"So far as words are concerned this is clear enough. When we come to things it becomes somewhat obscure, and what is more the policy, such as it is propounded by Mr. C. Lister, was expressly repudiated by one of the speakers at the conference. Mr. Dixon Hartland declared he could not be a party to taxing corn. There is thus still a rift within the lute. Fair traders are not entirely agreed as to whether they will advocate a duty on corn or not."

And here comes, I think, the most pithy statement of the question in England which I have ever heard:

"The manufacturers would like to put a duty on manufactures, but the agriculturist will not let him. The agriculturist would like to put a duty on corn, but the manufacturer will not let him. When these two parties are agreed we shall begin to believe in the strength of the Fair Trade League."

I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether the time has come for the two parties to be agreed. This was the result of that great meeting. There is a little addendum to this in an editorial in the Times, which the hon. gentleman might take to heart, and which expresses pretty clearly the opinion the majority of the people of England have on this movement:

"We are now told that fair traders are protectionists pure and simple with a sort of platonic predilection for what they are pleased to call 'Commercial Federation of the Empire.' 'They would' as Mr. C. Lister said yesterday, 'put a duty on everything foreign except raw material, placing, however, our colonies and dependencies in the position of having free entry here if they gave us free entry in return.'"

Are hon. gentlemen ready to give English manufacturers free entry here in return?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. FISHER. Hon. gentlemen say "no." If hon. gentlemen are willing to discriminate against England then they may be quite sure that England will discriminate against the colonies. So long as we impose duties on British manufactures, British manufacturers will not allow us to impose a duty on the food of their laborers. Moreover, it does not follow that if we allow British manufactures to come in free, England would admit our products free and discriminate against those of other nations. I attended the British Association meetings in Montreal, which were attended by a large number of the best intellects of Britain. I attended the economic section, and a discussion arose relating to the commercial relations of the Empire, when the question of Canadian intercourse with England came up a gentleman proposed Imperial federation or Imperial free trade, with discriminating duties against foreign countries. There were present a large number of representatives of British manufacturers, and there was one universal chorus of horror at the idea that they could be tempted, under any circumstances or conditions, to impose a duty on corn coming into England. The figures quoted by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) show that the importations of foreign corn were enormous, and to-day the British colonies do not produce, or, at all events, ship anything like to meet the surplus required by England from foreign markets. The hon. gentleman said that the duty to be imposed on foreign corn would be sufficient to give a very large return in the English markets. If so, what benefit would it be to us? It would not displace foreign corn, we would still have to compete with it. One of the two things would happen: either it would not increase our corn production and consequently would not displace foreign corn, or if it did so displace it, the duty would not give the income expected to be obtained from the duty on foreign corn. Mr. Cunliffe Lister says:

"Let us have free trade within the Empire, or as near it as may be possible, and no longer should we be dependent on the foreigner who refuses to deal with us."

The Times says:

"By all means we reply, but how are we to get free trade within the Empire? It is not true to say the foreigner refuses to deal with us, and certainly if any foreigner does refuse to deal with us, we cannot be in any way dependent on him. But so far as it is true that foreigners refuse to deal with us, it is equally true that many of our own colonies refuse to deal with us. If fair traders really can tell us how we can better persuade the colonies to adopt free trade than by showing that we ourselves believe in free trade, they have certainly so far succeeded in keeping a very important piece of information to themselves."

Therefore, although the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is advocating commercial Imperial confederation or free trade in the Empire, it must be remembered that if there is an obstacle to free trade in the Empire it has been brought about more by hon. gentlemen opposite than by any other individuals in the Empire, because Canada, in this respect, has gone beyond any other of the colonies and placed a stumbling block, which it is impossible to overcome, to any movement for free trade within the Empire. I will read another short extract to show what is the opinion of England on this question, and it is not going too far to say that this is a fair representation of that opinion. After discussing the old question of free trade or protection, the writer goes on to say:

"As for the other branch of their policy—namely, the commercial federation of the Empire—it seems to us to be a proposition applicable rather to Jupiter or Saturn than to the actual world in which we live."

This is a deliberate statement taken from the first editorial article in the London Times dealing with the question, and after the full exposition of it by the leader of the fair trade movement at the meeting to which I have alluded. The same article goes on to say:

"It might be possible, if the colonies were at one with each other and with the mother country, to establish a customs union which would secure free commercial interchange between the different parts of the Empire combined with hostile tariffs against foreign nations. Whether it would be expedient or not is another question, into which at present it is quite unnecessary to enter. But the colonies are not at one with each other, nor with the mother country. Victoria and New South Wales cannot agree with each other. Canada seems at present to be moving rather in the direction of commercial union with the United States than in that of commercial union with the United Kingdom."

There is another part of the hon. gentleman's speech to which I cannot refrain from alluding very briefly. He gave a very lugubrious account of the present depression in England. I was certainly surprised that the hon. gentleman, who is rather an important person and whose words carry weight, should have followed the policy which he has so roundly condemned in hon. gentlemen on this side of the House. Hon. gentlemen opposite have taunted us with decrying our country and have accused us of being unpatriotic, because we have said that Canada was not so prosperous as she should be; but the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) was quite ready to rise and state that the mother country is to-day suffering from commercial depression and is practically on the highway to ruin. I am not going to accuse the hon. gentleman of want of patriotism. If those are the facts relating to England we should know them, just as we should know the exact state of affairs respecting our own country. I do not attack a man's patriotism if he points out the remedy for a deplorable state of affairs, if such should exist. But if the hon. gentleman's accusation in regard to hon. members on this side of the House is true, then I must say he is as unpatriotic as we are. What are the facts? He says England to-day is depressed. I came across a report in a paper, which the hon. gentleman will acknowledge to be a good protectionist organ, the Montreal Star, and that organ says in alluding, not to anything of its own but to a report which the hon. gentleman will be content to accept as authority. Here is what the Montreal Star said about Mr. Giffen's report to the British Board of Trade. Mr. Giffen is well known all over the British Empire as a gentleman who is in no sense a partisan but who is essentially and before everything else a statistician, a man who deals with figures, examines those figures, and gives the result:

"Mr. Giffen's report to the British Board of Trade shows that Great Britain maintains its relative superiority with regard to foreign trade. In the open markets of the world the old country still distances all competitors. To some countries, such as India and Australia, it sends by far the greater part of what they import from foreign countries. Great Britain sends to Egypt 47 per cent. of all that it imports, France and Germany send 14 per cent. each, and the United States 1 per cent. To the Argentine republic, Uruguay and Chili, it sends from 28 to 39 per cent. of all they import, France sends 17 per cent., Germany from 8 to 19 per cent., and the United States 7 per cent. As much as 28 per cent. of all that China imports is sent by Great Britain, while Germany and France send next to nothing and the United States only 4 per cent. The Japanese get 43 per cent. of all their foreign goods from Great Britain, 9 per cent. from the United States, 7 per cent. from Germany and 5 per cent. from France. The preponderance of Great Britain is conspicuous in every country except Canada."

And mind you, Sir, that is after ten years of the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite, which was intended to foster a trade between us and Great Britain and to discriminate in favor of Great Britain.

"There the contiguity of the United States gives it an immense advantage. But as regards European countries, what Canada imports from the whole of them does not amount to much more than one-sixth of what she imports from the mother country. Germany about whose rivalry in foreign trade with Great Britain so much has been said, does not, according to Mr. Giffen, send to British North America more than 1.7 of its imports. Mr. Giffen's general conclusion is that 'Germany has not been gaining in common markets of late years at the expense of English trade. Its gains have been in special directions. Our predominance in the great common markets remains substantially what it was ten years ago.'"

This is only one evidence. I have here another quotation which is taken from the Times of last November, and in allusion to that same meeting which the Fair Trade League had held in London:

"The whole basis of their argument is the allegation that our trade is declining. The allegation is not true. 'In point of fact,' says our correspondent, 'English manufacturers and English industry in general, whatever may be the case with one or two branches only, are now developed to a greater degree than ever they were before, and our exports to foreign countries are also greater than they ever were before.'"

This does not look as if England were going back in the commercial race of the world. As a matter of fact to a certain extent it has apparently been slightly retrograding in consequence of the lower values of goods, but if you take the amount of goods exported, England has held her prominent position more than she ever did before. To-day she does most of the carrying trade of the world, and has a greater command of the markets open to competition than she ever had in any period of her history before. Those things show pretty clearly that England does not need to take up this policy which is proposed to her. Her old free trade doctrine is carrying her to prosperity and keeping her in a sound condition. It shows more than that: that the efforts which have been made to depreciate this free trade success, and the efforts which have been made to point out what is called the depression, in consequence of free trade, are clearly inaccurate and misleading in fact. It is also a warning to us in this country. At one time it would have been better for us if we had taken the example of the mother country, and if we had followed the good advice given by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), instead of, as was unfortunately the case in 1878, following the right hon. gentleman who leads the Government, who for the purpose of carrying the country at that time, chose to take the example of his neighbors to the south and chose to take that example which his followers have told him he was wrong to have done. We would have been in a far more prosperous position to-day, and we would not have been obliged to consider either the United States or the British Empire, in our internal economy or our internal legislation, if we had followed the policy laid down by Mr. Mackenzie. The great reason why it is necessary for Canada to regulate her commercial policy by the commercial policy of England and the States, is because our progress has been balked in consequence of the policy of protection which the hon. gentlemen opposite have insisted on this country adopting. I do not see how it is possible that this proposition can be practically carried into effect. I read with great interest some words of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) in Toronto a little while ago and those words I fully endorse. I thought that when the hon. gentleman uttered those words, he was going to come to a different conclusion from what he did, for certainly his first conclusion does not appear to me to agree with his support of this motion. The hon. gentleman said :

“ He did not think the practical Canadian people were prepared to endorse any scheme which did not hold out any hope, any prospect of being adopted on practical lines and being capable of practical solution.”

He was then advocating a policy which he has not yet shown in the slightest degree, to be practical. He comes before us and he supports the motion of the hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Marshall), but he has not shown us the practical solution of these difficulties which he has acknowledged were to be found in the discussions at the Free Trade League meeting in England. Instead of trying to forward a policy which would be practical he has attempted what I believe to be a dream, and a dream which never can be realised. It is a fact that the Empire to-day is composed of very widely scattered portions; it is a fact that they are building up new states in far distant portions of the Empire, and I believe if there is going to be any possibility of holding that Empire together it will be by giving each portion of it the fullest latitude and jurisdiction to deal with its own affairs as it thinks best for its own welfare. Thus and thus only will you be able to keep the Empire together. If we try, by any paper plan, to bring the bonds closer and try to draw the string more tight between the outlying portions of the Empire the result will be, as it has been, unfortunately, in this Dominion, a rather straining of relations between the different portions of the Empire a tendency to arouse irritation between the different portions and eventually to break up the Empire into a large number of possibly antagonistic states. The efforts of the leader of this House to centralise in this Dominion have been unfortunate. His efforts to make a legislative union, though he cannot adopt a legislative union in theory, are very unfortunate. We, as Canadians, can give a warning to the whole Empire that they shall not carry out the same mistake as we did and that they shall not be landed in the same difficulties as we have been. It is not from any lack of patriotism that I thus prefer that this resolution should not pass, or that this question be dealt with on the lines laid down by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). I yield to no one in my patriotism. I hold, as everyone in this country holds, that the Queen is the head of our country and our Government, just as much as she is of the English people, the Irish people and the Australian people. But, Sir, I do not acknowledge any allegiance whatever to the Parliament of England. We, in this country, are a portion of the British Empire, having free institutions, ruling ourselves in a Parliament that is supreme in this country; and we believe that the more that is done, and acknowledged, and insisted upon, the better chance there is that we shall remain good friends with the rest of the British Empire and with the mother country herself. I trust that it will be a long time before we have any other head to our Government than the Queen of England; I trust that we shall long remain a portion of the British Empire; but, Sir, I do not believe that, to occupy that ground, it is necessary that we should be subject to the Parliament of Great Britain or be ruled except by our own people, and in accordance with the views of our own people as expressed on this floor. Sir, the patriotism I glory in is the patriotism which leads me to do what I consider best in the interests of the people of Canada, and I believe I shall be doing that by favoring such measures as will tend to extend and increase the trade of our people. The hon. member for Simcoe gave utterance to some good and sound advice on this question. He said he believed we must discuss it purely from a Canadian standpoint, and I have been trying to do so; but we know that hon. gentlemen opposite, in discussing the question of reciprocity with the United States, prominently brought forward what they call the interests of the Empire. I have heard and seen in the press utterances of some hon. gentlemen from which I would be led to believe that they did not care at all for the interests of Canada, but were sent here especially to look after the interests of the Empire. It may be well for men who come here from the mother country to think of those interests; but I have to look back through too many generations to consider any interests but those of the country in which I have been born and brought up, that is Canada. In taking that position we follow the example of the mother country. In England, have we heard one word of what would be for the advantage of Canada from Imperial federation? Not one. Have we known any man there to call on the English people to accept that doctrine for the benefit of the colonies? Not one. It has been urged on the English people by its advocates, because they said it would be for the benefit of the manufacturing and agricultural classes of England; and one reason why England has been governed so well is that her statesmen have always been true to the English principle that it was their duty to look after the interests of the English people and nothing else. In the Associated Chambers of Commerce in London, in February last, a question similar to this was brought up, and I will just read to you this description in the Daily News of what occurred on that occasion :

“ A motion in favor of such changes in the fiscal arrangements existing between Great Britain, her colonies and dependencies as would increase the trade of the British Empire, was opposed by Mr. Mundella, M.P.—”

Hon. gentlemen are all familiar enough with his name to know that he is a pretty high authority on commercial questions in England; and what did he say?

“ He pointed out that the colonies could not supply us with all our needs. The United States were at the present moment the greatest market for our manufactures; and was it not possible that if we acted in the way suggested by the resolution, the United States would subject us to differential treatment? What would become of us then? We imported silks and tea from China, and were we going to put an increased duty on those articles? It would be cutting our own throats. The suggestion was especially ill-timed, when the United States were in the middle of a controversy regarding free trade. President Cleveland had undoubtedly taken a step in the direction of free trade, and if, or when, it was adopted, and America was made one of the cheapest instead of one of the dearest countries in the world, great advantage would accrue, not only to herself but to the English colonies.”

What was the result of that discussion in that purely commercial body, which is representative of the whole United Kingdom? “ The motion was lost by an overwhelming majority.” No, Sir; the people in the mother land look on this question purely and simply from their own standpoint, considering whether it is going to benefit them, and not in any sense whether it is going to benefit us. Then the question of differential duties was mooted there, Mr. Muddella did not look to Canada; he looked to the United States, and his fear was that the United States might put on retaliatory duties and injure English trade. Hon. gentlemen know that although we are a portion of the British Empire, and although our flag is the flag of the British Empire, our trade is intimately connected with that of the United States. Sir, by looking after the true interests of Canada, we shall, I believe, best conserve our relations with England and the most outlying portions of the British Empire. I must hope that this motion be not persisted in, or, at all events, that it be not carried.

Mr. TUPPER (Pictou). As the hour is late, and we have listened to several speeches this evening on this very interesting subject, which has been so ably brought before the House, I do not propose to occupy the attention of hon. gentlemen at any great length. Indeed, the hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House have rendered it unnecessary, at this stage of the debate, for those who are in favor of the principle of the motion, and the resolution on the motion paper to which the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) referred, to elaborate the case. The hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, who have successively taken their seat, one apparently from an avowed sympathy with the motion, and the other for reasons best known to himself, have avoided the main question before the House. The hon. gentleman who last spoke took up considerable time in discussing the question of trade relations with the United States, and alluded at considerable length to the question of Imperial federation. Neither of these questions is before the House on the present occasion. The question before the House has nothing to do with the question of Imperial federation. It is true, many of the leagues in Canada, and Canada alone, have favored some question of this kind; but neither the league in Canada nor the league in England has subscribed to the principles in this resolution. Therefore I do not understand why, when this question is important enough, broad enough, and big enough to engage our consideration, such questions as Imperial federation and other questions which have been discussed outside of the House, and are in no way connected with this important trade question, should be brought before the House. I was somewhat sorry, in listening to the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat—who poses in this House as a temperance man, and who lectures his brethren sometimes as to what they should do on that subject—to hear him dwell so long on the growth and export of barley in Canada. The main use for barley is for malting purposes, and surely my hon. friend has not receded from the strong position on the temperance question which he has so long occupied. My hon. friend discussed one other point only, and, perhaps, not the most important point, mentioned by the hon. member for North Simcoe, and that was the practicability of this resolution or of the scheme embodied in it. He took issue on that point with the hon. gentleman, who was sanguine that the day was coming when it would be practicable to go to the English Government with such a policy as this, and to endeavor to make trade arrangements for the Empire—not between Canada and the mother country, but between the mother country and all the different colonies of the Empire. I did not understand either the mover of the resolution, or the hon. member for North Simcoe, or the resolution itself, to go so far as to ask that this Government should at once approach the Government of the mother country with this policy. I understood the hon. member for North Simcoe to take an entirely different position in the debate. I understood him to forcibly allude to the different facts occurring every day in England, in order to show that the current of public opinion there was in favor of a trade policy for the British Empire, as distinct from the policy of England with the rest of the world. In support of that position, the hon. gentleman was able to urge strong reasons. He was able to point to the unmistakable utterances of a powerful party in England to-day—he was able to point to the utterances of the leaders of that party, and the body of men who constitute it, when they met in solemn conclave at Oxford, in favor of that view. But the trade returns and the consular reports appertaining to the British Empire furnish far wider reasons in support of the position taken by the advocates of this resolution. These reports and returns show unmistakably that, so far from the policy of free trade in the mother country carrying out the views and the opinions of the framers of that policy, who have stood by it for so many years—so far from these gentlemen being able to convince the world that free trade is the proper policy, steadily, day by day, all the nations of the world, all the countries that are the commercial rivals of Great Britain, are going more and more to the other extreme.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. TUPPER (Pictou). These gentlemen have found the colonies of the Empire forced to adopt a protective policy, and they have found that the foothold of England, once unchallenged in the different markets of the world, foreign as well as colonial, is steadily becoming weaker.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. TUPPER (Pictou). In a moment I will give the hon. gentleman my authority for making the statement. The statistics to which I have alluded, and to which the House will permit me briefly to refer, fully bear it out. Comparing the position which England holds in the foreign markets to-day with that she held formerly, we find that to the colonies, in 1872, England exported $320,500,000 worth of goods, while in 1886 she exported to them $350,000,000 worth, showing a steady increase; and if you take her returns of exports to foreign countries, which formerly were her monopoly, you will find the proportion has decreased. In the last fifty years the imports by Great Britain from the colonies increased from $75,000,000 to $405,000,000, and her exports to the colonies increased to about the same extent, from $75,000,000 to $375,000,000. Those are important figures, and hon. gentlemen will see their force. They will see by them that this colonial question never entered the minds of English statesmen at the time they adopted their free trade policy, the value of the colonial trade then being as nothing compared with the value of the other trade. No one will seriously controvert that position, and it furnishes an important and powerful reason for the change that is coming over English public opinion. We find, for instance, Sir Robert Stout, the premier of New Zealand, in a very interesting article in the Nineteenth Century, written last year, citing as evidence in support of the position I took a short time ago, and which hon. gentlemen opposite challenged, the important fact that in New South Wales, American contractors were able to obtain the contract for building the largest iron bridge ever built there, at a figure $135,000 below the lowest tender from Great Britain herself. Hon. gentlemen will see from this one sample, that in her own colony and in that iron industry which, with the coal industry, at one time gave England the monopoly of the markets of the world, England can be outbid by a foreign competitor. In face of this evidence, hon. gentlemen ought to hesitate before contradicting the assertion that Great Britain has not in the foreign markets to-day the position she hitherto held. Why do hon. gentlemen opposite try to minimise the undoubtedly grand results that would follow from increased trade between the mother country and her colonies. No man from the Maritime Provinces, I venture to say, would for a moment declare that he would be in favor of frustrating a movement which has in view the increase in commerce not only between the mother country and the Maritime Provinces but between the different colonies of the British Empire and the Maritime Provinces. We have expended, without demur, in times past, large sums of public money in the endeavor to create a trade between the West Indies and Canada, and hon. gentlemen opposite have always held that the money spent in this view was well spent, and that to open up new channels of trade was an object that should be encouraged. We find these potent facts: that, in the West Indies today, our competitor is not merely the mother country, but we find there, as in the English markets themselves, that the American States are our competitors. They actually buy from us about 700,000 lbs. of dried fish to send to the West Indies. Their trade relations are so complete with that portion of the British Empire, that they do not only their own trade but a part of ours with them. Of course, you can encourage that trade by subsidising steamers, but it, nevertheless, is true that you can encourage and foster it in the way proposed by the resolution now before the House. Not only do the United States send our productions there, but they also send them to Africa, to the extent of $5,000,000 annually; to Australasia, to the extent of $10,500,000 annually; and to Great Britain and Ireland, where they meet us as gigantic competitors, they send $447,000,000 worth of goods annually. The last gentleman who addressed the House, as a practical farmer, as one who is familiar with the trade between the mother country and the Dominion of Canada, mentioned, en passant, three articles in which we had a large trade with the mother country—cheese, butter, and I did not catch the other article which he mentioned. Even under present circumstances, I find competing with us in the markets of the old world that country to the south of us which Mr. Gladstone referred to recently as making progress by leaps and bounds, and he predicted that it was possible that it would distance even Great Britain in the near future. We find that, in regard to cheese, we send more to Great Britain than the United States do. But there are a host of things in regard to which they interfere with us. Looking at the trade returns, I find—though I have not had time to look the question up as I would wish to do—and taking the consular reports of the United States and the official documents published in Washington in 1885—the following results:—

	Great Britain Imported.	From United States.	From Canada.
Cattle.....	$46,661,210	$17,686,815	$4,650,595
Sheep and lambs....	12,591,091	157,775	919,495

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman is simply confirming what I said, that our chief export to England was animals and their products, and that we exported a larger amount in proportion to our population than the United States did.

Mr. TUPPER (Picton). If I misunderstood the hon. gentleman that is another thing, but I do not think he mentioned the article of fish or the article of lumber. At any rate, if the hon. gentleman will look through the trade returns, and I hesitate to weary the House by giving the proof of this at this hour, he will see that we send a considerable number of other articles in the same way. We are sending an appreciable quantity of manufactures, we are sending something of nearly every article, and the whole point is that you cannot judge of the trade which we could do by that which we do at present. Large as our trade has been in the past, you are not to judge what it may be in the future, or to test the merits of this resolution simply by what it has been in the past; but, if we have been able to do something, in spite of the strong and powerful competitors we have on the south, what can we do if we receive the preference in the different colonial markets? No one will dare to say that our advantages will not be great in that regard. I will not refer to the matter of canned goods and fruit which we export, which are becoming large items of our trade, and which, under any circumstances, we hope to increase year by year. But, in reference to all these matters, the slightest change in the tariff, the smallest amount that could be obtained from the British Government under an arrangement with the different colonies, would start all these industries in the most extraordinary and beneficial manner to Canada. The hon. gentleman spoke of the English merchants having no reason to fear competition in foreign markets, and said that our whole supposition was fallacious, without a careful consideration of the action which England would be sure to take in this matter. If you look over the blue-books published in England as well as those published in the United States, you will see that not only are the manufacturers of the neighboring republic meeting the English manufacturers in colonial markets, but also the German manufacturers to an alarming extent. I could quote from the reports of English and German as well as American consuls, to show that the Germans and Americans are driving the English from the position they once held; but I may summarise these reports by one small quotation from Sir Thomas Brassey's work on "Foreign work and English wages," in which he says:

"Excluded from the principal manufacturing countries by a protectionist policy, it is to the colonies and to the half civilised countries that we must look for new openings for the expansion of our trade."

When English public opinion is looking towards the growing commercial trade between England and the colonies, it is wise for us not to formulate any policy here; the time has not come for that. To make any definite expression of our views now would be unwise, but we should, by an expression of the opinion of Parliament, in an unmistakable manner, show public men in the old country who may help this matter, what our sympathies are, and that we hope the day will come when this will be carried out. I hope that some day the representative men of the Australasian confederation will go to London and meet the representatives of the other co-federated colonies, and arrange a system which will be beneficial to all the colonies, as well as to the mother country itself. In this, there is no attack upon self-government or upon commercial autonomy. It is not necessary to invoke any sentiment in regard to this matter, but there is simply a trade proposition before the House; and I understood the mover of the resolution and the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) to give no uncertain voice on this question, that this is no time for action, but that it is desirable to tell the distinguished men in Great Britain, men like Mr. Chamberlain—who has given the benefit of his great ability to this subject—that we are ready to meet them, and that there is nothing in the National Policy antagonistic to this matter or to the benefit of the farmers of that country. It is not proposed, as I understand it—and if it is proposed I am against it tooth and nail—to interfere with the vested interests of the country. It is proposed, on the other hand, to give them far more protection than they now have. Whatever other hon. gentlemen have to say upon the question, I, for one, would not go for lowering the duties which are necessary for a fair protection of the manufacturing industries of this country, to the extent of one single farthing. But I think an arrangement can be made; I think we can raise the duties on other goods when the time comes. But, certainly, if there is an unanimous desire throughout the colonies and Great Britain—I mean by unanimous desire, such a one as will induce political action

—I am satisfied that when the time comes, an arrangement can be easily and willingly made by this country to carry out the objects which the mover of this resolution has in view. I promised the House not to deal with the position of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher), as far as the question of reciprocity is concerned. It was quite natural that the hon. member for North Simcoe should explain his views as far as they affected the question of commercial union; and I quite admit that my hon. friends opposite who, a year or two ago, might consistently have joined hands with us, as the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) wished to do to-night, in legislating as far as we could towards a consummation of such a policy, are, to a large extent, debarred from it. They wish to throw in their fortunes with the United States, our competitors in nearly all the articles of trade between Great Britain and ourselves. We, on the other hand, who support the substance of the resolution, and the proposition of the hon. member for North Simcoe, desire closer trade relations with the mother country and the colonies which constitute the British Empire.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It does seem to me rather extraordinary that a motion of such importance as this should have been discussed the whole evening without any member of the Government giving to the House the slightest indication of what the views of the Government are upon this question. We are told by the seconder of this motion that it is one of paramount importance, that it is one effecting not merely the future well being of Canada, but one of the utmost consequence to the whole Empire; and yet, after such declaration as that, made by a gentleman who occupies a very prominent place on the front benches of the Ministerial side, not a member of Government, up to this moment, has given to the House the slightest indication of what their views may be upon the subject. Sir, there can be no doubt whatever that this measure is one, if it were adopted, of a revolutionary character. If we are to believe what hon. gentlemen opposite contended on another important proposition that was under the consideration of the House at an earlier period of the Session, we should come to the conclusion that the proposition now before the House would lead to the absolute destruction of everything like self-government in this country. Sir, those hon. gentlemen informed us again and again that anything like absolute free trade between Canada and the United States must ultimately lead to the wiping out of our political institutions, and there can be no doubt whatever that if they were to abandon the policy upon which the Government entered some years ago, and adopt the views expressed in this resolution, an equally great calamity would befall this country. We would have our autonomy wiped out, and we would be absorbed into the government of the United Kingdom. Sir, if there is danger on the one hand, there would be still greater danger on other; and if hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches entertain those views which the exponents of the Government put forward upon another proposition, we can come to but one conclusion with regard to their views as to what would be the political effect of this proposition. Now, an hon. gentleman has made a proposition which would lead to a complete change in the fiscal policy of this country. Are the Government prepared to recommend to this House that change? The Government asked us again and again, what were we to do if we wiped out the 7½ millions that we now derive from the imposition of taxes upon our trade with the United States? I ask them this question: What, under this proposition, are they to do if they wipe out 10 or 12 millions of customs duties which they receive by taxes upon our trade with the United Kingdom? There can be no doubt whatever that if the proposition of the hon. gentleman who moved this motion is carried out—I lay aside the commentary that was read upon the proposition by the hon. gentleman who seconded it—there must be an abandonment of those taxes which the Government have imposed on articles produced in the United Kingdom which have hitherto been consumed in this country. Why, Sir, hon. gentlemen do not suppose for one moment that the people of the United Kingdom would, if they were making such an arrangement as is proposed, permit the articles of Canada to come in absolutely free of taxes into the market of the United Kingdom, while those of the United Kingdom coming into Canada would be subject to a very heavy taxation. What do the Government propose, then? We find this proposition moved by one supporter of the Government, seconded by another, and supported in a speech by another gentleman who we are told, is looking with longing eyes, and not without hope to the Treasury benches. Sir, I think it is rather extraordinary, under these circumstances, that the Government should have, up to this moment, failed to indicate to the House what their views are upon the question. Are they in favor of abandoning their National Policy, and of accepting a policy of the federation of the Empire, for that is precisely what this proposition means. The hon. gentleman who seconded the motion told us that this was not quite so explicit as the proposition which he had submitted but that it was really a proposition with the same object and aim in view. And so the hon. gentleman has submitted to the House a proposition which we are led to believe has the support of the Government, proposing to wipe out $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 of customs duty, and establish absolute free trade between Canada and the United Kingdom. Now, the First Minister is in his place, and I put to him the question: If he could not see his way to carry on the Government of this country in abandoning the $7,000,000 of taxes that we get upon trade with the United States, how is he prepared to carry on the Government of the country and to abandon the $12,000,000 of taxes that we receive from trade with the United Kingdom? Does the First Minister propose to accept this proposition? Does he attach to it the importance that is attached to it by hon. gentlemen on that side of the House who have spoken? Does he subscribe to the doctrine that fair trade is in the air, and that the policy of fair trade at this moment constitutes the policy of the Conservative party in the United Kingdom, that Lord Salisbury is a supporter of that policy in disguise, without the courage of his convictions, and that all those who support him entertain the same views? I think, Mr. Speaker, that the people of the United Kingdom, their representatives, at all events, have rather a strange way of exhibiting their devotion to this principle. If I remember rightly, but a few weeks ago a vote was taken in the House of Commons upon the subject, and there were 4 supporters to 304 opponents. That, I think, was the way the vote stood. Those hon. gentlemen are proposing to us a proposition that, however favorably it may be received by hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches and those behind them, certainly has not been very favorably received by the representatives of the people of the United Kingdom. We are dealing here with questions of practical politics, and I suppose the Government are not prepared to abandon what they call the National Policy unless they see some hope of this new policy being adopted, and the action of the Parliament of the United Kingdom on the question does not indicate a very great disposition to carry it out at a very early day. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) in discussing this question not long since in Toronto told us that the theory of a Federal Government was propounded by Lord Durham in 1837, and it was not until 1864 that serious steps were taken with a view to consummating the policy of union which Lord Durham in his report had indicated. And so, the hon. gentleman says, we should not be discouraged. But it is rather an extraordinary proposition to submit to this Parliament, that we should at this moment disregard our present interests and present necessities and should look to the condition of things thirty or forty years hence, and undertake to exercise a policy of self-denial and act upon lines that are only to lead to conclusion long after we have not only ceased to be members of this House but inhabitants of the world. There is a great deal of force in the observations addressed some years ago to the people by the Rev. Sydney Smith. He said: Gentlemen, so long as you are members of the congregation and occupants of the pews you have the right to decide what shall be done in the parish church, but after you have become occupants of the graveyard, after you have ceased to be here and others have taken your places, you ought to leave them the same privilege of judging what is best in their own interests as you claim for yourself while living. So long as you are masters of the ship you may say that the ship shall sail east or west, but when you have resigned your position and it is placed in charge of other persons, it is for them to say in what direction it shall sail and upon what voyage it shall enter. And so I say that those who occupy the places we now occupy thirty or forty years hence will be the best judges as to what policy shall be adopted in their day.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of what ought to be adopted now.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is not the hon. gentleman's proposition. The hon. gentleman pointed out that Lord Durham in 1837 decided in favor of a union and it was not until 1864 that serious steps were taken to carry it out; but now we have a speech in favor of the principle of federation of the Empire at some period in the remote future, and that some one will then be in favor of giving effect to the policy at this time enunciated. I am not in favor of any such policy. I believe any step in that direction would diminish our power of self-government, it would increase our responsibilities, it would impose serious burdens from which, at the present time, we are relieved, and I am not disposed to sacrifice our present opportunity for practical improvement and our present lines of public policy that are in the interests of the people, in favor of some fancied scheme upon which it is necessary to consult another party which has a paramount interest in the question, especially when there is not the slightest indication of any disposition on their part to adopt the policy we are now marking out for them. The people of the United Kingdom number 37,000,000, and the hon. gentleman proposes that we shall mark out here a policy for those 37,000,000 and tell them what is the best course to adopt at this moment, not with any hope of its being now adopted, but, in order that we may convert them to our views and at some period induce them to accept what he and some other hon. gentlemen believe to be an excellent policy. The hon. gentleman also told the House that the people of Ontario were more prosperous than are the people of the United States to-day. That was a very extraordinary announcement for the hon. gentleman to make. One would suppose it was a statement of which he had been ignorant. It seems to be new to the hon. gentleman, quite as new as the calculation of an eclipse would be to an Indian. But this statement was as true ten years ago as it is to-day. There was a greater difference in 1877 between the relative prosperity of the people of Ontario and of the United States, as a whole, than to-day; and yet the hon. gentleman did not hesitate to declare that the whole country was going to ruin at that time. The present First Minister moved a resolution declaring that the people of this country were leaving it, that people could not get employment, and that if he was returned to power all this would come to an end. It did not come to an end. The people are leaving the country in greater numbers than before.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I say "Oh, yes;" and statistics show it to be true.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is no doubt whatever of the fact.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, every doubt of it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There are at least four times as many people leaving the country every year as there were in 1878. What did the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) tell us to night? The hon. gentleman said that the country is depressed, that trade is depressed, that the condition of the farmers, although better than the condition of the farmers in the United States, was far from satisfactory.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes, he did say so; I took down his words.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, he did not.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I say he did, and the question will be decided by Hansard when the speech of the gentleman appears. The First Minister knows that the hon. gentleman went on and said what the price of wheat is to-day, that it was 77½ cents a bushel. Now, the First Minister promised the people that it would never be less than a dollar. He further promised the people that the price of barley should never be less than it was in the United States.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They have had better prices.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. member for North Simcoe, to-night, has said that the farming population was in a depressed condition, but that it was brought about by matters over which the Government could exercise no control. I say we were told the National Policy was intended to prevent that state of things. We were called "flies on the wheel." Why did hon. gentlemen call us by that name? Hon. gentlemen, when in Opposition, promised to stop the emigration of the people and secure for every man good wages for a fair day's work and constant employment, and at the same time fair prices for our agricultural products. Yet what is the statement made by the member for North Simcoe, in support of the resolution to-night? It is that such is not the condition of things, that the agricultural population are in a depressed condition, in an unsatisfactory condition, and that it is necessary to bring about a better state of things than exists. How does the hon. gentleman, and the mover of the resolution, propose to do it? He says: Let us enter into commercial relations with the United Kingdom and other British colonies; let us enter into a compact by which there shall be absolute free trade between the various portions of the British Empire and high tariff against all the rest of the world. That is the proposition of the mover. But does the supporter of that resolution take the same ground? Oh, no; he tells us a different story. He says: That is too high a price to pay for such an arrangement as this, we would not like to have absolute free trade, we have got to consider the condition of the manufacturers to some extent, and the manufacturers have got to make concessions to the farmers. Now, assume at the present time that the manufacturer gets 60 per cent., and he must be content with 53, for the hon. gentleman says: Let us take off 6 or 7 per cent, so as to give the English manufacturer a little advantage in the Canadian market, and for giving him that little advantage the British people will give us absolute free trade and exclude the rest of the world from trading with them. Hon. gentlemen know that this is an absurd proposition. If the English Government and the people of England can be persuaded to act on the principle of free trade, and to tax the rest of the world and establish free trade between England and Canada and the colonies, it can only be on the principle of absolute free trade between the different portions of the Empire as free as that which exists between the different Provinces of this Dominion. But the hon. gentleman who leads the House will not support such a proposition, and the hon. gentleman who seconded this proposition dare not express his approval of such a proposition as that. The hon. gentleman is in favor of the federation of the Empire under which our autonomy would be sacrificed, he is in favor of a federation of the Empire that would compel us to fight the battles of England against Russia in Central Asia.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh !

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hon. gentlemen think this is nonsense. I believe that such a view is nonsense, but nevertheless, it is held by quite a number of his supporters. Here is a gallant general who sits on this side of the House, but who belongs to that side, who assured the people of this city the other evening that Canada absolutely was spoiling for war, in which she would feel all the consequences and mischiefs of war, and under which she would feel the necessity of relying upon the right arm of England for her support, and then from the feelings of gratitude that would be so far carried on that she would be compelled to fight the Zulus in Africa and the Russians in Afghanistan. I notice that the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) did not quite fairly state the commercial relations and the trade of England with the United States. He represented the trade of England as declining, that her manufacturers were losing the markets of the world, and that all this was being brought about because other countries had adopted a protective policy. He referred to the fact that the trade of England with the United States was declining. Where is the evidence of that? The hon. gentleman took a year that happened to favor his comparison, but let him take another year. The exports of England to the United States in 1878 were £14,500,000 and in 1886 £26,824,000 sterling; nearly double what they were in 1878. Why did not the hon. gentleman take some other year in which the comparison would not be quite so favorable to his argument?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He took 1885.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And I take 1886 when the trade is nearly £6,000,000 more than in 1885. Why did the hon. gentleman take 1885 and not 1886, for I apprehend he had the statistics before him? Then, when he comes to tell us about the report of the Commission of Enquiry into the depressed state of trade in England why did he read the report of the minority? The hon. gentleman did that, and he did not tell the House that it was a report of the minority.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Yes, he did.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I accept that statement. I did not hear him say so. At all events the whole drift of his speech was supported simply by a selection of evidence that suited the line of argument which he had adopted, and carefully ignoring whatever might tend to establish a different proposition. Then, Sir, if the hon. gentleman had thought as he does that free trade with England, with protection against all the rest of the world is such an advantage, why did he support the statutory offer? The hon. gentleman who leads the Government did not take the same view. The hon. gentleman proposes to establish free trade with the United States upon certain conditions. He never made such a proposition to England and in fact he declared in 1878 that we wanted a policy of retaliation to bring the United States to terms—that we wanted freer trade relations. What did the hon. gentleman do when he succeeded to power? Did he confine his increased taxation to the punishment of the people of the United States? Why, Sir, he applied the punishment to England as well. Does the hon. gentleman think it was a great advantage to this country to buy cheaply as well as to sell dearly? Why is it that he has adopted towards England which puts no tax on our exports the same policy that he does toward the United States where he said retaliation was necessary? The hon. gentleman has not taken the same view as to the importance of free trade with England that he has with regard to free trade with the United States, and yet the hon. gentleman's supporters here to-night state that they are prepared to adopt the other policy. Is the hon. gentleman who leads the Government prepared to adopt this policy? I am satisfied that the right hon. gentleman will not venture to ask the House to support this proposition. I am satisfied that the hon. gentleman will not ask the House to agree to reciprocal free trade between England and Canada. I am rather inclined to think—unless the hon. gentleman's views have undergone another revolution—that he will hardly be found here to support the views of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) on the subject of Imperial Federation. I think that the hon. gentleman has both in England and in this country declared himself against such a proposition; and unless he has had new light—and I have not heard that he has announced views different from those he formerly expressed—I fancy he will not support the proposition of the hon. member who moved this motion or of the hon. member who seconded it. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) told us that the English are driven out of the market of the world by the German competitors. If the hon. gentleman would undertake to read the reports of English consuls, and they are quite accessible, he will find that that is not the case, and so far as it is the case in certain localities it is due to other and different causes. The reports of the English consuls at Rio Janiero, La Plata and other parts of South America, show that the Germans have sent into the various republics of South America commercial travellers who are thoroughly conversant with the Spanish and Portuguese languages and he tells the English manufacturers that unless they send out men who are good linguists they cannot expect to sell goods with the same facilities that the Germans do. What are commercial men in England saying just now? We must establish schools and colleges for men intending to engage in commercial pursuits in all parts of the world where the modern languages will be taught to them? What is the report of the English consul from the capital of Japan? It is that the French and German commercial men there are thoroughly acquainted with the Japanese language. And they have sent their commercial agents all over Japan, while the English have sent men there who can scarcely speak a word of Japanese, and who have to confine themselves to the capital, and he says that unless they adopt the aggressive policy of the Germans and the French they cannot make the same progress in establishing a market for their goods in that country. He says their goods are better and cheaper—there is no doubt about that; but they have not men so well qualified to act on the part of those manufacturing and commercial houses as the French and German houses have. There is not one of the English consuls—and I believe I have read the reports of every one of them throughout the world—who assigns as a reason that the English are inferior as manufacturers and are failing in the race. Then, Sir, the hon. gentleman told us that our barley was a necessity to the people of the United States, and that as long as we chose to grow the article, the Americans will have it, no matter what the duty is. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. In 1875, the Americans raised but a very few million bushels of barley. To-day they raise more than five times the quantity they raised twenty years ago; and as every one acquainted with agricultural populations knows, the people in large districts become habituated to run in a certain routine; they grow certain products, and unless something occurs to induce them to change the order of rotation of crops, and to introduce some new crop, no change will take place; but when the people of the United States began largely to consume malt liquors, and a demand arose for barley, the article began to command a high price, and the Americans began to grow it largely. So that neither on the American side of the line nor on the Canadian side does barley bring as high a price as it did ten years ago, and the Government have found themselves wholly unable to seriously affect the price of that article. Now, I am not going to delay the House by entering into a discussion of this question at any length, because the Government has no more serious idea than we have of accepting the principle laid down in the gentleman's motion. They know better than to accept any such proposition, and that being the case I do not think it is necessary to discuss the subject further.

Gen. LAURIE. I desire to make a personal explanation. If I were an older member of this House, I might have been prepared for the way in which this matter was referred to by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). It appears to me that he rather took the line of drawing a red herring across the track, to carry this discussion to Imperial federation. I do not think Imperial federation is concerned. But with reference to the remark that I am stated to have made, that the people of Canada were spoiling for a war, and that they should be taken to fight the battles of England in Central Asia among the Afghans, or in Africa among the Zulus, I think that is exactly the opposite of what I stated. What I stated was that it was giving a false impression of Imperial federation to say that that was the view of its promoters; but I stated at the same time—and I am satisfied that in this I shall carry the House with me—that there was a strong feeling in Canada in favor of taking part in England's wars when she was in danger. But I certainly pointed out to the meeting I was addressing that it was not a true idea of Imperial federation that our people should be taken against their will to fight the battles of the Empire abroad.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I shall not stand between the House for any length of time and any hon. gentleman who may wish to address it on this subject, but I wish to make a few remarks upon it. Before doing so, however, you will permit me to correct the history of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills). He declared that the party of the right hon. gentleman characterised himself and his friends as "flies on the wheel." Why, Sir, they never did anything of the kind. That phrase originated with the hon. member for South Oxford.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No; there is the original proprietor of it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. DAVIN. I am perfectly correct, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for South Oxford was explaining political economy, and he declared that statesmen were only "flies on the wheel."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman is wholly wrong; I did nothing of the kind.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He is quite right.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It was first used by the First Minister at Halifax. He rightly compared himself to a fly on a wheel.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He used it at Halifax in 1864.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, the flies are not of so much importance; but I distinctly remember the hon. member for South Oxford making a speech, in which he did not credit the Prime Minister or anyone else with making the statement, but declared that statesmen had as much influence in promoting prosperity as "flies on the wheel."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Withdraw.

Mr. DAVIN. I cannot withdraw, because I remember it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then, all I can say is that it is a very vinous and after-dinner memory. I have told you distinctly that you are wrong.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, I do not think it is at all unparliamentary to say that my memory of a matter like that is one that can be relied on; and my memory, after dinner or before dinner, is probably about as good as that of the hon. member for South Oxford. But, of course, if he is deeply hurt at the suggestion that he could describe himself and his friends as "flies on the wheel," I will, out of consideration for himself and the flies, withdraw the statement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no hesitation in saying that the hon. member for South Oxford said so, and I heard him say so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, I have no hesitation in saying that the statement just made is utterly without foundation; and if I knew any stronger expression that would not be unparliamentary, I would use it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite ready to use strong unparliamentary language, but he did state so, and if he says he did not, he says what is not true.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I did not, and the hon. gentleman in saying that I did knows that he is stating a falsehood.

Mr. DAVIN. I will not refer to that, but I will say that I never in all my life felt confident in my memory, and found that I had cause to repent relying on it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But you have withdrawn.

Mr. DAVIN. I did not withdraw. The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) is, I see, trying the new role of a humorist; he generally appears in a different role. I will not pay any attention to the hon. gentleman in this role, but will proceed to discuss the question before the House. It is greatly to be regretted that the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) should have introduced Imperial federation into this question. This has nothing to do with Imperial federation.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Oh, yes, it has.

Mr. DAVIN. This is the proposal that the Government shall make certain propositions to England; and I venture to say there is not a man on either side of the House who will dare to controvert the statement that if we can get England to discriminate in our favor, it will be of the greatest advantage to us. It does not follow that we need in any way interfere with the protection we have given our manufacturers; it does not follow that our infant industries should, in any way, be imperilled, but we can make proposals to England that will be at once advantageous to England and to us, without in any way imperilling the existence of these industries.

At hon. MEMBER. What are they?

Mr. DAVIN. It is of great value to have introduced this subject here and to have introduced it in England, because England has had very little interest in her colonies, and in Canada up to a very recent period. It is exceedingly difficult to bring home to a large population, such as that of England, the affairs and the claims of a country separated from her by the "great floods and barriers of creation," to use the language of Edmund Burke. I can see here an illustration of how difficult it is to do that, in the difficulty we have of bringing home to members from the east the exact condition of affairs in the North-West, which is nearer to us than we are to England. But as surely as it is of the greatest importance to Canada that our eastern members and politicians should thoroughly understand the North-West, it is of the greatest importance to England and to the Empire that the people of England should thoroughly understand the claim of her colonies and the advantages that the colonies hold out to her. The other day I was reading the speech of an eminent naval man, who pointed out that England could not, apart from her colonies, defend her mercantile marine. He pointed out that, under the new conditions of naval warfare, England, deprived of her colonies, could not protect her mercantile marine; therefore, apart from any such consideration as that referred to by the hon. member for Bothwell, namely that we might have to be involved in wars and fight battles, which is a mere attempt to discredit a question on which it has no practical bearing, because nobody who takes a sensible view of this question proposes anything of the kind.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Ask the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) ?

Mr. DAVIN. If we can show the English Government that her colonies are of the greatest advantage to her, then, from our point of view, when we come to what the hon. member for Simcoe, in his closely-reasoned and most instructive speech, called the great market of the world, we see what an advantage is presented by that market to Canada. The hon. member for Bothwell talked as if this proposal was for free trade with England, and the hon. member for Elgin, acting on a similar supposition, said: let us have reciprocity all round. We would then have to go in for direct taxation and free trade with all the world, and the result would be that our manufacturers would despair, and the exodus, which weighs so heavily on the hearts of hon. gentlemen opposite, would be swollen to an enormous extent. There is no proposition here for free trade with England.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is it ?

Mr. DAVIN. There is the proposition that England shall give us an advantage in consideration of our giving her an advantage, as compared with other countries.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is it ?

Mr. DAVIN. Can we not discriminate? Can we not put up a discriminating duty against other countries in favor of England? Is not that possible? Mr. Gladstone was accustomed to say there are three customs. We may remain as we are, or we may adopt the benighted policy which hon. gentlemen opposite advocate, or we may support the suggestion of the mover of this motion and try whether we shall not get advantages in the English market, by discriminating on some articles, say on breadstuffs, in favor of Canada, while we would put a duty on manufactured articles coming from other countries to the extent of 5 per cent. or 10 per cent. over those imposed on the imports of foreign countries.

Mr. LISTER. That is a "dandy" policy.

Mr. DAVIN. I have never studied slang, and I do not know the meaning of "dandy." The only idea I have of "dandy" is as applied to the individual, and I dare say the hon. gentleman fulfils that part well.

Mr. LISTER. No, you are the man.

Mr. DAVIN.

Mr. DAVIN. This question has been most properly brought before the House to-night, but some of the hon. gentlemen opposite have sought to raise issues that should not have been raised. The hon. member for Bothwell complained that no member of the Government had spoken on this question. If this motion should be carried, no one can doubt that the Government will make proposal to the other colonies and to England, and that a step will be taken towards an understanding of what may be done in this direction. At this late hour I do not propose to say anything further except this, that any one who visits England—and I visited England eight or nine months ago—will find the greatest possible change in the sentiments of the people there; he will find they have made the greatest progress in understanding the colonies and that the fetish of free trade no longer holds dominion over their minds; he will find they are beginning to understand the advantage of taking a different course from that which they took under the inspiration of Manchester and under a complete misconception of the teaching of Adam Smith. I will also give the hon. gentleman a fact that came to my knowledge when I was travelling on the continent. I found that large quantities of ready-made clothes were being sent over to England from Belgium, sent to England where men are supposed to have such an advantage in manufacturing wearing apparel. Can anyone doubt that it would be an advantage to England to preserve that market for her own sons? Then, Sir, I know Coventry. I remember, when I was a boy, driving over to Coventry, before Mr. Gladstone's policy ruined their manufactures, and it was a thriving and a thickly populated town. After I left the university I visited it again, and I found it like a city of the dead, the manufactories closed, and the industries destroyed. By adopting a wiser policy, by adopting fair trade, as my hon. and learned friend has said to-day, and as is set forth in this resolution, England would benefit her own trade, would keep her own markets for her own sons, would practically promote her industries which are now dormant or dead, and would obtain advantages for herself and extend advantages to us.

Mr. McNEILL. As this is a very important question, a question the magnitude and importance of which can scarcely be exaggerated, and as hon. gentlemen opposite have not discussed it at all, I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. LAURIER. It is, perhaps, just as well to adopt the motion of my hon. friend, as, unfortunately, the Government do not appear to be prepared to give an opinion on this important question this evening, and, when it comes up again, if it does come up again this Session, we may expect to have the benefit of their views on the subject.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Orders in Council, &c., connected with the resignation of Antoine Audette, Esquire, Postmaster of North Stukely, and with the appointment of his successor.—(Mr. Langelier, Quebec Centre.)

Correspondence between the Corporation of the City of Quebec, or any of its officers, and the Department of Militia, or any of the officers of the same, respecting the supplying, from the waterworks of the said city, of water to the cartridge factory and the drill hall.—(Mr. Langelier, Quebec Centre.)

Copies of all correspondence, Orders in Council, papers and documents respecting the seizure of diamonds and other precious stones effected at Quebec on one David Levi, and the cancelling of the said seizure.—(Mr. Langelier, Quebec Centre.)

Copies of all correspondence between the Department of Railways and Messrs. A. Pion & Co., of Quebec, in relation to a claim for goods damaged on the Intercolonial Railway.—(Mr. Langelier, Quebec Centre.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12:10 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 1st May, 1888.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 118) to amend the Weights and Measures Act, as respects the contents of packages of salt. He said: I propose to amend the present Act by providing that every barrel of salt sold or offered for sale in Canada shall weigh 280 lbs.; the weight to be marked on the barrel. When imported in barrels such barrels should have the name of the importer marked thereon, and when packed in Canada the name of the packer shall be on the barrel. It is not proposed to interfere with salt imported in bulk or in sacks, but when small bags of salt are packed in barrels, such barrels shall have the gross weight marked on them.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. DAVIN. Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I wish to call the attention of the House to a gross breach of its privilege. Last night, it will be in the recollection of the House that the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) made a speech in which he used this phrase: "You said we were flies on the wheel." I happened to speak later on, and I said that I should like to correct the history of the hon. member for Bothwell. I said that the phrase "flies on the wheel" was not flung across the House at those hon. gentlemen. I said that the phrase "flies on the wheel" was—

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman will allow me, I must say that he cannot make a question of privilege of what passed last night in another debate in which he took part. If he wishes to make a personal explanation, and will keep himself within the limits I have on a previous occasion indicated to the House, that is another thing.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I will put the question. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt that motion?

Mr. DAVIN. I said that the phrase "flies on the wheel" had been used by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). Thereupon the hon. member, with that courtesy which distinguishes him, said it was not so.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is still breaking one of the Rules of the House. He is referring to a past debate of this Session.

Mr. HAGGART. If I understand rightly, the hon. member is bringing this up as a breach of privilege, the charge which was flung across the House to him last night, and I think he is perfectly in order.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair.

Mr. HAGGART. It was stated that the hon. member had not made a true statement.

Mr. SPEAKER. This incident could have been brought up last night as a question of order, when the veracity of the hon. member was called into question, but it cannot be taken up as a question of privilege.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If Mr. Speaker would so far kindly consent, it would please me exceedingly that the hon. gentleman should make his statement on the condition that I should have the right of reply.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it would be much better to have this dealt with when the debate is resumed, and I do not think it would further the business of the House to refer to that debate again.

Mr. DAVIN. In Manley's case, reported in the Commons Journals on the 10th November, 1620, the conduct of Manley was brought up as a matter of privilege, as I bring this matter up, and in Sheppard's case it was also brought up and was also a case of using language which it was not proper to use.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What year was that?

Mr. DAVIN. I think that was in 1622. Sheppard, for using language not nearly as strong as that of the hon. gentleman, was brought to the Bar of the House on his knees. However, if you decide that I should not go on now, I will not go on at present, but I can give notice, because, in the case of Sir Robert Peel and of Sir Edward Watkin, that course was adopted, so I will give notice in the regular way, and will bring the matter up.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. DAVIN. The Speaker rules that I cannot go on.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Speak to the motion for adjournment.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Go on.

Motion to adjourn withdrawn.

WAYS AND MEANS—THE BUDGET.

House resumed adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Sir Charles Tupper: "That Mr. Speaker leave the Chair for the House to go into Committee of Ways and Means," and the motion of Sir Richard Cartwright in amendment.

Mr. McLELAN. Mr. Speaker, I shall not follow the example of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) I shall not preface my remarks by stating that the observations that he made to the House were intolerable rubbish. The speech which he delivered is before the House and before the country, and the the House and the country will judge of that speech as they have judged of all the speeches which the hon. gentleman has delivered in this House, speeches which have never yet found a response in the hearts of the people of this country, to sustain him and approve of them. Sir, he excited our sympathies for the people of this country by telling us that he had addressed a hundred thousand of the electors of Ontario. The infliction of those speeches upon the people of Ontario excites our warmest sympathies, except in one respect, that they have resulted in giving to the Government a majority from that Province. He went down to speak to the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, in 1878, and his speeches there resulted in a majority against him and the Government of which he was a member. He has spoken, he says, to one hundred thousand people. One can fancy that speech redelivered and redelivered. I was reminded, Sir, of an American statesman, Mr. Stevenson, who made a humorous speech complaining that President Hayes had not appointed him collector of New Orleans; for, he said, on behalf of the republican party, he had made 127 speeches, or rather he had delivered one speech 127 times. So, Sir, I presume that the hon. member for South Oxford has repeated the same speech to a hundred thousand voters of Ontario. There is a similarity in all his speeches upon public questions and in all his resolutions every year. They seem to grow a little every year, but as a repetition of what we had last year and a little added. It reminds me of the old legend of "The House that Jack built," the revelations increasing in length a little from every repetition. He has discussed almost every possible question throughout the country. Sometimes we find him dealing with a protective tariff, and the robberies committed by protection; sometimes we find him discussing the gender of political parties. In 1884 we found him at Toronto advocating the independence of Canada, and in 1887 we find him here on the floor of Parliament, and on the hustings, advocating annexation to the United States. It is true, Sir, that the hon. gentleman, in all the speeches he has made in this House, does not openly use the word annexation; but yet the arguments he has used, the assertions that he is making, are in advocacy of annexation to the United States. He startled the House this Session by informing us that he had been reading his Bible, that he had learned from Solomon that it is "In vain to spread the net in the sight of the bird." And so, Mr. Speaker, he covers up the net of annexation, and he talks about reciprocity, but the net is there all the same. He tells us that sentiment follows interest, and he declared that ever since the Loyalists settled in Canada, there has been no year in which it was not the interest of the people of this country to associate themselves and to unite with the people of the United States. He tells us that we owe no debt to England except the debt of forgiveness for the wrongs she has committed against us. And so, Sir, under the guise of unrestricted reciprocity, he throws in sentences and expressions every little while to affect the minds of the people in favor of annexation, which is more dangerous than open discussion of the question, and an open declaration of his views and intentions upon the subject. Sir, he has learned from Solomon that it is in vain to spread the net in the sight of the bird, and he covers it up, but the danger is only the greater:

"The deadliest snakes are those which, twined 'mongst flowers,
Blend their bright coloring with the varied blossoms,
Their fierce eyes glittering like a spangled dewdrop
In all so like what nature has most harmless,
That sportive innocence which dreads no danger is poisoned unawares."

The net was spread, but hidden, and the serpent twined among the flowers and blended its coloring with the blossoms, exhaling its poison all the time. He has been good enough to define his position for our benefit. He took special care to define it for the benefit of my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. He declares that his position upon trade questions is to discriminate against England, to turn his back upon the mother country in all commercial transactions, and to favor the United States; and he tells the hon. Finance Minister that if the people of the United States knew that we were determined to discriminate against England, they would hold up both hands for unrestricted reciprocity with us. That he defines as his position, that is his fixed policy, the policy of himself and his party, which he is prepared, he says, to fight out upon every hustings, and in every farm yard in the country. Sir, the hon. gentleman called attention to the fact that my hon. friend the Finance Minister was unable to discover a way to provide for the ordinary wants of the administration of the country. He, however, professed to have all the knowledge necessary, that it was simply a matter of statesmanship, that he had that ability, that patriotism, and that wisdom which were necessary to solve that great problem. Mr. Speaker, it was amusing to see the way in which he directed the attention of his party and the members around him, to note the fact—and he called upon the press of the country to note the fact—that my hon. friend was unable to grapple with this problem, but that he, the hon. member for South Oxford, had the wisdom, the statesmanship and the patriotism requisite to grapple with that question. Let me read what he said:

"I call on my hon. friends to take special note of it, I call on the people of Canada to take special note of it, that the hon. gentleman, by his own words, admits that he and his party are unable to solve or grapple with this problem. I well believe it. There is no doubt whatever that to grapple successfully with the great enterprise to which we have set our hands, requires the greatest prudence and the greatest economy. There is no doubt it requires a knowledge of the first principles on which honest taxation should be based, it requires the greatest wisdom for the welfare of Canada, not for retaining place by grants to combines and trusts and monopolies; it requires the greatest statesmanship and patriotism."

And then he says: I, the member for South Oxford, possess all this wisdom and statesmanship, but I am going to button it up in my pocket and will not let the Finance Minister know anything about it for fear he will steal some of the plums. The wisdom comes to him late and it comes to him suddenly. Why, not only did he announce to us that he had been studying Solomon, but he made a pious ejaculation and wished to heaven we could go back to 1874. With this new-found statesmanship and this new wisdom that has come to him I suppose he wanted to go back to 1874, and from that date to 1879, in order to remedy the errors he had committed and to wipe from our public records the blot which he had placed upon those records by his administration of public affairs during those years. I am not surprised that he should want to go back, that he should pray to heaven that he might be permitted to go back to 1874 and exercise that wisdom and statesmanship for the want of which every industry in this country languished and died, for the want of which he declared himself, as the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) was about to prove, to have been unable to grapple with public affairs and was but a "fly on the wheel." I understood the hon. gentleman last night denied the paternity of the fly.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh!

Mr. McLELAN. The leader of the Government said it was a wasp. We have had proof that there have been a good many bees in the hon. gentleman's bonnet, and this Session there has been a bee of enormous growth that wants to fly unrestricted. Now, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman denies that, permit me to take the figure of a ship used by the Minister of Finance and to say that during that period the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) never touched the tiller, that he allowed the ship to drift helpless upon the tide wherever she might go, that during five years, for the want of that statesmanship, that wisdom and that sagacity which he now claims, he never touched a helm, he never trimmed a sail to catch a favoring breeze, but he left the ship of state drifting helpless, aimless and uncertain as the poet's rudderless ship:

"Asleep in an ocean fog."

Now, however, the hon. gentleman desires to go back to 1874 in order that he may exercise wisdom and statesmanship, that he may make a better record for his party and for his country than there remains for his administration. He claims now that he has all the statesmanship and wisdom necessary to grapple with this problem which was presented by the Minister of Finance, namely: How are you to govern the country without direct taxation? The Minister of Finance referred the hon. gentleman to his statements in 1874 during the time he was Finance Minister, to the declaration that he then made that he was unable to raise any more revenue without imposing direct taxation. The hon. gentleman then denied that he ever made such a statement. We have here his speeches for two separate years; they are nicely got up, gilt edged, but the policy did not turn out to be of that character. What did the hon. gentleman say when he was Finance Minister, although he now denies it. He said:

"An increase of duty is inevitable, and arises from circumstances over which this Government has no control. I do not think that any greater increase of the tariff than we now suggest would be wise. I think we have gone to the limit beyond which it would be impossible to pass without resorting to direct taxation. It may be that those very expenditures may indirectly help our revenue; but I desire to say to the House that, although I think the country can bear the entire burden we have imposed upon it without any great inconvenience, I do not think that much more taxation could be safely resorted to; nor do I think we should be called upon to consider the question of raising any great amount by direct taxation."

Now the hon. member puts aside the question of direct taxation and stands before this House and declares that he is quite able to solve the problem of sweeping away the entire revenues we derive from our imports from the United States, and nearly all those from our imports from Great Britain, and carry on the administration of the country and provide a revenue without direct taxation. I should like to refer the hon. gentleman to some observations made by his late leader, the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) at Malvern, when the question of the reduction of revenue was under discussion. What did his leader say?

"Now, what are our sources of taxation? Direct taxation is at this time out of the question. The reasons I need not discuss. The advantages and disadvantages I need not balance. We are dealing with practical conditions, and no one suggests direct taxation as practicable. There remain in the existing sources, the duties of customs and excise. From the liquor duties we cannot expect further relief. By common consent these are kept as high as the danger of illicit invasion will allow; some think higher. The progress of the Temperance movement will, we all hope, diminish this source of revenue, and when the advocates of total prohibition succeeds those duties will disappear; at any rate the excise will then be 'all smoke.' There remain the duties of customs on other commodities, and the conditions demonstrate the impossibility of diminishing to any large extent this fund. We have no longer a surplus to dispose of; we have a deficit to overcome; and, that done, we have a tremendous yearly charge to overtake. 'Oh, but,' say some Tories, 'you can yet do this and make a free trade or non-political tariff.' The statement is dishonest and absurd."

I want to call the hon. gentleman's special attention to this:

"The statement is dishonest and absurd."

I should like to know whether, if the hon. member for West Durham had been present, the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), knowing that that hon. gentleman made the statement that it would be dishonest and absurd, would have risen in the House and said he was quite able to solve this problem and quite able to provide revenues for the country without resorting to direct taxation. One word more upon this point. I have referred to a speech delivered last year by the hon. gentleman, and I find he took a little different course at that time to that which he is taking this Session, for he said that the charges on the revenue are so great that you must always raise a large sum from customs and excise in order to meet them. He goes over the different items: for interest and charges of management, $10,000,000; sinking fund, at $6,000,000; subsidies, $4,182,000; and if you include the Indians, $25,278,000. Now, Sir, he admits that here are the fixed charges which must be met. Allowing that from excise and miscellaneous sources, we receive enough to meet the controllable expenses of the country, let me tell the hon. gentleman that our entire revenue, exclusive of Great Britain and the United States, from customs, was $5,851,000. Having free intercourse and no duty from the United States, this would without doubt drop $5,000,000. The hon. member has told us, in a previous discussion, that although we had entire free trade with the United States, we ought to purchase from England as largely in proportion to our population as the United States does. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) put the amount at $150,000,000 of purchases from Great Britain. I do not believe that we would purchase anything near so large an amount, but assuming that we did, that would be $12,500,000 worth purchased from Great Britain, and it would give us a revenue of two and a half million dollars, or a total of seven and a half million dollars from those sources to meet the $25,000,000 that the hon. gentleman says are a fixed charge upon us. This would leave a large difference between our revenue and the fixed charges to be otherwise provided for. Allowing that from excise and from the general revenue of the country there would be a surplus of $2,700,000, there would still be $15,000,000 that would have to be met, and the hon. gentleman would have a difficult task before him to make this up. I know that the hon. gentleman, if he takes time to consider this subject will come to this conclusion, and if he gives weight to the assertion made by his late leader, that it is dishonest to say otherwise, he will admit that we must raise $15,000,000 by direct taxation from the people of this country, if the hon. gentleman's proposed scheme is carried into operation. I have been referring to the assertion which was made by his late leader, that any attempt to convince the people of this country that it was impossible to reduce the duties of the country without direct taxation, was dishonest and absurd. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), when reference was made to Mr. Blake, challenged us, or rather he contrasted our treatment of the member for West Durham and the member for East York now, with that of old times. Sir, when those hon. gentlemen were here in health, there were always men on this side to measure swords with them but when they became unfit, or rather when they retired from the conflict, we observe the decencies of life which should prevail between one member of this House and another. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) does not follow the example that we set him, and he is not careful of the good name of his late leader. Why, Sir, when the Finance Minister referred to what Mr. Blake had said at Malvern Hill, and that that hon. gentleman stated he had accepted the National Policy—when the Minister of Finance stated that Mr. Blake had given the manufacturers of this country and the farmers of this country to believe, that there would be no disturbance in the policy of protection, except upon the single article of corn meal for the Lower Provinces, the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) said that he knew when Mr. Blake was making this speech what Mr. Blake meant, insinuating that Mr. Blake was deceiving the people of the country on that occasion, deceiving his hearers, deceiving the manufacturers and deceiving the people at large. It ill comes from the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) to reflect upon the good name of the hon. the late leader of the Opposition; an hon. gentleman to whom he owes everything, an hon. gentleman who has done more for him than any other man in this country, and to whom he owes his seat in this House. When the hon. gentleman was unable to find a constituency, when driven out of Lennox and again defeated in Wellington, his late leader found him a place in Huron, and when the period had elapsed, and when the people of Huron were giving him intimation that he would have to move on, as a policeman would intimate to a loiterer on a street corner that he has to move on, then Mr. Blake came to his assistance, and implored the party, supplicated the party, begged of the party to provide him a safe seat, and to give one of the "hives" to the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). I do not know, Sir, whether there is to be another intimation to the hon. member for South Oxford to move on, or whether this is a finally, final safe seat for him. Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to one or two of the assertions made by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). That which deserves most attention just now is a charge made against my hon. friend of having cooked the Public Accounts, so that, in the statement which he delivered to this House, he might show a surplus for the year 1887. The hon. gentleman charged, as a crime against the Minister of Finance, that he had transferred to revenue account the receipts from Dominion lands, whereas, previously, they had been credited to capital account. Why, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows that, under his own administration, he always credited those receipts to revenue account.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And charged likewise.

Mr. McLELAN. And charged likewise; and so do we credit and charge likewise. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Public Accounts, and study them, he will see that whereas he charged only $80,000 or $90,000 of receipts from Dominion lands, we have this year charged $190,000 odd. But he knows that he always took credit for the receipts from Dominion lands, small as they were, and that they were always so treated down to 1881, both by himself and by Sir Leonard Tilley; and after 1881, when we had got this policy in full swing, Sir Leonard Tilley had such large surpluses, amounting to two, three, four, five, six and seven millions a year, that it was unimportant whether these charges were made to the credit of income or capital account. Now, Sir, in 1886, when I had the honor of standing before the House as Finance Minister, dealing with the Public Accounts, I said:

"It will be noticed that I have included in that amount, the receipts from Dominion lands. During the five years that hon. gentlemen opposite held the Government, all the receipts from Dominion lands were taken and counted as part of the revenue, and my hon. friend and predecessor, Sir Leonard Tilley, followed the same course up to 1881, placing these as part of the receipts from consolidated revenue account. From 1881 to 1885, Sir Leonard seems to have placed them to capital account. I suppose the reason will be found in the fact that he had a large surplus each year during that period, and it was immaterial whether they should be placed to capital or to revenue account. But, Sir, I think the House will agree with me that as we have made large expenditures in the North-West in opening up the country by railway, and incurred a large debt for that purpose, as we have made a large expenditure in surveys, in the North-West Mounted Police, in the Indian treaties, incurring large liabilities, it is but right that whatever revenue or return we should have from the lands in the North-West, should be placed to revenue account to meet the interest that we are paying on the expenditures and the sinking fund that we are providing in order to pay off that indebtedness. I think the House will agree with me that we should do that instead of increasing the taxation of the country. Should we receive from the lands in the North-West a larger sum in any one year than would meet the sinking fund we have to provide towards the payment of our indebtedness there, and the interest upon our indebtedness for that expenditure; then it might very well be placed to capital account, but until that point is reached, I think we are justified in placing it as hon. gentlemen opposite did, and as Sir Leonard Tilley did till 1881, to revenue account, and I have therefore proposed for the present and future to deal with it in that manner, calling it and using it as so much revenue, instead of increasing the taxation in order to meet our wants."

That was the proposition that I made to the House and that was agreed to by the House; and although the hon. gentleman was present, and although he knows the custom that had been pursued by himself and Sir Leonard Tilley, yet he now comes down and says that because these are credited to income, there has been a cooking of the accounts. Sir, I will tell the hon. gentleman what would be a cooking of the accounts. If Parliament makes a particular grant to be charged to capital or income, and that is sanctioned by Parliament, it would be a cooking of the account to transfer it, contrary to the orders of Parliament, to some other account; and the House will remember that when the hon. gentleman came into office in 1874, and a large sum had been passed by the preceding Parliament to capital account for the purpose, I think, of changing the gauge of the railway, the hon. gentleman, in order to diminish the surplus that Sir Leonard Tilley left behind him, charged this amount, which Parliament had declared should be charged to capital, to income, in order to reduce the surplus. That, Sir, is what may be called cooking the accounts, doing that which Parliament declared should not be done. Now, the hon. gentleman two or three times in his speech, and in all the speeches he has delivered to this House this Session, and I may say in almost any speech of any length which he delivered to this House in any Session, makes the charge against the Government that they have driven many people out of this country. Why, Sir, one is almost amazed at the assertion of the hon. gentleman, when we look back to the period during which he administered the Government of this country, and at the condition of the country during those five years, and when he has under his hand the proof that the people of this country went out during that period of depression by hundreds of thousands, and sought homes, and made a permanent settlement in the adjoining country. I have only to refer the hon. gentleman for an answer to all his assertions that we have driven people out of this country, to the statement made by his late leader in this House, on March 24, 1884. Mr. Blake, speaking of the loss that the Province of Quebec had incurred, said:

"The immigration of French Canadians to the eastern States has, no doubt, assumed alarming proportions, in two respects—first, in the extent of the departure, and secondly, in the character of the exodus. It is proved by the very thorough examination that took place in the year 1882, under the instruction of the Legislature of Massachusetts into the question, that it has only been within the last ten or fifteen years that this immigration has assumed such large proportions in that part of the country. It was only within a much shorter period, five or six years before 1882, that it began to assume the character of a permanent settlement in the country to which these people went."

And if the hon. gentleman will take five or six years from 1882, he will get back to 1876 and 1877, when the hon. gentleman administered the affairs of this country without the remarkable wisdom and statesmanship which he now claims to possess. Now, the hon. gentleman spoke of the meeting of French Canadians in the United States at Lowell. One of the resolutions passed at that gathering of French Canadians recites as follows:—

"Whereas, since the French Canadians have come to this section, they have reached a population of 400,000 in New England, and whereas a large number have become proprietors, paying large taxes, and whereas for the most part the young men propose to make their homes here; Resolved, that we protest against that portion of the report which says that we are a horde of industrial invaders. And whereas we have to live five years in the country before we can become citizens of this glorious republic, and the French Canadians have been here in large numbers but five or six years."

That would bring them to 1876-7, when they reached a population of 400,000, and determined to become permanent residents of the United States, having been driven out of Canada by the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. There is other evidence before that Commission of the Legislature to show that the French Canadians went to the States for employment, and that finding employment there, and having no hope of ever being employed in their own country, while hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, they determined to remain in their adopted home. The hon. gentleman has said that we are losing our very best men, the men that statesmen desire to retain in a country. Well, the hon. gentleman has here the proof that 480,000 went out in 1876 and 1877, under his administration, seeking labor in the United States, which his policy denied them at home. I find by the United States census that there were in the United States in 1880, including all these that the hon. gentleman drove out, 36,385 operatives in the cotton mills, 6,096 blacksmiths, 7,581 shoemakers, 3,447 brick and tile makers, 15,036 carpenters and joiners, 5,000 railway employes, 50,000 laborers not specified, 22,000 domestic servants, 21,000 laborers, 2,000 harness and saddle makers. So that the hon. gentleman, by his policy, drove out these men and women to work in the workshops of the United States. Following these there went out 1,379 traders, 1,520 doctors, besides lawyers and clergymen; and in addition to all these, there went out 50,000 farmers to supply the wants of them all. We have changed that policy. We are seeking to furnish employment to our own people in our own country; we are seeking to keep our own operatives and artisans and agriculturists to supply them at home. The hon. gentleman, before declaiming so loudly against the present Government for having helped the exodus, should consider that, under his own policy, he drove out of the country from one Province 400,000 to 500,000 people, and gave a permanent character to the exodus to the United States. The hon. gentleman complains we are now in a bad position because there has been a grant given to Prince Edward Island last year, and he complained that we had taken in British Columbia, which he urges was entirely premature. I would have thought that, backed up as he is by the little Province of Prince Edward Island, the hon. gentleman would have had a good word to say on behalf of that Province, whatever maledictions he might use against the Province of British Columbia. Then he said that there were great demands upon the Government for bridges across our great rivers and for harbor improvements, &c. Well, the hon. gentleman has given this House to understand that, under any policy he might adopt, there shall be no aid given to public works, either railway bridges or any other public work in the country, should he again assume the reins of power. The hon. gentleman has referred to the controllable expenditure of the country, and has compared, I regret to say, not fairly, the controllable expenditure of Canada with that of Great Britain and the United States. The hon. gentleman seems to take, on all occasions, a special delight in contrasting our condition with that of the United States, always endeavoring to make the contrast appear to our disadvantage. We have had speeches from the hon. gentleman in which he desires connection with the United States, and represents Canada in such a destitute condition that it would be the greatest exercise of charity on the part of the United States, if they would take into their Union such an impoverished country as he represents us to be. But he goes on to make this comparison between the controllable expenditure of this country and that of the United States, and he says:

"You will recollect, Mr. Speaker, that we were told that no economy could be practiced; no substantial economy could be practiced in the affairs of Canada."

Then he refers to his own record from 1874 to 1879, how he cut down the expenses in that period, but he did not tell us how far he came from meeting expenditure with revenue, and what was the deficit. In this comparison he cuts down the controllable expenditure of the United States from $75,000,000 to $54,000,000, and builds up the expenditure of Canada in all possible ways. For the purpose of comparison, he puts in our expenditure on Indians, $1,200,000, and on Mounted Police, $800,000, or $2,000,000 together, as a controllable expenditure which could be reduced. The hon. gentleman knows something of the history of the Indians on the other side. He knows that there is always a special grant, a very large sum provided for the maintenance and care of the Indians, and for guarding against their inroads, and he knows something of the enormous cost to that country of the Indian wars that, from time to time, have waged there. There was a return called for in the United States on the 24th January, 1882, showing the cost of the Indian wars for the ten years from 1873 to 1882; and it foots up an amount of $223,891,264 that the people of the United States have had to pay for Indian wars during the period of ten years. Now that we have provided a large sum for the maintenance of the Indians, and have provided $800,000 for the maintenance of the Mounted Police to keep them in check and in good behavior, $2,000,000 in all, the hon. gentleman puts that in the column of controllable expenditures which he says should be reduced. Then he puts in lighthouses, $600,000. I suppose, under his wise and economical statesmanship, he would put out the lights of every lighthouse, and save that expenditure. Then there is the protection of the fisheries, $400,000. My hon. friend near me says that the hon. gentleman would make all things dark. He has been blackening the picture from the time he first entered Parliament until the last speech he has made; he has always been making the blackest possible picture of this country. You may go over this list which the hon. gentleman would compare with the expenditure of the United States and of Great Britain, and he says that we are expending an enormous proportion greater than the expenditure of Great Britain and the United States in matters which are controllable, and, therefore, he says we are enormously extravagant, because that expenditure is $12,950,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You are getting mixed. That is for Canada.

Mr. McLELAN. I find that he says:

"I find in England, excluding services of education and similar services, and their legal expenditure, I find their civil list amounts to £1,000,000 sterling, their public works, £1,708,000, their civil departments, £2,468,000, with which we have nothing to compare."

He takes that out.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There are some reporter's errors in one or two lines there, and the hon. gentleman may be deluded by that; but I will tell him, if he likes, what I did say.

Mr. McLELAN. I am glad to find that the hon. gentleman has been misreported, and that there is no necessity for me to refer him to the speech of the Hon. Edward Blake, and especially to that line which is printed in large capital letters, "dishonest and absurd."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman want to know what I did say as to the expenditure? I will tell him, if he likes, as he seems to be very much mixed as to what I did say. He is quoting an erroneous report of my speech.

Mr. McLELAN. I accept the statement that that report is erroneous, and, therefore, there is no necessity to pursue that further, but I say that, if you make a proper comparison with the United States and Great Britain, considering the extent of the country over which we administer the Government, the comparison is not unfavorable to our country. But the hon. gentleman complained that the Finance Minister had not said anything about the Canadian Pacific Railway and the obligations which he says will be thrown upon the country in consequence of that arrangement. The hon. gentleman should have waited until that question was before the House before he made his complaint, and should have heard the explanation which the hon. gentleman will be able to give, the satisfactory explanation that he will give, that there is really no responsibility entailed upon the revenues of the country by the arrangement we have made. Why, the press of the hon. gentleman himself, when the terms were first made public, declared that the arrangement was as favorable as could be expected, and there was really no obligation thrown upon the country. The hon. gentleman comes back to the question of the taxation of the poor man, and he has been there so often and has been striving so long to excite our sympathy on behalf of the farmer and the laboring man, that one would think he was weary of the task he has undertaken. He wants to know what is free and what is untaxed in this country. I tell the hon. gentleman that, in regard to the necessities of life for the laboring man and the farmer, there are more articles untaxed or more lightly taxed than there were under his administration. The hon. gentleman says that we can get old masters free and rough diamonds free, and then he goes on to say, what about sugar? The hon. gentleman makes an enquiry about sugar: "I should like to ask him, what about sugar?" I am glad that the hon. gentleman is seeking for information. I hardly expected, after the declaration that he had made, that he was able to grapple with this great problem of the taxation of the country, that he would come down to this House and confess his ignorance upon the sugar question. Still, there is no man in this country that should more earnestly seek for information upon the sugar question than the hon. gentleman opposite. That hon. gentleman had a teacher at one time; he had an old master free. The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) undertook to give him some instruction at one time on the sugar question, and I supposed that, having that hon. gentleman behind him, he would not have found it necessary to appeal to this side of the House for information on the sugar question. In 1877, the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), then supporting the hon. member, delivered himself thus on the Tariff debate:

"There was another point to which attention had been directed, and that was the sugar duties. He ventured to say it was a question regarding which the people might have expected legislation at the hands of the Government. An article of that importance, from which a large amount of revenue was collected, ought to have been more prominently referred to, considering the opportunity the Government had had for collecting information in regard to it."

You will see how the hon. member for Halifax berates the hon. gentleman for not having collected information on the sugar question during recess.

"He was aware that the Government might say they did not feel in a position to try an experiment in the present condition of the revenue."

The hon. gentleman now is ready to try an experiment, to the sacrifice of three-fourths of our customs duties; but, in 1876, in his own budget speech, he says: "It is no time to try experiments;" and the hon. member for Halifax, sitting beside him, says perhaps that was the reason he did not operate. But he says:

"They might have proposed it if they had taken the trouble to consider the information submitted to them."

It seems to me that the senior member for Halifax had been endeavoring to furnish him, and had furnished him, information which he did not even take the trouble to consider upon that question,—

"He thought the sugar interest had not been fairly treated in that respect. Every hon. member in business knew that the Government had laid down a rule that certain articles purchased in the United States could not be introduced in this country."

I will not trouble the House by reading the whole of this speech, but he says:

"If the Government had applied that same principle to sugar, he would not have complained; but the principle applied to the manufacturers had been refused to the sugar refiners. The sugar interest demanded some consideration, because, if some legislation did not speedily take place, he was afraid we were going to lose a large trade with the West Indies. That trade, in the Maritime Provinces, at the present moment, involved from three to four million dollars a year, but the inevitable result of the present policy would be to drive the whole trade to the United States. We sent our vessels with outward cargoes, which were sold in the West Indies, and they were obliged to take the sugar to the United States to have it refined. Cargoes of sugar pass through the Boston refineries, and in twenty-four to thirty-six hours were exported into Canada again, under a bounty of 50 per cent. Such a system could not continue very long. In a short time when the Americans found out that they had destroyed our trade, they would dictate their own terms, and then it would be seen how disastrous the present policy was."

Then he goes on to quote Lord Derby's views upon the same question. So the senior member for Halifax, in 1877, recognised the ignorance of the hon. gentleman upon the sugar question, and sought, as one of the old masters, to give him instruction upon it; but he seems not to have been successful. The hon. gentleman comes down now and says: What about sugar? Well, Sir, I will tell the hon. gentleman, first, that we are not taxing sugar now nearly so high as he taxed it from 1874 to 1879.

Mr. McLELAN.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Oh!

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman says "oh." I have given him some information. It seems that more than one hon. gentleman on that side of the House desires to receive information on the sugar question. In 1878, we imported 109,000,000 lbs. of sugar, and upon that there was paid in duty $2,783,605. In 1887, we imported 202,466,000 lbs. of sugar, and the duty upon that, nearly double in quantity what it was in 1878, was $3,245,347.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How much did the refiners get?

Mr. McLELAN. Well, you go down and ask the poor man, ask every man how much he paid for his sugar from 1874 to 1879, and how much he paid during the year 1887, and he will tell you that there is a very perceptible difference in favor of the present period. Now, Sir, if we had imported at the same rate of duty last year that we did in 1878, the duty would have amounted to $5,003,476, or an increase of $1,758,127. Therefore, if we had the same rate of duty upon sugar last year that we did in 1878, we would have received $1,758,127 more of duty. Then there is the article of tea. If we had taxed it as the hon. gentleman taxed it, there would have been another million of revenue. But, Sir, I am sure he amused the House and he amused the country with the calculation he made as to the amount of taxation upon the poor man's family in consequence of this iniquitous tariff. He commences with the sugar question, and he tells us that the mechanic, the laboring man, who only earns $400 a year, consumes two lbs. of sugar a day, or for a family of five, 730 lbs. of sugar, or for a large family about half a ton.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You had better read what I said, then you will not fall into such a blunder.

Mr. McLELAN. I will read what he said:

"I have made a sort of rough average of the amount of taxation paid in Canada by an ordinary mechanic receiving that income, and having a wife and three or four children. I find that such a family will consume 2 lbs. of sugar a day."

Two lbs. of sugar a day, 365 days in a year, for a family of four, half a pound a day to each one, 180 lbs. of sugar. Why, Sir, the average consumption of sugar in the Dominion of Canada for a family, on the average, rich or poor, is only about 40 lbs., and the hon. gentleman would, in his kindness, give to this poor man 180 lbs. of sugar, in order to swell up that $48 a year of taxation upon the poor man. But this is not the limit of his generosity to the poor man. He says that down in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, after he had imposed $48 duty upon the poor man for sugar, dried fruits, and all these other luxuries, he says that in St. John, and I suppose in all the Maritime Provinces, they pay $8 or $10 a head more for their flour. Why, Sir, $10 a head would give the poor man twenty barrels of flour. His late leader, Mr. Blake, went down to the Maritime Provinces with the poor man's shirt, containing nine yards, and the hon. gentleman, to outdo him, goes down to the Maritime Provinces with 180 lbs. of sugar for the poor man, and 20 barrels of flour for a family. Why, Sir, that is four barrels apiece. We are about a million people in the Maritime Provinces, and according to the hon. gentleman the Province of Ontario supplies us with about 4,000,000 barrels of flour. Good for the Province of Ontario. But, Mr. Speaker, the reality is, so far as I can make the calculation, that there are only about a million barrels of flour going down from the Province of Ontario to the three lower Provinces. What is the use of following these calculations any further? $48 and $50 a head for every head of a family, represents $50,000,000 of customs revenue. I suppose my hon. friend the Finance Minister will be very glad to get so much revenue in order to wipe out the deficits which the hon. gentleman incurred from 1874 to 1879. Then he goes to the west. He is not so generous there. He tells the poor man that he is taxed on iron, and he puts it as if the iron duty on pig and bar iron enters the soul of every poor man in the North-West. By his calculations, a man in Manitoba who builds a house requires over two tons of iron. He says he requires $86 worth, which would be equal to two tons and a quarter. The hon. gentleman's mind must have been running on Dakota, that country of cyclones and tornadoes, where the people have to secure their houses and provide for their safety. I remember, when I was down in Nova Scotia, meeting the wife of one of my constituents who had gone to Dakota. She was visiting there, and in reply to questions she said she disliked the cyclones or tornadoes. She was asked what they did when tornadoes came. She replied that they built a cellar in which to go. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) evidently thought that the houses had to be iron fastened to meet tornadoes such as they had in Dakota. Then there was a ton and a half of iron for the barn, and so on. I am afraid, if I had not promised not to call the hon. gentleman's speech intolerable rubbish, I would now feel compelled to say that it was rubbish to talk to intelligent farmers, mechanics and laborers as to the taxes imposed on a family consuming 730 lbs. of sugar and 20 barrels of flour, and requiring two tons of iron to secure the house and one and a-half tons of iron to secure the barn. What intolerable rubbish. But the hon. gentleman said that this tariff would destroy the export trade, and he says that his friend Mr. Paterson had time and again referred to it. His friend Mr. Paterson had a little story that we have never disturbed. In 1878 the Norwegians had a craze for buying old ships, and they bought $1,250,000 worth of old ships, and that was placed in the returns as exports, by which the returns for 1878 were increased, so that Mr. Paterson has been able to make a favorable comparison with 1886 and 1887; and I suppose in a short time we shall have the same old ships trotted out again to do duty on this occasion. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) also stated there had been a great reduction in the volume of trade. On every point to which the hon. gentleman refers his own record stands as condemnation of the words he utters, and it is no wonder he wishes to go back to 1874 to wipe out the record for that period. Let me trouble the House with a reference to our trade, and I will only refer to that with the United States. I go back as far as 1854, and I had some papers prepared some time ago, by the statistical officer of the Customs Department, of the values of the imports from the United States of articles enumerated in the Reciprocity Treaty, from 1855 to 1886 inclusive. The total value in those twelve years was $520,278,650. In the next twelve years, from 1867 to 1878 inclusive, the value had run up, not decreased, as has been stated time and time again by hon. gentlemen opposite, to $837,589,194. If you take the next twelve years, allowing for the three years at the same rate as the nine years that have passed, the value of trade with the United States will reach $1,000,000,000. Yet hon. gentlemen opposite have been all the time declaring that our trade had dropped away to almost nothing, and that we should obtain unrestricted reciprocity with the United States in order that it might increase by leaps and bounds. We should be pretty well content with our trade, considering we are supplying so largely our own people, as is evidenced by the importation of raw material for manufactures. We ought to be content, moreover, with our trade, especially when we contrast it with that of the great country which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) wishes us to join. In 1887 the total value of imports to the United States was $752,000,000, exports $725,000,000, total $1,477,000,000, which, for 60,000,000 of people, gave $24.63 per head. The value of Canadian imports was $112,000,000, exports $89,000,000, total $201,000,000, giving $40.48 per head. While the per capita trade of the United States was $24.63, that of Canada last year was $40.48. If the hon. gentleman will reduce the number of our inhabitants from 4,800,000, as he wishes to do, and place it at 4,600,000, that will give a total value of $44 per head; so I think we should be content with the progress we are making, and the manner in which we are progressing. The hon. member for South Oxford says that all we have to do is to obtain unrestricted reciprocity with the United States and our export trade will go forward by leaps and bounds. The hon. gentleman has not pointed out the articles that we can export to the United States in order to build up that great trade, nor can he, unless there are included exports of articles through the United States to the old country that now go by the St. Lawrence and are shipped from our own ports. The hon. gentleman has told us that we have two customers, the United States and Great Britain. As was shown by the Finance Minister, and by almost every hon. gentleman who spoke on this side of the House, the articles of which we have a large surplus for export are the very articles of which the United States has a large surplus to export. I have before used an illustration of this, and it has been used elsewhere, but I may perhaps be permitted to give it on this occasion. The measure of the United States in the staple articles, of animals and their products, and of grain of all kinds is full and overflowing. Our cup is also full and overflowing; and is it common sense that, their cup being full and overflowing, we should, as the best outlet for our overflow, pour our surplus into theirs, already overflowing? No, we should pursue that course we have followed in the past, of facilitating exports direct to the mother country, the land that requires them. We should by all possible means cheapen the cost of transportation to the sea in order to benefit our agriculturists. But the hon. gentleman says: There are the great cities of the United States, New York, Chicago and Boston, all of which are ready to take the products of our farmers. The hon. gentleman did not tell us there were American farmers all around those cities, in closer proximity than are our people. He tells us that it is unwise to build up our own cities, and that we are building up Toronto, Montreal, Halifax and Quebec at the expense of the rural population. The hon. gentleman would strike down every industry in those cities and tell the farmers that they may send their products to the United States. He ought to have told them, however, that one city within their reach does more to increase the value of their lands than a hundred cities many miles distant from them. There is an article in Scribner's Statistical Record which I want to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to. It is respecting the value of farms; and he said a good deal here about the value of lands, and tried to make out apparently that the value of lands in Ontario had decreased. I do not think it is worth while to discuss the question as to whether Mr. Blue or the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is the more accurate in his figures, but the fact remains that in the North-West during the period which he refers to there have been sales of $20,000,000 worth of land, a large portion of which has been paid in cash either to the Government or the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The following is the quotation which I wish to refer to:

"The gross value of farms is greatest in Ohio; New York follows, then Illinois, and Pennsylvania. The value per acre ranges highest in the densely populated States of the North Atlantic group, gradually decreasing westward throughout the Northern Central group. Southward, the value decreases greatly, the lands of the cotton States barely averaging five dollars per acre with the improvements.

