men, and had I said so it would not have been the fact as I knew he was a meddlesome man, causing trouble by having too much to say. I never told him about any communications with the authorities at Ottawa. No such communications ever took place. His statement that I said I had received instructions from Ottawa is false. The facts are these: O'Rielly never applied for work in the spring of last year. He never reported himself at all. I saw him some time before the first of May. I knew from general report and by his own admissions that he had been abusive towards Mr. Curran. I never had any communication either with Mr. Curran or the authorities at Ottawa about the subject, but I consulted, as was my duty, my superior officer, Mr. R. H. Parent, superintending engineer of the Lachine Canal, and was instructed by him to cause those who had been guilty of abusing the members to bring letters of recommendation from them before giving them employment. The instructions in our department are to the men to attend to their business and not interfere with politics. When polling day comes around the men are allowed to go and vote according to their convictions and are in no way interfered with. When I saw O'Rielly on the street, where he was working for the corporation of the city of Montreal, I simply told him that if he wished to come back to the canal when it opened on the first of May then next, that he would require to bring a letter of recommendation from Mr. Curran. His answer was that he had said too much against the man, and that he would not apply for any letter. When some time afterwards the canal was opened he never applied for work as I have already stated.

"With reference to the other men mentioned in O'Rielly's solemn declaration, I received letters of recommendation from Mr. Curran for Holden and Frawley. Egan I took on myself; he is a quiet, inoffensive man. These men have all been taken on again this spring. As regards Tobin, who made the other declaration, I have to say he was one of the worst men on the canal and he should have been dismissed long ago and would have been, had it not been for the urgent solicitation of his friends and on account of his family. In fact, at the request of Mr. Curran, I gave employment to one of his sons as telephone boy and as an assistant on one of the locks, where he remained for two years until, on my recommendation, he got a better situation. Owing to Tobin's drunkenness and insubordination, I had to change him three times and place him at different points. When I changed him the last time, I told him that would be his last chance on the works. When he came and applied for work last spring, I called him aside and said to him: Owing to the way in which you have misbehaved in the past and your insulting manner during the late election, I cannot employ you again unless you give proof of reformation. I said to him, the first thing you have to do is to go and take the pledge, that you will abstain from all intoxicating liquors, and the next is that you will go and get a letter of recommendation from Mr. Curran. He left immediately, cursing and swearing that he would do neither, and I have not seen him since. I would not have employed him in any case, even had he not acted as he did during the election, unless he took the pledge.

"I solemnly declare that Mr. Curran knew nothing of this matter until the newspapers took the question up, and when he came to Montreal, a few days afterwards, he sent for me and asked me for a full explanation of the above affair, which I gave him, as I now state it.

"Both O'Rielly and Tobin state in their declaration that 'neither Mr. Curran nor anyone else, as far as they are aware, has ever taken any steps to have them reinstated in their positions.'

"I declare that when I told Mr. Curran the circumstances, he said he would very much prefer that the men should be taken back without any letters from him, as he did not wish to have any trouble with canal laborers. I said that I could not maintain discipline on the canal if my orders were not carried out.

"And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true and by virtue of the Act respecting extra-judicial oaths.

"WILLIAM WILSON,

"A Commissioner for taking affidavits for and in the Province of Quebec."

I have nothing to add to this matter. The House has heard quite enough about it; and if I had anything to say I would wait until the hon. member for North York was in his place. When I have anything to say against an hon. member, I say it before his face.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is quite unfair to the hon. member for North York that the hon. member for Montreal did not present those affidavits when the hon. gentleman was here. The hon. member for North York has interested himself in behalf of the three poor Irishmen who were dismissed from employment in Montreal. He did not endeavor to gather information, but it was sent to him to be presented to this House. The hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Curran) tries to shield himself by presenting affidavits executed by employes of the Government in the city of Montreal. No doubt by his influence exercised over these employes he has secured these affidavits. Probably, if they were in an independent position, they would not have executed the affidavits, but, finding that they might be dismissed from the service by the influence of the hon. gentleman, he extracted those affidavits from these employes.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is irregular.

Mr. McMULLEN. In order to back up the statement which he has made, I think this was an unfair course to take if he intended to refute the statement made by men who are not in the employment of the Government. The affidavits which were previously read were those of men who were discharged, and it is peculiar that their discharge should have taken place just after the hon. gentleman was elected. It is that circumstance that casts a very suspicious cloud over all this matter, and it is to shield himself from the odium under which he rests with the Catholic people of this country that he has exercised an influence so as to get affidavits from these men over whom he holds the threat that, if they do not do what he wants them to do—

The CHAIRMAN. Order.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why should you call the hon. gentleman to order?

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman has no right to say that the hon. member used threats and made use of undue influence to obtain these affidavits in the absence of any proof, and that in the face of the disclaimer of the hon. gentleman to the contrary.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Yes, he has.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the Chairman is too premature in this matter.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. MITCHELL. I tell hon. gentlemen that they had better shut up, and keep quiet about their "order." I tell the Chairman of this committee that he has no right to call the hon. gentleman to order for what he was saying. Go on, Mr. McMullen.

Mr. McMULLEN. I say the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Curran) had the opportunity to use this influence when this matter was within the purview of this House, but I say he had no right to exercise it now, and, in presenting these affidavits to the House, we must conclude that there was influence brought to bear upon these men to get these affidavits. I appeal to the Minister of Finance to prevent the reading of these affidavits and so possibly the continuation of the discussion and the detention of the House. We have all agreed to rush matters through as far as we possibly can, and I must say that I regret that we did so consent. At all events I think this should not now be brought at this late period before the House, especially when the hon. gentleman who brought it before the House originally has left for his home, but the member for Montreal feels that the cloud which has been cast upon him is so dark and gloomy that he cannot refuse to take this opportunity to endeavor to clear himself.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not call the hon. gentleman to order for saying that the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Curran) had an opportunity to exercise that influence, but for having made the assertion, as I understood him, that he did use that influence and those threats, and that in the face of the declaration of the hon. member to the contrary.

Mr. MITCHELL. We are here at the close of a Session, and the regular Opposition, as well as the party I lead myself, have shown every disposition to promote the business of the House. I am sure no one can say anything to the contrary. I think our worthy Chairman would have shown more discretion and would have taken a course tending more to the progress of public business if he had not been so hypercritical in calling hon. gentlemen to order. We have a good deal of business to go through. We all desire to adjourn to-morrow, but, if we are to do that, we have to pursue a course, as I tell the Chairman, which will not only meet the views of the majority, but also the views of the minority.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I feel that there was some force in the statement of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) that I should have interposed in this matter, as I did to-day in the case of my hon. friend from Algoma (Mr. Dawson), when I appealed to him not to raise a question which would be a matter of controversy. Still, the circumstances of the present case were, I thought, very peculiar. It appears that, in the absence of the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) read certain affidavits which became public by being placed in the Herald, reflecting very strongly on the hon. member for Montreal Centre. Now the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) asks why the member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) did not produce these at that time. How could he? They are in answer to the affidavits of these former laborers on the Lachine Canal, and it was impossible for him to produce the answers to these statements until the parties who were to answer them had an opportunity of seeing them, consequently the hon. gentleman had no legitimate opportunity before this to put his answer on record. What has he done? I am quite sure that, if the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) knew these two gentlemen, Mr. Parent and Mr. Conway, as well as I know them—and I had an opportunity for years of knowing them, as they were in the service when I was Minister of Railways and Canals—he would know that either of them is quite incapable of making a statement that is not true, and therefore I felt, under the circumstances, that this was a peculiar case. If the hon. member had attempted to make a speech or to detain the House, except in order to give the answer which he had from the only men who had the knowledge requisite to give the information, I would have appealed to him not to raise any question likely to promote discussion; but, under the circumstances, I felt that he had the right to give his answer to the statements which had been made.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) states that he never speaks in the absence of the person he is attacking, but he has done it to-day, because he knows that the hon. gentleman who read those affidavits read them on the eve of his going away. I am willing to excuse the hon. gentleman for reading these affidavits, because this is the only opportunity he could have of replying, but I am sorry that the hon. gentleman who made the statement is not here to reply to him. Perhaps my hon. friend from Montreal did the same thing with these affidavits as he did in regard to the recantation which the Herald signed—perhaps he wrote them himself, and no doubt, if he did, he would do so very efficiently. As to the statement of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, I may say in regard to the statement of Mr. Conway—and I know nothing about the other to whom he has referred—that I sent my manager down to see Mr. Conway, and he entirely verified the statement in the Herald. I am content to confine it to the question whether he stated what was correct or not, because that is the ground on which he put it, but I believe that every word these men said was true, and that they were told that they could not get employment unless they applied to Mr. Curran. I believe that this statement was made to them, though whether it came from the Government or was made by Mr. Lesage as coming from the Government, I am not prepared to say. I believe the statement they made, and I wish my hon. friend from York (Mr. Mulock) was here to reply on this occasion.

Mr. CURRAN. Just one word in conclusion. In the first place the affidavits that were read the other night were dated the 9th May. I was in the House every day from the 9th until the 18th. On that evening I happened to be temporarily absent, and during my absence these other affidavits were read, and the hon. gentleman who read them immediately left the city, and I could have no other means of meeting the affidavits than the one I have adopted. Here are these affidavits now. If it is supposed that the superintendent of the Lachine Canal would make false statements, if it is supposed these men would make false statements, they are amenable to the law; it is open to the hon. gentleman to proceed against them. Now, the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) says that I wrote the article in the Herald apologising to myself for having published statements of this kind, and he only looked it over. As regards these affidavits of course the writers are responsible for them; as regards the article in the Herald, I dictated it, I dictated the terms, I dictated an apology, and the hon. gentleman swallowed it, and if he is ashamed of it now and wants to withdraw it, let him do so, and let him make the charge again in his newspaper against me, and I will charge myself with making him dance in the courts for it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Now, we are coming to a live issue on this matter. I stated, on a former occasion, that he offered to settle the matter, provided I would give a reasonable acknowledgment. The hon. gentleman was willing to take a reasonable apology. He said he would not even charge the costs if it had not been that his partner was a very poor man, and he could not afford the funds, and practically to lose the expenses; and I said, all right, I will pay the expenses. I gave an explanation the other night why it was that I settled this matter. I can tell the hon. gentleman the reason to-day: It is that I had not much confidence in the hon. member for Montreal Centre, and I did not have much confidence in the crowd that was behind him—if it came to a trial—if he wants to know the real reason. The hon. gentleman says that if I wish to repeat the statement, he is willing to risk a trial. Sir, the law is of such a character in the Province of Quebec that the truth is not a defence to a statement of that kind. That was one of the reasons I stated the other night. The hon. gentleman is very valiant. Let him take care; I will watch him. I will give him an opportunity if I ever find him doing any more of his tricks with the canal laborers; I will give him an opportunity to bring the matter to a test and I will take care that I have something strong to rely upon. The hon. member for Montreal Centre is under the control of the Government, and I don't want anything of that kind to rely upon in an action for libel before the courts of Quebec. That is the secret, as I explained the other night; that is the secret why I consented to an apology, when my lawyer—a Conservative, it is true—advised me to do so. I said I am willing to make any reasonable apology; if I have got to eat crow I am not afraid of the pie. The proposition was made that Mr. Curran should write the letter, and he wrote it himself.

Mr. CURRAN. Certainly, and I made you swallow it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Made me swallow it! John J. Curran make Peter Mitchell swallow anything! His poverty made me swallow it. He complained that his partner could not afford to lose the expenses.

Mr. CURRAN. That is not true.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is true. More than that, it was not out of consideration of swallowing the leek. I am always ready, when I find myself in a tight place, to get out of it the best way I can. I found myself there for two reasons: first, on account of the Quebec law preventing the truth being a defence to a statement in certain cases; next, because the character of the witnesses was such I could not rely upon them, when I knew that Mr. Curran was a friend of some leading influential officials on that canal, and of the manager of the canal who had control of those under him, and I knew mighty well what would be the fate of the Herald upon the matter. That is the reason I ate the leek, and I am not ashamed of it. You make me eat the leek! You are a trifle in the consideration; you didn't weigh; I do not value you at all, nor your masters behind you.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on, go on.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am in no hurry. The week is long, and I can stand here if hon. gentlemen desire to extend this business. I am in no hurry, not the slightest. My business will stand for a week any way; and if hon. gentlemen are going to allow their supporters behind them to assume a dictatorial tone, an arrogant tone, such as that hon. gentleman has no right to assume in this House, neither from his ability, nor his position, nor the confidence he enjoys in the community. He has no right to assume any such tone, certainly not towards Peter Mitchell and the Herald.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. What are hon. gentlemen laughing at? The hon. gentleman from Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick), what has he got to say about it? He is a coming Minister, I suppose, everybody says so. And the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) is enjoying himself. I don't say anything about you Peter (Mr. White).

Mr. HESSON. I am perfectly quiet, I have not even laughed at the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the hon. gentleman sit down, please. That is right; do as I tell you. All I want to say is this: I believe the statement I made was true. If I did eat the leek it was a matter of form, not a matter of principle but to save my pocket; that is why I did it. And I did so because I could not rely upon the testimony that I had to depend upon; and I believe now that the dicta went forth from this Government telling the men on the canal that not one of them would be employed unless he got employment through Mr. Curran. I found the same thing in my own county when, at the last general election, they put on a hundred hands shovelling snow, and the overseers were told: You must not employ a man who has not got a vote, and you must not employ a man who does not bring a certificate from Mr. Adams that you are sound in your voting. That is the way they did it, and that is the way it was done on the Lachine Canal, notwithstanding what has been said about the matter. Why was the hon. gentleman absent the other night? Did he keep out of the way because he knew the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) was going to bring in these affidavits? He was in the city, he was in the House in the afternoon. He kept out of the way while the hon. member for York was here. I suppose he knew he was going home, and he thought after he got away he could get these affidavits and bring them in. Sir, the supporters sitting behind the hon. gentleman had just better be a little prudent if they want to get through to-morrow.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I want to say one word with respect to my absent friend from North York (Mr. Mulock). I do not suppose the hon. member for Montreal

Centre entertains the idea that the hon. member for North York was afraid to bring them up in his presence, although some of his remarks might seem to bear that construction. Now, I happen to know, if the hon. gentleman does not, that my hon. friend from North York, owing to a misfortune in his family, was obliged to be absent during the greater part of the time preceding the 18th; and I saw myself the hon. member for Montreal Centre in the House on the morning of Friday, as I think my hon. friend for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) did.

Mr. CURRAN. In the afternoon, too.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So there was nobody to blame but the hon. member himself if he chose to be absent from the House when the matter was brought up by the hon. member for North York, who had to leave that night. My hon. friend from North York was certainly in his right in bringing up the matter when he did, nor can the hon. member for Montreal Centre impute to him any design of shunning an encounter.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The affidavits produced by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) show conclusively that a number of persons were dismissed from the canal because they chose to exercise their franchise according to their consciences. In looking over the affidavits that were produced to-day they seemed to be open to great suspicion. The Hansard of Friday contained the affidavits and it was issued late on Saturday. How could they have got the Hansard and known what the affidavits contained if they had not taken them and sent them that night? How did they get the affidavit sent in by the member for North York (Mr. Mulock) and have affidavits here from them to-day? It looks suspicious. In effect, we have two affidavits against one affidavit, because they voted in accordance with their consciences. I heard the member for Montreal (Mr. Curran) complain in the days of the Mackenzie Administration that the Catholics were only made sweepers in this country, and here are sweepers who, because they voted in accordance with their conscience, were dismissed on the first opportunity. This is a piece of petty malignity unworthy of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope the member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) will show more discretion and sense in the future, and not attack the Herald which has always treated him fairly.

Mr. HESSON. Let the hon. gentleman take back what he said in regard to the member for North Perth.

Mr. MITCHELL. I meant the member for South Perth; I apologise.

Intercolonial Railway—Capital..... $305,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I desire to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to the working expenses of the Intercolonial Railway for the past year. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the report of the Railway Department he will find there has been an increase of expenditure for locomotive power of $68,000; car expenses, $73,729; maintenance of way and works, $176,950; station expenses, $18,314; general charges, $378—making a total increase of $337,395. That seems to be a very large amount. It is fair to admit that there has been some increase in the number of tons of freight carried over the road, but it must be well known to any one familiar with the working of the road that the working expenses are quite out of proportion to the amount of the traffic. If this is going to continue there is very little advantage in having increased traffic because it is attended by largely increased expenses. I notice by the report at page 19 the following: "The coal traffic between Nova Scotia and the Upper Provinces has increased as seen by the following comparative statement:" and then there is a statement given, showing that, in 1870, the amount of coal carried was 10,000 tons as compared with 175,000 tons in 1886. That would be a gratifying feature of the working of the road I am prepared to admit, if it were not for the remark that the rate at which coal is carried is exceedingly low and the cars are hauled back empty a distance of 600 miles, so that this business causes increased expenses without furnishing an increase of revenue. Last year when I brought this matter under the notice of the Minister, he admitted that coal was carried over the Intercolonial Railway at an actual loss. There are other coal interests in Nova Scotia which are interested in this question, and I have often been spoken to by gentlemen interested who very justly complain of the favoritism shown by the Government in this matter. They say they are contributors to a certain extent for whatever loss is incurred by the carriage of the coal, and that such loss falls upon the public generally. They further say, that were it not for the action of the Government, they would be prepared to have large depots for coal along the line, in order to take advantage of the scarcity which usually arises during the cold season when navigation is closed; but they say it is useless to go to any expense of this kind, because the moment coal reaches a point above what is merely a paying rate, then the Government step in and show their disposition towards this favored company by carrying their products over the Intercolonial Railway at a losing rate to compete with us and prevent us from obtaining what, under other circumstances, we would obtain, a fair advance for our precaution and foresightedness in having stocks accumulated at Montreal and Quebec, or other large consuming points. I do not think the House would be prepared to sanction in any part of the country an expenditure of that kind. The increase of the working expenses has been altogether out of proportion to the increase of traffic, and if the increase in expenditure has to continue in the same ratio with the increase of traffic last year, the more traffic the road obtains the worse off we shall be, especially in regard to coal, which I suppose is the main factor. It is time we put a stop to this business. The Government for the benefit of a company in the hon. gentleman's own county should not make a discrimination in favor of that company. I have no feeling against the Spring Hill Company, and I desire to see them prosper and make money and develop their industry in every proper and legitimate way; but, as a representative in this House, I cannot permit to pass without protest these statements in the report of the Railway Department every year which show that the department with which the hon. gentleman has so much influence has carried the product of that company's mines to market at a loss to the Dominion. The hon. gentleman admits that three-quarters of a cent per ton per mile is the lowest rate at which coal can be carried in the United States to pay working expenses, and yet coal is carried from Spring Hill to Montreal at three-tenths of a cent per ton per mile. It is high time this business was stopped, because it causes great dissatisfaction, and justly so, and we hear complaints from other parties having similar interests in the Dominion. I should like the hon. gentleman to explain, if he can, the increase in the working expenses on the Intercolonial Railway. I regret that the Minister of Railways is not in his place, because he naturally would be more familiar with the working of the road, but the enormous increase of $337,000 demands explanation.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid it is impossible at this late period of the Session to enter into an elaborate statement of the traffic and working expenses of the Intercolonial Railway. The question of the general policy has been settled before, and we quite admit that it would be very desirable, if we could do so, to make the accounts balance. But the hon. gentleman is somewhat unreasonable in complaining that the rolling stock is inadequate and that there are not sufficient coal cars, and also complain of the appropriation asked for the purpose of furnishing that rolling stock which is required. The hon. gentleman may be quite sure that the Government will not ask any appropriation for rolling stock for the Intercolonial Railway not demanded by increased business. I quite admit that the question raised is an important one, namely, whether business should be done that is not of a profitable nature. I have endeavored to point out the great importance of the inter-provincial trade, and that when we have a Government railway we have to adopt a system of rates that we cannot expect to obtain from a private company. The hon. gentleman complains that the coal is carried on the Intercolonial Railway from the Spring Hill mines more largely than from any other company. The reason of this large volume of traffic on the Intercolonial Railway, from the Spring Hill mines is because they are nearer to Montreal and the west than any of the other mines.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Naturally, yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, naturally, there would be a large volume of traffic from that cause. I imagine that in another year the volume of coal carried on the Intercolonial Railway will be greatly diminished, because of the construction of the Short Line Railway to Halifax and St. John, and the construction of the road from Spring Hill mines to the harbor of Pugwash which will give communication by water, as cheap as the transit over the Intercolonial Railway is now, and carried at a loss, as I admit it is, it will be carried much cheaper by waterway. I am afraid, however, it is too late to take up any longer time in the discussion of this question, which has been discussed over and over again on former occasions.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman says I am apparently inconsistent, because while arguing for an increase of rolling stock to accommodate the coal companies I am now complaining that this stock is being used for the carriage of coal to Montreal. The complaint of the other companies is that the general traffic of the Pictou mines, and along the line elsewhere is being neglected, and the stock is being used to carry the product of the Spring Hill mines to Montreal and Quebec at a loss to the Government, whereas if it were placed at the disposal of the Pictou mines for traffic in Nova Scotia, it would be profitable. The complaint is that those cars which are required for the development of the Pictou mines are given to the Spring Hill mines to carry their coal to Montreal and elsewhere.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is a question of some importance to the Maritime Provinces, and I am rather inclined to take the view of the Minister of Finance in this matter and not to object because he carries coal from the Spring Hill mines at a loss. It cannot be carried at all if it is not carried at a loss, and if we are to make a practical union of this Confederation, having built an Intercolonial Railway at an expense of $25,000,000 for the purpose of connecting the Maritime Provinces with the other portions of the Dominion, I am prepared to justify the Government in doing what is reasonable to develop the resources of that country. While this may be a loss to the country, it was the contract that was entered into at Confederation, and the Intercolonial Railway is the connecting link which binds the Maritime Provinces to old Canada and the western portion of the Dominion. The Government could no more sell that railway as they proposed to sell it, than they could fly, and pretend at the same time to hold the Maritime Provinces in the Confederation. The same principle that governs the carriage of the coal from Spring Hill, governs the carriage of the stone from Newcastle, and if we can develop any of those industries in the eastern portion of the Dominion—a portion of the Dominion which has sacrificed so much in the interests of Confederation—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. I say they are justified in carrying the natural products of those Provinces under special circumstances.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, I am prepared to justify that. The complaints of the other coal companies are that they are not so favorably situated as to their geographical situation as the Spring Hill mines are. I have no interest in the Spring Hill mines, and I never had, but I believe it is in the interest of the whole country that those mines should be developed, even if we had to develop them at some sacrifice to the other portions of the Dominion. Under those circumstances I find no fault with the Government carrying the coal from Spring Hill; always assuming they carry it at the best rate they can get. It is just as well those cars should carry coal as come back empty, even though they carry it at a loss. Take the case of that magnificent stone quarry at Newcastle, a monument of which is erected out here in front of these parliament buildings. When I am forgotten and have passed away, that stone will be pointed to, as coming from the county that Peter Mitchell once represented. Let me say to the Minister of Public Works, who is paying no attention to me—let me again say to the Minister of Public Works, who, for the third time I repeat, is paying no attention to me whatever—

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Very well.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let me say that I admire the course pursued by the hon. gentleman. When he found the best stone that would commend itself to the artistic taste of the artistical people of this Dominion, he at once adopted the principle of getting that stone even though he carried it at a loss. It is desirable to have that stone there as a monument of what Canada can do, instead of going to Ohio for stone as we did for this building when we can get the finest stone at home.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. the Minister of Finance said he would give us information.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. On a former occasion I gave the result of the increased traffic on the Intercolonial Railway, and I was asked what the earnings were. I have since obtained the information. In 1876-77 the earnings were $1,154,445.33; in 1886-87, ten years afterwards, they were $2,596,009.83, showing that the earnings have kept pace with the increased traffic. The loss in the operation of the road in 1876-77 was over half a million; the loss during the last year was under a quarter of a million.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Yes, but the expenditure in 1876-77 embraced $200,000 for new rails, as the hon. gentleman knows.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The fact must not be lost sight of that $10,000,000 of additional capital have been sunk in the road.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend from East York is not correct in saying that the expenditure in 1876-77 embraced the rails.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Yes, I am quite correct.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). $800,000, spread over three years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If you deduct that, you will still have a much smaller balance last year than in previous years.

Mr. MACKENZIE. But how much have you charged to capital during those years?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have followed my hon. friend's example as closely as I could, because I thought his example was highly commendable, that is, to charge all new rolling stock required for increased business to capital, and to charge to revenue that which was necessary to keep the rolling stock in repair. As the hon. gentleman's rolling stock was all new and ours was old, the burden has been much greater on the Government now than it was in the inception of the road, because a much greater outlay is required to keep it in repair. I did not bring this question up, but I thought it well to state that we have had a most gratifying increase in the traffic during the ten years, and in the revenue received from that traffic, and that we are able to balance the accounts more nearly, even in our worst year, than we were in the inception of the road. It is very natural that that should be the case, because every year additional industries spring up along the railway, and furnish increased business to it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is very gratifying, of course, to find that the increase has been gradual and natural; that was only to be expected from a new road. But I am under the impression that if the hon. gentleman had followed the same course as his predecessors, and had charged to working expenses what actually belonged to working expenses, we should have seen a very different result and a very much smaller amount standing charged against capital today. If I am spared to be in this House next year, I intend to move for a special committee to examine into the expenditure on capital account on the Intercolonial Railway, because notwithstanding all that has been said on this subject by the Government, I am under a very strong conviction—so strong that it will take a great deal to persuade me to the contrary—that large sums have been purposely and deliberately charged from year to year to capital account, which ought to have been charged to ordinary expenditure. I stated in the House at an early part of the Session that I was informed by one gentleman, an ardent friend and supporter of the Government living in Halifax, who is constantly complaining of the want of accommodation for the transport of coal, that he was aware of a certain number of coal cars having been burned up at Pictou or Stellarton, which could have been repaired at an expenditure of $60 or $70 each, because they would have had to be charged to working expenses, and that they were replaced by new cars costing $200 each, which were charged to capital account; and I will give the name of my informant to the hon. Minister of Finance. Therefore, I say it is utterly impossible that the large amount which has been charged to capital account since the present Government came into power could be properly classed under that head. There is another matter to which I would refer, that is, the very general feeling of discontent at the chief engineer or manager of that road being at Ottawa. The impression generally prevailing is that the management should be at Moncton. When anyone has a transaction connected with the Intercolonial Railway a great deal of red tape and a great loss of time are necessary before any business can be transacted or any information received, as it frequently happens that when one man is away, his deputy has to await his return. I know that very important questions of business relating to the Intercolonial Railway have been hanging over week after week; and I am satisfied that it would be very much to the interest of the railway if the management were transferred to Moncton. The hon. gentleman referred to the opening of the Short Line Railway. I am glad to hear that it is going to be open; but I always thought it very extraordinary that the Government should have subsidised a railway to form a rival line to the Intercolonial. If that road is going to shorten the distance as much as he says, the annual loss on the Intercolonial will be very much larger than it has been hitherto, because the working expenses cannot, probably, be very largely decreased while the traffic will be very largely decreased. Had that Short Line Railway been built by private enterprise, we could not, of course, raise any question; but I always thought it was a mistaken policy on the part of the Government to build up a rival line to destroy the interest this country has in the Intercolonial Railway. I may be mistaken, but I fear very much that when that line is in operation a few months hence, the loss on the Intercolonial Railway will be double what it has been in the past.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I wish to correct the misapprehension which I fell into when discussing the question of snow sheds. I assumed, from having no information at my hand, that they were to replace snow sheds which had been built ten years ago, but I find that I was mistaken. The snow sheds now required are new, in addition to what existed before, on the St. Charles Branch, and other portions of the line, where great difficulties were experienced for the want of additional snow sheds. I take this opportunity to explain this item, because all renewals certainly ought to fall on revenue, and I thought this had been treated exceptionally. The chief engineer informs me I was wrong, that the item for snow-shedding is for new and additional sheds, and that the keeping in repair of the old sheds is charged to revenue.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am glad to hear that because it will save us a vote on concurrence. I will take this opportunity to say a word with reference to the expenditure on this railway. The expenditure in the time of my hon. friend beside me arose largely from the alteration in grades or the replacement of iron rails by steel or both; at any rate, it was expenses which might reasonably have been placed to capital. But there are two other important questions. The present charge for interest on the Intercolonial Railway is fully $400,000 greater than it was in my hon. friend's time. The absolute cost to the people is now $2,250,000 as against $1,800,000 then for interest; and the hon. gentleman knows that no possible test of comparison can be made between a perfectly new railway, as that was in great part, only just open to traffic, and one which has been in operation for years.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Before this item is passed, I wish to say a word in reference to the management of the Intercolonial Railway, and I desire to do so because I see the chief engineer present, and wish him to take a note of what I say. You know, Sir, that the rebates on flour from Halifax and St. John are from 2½ cents to 10 cents a barrel, according to the amount imported. Well, there are many thousands of barrels imported by Prince Edward Island from Boston, and I would point out to the hon. the Minister that if the system of granting rebates was extended to the flour imported by Prince Edward Island, most of it would go over the Intercolonial Railway. We all desire to see the Intercolonial Railway made as paying an investment as possible, and if we can, by applying the system that is in vogue from Halifax and St. John to flour going to Prince Edward Island, the greater portion of that would go over the Intercolonial Railway. I know myself that in Boston this year, on the 1st May, there were at least 50,000 barrels of Canadian flour there for transportation to Prince Edward Island, and if a similar reduction were made to that made on flour from Halifax, it would all have gone over the Intercolonial Railway. I trust that the Government will take this matter up. If they can carry flour to Halifax for 55 cents a barrel, they ought to carry it to Pictou Landing at the same rate.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say a word with regard to this matter, and I wish also to answer a question asked by the hon. member for South Oxford. I would draw his attention to the condition of the canal account, which bears upon the point he was discussing. The hon. gentleman knows of the enormous capital expended by this country in connection with the canal system, and I draw his attention to the fact that the expense of maintaining the canal system exceeds the receipts this year by practically, $192,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are the receipts?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They are $556,646 from all sources, and the expenditure for expenses and repairs are $548,567, nearly $200,000 deficiency, which relatively is much greater than the average deficiency on the Intercolonial Railway; and yet we pay all the interest on the whole of this canal expenditure just the same as we pay the interest on the railway expenditure.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am afraid the hon. gentleman has underestimated the expenses. We voted $508,000 for this year; we voted $503,000 for the future years, and we have besides, under the head of railways and canals chargeable to income, about $220,000 more, so that the loss is not merely $200,000 but nearer $400,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You will find the statement on page 23 of Public Accounts, and that is for the year 1886-87. The loss in that year is $191,920 95.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It would appear that, in all human probability, the loss for 1888-89 will be $400,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid it will be largely increased.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What rate is charged by the Intercolonial Railway on stone from Newcastle?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. One-fifth of 1 cent per ton per mile, or about 12 cents per cubic foot.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman knows that great complaints have been made by the merchants of Halifax with regard to the accommodation given to the western millers, who are enabled to keep their flour at the public expense for a month. The Halifax merchants justly complain. If any person requires flour for shipment, say to Lunenburg or Liverpool, it can be shipped by the western millers owing to this accommodation, and the merchants in Halifax are prevented doing any business in flour at all. I think the hon. gentleman will remember there was a representation presented to the Government on that subject.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In answer to the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell), I will say that during the past recess a royal commission was appointed to take up the whole of this question in connection with the interstate commerce Bill in the United States. That commission was composed of very able men; and having investigated the whole of that question with great care, they embodied the result of their opinion in a report which has, to a large extent, been embodied in an Act which has passed Parliament the present Session, and which will deal with the question of rebate of which the hon. gentleman complains, by putting the various parties nearly upon an equal footing.