"The highest value per acre accompanies the densest population, and the greatest relative importance of manufactures and other industries. In other words, the greater the proportional number of inhabitants dependent upon other industries than agriculture, the greater the value of agricultural property consequent, of course, upon the higher prices resulting from the greater demand for farm products, and their more complete utilization. Much that is waste in a sparsely settled agricultural region, has a commercial value in cities and towns. Straw, burned as of no value in one place, sells readily where population is denser."

The hon. gentleman will see, and the country will see, that by his striking down the manufacturing industries of the Dominion; by his being willing to sweep them out entirely with one blow, he would do more to depreciate the value of lands in this country, by driving away all the artisans, and mechanics, and laborers, and those who purchase the farmers' products, than has ever been done. The hon. gentleman perhaps will deny that he wants to give over the manufacturers. We have been told in this House this Session, that it is useless to have upon the Statute-book an offer of reciprocity in natural products in the present state of the country. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) says: You have not the right bait on your hook; and another hon. member says: It is only playing with the question to make this offer. But, Sir, they are going to bribe the Americans by giving over to them all the manufacturing industries of this country, and as the bait is not sufficient the hon. member for Norfolk says: We will bait the hook with the manufacturer, we will give you free access to our markets; and if the Americans cannot see that they will take the entire manufacturing industries of the country there would be no inducement for them to accept his challenge. The hon. member for South Oxford wanted to shut down all the manufacturing industries of the country, but he made one exception. If you turn to that resolution of the hon. gentleman you will find this one exception, and that is that all the manufacturing industries of the country were to be swept away except the distilleries. He exempts the excise duties; he protects the manufacturer and distiller of ardent spirits and beer, in the country. The man who spins cotton, the man who smelts iron, and the man who digs coal and performs all the other duties of life necessary for the production of articles may, be sacrificed, but the man who distills ardent spirits and makes whiskey and beer must be protected. Why, Sir, a short time previously, when the Dominion Alliance was in session here, the hon. gentleman advocated that we ought to amend the Temperance Act in order to have prohibition, but now he comes forward with this resolution which would protect the distillers of whiskey and the manufacturers of beer; and those are the only manufacturers that he proposes to protect in the whole land. Mr. Speaker, I have only one or two more points to refer to. The hon. gentleman was good enough to quote, in answer to the Minister of Finance, some remarks from President Cleveland, and in those remarks President Cleveland is advocating free trade. He is advocating a reduction of duties in order to reduce the price of goods. The hon. gentleman wants free trade with the United States. He wants our articles admitted free, our lumber, our barley, and so forth, and at the same time he furnishes a proof to the House that that freedom will reduce the price. Now, Mr. Speaker, he has given in evidence that in those articles that they require the people of the United States pay the duty on the articles which they receive from Canada. The hon. gentleman concludes by referring to the debt, and he says the debt has grown to enormous proportions and that we have nothing to show for it, except assets so unprofitable that they cost about a million of dollars to take care of. Well, Sir, I have not looked over the list of assets lately, but I dare say there are some assets there for which the hon. gentleman is responsible, and there are some of our assets that I do not think we expend much money for taking care of. I do not see anything in the Public Accounts for taking care of the locks at Fort Francis, and I do not see anything charged for taking care of the Neebing Hotel and a great many other things that the hon. gentleman is responsible for. When the hon. gentleman talks of the increase of the public indebtedness of this country and of our having no assets for it, I suppose he refers to his own deficits from 1875 to 1879-90, amounting in all to about $7,900,000, for which he is responsible. I suppose he includes in our indebtedness for which we have no assets, the four and a half millions discounts, which he lost upon the bonds which he sold in Great Britain. I did expect, Sir, that an ex-Finance Minister, standing up here and representing a Government that had increased the public indebtedness at the rate of about $8,000,000 a year for five years, and had comparatively nothing to show for it, would have been a little more careful in speaking of the public indebtedness. Why, Sir this Government is able to show good assets for all its expenses. It may be that some of our public works, such as our canals and our railroads, on which we have expended large sums of money, are not worked at such rates as to yield large profits, as is the case in some other countries. If the hon. gentleman will turn to the Australian colonies—and he has sometimes referred to them to show that some of their public works are productive—he will find that the railroad charges there are equal to a tax of about $10 a head on the people of the country. If we worked our railroads and canals at similar high rates of charges, we should have a large income from them; but the policy we have been pursuing is to cheapen the rates of transportation to the seaboard to the farmers of the west, in order that they may compete with the farmers of the United States in the markets of the world. Now, Sir, without detaining the House at greater length, I may just say that if the rules of this House permitted me to move an amendment to the amendment of the hon. member for South Oxford, I should be very glad to do it, and I would do it, Sir, in this form:

That during five years, from 1874 to 1879, the present member for South Oxford, Sir Richard Cartwright, was, as Finance Minister, mainly responsible for the fiscal policy and administration of Canada. That previous to this, and from the date of Confederation, the Public Accounts show, each and every year, a surplus amounting in all to $11,075,063.39.

That the condition of the country when handed over to the member for South Oxford, as Finance Minister in the Reform Administration, was such that in the first year and before the effects of the change were fully felt there was a further surplus of $935,644, making the total surpluses $12,010,707.

That thereafter and for every year for which he arranged the tariff and expenditure, there was, notwithstanding he materially increased the taxation on general goods and levied duties on tea and coffee, a deficit, as also in the following year (the country not having recovered from the effects of his policy) amounting to $7,970,181.27.

That when the effects of the National Policy were felt upon the business of the country, the Public Accounts again show a surplus, continuous down to the latest, 1887, except in the years affected by the North-West troubles, making a grand total surplus of $30,375,382.

That the net debt of Canada, on the 30th June, 1887, was, as shown by the Public Accounts. $227,313,911

From which, if we deduct the amount allowed to the Provinces to cover their indebtedness and to provide revenue..... 106,472,934

There remain..... $120,841,877

As the net debt incurred by the Federal Government for Dominion purposes, accounted for as follows:—

Intercolonial Railway and extension	$ 33,335,971
Canadian Pacific Railway	61,760,755
Purchase of Canadian Pacific Railway lands	10,198,529
Deficits occurring from the policy of Sir Richard Cartwright	7,970,181
Losses on his several loans.....	4,500,000
Purchase from Hudson Bay Company of North-West, and organisation of territory.....	2,920,000

Thus making a total of..... $120,685,457

That it appears that the total indebtedness incurred by the Dominion for federal purposes is covered by the purchase of the North-West, the construction of the great national highway from the Atlantic Ocean to the Pacific, and the deficits arising from the policy of the member for South Oxford, and the losses or discounts on the loans he negotiated; whilst under the administration of the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald, for fifteen years, the ordinary revenues have met the general wants of the country, and permitted a large expenditure on public buildings, harbor improvements, and aid to railways, as well as to meet expenses of the troubles in the North-West.

That in this latter period as well as in the former, under Sir John A. Macdonald, the country has made great advances, as shown by a comparison of some of the returns of 1878-79, with those of 1887:—

BANK AND DOMINION NOTES IN CIRCULATION.

1887..... 45,502,987

An increase in 8 years of..... $ 16,621,663

1879.

Deposits in chartered banks..... $63,635,932
“ savings and loan companies..... 9,426,148
“ Government savings banks..... 14,702,715

$87,764,795

1887.

Deposits in chartered banks..... $107,154,483
“ savings and loan companies..... 17,712,885
“ Government savings banks 50,944,785

$175,812,153

An increase in 8 years of..... $88,047,358

Mr. MULLOCK. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. It appears to me that the hon. Minister is adopting an indirect mode of reading a speech.

Mr. SPEAKER. I cannot see that the rule would apply in this instance.

Mr. McLELAN—

That the money order system of the post office has grown from $6,788,723 in 1879, to $10,328,934 in 1887, an increase of $3,540,261; whilst the correspondence through the post office (the best possible test of commercial activity) in the same period, has risen from 50,840,000 letters and post cards in 1879, to 90,650,000 in 1887.

That the agriculturists have benefited in having the supply of an increased home market, as shown by the fact that the value of grain imported has fallen, in the period already referred to (1879-1887) from $9,882,315, to $3,630,247, a considerable portion of the latter amount representing Indian corn for distillation; whilst the importations of all articles of food and drink which

In 1879 amounted to..... $26,640,728

In 1887 amounted only to..... 13,107,286

Showing a reduction of..... $13,533,442 and a corresponding increase of expenditure among our farmers.

That our agriculturists have not only supplied this largely increased home market, but have also maintained a large export trade in grains, and, in addition, increased the exports of animals and their products from $14,100,604 in 1879, to $24,246,937 in 1887.

That the miles of railway in operation in 1887, and the movement in freight and passengers thereby, are nearly double what they were in 1879, whilst the traffic by water has also largely increased.

That the enormous increase of business as shown by the foregoing comparisons, has been conducted on a more healthy basis than that of the period from 1874 to 1879, during which the business failures were, in each and every year, greater in amount than the entire revenues of the country, averaging $28,627,000, whilst in the subsequent period the average has been $11,574,330.

That notwithstanding the expenditure in the completion of a great interprovincial highway from ocean to ocean, and numerous other works, all tending to develop the country by promoting internal trade and intercourse, and cheapening transport of agricultural products to the seaboard, the taxation levied on the country in the last fiscal year, in which every obligation was met, has only averaged an increase of three quarters of one per cent. per year a head in customs and excise over 1876, under the taxation imposed by Sir Richard Cartwright in customs, excise and stamps.

That whilst the credit of Canada has never suffered as did that of the United States for a period of years—the value of $100 currency being, at one time (July, 1864) only $38 00 in gold—nor as did that of Great Britain during the closing years of the last and the opening ones of the present century, yet it suffered so much in the hands of the member for South Oxford that the unguaranteed bonds sold by him in 1874 and 1876, amounting to $31,633,333, netted him only $28,064,770, while, under a changed policy and the improved condition of our credit thence resulting, these same bonds now command a premium of from 13 to 15 per cent., or, in round numbers, $8,000,000 more than the member for South Oxford sold them at.

That eminent statistical authorities—such as Sir John Gorst, Under Secretary for India—after elaborate investigation have declared that amongst the countries of the world, Canada stands third in respect to her ability to secure investors in her funds, only paying six pence per cent. more than the United States and £1 is. 3d. per cent. less than France; whilst the London Economist, in an elaborate presentation of British investments in the colonies shows that the external burdens paid of Australia were 3½ times those of Canada.

That, with this high standing, maintained until the maturity of our outstanding bonds, there will be no difficulty in placing upon the market other loans for their redemption at such a reduced rate of interest as will be practically equivalent to an extinction of at least $50,000,000 of the country's indebtedness.”

That this House views with just pride and gratification this high position which the Dominion of Canada has attained, as well as the extremely rapid progress it has made since the adoption of the policy of protection to home industries, and would impress upon the Government the duty it owes to the country, to all farmers, day-laborers, mechanics, artisans and factory operatives, to guard that policy from the machinations of those who are seeking, under the name of unrestricted reciprocity, to give over to the Americans the entire manufacturing industries of Canada, except that of intoxicants, and to impose a burdensome and relentless system of direct taxation upon the people.

That is the amendment to the amendment which I would desire to place before the House, if the rules permitted. But I would not desire to do so because of any need on the part of the Government to receive instructions as to the performance of their duty of protecting the industries of the people. The Government received the mandate of the people, in 1878, to protect our home industries. The voice of 1882 repeated that mandate, and the people's command given in 1887 was that we should continue our policy of protection. This Government will discharge the high duty imposed on it by the people of this country, by doing what lies in our power to protect our industries, to give employment to our people, and to develop the great resources with which this country is blessed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I rise for the purpose of suggesting to the House that, at this late period of the Session, we should reach the question at as early a moment as possible. The hon. member for South Oxford gave a very elaborate review of the financial statement which I considered it my duty to lay before the House. My hon. friend the Postmaster General has replied to that speech, and thus the views of both sides are, I consider, very fairly and fully before the country. I hope, therefore, that at this late period of the Session the House will be disposed to allow the debate to rest there, and that we will at once be enabled to reach a division that will show the views of every hon. gentleman in this House, and then proceed with the business of the Session.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. the Finance Minister, has certainly paid a very great compliment to my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), by the request he has just made. The hon. gentleman, having an army of clerks at his disposal, knowing precisely the line of argument he had to take, and the tables he required, and having every facility at his disposal for the preparation of these tables, gave to the House an elaborate speech on the Budget. My hon. friend from South Oxford had to rise in reply as soon as the hon. gentleman took his seat; and he was of course at the disadvantage of having to answer a line of argument which he could not have been aware beforehand would be taken, and to tables which were new to him and to the House. My hon. friend has been followed to-day by the late Finance Minister (Mr. McLelan) in a speech of about two hours in length—a speech in reply to my hon. friend, which he had some days to prepare—and after the delivery of that speech, the hon. the Finance Minister (Sir Charles Tupper) has risen in his place, and by the request he has made has declared to the House that he considers the speech delivered by the hon. member for South Oxford a speech equal in weight and importance to the combined efforts of his colleague, the ex-Finance Minister and himself. I have every confidence in the correctness of the position the hon. gentleman has taken, and I therefore do not intend troubling the House at any great length. I had some intention, considering that the hon. the First Minister the other night was kind enough to adjourn the House at a very early hour at the request of the ex-Finance Minister (Mr. McLelan) who desired to have from Friday night last until to-day to prepare a statement, or procure some one to prepare it, in reply to the speech of my hon. friend—I had some slight intention of asking the hon. the First Minister whether he should not grant me a similar favor and adjourn the House now, in order that I might have time to consider the amendment of the hon. the Postmaster General, which is ten times as long as that of my hon. friend from South Oxford. But the First Minister will no doubt agree with me that while the Postmaster General's amendment exceeds ten times the length of that of the hon. member for South Oxford, it contains only one-tenth of the sense of the latter, and, therefore, will not require so much time on my part to prepare a reply to it. The hon. the Postmaster General is of a poetic and a visionary turn of mind. He gave us to-day to understand, as he did in a celebrated financial speech of two years ago, that he has seen visions and dreamt dreams. To-day, however, his visions have taken the shape of snakes and blossoms, and he has seen snakes hidden in the blossoms. The last time he addressed us he saw blossoms without snakes; he saw blossoms, and wedding parties, and cradles, and babies, that would grow up and pay the taxes. We are delighted always to hear of the visions which the hon. gentleman sees, and when he is in dreamland he is certainly much more interesting than when he undertakes to descend to the plain world of facts and figures. Then he is apt to be confused, but he is to be forgiven, because it would require a man of much larger mental calibre than the hon. gentleman to do that which he undertakes to do; but, if he does undertake that task, he ought to show a little modesty, and then he would not render himself a subject for the remarks, a little severe or a little sarcastic, of those who may happen to follow him. What did the hon. gentleman tell us when he was alluding to the speech of my hon. friend? He alluded to a remark which was interjected when the Finance Minister was referring to the time during which my hon. friend occupied the position of Minister of Finance, and said that he would like to go back to 1874, and he said he supposed he would like to go back there to rectify the errors he had made, which I suppose meant to wipe out the deficit which occurred during that period. Was it not a piece of assurance on the part of the hon. gentleman to refer to the state of the finances at that time? If he remembers the state of the finances under his own administration, is it not a piece of assurance for him to talk about deficits? Can he venture to refer to deficits under the administration of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) with a tariff of 17½ per cent., and compare that with his tariff, ranging on an average to 22½ per cent., when he himself as Finance Minister had to come down to the House and confess to a deficit of two and a quarter millions in one year, and afterwards to a deficit which he expected would turn out, and which did as a matter of fact turn out, to be one of $6,000,000; that is, that he had in one year a deficit amounting to more than the deficits of the combined years of the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). But he found it necessary to bring that question before the House and to suggest that my hon. friend would like to go back to 1874 in order to remedy the errors which he made when he administered the finances of this country. I think the less they say about deficits the better. Then the hon. gentleman tells us, and he seemed to think it was a very weighty argument, and he attempted to be very funny and to be very sarcastic in reference to my hon. friend from South Oxford, in pointing to the fact that he had represented different constituencies at different times. I do not know that that is any discredit to that hon. gentleman, but, on the contrary, I think it shows that he is appreciated in every part of this country. I have never thought it necessary to find fault with the change of constituencies on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite. If was found necessary in the case of the hon. the First Minister to change his constituency, and that is no reflection upon him, but rather a compliment paid to the worth in which he is held in the different Provinces of the Dominion, when it was found that a seat could be obtained for him on the Pacific coast. Any of us may lose his seat, and I know that, under the pressure which hon. gentlemen have been good enough to put me to I have had enough work to hold mine. Of course, I do not think that my position or my attainments would warrant another seat being found for me, as it was for the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright); but, when I find that seats can be provided for prominent politicians, I think it is rather a testimony given by the people of the country that they recognise that there is great worth in the gentlemen for whom they make place, that it is recognised on all hands, and that it is not simply in the interest of any particular riding, but in the interest of this great Dominion of ours, that certain individuals should have a seat in the House. But I will ask the hon. gentleman who took his seat just now, who attempts in a side way to cast ridicule on my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), because he has represented different constituencies, if he thinks the adoption of such means as the late election trial in Colchester showed were adopted there, would not secure election in almost any county. I do not think that the record in that case is of such a nature that it need be referred to very much, or that the hon. gentleman need speak of the permanence of seats of hon. members on either side of this House. Then the hon. gentleman referred to the statement made by my hon. friend as to the extraordinary exodus of our citizens to the neighboring republic. He admitted the fact of the exodus, but he attempted to show how it came about, and he was not aware that he proved that it was only after the introduction of the National Policy, these States of the Union obtained such an influx of Canadians. That exodus has increased, as his statement showed, and has been intensified, as has been demonstrated on the floor of Parliament, Session after Session, and never refuted successfully by hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not wish to thresh that subject out again, but I will remind the hon. gentleman that the figures which have been used by the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) are based on reliable data supplied by the officers of the Government themselves. That is the case also in regard to the lamentable failure of the Government's policy in the North-West, and the hon. gentleman may remember that the First Minister himself expected that we would have had this year 400,000 or 500,000 souls there, whereas we had scarcely 108,000. In the Province of Manitoba, according to the calculation of the First Minister, we should have had last year 45,000 or 50,000 people going into that Province, but the records show that we only added to the population about 7,000. With these records before us, and with the census which was taken in 1885 and 1886, I think it is well for those hon. gentlemen to leave that part of the speech of my hon. friend alone, because it is unrefuted unless they can change the statements which have been given to the country. Then, the hon. gentleman referred to the question of taxation, and he waxed very witty, or thought he waxed very witty, as to the amount of sugar consumed by the people of this country. He referred to the statement in the Hansard, and my hon. friend asked him to read the context. He professed to do so, and members on the other side cheered him. The member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is correctly reported in the official debates with one exception. It is stated that the amount of sugar consumed per head of a family is 2 lbs. a day, and that the taxation is $5 per annum. If the hon. gentleman had any knowledge at all of finance, or if he were willing to bring that knowledge to bear on this point, he would know that, when the hon.

member for South Oxford had stated that the amount of taxation that would come from each head of a family on the article of sugar would be $5 per annum, the amount of 2 lbs. per day must be wrong, that it must be and error either on the part of the Hansard reporter or in the printing office. What the hon. member for South Oxford said was not that the amount consumed was 2 lbs. per day for each family, but 200 lbs of sugar per annum, and that upon that the taxes would be $5. If the hon. gentleman understood figures, if he could grasp the simplest arithmetical problem, he would see that there must have been a mistake in the calculation of the amount of sugar consumed. Where is the laughter of hon. gentlemen now? They laughed at an error made by the Hansard reporter or in the printing office; they laughed at the fact that the taxes on that amount of 2 lbs. a day for each family would be $5 per annum, but I challenge that hon. gentleman or any hon. gentleman to show that a family of four or five persons do not pay that amount of taxes on their sugar in the course of the year. It is estimated that each person consumes 40 lbs. of sugar per annum. That, with five in a family, would be 200 lbs. The hon. gentleman knows that 2½ cents a pound, at least, is taken out of the people for every pound of sugar that is consumed. Why do not hon. gentlemen laugh now? The question was not the amount of sugar which was consumed, but the amount of taxes which was paid, and that was stated by my hon. friend to be $5 per annum, and was so reported in the Hansard. I challenge the hon. gentleman to show that it was any less. I need not follow him through his further statement, when he attempted to be funny again in reference to the cost of houses and barns. He ridicules the idea. Perhaps so, to hear these hon. gentlemen opposite talk as they often do talk, about the poor man not paying any taxes. This is the way they talk, and they go on to legislate in order that the poor man may escape taxes, they make him live the life of a pauper. If he settles in the North-West they do not allow him the conveniences that a settler ought to have. Sir, the figures are there, and let them worry over them as they see fit.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He thinks they use wooden pegs.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I suppose he would not have them use iron eave spouts on their houses, but nail a couple of boards together and in that way run the water off. That would be good enough for settlers in the North-West. Of course, what are settlers in the North-West for, in the estimation of hon. gentlemen opposite, except to pay taxes, any way, and build up the Canadian Pacific Railway? Then he goes on and he calls me by name, asking to be excused for having done so. I readily grant it. He says I have stated in the House that our export trade of manufactures had diminished. He says his answer to that is to be found in this fact that when Norwegians came over to Nova Scotia they used to buy the old ships and enter these in the Trade and Navigation Returns and now they do not do that, and so that accounted for the decrease of exports. The hon. member for Halifax tells me that he is not cognisant of any Norwegians having bought any old ships about Nova Scotia, but of course that is a matter that the hon. gentlemen may know themselves. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that if he means to say that that wholly explains all the decrease in the exports of manufactured goods, I think he will find that he is entirely mistaken. Let him look through the list and see the manufactured articles, the export of which is being killed off by the National Policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. I know that. I live in a city where a large export trade had been done in a certain line, whereas they are driven out to-day under the taxation of hon. gentlemen opposite, and withholding the drawback that they pledged themselves, as a Government, to give that trade, and it is now about destroyed. And, Sir, that firm to-day are the most ardent advocates of a policy of unrestricted reciprocity that will give them access to the markets of the United States, not only where they may have a chance to sell, but where they can buy the raw material entering into their manufactures as cheaply as the American manufacturers can buy, with whom they have to fight in Brazil, in Australia, in Hungary, Chili, and other countries I could mention. Then he thought he was making one point against my hon. friend, because he said the resolution he had offered was a proposition to wipe out the manufacturers of this country, and it was to save the distillers. Very well, that might do for a little clap trap upon the public hustings, with a not too intelligent audience before you, but one would rather wonder to see a gentleman who has occupied the position of Finance Minister, and who may, for aught I know, be called upon to fill that position again, indulging in that kind of thing, in the Canadian House of Commons, in the presence of the people's representatives. Why, Sir, can he not comprehend that resolution? To save the distillers! Why, the very reason he has asked that they be left out is for the purpose of taxing them, not for the purpose of protecting them at all; it is that they may be taxed, not that they may be protected, not that they may be saved. Well, now, I think I have gone over all the points except those that are recited in his amendment—I cannot remember all that was in it. I cannot be expected, of course, to take up all those points and allude to them, as it would be impossible to remember all that the hon. gentleman said. But I think he had some reference to his deficit, and some boasting with reference to the surpluses that they had had. It is true they had a surplus, but that surplus was just so much more money taken out of the pockets of the people of this country, that ought to have been left in them. It was just so much money taken from them in order to encourage a reckless Government and an extravagant Government in going on to more recklessness and more extravagance. I do not see the reason for boasting, it sounds bad now, inasmuch as the hon. member for South Oxford showed, that unless there had been a peculiar arrangement of accounts, differing from the arrangement of accounts during some years past, the hon. gentleman would have had to confess to a deficit this year, which he has, by the process described by my hon. friend, converted into a nominal surplus, as he calls it. He stands with it now staring him in the face, and I think he was almost honest enough to admit that in the years 1888-89, he would probably be called upon, even with the enormous rate of taxation now burdening this country, to face a deficit of a million dollars. Now, I am reminded that the hon. member touched on the price of sugar. Well, Sir, that was remarkable—the statement of the hon. gentleman with reference to the duties, that the people are not taxed so much now because less duty is paid on sugar than was paid under the old tariff. The hon. gentleman knows that under the arrangement of his tariff, sugar comes into this country in a raw state at a very low figure, while before, it came in refined, a large portion paying this duty, and of course, the price being higher, there was a larger revenue from it. But hon. gentlemen opposite cannot claim that the people of Canada are getting their sugar as cheap now, under the tariff as arranged by the hon. gentlemen opposite, as they could get sugar under a tariff arranged similarly to that in force when my hon. friend from South Oxford was Finance Minister. Sir, I make bold to say, after due consideration on this subject, that I believe the sugar duties could be so arranged as to leave a protection to the refiners, and give to the people of this country their sugar at as low a figure as they get it now, and next year put a million dollars extra into the treasury to wipe out their expected deficit; and if they will go on the lines followed by the hon. member for South Oxford,—I do not say follow them absolutely, but base an arrangement on those lines,—I will venture to say that they will accomplish that result. And they will accomplish more than that. They will do away with the necessity of that commission that is sitting to ascertain the operation of this sugar combine and trust that the wholesale men, and other men engaged in the sugar trade, have entered into; they will find a remedy for this in a moment, and avoid the necessity of spending $6,000 or $7,000 in order to find out a remedy for the evil. If we, as manufacturers, are taking advantage of the tariff, to take more out of the people than we ought to—I say we, because I am a manufacturer myself—if that be true it is the bounden duty of the Government to reduce the taxation and take away our power of doing so. That sugar duty could be arranged by one stroke of a Finance Minister's pen so as to deal successfully with this difficulty, and at once put an end to this combine, and we would do no injury to the wholesale merchants scattered throughout the country. Sir, I believe they have gone into this combine in order to help themselves, yet I will venture to say that to-day they would rather have the privilege they had during the time my hon. friend was in office, of going to markets of the world and buying their sugar and standing their chance of making their profits on it—they would rather do that than to risk the profits they have now after they have entered into their combines, tied down, as they are, to the demands of the refiners, that can be made arbitrarily, and from which they cannot release themselves. Sir, I give that to the hon. gentleman with reference to this sugar duty.

Mr. GUILLET. Is not the hon. gentleman himself a member of combines?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I am a member of an association, if the hon. gentleman wants to know, and, Sir, I do not feel that I am doing any wrong to the country. I hold this, that if I am in an association that is taking any advantage of the public, by means of this tariff, hon. gentlemen opposite are recreant to their duty if they do not wipe out the protection under which we are enabled to do it. That is the hon. gentleman's answer. He will find me frank in stating the position that I am in, and, Sir, I do not claim that I am wrong. I only state this as a personal explanation. I suppose the hon. gentleman can find out all about it, if he likes to, and he is welcome to it. If there is anything wrong in the position I am in, I would like to know it, for if I thought so I would get out of it. But if the hon. gentleman thinks that I am taking an advantage of the tariff, it is his bounden duty to urge upon the Government that which will cure the evil. Wipe out your protection, and open the markets of the world to the people, and you will manage it very successfully. With respect to the manufacture in which I am engaged the difference between the cost of the raw material and the price of the manufactured article does not give any great amount of protection, and the manufacturers are met with the competition of the world, as I hold should be the case in regard to sugar and all other articles consumed by the people, and in regard to which they are taxed to an exorbitant amount. I proceed to notice a few statements made by the Finance Minister in his Budget speech. I notice that the tables he gave seem to be pretty fairly prepared, and for them I presume he assumes responsibility; I do not desire to criticise them, as they have already been criticised by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), and I wish to leave them in that position. I simply wish to re-enforce the statements made by that hon. gentleman that the rate of taxation imposed upon the people is excessive, that the hon. gentleman has added enormously last year to that taxation in the form of iron duties, that he has also changed the duties on sugar so that the treasury received something like three-quarters of a million extra in taxes from the people. The Finance Minister was honest enough to admit that with all the increased taxation there is in Canada to-day depression in trade, that the progress of the country has been checked, and to that checking of progress and dulness of trade he attributed the loss of revenue that has taken place and the probability of a deficit. I was a little amused at the hon. gentleman. He is of a happy turn of mind, he is of a cheerful spirit when on the Treasury benches, but when in Opposition he has a long face and deplores and grumbles about the position of the country. When seated on the Treasury benches, however, he feels that everything is all right. He took a glance through the country and saw, what we all very much regret, a failure of crops in Ontario, which is a very serious matter for the whole country; yet he extracted consolation even out of that thought. He said that after all the short crop in Ontario was a blessing in disguise because it would prevent over importation. The short crop in Ontario is a blessing because the people are too poor to buy the goods they bought before. I have sometimes wondered how a large and kind hearted gentleman such as he is could heap burdens upon the country without having twinges of conscience; but the explanation is here. What the short crop did by impoverishing the people and making them less able to buy goods, which was in the hon. gentleman's opinion a blessing in disguise, the Finance Minister accomplished by making them poor through excessive taxation, thereby conferring a blessing in disguise on the people without their knowing it. That is the explanation of the hon. gentleman's conduct, and we can now understand that he is not so hard-hearted as we otherwise might think he is. I pass on to notice the increase in the national debt. It must be alarming to the people of the Dominion to contemplate a net debt of $228,000,000. I am told, although I have not seen the notice myself, that the Finance Minister has given notice of a resolution asking power to effect a further loan of $25,000,000. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) pointed out very clearly the large expenditures we shall have to meet in the near future, the great augmentation of the net debt that is taking place, and that the time has arrived when if we cannot reach the ears of the Government, we should reach the ears of the people and lead them to put a stop to the further accumulation of debt in the interests of the well-being of this country. The Finance Minister while admitting that there was somewhat of a depression to-day, went on to point out that there were some directions in which there was light, and that our trade was increasing in some quarters. While there was a poor crop in Ontario he said there was a good crop in Manitoba and the North-West, and I very much rejoice in that fact. The hon. gentleman also said there was a great increase in the West India trade, and in order to prove that statement he gave the House some statistics. I wish to call attention to those figures, because I am unable to reconcile them with those I find in the public documents. The hon. gentleman said, at page 1085 of Hansard:

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

"I find that in 1878 the total value of the imports entered for consumption from all the West Indies was $1,181,728; and in 1886 it had increased to $3,249,642."

He gave those figures as showing a gratifying increase in the West India trade, a trade which the Government prided themselves on developing. The figures quoted by the hon. gentleman show an increase in the years mentioned of $2,067,914. But I desire to ask the Minister of Finance why he gave statistics for the year 1886 and not those for 1887. Surely when we take statistics of either private or public business we want them for the present year and not far last year. The hon. gentleman should have made his speech last year—he is a year late. I will give the figures for 1887 instead of 1886, which in all fairness the hon. gentleman was bound to have done, if he wished the people to thoroughly understand the question. I find by the Trade and Navigation Returns for 1887 that the value of imports entered for home consumption from the West Indies in 1878 was $1,033,849; 1887, $1,942,182, so that the increase in the West Indies import trade, during those nine years, was only $908,333, but the Finance Minister, by selecting 1886, led the country to understand that the trade had increased by over $2,000,000. The hon. gentleman further said:

“As regards the whole trade, both imports and exports, I find that in 1878 the total value of these amounted to $4,689,473, in 1886 to $5,553,892.”

The Finance Minister thus gave the House to understand that the total trade, exports and imports, had increased by the value of $864,419. What are the facts? If he had dealt frankly with the House and had given us, as he was bound to give us, the figures for 1887, in reference to this matter, as disclosed by Table No. 4, of the Trade and Navigation Returns, that the total value of the imports to the West Indies in 1878 amounted to $4,397,996, and in 1887, $4,017,593. Thus, Sir, instead of there being an increase in the total trade with the West Indies, as would appear by the figures given us by the Minister of Finance, there was a positive decrease in the total trade with the West Indies of $380,403. I think I am justified in bringing that fact before the notice of the Finance Minister, and in asking him to explain how it was that in making his financial statement to this House and pretending to show the progress we in Canada were making that he should have gone back to 1886 and overlooked the figures for 1887 which must have been before him? The hon. the Finance Minister was pleased to say that in addition to developing our West India trade we were also developing our interprovincial trade, and he gave us figures to show the increase of traffic over the Intercolonial Railway, and pointed to that as an evidence of increased provincial trade. I say here, as I said not long ago from my seat in this House, that the hon. gentleman would not delight more than I would delight if it were possible for us, in a business way, to increase our interprovincial trade. I said on a previous occasion, and I do not hesitate to say it now, that I believe the Minister of Finance is the founder of the National Policy, and has the honor of being its founder, if there be any honor in it. I believe that one of the objects of the National Policy, was as had been told us, if possible to develop an interprovincial trade. He saw the necessity, if we could not develop a foreign trade, to promote a trade between ourselves. I would rejoice with him if his figures could be taken as indicating that between Springhill, Cape Breton and Pictou, there could be a legitimate interprovincial trade, but I felt constrained to interject a question to the Finance Minister, which he was kind enough to answer at the time. I did not wish to disconcert him during the progress of his speech, but I asked him if he had a comparative statement of the expenditure and receipts during this period on the Intercolonial Railway. He said he had not, but that he considered it was a matter of very small importance—I think those were his words—in consideration of the vast benefits that would flow to this country from the encouragement of an interprovincial trade. Still, Sir, I can scarcely agree with him on that point. I ask the Finance Minister this question: Can you not develop an interprovincial trade to a much greater extent than at the present time, provided you run your Intercolonial Railway for nothing; provided you carry and lay down in the Maritime Provinces flour for nothing. Then our friends from the Maritime Provinces would buy all their flour from us, and they would not import any American flour and pay taxes upon it as they do to-day. If you bring the Springhill mines and the Pictou and Cape Breton mines and lay their products down in my city, free of cost to me, then I will purchase those products, or let you bring them over your railway, as far as it comes, free of cost, and then, Sir, I might be found using them, and that may develop the trade. But where would be the saving to the country? Why, Sir, you would be paying out of the pockets of the people of the country the expenses to run your road. We can only rejoice in a development of trade and commerce when that commerce is brought about legitimately, and when it is not brought at the expense of taxes that are taken out of the pockets of the people to pay for losses incurred in other directions.

After Recess.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to have been able to conclude my remarks before the House rose at six o'clock, but I found there were a few points I desired to touch upon, having reference more particularly to some of the statements that were made by the Minister of Finance in the speech he delivered to this House. I have discussed what I conceive to be the effect of the sugar duties, and of our trade in that direction, and I would propose now for a short time to consider the effect of the iron duties that were proposed by the Finance Minister last Session and from which he predicted such grand results would flow. The question of the great blessings to be derived in this country from the imposition of duties upon iron has been often pictured to us. As long ago as 1882 it was brought positively before our minds and the hon. Minister of Finance, Sir Leonard Tilley, told us that the reason that Parliament was prematurely dissolved was to give the people an opportunity of pronouncing whether the National Policy was the settled policy of the people of this country or not. He told us that he was in a position to say that if the people would endorse that policy in 1882, that he knew of millions of capital that was waiting ready to be invested in the manufacture of iron in this country. The First Minister, in speeches delivered throughout the country in various places, notably in the city of Toronto in 1882, during the general election, stated that to his own knowledge such was the case. I will not trouble you with long quotations but I will just read you in a few sentences what he said upon one occasion:

“I tell you—and this is not a matter of supposition but of certainty and knowledge on my part—that there are millions of dollars waiting to be invested in Canada; millions in England and large sums in the United States waiting to come to Canada, waiting to be invested in every kind of industry, in mines and in manufactures of every kind, but the capitalists say: Your Opposition say that your policy is only the result of a temporary madness on the part of the people in Canada in 1878 because times were bad then and that it will be reversed at the next election.”

He pointed out, Sir, in continuing, what the result would be if the people supported his Government and said that those millions of dollars were waiting to develop our iron industry if they did so. Nearly six years have elapsed since then, and I would ask those gentlemen, who spoke of their own knowledge, of their own certainty, not on supposition at all as they declared; whether those millions of dollars have been invested? The Government have been sustained in that election, the Government have been sustained in an election since then, and I ask where are those millions of dollars that were to have been invested? But last Session the hon. the Finance Minister told us that they had found out that this blessed policy of theirs that was to build up—that was so complete, and perfect, and harmonious in all its parts, and that was working such wonders in this land, had one serious fault. They had discovered that the iron duties were arranged on a wrong basis and that this was the serious trouble in this much belauded National Policy, that was the model of perfection itself. He applied the remedy; he asked Parliament to give an increase of taxes on iron and that this would remedy the trouble. We had him prophesying what would be the effect of this change. He said: Allow the imposition of those duties on iron and you will find blast furnaces springing up in those places immediately. I am no prophet, he said, and no son of a prophet, but I venture to say that there will be found very great prosperity in this country as a result of that policy. May I ask the hon. Finance Minister to-night, a year after the imposition of those duties, when we should have some promise of the fulfilment of his prophesies, whether he can point to any instances that prove that he was a true prophet on that occasion? Although he disclaimed to be a prophet or the son of a prophet, he was a prophet, Sir, but of a certain kind. Now, the Book from which he took that quotation tells us about a class of prophets who existed in other times and in another nation. They were prophets of a people who were steeped in iniquity, who wished to continue in their perverse ways, who did not wish to be disturbed, and who said: "Prophecy unto us smooth things, and they prophesied them." I think the hon. gentleman might be classed among those prophets. I would not like to apply to him the term applied to them, that of being false prophets; but he seemed to be ready to do what they did, and to prophecy unto us smooth things. Let the public debt be heaped up, say they; let the taxes be increased on the people, let there be a shrinkage in our trade, let us draw closer the lines and restrict our commercial intercourse with other nations, let us cripple our industries and our resources; we are at ease in our beds; do not talk about the accumulation of the debt; do not talk about bad times; do not talk about men being out of work or about people leaving the country; do not disturb us in our slumbers; they say: Prophecy unto us smooth things; and the hon. gentleman does so. Now, I would ask the hon. gentleman to-night to point out some of the proofs of his prophesies. Where are the blast furnaces which he said were to be brought into existence? I should like to know if there has been one brought into existence. I would like to ask my hon. friend from Carleton N. B., (Mr. Hule) whether that blast furnace in his county, whose fires were damped some years ago, has had them relighted. I would like to ask, where are the blast furnaces at Cobourg, at Weller's Bay, at Kingston, and at other places where the hon. Finance Minister said they were going to spring up? He said, there is only one thing in addition to these iron duties that we require in order to have blast furnaces established at all these points, and that is, to have the duty taken off anthracite coal. A year ago that was done and yet there are no blast furnaces at Cobourg, at Weller's Bay, or at Kingston, I have looked around the country, and I have failed to discover that any great stimulus has been given to the industry, while the iron duties imposed at that time have borne down heavily on the agricultural classes. The hon. Finance Minister told us that certain factories had increased their output. I will not challenge all the statements he made, but I will refer to a sample of them. I am not blaming the Finance Minister, who I believe was misled, but I blame the gentlemen who gave him the information. He told us that a wood screw factory was being erected in Hamilton that was not employing, but—the language was very guarded—to be capable of employing 400 hands. I think I am correct in what I am about to say, but I shall be very happy to be corrected if I am wrong. He told us that that was a new industry; but my impression is that that wood screw factory, that was to be capable of employing 400 hands as the effect of these iron duties, is the same factory that was located in the town of Dundas, five miles distant from Hamilton, for years and years, and was only removed to Hamilton.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. For twenty years.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Long before the National Policy was thought of, that factory was in existence in Dundas, and as a matter of convenience, as a better shipping point I suppose, it was removed to Hamilton. I think I am correct in that statement; if I am not, the hon. Finance Minister will correct me.

Mr. BROWN. I should like to correct the hon. gentleman, if I am in order. The hon. gentleman is correct to some extent, that the screw factory, a small concern, had been in existence in Dundas for some time, and did remove its machinery to Hamilton. But this establishment which has been organised in Hamilton is eight or ten times the size of the one that was in Dundas, and its creation is entirely a result of the tariff that was adopted at the last Session; and had that tariff not been adopted that large factory would not have been erected in the city of Hamilton or anywhere else. It is entirely due to the tariff adopted last Session that that large establishment is now in successful operation, giving employment to some 400 or 500 hands.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). Perhaps I may be permitted to a word of explanation.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member for South Brant has the floor.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). As these hon. gentlemen live in the town of Dundas, and are conversant with all the circumstances, I am quite willing that they should state the facts, because I would be glad to know whether this is a new industry or not, and to what extent it has benefited by the iron duties.

Mr. SPEAKER. It will lead to four or five explanations of the same kind, and I think it would be better, and expedite business, if the hon. member proceeded with his speech.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. May I call your attention to the fact that the hon. member for Hamilton (Mr. Brown) chose to intervene and interrupt my hon. friend, and thereby induced this reply. Now, he ought not to have been allowed to speak, or else I think the hon. member for Wentworth should be allowed to speak.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would have stopped him at once, but the hon. member for Brant seemed to be willing to have that interference.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He is willing that the hon. member for Wentworth should speak.

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes; but if we go on in that way, we shall have four or five speaking on the same subject.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The reason I was willing to give way was that the hon. member for Wentworth represents Dundas. I do not represent it, but I know all the facts, and I would just say—

Mr. SPEAKER. I would interrupt the hon. gentleman. These statements will very well come after the hon. member for South Brant has concluded his speech.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Well, I think the House is pretty well seized of the fact. At any rate, the hon. Finance Minister has been misled as to this being a new industry, started under the stimulating influence of the tariff, and it is possible that the gentleman who gave the explanation is the same one who gave the information to the hon. Finance Minister, and it would be natural that he should wish to make the best of the case. These cases which are given of manufacturers sending in their own statements about their output being so much greater than before, and all that kind of thing, really do not prove anything. We are capable of using business arguments, and determining for ourselves as business men what the effect would be; and to speak of an increased number of hands in my factory or your factory or anybody else's, proves nothing in an argument of this kind. It is quite possible that there might be, in these cases, something such as there is in the city of Toronto. If you consider the manufacturing industries located there, and say, in such a year, only a few years ago, there were only so many factories in existence, but to-day there are so many, hon. gentlemen would say they are the effect of the National Policy. Some of the factories are not the effect of the National Policy, but were in existence years before the imposition of the National Policy, and were simply transferred from one city to another. Cases of that kind continually offer themselves; and they were thus transferred, not under the stimulating influence of his National Policy but of the bonuses offered by rival towns. For instance, I need refer, as an illustration of this statement, to the offer made lately of a bonus of $30,000 by the town of St. Mary's to a factory in Paris, to induce the proprietors of that factory to remove their establishment to St. Mary's; and should that offer be accepted, no doubt some hon. gentleman opposite will claim the establishment of that enterprise in the latter town as due solely to the National Policy.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not want to interrupt my hon. friend, but I would like to ask him whether the National Policy and the bonuses had not something to do with each other? Does he think the bonuses would have been given but for the National Policy?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I will answer the hon. gentleman. I believe that in that particular case, the effect of his tariff has not been to stimulate that industry to that extent, as I was able to show when the reciprocity debate was before the House; I gave the testimony of the manufacturers in that line given before the committee of this House in 1876, in which they declared that the increase in the tariff would be injurious instead of beneficial to them. But the National Policy has had this effect, that manufactories have been transferred, by means of the bonuses, from one place to another; and I tell the hon. gentleman further, that one other effect of the National Policy has been this: Whether that effect has been good or bad I will not stop now to argue, but one effect has been to concentrate numerous small establishments into a few large ones. Take, for instance, the large boot and shoe manufacturers. You will find that they employ a large number of hands, but how does that come about? Is it that there are so many more men employed making boots and shoes than formerly? I think you will agree with me that there are not, but you will find that where formerly boot and shoe makers were widely distributed and employed men in their own shops—each boot and shoe maker employing in his own shop, in his own town or village, several apprentices—to-day the large factories have absorbed these smaller institutions, and the men who were formerly employed in smaller shops now have to turn to something else or to go into the large factories. You cannot say, therefore, that these factories are the effect of the National Policy, but you must trace them directly to the combining of the small shops into large factories. I have always made these statements with the reservation that I am willing to be corrected if wrong, and I make them to-day under the same reservation. But I have asked, time and again, hon. gentlemen to point to me a single manufacturing industry now in existence in this country, that was not in existence years before the National Policy came into effect at all.

Mr. HESSON. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must allow the hon. member for South Brant to proceed with his speech.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. member for Wentworth was not allowed to interrupt, and, as a matter of course, the hon. member for North Perth must not object to the same rule being applied to him.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would have been quite willing to allow the hon. gentleman to interrupt, but as I do not intend to occupy the time of the House long, he will have the perfect right to rise after I have finished, and enumerate the numerous industries which have been started after the National Policy, that he knows of. I have doubted that there are any, but, if hon. gentlemen opposite say there are any, I have asked them frequently to name them. That there are more factories to-day in existence, more woollen mills, more cotton mills, and more factories of that kind, I do not deny.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But can it be expected that the country is to go on increasing in population, and hon. gentlemen opposite will surely not urge that we have not increased somewhat, though at a slower pace than we should have increased—and that there should not, in the natural order of progress, be also an increase in these different kinds of manufactories? But in order that hon. gentlemen opposite may establish the claim they urge on behalf of the National Policy, they must prove that industries are to-day in existence in Canada which were not in existence before the National Policy was adopted. Sir, the great manufacturing industries of this country were in existence years before these hon. gentlemen attained the Treasury benches the second time. Years before that, the manufactures of Canada were exhibited at the Centennial Exhibition of Philadelphia and challenged there the admiration of the world; and as the result of the display our Canadian manufacturers there made and which attracted the attention of the people of Australia and Europe, a foreign trade sprung up in those industries which still continues, and I believe a larger trade would have been promoted between Canada and the outside world had not these manufacturers been restricted and burdened by the imposition of the National Policy. I ask hon. gentlemen opposite to point to a new industry which has been brought into existence by the National Policy. Take the census of 1871, take the census of 1881, or take any tables you may know of, of a later date, and point to me any new industry started since the National Policy. I will not deny that you may find some, but I venture to say that the lines will be very few and very difficult to name. I was told once by a gentleman, when I put this question on the public platform, that there was a pin factory started in Galt and that such a factory was unknown in Canada before the adoption of the National Policy. I accepted his statement, but I was corrected afterwards by a gentleman who stated that years before the National Policy came into force there was a pin factory in existence somewhere else in Canada. Another gentleman stated that the electro-plate business was brought into existence in Hamilton by the National Policy. I was not able to contradict that statement, but my impression is that there was one established in Canada before the adoption of our protective tariff. Therefore, these glorious prophecies, those grand, proud swelling words, which are uttered by Ministers and their supporters, are mere sound and fury, and carry no argument, unless those gentlemen are able to point to the case of any new industries which have been started into existence by our National Policy. Let these hon. gentlemen look over our census of 1871, and they will find that all these various industries about which we now hear so much, were in existence in this country then and prospering. I wish just to refer briefly to a statement that was made by the Finance Minister, and which afforded me some pleasure. I was pleased to hear him state that while he imposed an additional duty of $2.44 per ton on pig iron the price had only increased $1.25 per ton and he argued from that that the manufacturer in Canada had not availed himself of the full amount of duty, but that the foreign manufacturer in order to get his goods in Canada had to lower his prices. I think the facts hardly bear out that statement. I have not got access to the papers from which the hon. gentleman quoted. He selected the months of December and February, but I thought it would be as good a test as any, and I think the hon. gentleman will agree with me in this to take the figures from the London Economist. These figures are pretty reliable as a rule, and taking their quotations on pig iron for the month of March, 1888, and the corresponding month of March, 1887, they show the following exports from Great Britain to British North America:—In March, 1887, the export was 1,252 tons of pig iron, valued at $3,492; in 1888 the export was 1,877 tons, or a larger import in 1888 after the imposition of the high duties, and the value of that was $4,639. I call the attention of the Finance Minister to this fact, that in 1887, that iron averaged per ton, as quoted in the London Economist, £2 15s. 9½d., while the quotations of March, 1888, are £2 9s. 5d.; so there you find a reduction in the price in the old country, in Britain, of something like $1.52 on iron, and if you add to that the $1.25 that the Finance Minister admits it has to pay here, you have an increase of $2.77, provided the price of iron had not fallen in the old country market. I have not got the same months the Finance Minister had; I have not any access to them, but I have taken March, 1888, and compared that with the corresponding week in 1887, which I think is just as fair a comparison. Now having spoken with reference to the question of iron, and the duty on iron, and what it has failed to do in its effect on manufactures, notwithstanding the grand promises we had held out to us, I wish to ask the attention of the House for a few moments to another point on which the Minister congratulated the House, as being part of his policy, and that was when, in his round, swelling tones, he declared that the policy of this Government was to protect the labor interests of the country, to protect the artisan, the mechanic, the workingman, that their interests had been taken under the fatherly care of this Government. Well, Sir, I charge that that is just what this Government have not done. They have protected the manufacturers, or they have sought to protect the manufacturers, but I deny most emphatically that they have given any protection to labor at all. I think I can demonstrate that, instead of granting any protection to labor, they have discriminated against labor, they have oppressed labor, they have brought unjust competition to bear against labor in this country. Why, the very tables the Finance Minister gave us to show the increase in the output of the Londonderry works as the result of his tariff, if I understand his tables aright, though his figures are rather confused, demonstrate, if you go into the calculation, that while there are more hands employed in those Londonderry iron works, the rate of wages per hand is less than it was before. What does the workingman feel in reference to this matter? Is it any benefit to a mechanic to know that the shop in which he works is somewhat enlarged, and that other mechanics are found by his side, brought as it may be from Germany, from England or from the United States, to work at the same wages, or to lower the wages which he has received? What the mechanic and the laboring man want is not work for more mechanics. The country, as a whole, may benefit by an increased number of mechanics, but the interest of the laboring man and the mechanic of Canada is that his condition shall be improved and his wages raised, and he does not consider that he is benefited by a policy which brings in other artisans, so that he has to work for less wages, and I think it is proved by the tables of the hon. gentleman himself that this is what the Government have done. What have the Government done in reference to the protection of labor? They have, as my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has pointed out, taxed the workingman upon everything almost that he consumes. There is scarcely an article which he needs in his household, or for the use of his family, or for his own use, that is not heavily taxed; but, in regard to what he has to sell, his labor, have they protected his labor? No, but they have taken taxes out of the public treasury of this country, taxes that in part were paid by these hard-working, industrious mechanics, and have given them to mechanics in England and other countries to help to pay their passages to Canada to lower the wages of the mechanics who are working in our factories. That is the way in which those hon. gentlemen protect our labor. It would be amusing, if it did not raise a feeling of indignation, to hear an hon. gentleman professing to speak of protecting labor, when all the effect of his policy is to burden the mechanic with fresh taxes and compel the mechanic not only to contend against the labor market of the world, but also to take the taxes which he has contributed in part and apply them to the purpose of enabling other mechanics to come here and lower the wages which he was receiving before their advent into this country. The hon. gentleman spoke as to the condition of the manufacturers, and there has been a great deal of sympathy expressed on account of the manufacturers. What is the condition of the manufacturers in this country to-day? Of course there are manufacturers and manufacturerers. Some of them, I suppose, are doing fairly well; some, I suppose, are doing very well; but some are doing very ill indeed. That will always be the case. Fortunate circumstances may perhaps attend one man's ventures which may be absent from another's, so that under any tariff some men will prosper in business while others may not; but take trade as a whole—and I call the attention of the Finance Minister to this, because he stated in his speech to us last year what I believe to be a truth, and I like to quote truth whenever it is stated by the Finance Minister, and he saw as a public man, and knew what he was giving utterance to a year ago, and that was that production in manufactured goods in this country had about overtaken consumption. He was within the mark that time. Sometimes he is charged with overshooting the mark, but he was within the mark that time. Production has not only overtaken consumption, it has done more, it has outrun consumption, and, as a result, you have found men who, in order to save their capital, in order to save their resources, have found themselves under the necessity, as they considered, to band themselves together in order to restrict production and to keep up the price, which of course means a hardship to the consumer. The hon. gentleman recognised that, and he suggested that it would be the duty of the Government, and of every Government under those circumstances, to look abroad and to use every energy they were possessed of to open up new and foreign markets which might take the surplus of our manufactures; and he told us that the Government had sent commissioners to various countries, to the Argentine republic, and to Brazil, and to other countries, to open up additional trade. But no result has come from those efforts. I think a commissioner was sent to Australia, but I am afraid that nothing has resulted from that either. But, while the hon. gentleman admits the absolute necessity that our manufacturers should have larger fields in which to operate, he tells us that he is an avowed opponent of any scheme to open a market of 60,000,000 of people at our own doors or to give our manufacturers a chance to open that market. Why, instead of sending commissioners to these distant countries, does he not himself, with tenfold the ability of the men he has sent there, go to the neighboring republic, to the capital of the United States to which he was invited to go where he was told that they were ready to treat on a basis of larger commercial relations with us, and see if he could open up the markets of that great consuming people of sixty millions? Our manufacturers may be timid. Capital is always timid. Our manufacturers may dread radical changes, but, as the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has pointed out, what the manufacturers of Canada have to be anxious about is this, that, as soon as the United States are able to reduce their duties on raw material, or to wipe them out altogether, as they soon will be able to do in view of their overflowing treasury, then the Canadian manufacturer will be subjected to a closer, a keener, a stronger competition than ever before. That, Sir, being the case with the American manufacturer, and that being the case with our manufacturer, under the policy of expenditure that has been followed by these hon. gentlemen, they will tell you that the maintenance of high taxes upon their raw material would place them at a disadvantage in their own country, to say nothing of the absolute disadvantage that they would be under competing with the Americans in other parts of the world. Now, Mr. Speaker, suppose we leave the subject of trade, and finance, and figures, which are dry, and discuss lofty and exalted principles. We had a little novelty of that kind the other day when the Finance Minister did so. The Finance Minister left off his discussion of trade and commerce in order to read hon. gentlemen on the Opposition side of the House a lecture as to how they ought to behave themselves. He was kind enough to tell us that a party, in seeking to obtain power, should only seek power for the sake of the good they would be able to do when they got there, for the sake of giving effect to their principles; that if a party sought to attain power simply for the sake of holding and exercising power, it was a most unworthy, a most base thing. Sir, I agree with him. It was refreshing to hear sentiments so grand from the Finance Minister—not that I mean to say he is incapable of feeling them, but he has to deal so much in a hard, matter of fact region, that he does not often soar into the region of fixed principles. But I would like to ask him this question, agreeing with him in that: Is it proper for a party, in seeking to attain power, to do so with a single eye to carrying out their principles, and giving effect to them, whether he does not think it would be a good plan for a party after they have attained power, to retain their principles while they remain in office. I think that would be well. Now, we cannot tell exactly what the hon. gentleman's principles were when he was struggling for power; but let me ask him, in all frankness, Has he held on to his fixed principles since he got in? It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that there has been a departure from sound principle by one or other of the gentlemen opposite, when I see a Tupper and a McLellan sitting in the same Cabinet. I think there must be. I cannot conceive, myself, that one gentleman who denounced another as the high priest of corruption, who pictured him as robbing his fellow passengers with false arms in a stage coach—I cannot believe it possible that these two men were honest at that time, and can be found sitting in the same Cabinet together to-day, unless there has been a departure from principle on the part of one or the other. I will do the Finance Minister the credit of saying this, though, that he did not seek a seat in the Cabinet with the hon. member for Colchester, (Mr. McLellan), but the member for Colchester sought, and was willing to accept, a seat in the Cabinet side by side with this gentleman that he had thus described. I am afraid there has been a departure from principle somewhere. I would like the hon. gentleman, when lecturing this side of the House, to remember that while it is a high, and a lofty, and a proper thing to be actuated solely by a desire to maintain principles when striving for the Treasury benches, it is equally laudable to maintain these principles in all their purity when occupying this seat. I would remind him that it would be only a proper thing, in maintaining these fixed principles, if gentlemen, having that sense of honor of the way in which public business should be conducted, would be willing, in making an appeal to the electorate of this country for a renewal of their confidences, to go before that electorate and say: Gentlemen, these are our principles, this is our policy, these are our acts, this is what we have done; judge whether we have been faithful stewards of your affairs; in your hands we leave the decision of this case. We have empanelled you as a jury, and to your verdict we will bow. Sir, gentlemen of fixed principles, gentlemen who will trust to their principles and believe that they are right, would not hesitate for a moment to go to the country under such circumstances. But have these gentlemen opposite ever dared to go to the country on their principles? Have they ever dared to go to the country and fight their opponents in a fair field with no favor? No, Sir, the records of this country show not. Sir, gentlemen of fixed principles ought never to condescend to such acts as the Gerry-mander Act, as the Franchise Act, as the Revising Barrister Act, as the Returning Officer Act, if they felt strong, and confident that they were virtuous in their principles. Sir, I am afraid there has been a departure from fixed principles on the part of members of the Cabinet—though undoubtedly their sole desire in seeking to attain that position was not to remain there a day, or a year, but simply to give effect to principles that they believed in. My hon. friend beside me says, and I believe that is true, that, perhaps, with them there is one grand, overshadowing principle, which outweighs all other considerations to which they may bow, and that it is their fundamental principle to cling to office, no matter by what means, or under what circumstances. But then my hon. friend the Finance Minister will not say that that is a high and lofty principle. He will not stand on the pedestal that he did the other day, when delivering a lecture to gentlemen on this side of the House. Well, now let us examine and see what are the fixed principles of the party opposite. What is their policy? I remember last year and the year before, gentlemen on this side of the House had a fixed policy on a particular question, that it was the duty of the Federal Government to allow the Provincial Governments to exercise their undoubted rights within their constitutional sphere; and, therefore, they moved a resolution censuring the disallowance of Manitoba railway charters by the gentlemen who are in power. Well, Sir, we were answered by hon. gentlemen opposite: We will not consent to the abandonment of the disallowance policy, we will not consent to allow Manitoba to charter railways that will tap the Canadian Pacific Railway and divert the trade of our great North-West into American channels. They pointed out to us that millions and tens of millions of dollars of the taxes of the people of the older Provinces had been expended in building that road, and it was not in the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway, it was not in the interest of the older Provinces, that disallowance should be abandoned, and they would not cease their rights, as they claim to have the right, to disallow the charters and thus prevent our trade from being diverted. Well, there was their policy, fixed and unalterable, a year ago. Where are they to-day? The very same gentlemen have now on the notice paper a resolution to be offered by the Finance Minister himself, by which he will ask the assent of this House, not only to permit Manitoba to charter railways to take the traffic of the North-West, to carry it into American channels, but that we shall guarantee the interest for 50 years on $15,000,000 to the Canada Pacific Railway Company. This is the fixed principle of hon. gentlemen opposite. Why, they had a fixed principle in reference to this National Policy, to the industries of the country that were to be protected. Among them was to be protected the great tree, fruit-growing, and nursery interest, which, they claimed, has sprung up in this country as one of the beneficent results of their National Policy. Well, Sir, what is the fact? We had one day the First Minister and the Minister of Justice rising and declaring that though the Americans had put these articles upon their free list, and though we had a statutory officer upon our books, saying if they did that we would do the same with their products, these hon. gentlemen said they would not do it, that they had the liberty to select what they saw fit, that they would not consent to do it, that it would be treasonable to the interests of the country to do it. Within one short week the hon. the Finance Minister came down and said that that was all wrong, that already an Order in Council had been issued placing those articles upon the free list, where they remain to-day. One of the fixed principles of hon. gentlemen opposite has been that Canada must not discriminate against the mother country. Yet in that very Order in Council they discriminated against the mother country by declaring that those articles might come in free from the United States but not free from the land against which they would on no account discriminate. They had also a fixed policy in regard to the manner in which they would deal with the liquor traffic. The hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) and the First Minister put their heads together and a Bill was introduced known as the McCarthy Act. What was the result? They abandoned that principle, I will not say voluntarily, but they had to abandon it after an appeal to the highest judicial tribunal of the Empire. Their fixed principle of dealing with the liquor traffic is a thing of the past and all that remains of it is in the shape of taxes to the extent of nearly a quarter of a million to pay for the blunder the Government committed at that time. Then they had until a short year ago a decided policy and principle in dealing with the Americans and our fisheries. They were not to be allowed the use of our fisheries on any consideration; the Treaty of 1818 was to be entirely carried out and we were to uphold our rights. Less than a year ago the Minister of Finance went to Washington and arranged a treaty by which under certain conditions the Americans would be permitted to enjoy every privilege that hon. gentlemen opposite declared Canada would never consent to accept. I am not finding fault with the fisheries treaty, it is not necessary for the purposes of my argument, but I am simply pointing out that one year the Government had a fixed policy and were determined to carry it out, and in fact did carry it out, in such a manner that the Finance Minister has declared that it produced a feeling of irritation in the United States that led us to the borders of war, and yet now we find an abandonment of all those contentions, all done it is said for the sake of peace. The Finance Minister himself had a policy last year with respect to the United States, and he was not disturbed by the prospect of what was known as the Retaliation Bill being passed in the United States. Some fears were expressed in regard to the results that might follow from non-intercourse with our neighbors, and it was thought it would prove very injurious, but the hon. gentleman could even see in that Bill, as he saw in the poor crop in Ontario, a blessing in disguise. The whole outlook was not dark, there was a silver lining to the cloud, and he went on to picture the silver lining and it appeared to be not a silver lining but the bright cloud itself, and the non-intercourse would be in Canadian interests. What were the hon. gentleman's statements in regard to that non-intercourse Bill, as given to us last year? He said then:

"Non-intercourse would build up Montreal, Quebec, St. Andrews and St. John, &c., with a rapidity which the people of this country can scarcely understand."

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

That certainly would not be a bad result. Cities could not be built up except by providing employment for the people and giving a stimulus to trade generally. Hon. gentlemen opposite claimed it was part of their policy to build up great cities, and the effect of passing a non-intercourse Bill on the part of the United States would be that our cities would be built up with a rapidity we could scarcely understand. What more did the hon. gentleman say?

"Non-intercourse would lead England to put on differential duties on grain to such an extent as would vivify the industries of this country, especially the great farming industry of this country, to an extent which would make the most marvellous change in this Dominion."

If the result would be that it would advance our agricultural interests to such an extent as to produce a marvellous change in their favor non-intercourse would be of great benefit to us, and it would not be a cloud with a silver lining but a cloud white altogether with perhaps a dark rim. Yet this was the fixed principle which hon. gentlemen opposite declared a year ago, but within a year the Finance Minister comes to this House and declares that if the non-intercourse Bill had been put into effect it would have been the most disastrous thing that could have happened to Canada, and one of the great objects in surrendering what we did surrender to the United States of the fisheries was almost necessitated by the state of public opinion over there, owing to the policy we had pursued and to the danger that they might put into effect that very non-intercourse, which, according to the hon. gentleman's statement last year, would have been fraught with blessing to us. I think, therefore, we may fairly ask hon. gentlemen opposite when they read us lectures with regard to having fixed principles, to be themselves consistent not only in their utterances but also in their actions, because I would venture to propose this question: What principle is there that has been held by the party which occupies the Treasury benches which they are not ready to sacrifice if necessary in order to hold their present seats? Theirs has been a changing and a vacillating course, their promises have been broken and violated, their pledges have not been kept, they have not succeeded in giving that prosperity to the country which they promised that the country should enjoy. They to-day sit there with all their predictions not only unfulfilled but with many of them looked upon in the light of events that have transpired as having been perfectly ridiculous in their nature and in their expression, if I might be permitted to use language as strong as that without giving offence to hon. gentlemen opposite. But it is not too strong language to use when we look at their prediction of immigration into the North-West, when we read the predictions of the First Minister endorsed by the Finance Minister, given five, six or eight years ago and look at the actual result to-day, and on comparing them the question will force itself upon all minds. Can those hon. gentlemen have ability sufficient to manage a great and prosperous people like the people of Canada when they are unable to gauge with greater accuracy the state and condition of this country and the results likely to follow from the course and policy they are initiating? I will touch for a few moments on that which the hon. the Finance Minister has been pleased to term a new principle and new policy that we were grasping at. Several hon. gentlemen have pleased to tell us this and in the same breath have quoted the speech of the late leader of the Opposition (Mr. Blake) in which he stated that one of the settled principles of the Liberal party was to secure reciprocal trade relations with our neighbors to the south. We are told it is an entirely new principle, and the Postmaster General was pleased to tell us that the resolution offered by the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) was annexation in disguise. He sees he tells us, a snake in the resolution, and he seems to imply that this is a party ready and anxious to promote annexation with the United States. I do not think there is any necessity for saying things that are offensive in their nature when it is not at all necessary. What right had he to charge any such sentiments or the holding of any such sentiments upon gentlemen on this side of the House? Did he produce a tittle of proof that the great Liberal party that were represented in that resolution by the mover, have ever advocated annexation to the United States? Why; no, Sir, he did not. He would have failed of proof, and I say that I am only tempted to mention this fact because the hon. gentleman has provoked it by seeking to fasten the charge upon the Liberal party of this country, that they desired a severance of the political relations that bind them to the mother land. I only allude to the fact that if he wants to find the annexation party he would find it in days gone by, not in the ranks of the Liberal party, but in the ranks of the party he himself belongs to to-day. He would have found men prominent in the party with which he is connected, in high places in the State and in high places in the mother land advocating annexation. Therefore, before he attempts to make an insinuation, or to make a statement of that kind, he should make himself aware of the history of this country, and know what the history of the political parties of this country has been. I hold in my hand what purports to be the annexation manifesto of 1849. It is said to be reprinted from the original pamphlet with the names of the signers. I have not time to read it, but I will read you the 6th article, and what does it say:

"Of all the remedies that have been suggested for the acknowledged and insufferable ills with which our country is afflicted, there remains but one to be considered. It propounds a sweeping and important change in our political and social condition, involving considerations which demand our most serious examination. This remedy consists in a friendly and peaceful separation from British connection and a union upon equitable terms with the Great North American confederacy of sovereign States."

I find, Sir, appended to that document such names as "J. J. C. Abbott," I find the name of "John Rose," I find the name "D. L. Macpherson." Will the hon. gentleman answer if he has ever known any persons bearing those names or any names having before them those initials? and if he has I would suggest that he would confer with them and ask them whether they are the individuals who signed their names to that document, the sixth article of which I have read to this House? If he finds they are the same gentlemen then I would ask him in very modesty, before he levels charges of treason and rebellion against this side of the House, that he should take care that his own skirts, and the skirts of his own party are clean in this matter. In the course of the debate which took place on unrestricted reciprocity, we were told by the hon. the Finance Minister in his speech the other night that there was a certain gentleman who came from the United States and sought to place himself at the head of the Liberal party, to carry out the principle of commercial union. He gave us the name of that individual. He said it was Mr. Wiman. He said Mr. Wiman was a gentleman of large means—and the Finance Minister seemed to speak feelingly and knowingly when he said it was a great advantage to a party to have a man of large means connected with it. My friend from South Grey (Mr. Landerkir) said: "Like Sir Hugh Allan." What made him make that interjection? I will let him explain himself. But the Finance Minister understood the advantage of it. The hon. gentleman was pleased to say also that Mr. Wiman was a man of great ability and acknowledged power as well, and that he had come here to attempt to put himself at the head of the Liberal party and to lead the Liberal party to adopt commercial union. He told us also that the member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) was too much for the gentleman from New York, and that he had got the better of Mr. Wiman, with all his wealth, and all his ability, and that he had rescued the Liberal party from Mr. Wiman's leadership, and had thus saved the ship of the Liberal party from being dashed into pieces on the rocks of commercial union, but only to be stranded on the shoals of unrestricted reciprocity. I know nothing of Mr. Wiman myself. I am a humble member of the Liberal party sometimes consulted with, sometimes knowing what is going on within the ranks, and perhaps knowing as much of what goes on as the hon. the Finance Minister himself. Not that I claim to have any great intelligence or influence but simply from the fact that we would not consider him as trusted a member to admit to the caucuses even with all his ability, as I am myself. I am not aware that Mr. Wiman ever attempted to set himself up as the leader of the Liberal party in Canada, but I have the statement from the hon. gentleman himself that Mr. Wiman not only set himself up to be, but that he actually was the leader of the Finance Minister. Why, Sir, what glorifications we had over the consummation of the fishery treaty. What poems of praise were sung by the High Commissioner to the plenipotentiaries who arranged this fishery treaty. Great praise was given to them, and the Finance Minister, in that self-sacrificing manner which so eminently characterises him, took nearly an hour and a half to describe the admirable qualities of those gentlemen who had been engaged in the superhuman task of defining the Treaty of 1818. But it all came back to the Finance Minister, because those plenipotentiaries were appointed, at his suggestion, because he made representations to Mr. Bayard and Mr. Bayard made representations to the United States Government and Sir Charles made representations to the British Government and those representations were carried out, and, as a matter of fact then the credit came back to Canada's High Commissioner, as being the one who conceived the project of settling this question and devising the means whereby it could be settled. In a moment of frankness the hon. the Finance Minister told us how all this came about. Shall the Canadian High Commissioner have the credit? If he was the first cause, yes; if he was not the first cause, no. Was he the first cause? He was not. He himself told us he was not. Why, he told us that the way he came to go to Washington, and the reason he took the initiatory step was, that our mutual friend, Mr. Wiman, told me that he had a conversation with Mr. Bayard, and if you go over there Mr. Bayard will talk to you about the trade relations between Canada and the United States. Here is an admission that he received his instructions from Mr. Wiman, and although Parliament was in session—may be there was a holiday at that time—the Finance Minister takes a trip across to Washington, sees Mr. Bayard, and then followed the result that we all know. The point I wish to get at is this: The Finance Minister, who charges us with having sought to put ourselves as a Liberal party under Mr. Wiman's leadership, and charges Mr. Wiman with having sought to obtain the leadership of this party, he himself has confessed that he was a follower of Mr. Wiman, and, as far as we know, the only follower that Mr. Wiman had in this country, and that he followed him in this direction with the results that followed from it. I ask hon. gentlemen opposite—I wish to ask the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. C. H. Tupper) if he is in his seat, what he thinks of the conduct of the Finance Minister of Canada who has himself declared that this Mr. Wiman was "our mutual friend," and the member for Pictou knows what he told us about Mr. Wiman. He told us that Mr. Wiman was the apostle of commercial union, the apostle of unrestricted reciprocity or anything else that would lead to annexation. That is the description that was given to us of Mr. Wiman by the member for Pictou (Mr. C. H. Tupper). The member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) described Mr. Wiman as a renegade Canadian. What do these gentlemen think of the Finance Minister acknowledging him "his mutual friend" and acting upon the suggestion of this annexationist, and this gentleman who is the apostle of anything that would tend to annexation? I think that the hon. the Minister of Finance need not have looked to the Liberal party as those likely to follow Mr. Wiman's lead or those likely to look for a new leader. It would rather bear the significance and we would be more justified in considering that the hon. gentleman himself was prepared to enter into a league with Mr. Wiman to bring about not unrestricted reciprocity, but commercial union with the United States, than he is to charge the Liberal party that they sought to effect it by means of Mr. Wiman himself. Sir, he has declared that he had communications with Mr. Wiman, that he had negotiations with him, that he had received suggestions from him, and that he had acted on those suggestions; and I think he will not find that the Liberal party have ever done that. Now, Sir, the Liberal party have adopted the principle of unrestricted reciprocity, that is, they desire to promote the trade and the varied industries of this country. The agricultural interest of this country is not benefited, as I think the hon. gentleman himself will now be almost prepared to admit, by his so-called National Policy. What they want is larger markets and freer markets. Much of their produce has to go to the neighboring states as almost their only market. It is met there by heavy duties. The like products in the United States are so large and great in comparison with the quantity that we send to them that our products do not regulate the price in that market, but their own greater products regulate the price; and under these circumstances, as the hon. Minister of Finance himself pointed out, the Canadian seller has to lose the duty. Therefore we propose by this policy of unrestricted reciprocity to secure an open market, in order that the great agricultural interests of this country may reap the benefits that would flow to them from wiping out the American duties, and giving them the amount of cash which those duties represent in addition to what they now receive from the sale of their products. But the hon. gentleman tells us that the Liberal ship is stranded upon the shoals of unrestricted reciprocity. Well, I ventured to say to the hon. Finance Minister, when he said that, that he was very near there himself. It was about the only time that I perceived a shade of irritation upon his countenance. He had taken one or two previous interruptions from me in good temper; but when I felt impelled to point out that he was very near unrestricted reciprocity himself, he turned upon me rather fiercely, and said he was at a loss to understand the mental organisation of a man who could not understand the difference between unrestricted reciprocity and an unrestricted offer of reciprocity. Well, I do not dwell on that. I was sorry for the hon. Minister of Finance when he said it. The mental organisation is not a peculiar one, I trust, in this country. It is a mental organisation that you will find among honorable men, I take it, in any country—the organisation that believes that when you make an offer to a man you make it in good faith, and that making it in good faith you will be honorable enough to carry it out if he accepts it. That is all that is peculiar in the mental organisation of some men, and I venture to say that that is what the hon. Finance Minister did. The hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper), who spoke with power and authority—I know not whence he got it—told us that the offer made by the Finance Minister of Canada to the American commissioners in reference to trade relations was as broad and free as it was possible to make it. Sir, I cannot understand anything that could be plainer than that; I cannot understand a trade that could be more free and unrestricted if the offer had been accepted, than that involved in the proposition which the hon. gentleman himself made. When the hon. gentleman was asked by the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), did you offer what you did not mean to grant? He answered, no, that would be a mean thing to do, and he would not do it. If he made an unrestricted offer, the broadest, freest possible offer, to settle this fishery question, and to give the Americans free access and all the rights to our fisheries that we enjoy ourselves, if he offered to give them unrestricted free trade upon the land as well as upon the sea, and if the United States had said, we will accept your offer, and the commercial barrier shall be removed from the sea as well as from the land, and commercially we shall be one people, I say from his own description of his offer, he would have been bound as a man of honor, and doubly bound as one of the trusted plenipotentiaries of the British Empire, to have consented to that arrangement with the United States. Sir, he asked, in replying to the question of the hon. member for East York, if I had made this offer, and if the American Government had said, well, we will accept so and so, and we will not accept so and so, would I not be at liberty then to say, no, I will not agree to that? Grant that there is some argument in that; grant that if they had made an offer of partial reciprocity, then he might say, this partial offer of reciprocity that you make has been well considered by you, and will work more in your interests than ours, and I cannot consent to it. But if they had accepted the unrestricted offer, and had said, we will adopt what you have suggested, perfect, unrestricted freedom of trade, then, Sir, I hold that the hon. gentleman would have been bound, and would have had no excuse for rejecting such an arrangement. Therefore, Sir, we were not so very far apart a short time ago. This hon. gentleman who lectured us on fixed principles, ought to have held to the fixed principles he had when he was negotiating with Mr. Bayard, and was making this offer to that gentleman. If he had remained true to that fixed principle, he would have been to-day found in accord with the Liberal party and seeking to give effect to that offer of unrestricted freedom of trade to the American Government on perfectly equal conditions. Sir, the Liberal ship is not stranded on the shoals of unrestricted reciprocity. I do not think it will be stranded there. The hon. Finance Minister himself, sailing in his ship of unrestricted reciprocity, a few months ago, anchored in the waters of unrestricted reciprocity bay. The command of the ship was for a time given to him by the captain, who wanted to sleep and take his ease; but some of his crew from the county of Welland, some from the county of Lincoln, and some from other counties, mutinied and said, if you put us on shore to trade with these people, they will be smarter than we are, and we shall be beaten in the bargain; and they woke up the captain and called upon him to resume the command of the ship in place of the mate; so the anchor was lifted, and the ship was drifted to sea, and now they are drifting about, no one knows where, I suppose for some fixed principle to which they can tie their ship. No, Sir, the offer that was made by the Canadian people and adopted by the Liberal party is this. We propose, what I understood the hon. Minister of Finance proposed, to go to the United States and say, we are living on this same continent, we are speaking the same language, we are people descended from the same nationality, we are a people of the same blood,—let us reason together, let us talk this matter over, and see whether it will not be better for both of us to remove these artificial barriers that divide us. Let us see whether we cannot have access into each other's markets and trade together as a people in perfect amity, although differing in our political institutions, for Mr. Bayard was very careful to say that by no intention whatever did he propose to alter the political status of either country, but simply that he desired we should commercially be one people, and thus thrive, prosper and progress. Let the hon. the Finance Minister tell me, realising as he does the vast importance of this inter-provincial trade, and the great wealth that a great inter-provincial trade flowing freely in natural channels must produce—let him tell me that he is insensible to the effect of the wave of prosperity that will sweep over Canada, should we be permitted to enjoy the benefits of that vast inter-state commerce which has made the great American nation one of the greatest nations on the face of the earth to-day. Should that freedom of commercial intercourse be brought about between the two countries, which would have the best of the bargain? Which is the better, to have a market of 5,000,000 or a market of 60,000,000? Would we not be the gainers thereby? Yet hon. gentlemen opposite tell us to-day that our duty is to prevent our obtaining access to this great market by every possible means, because Canada's interests do not lie in that way. Why? Is it because it would not benefit our agricultural interests? Some hon. gentlemen opposite have ventured on that line of argument, but I venture to say that the hon. the Finance Minister will not. And I venture to say that hon. gentlemen opposite who have given utterance to this opinion will be glad to recede from that position. The great lumbering interests of this country must assuredly benefit by it. So must the mining industry, the fishing industry, and the shipping industry. There remains but one industry, so-called, the manufacturing industry, and what do hon. gentlemen opposite tell us with respect to that? They must all admit that free commerce between the two countries must be of great benefit, I will not say incalculable benefit, to the agricultural, the mining, the fishing, and the shipping industries of the country, to, in fact, nine-tenths of the people of Canada; and yet peradventure, because it might jeopardise the business standing and wealth of the remaining tenth who are engaged in the manufacturing industries, they oppose this policy. Is that the principle that prevails on the Treasury benches? Or do they hold to the old constitutional maxim of "the greatest good to the greatest number?" Hon. gentlemen who speak about fixed principles ought to take that as a fixed principle, and then let them tell me where the justice is in denying the right and the liberty to trade and increased prosperity to nine people in the country simply because of the danger, and I believe in many instances only a supposed danger, to the establishment of the other the tenth individual. They say that this policy will crush out our manufacturing industries. Why, the hon. the Finance Minister, in one part of his speech, declared—and I was glad to hear him declare it—that Canadians were the equals of any people on the face of the earth in a fair field and no favor. That was a sentiment I was glad to hear him utter, but I did not like to hear him say afterwards, with a singular want of logic in one who possesses a logical mind, that Canadians, who are the equals of any men on the face of the earth, could not hold their own with the people of the United States in manufacturing, in a perfectly fair field and with no favor, such as would be afforded were unrestricted free trade to exist between the United States and this country. As I have said on a previous occasion, that policy does not mean the Canadian bars down to the Canadian manufacturers, and the American bars up to the Canadian manufacturers, but it means all bars down and a fair field and no favor to both. Now, then, can the hon. the Minister of Finance go back on the statement he made, with apparent sincerity, that the Canadians would be able to hold their own under these circumstances? If the manufactures of this country would be destroyed under unrestricted free trade with the United States, how would their destruction be brought about? I would like the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), who is a manufacturer himself, to tell me. I think he must admit, as a manufacturer, that the only way they could be destroyed would be by the manufacturers on the other side of the line being able to sell their products at lower prices than can those of this country. That is the only way in which I can see our manufacturing industries would be killed by this policy. And if the American manufacturers, under unrestricted free trade, could sell their goods cheaper than could the Canadian manufacturers, it seems to me the Canadian consumer must be now paying more for his goods than he would be under unrestricted reciprocity, notwithstanding all the assertions to the contrary of hon. gentlemen opposite. Do they not see that they must take either one horn of the dilemma or the other? We can in a perfect free and open market hold our own; or if we cannot, it can only be because we are forced to charge higher prices than would the American manufacturers. I believe the Canadian manufacturer, under perfectly fair conditions, would be not only able to hold his share of his own Canadian market, but to secure his share of the trade of the United States as well. If this offer, which we made in the resolution that was voted down, had been instead endorsed by this House, and were accepted by the United States, it would produce some changes, and in these changes no doubt some men would suffer. That is an incident of everyday life. These changes and reverses are taking place continually, but I believe its great effect as a whole upon the country would be to give a stimulus to all our industries. I believe that it would promote immigration to our shores, develop and extend our North-West, and remove the feeling of irritation that exists in the Maritime Provinces by opening to them their natural markets. I believe that it would give to the people of Ontario their natural market, I believe it would weld our country together and solidify us as a Canadian nationality; I believe it would make us free commercially, and bind us together politically as a strong Canadian nationality, built up on the North American continent, a nationality that would do credit to the people from which we have sprung. I have been led into making these remarks in reference to this question, because I was disappointed in hearing the Finance Minister declare so emphatically against this policy, which, if I understood his offer to the United States aright, he proposed to them in good faith, not many months before. I do not desire to continue the debate any longer, I have made these remarks, as they occurred to me, in the endeavor to give expression to what I consider to be the principles of the Liberal party, and the hon. member for North Perth may now avail himself of the privilege of pointing out to us any new industries which have been brought into existence in this Canada of ours under the influence of the National Policy.

Mr. HESSON. I understood this debate was to be closed as soon as the hon. gentleman had completed his remarks, but as he has thrown out to me a challenge, I think it is but fair now that I should take that challenge up, by pointing out what has occurred in my own constituency with reference to establishment of new industries which did not exist there before the adoption of the National Policy. The hon. gentleman may refer, if he does not choose to accept my statement, to the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow) who knows whereof I am about to speak. I refer especially to an industry which has been brought into Canada from the State of Michigan, where its headquarters existed, and which gave employment to some 500 men. Owing to the policy adopted by the Government, the proprietors of this industry found they could not go into Canada with their manufactured goods and sell to our Canadian millers, and, consequently, as they possessed a specialty of their own, which had a large sale, here, they came over to our side. They came to our city, and seeing that the premises there were lying idle which formerly belonged to the Thompson William's firm, but had been silent for a number of years, they made a proposition to open works there. The town gave them a small bonus of $8,000, and the result was that those gentlemen established a business there which has given employment to 120 or 140 skilled mechanics, and they are paying every year from $50,000 to $60,000 in wages. This is what is called the Smith-Mills Purifying Company, and they manufacture a special article for mills. They brought many excellent hands with them from Michigan, including Mr. Hayward, the manager, with whom I engaged in conversation a short time ago. Speaking of the effects of commercial union, I asked him what the effect would be on that business. He said: "Mr. Hesson, I do not hesitate to say that the business would be closed up in four months if such legislation should take place in Canada. If we could get our goods into Canada we could manufacture them more cheaply in Michigan, in Jackson, than we can here, but, in order to keep the Canadian market, we find it better to manufacture here. If unrestricted reciprocity or commercial union were carried out, we would close our works in four months." My hon. friend from South Perth (Mr. Trow) knows very well what that means as far as my own city is concerned. I leave other gentlemen to speak in regard to their own observations, but, as the hon. gentleman threw out a challenge that no industry had been established in Canada under the National Policy, and asked hon. gentlemen to say where any existed, I think it is only right that I should make this statement. That industry would not have come to Canada but for the protective policy of this Government. In future, I think my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson) will not throw out that challenge when he knows now, if he did not before, that there are industries—and that is one of them,—that have been established in this country under the National Policy. I will not occupy the time of the House further, as I understand that there has been an arrangement to close this debate to-night.

Mr. TROW. I beg to correct the statement of the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson). I had no desire to rise on this occasion, but my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson) stated that no new industry had been started under the National Policy, and my hon. friend from North Perth (Mr. Hesson) took up the challenge, and said that a large industry had been started in the city of Stratford. I may state that that industry was started in the city of Toronto long prior to the time when it was brought to Stratford. It was started in Toronto under the name of Holland & Co. I had something to do, as my hon. friend from North Perth (Mr. Hesson) knows, with bringing it to Stratford. I had the honor and pleasure of taking down $8,000 to Toronto to bring the plant which was under way to that city long before it was brought into Stratford.

Mr. HESSON. It is quite correct, as my hon. friend has stated, that this industry was brought to Toronto. I believe the company had existed there for two years, but as they found they could do better with us than they could in Toronto, they removed to Stratford. My hon. friend is quite correct in stating that he took the $8,000 to Toronto, and, as he is aware, I was one of the guarantors of the fund until it was adopted by the corporation; but I may say that they would not have been in Stratford or in Canada if the National Policy was not in force.

Mr. MULOCK. I think the company in question commenced operations in Toronto, not by reason of the tariff laws at all, but by reason of the Patent Act. The company had a patent, and every hon. member knows that that Act requires that the articles which are patented must be manufactured in Canada within a certain time, I think within two years after the patent is issued. They desired to preserve their monopoly under the patent laws, and, therefore, they opened their factory in Canada instead of in the United States.

Mr. HESSON.