Esquimalt Graving Dock.....$67,325 15

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why was the amount of $17,383.15 for settlement of McNamee's claim not disposed of last Session?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Because the report of the Special Committee came in the last day or two before the end of the Session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is described here as the Session of 1886. Is that a mistake for last Session?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is a mistake for last Session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have forgotten who were the members of the Select Committee, but I do not like this business of referring claims of this kind to a Select Committee, because my experience is that that is a mere buffer for the Government to get rid of a disagreeable duty. Of course, the Government assume the responsibility, but I doubt whether any Select Committee should be allowed to deal with these matters in any case. If a claim is made, it should be dealt with by a judicial tribunal.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I was a member of the Special Committee, and I know that we investigated very thoroughly the claim that was made. The question was a difficulty between the Government of British Columbia and McNamee.

Mr. SHANLY. I was associated on that Committee with my hon. friend from the city of St. John (Mr. Weldon) and I know that we did investigate the matter very thoroughly, though I do not express any opinion as to the wisdom of referring any of these matters to a Special Committee.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am bound to say that the Government could scarcely have elected two members in whom I would have more confidence than my two hon. friends from the two sides of the House. At the same time, that does not alter my opinion that it is a very dangerous practice to send any such claims to a Select Committee. I would infinitely prefer that they should go before judicial arbitrators.

Mr. PRIOR. I do not object to the vote being passed, but I do object strongly to this money being handed over to F. B. McNamee & Co., unless there is some stipulation made that he shall pay his creditors. He took the contract from the Provincial Government of British Columbia in the first place, and in June, 1882, the Provincial Government took the work out of his hands because it was not being done satisfactorily. Afterwards the Dominion Government took the work and paid the Provincial Government a large sum of money for the work done, and also for the plant and material of McNamee & Co., and then the Dominion Government gave a contract to Larkin & Connolly, and they carried on the work. McNamee then petitioned the Provincial Government for compensation for the deposit of $10,000 which he had put up and the Provincial Government had forfeited, and also for the balance due on the contract work. The Provincial Government had a Select Committee appointed, and that committee admitted that the account should be paid, but reported that the Dominion Government should pay it. McNamee then petitioned the Dominion Government, and a Select Committee was appointed here, and that committee reported, that, although McNamee had not a legal claim, he had an equitable claim, and they thought the amount of $15,000 with interest should be paid. During the time that McNamee & Co. were performing their work in British Columbia they ran up a large amount of debts, and, when the contract was taken away from them, they left the country without paying their creditors, who have never received a cent to this day. The Provincial Government paid a great many workmen out of the $10,000 which was put up, because some of them were on the point of starvation, but there is now over $4,000 owing to creditors there. I think the Government should get a guarantee from McNamee & Co., that they will settle in full with their creditors in British Columbia, and I object most strongly to this money being handed over to them unless that guarantee is obtained.

Mr. BAKER. If it were necessary to corroborate the statement of my colleague, I would have pleasure in doing so, but I should like to ask the Government if the amount in the Estimates of $17,383.5 includes the amount of $15,000 with interest at 6 per cent. from the 8th November, 1884, which was the date of the letting of the contract to Larkin, Connolly & Co., and, further, if the Minister of Public Works will give an assurance that the creditors of McNamee & Co., in Victoria, will, before the money is paid, be protected. In order to secure that, I would move that the following words be added to the item:—

Said sum not to be paid over to F. B. McNamee, until satisfactory evidence has been furnished to the Department of Public Works that the creditors of the firm of McNamee & Co., in Victoria, and other British Columbia towns and cities have been paid.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There was a despatch received from the First Minister of British Columbia, Mr. Smith, stating that the $10,000 deposit which McNamee & Co. had made with the Government of British Columbia would be kept for the purpose of paying the creditors of McNamee & Co. in British Columbia. We are not aware that there is anything else in the amount to be covered by that $10,000. Therefore, this is not for the purpose of paying for work done, but it is to pay for the plant which was handed over by the British Columbia Government to the Government of the Dominion, and, therefore, I do not think this amendment should be adopted. If these parties have judgments that have not been paid, let them do as all other creditors do, let them execute their judgments; but I do not think they should ask us to pay the debts of a contractor to whom we are giving the price of the plant that was taken from him by the British Columbia Government and handed over to us.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The Minister of Public Works states that the plant had been taken by the Provincial Government without any authority, and that Government handed it over to the Dominion Government. Mr. McNamee could not file a petition of right against the Government, and he felt that the plant having been taken from him the amount should be paid. He notified the provincial authorities of the proceedings of the committee, and of the Dominion Government, and I think the matter was fairly investigated, and it would be very unfair now to say to Mr. McNamee that this condition should be attached, for it appears that in consequence of what was clearly and wrongfully the act of the provincial authorities of British Columbia, Mr. McNamee was practically ruined.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why should British Columbians come here and ask to be placed upon a better footing than other people?

Mr. BAKER. They do not.

Mr. MITCHELL. If a gentleman happens to enter into an engagement and gets into debt, and happens to have a claim against the Government, are the creditors coming to this Parliament and asking this Government to pay all his debts?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think we have a precedent for this action in this House. A vote was passed a few years ago, respecting the Short Line. The Government took a portion of that money to pay the laborers on that line; therefore if this vote is in a position to be utilised upon the same principle, I think the Government have a precedent for it.

Mr. BAKER. There are one or two things that the committee do not thoroughly understand. That committee, relying upon the veracity of my late colleague, Mr. Shakespeare, was formed on purpose to give Mr. McNamee justice, and also upon his verbal guarantee that if he got that money he would see these creditors paid, and that is why we, as British Columbians, ask the Minister of Public Works to see that, out of a sum voted by this Parliament to Mr. BAKER.

Messrs. McNamee & Co., whatever portion rightly belongs to the creditors in Victoria and other cities in British Columbia, should be held by the Government, instead of the whole being handed to McNamee & Co. British Columbians do not come here to ask anything which is not accorded to the other Provinces, and if we did, I think there would be very little show of getting it, if the hon. member for Northumberland had anything to say in the matter.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think the hon. gentleman should make an attack upon me. I have always shown to British Columbia an amount of fair play that many other members in this House have not shown. I appeal to my hon. friend whether, in almost every instance where British Columbia has been concerned, I have not favored her. I had something to do with bringing her into Confederation; I had something to do with the conditions under which she came in; and I think those conditions were very liberal; and it came with bad grace from the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Baker) to insinuate that if I had anything to do with the Government, she would not get fair play. The hon. gentleman is making a statement which the facts do not justify him in making, and he cannot sustain it by my attitude or by my votes. It is true that I differed with the hon. gentleman on the Chinese question, but, because I believed in allowing the Chinese to come into the country, the hon. gentleman must not suppose that I am against British Columbia.

Mr. BAKER. I did not make any insinuations, I stated plainly that everything I said this afternoon had reference to what you said immediately preceding, and to nothing else.

Mr. MITCHELL. He says he don't mean to insinuate anything. What was it brought me to my feet but the insinuations of the hon. gentleman? Insinuations, I tell him, not warranted by the facts. He cannot point to one title of evidence to show that I have been hostile to British Columbia. I have always been a friend of British Columbia.

Mr. BAKER. The hon. Minister of Public Works said if there were any unpaid claims—I have two in my hand, one from John Kinsman and the other from the Bank of British North America. The two of them amount to $1,100, and they have not been paid yet.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Why do not they execute their judgments against Mr. McNamee in Montreal?

Mr. BAKER. We have done so.

Mr. PRIOR. The Local Government has paid nearly the whole of that $10,000 out to workmen who are creditors.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Not all the $10,000.

Mr. PRIOR. Of the $10,000 deposited, the greater part of that money has been paid out to workmen whom McNamee had employed on the dock.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I am sure less than $7,500 of that money has been paid out.

Mr. PRIOR. I have got assurance from the Provincial Government that such is the case. I did not pay it myself.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). If there is any equity in the matter, the Province of British Columbia ought to pay it, and not Mr. McNamee.

Public Works, chargeable to Income, Quebec..... $56,300

Mr. LAURIER. In regard to the item of $13,600 for St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, I should like to know the particulars.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The expenditure is for building operations.

Public Works, Ontario..... $31,967

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire information in regard to the expenditure of $6,000: improvements, furniture, &c., Speakers' apartments, Senate and House of Commons.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Among the other improvements made, I may mention a change in the staircase, improved heating apparatus, electric light, painting and papering, and other works in the Speaker's Chambers of the Commons. The amount of $6,000 was about divided between the Senate and the Commons. The alterations in the Speaker's Chambers in the Senate included new heating apparatus, improved ventilation, change in the passage leading to the refreshment rooms and other works.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How many additional rooms does the Speaker of the Commons now occupy—how many rooms have been expropriated by him.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think he has any new rooms.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The room off the chamber is occupied by the Speaker, and I understand he has a room formerly used as part of the reporters' gallery, and that another small room has been partitioned off.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think he has any more rooms than last year.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does Mr. Speaker receive $4,000 salary as before, and for the same reasons?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Speaker receives the salary fixed by law.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). A statutory salary?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But the rule of law is that when the reason ceases the appropriation ceases also.

Repairs, furniture, heating &c..... $12,377

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like some explanation in regard to this item.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is the site of the old Parliament building at Quebec. That property had been transferred to the Quebec Government for the use of the Legislature there. The building was burnt down, and the Government of Quebec constructed another building, and they, therefore, retransferred this property to the Government of Canada, saying they did not want it any more, and they declared at the same time they would transfer the amount of insurance on the building which they had received. Under the purchase deed, at the time of the old Province of Lower Canada, there is a ground rent of $4,444 payable to the Archbishop of Quebec. We are now trying to have the Cardinal Archbishop of Quebec to accept the capital of that amount so as to extinguish the rent.

Mr. LAURIER. Were the Government bound to take back this property?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It had been handed to them only for that special purpose, and they said they did not want it any more.

Mr. LAURIER. Do I understand that the Government considered they were bound to take back that property when offered it by the Quebec Government?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. LAURIER. Is that the opinion of the Minister of Justice?

Mr. THOMPSON. I have not looked into the matter myself, but I understand the position to be this: that the title being with us we are bound to pay this rent.

Mr. LAURIER. I understood that it had been transferred to the Quebec Government by matter of contract?

Mr. THOMPSON. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This, as I understand, must have been a lease of the land from the Provinces of Canada to the old Province of Quebec.

Mr. LAURIER. Of Lower Canada.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, of Lower Canada, who leased this from the ecclesiastical authorities. That was the original state of the case.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There was an Act of Parliament passed at that period by which the Government of the Province of Lower Canada purchased from the then bishop of Quebec that property, on their paying one thousand pounds sterling annually.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That was done by the old Province of Lower Canada?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government of Canada continued that. It became their property when Confederation took place. After Confederation—about a year after, I think—there was an Order in Council giving the use of that property to the Quebec Government on which to erect a Parliament House. Now the Government of the Province of Quebec say: We do not want the property now, it is for you to pay the rent, and we give you back the amount for which it was insured.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much was that?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $33,000, I think.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do we get that back?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We will have that back.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I hope if the hon. gentlemen opposite are going to commute that they will commute it speedily before the rate of interest falls unduly low. At the present rate of interest it will only cost us $100,000; but on the principle laid down by the Minister of Finance if we wait until the interest falls, we will have to pay $200,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We are in communication with the Cardinal Archbishop of Quebec about that. He opposes our right to take the capital, and the matter has been referred to the Minister of Justice, who, in a very few days I understand, will give his opinion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The site ought to be worth something.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Oh, yes.

Little Nation River—Removal of obstructions..... $1,000

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I see no appropriation here for the repairing of the returning ground at Dresden. I have mentioned the matter before to the Minister of Public Works, and this place should be protected, by piling or otherwise. The banks of the river are giving away, and damage to life and property is likely to result. A little expenditure now will save the Government more than they would be obliged to pay for possible damage to property.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will have the matter looked into by my chief engineer, and I shall try to do what is right in the matter.

North Saskatchewan River..... $6,000

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask the Minister how this money has been spent?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is to cover an expenditure of $683 incurred up to the 1st of March, in connection with harbor and river works undertaken on the part of the Government, and to provide for requirements before the close of the current fiscal year, to the extent of $316.95. We want a small margin in case there should be anything more needed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not intend to object to this, but I should like to know what has been done in regard to the improvement of navigation on the Saskatchewan—what results have been achieved, and what is this money for?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The chief engineer says this is to cover the expenditure in connection with the improvement of the North Saskatchewan River to September, and to provide for the additional sum which he thinks will be required for six months of the coming year. He says that the report of the engineer has not yet been received. The reason of that was the engineer was seriously ill, but he is now working at the report.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman know how many miles of that river are navigable now?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have the statement here. The first and second rapids at the end of the falls, which were found to be slightly obstructed were cleared of boulders so as to leave a channel of three feet deep. At the third rapid a good depth of water was found and no further work was thought necessary for the present. The fourth rapid was obstructed by boulders and was entirely cleared, but at one place it is found impossible to clear more than about 16 inches deep for about 150 feet. The bottom being of hard gravel which could only be removed by dredging appliances which were not available then. There is a distance of water communication from the mouth of Red River to Edmonton on the Saskatchewan of 1,073 miles, but I cannot say what portion is navigable.

Mr. WATSON. I hope the hon. Minister will see that the money intended to improve the navigation of the Saskatchewan River shall be spent this year. It is very important that the navigation of that river should be improved, as the people of the Prince Albert district and other districts on the North Saskatchewan have no railway communication. I regret that I do not see any vote in the Estimates this year for improving the St. Andrew's rapids, which has been promised from year to year. Those rapids form part of the water communication between Winnipeg and Prince Albert and other points on the Saskatchewan, and it is very important that the lake boats should be enabled to go up the Red River to the city of Winnipeg, not only for the sake of the Saskatchewan traffic, but also to enable lumber from the timber limits on Lake Winnipeg to be delivered at Winnipeg by those boats.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. My engineers think that we must have more information than we have before we can do anything with regard to those rapids, which they seem to dread more than any other work. It is a question whether the improvements the hon. gentleman speaks of would really be improvements, or whether they would be an injury. Therefore, before we can do anything, we must be sure what the result will be.

Mr. WATSON. The engineers of the hon. Minister have been there for two or three years, and a large amount of money has been expended on surveys; and surely there is sufficient information now in the department to enable it to go on with the work. A few months ago it was supposed that it would be gone on with immediately. It was also understood that the Assiniboine River should be improved from Winnipeg to Brandon, on condition that Manitoba should submit to the railway monopoly until 1891. But since the monopoly is done away with, perhaps the hon. gentleman will not see fit to make the improvements.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will take a note of the matter, and see what can be done during the recess.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Dredging $20,000

Mr. WATSON. Where is it intended to expend the $5,000 for dredging in Manitoba?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The memorandum I have does not state where. It will be where it is wanted.

Mr. WATSON. A sum of $10,000 was voted some years ago to improve the Water Hen River, but nothing was done there. I do not object to the way in which the money was spent, because I believe it was more beneficially used to improve the mouth of White Mud River. But it is important that Water Hen River should be improved so as to enable the holders of timber limits in that district to utilise them. The Government have not yet been able to collect any dues from those limits on that account; but I believe the revenue which would be derived from those limits would more than compensate the Government for the expenditure necessary to improve that river.

To pay litigation in re schooner David J. Adams
(Governor General's warrant) $3,359 53

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this the result of some of those fisheries proceedings on the part of the Government last year?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is to pay the prosecution of one of the seized vessels.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the position of the case?

Mr. THOMPSON. Judgment has not been given.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is just on account?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Pretty expensive business in every way meddling with the Yankee fishermen.

Mr. MITCHELL. I recollect the day that this vessel was seized, meeting the right hon. First Minister in the lobby. I said to him: You had no business to seize that vessel; it was an undignified proceeding. The First Minister replied, priding himself upon the fact that although the Government had missed them on the violation of the treaty of 1818, they had caught them on the Customs Act. Nearly two years have elapsed since the seizure was made, and here is an expense of $3,200, and the matter is not yet settled.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Who is to blame for that?

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman is to blame. The hon. gentleman influences the courts. He can control their proceedings, he kept this case in abeyance, and it is in abeyance yet; and all the country has got for it is an enormous expense for legal proceedings. Who is the law firm?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Graham, Tupper & Borden.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is no reason why we should pay legal expenses to Graham, Tupper & Borden. Is Mr. Tupper the hon. member for Pictou? This thing should be put a stop to and the bill settled up. The seizure of the Adams was a disgrace and a discredit to the Government, and the continuance of the case for two years, without a decision having yet been given, may fairly be charged as a discredit to Canada.

Mr. THOMPSON. The Adams was seized for two offences: For violation of the treaty and for violation of the customs laws. The case was a test one. It was the beginning of the fishing season when our protection began, and we thought it important to test our right to prevent foreign fishing vessels coming to our ports and buying bait. The seizure was made, and the proceedings carried on were necessarily expensive, from the fact that it was a test case.

The evidence was, on the application of the defence, taken in the United States at considerable cost. In July, 1886, the entire case was closed, in so far as the evidence for the Canadian Government was concerned and so far as the evidence for the defence was concerned; and, with the consent of the counsel, a day was fixed for the hearing of the case and the evidence. That was in July, 1886, and, on a special application on the part of the defence, when the judge sat to fix a day for the hearing, a commission was issued to take evidence in the United States, and that commission had a very long time to run in consequence of one of the witnesses being at sea. The result of that adjournment, which took place at the instance of the defence and not of the counsel of the Canadian Government, was a year's delay in bringing the case to trial. The case was heard early last summer, and judgment has been reserved ever since without the slightest demand on the part of the Canadian Government or its counsel to influence the court to delay for a single instant the delivery of the judgment. A large part of the item is not for counsel's expenses but for other disbursements, and the hon. member for Pictou has not the interest of one farthing in this vote.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does it go to his firm?

Mr. THOMPSON. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What firm?

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Wallace Graham is our agent, and the partnership arrangement between those gentlemen does not entitle Mr. Tupper to one cent. Mr. Tupper is a partner of Mr. Graham, but in these Government matters he is not entitled to any of the fees.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wonder if we could find out the secret arrangement of that partnership, whether by it, in some other things, Mr. Graham would not be entitled to any portion of the transactions which Mr. Tupper brings. However, my point is that this case, which has been before the court as a test case, has been allowed to drift on for two years. It is the duty of the Government to have interfered and asked the court to come to a decision.

Mr. THOMPSON. What I said was that we had not interfered to delay the judgment.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have not charged you with that, but the hon. gentleman knows that it only requires a nod to keep things understood, and, if it is a matter involving international difficulties, it is not to the credit of the Government to have allowed this case to stand over for all these years. As to the case itself, it is one that never should have been brought up. As I have stated before, if it had been possible for the Government to select a weak case in order to test the rights as between the United States and Canada, they could not have selected a weaker one than this case of the D. J. Adams. I told the Minister of Marine before that here was a vessel which was seized under the Customs Act, which the officers had been on board of and examined twice, but she drifted out to sea and struck on a bar, and was seized because she was twenty-four hours there without reporting to Canada. I say it was a discredit to Canada to act in that way, and to take this as a test case in regard to the questions involved between us and the United States. It illustrates the impotence and the incompetency of the Government in dealing with this international question. A year ago, everyone saw the position we would be in, and now it is evident that the Government are afraid to bring this to a decision; and there cannot be any doubt that one word from them would bring the matter to a decision.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman says that the member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) is not in any way concerned in this matter. You will find almost every year in the Public Accounts professional payments to one member of that firm, and I venture to express the opinion, which is generally entertained, that I do not see the difference between legal gentlemen having their names in the Public Accounts and others who have had their names in the Public Accounts in connection with matters in which they were not directly interested. I remember that, in 1878, I happened to hold a few shares in a paper in regard to which I had no part in the management or control. It was a party paper, and because it received some Government printing my seat was threatened. I expressed the opinion that the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) and other legal gentlemen in this House, have since that time rendered themselves more liable to a prosecution for a violation of the Independence of Parliament Act than I did on that occasion, and, if this matter was investigated to the bottom, I believe it would be found that, while the hon. gentleman might not be directly concerned in this matter, there are certain considerations which give him an indirect interest.

Mr. THOMPSON. The law is the same in regard to legal gentlemen as it is in regard to others, but Mr. Tupper is not directly or indirectly interested in this vote.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman says so.

Mr. THOMPSON. The best way is for the hon. member to try it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We know that, when a partner of an hon. member gets large sums out of the public chest, it must inure to the benefit of the hon. member, possibly not directly, but indirectly, and I think it is a scandal for any member of a firm to sit in Parliament while another member of the firm is a pensioner of the Government. I think it is better that members of Parliament should be debarred from being members of firms which have any such connection with the Government. I do not accuse the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) with directly receiving any of this amount. I am quite aware that you can draw an act of partnership which will prevent one partner from directly benefiting from certain receipts of the firm, but undoubtedly he does indirectly benefit, and I think it is a vicious system that members of Parliament should be members of firms, legal or other, deriving emoluments from the Government, such as Wallace Graham & Co. do. I admit that we cannot touch that under the present law, but I think that is an error in the law and should be amended so as to render such a thing impossible.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If we look back I think we will find the same arrangement was made in regard to the firm of Blake, Wells & Morrison, and when that was brought up in the House, it was defended by hon. gentlemen opposite. It was no scandal at that time, and I think the same arrangement was made in regard to the firm of Blake, Kerr & Co.

Mr. MITCHELL. I object strongly to this answer which we so often hear. You are another. Whether Blake, Wells & Co. or anybody else did this, it is wrong. Mr. McCarthy's firm is deriving large benefit from their employment as counsel in the public service, and so with others. I say it is wrong for members of this Parliament, although they may not come within the provisions of the Act, to have these considerations. It may not be within the letter of the Act, but it is certainly in violation of the spirit of the Act that the partners of these hon. members should derive this benefit. If we go a little further, we find that the sons of these men who control and rule the country are obtaining these benefits, and we remember the scandal which occurred as to the bill of Tupper, Macdonald & Co. for their services in the North-West. Was it creditable that the son of the Premier and the son of the Finance Minister should send in bills demanding one-third of the amount for getting this and that bill through Parliament? Is it prudent or right or likely to elevate public opinion in this country?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think it is generally considered that this should be stopped, whether it is right or wrong legally. Mr. Wallace Graham is a very eminent legal gentleman, and is highly qualified for his position, but he was a Reformer in the old times, and there is no doubt that he would never have been placed in that position had he not been a partner of the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper).

Mr. THOMPSON. That is a great mistake. Mr. Wallace Graham was a Conservative almost from childhood. It is true that he was seduced by the hon. gentleman's persuasive eloquence to support his party for a time in a moderate way, but he changed his views, and his present position has nothing to do with this. He changed his opinion years before he received the appointment.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I believe the hon. Minister himself was a Liberal in his early life.

Mr. THOMPSON. Certainly.

Mr. LISTER. This is the point. The First Minister has stated that this side of the House, when in power, did what we complain of now. Hon. gentlemen led by the First Minister objected to that course of procedure at that time and said it tended to demoralise the public men of the country; but, when they came into power, they pursued the same tactics which they had condemned. If it was wrong then it is wrong now, and the Government have no right to follow it out. I do not believe it was right then. At all events, whether they be true or not, the course followed by this Government is one which they strenuously objected to when they were in Opposition. I can only echo the statement made by the hon. member for Northumberland when I say that this state of affairs is scandalous in the extreme—it is discreditable to the Government. Hon. gentlemen having seats in this House have no right to receive, directly or indirectly, any public moneys, and they have no right to allow their partners to receive any.

It being Six o'clock the committee rose, and the Speaker left the Chair.

North-West Mounted Police, required to complete the service for the year (Governor General's warrant). $100,000

Mr. CASEY. Such a large sum paid on Governor General's warrant requires some explanation, especially since these warrants are only supposed to be issued in cases of emergency.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so; but the hon. gentleman will see that we must maintain the Mounted Police, and when it was found necessary to expend this $100,000 it was just one of those cases of emergency for which the law provides a recourse to the Governor General's warrant.

Mr. CASEY. Will the hon. Minister tell us what were the special services that constituted this emergency?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There were no special services, but the service for the year involved a larger sum than had been provided for. I have no memorandum on the point, but I will ask the First Minister.

Mr. MITCHELL. It does appear to me that for a service like the North-West Mounted Police, an estimate that fell short $100,000 shows a lack of information, or a lack of judgment, on the part of the officer making the report.

Mr. MITCHELL.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no doubt there was lack of information. I presume the First Minister will give some information.

To meet expenses of Royal Labor Commission (Governor General's warrant). $40,000

Mr. CASEY. It seems to me this commission has been a very expensive way of obtaining information on the labor question. An unnecessarily large number of commissioners have been sent about all through the country. What the benefit will be to the labor classes we have yet to see. We do not know what action the Government intend to take on the report of the Labor Commission. It does seem as if all this information could have been obtained by a limited number of commissioners sitting in a limited number of places, and that they could have obtained a good deal of information by sending out circulars instead of moving this cumbersome body round from place to place.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is it expected the commission will extend much longer?

Mr. BOWELL. The labors of the commission have already ceased. The plan just suggested by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Casey) is the plan that was adopted. After the commission had been sitting sometime in the west, they were instructed to confine their investigations principally to the trade centres in the Dominion. The evidence taken by the commission will be printed shortly.

Mr. MITCHELL. I particularly object to the course the Government has pursued. They should have appointed the Labor Commission earlier, when this Parliament might have had an opportunity of getting the result of their enquiry, and then they might have dealt with any questions of hardship. It appears to me they either appointed the commission too late, or that the commission have been lax in not getting on more rapidly.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is another matter in respect to which for many reasons it is to be regretted, and that is this: those gentlemen who have paid the slightest attention to the evidence taken before those commissioners are aware that the evidence taken and reported in the newspapers with respect to the treatment of little children and of women, particularly in the city of Montreal, shows a state of things so disgraceful that I think it calls for immediate legislation so as to make such conduct on the part of employers penal, more so than it is at present. I am not disposed to complain of the conduct of the Government in awaiting the report of this commission to introduce a carefully considered Bill dealing with the whole subject, but I think that, bearing in mind that year after year we have seen Bills introduced into this House by individual members and not advanced a stage further, and feeling the Government must be supposed to have been acquainted with what occurred in other countries, when they found such a state of things was disclosed, as was disclosed by the evidence in Montreal, they should have taken some steps in order that during the next year little children and women should be protected from the abuses which appear to have been perpetrated. No man can know better than the Minister of Finance that when children of eight or ten years of age are subjected to labor for a period of thirteen or fourteen hours, for even a few days, it is liable to injure the constitutions of these children for life. The evidence that was laid before that commission disclosed the fact, to our shame and disgrace be it said, that in the chief city of this Dominion children of tender years were obliged to work with very little intermission from 6.30 in the morning up to nine or ten o'clock at night. I say that is a condition of things in no degree removed from white slavery, it is a disgrace to all of us. I do not pretend to say that we on this side of the House are perhaps entirely free from blame, because we have been a little lax in not at an earlier period of the Session pressing on the Government the need of legislation, but there was no fitting opportunity till that which now presents itself. I had hoped this item might have been reached earlier, and in that case we might have had an opportunity of taking some steps providing against tyrannous abuses being perpetrated during the ensuing year. I cannot, however, leave this item without expressing the shame and the humiliation I feel that in a country like Canada, which ought to be free from the state of degradation of semi-slavery that prevails in older and more thickly peopled countries, it should be possible that little children should be subjected to the gross oppression and tyranny which was disclosed before the commissioners. It cannot be said that that evidence was contradicted. Here is a portion of the evidence, and I call the attention of both the First Minister and the Minister of Finance to it:

"The children begin work at 6.25 in the morning, they are given 45 minutes rest at noon. Children of 10 years of age in the busy season work from quarter past six to nine p.m., and work continuously during those hours with the only exception of 45 minutes rest at noon; no time is given them for supper."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In what factory did that occur?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is in a factory in respect of which I am very sorry to see such a statement made—it is the Hudon cotton factory, employing 1,100 hands, of whom 200 are children. I am quite certain neither the First Minister nor the Minister of Finance, if these facts had been brought to their attention, could for one moment have tolerated—and they are the parties more especially charged with remedying such a state of things—the idea of allowing such a state of slavery, because it is slavery and worse than slavery, to go on in this country. Children cannot be worked, and no man knows it better than the Minister of Finance, who is a medical man of high reputation, even for a few days from six in the morning till nine at night with 45 minutes intermission without suffering the greatest possible injury, morally and physically. I do not hesitate to say that any child subjected to such treatment for even a few weeks would suffer permanent injury to their constitutions. I do not blame the Government, I say, for awaiting the result of this commission without bringing down a Bill dealing with the matter; but these are things in regard to which our criminal law ought to be amended, and most stringent penalties should be inflicted not merely on the overseers and the factory hands, but on the more responsible directors, or at least on some of those who are managers, and on the supervisors, that is to say unless the facts which are here stated, and which appear to be established beyond the possibility of a doubt, can be contradicted. Although, as I said, I suppose it is too late now to rush through a Bill rendering those acts penal as they ought to be and severely penal, I trust the First Minister will feel himself, in his capacity of First Minister, especially called upon to see that within the shortest time now possible this sort of thing is made impossible in Canada, this disgrace which should not have existed for one hour instead of, as it appears to have existed, for some years. I can conceive no possible ground or reason, no possible justification of such a state of things having existed at all anywhere.

Mr. CASEY. There is another point in this evidence almost worse than that to which my hon. friend has called attention. I think it was in the boot and shoe factories, or in the cigar factories, or both that it was proved that children had been flogged, that they were accustomed to be flogged for real or supposed failure to perform their day's work, the discretion being left in the hands of the overseer of the room. He was an actual slave-driver, and flogged those children as much as he chose when they did not do the quantity of work he thought should be done, and it was proved that even quite big girls had been treated in this manner. Then there were cases where the children had not been flogged but had been imprisoned in a black hole, in the cellar of the factory, and kept there for a considerable period, a most terrible and objectionable punishment for children. My hon. friend described this as something worse than white slavery, because the slave-owner owned the children and took at least as good care of them as he did of his working cattle. No man puts his horses or cattle to work before they are fit for it, because he knows it will not pay in the long run. When a man pays so much per day for the services of a child he is bound to get as much work as possible out of the child unless the law prevents him, and therefore the condition of the children is much worse than the real old-fashioned slavery. I do not think the Government's attention needed to be especially drawn to this question, because this evidence was given, some early in the Session, some before the Session, and the Government, no doubt, were aware of the evidence given before their own commission, and it was their duty, without any pressure being brought from this side of the House, to have taken action in the matter. The First Minister does not appear to think there is time to rush through a short Bill prohibiting this state of things, but I have seen Bills rushed through when no objection was offered, and no objection could be offered in a case like this. I would urge the First Minister to still further consider if it is not possible at some hour this evening or to-morrow to put a Bill through its different stages by the unanimous consent of the House, so as to prevent this disgraceful system of slavery being continued.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can quite appreciate the reasons which have induced the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) to bring forward this subject, and I do not think his language is a bit too strong with respect to the lamentable condition of affairs disclosed by the labors of this commission. The hon. gentleman will, however, remember that this is a delicate subject; it has always been considered as such by Parliament, in consequence of the question arising whether duty and the power of passing such laws did not rest rather with the Provincial Legislatures than with the Dominion Parliament. My hon. friend from Cornwall (Mr. Bergin), some years ago introduced a Factory Bill, I think in more than one Session, and I thought it was a rather complete Bill; but it was strongly opposed by the manufacturers, who said there was no necessity for any such legislation, and that it might well be that labor legislation of that kind would be required in England, or in the older countries where the laborer was at the mercy of the employer, but in this country where there was plenty of employment for young and old, that there was no necessity for introducing severe and strict legislation; that here the parents were quite able to support their children, without sending them to work and thus preventing the necessity of their being reduced to such servile work at this period of time. There was, as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) may well remember, a question arising as to where the legislation should begin. It was a matter of doubt, so much so that the Ontario Legislature passed a Bill, and the Attorney General was so uncertain as to whether the power existed that it was provided in that Bill it should be brought into force by proclamation. After some communication on the subject between the Minister of Justice, then Sir Alexander Campbell, and the Attorney General of Ontario, it was thought well to issue the proclamation for that law of inspection in the interests of Ontario. There was no great pressure brought upon the House for this Bill. Some petitions were presented, but those petitions were principally directed to the necessity of establishing safeguards around machinery, and thus protecting persons employed from being exposed to be caught by the machinery. There was no suggestion at all, according to my recollection, of there being any cruelty or anything like the state of things that exists in the labor market of Montreal. Of course there was no doubt that for a serious neglect of the rules of inspection, such serious neglect as to threaten health or life that it would probably come within the criminal law, and if these serious malfeasances occurred it should be declared a misdemeanor. I see my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) is not so sure that we can declare, on our will, anything we please to be a misdemeanor, but surely such cruelty as making children work for the hours mentioned by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is such an offence against the person as would bring it fairly within the law of misdemeanor, the same as any other offences of a like nature. It was very fortunate, I think, that the Labor Commission brought out—even at the eleventh hour—the evidence of this lamentable state of affairs. The hon. gentleman will quite see that a measure of this kind has got to be drawn with great care. A measure if passed by the Dominion Parliament must take care not to infringe upon the prerogative of the jurisdiction of the Local Legislatures, and therefore it would be quite impossible to run a Bill through that would be of any value at the present moment. That class of Bill must be carefully considered. Those children and the operatives are greatly interested in this report, and I believe that the very fact of those disclosures will have a preventive effect in themselves. No manufacturing establishment will venture, in the face of the public indignation which has been already evoked by these disclosures, to continue such a state of things. I think that we may reasonably expect and hope during this present season, that the warning given by the evidence which has come to light, and the still greater warning which they will receive from the report of the commission, when they do report, will prevent any recurrence or continuance of this state of affairs. Meanwhile I accept the responsibility which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has thrown upon the Government, to take up this question, and as far as we can, within the jurisdiction of the Dominion Parliament, protect in the future the operatives, young and old—especially the young—until we prepare a measure which we can submit to Parliament.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman will observe that I did not even suggest that a general Act could have been prepared. What I thought was that on these disclosures of two or three most flagrant abuses, such as compelling children of tender years to work for such a number of hours, the corporal punishment which appears to have been inflicted on children who did not work as their employers thought fit, and also the treatment of women in some cases (although those cases were not so numerous and not so well authenticated as the others) should have induced some remedy. Of course, the hon. gentleman is correct in saying that public opinion, properly directed, will possibly change a great deal of this, and on his pledge, as I understand him now to give it, that this matter will be dealt with next Session, at any rate, so far as making such cases severely punishable by law. I do not intend to say anything further with respect to the Hudson Cotton Company. There were several witnesses, all of whom agreed that children under ten years of age had been worked for fourteen or fifteen hours. One witness deposed that children of eight years had worked, and that is worse still. They work from half-past six to nine, and as the witness deposes, he had seen them severely punished.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With respect to the children, it is a case of assault and anyone inflicting this corporal punishment can be dealt with summarily or by indictment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is true in one sense, but it is not true in another. The most grievous feature of this is that, to a very considerable extent, the parents of those children, I am sorry to say, actually sold their children into this slavery, for the purpose of benefiting by their wages.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This was found to be the case in England and other countries, until the legislation in England established such severe penalties on the employers that they dare not allow the parents to live on the wages of the children.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This whole subject was before Parliament some time ago, although this particular phase of the question was not. I think the first Bill on the subject was introduced by the late Finance Minister, Mr. Tilley. That Bill was introduced two Sessions in succession, but it was ultimately abandoned, and then the member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin) introduced a measure directed in the same sense. While this question of the jurisdiction of this Parliament and the Local Legislature was being discussed in this House, at the instance of the Minister of Public Works, the debate was adjourned, and no action was taken. If I remember rightly, there was a discussion between the Minister of Justice here and the Attorney General of Ontario with regard to the right of the Provinces or the Dominion to legislate upon the subject. It was also agreed between those two officials that a case should be agreed upon, and that the subject should be referred to the courts for decision. That matter, I think, was about arranged when the present Minister of Justice succeeded to his office; and if I remember the facts rightly, the present Minister of Justice enquired of the Attorney General whether he had any doubt as to his jurisdiction. In fact, I think the present Minister of Justice abandoned the position taken by his predecessor in office on this question, and conceded that jurisdiction over the matter as a civil right belonged to the Provinces and not to the Dominion. I believe the reason why the Attorney General of Ontario did not, by proclamation, bring the Bill into operation at once was the objection made by the former Minister of Justice; and it was agreed that the question should be decided by the courts before the measure of either Legislature should be brought into operation. I have already discussed this question with as much care as I was capable of giving the subject, when the Bill of the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin) was before the House. I have no doubt in my own mind as to where jurisdiction over the subject belongs. The question raised by the hon. member for South Oxford is whether this Legislature might not deal with those features of the question relating to the grossly brutal conduct of parties employing minors—conduct of a criminal character. Of course, it is not easy to draw the line where police regulation ends and where ordinary criminal regulation begins. The 15th sub-section of section 92 of the British North America Act provides:

“The imposition of punishment by fine, penalty, or imprisonment for enforcing any law of the Province made in relation to any matter coming within any of the classes of subjects enumerated in this section.”

So that while the subject of criminal legislation belongs generally to the Parliament of Canada, it is perfectly clear that there are special subjects of criminal legislation which necessarily fall within the jurisdiction of the Province. For instance, with regard to the preparation of the voters' lists, the mode of conducting elections, the destruction of poll-books, misconduct during an election, unless the Local Legislature had power to make these things offences, and to say what punishment should follow them, its ability to carry on the Government of the Province might be rendered impossible. The question whether this 15th sub-section, conferring power on the Local Legislature to attach such punishment as it deems necessary to the violation of the law, places factory regulations wholly within the jurisdiction of the Province, is an important consideration. For instance, whether a child shall attain its majority at 21 or at 15, it is for the Local Legislature to say; what shall be the control of the parent over the child, it is for the Local Legislature to say; whether the parent may hire out the child, and abandon to some extent his control over the child and confer it on some other party, it is for the Local Legislature to say. The question the hon. member for South Oxford raises is this: Can this Government intervene and declare that to be a criminal act which a Local Legislature might declare to be a civil right? Now, I am not going to discuss this subject; but it is perfectly clear that if those parties were to flog those children inordinately, they might be punished criminally as the parents might be punished criminally. If, however, they were to put the children in an unhealthy locality, it is a question whether that is not a police regulation. To compel a child to work inordinately long hours, may, in some cases no doubt, be made a criminal act; but there are cases in which that would seem to be a violation of police regulations; and while it seems to me well that the subject should be considered by the Minister of Justice, it is equally important that it should receive the careful consideration of the Governments of the respective Provinces. Surely, a matter of this sort, in which the civil right of a party is to some extent concerned, it is of the very first importance that it should be considered by the Provincial Governments.

Mr. CASEY. I am very glad to see the hon. First Minister so jealous about provincial rights, and so careful not to take a step which might infringe them. I remember that, when matters of less importance than the life and health of children were at stake, after hearing arguments as to the constitutionality of the measure he proposed to pass—the Dominion License Act—he said he was prepared to let it go and take the chances of its constitutionality. He has either learned a lesson about taking chances on the constitutionality of a measure, or else he is not so eager to protect the children as he was to do something for the harassed licensees of Ontario. But, coming to the question of constitutionality, I agree with the hon. member for Bothwell that there are grave doubts as to which body should pass a general factory Act, and I am quite with him also that when a Province has passed a factory Act which has been held to be within its jurisdiction, the enforcement of it belongs to the Local Legislature; but I cannot go with him in saying that it is impossible for this House to declare that the act of killing children by compelling them to perform inordinate labor, or the act of assaulting and flogging half-grown up girls, cannot be declared to be a criminal act by this House. If we cannot declare such acts as those to be criminal, we cannot declare any offence against the person criminal; and I think we can declare any offence against the person to be criminal, whether it is committed inside or outside of a factory. This House should declare it to be a criminal act to assault any woman or child for the purpose of compelling them to perform labor; that is slavery, and I think this House would be quite safe in taking such action.

Mr. THOMPSON. What the hon. member for Bothwell has said about the Ontario Factory Act is substantially correct; but I think he is mistaken in stating that there was any arrangement on the part of my predecessor to submit a case.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I was retained myself.

Mr. THOMPSON. No doubt the Attorney General of Ontario retained the hon. gentleman for a case, but the proposal came from Ontario after I entered upon the office of Minister of Justice. I must say, as regards the general tenor of that Act, and its provisions as a whole, that I thought it was clearly within the provincial powers, and for that reason I declined to enter into a controversy with the Attorney General upon the subject. There can be no doubt that the offences which have excited public indignation, in connection with the employment and treatment of children in the city of Montreal, are offences which we may punish in the exercise of our jurisdiction over the criminal law. We do not need to rush through a statute to-night or to-morrow on that subject, because these offences are punishable both by common law and by the existing statute on the subject; but the reasons they exist are given by the hon. member for South Oxford—the connivance of guardians, the want of a prosecutor, the want of evidence. The real cure for evils of this kind lies in practical inspection, in regulation of the hours of labor, the regulation of the ages at which persons shall be employed to work, and the regulation of the various methods that would be used for protection of laborers. These are matters connected with police regulations and appear to me to devolve on the Provincial Legislature.

Mr. CASEY. Before we pass this item, I would remind the hon. the Finance Minister that he promised that the right hon. the First Minister would, when he came in, give us particulars of that $100,000 of police item.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. One considerable portion of that item was caused by the necessity of sending a detachment to British Columbia. The Government here were solemnly warned by the Government of British Columbia that we were on the eve of an Indian war. That great discontent had arisen among the Indians there in consequence of the land laws of British Columbia, and the sales by the British Columbia Government of lands that the Indians claimed belonged to them from time immemorial. It was a very dangerous crisis, and the Government could only, of course, take one step; that was to send at once a force there last year. Huts had to be put up for this force which was upwards of seven hundred men. These men have been there ever since. That caused an expenditure up to the present time of about $30,000, and the force will be withdrawn during this summer, as soon as the roads will permit. However, there was strong remonstrance from the inhabitants of that part of that country against the withdrawal of the whole of that force. According to law, strictly, the Province should have reimbursed the Dominion treasury for this expenditure. They decline, however, to do so, but the Government came to the conclusion that in such a grave crisis it would not do to haggle, and we sent in a force with the intention of presenting our account to the British Columbia Government. They have refused to acknowledge that account.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Did they admit the danger?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was they who informed us that there was great discontent among the Indians, but we had no idea it would amount to anything like the danger of war. We had, however, repeated official communications, most of them by wire, from the British Columbia Government that they considered the danger was imminent, and that a force must go out at once. A force was sent out to Kootenay to subdue the freebooter's hands. The danger was that the Indians were close to the frontier, and the evidence was strong that those Indians were in communication with, and expected strong support, not only from American Indians over the border but from the half-breeds and the refuse that infest the frontier in that wilderness. Then, the balance of the supplementary estimate is for services connected with the rapid movement of the detachment from place to place in the early part of the year, particularly in the south-western portion of the territory, in consequence of the unsettled state of the Indians,

The House will remember the reports that appeared in all the newspapers of risings, or threatened risings, among the Piegans and Bloods of the frontier, and their communication with the Indians of the same race and lineage across the line. We thought it a precautionary measure to keep a strong force along that frontier and to have it regularly patrolled, and their operations have been completely successful. Many outrages took place. Then, again, the system of raiding cattle on both sides has been increased to an enormous extent, and there is now a complete system of patrol along the whole of the frontier, including southern Manitoba, all of which, in consequence of the necessity of keeping all the patrol parties supplied with food along the line, has greatly increased the expense. The force has been eminently successful, this winter and spring, in suppressing raids and apprehending people in the very act of carrying off the cattle. A great many persons have been arrested, and a great many cattle have been restored to their owners. Then, again, the House will remember that there were four murders, under atrocious circumstances, by some of these people, who have been followed up with great pertinacity and at great trouble and expense. These parties have been caught, and two of them now stand for execution. All this has caused this expense of $100,000.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is difficult to tell what value to attach to these rumors. That reminds me of a little incident that transpired when I was out west last fall. At Gleichen there was some trouble among the Blackfeet, some crimes had been committed, and there was talk of an uprising. When we got there, a mounted policeman came through the train, and he spoke as if there was danger of an immediate uprising. He spoke in what I thought was an injudicious way, and seemed scarcely responsible for what he said. He said there would be one grand uprising and that would be the end of it. Listening by was a quiet looking gentleman who seemed to have listened until his patience was exhausted. Then he abruptly broke in on the policeman, and said: "What do you want to tell that gentleman a lie for; there is no trouble among the Blackfeet at all." I asked him: "Are you a Government official." He said: "Yes, I am a distributor of rations"; and he added: "The Indians were never more peaceable than they are to-day, although, to judge by the report of that policeman, you would imagine they were in a complete state of insubordination." I give this instance as an illustration of the difficulty of knowing what reliance to place on these reports.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This raises a very important question, and I am not going to detain the committee, at the lag end of the Session, by discussing it. But if I understood the First Minister rightly, he holds that each Province is responsible for maintaining the peace, and that if the Government is obliged to send a police force to the assistance of a Province, it must be at the expense of the Province.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That probably is my opinion, but it is not on that point that this charge has been made. In the North-West Mounted Police Act, it is provided that the North-West Mounted Police shall be employed in the North-West, but there is a clause which provides that the general Government may afford the assistance of the police to any Province upon requisition, and upon the Province agreeing to pay the expenses of the force sent. If you do so, it is upon the Province agreeing to pay the expense of the operation when they send in their requisition. In this case, they sent the requisition, but they did not say they would pay the expense. If it was an ordinary case of apprehended riot, of course the Government would not have sent the police, but there was the statement of the British Columbia Government that there was danger of an Indian rising, and we felt that we could not refuse to send the police, trusting to adjust the account afterwards with the Province.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The provision to which the hon. gentleman refers is, as he will see, an evidence that it is the duty of the Province to maintain peace, otherwise it would not be with any propriety that the police could act. The same thing, of course, would occur in regard to the ordinary militia. I suppose, however, that the British Columbia Government assumed that an Indian rising is different from any other, and that, the Indians being placed under the charge of this Government, they are responsible for preserving peace among the Indian population.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is the contention.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That was the supposition, though I have not seen the papers. I think that is a contention which we ought not to assent to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with you.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) Although the Indians and the lands reserved for them are under the control of the Government, I think that is to be interpreted in connection with the action which has been taken in regard to those people elsewhere. Many of them have gone out and mingled with the white population, have adopted the habits of civilised people and have become responsible for their duties. So far as they have done so, and have mingled with the rest of the population You have not attempted to follow them with any distinct legislation, and, if we confine our pretensions within reasonable limits as to what control we have in regard to Indians, there is no reason why the Indians should not be dealt with, in cases of this kind, in the same way as any other rioters, and no reason why the Local Government should not be responsible in regard to them as well as in regard to others.

Mr. CHISHOLM. I happen to know something of these Indians, and I may say that, probably, if they did rise, our Indians were not so much to be dreaded as those on the other side of the line. If the Government sent the Mounted Police over there, it was not so much to protect the people from the Indians residing in British Columbia as from the Indians on the other side. I think it would be very unfair for the people of British Columbia to be compelled to pay for their protection against foreign Indians, and I think it was the duty of the Government here to send the police to Kootenay to protect the people against those Indians who might come over to engage in this Indian war. When I was living at Kootenay, there were about 5,000 Indians of the Spokane, the Nez Percés and the Tobacco Plains, who went across to fight the Blackfeet. They are all related to the Indians of Kootenay. Even if it was incumbent on the people of British Columbia to pay for all the raids made by our own Indians, I do not think it would be right for the Government to make them pay for a war that would be made on these Indians by a foreign class of Indians.

Washington Fishery Commission (Governor General's warrant)..... $18,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I presume the hon. gentlemen have no further information to give us as to the state of things at Washington?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I regret to say it is still in doubt what the action there will be. I am, however, still hopeful, although the majority of the Committee of the Senate to whom this matter was referred reported adversely, that having been accompanied by a very strong report indeed from the minority, who stood four to five, urging by every possible means on the Senate the desirability of the adoption of the Treaty; but it is still in doubt whether it will be rejected or will be laid over until after the presidential election.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The First Minister promised that, before prorogation, he would let us know what policy the Government have decided upon in relation to that treaty, and I hope he will not forget it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is aware that the Bill which has been passed authorises the Government for two years, or until the treaty is rejected by the Senate, or until it is otherwise decided by the Governor in Council, to issue licenses under the modus vivendi. Practically the same Act has been passed in Newfoundland. If the treaty is rejected then it is in the discretion of the Governor General in Council to terminate that system, but it requires a proclamation to do it, and, in the absence of that, the system of licenses can be continued for two years under the existing legislation, notwithstanding the rejection of the treaty by the United States. A number of licenses have been already applied for by American fishermen, and it is hoped that, by pursuing that policy, matters will proceed without irritation. The policy of the Government is, while vigilantly protecting our fishing grounds from incursions by American fishermen, to avoid by every possible means in their power any irritation. They will carefully protect our fishing grounds from invasion or molestation by fishermen who may have no right under that modus vivendi or under the treaty to come in there, but they hope to avoid any possible cause of irritation with our neighbors.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I understand the position in which the Treaty places us for the present, at least, but my object was to ascertain, if possible, whether the Government, in the event of the rejection of the treaty by the Senate, would still act under the modus vivendi, and permit licenses to be taken out, or whether they would issue the proclamation and restore matters to the position they were in before the fishery negotiation commenced. That is the point upon which I thought probably the Government must have consulted, and it is important to know whether they have arrived at any conclusion on this subject.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that matter remains an open question, and even if a conclusion had been arrived at, I think it would be premature to announce it. It will be a question to be taken into careful consideration by the Government when such a contingency arrives, in connection with all the attendant circumstances.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do I understand the Minister to say that even if the treaty is rejected, the Government here have power to suspend the modus vivendi?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. By proclamation.

Mr. MITCHELL. You think it would be wise not to express any opinion as to the course you may pursue, and I agree with you about that; but I was a little in doubt as to whether you had the power.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, yes, express power.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad to know you have. I think in relation to the treatment of this question, we ought to deal most liberally with the American people. We know that the merits of the case will not determine whether the treaty will be accepted or rejected. The general impression prevalent, not alone in the United States but in Canada, is that the United States, in accepting or rejecting this treaty, will be more influenced by political considerations than by the merits of the treaty; therefore, I will suggest to the hon. gentleman that, even if the treaty is rejected, a liberal treatment should be extended to the Americans so as to give them time to let their political excitement cool down in order that they may resume a calm consideration of the question before any action is taken by our Government which might have a tendency to excite them, and perhaps precipitate them into a hostile attitude, which otherwise might be avoided. I have no hesitation, myself, as to what the result of that treaty will be.

That it will not be accepted now, I consider as certain; that it may not be rejected is possible. My impression is that it will very likely be rejected. But I think that after the election is over, after the excitement which will prevail during those elections, has subsided, I believe the calm, sober second-thought of the American people will lead them to see that they have got a treaty that, perhaps, they may never have an opportunity of getting again, that they have got advantages under that treaty which they would be very foolish, indeed, to reject, or to preclude themselves from taking advantage of. Therefore, I think that most liberal treatment should be extended to the American people in the protection of our fisheries during the next season. The utmost care should be used in the selection of men, and strict instructions should be given to them not to do what has been done, in the year before last, particularly, when it was made an object for the commanders of these crews to capture vessels. The object should be to avoid anything like that, and while maintaining the rights of Canada, to give the greatest latitude and extend the utmost courtesy and consideration possible to the American fishermen, while, of course, maintaining and asserting our own rights in the premises. That is the course, I think, which ought to be pursued, and I trust the Government will view it in that light, and endeavor so to conduct the affair as will lead to friendly results.

To pay C. E. Rouleau for 25 copies of Débats du Conseil Législatif, Quebec..... $75

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it ought to be certified to that some member of the Government has read these debates. I will not object to the vote, if any member of the Government will read these debates and tell us what they are about.

To meet expenditure in connection with consolidation and preparation of Orders in Council..... $8,300

Mr. THOMPSON. That is for the preparation of the 4th volume connected with the consolidation of the statutes. The other three volumes are distributed, this one is in the press, and it contains a compilation of the Orders in Council which have the force of law.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When this passes through the press, it is to be submitted to this House as the other was?

Mr. THOMPSON. These are purely Orders in Council that have been consolidated, rearranged, and repassed by the Governor General in Council, and they have already the force of law.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would observe that in the consolidation of the statutes, some very considerable differences were made in the existing laws that were passed upon by this House. What the hon. gentleman, as I understand, proposes to do, is, by one comprehensive Order in Council, to validate this whole consolidation.

Mr. THOMPSON. One Order in Council for each department.