Mr. COOK. I have heard for the first time from the member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) that there was an arrangement made by which this debate was to be brought to a close. I am not aware of such an arrangement. I think every member has a right to speak at any time he thinks proper, and I do not think the member for North Perth, the Finance Minister, the leader of the Government, or any gentleman in this House, or any number of gentlemen have a right to make an arrangement to gag any hon. gentleman in this House. For my part, when I feel disposed to speak, I will speak, and I will not be dictated to by the leaders on either side of the House. I propose to offer a few remarks on this question, and I am going to do it as briefly as I can, if hon. gentlemen on that side will hold their peace for a time. If they do not, it will take me so much longer.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. COOK. It does not make much difference to me when they cheer, as far as I am concerned. This is probably the proper time when any hon. member may discuss any question of importance in connection with the tariff rates of the country, and the members on both sides of the House, in this and in former debates have discussed the questions relating to their peculiar calling and also questions which they did not know so much about; but I was surprised to learn from a speech of an hon. gentleman who is interested in the lumber trade that the National Policy was a blessing to the lumber trade. I propose to deal with that matter for a time, but I do not propose to confine myself exclusively to the lumber trade. I think I know something about that trade, and I have the authority of a gentleman, who is perhaps the most intelligent of all the lumbermen of this country, and who is a supporter of the present Government but is opposed to the National Policy, that is Mr. Campbell of the Muskoka Lumber Co., who stated to me yesterday in Toronto that the National Policy has caused a loss to the lumbermen this year of not less than $2 a thousand. When you take into consideration the vast amount of lumber which is manufactured in the Dominion of Canada, you will see what an immense loss the lumbermen and the people of Canada have sustained. But I will go more minutely into the matter of the lumber trade. I will not deal with the lumber trade in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, nor the spruce trade in Quebec. I shall not allude to the trade in the North-West or British Columbia, but I shall confine my remarks almost exclusively to the pine trade in Ontario and Quebec. I think I will be able to show pretty clearly how that trade stands. I wish to show to the House the sales that have been made by the Province of Ontario since Confederation up to the present time. Before Confederation the hon. gentleman now leading the Government was in the habit of dealing out to his supporters, piece by piece, without any sale, or money, or reward, such limits as they felt inclined to take. He has adopted the same principle in the North West Territories, giving to all his supporters timber limits in those territories that come within the jurisdiction of this House. In 1871, under the Sandfield Macdonald Administration, we had a sale in the Province of Ontario of 487 square miles, at an average price per mile of $241.62. In 1872, we had a sale on the north shore of Lake Superior, when Mr. Scott was Commissioner of Crown Lands, comprising an area of 5,031 square miles, the average price of which was $117.79. A great deal of that section of country had very poor timber, and a large amount of land having been put upon the market, the average price was low. But, on the whole, it was a very good sale. In 1877, there were 375 square miles sold, at an average of $201.97; in 1881, 1,397 square miles, at an average of $532.03; in 1885, there was a sale of 1,012 square miles, which averaged $314.87. Last year there was a sale of 459 square miles, at an average of $2,559 per mile. Now, hon.

gentlemen will see how rapid of late the price of limits has increased. What is the cause of it? Well, it simply means that American capitalists are coming over here and acquiring our limits, competition is becoming greater, and consequently the price is increased. I claim that what is now going on in reference to timber limits, will occur in all other branches of business in the country. I claim that if our markets are thrown open, and we have the privilege of dealing with the Americans, American capital will come into this country, and what is now occurring in lumber will take place in the mining interests, the agricultural interests, and the manufacturing interests. Now, I will give some figures concerning the timber limits under license in Ontario. I give the figures for 1886; I do not take the figures for 1887, because a great many licenses have not been renewed in consequence of the depression in the lumber trade. The lumbermen are not very flush of money; and, therefore, have not yet renewed their limits. In 1886 we had under license in Ontario, 18,486 square miles, or 11,831,040 acres, estimated at $1,000 a mile, which would give a total value of $18,486,000. We have in the Province of Quebec—I take the figures for 1886 for the reason that we have not the Crown Lands report for 1887, which will not be brought down till the meeting of the Provincial Legislature—we have in Quebec, in 1886, 46,078 square miles of timber limits, or 29,489,920 acres, at an estimated value of $500 per square mile, which gives $23,039,000. The total value of timber limits in Ontario and Quebec is put down at $41,525,000. Now, we all know the timber resources of the Province of British Columbia, and of the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The timber of British Columbia differs from that of the Lower Provinces and of Quebec, because the spruce limits renew themselves every 8 or 16 years, according to the closeness with which they have been cut, and from the fact of the timber growing so thickly, the trees being so close together, the ground is sheltered, and there is a perpetual moisture, so that the fires do not destroy them, as a rule. Therefore the spruce limits in the Provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick will remain in perpetuity. Now, Sir, there was cut, in the Province of Ontario last year, 2,339,016 standard logs, at 200 feet to a standard, making 567,803,200 feet; and at $10 per thousand, we have the total value of the pine cut in the Province of Ontario for 1887, amounting to $5,678,032. In Quebec, according to the report of 1886, they got out 2,187,098 standards white pine logs, making 437,419,600 feet, which, at $10 a thousand, would give a value of $4,374,196. Therefore we have a total cut of pine timber in Ontario and Quebec for 1886 and 1887, of 1,005,222,800 feet, valued at $10,052,228. Now, according to Mr. Campbell's figures, the Canadian lumbermen are losers to the extent of $2 per thousand; but I take it at $1 per thousand, so that upon that vast amount of lumber, we are losing, according to that estimate, $1,005,222 a year. Then there is another great difficulty in that we have to compete with the American lumber in Michigan and Wisconsin. We have to cut our lumber considerably thicker than they do on the other side; as an average we cut it one-sixteenth of an inch thicker than the American lumber, so that upon every 16,000,000 feet of lumber that we manufacture, we lose a million feet, which is a very serious loss. Then there is a difficulty in getting Americans to come in and purchase our lumber, in consequence of their customs duty being so great. The fact is that we have to send our lumber there and pay our transportation and duties, and then when we get it into the American markets at Albany, Troy and other large cities, we have to compete with the Michigan lumber. Now the estimate is that we lose, for the reason stated, upon the whole cut of our lumber from Ontario and Quebec, no less than 62,826,425 feet, which, at $10 a thousand, would amount to $628,264 per year. We have a still greater difficulty to contend with. In consequence of the duties on our lumber we are unable to send inferior classes into the American market, and we are obliged to export the best, and to do so we have to cut the finest trees and leave the poor ones to rot. Taking an average, I suppose probably one-quarter of the timber is left in the woods, but that could be marketed if we had unrestricted trade. We could send our coarse grades there and relieve our market in Canada, which would be a very great advantage, because lumbermen are all aware that the coarser grades are more abundant. We sustain a still further loss, and it is a very important one. If we had unrestricted trade with the United States we would not be compelled to ship our lumber in the rough. There is a duty of 35 per cent. upon manufactured lumber, that is planed lumber or lumber put in shape for building purposes. That is a very serious matter. If the duty were removed we would manufacture lumber in Canada for the American market; we would be able to send lumber tongued and grooved and in proper condition for house building and other purposes, and this country would have the further advantage of having mills erected for that purpose and labor employed here to a very large extent. At the present time several of our lumber kings, such as Mr. McLaren and Mr. Bronson of Ottawa, and others, have large planing mills at Burlington, Vermont. They send lumber there and it is manufactured and sent all through the United States. If we had unrestricted trade with the United States all that work could be done in this country by our own people. I have prepared an estimate of the number of men we would employ under such a state of things. I place the loss on freight alone at over $400,000. The loss on these three items is therefore $2,033,486 a year, or taking the nine years during which hon. gentlemen opposite have had the National Policy in force, that policy which was going to be a blessing to the lumberman, the manufacturer, the agriculturist, the miner and the laborer, the loss has been $18,301,374. I have made another estimate and I find that we employ about 24,000 men in the woods getting out logs and timber. The last census shows that there are employed in saw mills, shingle mills, door and sash factories, 47,352 men, and that the capital invested in those industries amounted to $27,932,238—with a total output of $14,091,112. These figures give a total population of 353,760, taking five to a family. I remember that only last Session when the Minister of Finance was proposing to increase the duty on iron, he declared that in a very short time we would obtain an increased population of 100,000 people on that account. I claim that by manufacturing lumber in Canada and being able to ship it free to the United States we would employ directly half a million people. What do we find in regard to all the manufacturing establishments of the country which hon. gentlemen opposite claim they have protected? In all the manufactures of this country there are only 206,583 persons employed, and I am sure not more than one-half of those manufactures are protected by the National Policy. I claim, therefore, that the lumbermen as a whole do not receive that fair consideration from the Government which they deserve. I will not speak of the vast amount of money employed in plant required for the manufacture of lumber to place it in a state for shipment, or speak further of the question of the increased value of the timber limits in this country; but we know that the Americans gave the increased value to our timber limits and that many of the citizens of Ottawa and those largely employed in the lumber trade were at one time foreigners, and they have been the means of developing the lumber resources of the Ottawa Valley. At the last sale of timber limits Americans who have not heretofore been interested in Canadian limits, were instrumental in increasing the price of those limits to such an extent that the limits are now considered to be one of the main sources of revenue to the Province of Ontario. I will not detain the House by giving details of the lumber shipped to the United States last year, but I may just say that we shipped 508,304,000 feet, of the value of $5,209,023. I refer to shipments to the United States and not to any other foreign country. There can be no doubt that the American market is the proper market for the lumber of this country. We have exported timber to Great Britain and in small quantities to other countries, but Great Britain will not take our better grades, for they find they can obtain timber to suit their purposes cheaper from the Baltic. We find, moreover, that the Americans are more inclined to pay high prices for lumber than are the people of Great Britain, and, therefore, we must look to the United States for our market, and the sooner we make arrangements with that country to admit our lumber on good terms so much the better will it be for Canada. The United States will also be the gainers thereby, because at present they have to pay very high prices for coarse grades of lumber. If we were at liberty to ship the coarser grades of lumber the Americans would be benefited by that to a greater extent, and then our lumber coming into competition with theirs, the prices would be somewhat reduced. I happened to be in the House at the time we were discussing the probabilities of this tariff system—this blessed National Policy that hon. gentlemen opposite then proposed to inaugurate. After they came into power in 1878 I did not happen to be in Parliament when that system was inaugurated, for like many other hon. gentlemen I was swept out by the bugaboo cry of the National Policy. But just as soon as the electorate discovered that it was a sham and a snare they reelected me, and I have been here ever since. I expect to remain here, notwithstanding the efforts of hon. gentlemen opposite to defeat me, not alone in the election contest, but in the law courts. I had the pleasure the other night of telling the Finance Minister that now that the election had been decided and that there was no chance of another election, that he might appoint a collector of customs at Penetanguishene, a place he had kept open as a sop for his friends in the event of another election. I understood that the hon. gentleman stated something across the floor of the House to the effect that he had made the appointment, but I did not catch his words. I hope he has made the appointment, and I hope he has made a good one. We have heard a great deal about the balance of trade. We were told that unless the National Policy were adopted we would become poorer, and that the balance of trade was against us. But what is the result? In the time of Mr. Mackenzie the balance of trade against us amounted to $11,576,910, and according to this year's reports the balance against us is $24,678,519, a difference of $13,801,609. I would like to ask the Finance Minister what has become of his promises which he made when his party were in Opposition, and when he was the financial critic on this side of the House? But it was said the poor miners at that time were in dire distress. Have they been benefited a great deal by this National Policy? The condition of the farmers at that time was one of the great cries. Sir John—if I may be permitted to use his name—who was leader of the Opposition, then said he would not touch the National Policy unless the farmers were to be protected. And one of his friends (I think it was Dr. Orton) moved a resolution that the farmers should share in the blessings of the National Policy. How have the farmers shared in that policy? We find that in agricultural products there is a falling off of $8,454,854. Hon. gentlemen opposite say: Oh, we consume it. Who consumes it? How many people more have you got to consume it now than you had then? You have only got 400,000 more people. The fact is the farmers have become disgusted with the whole matter and they are not raising the amount of cereals they raised at that time. The farmers have been disappointed and disgusted because they expected something great from the National Policy and they did not got it. Although I was defeated by the cry of the National Policy, I must do the farmers of my constituency the credit to say that in the county of Simcoe they were not hoodwinked by the National Policy cry, because in every polling booth where the farmers voted they increased my majority instead of decreasing it. It was only in the towns that my majority was decreased, and that was on account of the promises that the villages were to be built into towns and the towns into cities. They were to have more smokestacks in the towns, and the towns were to be crowded with artisans. I remember the hon. the leader of the Government when he was in Barrie, the chief town of the county, stated what he was going to do for that town, and that he was going to make it a city. It is a town still, and has not progressed nearly as rapidly as some other places in the county. He appears by his presence to have put a blight on the place, because immediately after the inauguration of the National Policy the increase was much slower than it had been for years before, and, Sir, it will be many years yet—unless they get such legislation in the Province of Ontario—before that town will attain the position of a city. It is said that during the last nine years the National Policy has been in force that a good deal has been done for the manufacturers in the country. We know that every other industry in the country, the farming, the lumbering and the mining have been bled to support the manufacturers, and yet we find that the manufacturers have only increased their export this year over that of 1878 by $1,635,804. The fisheries was another industry they were going to foster. How do they foster that? By a reduction of the export this year as compared with 1878 of $53,556. The hon. gentleman stated before he got into power that the Province of Ontario, under the Liberal rule, would become a pasture field and that we would grow nothing but cattle. It appears, however, that those gentlemen, by the National Policy, have made this country a pasture field to a large extent. Let us take the total exports of 1887, and we find that we have exported only $1,637,242 worth more this year than we did in 1878. I would like to know what the National Policy has done for all our industries? The National Policy was the means of putting the hon. gentlemen opposite in power, and the means of defeating Mackenzie's Government, but, Sir, the National Policy is not the means that has kept those gentlemen in power for the last two terms. It is something else that has been done in the name of the National Policy, because the people are sick, and tired, of that policy. They are kept in power by such means as the Minister of Finance stated when he said: It is well to have a Mr. Wiman in your ranks, a gentleman of means. They had some wealthy manufacturers and we all know of the leader of the Government going to Toronto and calling those gentlemen together and asking them to put up the money to keep him in power. We know where the means came from. When they resurrected the Neebing Hotel, the steel rails, and the Fort Frances locks, as the hon. member for Colchester (Mr. McLelan) did to-day, I would refer them back to the Pacific scandal; and if the truth could only be known, we have had greater Pacific scandals than that of 1873, and many of those hon. gentlemen on that side of the House owe their seats to Pacific railway scandals. They were going to stop the exodus. They said the people were going out of the country too rapidly; the country was being depopulated; it would never do. But what classes have gone since? The flower of the country. Not the old men and the children, but the young men, twenty or twenty-five years old, who have just received their education, they are the men who go to swell the numbers in Uncle Sam's dominions. After we have been at the expense of educating them, and before they have become of any service, benefit or advantage to the country, they leave us and go to another country; and no wonder we are not growing the cereals that we did before. No wonder that our mines are not being worked; no wonder that the lumber trade is not in as flourishing a condition as it was in 1873, although one of the greatest depressions that was ever known swept over this country at that time, and not only over this country but over the United States and all other countries in the world, except little Switzerland, which was the greatest free trade country in the world. But those gentlemen on that side of the House did not hesitate to cry mad dog all along the line, or in declaring that we were not true to our country. They were the disloyal men at that time; they were the men who were crying stinking fish, and saying that the resources of the country were becoming exhausted by the system adopted, a system that had been in vogue for years under the management of the present leader of the Government. Sir, when he got to this side of the House, it was anything to return to the Treasury benches. He did not care how his friends decried the country, or what injury they did to the country, but when we on this side of the House state the plain facts of the case, we are disloyal. Well, Sir, I will have something to say about that loyalty question after a while. The hon. gentleman's chickens are coming home to roost. More than one hon. gentleman on this side of the House has spoken of the somersaults that have been taken by gentlemen on that side of the House during the last fortnight; most of them have been standing on their heads, if they have any heads. But if I were sitting behind a leader or a Government that would ask me to do as the hon. gentleman who leads them asked them to do within the last two or three weeks, I would soon say what I thought of them. The hon. Minister of Finance tells us in one breath that he made an offer of unrestricted reciprocity to the United States, and in the next breath I did not do it, or, at any rate, if I did I did not mean it. Fine diplomatists they are to represent this country! Great High Commissioner! Wonderful man to deal with a nation like the United States! He says to them, we will offer you so and so, and then he comes home and tells us on the floor of Parliament, and the people of the United States too: We did not mean it; we only did it to draw them out; we only did it for a lark; we wanted to see how far they would go. Then he states that he did not meet a man in that country who was in favor of unrestricted reciprocity; he was in every class of society, from the highest to the lowest, and every man was against it. But he forgot to tell us what measures were being discussed in Congress at the present time. He forgot to tell us about the Mills' Bill that is going to reduce the taxes of the United States by a vast amount. He forgot to tell us that President Cleveland, in his inaugural address, stated that he proposed making a reduction in the tariff. He forgot all these things, or probably he thought the people of this country do not read. Well, the hon. gentleman spoke of Mr. Wiman as the leader of the Liberal party to day, and the disciple of commercial union, and said we were going to be stranded on the rock of unrestricted reciprocity. Well, Sir, I am willing to be stranded on that rock; I would rather be stranded on it than on the rock of the National Policy, which has been a pretty hard one, not only on the branch of business with which I am connected, but on almost every other industry in the country. But the Finance Minister was a big man while he was there. He could consult with Mr. Wiman on that occasion. Mr. Wiman was not above his notice before he went there; and does he think that we have forgotten that Mr. Bayard recommended the hon. gentleman to the position of plenipotentiary? Does he forget that Mr. Wiman told Mr. Bayard that he thought Sir Charles Tupper would be a good man for that position? Was it Mr. Wiman who recommended him to Mr. Bayard? Was it Mr. Bayard who recommended him to the Home Government? And was he the spontaneous choice of the Home Government? We have some light thrown on the diplomatic arrangements that have been going on between the two countries; but, Sir, it is an exhibition that I hope I will never again witness the like of. Something has been said by hon. gentlemen on the other side, in reference to the question, how are we going to manage affairs so as to meet our expenses, suppose we obtain unrestricted reciprocity with the United States? How are we going to raise the revenue? Well, the hon. member for South Oxford has stated pretty plainly how it is to be done. We know from the past history of the country that these gentlemen opposite, through their extravagance, have increased our expenses during these last years from $23,000,000 to $35,000,000, and increased our national debt to a very large amount, about $100,000,000, or thereabouts. Then they raise the cry of direct taxation, should the policy we advocate be adopted. That is their great bugaboo. All over the country their supporters are crying themselves hoarse declaring that the Grits propose to have direct taxation. I am not in favor of direct taxation. I do not believe it would be practicable in Dominion politics and I have come to the conclusion that perhaps it would not do to have it. But we have, as it is, a large direct taxation in this country, and the people do not find fault with it. We have a direct taxation in Ontario for municipal purposes, which, in 1873, amounted to $5,605,779, or $15.54 per head; in 1879 it amounted to $7,157,366, or $16.27 per head; and in 1885 to $8,333,370, or $17.20 per head of the rate-payers. But the people have the opportunity of turning out the men who transact their business in the municipal councils, and if those gentlemen do not manage their affairs properly, the people soon get rid of them. Such would be the case here if we had direct taxation, and the hon. gentlemen opposite would not long remain on the Treasury benches. If every man who went into a store paid the price of the goods without taxation, and then was met by the custom house officer on going out and forced to pay the duty in cash separate from the price of the goods, he would soon find out what he has to pay under the present extravagant administration of the Government. But as it is, the people now pay taxes without knowing what they pay. On every $100 of revenue that is collected the people have to pay $54. Now hon. gentlemen opposite say a good deal about the deposits in the post office savings banks, and point to them as a source of wealth to the country. Well, the people put their money there because the Government give 4 per cent, and because there is no risk of loss. People who are afraid to invest their money in business put their money in the post office savings banks because they believe they are the safest institutions. You remember, Sir (Mr. White, Renfrew) because you were in the House at that time and took a lively interest in the debate, how you and your friends spoke of the faults of the system then in existence, and glorified the system that was to be put in operation when you succeeded in attaining office. I regret, Sir, that you did not succeed in reaching the Treasury benches, because I think you would be much more capable than some hon. gentlemen who got there. But now, when there are vacancies occurring in the Cabinet, it would give unbounded satisfaction to us on this side, so long as a Tory Government must be in power, to see you occupy one of the Treasury benches. I do not say this to boom you because you do not require it, and your leader must know you by this time, as you have been a long time in Parliament and have materially assisted your party throughout the country in their elections. To judge from the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite, you would think it was all sunshine throughout the country, and that there was not such a thing known as destitution at all. These hon. gentlemen ought to visit some of the quarters in our cities, and they would soon discover that the contrary is the case. Only a short time ago, sermons were preached in every pulpit throughout the length and breadth of the country, on depression and on the dire distress of the people. Only the other day, the Rev. Mr. McDonnell, of St. Andrew's Church, in Toronto, preached a sermon on that question, in which he stated that if he were to attend to all the cases of poverty brought under his notice, his usefulness as a minister would be gone, because he would have to give the whole of his attention to looking after the poor of Toronto. Hon. gentlemen opposite talked about soup kitchens. There are worse than soup kitchens now. The people, whenever they get the opportunity, are going to visit the sins of this Government upon the Administration, and I hope that opportunity will not be long in coming. Hon. gentlemen opposite pretend that on this question of unrestricted reciprocity the people are heartily with them. But let them only dissolve Parliament and go to the country and they will soon find out that the reverse is the case. Hon. gentlemen opposite take credit for the National Policy. Well, in my constituency, at every meeting held, both in the towns and in country places, my opponents on the platform, whoever they might be, took this National Policy as their stock in trade, and yet every time they attempted to talk on that question they were hooted. Now, if hon. gentlemen opposite are in office, it is due largely to the Gerrymander Act. Why, if the representation of Ontario in this House were based on a fair numerical adjustment of the population, instead of the Government having a majority of sixteen from that Province, they would have a majority of only one. I would like to ask, therefore, if that Gerrymander Act was an honest fair Act. I think the hon. gentlemen should follow the principles laid down in England, whereby the counties are not laid out by the Government of the day, but by the judiciary. I wish he would do that, and further, that he would change the constitution so that the Provinces would raise their own revenue, so that we would not have the Province of Quebec, or the Province of Manitoba, or the Province of Prince Edward Island, or the Province of Ontario coming to the Government on their knees, rapping at the doors of Parliament, and asking for increased subsidies. The Provinces are masters of the situation. The Provinces existed long before the Dominion was known, and to-day the Provinces ought not to be hampered in that way. They should be as free as the water which flows in the Niagara River. It would make the Provinces more economical to do this, because, if they had to depend upon their own resources, they would be very careful with their funds; but now they say, we will expend our money, we will make our people happy and contented, and then we will go to the Dominion Government, and we will give Sir John a wink as to what we are going to do in the next election, and we will get what we want. As far as the National Policy is concerned, I think these gentlemen have come to the end of their tether. I was surprised to hear the Finance Minister declare that he was to have a surplus of $97,000, when in reality he has a deficit of $350,000. How did he do that? By changing his accounts, by a sort of hocus pocus. If I had a book-keeper, or if any man in business in this country had a book-keeper who would so fix his accounts, he would dismiss him at once. The fact is that the hon. gentleman forces a trial balance, and he should be amenable to the law, and he would be amenable to the law if he were in the employment of any private firm. He is in a humiliating position to-day, by making these changes in his books, I suppose by giving instructions to his clerks to make the changes which have been made. How much more manly, and upright, and just it would have been if the hon. gentleman had come forward and said honestly: We have a deficit of $350,000; how much more would we have thought of him; but, when he changed that deficit into a surplus of $97,000, what will the hon. gentleman's friends think of him when they learn the fact? But, perhaps, he does not care about it. Perhaps he is going to leave us, he is going to London, where he can live comfortably and can hobnob with the nobility of the land, where he can sit in the midst of his wine tumbler and that sort of thing, and no doubt he will be more comfortable there than Croesus was when he was surrounded with the greatest amount of gold that any man ever had. I give the hon. gentleman this credit: that he is very obliging, very respectable, and I will not say very intelligent, because everyone knows that he is intelligent and obliging and respectable, but I think in his capacity in London he deals fairly and honestly and liberally with every class of the community that comes from Canada, and I give him credit for that. There is one question I have rather overlooked, that is, the mineral resources of the country. My hon. friend the Finance Minister, last year, attempted to do something for the mineral resources by increasing the taxes, but that is not the way to increase a national industry. I say the taxes should be removed altogether, that it should be as free as the air and the water that flows, and that, under those circumstances alone, will we be able to succeed in this country, particularly with the small population which we have. If we were a great country, like the United States, with 60,000,000 of people, we would be in a different position. If we had that barrier taken down, the manufacturers of this country would succeed better than they do now. The market has been glutted to a large extent. We have not the consuming population those hon. gentlemen promised us, and, except in regard to taxation, they have signally failed in the promises they made as to the results of the National Policy. What have we done in the way of minerals? It is well known that this country is possessed of great mineral resources, gold, copper, iron, silver, lead and other minerals. Last year, we only exported of all our minerals $3,805,959 worth, and in the last six years we only exported of silver, iron and copper, $318,660 worth from the whole Dominion. Now, what do we find on the other side? We find that in Michigan alone they produced in the last census year 45,830,000 lbs. of ingot copper, valued at $7,979,000, while in the same year the iron mines of that State produced 1,838,712 tons of ore, valued at $6,034,000. The copper companies of the State paid, in four years, from 1882 to 1885, dividends aggregating $10,352,000. We have as good copper mines in this country if they were developed, as they have, but we will never develop this country until we can induce people to come into it to help us to do it. If we would take down the barriers on both sides, American capital would flow in here. Perhaps some manufacturers would succumb, and some of them should, because if they could not live with a market of 65,000,000 or 70,000,000 of people, while they can exist on a population of 5,000,000, they should go to the wall. We have no right to pamper them. There is no reason why the people of this country should be taxed to keep them up. Then, salt was another of the great industries that the Government were going to protect. They did protect it and what was the result? The first return we had from the Geological report was in 1880, and that shows that the manufacturer of salt was 472,000 barrels, while in 1887 it was only 106,643 bushels, valued at $9,463. In Michigan, in 1860, when they were just developing their salt industries in the Saginaw Valley, they produced 4,000 barrels; in 1870, they produced 621,352 barrels; in 1880, they produced 2,685,588 barrels, and in 1886, they produced 3,677,257 barrels. So they steadily increased during those years, and we did not increase, but, on the contrary, we decreased largely, though our salt is, I am told, as good as any which is produced in the Saginaw Valley. But the difference is this, the salt manufacturers of Michigan have 60,000,000 of people to sell to, and our salt manufacturers in Canada have only a few people to sell to, and, therefore, they could not succeed. Now, I want to make a few comparisons in order to show this House that although we have the finest country on the face of the earth—I believe there is no better in America, at all events, for growing cereals—our farmers are not progressing. Why, Sir, the farms of this country are not nearly so valuable as they are on the other side. Farm property in the State of Michigan, or Indiana, or New York, is almost double the value of land in Ontario, and the best part of Ontario, too. Now, I will give you a comparison between the city of Rochester and the city of Toronto—the emporium of Ontario, one of the finest cities, probably, in Canada, not to make any invidious comparisons. We all know that Rochester is a slow-going place compared with other cities of the United States. Therefore I am prepared to make a comparison between Rochester and one of the most prosperous cities of Canada. Land for business purposes, in the heart of the city of Toronto, is worth $1,500 a foot, in the city of Rochester, in the business part of the city, is worth over $3,000 a foot. So much for the value of land. If we had unrestricted reciprocity, our city property and farming lands would be worth as much as they are on the other side of the line. Now, Sir, I will give you a comparison in wheat. In the State of New York they grow 14·8 bushels per acre; Pennsylvania, 12·6; Ohio, 13·3; Michigan, 16·4; Indiana, 13; Illinois, 12·9; Missouri, 10·9; California, 12; Kansas, 15·2; in Ontario we grow 21 bushels per acre, four or five bushels more than the best wheat-growing States in the Union. Now, how does this compare with the statement made by the Minister of Finance with reference to wheat growing in the North-west—60 bushels per acre? Sir, the farmers sitting on this side of the House—and I know something about growing wheat myself; I have done a little in that line—all shook their heads and laughed. Every farmer, I don't care who he may be, who has ever grown a bushel of wheat in this country, well knows the exaggerated statement made by the Minister of Finance. He made a similar statement a few years ago about the enormous yield in the North-West, and he reiterated it the other night, that they grow 60 bushels to the acre. Why, Sir, the farmers would laugh at him. He cannot go and hold a meeting among the farmers of this country, anywhere, and make such a statement as that. If he does, they will say that if his other statements are as correct as that, they would know just how much confidence to place in him. Then there is the question of spring wheat. In Nebraska they grow 12·7 bushels per acre; in Minnesota, 13·2; Wisconsin, 12·7; Dakota, 13·1; Iowa, 11·4; in Ontario we grow 16·1 bushels per acre, over three bushels per acre more than they do in the best States of the Union. Then we come to oats, and that brings me back to the campaign of 1878, when the leader of the Government went holding forth with his Neebing Hotel under one arm, and his steel rails under the other, and I don't know but that he had a model of the St. Frances locks. But he depicted them to the people. These were the three great cries he had against the Government. $10,000 in the Neebing Hotel. And the Minister of Finance and the Postmaster General had the hardihood to repeat those statements to-day. The Postmaster General might have let them die, but he felt inclined not to do so. But at present I am speaking of oats. The hon. gentleman spoke of myself as a lumber king, and he said the lumber king buys all his oats in Chicago, all American oats. I wrote the hon. gentleman a letter contradicting the statement. I do not know whether he received the letter, but he reiterated the statement, and I then had a statement put in the papers. I think he is a pretty close observer of the papers, although he may have overlooked that small item. I had a statement inserted in one of the papers that the statement he had made was entirely unfounded; but he still kept repeating it. Up to the present time, I have never bought an oat from the State of Michigan, or any other State.

If I can buy them cheaper there, I will go there to buy them. Hon. gentlemen do it themselves. They go to the other side to buy everything that they require, and they can get the same here just as well. They are such sticklers for their country, and their National Policy, and the manufacturers of this country. Why, Sir, we know that hon. gentlemen even go to London to buy their clothes. They have the measures taken, even for their clothes, in a shop on Bond street, in the city of London, and the clothes are sent out here. Whether they pay the duties or not I do not know, but the poor tailors of this country have discovered that a great many men, who are loud-mouthed in their cry for protecting that class of industry, do not get their clothes made here after all. Well, Sir, in the State of New York they grow 29·6 bushels of oats per acre; in Michigan, 32·9; Wisconsin, 31·1; Missouri, 26·2; Pennsylvania, 28·1; Indiana, 28·8; Minnesota, 34·6; Kansas, 31·9; Ohio, 32; Illinois, 34·5; Iowa, 34; Nebraska, 32. In Ontario, we grow 37·1 bushels per acre, so that we grow, of all these cereals, more bushels per acre than do the most favored States of the United States. Now, after looking at these figures, I want to know how it is that the farmers of this country have not raised more grain than they did in 1878? Why should there be such a falling off? Then there is the great question of barley. Barley is one of the most profitable crops our farmers raise. We exported last year over 8,000,000 bushels to the Americans. They will always take our barley, they are always glad to get it. Suppose, now, the duty of 10 cents per bushel was taken off barley going to the United States, what an advantage it would be to the farming community of this country! Now, we have an opportunity of making terms with the Americans for unrestricted reciprocity. I think it is within our reach, if our Government would only take the matter in hand. I do not wish to make it a question of turning the Government out of power. I am honest in my conviction that the Government should take hold of the matter and give us unrestricted reciprocity. They have discovered that the National Policy has been a failure, and knowing that they should grapple with this great question. By doing so they might keep themselves in power ten years longer, and I would be pleased to sit in Opposition for ten years if they would give us that great boon rather than cross the floor and sit under the National Policy. But if hon. gentlemen opposite do not give the people that for which they ask, and meetings have been held in different parts of the country and resolutions unanimously passed in favor of unrestricted reciprocity with the United States, then they will discover when it is too late that they have made a mistake in not taking the advice given them from this side of the House. I know it to be a fact that many of our large and wealthy manufacturers are only waiting for the bars to be taken down to enter the United States market and compete with the Americans on their own ground. They can do it. Give them the opportunity; do not decry the ability of the Canadian manufacturer and workman. History has shown that the freer trade is the larger are the wages received by the workingman. Compare the wages in England and in Germany and you will at once see the difference. Those are the two European nations having different trade policies, Germany being highly protective and Great Britain free trade. Here is a comparison of wages:

	Gt. Britain.	Germany.
Bricklayers	$7.56	$4.21
Masons	7.68	4.07
Plasterers	7.80	4.43
Carpenters	7.68	4.11
Blacksmiths	7.37	4.00
Cabinet-makers	7.68	4.25
Cigar-makers	6.07	3.68
Coopers	7.50	3.97
Laborers	4.70	3.11
Saddlers	6.83	3.96
Tinsmiths	6.56	3.56

In conversing, some time before the question of reciprocity arose, with a prominent Conservative in Toronto, he said to me: The moment you propose that resolution Sir John will haul up the loyal flag and the people will flock to him. The Premier has hauled up the loyal flag, as he has done on many occasions before; but he has got to be a pretty old man now and there are a great many young men coming up who cannot be hoodwinked, the young portion of the country cannot be carried by the loyalty cry and will not be hoodwinked by it. I hope hon. gentlemen opposite will raise this question at the general election, because I am satisfied that if that cry is raised we will be the victors. You know the story about the quaker and the mad dog.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. COOK. The quaker said: I will not raise my hand against it, but I will give it a bad name, and forever afterwards it will be called the mad dog. The hon. gentleman is going to raise the loyalty cry, and like the quaker is going to raise the cry of mad dog, hoping that that will bring the people around him; but he is very much mistaken. Let me say a few words about loyalty. Who have been the loyal party? I am descended from the United Empire Loyalists, and I do not yield my loyalty to the leader of the Government or any one else. Hon. gentlemen opposite are loyal so long as it keeps them in place and power and they get the benefit of it. So soon as they see they could, by turning round and hob-nobbing with the United States, gain any advantage, politically, they would do it quicker than any men living, for it is a question of keeping themselves in power. I believe the leader of the Government is desirous of promoting the well-being of the country, but if it stands between him and political success, then the interests of the country will have to give way to political success. Who signed the annexation manifesto? Hon. gentlemen opposite know very well. The leader of the Government knows that he sat in council with some of those men! Who burned the Parliament buildings at Montreal? Why, the Tories! Who rotten-egged the Governor General, Lord Elgin, at Montreal? Why, the Tories! That very mace now lying on the Table before you, Mr. Speaker, has a history. The beaver was stolen from it at the time of the fire in Montreal. Who did it? The men who burned the Parliament buildings and rotten-egged the Governor General—they stole the beaver off the mace! Who was it that hoisted the black flag in Brockville? It was the Tories! Wherever there is anything disloyal you will find a Tory mixed up with it, and when there is anything to be carried out that is not loyal it is carried out by the party who are always claiming they are the loyal party in the country.

House divided on amendment of Sir Richard Cartwright:

That the net debt of the Dominion of Canada was $140,363,069 on the 30th June, 1878;

That the net debt of the said Dominion was $228,235,786 on the 31st March, 1888;

That the total annual expenditure of the Dominion was $13,508,158 for the year ending 30th June, 1878, and $35,658,161 for the year ending 30th June, 1887;

That the estimated expenditure for the year ending the 30th June, 1889, is $35,321,440, wholly apart from divers known unprovided expenditures which will raise the total amount likely to be expended to at least $37,000,000, being an increase of the net debt to the amount of $88,000,000, and of the total annual expenditure of $13,500,000, in the space of 11 years;

That the said debt and expenditure have increased in a ratio very far in excess of the increase of the wealth and population of the country during the said interval;

That the said expenditure is provided for by a system of taxation so adjusted as to press with extreme and unjust severity upon the thrifty and industrious producer, and especially upon all farmers, day laborers, mechanics, artisans, and factory operatives, who are at present subject to a customs taxation on articles necessary to life and comfort, amounting to nearly one thousand per cent. more than that levied upon members of the corresponding classes in Great Britain and Ireland.

That the mischief caused by the present system are further aggravated by the very general substitution of specific for ad valorem duties, whereby the injustice of the existing mode of taxation and the unfair preference shown to rich consumers over the less wealthy is at once and the same time increased and concealed, and that it is expedient that the said injustice should be remedied and that the wealthy classes should be compelled to bear their fair proportionate share of the burden of taxation;

That this House views with alarm the extremely rapid increase of the debt and taxation of the Dominion, especially in view of the fact that there has been contemporaneously a very great reduction in the debt and amount required for necessary taxation by the United States, and that this House is of opinion that any considerable addition to the debt or taxation of the people of Canada will work very great hardship to the great bulk of the population and will tend powerfully to place them in a position of great disadvantage as regards the people of the United States, besides seriously prejudicing their chances of securing improved commercial relations with the people of that country.

Amendment negatived.

House resolved itself into Committee on Ways and Means.

(In the Committee.)

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved :

1. That the Governor in Council may, by proclamation, whenever it appears to his satisfaction to be desirable in the public interest so to do, either reduce or remove entirely or in part, the export duties provided for by section six of the Act respecting the duties of customs, and by schedule E thereto, or by an Act in amendment thereof.

2. That section nine of the said Act be repealed and the following substituted therefor :—

" 9. Any or all of the following things, that is to say :—Animals of all kinds, hay, straw, vegetables (including potatoes and other roots), salt, peas, beans, barley, malt, rye, oats, buckwheat, flour of rye, oatmeal, buckwheat flour, butter, cheese, fish of all kinds, fish oil, products of fish and of all other creatures living in the water, fresh meats, poultry, stone and marble in its crude or unwrought state, lime, gypsum or plaster of Paris (unground, ground, or calcined) hewn or wrought or unwrought burr and grindstones, and timber and lumber of all kinds, unmanufactured in whole or in part, including shingles, clapboards and wood pulp, may be imported into Canada free of duty, or at a less rate of duty than is provided for by any Act at the time in force, upon proclamation of the Governor General, which may be issued whenever it appears to his satisfaction that similar articles from Canada may be imported into the United States free of duty, or at a rate of duty not exceeding that payable on the same under such proclamation when imported into Canada."

3. That section ten of the said Act be repealed ; and items 592 and 781 in Schedule C to the said Act be also hereby repealed, and the following substituted therefor respectively :—

" 592. Coffee, green, except as hereinbefore provided."

" 781. Tea, except as hereinbefore provided."

4. That the excise duty on spirits manufactured from raw or unmalted grain used in combination, in such proportions as the Department of Inland Revenue prescribes, with malted barley taken to the distillery in bond, shall be the same as that in spirits manufactured exclusively from malted barley.

5. That when any substitute for methylated spirits is supplied to any manufacturer in accordance with section 238 of "The Inland Revenue Act," the price thereof shall not exceed the actual cost with the addition of 15 per cent.

6. That the excise duty on cigarettes, whether the product of foreign or of domestic leaf tobacco, weighing not more than three pounds per thousand, shall be sixty cents on every pound ; and on those weighing more than three pounds per thousand one dollar per pound.

7. That the excise duty on all cigars, whether the product of foreign or domestic raw leaf tobacco, when put up in packages containing less than ten each, shall be seven dollars per thousand.

8. The foregoing changes in duties of excise shall come into effect on and after the second day of May, 1888.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Just state the alteration proposed to be made in the existing law.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What articles are left out ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The article of green fruit is left out, because they are now there by proclamation.

Mr. MULOCK. Will not the repeal of the Act repeal the proclamation ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No ; the proclamation has placed them on the free list, and nothing would subject them to duty but an Act of Parliament.

Mr. MULOCK. Does not the proclamation depend upon that Act ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not at all.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What are the articles ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am now reading the articles omitted from the old list. Green fruit is omitted, bran is omitted, seeds of all kinds—for the same reason that they have been included in the proclamation ; also plants, trees and shrubs have been made free by proclamation. Coal and coke, hops, wheat, Indian corn, flour of wheat, flour and meals of any other kind, lard, tallow, salted or smoked meats are omitted ; and there are added, that are not now in the present list, fish of all kinds.

Mr. MITCHELL. Salted as well as fresh ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, fish of all kinds ; also fish-oil, fish products, fresh meats, poultry, wood pulp, stone in the rough, marble in the rough, burr and grindstones, lime and calcined gypsum. I may say that many of those alterations are made in conformity with the Mills' Bill, so that I have adopted the same designations as were used there, and have added some articles ; for instance, stone in the rough, marble in the rough, grindstones calcined gypsum, and poultry, which are included in the Mills' Bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. Were not wheat and the produce of wheat in the Bill ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No ; none of those were in the Bill.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the hon. gentleman's reasons for omitting those articles that he now omits from the statutory offer beginning with bran, if I took him down correctly, and going down to salted meat ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I stated that while you would be prepared, as a question of treaty, to put on a number of articles that you might not desire to have made free, because, taking the arrangement as a whole, you obtained the insertion of other articles that you desired very much. When you come to make those articles free by legislative enactment it became necessary to revise the list and the list would be revised from time to time. I am governed to some extent by the movements made in the Congress of the United States. I considered it not desirable to embrace in this articles which are not embraced in the Mills' Bill, and I have embraced a number that are embraced in that Bill. I think we must now deal with the revision of the system from time to time. While we retain it as a statutory offer, it must be from time to time revised in such a way as to meet the interests of Canada and the wishes of our own Parliament.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is coal in the Mills' Bill ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I did not feel disposed to take up the time of the House as gentlemen much more able to discuss the Budget than myself desired to speak, and have spoken, at considerable length ; but I cannot allow this measure to pass without again, as I have done Session after Session, calling the attention of the Government to the fact that wheat and the produce of wheat, and corn and the produce of corn, have been omitted from the list. I have repeatedly on former occasions pointed out the great injustice that is done to the lumbering, laboring and fishing classes in my own county, by the principle that makes them pay a duty on the food they eat as well as the clothing they wear, and everything that enters into the consumption and maintenance of life. I feel that year after year, when the system of protection is being aggravated very much, that it is an injustice to that numerous class of the community, to allow such an opportunity as this to pass without adding these items to that statutory offer of reciprocity. I am not going to make a speech about it ; it is useless. If I did not know it was so hopeless I would take up a good deal of time to prove to this House the injustice, and I would feel it my duty to divide this House on the point. But as I have done it before, and may have an opportunity of doing it again before the Session closes, unless the Government revise their decision, I will not take up the time of the committee at this late hour. I therefore simply enter my protest against the omission from that statutory offer of these articles, at the present time, when everything looks so favorable to our getting the United States to meet us on a fair reciprocal basis. I think if there is anything that should be put on the free list it is the food of the working classes.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I object to the course the Government are pursuing in this matter, from exactly the opposite reason to that stated by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. I think their course is objectionable on several grounds. It is objectionable because I think it is humiliating for this country to be playing this sort of game with the United States. I object to playing a game when I am playing second hand with a low card, can never have the lead and never get a trick, and that is exactly the position we are standing in with relation to the United States. I also object because I think, as a matter of principle, any such arrangement, whether by treaty or by statutory enactment, is in itself antagonistic to the National Policy. I contend that if we are to carry out the National Policy we must carry it out in its entirety. We cannot add a little bit here, and take off a little bit there, and say we will put this or that on the free list; and at the same time do justice to the great bulk of the community. I merely mention these two grounds, because I think the time must soon come, and the sooner the better, when if the Government are to stand by the National Policy, which this House and the country have supported them in, they must begin by repealing that statutory clause altogether. It may be said that that clause is only permissive; yet so long as we have it on the Statute-book, it is to some extent binding and obligatory upon us. If not, why do we put it there? We must also remember what we seem to have forgotten on this side of the House at any rate, in the debates that have taken place, that this country has not stood still since 1878—that what would have been a perfectly just and reasonable policy at the time of the initiation of the National Policy may naturally be expected to be entirely unreasonable and unsuitable to the present conditions. If the National Policy has done anything during the time it has been in force, it must have created a great many industries, and therefore have placed the country in an entirely different position. Therefore acting, as we are doing now, is almost equivalent to saying that the National Policy has not altered the condition of things in this country. I contend that it has altered them, and very much for the better; and it is because I believe in it that I do not wish to see it hampered in its operation by a reciprocity treaty or by any such provision as this, which is in some respects as binding and obligatory as a treaty. For these reasons I object to the course taken by the Government. In pursuing it, I think they will be digging a pitfall into which they will ultimately fall.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I regret that the hon. gentleman should have taken from the list any article that was there before. He has taken off corn and corn meal, and wheat and the flour of wheat. In doing so I think he is making a very great mistake. He is certainly not acting in the interest of the agricultural population of this country. He is leaving on barley; yet when there was no duty at all imposed on American barley coming into this country, none came; the barley went in the other direction. Does he suppose that the Americans are going to act on that statutory offer by taking the duty off barley if he leaves the duty on corn? It is in the interest of the agricultural population, who are raising stock, to have the privilege of obtaining corn from the United States to feed to their stock, because we raise in this country a quantity of that article altogether inadequate to our wants. The hon. gentleman proposes to agree to have free trade with the United States in certain natural products in which the exports are from Canada; but in regard to those articles which Canada imports he does not propose that any statutory offer shall exist. In making that proposition I cannot believe the hon. gentleman to be sincere. It looks like an attempt to put on the Statute-book an offer which he knows will not be accepted. What is he asking the House to do? He is asking it to guarantee the interest of a very large sum to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, to remove the restraints that exist against the importation into the United States of the growing products of the North-West, and yet he proposes by removing wheat and wheat flour from that statutory offer to interfere with the freedom of trade between the North-West and the United States. I say that in doing that he is taking a retrograde step. If he is, as he says, in favor of free trade in natural products, why does he remove any natural product from the list? He is either in favor of free trade in natural products or he is not. Why, every Minister who has spoken on the subject has declared himself in favor of free trade in natural products. Then, why remove any natural product from that statutory offer. Take another case. The hon. gentleman told us he was in favor of free trade in coal with the United States. He has told us so repeatedly. But now what does he propose to do? He proposes to take coal out of the statutory offer. He proposes to keep upon the people of Ontario a tax that is imposed upon the people of none of the other Provinces; he proposes to retain this very large tax that falls exclusively upon the people of Ontario. The hon. gentleman knows that he has repeated every Session, and hon. gentlemen behind him have echoed his statement, that the tax on coal does not increase the price of Canadian coal in Canadian markets. But he knows that he has collected nearly $1,000,000 from the people of Ontario on coal alone. There is not a town or city in the Province of Ontario, the people of which do not consume coal during five months of the year, and yet the hon. gentleman undertakes to impose a serious tax upon them, which must seriously weigh on their earnings. Why, I have seen myself, during the present winter in London, the children of poor people purchasing 10 cents, 15 cents, or 20 cents worth of coal or wood, and the hon. gentleman proposes to impose a tax upon the fuel which is to keep these people in comfort during the winter season. That is what the hon. gentleman proposes to do. He knows that at present there is a Bill before Congress proposing to remove the duty upon coal, which Bill will probably be carried, and yet, in order that he may avoid removing the tax upon coal, which falls very severely upon the poorer population of the cities—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What Bill does the hon. gentleman refer to?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I refer to the proposition that is now before the Congress of the United States.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Any tariff Bill?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What is it?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I cannot tell the hon. gentleman at this moment.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I know of no such Bill.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the hon. gentleman has not taken the trouble to read the American papers.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have followed them closely.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman now is proposing to remove coal from the list in the statutory offer. Why does he do so? If he thinks that there is no proposition to be made by the United States, no mischief, even according to the protectionist's view, can arise from leaving coal there. If there is to be such a proposition, the hon. gentleman puts it out of his power to place coal on the free list; and I say it is a serious tax upon the poorer population of Ontario. Then the hon. gentleman has referred to the effect of the proclamation that has issued. Of course the proclamation does not remain in force when the statute upon which it rests is repealed. The proclamation falls with the statute. The articles are put upon the free list, but they may not remain there. If they do, it is because there is no provision of the law that the former state of things shall be revived. I do not know whether there is a provision in the hon. gentleman's Tariff Bill which provides that the unenumerated articles shall be subject to a certain rate of taxation. If so, it is possible that those articles might be so included, but I suppose the hon. gentleman intends to put those articles, upon which the duty has been removed by the proclamation, in the tariff, upon the free list.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They are on the free list now.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does the hon. gentleman propose to put them on the enumerated free list of the tariff?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They are on the free list by law.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I call the hon. gentleman's attention to this fact: that the proclamation by which they are put there is gone when the statute is repealed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not at all.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I say if you repeal section 9, you repeal the proclamation which was carried in virtue of the power given by section 9. There can be no doubt about that. If an article is put upon the free list and there is no statute to interfere, and there is a provision that the former state of things is not to revive, it will remain on the free list. It will require a positive Act to revive the tax once it is removed, but the hon. gentleman knows there is a provision in the law that all unenumerated articles—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not an enumeration of the articles to leave them out of the list.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). They will require to be put on the free list and specified in the tariff.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not at all.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says no. I have not looked carefully into the Act for that purpose, but certainly the reason he has given is not at all adequate. The hon. gentleman says he proposes to follow the Mills' Bill. I find that petroleum is put in that Bill.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not say that I proposed to follow the Mills' Bill. I said the very reverse.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman said he would leave certain articles out of this Bill, because they were left out of the Mills' Bill, and that he would include certain articles because they were put in the Mills' Bill.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did, but I did not say I proposed to follow the Mills' Bill.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The statement the hon. gentleman has just made, is wonderfully like the same thing:

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is a great distinction between the two. I stated that when you came to deal with this question by legislation, both Governments were left entirely free to pursue the course that their own interests indicated as the best. That is the position I took; and wherever I found in the Mills' Bill an article I wanted to take advantage of and to make free I embraced it in this list, and if I find an article in that Bill that it is not in the interest of this country to have free, I am under no obligation whatever, because I know it was put in the Mills' Bill purely and simply with the view of considering the interests of the United States market.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the Mills' Bill were going on the line which the hon. gentleman mentioned, and without reference to what might be done here, it is very extraordinary, as the hon. gentleman must see, that the article of corn should be left out. What I was calling the hon. gentleman's attention to was that he might find that while the Americans would be willing to give us a remission of duty upon barley and a number of other articles, the natural products of the country, they might be willing to do so wholly upon the condition that we would be willing to take the duty off corn; yet the hon. gentleman puts it out of his power to accept an offer which on the whole might be advantageous to the country. Even taking the hon. gentleman's view that some of them are more advantageous than others, and some may not be advantageous at all standing alone, they might be advantageous taking the whole together. The hon. gentleman has said that his leader has stated that they would like to have reciprocity with the United States in natural products, and I am calling the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that he is seeking, by these provisions, to leave out some of those natural products, the free interchange of which he thinks would be to the advantage of this country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I find myself between two fires. In the first place, my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) objects to our having a statutory clause at all. I must remind my hon. friend that we are not bringing forward a statutory clause, but that, from 1849, in the old Province of Canada, this clause has been on our Statute-book. The Treaty of 1854 enlarged it very much; then, in 1866, the treaty having been abrogated, the clause was again put on our Statute-book, and it was re-enacted in 1867, 1868, 1870 and 1879. So we are not bringing forward the clause now. I am inclined to think that, if it was not already there, we might not be occupied as we are at this moment, but, the clause being on the Statute-book, we are of the opinion that it would not be wise that it should disappear, it would not be wise, at the present time and under the present circumstances, that it should be taken away. I do not hesitate to state to the House my position and my opinion in reference to this subject. I am in favor of having all the products of the farm, the products of the forest, the products of the mine, and the products of the sea, made free between ourselves and the United States. In my judgment, we might adopt the whole of that policy, and I say more, that both parties in this country have professed to desire that for many years. In my judgment, such a policy would be one that might fairly be entered upon with advantage to both countries, but we know that all our efforts to obtain a reciprocity treaty, which would make all these products free, have entirely failed; and, under those circumstances, the Legislature of Canada ever since 1849 have been placing a statutory provision in their laws in regard to a number of articles—not all those which were in the Reciprocity Treaty, not by any means all those articles which would be embraced in the category to which I have alluded the natural products of both countries—but they have selected a number of articles to be placed in this position. Now the time has come when it is clearly indicated on the part of the Congress of the United States that they do not intend to deal with fiscal questions by any other mode than by legislation, and we find a Bill brought forward in the House of Representatives there which proposes to place certain natural products of this country and others upon the free list. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) on the other hand, unlike my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), who thinks this provision goes too far, complains that it does not go far enough, and he speaks especially, he says, in the interest of the lumbermen. What is the first clause of the Bill? It is a new enactment which I am asking the House to put on the Statute-book in the interests of the lumbermen. I do not think my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), much as he may object to making some of the natural products free, will say that it would injure the lumbering interests of Canada to obtain free admission for all our lumber to the market of the United States.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Our lumber, but not our saw logs—that is the point.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is the position in which we find ourselves. Here is the great lumber interest of this country which has the prospect of having the market of the United States opened to it free by the Mills' Bill, which I am strongly of opinion will become law during the present Session of Congress. If that is put on the Statute-book of the United States, we would not be able to take advantage of it, because there is a provision which says that no lumber shall be admitted into the United States free from any country which has an export duty on logs. We have an export duty on logs, and the first clause in this Bill is to enable the Governor General in Council to remove that export duty on logs so as to give the great lumber interest of this country free admission into the markets of the United States, if that Bill passes. I have already stated why this measure has been revised. It is one thing, as I have already said, to make a treaty, but it is an entirely different thing to deal with questions of this kind by legislative enactment, and the moment this question was settled, as it undoubtedly was settled, by the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, that it is in violation of their constitution to deal with these fiscal matters without legislation passed by both Houses, we have to decide how far we shall go on one side or the other. The United States will decide to put on the free list, as they did in regard to lumber, such articles as they think will conduce to their own interests without any reference to our action. We, from time to time, will revise our list, and deal with our fiscal policy precisely as the Congress of the United States declares it will deal with theirs. We will make such articles free as we think the interests of Canada demand, and we will impose duties on such articles as we think the interests of Canada require. I think that will commend itself to members on both sides of the House. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has referred to coal. He must not forget that this Government without being moved to it by any party anywhere, removed the duty on anthracite coal, which had given us a revenue of $500,000 a year, and the hon. gentleman knows that the Province of Ontario, from which he comes, largely receives the benefit and the advantages of the remission of that duty. The hon. gentleman is perfectly aware that, deriving, as we do a large revenue from coal, it might seriously derange our financial arrangements if suddenly, in relation to that or any other article, an alteration were made, and we were placed in such a position that we would have no option but to make that article free. We have confined this list to such articles as it would be in the interest of Canada to make free, and that will be subject to revision from time to time as, in the judgment of Parliament, it may be found necessary to act in the interests of this country.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. the Finance Minister has referred to my objections to the form of the statutory offer, and he says I referred especially to the lumbermen and to the fishermen, and in that he is correct. He states that the provision in the first part of the Bill covers any advantage which the lumbermen might fairly expect.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not say so. I said the first clause was in the interest of lumber and in the interest of salt, which are the two articles the first clause deals with.

Mr. MITCHELL. My hon. friend knows that no portion of the class of people I have referred to in the Lower Provinces, will derive any benefit whatever from the first clause. Talk about salt. Can they take salt from Western Ontario down to the fishermen along our coast?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not mean to say that; but I meant to correct myself in saying that the first clause dealt entirely with the interest of the lumbermen. I had omitted to state that salt is also included, and that it had no reference to the hon. gentleman's constituents.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am speaking from the standpoint of constituents now, and from the standpoint of a very much larger sphere. I wish to let the hon. gentleman understand that the advantages given, as he claims, to the fishermen by the first section of the Bill providing for salt—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; the hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. I had no reference to advantages to fishermen whatever. The salt industry is entirely an Ontario interest, so far as the action of this Bill is concerned. It had no reference to the fishermen whatever. I merely referred to it as being in the Bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman referred by special direction to the objections I took on the ground of the fishermen and lumbermen, and when he spoke of lumber and salt I assumed that he meant to point out the special advantages to be derived by the class of constituents I represent. The fishermen of that section of the country know better than the hon. gentleman that a very large portion of the population of the Maritime Provinces is largely engaged in fishing, and another large portion engaged in lumbering and as laborers.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And they have all the salt free now.

Mr. MITCHELL. I know they have salt free, but the hon. gentleman put forward the question of salt, and I assume that he referred to that as he did to the question of the lumbermen being benefited by the first clause of that Bill. As to the advantages lumbermen get under that Bill, I do not think it has anything to do with the duty on flour and provisions that are used by men engaged in the lumber business. When I speak of the lumber interest I do not allude only to the men who carry on business in the woods, but I allude to the laboring classes that form so necessary a part of the lumber business, forming forty to one of the class the hon. gentleman refers to, the lumbermen proper. Now, I think it is pursuing a course to be regretted to leave out all these items and also the item of coal; and I think it is pursuing a course not to the advantage of the country. The hon. gentleman speaks of the advantages that have been given to Ontario by the admission of hard coal free. Why should a special portion of this country be selected for special advantages under this Bill? Why should New Brunswick, and Prince Edward Island, and a considerable portion of Nova Scotia too, be left out of the advantages which free coal would give them? If there is a loss of duty amounting to nearly half a million, by the act of the Government, in the admission of anthracite coal free for the benefit of Ontario, why should not the Maritime Provinces participate in those benefits, by taking the duty off soft coal? My hon. friend will say it would tend to discourage the miners of Nova Scotia. Sir, I was speaking to the manager of one of the leading mines in Nova Scotia the other day, the Spring Hill mine, and I asked his opinion about the effect of free coal. He said he would be glad to see coal free, he wanted no advantage from it; and he pointed out to me why, and his explanation was perfectly satisfactory. I can see no reason whatever why our people should be subjected to the disadvantages which result from the treatment which they have received by the preferences given, as shown in the instance the hon. gentleman has referred to in the case of Ontario and free coal. Now, this treatment has been going on quite long enough. I recollect the subject was brought four years ago before the then Finance Minister, the present Governor of New Brunswick, and an intimation was given very like a half promise that the duty would be taken off cornmeal, and I dare say some hon. gentlemen will recollect it. Now, if the hon. gentleman takes out of this list of statutory articles which they propose to make free—omits from it corn and the produce of corn, wheat and the produce of wheat, and barley and the produce of barley—if the Americans adopt the Mills' Bill and put them in, he precludes this country from getting the advantages of the powers that these very gentlemen would have the right to exercise under the law now, if these things were included. The hon. gentleman speaks as if we were to follow the United States alone. Why should they only follow the United States? Why should they only follow the Mills' Bill? The hon. gentleman says that if the United States make a certain article free, it is for the interest of Canada that that article should be made free also, that they may come, Session after Session, and take powers to make it free. Why do they not take powers now and reserve to themselves the right only to accept such articles as are in the interest of Canada—and this House would not hesitate to give them the power. That is, in my opinion, the course these hon. gentlemen should pursue, and not pursue that which is evidently their determination, and refuse to let the food of the people come in free. It is time this legislation for localities was done away with. I would remind my hon. friend that it has been stated in the press of the United States that there should be a clause—I do not know whether it should be put in the Mills' Bill or whether in a separate Bill, because there is a separate Bill talked of—there should be a clause put in one of these Bills that the free list which it is proposed largely to extend by that or some other Bill, shall not apply to Canada or any country that has certain stipulations against the United States which Canada has to-day. Now, Sir, one of these is fish, and I would like to know if my hon. friend is determined to impose upon the fishermen of our country the exclusion of fresh fish from the markets of the United States?—for that is what that Bill would mean, if there is anything in the statements of the American press. I need not tell my hon. friend that it would mean hundreds of thousands of dollars out of the pockets of the fishermen of the Province of which I have the honor to represent one county. It is a very serious position in which to place the fishermen of our country, in the future, in carrying on their business. I need not tell this House, because a dozen men in this House already know it, that to some counties in the northern portion of New Brunswick, and especially the one I represent, the free markets of the United States for fresh fish are of the greatest importance, and are, perhaps, the source of the living of a large number of people during the winter season in catching fresh fish and sending them through to the United States. But I very much fear, from the tone of the press of the United States, and what is said in relation to the treatment Canada has given them, that we may find ourselves excluded in the article of fresh fish from the markets of the United States, and I would very much regret it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I have no doubt the Finance Minister is correct when he said that the changes proposed by the American tariff Bill were more with reference to their own interests than to the interest of Canada. But be that as it may, I think it would not be wise for us to close the doors against any proposal looking to the enlargement of the free list between the two countries. Now, the list which is proposed by the present resolution embraces articles which we do not import from the United States, that is to say, animals of all kinds, hay, straw, potatoes, peas and beans, barley, rye, oats, buckwheat, oatmeal, buckwheat, flour, cheese, gypsum, timber, and lumber of all kinds, manufactured wholly or in part, including clapboards and wood pulp. Now, it must be remembered that we do not import any of these articles from the United States at the present moment; therefore putting them on this list is merely with the object of conveying to the country the idea that we are going to be very generous in making an offer to the United States for the free admission into our country of certain articles when these articles are placed on the free list of the United States.

The omission of coal and wheat from the free list may, it appears to me, prevent our having the advantage of the Mills' Bill, provided it passes. The hon. gentleman drew attention to the fact that last year we paid, as he said, although I see it is corrected in his revised speech, $1,800,000 on lumber shipped to the United States. If they place that on the free list and other articles which are on the free list at present, and should also place coal, which the hon. gentleman says they propose doing, and we should place certain articles, not coal or wheat, on the free list, then I am afraid it might prevent their allowing that clause to go into operation. They might say that unless you admit all those articles free, including coal, coke, wheat and breadstuffs of all kinds, we will not admit lumber and other articles which it is to the interest of this country should be admitted free into the United States. It would, therefore, be wise for the Government to take power, whether they exercise it or not, to be able under certain circumstances that may arise, when the Government may be able to dispense with the revenue which they at present derive from the importation of coal and which I admit is a large item—if the Americans should place coal and other articles on the free list the Government would be able to deal with the matter, if they saw their way clear to do so. If they put it out of their power to deal with it and the Americans pass that Bill enabling lumber and other articles to go free to the United States, I say they may naturally turn round and say: We are not going to give you what you offer unless you place all those articles on the free list in Canada. It is in that sense the Finance Minister would do well to amend his proposal and place those articles on the free list, coal and coke, and breadstuffs of all kinds, so that they may be able to deal with the matter if occasion should arise by the Americans placing them on the free list, otherwise the interests in which we are concerned in the proposal now before Congress might lose the benefit of free admission into the United States.

Mr. WATSON. I desire to ask the Minister of Finance if it is his intention to include flooring and siding in manufactured lumber.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We say manufactured in whole or in part.

Mr. WATSON. You specified clapboarding. I regret that the Finance Minister has not seen fit to place on the statutory offer the two articles which some of the members for Nova Scotia are afraid that unless they are placed on the free list will not be admitted into the United States free. As representing a country that might be supposed to be protected by the duty on wheat, I say that Manitoba regrets as well as New Brunswick does that the duty has not been taken off wheat. The Americans are now coming into the North-West to buy our hard wheat, which has brought 10 cents more per bushel in Dakota this year than in Manitoba. In fact they have sought that wheat in large quantities, notwithstanding the duties, and about 100,000 bushels have been shipped to the United States for seed, with a view to improving the quality of wheat grown there. It is well known that the area in the United States for producing hard wheat is rapidly diminishing, and I believe it would be to the interests of Manitoba to place wheat on the free list. A duty on wheat is no protection to any farmer in the Dominion, it simply prevents their selling wheat in the best market available. I also wish to draw the attention of the committee to the duty on coal. I believe if the duty were removed from coal a large part of the North-western States would be supplied with soft coal from mines in our Canadian North-West. There has been a large shipment of anthracite coal from Banff mine to California, some 10,000 tons having been shipped already. If we had unrestricted reciprocity a large portion of the North-western States would be supplied from our North-West coal fields, and if coal were placed on that list we might hope to have unrestricted trade. Another article from which the duty should be removed is potatoes. There have been a hundred carloads of potatoes sent to St. Paul and Chicago during the present season, and some also to St. Louis. It was my intention to have addressed the House on the question of unrestricted trade, but I am able to say that so far as Manitoba is concerned we have nothing to protect and no benefit can be obtained by us from a protective tariff. We are in a position to defy the competition of the world in natural products. Of manufactures we have very little indeed, and we do not wish to have them protected to the injury of the development of our agricultural resources. Manitoba would hail with pleasure the adoption of such a policy as has been introduced by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). We grow the best wheat, we have the largest number of acres in natural products, and if we had free intercourse with the United States, the North-West would prosper more rapidly than it has in the past. I hope that agricultural products and agricultural implements will be placed on the free list ere long. It is as important for a farmer to obtain cheap implements as it is to protect him in anything for him to grow. The duties paid on certain articles are imposed in the interests of two or three constituencies in Canada. The duty on fruit, which has been referred to, benefits only two or three constituencies. Coal in a like manner. Hon. gentlemen from the east have explained to me that if coal was placed on the free list they would be in a better position than at present. It is unnatural for coal to reach further west than Ottawa. Not a ton of coal from Nova Scotia goes as far west as Toronto. If the Government propose to operate a railway in the interests of the coal miners of Nova Scotia and carry coal free to them, but at the cost of the people at large, it may be done. But this is an unfair and unjust principle to adopt.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman seems entirely to misapprehend the scope of this measure. It is not to place anything on the free list. We have not power to put anything on the free list in the manner to which the hon. gentleman has referred, coal or wheat or breadstuffs entering the United States. It is the other way. All this does is to enable us, in case of legislation in the United States making the articles free, to place them on our free list by a proclamation. The hon. gentleman must not forget, and the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) must not forget, that we have had coal on the statutory offer since 1879. The United States have not placed it on their free list. There are only two tariff measures now before Congress and neither the Mills nor the Randall Bill has any reference to coal, corn, wheat, flour or meal.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.). Does the hon. gentleman say Indian meal is not in the Mills' Bill?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I say it is not, and while we have had it on our statutory offer since 1879, as well as coal, coke, and meal, and grain, and flour, and potatoes, not one of those articles are in either of the Bills that are before the United States Congress. It has been shown that putting those in the statutory offer has not accomplished anything at all in respect to those articles. We have tried that and it has failed. In fact I am inclined to think it has had a very contrary effect. I am inclined to think that putting coal on our statutory offer leads them to the conclusion that it is a great advantage to us to have coal free, and that rather prevents its being put on the free list in the United States. The same thing may be said of wheat and those other articles. I am just as anxious as the hon. gentleman is to see them include potatoes and I hope their Bill may be still amended before it becomes law as to include potatoes, and therefore I am anxious we should be in a position to take advantage of it.

Mr. WATSON.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Do you wish them to include coal and wheat?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have not said that. I said we have had it in the statutory offer since 1879 and neither the Mills' Bill nor the Randall Bill now before Congress propose to make those articles free.

Mr MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman has told us two or three times to-night that those articles were on the statutory offer since 1879. Knowing as he does the hostility to anything like free trade in the United States during that time, he has taken good care not to tell the House what I believe to be, viz., the change of sentiment, and what others believe to be the change of sentiment in the United States, in the direction of free trade. Notwithstanding the arguments that are made to the contrary, I believe that the free trade sentiment is making its way in the United States, and in view of that fact it is now proposed that we should take off some of the most important items, such as coal and wheat, flour and meal, from the statutory offer. I think the present time is the best chance for our offer being accepted, and these articles should not be dropped.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman is naturally enough in a difficulty. He and his colleagues have brought things to such a pass here, that we are now, according to his own statement, face to face with a considerable difficulty. I understand that the real reason for taking those off is, as he almost admitted, that he cannot dispense with the revenue he receives from them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would not like to lose it without having means to provide for the same.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am aware that the hon. gentlemen, by the mode in which they have conducted the public affairs of the country, have brought us to this condition—that in spite of the enormous taxation we are face to face with a deficit. Under those circumstances, with a known deficit of about a million on the next year, the hon. gentleman does not like to face another deficit, of as far as I can judge, a million and a quarter of dollars, if those articles should be placed on the free list. I think he is playing with edged tools. I have no doubt that when his proposition comes to be known and discussed, as it will in a short time be known and discussed in the United States Congress, that very much the conclusion will be drawn that has already been drawn and that is that he is carefully eliminating a number of articles which the United States might export to us in considerable quantities, and take from us in return other articles we desire to make free. As my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Mitchell) very properly says there was no disposition during the last nine years on the part of the then American Government to relax their highly protective system, but it does seem very expedient, to say the least of it, that now that there is good ground to believe that their opinions are altering, that these articles should be left on the free list. The hon. gentleman very materially reduces the scope of the articles which he had formerly proposed to make free, and, though I am bound to admit that there is force in the objection he took as to the probable loss of revenue, I think that he will find that the action he is now taking will be apt to be construed to our disadvantage and that it will prevent a number of articles which would be greatly to our advantage to put on the free list in the United States, from being put there.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think it is possible that can arise.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the hon. gentleman will find that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would consider it a serious question if I could take that view. I do not think it is possible that any person in Congress can object to the elimination of those articles. How can they take objection when they have refused to accept it for nine years, and when they find that in a number of articles they propose in their Bill to make free we immediately take power for the Governor in Council, the moment their Act becomes law, to make those articles free also?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is just as my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) pointed out. We sell the Americans no Indian corn, as the hon. gentleman well knows. I do not suppose we send a bushel except for the purpose of seed to the United States. On the other hand, everybody knows that but for our arbitrary tariff restriction we would import considerable quantities of corn from the United States. Then, as the hon. gentleman knows, too, we want to get our barley in there free. I think there is great force in the objection made by my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), that in striking out such an article as grain we may possibly prevent the Americans from admitting such articles as barley free.

Mr. WATSON. I finally comprehend the question and I have this to say, that I believe the Government ought to place such articles on the free list as would induce the Americans to give us reciprocal trade in certain lines.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The offer had no such effect. We have had it there since 1879.

Mr. WATSON. It is only now we could reap advantage from that. As far as we are concerned in the West we had nothing to trade with the Americans, but we find now that notwithstanding the duty they are seeking our potatoes and wheat to-day, and we wish to have those articles they are seeking in the American market placed on the free list if possible. I know that the Minister has not power now, but I wish he would take power to put them on the list, and the American people who are legislating now in the interest of the American citizens would, I am sure, ask power to place them on the free list also. I maintain that the Canadian agriculturist is handicapped by this policy. He has to pay more for his farm implements and he gets less for his farm products than he did before. It has been stated in this House that the farmer does not pay more for his implements than he did before. I know from my knowledge of facts and from my own experience that the Canadian farmer has got to pay a little more than the extra duty on implements, and more than that again in Manitoba, because the excessive freights charged on implements going into that country makes up the difference for the duty. I wish to see the agriculturist legislated for now, and I say legislation has not been in his interest, although that has been contradicted in this House by members, and by members from the North-West. I hold that the farmer of the North-West, who should be encouraged by this Government in settling that country, is handicapped as compared with the American farmer of to-day. A farmer in Dakota can buy his implements 35 per cent. less than a farmer can in Manitoba, and in some instances it is more than 35 per cent. less, because of the excessive freight to Manitoba. If time would admit I could give you the list of necessaries a farmer requires to settle on a farm in Manitoba and what he requires to settle on the same farm in Dakota. The balance is in favor of the American farmer by $270. That is the cost of the goods taken from actual figures paid in 1887.

Mr. FISHER. If I understand the hon. Finance Minister, he has taken off certain things which are in the old standing offer, because he does not find them either in the Mills' Bill or in the other tariff Bill before the United States Congress; but I find, notwithstanding this, that there are a lot of things in this offer which are not in the Mills' Bill. The hon. Minister mentioned potatoes as one article which he hoped to see introduced into that Bill before its passage through Congress, and therefore he left potatoes in this standing offer. Do I understand him then to build a hope that what articles he has in this standing offer will be placed in the Mills' Bill before it becomes law, and that we shall have that opportunity to have all these articles free? I did not understand him to say that much.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. FISHER. Then, I ask him why he has taken some articles off, and left some on which are in the same position. I would like him to say why he has left on animals, for instance, which he does not hope to have introduced into that Bill, and taken off such things as wheat, Indian corn, flour, Indian meal or meal of any other grain, lard, tallow, salt meats and smoked, some of which are still left on the free list by the Order in Council lately passed by the Government? The hon. Minister has not explained his reason for picking and choosing between these things at all, and I do not see why he should have taken from this standing offer these particular things. Does he intend it to operate against particular classes in this country, who might enjoy the freedom of the things which are put on the free list? I cannot understand any other reason for his having omitted these articles. I sympathise with the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) who has called attention to the fact that Indian corn and meal and meal of other grains are removed from the chance of being put on the free list. Not only are the fishermen and lumbermen interested in these articles, but a large portion of our farming population as well. The hon. Minister knows perfectly well that Indian corn is not grown in this country to any extent, and we cannot raise it as cheaply as it is raised in the Western States. The farming community, especially in Ontario and Quebec, buy these grains from the Americans for fattening their cattle, which they export and make a profit on. Therefore the duty imposed on corn is a detriment to them, making their meat dear, and putting them at a disadvantage in competing with the Americans in the English market. This is only one article, and I think others would come under the same reasoning. I was surprised to find the hon. Minister so candid as to say that he based this legislation on the legislation which was taking place at Washington. He did not say it in so many words, but he practically acknowledged that he is regulating our tariff by the action of the American Congress. Yet it was only a few days ago that his followers called us disloyal, and applied almost every opprobrious epithet to us, because they said we proposed to give the American Congress some power over our tariff. If it is so disloyal and wrong on our part, how is it possible that it is right in the Finance Minister of Canada to make this proposition? I say the hon. Minister and his colleagues are driven to it by the tortuous and varying policy which they have adopted towards the United States. While at one time, as they did in 1873, they try to threaten the United States into reciprocity, at another time they try to coax them into it to such an extent as they are willing to go, but will not accept anything except what they are willing to give. But just now the hon. Finance Minister stated that he was going to take some of those things from the standing offer so as to intimidate the United States, I understood he wants to try and force them to give us a chance of getting some of our articles free into that country. I think the Government's experience in the past in trying to intimidate the United States should show the hon. gentleman that he is not likely to succeed to-day, and I do not imagine that the United States are going to be influenced by his action in this matter. But so far, I have not had any sort of information from the hon. Finance Minister as to the reason he has taken these particular articles out of the standing offer, while he has left others which are exactly in the same category. If he does not explain that, we can only suppose that he has been entirely arbitrary in his selection.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to a matter of considerable and continually growing importance, with reference to the admission of certain classes of corn into this country free of duty. It is well known that the system known among farmers as ensilage, or green feeding of cattle, is carried on in many parts of Western Ontario as well as in the section I represent. It is produced from green corn, which is taken from the green stalk. This corn is grown from a seed which does not ripen in Canada, and which the farmers have to import. That seed is imported every year in large quantities, and the dairymen and farmers of the country would consider it a very great advantage to be allowed to import that kind of corn free. In the county I represent it is a new business, but last year some 200 bushels were imported for such purposes, and this year I am informed by the dairymen 600 bushels will be imported for seeding purposes, and the success of the dairymen in carrying on that system will depend on the cheapness at which they can obtain that food.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I understood the hon. Minister in the early part of his speech to emphasise that it has been and is now the policy of his party to obtain a treaty which would admit as far as possible the products of the farm, the sea, the forest and the mine from the one country into the other free of duty, and he gave us to understand that that policy was embodied in the old statutory offer. He has now revised that statutory offer, and has introduced a new one, omitting not only certain articles which by proclamation were taken out of the old statutory offer, and are now on the free list; but as my hon. friend behind me has remarked, he has omitted a large number of articles that were in the statutory offer and has limited the general character of that offer very largely. I think the House is entitled to know at greater length why he has done this. The hon. member for Northumberland asked a question on the subject of Indian corn and never obtained an answer. Why was that included in the old statutory offer and omitted in this? If the hon. gentleman is desirous that we should have reciprocity in the natural products, why omit these articles in the statutory offer? I hold the substance of a letter which the First Minister is alleged to have written a year or two ago to a leading statesman in the United States. It is contained in the letter of Mr. J. S. Ritchie, of Acron, Ohio, a gentleman well known in Ottawa, addressed to the Washington National Republican, and in that letter the First Minister stated what the policy of his Government was. Mr. Ritchie says:

"When the first Morrison Bill was under consideration in Congress I received a letter from the Canadian Premier, Sir John A. Macdonald, accompanied by a list of all the articles covered by the above mentioned provision (the standing offer) in her tariff law, and a large number of articles not there enumerated. In that letter he promised that if the Morrison Bill passed and included any or all of these articles in its free list, or admitted them at a lower rate of duty, Canada would at once treat all such articles which were the product of United States in a like manner. I gave that letter to Mr. Hewitt, the present mayor of New York, who was then an active member of Mr. Morrison's committee, and he gave it to Mr. Morrison, who expressed to me great satisfaction with the proposition contained in it. The letter, I believe, is to-day among the papers of the present Ways and Means Committee, and I do not doubt that the offer contained in it is as good as the day it was made."

The hon. gentleman will see that the expression of belief that Mr. Ritchie gives utterance to is not well founded, because the promise of the First Minister is not kept. A new statutory offer is introduced by the hon. gentleman, which, while it is extended to certain articles not mentioned in the old offer, deliberately omits a number that are mentioned in it. If they were omitted for the purpose of revenue, that reason is indefensible, because the taxation bears very heavily on the poorer classes. I would like to know whether the First Minister has changed his policy or whether he is prepared to adhere to the proposition he made in his letter to Mr. Ritchie. Before the hon. gentleman asks us to carry this resolution, he should explain why the articles in the old offer have been omitted in the new one.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman will read over Hansard, he will find there an answer to all that both he and the hon. member for Brome have said. In endeavoring to draw a distinction between a treaty and a legislative enactment, I have endeavored to mark the difference between a broad comprehensive policy entered into by two nations by treaty and a policy of each country deciding to adopt in reference to this matter just what suits its own interests. If the hon. gentlemen are not able to appreciate the distinction, I am afraid it is due to my inability to express what I feel upon the subject, in the mode in which I ought to be able to express it. It appears to me perfectly plain and simple that a policy which would be a sound, a rational and a judicious policy for a country to enter into by treaty covering all the natural products of the country is one thing, and it is another thing when one country declares it will not have a treaty or any reciprocal arrangement whatever, but will from Session to Session be entirely free to act just as its own interests require. That being the case, I view the position from that standpoint. I have never said that I decided to put everything upon our free list that I found made free in the Mills' Bill. If the Mills' Bill, or if the action of the United States Congress makes free an article which I do not consider it to be in the interest of Canada to make free, I will not put it in this clause. The articles put in this clause are put there to show what, in the judgment of the Parliament of Canada, we intend to take advantage of, should they be made free on the other side. I have put articles in this clause that are not in the Mills' Bill, but I do not confine myself to the articles mentioned in that Bill, because there are other articles which, should they be made free by the legislation of the United States, we would like to take advantage of. There are other articles that might by treaty be dealt with as a matter of deliberate arrangement, but which we would not be prepared at the moment to make free upon the action of legislation over which we have no control. I hope I have made myself intelligible. I have tried to explain everything in the fullest and frankest manner possible, and I hope hon. gentlemen will consent to review the statements I have made when they see them in print, and allow this proposition to pass.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not think it is creditable on the part of the hon. the Finance Minister, after the criticisms and suggestions which have been made by hon. gentlemen on this side, to try and lead us from the argument that we have presented. It has been stated that the hon. gentleman intends to put potatoes on the free list, no doubt in the interests of the Maritime Provinces. But, on the other hand, he refuses to put corn on the free list. If there is any article at all shipped from the United States that would be compensated by the free admission of barley to the United States, it is the article of corn. The hon. gentleman well knows that the farmers of Canada paid $20,000 during last year to get their barley into the United States. Now, there is not another item that would be more likely to be traded off for free admission of barley than corn.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We have had barley on our statutory offer since 1879, and barley does not appear in the Mills' Bill or the Randall Bill at all, so that we gained nothing by that. We have had both corn and barley on the offer, and neither one nor the other has been made free.

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not say that barley is on, and the hon. the Minister is not going to prevent me from making my argument by saying it is not in the Mills' Bill. I say corn is the only item that we might have to trade off in return for barley being admitted into the United States free, and the hon. gentleman has not explained why he has put potatoes on and left corn off.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. So far as potatoes are concerned, there was a great doubt as to whether it was in the Mills' Bill. In fact, it was supposed at first that it did include potatoes. But it was found subsequently, by the provisions of the full and complete Bill, that it was considered potatoes would come under the head of vegetables otherwise enumerated, and, therefore, potatoes were not included, but there is a strong reason to hope that, before that Bill becomes law, potatoes will be included. We have had corn and barley on our statute since 1879, and we have had wheat and flour and other articles, and that has produced no effect whatever.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Why not continue them?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The reason, as I have stated, is that we propose to deal with these questions from our own standpoint entirely.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman has, over and over again, stated that he has had these articles on the statutory obligations of 1879, but he fails to answer the argument which I advanced against that, and which was referred to also by the hon. member from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies), that we knew that after the repeal of the Washington Treaty, a feeling had grown up in the United States, arising out of the fishery difficulties, which was hostile to any extended commercial relations between the two countries at all. That feeling has existed pretty well for seven or eight years, and, although the hon. gentleman had that statutory obligation there, the argument which I raise in reply to that is that a change is coming over the people of the United States, that their financial difficulties demand that a very large reduction shall take place on the articles coming into their country, and, judging by the Mills' Bill, a very large quantity of free goods will be admitted. My hon. friend the Finance Minister continually refers to the fact that this statutory obligation has existed since 1879, but he fails altogether to give an explanation why potatoes and coal are not in, and why cornmeal and corn and flour are taken out; he fails to realise the change which has taken place in the sentiment of the people of the United States, and so his answer is no answer at all. He is evading the question.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The reason which the hon. gentleman has would be a reason for repealing the Act altogether.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think so.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He says he does not think so; then, why does he make the change in regard to these articles, and put articles there which are altogether contrary to the reason which he has given? He puts potatoes there, though he knows they are not in the Mills' Bill, with the hope, as he says, that at some future period or at some time or other the United States Congress will legislate in the direction of free trade.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is good reason to think so.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then he should put corn on the list also.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not say that I would put corn on, even if they did.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He said he was in favor of free trade in natural products.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I said, as a whole.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But he does not take power to deal with this as a whole. He deals with it piecemeal. Suppose the United States were to put the whole of the natural products on the free list to-morrow, the hon. gentleman does not take power to deal with that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It would be very questionable whether you ought to. I have endeavored to explain that, as a matter of treaty, covering the whole, I would be willing to do this; but I never said that this should be done by legislation, seeing the power of the Congress of the United States to throw our whole financial arrangements into confusion by dealing with three or four articles.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman has now repeated what he has said six or seven times before.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may have to repeat it five or six times yet before the hon. gentleman will understand me.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). If the people of the United States have reciprocity in natural products, they will not enquire whether it is under a treaty or under legislation. The effect is the same.

Mr. BOWELL. It is not the same.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I say it is the same. If that advantage is obtained, it is the same to the people of this country if it is done under legislation as if it is done under a treaty.

Mr. BOWELL. The one is permanent and the other is not.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman had better stand up when he wants to speak.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not talking to you.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You are interrupting me.

Mr. BOWELL. Very well; I beg pardon. Go on.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says we are not to take power to throw the financial affairs of this country into confusion. He is not likely to do that without sufficient reason, and Congress would have the same reluctance to throw the financial affairs of the United States into confusion. He has not given us any valid reason for doing what he has done. He proposes to put certain articles on the free list which he admits the United States have not yet put on the free list by any Bill which is before Congress, and he has taken off some articles that are included in that Bill. He says he does not know that he would in any case put corn on the free list.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You have said that a great many times.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Well, it seems to be necessary to repeat it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That statement has been repeated twenty times to-night, and it is one o'clock in the morning.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Quite so, but the hon. gentleman might have concluded this debate several hours ago.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did my best to do so, but the hon. gentleman knows that I could not.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The people of this country are in favor of putting all these articles on the free list.

Mr. HESSON. How do you know?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that he is opposed to reciprocity in natural products?

Mr. HESSON. I am, in some of them, certainly.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the hon. gentleman has been misstating his position this Session, and also in other Sessions, because he has voted to put that provision on the Statute-book which the Minister of Finance is now proposing to repeal. In fact the only hon. gentleman who has had the courage of his convictions, the only hon. gentleman who has spoken on this subject and has stated what he felt, is the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), who says he does not believe reciprocity in natural products would be good for this country. Other hon. gentlemen are acting as if they were in favor of that reciprocity, but they are simply pretending that they are. The Finance Minister has been on each side of this question several times during this Session.

Mr. MULOCK. It may be that the law is as the Finance Minister says. I am not going to enter into any controversy with regard to that, but I hope the Finance Minister will not be offended if I ask the Minister of Justice to give us an assurance on that point. The Customs Act of 1879, section 6, declares that the articles mentioned shall be admitted into Canada free of duty whenever a proclamation issues. Now it is proposed to repeal the proclamation under that clause.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, not the proclamation.

Mr. MULOCK. No, but to repeal the clause on which the proclamation rests; and it is said that the repeal of the clause will not affect the proclamation. I do not propose to argue that point, but that is a question on which I would like the assurance of the Minister of Justice, for whilst that may be law, it is possible there is a doubt. There are certain orders that the Governor in Council can repeal, and others that he cannot repeal. A proclamation standing under that clause, resting upon the clause in question, I take it, is not repealable by the Governor in Council, but if you repeal the clause and leave the Order in Council standing, it may be that the Order in Council may be repealable under some other provision of the law. Now, I would ask the Minister of Justice whether it is quite clear in his mind that the proclamation under which green fruits, and fruit trees, and so on, articles that are not now to be renamed in the substituted clause,—whether it is perfectly clear to his mind that that proclamation cannot be repealable by any other than an Act of Parliament?

Mr. THOMPSON. I understand the position to be this: These articles had a duty imposed on them by statute, and by the same authority, that is, by a statute of this Parliament, power was given to the Governor in Council to make what was practically an enactment upon that subject for the repeal of these duties. Now, in pursuance of the powers given in section 9, the Order in Council was issued, and the proclamation went forth effecting a repeal of the duties which were imposed upon green fruits, and upon certain seeds, plants and shrubs. My view is that from that moment the enactment imposing the duty upon these articles was repealed and cannot be re-enacted except by this Parliament.

Mr. GILLMOR. I regret to discover that the Government are not disposed to place corn upon that statutory offer, because it has not been responded to in the United States. It is very important to New Brunswick and to my own constituency that corn and corn-meal should be admitted free of duty, and during the campaign of the late general election, there was an impression given currency to by my opponents that that small grievance was going to be redressed. I regret to discover that the Government are not so ready to put corn on the free list, even if the States do take duty off corn. I have not heard the Finance Minister say yet that he would respond to that, that he would meet the United States with regard to the duty on corn and cornmeal. I wish he had left it, at least, on the statutory offer instead of removing it. I understand his position is that Government are going to exercise their own judgment as to how far they can accept reciprocity, as long as it is not general, and there is some force in the remarks of the hon. gentleman. But I do think that the duty on corn and cornmeal, even if it is kept on flour, ought to be removed, because you do not protect any industry that is now producing corn in Canada to any extent. I understand that there are two or three counties in Ontario that produce corn, but it is not exported to the Maritime Provinces, and we import a large quantity of corn and cornmeal. It is a matter that largely affects the poorer classes. While much of it may be used to feed horses and cattle, a very considerable quantity is also used by the poorer classes of the people as food. I think you might well have left it in your statutory offer. I do not think the people are going to have this duty removed from corn and meal quite as soon as they were led to expect by my opponents during the last campaign. If you would keep it on meal and allow corn to come in free, you would encourage our grist mills. Many of the grist mills you had before are now abandoned, but if you allowed corn to come in free, you would encourage the manufacture of grain into meal. The hon. Minister, who is a leading man in the Maritime Provinces, has intimated or hinted that he does not know whether he would meet the Americans half way, but in the interests of the people of that section of the country I would be very glad if he could meet their wishes in this respect.

Mr. MITCHELL. In relation to the duty on corn, I presume one of the objections the Minister has to its removal is the loss of duty. Now, I do not think the loss of duty would be so much as the hon. gentleman imagines, because I do not suppose any one would ask that the duty should be taken off corn that is used in the country for distilling purposes. What we ask is that it should be taken off corn when it enters into the consumption of the people and for the use of stock.

Mr. FISHER. The Finance Minister said a little while ago that he had over and over again answered the question which the member for Prince Edward Island had put to him. It is true that he has told us that he believes it is in the interests of the country to keep corn off the statutory offer in the future. Now, I would like to know why the Government think it to be in the interest of the country to do so. I would like to know whether it is that they believe that this is an industry which requires protection, or whether they believe it is a fair subject for taxation, or whether there is some particular interest to be conserved of which the Finance Minister has given us no inkling whatever. I have no objection to the Government taking the power to put upon the statutory offer such things as they think in the interests of Canada, but I want to know why they think it is in the interest of Canada that corn should not be put in such an offer. When the hon. member for Bothwell intimated that perhaps the Minister would not put corn upon the free list, even if the Mills Bill did contain it, and that he means to keep it for the sake of the duty, the hon. Minister did not say anything to the contrary. I think he is going back on his own statements that he wants to go as far as he can in the way of reciprocity in natural product.

Mr. HESSON. I confess that I cannot understand the hon. gentleman's reasoning. He has endeavored to make it appear that the exporters of barley from this country do pay the duty, and that if the Americans took the duty off we would get a higher price for barley. Now, if it will work in one instance, why would it not work in another? If the exporter pays the duty in the case of barley, may it not be possible that he will pay the duty on corn and cornmeal? Did it ever occur to the hon. gentleman in that way?

Mr. FISHER. What do you think yourself?

Mr. HESSON. I have my opinion, and you may study the question out for yourself. But you will see how difficult it is to convince gentlemen who think that we must pay the duty in both instances. It is simply impossible. If we export barley and pay that duty, why, then, may not the Americans, in the export of cornmeal, be presumed to pay the duty? They do not produce barley and we do not produce corn. They require our barley and we require their corn. It is perfectly clear that we do not pay in both instances. I know hon. gentlemen opposite always endeavor to prove that on sending products into the American market our farmers pay the duty. It cannot be a reasonable or a logical conclusion to suppose that the people will believe that if this is true in one instance it is not also true in the other instance. I am not in favor of the Government even taking into consideration the propriety of taking the duty off grain or flour. It would be a most unwise course, and in the interests of my constituents I will never consent to the removal of the duty from wheat, oats, flour or meal and a great many other articles I could enumerate. Our market in Canada is better than that of the United States for all these articles, and our market has been better since the duty was imposed. That is perfectly certain, and our farmers and business men realise the fact, and while we export our surplus to the old country the United States is not our best market for the articles indicated.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not want to be guilty of any discourtesy to the hon. gentleman, but I may say that I see no object in placing corn in the statutory offer. We have no desire to induce the United States to legislate so as to place corn on the free list. We have no object in doing so. We do not send any corn to the United States. Whenever it is the policy of Parliament to make corn free, then we can make it free, but there is no object in placing it in this offer.

Mr. FISHER. By parity of reasoning the United States might decline to put barley on the free list.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will say at once that the United States will place barley on the free list the moment they come to the conclusion that it is in the interests of their people to do so, and when they do that we shall be in a position to make barley free also.

Mr. FISHER. If the Americans do so for their advantage they do not care whether it is put on the free list or not. Under these circumstances it is no object to us to give power to the Government to put it on the free list.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do I understand the Minister of Finance to state that it is not in the interests of the people, particularly the poorer classes, to put corn on the free list; because that is the only inference I can draw from the objection of the hon. gentleman to placing corn in the statutory offer? If he takes that position we have a distinct issue, and one the country can understand. What I contend in regard to corn is this: It is a food consumed by the poorest classes, and it is grown in only two counties in Western Canada to any moderate extent.

An hon. MEMBER. Half a dozen counties.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is only raised to any extent in about two counties. When we do not raise an article that enters into the food of the poorest class of the population, when it is used by the farmers for food and by the lumbermen and teamsters to feed their horses, it ought not to be taxed. The hon. gentleman says it is not in the interests of Canada.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not say that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I put the question: Did I understand you to say that it is not in the interest of Canada?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Whenever Parliament decides.

Mr. MITCHELL. When the Government of the day which controls Parliament decides.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; Parliament which controls the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. We hold the reins, but you show us the way to go according to the old song. I contend that the hon. gentleman by his acts, if not by his words, decides that it is not in the interest of Canada to place corn on the free list. If there is one single article discussed that should be on the free list it is corn.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think my hon. friend had better make a clean breast of it before he sits down, and tell the House why the Government, of which he was a member, placed a duty on corn and cornmeal, and which they kept on while he was a member of the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is not necessary for the hon. gentleman to apply to one of the minor members of the Cabinet, as Sir Hugh Allan styled us, in the celebrated case which the hon. gentleman knows something about.