Amount required for lithographing Statistical Diagrams..... $3,110

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have a volume in my hand which, I suppose, is the subject of this vote. Many of these diagrams, I think, are useful and convenient things to have; but I notice that in drawing these some little matters have been slipped in which, I think, are not quite correct. For instance, I notice under the head of total exports of Canada in the year 1874, and for four or five years thereafter, they are marked "revenue tariff," and then "protective tariff." Now, as a matter of fact, the hon. gentleman knows quite well that from the year 1868 to 1874, or indeed to the year 1879, for the matter of that tariff, it was quite as much a revenue tariff as it was after 1874, because any alterations that were made rendered it perhaps a little more protective.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Is not that marked revenue tariff?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, it is not. All the years prior to 1874 are left blank; and it is so marked as to appear that from 1875 to 1878 some of which years as hon. gentlemen know, were years of serious depression all over the world, a certain state of things resulting. Had the table been marked for 1878 revenue tariff it would have shown a correct representation; but this certainly conveys a very deceptive meaning to outsiders who are not familiarly acquainted with our fiscal legislation. They would suppose that the first half of the dozen years was under something different from a revenue tariff. That is one point to which I wish to draw the hon. gentleman's attention. The table should have been amended, and as I do not suppose any other edition will be published, it should at all events be noted. I notice another, and a rather more serious matter. On page 23 there is a statement of the quantity of grain of all kinds entered for home consumption. That is made in such a fashion that, although it is technically correct as to our trade and navigation, it is very seriously misleading. The Finance Minister knows very well that in the years 1873-4-5-6-7-8 immense quantities of grain were entered nominally for home consumption, but which were really in transitu and were afterwards exported. The hon. gentleman is aware of the fact that a very small portion of that quantity, perhaps not one-third or one-fourth, really went into home consumption. After that date, those grains, being subjected to taxation, could not be entered for home consumption. So that table, not only not represents the things correctly but is entirely misleading. It should really be struck out. The same remark applies to page 24 where Canadian imports of articles of food for home consumption are also mentioned. An immense proportion of those were simply articles which passed through in transitu. These two pages are entirely incorrect in reality, although they may be correctly taken from our Trade and Navigation Returns. In the matter of business failures, I find that the same little device of making the revenue tariff commence at 1874-75 is repeated, and the years previous to that are left blank. That is not quite as it should be, and is misleading. Looking at the book casually I notice these errors, and two of them are errors of a rather serious character, although on the whole I believe the book will be found to be fairly accurate. The sum to be voted is a rather large one.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I dare say there are some grounds for the criticism the hon. gentleman has offered, and although usually works of that kind which are prepared by a Government employé, are not credited to them, I felt it necessary in my remarks in my financial statement, to give Mr. George Johnson, the statistician who prepared these figures, the entire credit for the work. I have no doubt that hon. gentlemen opposite will accept my statement that there was not the slightest consultation with the Government, so far as I am aware, or with any member of it, or any suggestion offered, in regard to the compilation of these statistics. I think a point has been raised by the hon. gentleman which shows that although these statistics are not as perfect as they might be, this is a very graphic mode of presenting to the eye and making an impression on the mind stronger than the mere reading of figures, and it is really an improvement to have such a system for the purpose of impressing statistics upon the memory and making them more attractive to persons interested in the statistics of the country as is done by means of diagrams as well as by figures. I have no doubt that Mr.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT,

Johnson, who is the statistician, and who is alone responsible for the form in which these statistics are presented, will see the criticism of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), and measures will be taken to remedy any possible cause of complaint in that direction.

Mr. MITCHELL. This document, for which we are paying $3,000, may be very useful or it may not. My own impression is that a document emanating from a gentleman who was employed to get up campaign literature for the present Government during the last general election, is not a person from whom the general public will accept the statistics which are printed in this book.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. At that period Mr. Johnson was not an employé of the Government. It was at a subsequent period that he was employed by the Government and engaged on this work. At that time he was entirely free to use his talents and abilities in any such way as he chose to employ them.

Mr. MITCHELL. We know that he did very good service from a party standpoint at the last general election, and no doubt Mr. Johnson has become an employé of the Government since. Of course, he got his reward from the party by being appointed to a lucrative position. I entirely disapprove of public money being spent in this way. The book may be valuable or not—I cannot see any great value in it—it is so much money thrown away. It may be that the Government may have taken this way of rewarding Mr. Johnson for services to the party at the last general election. If they have done so from a party standpoint, I have nothing more to say, because public money is spent in a great variety of ways in promoting party interest and advancing the interest of friends who support the Government. With that I do not propose to find fault, if the public are satisfied to allow things to run on in that way; but to spend $3,000 in this way is a waste of money, because no one will look at the book after he has received it but will throw it on one side. That is my idea of the value of Mr. Johnson's book.

Mr. BOWELL. I think the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) will find that, in the returns given on page 23 and 24, Mr. Johnson has given credit for the quantities of grain brought in for export. I see on looking at the Trade and Navigation Returns for that time, although the tables were not so clear as they are at the present time, there is a line for the articles imported, and also for the quantity entered for home consumption. I remember in conversing with Mr. Johnson on this question, when I was investigating the point which the hon. gentleman has raised as to the quantity of breadstuffs entered for consumption during a certain period as compared with another period, we took the particular quantities so entered and then deducted those which were exported. I am inclined to think that in that paper the hon. gentleman will find on investigation that this has been done, although I do not speak positively.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, the reason is obvious. During the other years those grains came in free, and it was a matter of perfect indifference to the party bringing them in whether they were called imported for home consumption or imported, so to speak, in bond or in transitu to pass through the country. That is the reason why these figures are misleading. The hon. gentleman will see that there were 10,000,000 bushels imported in 1874-75. That sank to 3,000,000 bushels in 1877-78. The hon. gentleman knows that was not the case, and that we did not consume the 10,000,000 in 1874-75. We exported a very large quantity of American grain, as will be seen by reference to the trade and navigation tables for those years, but we did not give ourselves credit for bringing them in for that purpose. It was, I admit, a natural mistake to make. I do not say Mr. Johnson has not quoted correctly from the Trade and Navigation Returns—he has done so; I do not wish to say he has garbled the official documents, for he has not. He has taken the official documents, but, from the circumstances to which I have alluded, the official documents do not correctly represent the state of trade. We are alleged to have imported $32,000,000 in 1873 and 1874, which is alleged to have sunk to $13,000,000 in 1877-78; that may be technically correct, but is not really correct. We did not consume those. We simply passed a large quantity of this through the country and exported it.

Mr. BOWELL. That is quite true.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I quite agree with the opinion expressed by my friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). I really do not see the value of those statistics to the members of this House, or to the public generally. It seems to me that any person desirous of availing themselves of the statistics of the country has the public records before him, on which he can rely with much more confidence than on any statistics prepared by Mr. Johnson. Undoubtedly members of this House will receive with a good deal of caution any statements made by Mr. Johnson, because he is pretty well known to be employed a good portion of the time in getting up statistics for speeches of members on that side of the House. During the Session I happened to hear frequently, that Mr. Johnson was preparing statistics for the hon. member for Cape Breton, and that he gave him all the statistical information which the hon. gentleman subsequently delivered to this House. Doubtless he also prepared statistics for other gentlemen on that side. We are given to understand that he was the celebrated author of the celebrated mode by which the Finance Minister reduced the national debt with such happy facility.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. May I take the opportunity of saying to the hon. gentleman, that I never exchanged a word with Mr. Johnson on the subject, and I am not aware that he gave it one moment's consideration.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Then the hon. gentleman did not keep his secret, because three or four days before the hon. gentleman delivered his speech I heard it announced about the lobbies that he was going to show that our national debt was only $50,000,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that I did not keep my secret well, or that Mr. Johnson did not keep it? Does he accept my word when I say that directly or indirectly I had no communication with Mr. Johnson in any shape?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I mean to say the hon. gentleman did not keep his own secret.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What does the hon. gentleman mean any way?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I knew three or four days before, that the hon. gentleman was going to deliver that statement.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I went across the House and told the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) that I was going to deal with the subject. I did not propose to keep it a secret in any way. I was anxious that the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) should be present, and I told him; there was no necessity for any secret.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Taking into consideration the assistance Mr. Johnston has given to members on that side of the House it was not an unnatural supposition that he had communication with the Finance Minister in that direction. I merely wish to say that I regard this as perfectly useless, and I do not think that any statements coming from Mr. Johnston would be received with a great deal of confidence.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend behind me called my attention to the matter we had been discussing. I do not want to make a misstatement, but I will explain how the error probably has arisen. If he will look to the Trade and Navigation Returns he will see that in 1873 the imports were $128,000,000, and of those there were entered for consumption $127,500,000, only leaving half a million, which escaped being entered for consumption. Notwithstanding this, in that identical year we find from another part of the returns that we imported $9,500,000 of foreign goods and in the next year $10,500,000. It is clear to demonstration that that which was nominally entered for consumption, was really goods passing in transit.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would like to ask the question why the table of exports from Canada is taken from the United States accounts, and the imports from the British North America accounts. Why not take our own trade returns for those matters?

Mr. BOWELL. On consulting with the American returns you will find that the exports from that country to Canada are much larger than our imports show. They have a better system of checking their exports than for checking imports, and for this reason, I will give you as an illustration. If you look at the item of pork, you will find from the American returns that some 34,000,000 pounds were exported to Canada, while in fact we have entered as imports from the United States only about 10,000,000 pounds. The way that occurs is this: They export pork in cars from Chicago via Sarnia and Montreal and thence to Europe, and the export entry is made in Chicago for Canada. The cars arrive at the border, and our officer simply sees that the seal is intact. They then pass on to Montreal, where the seal is broken and the pork is at once put on board a vessel and sent across the ocean or to its destination. No entry is made of that in our Trade and Navigation Returns for the simple reason that we do not know the exact quantity of pork each car contains, nor is it any particular interest to us to know. I have sent circulars to the inspectors to see if it were possible to adopt some plan by which we could show in the next Trade and Navigation Returns the exact amount of the transit trade through the country. I find that that is almost impracticable, unless we examine every car that comes into the country to see what it contains and the quantity and then enter it. I know they have a system in the United States by which they endeavor, as far as possible, to arrive at those facts, but you will see that after all they are mere guess work.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). My observation extended more in the other direction; just in the reverse of the question. Taking the other side, I saw that they were nearly correct, and that is the table used here, of our exports to the United States, taken from the United States returns, not their exports to us. The Minister has pointed out that there is a discrepancy between their export entry and our import entry. Of course I have not had time to examine it, and we have to accept it subject to examination.

Further amount for the clothing and maintenance of patients from the District of Keewatin in the Manitoba Asylum for the Insane.....$3,500

Mr. MITCHELL. Do we provide for the maintenance of insane people from Keewatin?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, Lunatics in the North-West are under the Dominion charge; and as there is no asylum put up by the Dominion for the North-West, lunatics are sent to the Manitoba asylum, where their board and lodging are paid for.

Further amount for works in connection with the Hot Springs Reservation near Banff.....$8,782 64

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It seems rather unusual for the Government to take a Governor General's warrant for such an expenditure as this. I have always opposed this expenditure on public grounds. I do not think we have any right to establish and maintain a park at Banff, for the benefit of that section or the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. If they want to attract people over their line, let them spend money themselves.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As regards the advantages of the Banff Park, I might leave that to the hon. member for South Perth.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). He is not sound.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. According to the memorandum I have on this vote, on the 1st of July last the whole sum available for the purpose of the Rocky Mountain park was $30,829. It was intended to have caused this amount to be so expended that there would be $4,000 or $5,000 on hand with which to put the roads in good repair during the coming spring; but the late Minister (Mr. White) having personally visited the park and consulted with the superintendent, came to the conclusion that it would be in the public interest to push at once the construction of a road 8 miles in length to the Devil's Head Lake, one of the most attractive features of the park, and also considered it expedient to construct a tank and pipes for the purpose of distributing the water of the hot springs to the hotels and bath houses without further loss of time. The water is supplied to them at a rental.

Mr. MITCHELL. Did you drink any of it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it pleasant?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not particularly; I don't hanker after it. It is confidently believed that there will be a very large pecuniary return for all this expenditure. It is proposed to give a certain number of leases to parties who want to build villas, and who will build them in accordance with the views of the superintendent, so that there will be no buildings put up to disfigure the park: There will be a handsome ground rent charged for them. At the village of Banff there is a continual demand for lots, and $4,000 and upwards have been received for lots sold within the last few months.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What further expenditure is contemplated there, or is this a final expenditure?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that substantially this sum will complete the park. Of course annual improvements will be suggested to beautify the grounds.

Mr. MITCHELL. What extent of area is included in the park?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. 20,000 acres.

Mr. MITCHELL. I suppose the hon. gentleman proposes to cultivate all the wild animals, such as cinnamon bears, rocky mountain goats, &c., in that park?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will have to come to Parliament for a special vote for that.

Mr. MITCHELL.

Further amount required to provide for the expenses in connection with the Commission for the settlement of the Half-breed claims in the North-West Territories..... $5,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I want to amend that by adding the words: "including $500 to N. O. Coté for service as commissioner. As the nature of the work of the Half-breed Commission was very involved, it was impossible to estimate the amount that would be required under this head. The work was more severe than was anticipated, and it was found necessary for the commission to visit a number of places which had not been taken into account. This vote is asked to meet the additional expense, including the $500 to be paid to Mr. Coté, who rendered valuable services as a colleague of Mr. Goulet.

To pay A. J. McKenzie, surveyor in Her Majesty's Customs at Hamilton, an allowance in addition to his salary, for services as Acting Collector, from 1st November, 1884, to 1st February, 1887..... $1,237 50

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is this the gentleman who discharged the duties during two or three years?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes. It is the difference between his own salary and that of the collector. He discharged the duties in an eminently satisfactory manner.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Why then has he been reduced?

Mr. BOWELL. He has not been reduced. He was always a surveyor. During the vacancy that existed, he was asked to assume the duties of a collector until a new collector was appointed.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It would have been only fair to keep him in that position, when he discharged the duties so satisfactorily during two years and a half, and not appoint another.

Mr. BOWELL. That is another question.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. McKenzie was a very efficient officer, and I did what I could to get him not only what has been allowed but double that amount. I found it very hard to get all I wanted from my hon. friend for Mr. McKenzie, but he would not give any more, and I am thankful to get this for him.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am delighted to hear this testimony on the part of the hon. member, but I am not delighted to hear that a gentleman who filled the post so efficiently has had to make way for an outsider. I should have expected that the hon. member for Hamilton would have used his influence to prevent this. Can it be possible that the hon. gentleman wanted to get a dangerous rival out of the way? It looks suspicious.

Mr. BROWN. I had no such desire, and I am glad to be able to do justice to the gentleman whose name is under discussion.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Still the fact remains that an officer who, according to the Minister of Customs and the hon. member for Hamilton, discharged the duties of collector for two and a half years in the most satisfactory manner, should, in spite of that, have to give up the place he so worthily filled to a gentleman who, I may say, is wholly unacquainted with business, for I believe he is a legal gentleman. This may not only have been doing an injustice to him, but also have been the cause of serious loss possibly to my esteemed friend from Hamilton, for, as a result of the appointment of that outsider, it was necessary to find another representative for the city of Hamilton, and to compel my hon. friend to absent himself on business and attend to parliamentary business for three months when he should have been at home. It would have been better had the Minister of Customs overlooked the fact that Mr. McKenzie was of a different stripe of politics and have allowed him to remain permanently in the position he so satisfactorily filled.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is to be regretted that this officer to whom the hon. gentleman proposes to give an addition to his salary, to which he was entitled morally, at all events, if not legally, was not allowed to retain the position he filled so efficiently during two years and a half. Every one who knows Mr. McKenzie, knows that he is thoroughly acquainted with mercantile affairs, and that there is not, perhaps, an officer in the customs service to-day better qualified to discharge the duties of customs collector. He was for many years a merchant, and is certainly acquainted with the duties appertaining to the office of collector. Now, the hon. gentleman has taken a lawyer and appointed him over Mr. McKenzie's head. As far as we can judge, there was no reason for appointing the present collector of customs, except to make way for the hon. member for Hamilton. That seems to have been the only reason for the appointment. There are many appointments which are open to lawyers which are not open to non-professional men, and for one who was thoroughly conversant with the trade of the country, and so well qualified to discharge the duties of collector of customs as Mr. McKenzie, who was actually engaged by the Government to perform those duties for two and a quarter years, to be removed in that way was a most ungracious act. There was no reason for it unless it was that he belonged to a different political party from that of the Minister of Customs. The hon. Minister of Customs says he discharged those duties for two and a quarter years. Why was he allowed to continue in that position for that time? If he was competent during that time he was able to discharge those duties for two and a quarter years more, and for twice two and a quarter years. Why did the Minister keep that open so long? Was it because he had promised the appointment to an hon. gentleman who was then on the floor of this House? In what position did that member stand to the Government at that time? Was he competent to give an independent vote? No; during that time he was a mere instrument of the Government. From the time the Minister held out the expectation that he would be appointed to that office, he was not an independent member of this House, and was disqualified from the proper discharge of his duties. In fact, if the promise was made to him, and he knew he was to occupy that office, he was legally disqualified.

Mr. BROWN. He is the best collector we ever had.

Excise—To pay Peter Kastner duty on malt used in the manufacture of beer, destroyed by fire, 24th August, 1881, authorised by Order in Council, 20th September, 1887.....$210 44

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know why, if this was a lawful and proper debt, six years have been allowed to elapse since the destruction of this malt without the amount having been paid?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). My hon. friend should remember that when the Government get money into their hands, it generally takes several years to get it out.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend no doubt speaks from experience, but that is not quite a satisfactory answer in Committee of Supply. There is a very serious objection to bringing up these old claims. If this claim is just, it ought to have been settled in a much shorter time than six years, and I think some explanation is due to the committee.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If any of Her Majesty's subjects have a claim against the Government, when they present it it has to be considered on its merits, whether it is an old or a new claim. My hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue is not here to-night, so I cannot explain this particular case, but the enquiry was gone into, and it was found to be a good claim.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In all such cases, particularly when you refer to an Order in Council, I think the Minister in charge of the Estimates should be provided with the Order in Council, because prima facie that is not the sort of claim which the House should look on with favor. If there is one thing more than another in which the Crown is likely to be a victim of unfair claims, it is in these cases which have occurred years ago. The sum is small, but the principle is one of considerable moment. I suppose the hon. gentleman will produce the Order in Council at some reasonable time to-morrow. We ought to see the grounds upon which it is passed. Of course I do not know the merits of the case. It may be a perfectly just claim and it may not.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If the claim was only presented last year, it would be rather a serious question, but if it was presented before, it is another thing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have sent for the Order in Council.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would call attention to one peculiar feature in this. This malt was destroyed by fire on the 24th August, 1881, and the Order in Council was dated on the 20th September, 1887, so that something over six years elapsed. If this claim had been good, the party might have taken steps to collect it, but he waited until the Statute of Limitation had run, and then presented the claim when it was open to the Government to accept or reject it. It certainly looks like a job.

Mr. TROW. I live within three miles of this brewery and I am aware that, in 1881, the brewery was destroyed by fire, and there was a current rumor at the time that Mr. Kastner had lost a considerable sum. I know he is a very respectable man. He does not live in my riding, but in North Perth, but I am sure that if he puts in a claim, he is entitled to be paid. I believe it is a just claim.

Outlers' contingencies..... $1,500

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. (Translation.) I wish to call the attention of the Government to certain regulations recently passed by the Department of Marine by which certain taxes are imposed upon implements used by fishermen. Under a regulation or Order in Council—I do not know which—a license fee of $2 a year and three or five cents a yard has been imposed upon hoop-nets, nets and lines. The effect of that tax is most disastrous to a certain number of fishermen who carry on that business around Lake St. Peter, that is, to fishermen from the counties of Berthier, Maskinongé, Richelieu, St. Maurice, Yamaska, and all the counties surrounding Lake St. Peter, on both sides of the St. Lawrence. Those fishermen do not catch marketable fish. Their catch consists mostly of eels, catfish, suckers, and other fish of that description. Their operations are not extensive, and if that tax is maintained it will result in depriving a large number of families from their means of subsistence. Last year the hon. Minister of Marine imposed the same tax, but upon representations made by the members for the interested counties, the regulation was suspended. Recently, the regulation has been put in force, although its injustice had been represented to the Government. I would like to know whether that regulation is to be cancelled, and I hope the hon. members for the interested counties will join me for the purpose of protesting against that regulation and asking that it be cancelled.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government have received several petitions from the fishermen who are said to be very poor, and unable to pay the fee that is charged. The Government have considered this carefully, but before coming to a final conclusion in the matter we were obliged to come here. The moment we have leisure, the day after prorogation, we will consider the matter. We desire, as much as possible, to meet the representations that have been made with respect to the fishermen.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the object of these licenses?

Mr. FOSTER. The object of these licenses is partly statistical and partly for the purpose of raising a revenue. We charge for these licenses the same everywhere. In the district of which the hon. gentleman has spoken, we now charge these fees; but previously this part of the Ottawa and St. Lawrence Rivers had not been under fees. Last year the matter was first brought to my attention largely for this reason: that this portion of the river presented an anomaly, and parties said rightly that in other places if these fees are not paid in one portion of Canada they should not be paid in any other portion. Last year the regulation was put in force, but owing to representations that the fish were not taken for commercial purposes, it was suspended. Since, the investigation has shown that these fish are taken for commercial purpose, and are caught and sold in large quantities. The fee is very small. 25 cts. are charged for 100 hooks, 2 or 3 cents per fathom for nets, and $2 for hoop nets, the same charge as is made for hoop nets catching the same quality of fish in other parts of Canada. The fees were placed at $2 for the hoop net. As I have said, representations were made to me, and as a compromise, I have reduced the fee one-half, making it $1 for the hoop net. I believe it has been stated that it will cost these fishermen a large sum of money, because the nets were old and worn out and have to be replaced with others. Now, it is not the design to charge $1 for every hoop net that is used to replace another. The fee is $1 for fishing with a hoop net the whole season. If one hoop net wears out and is replaced by another, it is not at all the intention, or the practice of the department, to charge another dollar. However, as has been said by the First Minister, since this regulation has been in force, representations have been made, and they are now being considered, and the Government will, no doubt, do what is fair and right in the premises.

Mr. LAURIER. I think my hon. friend the Minister is altogether wrong. There should be no revenue at all from such a source. If it be for statistical purposes there may be some reason in it.

Mr. LABELLE. The result will be that these poor people will be taxed twice. In our Province the fishermen are differently situated from what they are in Ontario. In Ontario they have good fish, and fishermen can sell their catch by the dozen; whereas with us, they have to sell them by the cartload in order to raise a little money to buy pork and molasses for their families, who, in many cases, are next to starvation.

Mr. LAURIER. Can the hon. gentleman give an explanation as to the increase in this item of $1,500 for cullers' contingencies? The revenue is largely decreasing from that source.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In the absence of the Minister we are not able to give information on that point. I will go to the department in the morning and make enquiries.

Railways and Canals, repairs and working expenses..... $492,525

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman explain that item?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that $2,600,000 were voted, and it was found necessary to obtain this additional amount of $477,000, making a total of $3,177,000 in order to work the traffic. That large increase was caused to a very considerable extent by a very sudden influx of ocean traffic, which was thrown upon the road unexpectedly, and which one year ago, when the estimate was taken, we had no reason to suppose would take place.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Civil Government, Department of Secretary of State..... $2,725

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Please explain the payment of $400 to C. A. Cattelier.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Mr. Cattelier is one of the oldest and most deserving officers in the Civil Service. He has the position of a Deputy Minister, but has never had the rank and salary of such; he is the Deputy Registrar General. His services have been recognised on this occasion by granting him an increase of salary amounting to $100. He has really been Deputy Minister since 1869, and has never received anything but the salary of a chief clerk.

Legislation—Franchise Act..... $30,500

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I move that the second item, "revision of voters' list, $15,000," be struck out.

Motion agreed to.

House of Commons..... $2,785

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to draw the attention of the committee to the names of four Sessional clerks. From the whole information I can gather, these have not done anything during the Session. Their names are J. E. Chagnon, Ouimet, C. J. Thompson, a lawyer in the city, who has not been here and has not attended to his sessional work but has drawn his money; and M. Haldane, who has not been here and has not performed any sessional work, although he has drawn his money. The latter is the owner or editor of a paper in Hull, I believe. I think it is unfair, and I think it is the duty of the Opposition to draw the attention of the Government and of the House to this fact. It is not enough that we are called upon to pay for a large staff of sessional clerks who do not perform any work, but we have to pay a lot of hangers on who virtually do nothing but draw their pay. In those four cases, I challenge the House or the Government, or whoever has those clerks in control, to show one single piece of work that those men have done. I venture to say they have not copied 12 sheets of foolscap during the Session, and yet they have drawn their salary. I would like to know under whose charge they are? I know from my information, and I have gathered it carefully, that they have not done a single item of work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That statement cannot possibly be allowed to pass without some explanation. If four persons have been appointed sessional clerks and have drawn their pay, and did not do any work, then there is no doubt that there is a gross abuse if it be the case. Of course my friend would not make such a statement unless he received creditable information on the matter. I think that charge must be answered by whatever official is responsible for the sessional clerks.

Mr. SPEAKER. I can only answer my hon. friend that I am not aware that one single individual has been paid who has not done his work. No later than to-day I have asked for a special report from the clerk who was in charge of them, and the Clerk of the House, who is here, can say the same thing. I think that every one of them, so far as I am aware, has earned the money he has been paid. I am not aware that a single man has been paid here who has not worked faithfully and done his duty; at least that is the report I have. I think that those reports outside are very much exaggerated about those clerks having nothing to do. Of course they have not work at all times, but sometimes the whole of them are required for the work of the House.

An hon. MEMBER. How many are there ?

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot say. The number is twenty-five provided for and fixed by a resolution of this House. I am not aware the resolution has been exceeded.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no doubt at all that if this state of things exists, it is a very gross abuse and I hold it to be the duty of any member of this House on either side, who has knowledge of a fact of that kind, that a person who is receiving pay as a sessional clerk who does not do any service, to report it. I think the members should make it known to the Clerk of the House under whom those clerks are. I am aware that the Clerk of the House has heard this for the first time. I do think it is the duty of any member of this House, if he is aware of an abuse of that kind, to bring it at once to the notice of the clerk in order that the party may be forthwith discharged from the public service.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have taken some trouble to find out whether those clerks are in attendance or not, and I hold that it is the duty of the person in charge of the sessional clerks to note their presence and if they are absent to strike them from the list. Members of the House are docked for every day they are not present, and I think sessional clerks should be treated in the same way. I have taken trouble to make enquiries and not one of those clerks have been there when I made the enquiry. I understand that it is not the duty of the man in charge to report their absence, and that all he has to do is to see that they are on the pay list.

Mr. FISHER. I am glad to hear from the Speaker that he has asked for the list of those clerks and the amount of pay they receive, and I trust that he will also ask for a return of the number of days each was present. I take exception to the statement of the Minister of Finance that it is incumbent upon members of this House to make complaints of this kind. I think it is the duty of those who have the control of officers of this House to see that they are present, and that he should be responsible for their presence. The members are not here to look after the officers of this House; that should be done by the committee, of which I believe the Speaker is chairman. I do not consider that members of this House have anything to do with the matter.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think that the English practice should prevail, which is that the appointment of extra sessional clerks should rest with the Clerk of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. So it is here.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says so it is here. I should like to know whether the Clerk of the House is responsible for those sessional clerks or not, and I should like to know whether he has assumed the responsibility of asking the Government for the appointment of a large number of those clerks. One of those who my hon. friend has named is a student in a lawyer's office in this city, and is engaged the whole season. He has not been here, and yet that clerk is drawing his pay regularly. I would like to know whether a party who is connected with the editorial staff of a paper on the other side of the river, has been here or not? And I would like to know whether his appointment is not due to the fact that he has done political services elsewhere, and not because his services were required in this House? The whole difficulty has grown up on account of the interference with the clerk in the proper discharge of his duties. He is the proper officer to name the parties he requires and he ought to be held responsible, for power and responsibility should go together, but he is deprived of the power. When the officer is interfered with at every turn, when he has pressed on him a number of inefficient men whose services he does not require, he cannot be held responsible for this large expenditure or for those inefficient appointments. We have here, as we have every year, a large number of persons appointed whose services are not required, and they are appointed not because their services are required, but they are appointed in order to compensate them for services rendered to the party led by the hon. gentleman on the other side of the Chamber. I say this is a gross abuse. If those parties have rendered the hon. gentlemen any important service, let them put their hands in their own pockets to pay them, and let them discontinue the practice of putting their hands in the pockets of the people of this country for such a purpose. That is what those gentlemen have been doing, and that is what they continue to do. At every turn we have abuses of this sort. These Estimates are filled with the names of parties who are pensioned on the public Treasury for the services they have rendered to the leaders of the Tory party. Why, Sir, an hon. gentleman named, to-day, a man who is to be appointed to look after timber at the source of a river where there is not a settlement within 500 miles, and where there is no person who could possibly cause any damage. What is that for? It is for political services, or to get him out of the way. The people of this country who are embarrassed in their circumstances, who find everywhere their burdens enormously increased, and who are obliged to curtail their expenditure in consequence of their strained circumstances, are obliged to pay this pension list. The people find their burdens increased by the hon. gentlemen opposite who in order to pay their parasites have fastened them as pensioners on the public Treasury. The condition of things is becoming intolerable, and it has not only extended to every branch of the public service, but it has found its way into this House. You can hardly move through the corridors for the number of people whom the hon. gentleman has placed here for the purpose of pensioning them. We cannot get proper ventilation in this chamber, and we are in danger of blood-poisoning, because of the impediments put in the way of fresh air coming in, in the shape of the persons who are crammed into the doorways and windows. Wherever you look you find them. The blackbirds in the corn fields are not more numerous or more dangerous to the prosperity and prospects of the people than those whom the hon. gentleman has placed on the pension list; and here, in the case of the extra sessional clerks, you find the abuse existing in its most aggravated form.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman has rather widened the scope of the discussion beyond that of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), who made an attack on some of the sessional clerks. With regard to the sessional clerks, the number of them was settled at 25 or 26 on a report from the previous Speaker, which was laid before Parliament, and I think approved by Parliament. The men who held the office at that time were considered as appointed merely for the Session; but it was provided that after that every sessional clerk, if he were considered a satisfactory clerk, although his duties were only for the Session, and although he was only paid for the Session, should have a right to come back here year after year if he proved to be a satisfactory clerk; so that the notion that these men are put on for political purposes I think has faded away. The number was settled by Parliament, and I think was considered on both sides as not excessive; and the proof that it is not excessive is that when Mr. Anglin was Speaker, the number was just twice what it is at this moment. It is 40 now; it was 80 in his time.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman forgets that the number was 120 in his own day. Has he forgotten that there was a list brought down in 1880, containing the names of upwards of 100, I think 118? And he knows that a number of names were struck off before the list was brought down, and put on again after the list was presented to the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. See the progress of reform. The hon. gentlemen, when in power, had 80; now we have got down to 40. I forgot to say, with respect to the three men spoken of by the hon. member for North Wellington, that there is a chief clerk in charge of all these sessional clerks, whose duty it is to see that they are at work the whole day.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Suppose they have nothing to do?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is not their fault. But I believe these men are fully employed. There must be intermittent work during the Session, some days being heavy and some being light. Of course, the hon. gentleman speaks as he has been informed. I do not at all dispute that he has made enquiry, and that the information he gives is what he obtained. It is the duty of the Clerk of this House to see that the chief clerk performs his duty, and I have no doubt he has done so. The hon. gentleman says the clerk has been interfered with. I am a member of the Internal Economy Commission, and I have not heard our clerk say that he has been interfered with in any way. He has never made any such statement to me, and I do not believe he has made it to the Speaker or to any other member of the Commission.