Mr. BOWELL. Do you acknowledge that?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes; I have the honesty to acknowledge that I was a minor member. I do not know, without referring to the statute, whether the statement made by the hon. gentleman is accurate or not. I certainly did not think that the Government maintained the duty all the time I was in the Government.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am willing to accept the fact that it was so.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No; it was not so.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am willing to accept the fact. It does not lie in the mouth of the Finance Minister, who occupied a more prominent and important position in that Government, to put such a question before me, which, as the letter of Sir Hugh Allan said, was one of the unimportant members of the Cabinet, who was not a person of sufficient importance to discuss important questions such as those which were discussed by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). As this is a matter of public policy I should like to be certain that I understand the statement of the Minister of Finance. I understood he was in favor of the free interchange of the natural products of the two countries.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. By treaty.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Then I understood the hon. gentleman to say that in the event of the Americans placing all those articles on the free list he could not say that the Government, so long as he was a member of it, would reciprocate in all those articles, but there might be some to which he might take exception.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I endeavored to draw a broad distinction between a treaty and legislation, between making articles free by treaty and by legislation.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That is an evasion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You may call it an evasion, I do not. I call it a frank, statesmanlike statement.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman is endeavoring to take credit elsewhere for being in favor of an exchange of the natural products of the two countries, but he is guarding himself all the time with this reservation, that unless it comes just in the way to suit himself,—and which he says cannot be given,—he is not going to admit the natural products of the United States so far as he can control it into the Dominion of Canada, although the Congress of the United States may express their willingness and may pass an Act admitting the products of the Dominion of Canada into the United States. If that is his position I wish the hon. gentleman to distinctly understand that we shall know him for the future, because we do not intend to allow him to take advantage of both sides of the question. We shall know henceforth that although the hon. gentleman is expressing his readiness for free exchange of products he is throwing difficulties in the way.

Mr. HESSON. I hope the Finance Minister will hold the position he has always held in this country of fairness and independence, and I do not think that any threat coming from the other side of the House will very likely change his views. In reference to the imposition of duty on corn, I wish to say that there is another consideration besides that for the House. That duty has had the effect of reserving our market for oats and peas and the coarser kinds of grain. Hon. gentlemen cannot help seeing the difference between a treaty and between an Act of legislation in this House. By a treaty we can say to them: If we take off the duty on corn, will you give us an equivalent in another direction? If by an Act of legislation we remove the duty on corn, it means leaving our market exposed to the Americans and getting nothing in return.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It means getting cheaper corn.

Mr. MULOCK. We could get in our barley.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman must take the ground that we are not producing the corn and the cornmeal, and the people must pay the duty.

Mr. MULOCK. Let me ask you one question?

Mr. HESSON. I am sure there is not a gentleman in this House who does not understand the position the Minister takes on this question, as to our legislation here and by one stroke this House wiping out the tariff imposed on grain, which we have felt in the interests of the country in the past, and which I hope the people of this country will maintain, we will be leaving our markets exposed to be flooded from the other side. By a treaty we can get something in exchange. They may under a treaty give us their market for free fish if we take the duty off grain, but if you do so by an Act of this House you expose the markets of the whole country simply to gratify gentlemen who will censure the Government afterwards for acceding to their wishes and get nothing in return.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Never.

Mr. HESSON. I venture to say it is so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is really a terrible thing to have such a censure pronounced by an old time supporter of the Government on the policy of the Government for the last ten years. Does not the hon. gentleman see that according to his argument nothing could be more absurd than the policy of the Government for the last ten years since this offer has been on the Statute-book?

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to ask the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) if the United States produce anything that can be used in substitution for Canadian grown barley, more particularly the best kinds of bay barley.

Mr. HESSON. I think not.

Mr. MULOCK. Well that answers the question at once as to who pays the duty.

Mr. JONES (Halifax).

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Life is too short to settle that question now.

Mr. MULOCK. I know the party on the other side is not agreed as to that question of duty. I heard the member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) insinuating and suggesting that the Canadian people are paying the duty on barley going into the United States. What does the Minister of Finance say on that question?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not say anything.

Mr. MULOCK. I remember that in 1878 when the Premier was in Opposition he drew a very beautiful picture of the Canadian farmer paying the duty on barley. Does any one know what was the policy of the Administration on the question we are discussing to-night? Why will they not admit us into their secrets? A little while ago during this very Session, the Premier said that he was not going to allow the Americans to pick and choose, and they had got to go the whole hog or none. The Premier said that and all his followers said it after him, and the Conservative press in Hamilton, Toronto and Montreal, all said that the Americans must accept the whole statutory offer or nothing at all, but they had hardly finished their tune when the Premier changed his tune.

Mr. MITCHELL. He got a telegram from Washington.

Mr. MULOCK. Yes. I want to ask the Finance Minister if the policy of the party which he represents is going to be changed every day and every hour by some Bill that may be introduced into Congress, and are we to be imitators of the people of Congress, or are we to consider the interests of the people of Canada? If it is in the interests of the people of Canada that we should have enlarged and freer trade relations with the people of the United States in natural products, let us not adopt this narrow policy now proposed, which will, at all events, have the effect of preventing the farming community of Canada obtaining a free market in the United States for some of their cereals; more particularly barley. If that is not what the Minister is aiming at it is where he is going to arrive. He is preventing the American people placing on their Statute-book any offer to Canada.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Ours is to be a sham offer.

Mr. MULOCK. Yes, it is practically a sham offer, and there do not appear to be two members on the other side who have the same opinions on the question. The member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) who I suppose is on the borders of going into the Cabinet, now says he is against placing meats on the free list. If that be the case I hope he will vote against the motion.

Gen. LAURIE. I deeply regret to have heard that the Government were not prepared to take into consideration at the present time, the free importation of corn. I fully realise of course that revenue must be raised, but I do sincerely regret that there is no present indication showing of any desire to put corn on the free list.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Vote against it then.

Gen. LAURIE. With regard to voting; when the time for voting comes I shall vote as I think proper. At the same time the Minister of Finance states that it is a matter which rests with Parliament. I wish to say that I shall be most happy to support him in any resolution that he will bring forward when he considers Parliament is ready to deal with this question. I think the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) has expressed the proper view in regard to this question. I do think it is a matter of extreme importance to the people living in our Province that grain should be placed on the free list. I do not think, however, that it is necessary we should have it in those resolutions, because in placing it on those resolutions we would have it on the free list, without any corresponding benefit for it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Not at all.

Gen. LAURIE. That is my view at all events.

Mr. BORDEN. I am glad to find my hon. friend from Shelburne (General Laurie) has experienced a change of heart since 1879. In 1879 we had a colonization committee sitting in this House from day to day. That hon. gentleman did not hold the responsible position which he now holds as a representative of a constituency in this Dominion, although he held as he does now, a very high military position. At that time the committee were endeavoring to obtain evidence on which to base a National Policy, and before that committee my hon. friend was called as a witness. A number of questions were put to him as to the effect of a duty on corn and cornmeal on the farming industry of the Province of Nova Scotia, and he replied to one and all of these questions by saying that the duty on cornmeal would not at all be opposed to the interests of any class in the Maritime Provinces. I, as a member of the committee, pressed him on that point. I said that as a representative of a county in the western part of Nova Scotia. I believed that it was very important to the farmers there to have this article free for fattening, but he persisted that it was not. In fact, he said that a duty would stimulate the introduction of coarse grains, which would be quite as good for the farmers as corn. Now, Sir, I find that the hon. gentleman has changed his mind. Is it because he has become a representative of a constituency in Nova Scotia? At any rate, I am glad to find that he has changed his mind, and has come to the support of those who have been for years endeavoring to induce the Government to take the duty off cornmeal. I am glad to find that I, who brought this subject last winter to the attention of the hon. Finance Minister, who kindly promised to take it into his consideration, have in the gallant general an able ally, and I have no doubt that in the near future we shall be able to secure that change we desire, the removal of the duty from cornmeal.

Gen. LAURIE. The hon. gentleman is rather flogging a dead horse. He states that in 1879 I was prepared to advocate a duty on cornmeal. I am now speaking of taking the duty off corn, and I pointed out that the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) had expressed my view, that we might well keep the duty on cornmeal, but take the duty off corn, and so encourage the grinding of corn in our own country.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Finance Minister stated it was the confirmed policy of both parties in this House to favor reciprocity of trade in natural products. We have certain friends in the United States who are fighting strongly for more extended trade relations between that country and Canada, and I think it is exceedingly unfortunate that at this juncture the hon. Minister of Finance should have considered it his duty to give our friends there a slap in the face.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. McMULLEN. He is doing it by taking from the free list an article that we declared to be free of duty, and he is placing us in such a position that we shall not be able to reciprocate if they put it on the free list. I think it is unfortunate that he is taking this retrograde step at such a time.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. Without entering into the question of the advisability of interchanging the articles produced here with those produced in the United States, my view is that the present is about the first occasion since this Act of ours has been on the Statute book, that the American Government have shown any disposition to reciprocate in any of these articles. The Americans, in the Bill before Congress, place a number of articles on their free list, as to which they are willing to reciprocate, and they have left out, not accidentally but by design, certain articles that to my mind, is equivalent to saying, we do not think it is to our interest that those articles should go on the free list; and if that is the American view, the passing of this Act is simply the withdrawing of the balance of those articles which they have said to us they will not reciprocate in, and I think it is the true and statesmanlike position for us to occupy to leave those articles for the further consideration of Parliament.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). There is no doubt that we in the Maritime Provinces are a unit in favor of the removal of the duty on corn, and I believe our people are just about as anxious to have the duty taken off cornmeal.

Mr. GILLMOR. I said that.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). But it seems that for the purpose of protecting a small number of people in Ontario who raise corn, the rest of the Dominion should be saddled with that duty, and at the very time proposals are being made in the United States in favor of reciprocity, we withdraw these items from the standing offer. I have listened attentively to the hon. Minister of Finance as to the difference between a treaty and legislation; but in regard to natural products it seems to me that we should maintain the same position that we did before, if we expect our neighbors to meet us with legislation that may culminate in a treaty. But it seems to me that the Government are taking the present course, either for the purpose of raising a revenue or because it is part of the National Policy that reciprocity must be subordinate to it, although the party supporting that policy profess to be in favor of reciprocity in natural products.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman speaks of this duty as having been levied in the interest of Ontario. It may be that the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec expect to receive some consideration in this matter. But I would ask the hon. gentleman and all the hon. gentlemen from the Maritime Provinces to recollect that the House in years past voted $150,000 to aid the fishermen.

Mr. MITCHELL. My hon. friend from Lambton, deserves commendation for the interest he has taken in an article in which I have taken some interest. If there is an article in which he is deeply interested it is petroleum, and I notice that in the Mills' Bill petroleum is made free. If the Government were to take the duty off that article, they would confer a great boon on the Maritime Provinces and Eastern Canada generally.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. They would not have put it in the Mills' Bill, without good cause.

Mr. FISHER. I would like to endorse the remarks of the hon. gentleman for Prince Edward with regard to seed corn, and I trust the Finance Minister will take it into his favorable consideration.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is a new question and we will consider it.

Motion agreed to.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved :

Section 10 of the said Act be hereby repealed and that items 592 and 781 of schedule O of an Act respecting the duties of Customs, chapter 33 Revised Statutes of Canada, 1886, be repealed, and the following substituted in lieu thereof.

592. Coffee, green, except as herein provided.

781. Tea, except as hereinbefore provided.

I may state that that change is for the purpose of dropping out what is now quite surplusage—that is section 10 of the Act which has entirely lost its force in consequence of legislation in the United States. It does not affect any change in the tariff.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). While I do not dispute the legal view of the Minister of Justice, it seems to me there would be no harm in having a provision that the proclamation continue in force. My own opinion in looking over the matter carefully, is in accord with the view of the Minister of Justice. Still there is some doubt, and it would be better by some clause just to leave that proclamation in force.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are tea and coffee free altogether?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, a duty of 10 per cent. on tea from the United States remains, but this legislation which is surplusage is removed for the purpose of taking away what has lost its significance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In what way does it lose its significance?

Mr. BOWELL. Having repealed the clause of the law which gives the Government power to impose a duty of 10 per cent. on tea from the United States, it becomes necessary to amend the items in the free list which affected coffee and tea, which read as follows:—"Tea, except as hereinbefore provided by section 10 of 49 Vic., cap. 33." The proposition is to make the items read: "Coffee, green, as hereinbefore provided." This leaves coffee, green, free, except when imported from the United States. Precisely the same remark applies to tea. These changes are necessary in order to prevent difficulty in the interpretation of these clauses.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do I understand that coffee or tea when imported direct from the place of production are free?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. But if they come from Great Britain, France or the United States they are subject to a 10 per cent. duty.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; only when they come from the United States.

Motion agreed to.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved:

That the excise duty on spirits manufactured from raw or unmalted grain used in combination, in such proportions as the Department of Inland Revenue prescribes, with malted barley taken to the distillery in bond, shall be the same as that on spirits manufactured exclusively from malted barley.

That when any substitute for methylated spirits is supplied to any manufacturer in accordance with section 233 of the Inland Revenue Act, the price thereof shall not exceed the actual cost with the addition of 15 per cent.

I may state to the committee the explanation of that is this: When the Inland Revenue Act was framed only two kinds of spirits were made—first from raw grain and second from malt. The former were allowed to use up to 10 per cent. of malt, though in practice the amount barely exceeded 4 per cent. This was duty-paid malt. The latter used malt entirely and in bond. Hence to put them on a footing of equality 2 cents a gallon extra was charged as spirit duty as an offset to the malt duty levied on the grain distillers. Last year a distillery was started in Halifax, which did not come exactly under either of these definitions, as they proposed to use 15 to 25 per cent. malt and the remainder raw grain. Section 130 of the Inland Revenue Act established a duty on the raw grain spirits at $1.30 a gallon and on the malt spirits at $1.32 a gallon. As the distillery at Halifax used a greater percentage of malt than was allowed to the raw grain distilleries the rate of $1.32 a gallon was established by the Department as the duty on the spirits produced there and this duty has always been collected and the object of the resolution is merely to remove any doubts which may arise as to the proper duty to be collected on such spirits. There is no increase in duty. The duty remains the same, but this removes a doubt that might arise in that connection.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Why does the hon. gentleman specify barley. The spirits made in Ontario are entirely made from Indian corn.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will not affect that in the least. It only removes a doubt arising from the effect of the different portions of the grain and malt duties.

Mr. MULOCK. I thought there was to be no change in the duties this year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no change in customs duties, but there are two or three in excise.

Mr. MITCHELL. Are there any changes?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If my hon. friend will allow me to read the resolutions, he will see.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have asked a simple question, and I want a civil answer.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The last thing in my mind would be to treat my hon. friend with anything except marked courtesy.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have not had much of that lately from you.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I simply thought that, by reading the resolution, I might give him the information better than I could state it. The first resolution is:

That the excise duty on spirits manufactured from raw or unmalted grain used in combination, in such proportions as the Department of Inland Revenue prescribes, with malted barley taken to the distillery in bond shall be the same as that on spirits manufactured exclusively from malted barley.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the provision if it is made from potatoes?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It does not affect that at all. It does not touch the manufacture from potatoes or from corn.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the Department of Inland Revenue issue a general declaration in reference to these preparations?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There does not seem to be any statutory provision as to the manufacture of alcohol from roots.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is another question. The second resolution is:

That when any substitute for methylated spirits is supplied to any manufacturer in accordance with section 233 of "The Inland Revenue Act," the price thereof shall not exceed the actual cost with the addition of 15 per cent.

The explanation of this resolution is that these methylated spirits have hitherto been manufactured by the bonded manufacturers, and the Department of Inland Revenue has had suspicion for a lengthened period that these spirits, the duty on which is 15 cents a gallon, have been largely used for potable and other purposes to which only pure spirits, duty $1.30 a gallon, should be applied. It is intended to withdraw the privilege of manufacturing the methylated spirits from the bonded manufacturers and to place the supply under the control of the department, who will supply wood alcohol or wood naphtha to varnish makers and others. The 15 per cent. added to the cost is to pay for handling, and to prevent the loss which would otherwise accrue from withdrawing the duty collected on the manufacture of methylated spirits.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are you going to undertake the manufacture of alcohol in the Inland Revenue Department?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The details will be fully explained when my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue introduces the Bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I hope you will not object to our discussing the matter on the Bill.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, the fullest explanation will be given then. The third resolution is:

That the excise duty on cigarettes whether the product of foreign or of domestic leaf tobacco, weighing not more than three pounds per thousand, shall be 60 cents on every pound; and on those weighing more than three pounds per thousand, $1.00 per pound.

The explanation of this resolution is that the present inland revenue duty upon cigarettes is the same as on cut tobacco, viz., 20 cents per pound. The duty on cigars is $6 per thousand weighing say 12 pounds to the thousand, or say 50 cents per pound. The growth of the cigarette business has been seriously threatening the cigar revenue, while costing much more for stamping, &c. It is proposed to raise the duty to 60 cents per pound on ordinary cigarettes and to $1 per pound on those weighing more than 3 pounds per thousand. The customs rate is $2 per pound and 25 per cent.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does that increase the duty on cigars?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; but on cigarettes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). How much revenue will you get out of it?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not a great deal.

Mr. MULOCK. Is this to increase the consumption of cigars?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will have that effect. The 4th resolution is:

That the excise duty on all cigars, whether the product of foreign or of domestic raw leaf tobacco, when put up in packages containing less than 10 each, shall be $7 per thousand.

The explanation of that is that the present duty is $6 per thousand and the extra dollar per thousand is to pay for the increased number of stamps used upon the smaller packages.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the resolutions take effect from and after the 2nd day of May.

Motion agreed to.

Resolutions reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2.20 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 2nd May, 1888.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BANK ACTS AMENDMENT.

Mr. THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 119) to amend the Bank Acts, chapter one hundred and twenty of the Revised Statutes. He said: The object of the Bill is to make a further slight change in that portion of the Act which enables certain producers and manufacturers to issue warehouse receipts which will be as security in the hands of the persons loaning money upon them. The provision of the Bank Act enumerates various manufacturers who shall have the right to issue warehouse certificates, manufacturers of timber, and various others, and I propose to add distillers. I may mention that one of the principal reasons for this change is the provision of the statute requiring the gauging of spirits, which makes it necessary that distillers should carry a very much larger stock than they otherwise would do, and it seems reasonable that such large concerns should have the right to issue warehouse receipts.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPREME AND EXCHEQUER COURT ACTS AMENDMENT.

Mr. THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 120) to amend the Supreme and Exchequer Court Acts chapter one hundred and thirty five of the Revised Statutes. He said: The object of the Bill is simply to enlarge the right of appeal in reference to British Columbia and the North West Territories. There is a provision in the present Act with reference to appeals from Maritime Provinces, giving appeals in some cases where the amount is above a certain sum, even though the action did not originate in the Superior Court. It is desired to extend that provision to British Columbia, and to provide some system of appeal in reference to the North West Territories. The provision for appeal which I propose to make with reference to the North West Territories, is that by leave of the Supreme Court, or of a judge thereof, an appeal may be allowed from the decision of the Supreme Court of the North West Territories, although the matter may not have originated in the latter Court.

RIVER ST. LAWRENCE IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. DAVIES asked, 1. What is the amount of the advances made by the Government to the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal for the Lake St. Peter and River St. Lawrence improvements, up to this date? 2. What is the total amount of interest on such advances? 3. What part of such interest has been repaid by said Commissioners to the Government? 4. What was the expenditure of the Harbor Commissioners for the calendar year 1887, apart from expenditure on capital account? 5. What was their net revenue for same year? 6. Does this expenditure include any, and what expenditure, in the harbor of Montreal? 7. What amount now remains unexpended of the sums authorized by the Act to be advanced the Harbor Commissioners for the completion of the Lake St. Peter channel, and which amount the Government, in the resolution submitted by Sir Charles Tupper, ask for authority to expend? 8. What is the estimated amount yet required to complete the widening and deepening of the channel in Lake St. Peter and the River St. Lawrence?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. 1. The amount of the advances made by the Government to the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal up to this date is $2,725,504.10. 2. The total amount of interest on such advances to the 30th June last was $794,028. 3. All of the interest above referred to has been paid. 4. The expenditure of the Harbor Commissioners for the calendar year 1887, apart from expenditure on capital account, was, according to the statements made by them to the Government, $327,290. 5. Their net revenue for the same year, $289,885. 6. They divide their expenditure as follows:—$220,123 as applicable to the harbor, and $107,187 as applicable to the channel. 7. The amount unexpended of the sums authorised, which the Government asks for authority to expend on the channel, is $279,495.90. 8. The Harbor Commissioners estimate that it will take the whole of this amount and $20,000 additional to deepen the channel to 27½ feet at low water, and that to straighten and widen it so as to make it easier of navigation, would cost say $200,000 more.

QUEBEC HARBOR.

Mr. DAVIES asked, 1. What amount has been advanced by the Government to the the Quebec Harbor Commissioners for the purpose of constructing the Lévis Graving Dock, up to date? 2. What is the total amount of interest accrued thereon, and how much, if any, has been repaid the Government? 3. What amount has been paid towards the sinking fund? 4. What amount has been paid out of capital by the Quebec Harbor Commissioners to the Government for interest and sinking fund on the bonds deposited with the Finance Minister as security for advances made by the Government on account of harbor improvements in Quebec and the tidal dock at the mouth of the River St. Charles? 5. What amount has been actually paid to the Government by the Quebec Harbor Commissioners for sinking fund on their bonds?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. 1. The amount advanced by the Government to the Quebec Harbor Commissioners for the purpose of constructing the Lévis Graving Docks, up to date, is $338,000. 2. The simple interest thereon payable in advance from 17th December, 1878, to 19th April, 1888, amounts to $204,454.32, of which no part has been paid. 3. Nothing has been paid towards the sinking fund on such advance. 4. The amount paid out as capital by the Quebec Harbor Commissioners to the Government for interest and sinking fund, on the bonds deposited by them with the Finance Minister as security for advances made by the Government on account of harbor improvements in Quebec and a tidal dock at the mouth of the River St. Charles, is estimated at $493,706.64. 5. The amount actually paid out of their revenue by the Quebec Harbor Commissioners for sinking fund on the last mentioned bonds, is, so far as can be ascertained, $98,621.59.

CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION AT CINCINNATI.

Mr. LAURIER asked, Is it the intention of the Government that Canada should be represented at the Centennial Exposition to be held at Cincinnati, and opened 4th July next?

Mr. CARLING. It is not the intention of the Government to be represented at the Exhibition.

THE PUBLIC DEBT.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to-morrow to consider the following resolution:—

That in addition to the sums now remaining unborrowed and negotiable of the loans authorised by Parliament by any Act heretofore passed, the Governor in Council may raise by way of loan such sum or sums of money, not to exceed, in the whole, the sum of $25,000,000, as may be required for the purpose of paying the floating indebtedness of the Dominion of Canada, and for the carrying on of the Public Works authorised by the Parliament of Canada; such sum or sums of money to be raised in accordance with and under the provisions of that portion of chapter 29 of the Revised Statutes of Canada relating to the public debt, and the raising of loans authorised by Parliament, and the sum so raised hereunder to form part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada. The rate of interest on any loans raised hereunder not to exceed four per cent. per annum.

Motion agreed to.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

RETURNS AND PAPERS.

Mr. LAURIER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I beg to enquire whether the papers to be placed on the Table of the House, with respect to the disallowance of railway charters in Manitoba, have been printed and will be distributed to members before the discussion on the resolutions is entered upon?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We are pressing the printers to have the papers printed immediately, and no doubt they will be distributed without delay.

Mr. LAURIER. Will the Government also bring down papers with respect to disallowance in British Columbia?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Were they asked at the same time?

Mr. LAURIER. Not so far as I am aware, but they would properly belong to the discussion.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We will bring them down as well.

Mr. McMULLEN. Up to the present time 92 orders have passed the House for returns since we met on 26rd February. Only 27 returns have been brought down. The Government have intimated their desire to have the business of the House closed in about two weeks, and the condition of business in the meantime, as evidenced by returns brought down, is in such a state that it is impossible for the Opposition to discharge their duties efficiently if they are not supplied with the information asked. I moved a resolution asking for a return of fees paid to counsel in the case of the Queen vs. St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company, but the return has not yet been brought down. Out of eight orders I moved myself only one return has been brought down, that in connection with the Strathroy post office. Only three returns a week have been submitted. I should like to know whether the Government's intention is to furnish the Opposition with the information they have asked, or not?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The returns are being brought down as rapidly as they are prepared. Some of them require a great deal of work and they cannot be brought down at an earlier period. They are brought down each day as they are ready—I do not know whether they are three, four or five a week. I know I have brought down a number, as other Ministers have done. But the hon. gentleman may rest assured that our attention is given to this matter, that the returns are brought down as rapidly as they are ready, and orders for their immediate preparation have been given in the different departments. However, if the hon. gentleman will send me a memorandum of any particular return he requires, I will make special enquiry about it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I should like the return in the case of the Queen vs. St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company; also the correspondence in relation to the establishment of a model farm in the North-West.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. If the hon. gentleman will send me a list I will notify the different departments, because the Government are as earnest as hon. members in obtaining these returns as rapidly as possible.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is a little unreasonable in the matter. I moved for a return three or four years and it took two years to bring it down—it was in relation to the Grand Trunk. The hon. gentleman may get the returns next year; he need not hurry.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 60) to amend chapter twenty-seven of the Revised Statutes, respecting the Department of Public Printing and Stationery.—(Mr. Chapleau.)

WAYS AND MEANS.

Resolutions adopted in Committee of Ways and Means (May 1st) were read a second time and concurred in.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 121) "An Act to amend chap. 33 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, respecting the duty of Customs."

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 122) "An Act to amend chap. 34 of the Revised Statutes respecting Inland Revenue."

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

ADVERTISING COUNTERFEIT MONEY.

Mr. THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 108) respecting the advertising of counterfeit money. He said: It may be somewhat useful to the House that I should make a short statement explaining the reason for introducing this Bill, because it is designed to put an end to what has been a very great evil, and is a growing evil in Canada. For some years past persons in the United States who are known as "confidence men" have been in the practice of obtaining in the Mercantile Agencies lists of the names of persons who do business in different parts of Canada, and who are supposed to be of somewhat weak financial standing, and of addressing to those persons circulars in which they intimate to them that at a low price they will furnish them counterfeit notes, either of the Dominion of Canada, or of the United States, and they are accustomed to send on the requisite specimens of the "goods," as they call them, which they are willing thus to sell. Those goods which they thus offer are described by various names. Generally they are called "green goods," referring to the color of the notes, and sometimes they are called "cigars" and sometimes "green cigars." Various other quaint names and expressions are made use of which convey plainly enough to the person receiving the circular the intimation that if he sends his money he will get a supply of counterfeit notes. Although it has not been generally known that this practice prevails to any very great extent, the fact has been ascertained that every week from the city of New York thousands of those circulars are sent into Canada. The result being, that in many cases persons are induced to enter into a correspondence, and the correspondence is followed very frequently by personal negotiations on the part of our people with these confidence men. The plan which is then pursued is this: An applicant for these "green goods" goes to a place indicated in the circular and he is shown, for his inspection, a bundle of notes which are in most cases perfectly good and finds that they are of a description which can easily pass current. He pays his money for the bundle of notes which is supposed to be wrapped up or put up in a satchel, to be given to him or to be left at a place where he can call for it. He finds, after he has paid his money and when he seeks to obtain his parcel or his satchel, that rubbish—either sawdust or blank paper—has been inserted in the parcel instead of the notes of which he saw samples. So generally has sawdust been used that the whole business is called under the name of the "sawdust circular business." Efforts have been made by the police authorities of New York to put a stop to these practices, but the ingenuity of these confidence men is shown by the dexterity with which the efforts of the police have been evaded from time to time. I may say that one of the practices by which the persons engaged in this kind of business attract attention and persuade the public that the notes which they introduce are notes that are easy of circulation, is by inserting from time to time in the American papers false accounts of bank note plates having been stolen from the Treasury, by which the public are given to understand that the production of apparently genuine notes is a very easy matter, and the "goods" as they call them are thereby advertised as being more likely to appear genuine and easy of circulation. The business which I have referred to is carried on in many places and with occasional variations, but in some cases the person to whom the circular is addressed sends his money—and generally speaking the remittances are not very large—in answer to the circular, expecting to receive in return counterfeit notes, but he generally receives no answer at all and the money is thus lost. It is a significant fact that the leading operators in this business in New York are many of them known to be worth from $50,000 to $100,000. It has come to our knowledge within the last two years, that the business has been taken up in Canada, and that in two or three places in this Dominion the same operations are being pursued by swindlers of this description, who have come here for that purpose from the United States. A large number of letters which have been written by persons to whom circulars were thus addressed are in my possession, and answers dated from various points in all the Provinces of the Dominion, and indicating the disposition on the part of persons to whom those circulars are addressed, to enter into the nefarious operations which the circular invites them to begin. One of these I may read as a specimen of hundreds. Many of them are from persons holding good positions, and who are supposed to be not at all likely to engage in transactions of this kind. This letter is dated February 9th, of last year, and this person says:

"DEAR SIR,—I received your letter a few days ago, and am so busy that I could not attend until to-day.

"Please send me $25 (twenty-five dollars) worth of the goods by return mail, with instructions how to sell them. I am trading with the country people a good deal in the run of a year.

"I mean business. Send the goods as soon as possible and I will send you a post office order by return mail."

This is only one of many hundreds that are in our possession from various points in the Dominion. Some of these, I regret to say, are signed by persons holding very respectable positions, commercial and otherwise, some of them municipal officers, some of them justices of the peace, several of them public functionaries, from whom one would expect a very different answer. I may state as an illustration of the extent to which these operations are carried on in the United States, and the difficulty of detecting them, that a pamphlet has been issued in Washington on this subject, in which lists are given of the fictitious names which are used by persons engaged in this business. The way in which the letters get into the possession of the police authorities here is that the person engaged in sending these circulars, finds it necessary so often to change his address and his alias, that the letters very often miss him and go to the dead letter office, whence they are transferred to the hands of the police. At one part of this report, two pages closely printed are taken up with the aliases and changed addresses of one man who was engaged in this business; and the writer mentions that another notorious offender had 81 names and addresses, and that another party, whose right name is unknown, now has 136 different aliases. Under these circumstances, and in view of the fact that persons in Canada are engaged in these operations of sending out circulars as well as sending and receiving bogus money, it is proposed by this Bill to make both the sending of circulars and the agreement to receive the money criminal offences.

Mr. EDGAR. Can the hon. Minister tell us whether the present criminal law is not capable of reaching this class of offenders? Has it never been put into operation against them? Is entirely new legislation required? Perhaps he will also kindly tell us, as there seems to be reciprocity in this business, at any rate between the United States and Canada, whether there is legislation on the subject on the other side.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think special legislation is required, especially to cover the offence of agreeing to receive. The Bill now before the House is very like one which is being adopted in the State of New York. I think the New York Bill does not make it an offence to agree to receive such goods, but otherwise it is similar.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time, considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 89) to amend the Dominion Elections Act, chapter 8, Revised Statutes of Canada.—(Mr. Thompson.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. THOMPSON. I propose to move a substitute for this clause, making the electoral districts of Algoma, in the Province of Ontario, and Cariboo, in the Province of British Columbia, exceptions to the provision that the nomination of candidates at a general election shall be on a particular day.

On section 2,

Mr. THOMPSON. I propose to substitute for this section the same provision that is contained in sub-section 2 of section 14 of the present Act, but limiting the provision to the electoral districts of Algoma and Cariboo. It changes the Bill in order to make exceptions of those two districts.

Mr. EDGAR. This only applies to general elections. Do the Government not think it would be well to provide that one and the same day should be fixed for bye-elections as well, when there are more than one?

Mr. THOMPSON. That suggestion, I think, is hardly applicable to the present section.

Mr. BARRON. I have an amendment to propose to the proposed amendment of the hon. Minister of Justice, and to which I referred slightly the other day. I think it is an amendment which must present itself favorably to the minds of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. I think it is hardly right or proper that it should be in the power of the Executive, whether it be composed of hon. gentlemen on that side of the House or on this, to bring on the elections when there are vacancies during a recess just when it suits their particular purpose, and perhaps in some cases bring them on rather hastily without due consideration of the interests and rights of the people in any electoral district, or in others so slowly that for some considerable length of time the constituency may be unrepresented. Now, in the amendment I intend proposing to the House, I have endeavored, as far as possible, to follow the spirit, if not the letter, of Imperial legislation, and hon. gentlemen in this House who seek to copy the English practice will be glad to know of that. I find that the practice in England in some respects is not unlike our own. There the Speaker acts upon the receipt of a writ to the effect that a member has been promoted to the House of Lords, or upon the certificate of a judge of an election being voided, or upon the certificate of any two members of a vacancy having occurred. There, under the statute of George IV, I find that a period of fourteen days was allowed to elapse, during which time the Speaker was required to advertise in the London Gazette the fact of receiving notice of a vacancy having occurred in the representation of any constituency. Now, under a subsequent and amending statute, 24-25 Vic.—and to this statute I would like to draw the attention of this House, because it shows the spirit of improving legislation in England—the period of fourteen days was shortened to a period of six days; and if any hon. gentleman will look at the Act, he will see that the preamble recites the fact that it is necessary to shorten the time in order to expedite the bringing on of elections. Well, under that statute the Speaker is required, as he is required with us, on receipt of a certificate, immediately after that delay, to issue his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. Our statute provides also that the Speaker must issue his warrant “forthwith,” but in England I find the practice is to proceed as expeditiously as possible after the warrant reaches the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. That gentleman is at once required, on receipt of the warrant, to issue the writ. In fact, so important is it that he should do so at once, that any wilful neglect or any delay in the transmission of the writ to the returning officer is made a misdemeanor. Now, there is no such law as that here. As soon as a warrant here reaches the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, then the delays begin, and very serious delays, as we know, occur, so that I think the amendment I propose must present itself to the favorable consideration of hon. gentlemen in this House, who seek to copy as closely as possible the well established practice followed in the old country. Now, I will proceed to show the serious delays that have occurred here and the undesirability of continuing the practice which has heretofore existed; and I will ask the House to bear with me for a few moments while I show them the delays which have occurred in the issuing of writs in some particular cases, and I shall not go beyond this Parliament to seek for instances. In the case of Yarmouth, the judge certified to the Speaker on the 13th of August, 1887, but the writ did not issue until the 18th of November following. There was thus a delay of three months, because I presume that when the judge certified to the Speaker, the latter complied with the provisions of the statute, which is, that he shall “forthwith”—because “forthwith” is the word used—issue his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. I presume, therefore, that as soon as he received the judge's certificate, the Speaker acted upon it and issued his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. But, although the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery received the writ, as I presume he did as soon as the Speaker received the certificate from the judge, on the 13th August, 1887, the writ was not issued until the 17th October, 1887, or three months later. The delay, therefore, that took place was, no doubt, due to the Executive, in delaying the issue of the writ for a period of three months, and the election did not take place until the 15th December following. Thus, the people of the electoral district of Yarmouth were unrepresented in the Parliament for a period of four months. Now, take the case of Dorchester. In that case, the judge certified to the Speaker in August, 1887, but the writ was not issued until the 21st December following, being a delay of four months for which the hon. gentlemen opposite have to account. How was it that this period of four months elapsed after the warrant was issued by the Speaker to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery before the writ was issued? And the election only took place on the 7th January, 1887. Thus there was a period of five months during which that constituency remained unrepresented. I think the Government should account for that delay. They should also account for the undue haste exhibited in the case of the Shelburne election. In that case, the judge certified on the 9th November, 1887, and the writ was dated on the 18th November following, so that only a period of nine days elapsed between the time when the Speaker received the certificate from the judge and the issuing of the writ. How is it there was only nine days delay in that case and a delay of five months in the case of Dorchester? The result was that the delay in the case of Shelburne, between the time the judge certified to the Speaker and the time the election took place, was only one month and six days, whereas in the other two cases the delay was four months and five months respectively. Take the case of Gloucester, which is represented by the hon. the Postmaster General. In that case, there was still greater haste displayed, the judge having certified on the 3rd October, 1887, and the writ having been issued on the 5th October, 1887, so that it took only two days for the judge's certificate to reach the Speaker and the certificate and the warrant of the Speaker to reach the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and the time between the date of the judge's certificate and the election was only twenty-four days, as compared with four and five months in the first two cases I have given. Then, take the case of the county of Cumberland, in which only one month elapsed between the judge's certificate and the election. Take also the case of Haldimand. In that case the judge certified on the 15th October, 1887, and the writ was dated the 24th October, 1887, so that only nine days elapsed between the date of the judge's certificate and the issuing of the writ, and only 28 days altogether elapsed between the date of the judge's certificate and the election which took place on the 12th November following. Take the case of Victoria, N.S. The judge's certificate was dated the 17th October, 1887, and the writ was issued on the 28th October, showing a delay of only eleven days. And the election was held on the 21st November, 1887, thirty-four days thus elapsing between the date of the judge's certificate and the date of the election. Then, take the case of East Northumberland. The judge's certificate was dated on the 16th November, 1887. The writ was issued very hastily, it was issued within twelve days, on the 28th November, and the election was held on the 22nd December, 1887, only thirty-six days elapsing between the date of the judge's certificate and the day of the election. In the case of Prince Edward county, the certificate of the judge was dated the 9th February, 1888, the writ was issued on the 22nd February, 1888, thirteen days elapsing between the judge's certificate and the date of the writ, and the election was held on the 10th March, that is, thirty days after the judge's certificate. In West Middlesex, the judge's certificate was dated the 20th February, 1888, and it only took two days for that certificate to come to Ottawa by post in order to reach the Speaker's hands, and for the Speaker to issue his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and for the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to issue his writ for a new election; whereas, in the case of Yarmouth it took three months, and in the case of Dorchester, four months. Then, take the case of L'Assomption. The judge's certificate was dated the 3rd March, 1888, and the writ was issued on the 9th March, six days only elapsing, and the election took place on the 3rd April, 1888, only thirty days elapsing between the date of the judge's certificate and the election. Now, in those cases where the time has been short, it is a very peculiar coincidence that they are electoral districts returning members to support the Government; but, in those cases where great and serious delays have taken place, it is another peculiar coincidence that they are constituencies which send members here to support my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Laurier). If such delay is possible in one case, and such extraordinary haste is used in another case, it is evident that there should be some amendment to the law, and the amendment which I ask the House to adopt is the following:—

In the case of a vacancy happening in the House of Commons by the death of any member, or by a member accepting any office, or by a member resigning his seat, or by reason of the seat of any member being declared void under the Dominion Controverted Elections Act (except as in the next succeeding section is provided for), then and in every such case, the day for the nomination of candidates shall, in the electoral districts of the Province of British Columbia, and in the electoral district of Algoma in the Province of Ontario, and in those of Gaspé and Chicoutimi and Saguenay in the Province of Quebec, be within thirty days after the day when the Speaker or any two members shall have, according to law, addressed his or their warrant, as the case may be, to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery for the issue of a new writ to fill the vacancy, and in the other electoral districts of Canada be within twenty days after the day when the Speaker or any two members shall as aforesaid have so addressed his or their warrant.

The committee will see that that section provides for the case of all vacancies arising when the House is not in Session. It provides for the two cases, where the Speaker is required to issue his warrant, or, in the case of his absence or sickness, or when there is no Speaker, for two members to address a warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery. That is only in cases where the writ has to be issued by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on receipt of the Speaker's warrant, but there are cases where a writ has to be issued on the order of the House, and this amendment, if it went no further, would not deal with the cases where the writ has to be issued on the order of the House. Therefore, I have to ask the committee to adopt another section which I propose shall come immediately afterwards, in order to meet such cases as I have spoken about. Let me, for a moment, speak of the case of Russell, and the case of Kent, in order to show how delays have occurred, and how necessary it is to avoid these delays hereafter in any electoral district. In Russell, the Speaker issued his warrant before the 23rd February, 1888, and he so informed the House. The writ was issued on the 5th April. But, on the 27th March, the House ordered the writ to issue on the motion of my hon. friend from Quebec East (Mr. Laurier). It took eight days after this House ordered the writ to issue for the writ to be issued. Why was that delay? Hon. gentlemen sometimes say that they do not know who is to be the returning officer. We could very easily get over that difficulty if the law was altered so as to have permanent returning officers, but surely, when this House orders a writ to issue, it cannot be said that it takes eight days to communicate with the candidate, because I believe that is what the present Government does, as shown by their history in the past, to find who shall be the returning officer. At all events, in Russell it took eight days to issue the writ after the House had ordered that the writ should issue. In Kent we find the same thing. On the 28th February, the House passed a resolution that the report of Mr. Justice Osler should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. It took a month for that committee to report to the House, and what was done in that case? That is a delay which should not be allowed to occur again, especially when the House is sitting and the constituency, therefore, without representation in this House. However, the committee did report, and on the 27th March last, the writ was ordered to be issued; but in that case it took ten days for the writ to issue.

Kent is not so far away that the Government could not communicate with the gentleman who was running in the Conservative interest, and find out who was to be his returning officer, in less time than that, but it required ten days before that writ was issued. In the case of Russell, the order of this House was practically disobeyed for eight days, and in the case of Kent it was disobeyed for ten days. In order to meet a case of that kind, I propose to ask the committee to adopt this clause:

When a new writ for an election has to issue upon the order of the House of Commons, then and in every such case the day for the nomination of candidates shall, in the electoral districts of the Province of British Columbia, and in the electoral district of Algoma in the Province of Ontario, and in those of Gaspé and Chicoutimi and Saguenay in the Province of Quebec, be within thirty days after the day when the House of Commons shall have ordered the writ so to issue, and, in the other electoral districts of Canada, shall be within twenty days after the day when the House of Commons shall have so ordered the writ to issue.

I think, if these amendments are adopted by this committee, and by the House, they will be in the general interest of the entire country.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am not prepared to say that the hon. member's suggestions may not have a good deal of merit, and that some measure might not be devised to meet what he thinks is an uncertainty as to the time when the writ should issue and the elections should be held; but I do not think he has made out a case for the amendment which he has read. I understand his objection to be, in regard to the elections which have taken place since the general election, that undue delay has taken place in the issue of the writ and the holding of the elections, and his object is to prevent a recurrence of that delay. The hon. gentleman cited, irrespective of the two cases dealt with by the House, eleven cases of bye-elections and in nine of them he had rather to complain of precipitation than of delay. In the cases of Yarmouth and Dorchester, in both of which the vacancy occurred long before there was any probability of a Session of Parliament, he complained of the delay of four months in one case and three months in the other. In the other nine cases the hon. gentleman will remember the statement that in Shelburne there was a delay of but nine days; in Colchester, less than a month's delay; in Cumberland, a month; Haldimand, nine days; Victoria, eleven days; East Northumberland, twelve days, Prince Edward, thirteen days; West Middlesex, two days; L'Assomption, six days. If there was any other, I missed it from not hearing the hon. gentleman distinctly. But his statement to the House practically is this; that out of eleven cases with which the Government have had to deal, in nine of them they pursued a course that his amendment would direct us to pursue, and in the other two cases, the vacancies occurred at a time when there was no occasion at all for any haste in holding the elections. The hon. gentleman has stated that it seems desirable to follow the English practice upon this subject, but I think he has not quoted to the House any English statute bearing upon this subject, of the kind which he asks us to adopt. I think there are very good reasons why such a statute does not exist in England, and why it should not be adopted here. One reason appears to me to be this, that if we make the rule rigid, that the election must take place within a certain period, then the effect of such an enactment is to invalidate the election which does not take place within that period; in other words, to come down to details, that the Speaker should issue his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and if any misadventure should occur, or any miscarriage, through death of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, or his neglect, or his illness, or through failure of the postal connection, or through neglect of the returning officer, the election should not take place, or the nomination should not take place precisely within the twenty days which the amendment points out, then no election can take place. If the hon.

gentleman does not make it as rigid as that, he has to leave the matter still in the hands of the Government, subject, of course, to the responsibility which the Government has to this House. It seems to me, therefore, that it would be unwise to make the change, and that the hon. gentleman has not made out a case by the illustrations which he has cited.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman, in arguing against the proposition of my hon. friend, has also argued against the principles of the Bill. The same accidents which he says are possible in the cases referred to, in the amendment proposed by my hon. friend, might take place at a general election, and yet we do not refuse to provide for holding all the elections over the country on the same day, and the nominations on the same day, in a general election, because such misadventures may happen. The hon. gentleman says that we have not followed the plan of the English statute. Well, Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman seems to overlook the difference between our circumstances and those of the people of England. In the United Kingdom, the Government do not appoint the returning officers, the returning officers are named in the statute; the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is not controlled or interfered with by the Government that issue the writs. There is a duty imposed upon him by law, and that duty he is called upon to discharge. The hon. gentleman, therefore, will see that the difference between the position of the matter in England and this country arises largely from the action of the Government here in repealing the law which names certain parties as returning officers. The hon. gentleman will also see that the Government have no more right to name returning officers, and to interfere with the freedom of the people in holding an election, than they have to name for the people a candidate whom they shall be called upon to elect. There was a period in the history of England when the Crown named the candidates, and called upon the electors in various parts of the United Kingdom to support the candidates so named. But that is not the law or practice in the United Kingdom at the present time, and it ought not to be the law or the practice here. The hon. gentleman says my hon. friend has not made out a case. Why, my hon. friend pointed out two cases where the writs were delayed for upwards of three months. Now he says that there are only two cases out of some ten or twelve. Why, two cases out of ten or twelve are a very large percentage, quite sufficient to influence the constitution of this House. There is no more reason for the hon. gentleman retaining the power that he possesses under the law, to perpetuate an abuse, or create an abuse which did not before exist, than there is to continue the old abuse of non-simultaneous elections. Sir, they have not simultaneous elections in England at the present time. And why not? Because no abuse has ever grown up. The writs are issued as a matter of course, after Parliament is dissolved. The Crown does not interfere, and can exercise no control over the issue of those writs. No Minister would for a moment be permitted to interfere with the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery in the discharge of his duties. Those writs are issued as a matter of course. The elections where the Government is likely to be successfully opposed are just as likely to come on first as those where the Government are likely to be successful in carrying the constituency. So there being no abuse, no change has taken place in the law. Why were elections made simultaneous here? Because the hon. gentleman who now leads the Government misused the powers of the Crown in this matter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, Sir.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says no; but I remember very well when the hon. gentleman, in a general election, held some elections in July and others nearly as late as the 1st of October. I remember, in 1867, when some elections took place in July, and my own election took place on the 17th September, and the elections in Nova Scotia took place on the 19th, when there was no supporter of the Government—except the hon. member who is now Minister of Finance—returned from the Province. I want to know why that was not an abuse? I want to know why, in 1872, when the general election was spread over more than two months, was there nothing to complain of? I want to know whether it was not this abuse of the authority of the Crown, this interference with the liberty of the people in the choice of representatives, that did not lead to the demand for simultaneous elections? There can be no doubt whatever on that point, and the hon. gentlemen, driven from their old ground, now undertake to perpetuate an abuse, or create an abuse, of another sort. And why is it? Why, that—although the law provides that the warrant of the Speaker shall issue forthwith under certain circumstances, that a writ shall issue immediately by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, the hon. gentleman undertakes to render that law nugatory and of no force by the usurpation of the power to appoint returning officers. If the hon. gentleman refuses to appoint a returning officer, of course it is impossible for the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to discharge his duty. The House may order the writ to issue, but there is nobody to whom that writ can issue, for the Government have usurped control of the appointments, and it is impossible for the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to discharge his duties. There has been an abuse in that respect. We have had an instance in Kent. Why did the hon. gentleman refer that matter with regard to the election in Kent, and the report of the judge, to the Committee on Privileges and Elections? It was done to secure delay, it was to prevent the writ being issued. They said: We must have the evidence published, we want to know what the case is. I told them that the evidence did not indicate the views expressed by the judge, and the Minister of Justice found it so. They said: We want to know what the evidence is, and the committee must judge. A whole month was consumed in printing the evidence. Then the hon. gentleman said: This committee has no right to examine the evidence, and criticise the decision of the judge; they would be sitting in review as an appellate court and overriding the decision of the judge, and therefore we have no right to look at the evidence and estimate the accuracy or inaccuracy of the judge's conclusion. We must accept his report, as a matter of course, as perfectly correct. So the position was taken that while a month was wasted in getting the evidence printed it was not to be looked at when printed. And then the matter came before the House. What then happened? The House ordered the writ to issue forthwith. Was that order obeyed? No. And why not? Because the First Minister and his colleagues, having repeated the law which named the returning officer, as he is named in England, usurped the power to appoint a returning officer to discharge the trust that the law had imposed on them; they failed to advise His Excellency as was their duty to do. When the House and the law says the writ shall issue forthwith, what right has the hon. gentleman to neglect to advise His Excellency to make the appointment at once? The law was set at defiance. Ten days were wasted. There was further procrastination; not until two months had elapsed from the date the vacancy was reported to the House was the writ issued. Yet the hon. gentleman says there is no abuse. Why, there were three months and a half in Yarmouth, four months in Dorchester, and six weeks in Kent, of delay. This is a monstrous condition of things. If the hon. gentleman persists in retaining the power to appoint the returning officer, he should indicate the individual for the five years, or for the continuance of the Parliament, and should appoint a returning officer for a Parliament. If such a course were followed there would be some one to whom the writ could issue. Why should there be Government interference at every turn in every election? The hon. gentleman knows that there has been interference, that there is a meddling exercise at every election held; he knows the people are wearied and disgusted with the delay, and that the election in Kent to-day is taking place at a time when every farmer is busily occupied with his spring work. The convenience of the public interests are as nothing in the estimation of the Government, so long as they can manipulate a constituency and use the power they possess for the purpose of party interest. If the Government do not want to accept the amendment of my hon. friend, let the Minister of Justice amend the Bill so as to secure the nomination by the Government of a returning officer during the continuance of the Parliament, and then there can be no meddling interference, then the writ will issue as a matter of course in obedience to the law to the party so indicated; but the Government now set the law at defiance. The abuses committed by Charles I, for which he lost his head, were not grosser than those that are being committed by the Government of the country to-day. If the people of this country had not been degraded and debauched by the conduct of the Administration, if their political independence had not been sacrificed by the conduct of the Government, they would no more tolerate such proceedings than the people of England would tolerate the interference of the Crown in matters which concern public affairs. The First Minister knows that he has prevented the free expression of public opinion at the general election from the course taken; he knows that he has prevented the free expression of public opinion in the constituencies where elections have been held since the general elections took place, and that system is being persisted in by the Government setting the law at defiance and refusing to advise the Crown immediately in order that the law itself may be obeyed. My hon. friend made out a strong case in favor of the amendment he has proposed, and the Minister of Justice has not at all answered the objections he made to the law as it now stands. Now abuses are being perpetrated, and we seek to have such an amendment to the law as will tie the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite and prevent those abuses being repeated. The proposition is a reasonable one, and the Minister of Justice, with his sense of justice, must be satisfied that there are abuses which should be corrected, and which I do not believe he is disposed to allow if he were in the position to take his own course.

Mr. THOMPSON. I listened to the hon. gentleman's remarks with a great deal of interest and pleasure, but my pleasure would have been increased if he had spoken to the Bill. Let me offer a few words in reply to the hon. gentleman's remarks on a matter which is not referred to in the Bill, the Kent election case, in regard to which the hon. gentleman appears to have utterly forgotten the leading facts on which he based his comments. It is not a fact that the printing of the evidence for the committee occupied a month. The committee were instructed by the resolution of the House to advise the House what course ought to be pursued in view of the report which the learned judge made upon that case. I hold in my hand the evidence on which the committee were asked to advise this House. It occupies 129 closely printed pages, and when the committee met and that evidence was in the hands of the chairman, not a member of the committee had seen it. I admit the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) was sagacious enough to be able to come to a resolution as to what advice should be tendered to this House, without reading the evidence.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I had read it,

Mr. THOMPSON. I had not and there were several other members who were in no better position, and they desired before passing judgment to see the evidence. I asked under those circumstances that the evidence be printed, for there was no other way of getting it into the hands of the committee, and instead of the printing taking a month, I venture to say, although I am speaking from recollection, it did not take six days.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman is altogether mistaken.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think one month was consumed from the time of the reference to the committee until they made their report.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Look at the date.

Mr. THOMPSON. The second observation I have to make with respect to the delay is that the decision of the committee in that case was such that delay was inevitable. The decision of the committee was, in view of the report the learned judge had made, that the time which had elapsed without representation of that constituency, to the date of the report, was sufficient disfranchisement. So that if the committee had reported earlier they would, under any circumstances, have advised a delay in the issue of the writ. The hon. gentleman's next comment on the Kent election case was that we had no right to hold the election to-day, when every farmer was busy with his crops—perhaps a very serious inconvenience, perhaps not a greater inconvenience than holding an election at a time of year when in that county not one-fifth of the voters could go to the polls on account of the condition of the roads. But in any case let me call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the amendment which he supports proposes a fixed date for the election, which cannot be averted or changed, notwithstanding the greatest inconvenience might arise to the constituency. The hon. gentleman's next argument in favor of the amendment was that the Government should have no right to appoint a returning officer, yet the amendment does not contain one syllable on that subject, it simply fixes the day within which the election, if an election is to take place, must take place, and it leaves the question of returning officers precisely as it is under the present law. Now, as I have said, if the election does not take place within that period we have to wait, not till after the twenty or thirty days which elapsed in some of those cases; not even for the three or four months which seems to have been an intolerable delay to some of my friends opposite; but we have to wait until Parliament shall pass a statute to meet those special cases. The hon. gentleman told me that I was arguing against my own Bill in stating the jeopardy of allowing an election to be entirely defeated by fixing a time within which delays take place. My Bill is entirely silent upon that subject. It has nothing to do with it whatever.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON. It does not mention the subject from beginning to end. The Election Act which I am amending, the hon. gentleman sees, contains provisions with reference to a general election which incurs that jeopardy, but only in relation to that part of it which requires an election to take place on one and the same day throughout the Dominion. And it is only liable to the jeopardies which exist between the issue of the writ and its reaching the hands of the returning officer. Within a certain number of days after he receives the writ he is to have the election, but the amendment proposes that beside that delay and jeopardy connected with the mail, if there should be any miscarriage between the time the warrant issues and the writ issues, the election shall be defeated.

Mr. THOMPSON.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman stated a moment ago, when he was addressing this House in answer to my friend behind me from Victoria (Mr. Barron), that he had made no case, because out of some ten or eleven bye-elections which had taken place delay had only occurred in the cases of Dorchester and Yarmouth and, that in every other instance the writ had issued without delay. But as there has been delay in two cases there might have been delay in all the other cases as well, and that is exactly what my hon. friend wants to prevent. Why should there be any delay at all in those cases and no delay in the other nine cases. At the present time there is no rule whatever. The writ may be issued at once as soon as the vacancy occurs, or it may be deferred for two or three months. There is only one rule as far as I can understand, and that rule has been put into practice, namely, the convenience of the Government. If it suits the convenience of the Government to withhold a writ it is withheld, and if it suits their convenience to issue it at once it is issued at once. Take the case of Dorchester, for instance. It is well known that they went around from door to door and knocked at this man's door and at that man's door asking if any one would be willing to sacrifice himself on the altar of his party. They found no victim; they waited two or three months and at last they had to let the election go by default and let my hon. friend the present member for Dorchester be elected by acclamation. In the county of Yarmouth they did the same thing, but they found a victim there to sacrifice himself and he was defeated. In the other cases when they found the chances were good, and the result proved their chances were good, they issued the writs immediately. My hon. friend's object is that there should not be a rule in an election for the convenience of the Government, but a rule which would act uniformly to the advantage of the Government or the Opposition, or to the detriment of one or the other. What reason can there be against this? Why not have the law declare that the writ shall issue on a reasonable delay and that there will be no undue favor on one side or the other. The hon. gentleman stated that the amendment of my hon. friend did not contemplate the appointing of returning officers, but the Government have told us again and again that they will keep in their hands the choice of the returning officers and that they will not trust the present officials, who by the nature of their office ought to be returning officers; that they will not trust the registrars or sheriff, because, as was stated some time ago by the Prime Minister, those men being appointed by a hostile Government might be hostile to the Government of the day. I think it is a very bad reason, but we cannot help it, and as it is so we must stand it. I appeal to the sense of justice (if there is any left on the other side), when they have to deal with friend and foe, why not have a uniform law? Why not declare the writ shall issue within a reasonable time? It may be that in one case it would work injuriously to the Government and that in another it would work in their favor, but at all events it would be even justice to all. You can provide for permanent returning officers, when the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery will know at once to whom he should direct his writ, and my hon. friend will be happy to withdraw his amendment if you do that. I do not see any better rule to have uniform justice than the one proposed in the amendment before the House.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says there is no such provision in his Bill by which accidents such as he hypothetically stated might arise, in the case of the amendment proposed by my hon. friend being adopted. Why, Sir, the very first clause of his Bill gives rise to the same possibility of misadventure. The Bill says:

"The Governor General shall fix the day for the nomination of the candidates at the election, and shall, at every general election, fix one and the same day for the nomination of candidates in all the electoral districts."

What if the writ should go astray? What if, before the writ reaches Cariboo or some other district, it should be lost? There is the same possibility of misadventure in that case as there is in the case where the time is limited. The time always has been limited. You say all the writs shall be returned before a certain day, when the writs are issued. There is such a provision, and you can make the time long or short, as the law stands now, within which the writs may be returned. Now, the objection of the hon. gentleman in that respect is really no objection at all. Does the hon. gentleman refer to cases in which this power that the Government holds in its hands has been abused? He says there are but two instances mentioned by my hon. friend. I draw his attention to another, the case of the Kent election. The hon. gentleman says there was no delay in the Kent election. The hon. gentleman forgets that a long time elapsed from the time that election was reported and when the evidence was printed. My complaint was this, and I have said sufficient to show that the reason for asking that that evidence should be printed was not a genuine reason, and was not the reason which influenced the Government and their friends in asking that the evidence should be printed. I have stated that the hon. gentleman himself, after that evidence was printed, refused to consider the evidence because he said we were bound by the decision of the judge and we could not go into the question at all, as to whether there had or had not been such corrupt practices as the judge reported. Why, Sir, if we were not at liberty to enquire into that fact there was no object in having that evidence before us, and yet there was a delay of nearly a month in getting that evidence printed. When it was printed the hon. gentleman refused to act upon it, and refused to consider it. When the report was made to this House and it was ordered that a writ should be issued there was still a further delay of ten days, because the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery could find nobody into whose hands that writ could be delivered. The statute says that the writ shall issue forthwith, and yet the Government nullified the provisions of the statute by refusing to name the returning officer. There are two ways in which that difficulty can be got over, that is to accept the amendment of my hon. friend, or let the Government name a returning officer during the continuance of Parliament in every constituency throughout the country. They have named returning officers at last election. Why do they not say: These parties shall be the returning officers until this Parliament is dissolved, and then the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery can issue his writ to that person without the interference of the Government at all. We have pointed out again and again on this side of the House that in England the Crown never interferes with the matter of the appointment of a returning officer, or never interferes with the issue of the writ. The Clerk in England does his duty, as he has sworn to discharge his duty; and as he is not allowed to do his duty, though he has sworn to discharge it, in this country, in consequence of the improper interference or negligence of the Government in advising His Excellency to appoint the returning officer. Now let the Government name a returning officer during the continuance of a Parliament, and then the law may be complied with. Then the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery may issue the writ as the law says he shall. While you agree to such a statute, you render it unworkable by reserving to yourself a dispensing power, such a power as one King in England lost his head for pretending to. The hon. gentleman shakes his head, but I say it is a gross abuse of the power he possesses; I say it is contrary to the obligation into which he has entered as an adviser of His Excellency the Governor General. Did he not swear to give His Excellency proper and true advice, to carry out the law of the land as it was intended by Parliament it should be carried out; and is it not violating the spirit of that law which says that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall issue the writ forthwith when he refuses to name the man to whom that writ can be issued? Why did you not advise His Excellency to appoint the returning officer the moment Parliament gave the order? We know very well why it was not done—because the hon. gentleman knows on whom he relies. He knows that those who assisted him to put that Act on the Statute-book are ready to wink at the misconduct of the Government on this question; and when we propose an amendment to the law to carry out the purpose of Parliament, he seeks to defeat that proposition, not because it is not reasonable or will not have the effect of securing a fair and just administration of the law, but because it will take away from him the power which he has abused, both in advising His Excellency and in disregarding the order of the House.

Mr. BARRON. The objection made by the hon. Minister of Justice to my proposed amendment is that delays might occur which would render it nugatory. That objection applies as much to his Bill as to my proposition. But the hon. gentleman could not have read the statute which he proposes to amend, for section 15 of it provides:—

"Whenever from unforeseen accident, delays, or otherwise, the proclamation hereinafter mentioned cannot be posted up so as to leave the required delay between the posting up of the proclamation and the nomination day, or whenever any candidate dies after being nominated and before the close of the polls, the returning officer may fix another day for the nomination of candidates."

That section will still be in force, and if there is any such occasion as the hon. Minister pointed out, the election can still be carried on.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) improved or strengthened his argument by his violence of language. It is very remarkable that whenever we are concerned with the franchise, or the appointment of returning officers, he is so strong in his opinion that he threatens us with losing our heads; but when he speaks so strongly, I think he has lost his head already. It is a new reading of history that Charles the First lost his head because a writ was delayed twenty days. The hon. gentleman says the Government have usurped the power of appointing returning officers. Well, it happens that the Government are authorised to appoint returning officers by the law of the land; it happens that it is a duty forced upon the Government by the law of the land, and they would be guilty of breaking their oath if they did not appoint the returning officers.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But you do not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We do recommend the appointment of the returning officers to His Excellency, and His Excellency has been pleased to appoint the returning officers that we recommend in carrying out the law of the land. But it seems to me that it answers no good purpose to enter into a general discussion as to whether the law was right or wrong with respect to the appointment of returning officers on this occasion, or the general principles under which elections are carried on. Now, if the hon. gentleman is anxious to alter the law, let him prepare a Bill and introduce it, and we will discuss it. It is too late this year to discuss it, but there will be four years before a general election, and the hon. gentleman who moves this amendment can make it a portion of that Bill. Meanwhile, I think the hon. gentleman should allow this Bill to go through. The hon. Minister of Justice says that he is not prepared to accept this amendment or to delay his measure for the purpose of making it a portion of it. I think the hon. gentleman, having expressed his views, had better reserve his amendment to be a portion of an Election Act which the hon. gentleman can bring down next Session.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Would the hon. gentleman explain the reason of the delay in the two cases of Kent and Russell.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think it is especially my duty as First Minister to look after the election lists.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Oh, yes, it is.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know whether my hon. friend interfered when he was First Minister. Perhaps my hon. friend thinks it was his duty; it is not mine.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I did not interfere; but I saw that the law was carried out. You did the reverse.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As I understand, the law provides that the writ shall issue forthwith. Everybody knows that the writ has not issued forthwith in a great many cases, for various reasons, and therefore the law is not obeyed. It is a matter of notoriety that in the case of the city of St. John, when its representation was vacated by the decease of my friend, the late Mr. Burpee, five months were allowed to elapse before that vacancy was filled, although the law provides that when the Speaker is notified of a vacancy, the writ should be issued forthwith to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and it is after the writ is in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery that these delays occur. Then, there are the cases of Haldimand and Chambly. In 1886, when it was desired to test the popular pulse, various reasons were given for delaying the election in Haldimand; it was impossible to have that election until the new voters' lists came into play, and certain serfs of the Crown should be included in it. But, although that was the case in Haldimand, the election in Chambly was hurried on before the new lists were prepared. It seems to me that where accidents of that kind occur, there is the greatest abuse—or if the hon. gentleman objects to that term, there is a remarkable irregularity, to say the least, in the course the Government have seen fit to pursue under an Act, which, as I understand it, was intended to secure the immediate filling of vacancies, and it was with the same object that my hon. friend's motion was proposed.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It seems to me that this is quite an important question. The only objection the hon. Minister of Justice has offered to the amendment is that by some accident the writ might not arrive in time; but it has been pointed out that section 15 provides for such an occurrence, and, as the hon. member for Bothwell has pointed out, that may occur in the case of a general election. Now, it seems to me the spirit of the Act requires that as soon as the Speaker is notified of any vacancy, according to law, he should at once issue his warrant, so that the vacancy may be filled up. The instant the warrant passes to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery the Government take hold of it, and, under the present system, can delay the election as long as they please. My hon. friend who moved the amendment has not gone beyond the present House, but in 1885, in the case referred to by the hon. member for South Oxford, the warrant of the Speaker was in the hands of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on the 12th July, 1885. On the 16th July, 1885, enquiry was made in the House of the Government as to whether the writ was issued in that case, and the only answer that the hon. Minister gave was that he would enquire about it, and he was enquiring nearly three months before he decided to issue the writ. It was nearly the end of September before the writ was issued. When, however, a vacancy occurred in the city of St. John, owing to the acceptance of office on the 30th October by the present Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, the writ was issued on that same day for the election in that constituency. It seems to me that the writ should issue within a certain specified time, say twenty days, as named by my hon. friend, after notice being received by the Speaker of a vacancy having occurred or of an election having been voided. Surely the Government could, without difficulty, appoint a returning officer in that time, and they would then carry out the spirit of the Act. We find that, in one case, the Government were able to name a returning officer within two days, and, therefore, it may be presumed that a delay of twenty days would be ample time for a similar purpose. In that case, there could be uniformity, whereas, to-day, the Government, when it suits them, may delay the election for an indefinite period, as they did in the two flagrant cases of Yarmouth and Dorchester. The hon. the Minister of Justice says that there was no Session of Parliament in the cases of Yarmouth and Dorchester before the elections took place, and that, therefore, the elections took place in ample time. But in the Chambly case the election was held in July, when there was no prospect of any Parliament being held until the following winter; and although the Franchise Act had been passed, the Government did not wait for the electoral list to be revised, but held the election in July, despite the fact, if the contention of the hon. the Minister of Justice is right, that there was not the slightest necessity to do so, because there was no probability of any Session of Parliament being held for some months. It seems to me that in justice to the electoral districts, and to carry out the spirit of the Act, there should be no delay on the part of the Speaker issuing his warrants and at once putting the machinery in motion for the purpose of having an election. Let a reasonable delay be given, and then the responsibility will fall on the Government, and surely, judging from past experience, there ought to be no difficulty in the Government carrying out their duty within the delay suggested by my hon. friend.

Mr. THOMPSON. The objection now is that in Chambly the writs were issued too soon.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Not so.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is really very difficult to satisfy hon. gentlemen opposite. In most cases, they complain of the delay being too long, but now they change their tune; and, after first taunting us with undue delay, they complain of too much haste. I would draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that this amendment would have compelled the election to be held in Chambly at once, contrary to the argument which my hon. friend has just presented that the Government ought in such a case to wait until the electoral lists were revised. I would just say a word to the hon. member for Bothwell with regard to my contention as to the effect of the evidence in the case of the county of Kent, because I am sure, had he spoken of the matter when it was fresh in his memory, he would not have said that my contention that we should wait for the printing of the evidence was insincere, in view of the fact that when the evidence was printed I held that the finding of the judge was conclusive and could not be reversed by this House. My contention was that we had no right to say from the evidence that the judge's finding was wrong, but that we were bound to read the evidence in order to be in a position to advise the House as to whether the corrupt practices which the judge said had prevailed in the election for that county were of so flagrant a nature that we should disfranchise the constituency. We did refer to the evidence for the purpose of making the report which we made to the House; and if we had not referred to it, we could not have conscientiously come to the conclusion we did.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman certainly has forgotten the discussion that took place and a portion of his own report. He proposed that we should declare that the constituency had been sufficiently punished by being deprived for a time of representation in this House. I pointed out that the evidence disclosed the fact that the constituency did not deserve to be punished at all, and the hon. gentleman's contention was that the judge having said there was reason to believe corrupt practices had extensively prevailed in that constituency, we were bound to accept that statement as true, no matter what the evidence might show. That was the position of the hon. gentleman, and that was his justification for putting that provision in the report, and refusing to accept any amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have said that was my contention, and I say again we are not at liberty to refer to the evidence in an election case for the purpose of revising the decision of the judge, but can only refer to it for the purpose of advising the House whether the corrupt practices that prevailed, prevailed to such an extent as to justify steps to be taken to disfranchise the constituency.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman does not meet my statement squarely. I do not say that we should sit in judgment and review the decision of the judge, but the hon. gentleman embraced in his report the inferential statement that the constituency was corrupt and deserved punishment, but that it had been sufficiently punished by the delay that had already occurred in its representation; and when I pointed out to him that there was not a tittle of evidence to show that the constituency deserved punishment, he said we had no right to look at the evidence in that matter, but to look only at the report of the judge. That was the position he took. Therefore, it was not the evidence that the hon. gentleman was examining in order to make his report, but it was the decision of the judge that the House had before the evidence was printed at all. The hon. gentleman says we are hard to please on this side. He says that we complain about the haste in issuing the writ in Chambly and the delay in issuing it in Haldimand. The hon. gentleman has forgotten the circumstances connected with those elections. The late member for Haldimand died while Parliament was in session, and it was proposed here that the writ should issue. The Speaker issued his warrant, if I remember rightly, and the hon. gentleman, when we asked him why the writ did not issue, declared that there was no necessity for any haste, that the new voters' lists were being prepared, and that it would be wrong to hold the election before that list was completed. Parliament he said, had by its legislation already declared that the existing voters' list was imperfect, it had altered the qualification of electors, and we must wait for the new list. That was the declaration the first Minister made on behalf of the Government. The Government set the provision of the law at defiance, and justified their course in that matter on the ground that a new voters' list was being prepared, and that, until that list was prepared, there ought not to be an election. That was the hon. gentleman's position. It was either right or it was not right. Some two or three months later there was a vacancy in Chambly, and the hon. gentleman disregarded the rule which had been laid down in the case of Haldimand, and ordered a new writ to issue at a time when the old voters' list was the only one under which it could take place. Both these cases occurred at the same period of time, and what we are now calling the attention of the Minister of Justice to is the fact that there was one rule and policy adopted in the county of Chambly and another rule and policy in the county of Haldimand. Both of these could not have been right. One or the other rule should have been adhered to, and we now propose to make such a change that the discretionary power the Government possess and have abused, as has been shown very clearly, should no longer be left in their hands, and I think it is clear that it ought not to be left in their hands, and I think we are not very hard to please. We point out what the abuse is, and what the remedy is, and we do not want the abuse which occurred in Chambly or the abuse which occurred in Haldimand to be repeated. We wish to see the law amended and made what it ought to be, so that justice may be done and that, when elections are held, they may fairly reflect the public opinion of the constituency.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). My hon. friend the Minister of Justice thought I complained in regard to the election in Chambly. He said that the reason why the elections in Yarmouth and Dorchester were delayed was that there was no Session of Parliament at the time, and there was no necessity for holding an election, but the election in Chambly was held in July, the vacancy having occurred at about the same time as that in Dorchester, but the Government issued the writ in the first case and not in the other.

Mr. THOMPSON. My argument was not that an election should not be held in summer, but that there was no ground for complaint if it was not.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Surely, if the Minister of Justice will not accept this amendment on any other grounds he will when he sees how it must distress the Finance Minister to witness this lack of fixity of purpose on the part of his colleagues.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have not seen it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Surely the hon. gentleman will understand that, when a certain rule was adopted in regard to Chambly, and an entirely different rule prevailed in Haldimand, we had good reason to propose a change. If there was ever any case in which the power and authority of the Government were abused for a party advantage, it was in the different treatment they accorded to Chambly and Haldimand.

Amendment of Mr. Barron negatived.

On section 7,

Mr. EDGAR. That is the section which was allowed to stand. Is it not proposed to make any alteration in that?

Mr. THOMPSON. I think not. The reason it was allowed to stand was, as I said the other day, that I thought that the substantive part of the legislation regarding the qualification of farmers' sons and owners' sons, was in the Franchise Act, and I still think it is.

On section 9,

Mr. THOMPSON. This section was allowed to stand at the suggestion of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) in order to make it clear that there should be no counting of the ballots by the returning officer unless the certified statements or copies cannot be obtained.

On section 13, sub-section 3,

Mr. THOMPSON. This was allowed to stand at the suggestion of the leader of the Opposition, who thought there should be a trial by the indictment.

Mr. LAURIER. I objected to that section because I thought it was leaving too great powers in the hands of the justices of the peace. As a rule, without any offence to justices of the peace, I would not be disposed to trust them with these very large powers. I believe it would be better to follow the spirit of the Act, and to make the offence punishable as all other offences are punishable under the Act.

Mr. BARRON. It is quite clear that under that section there is no right of appeal whatsoever.

Mr. THOMPSON. I was going to suggest that there is a Bill relating to summary convictions before the House, and in it I will endeavor to provide for an appeal in such cases.

Mr. AMYOT. I beg to move in amendment to this Bill the Bill which I introduced some time ago—Bill No. 2. It is as follows:—

Paragraph (b) of section nine of "Dominion Controverted Elections Act," is hereby amended by striking out the following words after the word "days" in the second line of the said paragraph: "after the day of publication in the Canada Gazette of the receipt of the return of the writ of election by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery," and substituting the following: "after the day fixed for the nomination, in case the candidate or candidates have been declared elected on that day, and in other cases thirty days after the polling day."

My object is to make uniform the delays in contestations, 30 days after nomination day, when the election is by acclamation, and 30 days after polling day when there has been an election. I do not think there can be any objection to this. I do not want to discuss the matter, as the House is fully informed of the facts.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think the hon. gentleman will see on reflection that his Bill is not a safe one. I will read paragraph (b) of section 9 which he proposes to amend:

"The petition must be presented not later than 30 days after the day of publication in the Canada Gazette of the receipt of the return of the writ of the election by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery."

He strikes out those words and says:

"After the day fixed for the nomination, in case the candidate or candidates have been declared elected on that day, and in other cases 30 days after polling day."

Now, it seems to me, from the examination I have given the hon. gentleman's Bill, that if the returning officer, for any reason, delays his return beyond 30 days after nomination day or polling day, he would put it beyond the power of either party to controvert the election.

Mr. AMYOT. The returning officer is bound by law to make his report within a certain delay, which delay is fixed, I think, by the statute. He is bound to do it, and we have never seen an instance where he has not done it.

Mr. THOMPSON. But if he does not do so, he does not now deprive any party of his remedy. But it is a very dangerous thing, I think, to allow him to prevent the return from being controverted by petition.

Mr. AMYOT. We can make a special proviso for that, so as, except in cases where the returning officer will not comply with the law, to fix another delay for that case. I think it is fair that the delay for contestation should be the same for all the members. It is not fair to give 40 days or 60 days to one and only 30 days to another. Let us make a uniform delay for every one, and have equal justice.

Mr. MITCHELL. It appears to me that my hon. friend's intention in his Bill is very good, and if the working of his Bill is not such as to meet the difficulty, if any difficulty presents itself to the Minister of Justice, he can easily frame a Bill which will carry out what my hon. friend asks for, namely, that every person shall have the same time granted to him to enter a contestation or to meet a contestation. It is very easy to frame a clause to meet the difficulty, if the Minister of Justice feels there is a practical difficulty in what my hon. friend presents. He wishes to avoid the recurrence of what took place at the last general election. It is patent to everyone that gross injustice was done to some members, that some of us were not gazetted for three weeks and some for nearly four weeks, after the returns, and some of them coming in the same day were gazetted in the next Gazette; in other words, there was a fortnight or three weeks of opportunity for contesting the election as against some gentlemen, while most of the ministerial candidates were gazetted almost immediately. If this Bill does not meet the case, the Minister of Justice can prepare a clause that will meet the difficulty.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is no difficulty in carrying out the clause as proposed by my hon. friend. The hon. gentleman proposes that the period within which an election may be contested shall be thirty days counting from the day of election. It is contended, however, that it is possible the returning officer might, contrary to law, delay the returns of any particular candidate for thirty days. I do not see how it is possible. The returning officer is sworn to discharge certain duties; he must within a certain number of days declare a candidate elected, then four days are given for an appeal to the county judge for the purpose of having a recount. The whole of the proceedings taken must be taken within less than the thirty days, and, that being the case, such an abuse as the hon. gentleman suggests could hardly arise. Certainly it never could arise if the Government were to allow certain officials to act as returning officers. So far as I know, since the Union in 1867 not a single instance has occurred in which the period of thirty days elapsed before some candidate seeking election was declared elected. It may be that if the hon. gentleman wishes to take abundant security further amendment may be required by providing that in any case where the returning officer has failed to declare some candidate elected within thirty days a week or more time may be allowed for petitioning. But certainly thirty days covers a much longer period than is required by law to have one or other candidate declared elected, even where an appeal is made to the judge and a recount is had. If the hon. gentleman thinks the time is not sufficient it might be extended to thirty-five days.

Mr. O'BRIEN. My suggestion is that the time should count, not from the day of election in case of a contest, but from declaration day, when the vote is summed up and the returning officer makes his declaration. That should be the time from which the period allowed for filing a petition should be dated.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think the matter requires to be very carefully considered, and several Acts, both the Election and the Controverted Elections Act, will require to be remodelled to carry out such a principle as has been advocated. I would remind the House of the proceedings after the holding of the poll. We have first of all, after polling day, the delay until declaration day, then the summing up of the votes, then the delay of six days and possibly a recount in the meantime as well. The petition is to be a petition complaining of the undue return. If we are to confine the practice to the Controverted Elections Act, we must give a fair chance to those desiring to petition, and all those proceedings, by the amendment, would have to be taken within thirty days. The return goes to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, perhaps on the twenty-eighth or twenty-ninth, or even on the thirtieth day, and there is certainly no time to prepare a petition or even to know what the return is against which the party will petition, in the short interval remaining unexpired. I stated to the House at an earlier period of the Session that, although it had been intended to introduce a Bill relating to the Controverted Elections Act and to suggest several important changes—and this is, of course, an important change, but I refer to other important changes—it was decided that it would be better for several reasons to wait until another Session, and no great harm could accrue by that delay, inasmuch as the probability was that few bye-elections would be held in the interim. I will, if the hon. gentleman concurs in the suggestion, let this matter stand until that has been done, the Acts compared and the necessary changes made, and in the meantime I assent to the principle suggested and embodied in the hon. gentleman's Bill for having a fixed time at which all returns shall take effect irrespective of any discretion on the part of any officer whomsoever. As regards the suggestion of the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien); that would be quite feasible if it were not that the petition has to be against, not the declaration of the returning officer, but against the return which he makes, and which is really not made until at least six days after declaration day. That, however, could be remedied by making a provision to this effect, that on declaration day or after the six days the returning officer should make such a return, and should make it immediately so public that every person desiring to petition would have ample notice of what the return was, and from that date we might have a fixed period, and a short period too, in which the election may be protested.

Mr. EDGAR. I must congratulate the Minister of Justice on having assented to the principle of the proposed amendment. I would point out, however, that even more changes will have to be made in the law. I do not find anything in the law rendering it obligatory upon the Government to fix any particular day for the return of the writ. There are uncertainties which must be removed. If we are going to fix a day by statute within which the petition against the return must be made, we must begin by fixing a date in the statute within which the return itself must be made.

Mr. AMYOT. In view of the declaration of the Minister and his promise that he will introduce a Bill next Session, I withdraw the amendment.

Bill reported.

FORFEITURES FOR TREASON AND FELONY.

Mr. THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 88) to abolish forfeitures for treason and felony, and to otherwise amend the law relating thereto.

Mr. EDGAR. I surely think the Minister of Justice must see that this Bill interferes in a most marked degree with the rights of the Provinces, because it undertakes to deprive them of their property. In this Bill the Government proposes that the land which by the law to-day when it has been escheated in some cases becomes the property of the Provinces, shall not escheat and shall not become the property of the Provinces. I surely think that cannot be a proper function for this Parliament to assume. It may be said that because it is escheated on account of crime, that that would make some difference. I do not apprehend that it does. It has been decided by the Privy Council in the Mercer case that escheated land goes to the Provinces, because escheats are royalties. It cannot be contended that escheats for crime are not royalties and do not go to the Crown as royalties, and to the Provinces consequently. I know that, in the Province of Ontario at any rate, that when before the decision of the Privy Council they were legislating about escheats, they excepted escheats for crime from their legislation; perhaps, having some doubts then as to the law on the subject. I think that those who took the provincial view, thought that escheated land belonged to the Provinces by reason of the tenure of the Crown. When a failure of heirs arose the land would revert on account of the tenure to the Crown. Probably for that reason they left out in the legislation in Ontario, reference to escheats in the case of crime. But, as I said, the Privy Council has distinctly decided that escheats belong to the Provinces as royalties. Take section 2 of this Bill. It says:

"Subject to the provisions of this Act and from and after the passing thereof, no confession, verdict, inquest, conviction or judgment of or for any treason or felony or felo de se shall cause any attainder or corruption of blood, or any forfeiture or escheat, provided that nothing in this Act shall affect the law of forfeiture consequent upon outlawry or any forfeiture in relation to which special provision is made by any Act of the Parliament of Canada."

I surely think that is taking away the property of the Provinces, and the Act seems to interfere in another respect most distinctly with provincial rights. There is provision made in this Act for the administration of assets. Section 8 provides:

The Governor in Council may, if to him it seems fit so to do, commit, during pleasure, the custody and management of the property of any convict to an administrator to be appointed in that behalf; and upon any determination of such appointment, either by revocation or by death of any such administrator, a new administrator may, from time to time, be appointed; and every such administrator shall, upon his appointment, be and be deemed to be the successor in law of the former administrator; and all property invested in, and all powers given to such former administrator by virtue of this Act shall thereupon devolve to and become vested in such successor, who shall be bound by all acts lawfully done by such former administrator during the continuance of his office; and the provisions hereinafter contained with reference to any administrator shall, in the case of the appointment of more than one person, apply to such administrators jointly.

Now I think if there is anything that belongs to the Provincial Government at all it is the right to regulate matters of administration, and I think for that reason the Bill in those respects, at any rate, is not within the jurisdiction of this Parliament. There are portions of it which, however, are different and do not bear on the rights of the Provinces.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not propose this evening to go on with the Bill in the Committee of the Whole House. I will avail myself of the opportunity of going into committee to answer the objections which the hon. gentleman has made. They only relate to certain features of the Bill, and I think I can satisfy the hon. gentleman that the Bill is entirely within our jurisdiction—that we are dealing with the property of the Crown, after having relinquished our right to forfeit—dealing with the property of the criminal in respect to which the Crown has the right of ownership, as we can relinquish the forfeiture for crime. That property, which is of right ours, we propose to administer in a certain way for the benefit of the convict himself. That is the principle that underlies these provisions.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Can the Crown restore the forfeiture? I recollect that some years ago in New Brunswick a party was pardoned, and subsequently an Act of the Local Legislature was necessary to restore his property.

Mr. THOMPSON. By this Bill we propose to give up the property.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman, in this second section, misuses the word "escheat." Forfeitures and escheats are two different things. Mr. Blackstone, in his commentaries, points out that when there were allodial estates, and when there could not be any property except in the individual owner, there is nevertheless forfeiture. The doctrine of escheats was of very much later growth; but even in this country in cases for forfeitures for crime, they never could be more than forfeiture of the interest of the party, that is, forfeiture of the interest of the tenant in fee, not forfeiture of the property. The jurisdiction as to escheated property is necessarily in the Local Legislatures; but I think that decision of the Privy Council does include forfeitures as well as escheats. However, that matter can better be considered in Committee than in a discussion on the second reading of the Bill. I merely mention the fact that the hon. gentleman uses the word "forfeiture" properly, but the word "escheats" improperly in the Bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. By another name it would smell as sweet, and we can change it if necessary. Yet, I am not willing to admit that I use the word improperly, because my authority for it is the English statute, of which this is an exact copy.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But there is this difference: that in the United Kingdom the whole power is vested in one body.

Mr. THOMPSON. But the expression is there used in reference to the forfeiture which results from felony.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I think the position taken by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) would surprise most lawyers, that this Parliament, in dealing with the criminal law, has not itself power to decide what the penalties shall be, and that by the decision in the Mercer case escheats do not go to the Crown. The hon. member for Bothwell's playing upon the words escheat and forfeiture strikes us as really a mere verbal and technical criticism. These words are certainly used in the ordinary sense, as the hon. gentleman will find them in any law book.

Mr. TISDALE. I think that if this House has the power, it ought to prevent any such cases as the Mercer case occurring again. There were descendants of the man whose property was in dispute. We have a large building in Toronto, which has been erected at the expense of a private individual for the benefit of the Province. I think if this House can do anything to prevent any Province taking property in that way, it should do it.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

Committee rose.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

UPPER OTTAWA IMPROVEMENT COMPANY.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew) moved that the House resolve itself into committee on Bill (No. 20) relating to the Upper Ottawa Improvement Company.

Mr. BRYSON. I desire to ask that this Bill be left over until it is reprinted. Several gentlemen who are absent to-night would like to place themselves on record in relation to this Bill, and at their suggestion I make this request.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). This Bill has been two months before the House. It was fully discussed in the committee, as were all the amendments made to it, and it seems to me that it would be unnecessarily delaying the work to have the Bill stand over.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee (Mr. Small in the Chair).

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This proceeding is irregular. The law provides that the Deputy Speaker, who is called the Chairman of the Committee, shall take the Chair whenever he is in the House.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Very well, I will take the Chair.

The Committee passed the several clauses and the preamble of the Bill.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER called on Mr. Small to take the Chair.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This is again irregular. The Deputy Speaker must remain in the Chair; and as he cannot report to himself, the Speaker must be called in. No hon. member can be appointed Chairman of the Committee of the Whole while the Deputy Speaker is in the House, and as the Deputy Speaker cannot report to himself, the Speaker must be called in.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. When the Deputy Speaker is in the Chair he cannot very well act as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and then get up and report to himself.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Certainly not, and the Speaker must be here to receive the report. The clerk says that is not the English practice, but look at our own Rules which we have made for ourselves. The Rule says that the Chairman of the Committee shall be called to the Chair whenever he is present. Now, the Chairman of the Committee is present, and is called to the Chair. He, of course, cannot report to himself, but the Speaker must be here in order that he may report to him.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Rule is that the Deputy Speaker, if he is in the House, must take the Chair; and once he does so, he can call on any one else to take it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let us send for the Speaker.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is impossible that the Deputy Speaker should report to himself, and the Speaker is not present. Therefore the Deputy Speaker must call on an hon. member to take his place as Chairman of the Committee in order that he may receive the report of the committee.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The proceeding is altogether irregular, and contrary to our Rule.

Mr. SMALL then took the Chair and reported the Bill, which was read the third time and passed.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 102) respecting the Central Ontario Railway Company.—(Mr. O'Brien.)

House again resolved itself into Committee.

Arts, Agriculture and Statistics $147,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I wish to state that we propose to drop the item "for expenses in connection with Dominion Exhibition, $10,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Why is the hon. gentleman dropping that?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We thought it was not necessary to incur that expenditure this year.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) You are not going to contribute anything to that?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why was it put in?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was put in the main Estimates before it had been properly considered, and it was reconsidered afterwards.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would suggest whether it would not be just as well to apply that amount, or more if necessary, to a proper representation of Canada at the Cincinnati Exhibition. The hon. gentleman knows that there are an immense number of Canadians in the United States, and he professes to be anxious to promote trade relations between the two countries.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is only sometimes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And, if he would assist the exhibition of Canadian products at Cincinnati, it would do a great deal towards promoting more intimate commercial relations between the two countries. Of course, if the hon. gentleman is opposed to that, such a policy would be objectionable to him, but, if he is favorable, as he professes, to more intimate trade relations, there is no way in which he could assist it better than by giving an opportunity for Canada to exhibit her products at that exhibition. Even if he or his leader is opposed to that now, they have changed their views so often this Session that, perhaps, we may expect them to be in favor of it when the time comes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is one difficulty, and that is that we have no authority from the Crown recommending such an expenditure.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Certainly not.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You were merely suggesting how we might avoid the difficulty of having this $10,000 left on our hands.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman knows that there is no difficulty whatever in getting the authority of the Crown for this expenditure; and therefore, if he has any better objection to offer, we should know it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I see that last year, though the amount voted for the care of archives was $6,000, hon. gentlemen expended about $4,200 in excess of the grant. I think the House should have some information upon that.

Mr. CARLING. This amount is for collecting historical records and manuscripts, of which there are now upwards of half a million volumes arranged, bound and ready for reference. The volumes are constantly referred to for settling disputed points. The archivist reports the vote insufficient, and for this reason it is impossible to begin copying documents in Paris. Dr. W. F. Poole, president of the American Historical Society, in his report of a visit to Ottawa in September last, made officially, to the Society of Librarians of North America, describes the Canadian archives as the most valuable collection for historical purposes on the continent.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not objecting to his taking this small vote, but I was objecting to the Department spending nearly double the amount that Parliament voted for a specific purpose, and when money is expended in that way, it amounts to this, that it is only a farce for us to go through the form of voting money at all. If we vote a sum of $6,000, and they spend between $10,000 and $11,000, the reason for going into Committee of Supply seems to be rendered nugatory.

Mr. CARLING. I think it is the practice, if any particular vote is over-run, to take the balance from another vote. I believe the money was carefully expended, and, if necessary, I can get the particulars.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have no doubt that the amount was expended, and I am not objecting to the expenditure, but I am objecting to the principle which is involved. I do not think the hon. gentleman is justified in withdrawing from another sum voted for a specific purpose, any amount to apply to this. The whole principle is wrong. I have no doubt that the money was spent, or it would not be in the Auditor General's report, as it is.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I see that C. C. Chipman is down for $400 in connection with the archives. How does that come about?

Mr. CARLING. That is not in this year.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). No, but last year it was in, and I think it was stated that there was an appropriation of $1,000 extra for this purpose. Yet we find that C. C. Chipman has drawn $400 out of this fund, and perhaps that may be the reason why the expenditure of 1886-87 amounts to so much more than the sum appropriated.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that the arrangement previously was that Mr. Chipman had $400 a year in connection with the supervision of this work on the other side of the Atlantic, and the hon. gentleman will see that it disappears from the vote of this year. It had nothing to do with the $1,000 which was voted to that gentleman, and which was for an entirely different purpose. It was for the very extraordinary duty that has been thrown upon him in connection with the exhibition in London. The $400 was paid to him by the Department of Immigration for the supervision of and constant attention to this work in the Archives Branch.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is this Mr. Chipman the gentleman who was in the office of the High Commissioner in London?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, he is the same person.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Then he received his salary under another head as private secretary to the High Commissioner?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, he was not private secretary to the High Commissioner?

Mr. LISTER. What position did he hold?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He held the position of accountant and assistant secretary in the High Commissioner's office.

Mr. LISTER. At what salary?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. At a salary of $1,800, and this was $400 added.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I did not hear what explanation was given why the vote had been $6,000 and the expenditure $10,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The explanation given by the Minister of Agriculture was that an unusual amount of work was thrown upon the archivist, who was extremely anxious to carry on a considerable amount of work. In fact it has been very extensive indeed. This amount was taken from the bracketed vote, as the hon. member will see, but it was thought as there was sufficient money provided in this resolution (No. 45) to cover the expenditure, it was taken so that they could go on with this work that Mr. Brymner was very anxious should be done during the year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think that we have ever considered that when these votes for a distinctly different purpose were bracketed, it was right to transfer one to another. I think it is a very objectionable practice. I have always objected myself to bracketing.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think it would be better to avoid it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But where you state distinctly, so much for one purpose and so much for another, then it is very objectionable to remove a vote from one to the other.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no doubt about that, and I have no doubt my hon. friend will see that it does not occur again.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Was any authority taken by Governor General's warrant or anything else?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No. It was held by the department that there was enough in the total vote to allow for an excess in one branch, and this amount was taken; but I quite agree that it is not a good practice, and I am quite sure the Minister of Agriculture will see that it does not occur again.

Mr. CARLING. I may tell the hon. member that this was for agriculture and statistics, and I believe it has been a practice in the Department of Agriculture, not only last year, but for many years, and during the time the hon. gentleman was Finance Minister, I am told by the officers of the department that when a sufficient amount was voted and it overran, they would take it for another vote.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not recollect whether the hon. gentleman is right that the abuse may have prevailed before, but I think it is distinctly an abuse. I do not remember at this moment anything of the kind that the Minister of Agriculture mentions, but it may have occurred. Where such things were brought to my notice, I always insisted on a separate vote being taken, but it is possible that one or two occasions may have occurred.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No doubt the practice is contrary to the rule at the present time. The old English practice, of course, was to vote the subsidy in a lump sum. Mr. Downing was the first Chancellor of the Exchequer who introduced the present practice, and from his time down to the present, it has always been the practice, in the English House of Commons, to confine the expenditure to the appropriations made; and the sum that is asked for one purpose cannot be applied to another different purpose.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would ask the Minister of Finance whether these services were performed on the other side of the water, or here in Ottawa?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They were performed on both sides. I may explain to my hon. friend that Mr. Chipman, who was appointed to the position of accountant and assistant secretary of the High Commissioner's office in London, was necessarily required when I was called back to the position of Minister of Finance, and remained still charged with the administration of the duties of the High Commissioner's office in London. My hon. friend will see that it was almost indispensable that I should have the services of a gentleman who was thoroughly familiar with the duties in both departments, and consequently I appointed Mr. Chipman my private secretary as Minister of Finance; and it would have been almost impossible for me to carry on, as I have done, the administration of both departments if it had not been for the valuable services of Mr. Chipman. I dare say my hon. friend knows that he is a man of exceptional ability, and of unwearied industry. He has served long in the various departments of the public service, in New Brunswick first, and subsequently in the Railway Department at Moncton, then in the Finance Department, and then in the Department of Railways and Canals. There are few gentlemen better acquainted with the duties of these various services. When Mr. Dewar retired he was appointed in his place to the position of accountant and also assistant secretary in the High Commissioner's office. I may say that in that position I had no private secretary. There is no charge for a private secretary in that connection. But when it became necessary for me to return as Minister of Finance, and I was still charged with the duties of administering the office of High Commissioner on the other side, it was absolutely indispensable that I should avail myself of the services of a gentleman who was thoroughly familiar with the duties of both departments.

Mr. COCKBURN. I had happened to be in London during the time of the exhibition, and was brought into very frequent contact with Mr. Chipman, and I can assure the hon. gentlemen opposite that there was no man on that side of the Atlantic who worked harder for the interests of Canada than did Mr. Chipman. I found him early in the morning and late at night, hard at work, and I know from personal knowledge that in the management of some things entrusted to him, he was the means of saving to this country several thousands of dollars. If hon. gentlemen knew his valuable services as well as I do, Mr. Chipman is the last man to whom they would grudge the small amount that is now being voted to him.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. TROW. No doubt Mr. Chipman is a very worthy officer. I found him so. I had the pleasure of being in the office of the High Commissioner, and found him very attentive to his duties, and no doubt a very worthy man. The only fault we find is that he is being paid sums under different headings, and it is difficult to ascertain how much he has been paid. I find he has received $1,799 in Immigration Department.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The $1,800 is his salary as accountant and assistant secretary in the High Commissioner's office.

Mr. TROW. I also find that he has been paid travelling expenses, $170; he received as private secretary, $250; travelling expenses again, $48.56; cab hire, $8.50, and $400 in connection with the archives, making a total of $2,862 already discovered. There may be other items that we have not discovered.

Mr. LISTER. Do I understand the Minister to say that he acted as his secretary while the hon. gentleman has been in Canada?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Since I left the London office. He received $600 a year as my private secretary.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. Minister has given us a very minute description of the ability and services of Mr. Chipman. I am sorry that I do not know of his services. It is quite new to me that he is such a desirable man, although I have no doubt he is a valuable man. Is that the gentleman who is brother-in-law to the present Lieutenant Governor of New Brunswick, Sir Leonard Tilley?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, I am sorry for that, because I would like to put in a word for him on that account. The hon. gentleman has stated that it became absolutely necessary, from the dual position he occupied as High Commissioner and Finance Minister, that he should have a confidential man as secretary. No doubt it was very desirable, that he should have a confidential man as secretary, but it is much to be regretted that my hon. friend should have attempted to occupy these dual positions, otherwise, perhaps, we would have avoided this charge of $600. But I suppose it has been paid, and we cannot get the money back, therefore the less we say about it the better. After the testimony that has been borne to the value of Mr. Chipman's services in connection with that exhibition, no doubt according to the ideas of the hon. gentleman, they entitle him to some additional remuneration. I can only say that from the first I opposed that enormous vote, which has swollen from the moderate sum which the Finance Minister stated at first to, if I am correct, over $100,000 for that exhibition in London. It is so much money thrown away, and I hope there will be no repetition of such squandering of the public money while the country's finances are in such a deplorable condition.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. gentleman give us my information in regard to the receipts from the Patent Department?

Mr. CARLING. The receipts from that department have increased very much indeed. Last year the gross receipts for patents and trade marks were $76,600, or $13,000 more than the previous year.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.). Will the hon. gentleman explain the manner of obtaining criminal statistics?

Mr. CARLING. The item of $4,000 is required for the collection of criminal statistics from every police court and magistrate in the Dominion, the remuneration being fixed by statute. The cost of the preparation of the returns for the year is included in the expenditure.

Mr. LISTER. Who make the returns ?

Mr. CARLING. The police magistrates.

Mr. LISTER. They have only cognisance of the convictions made before themselves. Is there any way of having returns sent by the clerk of the peace in each county ?

Mr. CARLING. I understand the returns are made according to a schedule in the Blake Act.

Mr. DAVIES. Partial statistics are of no use, and it is desirable to ascertain whether the present system places the hon. gentleman in a position to obtain statistics for all the Dominion.

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Have the Government given up the idea of contributing the usual amount of $10,000 towards the Dominion Exhibition this year to be held in Halifax ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is matter for regret that the contribution should have been made by the Government year after year when the Dominion Exhibition was held at other places and that it should now be dropped. It will be a matter of considerable disappointment to the people of Halifax that the exhibition will not be held there this year. They have been making considerable preparations under the expectation that the usual grant would be made, and as it had been held in other places in previous years there was a reasonable expectation that it would be held at Halifax this year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was with extreme regret that the Government dropped the vote ; but the hon. gentleman will see that if we are to economise we must commence somewhere, and we felt this was an expenditure which we could, without any very serious injury to the country, forego this year.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Perhaps the Minister would explain the working of the system in connection with health statistics, for which $10,000 is asked. I have been unable to see that this amount is usefully expended. I observe that $10,000 is still asked, although last year only between $6,000 and $7,000 was expended.

Mr. CARLING. These are returns obtained for the different cities and towns in the Dominion from health officers appointed by the municipal authorities. These returns are placed in the records of the department, and a report is issued every year.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Will the Minister tell me how this health officer appointed by the municipality obtains his information ? What instructions are given to him by the Government, and what duties are imposed upon him, so that the reports may be somewhat reliable ? Are there any directions given to those health officers as to their duties ?

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman of course will find that, if he refers to the annual report and the certificates of the medical officers which are in the report issued by the department every year.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Pretty nearly every municipality in the Province of Ontario has a board of health now. Have you given your officers directions to avail themselves of that information, and to get information from those various boards ?

Mr. CARLING. An Order in Council was passed some years ago limiting this information to cities and towns of 5,000 inhabitants and above, and we avail ourselves of the health officers of the cities and towns for this information.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). It appears to me that we are not getting that information that we ought to, when we are asked to vote $10,000 for this purpose. The Minister knows very well that all the duties those health officers perform are merely by their going to the sextons and copying from the sexton's book the number of deaths or burials that took place there. As far as the department is concerned they perform no other duties whatever and we are asked each year to grant $10,000 for that.

Mr. CARLING. It is true none of those officers are appointed, except the municipality have by resolution appointed a health officer.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). All they do is to go to the sexton and obtain information as to how many were buried there. They may not obtain full information, because people who have died in a particular locality may be buried elsewhere. We might just as well not spend a single dollar, for all the reliability that can be attached to those reports. It is a waste of money, and it is evident that the Government are not making any effort whatever to have this branch made efficient. It has now gone on for a number of years. We were told at first that it was merely experimental, and that it would be in a few years of importance to the country in reference to health statistics. Many thousand dollars have been spent upon it, and I would ask the Government to-day wherein can they point to the benefits accruing from the policy of the department in this respect. I say there are no benefits whatever. The information is of no use to us, because we cannot rely upon it, on account of the manner in which those officers discharge their duties. It would be much better to strike out the item altogether.

Mr. CARLING. The information gathered from those different municipalities is published monthly, and it is very much sought after by the press and published all over the Dominion, giving the death rate of each city and town. I think it is important to have the information. It might perhaps be fuller, but the established rule has been that no place under 5,000 inhabitants could give the information because it had no health officer appointed. If a health officer is appointed in a town of less population, we have not stood strictly to the 5,000, as we are anxious to get the information. I think the amount paid those officers is not extravagant. I see in the town of St. Thomas which the hon. gentleman has the honor to represent, with a population of 10,000 or 12,000 people all that was paid to the health officer during the year was $120. Considering this information is gathered from cities and towns all over the Dominion and that the information is most valuable to the people at large, I think it does not cost very much.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The statement of the hon. gentleman shows that what the Province of Ontario is doing for itself with tolerable completeness, the Government here are doing very imperfectly. Of course hon. gentlemen would like any information that would contribute to the general welfare of the health of hon. gentlemen on that side of the House. I may say for their information that Mr. Campbell who formerly represented Kent in this House has been returned by the people of Kent by an increased majority.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I may say that whatever the health officer in St. Thomas gets, be it much or little, he gets more than he earns for the services he renders. It is a notorious fact that those officers are appointed by the municipalities and they perform the duty for the municipalities. They duplicate the information which they collect for the municipalities, and if all that he does is to send to the Government a duplicate of the information he has to render to the St. Thomas Council, I should say he is pretty well paid. I do not know what the Minister of Agriculture may think, but he may be in the habit of giving more liberally than that. Take for instance the officer in Toronto. He receives between $300 and $400, and you do not pretend to tell me that sending a duplicate here is worth that amount? Whether the cost be much or little the information is unreliable and it is not worth what you pay for it. Unless you organise that branch of the Department in a different way you might as well strike out the item altogether.

Mr. LISTER. Are those officers appointed by the Government?

Mr. CARLING. The Government appoint the salaried health officer of the city or town.

Mr. LISTER. I observe here that the returns are very imperfect. I find that the towns of Goderich and Sarnia are not included.

Mr. CARLING. The law provides that if a town appoints a health officer, such officer is selected by the Government for mortuary statistics.

Mr. LISTER. We have a health officer in our town.

Mr. CARLING. That has not been reported.

Mr. LISTER. I do not say that one should be appointed, because I agree with the hon. member for East Elgin that this money is thrown away, so far as the information given us is concerned. The amounts charged by the different officers for making these returns vary greatly. In some cases the amount is $100, and in others as much as $300. In Brantford and Woodstock it is $56, while in smaller towns, Galt for instance, the amount is considerably more.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman must understand that it is according to population.

Mr. LISTER. The amounts are larger in some cases than in other cases where the population is smaller.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I would like the Minister to tell us whether there is a health officer in London.

Mr. CARLING. Dr. Hutchinson, I understand, is the health officer for that city.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the meaning of this item, "Sundry persons, for 18,012 certificates, at 15 cents each, $2,700?" Who gives these certificates, and what do they represent?

Mr. CARLING. They are medical burial certificates. They are paid to the cemetery keepers, who get 15 cents for each medical burial certificate.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think the Minister must be in error. I think he will find that the 15 cents is the amount paid by the health officer to the sexton on account of a certificate given to him. It may be that some of these sextons get the 15 cents, but I doubt it very much. This is a very large amount of money expended for that purpose, and we have no explanation to show where that $2,700 goes.

Mr. CARLING. I think the hon. gentleman must have seen the report which states that the cemetery keeper get 15 cents per burial.

Mr. LISTER. As I understand, the health officer makes these returns. Why, in addition, should there be this enormous sum paid to get the certificates from the cemeteries?

Mr. WILSON (Elgin).

Mr. CARLING. I do not think it is an enormous sum for these certificates of burial, obtained from all the cities and towns in the Dominion.

Mr. LISTER. It is of little consequence whether it is large or small, but why should it be done?

Mr. CARLING. As a matter of policy, to get the information as accurately as possible. It has been done for fifteen or sixteen years.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does that represent the death rate of these various cities?

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This information would be valuable, no doubt, if it represented accurately the death rate in each of these cities; but I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, who in his professional capacity is an excellent judge, whether it does so. He knows that the cemeteries adjacent to towns and cities are often made use of by a considerable section of country around. Does he know whether this death rate is that of the cities, or is it that of the cities plus a large section of country around them?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I imagine that the death rate represents all the persons buried there, whether belonging to the city or the adjacent country. But the statistics are valuable because as a rule, they present a lower death rate than is found in any other part of the world; and anything that tends to show a low death rate establishes the healthfulness of our towns, and makes them additionally attractive. In that way these statistics have a certain value. I am afraid the appropriation is too small to enable the Minister of Agriculture to obtain as thorough and full information as is desirable. No doubt there cannot be a very great deal accomplished all over the Dominion with this amount of money; but in the absence of a better and more complete system of vital statistics, it furnishes that which persons investigating the relative attractions of different countries attach a good deal of importance to, as an evidence of the healthfulness of our climate.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is no doubt the object is a good one, and the information if obtained would prove of some importance. What my hon. friend was asking was a small piece of information which I imagine the hon. Minister could give at once. This $2,700 has been paid to sundry persons for what? I have not been able to gather as yet.

Mr. CARLING. It is paid to the sextons of cemeteries for burial certificates.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) What has this to do with the collection of statistics. The doctor gives statistics of the deaths and the causes of death. The sexton in charge of the cemetery has nothing to do with the causes of death. You want to get the population of a town, the number of people who died, and the different diseases of which they died, so as to see what diseases are most prevalent and what the death rate is, in order that some precautions may be taken to reduce the death rate by adopting means to prevent the inroads of any special disease that is more prevalent than others. I do not see therefore why we should pay $2,700 a year in order to get the certificate of a sexton that a certain number of men have been buried in a cemetery.

Mr. CARLING. The certificate furnished by this officer gives the disease which each person died of.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The sexton cannot possibly be able to state the disease except from information he gets from the doctor.

Mr. CARLING. The doctor's certificate certifies the disease of which the person dies and the sexton certifies that he was buried.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Why not also get a certificate from the undertaker?

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think the hon. Minister is laboring under a mistake. In former years, 10 cents was paid to the municipal clerk for each death certificate, and that, in the Province of Ontario, is paid out of the local dues of the municipalities. I cannot say what may be the course pursued in the other Provinces, but it may be that the Minister pays 15 cents for a certificate from the sexton, and that the sexton, in his wisdom, certifies that the man lived to a certain age and died of a certain disease. It has been proved that these certificates are worthless as data on which to form an opinion in reference to the health of any locality.

Mr. LISTER. Will the hon. gentleman strike this out? There is no earthly use for it.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). It is the custom among professional men to give a certificate of death stating the age, the disease, and other facts in that connection, for which the medical man receives from the Local Government about 10 cents. Do I understand that the 18,000 deaths given in this return are the actual number of deaths that took place in the whole Dominion or only in those cities where those health officers are appointed?

Mr. CARLING. It indicates the number of deaths in those different cities and towns where there are health officers.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Then the information is of no value, as regards the death rate of the Dominion, because it is only partial information. There are a large number of villages and towns, with a population under 5,000, that have no officers of that kind. It would have been far better and less expensive, as regards Ontario, to take the returns made by the Legislature of Ontario of the births, marriages and deaths in the whole of that Province, instead of taking this return from special centres in it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. At all events, we must have this vote, whatever may be the opinions of the House and committee as to the real value of these statistics. This system has been going on for a good many years, and the arrangement cannot now suddenly be closed. No doubt my hon. friend will consider the remarks made by some hon. gentlemen, professional men, whose opinions are worthy of all consideration.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). I understood the hon. gentleman to say that these statistics were all published in his report. I have looked into it, and I have not been able to find them.

Mr. CARLING. They are in the appendix to the annual report.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wish to point out to the hon. Minister that although it is true we have recognised the desirability of having health statistics, if they were accurate, it is worse than useless to have inaccurate statistics because they are positively misleading. Now, for several years we have been pressing from this side that some different system should be adopted. My own impression is it would be far better to select a small number of points and to work them thoroughly than to attempt to carry out the system that at present exists. For four or five years, we have been pointing out the desirability of having some new departure in this matter, so that it cannot be said this question is brought up for the first time. It does not seem, however, that we are much nearer to any solution of the difficulty than when we started.

Mr. CARLING. I think we are carrying out the very suggestion the hon. gentleman made to the House of gathering these statistics from the centres of population, and I think the hon. gentleman will find that the information we have from these centres is correct. As the hon. the Minister of Finance has said, perhaps the vote is not large enough, but I am confident we are getting information that can be relied on.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did I understand from the hon. the Minister of Finance just now that these lists of deaths do not really represent the deaths of the several places referred to?

Mr. CARLING. Yes, they do.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I understood the hon. the Minister of Finance to say that they represented the number buried in the cemeteries in and adjacent to these several centres.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They cover all the cemeteries in each locality where there is a health officer, and a few of the cemeteries adjacent to these localities.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). The hon. gentleman will see that he had better reduce the vote for that reason. Last year he expended only $7,800. That includes $2,700 which was paid for certificates which are perfectly useless, and in fact, no one knows what they are for. Then, if you take the $2,100 which you are asking more than last year and the $2,700 you have paid for certificates, you might make a saving of $5,000.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). One objection which I see to this vote is that Ontario has a complete system of health statistics, covering the whole country, while the hon. gentleman is collecting only from a few points.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is quoad Ontario alone.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But a large proportion of this expenditure, nearly the whole of it, is for the Province of Ontario, and in regard to that Province all you need do is to examine the reports made by the Province, which are not only in relation to these few places that the hon. gentleman obtains his statistics from, but from every locality, and then you have in a complete form what you are here obtaining in a very incomplete form. Why, then, should we expend this money to obtain imperfect statistics when we can get complete statistics without any expenditure at all? The Provincial authorities have facilities, far greater than those which you have, to get these returns; and, while it may be proper to carry on this system for those Provinces which have no such law as that which exists in Ontario, to extend it to the Province of Ontario is certainly a work of supererogation.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). As has been stated by my hon. friend from Queen's, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies), we do not take any exception to the vote for obtaining statistics, but we do object to the way in which the money is expended, and the unsatisfactory results obtained from it. I can see no benefit in getting these statistics from the cities alone. If it is desirable to obtain these statistics at all, they should be obtained from all parts of the country districts as well as from the cities; and, therefore, I think the Government should consider whether, in the interest of the country, we should not have some arrangement whereby the vital statistics of the country generally could be obtained and tabulated and pointed to and relied upon. At present, the information is only derived from the cities. It is imperfect. In the Province of Ontario far better information is obtained than this Government can obtain, because the information of this Government is only obtained from the cities. I think this is hardly worth the expenditure which is made upon it. If the hon. gentleman were to adopt a broader view and obtain the vital statistics from the country generally, it would be different, but, until that is done, I think this is simply a waste of money.

Mr. TROW. I think the Minister in charge of this department should make it imperative in other Provinces to have these statistics returned. In Ontario it is made imperative by the law for the clerk of the municipality to make his returns, and to give this reliable information under a penalty on those who neglect to carry out that duty. Some hon. gentlemen has referred to the sextons, but I cannot understand what knowledge the sexton can have. It is a matter of indifference to him whether the coffin is empty or full. He knows nothing about the cause of death. He knows nothing about the matter except in connection with the graveyard.

Mr. LISTER. Does this $10,000 cover the expenditure for registration of births, deaths and marriages, which was $871 last year?

Mr. CARLING. No, it does not.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is the hon. gentleman asking for an expenditure on that account this year?

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). In reference to this item of outlay towards the establishment and maintenance of experimental farms—$90,000—will the hon. gentleman give us some information as to what has been done here and in other parts of the Dominion? I should like to know something about the farm in the Maritime Provinces, where it is located, what progress has been made, and when he proposes to put it in operation?

Mr. CARLING. A site has been purchased, containing 300 acres, on the Intercolonial Railway, near the town of Nappan.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What have you paid for it?

Mr. CARLING. I think it is $16,000 for the 300 acres.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is that in the county of Northumberland?

Mr. CARLING. It is on the line of the Intercolonial Railway, and it is a very suitable location, as Mr. Saunders reports.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is in the county of Cumberland?

Mr. CARLING. I suppose it is.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is a place in my county which is spelled Napan.

Mr. CARLING. There are two "p's" in this Nappan.

Mr. MITCHELL. I did not suppose it was in my county.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will the Minister tell us what progress has been made?

Mr. CARLING. None as yet. We have secured the property, and steps are being taken to construct the buildings and to put up the fencing.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Has any person been put in charge of it?

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Who?

Mr. CARLING. Colonel Blair has been appointed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) From whom was the farm purchased?

Mr. CARLING. From Mr. Roach and Mr. Marshall.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many farms has the hon. gentleman now got? There is one near Ottawa, there is one in Nova Scotia, how many other farms has he purchased?

Mr. JONES (Halifax).

Mr. CARLING. There is the Central Farm, the farm in the Maritime Provinces, and a site has been secured in the North-West Territories and one in Manitoba and one in British Columbia.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Five in all?

Mr. CARLING. Five in all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where are the farms situated in Manitoba and the North-West Territories?

Mr. CARLING. The farm in Manitoba is in the vicinity of Brandon, the farm in the North-West Territories is near Indian Head, and the farm in British Columbia is at Agassiz.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where is Indian Head?

Mr. CARLING. It is near the Qu'Appelle Valley.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In reference to the farm in the neighborhood of Brandon, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman what is the extent of it, what price he has paid for it, and from whom it was purchased?

Mr. CARLING. The farm is a section of 640 acres, and I think the total cost is $9,200.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman remember from whom it was purchased?

Mr. CARLING. I do not at this moment, but I can give him the information to-morrow.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should be glad if the hon. gentlemen will also get the exact locality of this Brandon farm.

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture whether the fencing of the Central Agricultural Farm was a matter of competition, or whether it was done by piece-work, and, if so, what it cost per rod?

Mr. CARLING. It was done by contract.

Mr. MULOCK. What was the cost?

Mr. CARLING. In the neighborhood of 15 cents a foot.

Mr. MULOCK. What kind of a fence is it?

Mr. CARLING. It is cedar posts with buckthorn wire.

Mr. MULOCK. Is that the sort of fence the hon. gentleman would recommend as a sample fence to the ordinary agriculturist of Canada?

Mr. CARLING. I do not mean to say it is. But I mean that the central farm is in the vicinity of the capital of the country, it is in a beautiful locality, and it is a permanent fence for the next 20 years. I do not think it is a very expensive fence. I know that some of the neighbors have asked the contractors to put up a similar fence around their property, and they would not do it at the same price.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not think the hon. gentleman will find any farmer in Canada to adopt such an absurd style of fence, and invest such an enormous sum of money in the construction of such a useless article. I venture to say it will not be two or three years before the whole structure will have to be pulled down and built on a different plan.

Mr. CARLING. I am quite sure the hon. gentleman does not understand the subject in hand, because the matter was very carefully considered, and I am sure that there is not a more solid or permanent fence in Canada than that. It was said by others that the frost would heave the fence and throw out the posts, but if the hon. gentleman inspects the fence now, just after the winter, he will find it just as solid and substantial as it was when first put up.

Mr. MULOCK. I mean to say that it is an utter waste of money to go on and invest such a large sum—did I understand 40 cents a foot or 15?

Mr. CARLING. 15 cents a foot.

Mr. MULOCK. For the erection of such a fence as this. It was not at all necessary. The farm is not situated within three or four miles of this city, and a much less expensive fence would have answered just as well. I again repeat, without referring to the character of the work—for I do not wish to do any injury to the patentee of the wire used—but I venture to predict that the wire used will, in a very short time, be condemned as absolutely unsuitable, the frost will destroy it. Any one knows, after an examination of the material used, that it will not be at all durable. It is a real waste of money, in my opinion.

Aid to Agriculture Societies in the North-West Territories. $10,000

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I see an item of $6,425 for labor I would like to know how much of this was spent for fencing, and how much for drainage. In a lump sum, we have no idea what each class of work has cost. Then, I see there are three superintendents besides the workmen. What are they employed in doing?

Mr. CARLING. The chief director of the farm is Professor Saunders, and he has a horticulturist employed to look after the planting of trees, and the management of the fruit and garden department. I think these were the only two that were employed last year, excepting the laborers. And also a chemist whose salary did not commence until late in the fall. But he is now occupying his time in making chemical examinations of different seeds, and other things in connection with the farm.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I see here the name of Mr. McKay, superintendent, the name of Mr. Bedford, superintendent, and William Blair, superintendent, besides a foreman, and a Mr. Hurlburt, as horticulturist. What are they superintending?

Mr. CARLING. Colonel Blair, as I said before, has been appointed superintendent of the Maritime Province farm, and we utilised his services in the summer time for two or three months at the central farm until he took charge of the farm in Nova Scotia, having in view to make him acquainted with the system pursued. He is a practical farmer, and is to get $1,200. Mr. McKay has been appointed to take charge of the farms in the North West Territories at Indian Head. He is a very superior man, and we utilised his services for two or three months in the same way. He is now at Indian Head and Colonel Blair is in the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). My question is not yet answered. I see there is $6,425 for labor. How much of that goes for clearing and draining the land?

Mr. CARLING. I should be very glad to furnish the hon. gentleman with that information to-morrow, but I cannot give it to him at this moment. To-morrow we will tell him exactly how much has been expended for the purposes he speaks of.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the Minister state, roughly, how he proposes to dispose of this large amount of $90,000—what division he is going to make among the several farms?

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). I see there is an item of $1,076.25 for manure and $606.31 for freight. Now, in this section of country, it may be necessary for the farmer to purchase a certain amount of manure, and as this farm is to serve as a model for the people of Canada, we should know how it is conducted. We all know that in order to manage the farm successfully the manure must be made upon the farm, and used upon the farm, because we cannot make a great deal of profit if we spend a large sum of money in buying manure. There is an opportunity in this farm of ascertaining by experiment what can be done with land that was run down in the direction of renewing its fertility without the aid of manure. Such experiments would be of benefit to the farmers. Unless, however, these experiments are carried out on a proper system they will mean money thrown away. There is just one thing I regret, and that is that there is on the central farm very little, if any, of heavy clay land, such as prevails throughout Ontario, which requires the most scientific farming. A great many of our farmers do not succeed with land of that description, yet if properly farmed it is perhaps the most profitable land we have in the Province. If a large amount of manure is to be brought on the farm, the experiments will be of no benefit to the farmers in the direction of showing what can be done with the land.

Mr. CARLING. The Government selected the farm with a view to obtaining different varieties of soil, and it contains about 35 acres of heavy clay land, such as the hon. gentleman refers to, as well as other different varieties of soil. With respect to manure, we found it necessary to purchase a certain quantity in order to conduct our experiments with seeds and grains. Mr. Booth, a very extensive farmer adjoining the Government farm, purchased last year more manure than we did, and it cost him as much. The farm is only two and a half miles from the centre of the city and it is not very difficult to get manure; of course when we have a large quantity of stock we shall not require to purchase manure. This is not so much a model farm as a farm where experiments are made, and the results are published for the information of farmers throughout the Dominion, especially results as to what can be produced on particular kinds of soil and particular kinds of manure and certain quantities of it. As to the general expenditure I may say that it is expected that this amount, together with the sum in the estimates of the Department of Public Works will complete the purchase and the fencing and building, and leave a small amount for the purchase of stock for the central and branch farms. This money will be devoted to completing the central farm and the farm in the Lower Provinces, Manitoba, North-West Territories and British Columbia.

Census and statistics. $7,500

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the hon. gentleman explain this item?

Mr. CARLING. We are collecting statistics all the time, and a statistical record is published by the department each year, which has proved of very great use to members of Parliament and to the people of the country.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Is it necessary?

Mr. CARLING. It is a work very much in demand and it contains information that can be relied on.

Mr. LISTER. It contains a great many inaccuracies.

Mr. CARLING. If so, we shall only be too glad to have them remedied if the hon. gentleman can point them out.

Immigration..... $116,389

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture may recollect that a few days ago I put several questions to him with reference to the policy of the Government in regard to necessitous and unfit persons coming to this country. The hon. gentleman at that time gave me to understand that in the judgment of his department there was very little occasion to make any special provisions or take any special precautions against this class of persons. The information which has reached me from various part of the country is this, that a very large number of utterly unfit persons are being dumped on our shores from time to time, and that there is at the present moment something which might be fairly described as a sort of movement on the part of the authorities in the British Islands to dispose of a considerable number of paupers or persons who are only one remove from paupers, by sending them to this country. The hon. gentleman knows that in other countries a great many of these people have been sent back, but I have never heard of any being sent back from Canada. I do know that such cities as Toronto, Kingston and other cities throughout Ontario, and I believe Montreal and other places have a yearly increasing number of such persons who become a charge on public charity. I have received from a gentleman in Toronto a resolution passed by the City Council, and I will read an extract or two from it that may convince the hon. gentleman that, in the opinion of the civic authorities of the largest city in Ontario, there is a good deal of need that the Government should exercise some care in this matter. The resolution is as follows:—

"Whereas during the last winter season, and to a great extent for a number of years past, the demands on the various charitable institutions and of the city authorities for assistance to destitute immigrants have been so great and of such a character that the resources of the civic authorities and others interested in the question of providing relief for the destitute have been seriously overtaxed, and the causes which have led to this state of affairs require our most serious consideration; and whereas according to reliable information received from various sources, and from information received in some cases from the applicants themselves, a great many destitute persons have been sent over to this country by the Poor Law Guardians of Great Britain and the various charitable institutions of that country in order to relieve themselves of the further support of persons who are unable to provide for themselves in their own country; and, whereas we believe that continued efforts are being made by the parties aforesaid to ship to this country during the coming season this very undesirable class of immigrants, to the great injury of this city and the country; therefore be it resolved, That the council of the corporation of the city of Toronto enters its most emphatic protest against the continuance of this practice of shipping to this country a class of people so very undesirable, and who, being unable to provide for themselves in the old country, necessarily become a burden on the charitable institutions of this country, and help to swell the number of inmates in our gaols and asylums."

There is danger here. If the statements made by those gentlemen—and I believe a copy of the resolution was communicated to the Minister of Agriculture—have any foundation in fact, and from what has come under my own observation in other places I am inclined to believe they have a great deal of foundation in fact, there is need that a good deal of care be taken on the part of Government officials to prevent the number of such persons swelling. If the authorities who control English and Irish poor houses are allowed to do this they will scruple very little at sending several thousands of most undesirable emigrants to this country. I am not now speaking of the other question of the desirability of putting an end to assisted passages, because I understand that at last the policy of the Government is to do so, but I am speaking of the necessity of preventing our country from being made a place of deposit for persons who are not able to earn their own living in the mother country. I can tell the hon. gentleman he will find a very considerable degree of danger that unless the strictest precautions be taken many persons of that sort will come here.

Mr. CARLING. I think the statements made in the country through the press in reference to pauper immigration have been very much exaggerated. I am quite sure from the statements I possess from our agents in Liverpool, Halifax, Quebec and other parts of the country, the percentage of pauper immigration is very small indeed. I think it will be found that these statements that have been made through the city council of Toronto that there is a very large number of paupers coming into the country are incorrect, and that many of those who have had to be supported have been people who were not immigrants but worthless people who flock to the cities from different parts of the country. From all the information I have obtained from the officers of the department as to the parties leaving the old country to come here, the number of unfit persons arriving in this country has been very few indeed. I think the hon. gentleman will find that every precaution has been taken that can be taken to prevent any such class of people from coming into the country and becoming a burden upon the people.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I hardly think that is at all a satisfactory answer to the resolution of the corporation of the city of Toronto. I understand this resolution was carried unanimously.

Mr. CARLING. That statement, I may say to the hon. gentleman, is a general statement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It says that during the last winter, and to a great extent for a number of years past this has been going on. I am not speaking only with reference to what the Toronto corporation say. I have observed myself, in other places, that a very considerable number of persons have been brought into this country substantially by false representations. Not, it may be, made by authorised agents of the Government, but representations made to them by persons in the employ of various steamship companies, who did not care two straws whether the people were fit to be emigrants or not, but who simply wanted to get a commission on the passage money and swell the receipts of the various steamship lines. That was a great and serious evil, and it was all the more so because we know from our own returns that those people who are brought out, do not stay here but that a great part of them find their way to the States. A residuum of them stays here and that residuum, in other places as well as in Toronto, are neither more nor less than burdens on the charity of the people of Canada. I am not at all satisfied that any efficient precautions are being taken, and the hon. gentleman the other day stated, if I recollect rightly, that nobody had ever been sent back. I say that this kind of people ought to be sent back. I say there is neither rhyme nor reason in allowing paupers from England, Ireland, Scotland or elsewhere to be made a charge on Canada. Of course it is not necessary to require that every healthy, industrious man who comes here should be provided with capital. We cannot do that, but it is necessary to see that decrepid, infirm and unfit persons are not allowed to come here.

Mr. CARLING. A departmental letter has been written to the mayor of the city of Toronto in answer to that circular, asking him to give us the particulars and let us know when those people arrived, and where they came from, so that we can trace them and know if those people were really brought from the old country and dumped upon our shores. I can assure the hon. gentleman that everything that possibly can be done by this Government will be done to prevent any such immigration as he has reference to.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I really do not think that the Minister of Agriculture has given that information which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) was entitled to. In reply to the charges made by the corporation of Toronto, a respectable body, a body who had an opportunity of thoroughly investigating the whole facts in connection with the charges they had made, they are coolly told by the Minister: Oh let them make a detailed statement of where those parties came from, how long they have been in the city of Toronto, what are the circumstances in connection with their former habits, and whether they be emigrants or whether they be somebody from the surrounding country? That is hardly treating a respectable corporation like that of the city of Toronto in a fair way. I cannot see how the members representing the city of Toronto should sit here and allow that corporation to receive a slap in the face from a Minister, who as much as says, that they sent false representations to the Government in reference to the city of Toronto. I think the Minister should be a little fairer than that. He should bear in mind that he has three representatives from the city of Toronto, but it might be perhaps that the Minister of Agriculture will say: "Oh, the city of Toronto is not as true and loyally Conservative as it was before in the city council, and therefore a large proportion of the aldermen of the city of Toronto being Reformers we cannot depend upon their statement. When we find one of the first cities in the Dominion of Canada coming here with a memorial of that kind, it is right and fair that the Minister of Agriculture should treat their representations in a different way.

Mr. CARLING. How have I treated them?

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). He asks me how has he treated them. I appeal to the House as to how he has treated them. He says let them make a detailed statement, let them give us in detail the whole facts so that we may examine into the affair. Is the city of Toronto the only place where complaints have come to the Government in reference to the kind of immigrants brought from the old country? It is the same report from every city and municipality almost, from one end of the country to the other. We have been told that there is every precaution used to prevent undesirable immigrants coming here, but the facts belie the statements made by the Government. The facts show that a very large number of those who come out here are not suited in any way for the requirements of Canada, and, therefore, if the Government exercised every precaution they could exercise, I say their manner of conducting the affairs is not successful and they had better adopt some other means. The hon. gentleman says that many of those immigrants in the city of Toronto likely come from the surrounding country. I guarantee that his experience, and the experience of every individual member in this House in the locality in which he resides has been that the greater proportion of those who require aid and assistance are those who have been brought out as immigrants from the old country within the last few years. I have no hesitation in saying, that there are a good many useful citizens who are immigrants, but I do say that the method and the manner in which the hon. gentleman and his predecessors have managed the affairs in reference to immigration has resulted in a class of immigrants coming here that are not suitable. When we find the labor market is entirely overstocked, and that the demand for labor has been decreasing rapidly for some length of time, it is the duty of the Government to come forward and reduce still more the expenditure on this item. Is it necessary that you should keep your large staff of agents in Europe and in Canada, when you now find the city of Toronto petitioning you not to proceed with it any further, because of the enormous number of unsuitable immigrants and the superabundance of labor in the market, why do you not take this item out altogether? It may be said that it is necessary to keep up the same staff in Europe, but we have a High Commissioner there, and we were told that he would perform some of those duties. When we were called upon to grant millions of money to the Canadian Pacific Railway the Government said: Give us the money, let the Canadian Pacific Railway proceed and we will have the best immigration agents that can be had in Europe and we will not be called upon to spend money for emigration purposes. We liberally passed a measure appointing a High Commissioner for Canada in London, and we have made liberal grants to this railroad; and yet we find the Minister of Agriculture bringing from the old country a number of immigrants unsuited in every way to the requirements of the country, and paying large amounts of money for bringing them out.

Yet the Government still asks this House to continue to vote large sums of money for this purpose. I say it is a great mistake, and the amount they are now asking ought to be reduced at least one-half. If it is necessary to keep up the High Commissioner's office, well and good. He will not be very comfortable in staying here, and let us use him as an immigration agent in London; he is capable of being a good one. We have no objection to his staying there altogether, at any rate as long as his friends remain in power. Let the money we vote be used in bringing out a better class of immigrants, those who have small means and who will not be a burden on the country.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman tried to make out that I said something derogatory of the city of Toronto. I believe the hon. member is a member of the Committee on Immigration, and if I am not misinformed, that committee passed a unanimous resolution to-day asking the city of Toronto to give particulars as to the pauper immigrants sent to that city last year. I believe that is correct.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). It is quite correct. The chairman thought he should have the information.

Mr. CARLING. My department has asked for the same information that the Committee on Immigration authorised the chairman to obtain from the City of Toronto. I think the hon. gentleman has made a statement that he should not make in this House. He says we have the same reports from other cities as we have from Toronto with regard to pauper immigration. Well, I happen to be the head of the Department of Agriculture, and I can state that the one sent from Toronto, which is a very indefinite one, is the only resolution the Department has received that I am aware of, petitioning against pauper immigration.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I suppose the hon. Minister will remember that he had a report from Montreal.

Mr. CARLING. I think that was merely a newspaper report. We had nothing official, so far as I am aware, from the city of Montreal; and I think that the hon. member will find that when the city of Toronto and the different cities look into the matter, they will see that the Government has taken every precaution to prevent anything like pauper immigration, and that the percentage of paupers coming into the country is very small indeed. I am sure this matter has been very much exaggerated, and I am afraid it has been done in some places for purposes other than the general welfare of the country.

Mr. McNEILL. I will just state that I am a member of the Immigration Committee, and was present in the committee to-day when the communication from the city of Toronto was discussed by members of the committee belonging to both political parties. The hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Wilson) was present when it was decided unanimously, he being a consenting party himself, that this communication should be sent to the authorities of the city of Toronto, asking for information on this subject. If there was any insult offered to the city of Toronto the hon. gentleman was a party to it; but there was no insult intended or thought of. There was a statement made to the effect that a number of people were out of employment in Toronto, and the opinion was expressed that the Department of Agriculture should see that unsuitable immigrants were not brought to the country. After the matter had been discussed for some time, it was decided that nothing could be done until we ascertained something of the numbers of those people out of employment, and where they came from. Therefore it was determined that the authorities of Toronto, who had sent this communication, should be asked to furnish that information; and the hon. member was present at the time consenting to that which he says was an insult. I am astonished at the observations of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am not going to say anything of the character of the immigrants who come to the country, because I am not in a position to express an opinion upon that subject. What I wish to call attention to is that the money voted by Parliament year after year seems to be wasted, or distributed in a manner not calculated to bring any great advantage to the country at large, but seems to be considered as a fund from which the Government may reward some of the papers supporting them throughout the country. If you take up the Auditor General's report, and look at page 112, you will find that payments have been made to almost every Conservative paper, in the Upper Provinces at least, for pamphlets on all imaginary subjects. One is called, "The Immigrant," another "Facts and Figures," another "Across Canada," another, "The Fisheries of Canada," and so on through the list. The payments made in these ways amount to the very large sum of $49,418 which, with $20,000 for paper, makes $69,418 expended in that way. Now that does seem to me to be an expenditure which is unnecessary to such an enormous extent. It would seem that the Government have so much money to dispose of that it is almost too much to ask any employé who draws a handsome salary from the Government to hand these pamphlets to the immigrants as they are coming into the country. I see on page 116 that the sum of $800 was paid to the marine mail clerks for distributing mail pamphlets, or $100 each. It is absurd that these postal clerks on the steamers who are paid by the Government, and whose time is at the disposal of the Government, should require to be paid $100 each for handling a few Government pamphlets to the emigrants on board. This is a sample of the utter recklessness with which the Government disbursed the emigration money. Go through the whole expenditure on immigration, and you will find it consists solely of paying out large sums of money to supporters of the Government for purposes useless, so far as immigration is concerned.

Mr. CARLING. I am sorry the hon. gentleman, when he was in office, did not do away with this grant to the mail clerks on ocean steamers; and I may say that this expenditure has been discontinued. There are no mail clerks now on the ocean steamers.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am glad to see that the hon. gentleman has discovered this was an unnecessary expense, and I will be glad to see him do away with the other expenditure which appears to be a waste of public money. Here is the Hon. Hector Fabre receiving for the Paris-Canada $1,739, and T. Skinner for copies of Canadian Gazette and advertising $2,769. Then there is the income tax on the salaries of the High Commissioner's staff. Well, we have voted in this House the income tax on the salary of the High Commissioner—and these gentlemen, I believe, are in the employ of the High Commissioner in London. Mr. C. C. Chipman, I think, is the private secretary of the hon. the Minister of Finance.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). And Mr. Colmer, I think, is also in the Department of the High Commissioner in England?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Well, these gentlemen are paid salaries for their work, and I have no doubt they do it well; but if they are entitled to anything more, it should be added to their salaries and not slipped in in this way as an income tax. It is not a very large amount, I admit, but every dollar than can be placed in the way of these people, who compose the hon. gentleman's staff, and seems to think the country belongs to them, and that they must be rewarded for their political allegiance, is given to them.

Mr. McNEILL.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The salaries paid to-day to the entire staff in the High Commissioner's office is less than it was in 1883 when I took charge of that department.

Mr. COCKBURN. As the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Wilson), has challenged the members for Toronto to stand up and say something to save that city from the supposed aspersions cast upon it by the hon. the Minister of Agriculture, I am very glad indeed to accept the challenge. It seemed to me that the half hour he devoted to attacking the policy and the action of the Minister of Agriculture was devoted to attacking the Minister for doing precisely what the hon. gentleman himself, twelve short hours ago, had been instrumental in doing. It is to be regretted that in a matter so important to all of us as emigration, hon. gentlemen should be so far led astray by party feeling as to make it a party question. I ask the members of this House, in discussing a business matter of this kind, to put aside, if possible, for one short night, their strong political proclivities, and see if we cannot together discuss a question of this kind on its own merits. The speech of the hon. member for East Elgin is not new to us, for we had almost verbatim the same speech last year. The only little point in it that is novel is the attempt to foist on the Minister of Agriculture the charge of dealing harshly with the representations made by the city council of Toronto. Now, while I am quite prepared to stand up for the city of Toronto on all occasions, and especially for two noble wards in that city, at the same time I must say that I see nothing in the action of the hon. the Minister of Agriculture which could lead the member for East Elgin to make the attack he did. What are the facts of the case according to the hon. gentleman's own statement? The city council of Toronto sent to the Minister of Agriculture a certain statement with reference to the character of emigrants who arrived in that city. Like a courteous gentleman he acknowledged the receipt of their communication and courteously said to them: Your statements may be all correct; will you aid me in my tracing the source of this evil, if such evil there be? Will you give me all the information in your power, and let us see if we cannot get at the facts. As far as I can make out, that is the whole gravamen of the charge brought by the hon. gentleman. If the Minister of Agriculture is to be challenged in this House for simply discharging, in a courteous and gentlemanly way, the duties of his office, I do now know how any Government is to be carried on. I trust that hon. gentlemen in future will try to regard this question of emigration, with which the future of our country is so intimately connected, in a plain, simple, impartial spirit, and, for the time being, lay aside those feelings of hostility which are, perhaps, apt to creep up in other questions of a more partisan character.

Mr. TROW. I do not think it lies with the hon. member for Toronto to lecture my hon. for Elgin on what he said, for my hon. friend merely asked to be informed of the true state of the affairs in Toronto. The hon. the Minister of Agriculture, we are aware, took proper steps, and I do not know of any plan which he could have adopted better than the one he did adopt to ascertain at once the actual state of affairs in the city of Toronto, and find out whether really an undesirable class of emigrants has been dumped out there by the charitable institutions, or whether they have been brought out by the Immigration Department. At all events, during the winter season, improvident people from many parts of the country, in the rural districts, where work is then scarce, find their way to the towns and cities, where the bowels of compassion of the people are more likely to be moved than in the country sections. Now, if we get proper statistics of the class of which the city council of Toronto has complained, we will then be able to judge what remedy should be applied. I know sometimes these rumors are very much exaggerated. I recollect when the Mackenzie Administration was in power that it was said there were hundreds in this city in need of employment and on the verge of starvation; and on that occasion, whether hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House aided in the gathering of the large community that met in the railway room or not, 200 or 300 were drummed up and found their way there, demanding bread and soup, and we were accused of having soup kitchens all over the country. Well, the Mackenzie Administration took the step then that the hon. the Minister of Agriculture is now taking, to ascertain the facts of the case, and instead of 200 or 300 being at the point of starvation, there were only 13. Well, the case in Toronto may turn out, as I hope it will, similarly.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Of course I receive with due submission the remarks made by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn). I know he is in the habit of punishing delinquents. He followed that practice for a long time, and I suppose he thinks I am one of those delinquents and that he can use the rod for my punishment. An hon. gentleman near me says that he is an old school-master, and that might account for the punishment he imagined he was to give me. I did not complain of the Minister of Agriculture obtaining his information from the city council of Toronto. What I complained of was—and that is what the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) withheld in order to make a point against me—that the Minister should get up in his place here and make an assertion, without having the information he desired, that very probably the report was not reliable because it may have been wrong in some points. Was I wrong in saying that? Will the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) say that the city council of Toronto made a report which was not reliable? He said that I condemned him for obtaining that information. I did nothing of the kind. If the hon. gentleman would remain in this House and pay attention to what takes place, he would know better, and he would not make that kind of mistake. He says that the speech I made was the same as made a year ago. He has a good memory. He is a wonderful man. I venture to say that he has not looked at a single speech that I made a year ago or six years ago, but he is a wonderful man, he has a wonderful memory, and yet he does not remember what I said a year ago, but, while he has a long memory, what he fails in memory he makes up in assertion. My hon. friend from Bruce (Mr. McNeill) said that I supported a certain matter in the committee which I did not in the House. I may say to my hon. friend, for his information, that it is not right to say anything about what took place in a committee until the report has been presented to the House. However, I will not object to that. I think it is right that the Chairman of the Committee should send and obtain full proofs, but I complained of the Minister of Agriculture making unfair assertions against the city council of Toronto without proper ground. My hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) said that I could not rise above partisanship. Those hon. gentlemen say they are only going to take half the money for immigration purposes this year that they did last year; but, if you run your eye from top to bottom over the various agencies which they have, you will find the same amount of money voted for them as there was before, as there was at the time when they proposed to spend double the amount of money. What is this for? It is, as everyone knows to keep a large number of these servants employed, and also to give an opportunity to the various presses from one end to the other of this country to print immigration pamphlets, and charge the cost to the Government. No doubt they can come down handsomely at election times, and they should get a consideration for that. No doubt the Minister of Agriculture has received a handsome return in that way from the London Free Press, and we have only to look at that item to find that that paper received nearly $6,000 during the year 1886-87. What was that for? Did that conduce to immigration to any great extent? I do not think it did, at all events to the extent of $16,000. No doubt my hon. friend will say that this was for the purpose of engraving and printing pamphlets, and advertising, and so on. Very likely they did print some pamphlets, but I should think the principal part of the printing would be the enormous profits the proprietors received, and I think the Minister of Agriculture benefited in his election by the assistance which the Free Press has had. You may go over nearly every Conservative paper from one end of the country to the other, and you will find that they have been employed in printing immigration pamphlets. It is a very nice thing. It gets the good will of all those Tory papers. I advise my friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) to consider that immigration is a matter of more importance than to retain the present Government in power, and that the money which is given for immigration purposes is not given for electioneering purposes. If that hon. gentleman would exercise more ingenuity in that matter and would read fewer lectures to me, he might become of more use in this House than he is now. If the Government are candid and sincere, if they desire to retrench, they will commence by reducing the expenditure upon these various offices. How can you explain, when you are taking only half the money, how you require to expend the same amount in each of the offices? Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture could induce the Free Press to print only $8,000 worth next year instead of $16,000. I know it would be hard on the Free Press. It is a good Conservative organ. It was a Reform organ at one time, but it was bought over, and now it is to have $16,000 as a substantial inducement to support the Government every year. I have only to repeat that I do not think this money has been in the past expended in the interest of immigration. Judging from the appearance of the various agencies, I do not think that it is intended to expend this money for that purpose in the future. I think it is intended to keep civil servants outside in positions which they have occupied for some time past, and the Government do not desire to remove them; but the country demands a larger retrenchment at their hands in reference to immigration at this time, and I think, when an opportunity occurs, the people will give this Government to understand that they intend to enforce that view upon them.

Mr. McNEILL. As a matter of explanation, I want to say that what I referred to was the fact that the hon. gentleman had accused the Minister of Agriculture of deliberately insulting the city of Toronto while he had spoken of the communication from the city council of Toronto in exactly the terms, or in words in the same sense as those which were used by the Chairman of the Committee on Agriculture to-day. There was a consensus of opinion in that committee to the effect which has been expressed by the Minister here to-day, and I said that I was astonished at an hon. member, who had been one of those who held that opinion, coming here a few hours afterwards, and endeavoring to make party capital out of the statement of the Minister of Agriculture, who had stated exactly what the Committee had stated a few hours before. I must say that I was astonished at that, and that I think it is degrading to this House that any hon. member should do so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it is extremely unfortunate that any hon. gentleman like the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. McNeill) should so far forget the Rules of the House as to bring before the House what has passed in a committee, and it is still more unfortunate, if he wants to promote the business of the House, that he should tell another hon. gentleman, like my hon. friend from Elgin (Mr. Wilson) that he has used language which is degrading to the House. Such remarks as that will not facilitate the progress of the Estimates in the slightest degree. They only lead to disagreeable altercations, and draw our attention away from the point before us. And I am certain that his friends on the Treasury benches will not thank him for taking the conduct of the Estimates out of their hands. Now, I want to call attention to what appears to me an extraordinary charge, one of the items my hon. friend referred to. There is in the Auditor General's report for last year a charge of $15,807 for the London Free Press, and in that there was an item of 322,000 colored posters at 4½ cents. They cannot have been works of art at 4½ cents. It appears to me that that was just another instance of what I must call a most gross waste of public money, for all these 300,000 or 400,000 colored posters amount to just so much rubbish, and nothing else, flung broadcast across the country, for no earthly purpose except to enable a particular newspaper to make a good thing out of the job.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman should not make that statement without knowing —

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I saw one of the colored posters.

Mr. CARLING. I can tell the hon. gentleman that the London Free Press has a large lithographic establishment, and it is the only newspaper in Canada, I believe, that has one. The posters were published in English, French, German and Norwegian, and distributed all over Great Britain and Europe, and we have statements from our agents in Europe, and from the different steamboat agents, that they were most valuable in drawing the attention of the people to Canada. I am satisfied that nothing has been done that has tended more to attract people towards Canada. Such is the information we have from our agents, and from the agents of the steamboat companies, who have been pressing us to give them further supply. The price paid to the Free Press for these posters was certified by the Queen's Printer as a fair and reasonable price.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, I saw one of these posters, and I am bound to say that if it is a fair sample of the 322,000 I will not qualify or withdraw what I stated. I think a most gross waste of public money was committed. But with respect to the whole of this, I am glad to see that the Ministers have cut down the expenditure. I believe that no worse use of public money has been made for many years than to expend it in bringing people to this country whom our own returns show we have not been able to keep here, who have been brought here largely by false pretences—I won't say in all cases on the part of the Minister's agents; but the men who brought these unfortunates here, not for the purpose of doing any good to Canada, but for the purpose of swelling their own commissions. Now, we find in the returns for Manitoba what this amounts to. We found that hundreds of thousands of people were stated, on the authority of the department the hon. gentleman now presides over, to have gone to Manitoba, and when we took the actual census there we found that not one in five of those who were alleged to have gone there, had settled there, or remained there. Now, the danger and the mischief is this: You bring people here by false pretences, and they leave Canada and go to other countries and become, to all intents and purposes, anti-immigration agents. It is a great error and blunder to bring people here who are not wanted here, and that has been done for a long time.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Before that passes —

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Let us get on.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). If my hon. friend was as ready to call the attention of his supporter to the fact that he was discussing a matter not pertinent to the question—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think he has been answered by the hon. member.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Then, all I have to say is, that as to my remarks being degrading to this House, the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), having so long existed in such an atmosphere as that, is a good judge of degradation. I will therefore allow the matter to pass.

Immigration Agent at Victoria, B.C. $1,000

Mr. BAKER. I desire to ask the Minister of Agriculture the same this year that I did last year—if he cannot see his way clear to increasing the salary of the agent at Victoria, B.C. For the last two or three years he has got only $1,000 a year, and I see no reason why he should not get the same salary as is given in other places where the agents get $1,200 or $1,400. I undertake to say that the duties performed by that officer are as onerous, if not more so, than those performed at Calgary and Medicine Hat.

Mr. CARLING. The agent at London is only receiving $1,000, and the same is given at Halifax and St. John. We are paying no more than $1,000 at Medicine Hat and Calgary. We have not been able to see our way clear to make any change in the salary.

Mr. BAKER. The hon. gentleman will remember that the reason given for paying higher salaries at Brandon, Calgary and other places in the North West, was on account of the high cost of living. The same reason should induce the Minister to increase the salary paid at Victoria, B. C.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Perhaps the better way would be to reconsider the whole list. At Quebec there is an agent, an assistant, and a clerk, receiving altogether $3,800, and there are in addition an interpreter and a messenger. Now, I notice there are eight immigration agents in the North-West. I do not know how far they are necessary, but it appears to me rather an unnecessary expense to have eight agents and four interpreters engaged in the North-West, when we hear of so few people settling in that country. I presume the distance is considerable between the various points, but now the railway is running I should imagine the necessity no longer exists for having an agent at each one of those various points.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has overlooked the fact that Quebec is the great central point where the people focus. We have thousands of emigrants coming there, and we must have persons able to communicate with them and give them the needful information at the point where they touch the country. That accounts for the number of officers and the larger charge for Quebec. When we come to the question of the North-West I may say this: These agencies are widely separated, and hon. gentlemen can hardly imagine the vital importance it is to strangers coming into the country to have persons take them by the hand on their arrival giving them information as to how to locate themselves and assist them to settle. There is a reduction of $100,000 in the item, but we could not dispense with the services of these officers if we are going to have immigrants come into the country and hope to keep them here and settle them in a satisfactory way. We must have persons who possess the information and knowledge of the country to take them by the hand on arriving here. I do not think these amounts are too large, nor do I think there are too many of those officers for the purposes for which they are really required.

Mr. TROW. I agree with the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) in the statements he has just made. I would not press the giving up of agents in the older Provinces. I can, however, see no use for an agent at Port Arthur, for there is no land adapted for settlement in that locality.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Port Arthur is the landing point for the steamers. These immigrants will mainly go across the lake by steamer, and this vote is for the purpose of providing officers who will receive them on their arrival there, care for them and give them proper advice and assistance. They come here strangers, and I do not think that any person who has had any experience can over-estimate the importance to persons coming into a strange country, of having some one to whom they can apply for advice and assistance, and protect them against being misinformed and misled by interested parties.

Mr. TROW. I may still further say that there may probably be use for an agent at Brandon, as there is a good section of country both north and south, but I think the Government might do away with the agent at Qu'Appelle. As to the agent at Medicine Hat, very little land is taken up there or is likely to be taken up.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Medicine Hat is a place to which miners will naturally resort.

Mr. TROW. Coal miners?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman will find that some years ago buildings were erected at Brandon, Qu'Appelle, Medicine Hat and Calgary. A number of immigrants have gone in at those different points and they took advantage of the immigration buildings for shelter. Of course there must be some officer in charge of each building to look after it and also to see that the immigrants obtain information as to the advantages of each particular section and, in addition to their other duties, act as land guides to assist them in securing land for settlement. So far we have found it necessary to have these officers. If later on it is found to be unnecessary I shall be very glad to consider the question of doing away with them; at present, however, we do not see our way clear to do so.

Mr. TROW. I have seen large buildings at those places. I know there was no immigrant agent at Medicine Hat last fall. In regard to Calgary I do not know of any great quantity of land there except what was adapted for grazing.

Mr. CARLING. There is very good land north of Calgary, in the Red Deer district. A large number of settlers went there last year and a number are going this year. When immigrants reach Calgary we have an agent there to give them information in regard to the district, and of course to the country north of Calgary.

Mr. TROW. There is some force in the remarks of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Baker) in regard to the expense of living in that city. I observe that the agent at Victoria receives $1,000 while others receive $1,300. It strikes me from the little experience I had there that a man can live cheaper in either Manitoba or the North-West than in Victoria and that provisions are much higher there than in the North-West or Manitoba. The argument of the hon. gentleman is therefore quite reasonable.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). I quite agree with the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture with regard to the agencies established at different parts of the North-West. People go there entirely unacquainted with the country and it is necessary to have some officer there to provide accommodation for the new arrivals for the time and assist them in locating on suitable land. Otherwise they would have to obtain the services of some one who might take great advantage of them, while the immigration agent possesses full knowledge of the country and is enabled to give them valuable information in regard to locating. In regard to doing away with the officers, I may say that I have had different applications from sections for officers to be appointed to assist settlers coming in.

Mr. LISTER. New offices?

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). Yes. I have had an application from Whitewood asking that an immigration shed should be built there, and stating that a large number of immigrants had been obliged to lodge in the railway station, and had been entirely at the mercy of the operator for accommodation. In place of doing away with any of the offices already existing, there should be more established for the accommodation of the people. The land is good and our whole country only requires to be known, and it is a very important matter to strangers to have some one to guide them and to look after their interests.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). To keep them in the country.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). You want to give proper information in regard to location. Strangers do not know where to go when they have to engage in land hunting. The land has to be mapped off, and unless you have somebody to guide you, how are you to make a proper selection? So far as doing away with them is concerned, I think it would be much better for the country to increase the staff.

Mr. LISTER. By how many?

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). In my district by about two more. I only speak for my own district.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says there are not a sufficient number of immigration agents in the North-West and that immigrants are going in now.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). Yes, Sir.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And more immigration agents are required.

Mr. PERLEY (Assiniboia). Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is a Mr. Adam J. Baker at Qu'Appelle. I suppose that is an important point at which to have an immigration agent. Will the hon. gentleman abolish that as an immigration agency?

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Baker is not an agent at Qu'Appelle.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is he not?

Mr. CARLING. Yes; I have been informed now that he is.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman has discovered that he is. Mr. Baker is down here. He has been engaged in canvassing in the county of Russell for the Government candidate, and I suppose his salary is going on and that he is paid travelling expenses from the North-West down here. The House will now see the importance of having immigration agents, and they will understand the importance of the hon. gentleman's suggestion that the Government wants more immigration agents. Of course you could not have got on in those by-elections if you did not have more of those immigration agents.

Mr. MITCHELL. They will want more of them now.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Perley) says there are more of them required in the North-West, but when you appoint them in those districts they are like the non-resident clergy in Ireland, they do not happen to reside in the place for which they have been appointed. Here is Mr. Baker, an immigration agent, drawing his salary, and whose salary has to be provided for next year in the appropriation the hon. gentleman now asks the committee to vote. His travelling expenses will have to be provided, as were the expenses of the private secretary of the Finance Minister, who is sometimes on the other side of the Atlantic and sometimes on this. Those travelling expenses will be very large, but not larger than is necessary, because how could Mr. Baker be engaged in canvassing for Mr. Mackintosh in Russell, when he was appointed for the North-West, if a sufficient appropriation was not allowed to cover his expenses coming from the North-West down here. According to the hon. gentleman's statement there are immigrants going in there and there is no person to guide them. The shepherd has gone and the sheep are being scattered, and they are in danger of being taken over to Dakota, where the wolves will devour the sheep of the hon. the First Minister. The country of course will understand now why it is necessary to make this liberal appropriation, and why although we have scarcely anybody in the North-West now, we should have more immigration agents. The hon. the Minister and his predecessors in office informed us that 155,000 people had gone to that country during the past five years, and when the hon. gentleman looked at the census he could only find 43,000 of them remained. Here are 112,000 of the hon. gentleman's sheep lost, and lost because those shepherds who are so well paid for locking after the sheep, are not there to take care of their flocks. They are down in Russell and they are down in Kent. One of those shepherds received $1,890 for looking after these sheep in Dakota.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that Mr. Smyth.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes, that is the shepherd named Smyth. I do not know whether he found any stray sheep down there or not, but at all events he was down in Kent, and he was a candidate and I am glad to know that he was not a very successful candidate. The country will understand the importance now of voting the hon. gentleman's appropriation without further question. I am surprised that the Minister did not ask for more, as is suggested by the hon. gentleman behind him. Why did he not propose to appoint two or three more immigration agents for the North-West, who will not reside there and no doubt the hon. gentleman's supporters on that side would without question have voted the necessary appropriation? Why, Sir, this Government never could have got on unless this committee deals more liberally with them. They cannot keep their flocks in the country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Let us go on.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Will the hon. gentleman promise to reform?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Oh, yes; I will promise it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Will he perform it though. If we have reached the hon. gentleman's conscience—

An hon. MEMBER. Where is that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It may be like the man in Richard III that it is a troublesome thing, and that every man who wishes to get on in the world with convenience and comfort to himself ought to get rid of it. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has come to that conclusion, but I think the country will come to the conclusion that this appropriation is unnecessary to the extent that the hon. gentleman has asked for. When he pays out of the public treasury a man who can be taken 1,500 miles away from the place he is supposed to be serving, to engage as a political hack in an election contest, I think the appropriation could be dispensed with.

Mr. LISTER. There is one thing I would like to say to the hon. gentleman, I suppose Mr. O'Donohue was in the service of this department also. I do not know whether he is an immigration agent or not but I think he is in the pay of the Government.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

An hon. MEMBER. He is an extra clerk.

Mr. LISTER. I thought he was in the Immigration Department. Mr. O'Donohue was down in Russell too, and he is canvassing from house to house for the Government candidate. I do not know how that can be, because, if I recollect, last year he spoke in the kindest terms of the First Minister. Probably it is because of what he said about the First Minister last year that he is engaged in this occupation now.

Mr. MITCHELL. What did he say?

Mr. LISTER. I do not like to repeat it. This shows the way that the Government hacks in this country are being paid by the people's money to support this corrupt Administration. They are being paid a salary day after day, and they are employed as Tory hacks throughout this country serving in the interest of the Tory party. Only the other day three respectable young men as ever found a position in this House were dismissed for taking a part in an election against the Government, and yet this honest, honorable, upright Government, which has found so much fault with these translators, permit those miserable, wretched hacks to receive the money of the Government to malign the Opposition, and to misrepresent the position of the Government for the purpose of defeating Opposition candidates. So far as their influence is concerned, the Government has had a lesson to-day, and I think on next Wednesday they will have another lesson. When another general election comes around those gentlemen will find that they will be right here in these benches, and that better men will be occupying their positions of to-day.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). This is no joking matter at all. It shows to what extent public opinion has been debauched in this country, when the Government would dare,—dare I say,—to bring one of their public officers from the North-West to take part in an election in this part of the country. Imagine for one moment the Prime Minister or a member of the English Government doing this. Would they be able to stand 24 hours against the indignation of the people of Great Britain if an hon. member on the opposite side of the House should bring such a charge against them as is being made by the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) against the Administration here to-night. I say no matter whether it was a man of the standing of the present leader of the Government, or Mr. Gladstone, or any other, there would be such a howl of indignation from one end of the country to another, that the party which permitted such things would be swept out of office. There was a time in the history of this country when the hon. gentleman would not have dared to do this either. There was a time, at the commencement of Confederation, when the public opinion of this House and country would not permit the hon. gentlemen to sit there and laugh at the statement made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills). When he states that the Government have brought one of their own officers, whom the taxpayers of this country are paying to take immigrants by the hand and locate them on the lands of the North-West, and have sent him to be a party hack in an election, I repeat that the public opinion of this country must have descended low indeed, when the hon. gentleman and the Government dare to sit there and treat the observations of the hon. member for Bothwell as they have done. I say no man can look for much from the future of this country if that thing is going to be permitted. If this country is going to occupy as high a place in the world as other countries, there must be a wholesome tone in the public opinion of the country. We are sometimes directed across the border for instances of corruption; but if an act of this kind were committed there, you would find every paper in the country ringing with it. But here we find a Government, which is safe for the present, ready to outrage every sentiment of public principle and honor, and send their officers to interfere in by-elections from one end of the country to the other. I repeat that it is a melancholy fact to the world, and it will be known abroad, that we have descended to such a condition of affairs. Therefore, the Government should now understand that this is no joking matter, that we are not going to sit here and quietly permit the Government to appropriate the funds of this country for the employment of immigration agents or any other agents for political purposes.

Mr. CARLING. The statement made by the hon. member for Bothwell is not correct. Mr. Baker has not been brought down from Qu'Appelle by the Government or offered his expenses. He came here of his own accord. He lived in this county, and his friends live in this county, and he asked the Department to give him what is given to all other officers of the Government, leave of absence.

Mr. LISTER. A singular coincidence.

Mr. CARLING. If the agent at Qu'Appelle asks the department for leave of absence, we give it as a matter of course. The officers of my department or any other department are entitled by the law to three weeks holidays each year; and if Mr. Baker asks for holidays and pays his own expenses, I think I would be remiss if I refused to him the privilege that I allow to other officers of the Government.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to know whether the hon. Minister denies that Mr. Baker, an official of the Government, is now taking part in the Russell election.

Mr. CARLING. I am not aware whether he is or not.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I am sorry to have to differ from the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow). I think he is wrong about there being no necessity for an agent at Port Arther, and I agree entirely with the hon. Finance Minister about the importance of having an agent there. It is the place where the immigrants land from the boats and go on the railway on their way to the North-West. More than that, I have been informed by Mr. Conmee, the local member for that district, that within twelve miles of Port Arthur there is just as fine land as can be found in any part of the country; and we know, from the reports of the commissioner sent out by the Globe Company, that in the Rainy River district there is as fine land as can be found in the Dominion of Canada, and it is of the utmost importance that attention should be drawn to it. With regard to the immigration agents in the North-West and Manitoba, I cannot see why there should be such differences in the salaries paid there compared with those paid in British Columbia. The hon. Minister says that the larger salaries are necessary because the duties there are very onerous. I can understand that in certain seasons of the year it is absolutely necessary that those men should be there. I can understand, from the reports that I have received, that it is absolutely necessary that the immigration agents should be on hand at the present time to meet the immigrants and direct them to the best localities. With regard to the immigration agent at Qu'Appelle, I think his agency is one of the most important, and the most important duty he has to perform is to tell the poor immigrants who are coming in not to go one mile further west in search of farming lands on the Canadian Pacific Railway. With regard to his being absent at the present time, it is a strange thing that he did not take his holidays when there were no immigrants going into the country. Any one can understand that just now, when the busy season is coming on and immigrants are going in, it is of the greatest importance to have a man there to locate the immigrants.

Mr. CARLING. I may tell the hon. gentleman that the agent at Qu'Appelle has provided a substitute at his own expense during his absence.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. Well, last year we had a general election, and I know from the very best authority that last year and every year that there has been an election in Russell, that gentleman has been there.

Mr. MITCHELL. He got leave of absence perhaps.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. No doubt he got leave of absence. But it is a strange fact that gentleman always lands down in the county of Russell when an election is coming on. He is said to be one of the best manipulators in the country. Another fact I want to draw attention to is that last year when he was down there, and no doubt paying a substitute at his own expense, the Auditor General's report shows that he received every cent of his salary, $1,400. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) has called attention to the fact, that not only he, but other civil servants are out stumping the country in the interest of the Government. I met Mr. O'Donohue in the county of Russell. It may be said that these gentlemen are not paid while they are there, and I am the last man who will stand up and question the right of any man to express his opinion, whether he is a public servant or not; but what I contend is that something like even-handed justice should be shown—that the law on one side of the House should be the law on the other side of the House too. It is only a few days since two men who hurt the feelings of the Secretary of State and the hon. member for Richmond and Welfe were dismissed summarily for the part they took in the elections. What I say is that British fair play and honorable dealing demand that the same law should be meted out to one side of the House as well as to the other, and that men should be dealt with on the same basis on both sides.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. the Minister of Agriculture does not deny that Mr. Baker is the Government immigration agent at Qu'Appelle. He does not deny that Mr. Baker is not in Qu'Appelle, where he said an immigration agent is particularly required at this season. He does not deny that Mr. Baker is here in Russell, engaged in canvassing on behalf of the Government candidate.

Mr. CARLING. I do not know that.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Ignorance sometimes is convenient.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He knows it now.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman does not know it, but that does not alter the fact that Mr. Baker is in Russell county, aiding in the canvass for Mr. Mackintosh and doing what he can to secure that gentleman's election. The hon. gentleman nods his head; he approves of that. Well, Mr. Baker cannot be in Russell helping Mr. Mackintosh and in Qu'Appelle at the same time. The hon. gentleman says Mr. Baker has paid an agent to act in his place. Has the Government entrusted Mr. Baker with the power of appointing an immigration agent? Is this the new doctrine that an agent may delegate his powers to another party with the consent of the Government? Is that the rule now?

Mr. CARLING. That is the rule. If an officer at Qu'Appelle or Calgary or Medicine Hat requires leave for a week or two, a substitute is appointed, or he selects one to take his place, but the substitute must be a responsible man.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is it the practice for agents during their absence to appoint and to pay substitutes?

Mr. CARLING. If an agent makes application at any one of those points for leave of absence, and a good man is recommended to fill his place, we will allow him to have his leave of absence.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). At election time.

Mr. CARLING. At any time at all.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman says at all times. When did this practice of appointing agents and paying them at the expense of the regular agents arise? So far as I know, the practice is that when you give a man his holidays you do not charge him for carrying on the work of his office during his absence; and when the hon. gentleman informs the committee that Mr. Baker has employed and paid an agent to act in his behalf, he is stating a fact which shows that he has adopted a different rule from the one which usually applied in the public service. The hon. the First Minister informed the House a few days ago that the Government did not authorise Mr. O'Donohue to go or did not send him to Russell county. Well, the Government did not by Order in Council say that Mr. O'Donohue should go to Russell. The Government, as a Government, did not take any action in that sense; but Mr. O'Donohue is a clerk in the public service and he is not in Russell without the consent of his chief. Mr. O'Donohue is paid as a clerk in the Government service while in Russell, and Mr. Baker is paid as a Government agent while he is also in Russell, both engaged in the same election contest; and both these men are being paid out of moneys to which the Reformers of this country contribute as well as hon. gentlemen on that side. When hon. gentlemen wish to appoint election agents or ask parties to support their friends, they should do it at their own expense and keep their hands out of the public treasury. There is no difference between a misappropriation of public funds on the part of a clerk for which he is tried and sentenced to penitentiary and the action of the Government, when they put their hands into the public treasury and pay an officer who is employed in the public service and who should be giving his time to the public service while, he is, instead, doing electioneering work. I say that this whole proceeding is in the last degree discreditable to the Government. I say it is in the last degree discreditable to them that, under the pretence of appointing an immigration agent to look after the interests of the immigrants in a part of the North West, they should pay a man for working in an electioneering contest 1,500 miles away from where his public duties as immigration agent should be discharged were he fulfilling the duties of the office to which he has been appointed. I say that condition of things is intolerable. I say it is impossible that hon. gentlemen opposite should be permitted to go on this way, and if they desire to have the Session brought to an end, as we all desire it should, let them take the public moneys and honestly devote them to the purposes for which they are voted. They are not doing that when they employ a man as an immigration agent in the North-West and then send him down to the county of Russell to aid in an election contest, or permit him to go down there for that purpose. In so doing they are misappropriating the public moneys; in so doing they are obtaining moneys from the people and the Parliament of this country under false pretences.

Mr. MULLOCK. I am surprised to learn that the hon. the Minister of Agriculture has permitted these abuses to occur in connection with the administration of his department. Of him I had expected something different, but I cannot say as much for his colleagues, and I can only look upon the conduct of the Minister of Agriculture as one of the effects of the company the hon. gentleman is keeping. I quite endorse all that has been said by the hon. member for Bothwell. This is certainly a misapplication of public money; it is certainly a breach of trust on the part of the Minister who is responsible. It is a breach of trust which if it occurred between the hon. gentleman—if he is the Minister who is responsible—in his individual capacity and any one for whom he might be a trustee, would render him liable in his person and estate in any court of competent jurisdiction. That he should, because he happens in this case to be judge as well as a trustee, abuse the position of trust which he occupies, as a trustee of the funds and the law and honor of the country, is discreditable to himself and to the Administration of which he is a member. I will just remind the hon. gentleman of another transaction in connection with his department. I had expected that the Minister of Agriculture, at all events, would have had a due regard for the public funds and for what is right and proper, but when I look over some of his ways of spending the money entrusted to him, I find ground for the opposite opinion. I see that he is now spreading broadcast over the country a pamphlet entitled "The experience and observations of Mr. Webster," who poses as a farmer from Gananoque. I suppose that pamphlet has been ordered by the hon. gentleman and paid for out of his department. This Mr. Webster, I am informed, is also an election agent, although he is in the pay of the Government, and from time to time he is sent out as such. I had the honor of meeting him on several occasions, when he posed as a farmer, and I find his name scattered through the public accounts. The hon. Minister who has evidently taken him under his wing, pays him for his pamphlets, and uses him as an agent of the Government. What must be the position of an Administration which is obliged to fortify itself in this way by misapplying the moneys and abusing the power they are entrusted with. The Government must feel their position very precarious when they resort to practices of this kind. No wonder the voice of the country is loud against them; no wonder that election after election is going against them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh! Oh!

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to know what election there has been lately, since this House has been in Session, which has not gone against the Administration. Although we hear of many hon. gentlemen seeking portfolios, I doubt very much if there is a member of the Cabinet to-day who will resign his seat, for fear that it may not be filled by a supporter of the Administration.

Mr. CARLING. How about West Middlesex? That has been since the general election.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What about the post office in Strathroy?

Mr. MULLOCK. West Middlesex did render a temporary verdict, but we will see how it turns out when it is adjudicated upon. The member for West Middlesex was returned to this House by about the same majority as he had before. The very same day an election was held in Prince Edward, and the candidate who was defeated in 1878, who was elected in 1882, who was elected by a small majority in 1887, was returned to this House by a majority about 200 per cent. larger than that which he received in 1887.

Mr. MITCHELL. What about Missisquoi?

Mr. MULLOCK. Yes, what about Missisquoi, and Hochelega, and Maskinongé? Are not these indications of what the public think of this practice; and what about Kent? Of course Kent is present in the minds of those hon. gentlemen to-night, and I hope the result there will warn them that these practices can only have the same result. When a candidate was proposed in Kent, who had the nomination of the party practically in his pocket, while the protest was undetermined, he was appointed to a nominal office, and was given $1,800 of the public money, to do what? To go out of the country at a convenient time. These are scandals that the public are becoming familiar with, but I think the country will soon resent them, and then hon. gentlemen will feel regret that they have not had more regard for the welfare of the country as custodians of the public money and custodians of the public honor.

Mr. MITCHELL. In looking over the details of the expense, I find that C. C. Chipman is put down for $316 in addition to the $2,000 referred to two hours ago, and I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if that gentleman is employed in his department.

Mr. LISTER. $3,200.

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, if it was $3,200, here is $316 in addition, which makes $3,516. Is that the same man?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Probably the hon. gentleman does not understand that Mr. Chipman's office is under the Department of Agriculture. All the staff of the High Commissioner's office are under that department.

Mr. MITCHELL. But how does he come to draw over $3,500? That is an enormous salary.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no such salary.

Mr. MITCHELL. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will say that this statement on page 119 of the Auditor General's report is not correct? There we find, under the head of travelling expenses, C. C. Chipman, $170.33. Farther down we find, C. C. Chipman, advance on account of contingencies, $146, making $316.33. I do not know how many more items there are for C. C. Chipman. On page 112 of the Auditor General's report, I find that the Quebec Canadian received for publishing 20,000 "North-West of Canada," $727.49; the Brockville Times, 50,000 British Columbia pamphlets, $573.28; the Burland Lithographic Company of Montreal, for maps, and so on, $5,907.26; the Montreal Gazette, 28,000 pamphlets with maps, $746.23; the Scandinavian National Union of Winnipeg, 20,000 Scandinavian pamphlets, $382.50; the Canada Bank Note Company, Montreal, for maps, &c., $847.80—that may be right enough, I dare say—the Quebec Courrier du Canada, 5,000 British Columbia pamphlets, $512.28; the Quebec Cultivateur, 3,000 "Esquisse de la Gaspésie" and "Notes on Gaspé," $1,033.33; Three Rivers La Liberté, "Esquisse Générale du Nord-Ouest," $1,704.70; Notman & Son, Montreal, views of Charlottetown, and so on.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The view of Charlottetown is only 50 cents.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is so, but there is J. H. Brownlee, of Winnipeg, 8,000 maps of Manitoba, $200. Then we have J. Wilson & Co., of Ottawa, stretching and binding 1,000 chromo posters, stretching chromo posters with zinc ends, stretching maps, binding, framing, and so on, $905.20; Quebec Chronicle, 50,000 "Information for settlers in B. C."—which, I presume, means British Columbia, and that appears to be a pretty expensive place—$744.92; Morrisburg Courier, 50,000 "Canada, its extent and resources," $644.77. This is touching the resources of Canada pretty well. Then there is the Montreal Colonisateur Canadien, $1,520; the Montreal Monde, $981.51; Montreal Minerve, 50,000 pamphlets, "Rapport Agostini," $1,784.93; Toronto Mail—I suppose this was before the Mail learned to speak the truth—

Mr. CARLING. How much did the Herald get?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not see anything here about the Herald.

Mr. CARLING. But the previous year?

Mr. MITCHELL. We got something to do in a previous year, but, as we had independence enough to speaking what we thought, we were mighty soon stopped. Toronto Mail, $10,088.78. Then we have Richardson of Winnipeg, 13,000; "Facts and figures," $624; Mortimer & Co. of Ottawa, lithographing and printing 10,000 maps, and another 10,000 maps, $484.44; S. B. Foote, advertising in Canada, $50; J. A. Carman, of Winnipeg, $75; Toronto Irish Canadian, 100,000 "Across Canada," $718.98; Quebec Journal, 50,000 "To Canada," $949.50; Pembroke Standard, on account of work completed in September, 1887, $262; Ottawa Le Canada, 1,000 Hungarian circulars and translation, $22.50; Berlin Gospel Banner, 50,000 German pamphlets, $751.60, and then we have the London Free Press, the only instance in the whole lot that I find of a Liberal paper, which receives $15,807.32.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It gets a liberal supply, at any rate.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is not that your paper, Mr. Mills?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No, it is on the other side.

Mr. MITCHELL. He gets $15,807; Welland Telegraph, $50,000; German pamphlets, folding, covering, &c., $351; Arthur Buies $200, "Sur le parcours du chemin de fer du Lac St. Jean, $20." I do not object to the hon. gentleman publishing pamphlets and books to inform the public of England and Europe of the advantages of Canada as a country to settle in, but it appears to me that the distribution of the public money in the way of printing is very badly administered. I think it is a little selfish of them to keep it all among the Tory press, and I think there is an amount of trash published in some of these pamphlets that is perfectly worthless. We know the object. It is to subsidise them, and we know that the sum that is paid in advertising, to say nothing of other expenses connected with the Department of Agriculture, is utterly out of proportion to the amount of the benefit received. Sir, I am glad to see the Government have dropped out $100,000 on account of assisted passages. I think we have been spending money most recklessly in that way, and we have no corresponding advantages to the communities in which we live. I think now the Government ought to go on and to a large extent cut off the expenses for these useless publications. I do not mean to imply that all the persons who write pamphlets do not render some service, but there is a great deal of trash circulated in connection with this department that is outrageous.

Mr. LISTER. So far as these pamphlets are concerned, with the exception of one, that of Mr. Lynch, on dairying, the rest are simply trash. They are prepared simply for the purpose of giving money to the friends of the Government; and so far as the newspapers are concerned, they are simply subsidised in the interest of the Government. I challenge the Minister to point out a single Tory newspaper from Prince Edward Island to British Columbia that is not subsidised by this Government. Why, Sir, if they want coal away down in Prince Edward Island, they advertise it in the British Columbia papers, and in the Regina Leader. Why, Sir, a gentleman who sits in this House as member for one of the Assinaboias, appears in the Public Accounts as having received something like $5,000 last year. No wonder he could take a trip on the continent. He says he went to the continent, and he told us that he was at some university. He has travelled on the continent at the expense of the people of this country, for which he is giving them nothing at all. Now, the hon. gentleman talks about the election. I think he had better have said nothing about the West Middlesex election. Does he not know that they dangled a post office before the people of Strathroy for months before the elections? Does he not know that every Tom, Dick and Harry who had a lot of land in Strathroy were promised that the Government were going to buy their lot at an enormous price? Does he not know that every contractor in the town was led to believe that he was going to get a contract for this building, and that everybody who had anything to do in the village, was going to be appointed clerk of works. No wonder that West Middlesex went against the Liberals this time, but wait until the next election comes, and we will show you a trick or two. Does anybody suppose that these two men, O'Donohue and Baker, who have worked for the Government in Russell, if they were Liberals, and had worked against the Government, would have remained in its service a single day? No, Sir, they would have been dismissed like the French translators. The Premier and one or two of his friends go round and say to the Speaker, dismiss that man without trial. That is British justice and fair play for you! But as long as a man is working for the Government he can go home and leave his business when he ought to be at his post in the department, and go back and forth pursuing his nefarious work in promoting the election of the Government candidate. There may be a day of reckoning for this gentleman, who may find that the position he has held, under these circumstances, at all events, is not a very safe position. How differently hon. gentlemen treat Liberals. I had occasion only the other day to bring to the attention of the Postmaster General the case of an honorable and responsible citizen who was postmaster down in Arkona in my county, and because they wanted to have his place for a political hack and supporter of theirs they dismissed him without a trial. They preferred no charge, they had no investigation, there was nothing wrong with the office, and that man was summarily dismissed, and his crime was the crime of being a member of the Liberal party of this country. They tell us that his books were in disorder. But he denies it in his letter to me. He says there was nothing against him; no charge ever made, no wrong ever took place in the office, and the statement made by the Government that he was dismissed for cause is falsified by the fact that the man who has received his position was promised the appointment of postmaster for months before the dismissal of Mr. Evarist. That is the way Liberal officeholders in this country are treated by this Government. That is the way that worthy officeholders are treated by hon. gentlemen opposite. Sir, they must not be surprised if, when a change of Administration takes place, these wrongs are righted. There will be a fearful day of reckoning for these men who have violated the position they occupy, who have proved themselves to be unfit to be in the public service. They must not be surprised if they are slaughtered right and left when a change of Government takes place. The public service of this country cannot be kept in the position it ought to be, unless all public servants cease to be partisans, and cease to interfere in elections.

Mr. BAKER. I still wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture if I may have any reason to hope that the agent at Victoria will have his salary increased.

Mr. CARLING. I can only say that if I find that the duties of that office have been very much increased, I will take an increase of his salary into favorable consideration.

Salaries of the London Office in England $7,554

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is this to be voted again this year? The hon. gentleman is not accepting any salary?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It has nothing to do with my salary.

Mr. MULOCK. I am glad to have an opportunity of saying a good word for an official of this House. I wish to offer my testimony to the manner in which Mr. Colmer, of the High Commissioner's Office in London, has discharged his duties. I have had an opportunity of knowing personally how he treated the people from Canada, and I have found his conduct in that regard entirely satisfactory.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may take this opportunity of saying that it would be impossible to find in any department of the public service, a more energetic, industrious, and painstaking officer than Mr. Colmer. The total salary paid with this increased vote is less than it was in 1883 when I first took charge of the office.

Mr. McMILLAN. I see there are three different officials who are paid the same salaries, the agents at Liverpool, Dublin and Glasgow, but each pay a different amount of income tax, namely, $137, $86.62 and $30.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The income tax is so much per cent. upon the salary, and when the salary is larger of course the income tax is greater. I can assure the hon. gentleman that the salaries are not alike.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it necessary, now that we have decreased assisted immigration expenditure by over $100,000, or about two-fifths of the whole expenditure, that all these officials in Europe and Great Britain should be maintained?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is impossible to immediately change the staff. These officers have been placed in those positions, and they will have to discharge the duties to the office precisely the same as before. I may say with regard to the Liverpool office that Mr. Dyke, who is an extremely able and assiduous officer, is charged with a large amount of work in connection with continental immigration. Persons on his staff are corresponding in different languages with persons in Germany, Norway, and Switzerland, and other countries, and, therefore, so far as regards the Liverpool office, which is the principal point of departure for European emigrants to this country, must be maintained. You cannot dispense with it, because you have reduced the amount of assisted passages; in fact we would rather require to increase the efforts of the agencies in Liverpool, Glasgow and Dublin with a view to attract agriculturists with capital to this country. I do not think if the hon. gentleman will give the subject his attention he will come to the conclusion that it would be wise that, because we are effecting a saving of $100,000 a year in assisted passages, we should do away with our officers, but on the other hand we should rather increase our efforts to obtain such immigrants as will not be able to pay their own passages, but will possess sufficient capital to enable them to become useful and valuable settlers in developing our country.

Mr. MITCHELL. The explanation given by the hon. gentleman is a very reasonable one.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I find that Mr. Dyke's salary is $2,100, Mr. Graham's salary $1,300, Mr. Connolly's $1,000, instead of all the salaries being equal, as has been alleged. The hon. gentleman was looking at the amounts for travelling expenses, which is a different matter. The income tax is so much per cent. on the salary, and the statement of the Minister of Finance was therefore perfectly correct.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) What agencies does the hon. gentleman propose to retain?

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Dyke at Liverpool, $2,100; Mr. Graham at Glasgow, $1,300; the agent at Belfast, $1,000; Mr. Connolly at Dublin, $1,000; agent at Bristol, $500, and an agent at Switzerland, $800.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I find the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) is quite mistaken in regard to the income tax payments. The same amount of income tax has not been paid by officers with the same salaries, the difference in one case being 86 to 27, and in another case 50 to 28.

Mr. CARLING. There is a receipt for each of the items certified by the Auditor General.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will bring the Auditor General's statement which will show that the amounts stated are perfectly correct.

Mr. MULOCK. Are the agents in Europe remunerated for their actual time while travelling?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There are $4 a day allowed for travelling expenses.

Mr. LISTER. Whether they travel or not?

Mr. MULOCK. This agent has his fixed salary, and $1,460 are allowed him for travelling expenses, as we see by reference to the Auditor General's report, that is $4 a day for the 365 days in the year. I suppose that during the most of his time he is engaged in his office at Liverpool.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is not exactly so. He frequently makes trips to Norway and Sweden and parts of the continent of Europe to see the various agents and persons with whom he is in constant correspondence.