Mr. McMULLEN. I enquired of the chief clerk of the sessional clerks whether it was his duty to see that they were in attendance, and he said it was not, but that it was his duty to see when they were there that they performed their duties. I know that these men have not been there. They always appear on pay day, that is a certainty, and they draw their pay regularly; but I warn the Speaker that if these men are paid in full for this Session, they are getting money for nothing at all.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think this thing might be managed on business principles. When a clerk does any copying day or night, if he made a little memorandum stating that he was engaged so many hours at that work, and what it was for, then every night it could be ascertained what amount of work was done, and who did it; and when that was compiled, it could be found whether a less number of clerks could do the work. I understand that the hon. First Minister says about the work being intermittent, being heavy one day and light another day; but it could in that way be ascertained, on the average, what work was performed. Certainly, what the hon. member for North Wellington has stated could not be allowed. He has simply done his duty, and the matter ought to be attended to.

Mr. TROW. The hon. First Minister says that if they have done nothing it is because there has been nothing for them to do. I would like to know how he accounts for so many returns which have been asked for not being brought down during the Session, if these men have nothing to do? They might have attended to that work.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It would not do to take these men from their work to send them to the different departments to make returns, which might occupy a man steadily for a fortnight or a month.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I trust, as the statement has been publicly made, that the authorities of the House will, to-morrow, inform us what the facts are. There ought to be no difficulty in ascertaining the facts in a matter of that kind, and we shall expect to know what is to be said on the subject to-morrow.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

House of Commons—To pay C. J. Coursol, Esq., M.P., absent through illness, balance of his sessional indemnity and mileage..... $965.40

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The rule applies to a member who is ill, but in the city. This is, of course, adopting a broader rule, and it seems to me that it would be more appropriate to amend the Act in that particular, if every member who falls sick is to receive his sessional indemnity.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Coursol was here attending to his duties, but he was taken very ill, and went home to Montreal, and now lies at the point of death.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Suppose any member was taken ill and obliged to absent himself, is it reasonable that this rule should be made of general application? I call this to your attention, simply because you put in the statute one rule, and once in a while you act differently.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would be very sorry to see the Act altered. Every case should be judged on its own merits. Mr. Coursol was here at the beginning of the Session, but he has been at the point of death almost ever since. If you were to lay down a general rule that a member who happened to get sick should have his indemnity continued, he might make a slight illness the pretext to stay home altogether. The statute is a great check and compels members to attend the House.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I remember calling the attention of the House some two years ago to a case parallel to Mr. Coursol's, the case of the late David Thompson, who was so ill that he was unable to attend the Session, and he never got any of his sessional indemnity. I do not object to this, but if there is a rule for this case it should be applied to others.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If Mr. Thompson's case had been called to the attention of Parliament, he would have received his indemnity.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I called the attention of the House to it at the time, and the hon. the First Minister told me the case was a good one and he would attend to it. There was not only the case of the member for Haldimand, but the case of the member for Lincoln, who was ill that Session. I also drew attention to his case and was told it would be attended to but it was not.

Senate—To pay amount of sessional indemnity to Hon. Mr. Fortin who was prevented by illness from attending Parliament $1,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is not this rather unreasonable? I can understand the case of Mr. Coursol, who attended here and was struck down by illness, but, although we all like Mr. Fortin, it seems to me that it is establishing a risky precedent to give a gentleman who cannot attend at all the full amount of his indemnity.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is not warranted by law, and that is why it is put specially here. But we all know Commodore Fortin, who, for many years, has been a member of Parliament here, and who, since he has been in the Senate, has been very ill. He is thoroughly broken down, and I am afraid he has not long to retain his seat in the Senate. I believe he is in extremis almost, and is now in the hospital at Montreal. I am quite sure the hon. gentleman will not object to this, and we have a precedent from the Senate in the case of Hon. Mr. Christie, who did not attend during the whole Session and whose allowance was paid.

Mr. LAURIER. There is no doubt that the rule laid down by the hon. member for Bothwell would be the best one, but I would object to having the law altered. We should have the rule as it is, and depart from it as occasion requires. In this case I think we should give the indemnity to Mr. Fortin. We know he could not attend at all, and if he had been well enough to come to Ottawa, but would still be compelled to remain in his room, he would have been entitled to his indemnity. He could not come, and, under the circumstances, I do not see why he should not have the indemnity.

To repay the Government of Prince Edward Island the amount paid by that Province annually on account of pensions, from 1st July, 1873, and interest thereon, from dates of payment to 30th June, 1888—
 Sir Robert Hodgson, pension, $4,029.81, interest, $2,094.49..... $6,124 36

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the reason of this?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Under the Union Act we are obliged to pay these pensions, and would have paid them had our attention been drawn to them by the Government of Prince Edward Island. They were overlooked, however, and were paid by that Government, which has now called on us to reimburse them.

To improve the outlet of Sunfish Creek from the Feeder to Grand River..... $ 1,200
 Construction of a bridge across the Feeder, at the Forks Road 4,000
 Construction of dams above and below Dunnville weirs..... 13,650
 $18,850

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I take this opportunity to reply to the question asked by the hon. member for North Ontario as to who is the lockmaster at Fenelon Falls. His name is W. MacCarthy. The construction of dams above and below the Dunnville weirs cost $13,650. This is the approximate or the probable cost of building six dams, one above, one below, and one each on the three waste weirs, also filling out wash-outs with stones, repairing valve rods, uprights, flood gates, &c. The object in building these dams is to improve the three weirs, they being now in bad condition.

Construction of a bridge over the canal between Concessions C and D, Nepean Front..... $7,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is for the construction of a bridge over the Rideau Canal below the railway bridge and opposite the upper part of Archville; it is the site recommended by Mr. Wise.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that not an expensive bridge for the Rideau Canal, which is not a very large one?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I suppose, probably, it is an iron bridge.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How far is it from the city?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A little below the Canada Atlantic bridge and near Archville. It will accommodate a large number of people and bring them in connection with the city.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What has this Parliament to do with that bridge?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is across the Rideau Canal.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the Government should only give liberty to build it, but should not build it themselves.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). This is another expenditure for the benefit of the city of Ottawa of the same kind as those we took exception to the other evening. If the hon. gentleman establishes a precedent of this kind, the probability is that he will have a number of demands from all over the country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It has been the practice to construct bridges across the canals where they were required. When you establish a canal, you cut off the communication.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That will not hold at all. It is quite indefensible to build this bridge. All that should be done is to give permission to build one there.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it is according to law. I think it is according to the Rideau Act. It is a very just provision, where the main road running through a county is interrupted by a public work—a canal or any other public construction—and is broken up, especially in the case of a canal. If the road is cut in two by the canal, surely the township is not obliged to build the bridge. It is right that their communication should not be interrupted, and if it is, it is quite just that the Government should pay for it. That has always been the practice, and I am quite satisfied that such a provision is in the Rideau Act.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There are a number of bridges which, I think, have been constructed by the municipalities along the Rideau, which extends from Kingston to Ottawa. The principle laid down by the Government now will require that the Government either shall have built these bridges or shall make compensation to the municipalities for having built them; and the hon. gentleman may find that this expenditure of $7,000 may lead to a good deal more. Unless I am mistaken, a great number of the bridges along the Rideau have been built by the municipalities at their own expense.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is on new roads.

Mr. SHANLY. This is a concession line.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that, on the old concession lines, the people have a right to these bridges.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then I am to understand that if the road existed prior to the canal and was used as a highway before the canal was built, the Government assume the responsibility of building the bridges?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think so.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then, in regard to all those roads which have come into use since that, the municipalities are to build the bridges?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I suppose the same rule would hold good on the Welland Canal?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No doubt any road which is interrupted by a canal should be restored by the Government.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I understand that, if the hon. gentleman maintains that a well established road, one which has been used as such, is interrupted by the construction of a canal, the Government might be called upon to build a bridge; but, if it was not called upon to build a bridge immediately afterwards, if the road was bridged by the municipality and the responsibility assumed by them for 25 or 30 years, it seems rather extraordinary that the Government should then assume the liability. When these canals were made, the municipalities and the canals were under the same Government. Before the Union, a canal was the same as any other channel and, unless it was understood that the work should be undertaken by the Government and not by the municipality, it does not seem reasonable that the Government should now undertake the work.

Kingston Graving Dock $75,000

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). Is that a Government work or is it let to a company?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is a Government work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where do you propose to build it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is not decided. There are two locations offered, one in the city and one at Portmouth.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think the member for Prince Edward county (Mr. Platt) stated that a graving dock of this kind had been required for some years, but I understood him to say that a private capitalist had commenced the construction of one.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Ob, no.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total cost of this expected to be?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We do not know exactly yet, because the site would have to be selected first in order to ascertain the best site for this dock, and the future cost of the dock will have to be considered at the same time, but I suppose it cannot be less than between $250,000 and $400,000.

Mr. CHARLTON. What size vessels is it intended to make this dock capable of taking in and docking?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The vessels that pass through the canal and come down the St. Lawrence generally come to Kingston, and a portion of them discharge their cargo there. There is no graving dock there where the cargoes are exchanged and we thought this was the best place to put it.

Mr. CHARLTON. Why Kingston? It seems to me that some other point would be better than this which is at the foot of the lakes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. All the shipping interests have settled upon Kingston. The Board of Trade of Toronto, the Board of Trade of Hamilton, and various other commercial bodies have agreed that Kingston is the place for the building of this graving dock. At present, if an injury happens to any vessel she has to be taken across to the United States, and for fear of accidents in the fall, they often go to the United States direct without going to Kingston at all.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is it absolutely necessary that the Government should undertake the cost of this work? In the United States there are docks at Oswego, Buffalo, Cleveland, Toledo, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, and these docks are all built by private companies. Why it is necessary for the Government to undertake the construction of a dock on this side, when a number are built on the other side by private companies, I am unable to understand. It strikes me that this work might be left to the shipping interests of the lakes to provide for themselves.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid they are not able to do that.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I am informed that there is a company already formed in Kingston for this purpose.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I never heard of it.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I understood the member for Prince Edward (Mr. Platt) to say that some sixteen miles east of Picton, a dock was nearly completed, I think it was by Mr. Hepburn.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A graving dock?

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth.) That is his statement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Quite a mistake.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). That is his statement, and that he thought, under those circumstances, it was hardly Mr. BAIN (Wentworth).

fair for the Government to step in and interfere with private enterprise where they had already spent a large sum of money.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no graving dock there, I can assure the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I presume the Government will take charge of it in any case, before the location is settled.

Public Buildings, Ontario..... $17,925

Mr. CHARLTON. Improving ventilation of House of Commons, $4,000—in what way does the Minister propose to improve the ventilation?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This vote is taken in consequence of the complaints of hon. members, and of the suggestions that have been made. I am not in a position to say in what way the money will be used. We will use so much of it as will be required to improve the ventilation between this and next Session. If a plan cannot be found satisfactory to the Government, then, of course, we will not expend it; but I think there are certain improvements that we can make which will benefit the House and improve the ventilation.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am sure the House will say that the money is properly used if the ventilation of the chamber is in any way improved. I ask this question because I feel a deep interest in it, and I hope that the money will be used in such a way as to secure the object for which it is voted. I fear, however, that the sum will be found insufficient to meet the changes that will be essentially necessary to secure the proper ventilation of this chamber. We shall have to adopt some different method of bringing in fresh air to secure an adequate supply. It occurred to me that, if possible, the cheapest way to obviate the difficulty that we labor under here to secure a well ventilated chamber, would be to build a new one, which would have three sides exposed to the air.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As I said the other day, I am ready to undertake a new building as soon as Parliament will give me the money. But the hon. gentleman knows that to erect a new House of Commons will require a large sum of money. We could not erect it in connection with this building without disfiguring it; but if, as I suggested the other day, we were to build it beside the Western Block, where there is a vacant space, we could there build a very good House of Commons, having ventilation and light on three sides, and with all the modern improvements. But, as I said the other day, that will cost a large sum of money; however, if Parliament is ready to undertake it, I suppose the Government will have to find the money. I do not suppose that we could build it for less than half a million.

Mr. CHARLTON. I hope, at all events, the Minister of Public Works will give this matter his best attention, and will succeed in providing some remedy for the difficulty we labor under now with regard to this present Chamber. We have a difficult problem to deal with, no doubt. The situation of the Chamber is such that we cannot let the sunlight in. He may not be able to succeed as well as he might wish, but no doubt the effort might be made. However, I am sure he would have to ask for more money than is asked for here.

Public Buildings, North-West Territories..... $155,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. North-West Mounted Police buildings, $100,000—where are these to be built?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The chief architect has submitted a statement in which I find $25,000 for the Regina riding school; $5,000 for additional barrack room; a new hospital at Regina, $7,000; Medicine Hat, new town station and general repairs, $2,500; Calgary, new building, $26,878; repairs and alterations, $10,000; Fort McLeod, general repairs, $2,000; Fort Saskatchewan, general repairs, $500; Edmonton, new buildings, $10,000; Battleford, new buildings, renewals, repairs, fencing, &c., $5,000; Prince Albert, additional buildings required to complete, fencing and new road to barracks, $3,000. These items, along with contingencies, make up the sum we are asking for.

Mr. LAURIER. We have already voted $27,000 in the same direction. Is there any connection between the two items?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is new. The other amount was for the year that will end in a month or two, and a large portion of it has already been expended.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Was the riding school at Regina totally destroyed, and if so what was the cause?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, and the cause was a defective flue.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I observe it is proposed to vote $15,000 for Governor's residence at Regina. We voted $11,000 two years ago.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is for new buildings. The present building was a portable building, but it is a very poor structure. The Governor could not pass another winter there without repairs, costing $2,000. It would be more economical to build a new building rather than patch up the old one.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The building is made of portable frames carried from Ottawa and Montreal before the railway was built, and another portable wing has been added since. It is a wretched place, and I do not see how the Governor's family live there during the winter. I have occasion to know that their sufferings from the cold in winter are very great. There were 17 stoves going continually, and the inmates could not keep themselves warm. My wife was there during a winter, and although there was a stove in the room, the water froze.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the hon. gentleman sure that the water did not freeze when it was on the stove?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is $15,000 the estimated cost of the new building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is about one-half the cost, the total cost being $30,000.

Harbors and Rivers, Nova Scotia..... $33,250

Mr. LOVITT. In what county is Beaver River?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is in the county of York.

Mr. LOVITT. I desire to call the Minister's attention to a breakwater at Green Cove. It has been there for twenty years, and is the most important breakwater in the county, but part of it has been destroyed. It affords valuable shelter for fishing vessels. I regret there is not an amount in the Supplementary Estimates to place it in proper repair.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will enquire into the matter.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The breakwater mentioned by the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Lovitt) is one that was washed away, and is a very important one. It is a pity to allow it to remain in its present condition, because it will involve a heavier outlay at a very early day. I regret the hon. gentleman has not paid attention to the representations of the hon. member for Yarmouth. It would be much more important to attend to a work of that kind, that is falling into decay, than to proceed with some of the works for which sums are now asked.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The case had escaped my memory; I will take a note of it. If there is an absolute necessity, I will try and attend to it.

Harbors and Rivers, New Brunswick..... $27,750

Mr. MITCHELL. Where is Edgett's Landing?

Mr. FOSTER. In Albert county.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Where is Mizonette?

Mr. FOSTER. In the county of Gloucester.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Where is St. Louis?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In the county of Kent. The vote is for a general landing wharf for shipping interests.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I never heard of any vessel going there, and no vessel will ever go there.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is done, I suppose, to meet the views of the Government supporters, and I recognise the principle that the Government must subsidise their supporters.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount of $10,000, re-vote, for St. John harbor, is to place a quantity of large stones at the outer end of the works, according to the recommendation of the chief engineer, which had been carried away by heavy seas in 1886-87.

Richibucto Protection Works $3,000

Mr. MITCHELL. What are those works for at Richibucto? It appears to me that the money is all going to Kent.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is for works which the chief engineer reports to be necessary for improving the entrance of the Richibucto.

Mr. MITCHELL. I notice that all the grants are for the constituencies of members who support the Administration.

Campbellton Ballast Wharf..... $1,500

Mr. MITCHELL. Are you going to build a $1,500 wharf for ships to discharge their ballast cargoes?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If we do not the ballast will be thrown into the harbor, the same as it was at Dalhousie.

Mr. MITCHELL. Such a thing occurs in Quebec, but it does not occur on the north shore, for they are not allowed to throw ballast into the harbor. I notice that there are eleven votes here for New Brunswick, and not one of them are worth a cent, as far as the interests of the country are concerned. If it manages to get votes for the Government there, it is about as much as it amounts to.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works what is the estimate of the cost of the work at Barrington pier?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The chief engineer says $50,000.

Rivière Ste. Anne de la Pêrade..... $1,000

Mr. LAURIER. What do you propose to do at River St. Anne?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is to continue the channel at the mouth of the river.

Three Rivers Pier..... $10,000

Mr. LAURIER. Where is that to be?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is a continuation of the works the Harbor Commissioners built there. We thought it should be a Government work.

Improvement of entrance channel of River
Thames, Ontario..... $4,000

Mr. CAMPBELL. Before that vote is passed, I would like to say that this is one of the best appropriations that have been made. This work is very much needed. It was asked for by the late representative of the county of Kent, Mr. Henry Smyth; it was also asked for by myself last year; it has been pressed for by the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. Patterson); and the board of trade and the town council have repeatedly urged the matter upon the attention of the Government; and I am very glad indeed that they have made this appropriation. I fear, however, that the hon. Minister is asking for too little; I think he should have made the vote about $10,000 instead of $4,000; but I suppose he has had his engineers investigate and report upon the work. I have a letter from the hon. Minister of Public Works, addressed to Mr. Henry Smyth, as follows:—

" OFFICE OF THE MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS OF CANADA.

" OTTAWA, 14th April, 1888.

" Mr DEAR MR. SMYTH,—

" I am in receipt of your letters of the 15th, 17th and 24th of March, and the 2nd and 4th inst. (the last enclosing a letter from Mr. Samuel Barfoot, President of the Chatham Navigation Company), on the subject of the improvement of the Thames River.

" I have directed my officers to place a dredge at the mouth of the river not later than the first day of May, and as speedily as possible give your county the necessary navigation, and to forward me without delay, a report upon the other improvements which you ask, particularly those spoken of in the communication forwarded by you from Mr. Knight.

" You are aware that there will be no funds available for the permanent work to be done at the mouth of the river, until the first of July next.

" Yours very truly,

" HECTOR L. LANGEVIN.

" HENRY SMYTH, Esq.,
" Chatham, Ont."

It will thus be seen that the Minister promised that this work would be commenced on the 1st of May. I am sorry to say that it has not been commenced yet; and I have only this to ask of the hon. Minister—that seeing that this work is of great interest, not only to the county but to the whole surrounding country, he will at as early a date as possible, see that it is commenced. The prosperity of the town of Chatham depends on the navigation of this river. At present it is impossible to get a vessel in there drawing more than five or six feet of water. A great deal of lumber is brought in there; a large quantity of grain is shipped; large quantities of brick are also shipped from different points along the river. One gentleman told me that he had lost the sale of about a million of brick last fall because he could not get them shipped. I trust that the hon. Minister of Public Works will see that a dredge is put at work at an early day, and have the work completed. I would like to ask him how soon he expects to have a dredge begin the work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. When I wrote that letter I expected that this vote would have been passed in the House before the first of May, and I would have then felt that I had the authority to go on and make some arrangements, knowing how pressing this matter was; but unfortunately delays took place, and not having the money I could not go on with the work. Now that it is voted, I will go on with the work.

Mr. LAURIER.

McGregor's Harbor, protection work $2,000

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Where is McGregor Harbor?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is in North Bruce.

Bayfield Harbor—Repairs..... $1,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the condition of Bayfield Harbor now?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The engineer reports that to restore this harbor to its former state of usefulness, it would be necessary to rebuild the north pier, where the damage has taken place, to repair the upper end and make the harbor a depth sufficient for the accommodation of fishing boats. These repairs are estimated at $5,000, and the cost of dredging, if done by the Challenge, at $1,500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. To render the dredging of any use, you will have to expend a considerable sum on the pier.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This year we will go on with the dredging.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. From the nature of the case, if you go on with the dredging without repairing the other, the work will be undone by the first storm that sweeps in from the North-West.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The engineer states that perhaps some filling will take place, but it will still be good next year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have been there often. The last time I was there, ten feet of sand was washed in, in the course of two or three hours, by a North-West gale. I am certain that unless the clerk of the weather arranges matters to suit the engineer, and if the harbor is dredged out without the pier being repaired, the work will be undone.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It will be well understood that I will make what use of this vote is best, either in dredging or anything else.

Toronto Harbor—Works at eastern entrance, the city having contributed $100,000. $50,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Last year I moved for a return showing the blind bolts that were used in the construction of this work and that were washed away, and all the communications between the Minister of Public Works and the inspecting engineer in charge. That return has not been brought down. In a matter of this kind we should have all the information asked for. The hon. gentleman admitted there had been blind bolts used and that some were in his possession, and he promised to bring down a sample of them and the correspondence.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will take a note of it.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. gentleman has taken no steps with regard to dredging St. John Harbor. Although he said it is a private property and that the corporation are simply trustees, it stands in the same position as other harbors which require the care of the Government, and something should be done towards removing the stuff from the river.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will take a note of this, so as not to forget it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Last Saturday I called attention to the fact that there was no item for improvements in relation to the Horse Shoe Bar at Miramichi, and my hon. friend said he would furnish information with regard to that.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The chief engineer reports that the Horse Shoe shoal was completed in September, 1884, leaving a channel of 20 feet wide and 20 to 21 feet deep at low water, where previously the depth was 16 or 17 feet. At Grande Dune a cut was made 1,020 feet long, 120 feet wide, and 17 to 20 feet deep. No complaints have reached the department since then, nor has the department been informed that boulders exist in the river.

Mr. MITCHELL. I never made such a ridiculous assertion that boulders were in the harbor. The boulders are up the river sixty miles.

Roads and Bridges $85,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Under what principle are the hon. gentlemen going to justify this vote of $10,000 for one-half the cost of the construction of a bridge across Grand River at the village of York? If we are going to construct bridges all through the Dominion of Canada, it is not $10,000 but $2,000,000 that will be required.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This vote is recommended by the chief engineer as an assistance to the county of Haldimand, on account of the increased width and depth of the water way, resulting from the dam built at Dunnville.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There are a great many miles between Dunnville and York. From Dunnville to Cayuga by the river is about 12 miles, and it is not possible that the water could be dammed up beyond Cayuga. After you pass Cayuga, there is a distinct fall between York and Cayuga of about 13 feet, and I do not see how in any way the river can be dammed back by the dam at Dunnville so as to widen the river at York. It seems to me that the statement made by the hon. gentleman's engineers is an impossibility.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman is perfectly right when he says that it is not dammed up ordinarily by the bridge at Dunnville as far as the village of York, which is about twenty miles above, but the evidence of the parties who are residents there, both before and after the construction of the dam at Dunnville, goes very clearly to show that, since the river has been dammed at Dunnville, the ice forms above Dunnville very strongly, that the lighter ice above Cayuga comes down, and in the floods of the spring it forms an ice dam and floods the water back even over the village of York, and the water is flooded completely over the banks there. The evidence goes to show that the cost of bridging the river at York is increased by the dam at Dunnville. Perhaps the hon. gentleman knows Mr. Davis, the county treasurer of York, who has very considerable commercial interests at the village of York. He is a thoroughly reliable man, and he is opposed to me in political matters, and thoroughly in sympathy with the hon. gentleman, and this is what he states:

"During the freshet the water rises about 8 feet. It rose very rapidly twice during the last two years (last year was one of these). A jam formed three or four miles below Cayuga and forced the water back until it ran the reverse way over the dam. I am of opinion that if the river was not dammed the water would not have risen so high. I am not experienced in these matters, but I know that if the dam was not at Dunnville one-tenth part of the ice would not form that now forms, and consequently the water could not be backed up in the same way it now is. The summit level of the Grand River extends from Dunnville to about 18 miles above and forms a pond averaging half a mile in width. The extreme width of this pond is a mile or more in some places. The ice forms all over this and the whole of it has to escape over the dam at Dunnville. The running ice from above gets under the solid ice, at a point near Cayuga and upwards in the narrow part of the river, and there forms a dam which backs the water to York and above it. I consider that a bridge at York is necessary in the interests of the public."

That is the statement of Mr. Davis, and that is borne out by a large number of the residents there, and anyone who knows anything of the river there knows that a great deal of flooding has been caused by the dam at Dunnville. The Government has paid a large sum to owners of lands which have been flooded in consequence of that dam, and to townships for the construction of bridges across streams which have been affected by the action of that dam. I would ask my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works if he has taken into consideration the claim which the county council has made upon the Government for a rebate upon the construction of the Cayuga bridge. The evidence all goes to show that the county has been very badly treated in this matter, that, owing to the existence of this dam, the county has been put to a large expense. For instance, the bridge at Cayuga need not have been within, I think, 15 feet as high as it is at the present time. Owing to the dam, the county was compelled to make a stronger bridge, and a great deal wider bridge than would have been necessary otherwise. A short time after they constructed that bridge, the Government raised the water by increasing the height of the dam at Dunnville, and the result was that the county has had to spend some thousands of dollars to increase the height of the piers in order to let the water under. If my hon. friend was acquainted with all the circumstances, I think he would not object to the vote, but that he would agree with me and with the Government, and with the engineer, that it is perfectly justified on the ground that the dam at Dunnville has caused an increased expense in bridging this river.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is about 40 years since the dam at Dunnville was raised to its present height. I have known that county myself since boyhood, and it has always been understood that the dam at Dunnville had no influence beyond Cayuga; that, I believe, is not disputed; and there are rapids, not of a very formidable character, certainly, but there are actually rapids between Cayuga and York.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes, I admit that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My esteemed friend the late member for Haldimand (Mr. Thompson) had a mill a little distance above Cayuga. Whether the dam which he once made there for the use of his mill, is still in existence, I cannot say; but there is certainly a considerable fall from this point, between York and Cayuga. As to the extent an ice jam may form, I am not prepared to say. But I know that if we grant a vote for this purpose, the Minister of Public Works will have opened the door for an immense number of other demands in other quarters.