Mr. MULOCK. I hardly think that is a good way to remunerate him. He receives a certain amount as salary and he receives $1,460 more in order to keep him from loss in case he travels. You are remunerating him in a way that conflicts with the public interest. If it is in the public interest that he should travel, he should be paid for travelling, but by the way in which you are remunerating him now you make it to his interest not to travel. I presume that it is more expensive for him to travel than to remain in Liverpool and if he receives $1,460 whether he travels or not, and it is more expensive to travel than to remain in Liverpool, he will stay in Liverpool. I think he should be paid his expenses when he travels, and then only.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is something in the remarks of the hon. gentleman. This practice was established several years ago and when a practice is established in remunerating a public officer hon. gentlemen well know how difficult it is to change it.

Mr. DAVIES. There is a great difference between the travelling expenses of some of the agents. The agents at Liverpool and Glasgow are allowed $4 a day as travelling expenses and Mr. Connolly in Dublin is only allowed $2.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is in relation to the importance of the position he occupies.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.). The man in Dublin would seem to be just as important as the man in Glasgow.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I see that in another part of the accounts, Mr. Dyke gets $450 more for travelling expenses.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Finance seems to admit that this is not a sound way of paying those travelling expenses, but he does not hold out any hope that he will correct it. What has fallen from the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) shows the necessity of establishing a proper basis by paying a fixed salary, and if he travels by paying him for travelling.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no doubt but this is a subject worthy of careful consideration.

Mr. MITCHELL. I see Christmas gratuities in Mr. Dyke's items, $12.54. It is a small item, but it is a strange principle to establish to give gratuities and charge it in the public accounts.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.). What is the saving made in the item for contingencies for Canadian agencies? I see that you saved $9,000 on this year's grant.

Mr. CARLING. The amount last year was $30,000. This report is based on the actual expenditure for last year.

Gen. LAURIE. While on the item for immigration expenses I should like to ask is it probable that any better accommodation will be afforded at Halifax to immigrants waiting there before they are taken out west? I do not know whether it comes under the Department of Agriculture or of Railways, but the immigrants have no other accommodation at present than a freight shed, and it is very severe on women and children coming in an inclement season of the year that they have no place to obtain warmth and food. It does seem to me that accommodation should be provided for them rather than leave them as they are now among the sheds.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have been in a place there which is to accommodate the immigrants and which is at the head of the wharf. It is not very spacious it is true, but at the same time it must not be forgotten that there is no object in having arrangements made to keep immigrants there a long time. We do not want to have them there an hour if we can help it. The trains come down on the spot and they are on their way, after a short time. The accommodation is not very ample, but there is a house at the head of the wharf to give them temporary shelter while the trains are being got in readiness to take them away.

Mr. KENNY. My hon. friend the member for Shelburne (Gen. Laurie) is slightly in error. There is a room there which communicates with the shed in which the emigrants land, but inasmuch as last year, I think, some 13,000 immigrants were landed in Halifax, I do not believe the accommodation is sufficient for this large and increasing number. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will take that matter into consideration, whilst there is some accommodation there it is quite insufficient for the growing traffic.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if any portion of this $30,000 is to be applied towards assisting immigrants who come to Canada?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, not any.

Mr. MULOCK. No public money is to be expended in that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No. At present the question has not been finally decided with reference to children who are brought out by charitable institutions; by Dr. Barnardo and other persons, who have established with their own money homes in this country, in which the children are cared for until they are finally placed in a satisfactory position. The country has had no other charge and there has been a small assistance, I think I am right in saying of $2, given for each of those children.

Mr. CARLING. Over 1,000 were brought out last year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Two or three thousand dollars is the entire expense and that has not been withdrawn.

Mr. MULOCK. Am I correct in understanding from the Minister of Finance that the Government have decided that they will not in any way contribute towards paying for immigrants.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not a shilling.

Mr. MULOCK. The only question in point is the question of $2 for each of those children?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL. While this subject is before the House I wish to give an expression of opinion about the allowance for those children. I entirely approve of an allowance to a moderate extent to assist those people who bring out those children. I do not think because we condemn aid being given to those immigrants generally that the same applies to benevolent societies or individuals who at their own expense bring out children. I do not think this country would object to a small contribution such as this for that purpose.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) It depends on the children they bring out.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say as to that that the investigation has been most satisfactory. I believe it has been found that 95 per cent have been well selected and are all that could possibly be desired.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think the hon. Minister of Finance was right in his statement that the immigrants remain only a short time at Halifax when they land there. My firm being agents for the Dominion line, by which a large number of immigrants come during the winter months, I have been able to watch the modus operandi, and he is quite correct in saying that we always endeavor to get them away as soon as possible, and they seldom remain there more than a few hours, in fact only long enough to have their baggage examined. There is a room there for their accommodation, but at times it is hardly sufficient for them, and we sometimes have to obviate the difficulty by keeping them on the steamers until the trains are ready. There is a house opposite the depot for the accommodation of immigrants. I do not know anything about it, and would not be understood as saying a word against it; but some of the clergymen in Halifax, who had an idea that liquor was sold in that house, started an immigrants' home opposite the deep water terminus, where the immigrants would be under the charge of people belonging to the different churches, and would be carefully looked after. I understand that the people in charge of this home have made an application to the Minister, and if the Government would make an arrangement with them, they could rely on the immigrants being carefully looked after, and kept away from temptation. The accommodation we have we manage to get along with, but it would be better if we had a little more.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think the hon. the Finance Minister stated that the Government had not yet decided whether they would give any assistance to those societies which are bringing out children. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) said he thought it was right and proper that aid should be rendered to them. I think the Government should seriously consider whether it would be in the best interest of the people of Canada to assist the majority of those children who are brought here. I have had frequent opportunities for a number of years of seeing and examining those who have been brought out by various institutions, and I have no hesitation in saying that they are not a desirable class out of whom to make citizens of this Dominion. I think the Minister stated that careful inspection was made to see that only proper children were brought out. I should like to know what arrangements are made for doing that. I do not know of any regulations of the department providing for any proper inspection of these children before they leave the old country. Many of these children are the offspring of a class of people whom we would not like to become citizens amongst us; many of them are diseased, and I think it should be seriously considered whether it would be wise to allow them to be scattered throughout the country, to mingle and associate with the children of our own people. I certainly think that the Government ought to decide either to exercise every diligence in the selection of these children or else not to render any further aid to that class.

Mr. TROW. I dissent entirely from the view expressed by my hon. friend. In the town of Stratford there is an institution, established by Miss Macpherson, to which she has brought hundreds of children, and they are not there twenty-four hours until they are placed in good, comfortable positions for life among the farmers in the neighborhood, and thus far I have not heard of more than two out of the thousands she has brought who have not proved to be respectable citizens. I think these children from 12 to 14 years of age are the most desirable class of immigrants we can get. We have been freed from the expense of raising them until they are prepared to take positions in life for themselves, and the farmers are always anxious to obtain them.

Gen. LAURIE. It fell to my lot to place about 500 of these children, and I think the best proof that they gave satisfaction is the fact that as successive parties came out the applications for them increased so much that I had four or five applications for each one that came out, for I inferred that the people would not apply for them unless they were a desirable class. I watched over them and inspected them for a certain number of years, and while a certain number were not satisfactory, the great mass of them were satisfactory. I have watched the careers of many of them since and they have become valuable citizens.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Notwithstanding what my hon. friend from South Perth has said, I have seen many of these children as they grow up, and I consider that they are not such a class as we ought to have in our midst. They are a class brought frequently from the poorhouses and the slums of the cities of the old country.

Mr. TROW. No.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). My hon. friend says no, but he knows nothing about it; he has had no opportunity of witnessing the diseases that are prevalent among many of those brought from the old country. If we wish to sow the seeds of disease among the people of this country, we will continue bringing that class. My hon. friend desires that we should do so. I have no objection as far as he is concerned, but I desire to protect the rest of the community; and I say that my experience has been that many of those brought here should not have been permitted to remain in this country. These children, of course, are not to blame. Their diseases are inherited from their parents; but the Government would be justified if they would devise some means by which a selection would be made and we would be spared the infliction of the immigration of poorhouse children.

Mr. TROW. The experience of my hon. friend must be very limited, for the simple reason that there is not an institution for the reception of these children probably within 100 miles from where he resides, and he would not have an opportunity of considering their character in the isolated constituency he represents.

Mr. MITCHELL. I notice that a considerable amount has been expended for the examination of these children. I find eight items on page 117 and two items on page 118.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am glad to hear the hon. gentleman state this, because the hon. member for East Elgin will find there is a careful examination made.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Perhaps if the hon. the Finance Minister would take an opportunity to see many of those children, he would have the same opinion with regard to them as I have. It is not my desire to make any attack or to misrepresent things in the least. But I have had the opportunity of examining into the condition of those children, and I know what I am speaking. As regards the remarks of my hon. friend (Mr. Trow) to the effect that there is no institution for these waifs within 100 miles of where I reside, that statement comes fittingly from one who speaks of mountains thousands of miles high, and I do not pay much attention to it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I remember speaking last year on this subject with a police magistrate in Chatham, where a considerable number of these children, principally girls, were left; and I think he told me that in the course of six months, there was not one of them that had not been before his court. I think, therefore, the subject is one that ought to receive the careful consideration of the Government.

Mr. MULOCK. Before this resolution is carried, I would ask the Finance Minister if he would call an early meeting of the Public Accounts Committee to examine into the cases of Mr. Baker and Mr. O'Donohue, and find out the exact circumstances under which they absented themselves from duty to take part in an election contest. Perhaps Friday would suit the convenience of the hon. gentleman. This is a matter which we cannot pass over in silence. The hon. the Minister of Agriculture has given a very unsatisfactory explanation, and we are bound to find out how it is these public servants have been allowed to desert their posts in order to perform other duties.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That has nothing to do with Public Accounts.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It has a great deal to do with them. This Mr. Baker left an important post to canvass in Russell, and a most unsatisfactory explanation has been given by the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. CARLING. In what way?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Either he is absent on leave or he is not. If absent on leave for the purpose of electioneering, his action is most disgraceful to all the parties concerned. If the hon. gentleman has been deceived by Mr. Baker—

Mr. CARLING. I have not.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There can be no more important enquiry before the Public Accounts Committee than the enquiry into the circumstances under which a man receiving public pay is neglecting his duty and engaging in an electioneering contest. If this kind of thing is to go on and there should be a change of Government, none of these men can hope to retain their places longer.

An hon. MEMBER. That will be a long time.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Perhaps so. But even if this Government continues in office, I am sure the better men supporting it do not wish to see public servants neglecting their duties to take part in a political contest. As far as we are concerned on this side, we are prepared to enter our protest against it, and will make that protest very effective, if it ever falls in our power to do so. I desire these public servants to know that if they choose to make themselves political hacks and canvass for Government supporters in an electioneering contest, they must do it at their own risk, and I desire to know how far the Minister of Agriculture has lent himself to such conduct.

Gen. LAURIE. If a public servant happened to be canvassing in behalf of a supporter of the Government, I would like to know what position the hon. gentleman would take?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman surely did not hear the debate which took place the other day on the dismissal of some gentlemen who were not even officers of the Government, but were officers of the House, because they ventured to take part in an electioneering contest against the Government, while those who took part on the Government side were retained.

Gen. LAURIE. I regret to say that I know of a great many public servants who worked very hard in favor of an opponent of the Government in a late contest in which I was engaged.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman had the advantage of the Government steamer to carry his voters all along the coast.

Gen. LAURIE. I have already stated that is not the fact.

Mr. GILLMOR. I have sat here for two or three years listening to this discussion. I think that the question which is now occupying the attention of the committee is a serious one. Of course, the salary is not a very large one, but I would have been glad to have heard some of the members of the Government express an opinion with reference to this small matter. If it is their policy to encourage officials who are paid out of the public Treasury to leave their post of duty in order to assist in elections, and to run throughout the Dominion, they should announce it. I do not think they can approve of it. I have listened to the charges which have been made. There is very little political capital to be made out of that sort of thing, but there is a principle involved, and I would be pleased to hear members of the Government disclaim any intention of using their officials, who are paid out of the taxes of the people, who are paid out of the public purse, in this way. I think it is wrong, and I would be glad to hear some members of the Government disclaim this sort of thing. It ought not to be, no matter what party is in power. I could occupy the time of the committee much longer, but I do think it is important for this country that we should have at least as much political morality as it is possible to have, and I think this is political immorality and ought not to be encouraged, and I do not think the Government can approve of this sort of thing. It would please me to hear them say it is wrong and should be discontinued, and to hear them say they will discontinue this sort of thing.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It occurs to me that the question put by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) comes at the wrong time and in the wrong place. We are at present discussing the Estimates and not the conduct of the Government. If hon. gentlemen opposite choose to bring up a charge against the Government, let them do it at the right time, and we will be prepared to meet it. As to the question of my hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) I may say, in reference to this Mr. Baker, whose case I never heard of until to-night, that I think the statement of the Minister of Agriculture ought to be perfectly satisfactory. He says that Mr. Baker applied for leave of absence and obtained it, that he got the same leave of absence which was given to other officers, that he found a substitute to do his work, that substitute being satisfactory to the department for the performance of his duties during his leave of absence; and the Minister of Agriculture says that how Mr. Baker was employing his time he does not know. That was the answer of the Minister of Agriculture, and no other answer could be given. He did not know any more in reference to Mr. Baker.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Then he cannot read the papers.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I read the papers, and I never heard Mr. Baker's name until it was mentioned by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills).

Mr. MULOCK. We are now engaged in voting a sum of money to pay Mr. Baker's salary for the ensuing year, and I think it is very pertinent to that question to decide whether he has been discharging his duties in such a way as to move this committee to continue their payments.

There are some four or five thousand civil servants in the service of this Government, and perhaps this kind of action might go a little further, because we have seen some interference with civil servants in certain cases. Sometimes we have seen them removed from their positions, and in others we have seen them compelled to take part in elections on behalf of the Government. If the First Minister does not regard this inquiry as being limited, let him go a little further. I am not at all satisfied as to the circumstances under which some of these men have been dismissed. For instance, there were those three Irishmen who were dismissed from the canal at the instance of the hon. member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran). I believe he is blameable for not protecting them if he is not for obtaining their dismissal. That, perhaps, is a matter which is not germane to this point, but it ought to be cleared up. In regard to the matter now before us, if the Minister takes the ground that, as a committee, we are not entitled to do this, surely as a committee we can make a representation to the House, and that should be that A. G. Baker, or whatever his name is, was employed as immigration agent at Qu'Appelle, that he was stationed at Qu'Appelle, that at the present time the immigration business is very brisk at Qu'Appelle, that he has had some experience in managing that business, and that his business there ought to call upon him to discharge the duties of his office, and that the interests of the country imperatively demand that the duties attaching to that office should be attended to, and that they will not admit of delay or of being performed by a person incompetent to perform them; and therefore no person should be allowed to vacate that office at such a critical moment, except under the greatest possible urgency. I ask the hon. the Minister of Agriculture whether this civil servant submitted to him the name of his successor who was supposed to be able to perform these duties.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He did not know that he was the agent.

Mr. MULLOCK. The First Minister says he did know, but he says the Minister of Agriculture passed upon the qualifications of the substitute.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, I did not. What I said was that the appointment of the substitute was satisfactory to the department. I do not know whether it was satisfactory to the Minister or not.

Mr. MULLOCK. I do not know whether the Minister runs the department or the department runs the Minister, but I assume that any hon. Minister ought to understand his own business, and I do not think that even the First Minister, who has had great experience as head of a department, will admit that he was not responsible for everything that took place in his department. I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he knew what were the qualifications of this substitute of Mr. Baker before he granted leave of absence to that agent. Did he consider for a moment that this was not the time to grant leave of absence, and that it should only be granted under great urgency, such as a family bereavement or something of that kind, which would justify the Minister, if he were willing to do so, in recommending a change in the Department at that time. If that is not so, the Minister of Agriculture has been derelict in his duty. If everything is satisfactory, the committee will, of course, disclose it, but, if the hon. gentleman gives out that the only excuse was to enable this gentleman to go to some constituency and manipulate votes there and secure the Minister of Agriculture and his colleagues in office, that would not be a sufficient ground for the leave being granted. I think we must first find out whether this officer has discharged his duty properly, whether he was justified in leaving his office, either by the circumstances or by permission; and not till then should we vote money to continue him in office.

Mr. CURRAN. With reference to the statement made by the last speaker in connection with this matter, and which he has just taken the opportunity for the third time to repeat in this House, although I stated that the allegations he had made on two former occasions were untrue, as he has again repeated to-night the statement about three Irishmen being discharged from the public service in Montreal, whose discharge I might have prevented, I may as well make, once for all, a formal statement with regard to that subject. The report originated with a young man who was employed on the Montreal Herald, and was utterly without foundation. In the first place, there were no men discharged, either Englishmen, Irishmen, Scotchmen, Frenchmen, or men of any other nationality, from any public service in the city of Montreal, and I had nothing to do with such discharge, if it took place, and I know it did not. On the contrary, when this statement appeared in the newspapers and was copied into one or two other papers in this city and elsewhere, I stood up in my place and stated that if any such discharge had taken place, it was without my knowledge or consent, and that I would give the papers in question an opportunity of proving their assertion. I went to Montreal, and I there enquired from the superintendent of the canal what had taken place. These three men were alleged to have been discharged from the canal works because they had taken part in an election against me. I found that no such men were in the employ of the canal office at all. There are a certain number of laborers employed in the canal office every year to take charge of the locks. The superintendent of the canal informed me that certain parties had told him that during the course of the election three men who were in the habit of being engaged in the spring, were taking a very active part in the election against me, and that he had gone and told them that it was very much better for them, as they did not know what Government would be in power, to give their votes as they thought proper, but to take no other part in the election canvass. It appears that the three men whom he had thus notified applied for work at the opening of the season, and he told them to come to me and get a letter of recommendation, and he would give them work. That was all that was said. Two of these men come to me and asked for letters of recommendation, which I immediately gave them, and he immediately gave them work. The third man never applied to me for a letter, and I confess I never ran after him to give him one. If he had come to me he would have had the letter just the same as the others. Now, I will read what the papers which had published this statement about me said afterwards. In the first place the Montreal Herald, in a very manly way, came out in the following language:—

"Some time ago, before the animosities of the late general election had subsided there appeared in the Herald an article in which Mr. J. J. Curran, member for Montreal Centre, was alluded to as the enemy of Irish Home Rule and a coercionist. He is represented as having made use of his political position to oppress a number of Irish laborers in this city. We deem it our duty to state how much we regret that the article in question should have found its way into our columns, and lest its publication may have in any degree injured that gentleman in the esteem of his fellow-countrymen, we desire to add that the charges were unfounded, in so far as they related to Mr. Curran. We differ from Mr. Curran on many questions of Dominion politics, yet we willingly acknowledge that he is a sincere friend of the Irish cause and an upright Canadian politician."

That was published on the 14th September, 1887, and I think disposed of the question in so far as I was concerned. I have stated exactly how far the superintendent of the canal was concerned, also. Then the Montreal Post, which had been most bitter against me all along, copied the article of the Herald and published a very strong article on its own account, in which it stated:

"The article of the Herald which occasioned the above apology having been reproduced in the Post and True Witness, it is only fair that the management of those papers should publish the disavowal. On the other hand, they also published strictures on the member for Montreal Centre, and to end if possible all causes of dispute with that gentleman they deem it proper to make the following statement: The Herald says that Mr. Curran is an upright Canadian politician. The management agree with that paper. He is an honorable and an honest man. The charges made against him in this paper relative to coercing poor laboring men were, they now believe, unfounded and the management regret any such allegations having been made.

"The management of the Post are therefore prepared to admit that when a difference of opinion comes it is possible to advocate the views of either side without having recourse to epithets. The management of this paper feel that some of the language made use of by their writers gave Mr. Curran good cause of complaint and they desire to make the amende honorable in this connection."

This was published both in the Post and True Witness, on September 29, 1887. Another paper published in this city also apologised for having reproduced the statement in question. Now, all these things must have been known to the hon. member who has just spoken. When I stood up in the House, on a former occasion, I gave the most emphatic denial to the allegations that he had made. Still, he persisted in them. He was requested to withdraw this statement, but he would not withdraw it. Now, I have only one thing to add, that any man who says that I have ever, on any occasion, oppressed public servants, or sought to deprive them of any position which they hold under the Government, or might hope to hold under it, because any man or men had opposed me in an election, is a liar, in the plainest language.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. CURRAN. I say any man who says so, is a liar.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order, order.

Mr. CURRAN. What is the order about? I say so here, and I will say so anywhere else. Now, I hope that this thing has come up for the last time, because I shall consider it a personal insult if it is again hurled against me, after the manner in which I have disproved the allegation. As I said, the papers in question came out in a most manly way and exonerated me in every respect, and from that day to this I have been well treated by them, I believe. But certainly there is no excuse for such reiterated attacks upon me in a matter that is utterly without foundation; and if all the other allegations made here with reference to public employes are of the same nature, this House can judge of their value.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is the second time the hon. member for Montreal has chosen to read that article in the Herald.

Mr. CURRAN. I never read it before in the House.

Mr. MITCHELL. You referred to it, then, last Session.

Mr. CURRAN. No, I could not refer to it last Session, because it had not been written then.

Mr. MITCHELL. In the beginning of the Session, you did.

Mr. CURRAN. Not at all.

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, I certainly understood so.

Mr. CURRAN. I stated in answer to the hon. member who spoke a moment ago, that this article had appeared in the Herald, but I had not the article about me just then to read.

Mr. MITCHELL. I know you referred to it, at all events.

Mr. CURRAN. Yes, I did.

Mr. MITCHELL. As the hon. gentleman has made a statement, I may just as well make one too. This article was written without my knowledge, and the first I saw of it was in the press. It was written by a gentleman who then managed my paper, and when I saw the article I at once asked that gentleman—I need not mention his name, gentlemen on the other side know who it is.

An hon. MEMBER. The Empire?

Mr. MITCHELL. The Empire, if you like. I asked him what the meaning of the article was, what was the foundation for making such statement against a man of Mr. Curran's position and standing. He said he had the best authority for it, that he had sent down to verify the statements of the men—the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Curran) spoke of three, to the best of my recollection the number was six. My manager told me they had been not exactly discharged, but had been refused employment on the canal. They had been employed from season to season, some of them for years, and when they went to get employment at the opening of this season they were informed that before they could be employed they would have to get permission from Mr. Curran. My manager informed me that he had verified the facts, and the men had come to the office and asserted it over and over again and they were prepared to prove it. When Mr. Curran brought an action against the Herald I said: If those facts can be established I will defend it, and I did defend the action, till I got an intimation that the matter could be very easily settled. I believed there was very grave doubt as to whether, under the libel law of Quebec, the proof of the truth of the statement was always a defence, and when I came to consult my lawyer, who was a very prominent Conservative, I discovered that there were very grave doubts whether, even if every fact be proved as stated in the paper, I would not still be mulcted in damages. Mr. Curran having very handsomely offered to settle the matter if an acknowledgment was made, my lawyer said I had better do it and get rid of it. I at once said to my lawyer: If that is the case I will do it. I will say this, that Mr. Curran said more than that, namely, that he would not even charge the costs against the Herald if he had not a partner who was entitled to have his costs in the matter, when he found that it was done without my knowledge or information. I said to my lawyer under these circumstances: We will pay Mr. Curran his costs and make such an acknowledgment of error as you think desirable—and Mr. Curran prepared it himself, he will acknowledge it. And that at the time I said to my lawyer: Well, it is going pretty far, but we have done him some injury and I am willing to make the utmost recompense to him for it. Under those circumstances I gave Mr. Curran that explanation for publication, if he chose to use it. It was objectionable to me somewhat, expressing as it did an opinion about his private character, but at the same time I felt that, when I was doing it, it was better not to do it half way but to go the whole length and satisfy Mr. Curran. I want to say this to Mr. Curran, that every man connected with the editorial staff, and there are several of them, was indignant to think, with a case which they thought clear, I should have been so foolish as to settle it. I have had some little experience with actions for libel since I became connected with a newspaper. I know what the troubles are. I got into an action in which there were ten different allegations of defence, each of which would have laid me open for an action for damages. The partner of our worthy Speaker brought an action against the Herald in that case, brought us into court, and one of the allegations was of rather a serious character, the case being in connection with a young immigrant woman. She subsequently emigrated to Vermont. I had to send to Vermont for her, and although I proved every one of the ten allegations except one, which had to be proved by that young woman, the old woman who brought the action hurried her away and I was never able to get sight of her again. Judge Jetté, who presided at the court, postponed the final evidence for several days, knowing we had brought this young woman there and that she had disappeared, but the result was that because we were not able to prove the tenth allegation, although we had proved nine, I had to pay $100 damages and over $300 costs to the worthy Speaker's partner. That was a little experience for me. My lawyer told me, as I have said, that even if I proved the facts to be as stated it was very questionable under the Quebec law whether that would free the Herald from damages; I said I did not believe any such thing in regard to the law. I happened to have another suit in the court, of a political character, and I got out of it on appeal on account of the declaration not having been properly drawn. I have thus had some experience of the effect of the libel law in the Province of Quebec. I made up my mind that it was better to eat a little crow than to pay large lawyers bills, and when I did make up my mind to eat the leek I did not go half way in the matter; and as Mr. Curran knows, when he prepared the letter and submitted it to my lawyer and my lawyer submitted it to me, I said: It goes rather too far, but I will sign it and pay the bill and the hon. member and myself have been friends ever since. I merely state these facts in order to explain how Peter Mitchell came to eat the leek, for he does not very often do it.

Mr. CURRAN. It is perfectly true that the apology was prepared by Mr. McMaster and myself.

Mr. MITCHELL. By yourself chiefly.

Mr. CURRAN. On the other hand I do not wish the hon. gentleman to be under a false impression, and I may say here that whatever may be the defects in the Quebec law, if the hon. gentleman is sure of what he has stated I am perfectly prepared to waive the whole question as to damages. If he imagines he can prove any one part of the statement made against me as true, I state in the presence of this House that I am prepared to say that he shall not be mulcted in any damages, and let him go on with the suit. I am prepared to establish that I had nothing to do with this matter, and that the statement I have made is true in every respect.

Mr. MITCHELL. I did not say you had.

Mr. CURRAN. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that it was because he was afraid he might not be able to prove it on some one or other point.

Mr. MITCHELL. No, I did not say that. I had given my experience as to what had been done in another case.

Mr. CURRAN. That seems to have led the hon. gentleman to adopt the course he did adopt, as I thought in a very manly way, in this matter. As I have said, there was no man discharged. It may have been a very tyrannical thing on the part of the superintendent of the canal to say to those men go and get a letter of recommendation from Mr. Curran. I do not think it is, because a great many come to me for letters, and although I give them, I cannot always get them work. I gave the letters the very moment the men came and I would have given it to the third man if he had come also.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Curran may have misunderstood me. What I did wish to convey to him and to this House, was that I knew nothing of the facts myself. The libel, if it was a libel, was committed before I knew anything about it. As to the facts I endeavored to get them verified after the event, as my manager had verified them, as he said before. I told him to verify them again, and he assured me that the facts which he was prepared to prove were, that those six men, not three if my recollection serves me right, who were in the habit of going as a matter of course in the spring of the year and getting employment as they had employment before, when they did apply they were told by the manager of the canal that they would have to get a letter from Mr. Curran before they could get employment. That is what those men told my manager, as my manager told me, and he was prepared to verify that and he was very indignant with me for taking the course I did.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think it is quite germane to the whole debate that the suggestion of my hon. friend should be entertained, because this discussion places the hon. the Minister of Agriculture in a very equivocal position. The hon. the Minister says that Mr. Baker recommended to him or to the department a person to look to his office during his absence and that this was satisfactory to the department. The hon. gentleman forgot that when Mr. Baker's name was mentioned by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) at the commencement of the discussion, he did not remember that Mr. Baker was an officer of his department at all. I would ask him how he can state now that Mr. Baker could have made this satisfactory arrangement for the conduct of his business?

Mr. CARLING. I did not say that I did not remember that he was an officer of the department. I said that I thought he was the agent at Brandon and not Qu'Appelle.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he was not aware that he was an officer at all, and when he consulted with his deputy he found that he was. However this is just a part of the programme that has been played for a long time. It was played in Halifax during the local election when an officer of the Customs Department who had enjoyed a summer holiday, on his return from his holiday and when the local election was going on, the collector received orders from the department here at Ottawa to give him leave of absence during the election and he was despatched to Isidore with fishing bounty cheques, to be distributed so as to influence the electors to vote against the provincial secretary. That gentleman's name is Mr. Morris. His salary has since been advanced, and he was used during the whole of that election with the fishing bounty cheques in his pocket, working by orders of the Department of Ottawa. It is part of the same system that Mr. Baker is carrying on in the county of Russell.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not know Mr. Morris' trip to Nova Scotia, to which the hon. gentleman refers, but when he makes the statement as broadly as he has done, that Mr. Morris was sent down there to work against the Local Government by the department at Ottawa, he tells what is not correct and what it is impossible for him to prove.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I can prove it.

Mr. BOWELL. I say you cannot prove it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I say I can.

Mr. BOWELL. I give no opinion as to the gentleman to whom he refers obtaining leave at that time. I am not in a position at this moment to state whether it is correct or not, but I do deny that that gentleman or any other gentleman was sent down by the department at Ottawa to electioneer against any local candidate or any Dominion candidate either.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I say he was, and I know it.

Mr. BOWELL. I say he was not, and I know better.

Mr. MULOCK. The member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) says that no men were discharged from the canal service. That is, of course, a technical way of getting out of the difficulty. The facts are, as I understand, that the men in question had been appointed from year to year, and while they only worked during the season of navigation, yet their appointments were considered as permanent as that of any other person in the public service. To say, therefore, that they were not discharged, if when the season was about to come round again they were refused to be allowed to proceed with their work as usual, is trifling with the real substance of the question. However, the member from Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) admits that an employé of this Government, the superintendent of the canal, chose to resort to the extraordinary course of intimidating three of the electors of Montreal Centre.

Mr. CURRAN. Nothing of the kind.

Mr. MULLOCK. And that the superintendent of the canal informed those three men that if they took a prominent part in the elections they would be dismissed, or, what is the same thing, that their services would be discontinued. Now, the member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) can settle this matter between himself and the canal superintendent. I presume the superintendent knew there was an election on, when he said that, and I presume he was concerned very much in promoting the election of the member for Montreal Centre, and I very much doubt if there was not some hint or other given to the superintendent about the promotion of the election in Montreal Centre. I would, under these circumstances, attach very little importance to the withdrawal and the apology that appeared in the Montreal Herald. I admit that to the sentiments expressed in the Montreal Herald should attach very great weight as disclosing very fully the gentlemanly demeanor and the principle of the member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), because no one knows those better than the member for Montreal Centre himself who wrote it. But the circumstances under which they were prepared as has been stated here and under which they were published in the Herald I hardly think can be cited as good evidence for the member for Montreal Centre. We come right back to the fact that three men, three Irish Catholics—perhaps six, but at all events three—were driven from the public service because they chose to exercise the rights of freemen. That is the transaction. The member for Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran) when he knew that wrong was done and when two of those men, perhaps from their necessities, were humiliated and compelled to come to him to ask him to get justice, knew that there was another suffering, but he had not the courage or the manliness to go to that independent man and see that he was reinstated in his office. He knew that man was unjustly treated, and I charge him with the whole responsibility. I say he is trifling with the facts when he endeavors to escape from the dilemma and when he says: I the representative of the Irish Catholic people of this country in this House chose to stand on my high position as representative of Montreal Centre, and when two of those men came and humbled themselves before me and begged for food I did not refuse them; but one other who was manly enough, courageous enough, and Irish enough to refuse to humble himself before me, I from my high pedestal refused to step down and extend a hand to him. That is the attitude of the representative of the Irish people of Canada in the House of Commons of Canada. I hold him responsible for every bit of it. I do not take back one word of it. I charge him with the guilt of it, and no apology will come from me, let him use all the dignified and classical terms he may choose to apply to me. I say he is responsible for it.

Mr. TROW. I rise to order. What has this to do with the item under consideration?

The CHAIRMAN. I think this is irregular. I would have stopped it before if my attention had been called to it.

Mr. CURRAN. I will refrain from saying anything, as I do not think the gentleman is worthy of any answer.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 1.20 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 3rd May, 1888.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

CRIMINAL PROCEDURE.

Mr. THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 123) to amend the Criminal Procedure Act, chap. 174 of the Revised Statutes. He said: The object of this Bill is to make two changes in the procedure relating to criminal libel. In the first place, it is proposed to enact that the place of trial in criminal prosecutions for libel against the publisher of a newspaper, shall be within the Province in which the newspaper is published—the publishing office of the paper. In the second place, it is proposed to establish that the crime of libel shall be like that of perjury and two or three other offences, in respect of which it is provided in the Criminal Procedure Act that proceedings by indictment must be preceded by a preliminary investigation before a magistrate, unless the indictment is on the fiat of the Attorney General of the Province, or approved by the judge before whom the indictment is preferred.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand, from the hon. gentleman's explanation of the Bill, that he does not propose to include any clause to have reference to the exercise by courts of arbitrary power of imprisonment for constructive contempt?

Mr. THOMPSON. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I rise merely for the purpose of giving the hon. gentleman notice that it is my intention, at an early and convenient opportunity, to bring before the House for discussion the proceedings arising out of the imprisonment of John J. Hawke, editor of the Moncton Transcript, for alleged constructive contempt of the New Brunswick Court; and probably before that discussion is disposed of, the hon. gentleman, if he sees the feeling of the House is in that direction, may make up his mind that it is desirable to enlarge the scope of the present Bill by making it refer to proceedings of that kind, and limiting, if such is the wisdom of the House, the arbitrary power which seems to be vested in the judges, as seen in the action of those gentlemen in question. I do not propose to discuss the matter now, but merely to give the hon. gentleman notice that I will bring forward the matter.

Mr. THOMPSON. I thank the hon. gentleman for giving me notice, but I shall esteem it a greater favor if he informs me at a subsequent time when he proposes to bring the matter forward, because I shall have to make enquiries at a distance.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

COPYRIGHT ACT.

Mr. THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 124) to amend the Copyright Act, chap. 62 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. He said: The effect of this Bill will be to adopt in Canada the provisions of the Berne convention relating to copyright.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LANDS.

Mr. WATSON asked, What amount of lands retained by the Dominion Government as provided for in 49 Victoria, chapter 9, is situated within the Province of Manitoba? Also, what amount of said lands have been retained west of the boundary of the Province of Manitoba and east of 3rd Meridian?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The negotiations with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the defining of the lands which are to be retained under the Act mentioned have been proceeding, and they will be completed as soon as possible after the passing of the resolution respecting the company's land grant now before Parliament.

Mr. WATSON asked, 1. Whether the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has made a selection of all lands granted to it under clause 11 of Canadian Pacific Railway contract? 2. What amount of said lands have been selected within the boundary of the Province of Manitoba? 3. What amount of said lands have been selected between the western boundary of the Province of Manitoba and 3rd Meridian?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. 1. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have selected nearly 7,000,000 acres of the lands granted under clause 11 of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract. 2. The area of lands selected within the boundaries of Manitoba is, in acres 1,818,330. 3. The area of lands selected between the western boundary of Manitoba and the 3rd Initial Meridian is, in acres, 2,939,440.

Mr. LAURIER asked, 1. What number of acres is there of unsold lands which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company propose to receive by deed of bargain and sale to trustees under sub-section c of the Resolutions now before the House? 2. What portions of such lands lie within the Railway Belt? 3. How many acres of those lands are there in Manitoba, and how many in the Territories, east of the 3rd Meridian? 4. How many acres have been sold by the company, paid for, and the deeds completed? 5. How many acres have been sold, but the sales are still incomplete? How much paid on the same, and how much remains due, and when and how payable?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am able to answer one of these questions, but not the whole satisfactorily, as the information must be obtained from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I have asked the company to provide the information and I expect it any moment.

Mr. LAURIER. Perhaps you will answer the questions to-morrow.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If you please.

LIGHTHOUSE ON STAG ISLAND.

Mr. MONCRIEFF asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to construct and establish a lighthouse on Stag Island, in the River St. Clair?

Mr. FOSTER. The department has been gathering information and making enquiries with respect to the necessity of establishing a lighthouse on Stag Island, and the matter is now under consideration. At the time the Supplementary Estimates come down I shall be able to answer the hon. gentleman definitely.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT STRATHROY.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Has a site been selected for the proposed public buildings at Strathroy? If so, where is the location? Has any, and what progress been made towards the erection of such public buildings?

Mr. THOMPSON.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The site has not yet been selected.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES ACT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House resolve itself into Committee, to-morrow, to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that there shall be payable, in respect of his attendance at each Session of the Legislative Assembly of the North-West Territories, to each elected member thereof, an indemnity of $500, and to each legal expert, for the like attendance, an indemnity of $250, in addition in each case to his actual travelling expenses, subject to a proportionate reduction for each day's absence from a sitting of the Assembly, the amount of such reduction and of such travelling expenses to be ascertained in such manner as the Governor in Council prescribes; that there shall be payable to the Speaker of the said Legislative Assembly an annual salary of $500, and to the Clerk of the said Assembly, acting also as Secretary to the Lieutenant Governor, an annual salary of $2,000; and that all such payments shall be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This, of course, relates to the House of Assembly in the North-West Territory. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether he has considered the propriety of placing at the disposal of the Governor and Legislature of the North-West Territory the same grant as that which the Provinces receive in proportion to their population; leaving to them to appoint their own clerk, regulate their own affairs, and to spend the money so given, in the way that they think best in the public service. The hon. gentleman knows at the present time that this assembly has really no funds with which to carry on the business of legislation, except such as the Government here may place at its disposal. If there was an account opened with the Territory, the moment a Legislature is established and money placed at their disposal, when they come to be admitted as a Province of course the whole sum so received by that means could be taken into consideration. It always seemed to me, that that would be the rational way to deal with them whenever they had a legislative assembly. I would like to know whether the hon. gentleman has considered the subject, and whether he proposes to invite parliamentary action in the matter? It will be perceived that it would be a little more reasonable, in conferring on them the power of legislation and representation, that they should have funds with which to carry on their operations.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This discussion will arise more properly on the second reading of the Bill. I will say to my hon. friend that we do not propose to put in any such vote for this year. The territories are not quite without revenue, as the hon. gentleman knows, and I have no doubt they dispose of that revenue to the best advantage of the territories. Those revenues are very small, certainly, and I am quite ready to admit the merits of the suggestion of the hon. gentleman. The idea is to make as little change as possible until they have a purely elective assembly representing the people. They will be obliged, after the elections, to meet very soon, and to consider what the wants of the country and what administrative action here they think would be most satisfactory for that country. The measure before the House is intended merely to carry out the principle, with all due respect to their suggestions for the future. From time to time we have had a series of resolutions passed by the mingled council, in which parties were nominated and parties elected. Those are contradictory in themselves and cannot be supposed really to represent the feelings of the people. We propose to make no appropriation of a sum to be disposed of by the Governor there, including the Legislature, until they have really a Local Legislature and ascertain what their own ideas are on the subject.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Of course I do not propose to enter into a discussion, and I am making only a suggestion now. Those people are contributing their proportion to the taxes of the country at the present time. In all the Provinces a certain portion of the revenue, so much per capita, is paid over to the Provinces as provincial revenue for provincial purposes. My remarks had reference to the intention of the Government when the hon. gentleman's Bill is adopted, and the Legislature made completely elective. It does not seem to me, and I do not say it with a view to provoking controversy, that it is not a matter of negotiation to know how much they are entitled to. As a matter of right they should be entitled to the same amount per capita, revenue for local purposes, as in the Provinces, and which should be accounted for at the time of Union.

Motion agreed to.

THE RAILWAY ACT.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 24) to amend and consolidate the Railway Act.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2, sub-section p,

Mr. MULOCK. This clause, defining the word "near," refers to the proximity of one railway to another. Would it not be advisable to define the word with reference to some point as well? In Acts of incorporation the word "near" is used to define the route taken; but I do not know how any court could determine whether any railway was exceeding its powers when it is authorized to go to or near a point. In this vast continent that might mean many miles away. While I do not wish to embarrass any company, I think it would be well to give some statutory definition of the word "near" under such circumstances.

Mr. TISDALE. It is easy to define the word, having regard to the relation of one railway to another; but if we try to define it in relation to the routes of railroads, it seems to me we should define the object the hon. gentleman has in view, because "at or near" any point, describing a route, will depend on all the circumstances. No difficulty has arisen from the want of such a definition, that I am aware of. Sometimes a court would hold that a quarter of a mile was near, and in other cases they might hold that two miles was near.

Mr. MULOCK. Or fifty miles.

Mr. TISDALE. No.

Mr. MULOCK. Where will you draw the line?

Mr. TISDALE. The courts will always draw the line according to the circumstances, and give a reasonable construction to the word, as they do in other cases. But I think if we define the word in a railroad Act, we would create greater difficulties than now exist.

Mr. MULOCK. Suppose a railway was incorporated to build to or near a certain town which may be near a certain other town. It might be within five or ten miles of the other town, and the engineering difficulties might be precisely the same in both cases. There might be no such circumstances as the hon. gentleman suggests to enable the court to determine how the word "near" should be construed. I do not think it is right to incorporate a railway company, giving it the utmost freedom in the choice of a particular route, thus causing one municipality to compete with another, and perhaps obliging it, by force of circumstances, to give a large bonus to bring the line within its neighborhood. If the route is not defined by the Act of incorporation, you give the company practically a roving commission, enabling it not only to commit the abuse I speak of, but perhaps to affect existing rights. Therefore I am satisfied that it is in the public interest that we should not incorporate these companies at large. I would suggest this. Every railway company under the general Act, has power to build branches six miles in length, and I think the word "near" might be defined here to mean not more than six miles. In the North-West, where there is a vast prairie country, engineering difficulties would not arise to aid the court in determining the meaning of the word. Suppose a company were incorporated to build a road in the North West near to a certain town. In that vast country fifty miles are equivalent to not more than five or ten miles in the older Provinces. Surely a company should not have the power to choose a location as wide as fifty miles; but what would enable a court to determine whether it was exceeding its powers or not?

Mr. EDGAR. I think it is just as easy for a court to determine when one railway comes near another as it is when a railway comes near a point; and I think it is quite as necessary to define the meaning of the word "near" in the latter as in the former. Not a Session passes in which a number of Bills are not put through the Railway Committee saying that the railway shall commence at or near a town or city or a certain point. This certainly leaves a great deal of doubt as to the distance intended, and I think that both for the general purposes of a public railway and for the legal effect of such a provision, some definition of distance, say four, five or six miles, should be covered by the words "at or near." I would suggest to add to this clause as it stands, "and near to a point or municipality when some part of it is within five or six miles thereof."

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think it is quite so easy to define the word "near," in relation to the construction of a railway, as it is in relation to its operation. The definition would have to be of an entirely different character. When we are defining the word "near" in this sub-section, we are dealing with the interchange of traffic and matters of that kind, in relation to which proximity must be pretty close, but when we come to deal with the word "near" in relation to the termini of a railway, as the hon. member for York mentioned, a very much larger limit must be given. Then, take a charter in which it is provided that a railway shall be built from a point beginning at or near a certain town. There would also be a good deal of practical difficulty in defining that word, because we would be giving a material limitation to a large number of charters which Parliament has already passed.

Mr. MULOCK. It would not be retroactive.

Mr. THOMPSON. In relation to those railways which have not been commenced, it probably would. The limitation of six miles in some cases would hardly do. Some of the statutes, for instance, are for lines not six miles in length, and it would defeat the limitation in the charter altogether if we were to apply so lax a limit to such lines. The whole thing depends on the kind of country through which a line passes and the kind of termini it has. The hon. gentleman's suggestion, however, deals with a separate subject, which we can consider later, if he thinks the matter is of sufficient importance.

On sub-section r,

Mr. THOMPSON. In this section I do not think there is any change in the law; it is only a little more full.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I would suggest to add the words "or other erection" after "railway bridge."

Mr. THOMPSON. I will add those words.

Mr. BARRON. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if it would not be well to define the meaning of the word "railway," as including the lessees of a railway. I have found in my professional practice that the Grand Trunk Railway, as lessee of the Midland Railway, have escaped all liability ties from injuries resulting from overhead bridges, by reason of not being met by this particular Railway Act. I find that the sections referring to overhead bridges in this new Bill are almost similar to the sections in the old Railway Act. The word "operate," however, if new, may cover this objection. The hon. gentleman will remember that the other night we discussed the necessity of providing that all railways leasing other roads should be liable for damages resulting from overhead bridges, such as did result in the case of the Niagara Central.

Mr. THOMPSON. I did consider this question. The hon. gentleman was kind enough to show me the case, and it seemed to me that provision ought to be made, and if we find it is not clear in the Bill that such provision is made, we will attend to that suggestion.

Mr. MULLOCK. Why except Government railways? Are they not held liable as common carriers?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, but we have a special Act for them.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does that Act provide in the same way as this?

Mr. THOMPSON. It regulates the liability of the Government as a common carrier.

On section 4,

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Can we compel local railways, built under local charters, to come under this Act? They are not works at all under the control of the Government of Canada, but they are entirely under the control of the Local Legislatures, and are subject to such provisions as the Local Legislatures may pass. This Act, however, brings them in for certain purposes under the jurisdiction of the Dominion Parliament, and, if they can be brought in for one purpose, they can for all. Unless these are for the general advantage of Canada, they are altogether without the purview of this Legislature.

Mr. THOMPSON. That clause is the same as the other, excepting that the other is contained in two provisions, owing to the Bill being in two parts, and this is merely throwing the two provisions into one, but, if the hon. gentleman thinks that it is of any importance, we will let that section stand.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The hon. gentleman knows that only the other day an information was filed against a railway in New Brunswick, and my attention was called to this matter in that way, and it struck me that it was a question whether we had any power to make any work which was within the control of the Local Legislature of the Province, liable to this Act, because, if you can do that in one case, you may make them liable to the whole of the provisions of the Consolidated Railway Act. I think that, as long as these railways are under local legislation, the Local Legislature is paramount in dealing with them.

Mr. THOMPSON. The intention is only to bring them under our jurisdiction in regard to matters in which we certainly have jurisdiction, such as offences, penalties and statistics. However, we will let it stand.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No doubt we can bring these railways under the jurisdiction of this Legislature in certain matters, but I think we have gone far beyond our jurisdiction already in declaring certain railways to be for the general advantage of Canada, though they have been constructed under local authority. I think that there is no doubt that, when these questions are argued in the courts, our action will be declared to have been ultra vires, and I do not think we should go any further in that direction.

On section 8,

Mr. THOMPSON. This is simply to provide that certain members of Council shall be members of the Railway Committee ex officio. The present law provides in section 58 that the Governor General may appoint such members as he thinks fit to be members of the Railway Committee, but this clause declares that the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Justice shall be ex officio members of the Railway Committee of Council.
Mr. BARRON.

Mr. TISDALE. I think that when the quorum is only two one should be the Minister of Justice. Of course, if the whole of the members are there, it is all right, but we ought to have the Minister of Justice always there.

Mr. THOMPSON. We may go back to that question hereafter.

On section 10,

Mr. MULLOCK. I would call the attention of the Minister to sub-section c of this clause. It appears to give the Railway Committee power to fix the liabilities of companies transgressing the provisions of sub-sections a and b, section a dealing with the rate of speed at which railway trains may be run. Now, it might be held that was the only liability the railway company incurred. Of course the Minister does not intend it should have such a meaning as that. A railway running its train beyond this speed, through a thickly-populated section, might cause damage far in excess of anything for which section c provides a remuneration. Therefore I think it would be well to qualify section c, so that shall not interfere in any way with the liability of the company in any court for damages for which it might be liable.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have no objection to that. It is a mere copy, however. I propose this as a sub-section:

"The imposition of any such penalty shall not lessen or affect any other liability which any company may have incurred."

On section 11,

Mr. EDGAR. With reference to that clause, which seems to be largely new, perhaps the Minister can point out what provisions are based upon the recommendation of the Railway Committee?

Mr. THOMPSON. No, I cannot, from any memorandum I have here. If the hon. gentleman desires, we will let that clause stand for the present.

Mr. MULLOCK. I would like to recall the attention of the Minister to the amendment we have just made in section 10. I think we should use the word "person," instead of the word "company," so as, for instance, to meet the case of an engine-driver abusing his power and disobeying orders, resulting in loss of life or damage, for which he might be personally liable.

Mr. THOMPSON. Very well; I accept the suggestion.

On section 20,

Mr. MITCHELL. Will not this section be required to be amended so as to make it consistent with section 17?

Mr. THOMPSON. No, I think not, as construed together. They will have a right to review their own order, but no other tribunal would.

Mr. MULLOCK. When does it become final?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is final as soon as it is made.

Mr. EDGAR. There is no appeal except to itself.

Mr. THOMPSON. There is no objection to making a change. I propose that it read: "shall, subject to the provisions of sub-section 17, be final."

Mr. EDGAR. It is a question whether four weeks public notice of the regular annual meeting is not more than is necessary. Special general meetings should be well notified, but general annual meetings are fixed by statute.

Mr. THOMPSON. Are not those the provisions of the Model Bill?

Mr. EDGAR. I do not think so.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think so.

Mr. TISDALE. Under the Model Bill it was found this Session that there was no power to call a special meeting, and the idea is to have one class of notice for all classes of meetings.

Mr. EDGAR. I think four weeks is too much notice for an ordinary annual meeting.

Mr. THOMPSON. Let it stand, please, and I will consider it.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think it better to have a uniform rule with regard to giving notice of those meetings, and I should be in favor of having this clause passed.

Mr. TISDALE. Four weeks is not too much for important meetings, such as the issue of bonds. All the large companies give that notice, and many of them six weeks. I think it is better to have the clause adopted.

On section 44,

Mr. MITCHELL. I think that there should be a rule that the proxies at meetings should be held by shareholders only.

Mr. TISDALE. Why?

Mr. MITCHELL. Because I do not think that outsiders should be allowed to come in and discuss questions.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In banks outsiders are now allowed to hold proxies.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not think it is usual for proxies to be put in the hands of anybody but shareholders, but if a shareholder wishes to appoint his counsel, I do not see why he should not be allowed to do it.

Mr. TISDALE. It has always been the law and it has always worked well. The people may not notice those little changes and some company may hold a meeting which might be illegal on account of this.

Mr. MULOCK. Is there anything in the Act saying that the head of a municipality should be admitted as a shareholder? Suppose a municipality took stock, the municipality of course could not all be present, but it might be represented by its head.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will look into that question and see.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will you enquire as to whether the proxies should be held by shareholders or not?

Mr. THOMPSON. I would like to take the opinion of the House on that matter.

Mr. MITCHELL. You might consider it when you are amending the Act.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will.

On section 49,

Mr. CHARLTON. Why is it necessary to exclude stockholders holding less than twenty shares from the board of directors?

Mr. TISDALE. Twenty shares is the qualification adopted by the Railway Committee in the Model Bill. The committee thought that anyone who was not interested to that extent should not fill so important a position.

Mr. EDGAR. I suppose that this section only applies to cases where no provision is made in a special Act for a similar sum.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. LANGEЛИER (Quebec). I think a provision should be introduced which would prevent a director acting as security for a contractor. In many cases the security is the real contractor.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will insert that provision.

On section 60,

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Are those words "absence or illness" not too general? What do they mean?

Mr. THOMPSON. They mean that when the president is away, the vice-president shall act in his place.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The question might be raised as to the authority of the vice-president, as to whether the president was really absent or not. I would suggest to leave those words out.

Mr. THOMPSON. Then you would give the vice-president authority to act even when the president is there, and difficulty might ensue.

Mr. TISDALE. This is the wording of the old law, and no difficulty has arisen under it. The president is head, and in his absence the vice-president. It simply means that when the head is there he must do the work, but that when absent the vice-president has his powers.

Mr. THOMPSON. I propose to add the words "or in case of a vacancy in the office of the president."

On section 62,

Mr. HALL. I do not see any necessity for making the date of the annual balancing of accounts the 30th day of June, because there are many companies whose books are balanced, under their charters, on other dates.

Mr. THOMPSON. The object is to have the accounts closed at such a time that we can get the statistics in time for the meeting of Parliament.

Mr. MITCHELL. It appears to me the object is very desirable, because it is well to have uniformity.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It will cause a great deal of inconvenience and difficulty to many companies if they should be compelled to change the date at which their financial year closes. Many of them make their annual statements on the 31st December.

Mr. MITCHELL. It will cause inconvenience only for one year, and will enable us to receive the statistics in proper time, and create uniformity.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Some of the companies, by their special Acts, are obliged to make up their accounts at a different date. Many of them must hold their annual meeting in May and make their accounts up to the 31st December. You might as well compel insurance companies to change the date of their annual meetings and statements of account.

Mr. MACKENZIE. We have done that.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Not with every insurance company.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think this provision could apply to any company which has a special provision in its Act, and it is impossible to get the returns in time for Parliament, unless we have a uniform date. One of the recommendations of the Commission was that there should be a uniform date, and it is impossible to fix that uniform date at a better one than the 30th June.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the statement has to be made up to the 31st December, it makes only the difference of half a year, and that will not entail any serious inconvenience.

On section 69,

Mr. HALL. It is a very unusual thing that dividends should be declared by the shareholders. As a rule, the dividends are declared by the directors. I suppose the object of this is that the dividends should only be declared from the profits that might be made, and I think it might be provided that the directors should only declare dividends on the clear profits of the undertaking.

Mr. THOMPSON. This is the exact section which was in the old Act, but I will consider the matter.

Mr. MULOCK. I would suggest that the word "clear" should be struck out, and the word "net" should be substituted.

Mr. MITCHELL. It appears to me that that clause goes a little too far. It says:

"At the annual meeting of the shareholders of the company, a dividend shall be declared out of the clear profits of the undertaking, unless such meeting decides otherwise."

Why should the power be given to the meeting to decide otherwise? Surely we are not going to give power to the meeting of the shareholders to declare a dividend out of capital?

Mr. THOMPSON. It simply gives them power to refuse to declare a dividend.

Mr. MITCHELL. This section really gives them power to provide for a dividend out of the capital.

Mr. TISDALE. Section 71 provides for that case.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think this clause should be amended so as to read that the dividend may be declared out of the net profits, and leaving out all after the word "unless."

Mr. WELDON (St. John). According to this, they can only declare a dividend once a year, while some companies declare a dividend every six months.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. That is true.

Mr. CHARLTON. Would it not be well to insert the word "only" after the word "shall"?

Mr. THOMPSON. I think the intention of the Act is to prevent the directors making a dividend from funds arising out of fortuitous circumstances, and to prevent the irregular declaration of dividends, and to prevent the directors, without consulting the shareholders as to what dividend shall be declared, making such a dividend.

Mr. HALL. Why are these more applicable to railway companies than to banks or any other joint stock companies? In those companies, the directors always declare the dividend.

Mr. THOMPSON. The operations of railway companies are more expensive than others, such as banks, but, of course, I am in the hands of the committee in regard to this matter.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I see that this clause provides only for an annual dividend, and, supposing the annual meeting fails, no dividend can be declared that year.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The Grand Trunk has a semi-annual meeting at which it declares dividends.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Why should you not say that a dividend might be declared at an annual or special general meeting of shareholders?

Mr. TISDALE. It seems to be the policy that directors shall not declare dividends without the consent of the shareholders. That has been the law, and I cannot see any reason for changing it. The Grand Trunk Railway Company has special legislation for that purpose, but I think it would be a mistake to do the same thing in regard to other railway companies. If that is done, you must authorise semi-annual meetings instead of annual meetings. I think we should be careful to see that these companies have money in the banks out of which to pay for labor, and for accidents, and all that sort of thing, and, as a rule, with regard to most of our railway companies, there is no occasion for semi-annual meetings to declare dividends, because there are no dividends to declare.

Mr. MITCHELL. The only instance I know of where semi-annual dividends are declared is the Grand Trunk Railway. The other railways are only authorised to declare dividends annually. I do not see that it is necessary to declare semi-annual dividends on any of these railways. I would suggest that the section should be so amended as to read that:

"At the annual meeting of the shareholders of the company, a dividend shall be declared only out of the net profits of the undertaking."

And leave out the words "unless such meeting decides otherwise." I think that would meet the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The way in which the clause now reads is:

"At the annual meeting of the shareholders of the company, a dividend may be declared out of the net profits of the undertaking."

Mr. MITCHELL. That will do.

On section 71,

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I do not know whether there is any penalty for the infringement of this clause. If there is not, it will be nugatory.

Mr. THOMPSON. This makes it illegal, but it would be very difficult to inflict a penalty when it is the act of the whole company at an annual meeting of the shareholders.

Mr. MULOCK. Would it not be possible to provide some means of enforcing this section? It says that the directors shall not pay a dividend on the stock until the undertaking has been completed and opened to the public, and then they may pay interest at the rate of 6 per cent. Supposing the directors violate this provision of the law, what will you do? The clause says:

"The directors may, in their discretion, until the railway is completed and opened to the public, pay interest at any rate not exceeding 6 per cent. per annum."

If the proprietors pay more than 6 per cent., they should be held liable, and I suggest that they should be made liable for any excess, without any prejudice to the right to recover from the parties receiving the same.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will make a note of that.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. We also ought to have the time specified when the railway is to be completed. I do not think any railway in Canada is really completed, and therefore there is no definite time specified.

On section 73,

Mr. MULOCK. Would it not be proper to provide restrictions against shareholders disposing of stock which they have not paid up, where good shareholders may rid themselves of liability by transferring their stock to men of straw? Under the Joint Stock Companies' Act, there is a provision to meet such a case as that. Under that Act, if I remember rightly, the directors are not allowed to permit the transfer of stock that is not paid up in full, to other than substantial persons, or persons who are generally reputed to be substantial persons; and if they violate the provisions of that Act, they are liable. I would suggest that provision of the Act might be well incorporated here.

Mr. THOMPSON. Would it not restrict the transfer of shares very much?

Mr. MULOCK. I mean to say that when a man subscribes for stock and pays up, say, 10 per cent. upon it, and owes 90 per cent., he ought not to be at liberty to transfer that stock to a man of straw and leave other persons, who were induced to come in on the faith of his transaction, to meet the whole liability. I think there should be a limitation of transfer.

Mr. THOMPSON. If the hon. gentleman will look at section 75—I think that meets the case.

Mr. MULOCK. That only deals with the transfer of stock on which there is no arrears.

Mr. THOMPSON. But suppose an individual takes 50 shares in a railway company, on which there is a call of 80 per cent., the rest may never be called up, and would the hon. gentleman make these shares never transferable?

Mr. MULOCK. No; you must not quarrel with me, but with Parliament that has laid down the principle under the Joint Stock Companies' Act. It is one thing for them to be in arrears, that is, to be overdue, and it is another thing to have liability that has not been called up at all. Now, the Joint Stock Companies' Act provides that a shareholder cannot rid himself of his contingent liability, however remote it may be, except with the consent of the directors, and the directorate must not give that consent. I ask that the same safeguard be put in here for the protection of the honest shareholder.

Mr. THOMPSON. Very well, we will let that stand for the present.

Mr. TISDALE. I do not think we need to waste any sympathies over the railway companies. I think the shareholders are in much more danger of being induced to take stock than are the railway companies to suffer. I think any gentleman who has any knowledge of the way railway companies are organised in this country, knows that there is much more danger of the shareholder being victimised, than of the company being imposed upon by allowing the shareholder freely to transfer his share. The Joint Stock Companies' Act, and the subjects it covers, are entirely different matters from railway companies. I think the hon. gentleman's grievance is entirely theoretical. It would certainly be a very inconvenient law to limit the transfer of shares. The ordinary law is that you must pay your calls in order that a company may go into effect. Now, the Joint Stock Companies' Act deals with a different class of subjects, small companies of all sorts, engaged in mercantile transactions, where business men carry on business for themselves. When railway companies are organised the general public are invited to subscribe, and they do subscribe, and they cannot transfer their shares unless they pay calls. You subscribe to stock, and the law says that if the company impose a call, that shall be paid, otherwise the shares are free to be transferred. I think it would be a great mistake in the interests of the construction of railways, and it would rather be putting the boot on the wrong leg, to give railway companies more power over people subscribing stock than they have now.

Mr. MULOCK. I am not seeking to protect railway companies particularly, but to prevent injustice. We are now on the eve of a great boom in railway building, particularly of short lines in the North-West, and these railways incur liabilities particularly to creditors, and the provision I suggest would be, in the first instance, in the protection of creditors. We have no right to allow partners to escape their liability. These shareholders are limited partners by virtue of the Act, and the general law of partnership applies, that partners are liable to pay the creditors of the concern. In this case they are only liable to the extent of their shares. They undertake to pay at some time or other a certain sum of money. The shareholders may not choose to make calls, there may be arrears in regard to the liability, but the liabilities exist, and if unpaid the creditors can proceed against the shareholders and recover payment. To allow solvent shareholders to transfer stock and escape liability renders it possible to commit a fraud upon creditors. Then again it would leave shareholders, who perhaps did not have the consent of the directors, liable to pay in full, whereas other shareholders might be allowed to escape. I think it is proper that such a provision as I have suggested should be introduced.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). If you put such a clause in the Act you will very soon have few stockholders.

On section 75,

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). This section should be struck out, as it is infringing on the powers of the Local Legislatures. We have no right to determine what is personal and what is real estate; that is a question of property and civil rights.

Mr. THOMPSON. All property and civil rights in railways under our control may be regulated by this Parliament. As regards railways, we have a right to legislate over property and civil rights, as being within our jurisdiction and not within the jurisdiction of any other Legislature. We can absolutely forfeit or do anything we please with railways under our control, and it is only as to them this Act applies.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). This section has nothing to do with the railway itself. It is more than doubtful if we have the right to determine that certain property with which we have power to deal is real or personal property. It is of great consequence, not at this moment perhaps, because I think the law is the same in all the Provinces of the Dominion. We have in the civil code of Quebec a declaration that shares in railways are personal property; but supposing the Legislature of Quebec thought proper to change that, I think it would apply to railways as well as to anything else. This question is of great consequence, on account of the law concerning marriage settlement. Under our law there is a community of property between the parties, and in that community is included every kind of personal property. It would raise a very serious question, supposing the Legislature of Quebec should make a law declaring that railway shares are real property.

Mr. THOMPSON. I admit, of course, that we should not interfere with the rights of property unnecessarily, but it must be remembered that all the other seventy-two sections have dealt with the question of property and civil rights. If we hesitate as to our power on that subject we surely must reconsider our position as to the transfer of shares and the declaration of dividends, and everything of the kind. But the hon. gentleman will see the consequences that will ensue. If the doctrine can be sustained that it is only for the Provincial Legislatures to say whether these shares are real or personal property, this result would follow, that the Provincial Legislature might declare them to be real estate, or interest in real estate, and then they would not be transmissible in the way prescribed, and every provision of the Bill as to the rights of shareholders would have to be altered. It is inevitable that the power must rest entirely here, and that we should deal with railway shares as being personal property.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I do not dispute that question of civil rights necessarily incident to railways can be dealt with by this Legislature. I do not, however, see the bearing of this determination of the nature of railway property as regards the building of a railway. What necessity is there, when we are legislating on railways, to say what the nature of railway property shall be?

Mr. THOMPSON. It seems to me most material to the construction and working of a railway that the interests of the shares shall be personal property, and that only. If we are to treat them as interests in real estate, the holders may at any moment interfere with the operation of the railway, and claim a division of the property, and their shares would be transmissible to their heirs, and a new set of shareholders would come in in that way. It is vitally connected with the exercise of the necessary control over the companies which are authorised to construct railways under our control. I would be sorry to be disposed to interfere unduly, but it seems to me to be necessary.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I will point out the difficulty which this may bring about. It is this: Personal property is a word used in English law, but we have not that word in our Quebec law. If you state that railway property will be personal property, it will raise a difficulty in our Province, where the law is not the same as in the other Provinces.

Mr. THOMPSON. I now see the particular point of the hon. gentleman's objection. It may need another word added to describe the kind of personal property it would be in the Province of Quebec; and I will therefore let the section stand, with that view.

On section 83,

Mr. TISDALE. I see that that clause is changed materially, although it does not show it in the printing. There is a portion of the old clause left out, as regarding the power to sell shares, which may affect railway companies already incorporated. It is a question whether those powers should be taken from the companies that are already organised. Some of those companies from time to time do sell shares that are not altogether paid up. I think the Canada Southern, and the Grand Trunk, and possibly the Canadian Pacific Railway, have a large amount of capital stock yet unsubscribed, and under the former Railway law they would have a perfect right to sell this, while according to the present Bill they would be deprived of that right. Formerly this unsubscribed stock could be sold, or they could make loans for it. On ordinary small railways it would not matter very much; still I would like to know if there is any objection to that power being retained. It would seem to me that there is an objection to its not being retained in the case of companies now incorporated, and I should think we ought to be careful how we should deprive them of rights they have had up to this time.

Mr. EDGAR. I do not see what is the use of retaining that provision.

Mr. TISDALE. Formerly they could sell or pledge the stock.

Mr. EDGAR. Not unless it is subscribed.

Mr. TISDALE. Yes, they could get subscriptions for it. It struck me it must have been put in the Railway Act for some object, and I think we should be careful in making such a radical change.

Mr. EDGAR. I think it is far better the way it is in the Bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think the view of the Minister of Railways was that it was too large a power to give to directors, to sell or pledge unsubscribed stock.

Mr. TISDALE. I have not heard that any railway companies object to this provision, but I know that in times past some of them have used that power to raise money. We know the Grand Trunk at one time sold several millions of that sort of stock, and, by what the hon. gentleman opposite says, I think the committee have hardly got the correct idea.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec).

about the matter. There is a very material difference between people buying at 20 cents on the dollar, and subscribing so that they will have to pay 100 cents on the dollar. I might be willing to buy $10,000 and to pay $1,000, but I would not want to pay $10,000 and be liable to be assessed for a hundred, when it is only worth 10 cents. As you will see by the stock quotations, the companies deal in this by millions. I remember well when Parliament authorised the Grand Trunk to enlarge their capital stock, and they sold it at 10 cents on the dollar and realised a great deal of money, because it tempted people to buy it in the hope that it would be worth something. Though this was a very large power under the general Railway Act, we should be careful that we do not put ourselves in the position of legislating away companies' rights.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is not my hon. friend fighting a phantom. I do not think the illustration he has given occurs at all in relation to this particular section. The section says:

"The directors may sell, either by public auction or private sale, and in such manner and on such terms as to them seem meet, any shares so declared to be forfeited, or may pledge such forfeited shares for the payment of loans or advances made or to be made thereon, or for the payment of"—

That is, only shares subscribed.

Mr. THOMPSON. What he complains of is that the provisions of the present law are left out, which enables the sale of unsubscribed stock by the directors.

Mr. TISDALE. After the word "forfeit" is left out several words, "Any shares remaining unsubscribed of the capital of the company and they shall be allowed to pledge for loans of money." That is a serious change and might affect some rights of those companies very largely.

Mr. HALL. I think it ought to be left out so far as general powers are concerned. The illustration the hon. gentleman gave of the Grand Trunk was by special legislation and under special circumstances. We can always give that power under similar special circumstances. I think the power is wisely left out of this Bill, of giving the company permission to sell their stock at less than its par value.

Mr. TISDALE. I do not think the special legislation the hon. gentleman referred to went so far. The special legislation authorised the company to increase their capital, and I think they sold it under this power of the general Railway Act.

Mr. HALL. They ought to have had special legislation for both.

Mr. THOMPSON. It does seem to me that power like that should be specially given. The powers here given are often overlooked by people who become shareholders. It is unsafe to entrust power like that to every class of directors.

On section 86,

Mr. MULOCK. I would point out that if you allow a shareholder to transfer his stock, on which there are no arrears, and on which he is liable to creditors, you allow him to escape from the provisions of that Act. The shareholder who is liable at the time ceases to be liable if you allow him to transfer. Section 86, pretending to give security to the creditor, can be defeated under the provisions of a prior section.

On section 88,

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think you should have added the words, "Which shall be open to the inspection of shareholders."

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, I think that might be done.

On section 89,

Mr. THOMPSON. The Act at present provides that 10 per cent. of the capital stock must be expended on the construction of the railway within three years. It is proposed by this Bill to change the amount to 25 per cent. and to reduce the time to two years.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does that affect any special charter already granted?

Mr. THOMPSON. No.

Mr. EDGAR. It seems to me that this is rather hard, because a large amount raised from bonds or otherwise may be expended, although 25 per cent. of the capital stock may not be expended within two years, and if not the powers of the company cease. I think if this were put into effect it would cause the forfeiture of almost every charter, because the system is to do the work by Government subsidy and the issue of bonds, and it is very seldom that 25 per cent. of the stock is expended in ten years, much less in two years. I think 10 per cent. would probably be enough.

Mr. THOMPSON. Ten per cent. would probably be too low. We might make it 15 per cent. instead of 25.

Mr. MULOCK. Would it not be better to make this a percentage of the cash paid, because capital stock embraces a great deal that is given away for nothing.

Mr. THOMPSON. If you said ten per cent. of the cash, that would mean very little.

Mr. MULOCK. Suppose a company had $1,000,000 capital stock, and gave away $800,000 of it; there would only be $200,000 which represented cash.

Mr. THOMPSON. We should make it so that it is impossible to give away so much stock.

Mr. MULOCK. Every special Act allows stock to be given away in that way.

Mr. THOMPSON. It would be subject to this provision, which would make that unworkable.

Mr. EDGAR. As I understand, this provision will only apply to cases where there is no time limit fixed by a special Act?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

On section 90, sub-section d,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Suppose a railway company was desirous of crossing an Indian reserve, which is not held in fee simple, but in common, how would it obtain the power?

Mr. THOMPSON. The title could be given with the assent of the Crown,

On sub-section e,

Mr. EDGAR. Surely this section, which permits a company to remove trees which stand within six rods from either side of the railway, or which are liable to fall across the railway track, cannot be intended to apply to the open country, because it would include trees in a man's orchard.

Mr. THOMPSON. If they fell on the track.

Mr. EDGAR. It includes all trees. If you strike out the word "or" it will be all right.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I think there ought to be some provision that if the timber that is felled by the railway company is converted to their use, they ought to pay for it.

Mr. TISDALE. That is covered further on.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I hope it is, because the companies take timber and convert it into bridges, and refuse to pay the proprietors.

Mr. MITCHELL. There may be hardships about that. I have heard of a railway company going through a country and taking trees which were nothing but rampikes only about the size of a man's leg, and the owner made a claim on the company for using some of these rampikes for ties. We know that if certain obligations are placed on the railways they may be taken advantage of by some of these proprietors.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name.

Mr. MITCHELL. There was a claim once put in for something of that kind—but I will spare the hon. gentleman's blushes, and not go on.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I confess I have not heard anything from the hon. gentleman that removes the objection against placing the railway companies in any different position from that which they will occupy under the amendment I suggest. I do not know to whom the hon. gentleman refers. He should have told the committee when he went so far as he did.

Mr. MITCHELL. I shall certainly do so if you wish.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). But no matter whether those trees to which he refers were, in his opinion, of little value or not, they were the property of somebody else, and they should not have been converted by the company to their own use without compensating the proprietor. However, I am not speaking with regard to this particular subject, because I do not think it should have been alluded to by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), but I say that when trees are removed from the vicinity of a railway by the railway company and used in the construction of the railway, or for any other purpose, the value of those trees should be paid to the adjoining proprietor.

On sub-section g,

Mr. INNES. I would like to call the attention of the Committee to the large powers this section gives a railway company in respect of the closing up of roads, or making permanent embankments. You will notice by this section that it gives the company the power to make an embankment, and to close up a road or a road allowance. Of course section 91 provides that the company shall leave the road as nearly as possible as it was before, but we know well that in many cases railway companies exercise rather arbitrary powers in that respect. Section 92 provides for compensation, but in the case of municipalities it is very difficult indeed to assess the damages, as no individual is concerned. I think the section should be amended so as to be as much as possible in the interest of municipalities. There is a case in point in the corporation of Guelph, of which the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly) knows. When the Grand Trunk was constructed, a good many years ago, they made a large embankment of 20 feet across the road allowance, and that road has never been made, and the company has never made an under-crossing. The matter is now in litigation. It is just possible, according to the terms of the clause, that the Railway Committee may make the under-crossing, but it provides that the approaches may be made by inclined planes, and these may be of such a nature as to render the crossing in a sense useless or impassable. I think the clauses should be modified in some way so as to conserve the rights of municipalities as much as possible, and to provide that these crossings shall be of such a nature that they will be useful. It should also provide for proper compensation to municipalities.

Committee rose.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee,

(In the Committee.)

On section 90, sub-section g,

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. member who called attention to the necessity for making a provision in favor of municipalities as regards the interference with embankments, aqueducts and bridges, will, I believe, acquiesce in the view that the company should have these powers. I have made a note of his suggestion that the municipality should have some protection, but in the meantime there can be no objection to this clause passing.

Mr. INNES. Do you mean both with regard to the proper crossing and with regard to the compensation?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. EDGAR. In this clause, the word "permanent" is quite new. I fancy it is taken from the English Act, but that makes a serious difference in the law as it has existed hitherto, because this gives power to the railway company to construct a permanent embankment across a roadway. That is entirely unusual, under our practice.

Mr. THOMPSON. As we go on, the hon. gentleman will find that there is a provision that, if the level of the highway is to be altered, the consent of the municipality has to be obtained, and if that consent cannot be obtained, it goes to the Railway Committee.

Mr. INNES. I think it is left altogether to the Railway Committee, and the power is taken out of the hands of the municipality.

Mr. EDGAR. That is in regard to running along a highway. I would like to ask if it is proposed to allow a railway company to obstruct a navigable stream?

Mr. THOMPSON. They cannot obstruct any navigable streams without the approval of the Governor in Council, under the Acts respecting the navigation of rivers.

Mr. EDGAR. Should not the power given under sub-section h be subject to the approval of the Railway Committee?

Mr. THOMPSON. I think the hon. gentleman will find that it is so.

Mr. EDGAR. I would like to ask whether, under this clause, a railway is entitled to make all these obstructions in any direction without coming under the subsequent sections? Apparently, in regard to the permanent location of the road, its profile and alignment, the Railway Committee has control, but I think that in regard to these temporary proceedings they ought to have some control also.

Mr. HALL. I think some power should be given to a railway company in regard to highways. There is sufficient provision for Government control under sections 183, 184 and 185 of the general Act.

Mr. EDGAR. That is in regard to permanent construction, but this is only temporary.

Mr. LAURIER. These permanent powers taken under sub-section h, seem to be in conflict with clause 91, because the latter reads:

"The company shall restore (as nearly as possible) to its former state, any river, stream, water-course, high way."

Now, sub-section h, on which we are now, contemplates that the company shall have power to alter. I suppose the word "permanently" has been added since. It could not have been the original intention.

Mr. INNES.

Mr. THOMPSON. A highway, for instance, is to be restored as nearly as possible to its former state. It cannot be restored to its former place if it has been diverted.

Mr. LAURIER. Yes, but if the alteration is to be made permanent how can it be restored to its former condition?

Mr. THOMPSON. The highway can be completed as well as it was before, or as nearly as possible.

Mr. LAURIER. The section now reads:

"Divert or alter, temporarily as well as permanently, the course of any such river, stream, water-course or highway."

Then clause 91 says:

"The company shall restore (as nearly as possible) to its former state, any river,"

And so on. Does not the hon. gentleman see a contradiction?

Mr. THOMPSON. It would be so, excepting for the words "as nearly as possible." I think that is about as close as we can get for a provision of that kind.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I think it is doubtful whether we can give such power. Of course they can do so in the English Parliament, because there is no other body having jurisdiction, but here there are Local Legislatures under whose jurisdiction all the property of the country is situated, and while we are authorised to incorporate a railway company, we cannot insist upon giving to that company any other powers than those which are necessary to its existence. We cannot do what we might do, if property and civil rights were under our jurisdiction. If a Province were to say, for instance, that a railway should drain the track in a particular way, that would apply to railways of the Dominion just as well as to railways of the Province. If a railway of the Province could exist when such powers are being exercised, so could a Dominion railway, and we could not protect the Dominion railway against the public policy of a Province.

Mr. THOMPSON. We cannot legislate on the subject of railways at all, if the hon. member's views are correct. We cannot invade the rights of property by allowing a company to take any lands, and if we cannot give them the right over land, the railway cannot be built.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). My statement is, and it is in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, that if you have power to create a railway corporation, you have power to confer upon it all powers that are necessary to the existence of that corporation.

Mr. THOMPSON. And to enable it to carry out its undertaking.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). But you cannot go beyond that. Suppose you were to authorise a railway company to build a road, and they located it along some river or water-way which would seriously interfere with the drainage of a large section of the country. I say you could not do that. That is my contention; and you could no more do that than a Local Legislature could deny you the right to create a railway corporation. Property and civil rights being vested in the Local Legislature, of course, do not deprive this Parliament from creating a corporation where such corporation comes within the exceptions in the 92nd section of the British North America Act. But surely you cannot give a railway corporation powers beyond that. For instance, you could not say that a railway corporation shall not drain its lands in the same way as any other portion of the municipality affecting the public health; if a railway corporation were to create a particular nuisance, you have not the right to say, by legislation here, that it should not be called upon to drain those lands in some other way. That is under the jurisdiction of another body, and they have just the same right to legislate with regard to the conduct of a company created by this Legislature as they have with regard to the conduct of any citizen within the Province.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am afraid we cannot convince each other on these doctrines.

On section 101,

Mr. EDGAR. Do they decide who shall receive the compensation?

Mr. THOMPSON. In connection with the preceding clause I suppose it would be all right. It is just adopting the words of the Act amending the Indian Act of last Session.

On section 130,

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I would suggest the propriety of changing this provision, which requires the map and the book of reference to be deposited in the office of the Clerk of the Peace, and make it the office of the Registrar, which is much more accessible to the general public, I think, in all the Provinces.

Mr. EDGAR. Besides, the Clerk of the Peace has no vault or safe place for keeping these plans, which are valuable and should be preserved for future reference. But the registry offices always have vaults.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, I think it should be the registry office.

On section 150,

Mr. LAURIER. This section provides that if the opposite party neglects to give notice to the company that he accepts the sum offered by it, or does not give the name of the person whom he appoints as arbitrator, the judge shall on the application of the company, appoint a person to be sole arbitrator. This seems to me to be rather arbitrary, as it would put the proprietor in that case altogether at the mercy of the sole arbitrator.

Mr. THOMPSON. We will let that stand.

On section 159,

Mr. LAURIER. This clause provides that the arbitrator may be a person professionally employed by either party. Is not that contrary to the general principle, that no one should be arbitrator who is interested in the suit or has expressed an opinion on it.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is the same as the law at present, and was really made in the interest of the property owner. The fact is that the property owner, in nine cases out of ten, selects some personal or professional friend as his arbitrator, but who is really an advocate, and the party on the other side does the same; then a third party, if they do not agree, is appointed to judge between the two.

Mr. EDGAR. The practical result of this is, as I know from professional experience, that the Railway Company employs one man who is a skilled surveyor as their arbitrator, and he, understanding the case, does not call in the number of witnesses that one not cognisant of the facts would. The other side selects their arbitrator on the same principle, and thus a great saving is made in the expenditure which would be entailed by calling in a large number of witnesses. Then, if these two disagree, they call in a third party.

Mr. THOMPSON. It looks unsound in principle, but it works really well after all.

On section 164,

Mr. THOMPSON. This section changes the percentage from double the amount mentioned under the notice served under section 146, to 25 per cent.

Mr. WELDON. On a small amount of land, 25 per cent. would be very little.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Better leave the law as it is.

Mr. THOMPSON. Well, we will say 50 per cent.

On section 169,

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I would call the attention of the Minister of Justice to one great inconvenience which has arisen under the old clause. Our judges have decided in several cases, that no compensation can be awarded for witnesses, because, as they said, the witnesses must appear voluntarily. I have known cases where the parties have succeeded as against the railway company, but had to pay hundreds of dollars for witnesses, because the judges held that the witnesses appeared voluntarily, and that, therefore, the allowance to them could not be taxed. I think there should be some provision that the party that loses should pay the witnesses. Of course I am speaking of the law in the Province of Quebec, which is exactly the same as this clause, and it is under that that the judges have taken this position. I know, in my own practice, that a client of mine had to pay $250 for witnesses, though he won his case.

Mr. THOMPSON. We will insert the words "including the proper allowance to witnesses."

On section 173,

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). That does not state how long notice shall be given before the application.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think the General Manager should be inserted, as well as the other officers.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, we will insert that, and make the notice ten days.

Mr. EDGAR. Why is the last part of the old clause left out?

Mr. THOMPSON. That is provided for in section 176.

On section 175,

Mr. THOMPSON. This is intended to enable the Railway Committee to impose conditions for the safety of trains passing over crossings which the Railway Committee may sanction. At present, the Railway Committee have only the power to approve or disapprove of the crossing, and sometimes, when the Committee ask that certain precautions shall be taken in regard to the crossing, they are told that they have no jurisdiction, and they can only get the control by refusing to allow the crossing until the parties agree to adopt the precautions. That is very indirect, and, therefore, this provision is made.

Mr. EDGAR. Does that arise in reference to the difference between the Grand Trunk and the Ontario and Quebec Railways.

Mr. THOMPSON. No, I think not. I did not hear that fully, but I have seen cases where this difficulty has arisen.

On section 176,

Mr. SHANLY. As this clause is somewhat cognate to sections 11 and 102, which have been allowed to stand, and as this section is a new one, I hope the Minister will allow it also to stand.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will agree to allow it to stand, as it is cognate to other clauses which are standing, but it is not new. It is simply a recasting of sub-section 13 of section 6.

Mr. SHANLY. In the expropriation of one company's property by another, that has not hitherto been the law. It is provided for in section 102, which has been allowed to stand, and therefore I ask that this should be allowed to stand also.

On section 177,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I cannot help thinking that this is an objectionable section, and that it is in all probability, beyond our jurisdiction. This section undertakes to control all crossings of railways, whether these are incorporated by the Provincial Legislatures or by the Parliament of Canada. Now, while we have a right to control corporations constituted by the Parliament of Canada, I do not think we have any authority to exercise jurisdiction over other corporations that have an equal right to existence, and an equal right to be protected against regulations and interference by a body that did not create them. Certainly the power to regulate or control implies the power to destroy, and the Bill here might establish regulations that would be so vexatious or so burdensome as completely to destroy the profitable character of roads that were incorporated by the Provinces; in fact they might make such regulations as would induce every railway corporation to seek to become a corporation of the Dominion, rather than of any one of the Provinces. I was not in the House during the Session that the Minister of Finance (I think it was) passed the Bill that usurped control over nearly all the local railways of this country. This is the first time the subject has come up since that period, and I wish to call the attention of the House for a moment to the provisions of the British North America Act upon this subject.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the hon. gentleman allow it to stand for the present? We can discuss it more fully hereafter.

On section 183,

Mr. EDGAR. With reference to that clause, a very radical change is made in it. The old law provided that whenever a railway was carried along an existing highway, as distinguished from crossing it, the consent of the proper municipal or local authority thereof should be first obtained. I do not think the Railway Committee of the Privy Council should be substituted for that local authority. What means can they possibly have for knowing about the local interests affected by running railways along highways in every municipality where they may be constructed? It is not one of the class of cases that I think is at all proper for the Railway Committee to undertake, but is one that the municipalities have been accustomed to deal with.

Mr. THOMPSON. We will let that stand.

Mr. O'BRIEN. This subject is worthy of a good deal of consideration, and I think the time has come when the people of this country ought to have more protection against railways than they now have. It will be utterly impossible for the Railway Committee to deal with the various cases which require to be adjudicated upon. There seems to be a conflict between this clause and the 187th clause. This clause says:

"A railway shall not be carried along an existing line of highway."

But shall merely cross it. Clause 187 says:

"Whenever any portion of a railway is constructed, or authorised to be constructed, upon, or along, or across any street, or other public highway."

Clause 183 makes no provision whatever for any restriction being put upon railways as to the manner in which they shall cross highways. Then clause 187 provides, as I understand it, that no railway shall be constructed along or across any street or public highway at the railway level, without previously obtaining the consent of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. Well, that would be all right if it was practicable, but how in the world can the Privy Council undertake to deal with the numberless cases throughout the Dominion in which protection is required for the public? I am sure every member of this House must have within his own knowledge a number of cases where life and property are in danger every day in the week by railway crossings. I know one case of a crossing on the Northern Railway, which is practically within the yard of a station where there is not a day that life is not in danger. It may be said that this is the business of the municipality, but the municipalities have never yet, in any case that I am aware of, taken the matter up, and it is very certain that the Railway Committee cannot act, because the labor imposed upon them would be interminable. There should be some speedy and expeditious way of having these questions properly adjudicated, so that a railway shall not be permitted to cross a highway in a manner dangerous to life or property. Now, such a state of things as exists in the case I alluded to, and in several other cases within my knowledge, would not be tolerated in any other country. Any one who has travelled in England knows that, even upon branch lines upon which there is the least traffic, either by road or by railway, such a thing as a level crossing without some protection to the public is not permitted under any circumstances. But here we allow railways with long trains to go back and forward over crossings without affording any protection whatever, and the public have just to take their chance. The only protection they have is the privilege that, if a man is injured, he can bring suit against the company for damage, but that is a very poor compensation for the loss of life. I think the Government ought to deal with that class of cases. It has been supposed hitherto that it was so important to get railways built, that we should not interfere with their freedom of action in such matters, and that it was better to run a certain amount of risk than to put railways to the immense expense which they must incur if they provide proper protection. I do not think this 187th clause can be acted upon. I should like to know how, in cases such as I alluded to, and such as must be within the knowledge of this House, it is possible that a Railway Committee of the Privy Council can give us redress? It is one of those cases in which, it being nobody's business to act, and in which a remedy cannot be obtained without a great deal of expense, nobody undertakes it, so that we go on from year to year with an increased traffic, and yet the railways furnish no protection to life and property. I do think it is something that ought not to be tolerated any longer, and it is not tolerated in any other country in the civilised world.

Mr. EDGAR. I think that we should get section 183 amended as suggested. We want more protection to the public against railways. The whole of the plans and profile of the railway must be first submitted for the approval of the Railway Committee, before they can do anything. That is the safeguard, and it is a check on the companies. I propose that we should go back to the old provision that a railway shall not be carried alongside a road unless leave is obtained from the municipal or local authority.

Mr. HALL. It is idle to compare the condition of affairs in this country with that in England. It is said that there is no country where this state of things exist except Canada; in the United States level crossings are the rule, rather than the exception. It is idle to expect that we can have overhead and under-crossings; we are obliged to have level crossings in nine cases out of ten. The provision inserted is a very wise one. It would be unwise to go back and give power to municipalities to dictate as to how crossings shall be made. We might just as well tell individuals that they need not give up their lands to railways unless they are compensated according to the terms they choose to ask. Municipalities would impose crossings on railway companies which they could not comply with.

The Railway Committee of the Privy Council will safely guard the public interests, and it is a better tribunal resort than the one existing under which railway construction was first commenced in this country. The change is a wise one and it is in the general interests of the people.

Mr. O'BRIEN. No one has interfered, and the evil still exists. I do not say that we can get under or overhead crossings at every concession line; but some authority should have interfered in this matter long ago. Under this Bill there will be no interference, for it will be impossible for the Privy Council to take up all these cases. How are the people going to travel from remote parts, even of Ontario, to Ottawa, to see the Privy Council, in such a case as I have in mind this moment? I am not, I repeat, proposing that the company shall be obliged to make crossings at every concessional line, but there are a number of cases where protection should be afforded.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is a point as to which I can confirm the statements made by the hon. gentleman who has last spoken. I recollect extremely well that in Kingston, or within two or three miles of it, eleven or twelve deaths occurred from the dangerous state in which railway crossings were left for many years. It was only after an enormous number of remonstrances, and after delegations had been sent to Ottawa, at very considerable expense, that the Railway Committee were at last, I believe, induced to take action. I doubt whether even at this moment the several crossings to which I allude have been put in proper shape. I dare say the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly) will recollect the rather notorious crossing at Collins' Bay, where as many as ten lives were lost in the last twelve or fourteen years, and other crossings in the same vicinity where also lives were lost, and the crossing at Cataragui Road going out of Kingston. The appeal to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council is a very tedious, expensive, and unsatisfactory proceeding. Very often the Ministers are away, very often it is difficult to obtain appointments at convenient times for delegations, and bringing people to Ottawa from a great distance necessarily involves a heavy expense. I should like to hear the opinion of the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly). I know, as a matter of fact, not mere cases of inconvenience, but cases of very serious risk to lives of all persons who cross the railway track do occur, and if any means can be devised for providing some remedy, it is exceedingly desirable it should be done, even if we have to arm the judges of the land with some discretionary power to deal with the evil.

Mr. SHANLY. I quite remember the crossings to which the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has referred. They were peculiarly dangerous; but I do not suppose that he, any more than the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), intends to propose that all level crossings shall be done away with, because, in this country, it would be utterly impossible to provide overhead or under-crossings at all highways. But, at the two places referred to by the hon. member for South Oxford, the crossings were peculiarly dangerous from the fact of there being short turns in the road. In cases of that kind I think it should be insisted on that overhead crossings be constructed. I rather think in one of those cases, that of Cataragui road, the cause of possible danger has been remedied lately, or, at least, it has been proposed to construct an overhead crossing at an early day. The hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) finds fault with the system of level crossings, especially in the vicinity of railway stations, but he does not point out a remedy. If we do not refer the matter to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, it is not to be supposed that that body can take cognisance of these dangerous crossings; but, when reported to them, this would be done. The Railway Committee is the general court of appeal in these matters, and they could inspect crossings complained of through their officers. In the case of old-established crossings the municipalities might very fairly be asked to assist the railway companies in making the necessary improvements. Some of the earlier crossings were not dangerous until population increased and the roads were more used. I consider the Privy Council to be the best Court of Appeal in such cases, having, as they would, to deal, not only with cases of level crossings, but with all other subjects covered by the clauses of this Bill in which they are made sole judges. In those other instances the same objection might be taken, and it might be contended that some other authority should be established other than the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. I think the clause as it stands is fairly protective of public safety. The appeal, I repeat, should be in the hands of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. I do not think it is right or just that such matters should be left in the hands of municipalities, in regard to which I do not speak too harshly when I say that they are not, as a general rule, inclined to be over just to the railway companies.

Mr. COOK. In cities and towns I think gates might be erected at level crossings. We have an instance in Toronto in connection with Parkdale, where a great many accidents occurred. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council had been applied to frequently, but they would not move in the matter until, finally, there was an accident by which a valuable life was lost, and then the Privy Council gave the privilege to build the sub way, and it was built. On King street there is a crossing of about eight tracks, and that has been in a disgraceful condition for a number of years. Accidents occur there frequently, and, finally a nearly fatal accident having occurred, the Privy Council ordered the railway authorities and the city to build a subway there. The railways run through the town of Parkdale, and in some places the crossings are very dangerous; one place particularly so, because of a curve in the road and a high grade, where the trains come with great speed; and in this place, to my own knowledge, accidents have occurred. In places like this the railway companies should be compelled to put up gates, and it would not be very expensive. I believe that the public should be protected a little more than they are, and I believe, with the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), that it is too expensive and too difficult to appeal to the Privy Council in such cases. It is too difficult to move the Privy Council when a railway company is concerned. Railways are great corporations, and they have very great influence. I do not care whether it is the hon. gentlemen who are occupying the Treasury benches to-day, or whether other gentlemen, are in power, but I know to my own knowledge that both sides are influenced largely by these corporations. Therefore, I think it would be in the interest, not alone of the Privy Council, and the members of the Privy Council, but of the country at large, that these influences should be removed, and that there should be a general Act by which the public would be fairly protected. The public of this country are not protected as they should be from these railway corporations, and I think it is about time that this House should study the public interest. I believe that the Privy Council would find it much to their advantage to see that the public are protected against these great railway corporations.

Mr. SHANLY. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman who has just spoken and with the hint which has fallen from my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), that in all cities and towns there should be gates on the crossings. I am not so familiar with the cities of western Canada, but in Montreal it is never thought of having a level crossing without a gate. If they have none in Toronto, I can say that at the Parkdale crossing they have done a great deal better, they have made an excellent under-crossing; in that instance, the municipality came to the aid of the railways.

Mr. O'BRIEN. How long did it take to get that done?

Mr. SHANLY. I do not know that; but it ought to be remembered that when those roads were first constructed they were scarcely dangerous at all, and that they only became to be so considered as the population increased. In the case of the Parkdale crossing, as I was the first person that constructed it, I ought to know something about it. When it came to be a great thoroughfare, and instead of being as formerly, an ordinary country road crossing, it was actually in the city, the necessity arose for giving increased protection. I remember the case, for I was applied to by some Toronto people for my opinion. As well as I remember, the Privy Council took notice of it very promptly. They had a meeting with the railway authorities, who divided the expense with the municipalities, and made an excellent safe crossing, better than gates could possibly be. I know that the King street crossing too, is a dangerous one, and I also know that it is in contemplation now to do something the same with it as was done in the case of the Parkdale crossing.

Mr. COOK. Oh, yes; it is under way now.

Mr. SHANLY. From having been a crossing in the open common it has become a crossing in the middle of the city. I am strongly of the opinion that the Privy Council is the proper court of appeal in those matters.

Mr. DESJARDINS. The hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly) has alluded to Montreal, and says that all the railway crossings in the streets are provided with gates. He does not know, perhaps, that outside the limits of the city proper, there are densely populated localities where the railways cross numerous streets, and where there are no gates to provide for the security of the people. He knows, probably, that every year we have to deplore the loss of many lives on account of the want of proper precautions on the part of the railway companies. I think it would be better if we had a clause in the Act which would immediately provide, instead of leaving it to the Railway Committee, that wherever a railway line goes across a densely populated town or district, the law would compel the company to build gates immediately and provide necessary safeguards against accidents. This would be moving in the direction that my friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) has indicated. Take, for instance, the town of St. Henri, in the western portion of Montreal city, which has 2,000 of a population. The inhabitants of that town have applied several times to the Grand Trunk for gates to be put on the streets where the railway line crosses, and they have also applied here, but as yet there are no proper safeguards against accidents there. It is my opinion that the law should provide immediately that whenever a railway crosses the street of a town or a village, where the population is dense, that gates should be put there. If this were done those accidents which we deplore would be avoided, and it would meet the object which we have in view.

Mr. SHANLY. I quite agree with my hon. friend that some of the suburban towns around Montreal have become, to all intents and purposes, part of the city. I am entirely in favor of insisting that gates or some such safeguard shall be used where there is a large population; and not only am I in favor of it, but I would make it imperative that gates and keepers should be provided for those crossings.

Mr. DENISON. In Toronto the citizens have complained for a great many years of these level crossings not being protected. There are a great many level crossings in

Mr. SHANLY.

Toronto, and I know of only two instances in which there are gates. If anything can be done in this Railway Bill to protect the citizens of towns, where there are large populations, I think it should be done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My attention has been called over and over again to the very great indifference of the railway corporations, one and all, to the destruction of human life. The fact appears to be that when accidents to life happen the survivors are ready enough to bring claims against the railway companies for compensation; and, generally speaking, the railway companies, to do them justice, are willing to consider those claims and make settlements; but it is nobody's business to take steps to prevent the recurrence of such accidents, and the consequence is that year after year a succession of fatal accidents occur at particular crossings. Now, if this matter is going to be left to the discretion of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, it appears to me that the Railway Department should also be called on to investigate every case of death which takes place at a crossing. That might well be made a part of the functions of that department; and in such cases, it should be the duty of the Government, as the natural protectors of the lives of the people of this country, to see that effective steps are taken, as far as possible, to prevent the recurrence of similar disasters. There is no use in leaving the matter to private parties, because they will not exert themselves further than to obtain compensation.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I quite agree with the observations of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright). If this Bill does not provide, it ought to provide, that in every case of death caused by a railway, the Government ought to make an investigation.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Why wait for death?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Or in any serious accident to the person; for these accidents almost invariably result in death. I think the Railway Committee should investigate such cases and have a report, because that is the first necessary step towards taking such measures as will prevent the recurrence of such accidents, and the Railway Committee should be clothed with power, not only to make the investigation, but to apply the remedy.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am quite prepared to endorse what the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) has said on this question. In my own riding there are many places where there is very great risk of the loss of life almost every day, not only from crossings, but from trains running close to roadways. If the municipalities are not given power to do something in the way of insisting on railways putting up high fences so as to prevent teams being frightened, and caused to run into ditches or against fences, and upsetting the vehicle to which they are attached, these accidents will undoubtedly continue to happen. In some cases the railway companies have put up snow fences, and have carried them close to the crossing, so that a person driving cannot see a train coming until he is right upon the crossing. It is all very well for hon. gentlemen to advocate changes for the protection of cities, but my hon. friend from Muskoka and myself are here to advocate such changes as are necessary for the protection of life in the country districts as well. I hold that the municipalities should not be prevented from compelling a company to erect fences along the line where it runs beside a public road. If the matter were left to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, as the hon. Minister of Finance suggests, and if every constituency were compelled to bring before them the same number of accidents that happen in my constituency, they would not be able to investigate all the cases that would come before them. I quite agree with what the hon.

member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly) says about level crossings. It is impossible at present to do without them in Canada, but I think that any hindrances, such as fences and shrubbery, should be removed, and I think the municipalities should have power to enforce their removal; and where the railway companies erect snow fences in winter close up to the crossings, they ought at least to be taken down during the summer. If the public have to come before the Privy Council with all such complaints, when there are, perhaps, forty or fifty crossings in each county, it would be quite impossible for the Privy Council to deal with all these cases. I do not see that a better arrangement could be made than to allow the municipalities to stipulate what protection should be afforded in the interest of the travelling public.

Mr. SHANLY. Will you guarantee the municipal councils being reasonable?

Mr. McMULLEN. I quite admit that in some cases they might be unreasonable. At the same time, there should be something done to protect the public from these accidents which are continually happening, and which will continue to happen unless some change is made.

Mr. BRIEN. In the town from which I come there is one of the worst crossings in Canada, where accidents are constantly happening. A year ago last winter a young man with a bob-sleigh ran upon it, when a train came along, and he was thrown on one side and the bob-sleigh on the other. The buildings are situated close to the track on each side of the crossing, so that one is on the crossing before he can see the train coming. Last summer a poor unfortunate fellow, while attempting to drive across, had his horse killed and his own head taken off. Action was taken against the railway corporation, who were, of course, quite willing to settle. The law provides that trains must travel through the town only six miles an hour, but they almost invariably travel at a more rapid pace, especially in shunting. I think it would be in the interest of railway companies themselves if some provision were made by which the public could be protected. The corporation or city council have made application to the railway company two or three times to do so, year after year, and invariably the reply has been that if the corporation will pay the man, the company will furnish him. That is equivalent to treating the corporation with contempt; and I think that now is the proper time to adopt some provision by which the public would be protected.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think it was Sydney Smith who said that if a director were tied in front of every engine, accidents would be less likely to occur. Many members of this House visit my country place, and every time they do so they run very great risks, as there are three very dangerous crossings on the way. Only the other night, on my way home, I had to wait half an hour for an engine to pass up and down over the crossing on the Gatineau road. No serious accidents have as yet occurred, but no doubt if this thing continues, some very serious accident will some day occur. On the road to Aylmer we have two very bad crossings, and I quite agree with the hon. member for Muskoka that country people ought to be protected quite as well as the city people, and that railway companies should be bound to provide against serious accidents resulting from these unguarded crossings. I hope the Government will see its way to do this, because this is really an important matter.

Mr. SHANLY. Would you advocate that for every level crossing?

Mr. WRIGHT. I would, certainly, for every level crossing in the county of Ottawa.

Mr. THOMPSON. This is, no doubt, a very important portion of the Bill, and it is well it should receive the utmost attention, I am quite willing, in accordance with the request made, to allow the clause to stand over for future consideration; but I would ask the hon. members who have given this matter some attention this evening, to examine again the clause in connection with the existing practice and the difficulties which have arisen under that practice, and I think they will find that this section is a change in the direction of providing for the public safety. Whether it is adequate or not will remain to be considered, but it is, I think, a decided improvement in that direction. The discussion of this particular clause commenced by the suggestion that we were taking away the power of control from the municipalities, as under the existing law there can be no crossing over a highway without the consent of the municipal authorities. In the first place, we must provide, as has been suggested by my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Shanly), for the arbitrary refusal of the municipality, because that is not provided for in the existing law; but, as regards the control of the municipality being sufficient for the purposes of public safety, hon. gentlemen will observe, on reflection, that it is under that system that all the present difficulties and negligences have occurred. While the law provides that there shall be an absolute veto in the hands of the municipal council, so little control has been exercised by the municipalities, that not only have the necessary safeguards never been taken, but the matters in dispute have never been brought before the Railway Committee for adjudication. The present law works, as I understand it, practically in this way: No railway crossing on a level shall be made, and no railway shall run along the public highway without the consent of the municipal authorities. A railway is built with or without that consent. Generally speaking, no doubt, that consent is assumed. Since I have been a member of the Railway Committee, in only one case, and that in the Province of Quebec, has a municipal authority objected to a crossing, and the matter had to come before the Railway Committee, and then the public interest was safeguarded to the fullest extent. In nearly all other cases, the consent has been given on account of the general desire which municipal authorities have to give every facility to railway companies; and they pay but little regard to the chances of accidents, when those chances are balanced by the danger of the railway being diverted to some other locality. In other cases, the consent is taken for granted, and there is no control in such cases in the hands of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council at all, unless some other question arising, it becomes necessary for the company to get its crossing confirmed; and it is only after the railway has once been constructed with the consent of the municipality or that consent having been taken for granted, that by the occurrence of some circumstances, such as conflicting interests, the matter comes before the Privy Council Committee. Now the change we propose to make is this: We say that a railway cannot be built, even if the municipal authorities consent, across or along a public highway unless the approval of the Railway Committee is first obtained; so that it will not be a question of depending upon the municipal authority for the safeguards which they have seldom insisted on down to the present time, but this will be a provision that a railway company shall not make the crossing until they come before the Railway Committee, where we will have an opportunity of hearing all the contentions made, and when we will have the advice of our own engineer, and thus be able to see that the public interests are guarded. I do not think that the Railway Committee is so inaccessible or so expensive a tribunal in cases of this kind as the hon. member for Muskoka has suggested. I have sat upon it in two cases which were presented in relation to railway crossings, one being the case in Toronto, which the hon. member for Muskoka has mentioned. In that case, representations were made by the mayor on one side, and on the other side by the counsel for the railway company, and I do not think that any witnesses were examined. I do not think that the discussion occupied half an hour, and I am sure that the expenses incurred did not reach $40. In half an hour a decision was made that gates should be put upon the crossing, and I understand that that decision is being carried out. If it is not, under the provisions of this Bill, it can be very speedily enforced, because an order of the Railway Committee may be made a rule of court, and be made compulsory by summary proceedings. Only one or two other cases have occurred in which the Railway Committee have been asked to intervene, either by the municipalities or any other person, as regards gates across highways, and in those cases the gates have been ordered to be put up; but, generally speaking, the difficulty has not been in consequence of the difficulty of getting the Committee to meet, or the cost of its proceedings, because its proceedings are very inexpensive, but it is owing to the utter negligence of the municipal authorities, which are far more under the influence of the railway corporations than the Railway Committee can possibly be, in bringing such matters before that committee at all. In the first place we have to be careful that we do not give a control to the municipal authorities, which will be absolutely arbitrary, and, in the next place, we must provide that some better and more independent authority than the municipality shall have the regulation of the question before the crossing is made. However, I am willing to let the clause stand.

Mr. McMULLEN. I may say that it would be well to provide in this Bill that at all crossings in rural sections, railway companies should be required to protect the crossings by removing trees or shrubbery, or anything of that kind that is growing up upon their land, and that prevent people approaching the crossings from seeing the approach of an engine or train. I know of some sections where the railway companies have never tried to remove the shrubbery growing up on their land, and which becomes a complete hedge, hiding the place of the crossing, especially where there is a deep cut. If this Bill would provide that in rural districts the railway companies must remove such impediments to the view, a good reform would be effected. I think there should be some provision that the railway should be required to remove anything which tends to prevent a party travelling along the line of the railway from seeing the approach of the train. I know that trees or bushes grow up, and the railway company should remove them, whether they are on their own property or even on private property, so that parties who are crossing the track should have an opportunity to see the train when it is approaching the crossing. I know of several cases in my own county where the shrubbery has grown to such an extent that it hides the train, and in several cases it has caused accidents.

On section 191,

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Am I to understand that the company is to be made liable only if it does not make provision for the passing of farmers' carts over the railway? Very frequently it is found better to make the crossing under the railway, but there seems to be no provision for that.

Mr. THOMPSON. We will insert the words which will make it read "under or over the same."

On section 193,

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I understand the object of this section is to have means adopted which are found necessary for the protection of trains crossing bridges. It is proposed to have the floor of the bridge so constructed and maintained as to be a closed floor instead of there being large open spaces, so that if a locomotive is derailed it cannot crush down between the sleepers. It is also proposed to have a V shaped block next to the rail in order to prevent cars striking against the bridge. It is a technical matter, and the importance of it will be seen by every one.

Mr. THOMPSON.

Mr. SHANLY. I quite agree that this is a technical matter and I think the sub-section had better be omitted. We are proposing to insert a specification in this section, but we may get a better system before long. It will be quite sufficient if it is provided that the trains shall not run on a bridge unless such bridge is approved by the Minister. The sub-section will simply complicate the matter and may lead to trouble.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so. The sub-section is all right at this moment; but a better system might be discovered afterwards, and the plans might then be varied as improvements are made.

Mr. EDGAR. I suppose it is meant to be enforced against all railways after six months?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, it gives six months to enable the companies to conform to the provision.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have drawn the following clause to cover the point:

"No company shall run its trains on any bridge unless such bridge is constructed and maintained with the safeguards approved by the Minister. This section shall not apply to any bridge already constructed until six months after the bringing of this Act into force."

On section 194,

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Some further provisions should be made in regard to the fencing of railways. There is a provision already for fencing against adjoining proprietors, and section 196 provides certain penalties for neglect in such cases. In Ontario, municipalities have power to permit the running at large of cattle upon public highways. The railways are constructed in certain portions of my county without having any fences erected along the line for long distances and no cattle guards at the public highway crossing, and some of the municipalities where the road is not fenced have passed by-laws permitting cattle to run at large on the highways. In many instances these cattle stray on the railway track and are killed, partly because of the non-fencing of the track and partly because of the non-construction of cattle-guards at the public highway crossings. I know that instances occurred in my county during last summer where a large number of cattle were killed belonging to people who could not afford the loss. When compensation was applied for the companies sheltered themselves behind the common law, which provides that as the cattle were trespassers on the railway line at the time they were killed the owners were not entitled to compensation. What I want to provide for, if it can be provided for, is to make some provision in cases where municipalities have passed by-laws permitting the run of cattle on the highways, that the railway companies shall be required to maintain their fences and cattle-guards, and if they do not do that they shall be liable to damage for cattle killed when they may have strayed on the track from the public highway.

Mr. BARRON. The member for North Renfrew (Mr. White) anticipated me in the very point which I was about to raise. I have had some experience of this very matter in my riding, and at the present time I am asked to bring an action by people whose cattle have been killed by reason of escaping off land over which they had a right to be and to pasture under the by-law of the municipality allowing them to run at large. I rather fear that under the law as it is those people who have lost their cattle will have no remedy. We know it is only as against the adjoining property that the railroad has got to fence, and they have already refused to fence in many instances except in so far as to protect the cattle escaping from the farm of the particular men who wish to have an action brought. It seems to me that sections 194 and 195 are somewhat defective, because section 195 refers to the fencing mentioned in 194 and says that "such fencing shall be done within three months after the construction of the railroad as against the occupier." That applies to the case where the land is already occupied. Section B applies to the case where it is not already occupied and it requires the railway company to fence it within three months after it is occupied. There is no means of giving an occupier any remedy in law for not fencing unless the occupier first of all gives notice requiring the railway company to fence. I do not think that is right. I think that the occupier of land should have an action of damages without first of all giving the railroad company notice to fence.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not quite comprehend where the difficulty arises. As I understand the member for North Renfrew, he takes the case of the railway crossing which the company has neglected properly to fence, and cattle are killed at the railway crossing. If they had escaped from the owner's property to the highway and had been destroyed for want of proper fencing of the railway, the company of course would be liable, but the company sets up a defence that they are killed on the railway crossing having first escaped from their owner's property and being wrongfully on the highway, and that although the company were wrong in not having those fences up, the cattle were wrong in being there. I would refer the hon. member to section 200 which requires them to fence the crossings.

Mr. LISTER. It is not the case of farm crossings at all.

Mr. THOMPSON. I understand that.

Mr. LISTER. As the law now is all the railway company is bound to do is to fence against adjoining owners. The difficulty arises where they have not fenced as against the adjoining owners and where cattle belonging to people, owned by persons other than the adjoining owners, escape on the railway track over on fenced land. What I learned from my hon. friend is: If the municipality allows those cattle to be free commoners and enacts a by-law by which they cease to be trespassers allowing them to run over on enclosed lands, then if the company has neglected to fence they should be held responsible in the same way as if they are owners of the adjoining land. Of course, the law, so far as crossings are concerned, is plain enough.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Though the law expressly requires railway companies to put on cattle-guards on the level crossings, and if they do not and if cattle stray on the tracks, or even on the crossings, and get upon the railway line, from the fact of there being no cattle-guards, then the defence is set up that those cattle are trespassers, and although they are there by the law of the municipality, that they have no right to be on the public highway. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) contends with me that the railway company should be bound to fence against the trespassing of those cattle on their line. I think it is a manifest duty that they owe to the public in every populated portion of the country that they should fence their lines. What I want to get into this law, if I can, is a provision that will require them to do so, and if they neglect their manifest duty that they should be made to suffer.

Mr. WATSON. This is a very important point, and especially important in Manitoba and the North-West. A great many farmers there have suffered loss on account of fences not being erected along the lines of railway, and by cattle being killed upon the track off their own property, just as the member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) and the member for Renfrew (Mr. White) have explained. These cattle do not get on to the crossings, but the railroad running through a section of a prairie country on which cattle are allowed to run at large, they get on the railway track where the company does not fence the track, and the result is that numbers of cattle are killed, and the settler whose cattle are destroyed, finds it almost impossible to receive compensation. I hope the Minister will amend the law in such a manner as will compel the railroad company to fence the railroad through the cities or municipalities, and to protect cattle where they are allowed to run at large. It is the duty of the railroad company to protect their lines and the Government should insist upon it. Of course, I quite understand that when a railroad runs through twenty or thirty miles of unsettled country, it would be harsh to ask the companies to fence those lands.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In a thickly settled country you want fences?

Mr. WATSON. Yes, and if the land is not occupied and the farmer is allowed to have his cattle run at large.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They ought not to allow them to run at large; it is very dangerous to life.

Mr. WATSON. It would be almost impossible to compel a man to fence his cattle in. It is much more reasonable to say that the railway company should fence the railway track.

Mr. SHANLY. There is one view in the case that my hon. friends from Renfrew (Mr. White) and Lambton (Mr. Lister) have not touched upon. My hon. friend from North Renfrew (Mr. White) seems to be particularly careful of the lives of cattle, but he should remember that in this free commoner business the lives of people travelling by trains are in peril by cattle being allowed to run at large. While I am entirely in favor of railway companies providing proper cattle-guards, I think it should be insisted upon by some law or other that cattle in a populous and settled country should not be allowed to run at large. No matter how good the cattle-guards may be even where high fences are constructed, you will occasionally find places where the cattle will get on the railway, if they are allowed to roam at large; and it is much more important to consider the danger to the people in the trains where the cattle are killed than the cattle themselves.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is very important that the quality of the fence should be considered, because if the fence is not of such a quality as to prevent cattle and other animals getting through, and on to the track, loss of life may occur from the trains coming into collision with them. Many of the railways have fences that are wholly inadequate to prevent cattle, sheep and pigs from getting through them. For instance, many of the fences consist of wire hung on posts which are twelve or fourteen feet apart, and frequently there is no board on the top of the posts, so that the animals can easily make their way over or through the wires. It is a great hardship to farmers, and to people living in towns, to prevent their cattle running at large. In many towns there are commons, and the municipal by-laws permit the cattle to run at large, and sometimes the cattle get on the station grounds, owing to the station grounds not being enclosed. I know of a case in which a cow was killed by getting on to the station grounds, and the company declined to pay for the cow on the ground that she was running at large. If there is anything in the contention that a cow coming in contact with a train is liable to throw the train off and destroy human life, it is of vital importance that the company should not be allowed to neglect to construct such fences as will prevent cattle getting on the track. The quality of the fence is not sufficiently laid down in the Bill. If the railway company erect a wire fence, it should be compelled to place a board on the top of the posts, and if the company neglects to construct a proper fence, it should be held responsible for the accidents which occur in consequence. I know of a number of cases in which cattle got through improperly constructed fences and were killed, and their owners were not compensated, on some pretext or other. It is impossible for a farmer to go to law against a railway company, for the company appeals and appeals, and on some technical ground the farmer is defeated. It is the duty of this House to have the fence well defined in this Act. That is apart from the other question. I want to see human life protected, and in order that it should be protected the railway companies should be compelled to erect good fences which cattle will not be able to pass through, and thus throw the train off the track and endanger human life.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In the Province of New Brunswick there is this difficulty, not in the cultivated portions, but in the woods. The farmers in the spring turn the cattle in the woods, and they get on the railway in spite of every precaution. If the cattle are to be allowed to run at large, the company would have to fence its road from one end to the other. Then, in some portions of the Province the occupiers of land do not want the railway fenced, because the fence takes up a large portion of land, and they prefer to crop it close up to the track. We have to consider the life of the public in these cases, and if the cattle are allowed to stray on highways in proximity to a railway, it is almost impossible to run a railway without some accidents occurring; and the question is whether in the interest of the public, cattle should not be prevented from running on highways which cross railroads. How can you make a company responsible in cases where the occupiers prefer not to have the land fenced? There should be consideration for the railway as well as the cattle in these cases.

Mr. McNEILL. I think if it is possible to keep the cattle off the line over all the rest of its course, they can be kept off the line so far as the highways are concerned. There is no doubt that in many parts of the country which are partially settled, it is of great importance to the settlers that they should have the opportunity of turning their cattle into the woods and along the roadsides, and it seems to me that it is a piece of almost high-handed tyranny on the part of railway companies to refuse to take the trouble of having the railway guarded against cattle in those districts as well as in other parts of the country.

Mr. SHANLY. How are you going to secure the highway if the cattle are running.

Mr. McNEILL. By cattle-guards. As my hon. friend will see, the point that the hon. member for Renfrew has made is this, that there are cases where these cattle-guards are not as well constructed as they ought to be and where there are none at all, and the cattle straying from the roads on to the railways are killed.

Mr. SHANLY. If the cattle are running at large, they may be killed actually on the railway line. The cattle-guard may be perfect, and still the cattle may be collected on the highways at the crossing and there be killed, and perhaps kill the railway passengers.

Mr. McNEILL. Of course it is possible that they may get on the road and stand just on the crossing, but that is very unusual. It is generally when the cattle get on the line and are collected in places within the fences and cannot get away, that accidents occur. When the cattle are standing on the highway at the crossing and a train comes along, all they have to do is to walk out of the way, and that they do. As soon as the engineer sees the cattle he blows his whistle, and they move on. It is not on the crossings that accidents occur, but it is on the line through the crossings not being fenced.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is in the cut.

Mr. McNEILL. It is in the cut and along the line. It is most important an arrangement of this kind should be made. I must emphasise again my statement that it is of the greatest possible importance, in sparsely settled districts, that farmers should have the benefit of their cattle feeding in the woods and along the roads, and I do not see why they should be prevented having this benefit, simply because railway companies do not choose to be at the expense of fencing their lines as they should.

Mr. MITCHELL. You can easily see the difference between the gentlemen who represent the population and wealth of cities, such as the hon. member for the city and county of St. John, and gentlemen who represent rural constituencies like the hon. member for North Bruce. I happen to represent a constituency which is a mixture of rural and urban, and I have had a good deal of experience in the matter of cattle being killed on railways. I must say I entirely differ from the hon. member for the city and county of St. John (Mr. Weldon), and I agree in the sentiments expressed by the hon. gentleman who so ably represents the British Empire, when he speaks on that subject, and who in this case is representing the farmers. I suppose I have had occasion to plead before the Railway Department of this country as often, and get as little, as almost any member of this House, and I have heard these legal objections raised there which have been raised by some hon. gentlemen opposite. I have had occasion to ask for compensation for cattle, horses, colts and cows killed on the Intercolonial Railway, and the only animal I ever got paid for was the widow Murphy's cow after a long and arduous fight. I believe it is the duty of railway companies, and of the Government, which owns a railway, to fence their lines both in settled districts and in districts which are only comparatively settled. In the latter the farmers have to allow their cattle to feed upon the unoccupied territory of their neighbors, and the hon. member for North Bruce has correctly represented the condition of things in relation to that matter. I will just say to the representative of the Intercolonial Railway that it would be very well if the Government will keep the fences in repair after they had put them up. As the chief manager of that enterprise is in the House, I hope he will see that the fences in the county of New-humberland are better maintained than they have been for some time past. There ought to be some provision in this Bill by which railway proprietors, whether corporations or governments, should be compelled to fence, not only through thickly settled districts but also through partially settled districts, especially as in the latter the farmers must utilise their unenclosed land to pasture their cattle during the summer.

Mr. EDGAR. There seems to be two points on which this discussion has taken place. One is the necessity of fencing a railway from the adjoining land. Now there is a very distinct and good provision for that in the first part of section 94; then, the other point is the necessity of having sufficient cattle-guards at all highway crossings to prevent the cattle getting upon the railways from the highways. That is provided for by sub-section b of section 194, in very clear terms, I think.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). But if the railway company does not put them in, what then?

Mr. EDGAR. Those two provisions seem to be clear and sufficient as to those two purposes.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The fences should be made higher.

Mr. EDGAR. Apart from that, there are those two provisions. Now, how are they enforced? I would like the hon. the Minister of Justice to explain section 195. Is it in his view necessary that the adjoining proprietor should give in all cases six months' notice in writing to the railway company before it is liable for not fencing? I cannot make out from that section whether it is necessary that the notice should be given, and whether the delays referred to in the first part (a and b) render the railway liable without a notice in writing. I think section 13 of the old Act renders it necessary that notice in writing should be given before the railway company is liable, because the old Act mentions these delays; and then it says: "and after the company has been so required to give notice." I observe that in this section the draftsman of the Bill has left out the word "and," so that it does not seem to require that the notice is necessary in writing in addition to the delay. I think it would be a most scandalous thing if that were allowed, that no railway company should be liable for damages to the adjoining proprietor if his cattle were killed, unless he had given six months' notice calling for the fencing to be done. I am glad to see that this Bill appears to change that provision, and I hope the committee will accept it so far. But, supposing that improvement is made, how is the remedy to be enforced? The railway is liable, but it is only liable to the occupants of the land in respect to which the fences are defective, and the occupants, as in cases that have been mentioned to-night, of all other land through which cattle may stray on to the track, over land which does not belong to the owners of the cattle, are left without legal redress. I think that matter ought to be considered. I think, if the company is bound to make and maintain these fences, it should be liable for the loss of all cattle straying upon their track through these fences where they are defective.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Where there are no fences erected at all, what would you do then?

Mr. EDGAR. Of course I am assuming that there are fences erected, and I think some means should be adopted in that case to make the company liable for damages.

Mr. SHANLY. You would not propose to compel the company to keep all the farm gates closed?

Mr. EDGAR. I am very glad to see the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly), with his great practical knowledge, taking part in this discussion.

Mr. SHANLY. Supposing the cattle strayed on to the track through the carelessness of a farmer?

Mr. EDGAR. That case is not in question, because section 201 says that anyone who leaves a gate open is liable to the company for all sorts of damages, but why should the company not be forced in all cases to make a good lawful fence. I think they should be made liable for damages if they are not.

Mr. SHANLY. That is, in a settled country. You would not want them to fence round Lake Superior, for instance?

Mr. EDGAR. Yes, in a settled country. It must be remembered that it is not only the cattle that are lost, and it is not only the loss to the farmer which has to be considered. I think we ought to make it absolutely clear and distinct that the railway companies, in settled counties at least, must be forced by some means to keep up these fences, and I do not think that the ridiculous provisions in the former Act, requiring notice in writing to be given, should be entertained for a moment.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Are you speaking of the Act of 1883?

Mr. EDGAR. I am speaking of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. WATSON. I would make a suggestion to the Minister of Justice to add these words in sub-section c.:

"If the company is required in writing by the occupant or by the municipal council."

I think that would suit most people, and certainly most people in the west, because I would not ask the Canadian Pacific Railway, or the Manitoba and the North-West Company, in those portions of their line where they have to run through an unsettled country, where there is no danger of cattle straying on the track, to go to this expense, but, when a municipal council is giving the power, I do not think any municipal council would act unfairly to a railway company. I know of instances where some settlers had three or four head of cattle killed. They appealed to the county court, and were awarded the value of the cattle, but the railway company appealed to a higher court, and the settlers had to stop because they had not the means to go on further. If the railway company were notified, I do not think that any one would object.

Mr. McNEILL. I think that notice should be given before the railway is constructed, or before it is completed.

Mr. SHANLY. I think the suggestion of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson) is a very good one, that the maintenance of the fences should be insisted upon when the municipality desires their continuance.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I am not altogether in favor of that, because there are many places where there are no organised townships, were it would not apply.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I agree fully with the remarks of the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill), and also with those of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). In counties where people are settling and where the farms are new, it is a necessity that the cattle should be allowed to run at large. I speak with knowledge, and even with authority on this matter, because I began life on a new farm, and everyone who knows anything in regard to farming knows that a new settler has no choice, but that his cattle must be allowed to run at large. If the railway, therefore, is not to have its track enclosed, it simply prohibits the new settler from keeping cattle at all. The hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly), if I understood him aright, said that the same danger existed in regard to railway crossings.

Mr. SHANLY. Not to the same extent of course.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. If we take the surveys which have been made in the Province of Ontario, we find that that danger is one to five hundred, and anyone who has observed the habits of cattle knows that there is nothing like a railway or a turnpike road where they will seek to lie down, to escape from flies or other nuisances; and I think the motion of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) meets the difficulty as well as it is possible for this House to meet it. I think the House ought to make the safety of the people the first consideration, and it is certain that there is no more fruitful source of accidents on railways than animals lying or being upon the road. I therefore hope that the Minister of Justice will adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson).

Mr. THOMPSON. The suggestion will go further than, I think, the hon. gentleman intends. It would enable the municipal council, in unsettled places, to fence on both sides of the line of railway, and I think the clause had better be allowed to stand.

Mr. WATSON. I do not think a municipal council would be unfair in dealing with a railway company. I think it would be perfectly safe to allow the council to decide as to whether there was any danger of cattle straying upon the road, and they might make arrangements with the railway company, in case of accidents, to pay the damages. But it is very annoying to a settler to know that his cattle are liable to get on a railway track, and he cannot recover damages if they are killed. I do not think there would be any injustice in asking a railway company to fence the land, when notified to do so by the owner or occupant, or by the municipal council.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I would go somewhat further than my hon. friend. I think he will remember a discussion that took place here some five years ago in regard to fencing railways, in which I took the ground that railway companies ought to fence their roads without any notice from the adjoining proprietors; and I intend, if these clauses are allowed to stand, and when they come up again to renew that proposition, that railway companies shall be required to fence against the adjoining properties without any notice being given requiring them to do so. I quite agree with the hon. member for South Grenville (Mr. Shanly), that the protection to human life ought to be of paramount importance to this House, and I think that only strengthens the argument I have presented in favor of the proposition that railway companies should be obliged to fence their roads, not only for the purpose of protecting settlers from the loss of their cattle, but also for the protection of human life. Let me point out an instance that occurred in my county last year. In the township of Head, a considerable portion of the railway was unfenced, and representations were made to the railway company, by myself and by the municipal authorities, asking them to fence the road along this portion of their line, some four miles in extent, where there was a considerable settlement, but where the land is not of very rich quality, and consequently the settlers are not very well off. After we made these representations the company promised time and again that they would erect the fences; but they neglected to do it, and the consequence was that not less than 30 head of cattle were killed in that short distance, during last season, and no redress could be had from the railway company at all. When application was made for payment they replied that they did not believe they were liable, as the cattle had not strayed on the railway from the lands of the adjoining proprietors; and so these poor people, who were (in the exercise of their rights,) allowing their cattle to run at large, and in conformity with the by-law passed under the Municipal Act of the Province of Ontario, and who were not improperly occupying the land from which the cattle strayed upon the track, were prevented from obtaining a single dollar of compensation for the damages they had suffered. Not only that, but, as I have already stated, there are three or four crossings in that township, two at all events, that I am aware of, and I believe four, upon which there are no cattle-guards erected, so that if cattle strayed from the highway, at these points to which I refer, there would be nothing to prevent them from going on the track, that is, in the way of cattle guards. So I think that some provision ought to be made to carry out the idea I suggested, and if the Minister of Justice proposes to allow any of these clauses to stand, I would ask him to allow to stand all those clauses relating to fences, for future consideration.

Mr. THOMPSON. We will allow them to stand.

On section 201,

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Under this section, in case for instance, a farmer had a crossing on his farm, and through the negligence of a servant, his cattle happened to get upon the track and an accident occurred, according to this section, he might be called upon to pay an enormous sum, which would ruin the unfortunate farmer, when, perhaps, he was really not personally to blame.

Mr. THOMPSON. We have adopted a provision in the Bill which entitles every farmer to a crossing, and entitles him to have gates for the passage of vehicles. Surely it is necessary, in the public interest, that he should keep these gates closed. The company cannot be expected to keep them closed, because, they are entirely for his own use. If the provision is strict against the farmer, it is so in consequence of the necessity, on his part, of exercising care to prevent accidents.

Mr. WATSON.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). My hon. friend supposes the case of an accident occurring upon the railway through the negligence of the farmer's servant, in allowing the gates open. I think he desires that you should attach a sufficient penalty to the farmer, without entirely ruining him, through no fault of his own.

Mr. SHANLY. It should be remembered that the farmer's negligence may almost ruin a railway; the destruction may amount to tens of thousands of dollars, not to speak of the loss of life that might occur. It should be made a terror to farmers to leave their gates open.

Mr. WATSON. Make the penalty not less than $20 nor more than $500. It might be a hardship to make the farmer responsible for the whole damage.

Mr. SHANLY. That is absurd, because the farm would not pay the damage, in most cases.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is the provision of the law at present.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No serious difficulties have arisen yet; no such cases have occurred.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin.) We may not have had any up to the present time, but we have no guarantee that they will not occur.

Mr. McNEILL. I venture to suggest that in the present state of scientific knowledge and inventive power if a premium were offered by the Government, and probably the railway companies would be willing to join in, as it would be very advantageous to them, some invention would be made by which a flag would be allowed to drop, say, eight or ten rods from the railway crossing, as the train was coming forward. I should think by the use of electricity this might be done without much difficulty. At night this might be done by using another kind of signal such as turning a red light in place of a green one. This is a matter of such enormous importance to the public that it might be as well for the Government to take it into consideration and see if something of the kind might not be done.

On section 250,

Mr. WATSON. I would suggest that a price not to exceed a certain amount per mile, should be fixed for passenger fares. In some cases the railroads charge 4 and 5 cents per mile. I think 3 cents per mile is generally conceded to be fair.

Mr. THOMPSON. Those rates are all subject to the control of the Governor in Council.

Mr. EDGAR. Was there any limit to the rate in the old Act?

Mr. THOMPSON. No.

Mr. EDGAR. If it is not in the general Act it is in many special cases.

Mr. WATSON. The old Act subjected it to the regulation of the Governor in Council, and railroads were allowed to charge 4 or 5 cents per mile. I think we ought to fix by legislation the rate of toll not to exceed 3 cents per mile.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Are there any rates above that?

Mr. WATSON. I do not know this year, but last year I know the Canadian Pacific Railway charged 4 and 5 cents a mile; west of Brandon 4 cents and west of Barton 5 cents.

Mr. SHANLY. The Grand Trunk rate is $3\frac{1}{2}$ cents by statute; that is to say it is two pence per mile in the original charter which is equal to $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents.

Mr. WATSON. Make this $3\frac{1}{2}$ or $3\frac{3}{4}$ cents and have a limit.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That might have the effect of preventing the construction of railways in many unsettled localities where they are a great benefit to the settlers.

Mr. SHANLY. It is better not to make a rate in partially settled countries like the North-West where there are few people to make the road pay. I think it is better to leave it to the Governor in Council to make the rate.

Mr. WATSON. I find that the Governor in Council legislates in the interest of railroads and not in the interest of the public.

On section 235,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This requires the company, on the demand of any person, to make known any special rates which they have given. Suppose they refuse to give the information, something is required to compel them to give it.

Mr. THOMPSON. Well, we will let this stand, and I will look at the Interstate Act.

Mr. CHARLTON. Are these clauses modelled on the Interstate Commerce Law?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

On section 274,

Mr. HALL. I would suggest that the words "or across" should be added, because I have seen a prosecution fail on that ground.

Mr. O'BRIEN. That would be a very unreasonable regulation. If a railway runs through a man's farm, is that to prevent his crossing the track?

Mr. EDGAR. A man has to go across the track very often.

Mr. HALL. Railway companies never enforce the provision unless there is a wilful violation of the law, but there are cases in which the companies are prevented from stopping the public from crossing the track, though it is dangerous to the public themselves, and I think they should have the power to do that.

Mr. EDGAR. They have it already. They can stop trespassers on railway land.

Mr. THOMPSON. There are many cases where lands have been severed by a railway, and you would not propose to prevent persons crossing the track there. The provision the hon. gentleman suggests would be very severe.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It would defeat itself by its severity.

On section 282,

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think there ought to be some provision by which persons who purchase a railroad under the foreclosure of a mortgage ought to be able to become a corporation and obtain the franchises, because it is doubtful if a purchase under a deed of foreclosure passes the franchises. An Act was passed in New Brunswick last year to enable the persons who purchase under a deed of foreclosure or a deed of sale to become a corporation.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think it is very undesirable that railway companies should be incorporated by letters patent.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This very day there is a railway to be sold, and there can be no incorporation until next year.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will make a note of the point.

On section 288,

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Would it not be advisable to introduce a clause providing that parties should give notice to a railway company when they claim damages, on the same principle that notice has to be given to revenue officers? Sometimes these actions are brought on speculation. Frequently no notice is given to the railway companies, and the first thing they know a writ is served.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think parties usually try to get some compensation from the road before they bring the action.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). No, they do not. The first thing they know the writ is served. In the State of Maine a notice has got to be given to the railway, and the particulars have to be given, upon which a claim is made for damage, before the action is brought.

Mr. MASSON. I think the limitation of six months is too short. The last speaker says that often the first notice a railway company gets is the writ. That may be the case sometimes. I know cases where a railway have got the notice, and then pretending to promise a settlement, they waste time until the limitation expires, and then the company refuses a settlement, and the unfortunate man has to suffer a loss. I would suggest that the time be lengthened to a year, or that notice of action should be sufficient to prevent the limitation running. I think the object of the short limitation is to allow the company to have notice within reasonable time, while the means of obtaining evidence for their defence are available, and not allow the claim to get stale when they would be at a loss to discover evidence. I believe that to be the reason for which the limitation is so short. I think that notice in writing within six months would be sufficient, and it would then give time for negotiating a settlement.

Mr. THOMPSON. As regards the notice of action, the difficulty is that so many technicalities surround it, that practically, in four cases out of five, actions fail where notice of action is required.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). All that is needed is a simple notice to the company on the part of the claimant that he intends to bring an action, and to give some information to the company as to the particulars of the action. I know that in the State of Maine, notice is required, and if it is required here, I think it might be extended to 12 months instead of 6—so many days' notice, and then extend the time within which the action may be brought. I propose to join protection to the railway companies with further protection to the public. Six months is undoubtedly a very short time to let a suit clear a railway company.

Mr. THOMPSON. If we intend to insert a provision of this kind, it will have to be very carefully drawn, and we should let the clause stand.

On section 294,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). You do not propose to make the employé responsible, but only the person who sells him the liquor?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the employé drinks enough to become intoxicated, he becomes guilty of a misdemeanor.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Suppose a conductor stops at a station and goes in to take lunch, and takes a glass of beer?

Mr. THOMPSON. Spirituous or intoxicating liquors.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Beer is intoxicating.

Mr. THOMPSON. I did not know that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It depends upon how much you take.

Mr. THOMPSON. If there is to be a prohibition, it must be strict, and we can only draw the line at spirituous or intoxicating liquors.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think to have perfectly sober men on a train is of very great importance. I do not see why we should not prohibit a person, when on duty, from taking it, as well as to prohibit a person from selling it.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Suppose that party did not know that this man was engaged upon the road, and sells him a glass of liquor, would he then be liable to a fine?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If nobody sells or gives it to him, he will not take it.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is just the same as the prohibition against selling to minors. Persons who are engaged in a business which we restrict must take the risk of violating the law.

Mr. DAVIN. I desire to call attention to what I consider a very grave circumstance. In the North-West Territories we have, or had up to the time I left, conductors and brakemen running from Donald to Swift Current and from Brandon to Swift Current, and I have seen conductors dropping asleep. They had been up the best part of two days and one night on that run. This causes danger to life, for the whole train depends on the wakefulness of those men. I will not comment on the cruelty to the men. By clause 293 we declare that "every person who is intoxicated while in charge of a locomotive engine or while acting as conductor to any car or train of cars is guilty of a misdemeanor." The reason why you punish him for being intoxicated is because his intoxication unfits him to discharge his duties, and if conductors have to run from Donald to Swift Current, by the time he is within 100 miles of Swift Current the average conductor will be not wakeful enough to attend to his duties.

Mr. SHANLY. What is the distance?

Mr. DAVIN. I do not know the exact distance at the present moment. It will take the best part of two nights and a day, and that is too long a time for the men to be at work on duty.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That there and back?

Mr. DAVIN. No; direct.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Surely not.

Mr. DAVIN. I rather think so.

Mr. SHANLY. It must be a very slow train.

Mr. DAVIN. I believe the train leaves Donald some time in the night, and it will get into Swift Current the day following. The conductor has to get up in the night, get on board the train, run a whole day, and it will be night before he gets into Swift Current. I have seen the men dropping asleep. They come in and sit in the "Pullman" for a moment and their eyelids fall. I have spoken to them; I have written to Mr. Van Horne; I also sent an account of what I saw to the Railway Committee, for I think it is a serious matter.

Mr. SHANLY. How many miles a week does the company get out of them?

Mr. DAVIN. I do not know. The fact is as I state it. From Brandon to Swift Current is not so long a run, but I apprehend it is too long. They leave Brandon at about half past one or two o'clock and get into Swift Current the next day.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is a very important question.

Mr. THOMPSON.

Mr. SHANLY. It is a question as to the number of miles a week the company get out of the men. Somebody must do the night work.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Is it the intention of the Government to embody in this consolidation the Bill introduced by Mr. McCarthy in reference to protecting railway employés?

Mr. THOMPSON. Some parts of it I propose to add when the House goes into committee again.

Mr. DAVIN. The question I apprehend is not how many hours of work you get out of them, but how many hours continuously can a man stand it. That is the real question. There cannot be the least doubt, I can assure the Government, that this is required in the interest of the public, in the interests of human life, and I would say even in the interests of the railway companies, because they will one day or other have an accident and the result of that accident will cost them, by many times, more than if they had adopted this regulation.

Mr. SHANLY. They have too few conductors you claim?

Mr. LANGEЛИER (Quebec). On behalf of my hon. friend the member for York (Mr. Mulock) who has been compelled to leave before the committee had finished their work, I would call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the fact that the hon. member said to me that last year when several amendments were moved by him to the Act respecting the sale of railway passenger tickets he moved the following amendment:—

"Every railway company liable to redeem any such ticket, which refuses to redeem the same when so presented, shall forfeit to the holder thereof a sum equal to ten times the amount payable for its redemption, which sum shall be recoverable, at the suit of the holder against such company, in any court of competent jurisdiction."

The member for York (Mr. Mulock) tells me that that amendment was left out with a promise from the Minister of Railways that it would be incorporated in the consolidation of the Railway Act which was to be introduced this Session. I see that it is not incorporated in this Bill, and he says the amendment is an important one. I do not think it has any great application in the Province of Quebec. Since some of the amendments passed last year, compelling railroad companies to redeem their own tickets when they are not used to the end, the railway companies have refused to do so, or they have placed such conditions on the redemption that it makes it practically impossible to redeem them. The result is that the value of the tickets are lost, or they are sold at a loss by those who are the buyers of them. I would not be prepared to support the amendment as proposed last year compelling railway companies which refused to redeem the tickets to pay ten times their value. I think the penalty is rather too high. We might say they would pay double the value of the ticket or some other figure. I wish to draw the attention of the Minister to the statement of the hon. member that there was a distinct promise made last year by the Minister of Railways that this would be incorporated in the consolidation which was to be made this year.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken about there being a distinct promise. The Minister of Railways did promise that this year there would be a consolidation Bill introduced, and also stated that that would be the time to consider the matter. If the amendment has been overlooked in the drafting of this Bill, I will see that it is considered. In relation to what the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) says I will also see that that matter is considered before the House goes into committee again.

Committee rose.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.50 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 4th May, 1888.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

LETTER FROM THE GOV. GENERAL'S SECRETARY.

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that he had received the following letter from the Governor General's Secretary:—

"OFFICE OF THE GOVERNOR GENERAL'S SECRETARY,
"OTTAWA, 4th May, 1888.

"SIR,—I have the honor to inform you that Chief Justice Sir William Ritchie, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber this afternoon, at three o'clock, for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to the Bills which have passed the Senate and House of Commons during the present Session.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"HENRY STREATFIELD,

"Governor General's Secretary.

"The Honorable

"The Speaker of the House of Commons."

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY MORTGAGE.

Mr. EDGAR. I wish to ask the Government if they would lay on the Table of the House the mortgage of the Canadian Pacific Railway under which the existing bonds of the road are secured. I do not think it has been laid before the House at all. It would be very important for us to have it in considering the questions which are coming up.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If it has not been laid on the Table of the House, and is not in any of the public documents, we will have it laid on the Table.

Mr. EDGAR. I could not see it amongst the documents.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not quite certain, but my impression was it had already been laid on the Table.

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 95) respecting gaming in stocks and merchandise (from the Senate).—(Mr. Thompson.)

Bill (No. 104) further to amend chapter 51 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, the Territories Real Property Act.—(Mr. Thompson.)

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY LANDS.

Mr. LAURIER asked, 1. What number of acres is there of unsold lands which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company propose to receive by deed of bargain and sale to trustees under sub-section c of the resolutions now before the House? 2. What portions of such lands lie within the Railway Belt? 3. How many acres of those lands are there in Manitoba, and how many in the Territories, east of the 3rd meridian? 4. How many acres have been sold by the company, paid for, and the deeds completed? 5. How many acres have been sold, but the sales are still incomplete? How much paid on the same, and how much remains due, and when and how payable?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. 1. The unsold lands, representing the balance of the land grant, amount, as stated in the memorandum of the Minister of Railways, printed in the Votes and Proceedings, to 14,934,237 acres. 2. The land accounts of the Canadian Pacific Railway are not subdivided so as to show the number of acres within the railway belt, or in any particular district; and besides, the selection of the company's lands has not yet been completed, either inside or outside of the railway belt. 3. It will take a considerable time to make up a return which would serve as an answer to this question, since, as already stated, the lands inside the railway belt or in the Province of Manitoba are not shown particularly in the company's accounts, and, moreover, have not yet been fully selected. 4. The number of acres sold and paid for, and for which deeds were completed up to the 1st of October, the date of the last return to Parliament, was 517,120. 5. The number of acres contracted to be sold, the deeds of which had not been made, was at the 31st of December last, about 2,755,629. The company cannot at present give exact information as to the number of acres for which full payment was made and deeds executed between the 1st October and the 31st December last, without reference to their land commissioner's office in Winnipeg. The amount outstanding on uncompleted sales was, at the 31st December last, $1,252,857, which is payable by yearly instalments spreading over various periods not exceeding nine years from the date of the contract of sale.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Medical Inspection, Quebec$1,600

Mr. MITCHELL. With regard to that medical inspection, I believe there has been a great change in connection with the old gentleman who formerly had the superintendence at Quebec. Only one inspection is required now, and it is said that some cases of small-pox passed the inspection at Grosse Ile and the inspector at Quebec, owing to the fact that the inspector there has been prohibited from inspecting ships at Quebec. This requires some explanation.

Mr. CARLING. When did this happen?

Mr. MITCHELL. Last year or the year before.

Mr. CARLING. Under the new regulations put in force last August, all vessels, except the mail steamers, which are inspected at Rimouski, are inspected at Grosse Ile before they come to Quebec, and it is improbable that anything contagious should break out between Grosse Ile and Quebec, a distance of 30 miles.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the hon. gentleman inform the House whether he is able to state that no cases of small-pox were discovered on landing at Quebec, although the vessels had been inspected at Grosse Ile.

Mr. CARLING. I am informed to the contrary.

Mr. MITCHELL. As I understand it, the officer at Quebec, is, under the regulations, authorised to inspect, but has received official instructions not to inspect. Now, he is on pay there and there is no reason why he should not inspect the ships on their arrival there.

Mr. CARLING. I think the statement was made, over a year ago, that some cases of small-pox had been sent to Ontario, but it has never been proved to the satisfaction of the department that such was the case. I contend that as the inspection is now made at Grosse Ile, and a certificate is given by the doctor to the master of the vessel, it is not likely that any cases as the one referred to will occur again.

Mr. MITCHELL. The officer is on pay at Quebec to superintend the landing of passengers, and there is, therefore, no reason why he should not continue the inspection.

Mr. CARLING. The Government will see that particular care is taken to have a good inspection.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I notice also that the expenses at Grosse Ile are increased $4,000. The medical superintendent last year had $1,600, and his salary is increased to $2,400, and he has an assistant at $1,200. It seems to be a very large increase to give the medical superintendent $800 extra, and the other items are increased generally, making altogether $4,000 increase at Grosse Ile. I can hardly see the necessity of having an assistant and then increasing the pay of the inspector 50 per cent.

Mr. CARLING. New regulations were put in force in August last. Previous to that vessels were only inspected during the day, but now they have to be inspected day and night, and the doctor could not be called upon to discharge duties by night as well as by day.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That is a fair explanation for the appointment of an assistant, but not for increasing the salary of the superintendent.

Mr. CARLING. In addition to the regular officer, it has been found necessary to have an assistant, and therefore this appointment was made.

Mr. MITCHELL. That does not come in under the salary question.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman is speaking about the increased expense.

Mr. MITCHELL. We are speaking about the increased salary.

Mr. CARLING. The increased salary is caused by the increased duty which these gentlemen have had to do, having to work day and night.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). But you do not require two physicians at the same time to inspect, and, if you have the twenty-four hours all round, it is obvious that the inspecting physician who was there before has no more work to discharge than he then had, because you have given him an assistant to do the extra work, and I do not see why you should increase his salary 50 per cent. It seems altogether out of proportion to the duty he is called upon to discharge.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I understand that now all ships are to stop at Grosse Ile. I understood the Minister to say that, if that is done at night, the medical superintendent at Grosse Ile station will go on board, and—

Mr. CARLING. And inspect.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). He has no time to make an inspection. Suppose there are 500 or 600 passengers, it would take a whole day for the doctor to inspect them. I think the previous system was much more efficient, that is, the system which was adopted when there was some fear of the cholera epidemic. There was a physician stationed at Rimouski or at Father Point, and he boarded every ship which carried passengers.

Mr. CARLING. That was only in regard to mail steamers.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). If we are to increase the expenditure—and I do not object to that so long as it will prevent the introduction of disease into this country—the same policy should be adopted as was adopted, I think in 1871 or 1872, by appointing a physician residing at Father Point, who should board every vessel carrying passengers, and should come up with the ship, and would have plenty of time to examine all the passengers, to look into every room and every berth on board the steamer by the time it arrived at Quebec. But, if the examination is to be made at Grosse Ile, as I understand, either the examination will be a perfunctory one, or it will take so much time that those interested in trade and commerce will complain. In the case of a ship with 500 passengers on board, it would take twenty-four hours to make an efficient examination, and the trade would complain if the vessel were delayed so long for that purpose. I think it would be a much better system not to have the inspection at Grosse Ile, but to have physicians detailed at Father Point to board every ship carrying passengers and inspect the ship on the way up, which would be done without delaying the ship in any way. Then there would be plenty of time to make a good inspection. In the case of fast ships, it would give the physicians 12 or 15 or 16 hours from Father Point to Quebec, and he would have all the time necessary, I think we are not improving on the old system which was adopted when there was fear of a cholera epidemic. I have heard it remarked that it is impossible that this inspection should be effective. There is no doubt that, under this system, the physician will go on board and make enquiries of the captain, and of course the captain does not like his ship to remain there for two or three days, and, if he has only one or two cases of disease on board, he will say it is all right; and, so also the physician paid by the steamship company will report everything correct, and so the ship will come to Quebec, and then, perhaps, it will be discovered that there is disease on board.

Mr. CARLING. The Sanitary Boards of Health of the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario, have highly approved of the new quarantine regulations at Grosse Ile. In regard to what the hon. gentleman says as to the detention of vessels, the vessel owners have highly approved of the system we adopted last year. The physician goes to the vessel in a tug, and the tug goes up the stream alongside the vessel, and in one or two or three hours, the doctor makes his inspection, and then he has also an affidavit from the captain in addition to his inspection that all on board are in good health, and on that he gives a clean bill of health.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I can quite understand that these boards would approve of the regulations, because they understand that the inspection will be efficiently done. It does not matter where the physician goes on board, so long as the inspection is efficient, but it is within my own knowledge that, under the present proposals, it would be done in a perfunctory manner. The Minister stated that the reason for an increase is that the inspection may have to take place during the night, and of course the increased machinery necessary has to be provided for.

Committee rose.

ROYAL ASSENT.

A Message was delivered by R. E. Kimber, Esq., Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod:

Mr. SPEAKER.—Sir WILLIAM RITCHIE, Deputy Governor, desires the immediate attendance of your Honorable House in the Chamber of the Honorable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the House went up to the Senate Chamber; and having returned,

Mr. SPEAKER informed the House that the Deputy Governor had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:—

An Act respecting the Port Arthur, Duluth and Western Railway Company.

An Act to incorporate the Canada and Michigan Tunnel Company.

An Act respecting the Canada Southern Railway Company and the Erie and Niagara Railway Company.

An Act to amend the Acts relating to the Great Western and Lake Ontario Shore Junction Railway Company.

An Act respecting Bonds on Branch Lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

An Act to amend the Act incorporating the Shuswap and Okanagan Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada.

An Act to enable the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company to run a ferry between Beecher Bay, in British Columbia, and a point on the Straits of Fuca within the United States of America.

An Act respecting the South Norfolk Railway Company.

An Act to amend the Act incorporating the Hereford Branch Railway Company and to change the name of the Company to the Hereford Railway Company.

An Act respecting the Lake Nipissing and James' Bay Railway Company.

An Act to incorporate the Collingwood and Bay of Quinté Railway Company.

An Act respecting the River St. Clair Railway Bridge and Tunnel Company.

An Act to incorporate the Western Ontario Railway Company.

An Act to incorporate the Pontiac and Renfrew Railway Company.

An Act to confirm a certain agreement made between the London and South-Eastern Railway Company and the Canada Southern Railway Company.

An Act to incorporate the St. Lawrence and Adirondaek Railway Company.

An Act to confirm a certain agreement made between the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada, the Canada Southern Railway Company and the London and Port Stanley Railway Company.

An Act to reduce the capital stock of La Banque Nationale.

An Act to incorporate the Chinook Belt and Peace River Railway Company.

An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the Kincardine and Teeswater Railway Company.

An Act to incorporate the Ottawa and Parry Sound Railway Company.

An Act to amend the Act relating to the Manitoba and North-Western Railway Company of Canada.

An Act to amend the Act to incorporate the Moncton Harbor Improvement Company.

An Act respecting a certain Treaty between Her Britannic Majesty and the President of the United States.

An Act to amend the Revised Statutes of Canada, chapter one hundred and eighty-one, respecting punishments, pardons and the commutation of sentences.

An Act to amend the Adulteration Act, chapter one hundred and seven of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

An Act to amend the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, chapter twenty-nine of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

An Act further to amend the law respecting Procedure in Criminal Cases.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MITCHELL. If I understand aright, with regard to this Grosse Ile business, you do not intend to disturb the inspection, or the salary of the inspector at Quebec?

Mr. CARLING. We do not propose to interfere with the duties of the port physician.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to ask the Minister why he has increased the salary by 50 per cent., and provided an assistant at the same time?

Mr. CARLING. The inspection is continued now twenty-four hours instead of twelve hours, as formerly, and we have a night service as well as a day service.

Mr. MITCHELL. $600 for Chatham, New Brunswick. When was the Chatham officer appointed?

Mr. CARLING. In August, 1887.

Mr. MITCHELL. There was no vote last year.

Mr. CARLING. He was paid out of the quarantine vote.

Mr. MITCHELL. Was there any special reason presented for his appointment?

Mr. CARLING. Yes, special reasons were given for the necessity of appointing an officer there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What were they?

Mr. CARLING. The large number of vessels arriving at the port of Chatham, and the necessity for an inspection.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No immigrants come there.

Mr. CARLING. I think there are.

Mr. MACKENZIE. How many immigrants?

Mr. CARLING. I cannot say the number of immigrants, but the vessels were inspected by this officer.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think there are any immigrants coming, but the necessity of the appointment is apparent, with the threatened cholera scare that occurred, and so many vessels coming from the continent. I would like to know on whose recommendation he was appointed. I had been trying to get an appointment made for five or six years, and could not succeed, but as soon as I assumed the attitude of freely criticising the action of the Administration, parties were appointed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps it was to inspect you. You were in quarantine, in a sort of fashion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A very good reason.

Mr. MITCHELL. But I do not think it was a good use to make of the public funds. Either the officer was necessary or he was not, for some years past, and if he was necessary, he ought to have been appointed while I had the ear of the Administration, and not immediately when I ceased to possess that influence. I do not object to the appointment —

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL—because I think it is necessary, and I think it has been necessary for a good many years, when the hon. gentleman did not "hear, hear" so cleverly.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hearing has improved lately.

Mr. MITCHELL. They say you have got religion, and I don't see why you should not get hearing, too.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Port Hawkesbury, Nova Scotia, $300. Why do you select Port Hawkesbury? It is not so far, as I understand, a port of very great call.

Mr. CARLING. It has been represented to the department that a very large number of vessels touch that port. It was represented by the medical men in that district, and by the townspeople, that it was very important, and after we made enquiries we found that it was necessary.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There are a great many ports that appear to be of more importance than Hawkesbury, so far as one can judge, and I want to know how it is that Hawkesbury comes to be a port of special call? If I am correctly informed, but a very small revenue is received there.

Mr. CARLING. A very large number of vessels touch there.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It does not appear to be a very great port in point of customs receipts.

Mr. CARLING. We are not paying a very large amount of money.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But where do the vessels come from? What sort of vessels are they—fishing boats, or traders, or vessels taking in coal?

Mr. CAMERON. Hawkesbury is a port near the Strait of Canso, and a quarantine station was established some years ago on Point Tupper, in the county of Richmond. The Strait of Canso separates Nova Scotia from Cape Breton, and a very large number of vessels pass through the strait, and as a general thing, make Port Hawkesbury a port of call. Steamers ply between the United States and Prince Edward Island which call there, and it is the terminus of the Cape Breton Railway. It is true that a number of contagious diseases have been sent to hospitals there, and it was found necessary, on the representation of the late member for Richmond, I presume, to have a quarantine station established there. I do not know of any point in Nova Scotia, with the exception of Halifax and North Sydney, where so many vessels call, and where I believe a quarantine station is more necessary.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. To meet expenses of precautionary measures for public health, $15,000—I am not disposed to object to a vote of $15,000 for the benefit of public health, or for enabling the Government, in case of the outbreak of an epidemic, to take proper precautions, but I fail to see, although the journal may deserve some assistance, that it is quite correct to charge to the vote of precautionary measures for public health, a sum of $1,200 as a subsidy to Dr. Playter for his health journal, and other sums to other medical men who are starting other journals. It seems to me it is rather a misappropriation of the public money to have expended that amount under a vote for precautionary measures for the public health. I do not mean to say that the Government may not be justified in subsidising those medical publications, but the amount should be placed under a different head from precautionary measures. As I understand it, the Government require this vote in case of an epidemic, so that they may be able to isolate patients, or take such other precautions as may be necessary, and to that I do not object, but I seriously think a subsidy to journals should appear under a different head.

Mr. CARLING. This item has appeared in the Estimates for a great many years, and it covers a sum given to Dr. Playter and also to a French journal in Montreal. The medical profession have brought pressure to induce the Government to increase the amounts, but I have not seen my way to recommending an increase to the Government. This vote has been passed a number of years, and I think it is money very well expended.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be; but I do not think it comes fairly under the head of precautionary measures for the public health.

Mr. CARLING. They advise the public what to do in case of an epidemic occurring.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The vote for precautionary measures is none too large if an epidemic should occur.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). What is the method of distributing this health journal; how many copies are published, and in what way are they distributed? We should take the necessary precautions against an epidemic, but I really do not see the propriety of giving a large sum of money for this useless book. Perhaps the Minister will be able to explain in what way it is distributed or placed in the hands of those who would be benefited by it?

Mr. CARLING. These pamphlets or books that are printed by Dr. Playter and by the French Hygienic Society of Montreal are distributed to the press, to the medical profession, and in different cities and towns throughout the country. A large number of professional men in the Provinces have written asking to have an increased number distributed, and I take it for granted that it has done very much good in instructing the people as to what precautions to take in the event of an epidemic.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). That is a very strange explanation. If a medical man desires special information, in regard to the treatment or prevention of disease, he should subscribe for appropriate books. I have been practicing some length of time, and I cannot recall any of the books being sent to me. I do not desire them, and I do not think much of the information in them; but if they were sent to medical men in towns and cities, certainly some would have fallen in my way, and I would have had an opportunity of seeing them. According to the experience of the majority of medical men this book is not sent to them, and the vote is a useless expenditure of money. We further find that this vote is squandered very recklessly, regardless of the manner in which it is expended and benefit done. A number of physicians received payments for visiting vessels. Some, I observe, received $4 a visit. Another medical man at Rimouski made twenty-five inspections, and received $10 a visit. Besides, he received a salary of $250; then there was a boat and $374 wages of boatmen. I can understand the necessity of such visits, if we were threatened with special diseases. Perhaps the Minister will explain why $10 is paid in one case and $4 in the other case, and that fees are paid in addition to salary? There must be something wrong.

Mr. CARLING. The fee of $10 is for each inspection of the mail steamers at Rimouski by Dr. Gauvreau. He is a very excellent officer, and makes a thorough inspection of the mail steamers, which is necessary to allow them to proceed to Quebec without further detention. The payment of $4 a visit is for the ordinary inspection of other vessels; it is fixed by law.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Were there only twenty-five mail steamers in the course of the year? I thought the Dominion as well as the Allan line carried the mails.

Mr. CARLING. No; there is only one mail steamer a week we inspect.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I understand that at Grosse Ile there is a medical officer who is paid for his services. What are his duties? What is the use of having a medical man there if vessels are not inspected? He is apparently there to perform no duties whatever, but he sends the steamers forward to this other point at which a medical man inspects them, receiving $10 a visit.

Mr. CARLING. I stated, a short time ago, that between 900 and 1,000 vessels came up the St. Lawrence last season, and I have no doubt that as many will come up this season. All those vessels will have to be inspected, and Dr. Gauvreau inspects the mail steamers, which come up once a week. The mail steamers are obliged to stop over at Rimouski to deliver the mails, and Dr. Gauvreau makes that inspection. The number of steamers amounted to twenty-five as I see here, or it may have been more than twenty-five, and Dr. Montizambert and his staff inspect over 900 vessels at Grosse Ile, for which we pay his salary and that of his assistants. This amount is only for the inspection of the mail steamers at Rimouski, which inspection is made there so that they shall not be detained at Grosse Ile, and it enables them to bring up their passengers as rapidly as possible to Quebec.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). How long is the mail steamer detained at Rimouski?

Mr. CARLING. I understand that it is not more than an hour or two. During the time the mails are being delivered at Rimouski the medical officer makes the inspection.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). As I understand the Minister, he says the vessel remains for about an hour, and the doctor, who lives in the place, is understood to make a thorough inspection of the boat during that time. According to the Minister this man made a careful and particular inspection for which he receives $10, and the other men only receive $4, because it is not as important an inspection. If the steamer remains there an hour a thorough inspection must be made in that time, so that the doctor gets $10 for one hour's service. If that be the fact I think the Minister is very liberal indeed.

Mr. CARLING. It was mentioned to me by a gentleman who has passed up and down the river that a steamer may remain there longer.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The Minister said an hour.

Mr. CARLING. I was informed by a gentleman sitting beside me, and I cannot say whether it is an hour or two hours. The vessel is inspected and the doctor and the captain are obliged to make the same affidavit to Dr. Gauvreau at Rimouski as the officers of other vessels are obliged to make to Dr. Montizambert at Grosse Ile.

Mr. SPROULE. The member for Elgin (Mr. Wilson) forgets that the doctor is obliged to be there day and night, whenever he is notified of the arrival of the steamer. Every medical man knows that if he makes a night visit it costs more than if he makes a day visit. The necessity for inspection means that there may or may not be contagious disease on board the vessel, and if the doctor finds any evidence of disease the vessel will be detained longer than if he found no such evidence. The length of time occupied will depend on whether or not there is disease on board the vessel. It does not mean either that the doctor is on service just the actual time he is on that vessel, because from the time a vessel is notified he must be in readiness at any hour of the day or night. It is hardly reasonable, therefore, to suppose that the doctor is paid $10 just for the time he is on board the vessel. With regard to the distribution of the literature by Dr. Playter, I remember that it was distributed very largely throughout Ontario, not only to medical men but to the heads of municipalities and others interested in health matters. Two years ago, when it was anticipated we might have cholera in Canada, this pamphlet was distributed. It was a very good pamphlet and contained information regarding cholera, diphtheria and other contagious diseases, so that persons who were not medical men, when they came into contact with contagious diseases, obtained information as to what they should do, and were instructed how to isolate cases as soon as possible before they could bring them to the notice of the health officers or medical men of the district. In my part of the country those pamphlets were found very useful, and when they have not been distributed lately there have been a number of enquiries for them by medical men and the heads of municipalities.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With regard to the inspection that mail steamers undergo at Rimouski, if I understood the Minister aright, he said that when they are inspected at Rimouski that they are not inspected at Grosse Ile. Everyone who passes up the St. Lawrence knows that those vessels are not detained long at Rimouski, perhaps an hour and a half. It is utterly impossible, I should think, for any medical officer to make a personal inspection, which would be of the smallest value, of a mail steamer in that time, for there are often 800 or 900, and possibly 1,000 immigrants on board. This is all the more difficult if a ship comes in at night. It appears to me all the medical inspector can do is to confer with the medical officer on the mail steamer, and if that gentleman tells him it is all right he accepts the statement and the vessel goes on. That, I take it, is practically the result of the inspection of the mail steamer, carrying many hundreds of immigrants and reporting at Rimouski. The inspection is simply equivalent in value to an affidavit made by the captain and medical officer that they have no contagious diseases on board. It seems to me, on the Minister's own saying, that this gentleman stationed at Rimouski cannot by any possibility make any perfect inspection of a large number of immigrants arriving under the conditions stated. I fail to see that there is any practical use in it which cannot be equally secured by an affidavit made, under penalties, by the medical officer on board.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You can understand that a steamer arrives there with a large body of immigrants on board. The vessel has a captain, who is responsible by his character and under the law, for a true report, and there is also a medical man on board who is likewise responsible. We must not allow the ship to pass simply upon the idea that the medical officer on board, when he arrives at Quebec or Montreal, or wherever his destination may be, will make an affidavit that there is a clean bill of health. We have a right to see that when those ships enter into our waters they should be examined.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Quite so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You can understand how it is. The medical man at Rimouski goes on board and he must be paid for that service. He sees the doctor of the ship, and he asks him what has been the state of the health of the passengers on board during the voyage. He asks the captain the same thing; and they are bound to make honest and true statements, and there is no reason why they should not make honest and true statements. I take it the medical man may say: There are so many cases on board; there are some of measles, but we think they are over; there is no small-pox; there are no other of the innumerable diseases I could mention; but here is a case I would like you to look at, I am not sure whether it is small-pox or measles, or anything else. He goes and sees that man and adds his responsibility as a Dominion medical officer to the responsibility of the captain and the surgeon; and there is a substantial advantage in getting the captain and the medical officer on board cross-examined by the medical man who is responsible to the Government, that no unhealthy or diseased person should pass the inspection. It is of very great consequence that that should be so. While on my legs, I would say that although the quarantine regulations lately adopted are a very great improvement on the previous system, yet I am not at all prepared to say that the Government and Parliament would not be justified in sanctioning a very considerable additional expense to provide for extra precautions being taken against the introduction of disease by the large mass of immigrants at the very portals of the Dominion. I quite agree with the hon. member for Quebec that it is not sufficient that they should be passed either at Rimouski or Grosse Ile, but that if there is the slightest suspicion of disease, there should also be an examination at Quebec. I am rather surprised to learn, for I did not know it before, that there is no officer to examine them at Montreal. The ships now go up to Montreal. Years ago, when these Grosse Ile regulations were established, Quebec was the place of debarkation for all the immigrants. I am not at all satisfied that there should not be an examination both at Quebec and Montreal, just as much as at the other two points. I thoroughly agree that this is a matter as to which there should be no starving of the service.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We have no desire that there should be; we are quite agreed as to that. Probably a bow passes between the medical gentlemen, and the examination is one of a very free-and-easy description. I am not sure that, if there were serious cases, the captain or owner of the vessel should not be held responsible. In fact, I would be disposed to do as is done in England, make it equivalent to manslaughter for the captain or owner of a vessel to allow it to enter a port, knowing that there were contagious diseases on board, without reporting.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It should approach to that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a great offence against the public weal, and the hon. gentleman has just touched the point, which is, that the ships cannot be properly inspected at Rimouski, unless you allow the medical officer to accompany the ship to Quebec or to Montreal, and make a pretty thorough examination as he goes; and I would suggest that he should do so.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The moment a ship arrives at Rimouski the medical man goes on board for a short time, and then the vessel starts for Quebec. There is no opportunity of making a proper examination; but if the previous method were adopted, of accompanying the vessel to Quebec, the officer could make a better inspection than he is able to do at present.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I do not think the explanations offered are quite satisfactory. I do not doubt that the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) receives some of those documents; but what I said was that I did not think it was reasonable that the country should pay for those works to be sent to medical men. If they require them, let them pay for them as other people are required to do. I should like to ask the Minister whether the officer at Rimouski has detained any vessel after it has arrived at that port?

Mr. CARLING. He has sent vessels to Grosse Ile if he has discovered any contagious diseases on board. There the patients are taken charge of by Dr. Montizambert, and the vessel is disinfected.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Can he tell me the number of vessels which have been detained and sent to Grosse Ile?

Mr. CARLING. I cannot at this moment, but I shall be very glad to furnish the information to-morrow.

Mr. LAURIER. Do I understand that every steamer is examined at Rimouski?

Mr. CARLING. All the steamers that stop at Rimouski to deliver the mails are examined. The Allan line and the Dominion line carry the mails week about alternately. Twenty-five come up during the summer months, and these are all inspected.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it would be strictly germane to this item, relating to precautionary measures for the protection of the public health, to call the attention of the hon. Ministers to the fact that for the last two or three days there has been a very unsavory and unwholesome smell on this side of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman had better change to this side.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no objection if hon. gentlemen come over here. It is particularly disagreeable this afternoon. I believe our worthy Clerk has noticed it for the last two or three days. It evidently comes from the ducts under the Clerk's table; I do not know what the cause of it may be. I think it is eminently in the interest of the public health that it should be looked to.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I had no idea that there was anything of the kind. I may say that the officer in my department, who has charge of these ducts, stated to me not more than two days ago that they had all been examined, and were perfectly clean, and that the air in them was pure. It seems to be only on that side of the House. However, I will have the matter enquired into.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am quite willing to accept the suggestion to change places pro tem, and to consider this the right side of the House for the time being.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is a constitutional objection to that—the eyes sit on this side, and the noses on that side.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh,
Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Mr. COOK. I think it would be an improvement if the ducts were whitewashed. There is a good deal of whitewashing going on on the other side.

To meet expenses for cattle quarantine, Province of Quebec $5,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would call the attention of the House to a rather extraordinary correspondence which took place with respect to this item between the Auditor General and the Department of Agriculture. The House will recollect that we had a great deal of trouble in fixing the value of animals, and that after a good deal of discussion it was decided that the sum to be paid should not exceed $150 in any one case. Last year the payments were made to two or three gentlemen largely in excess of what the Act permits. One is Mr. James McEacran—who is he?

Mr. CARLING. He is an importer of cattle and resides in the city of Guelph.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And Messrs. Clarke and Norris?

Mr. CARLING. They belong to Nova Scotia.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I notice that the Auditor General declares that in the case of the First mentioned gentleman, an overpayment was made of $795, and in the other case an overpayment was made to the amount of $856. I have looked over the correspondence, and desire to call the attention of the House and the Minister to a very remarkable letter from Mr. McEacran, who, I understand, is to be the inspector employed by the department. In the first instance, Mr. McEacran made the appraisalment low, and the Auditor General properly pointed out that under his appraisalment the sums paid were considerably in excess of what is provided by law. I shall not trouble the House with reading all Mr. McEacran's letter in reply, but will point out the remarkable statement with which he concludes. He had made an appraisalment under which, according to the Auditor General, a considerable sum had been overpaid. He does not deny that he made that appraisalment, but he states:

"In filling up the appraisalment forms, I put the appraisalment at a low value purposely, in many cases, under the then market value. My motive being to make the compensation allowed appear in the most favorable light to the owners of the cattle. I can, however, with perfect honesty make the appraisalment equal to one-third more than the amount paid, and I herewith enclose certificate amended in this sense."

That is rather a remarkable declaration. First of all, he sends an appraisalment under which payment is made considerably in excess of the law, and then he declares that he could with perfect honesty have appraised the cattle one-third more, and encloses certificates amended in that sense; and on those the department consider that the Auditor General's objections are overruled. I do not think that is a sound way of doing business. It might be quite true that the total value of the animals was in excess considerably of the amount the Department were allowed to pay, but it is quite clear from Mr. McEacran's own statement that the Auditor General was right in saying that the Department had paid two sums of nearly $1,000 in excess of the law, and that Mr. McEacran's mode of dealing is not a correct mode of dealing with the subject.

Mr. CARLING. In no case has more than $150 been paid. No doubt Mr. McEacran had made an error of form in his certificate.

Mr. LAURIER. The law does not allow the full value of the animals to be paid but only two-thirds of their value, and that value must not in any case exceed $150. In the present case the parties were paid not only according to Mr. McEacran's appraisalment, the full value of the animal, and thus Mr. McEacran and the department seemed to have overlooked the law. No doubt the loss to the proprietor of the animals was a serious one, but still the law must be carried out. If it is unfair it may be amended, but as long as it remains what it is, it is not within the competence of any officer of a department to go beyond it. In order to cover this violation of the law Mr. McEachran says that he filled up the appraisal forms at a low value, his motive being to make the compensation allowed appear in the most favorable light to the owners of the cattle. The proprietor, however, not being satisfied, he says :

"I can, however, with perfect honesty make the appraisal equal to one-third more than the amount paid, and I herewith enclose certificate amended in this sense."

The whole thing is irregular. I am fully aware that in many cases this law must work extreme injustice to the owners of cattle, but in this matter their rights must be sacrificed to the general good. Therefore these cattle are slaughtered, and for compensation the law provided that two-thirds of their value shall be paid but not to exceed $41.50. The Department simply disregarded the law and paid the full value. Under the circumstances it is impossible that the department should not be censured.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No doubt there is an apparent irregularity in this matter. But, after all, the desire of Parliament and the public is that parties who lose their cattle should get this $150 if that is two-thirds of the value of the animal. It appears that Dr. McEachran, from some mistaken idea, undervalued the cattle, and afterwards, when the error as respects the regulations was pointed out, he says :

"I can honestly and fairly state that the cattle are worth one-third more."

I admit the irregularity still. On the whole the money has been paid and the party has not received more than the two-third value, looking at the amended report of Mr. McEachran. At the same time I do not underestimate the importance of officers like Mr. McEachran—who, I believe, is a very good man—being kept strictly on the line of their duty and not left to their discretion. He should have given the full value in the first instance.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The value appears to have been lumped, which the Act clearly intended it should not be. There are cases, no doubt, in which some of these cattle were worth less than $150. That is almost as good as stated here. The statement is that the value of many, if not of all, was one-third over the maximum, and that the owners were heavy losers. I do not doubt that many of these cattle were worth more than that amount, but we know that the value of fancy cattle goes up to enormous figures, $4,000, $5,000, $6,000, $7,000 and $8,000. The Act, however, is clear in declaring that each animal shall be dealt with separately, and there is good reason for that. It would seem to be a sensible view that gentlemen who choose to import very expensive cattle should be their own insurers and should stand their own risk. For instance, we should not be called upon to pay $12,000 for one animal, though I believe that amount has been paid for certain cattle. In fact I have known that to be paid. It would never do for the owner, if that animal were lost, to come on the country for that amount. I simply call attention to it because I think the Auditor General is perfectly correct in calling the attention of the department to it. The department, no doubt, without meaning any harm, have been incorrect in this matter, and my special reason for referring to this is to point out that the officers of the department ought to be very careful not to make two distinct appraisements. When an appraisal is made, whether under oath or not, it is supposed to represent the true value of the article, and after that the appraiser ought not to add one-third to the value and so change his sworn appraisal.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I simply would call the attention of the department to it, and after the statement of the First Minister, I suppose we may understand that it will not occur again.

Mr. LAURIER. It is evident that the owner of cattle will never be satisfied with the amount given by the appraiser.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It should be a final estimate.

Mrs. Delaney, wife of Indian agent killed at Frog Lake..... $400

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose this is a proper opportunity to enquire what decision the Government have arrived at in the Gowanlock case, which the Prime Minister stated the other day would receive their attention.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the Supplementary Estimates will show that the Gowanlock case has been considered.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Of course, I do not press this, but possibly the hon. gentleman might as well state now what decision the Government has come to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think, but I am not sure, that it has been put on the same footing as the case of Mrs. Delaney.

Pensions payable on account of Fenian raid$3,355 60.

Mr. DENISON. I would ask whether these pensions could not be paid next year in advance in the same way as other pensions are paid? Of course, I do not suppose it can be done this year.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That will be considered between this and the next Session. It is too late now to make the change.

To meet probable amount required for veterans of war of 1812 $4,530

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are you giving these old men at present? I think the amount was raised a little, was it not?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. They are getting $30 each. The number who were paid last year was 151.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman recollect the age of the oldest of these veterans?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I must say that I do not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it must be over one hundred.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). How many of these veterans are still living? It seems to me that they must be very, very old, and I should like to know whether there are any fresh applications placed upon the lists.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have told the hon. gentleman that we paid 151 veterans $30 each last year, and I may add that we have a couple of new applications which are now being considered by the department.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). In regard to the item on account of the Fenian raid, I would like to ask whether that was not a liability incurred previous to the Union. If so, I do not think it is a proper charge on the Dominion, but it should be born by the Provinces.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is regulated by the Statute, 42nd Vic. Some portion of the amount was incurred previous to Confederation, but it was all assumed by the Federal Government after Confederation.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I would like to ask the Minister if he pays any pensions to widows of veterans of 1812. I know of a case of a poor woman whose husband served in that war, and I know she is in destitute circumstances, and, if there were any possibility of getting anything for her on account of her husband's services, I think, under the circumstances, it should be given to her.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Under the law we do not provide for widows.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Other pensions, in other cases.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This matter is regulated, the hon. gentleman should see, by statutory enactment, out of which, of course, I cannot go.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes; but you do take care of widows in other cases. Your military regulations provide for widows of officers and men who are killed, or who are wounded, and they get paid.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. But we do not at present provide for the widows of 1812.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes, we have paid them since the last two years. Do I understand there is no possibility of a provision being made?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I do not think there is any law regulating pensions to the veterans of 1812. It is an annual vote, given to the department to pay them. Would the Minister tell me what the law is?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. But don't you see that unless she volunteers we cannot pay her? It is to pay the volunteers, not the volunteers' widows.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No, it is the veterans of 1812.

Pensions payable to Militiamen on account of Rebellion of 1865 $25,000

Mr. JONES. I would ask the Minister of Militia whether he has arrived at any decision with regard to Capt. Fortune of the 63rd, whose application has been before the department for some time. I understood he passed several boards of enquiry, and it was known that the injury he received was incurred while he was serving in the North-West. Last year the Minister promised to look into that case, and I hope he has arrived at a favorable decision. The man is completely incapacitated for work, and has to use a crutch.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The case of Capt. Fortune was brought to my notice, like that of all the militiamen who served during the troubles of the North-West and who were wounded. He had to go before a board of doctors, and under the first report that was made he was granted a gratuity. Representations have since been made to the department, and a report has been sent in by a new board of physicians, and his case has been submitted to Council—all the pensions are regulated by Orders in Council. I have made my recommendation to Council, and I am happy to be able to tell the hon. gentleman that his case is now before the Council, but it is not yet passed.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is an increase of $5,000 in this vote. To that I shall not object, but I think we ought to have supplied to us, in the shape of a memorandum, which might be printed in our Votes and Proceedings, or otherwise, information as to whom this $5,000 is to be distributed. I suppose, as to the other $20,000, I can find particulars in the Militia report.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, no doubt. I will be happy to furnish the hon. gentleman with the information he requires.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that it ought to be furnished to us at the present moment, but if the hon.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

gentleman will lay it on the Table I will not object to that, on the understanding that I can bring this up at any convenient time in the passage of supplies.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, I think I can lay it on the Table on Monday.

Mr. LAURIER. Is there an increase of new applications?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There are some new applications; and the hon. gentleman will understand that some of these applications already made could not be immediately brought before Council. In some cases there are certain arrears, and the money they were entitled to under a new Order in Council had to be provided for.

Pensions payable on account of Rebellion of 1885, to Mounted Police, Prince Albert Volunteers, and Police Scouts $4,324.91

Mr. DAVIN. Before that item is passed, I wish to call the attention of the Minister of Militia to the claims of certain persons which I brought before him last year, but without success. After I brought these claims before his attention last year, the Minister paid a visit to the North-West, and with Col. Scott and Major Mowat, I saw him, and my impression was that we had entirely removed from the Minister's mind the difficulty that he found in acceding to the proposition that I laid before him. There are other persons to whose claims I would like to call the hon. gentleman's attention—in fact there are two classes of claims that I would press upon his attention, and upon the attention of this committee. There is a class of persons who are legally entitled to what they claim, but who have not got their legal rights; and then there is a class which has an honorable claim, a just claim, but under the law they may not be able to substantiate it. Sir, I contend that in a matter like this, where men have been ready to risk their lives for the country, where men have been fighting our battles, it surely is not creditable, it is not what the country desires, that we should go into every nice question, and consider in a huckstering spirit whether we shall acknowledge their claims or not. Now, Sir, the fortune of war, at all times, has been unequal. Men die in thousands in a ditch, heroes die in thousands, in order that one man—and he, perhaps, may not be as brave as the least brave amongst them—may wear a star; and I should be very sorry, in this free country, in this country where we are accustomed to hold that one man is as good as another, that our Government should have one rule for the rich and powerful, and another rule for the poor man. Now, Sir, there are cases like this. For instance, there is the case of a man named Whalen, who served as gallantly as any man that ever fought for his country and flag, who was under fire, but because he was under the police at Cut Knife, instead of under the militia, a distinction is made in his case. He was at the head of the teamsters, he was under fire at Cut Knife, and although he was recommended strongly, yet nothing is done for him. Now, I urge that the scouts and the teamsters, those men who were engaged in that rebellion in one form or another, should have their claim considered; and I urge in the case of the police, not merely those who were under fire, but those who were actively engaged in other ways, who might have been under fire, that no invidious distinction shall be made between them; and that they shall get their medals. I believe there are only about 150 of them who want their medals. I am told they do not want scrip, but they want their medals, and I hope they will get them. Now, I will ask the Minister's attention to the case of those who have a legal claim, the volunteers at Regina, and others like those at Edmonton, who are on the same footing. Last year I presented to the Minister every element in their favor that a case could require. I met the Minister, and everybody who meets him knows how courteously he enters into their demands. But the fact is this, as one brother member of mine said to me, "He is too polite." I do not give the exact language he used. But, Sir, I will put it in Shenstone's language:

"He kicked him down stairs with such a sweet grace, You might have thought he was handing him up."

But the objectionable thing about it is that the Minister is not to be moved. We have failed to move him, even though we put, as I believe, just claims before him. In the case of the volunteers whose claims I put before him last year, he acknowledged there was every element of a case made out, but he said to me: "Here is a telegram in which Col. Scott acknowledges that these are home guards." When I read the telegram I confess it seemed to me that we had been bowled over. But we were able to show the Minister, when we met him in January, that these telegrams about the home guards had nothing whatever to do with the volunteers. Every telegram about the home guards is signed by Mr. Scott as mayor; every telegram about the Regina volunteers is signed by Mr. Scott, with his military rank attached to it. Now, this is the telegram respecting the home guards:

"REGINA, April 1st, 1885.
"To the MINISTER OF MILITIA, Ottawa:
"Guard organised here for home protection. No arms. Can they obtain 75 stand and ammunition from the department? If so, when? Town Council will be responsible.

"D. L. SCOTT,
"Mayor."

Here is the answer, signed by A. P. Caron, dated Ottawa, April 1st:

"To D. L. SCOTT.

"Yes. Must apply to Major General for permission."

In the case of the volunteers—I have the telegrams here—the Minister does not say that he must apply to the Major General, but he at once says that the arms are on their way. Another telegram is dated Regina, April 11th, 1885:

"The MINISTER OF MILITIA, Ottawa:

"Have applied by telegram to Major-General for arms for home guard, as directed by you. No answer from him. Can you order arms and ammunition for 75 men to be supplied from stores at Winnipeg?"

"D. L. SCOTT,
"Mayor."

The reply was:

"OTTAWA, April 12th, 1885.

"To D. L. SCOTT, Mayor:

"Cannot interfere with distribution of arms. My doing so might disturb arrangements made by General.

"A. P. CARON."