Mr. McMULLEN. This bears all the evidence of being a barefaced job. It would never have been put in the Estimates if the county had not been represented by the hon. gentleman opposite. It shows plainly that the Government have done it for the purpose, in the first place, of aiding him in getting elected, and in the second place, of sustaining him in his seat. This vote is in accord with many others that my hon. friend from Northumberland has been complaining about in New Brunswick and other places. Counties that have returned supporters of the Government stand a chance of getting their bridges built, of getting any mortal thing done, no matter what it is. As long as they return member to support the Government they are sure to come in for something. The hon. member for Haldimand had nothing else to aid him to secure the representation of that county, unless he could get the Government to agree to contribute money towards building a bridge. I would like to know if these matters are not under the control of the Local Government. The county of Haldimand is a very close one, and so $10,000 is put in the Estimates to build a bridge in order to secure to the hon. gentleman a continuation of the seat he now occupies. We have too much of this kind of thing. In my county, for instance, there are three post offices in each of which the receipts are in excess of those in a town in another county where the Government are now spending $10,000 to $15,000 to build a post office and custom house, simply because the county sent a representative here to support the Government. If this system is to be carried out, I do not know where it is going to end. It will take all the money the Finance Minister is authorised to borrow, and, if, Session after Session, we are to be called upon for items like this it is going to be a sorry day for this country.

Mr. MONTAGUE. In reply to my hon. friend who last spoke, I thank him for the compliment he has paid me, in saying that it was my presence here that got this grant. I am sure if the hon. gentleman knew the circumstances, if he knew how the people had been annoyed by the existence of that dam, his spirit of fair play would have led him to admit that this item is justified. I do not desire to characterise what he has said, because the hon. gentleman, I understand, is not acquainted with the county.

Mr. McMULLEN. I mean to say that the promise of this vote was one of the reasons which secured the election of the hon. gentleman. I can judge from what I have seen in the past, and from the general tenor of the votes that have been going through, and I believe this is in accordance with all the rest. I do not say that it was altogether because of the hon. gentleman's ability; no, it is because he is always sure to vote right.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That claim made by the county council of Haldimand concerning their bridge, I have not been able to take up and submit to my colleagues, for want of time; but it is a matter which will be taken up at the close of the Session.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). Will the hon. member for Haldimand tell us if there has been any estimate of the cost of the bridge?

Mr. MONTAGUE. The county council passed a resolution, I think, in the early part of the year, which was forwarded to the Minister, offering to build half of the bridge if the Government would build the other half. Since that time they have formulated a claim upon the Government for the half of Cayuga bridge. I think the Government employed a gentleman named Long, a provincial land surveyor and an engineer in Dunnville, to make an estimate of the amount which the Government were indebted to the county of Haldimand upon the Cayuga bridge, and I think he told me personally that his report showed that the county had a just claim upon the Government to the extent of $18,000, without interest. I know from hearsay that the estimated cost of the York bridge is about $20,000. The county claims that the Government should build the whole bridge in lieu of their giving up their claims to the Cayuga bridge, and I believe if hon. gentlemen opposite understood all the circumstances, they would agree it was correct.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have no doubt that if the county was to wait a few years until another election took place and again returned the hon. gentleman, the Government would build the whole bridge for them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not exactly see how the ice jam or anything else can affect the river at Cayuga. From the statement made by my hon. friend from South Oxford, it seems that the water by the dam at Dunnville is not backed up the river further than Cayuga. The hon. gentleman who represents the county of Haldimand says that the ice jam caused the water sometimes to back further still in the spring. Well, Mr. Thompson's mill is above Cayuga, the river is dammed there for the purpose of the mill. Now, how is it possible that the dam at Dunnville can affect the river above another dam? The water has never backed over that dam at Mr. Thompson's mill, in consequence of the dam built at Dunnville. Then, if that is so, by no possibility can the dam at Dunnville be backing water directly or in consequence of any ice jam affecting the river up at York. According to the plan submitted, there is thirteen feet fall between York and Cayuga; there is the dam at Thompson's mill above Cayuga, and that dam backing water part of the way to York might possibly cause an ice jam that would affect the river at York, although the hon. gentleman does not so represent it, and has no reason to suppose it does. But that dam intervening, it makes it utterly impossible that any ice jam caused by the dam at Dunnville could affect the river at York, and that being the case, no claim can arise in consequence of the dam at Dunnville for the construction of a bridge, by the Parliament of Canada, over the river at York. It is extraordinary the Government should undertake a work of this sort. How is it that twenty-one years have elapsed since the Union, and this claim has not been put forward before? How is it that the people of Haldimand never became aware that they had such a claim; how came it to be presented; who suggested it? There are rivers all over the Dominion that require to be bridged. The practice has been to bridge them at the expense of the community that uses them, and if you depart from that rule and undertake the construction of such works at the expense of the country at large, you break down all distinctions, not only between the Dominion and the Provinces, but between the Dominion and the municipalities, and all the advantages supposed to arise from our form of Government fall to the ground. What is the use of having Provincial Governments and municipal institutions which undertake works for the benefit of the people, if the Dominion Government can come down and ask appropriations for the benefit of the people in any particular locality? It is a monstrous proposition. It was reported in the papers, at the time that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) asserted to the people of Haldimand that, if he were elected, he would secure an appropriation for this purpose, and that if a member of a different political complexion was returned, such would not be secured.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Who is your informant?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It was so stated in the newspapers at the time, and it would not have been stated if the hon. gentleman had not said it or some one on his behalf. Now the hon. gentleman boasts that he has such influence with the Government that he is able to secure this appropriation. It is to be regretted that the Government are not restrained from appropriating public money, that is supposed to be for the general good, to undertakings connected with a particular municipality. This is a most improper appropriation, because everything goes to show that it is an appropriation for a work upon a pretext that has no foundation whatever in fact.

Mr. MONTAGUE. So far as this matter is concerned I suppose the residents of York, and those who are prominent in municipal politics in Haldimand, probably know as much about the question as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), though they may not know as much in regard to the science of the flowing of water. Evidence, however, is quite clear in opposition to the statement made by the hon. gentleman that water has not flowed over the dam. The statement is made by 17 prominent persons who reside in York, belonging to both political parties, that the water has flowed over the dam time and time again; and I could read to him, if it were necessary, the report of the local superintendent upon the canal, which shows that the river has widened in the spring from 350 feet to between 600 and 700 feet, and when the ice jam formed below the village of Cayuga the water was forced over the dam at York. I think if the hon. gentleman understood all the circumstances he would hold a contrary opinion to that which he has expressed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like some explanation in regard to the item of $45,000 new iron truss bridge, to replace the Union Suspension bridge, Ottawa.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Last Session the question in connection with this bridge came up. It was understood that we would have to leave it for another year without replacing it, the chief engineer having stated that with some care it might last another year. Since that time he has warned the Government that the suspension bridge could not be relied upon for the future, and that we must provide to replace it with a fixed bridge. He has estimated the cost at $45,000. We intend, during the summer, to make all necessary preparations, and when the ice takes on the river in the winter, we will have the traffic go over the river and we will pull down the cables and erect the new bridge.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Please give some explanation in regard to $2,000 for McLaren's bridge.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is to make provision for an appropriation to the county of Carleton to assist in the construction of an iron bridge over the Rideau River, on the highway leading to Rideau Hall.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This system of subsidising the people of Ottawa, who should be able to carry out their own works, is a most improper one and opens the door to every imaginable demand of a similar kind from other places. There is no more reason in admitting this claim than there would be a claim from any municipality in the seven Provinces. I warn the hon. gentleman that, though this sum is comparatively small, the passage of such votes does more to injure the whole system of our confederate Government than almost anything else we can do.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The property at Rideau Hall and grounds form nearly one-half of that municipality, and from them the municipality does not obtain one cent. Under these circumstances the Government thought they could grant $2,000 to assist in giving access to that municipality, and therefore to their own property.

Paving Wellington Street, Ottawa..... $5,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Could the hon. gentleman tell us what is the reason for asking this vote?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In the arrangement we made with the corporation of Ottawa about the bridges and the street in front of the Parliament buildings, it is stipulated that the street should be kept in good order by the Government. We have tried macadamising, but the traffic is so great that we think it would be better to pave it, so that it would last for five, or six, or seven years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Pave it with what?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We have not decided yet whether it would be wood or stone, but it will be whatever is best under the circumstances.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I suppose the Government has decided to do this, and it is not worth while questioning it any longer, but it seems to me one of the most objectionable items that could be placed in the Estimates. I cannot see on what principle this Parliament is called upon to vote those large sums for the city of Ottawa. It would seem that the hon. gentleman, having lived here so long in the Government, has conceived an attachment for this city, and wishes to spend the public money upon it. They must remember that every other part of the country has just the same claims on the public funds. The Government are building a bridge here over the Rideau and paving streets, and I would remind the hon. gentleman that his constituents have just as good a right to claim a bridge as the city of Ottawa has. He has made no explanation about this expenditure, which would be accepted as satisfactory before any court. It is late in the Session, and I do not wish to detain the House, but I think it is an item that should be voted upon in concurrence, because the Government may charge us afterwards, as they did before, with the remark: You spoke against it, but you did not vote on it. I was in hopes that after the strong expressions of opinion made from this side of the House that the Minister of Public Works would have seen his way to take this sum from the Estimates. He surely cannot in his own mind see any just grounds for asking us to vote this sum. He is opening the door for similar applications from all parts of the Dominion which he cannot resist, because when you once establish a precedent you do not know what expenditure it is going to involve. I regret that the hon. gentleman will not be here always, and in future those who follow him will point to the action of the Government here to establish a similar claim. I think it is an extravagant waste of public money to vote this.

Mr. BARRON. Surely the advantage to the city of Ottawa of having the Government buildings here is quite sufficient without asking the country at large to keep up their roads and bridges. It is quite true that the Rideau grounds are not taxed, but the city of Ottawa gets an equivalent without this expenditure, inasmuch as it is the seat of Government. If the country at large is going to be asked to keep up the roads and bridges of the city of Ottawa, there are other cities which will come forward and say: We will take the seat of Government; we will put up buildings and exempt them from taxes, and not ask the Government to keep up our roads and bridges. Already there has been, as we know, efforts made to have the seat of Government elsewhere. I am quite sure that this practice will give rise to ill-feeling more than ever, and it is a very bad precedent to establish, for the public at large to keep up those roads and bridges for the city. I do not think this money should be voted for the purpose.

Mr. MITCHELL. I must express regret that the Minister of Public Works has not thought fit to give me that telegraph line along the shore of the Miramichi River from Newcastle to Tracadie. I spoke to the hon. gentleman about it, and I hope he has got a note of it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, I took a note of it.

Telephone communication between Wolfe Island, Lake Ontario, and the mainland.....$2,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On this item I think something must be said, and a good deal ought to be said, although we may not be able to say it all to-night. It appears to me that it is introducing a new and most improper departure to establish this telephonic connection. On the telegraph communication there is not much to be said, but to ask this Parliament to establish communication between Wolfe Island, opposite Kingston, and the mainland, appears to me to be a very ras-cally job indeed. Why, in the name of all that is wonderful, should Canada be asked to support telephonic communication from an island in the St. Lawrence, two or three miles from Kingston, in connection with that town? There is no possible defence or excuse for this. It is true that it is in the immediate vicinity of my home, but that cannot make it any better.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The people of that island have got no communication with the outer world.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They have got the telegraph.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is the only thing we can do for them. We cannot give them a railway or anything of the kind, and this is the only thing they have asked from us.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is just as atrocious a job, although not a big one, as ever was perpetrated. There is no earthly reason, or ground, or excuse, why you should give telephone communication to an island in the St. Lawrence opposite Kingston. There is no justification in the world for it, and nothing to be said for it except that you have no other way to spend public money there; and that is what the hon. gentleman in substance says—we cannot find any other way to bribe them except to give them telephone communication. I must say the hon. gentlemen appear to me to be laying their heads together in order to find ways and means to establish various things which will cost this country hundreds of thousands and millions of dollars. If you choose to do this kind of thing for every little municipality because you cannot find any other way to spend money for it, there will be no end of applications for such grants. The hon. gentleman has not advanced one solitary reason for this. These people have ample railway communication; and a steamer goes between there and Kingston every two or three hours. There is absolutely no ground for this. It is a regular job—a job of the worst kind.

Telegraphic connection of Bonilla Point with Victoria, British Columbia. $15,000

Mr. JONES. (Halifax). What is that?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is to establish a telegraph line at Bonilla Point, where the vessels going into the Strait of Fuca must all pass, and by this means their arrival will be announced. Then, on account of the wrecks on the Pacific coast between that point and the entrance to Barclay Sound, it will also be very serviceable in protecting life and property, because if a wreck happens there, a notification of it can immediately be telegraphed, and vessels can be obtained from Esquimalt or Victoria to go to the rescue.

Examination in connection with spring floods at Montreal and vicinity $2,500

Mr. MITCHELL. Is there any report on that yet?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The reports have been laid before the House, except the last one, which I have been told is coming in a few days.

Steam communication on Lakes Huron and Superior. $12,000

Mr. MITCHELL. What is the explanation of that?

Mr. McLELAN. This is for the transportation of the mails at twelve or fifteen points along the Georgian Bay, as far as the Sault.

Mr. MITCHELL. What vessels get the subsidy? Who are the proprietors of them?

Mr. McLELAN. I do not know the proprietors. There are several lines. The Northern Transportation line last year had a portion, and there is another company running in the same direction.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the hon. gentleman should have been prepared to tell us what companies are running, what points they run from, what ports they touch at, what vessels they employ and everything connected with it. The information should be definite and specific.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This has been in operation for many years.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is all the more reason why the hon. gentleman should give us the information.

Mr. SPROULE. I may tell the hon. gentleman that there are two lines, one from Collingwood and one from Owen Sound, and that they call at all the ports on both shores from Owen Sound to Sault Ste. Marie.

Steam communication with the Magdalen Islands.... $7,800

Mr. MITCHELL. What is the meaning of this?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This has been in operation for many years, between Pictou and the Magdalen Islands. It is the only regular means of mail communication as the hon. gentleman knows.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT

Steam communication between Halifax and St. John, via Yarmouth and Port Medway..... $7,500

Mr. LOVITT. I see that is the only item in the whole list of subsidies that has been reduced; and, in addition, the provision that the vessels must call at Port Medway is added. The hon. gentleman knows that this line has been in existence for the last ten years, and that with the subsidy of $10,000 vessels have been calling at Lunenburg, Shelburne, Liverpool and Yarmouth, and other ports. Port Medway is only 9 miles from Liverpool. I think the least the Government can do is to strike out Port Medway.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not intended that the steamer shall call at Port Medway, but this is inserted for the purpose of requiring her to make connection with that point. There is a small steamer which has a small subsidy from the Local Government, and $500 of this vote will enable her to make the connection, which I quite agree with the gentleman is otherwise quite impracticable. The hon. gentleman says that the subsidy has been received for ten years. That is quite true, but you often subsidise a line until it is self-sustaining, and then you do away with the subsidy altogether. And we believe that a subsidy of $7,000 to this line will be quite sufficient, and we added the $500, for the purpose of enabling the company to make connection with a small steamer at Port Medway, so as to give communication with that point, but it was not the intention to require the vessel to go in there at all.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Does the hon. gentleman think it is fair, not only to reduce the amount but also to require the company to employ another vessel? You will observe that this is the only item that has been reduced, and they have no means of communication backwards and forwards except by water until the railways are finished, and I hope the Government will see their way clear to maintain the original grant until the railway is finished between Lunenburg and Liverpool.

Subsidy to steamer between Campbellton and Gaspé and intermediate ports..... $12,500

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I notice the steamer Admiral only runs to Dalhousie.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Now that the railway runs to Dalhousie, she makes connection there.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The Campbellton people complain of this, and if she gets a subsidy to go to Campbellton, she ought to go there.

Gen. LAURIE. I ask the Government if they could not continue the subsidy to the line running from Charlottetown to Halifax. The merchants of Halifax, generally, maintain it is most desirable it should be continued.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman made strong representations, backed by a great body of the merchants of Halifax. It is most difficult to take off any subsidy as a rule, but the hon. gentleman will see that there are many subsidies connected with the port of Halifax. There is communication with Prince Edward Island by railway from Halifax to Pictou, and a subsidised line of steamers from Pictou to Charlottetown. There is another subsidised line to Shediac and Summerside, and there is so many of these lines of communication that we are anxious to remove these subsidies wherever possible, and this is one we thought might, under the circumstances, be dispensed with. It was a matter of personal regret to myself, because it interferes with the interest of parties who have been maintaining the line, but the Government did not feel they were warranted in granting that subsidy, and I believe there is a company being formed for the purpose of having a service that will not require a subsidy.

For direct steam communication Antwerp or Germany or both..... $30,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We struck out the subsidies of $24,000 each for direct service, the one to Hamburg and the other to Antwerp, and have given a subsidy of $30,000 instead, on condition that an equal amount is contributed by the Belgian Government, so as to establish a first class line of steam communication between Belgium and Canada. Strong representations were made by people in Montreal against the reduction of the two subsidies granted for many years to the White Cross and the Munderloh lines, and it was with regret we were not able to comply with their wishes. We felt that these lines were practically being subsidised by the Government to compete with private capitalists, who were performing, to a large extent, the same service, and we felt we were not warranted in continuing this subsidy, but would contribute instead $30,000 to a first class line, on condition that the Government of Belgium would contribute an equal amount. Unless they do that not a dollar of subsidy will be expended by us.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Will the terminal point be in Canada.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The terms are that we must have a direct service both ways. At present, the White Cross and the Munderloh lines are competing with private capitalists, and there was very strong ground to complain against that system. We require this line to be a direct line from Germany or Antwerp, or both, to Canada direct both ways, not calling at any other places either going or coming.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Have they not been in the habit of going in the winter to the American ports?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, but we do not permit that. They must make the Canadian ports their terminal ports, winter and summer.

Gen. LAURIE. I hesitate to press any other matter upon the Government, but the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny), has asked me to call the attention of the Minister to the strong feeling which exists in favor of a subsidy for a line of steamers to the West Indies. It is rather a false position for me to be placed in, to press this on the Government, but, from my own point of view, I think it is a very desirable line; and, perhaps, if the terms upon which the subsidy to the Antwerp line should not be met by similar terms being given by the Government on the other side of the Atlantic, I would suggest that it may be possible that this money might be applied to develop a line of communication with the West Indies, which would certainly develop our trade very largely. I know there is an opposition to it, but it is believed, and most of us believe, that it would build up a trade which would be of great advantage, and that belief is held not only in the city of Halifax but in the ports along the coast. Those who are connected with the West India trade think that it is a trade that might legitimately be developed, and, as the Minister of Finance mentioned, in his speech in producing the Budget, that there were hopes that they might give some inducement to establish a line between Halifax or St. John and the West Indies, we hoped the Government would see their way to carry that out, but I see there is no provision for it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Is the French subsidy on the same terms as the Belgian subsidy?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; I regret to say it is not. The matter had not been considered so carefully then as it has been since. That French company is required to run a direct line from France to Canada, but it is permitted to call at an English port on its return voyage, but not when coming this way.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It has to make its terminal points in Canada.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). My hon. friend from Shelburne (Gen. Laurie) has spoken in reference to the subsidy for a line of communication with the West Indies, and I regret that the Government did not see their way clear to accede to the wishes of the delegation that waited upon them in favor of that project. I agree with my hon. friend that, if the Belgian Government do not agree to this proposal, this money should be applied to the development of that line, which should be a joint line from St. John and Halifax, which has been so strongly pressed upon the Government from both these cities.

Mr. O'BRIEN. This is not a Maritime Province question altogether, and, representing an Ontario constituency, I think it is a matter of great importance to the producers of agricultural and other produce in Ontario to have our trade with the West Indies encouraged as much as possible, and I think it is much more important for us to have a line of steamers to the West Indies than it is to have one either to France or to Belgium.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I do not understand, when the hon. gentleman knows that this vote for the French line is being renewed every year, on what principle the Government are not able to change that arrangement and to dictate their terms. They should place it in the same line with the German line.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That was a contract for five years, except in a certain contingency.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am glad to hear the hon. member for Shelburne (Gen. Laurie) recommending this trade, because the recommendation comes from a class of persons who know nothing whatever about the trade of the West Indies, and the hon. gentleman has made a representation as to the people along the coast being interested in this line, which is utterly at variance with the facts. Every merchant in the county of Shelburne, which the hon. gentleman represents, every merchant in the county of Lunenburg, who is connected with the West Indies, signed a document directly at variance with the statement which the hon. gentleman has made; so I would suggest to him in future to confine his remarks to matters with which he is familiar, and with which he has some acquaintance, and not to interfere with those about which he knows nothing.

Gen. LAURIE. I generally speak of matters with which I am familiar, and I generally speak with some authority to sustain me. I have in my hands a statement of the leading firm of Lockeport. I spoke this evening on behalf of the junior member for Halifax, to a certain extent, but also on my own part; but, if I attempted to represent the city of Halifax, the hon. gentleman must be thanked for attempting to represent Shelburne county. I think I am quite prepared to represent Shelburne county yet myself. I have here a letter from the leading exporting firm in Lockeport, which is the largest exporting place in the county of Shelburne. The writer says:

"Have also noticed a move for a line of steamers between Canada and the West Indies which think is recommendable, as every chance for opening up trade should be the first care of the Government, seeing that our neighbors are always on the alert to do so."

Mr. JONES (Halifax). From whom is that?

Gen. LAURIE. That is signed by J. and F. Locke. My hon. friend knows them well. They are competitors with him in the West India trade.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Every firm in Lockeport signed the statement against it. I do not know what they may write to the hon. gentleman now.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, you do, you have heard it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I do not know for what reason they should make that statement, but every firm in Lockport signed against it, and when I come here and have to discuss matters of business with persons who—not wishing to be disrespectful—have no acquaintance with the subject or with the nature of our trade with the West Indies, and who from their training and experience have no knowledge or experience of the matter, —

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think my hon. friend from Shelburne was mistaken in saying that I held out hopes, in making my financial statement to the House, that this subsidy would be provided for this Session. I did not intend to make any such statement. I explained a year ago that we were very anxious to establish a line of steam communication with the West Indies. And I explained that there were two or three difficulties in the way. One was that we proposed during the recess to be in communication with the Government of Spain in relation to a treaty for extending the trade between Cuba and Porto Rico and Canada, and that we felt it was not wise that we should anticipate those negotiations by providing a line of steam communication that we might make substantial use of in those negotiations when they were taken up. When I went to London, after the close of the Session, I was visited by the Spanish Minister, who communicated to me, in the first instance in writing, and afterwards requested an interview. I had a lengthened interview with him on the subject. He intimated that the Government of Madrid was quite ready to enter into negotiations for enlarged trade relations with Canada. I told him that we did not propose to go on with those negotiations, because I found they had extended the time for bringing the modus vivendi with the United States to a termination, in such a way as to lead me to suppose that they were still negotiating with the United States. If any such extended treaty as Spain had negotiated with the United States were entered into, it would be quite useless to make any such arrangement as Canada proposed to make with Spain; and I proposed, therefore, to allow the matter to remain in abeyance until that matter was brought to a termination. I believe, the 1st July will find that matter finally concluded, that the modus vivendi with the United States will be abandoned, and that we will then be in a position to resume these negotiations, with a fair prospect of making arrangements that will be greatly beneficial to Canada by the extension of our trade with Cuba and Porto Rico. I did not think it was wise to interrupt this line of steam communication, to which we knew Spain attached great importance, until we entered upon these negotiations. I may say to the hon. gentleman that we had a very large deputation from the city of St. John, who, I am afraid, were treated with scant courtesy by the hon. member for Halifax, who intimates that this large and what he supposes was an intelligent and influential deputation was a party deputation. I assumed that deputation represented, not the Conservative party, but all parties in St. John; that the deputation that came to the Government asking for the establishment of steam communication with the West Indies, was not a party deputation, but that it represented the mercantile sentiment of the city of St. John, embracing both parties. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the greatest importance was attached to their statements. They were told that we had sent, at their request, a delegate to the Argentine republic and Brazil, and that he would collect additional information; that step was one to which we attached great importance; and that as Halifax and St. John were combined in their application to the Government to establish communication between these two points, and different portions of the West India Islands, and, perhaps, embracing the Spanish West Indies, the Government would give that subject the most careful consideration during recess, and we would be able, at the next Session, to provide for that service. We recognise the great value of taking means—the same as the United States have taken—by steam communication, to expand our trade with both the Spanish and the British West Indies, and with the southern countries. Now, suppose this vote is not taken, suppose the Government of Belgium does not provide an adequate amount, then we would not be able to touch a dollar of that money for an entirely different service. You must have the money voted for that service. I quite agree with the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) that the service that is now under consideration is of much greater importance than this continental service to which attention has been drawn. That subsidy may not be used, and it is, perhaps, doubtful whether it will be, with the stringent conditions attached to it, because the parties who approached us on behalf of the Belgian Government, asked that they might have permission to come during winter, at all events, to an American port as well as to a Canadian port. They have been informed that they must give an equal amount of subsidy to that which we vote, that the voyage must be a direct voyage, touching no place except between the continent and Canada, and that the ports, both summer and winter, must be terminal. Under these conditions it is perhaps unlikely that the vote will be used, but, in any event, I do hope that the Government will be able at the next Session to provide for what I am certain is calculated to benefit not only Halifax and St. John, but Canada as a whole.

Mr. JONES (Halifax).

Steam service between the United States and Victoria, B. C.

For steam communication between Canso, Arichat, Guysboro', Port Hood and Mabou, and such other places between above limits as may be agreed upon, touching daily at Port Mulgrave, and also to provide for continuance of service during winter, on the Port Mulgrave and Canso section $5,000

Mr. MITCHELL. I see the Government have left the steam service between the United States and Victoria, B. C. Is there no subsidy there now?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will just mention that, on Concurrence, we may have something to say on that point; we will take it as in committee.

CAUGHNAWAGA RESERVE.

Mr. DOYON asked, For what purpose did the Government cause a survey to be made of the Caughnawaga Reserve, in the county of Laprairie? When do they intend to carry out their plans in relation to the said reserve? Is it their intention to lay before this House the report of the operations of Mr. McLea Walbank, as to the survey of Caughnawaga?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The survey of the Caughnawaga Reserve was ordered in the interests of the Indians occupying the said reserve in order that a fair distribution of the land composing it might be made among the members of the band. The Indians entitled to land upon this reserve have been located for various lots, and as soon as full returns of survey have been received location tickets will be issued. I am not aware of there being any objection to lay before Parliament the report of the operations of the surveyor as soon as the same has been received.

Mr. DOYON asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to allow the inhabitants of the Caughnawaga Reserve to make an election of chiefs or councillors, in pursuance of the Indian Advancement Act? If so, when do they intend to grant them such permission?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government have been asked by a number of the Indians of Caughnawaga that they should be allowed to hold an election of councillors under the provisions of the Indian Advancement Act, and the question as to the time at which it will be best that such election should be held is at present receiving consideration.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House until this morning at ten o'clock.

Motion agreed to; and the House adjourned at 1.35 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 22nd May, 1888.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Ten o'clock.

PRAYERS.

INDEMNITY TO MEMBERS.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I move, seconded by Mr. Small:

That the accountant be authorised to pay their full sessional indemnity to Mr. Platt, member for Prince Edward county, and to Mr. Roome, member for West Middlesex, subject to the usual deductions for absence since taking their seats.

Mr. SPEAKER. I question the regularity of this motion, although the House may do what they like.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think if that is done—I am not against doing it—Mr. Edwards, Mr. Godbout and Mr. Campbell should be placed on the same footing.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

To provide for erection of piers and lighthouse in the Lower Traverse River (on account, estimated cost, $100,000) $10,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How is it that a single lighthouse, unless the pier is one of extraordinary dimensions, comes to cost $100,000?

Mr. FOSTER. For a number of years we have had a lighthouse in this river. The passage there is a very difficult one, and the current extremely swift. The lightship which cost $45,000, was run down and sunk, and these lightships are very liable to be sunk at that point. It will cost $30,000 or $40,000 to put a new lightship in position, and instead of having a temporary lightship, it was thought an opportune time to build a permanent pier and put a fixed light and fog-alarm on it. That will cost probably $80,000; the first cost will be greater than that of the lightship, but the advantages are so largely in favor of the fixed light that its ultimate cost will be considerably less.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is a shoal in the centre of the channel at this place, and the channel is very narrow, and the lightship is liable to be run down. I have no doubt that the pier is very necessary in the interest of navigation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there any fear of the pier itself being swept away?

Mr. FOSTER. My engineers and other engineers in Quebec agree that it is feasible to build it. Of course, it will require very careful consideration.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is feasible to build, but it is quite uncertain what the effect will be. The ice there is very strong and runs with a great deal of force.

Mr. LOVITT. I think it will be found cheaper in the end to build a stationary lighthouse.

Manitoba Indians—Additional sum required for erection and equipment of two industrial schools in Manitoba. $14,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do you propose to do with these young Indians—are you going to train them for mechanical or agricultural pursuits?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. General industrial purposes. It is found that the common schools are of comparatively little value. The young Indian learns to read and write, and then goes back to his tribe, and again becomes a savage. The object is to get the young men and the children severed from the tribe as much as possible, and civilise them and give them a trade. There is also provision made for girls. The system has proved very successful in the United States, and is proving successful in the North-West. The system has been at work for three years there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do the children go back to the tribe?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, we endeavor to discontinue that as much as possible. The young men when trained can get their homesteads, and if they can get white women or educated Indian women as wives, they sever themselves from their tribes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If they do not go back to the tribe, what good is gained, the number instructed is so extremely small.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Still it is better we should save these youths rather than run the great risk of sending them back. A little leaven will not leaven the lump of the band.

Mr. MITCHELL. I see an item to pay Rev. Mr. Richard for services to the Indians of New Brunswick, $200. For several years I made diligent efforts for Mr. Richard, but could not succeed, and am glad to see somebody has got some justice for him.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is the cause of this vote. With his usual persuasiveness, he got me to give a sum to the Rev. Mr. Banff. That was a new departure, and we had to do the same with regard to Mr. Richard.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose the Government do not alienate any minerals found on Indian reserves but retain them for the present at all events?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is the general rule.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it the invariable rule?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, it is not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think for the present it ought to be the rule that valuable minerals on Indian reserves should not be alienated until the country gets better settled.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In some portions of the country, the coal lands are sold at the same price as those which are not on Indian reserves.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What becomes of the money ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is funded for the benefit of the band.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems to me that, in the present sparsely settled condition of the country, considering that, in the matter of the Indian reserves, we are very strictly trustees, we ought to reserve those mineral lands.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think if we get a fair price for them, and fund them for the benefit of the band, we are performing our duties as trustees. It would be a great pity to lock up a good mineral region simply because it happened to be on an Indian reserve. You cannot get royalties paid, because the people can go across the line and get this land there at $10 an acre.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They will not do that very long.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They will not be able to get large areas, but they would be able to get small areas at the regular selling price. I do not think we can do better in this matter than to follow the example of the United States. As far as I have seen I think the Indian Department of the United States has been conducted with a desire to benefit the interests of the Indians.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see an amount of $3,700 to pay for the dwelling and other houses owned by Indian agent R. J. N. Pither at Fort Frances, which he had to leave for the use of his successor at that agency. The dwelling house may be reasonable enough, but what about the other houses ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are all outbuildings. There is one building to shelter the Indians, where they can stay when they come to the agency, and there are other outbuildings.

Indians—British Columbia $11,317 64

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is perhaps the most proper moment to call the attention of the House to the unfortunate removal of Mr. Duncan's flock, or a large number of them, from the reserves in British Columbia to Alaskan Territory. I have not visited that place myself, but I have always understood that Mr. Duncan was one of those rare and very few men who have succeeded in civilising the Indians under their charge, that these Indians had made enormous progress; they had repeatedly been referred to in the reports which have been laid on the Table by the Ministers, and I think by their predecessor, my hon. friend (Mr. Mills) as affording an extraordinarily good example of what could be done by patience and kindness in dealing with these people. Now we find from some cause or other that settlement has been broken up, and a very large number, if not all, of those Indians have been transferred to American territory. We ought to have some explanation from the Government as to what they know about that state of things.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. gentleman will find all the particulars in the annual report. It is a very unfortunate affair altogether, but it is quite beyond the control of the Dominion Government. Mr. Duncan first went there as a lay reader, sent by the Church Missionary Society of England. He has been very successful, he is a man of great administrative ability, and he really made an exceptionally good settlement there. He employed those Indians in the pursuits of white men, especially in tanning and similar pursuits. The odium theologicum arose there, which is the most uncontrollable of all sorts of animosities.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Worse than political ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have seen a good deal of that odium, and it is certainly a very different thing from Christian unity. Mr. Duncan, took, I think, peculiar views on religious matters, and severed himself from the church in which he had been. It seems that, years and years ago, when British Columbia was a Crown colony, Sir James Douglas granted a patent to the Missionary Society, or to the bishop as representing that society, of two acres of land. The Missionary Society sent a clergyman there. I think the bishop went there himself. That was resisted by the Indians and by Mr. Duncan. He set himself up to oppose the use of those two acres by the English Church bishop. The British Columbia Government said: We must sustain the law, these two acres were a Crown grant to the church, and they must be allowed to be in peaceful possession of them. The animosities became very great, and the Indians took up the quarrel. I may say that the Indians are not by any means unanimous in regard to this, but a majority followed Mr. Duncan. A very considerable minority, however, adhered to the system established by the Church Missionary Society, and a most unwholesome state of things arose. They began to pull down the houses, and Mr. Duncan, according to the report of law officers, broke the law. I may say that when I was in England I tried to mediate, and to have matters settled. I saw the leading officers of the Church Missionary Society. Mr. Duncan was in England at the time, and I offered him that if he would try and settle with the society, I would recommend his appointment as Indian agent for the north-east coast. He seemed inclined at one time to take it up, but in some way or other we could not come to terms. Then, I am sorry to say, Mr. Duncan took the extreme step of advising the Indians to resist the laying out of their reserves, insisting that the country belonged to the Indians, and that they had never surrendered anything.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is your doctrine.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, he carried that into practice, and refused to allow the surveyors to lay out reserves. I may say that Mr. O'Reilly was sent there with intimation that both the Dominion and the Provincial Governments desired that the most liberal terms should be made with the Indians, but they would not listen to anything. Mr. Duncan then, finding that the British Columbia Government were resolved to carry out the law, induced the Indians to go with him to Alaska, and they commenced, in the most wanton way, to pull down the buildings and improvements at Metlakahla, and some of the materials they carried off to Alaska. They made a complete waste of the whole thing, in fact there was a sort of civil war in that settlement. I believe the Indians, a good many of them, repented going to Alaska, because they had not found everything couleur de rose there, and they are returning in small parties to Metlakahla. It is a grievous thing, because Mr. Duncan certainly did great service when he first went there, but he had been so long governing the Indians in that whole region like a dictator, that he could not submit to the law.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is that the effect of long rule and government ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is, when it is quite unchecked by the second and third parties. They had not a second or third party. If they had had a third party, especially one headed by the hon. gentleman, I do not think there would have been so great an autocracy established.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No, that is not the reason, it is when there is no check inside the party, as in the case of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think what the hon. gentleman has said, has shown that it is because there was not a second or third party that all the mischief arose. Now, Mr. Duncan, I believe, is the most successful white man that has ever dealt with the Indians during this generation. He has had remarkable success in civilising the Indian population, in inducing them to adopt the habits of an industrial and civilised community. I think it is very unfortunate that the Government should have meddled with the theological disputes between Mr. Duncan and the Church Society.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is just what we did not do.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). In my opinion all the difficulties have grown out of the meddlesome oversight which the Government undertook to exercise in connection with the Indian lands. If they had not offered their services as umpire, and interfered between Mr. Duncan and the bishop, it is probable the difficulties would not have arisen; and the Indian population, who had the greatest confidence in Mr. Duncan, and the vast majority of whom stood by him, would have continued to stand by him, and the bishop who interfered, would have been compelled to withdraw. Now, I do not think the Government have anything to do with the theology of the Indian population. It was none of their business whether Mr. Duncan was orthodox or heterodox. He was a good officer, a man who had remarkable success in dealing with the Indian population, and he was the party by whom the Government ought to have stood. It would be quite as improper for the Government to go into a Methodist Conference and interfere in the dispute that might arise between laymen and clergymen, as between Mr. Duncan and the bishop, who claimed to have sent him there. As I understand the question, and the hon. gentleman can correct me if I am wrong—I have not had an opportunity of looking at the papers—but it has been reported in the newspapers that Governor Douglas issued no patent to the Church Society for the two acres of ground upon which the church stood, but that such patent was issued by the present Government of British Columbia, at the instance of the hon. gentleman.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, it is not so.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Well, it has been so represented, that the whole of that territory was set apart as an Indian reserve, and that neither the Church Society nor any other party had a right to any portion of the land so marked out. Certainly, it would be altogether at variance with the policy which the Government has hitherto pursued, at all events, the Government of Canada, if any portion of an Indian reserve was handed to, and made the property of any religious body whatever. Churches are permitted to build church buildings, and a portion of the land has been set apart for that purpose, but the title to the land has never been taken from the Crown as trustee for the Indians, and handed over to any Church Society, and when that has been done, it is an exception to the general rule. There is no doubt whatever that very serious injury has been done to the settlement at Metlakahla by what has there transpired. It seems to me it was the business of the department to stand by the Indian population; they had nothing whatever to do with any religious body that might come amongst them except to give them fair protection. I understand that the church that was built there was built by the Indians themselves under Mr. Duncan's directions, that the Church Society contributed nothing towards the erection of that building, and the buildings which the right hon. gentleman says the Indians tore down, were their own houses, which they undertook to remove elsewhere that they might occupy them in their new home. But certainly whatever damage has been done to the settlement has been done by the Government taking sides with the bishop, instead of allowing the bishop and the Indian population to settle their dispute in the best way they could.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We cannot well go into the subject in full, but I can assure my hon. friend that he is not correctly informed. We have done everything in the world to avoid complicity with the quarrels that existed there.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Did you not invite a man of war to go there to restore order by taking sides with the minority against the majority of the Indian population?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, what we did was this: We sent a surveyor, under the arrangement the hon. gentleman made himself, I think, with the British Columbia Government, to lay out the reserves.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). To mark the limits off.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No more than to mark off the limits, because the assent of the British Columbia Government had to be given to every reserve. We sent Mr. O'Reilly there, and he was resisted, they would not give him the land, they said they would kill him. I can assure the hon. gentleman that there has been no intermeddling. So far from that being the case, when I was in England I pressed strongly the Church Missionary Society to give up their two acres, and to direct their energies to other portions of British Columbia among the heathen Indians, and leave Mr. Duncan there to govern the whole reserve, and for that purpose I offered to appoint him the Indian agent over the whole of the coast.

Mr. DAVIS (Alberta). I think the hon. the First Minister has placed the Metlakahla troubles before the House very fairly, and I am sure if the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) had read the reports of the Provincial Government, of the commission appointed by that Government, and of the conference held between the Indians and the Indian superintendent and members of the Government, he would not have made the statements he has made to-day.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes.

Mr. DAVIS (Alberta). The hon. gentleman certainly cannot have read them all or he would not have stated what he has stated. The differences were almost altogether of a religious character, and if the Government erred at all it was in not interfering sooner. Directly Mr. Duncan placed himself above the civil law, then the Government should interfere, and my opinion is they did not interfere quite early enough. With respect to the Provincial Government only granting the parcels of two acres quite recently, that may be true; but there was a written pledge given by Governor Seymour, who was Governor of the Crown colony, that two acres should be given. That being the case, how could the Provincial Government ignore a promise made many years previously?

North-West Mounted Police.....$1,783

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. On what principle has this gratuity of $583.33, seven months' pay to ex-inspector Thomas Dowling, been fixed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The rule has been to allow a month's pay for every year in the service.

Culling timber.....$200

Mr. LAURIER. Why is an increase of $200 given to James Patton, Supervisor of Cullers, Quebec.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The salary of the previous supervisor, Mr. Quinn, was $2,600 per annum, and as Mr. Patton is discharging those duties, it was thought that an additional $200, which would make his salary $2,400, would not be excessive.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Considering that we only received last year $19,000 and had to pay $55,000, an increase to the supervisor's salary is rather a stiff proposal to make. The whole matter looks like an abuse. Formerly we obtained $40,000 or $50,000 and had to pay out from $50,000 to $52,000. It is an abuse that we should be called upon to pay this large amount for ticketing timber sent down to Quebec. The item is small enough, but the principle of increasing the salary of the supervisor under such circumstances is a vicious one.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think it was understood when we are discussing the regular Estimates, that the Minister would next Session if he was here, of which there is some doubt expressed, revise the entire system on which those men are paid.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think it ought to be changed. I think the system has outlived its usefulness, and has become an unnecessary expense on the country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is the intention of the Government to endeavor to reorganise that system of culling which the hon. gentleman says has outlived its usefulness.

To pay H. J. Miller, Assistant Crown Timber Agent, Quebec, a salary of $1,400 per annum, the estimate for this purpose being $1,200..... $200 00
To pay H. J. Chaloner, Crown Timber Agent, Quebec, a salary of $2,400 per annum, the estimate for this purpose being $2,200..... 200 00

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Why should those men's salaries be increased? As far as I can make out from this office there is a loss of $40,000 a year to the country. It does appear to me a very absurd thing that we should continue that, if we cannot make it pay, and still more absurd that we should increase the salaries under the circumstances.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. $2,400 was his salary for a certain number of years as chief clerk. Those gentlemen have served a long time and they get this in the ordinary course of promotion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Those are things which if it be exactly as the hon. gentleman states—but sometimes he makes mistakes—which were thoroughly well known when the main Estimates were prepared, and they should have been included there, so that we would have an opportunity of discussing them. Now they are brought up at this extremely late period, apparently with the idea that they would pass through without more than a word of protest.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The fact is they were forgotten.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think this is a thing which, if it was earlier in the Session, we should discuss, however, as the Government intend to revise the whole thing we might let it go.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I did not understand that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, the whole thing.

Mr. LAURIER. I remember in former years strong objection was taken to the fact that balances were left in the hands of those agents, and the Minister had promised his attention to it, but I see no reform whatever.
Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Minister told me he would try to collect as much as possible.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How long has Mr. Chaloner been in our employ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Ten years. He was appointed in 1879, I think.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Mr. Chaloner collects dues for the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec as well as for the Dominion, and as I understand it the two Provinces and the Dominion each pay one-third. When Mr. McLean Stewart was collector of crown dues his salary was $2,600 per annum. Mr. Chaloner came in at $2,000; he has been eight years in the department and his salary has increased to $2,400, which is $200 less than Mr. McLean Stewart was paid. One-third is paid by the Dominion and the other two-thirds by the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. LOVITT. I would like to ask the Postmaster General if he has heard from the inspector about the post office at Pinkney's Point, which I spoke to him about?

Mr. McLELAN. No, I have not.

Post Office Department..... $1,325,684 39

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I gave the Postmaster General a notice that I wished to obtain from him information in the shape of the last report he had in reference to this business at the Kingston post office.

Mr. McLELAN. I understood you to say the first intimation I had of the transaction.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is one thing I desire to enquire. I understand the Minister received no intimation by telegram.

Mr. McLELAN. That letter was the first intimation I had. It was written on Friday, Saturday it did not come to me, but on Monday the 19th I got it and that was the first intimation I had.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I will read that letter, and I certainly think there is grave cause for censure in this matter. The letter is as follows:—

"POST OFFICE,
"KINGSTON, 16th March, 1883.

"SIR,—I greatly regret to report that the Assistant Postmaster William Shannon was found with three letters in his pocket which he had opened to-day, and stolen the contents, some postage stamps, and a ten cent piece of silver. The inspector who will report the matter to you fully has allowed him to depart. The matter has come upon me so suddenly that I don't know what to do or say further.

"I am, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"JAMES SHANNON,

"Postmaster.

"The Honorable,
"The Postmaster General,
"Ottawa."

Of course Mr. James Shannon could hardly be expected to do anything more than that. But the House will note that according to the statement made to the department this party was caught in flagrante delicto; and although there is no room to doubt that he had committed numerous felonies before, the inspector allowed him to depart. He did not depart as a matter of fact for twenty-four hours. Surely, the Postmaster General must see that the reason he assigned to the House when this matter was brought up is a reason which can by no possibility be accepted by the House, and which I think ought not to have been accepted by the department. If an inspector, whose duty it is to see that the laws are enforced, has this idea of doing his duty, that a party caught in this fashion, with open letters in his pocket from which he has abstracted the contents, is to be allowed to depart, then there is an end altogether to any discipline or justice in this country. The Postmaster General knows that several persons occupying much inferior positions, young men, under circumstances of infinitely more temptation than could have befallen this officer, have been ruthlessly prosecuted and sent to penitentiary for offences not so aggravated or so numerous, and committed under circumstances that afford much more excuse. I say that the excuse given, that the inspector was dazed and did not know what to do under such circumstances, is no excuse at all. A very grievous failure in public duty has been committed, and I cannot understand how the Postmaster General could have passed over such a thing. It appears to me, that if there is no other excuse to be made, the inspector is almost as culpable as Mr. William Shannon.

Mr. McLELAN. I stated before that there was a neglect of duty and a want of vigilance on the part of the officers. When the information came to the department that he had returned, it was determined to have him arrested, and the inspector was immediately telegraphed to take proceedings against him. But the answer was that he had never been on this side of the line since the 17th of March. There is no doubt that the inspector and the postmaster neglected their duty in not having him arrested at once. As I stated before, the postmaster and his friends had placed a sum in the hands of the department in order to make good the losses that have occurred, and investigation will be made regarding them. That is the first point, and the next is what punishment may be inflicted on the inspector for neglecting his duty.

Mr. LAURIER. There is no matter in which the public are more deeply interested than the proper administration of the Post Office Department, which ought to be, like Cæsar's wife, above suspicion. In this matter, nobody can escape the conclusion that the inspector has been derelict in his duty; and, as my hon. friend says, if the impression is to go abroad that an officer in the department can commit such grievous offences as that committed by Wm. Shannon and go, it will have a very bad effect; and that impression ought to be corrected by reaching the party who is guilty and who is still in the power of the department. The inspector ought not to go without a very severe reprimand at least.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is another point as to which I wish to enquire of the Postmaster General. It was stated, I do not take it upon myself to say whether correctly or not, that Mr. Wm. Shannon's name was still left on the pay roll. Is that the case?

Mr. McLELAN. Oh, no.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I presumed that it was not, but as it was publicly stated, I give the hon. gentleman an opportunity to deny it. I have been informed of another little matter, which I believe did occur, that all the clerks in the post office were taken down to some judicial authorities in Kingston, and were sworn to bear true and faithful allegiance to Her Majesty, which is well enough, but were also sworn to a sort of oath of secrecy, that they would not divulge the secrets of the prison house any more. Was any such oath administered?

Mr. McLELAN. I think the Auditor General has required the oath of allegiance to be taken by all the civil service. There is no special oath called for at Kingston any more than anywhere else.

Committee rose and reported.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

House proceeded to consider resolutions reported from Committee of Supply.

Administration of Justice. $50,280

Mr. LAURIER. I have received complaints from judges in Montreal, and from the Montreal bar, that the Government had not yet appointed or taken measures to appoint two judges required for that district by an Act of the Legislature of Quebec passed in 1886. I am quite aware that the anomaly is very great that any Province should make provision for the appointment of a judge, and that the duty of appointing him and the expense of paying him should be thrown upon the Dominion Government. But after all such is the law, and unless they have discretion in the matter, the Government can do nothing else than appoint those judges.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman that when a Provincial Legislature passes an Act for an increase in the number of judges, there is no discretion left to this Government. On the contrary, we are bound, when we ask Parliament to vote the salaries, to justify the appointment, and on some other grounds than merely that it was the will of the Province. My own opinion was that possibly the appointment of any additional judge in the district of Montreal might be safely deferred until next year. But it was intended at the early part of the Session to have made provision for an additional judge, as the hon. gentleman knows, from the resolutions laid on the Table. These resolutions, for reasons I need not explain more fully now, we are obliged to hold over until the next Session, when the whole subject will be considered. I may say, however, that the representations of the hon. gentleman have been strongly pressed upon me by members of the bar, and I would now suggest that although it is not possible to go on with the resolutions, we might, with the unanimous consent of the House after concurrence, pass a resolution to provide for the salary of one additional judge.

Mr. LAURIER. That is better than nothing, and I have no objection to it.

Mr. DESJARDINS. That proposition ought to be accepted, because it is well known that in the district alone there is more business transactions than in the whole of the other districts together, and the work is really too much for the number of judges appointed.

Mr. LAURIER. I see no reason why you should not appoint two. I do not want to discuss the constitutional question, but there are serious complaints from all sides.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What power do the Government exercise in distributing the work of the judges in Lower Canada? There are a number of these gentlemen in the country districts, who are not overburdened with work. Is it in the power of the Government to assign to them larger districts or transfer them to headquarters.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is done by provincial legislation. The districts are created under provincial legislation, and we simply appoint the judges for the districts.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is not quite the case in Ontario. There the judges' districts are settled by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. THOMPSON. The judges are appointed for the whole Province.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am speaking of the County Court judges, who, to a certain extent, answer to the judges of the rural districts.

Mr. THOMPSON. The districts are regulated by provincial legislation at any rate.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. At any rate you practically provide for dividing the districts by appointing junior judges, and it seems to me the condition, as between the two Provinces, is very mixed. The present Government divided the districts by appointing junior judges when they saw fit, and those are not appointed by the Local Legislature.

Mr. THOMPSON. The districts in Ontario, as well as in the other Provinces, are defined by the Provincial Legislature. Sometimes counties are grouped together as a judicial district, and power is given by provincial legislation to appoint junior judges. In such cases the junior has charge of the whole district as well as the senior.

St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary..... $85,654 79

Mr. LAURIER. When we had this item in committee, the Minister informed me he was glad to say that under the new arrangement things were going on satisfactorily in this penitentiary. I have information which does not quite agree with the statement of the Minister, but I do not mean to say that his information is not correct or that mine is correct. I would like to ascertain from the Minister whether there has been any enquiry made since the outbreak in 1886—in May, I think it was—as to the causes of that outbreak and as to the arrangement of the penitentiary since.

Mr. THOMPSON. There was an enquiry made immediately afterwards by the regular officer, Mr. Moylan, and, in pursuance of the promise which I made a further enquiry was held in the absence of Mr. Moylan, which was conducted by the Secretary of State, myself and the Deputy Minister. We examined the officers of the prison and others, and we came to the conclusion that the difficulties which had given rise to previous troubles had been removed and that everything was going on satisfactorily.

Mr. LAURIER. That enquiry has never been brought before the House. Will the hon. gentleman bring it next Session?

Mr. THOMPSON. If the evidence is required I will endeavor to bring it down. There was no report.

Manitoba Penitentiary..... $19,914 48

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When this item was under discussion I called attention to the extraordinary expenditures in connection with that penitentiary. Since that, the Ministers in charge of the British Columbia estimates stated that they found the expenses of living in British Columbia were considerably more than in Manitoba, but, notwithstanding that, the cost of maintaining the convicts in Manitoba is very much larger than it is in British Columbia. We also find that the expense of maintaining the convicts in Manitoba penitentiary appears to be some $30 per head greater than the subsistence vote for mounted policemen in the North-West force, and we find in the details that four times as much meat and such matters per head were consumed in Manitoba than in British Columbia. Altogether the expenditure for this penitentiary appears to have been conducted in a very loose manner, and this seems to be a vote which hardly ought to be concurred with, unless there be some explanation to be given which we did not receive when the Estimates were being put through. I believe the Minister has some further information than we have yet received. This is two and a-half times as great an expenditure per head as that which is incurred in the Kingston penitentiary, but I am aware that, in the smaller penitentiaries, the gross expense per head is not quite a fair criterion. Still, I can see no reason why the expenditure in Manitoba should so much exceed the expenditure in British Columbia relatively, and I have not yet seen any reason for the enormous items which were put down in the various details to which I have previously alluded.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am in a position to explain some of the items which were excepted to. As regards the per capita cost of maintenance, I hope that next Session, the system of rations having been abolished, a different result will be shown. In regard to the quantity of beef to which the hon. gentleman called my attention as indicating the enormous expenditure in that penitentiary, I may say that the 57,353 pounds of beef shown in the Auditor General's report, refers to cattle on foot. They are alive, and, when they are slaughtered, the quantity is reduced at least one-third.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What was the price per pound?

Mr. THOMPSON. It was mentioned at the time, but I forget.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems to me that the price per lb was a price that ought hardly to be paid for cattle on foot.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think it was higher than the price would be for dressed beef in the eastern Provinces, but it was bought under contract and this was the lowest price obtainable.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That seems to be a very shady business, for surely cattle can be bought cheaper than that in Manitoba.

Mr. THOMPSON. No, that is the lowest price. Then, as to medicines and drugs. The warden was obliged to move his family to Winnipeg in order to give us greater accommodation for the half-breed and Indian prisoners after the rebellion. His wife was in a dying condition at the time, and afterwards died, and these were drugs and medicines furnished to her in consequence of her removal. As to the diet, and the cost of ink, and sugar, and travelling expenses, and so on, instead of reading the statement I have here I will send it over to the hon. gentleman.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not know that it is in our power to investigate these matters more thoroughly, but I must say that the whole expenditure for this penitentiary appears to be conducted by the officials there utterly regardless of expense. I called attention the other day to one of the facts, which appears on the face of it to show that, beyond any possible explanation that could be given, the cost of the food of the mounted police appears to be $90 a head, and the cost of the food for each convict in the Manitoba penitentiary is $120. That cannot be the case without the existence of some serious negligence on the part of the officials.

PROROGATION.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honor to inform the House that I have received a letter from the Governor General's Secretary intimating that His Excellency the Governor General will proceed to the Senate Chamber to prorogue the present Session of the Dominion Parliament to-day, the 22nd instant, at 4 o'clock.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

Immigration, salaries of agents and employes..... $116,389

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Have the Government arrived at any decision at all as to the course they will pursue with respect to pauper and unfit immigrants being landed in this country?

Mr. CARLING. I think I mentioned to the House the other day that we were now enquiring into the reports that were made in the press, and if it was found necessary, a proclamation would be issued with a view of preventing pauper immigrants coming into the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If the evil does exist in the proportion as alleged, I do not think a mere proclamation would meet the case. I doubt whether there is any possible way of dealing with that, except by fining the companies who bring such parties over here, or by compelling them to return the immigrants.

Mr. CARLING. I think we have the power to do so according to law by issuing a proclamation.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And if you issue a proclamation any steamship company who attempts to land persons of that class here can be fined to what extent?

Mr. CARLING. I am not prepared to say to what extent.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can you compel them to take these persons back?

Mr. CARLING. Yes, that can be done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And that the Government are prepared to do, I understand, if you find on examination that this evil is attaining any appreciable magnitude?

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose I may hint, without breach of parliamentary etiquette, that there is a possibility that the hon. Finance Minister will be High Commissioner within a short time; and I suppose in that case the High Commissioner will feel it his duty to look into this matter on the other side of the Atlantic.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that in the event of my holding that office, I shall certainly consider it my duty, and whoever holds it, it will be his duty to do everything possible to prevent unfit persons being sent from the other side. I have already impressed upon the parties who have been in communication with the London office the necessity of resisting and refusing the emigration of infirm and unfit people. The only case in which I think it is legitimate to depart from that rule is where persons have relatives in this country who are able to take care of them.

Royal Military College of Canada..... $59,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I desire to enquire of the Minister of Public Works whether any steps have been taken to provide sleeping and dormitory accommodation for the cadets, as I am informed it is wholly inadequate for the number of pupils. Is anything being done to provide that requisite accommodation? It is not possible, as the hon. gentleman knows, to carry on an institution of that kind unless you either limit the number of pupils, or provide reasonable accommodation, which I believe is not the case just now.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. My attention as Minister of Public Works has not been called to this subject lately by the Minister of Militia; I suppose he will do so later on, and of course I will then lay the matter before my colleagues, and see what can be done. I know that at times it has been rather crowded, but I have heard no complaints about it for some months.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think it is very necessary that some steps should be taken to provide additional accommodation for the cadets in that college. It is an institution supported by the Dominion, and admission to it is largely sought after. Some forty to fifty young men make application every year, while only twenty-four can be admitted. I believe they have there this summer upwards of a hundred, while they have not accommodation for more than sixty; consequently some of the cadets are sleeping in the hospital, or in the basement below; they have to double up in their rooms, or are sleeping in the educational rooms, and are packed away in this very unsuitable manner. For a large institution of that kind, I think this state of things should not be permitted, and I hope the Government will at once provide the necessary barrack accommodation.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is no new thing for me to take exception to that Military College at Kingston. It is an institution that I never believed in, and I think it is an institution that ought never to have been established, because it takes the money of the laboring and middle classes of the community to educate the children of the aristocrats like my hon. friend here, and like my hon. friend opposite.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No, no.

Mr. MITCHELL. I say, yes. From the great number which go there and who cannot get accommodation, I have no doubt of it. I can give instances. Every gentleman who has influence enough to get his son into that college would like to have him educated there at the public expense, because that is simply what it amounts to. I know that I am facing a determined cohort of military men, colonels in front of me, and colonels behind me.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And on the flank.

Mr. MITCHELL. No doubt. The broad ground I take is this, that an institution like that which is kept up and established for the sole purpose of giving a free education to the sons of gentlemen—for that practically is what it amounts to—is one that should not be supported at the public expense. We have to pay $60,000 a year to maintain this institution, and if my vote would abolish it, it would go down mighty quick.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I may inform the hon. gentleman that the most prominent cadets who have graduated from that college, are the sons of working farmers in this country, who have passed the most successfully.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is all very fine to speak of the sons of working farmers who live in the immediate vicinity, but I want to know how many working farmer's sons go in there from Cape Breton, and Nova Scotia and Manitoba and these distant places, even if they do get a free education. If my hon. friend will take up the list, as I have done, he will find there the names of the sons of men who can well afford to educate their own sons, without making the public pay for it.

Cornwall Canal $724,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will this amount complete the whole work? I notice the amount is about three times as large as was voted in 1887-88.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is a revote of $224,000 and a new vote of $500,000 for the enlargement. There will be required to complete this work $2,180,000 additional.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What will that do?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will give 14 feet navigation, which is now being aimed at, and the total cost of obtaining that depth throughout the whole route from the present time is, as nearly as can be ascertained, $11,500,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That would be about $5,000,000 more.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, for the whole of the St. Lawrence system.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When the hon. gentleman makes that estimate, I presume he has had complete surveys made of the whole channel of the St. Lawrence.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are there not in many parts of it very large quantities of rock in the river bed, the expense of the removal of which can hardly be ascertained?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No. This matter has been going on for some years, and the chief engineer considers he can give now a close approximate estimate. I discussed it with Mr. Page personally, and told him we were desirous to be able to state the amount it would cost to complete 14 feet navigation throughout the whole system. He said that we might state the cost at $11,500,000, less the estimates.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. About what time does the Minister expect that the work will be completed?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We are proceeding gradually. I shall hope before very long.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you mean by that statement within the next two or three years?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I should say within three or four years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the canal you propose to have—the same as the Welland?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The same as the Welland.

Welland Canal..... $190,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is estimated to be the cost of finishing the Welland Canal, beyond the present estimates, to the depth of 14 feet?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This will complete the amount and settle with the contractors.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Absolutely?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Public Buildings, Repairs, &c..... $463,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In regard to this matter, considerable discussion took place in the Public Accounts Committee. The feeling of that committee, if I may refer to it, was somewhat to this effect: That no sort of practical supervision was exercised at present over the expenditure at Rideau Hall, and that such has been the case for many years, and it was desirable that some attempt should be made to exercise supervision. We are getting a new Governor General, and there is an opportunity for possibly a new departure. The consensus of opinion was that it would be better to assign a certain vote definitely for the purpose of maintaining the grounds and doing what was necessary in that regard, the Government to bring down that vote on their responsibility and a certain fixed sum instead of leaving it completely at loose ends as at present. That amount can be disposed of by arrangement between themselves and such portion of the Governor's staff as they might agree upon, if that could be done, or at all events it could be disposed of by the department with a distinct understanding that if they required further expenditure the Government must come to the House and obtain it in the usual way. As the matter now stands we vote a lump sum and there is practically no sort of control. I have no doubt that a great deal of laxity has prevailed under the various administrations, and a good deal of discussion of a somewhat unpleasant character has taken place in the newspapers. I do not think it is advisable that that system should be continued. In one way or another some definite arrangement should be arrived at, and if there was good reason for asking a further sum, the Government might come down with an appropriation giving the reasons therefor. I think the present system should not be continued; no one is held responsible, there is constant grumbling and unpleasant things are said; and I do not think the fault lies with the Govern-nor General, I think the fault lies with ourselves and with the Government.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I go a great way with the hon. gentleman in his statement. I think the expenses have been increasing year after year. I do think they cannot do better than adopt the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman, that there should be some fixed sum for such supplies and works as ought to be defrayed by the Government. If any further sums are required by the Governor General we can come down to Parliament. I cannot forget that when the salary was increased from £7,000 to £10,000 I myself gave a pledge in answer to a question of Mr. Holton, that the £10,000 was to cover everything. At first it was kept very well within that, except the expense of some outside servants to keep the grounds. The Governor General said it is not my affair to keep up those large grounds and if you do not choose to keep them up they can run wild. With that exception I think the Governor General defrayed all expenses. There was some furniture put in of the larger description, and by degrees the supplies increased. I am not going to look back on who commenced the system of extravagance in increasing the supplies, such as furniture, glass and plate, but by degrees all those supplies were furnished and I have heard that some of those supplies mysteriously disappeared on the change of Governors. All that kind of thing had to be ended. I am sure that the remarks of the hon. gentleman of the party opposite will be of very great assistance to us when we are making new arrangements in the manner we contemplate doing.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How far north do these meteorological surveys extend?

Mr. FOSTER. As far as Prince Albert, and we have three corresponding stations along the Hudson Bay coast. There is a station at Fort Kino, another at Dunegan and one or two others in the North-West.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are they connected by telegraph?

Mr. FOSTER. No, they are correspondence stations.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Practically speaking Prince Albert is the furthest northern point to which you have telegraph communication?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Surveys in Lakes Superior and Huron..... $18,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How long are these surveys likely to last?

Mr. FOSTER. This survey was commenced originally with the intention of surveying Georgian Bay, but it was extended northward along the north coast. It will take this year to finish the work in Georgian Bay. Probably three or four years, including the present year, will complete the whole work.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do you intend to survey Lake Superior also?

Mr. FOSTER. That is not decided on.

Payments to Extra Clerks for preparation of Returns ordered by Parliament..... $5,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps it may be as well to enquire here what information has been obtained with respect to the statements made on the floor of the House by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), that four sessional clerks have been drawing pay and not attending to their duty.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will send over an explanation to the hon. gentleman, and if he would like to have it read afterwards, I will read it.

Plant required for Government printing office and Government bindery..... $175,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to this, a divided statement was promised.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. Last year a detailed statement was given to the House, which had been prepared by Mr. Romaine, who is a practical printer, and the Queen's Printer. When the superintendent of printing was appointed, an increase in the plant was provided for to the amount of $32,000, for presses and a number of modern improvements.

Mr. MITCHELL. How much is the whole estimate from first to last for furnishing that building?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. $128,000 was voted last year; we have to add this $32,000, and $63,000 for the plant for printing the voters' lists.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is a quarter of a million dollars, just about the amount of the subscription list of the Empire. All I can say is that it is a good deal of money. As I know, machinery is pretty expensive. I have had to fit out an establishment this year, and it is a pretty good one, but I think I could fit out four or five like mine with that amount of money. I see the hon. the Minister of Railways (Mr. Pope) here, and I take this opportunity of saying that there is no sight I have seen for a long time which pleases me better than the genial countenance of my hon. friend, with whom I have been associated occasionally in social and in business relations; and I take this opportunity of reminding him that there are three or four claims connected with the Derby branch which have bothered me a good deal, and which I hope he will bear in mind. Nothing delights me more than to see his genial old face again in our midst. No one has done more in directing the policy of the country—I will not except even the Premier—than our respected friend the Minister of Railways. He has been the brains of the Administration; and I only regret that his physical health has been such as to deprive us of his presence here during this Session. There are few men who can sit here with a solid countenance, and answer to all attacks and questions, that "there 'aint' nothing to it" better than my hon. friend. When he was here, we appreciated his presence; we recognised the supreme ability which enabled him, without those distinguished forensic powers that the hon. the Minister of Railways possesses, without that seductiveness and persuasiveness which distinguished the hon. the Minister of Justice, and without the dogged, persistent determination which is eminently displayed by the hon. the Minister of Finance, to hold his own against all comers. We all appreciate the Minister of Railways; and while I say I am glad to see him again in his place, I hope that he will see that these two or three paltry claims on the Derby branch are settled at once and forever. Of course, at the close of every Session you find generally that two great parties, the Government on the one hand and the Opposition on the other, take a slight review of the position. For myself, as a leader of the Independent party, I may say that party has done something to control the legislation of this country, because, however people may laugh at it, and although, if you were to estimate its power and influence by numbers, it would be in the negative, when you get down to hard pan discussing the policy of the country and the Estimates, the left centre counts for something in the country if it does not count much when it comes to a vote. I think that the representatives of this House have shown very little respect for their position and for the duties that devolve upon them as representatives of the country. I look around these benches, and I find almost four-fifths empty. I see none here but representatives for Ministerial honors. I see present the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) who is generally admitted to be one of those who occupy a prominent place in the running; indeed, he is selling as first favorite. There is the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) another favorite, a kind of second horse in the race. And then there is the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) and his colleague (Mr. Perley) running in pairs, neck and neck for the position. My hon. friend the solitary Colonel from Toronto (Mr. Denison) is also on hand and the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown), and of course the British Empire remains here to the last, my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), always on hand. Of course, the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) has to stay, and he is sure of a position. The hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly) I am not going to name because he is too entirely respectable for that combination. Then there is the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Haggart), and the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Hudapeth), but he has yet to earn his spurs. It is lamentable to think that at the close of a Session such as this, when the money of the country is being squandered and thrown around everywhere, there should be so few present. They manage to get their sessional allowance and after that they go and leave the closing up of the business to a few of us patriots, who devote our time to the interest of the country, and who want nothing, and who are not likely to get much.

Steam communication between Canada and Antwerp, or Germany, or both..... $30,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I observe that the Government have discontinued steam service between Victoria and the United States. Now, what is their policy, or have they arrived at any policy, with respect to encouraging steam lines of communication in the Pacific from British Columbia, either in the direction of Japan or China? A good deal has been said at various times about what might be done, and what was expected to be done, by the Canadian Government in that direction. If I am correctly informed the British Government entered into some negotiations with them on the subject. Can the hon. gentleman state to us how far these negotiations have progressed, and if they have any defined policy on the subject?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The House will recollect that I stated a year ago that we proposed to Her Majesty's Government to give one-fourth of a subsidy of £100,000 a year for a fast and effective steam service fortnightly between Vancouver and Yokohama, Shanghai, and Hong Kong, or one-fourth of £60,000 per annum for a monthly service, upon Her Majesty's Government giving the other three-fourths in either case. After a great deal of discussion with the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Goschen, he wrote to me to say that Her Majesty's Government had decided to give the three-fourths of the £60,000 for a monthly service, and authorise the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to open negotiations with them for the arrangement of a contract. That was communicated to the company, and the negotiations are now proceeding to settle the terms of a contract between the Canadian Pacific Railway and Her Majesty's Government for securing that subsidy of £45,000 a year which Her Majesty's Government have agreed to give for a monthly service between Vancouver and Shanghai, Yokohama, and Hong Kong. I may say that nothing has been done with Australia further than that negotiations have taken place; but nothing has been brought to a point in connection with the Australian service, although, provided the Australian Provinces will agree to provide the bulk of the subsidy, we have offered to give a quota towards that subsidy.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is any definite appropriation named in that case?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think we have offered to give £25,000 a year for the purpose of providing for that service, upon condition that the Australian colonies will furnish a sufficient amount to establish an effectual fortnightly communication between Vancouver and Australasia and New Zealand.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So, practically, the Government are committed to ask the consent of the House for one subsidy of £15,000 and another of £25,000, in the event of the Imperial and Australian Governments making up the difference?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. Might I ask the hon. gentleman, while he is giving explanations, whether any steps have been taken, and what progress has been made with regard to service on the Atlantic.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That subject has also attracted the attention of the Government. We are most anxious that there should be a fast service across the Atlantic, corresponding with the progress of the day, in the same way as we are proposing to extend it across the Pacific. But in order to be in a position effectually to take up that question, the Government has given notice to the Allan Steamship Company to terminate the contract with them under which, as the hon. gentleman knows, we pay, I think, $126,533.33 a year, and that contract is to terminate in one year from the present time, that is to say, next spring. We have received a number of tenders and we are in negotiations with parties in the hope of having a much more rapid and effective service across the Atlantic, making, in fact, this vast great transcontinental line of communication from London to Hong Kong.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am very glad, indeed, to get the information the hon. Finance Minister has given this House. I am sure the country has looked with some anxiety to what might be done in relation to creating a fast line of steamers in connection with Canada and Great Britain on the Atlantic. I agree with the hon. gentleman that the present class of steamers, and their present rate of speed, are not such as to command the trade, which will naturally go where the fast boats are to be found, that is, to New York. I entirely approve of the course indicated by the Minister; and I may say that if, in the competition that is offered for a fast line of steamers, the Allan Company, who are the pioneer company, and who have certainly reflected credit upon Canada, and given proof of enterprise, zeal and ability, can compete on as favorable terms as any other company, my impression is that they ought to have the preference, but if they will not come up to the standard, and will not agree to enter into a contract for the rapid communication which is demanded, by the advancing spirit of the age, they must, of course, take their chances and give way to others. But everything being equal, I think we should encourage our own people, and encourage a company that has done so much to advance the reputation and credit of Canada in respect to a transatlantic mail service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would call the attention of the Minister to one point that, I suppose, he has looked into. In the Estimates he has neither put down a sum for a subsidy or a statutory grant, nor has he asked a vote, as I understand the statute has expired. Here we are paying money that is not provided for by statute, and for which no vote in Parliament is taken.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have overlooked that; but I will take care that the proper steps are taken.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But if the statute has expired you require a vote for it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But you have mighty little time to get it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is too late to be done now, of course.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is not too late, but it is very expedient, in a matter to which attention is called, to have a Governor General's warrant issued. What does the First Minister think about it? If the permission under the statute has expired, I take it there cannot be a statutory provision.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it is a statutory provision, because the contract means that it shall be for a certain number of years terminable on a year's notice.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think it has expired but we will not forget to look it up.

THE SUPPLY BILL.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Ways and Means to consider the following resolutions:—

1. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty for the financial year ending 30th June, 1888, the sum of $1,794,772.62 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

2. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted to Her Majesty for the financial year ending 30th June, 1889, the sum of $24,548,591.25 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into committee.

Resolutions reported, read the first and second times and concurred in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 141) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial years ending respectively 30th June, 1888, and 30th June, 1889, and for other purposes relating to the public service.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first, second and third times and passed.

INCREASE OF THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. THOMPSON moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Act respecting the judges of Provincial Courts as follows:—

That section four of the said Act (chapter one hundred and thirty-eight of the Revised Statutes) be amended by providing for the salaries of twelve puisné judges of the Superior Court, whose residences are fixed at Montreal and Quebec, each $5,000.

Motion agreed to, and resolution considered in committee, reported and concurred in.

Mr. THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 142) to amend the Act respecting Judges in the Provincial Courts, chapter 138 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and second times and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. I suppose this Bill is intended to cover the law of the Local Legislature respecting a judge to reside in Montreal and not in Quebec.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. BEAUSOLEIL. It is not for the district of Terrebonne.

Mr. THOMPSON. No; the Act of last Session provided for that. The judge is to reside in Montreal.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

TRADE COMBINATIONS.

Mr. GUILLET. With the permission of the House I desire to give notice that when the House is in committee on (Bill No. 138) or any similar Bill for the suppression of combinations in trade I shall move to add the following clause:—

That the provisions of this Act shall be construed as having taken effect and be in force on and after the 21st day of May.

House took recess.

House resumed at three o'clock.

FAREWELL ADDRESS TO HIS EXCELLENCY.

House proceeded to the Senate Chamber where the joint farewell address of the two Houses was presented to His Excellency the Governor General (page 1561).

His Excellency replied as follows:—

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I thank you cordially for the generous terms in which you have been pleased to take leave of me. The unanimous expression of your goodwill, coming as it does from the whole Parliament of the Dominion of Canada, falls from your lips with an authority which admits of no question. I accept it from you as the representatives of the Canadian people, and to that people as well as to you I offer my grateful acknowledgment for the signal honor which you have conferred upon me.

I cannot avoid referring to the recent loss which your Houses have sustained not only by the death of your distinguished predecessor, Mr. Speaker, in the Chair of the Senate, a gentleman whose admirable qualities had earned for him the respect and affection of all who had the pleasure of his acquaintance, but also by the removal of other valued members of both Chambers, and I regret that I must include amongst those who have been taken from us one of the most trusted and honored of my Ministers—a statesman whose premature end has deprived Canada of an able and indefatigable servant and the representative of the Crown of a most faithful and loyal adviser.

A residence of nearly five years in this country as the representative of Her Majesty, has given me a deep and abiding interest in its affairs. I feel that I cannot overrate the advantage which it has been to me to have had a part in the administration of the Dominion and to have watched at close quarters the working of the wise and liberal institutions under which your community is governed. I shall rejoice if at a future time the experience which I have thus been able to gain, should as you have been good enough to suggest, enable me to guard the interests or to promote the welfare of the Dominion. Be this as it may, I can never entertain towards this country any feelings other than those of a friend bound to it by the deepest gratitude and respect.

I may, I hope, congratulate you on the fact that during the years which I have had the good fortune to spend in your midst, the main principles of the Federal constitution have successfully stood the test of experience and are regarded as the basis of an enduring political system well adapted to the requirements of your people.

Your relations with the Mother Country have been without exception of a cordial character. There has in no single case been a serious divergence of opinion between the Government of Her Majesty and that of the Dominion. A free interchange of views between the two has, in every instance, brought into prominence the closeness of the accord by which in all vital matters they are united—an accord which, I believe, reflects the ever increasing esteem entertained for each other by the peoples from whom those Governments derive their power.

I rejoice to know that you are pleased to recognise the deep concern which I have felt in the material progress of the Dominion, and I note with especial pleasure your reference to the completion of the national highway by which the Provinces are now united, a work which has so greatly contributed not only to the consolidation of the Dominion, but also to the strength and to the resources of the Empire.

I have felt it to be a privilege to be allowed to associate myself with your people in their spontaneous endeavors to obtain an increased share of attention for the fine arts and for literature and science, and I have observed with pleasure the degree of success by which those endeavors have been attended.

I cannot pass over in silence your reference to the fact that Her Majesty has been pleased to entrust to me the duty of representing her in another portion of the British Realm, one differing no doubt in almost every respect from that for which you are called upon to legislate, but forming like it a splendid and integral portion of the empire which is the common inheritance of all Her Majesty's subjects. Your congratulations and your readiness to regard with favor my selection for so arduous and important a post will inspire me with courage to undertake the heavy responsibilities which are inseparable from it.

I feel sure that your good wishes for our welfare are sincere, and I have heard from you with a feeling of the deepest gratitude that you regard our approaching departure from this country with regret. Your kindly and appreciative mention of her who has shared with me the happiness of the last five years has touched her heart and mine. I thank you in Lady Lansdowne's name as well as in my own for your personal courtesy to us both. During our residence in Canada it has been our good fortune to become acquainted with a large number of the members of both Houses. We shall always look back with satisfaction to our intimacy with these representatives of the Canadian people, a satisfaction which is increased by the assurance which you have now given us that the regard which we have felt for you has been mutual.

I shall not fail to convey to Her Majesty the expression of your unaltered devotion to her, and of your loyalty to her Empire. I thank you in her name, and pray that there may be conferred upon the people who have reposed in you the sacred trust of watching over their interests in the councils of the nation every blessing which can serve to establish upon sure foundations the greatness and the reputation of your country. I trust that under the will of Providence it may long continue to present to the world the spectacle of a united and contented community, not only proud of its own prosperity and confident in its own future, but glorying in its connection with the British Throne and determined to bear its part in adding to the greatness and renown of the Empire.

LANSDOWNE.

22nd May, 1888.

The House having returned,

CLOSING REMARKS.

Mr. TROW. It is not my intention to inflict on this House a speech, for the simple reason that the members are on the qui vive to depart for home. The reporters are also anxious to leave, and not desirous by any means to take down any rambling remarks I may make on this occasion. The Hansard staff has been very busy this Session, having had to report over ninety speeches on one particular subject; and I fancy they are not, at all events, desirous to make any further reports. We have had on the whole, a very useful Session, and I believe it will be the means of doing very much good throughout the country. That lengthy discussion we had on unrestricted reciprocity, the most important question raised since Confederation, was unsurpassed for the debating abilities displayed on both sides, and I presume hon. gentlemen opposite will acknowledge throughout life that the Opposition had the best of the argument. Popular opinion is in our favor; the tide has turned throughout the country, and that measure, above all others, will place the Opposition in an advantageous position. Why, even the hon. the Finance Minister was converted. He, unfortunately, was not able to attend the debate on account of illness, but, no doubt, he read the speeches made on this side, and they evidently had a strong effect upon his mind, because when he made his appearance here, he cut the feet from under his supporters who had been speaking on that same subject. I was surprised at the calmness with which his supporters acknowledged that they had been for weeks in error, and had spoken sentiments diametrically opposed to those to which the hon. gentleman gave utterance. The next measure of great importance was the disallowance question, and I am very glad that that question, which created so much excitement throughout the west, has been settled. I am decidedly of opinion that for years it checked immigration. I am of opinion that the disallowance question had a tendency to check, and did check immigration during the year. Now, that is set aside. I do not know whether you paid too much for your whistle or not, because a great portion of the North-West is not adapted for settlement at all. Of course, you had no control over Manitoba or British Columbia, but it was only the new portion of Manitoba and the North-West that was affected by disallowance. I understand from the Minister of Agriculture that even up to the present the number of immigrants is much larger than it has been for some years. I hope that the proper encouragement will be given, and that competing lines will be made through that great country, for it is a great country. We have millions of acres there fit for settlement, and our whole dependence in the future rests upon the development of that country. I think the action which has been taken by the Government this Session, though it has been delayed so long, will be the means of settling up that great country of ours. The Government have certainly had their troubles this Session, and we all regret the sudden and unexpected demise of our respected friend the Minister of the Interior. He was a man whom we all respected. I met him repeatedly in the North-West. He was becoming thoroughly acquainted with the duties of his office, and there was no man in the House or out of the House who was better fitted to perform the duties of that office than the late Hon. Thomas White. The Government have also had a difficulty in consequence of the illness of the Minister of Railways. I was happy to see to-day that he was in his seat, and I hope he will recuperate and will take his place as formerly in the council of the country. He seems to have renewed his strength and his health, and I hope that will continue. The other Ministers have been assiduous in the performance of their duties. There are some of them who can work in the Railway Committee all day and in the House all night. The leader of the Government has to take a little rest sometimes, but on the whole he has been very attentive, and I think he has renewed his youth, and we all wish that he may long continue, though not on that side of the House, but may live at least a quarter of a century longer, and give his counsels to the people from this side of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Over the left.

Mr. TROW. I do not know any Government that has so long continued in office that has not become corrupt. The Ministers have become extravagant, but not more than usual. We have learned a lesson during this Session. The Finance Minister has proposed a new way to pay our indebtedness. By one stroke of the pen, he thinks he has paid off $53,000,000. I doubt if many people in the country will credit the possibility of doing this, but he seems to think that by reducing the rate of interest he reduces the principal. I am not of that opinion. At all events, we have had a very happy time. I believe the Opposition are in a better position to-day than they were when the Session commenced. You must have noticed that during the recent elections we carried everything before us, and I have no doubt that the Reform party will continue to carry everything before them, that they will carry Cardwell and all other ridings which are opened between now and next January.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then we will not open them.

Mr. TROW. In that case, we shall be in the same position. I know the reporters are not anxious to take down very much to-day, and therefore I will conclude.

ADDRESS TO HIS EXCELLENCY.

Mr. SPEAKER I have the honor to inform the House that, in conformity with the resolution of this House for the presentation of a joint address of the Senate and House of Commons to His Excellency the Governor General, I have been in the Senate and presented said address and received the answer, of which I have left a copy on the Table.

Mr. TROW. I notice my hon. friend, Sir Donald Smith. He closed the Session once in a very agreeable manner, and I hope he will do so now.

Sir DONALD SMITH. I had not the pleasure of listening to the admirable address of the hon. gentleman. I came in just as he was about closing, so it would not be possible for me to follow what he said; but I am sure that on both sides of the House we are a ways delighted to hear the hon. member, and not the less so when we are all very greatly delighted to get away at the close of the Session. We have all very great esteem for the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow), and we trust that he may long be spared to address the House in such felicitous terms on these occasions—as an hon. member reminds me from the opposite side of the House. However, from whichever side of the House he may address us, I am sure we shall always be happy to listen to him; and if he should ever decide to come over to this side of the House, the members here will welcome him with open arms.

Mr. DAVIN. I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the remarks that fell from the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) and I am glad that this Session should close with such emphatic utterances as to the importance of the North-West. At an earlier period in the Session I endeavored to make an argument in the same direction though, perhaps, not in so happy a vein. Sir, I think it is a good omen that the Session should close with these words from my hon. friend, so strong in their appreciation of the position that the North-West occupies in regard to the Dominion of Canada. For, Sir, let there be no mistake about it—that great region is to be the backbone of Canada. It has already given to Canada a position before the world that she would not otherwise have attained; and the more the minds of statesmen, like my hon. friend, are directed towards the development of the North-West, the more rapidly will the Dominion of Canada advance in the path of prosperity and greatness.

PROROGATION.

A Message from His Excellency the Governor General by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod:—

Mr. SPEAKER,

His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate presence of this House in the Senate Chamber.

An Act to amend the Act respecting the Judges of Provincial Courts, chapter one hundred and thirty-eight of the Revised Statutes.

Then the Honorable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General as follows:

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:

The Commons of Canada have voted the supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the Public Service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following Bill:—

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service, for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1888, and the 30th June, 1889, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service, to which Bill I humbly request Your Excellency's assent.

To this Bill the Royal assent was signified in the following words:—

In Her Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her Loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the Second Session of the Sixth Parliament of the Dominion with the following Speech:—

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In terminating the present Session of Parliament I desire to record my appreciation of the earnestness and zeal which you have shown in the performance of your public duties.

The measure for the ratification of the Fisheries Treaty agreed upon at the opening of the present year between Her Majesty's Plenipotentiaries and those of the United States, to which I have given the Queen's assent, will, I believe, be viewed with satisfaction by the people of the whole Dominion, as affording a crowning proof of Canada's constant desire to arrive at a just and honorable settlement of all questions arising out of the interpretation of the Convention of 1818.

I venture, with some degree of confidence, to hope that the several authorities, whose sanction of the treaty is necessary to its operation, may not be insensible to the great advantages to both countries which the removal of so fruitful a source of ill-feeling is calculated to entail.

The arrangement under which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has relinquished the exclusive privileges possessed by it in virtue of article 15 of the original agreement between Her Majesty and the company, will, I anticipate, meet with general acceptance, and by increasing its financial strength, enable the company to keep pace with the ever-growing requirements of the vast region which the railway serves.

The extension to the people of the North-West Territories of a larger measure of self-government than they have hitherto enjoyed, is satisfactory evidence of the rapid development of that important portion of the Dominion, and will, I trust, be attended with beneficial results.

The prospects for a large immigration this year of a desirable class of settlers are, I am glad to believe, exceptionally good.

The various amendments to the laws relating to the Inland Revenue, Railways, the Civil Service and to other Acts affecting the public interests which you have passed, seem well adapted to meet the circumstances which have rendered them necessary.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

In Her Majesty's name I thank you for the supplies which you have readily granted for the carrying on of the public service.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate:

Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

I cannot take leave of you for the last time without placing on record my deep regret that my official connection with your country should be at an end. It is a source of no slight satisfaction to me to call to mind under these circumstances the fact that within the last few hours you have been pleased to assure me of the favor with which you have regarded my endeavors to discharge the task committed to me by Her Majesty.

My interest in the Dominion will not cease with my departure from its shores, and I pray that in years to come its people may enjoy in abundance every blessing which it is in the power of Providence to bestow.

THE SPEAKER of the Senate then said:

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate, and Gentlemen of the House of Commons:

It is His Excellency the Governor General's will and pleasure, that this Parliament be prorogued until Saturday, the thirtieth day of June next, to be here held, and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued until Saturday, the thirtieth day of June next.

The Parliament of the Dominion of Canada was then prorogued to the 30th of June next.