When the Minister comes to deal with D. L. Scott as colonel, he does not make any such statement as that; and I will call the attention of the committee for a few moments to this subject. On July 12th, Colonel Scott wrote to the Minister informing him that he was the commanding officer of the Regina volunteers, and that he had issued to the members of that company the necessary certificates of enrollment and service to enable them to obtain land warrants or scrip under 48-49 Vic., c. 73. One of the members of the company who had applied under the Act brought to Colonel Scott a letter from the Department of Interior, in answer to his application, stating that no further action could be taken with regard to the issue of scrip, until a certificate showing that he was entitled to military bounty was received from the Department of Militia and Defence. Another member of the company had also shown Colonel Scott a letter from a friend at Ottawa, through whom he applied for a warrant, enclosing a memorandum from T. B. Aldrich stating that the Regina company was recognised only as a home guard. From those communications Colonel Scott was led to infer that the right of the members of the Regina Company to the bounty under the Act had not then been recognised by the Department of Militia and Defence. Colonel Scott, in conclusion, said:

"I beg to enclose herewith for your information, copies of the correspondence between me and the militia authorities."

He goes on to say:

"I have the honor further to state that on 1st April, 1885, I, as mayor of the town of Regina, telegraphed you stating that a home guard had been formed here and asking you to forward arms and ammunition for its equipment. The home guard mentioned in the telegram was a different body to the volunteer company organised by me, and at the time I telegraphed you I had already received the arms and ammunition for the volunteer company.

Then, Colonel Scott gives the telegram relating to the formation of the corps of Regina volunteers:

(Telegram.)

"REGINA, 27th March, 1885.

"The Minister of Militia, Ottawa.

"Will you authorise enrolment of volunteer rifle or infantry corps, and direct equipment to be forwarded forthwith? Corps will be filled at once.

"D. L. SCOTT, Lt. Colonel,
"Mayor."

To this telegram he received the following answer:—

(Telegram.)

"OTTAWA, 26th March, 1885.

"Lieut.-Colonel, D. L. SCOTT.—Yes, authority is given to organise company at Regina. Arms and equipment on way to Winnipeg."

"A. P. CARON."

Here is a letter addressed to Lieut. Colonel C. F. Houghton, Deputy Adjutant General, Winnipeg, Manitoba:

"REGINA, 31st March, 1885.

"Sir,—I have the honor to inform you that acting upon the suggestion of the Lieutenant Governor I telegraphed the Minister of Militia as follows:—

Here follows copy of first telegram sent in his capacity as Lieut. Colonel:

"I received a reply from him as follows:—

"ANDON, 28th inst.

Here follows copy of telegram I have already read.

"In pursuance of this authority I was deputed by the citizens to proceed with the organisation of the company, and I have the honor to state that I have enrolled a company of 55 men, and have arranged to put them through a course of drill instruction, and I hope to be able to put them in a state for active service by the time the arms and equipments reach here. It is the unanimous wish of the members of the company that the corps should be equipped and uniformed as a rifle company, and I have been requested by them to acquaint you with their wishes in that respect. I have the honor to request that you will take the necessary steps to have the corps and the officers thereof gazetted and have the arms and equipment forwarded to us here as soon as possible."

To that communication Colonel Scott received a letter from the acting Deputy Adjutant General. On 17th April, 1885, the following telegram was sent to the Minister of Militia by Colonel Scott:—

(Telegram.)

"REGINA, 17th April, 1885.

"The MINISTER OF MILITIA, Ottawa:

"Has my company been placed on active service? When will uniforms be forwarded.

"D. L. SCOTT,
"Lt. Colonel."

The answer was as follows:—

(Telegram.)

"OTTAWA, Ont., 18th April, 1885.

"Yes, your company is authorised. Make requisition for equipments.

"A. P. CARON."

After the troubles were over, C. F. Houghton, Lieut. Colonel, Deputy Adjutant General, wrote to him the following:—

"HEADQUARTERS, MILITARY DISTRICT NO. 10.

"WINNIPEG, MANITOBA.

"Sir,—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 20th inst., relative to land grants for the late Regina company under your command. Your service roll was duly received and forwarded to headquarters on 3rd October last. The course now to pursue is that a separate application must be made in each case direct to the Department of the Interior, by the soldier or his duly appointed attorney, stating clearly whether a warrant to enter for 320 acres of land is required or scrip for $80 in lieu thereof.

"Pay lists will be forwarded to you to be filed in for the time your company was engaged on active service and returns to this office to be submitted for approval."

On 7th October, 1886, Colonel Scott wrote to the Militia Department as follows:—

"REGINA, 7th October, 1886.

"SIR,—I have the honor to state that on 12th July last, I wrote you respecting the application of the members of the Regina Volunteer Company for land warrants or scrip under 48-49 Vic, c. 73, and enclosing for your information copies of the correspondence relating to the formation of the company and other matters relating thereto. I have not yet received a reply to my letter."

To that communication Colonel Scott received this reply:

"OTTAWA, 17th October, 1886.

"SIR,—In reply to your letter of the 7th inst. I am directed by the Minister of Militia and Defence to direct you that it appears that the Regina volunteer company were organised as a home guard."

And so on. It is perfectly clear that the Minister acted bona fide. I think he was misled by the fact that Colonel Scott, as mayor, had communicated with him about the formation of a home guard, and I think the Minister confused the action of the mayor with the action of Colonel Scott; and after I have pointed out to him that there is no connection whatever between the two, and that those telegrams re home guard were telegrams having nothing to do with the Regina volunteers, I hope the Minister will have no difficulty in acting. In case he should feel any difficulty about it I will forward either to him or the Minister of Justice the whole case, and I have no doubt whatever that the Minister of Justice, or any lawyer—I had forgotten that the Minister of Militia is himself a distinguished lawyer—will see at once that those men have a legal claim. The Birtle volunteers, as I showed last year, were acknowledged and from the Gazette, which I quoted last year for the Minister's information, I will give him the details again. He will find, for instance, in the Gazette of 11th April:

"The following companies have been authorised to be raised in Manitoba and the North-West Territories for active service."

A list of the companies is given, and among them are the company at Regina, Captain David L. Scott, and the company at Birtle, Captain James H. Wood. The hon. Minister found no difficulty whatever in dealing with the company at Birtle. He gave them the scrip, he acknowledged their status, he acknowledged the status of other companies, and I should think it a very extraordinary thing indeed, if after his doubt has been removed by what I have pointed out to him respecting the mistake made by confusing the home guard with Regina volunteers, he will not see his way at once to admit my contention in this matter. Again, in the Gazette of 18th September, 1885, there appears a list of the following corps that have been relieved from service and disbanded, among others: Infantry company of Regina, Captain Scott, infantry company of Birtle, Captain Wood. I have a letter here from Captain Wood, and probably it reflects upon myself for not having got the scrip for the Regina volunteers. Captain Wood addresses this letter to the major of the Regina company:

"BIRTLE, 8th May, 1886.

"MY DEAR MOWAT,—I have been in Ontario for the past three months on the business to which your favor of the 28th February refers, and had it not been that I was in Ottawa when the Riel rebellion broke out, and got our company by general order gazetted on actual service, we were left, as far as recompense for services was concerned. As it was we were relegated to the home guard list till I went down, and after a pretty hard fight in the department, I succeeded in establishing our claim to be placed on the active service list, and thus we got our claim to the land allowed."

MR. DAVIN.

Now there are other companies that have been dealt with, as I contend, justice demanded, and I trust that the Minister will take steps to deal with the Regina volunteers, and other corps similarly situated, in accordance with the legal claims of these bodies. It cannot be contended that the Regina company was a home guard within the meaning of the amending Act, 49 Victoria, chapter 29, because the latter Act is not intended to restrict or annul the operation of the former. The expressed intention in section 1 is to widen the scope of the original Act by extending its privileges to certain classes who would otherwise be excluded, as, for instance, members of the irregular forces. Nor is the Regina company within sub-section "a," by reason of the fact that having been duly organised and enrolled under the special provisions of the Militia Act, it is not an irregular force, and the special section mentioned only excludes irregular forces serving as home guards. I do not think that I need trespass further on the attention of the committee, because I have established, if I may venture to say so, the legal claims of the volunteers. But I would just urge on the attention of the Minister, with whatever little persuasiveness I might be capable of using, to consider claims that are just as strong, morally—although they may not have a legal backing—to consider the claims of the police who, although having been on active service, are deprived of their medals, to consider the claims of those scouts and those teamsters who may have served under the police, which claims have not been acknowledged, because they did not serve under the militia. In conclusion let me say that I think it is not desirable, in the interests of Canada, that we should make a distinction between the North-West Mounted Police and the militia in such a manner as would make those policemen feel, if ever called again to perform service to the country, that when their services come to be appraised a gallant deed done under the red coat of a mounted policeman is one thing, but a gallant act done under the uniform of a militiaman is quite another, I hope that the Government will take the view of the people of Canada that any man whether he be a mounted policeman, militiaman or volunteer, who in the hour of danger strikes a gallant blow for his country will be acknowledged in Parliament with the same gratitude which his fellow countrymen feel, and that he will know equal justice will be dealt out to him by the Government of Canada.

MR. SPROULE. I would just like to say very briefly that I can endorse what the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has said in reference to the police and the scouts in the North-West, who did not get medals and scrip, or land grant warrants. On behalf of some of those police scouts I have for a couple of years past been endeavoring to get them that acknowledgment for their services, which I believe they are fairly entitled to. There seems to be an interpretation put upon the law, that does not appeal to common sense as a correct one. The law was amended, as I understood it at the time the amendment was made, so as to include those police scouts and to insure that they would get their land grants or scrip the same as others who had served in the rebellion. When the application was made in their behalf the objection was raised that they were not police scouts in the ordinary acceptation of the word as interpreted by the Minister of Militia and Defence, but that they were home guards. At the time, I was not aware whether they were or not, but in looking into the case further I asked the Minister's interpretation of what he considered was a "home guard." He said he considered it was the men who were appointed to look after their property at home. For instance there might be a locality where a number of people were congregated together and they were afraid of some infractions of the law or intrusion from outsiders, and they banded themselves together to look after their property. I found, after examination, that those men to whom I refer were enlisted by Lieut. Col. Macdonald for the purpose of scouting all over the country, and that they were employed at Wood Mountain, more than one hundred miles from home. They were sent to this place because it happened to be on the trail between Batoche and Montana, where it was expected the Indians from Montana might come, or where there might be communication from the half-breeds and Indians around Batoche with those of a foreign country. They were stationed there for the purpose of giving information to the authorities, and they were supplied with arms, but each man had to furnish himself with a horse. They were on the prairie at the time, and were subjected to all the hardships and all the dangers of those engaged in quelling that rebellion. It was only by the accident of war that they were not under fire the same as the volunteers were, yet those men were denied the same consideration and remuneration that the volunteers got, because of what I believe to be an unfair interpretation, or some technical defect, in the law intended to cover those men. The objection was raised that those men could not get either scrip nor land grants because their services were not certified to by competent parties, and the question arose who would be competent to certify to them. It was thought at the time that the certificate from the officer under whom they served would be competent, and for that purpose those men got their certificates from Lieut. Col. Macdonald. It turned out afterwards that this certificate should have been from the head of the police force there, but they only got that information after the head of the police force was changed and another man who did not know the circumstances had been sent to his place, and at this time it would be a very difficult matter to get a certificate, as the man who occupied the position did not know of their services. The objections raised were tried to be got over so far as they possibly could, with the object of satisfying the department that those men were entitled to compensation, but up to the present they have failed to receive that acknowledgment which is their due. I am glad to say the matter is now under the consideration of the department. It may be that through time they will get what they are entitled to. Whether they do or do not, it is not amiss at this present stage to say—inasmuch as the notice put on the Order Paper is not likely to be reached—that I think they are fairly entitled to some reward. In regard to those policemen who did not receive their medals, I am told that $150 would cover the whole expense, and it does seem to me very unfair that one part of the forces engaged in that rebellion should receive medals and that other members engaged similarly in defending the country should not receive medals. If any dissatisfaction is created, for the small amount of money that would be required to satisfy all of them, I think the country could well afford to place all of these gentlemen on an equal footing. We have plenty of land in the North-West, and these police scouts only ask for land or scrip. Many of them are actual settlers in the country, and as we have 250,000,000 acres there that we want to get settled, the consideration necessary is only a small one, and I do not think any hon. member on either side of the House would object to the Government granting it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In regard to the remarks which have been made, I am bound to state that no member of Parliament has taken a deeper interest in trying to secure recognition for those who took part in the suppression of the rebellion troubles in the North-West than my hon. friend from Assiniboia (Mr. Davin). On more than one occasion the hon. gentleman has come into my department, and he has been most energetic and careful in securing all the information that could possibly be secured for the purpose of making the case which he was submitting to me as strong as possible. I must, however, recall to his recollection that when he and I discussed the various points which he has submitted to-day, the hon. gentleman could not overcome the objections which existed, according to the statute as I understand it, against the recognition of the Regina company as anything but a home guard. The hon. gentleman submitting the case de novo to-day, has read some letters which have not yet come to my notice. As I am ever so anxious to meet the claims of those who took a prominent part in the suppression of the troubles in the North-West, and who have earned from Canada the gratitude which our country should grant to those who at the call of duty sacrifice their business and their daily occupations for the purpose of resisting any risings from outside or at home, I shall be very happy indeed to reopen the case and consider it from the new information which has been submitted to the House to-day by the hon. gentleman, and see whether it is possible for me to alter the decision that I arrived at. The hon. gentleman must consider that, however anxious we must all feel to recognise the services that have been rendered, those troubles have already cost a very large amount of money. The list of pensions has been large and I believe the pensions and gratuities granted have really been most liberal, so far as the circumstances of the country would allow. I must also draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that I am controlled by the statute, which was passed by this Parliament, and which decided what classes were entitled to receive pensions and gratuities. The hon. gentleman remembers that the point of discussion between us was whether the company he has referred to to-day had been regularly enlisted in the militia force of Canada. I claimed that they had not been; and if it should appear from the letters from Colonel Scott, which the hon. gentleman has read to-day, that that decision should be changed, I shall be very happy to change it. The hon. gentleman referred to the Birtle volunteers. That case is no doubt different from the case I have just referred to, and I think it has been considered as much as it is possible to consider it from the information we have received. In that case, as in the other, if any fresh information can be furnished to the department, I shall be very glad, indeed, to reopen it and consider it de novo. The hon. gentleman from the east riding has referred to the case of the Wood Mountain rangers. Under the law as it exists, as I have explained to the hon. gentleman, I do not see that it is possible for me, as Minister of Militia, to do anything more than has already been done. I have been anxious to meet all the claims of the volunteers who took part in the suppression of the troubles, but I have to be controlled by the law passed by Parliament. The hon. gentleman has referred to the fact that some of the police have received medals and some have not. He must remember that the same distinction was made in the case of the volunteers. Parliament decided that only those volunteers who had seen active service west of Port Arthur should be the recipients of the medals received from Her Majesty, and that those of the police who had been under fire should receive medals, while those who had not been under fire should not receive them.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I find very great difficulty in understanding on what principle pensions are granted by the department. I call attention to two pensions which were granted to the families of militiamen who were killed in action or died from wounds or disease, reported at page 12 of the Militia report. The first of these is that of a man named Ryan, who died from disease, leaving a wife and daughter. The widow receives $68 and the daughter $14 a year. I am not in the slightest degree inclined to object to that; but the next case is that of a man named Valiquette, who died from disease likewise. He apparently leaves no widow or children, but he leaves a father, two brothers and three sisters, all presumably adults, each of whom receives $51, making in all $307 a year; or practically four times as much is granted to collateral relatives, brothers and sisters, in the one case, as is granted to the direct heirs, the widow and daughter, in the other. There may be some reason for this distinction; but prima facie it seems a very absurd thing that widows and children, who are necessarily dependent on the husband and father as the bread-winner, should receive a very small proportionate sum, and a very much smaller absolute sum than is granted to the collateral relatives in the other case. I should be very glad to hear an explanation of what appears to be a very unfair distribution of the Government bounty.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The question which the hon. gentleman has submitted could be much more intelligently discussed and understood by reading the Order in Council which afterwards appeared in the General Orders. Every individual pension granted was decided by the Governor in Council, and every pension was decided according to circumstances, possibly the nature of the wound in some instances.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. These are cases of death.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In cases of death the financial position of the relatives or family of the deceased was considered. In other cases, some of those who received pensions had means of their own, and the pensions were given to supplement that portion of which they were supposed to be deprived by the death or loss of those who were killed on the field of battle. In all cases the pensions have been submitted to the department, and the documents accompanying the applications looked into, and it was only after careful examination into the special circumstances attending each individual case that the department arrived at a decision. On Monday I will bring down the list of pensions granted, and a copy of the General Order which appeared in the Canada Gazette, as well as a copy of the Order in Council regulating those pensions. In the case of Valiquette, I am not to-day prepared to give an explanation, but I will look into the docket and give the hon. gentleman the information he requires. I may say that the board which was called upon to examine into these cases was careful to get all the evidence possible before arriving at a conclusion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is all very proper, but it is our duty to see that justice is done between the parties; and I must say that the allowance to the daughter of a dead soldier of $14 a year, and the allowance to each of the sisters of another of $52, would strike most men as a very disproportionate allowance.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. One may have been an officer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. One man was gunner Ryan and the other sergeant Valiquette, so that there could be no such distinction in rank as to warrant paying the one 300 per cent. more than the other. In the former case the grant was made, besides, to collateral relatives. This is a thing subject to great abuse. A man is not usually the supporter of his brothers and sisters. They are expected to look after themselves, but he is supposed to be the supporter of his wife and children; and my point is not alone with reference to the enormous disparity of the allowance, but also the fact that in the one case they are the parties who would have looked naturally to the deceased, in his lifetime, for support, and in the other case they are collateral relatives who have no prima facie particularly good claim on the country to be compensated for the loss caused by the death of their relative. It is possible this man was the sole supporter of his brothers and sisters, but it is an unusual case, and the allowance is a large one for a discharged sergeant. For instance, an annuity of $300 is given to his family, and unless sergeant Valiquette was a man of superior education and rank in life, an annuity of $300 to his family is excessive; while, in the other case, the widow gets some $64 and the children $14 each, in all $33. In all these cases where there is a discrepancy, a full explanation should be appended. I called the hon. gentleman's attention last year to a discrepancy between the pension given to the widow of a captain and the allowance made to the collateral relatives of a lieutenant, the latter getting much more than the former, while the information given by the hon. gentleman, who professed to know both parties, was that the widow was in quite as destitute circumstances as the father, brother, and sister of the officer I refer to.

Mr. SPROULE. As I had not the Act when I addressed the House I would like to draw the attention to the clause that refers to those scouts. The Act is 49 Victoria, chapter 29, and the clause is as follows:—

"Whereas it is expedient to make further provision respecting the grants of land authorised to members of the militia force by the Act passed in the Session held in the 48th and 49th year of Her Majesty's reign and chaptered 73: Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, declares and enacts as follows:—

"In the Act hereinbefore cited, the expression 'member of the enrolled militia force actively engaged and bearing arms in the suppression of the Indian and half-breed outbreak' shall be deemed to include, in addition to the members of the said force mentioned in the said Act:

"Every officer, non-commissioned officer and man of any irregular force raised by authority and actively engaged and bearing arms in the suppression of the said outbreak, other than as a home guard for the protection of property at or near their place of residence."

Now, the Wood Mountain scouts could not be termed "home guards" under this clause, because they were employed 100 miles from home, and at a place where their services would be needed. That disposes of the contention those men were not entitled to compensation because they were home guards. The Act provides further:

"Every scout actively engaged during the said outbreak, whose services have been certified to by competent authority."

The objection in the next place was that their services was not certified to by competent authority, and the question arose as to what was competent authority. They were requested to send certificates of service, and they thought the best certificate was that of the lieutenant colonel under whom they were serving. They, therefore, sent the certificates of Lieutenant Colonel Macdonald. Then it was contended that the certificate should be either the certificate of the Commissioner of the North-West Mounted Police or of Major General Middleton, and they could not get the certificate of the former because he had been changed and was out of the country. Under a fair interpretation of the Act these men ought to be included among those entitled to consideration. Therefore, I hope the Minister will look into this matter again, and will give them what they are entitled to under a fair interpretation of the law.

Mr. WATSON. Last year, I asked the Minister of Militia to look at the discrepancy between what was paid to Mrs. Brown, the mother of Capt. Brown, one of Boulton's scouts, who was slain on the field, and the pension allowed to the parents of Lieutenant Swinford of the 90th Battalion, Winnipeg. The father and mother of Lieutenant Swinford are both living, and I believe the father is performing his usual occupation in Guelph, but they received a much larger pension than the mother of Capt. Brown. I think the Minister of Militia told us last year that he would look into the matter, and explain why the discrepancy existed. I think the amount granted in the case of Capt. Brown is something over $200, while in the case of Lieutenant Swinford it is something over $700. I wish the Minister would look up this case and give some explanation in regard to it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I will make a note of it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There is evidently a mistake in the principle which has been adopted in regard to these pensions. I think the Minister has hardly satisfied the House in regard to the cases which have been brought up by my hon. friend from Norfolk and my hon. friend who has just spoken. It is clear that, when a man loses his life in the service of his country, it is intended that the pension is for his family and not for his collateral relations. In the Imperial service, I understand that the pension only goes to the widow or children of the man who loses his life, and not to his brothers, or sisters, or father, except under peculiar circumstances. I do not deny that such circumstances might fairly arise, but there is no case in which the Government should award so large an amount to the brothers, and sisters, or father, of the one and so small an amount to the widow of the other. The only excuse that has been given is that it was settled by an Order in Council, but the hon. gentleman knows that he made the recommendation to the Privy Council, and, therefore, it is the same thing. He is responsible, and the Government are responsible. There is no reason that we can understand for this irregularity, that such a large amount should be allowed in one case and such a small amount in the other, particularly when, according to my judgment, in the first case they have no right to anything at all. As far as I can judge, in the case of sergeant Valiquette, his father, his two brothers and his three sisters were not entitled to any pension at all. He must have been a young man of age, and his two brothers and three sisters with their father had no claim upon him for their support, and the fact of the Government adopting a principle like that may lead to very much further results than the hon. gentleman is aware of. I think the House cannot protest too strongly against such a misappropriation of the public funds, and I should very much like to see the papers connected with that case, if the hon. gentleman can give any explanation of it, because, up to the present time, as far as I am concerned, the explanations are not at all satisfactory.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have already explained that every case was investigated by a board. Upon the report of that board, it was submitted to the Minister of Militia. After the report was concurred in, the Minister of Militia made his recommendation to Council. Of course, I am quite prepared to take the responsibility of that recommendation. If the hon. gentleman will point out any individual case where he finds that there is a disparity, or where he believes that the pension or gratuity is larger than it should have been, I am prepared to bring down the information and to put upon the Table the docket containing the history of that individual case; but, considering that the list of pensions is very large, I am not prepared from memory to go into every individual case and state the circumstances which led to the conclusion arrived at. I am prepared to give every information in regard to the case of Valiquette, and the other man, whose name I forget.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Ryan was the name, and it is mentioned in the hon. gentleman's own report, page 12.

Mr. WATSON. There is also the cases which I have mentioned of Capt. Brown and Lieut. Swinford.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). My objection is to the principle of granting pensions to collateral relatives.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is explained by the General Order regulating pensions.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That may explain the Government's view, but whether it is wise or proper for the Government to adopt such a policy in this country which does not obtain in other countries, and certainly does not obtain in England, is another matter. If the hon. gentleman has opened the door to giving a pension to every connection a man may have, if in his wisdom and in that of the Government behind him they see fit to do so, it is difficult to see the end of it. I think none of these people have any right to a pension. I am simply contending for the principle being wrong and vicious, and I think it should be put a stop to.

Committee rose and reported progress.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 45) respecting the Ontario and Quebec Railway Company.—(Mr. Small.)

Bill (No. 73) respecting the Stanstead, Shefford and Chambly Railway Company.—(Mr. Fisher.)

REPORT.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I beg to lay on the Table of the House Abstract of statement of the Insurance Companies in Canada for the year ending 31st December, 1887, and in doing so I may say that this statement has been in the hands of the printers since March, a circumstance which I mention to account for laying it on the Table at so late a period.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Among the items for quarantine there is one for $200 for chaplains at Halifax quarantine. Only one chaplain acted last year, the Catholic chaplain, and the rector of the parish having left that district and another person having been appointed, he was not aware that $100 was appropriated for that service at the quarantine station. Of course, I do not ask that he be paid for the time he was not doing the duty, but I suppose the $100 will be continued as usual to the Protestant chaplain as a similar sum is paid to the Catholic chaplain.

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Mr. McNEILL. I wish to express my gratification at learning, from the observations that have fallen from hon. members during the discussion of the Estimates, of the very great appreciation with which the volunteers regard the medals which have been struck for them at the instance of the Government. As I had the honor of recommending, or suggesting, to the Government that these medals should be struck, I feel very much gratified to find they are so much valued, so much prized by the men and so much sought after. The hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) took occasion, from his place in this House, to state, judging from his supposed knowledge of the feelings and sentiments of the people of Canada, that they would not wear the medals, that they would reject them, with scorn, in fact. From my knowledge of the views and sentiments of the people of this country I believed that they would value them, and I am glad to find that my view in reference to this was correct, and that the view of the hon. gentleman was wrong. The hon. gentleman seeks to pose as the representative of the views and sentiments of the people of this country, but he only represents certain peculiar views and sentiments that he himself entertains. I may leave it to this House and to the country to decide, as to whether he or I best represent Canadians in reference to this matter,

I who proposed that these medals should be struck and believed that the people of Canada would value them, or he who says that the people of Canada would refuse them with scorn.

Mr. EDGAR. I am very glad indeed that the hon. member is so satisfied with rejoicing over the unfortunate events that occurred in Canada in connection with the North-West rebellion. What I said before on the subject of medals I will repeat now. I think it a great pity that so unfortunate an event as that should be commemorated by striking a medal. It is very well when Canadians fight for their country against a foreign foe that they should be decorated with medals, but when Canadians fight against Canadians in a miserable civil strife like that, I think we ought to be ashamed to strike medals to commemorate it. I thought so when I spoke before and I think so now.

Mr. McNEILL. It has been reserved for the hon. gentleman to suggest that Her Majesty the Queen would grant medals on an unworthy occasion.

The CHAIRMAN. I must call the hon. gentleman to order.

Mr. McNEILL. If I am out of order I will sit down.

Mr. LISTER. This self-glorification is perfectly ridiculous. He thinks there are no loyalists in the country beside himself.

Mr. McNEILL. I am not speaking of loyalty now.

The CHAIRMAN. Order.

Mr. LISTER. He has no right to lecture native-born Canadians.

Mr. McNEILL. I shall move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. Order.

Mr. McNEILL. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman should be amenable to discipline. There is no question before the Chair. The gentleman is entirely out of order from the first.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If you allow me I will put a question before the Chair. I move—

Mr. McNEILL. I think I am in order.

The CHAIRMAN. Order.

Mr. McNEILL. I rise to a point of order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think I have the floor, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McNEILL. I am merely rising to a point of order and I think I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Order.

Mr. McNEILL. I move the Committee rise, and I want to know whether that is in order or not. If the Chairman rules I am out of order I shall discontinue.

The CHAIRMAN. What do I understand the hon. gentleman to move?

Mr. McNEILL. I move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. That is in order.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I must raise the question that the hon. gentleman having spoken he is not competent to move—

An hon. MEMBER. He has a right to do so in committee.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the hon. gentleman is in order, and he has a right to speak.

Mr. McNEILL.

Mr. McNEILL. So far as the observation which has fallen from the hon. gentleman opposite is concerned that I am lecturing native-born Canadians, I just simply wish to say that I am representing the North Riding of Bruce in this House, and that I think the representative of the North Riding of Bruce has as good a right to express the views of his constituents in this House as the representative of any other riding in Ontario, or in Canada. I am perfectly satisfied that in any observations I have made in this House in reference to this, or any kindred subject, I am only representing the views of those who did me the great honor to send me here. I am responsible to my constituents, and I am prepared to abide by their verdict in reference to my conduct in this House. So far as my representing the views of the people of Canada is concerned, I think I have the right to say that I represent the views of the people of Canada a great deal better than the member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) or the hon. gentleman from Lambton (Mr. Lister) who so rudely interrupted me, inasmuch as, since I came to this House, I have consistently supported that great consistent policy which has been approved by the people of Canada, and the hon. gentlemen who have so interrupted me have inconsistently supported in this House a score of inconsistent policies, all which have been disapproved by the people of Canada. Therefore, I think I represent the views of the people of Canada as well, if not better, than the hon. gentlemen opposite. I venture to say that the hon. gentleman from West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) who prides himself so much upon the possession of the wisdom of the serpent, may find, and his party may find, that that wisdom has been as superficial and dangerous to them on this occasion as it has often proved in times past. I will say that the suggestion which came from the hon. gentleman that in this country men who happen to be born in the mother country, or in any other part of the Empire, are to be distinguished from those who happen to be born in Canada, is carrying pretty far that policy which the hon. gentleman has so distinguished himself in supporting, that is the policy of sowing dissension among the people of this country. He has been distinguished in sowing dissensions between Province and Province, race and race, creed and creed, and between the Provinces and the central power. Now, he goes a little further and endeavors to sow dissension in the family circle itself. He endeavors to teach the son that the father who came to this country has not as good a right to have a say in the affairs of Canada as the son has himself. I do not think that policy is one which will commend itself to the people of this country, and as I said before, I think that the hon. gentleman will find that the policy which he now represents is not so very astute as he thinks it to be. Speaking for the native-born Canadians of the North Riding of Bruce, whom I represent, I venture to say that if the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) came there, and from any public platform suggested that the people would refuse to wear the medals which Her Gracious Majesty, whom they so love and so revere, had presented to them, although there is not any more orderly constituency in the Dominion of Canada, he would—well he would very likely have cause to repent his temerity. I do not say that he would receive a baptism of fire, for that he would require to go south where his affection is, but I think he would be likely to get a baptism in the nearest swamp.

Mr. LISTER. I came into this House, I think, about the same time that the hon. gentleman for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) did in 1882, and I think there has hardly been a Session from that time to the present that that gentleman has not sought every available opportunity of proclaiming his intense loyalty, and speaking about the disloyalty of the Opposition.

Mr. McNEILL. That is not so. Please do not misrepresent me.

Mr. LISTER. One would think he was a warrior bold; he reminds me of Artemus Ward, who was always willing to sacrifice his wife's relations for the good of the country. I am not aware that the hon. gentleman shouldered his musket on the occasion he speaks of, or participated in any way in the rebellion. I want to tell this to the hon. gentleman: That so far as Canada is concerned it belongs to all people no matter from where they come. Every man in this country has an equal right, but a certain portion of the people of this country have a right to say, to a gentleman like my hon. friend, that he has no right, on every occasion, to lecture any other portion of the community. Now, so far as the rebels are concerned, I have nothing to say one way or the other. If it pleases the volunteers to receive these medals and to wear them, all well and good; but this I have to say, that in that rebellion our own people were called on to shoot down their brethren, and that war was a war caused by the administration which the hon. gentleman supports. If the people of the North-West Territories had been treated as they ought to have been treated, if the privileges had been conceded to them which they demanded, and which were ultimately given to them, there would have been no rebellion, and no occasion for striking the medals and giving them to the gallant men who went to the North-West to suppress it; and yet the hon. gentleman, who supports the Government that was the prime cause of the rebellion, takes every opportunity of saying to gentlemen on this side of the House: You are disloyal. Disloyal for what? For putting the blame on the proper shoulders? Now, I want to say to the hon. gentleman, who has all the loyalty of Canada wrapped up in his particular person, that his constant prating about loyalty does not prove that he has any of it himself, and it is obnoxious to a large portion of the community. People who are constantly preaching virtue have generally very little of it themselves, and people will be apt to say of the hon. gentleman, who is always preaching about loyalty, that he has very little of it himself. The hon. gentleman talks about being the representative of North Bruce. How is he the representative? By the most infamous gerrymander that was ever perpetrated. He might live to be as old as Methuselah and never have been in Parliament but for that gerrymander. But if we happened to get into power, and it became necessary to redistribute the counties, he would not be here at all.

Mr. McNEILL. You would gerrymander me out of my seat.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman knows that he is only a representative of a particular section—they are all put there together—not a temperance section, but another section. He knows as well as I do that he is here by virtue of a gerrymander, not by the free will of the people.

Motion withdrawn.

Salaries, Military Branch and District Staff..... $14,100

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How is the decrease of $3,400 caused?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. From the fact that two of the deputy adjutants general, Col. Harwood and Col. Jackson, have been retired this year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What retiring allowance is made to these gentlemen? What is the rule of the department in that respect?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We give two years' salary.

Brigade Majors, salaries, &c..... $15,100

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister to a matter of some importance to one of the brigade majors; I refer to Col. Aylmer, at London. The hon. gentleman knows that he has a claim against the department of two or three years' standing, and I believe the hon. gentleman some time ago assured Col. Aylmer that that claim would be paid, but up to this moment that promise has not been carried out. It is a claim for having discharged the duties of a special officer for a time, and, according to law and the practice of the department, he was entitled to be paid for those services.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not at all admit that I ever told Col. Aylmer that his claim against the department of Militia was going to be settled. The circumstances under which that claim was made are these: During the troubles in the North-West some of the deputy adjutants general were sent, under orders from the department for active service, to the front, among others Col. Straubenzie and Col. Jackson, the former under orders of the major general, and the latter being put in charge at Winnipeg. In the case of Col. Straubenzie, the allowances made to the deputy adjutant general were transferred by him to the brigade major, who acted as commanding officer of the district during his absence. In the case of Col. Jackson, his allowances for a portion of the time he was away were paid to Col. Aylmer, and a difficulty arose between the deputy adjutant general and the brigade major as to the balance of those allowances, the deputy adjutant general claiming that some reduction had been made by the department when he was acting here as commissioner for trying claims arising out of the troubles in the North-West, and that this reduction should go to pay Col. Aylmer. The hon. gentleman brought this matter under my notice the other day, when I told him that I would take it up again and see whether or not it was possible to adjust that claim; but I wish it to be distinctly understood that I made no promise or pledge to Col. Aylmer or anybody else to settle the matter, because the contention of the department was that we had nothing to say of the transfer of allowances to other districts.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would like to ask whether it is not the uniform practice of the department, and the recognised right of an officer who takes charge of a district and discharges the duties of an absent officer, that he shall receive the extra amount making up the difference between the salaries of those officers.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It has never been the practice. The department has always left the two officers to settle that between themselves.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I understood that the department kept back the amount.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is a mistake. It has not been kept back.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I did not say that the hon. gentleman made me any promise at all, but I understood Col. Aylmer to say that when he met the Minister in London he promised to pay this claim.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is a very fair way of settling it, but I do not want to pledge the department at all.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What makes that item so much in excess of the expenditure of previous years? I see in the Militia report that brigade majors are put down for $10,800 for 1856-57, and the hon. gentleman is now asking for a vote of $15,100.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In District No. 2, I had placed the whole district under the charge of the Infantry School. We found that Col. Otter's time was fully taken up with his duties as commandant of the Infantry School, and also as acting deputy adjutant general for District No. 2. It had been in contemplation to supplement that by throwing the work of the brigade major upon the officers of the Infantry School. However, the Government decided to appoint Col. Gray, who is an officer of great experience, and who had been a prominent member of the volunteer force, as brigade major, and he has been acting as such ever since. Of course the hon. gentleman, in noticing the increase to brigade majors, will also notice that there is a decrease, in so far as the staff expenditure is concerned. The second increase is for the purpose of appointing a brigade major in the Eastern Townships. We found that, as I was dispensing with the services of two deputy adjutants general, and making a reduction in so far as those two salaries were concerned, that for the efficiency of the service, it was necessary to appoint a brigade major in the Eastern Townships. I think the system adopted by the department will act satisfactorily. It is a reduction in so far as salaries are concerned, and I think the efficiency of the service will benefit by the change.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That will absorb the difference of $5,000.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think the policy of the Government is a very good one. In the first place, the appointment of the commandant of the Infantry School as deputy adjutant general brings the school itself more directly in contact with the force, and will prevent to some extent the tendency, always had by these corps, to assume a professional standing above that of the ordinary militia. The fact of the commandant of the school holding the position of commandant of the military district, as well as the appointment of brigade majors from the active force itself, will have a tendency to prevent that. This will make a connecting link between the two corps. Where it is necessary to have a brigade major, he should be appointed from the active force, and the deputy adjutant general should also be the commandant of the Infantry School.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the exact position of Col. Irwin? Is he still in the Imperial service?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No, he has retired altogether from that service.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I wish to call the attention of the hon. the Minister of Militia and Defence to a memo. that was handed to me by Mr. Little, and if the statements therein are accurate, I think the hon. gentleman must be laboring under some error with regard to what has been the practice in former times in his department. I find it here said:

"Mr. Aylmer was major in the Military District No. 1, acting as such, during the absence of the deputy adjutant general, from the 3rd March, 1885 to the 11th December, 1885, and he received an allowance for that time at the rate of $500 per annum. That he acted as deputy adjutant general from the 6th January, 1886, until the 6th January, 1887, and received no portion of the allowance for performing duty during that period of time, although he was entitled to $41.66 per month. The $500, however, was paid monthly to Colonel Jackson, who was absent for the whole time, from the 6th January, 1886, to the 6th January, 1887, as chairman of the North-West Claims Commission."

Mr. Aylmer was engaged in the discharge of his duties.—

"That subsequently the allowance of $500 was withdrawn from Col. Jackson, that officer having been paid his salary on an Order in Council of August, 1885."

Consequently neither the brigade major nor Col. Aylmer who had charge of the district received any portion of this $500.—

"That the officer in charge of Military District No. 1, although that district was in an inefficient state, was allowed this particular sum. That the precedents show that the brigade major has received the staff allowance in the following cases: During the absence of Lieut. Col. Osborne Smith, the deputy adjutant general at Winnipeg, District No. 5, in 1871, 1872 and 1873, the brigade major, although the junior in District No. 5, drew the staff allowance at the rate of $41.66 a month."

And that was paid by the department and not by the officer.—

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

"In 1876, Lieut. Col. Wilson, brigade major of the District No. 9, acted as Deputy Adjutant General, and drew the allowance. At that time Lieut. Col. Straubenzee, the deputy adjutant general in Military District No. 5, was seriously ill at Montreal, and the brigade major, who acted in his absence, drew the staff allowance."

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Quite right.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell)—

"And during the time that Lieut. Col. Straubenzie was absent on the North-West service, in 1885, the brigade major, on orders from headquarters, as will be seen from the Auditor General's report, drew the staff allowance."

Not by a private arrangement between the absent officer and the party acting on his behalf, but by order of the department, as appears by the Auditor General's report. I think that these statements show that it has been established, as a regulation by the department, to pay the money. So far as I know, this is the only officer in the service who has been so dealt with. Lieut. Col. Aylmer made official application to the hon. gentleman for the amount to which he was entitled, on three different occasions—on the 23rd March and the 19th May, 1886, and on the 23rd December, 1887—and he has not received any allowance, nor has there ever been any decision communicated to him with reference to his claim upon the hon. gentleman's department.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In the several cases to which the hon. gentleman has referred, I have no doubt that in so far as the fact of the payments is concerned, it is quite correct; but the point between the hon. gentleman and myself is simply this: What I claim is that the payments were made by an arrangement between the deputy adjutant general, and the brigade major serving under him. The position I took, as Minister of Militia, when the troubles broke out in the North-West, was that I did not consider, when taking an officer in that position and sending him to the front to take the risk and hardship of a campaign, that it was right for us to deduct anything from his pay; but, in the case of Col. Straubenzie, under whom Col. Worsely was acting as brigade major, Col. Straubenzie handed over to Col. Worsely his allowance, but that was by an arrangement between Col. Straubenzie and Col. Worsely, but not by any direction of the department. In view of the serious illness of Col. Straubenzie, the allowance was made to the gentleman who was performing the duty of deputy adjutant general, and that was all. I can, however, give a case of similar nature to that of Col. Jackson and Col. Aylmer. In this very district, Col. Lamontagne was adjutant general, and Col. Lewis was acting under him as brigade major. Col. Lamontagne was sent to the front ill, but he did not pay over his allowance to Col. Lewis, the brigade major, and the department did not interfere. The department did not think it ought to interfere in the case of Col. Jackson either, although it is true that I thought, if I could bring on an arrangement between the two officers, it was not only my duty but it would be a pleasure for me to make that arrangement. I was under no pledge to Col. Aylmer, and he is in the same position as Col. Lewis was in this district, when serving under Col. Lamontagne. No doubt this money may have been drawn and paid through the Auditor General in the case referred to, but, if so, it was drawn and paid by an arrangement between these officers. I am not prepared to say that, previous to the time when I undertook the administration of the Department of Militia, some cases may not have been dealt with in a different manner by other Ministers of Militia, but I can say that, during the time that I have been acting in that capacity, no such case has been settled in the way the hon. gentleman says it has been settled by the Department of Militia.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). While Col. Straubenzie was in the North-West, I think you will find that the payment was made by orders from headquarters.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is so stated in the Auditor General's report.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It may have been, with the consent of Col. Straubenzie, but I state positively that no such payment was made without the consent of Col. Straubenzie.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I may say further that the hon. gentleman has overlooked the fact that Col. Jackson was supposed to be differently paid while he was acting on the Commission, and the Government were of the opinion that his payment as deputy adjutant general should cease for that time.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He was paid, and he was called upon to return what he received, and he did return it, and neither Col. Jackson nor Col. Aylmer has received any allowance for that time, which they were entitled to as officers holding that position.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is not so.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I am so informed.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The pay as deputy adjutant general, the salary, was not affected in the least. This is simply the allowance.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What I am referring to is the allowance.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The question is whether he should have handed over his allowance as commanding officer of that district to the brigade major during his absence. I have stated that, during the absence of Col. Straubenzie, with his consent, the money may have been drawn by Col. Worsley, but the department was never brought into play to get Col. Straubenzie to hand over his allowance to Col. Worsley any more than it was to get Colo. Jackson to hand over his allowance to Col. Aylmer.

Ammunition, Clothing, Military Stores, &c..... $205,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The Minister will remember that last year there was a discussion on the subject of the manufacture of ammunition at Quebec, and I took the opportunity then of expressing an opinion which I had heard from several quarters as to the poor quality of the ammunition manufactured there, and issued to the force. The hon. gentleman then said that they were about to institute a system by which they hoped to obviate that difficulty, and that in future he hoped there would be no complaints made in regard to that. Would he now be able to inform the House as to what changes, if any, have been made, and what has been the result in regard to the expenses attending it?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Since the time that the question was brought before the House, we have had competent men, who take a great deal of interest in rifle practice, who have made a report as to the cartridge factory. A great deal of the trouble, if I may so express myself, arose from the fact that it was supposed that the powder used in the manufacture of these cartridges, which was manufactured in Canada by the Hamilton Powder Co., was not as good as the powder we imported from England. To obviate this difficulty, we ceased to use the Hamilton powder, and got the powder from England. Of course, I need not explain to the hon. gentleman that, like himself, when he was occupying the position I happen to occupy to-day, I am a layman, and my experience of rifle practice has not been as large as that of some other hon. gentlemen. I should not undertake to express my own opinion on this subject against that of prominent members of the militia force who occupy seats in this House. About two weeks ago there was an article which appeared in a certain newspaper criticising the quality of the cartridges manufactured in Quebec. For my part, I did not even know that the cartridges manufactured in Quebec were being used in Infantry School "C" in British Columbia, the latest addition to our Infantry Schools in Canada, but I received a letter from Col. Holmes who, after reading the article in the papers, thought it might be desirable, from the standpoint of the department and also from the standpoint of the force, to give his experience during the period of time when it was his duty to put his school through rifle practice in British Columbia. He writes the following letter, and as it is the opinion of a practical man, who has been one of the leading shots in Canada during most of the competitions that have taken place, I think it will satisfy public opinion more than anything that I could say from personal knowledge:

" 'C' Battery has just completed firing at the annual practice, and has fired 4,000 of Snider ammunition of Canadian manufacture, which was sent with the corps to British Columbia. As I have heard of discontent being prevalent regarding its reliability, although I had never seen any of it in use before, as our supply here is of English make, I was prepared to find fault with it, if necessary. I must say, however, that what we have just used is really as good and reliable as any I have ever seen anywhere, and I should be a judge, as I stood 5th in the Wimbledon team for 1873, and have always been a fair average shot. Peters—"

Major Peters, who is also known to be a capital shot and great sportsman, and one of the best officers we have in the force—

" Peters also agrees with me as to its good quality, and speaks highly of it, and says all the fault found with it of late years is groundless. I thought you would like to have an opinion from British Columbia in this matter, as I presume some one may possibly bring up the same remarks which have appeared in the papers against the cartridge factory."

Now, this is evidence of an officer who is not only a very good officer, but who is known to be a first rate rifle shot; and relying upon information which I received from competent officers such as he is, I believed that the cartridges manufactured in Canada were not perfect at first. Like every other new enterprise it required skilled men and skilled labor, and that skilled labor could only be acquired by the experience which we possess to-day, and which is making of the cartridge factory a success.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will the Minister tell me what the cost of manufacturing is? It occurred to me that if the Minister has to import powder, he might import the cartridge filled much cheaper from England than he could manufacture it here.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. So far as possible, I am very much in favor of keeping Canadian money in Canadian hands. I believe the reason why we decided upon importing the powder from England was that it was reported to me by men who understood the question thoroughly that the powder which we had was not up to the mark, possibly from the fault of our specifications, or from some other reason, because I believe that just as good powder can be manufactured in Canada as anywhere else. Possibly we had not acquired sufficient experience to specify the manufacture of that powder in such a way that it should be equal to the requirements of the cartridge factory, so we got the powder from Waltham Abbey, where we all know that the test is absolutely certain, and it is known all over the world as being equal to any powder manufactured.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman tell me what it costs to manufacture the cartridge, including the cost of powder, as compared with the cost of importing cartridges from England filled?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The only way we can arrive at that point is to know how much the cartridge factory costs to Canada.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Cannot the hon. gentleman give me an idea of how much they cost per hundred?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The cartridges cost us $20 a thousand—manufactured in Canada. But I must draw the hon. gentleman's attention to this fact, that we have got the Enfield rifle here, and that the same cartridges are no longer manufactured in England, consequently we would have had to change the whole of our armament, at a cost of millions of dollars to Canada, or to manufacture our own cartridges, because the cartridges we used to obtain from England are no longer manufactured there.

Clothing, [great coats..... $90,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I notice by the Public Accounts that these infantry overcoats cost $5.48; scarlet tunics, $5.50. I do not remember at the moment what those imported cost during the time I presided over the department.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is the cost, $5.48.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). My experience was that two suits of English clothing were equal to three suits of the clothing manufactured here. Is that the hon. gentleman's experience since that time?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The Minister seems to have had some doubt about it, because in his report he says:

"The contracts for the clothing in the force have been given to experienced Canadian contractors, and I have no doubt that the clothing manufactured by them will give entire satisfaction."

Has it given entire satisfaction?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Is the relative cost cheaper as compared with the figures I have given?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Not cheaper.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There is still that difference in the wear?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. A great difference.

Mr. JONES. That is to say, that it takes three suits of Canadian to last two of English. That was the experience during the time I was in the department. Is that the result of your experience up to this time?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No. The National Policy of Canada has been improving our manufactures so rapidly since the hon. gentleman ceased to be at the head of the Militia Department, that the reverse of the hon. gentleman's experience now is true.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh!

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman says, Oh! but I am asked a question to which I am attempting to reply, according to the experience I have acquired in the department. We find the cloth manufactured in Canada is far superior to any cloth we have imported. I am expressing not my own opinion but the opinion of the officers who have had charge of the store department for years, and they all agree that the cloth manufactured in Canada is superior to any we have ever imported from England, in so far as durability and comfort are concerned; it is a warmer, heavier and better cloth in every way. We consider that overcoats which formerly lasted only five years will now last six or seven years, owing to their being manufactured of better material.

Mr. JONES (Halifax).

Mr. LISTER. Do I understand that the cloth for the trousers is manufactured in Canada?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, everything now.

Mr. LISTER. I brought this matter up at the last Session of Parliament, and I have reason to do it again this Session. I see that the contractors are: for trousers, Henry Shorey & Co.; great coats and tunics, W. E. Sanford (who is the senator) and James O'Brien. I have not heard any complaints about the tunics and great coats; but as regards the trousers, they were made of nothing but shoddy. I am told by members of the force who were out last season that the trousers only lasted a few days, that you could take the cloth and pull it to pieces, the fibre was so short, that they were perfectly useless. My own company went out well clothed but some of the men had to buy new trousers during the 12 days and in other cases the trousers were not fit to wear. I have seen the cloth, and it is the most wretched shoddy ever manufactured. Any hon. gentleman who has given attention to the matter, I am sure will corroborate my statement. I am not blaming the hon. gentleman for it but the contractor, and I bring it before the attention of the Minister in order that the matter may be remedied. What I complain of is that shoddy cloth should not be distributed to the force. We are paying good prices for the cloth and it should be a good article. The force is entitled to that, and I trust the Minister will make it his duty to enquire into the matter, and I am sure he will find that the statement I have made is strictly accurate.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I have had some little experience in regard to militia clothing. The great coats are of excellent quality; I could not say how they compare with those issued under the old system, but so excellent was the cloth that I obtained a piece for my own use and have been wearing a coat made from it regularly. It is a cloth of excellent quality both as regards quality and wear. The new tunics I cannot say anything about, because our tunics were of English manufacture, and we have not yet had issued any of Canadian make. With regard to trousers, there was one sort, a sort of serge, that was certainly very poor stuff. The clothing we had in the North-West certainly wore very well.

Mr. LISTER. I am speaking of trousers only.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The serge trousers were very bad. Any further issue of them should be stopped; but the cloth is very well.

Mr. LISTER. I am speaking of last summer. The men went out with apparently good trousers, and they were worn out in the course of a few days.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I cannot speak of last year's issue.

Mr. TYRWHITT. I have had some little experience in volunteer matters and have taken an interest in the clothing of the force. So much interest have I taken in the matter that this year I have gone through the stores. My attention having been drawn particularly to the trousers I can offer my testimony that the cloth is of an unusually good character, and the clothes were much better finished in every way than they have been during the last twenty years. I did not see the issue of last year; but the issue of the year previous, and we have been using them in my corps, I found of fair quality. Those of the present year are of exceptionally good quality and much better finished. No comparison whatever can be made between those trousers and the trousers of previous years, as the former are so very much better.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Has the department in hand many trousers of the inferior quality mentioned by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien)?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not admit that we issue any clothing of inferior quality. I do not make that statement on my own authority alone, but I will give an opinion that will carry great weight with hon. gentlemen opposite, namely, the Globe newspaper. It says, speaking of military cloth:

"Lieut. Col. Gibson, commander of the 13th Battalion, and Captain Hendry, of the Hamilton Field Battery, in company with our correspondent, this afternoon were shown through the factory of W. E. Sanford & Co., manufacturers and contractors for the Canadian militia clothing, with the idea of giving them an insight into the character and quality of the goods manufactured for the militia. After inspecting the machinery, the process of making the clothing, and making a minute examination of the material, with a view to its quality and durability, as compared with imported cloth, they expressed their entire satisfaction with the result of the inspection, as well as their complete confidence in the ability of the present contractors to produce superior military clothing. During the visit of these military gentlemen a comparative test between English and Canadian cloth was made, proving the latter to be in every particular superior to the English make, the imported cloth tearing with comparative ease, while it was almost impossible to make the home fabric move, it being of superior quality. Its weight, dye and great durability seemed to be all that could be desired. Whatever may be said of the militia clothing, the clothing now being made for our active militia by W. E. Sanford & Co., and which will be distributed in due course, if it does not prove to be the best ever worn, at all events will compare advantageously with any previous issue. The officers noticed in particular a marked contrast between the quality of the cloth used for the trousers and that of the material worked up in most of the outfits to which we have been accustomed. We are happy to say that the issue to the 15th Battalion seems excellent, especially as compared with the ill-fitting, badly made clothing supplied after the burning of the drill shed in 1886."

That happened to be imported English clothing which was served out. I am free to admit, for I wish to be perfectly frank in the matter, that we had, at the beginning, certain complaints in regard to some of the material used. It was at the beginning of a new enterprise, and it is not surprising if the clothing was not as perfect then as it is to-day.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That is more to the point than the advertisement which the hon. gentleman has read. Of course, the hon. gentleman well knew that it was an advertisement.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is not an advertisement; it is published in the Globe.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does the hon. gentleman pretend to say that a puff is being put into a newspaper without being paid for?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not agree with the hon. gentleman. I will venture to say that if I called Mr. Sanford's book-keeper here he would tell a wholly different story. It is merely trifling with the House to read an advertisement for which, perhaps, double or treble rates were paid, as showing the excellent quality of the clothing, in opposition to the statement of my hon. friend made from personal knowledge, that the men had to buy trousers in order to avoid coming home in their shirt tails. In the face of a statement of that sort the hon. Minister reads an advertisement.

Mr. TISDALE. I am surprised at the allusion made to Col. Gibson, who although opposed to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, politically, yet occupies a very high position as a politician, a gentleman and an officer, and if I understood the article which the Minister of Militia read it was on the authority of Col. Gibson. I am surprised, therefore, at Mr. Mills insinuating, indirectly, in that way a charge against Col. Gibson and not against the Globe newspaper.

Drill Pay, etc..... $290,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Perhaps on this vote for militia the hon. gentleman will explain how it is that he is asking for $290,000 this year as against $257,000 last year. Is he going to give those he calls out a greater length of service?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The items are 12 days' drill, city corps and brigades of garrison artillery at local headquarters, for cost per officer and man of 72 cents a day.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Would the hon. Minister explain where the increased amount comes in and we might dispense with the items?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I cannot see any increase. I am explaining the details to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I see by the report that this amount seems to be creeping up year by year.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No, it is not.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). In 1886 for this purpose there were $241,217, in 1886-87 $257,385, and now the Minister is asking for $290,000. I merely ask the hon. Minister where the increase comes in?

Mr. O'BRIEN. There is no increase. The same amount has been voted year by year since I have been a member of this House. The number of men who turn out is not always the same, and there is thus a difference between the amount voted and expended. Suppose that one year the brigade camps do not cost the same amount, it is carried on to the next year, but the same amount has been voted by Parliament for years back. What we should complain of is that the Government does not deem it proper to have the rural corps out every year.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am not complaining of the amount. I only asked where was the difference.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The amount voted has not varied. I do complain that while the city corps get their pay every year the rural corps are only called out every two years.

Mr. DENISON. I endorse what the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) says about the necessity for having the militia drilled every year. I see that for some years back about the same amount has been voted for this purpose, and while the amount for the ordinary militia has remained in the neighborhood of $290,000 that for the permanent schools has steadily and largely increased. I think that the amounts for each are out of proportion, too much being spent upon the schools in proportion to amount spent upon the militia. We find here that we have an amount of $290,000 for drilling the ordinary militia of the country for the coming year, and we find that there are $522,700 set apart for permanent schools. I have taken the trouble to look over some blue-books to ascertain the figures upon this question, and although I am not quite sure of my figures, because I had some difficulty in culling them from the different reports, I think they are in the main correct. I find that, in 1884, the drill pay was $314,473.50; and for the permanent schools, $226,720.81. In 1884-85 the drill pay was $270,151.19; and the permanent corps had increased to $280,945.51. In 1885-86 the drill pay was $281,207.91; and the permanent corps had again increased to $350,858.87. In 1886-87 the drill pay was $290,000, and the permanent corps $482,700, and for the coming year the drill pay is estimated at $290,000, while the permanent corps is estimated at $522,700. I regret very much that some move is not being made in the direction of increasing the amount that is spent on the ordinary militia of the country, in the same manner as they are increasing the amount that was spent on the permanent corps. If the present policy is pursued we will soon not have any militia, but only expensive schools in which the militia are to be trained, but no pupils. In 1873, some fifteen years ago, when our population was much smaller, we expended on the militia, $1,248,663; while we had a gross expenditure of $19,174,647. Then we were drilling 45,000 men, or in other words all the militia we had in the country, and we were drilling them every year. In 1886-87 we are drilling only some 18,000 or 20,000 men and the militia expenditure is $1,193,692, while our gross expenditure for all purposes in Canada reaches the sum of $35,658,161 10. I, therefore, wish to draw your attention to the fact that while the ordinary expenditure of the country has been very largely increased, that the expenditure on the militia has not increased in the same ratio or in anything like it. If we increase our expenditure on the militia in anything like the ratio of the general expenditure, we would now be spending on it in the neighborhood of $2,000,000 a year. I regret that within the past few years so much has been devoted to the permanent schools while the amount for the militia remains as it was, and in looking over the report of the Major General of Militia this year we see no indication from it that any move will be made in the direction of staying the expenditure on the permanent schools and increasing it on the militia, but rather the reverse. Speaking of the school at Quebec, the major general says:

"A riding school is very much needed, and I would again beg earnestly that the strength of the troop be increased, its present strength being inadequate for the work. It should number at least 60 troopers with 50 horses, and the commissioned ranks should be increased by one captain, one subaltern, a riding instructor and a quartermaster."

In reference to Toronto, he says:

"I again beg to recommend that a cavalry school be formed in Toronto where it is much required, and also with regard to 'A' and 'B' Batteries I would beg to point out that the present organisation of only two guns in each school is not a good one, two guns only not being sufficient to give proper instruction in field artillery, and I would recommend that each school should have four guns fully horsed, the guns of the battery should be replaced by more modern guns when possible."

He goes on to say with regard to Winnipeg:

"A riding school is absolutely necessary, and I hope will soon be built. The mounted men of this force should, as in the Imperial service, have a slight addition to their pay, their work being harder and the wear and tear of uniform being greater."

He also says:

"I would again urge the necessity of increasing the number of officers in the several schools. This is requisite for the due exercise of discipline alone, since owing to the paucity of competent officers it is now almost impossible to hold regimental courts martial without employing non-competent officers or such officers of the local militia as can be found available, which practice is not for obvious reasons advisable."

That is certainly a thing that I cannot agree with, for we have a good opportunity in those schools of instruction where the local officers might be placed on courts martial and so taught to do the duties of officers of court-martial. It seems to me a great mistake to appoint a permanent officer on purpose that he should be ready to go on courts martial for the purpose of trying these men. It would certainly be an advantage to the militia force generally, if that money were spent in having different officers go on the board, and so teach them these court martial duties. Then he goes on to say:

"I would again recommend that the school corps be armed with Martini-Henry rifles now in store, and be supplied with the latest equipment—the belts and straps of brown leather."

Again, he says:

"I would here beg to recommend strongly that liberal assistance be afforded by the Government towards the maintenance of the non-commissioned officers messes and the men's reading and recreation room. . . . I venture to think it would be unwise of the country to begrudge a little extra compensation, within reasonable limits, to the permanent corps, as being so small a force it should be thorough and ready in the time of need to act as a foundation on which to form rapidly a large force."

All these remarks, advocating increased expenditure, are in reference to the permanent corps, a body of some 900 men. Then, we come to the general's report in reference to the militia of Canada, which is supposed to consist of about 40,000 men, and here is all we find in regard to increased expenditure on them:

Mr. DENISON.

"This year I was enabled to visit all the camps assembled in the Dominion, and to see the troops at different stages of their training, and from this experience I am confirmed in my opinions, expressed in my last year's report, that though the men and officers do certainly make the most of their time, it is altogether too short, and I do earnestly hope that some arrangement may be made to lengthen it, and that the city corps, who with their superior knowledge of drill would greatly benefit by it, be encouraged to join the camps in their districts, if only for a few days."

Then he says he would like to see the city regiments with paid adjutants; and says further:

"My experience of another year does not lead me to alter the opinion expressed in my previous reports, that with the amount of money now voted for the militia, the strength of the force should be reduced, and that every regiment, corps and battery liable to camp service, should be called out every year for not less than sixteen days, which, when compared with the number of days that the Imperial militia are out for training, seems a very limited time."

Then he urges the formation of an engineers' corps. I have searched through his report, and that is all I find in reference to increasing the expenditure on the ordinary militia of the country—a force which we all know is absolutely necessary for the purpose of maintaining order, in case of any serious trouble. While making these remarks about the schools, I must not be understood as saying that they should be disbanded, for they do a great deal of good. But we should not have the whole life-blood of the militia drained into these schools, which show very small results for the large expenditure of money upon them—355 obtaining certificates, with an expenditure, last year, of $482,700. If something like the old system were adopted, it appears to me that it would be a great advantage to the country. Now, the plan adopted is that any one who wishes to join one of these schools has to go in either as an officer or a private. When the original schools were formed twenty years ago, a captain and half a dozen non-commissioned officers were told off from a regiment to carry them on, and anybody, whether an officer or private, or anybody else, could go into one of these schools and be drilled for the small sum of $50. There are no doubt a great many young fellows in the country who would be willing to go in if they could go in in that way, and get their certificates, but at present they do not care to go in, either as officers or privates. I received a letter the other day from an officer, not a constituent, but one living outside of Toronto, which with your permission I would like to read for the benefit of the House. He says:

"DEAR SIR,—Knowing the great interest you take in the militia of this country, I have taken the liberty of writing you in regard to it. The evident tendency of the policy of the Government seems to lean towards decreasing the militia force and adding to the permanent corps, at least that is the opinion of a great many militia officers in this district, and I think we are justified in this opinion by the action of this and preceding Governments. We used to have about 45,000 men drilled every year, then it was reduced to 35,000, now we drill 19,000, but keep on the rolls 37,000. The general recommends that the force be reduced to 18,000, and drill them every year, probably in a year or two they will again economise and drill some corps every two or three years, until we have no militia, and the defence of this country is left to the permanent corps consisting of say 3,000 men; 18,000 men are no use, we should drill 50,000 men twelve days every year, and this could be done at a very small increased expense, the same brigade staff general expenses would do for 50,000 men. The same officers would look after a company of sixty men as well as forty, same case of arms, instruction, drill sheds, the only increase would be averaging city and rural corps: pay, $6; rations, $1.25; clothing, transport, contingencies, $3; $11.25 difference between 18,000 and 50,000—32,000 men at $11.25 or $360,000—or a great deal less than we now pay to support 950 men at the schools. I would also like to give you some examples from the Public Accounts.

"The following city corps cost in pay $25,000: 7th, 2nd, 10th, 13th, 14th, 1st, 5th, 6th, 3rd, Governor General Foot Guards, 3,000 men, add $9,000 for clothing, ammunition, &c., per year, and 8,000 for care of arms instruction, &c., we find that these 3,000 well drilled men, that in the recent rebellion turned out as promptly and marched and fought as well as any there, did not cost the country as much to support as the 100 men at one of the schools, 3,000 men against 100 for the same money. Again take a field battery of artillery, of whom Lieutenant Colonel Irwin says they are as efficient as they will be under existing circumstances, and of whom the general also speaks very highly: pay, $900 per year; instruction and care of arms, $200; rations, $230; clothing, $150; $1,480. This, for about 60 men, would be slightly increased 70 and 30 horses, and it just costs the country as much to maintain as three garrison gunners from a permanent corps without guns. In the event of serious trouble, which is of the most service? The country can afford to thoroughly equip, drill and clothe men in a rural company, as cheap as it can keep one private at the schools. Most of the schools are asking for more men and money. If they get more, five or six regiments will not go to camp next year, and so on until the militia ceases to exist, when the excuse for maintaining the schools will also cease. We want good schools, well equipped, with the best men we can get in the country to manage them.

In conversation with some officers it was suggested I should write to you and give you some figures, and if the people want regulars by all means let them have them, but they must be prepared to pay for them and even then, say in a war with Russia, militia would have to be again organised. Hoping I am not giving you too much trouble.

"Yours truly."

I think that shows conclusively the value of the militia as compared with the permanent corps. I hope, therefore, that the hon. Minister will bring down in the Supplementary Estimates an amount sufficient to drill the whole militia force of the country. I would like to see him look after the militia in the way I have pointed out, and to show that, if he is looking after the permanent force, he is not altogether unmindful of the militia.

Gen. LAURIE. As the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Denison) has gone fully into this subject, I will not speak on it at any length; but I feel that I would be recreant in my duty if I did not say a word on this question. The total sum to be voted for the militia is $1,319,000, and yet, as the hon. gentleman for Toronto has said, only $250,000 of that is given for drill purposes. We are to have a militia composed of 37,000 men, and yet we are only to drill of that number 20,000 men, so that 17,000 are to remain undrilled. Now, I maintain it is very desirable that the whole 37,000 should be drilled. I am not opposed to any of the expenditure made in connection with the permanent force, which is a very valuable force indeed, for I have had reasons to change my views, since I have been on active service in the militia, with regard to the value of a permanent force, and will touch upon that subject when we come to deal with it. With regard to this vote, however, I must repeat I think it is unreasonable that whilst we have a militia expenditure of $1,300,000 a year, the force proper should only consist of 20,000 men drilled, and the amount devoted for drill purposes be but $250,000. I do not wish to draw comparisons between the country and the city militia. They both render good service. I have seen the two under all circumstances, both in aid of the civil power at home and on service in the field, and the one is as good as the other. I contend, therefore, that similar treatment should be dealt out to each. The city militia have special advantages for perfecting themselves through the opportunities they have for assembling for drill purposes, but the country militia, although they have not such favorable opportunities for improvement, have done themselves and Canada great credit by the way they have turned out, and I think they should have the same facilities accorded to them as are accorded to their brother corps in the cities. I am not prepared to go as far as my hon. friend for Toronto has gone. I know that the hon. the Finance Minister finds it difficult to spare even this sum; I know the great difficulty that war ministers, in other countries, and the Minister of Militia here, have to contend with in obtaining an adequate allowance from the Finance Minister. It is the Finance Minister who is checking the Minister of Militia in this case. Of that I do not think there can be any doubt. The hon. the Finance Minister has been so often criticised for allowing so large a sum of money to be expended, that I am not surprised he should draw the cord as tightly as he can when he has the chance; but I think the House and the country will back up the hon. the Minister of Militia, in asking for a sufficient sum to enable the whole force to be drilled. I am sure that the feeling in the country is that although the force is what is called a spending service and does not bring back an immediate return, still the expenditure on it is a proper one, especially in the rural districts. The expenditure is scattered throughout the country and the people get the benefit of it, although I do not give that as a ground for a heavy expenditure, because the money must first come from the people; but I maintain that it is essential that this valuable military training should be given to as large a number of our population as possible. The rural militia have performed their share of service and should be given the same advantages as the militia in the cities. I, therefore, trust that at as early a date as possible we may see the whole rural militia trained to the same extent as the city militia. It simply amounts to this: that, while on the expenditure, under our system, of $1,300,000, we can only drill 20,000 men, we could on an expenditure of $1,500,000 drill double that number. As that is actually the case, I do think that if we are to get 20,000 men trained for the $1,300,000 it is right that we should train all our force and get 40,000 drilled for the $1,500,000.

Mr. McKAY. I would like to say a few words in reference to the remark of the hon. member for Bothwell, when commenting on the quotation made by the hon. the Minister of Militia from the Globe newspaper, that the extract quoted was merely a paid advertisement. I can assure the House, on the highest authority, that the extract referred to was not a paid advertisement but the voluntary opinion of Mr. Gibson, colonel of the battalion of Hamilton in question, and a member, on the Reform side, of the Ontario House.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think there is a good deal of feeling in this country in the direction indicated by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Denison) and the hon. member for Shelburne (Gen. Laurie), that we are expending too much money on the permanent force and too little in training the militia and giving them yearly drill. I am aware that there is rather a strong sentiment in this country against expenditure of that permanent character, and that the feeling is in favor of expending more money and giving the whole of the militia some training every year. In my judgment, such expenditure would be more beneficial to the country in the end, as would be proved should the militia ever be called out on active service.

Mr. PRIOR. I heartily endorse the opinions expressed by the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Denison) and the hon. member for Shelburne (Gen. Laurie) with regard to the desirability of the militia being trained every year. In my district, the brigade, in which I have the honor to hold a commission, has not been out for drill for the past four years. It is not fair to the officers or men that such should be the case. The officers are put to heavy expense in getting their uniform and making their course through the schools and obtaining certificates; and when the force is not allowed to go out, they can never become proficient, and the whole thing seems to me a farce. In regard to the clothing, I would like to ask the hon. the Minister of Militia whether he could not give more clothing to the artillery. I do not think it is fair to put the artillery on the same footing as the infantry, because they have a great deal of hard and dirty work to do, which the latter have not, especially in the shifting of ordnance, which wears out clothing quicker than ordinary work. The clothing is supposed to last for five years, but that it should last that long is out of the question. This remark applies specially to the trousers. I must bear out what the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) has said with regard to the trousers. Those issued to us were very poor shoddy indeed, not at all the same quality of cloth as the tunics, and I would ask the hon. the Minister if he could not remedy this and see his way to issuing some extra clothing to the artillery.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The system which has been adopted in Canada has been discussed several times, and I believe, in so far as I am personally concerned, in the policy of having training schools. That is the system which has been adopted in every country in the world, and I think unless you have some way of training these men within the period of time which their civil occupations will allow them to give to military matters, it is quite impossible to expect that they can acquire the efficiency they ought to have. When the Imperial troops were in Canada it was different, as we had then our military schools which were drawn from the Imperial troops, and were models which our volunteers were called on to copy. I believe it is desirable the militia force should be drilled every year, if possible, but we must proceed gradually. Canada has been called on to incur heavy expense for very important public works, and it is essential that, without neglecting in any way the military service, we should be as prudent as possible in our expenditure in that service. I hope the day will come before long when it will be possible for Parliament to add to the money which is now voted every year for drill purposes a sum sufficient to drill the entire force. I fully concur with what has been said about the rural militia. The city militia are certainly equal to any militia I have seen, but we must remember that, in times of trouble and when the militia force has been called upon to do duty for the protection of the country, the rural corps have been equal, in every respect, by their pluck and their powers of endurance and in every way, to any regiment from a city. In answer to my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior), I may say that the matter he has referred to has already been brought under my notice, and I must admit that I agree with him, and that for two reasons: I believe that, from an economical point of view, it would be a saving if we issued, as we did during the troubles in the North-West, a canvas suit for artillery purposes. In regard to the artillery, who have to do the heavy duty of handling heavy ordnance, I think we could issue a suit of canvas such as the artillery have for training in England and in Canada. If that can be done—and I can almost say it shall be done—I can tell the hon. gentleman who, for one, has brought the matter under my notice, that the reasons he has given from his standpoint, as a practical officer belonging to that branch of the service, have had great weight in getting me to arrive at the conclusion to which I have arrived. As to the trousers, that is a matter which has been brought to my notice tonight. I think the hon. gentleman will find that the trousers which he says were made out of shoddy were imported from England. I do not want in any way to disparage what we have imported from England so far, but they issue their clothing for one year instead of five years, and the shoddy stuff is sufficient for that time. The suits we issue are supposed to last for five years, and our material is so far superior to what we have had from England that, judging even from that article in the Globe, I do not think any comparison can be made between the goods made by our own manufacturers and those we import from England. If in the case of any contracts given out by the department, some inferior article has been produced, the officers of the department have taken care to call the attention of the manufacturers to anything which is not up to the standard, and in several cases those articles have been returned to the manufacturers. I hope, as I told the hon. gentleman before, that we will be able to issue a common suit which will serve during the training of twelve days for the handling of heavy ordnance, and which will save the more expensive tunic and trousers which are supposed to last for five years.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would again call the attention of the Minister of Militia to the case of the volunteers in reference to whom I spoke to him about two or three years ago. I understand that this grant is increasing, and it will be in the recollection of the Minister that there were five or six volunteers from the Grey Battalion who went to drill in Toronto and were incapacitated through illness. They were young men who were drawing from $1 to $1.25 a day before they went to Toronto. They went there in the service of their country. They fell sick. One of them was sick for about six months before he could go back to work. He lost his situation, and was put to great personal inconvenience and a great outlay of money. Another of them was, to my own knowledge, sick for six weeks. The four others were sick for a long time, and I regret to say that one of them subsequently died. There is no doubt, in my mind, that they contracted the disease in camp. I have the testimony of the medical men who attended them, and that is their opinion. Those were industrious young men, active and hard-working young men, and, with that spirit of loyalty which we hear spoken of so often in this House, they were willing to qualify themselves to defend the country in case of danger. When application was made that they should be paid for the loss, and the suffering they endured in preparing themselves for the service of the country, a deaf ear was turned to their claim. I have brought this matter to the attention of the Minister before, and it may be due to the imperfect way in which I presented it, but nothing has been done for these men. Of course, they are but poor laboring boys, or they were at that time. If they had been officers, or if they could have brought political influence to bear in their behalf, probably they would not have had a deaf ear turned to them. I know a case of an officer who suffered from trouble which he contracted in camp, and he was paid something like $400, but these young men—and young men are the hope of the country—find their claim treated coldly by the Minister of Militia, an hon. gentleman who has been received with marks of affection and esteem by Her Majesty, who has received honors from the Queen; and is he going to leave these young men, who suffered for their country, neglected, and is he going to tell them that Canada has nothing to give them? That is a strange commentary upon the policy of the Militia Department. This country wants no unpaid services; it wants to see the humblest person in this country who discharges his service, and contracts an illness in discharging that service, requited for his sufferings, and I think that the claims of these young volunteers are as deserving of the support of the Minister of Militia or of the Government of this country as any claims which have been brought to their attention. There is not the slightest shadow of doubt that these young men contracted the disease in camp, and they were put to great inconvenience and loss, and suffered a great deal, and one of them has since died, I regret to say. I hope that, having brought this question again to the attention of the Minister, that hon. gentleman, with the generous heart that throbs in his bosom, and with that politeness with which he is so largely endowed, will no longer neglect the claims of these young men.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Landerkin) forgets that the surgeon who examined these men has reported the contrary to his statement, and that report is in the hands of the Minister. Besides, I understood that at least three of these young men had gone out of the country and had never come back.

Mr. LANDERKIN. No, they have not gone away. They stayed with their friends for a considerable time and those people were never paid for their board. They were told that the Militia Department would pay for it. They kept them, and nursed them, and looked after them and it is on their behalf that I have spoken. It is on their behalf that I am speaking, and I think they should not suffer. They were told, when the doctor came there, that the Militia Department would attend to their case, but the surgeon reported against them. The surgeon did not see them, never saw a single one of them in their illness. He came almost a year after they had recovered and consulted me, and I told him the nature of the disease and where they contracted it, and that no others in that broad country had the disease at that time. It only existed where they were drilling. He then told me that he would report in conformity with the testimony I gave. Dr. Jamieson, who attended the others in Durham, also made me the same assurance. I read his affidavit to this House a year ago, stating that they had contracted the disease in camp. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) probably would be prepared to believe the affidavit of Dr. Jamieson who attended the three—I attended the other two myself. I have no doubt about the matter at all. If he has no confidence in me, probably he would have in Dr. Jamieson who made the affidavit I spoke of. The surgeon did not come to see them, and did not gain any information except what he got from those who were in attendance, and those who were in attendance were the best judges of the cases. There is not a doubt in my mind, there was no doubt in the mind of any of the volunteers. Dr. Jamieson believed, and everybody who knows about the circumstances is well satisfied, that they contracted that disease in camp. Now, these men had to be cared for. Any gentleman will understand the affliction it is to have two volunteers in the same house to be nursed for six months by their friends, to be provided with medicine and every other comfort that is required in a sick room. We may well understand what their friends had to undergo. They have never been requited for their care, nor have the Government requited them a single cent. It is a case of hardship that the hon. Minister of Militia should not allow to exist. I do not think the hon. Minister of Militia because I do not uniformly support his Government, should do an act of injustice to a volunteer, which he would not do if it were brought before him by some other person who had uniformly supported him. Would the hon. Minister of Militia give us to understand that the militia force is conducted in that fashion?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No, no.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Now, I am speaking of what I know. I care not what any other mortal man says. I say I understand the case, and I believe they contracted the disease while in camp, and after they recovered, they left debts incurred which the parties believed were to be paid by the Government of this country, and they are still unpaid.

Mr. SPROULE. It seems very strange that when the Minister of Militia, as a member of the Government, is asked to recommend the payment of money, that he should be expected to do so upon the strength of representations made by officers outside his own department. The surgeon of the 31st Battalion who examined into these cases, I take it, would be the only responsible person whom the Minister should listen to on this subject, and the report of that surgeon was against it. In connection with that I may say that the hon. member for South Grey intimates that the surgeon of the 31st Battalion did not see them for a year after the time they got better.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I say so.

Mr. SPROULE. Now, he tells this House that one of them was sick for six months before he got better, and that makes a year and a-half before the surgeon went to examine these cases; in other words, they were allowed to go to that length of time before the application was made. It seems strange that so long a time was allowed to elapse before an application was made for some compensation for the disease said to be contracted during the time they were putting in drill. The surgeon of the 31st Battalion was in camp at Toronto, and during that time I believe the drill was put in. If they had contracted the disease then and then went home sick with it, or shortly after, I can see no reason why it should not have been so reported and the claim be put in at an earlier date, and then the surgeon could have been sent there to examine these cases before they got well.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I dare say the surgeon could have been sent, but he was not sent, and what is the use of fighting a phantom of that character? If it suits the hon. member for East Grey to try to oppose these volunteers, these poor young men, from getting their pay, then he will have the consciousness of trying to deprive them of getting justice through some technicality. I am not going to be so accurate about the time, but I know it was quite a length of time. It was somewhere about a year before the surgeon came to see them, and he spent the day with me. He did not see one of them when he came there, and all the information he got in connection with these two cases he got from myself. The doctors assured the surgeon that these cases were contracted while on drill, and I have no doubt about it in the world. I am only astonished that it would be any pleasure for the hon. member for East Grey to strive to prevent the volunteers, who deserve so well of this country, from getting their pay on the ground that there is a technicality arising in the report.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to remind the hon. member that I am not opposing the volunteers getting a just claim, but I am opposing the department paying out money without competent authority. I know if any department of this Government paid out $10 without a very good reason, the hon. member for South Grey would be the first to condemn it, but in connection with this case it suits his purpose better to be on the other side. Now, what I have said was rather to defend the Minister for not paying out money without having just grounds for doing so. I am sure the hon. member for South Grey would condemn it as quickly as any man in this country, if the Minister did so.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I will just say that any Minister who would refuse to pay this claim would never get my support at all.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I can tell the hon. gentleman that the reason he gave first would be much more likely to induce me to consider this claim favorably, when he spoke of my humanity, and from that standpoint I am perfectly prepared to say that I would have been only too happy to entertain the claim which he prefers on behalf of these young men, if I could have found it consistent with my duty to do so. But when he supplements the compliment he pays me by stating that possibly if the claim had been brought before the department by a supporter of my own—

Mr. LANDERKIN. Allow me. You mistook my meaning altogether. I said I would not believe for a moment, or entertain the idea, that you would refuse—these are the words I used—because I had brought it forward, because I thought you were more of a warrior than that.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am glad the hon. gentleman has such a fair opinion of me. I agree with him that it would be a very poor reason for refusing to consider this claim, because it was put forward by a gentleman who does not support the Government. The hon. gentleman knows that the matter was investigated, and I could not pay out public money without having a report from the officers of my department recommending the same. I did get a report, and it was directly opposed to the claim. The hon. gentleman brought the matter to my notice on more than one occasion, and he was very energetic in pushing the claim. I reopened the case, and reconsidered it, and I should have been only too glad to be able to comply with his wishes, but I could not see my way clear to do so. I had no ground officially which would warrant me in paying out for that claim the money which was entrusted to my care.

Mr. LANDERKIN. But you could easily get over that by putting a sum in the Supplementary Estimates. The House will vote it.

Contingencies $38,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What has been done, or what has been proposed to be done, with respect to the rifle range of Toronto? The Minister is aware that a very unfortunate accident happened there by which a poor young fellow was shot; and no doubt he is also aware, and if not I can tell him, that no matter how carefully arms may be used there, so long as the range is in its present position bullets will be apt to drop into the water. When that occurs, the water being a common highway, it is quite clear that near a large city there will always be a certain amount of danger, and I wish to enquire if any steps are being taken to prevent that risk and locate the range at some point where the public will not be exposed to danger.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am very glad indeed the hon. gentleman has brought this matter under my notice to-night. A few days ago I had the pleasure of receiving a large and influential deputation, headed by the mayor of Toronto, who called upon me as Minister of Militia, to point out the danger which they claimed surrounds the performance of the annual rifle practice of the volunteer force in Toronto. The question is one of very great importance, but it is fraught with difficulty. The point is simply this: Hon. gentlemen who take an interest in militia matters know how difficult it is in a large and growing city like Toronto, or any other great commercial centre, to find rifle ranges which are sufficiently close to be available for the purpose intended. As the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) knows when rifle ranges are only a moderate distance out of town volunteers will not go there, holding, and I think properly, that they should not be put to even a small expense to reach rifle ranges on Saturday afternoons when they are enjoying their half holiday. In Toronto the same difficulty arises. I find the great difficulty is to be able to procure a field where it is possible to establish our rifle ranges. I fully agree with the hon. gentleman that the range must be made absolutely safe, so far as life is concerned, and I think from the reports handed into my department by competent officers that it can be made absolutely safe. But I find another difficulty in the way. The great prosperity of Toronto, and I am glad to be able to congratulate my hon. friends from that section of the country on the increased growth and prosperity of that city, has led the agricultural associations and other associations to be anxious to obtain possession of the rifle range for the purpose of increasing their own properties for purposes in which we all take a deep interest. No doubt it is very important that such associations which have done so much, should be assisted to the fullest extent, but in exchange I am offered a range five or six miles, and I am told by others, 14 miles from Toronto. The hon. gentleman knows that it would be tantamount to telling the volunteer force of Toronto that they must give up rifle practice, as it would be impossible for them to find any range there. My first duty is to look after the volunteer force, and that duty I am prepared to perform, but outside of that particular duty I am willing to go as far as possible in order to accommodate those gentlemen in carrying out the objects for which they desire to obtain that property. I fully understand that it is necessary for the department to make the ranges perfectly safe, and I think there can be no difficulty whatever in making them so, according to the reports I have received, and unless we can keep a range which will be available for militia purposes within a reasonable distance of the city it would be quite impossible to keep the force up to its present position in Toronto.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How does the hon. gentleman propose to make the ranges safe in Toronto?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I can tell the hon. gentleman what I understand from the plan. It is to erect a kind of revetment, or an iron screen behind the ranges, which would prevent the possibility of any bullets escaping from the limited space within which rifle practice would take place.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know something of the situation, and I doubt whether that class of protection would be sufficient. It might be, but unless it were done on a very extensive scale, very high and very broad, I have very considerable doubts—I will not say positively, whether at the long range now used, especially if the Martini is allowed to be practiced with—if the thing is possible. I am not prepared to say whether, by taking precautions by way of having guard-boats and buoys properly placed, it may not be made reasonably safe, and I think the difficulty is considerable in any case. Without protection on the water I doubt extremely whether the hon. gentleman can avoid accidents in future.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Every precaution must be taken.

Mr. CASEY. A good deal has been done and a good deal can be done to make the range moderately safe no doubt, but any one who knows the situation and is a practical rifle shot must doubt very seriously whether it will be possible to make it absolutely safe, and nothing short of that is needful. The danger is not so much from competitions at rifle meetings, but from greenhorns' practice at ordinary times, and any one who has seen young men learning to shoot must be aware that they sometimes shoot over the top of the hill behind the target. I have seen shots strike 40 or 50 feet above a target on a hill side. Shots also strike too low and ricochet to an uncertain height and fall behind the target. I am very sorry to have to say anything that the Ontario Rifle Association would not like to have said, but it is our duty to insist on some change being made in this matter. The Minister says he has not been offered any good range within a reasonable distance of the city. He did not say whether he had caused particular enquiries to be made.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, I have.

Mr. CASEY. Have officers looked around in the neighborhood?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, several have.

Mr. CASEY. It seems very strange that no reasonable place can be found within a reasonable distance of the city. The present range is now almost within the heart of the city, and I do not think it is reasonable to retain it there. If volunteers are called upon to pay charges for going to a rifle range at some point on the line of railway the expense would only be trifling, much less than that formerly paid by English volunteers in going from London to Wimbledon. I do not think volunteers there are much richer than volunteers here. I do not know that the officers of the Ontario Rifle Association are eager to find out another place. They would not tell lies to the Minister of Militia, but I do not think they trouble themselves very much to find new grounds, because the present grounds are very convenient for them. I think a thorough search should be made for a new ground by some special officer sent from Ottawa or by one chosen there who can be depended upon.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I wish to know whether the claims pending against the cadets who have withdrawn from the college have been disposed of? I see a letter from Mr. Helmsley who paid $100 when his son was taken from the college, and he was informed, subsequently, that others whose sons had been removed had not paid that amount. Last year I think we had a return here of some half dozen of those claims that were still unsettled. Have they been disposed of and if not how many are still unsettled?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Some of those claims which the hon. gentleman refers to have been settled since last year, and others have not. I caused a circular letter to be addressed to the parents of the cadets, and, in some instances, to the cadets themselves, calling upon them to reimburse the amount, and stating that if those who had accepted commissions in the Imperial service did not reimburse the Government we would apply to the Imperial authorities to ask them to withdraw it from their pay and hand it over to us.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman bring us down, later on, a statement of those that are still pending?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total number of the permanent corps, rank and file?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We have three batteries, "A," "B" and "C," the latter is now stationed in British Columbia.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). How many men in each. Are they full batteries?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We have 150 men in "A" and "B" Batteries and 100 men in "C" Battery. Besides that we have a cavalry school in Quebec, which is the only cavalry school we have in the Dominion. Hon. gentlemen will notice that I have provided for the establishment of a cavalry school in Toronto, and the intention is to take a detachment from that school in Toronto to utilise in Kingston for the drilling of the cadets. Besides we have an infantry school in Fredericton, N.B., one in St. John's, P. Q. another in Toronto, and a fourth in London, and a mounted infantry corps in Winnipeg.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How many men altogether?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The total permanent force, not counting the cavalry school in contemplation, is about 1,000 men.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). You are adding $40,000 for the permanent staff. Do you think it would not be better to utilise that money in giving better drilling to the militia, and drilling the whole of them each year, than establishing a cavalry school at Toronto. They have an infantry school in Toronto, and the cavalry school at Quebec might be sufficient for the present. I venture to say that it would be much more in the interest of the country if this money were expended in Quebec than on establishing a cavalry school in Toronto.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We have estimated $40,000 for establishing a cavalry school in Toronto. The Quebec cavalry school cost $30,000, but we expect we will have to spend the other $10,000 in purchasing horses and saddlery. Those who take an interest in the forces will admit that the training school for cavalry is very necessary, if not indispensable, in Toronto or some centre in Ontario. Of 1,944 cavalry which compose the entire cavalry force of the Dominion, Ontario has 1,017. Moreover we felt the necessity of having cavalry to train our cadets in Kingston, and the only way we can provide for that is by sending a small detachment from that cavalry school. We propose by that school to train for the whole cavalry force in Ontario, and also to train the cadets in Kingston. I think it is money well spent. The cavalry school in Quebec provides training for the Lower Provinces and the Province of Quebec, and it is impossible to take any larger number of men for a short course in that school. Unless we have a training school for the cavalry of Ontario and the Upper Provinces it would be placing that very important force in a position of inferiority that I think should not exist.

Gen. LAURIE. I have spoken already on the subject of what I consider the desirability of training a larger portion of the militia proper—the militia whom we consider really our fighting force. I consider those schools as an auxiliary to the militia, but at the same time I do not wish it to be understood that I consider those schools are of little service, or that they should be done away with. Far from it. I have not always had as high an opinion of the necessity for those schools as I have since I went on active service with the militia. We who have been more particularly connected with the English-speaking portion of the militia forces, have found that we got on fairly well without appealing to the schools very largely, because we have drawn from the regular service very valuable assistance to the training, in the shape of old non-commissioned officers of the army, and these have been of great assistance to officers training their men. But it was only when, for the first time, I was associated in the North-West with the French-speaking Canadian regiments that I found how necessary it was that there should be some system for training non-commissioned officers and officers for the service. The regiment commanded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) came under my command. They were as full of zeal and just as anxious and determined to do their duty as any regiment of English-speaking Canadians, and just as competent, so far as the means placed at their disposal were concerned; but they were deficient in that very necessary portion of a military organisation, trained non-commissioned officers; as they obtain none who have served in the English army, because it is natural that men coming out from the English army are not likely to settle in French districts, and if they did they would be of very little use, as not speaking the language. I did find in consequence that the officers had extra duties devolving upon them; and I am bound to assume that that regiment was only a type of other French-Canadian regiments. That circumstance showed me the value of the schools, not as being merely an aid, but a necessity to the force, to provide for local training in our own country. I am, therefore, fully prepared to support the position taken by the hon. Minister in strengthening this force, but I do press upon him that we must not look upon it as the force proper, but simply as an accessory of the force.

Mr. CASEY. I am glad to be able to congratulate my hon. friend this year on the wonderful rapidity with which Battery "C" has filled up during the year. Two or three years ago, when we first began to call attention to the fact that there was a commandant without a school in Victoria, we were told that the school would be filled up soon, as it was impossible to get recruits in the Province, owing to the pay being so much less than the rate of wages there, and the hon. gentleman told us that he was to get recruits by obtaining the loan of some pensioners from England, who were going to be warranted as sound in wind and limb, although invalided from the English service. Last summer, I understand, an attempt was made to secure these, but, alas, for the hon. Minister's plan, these retired veterans refused to come out without their wives and families, as I understand, and that plan fell through, and the hon. Minister has had to recur to the common sense plan, which he should have adopted in the first place, of taking over drafts from the military schools in Canada. That was one plan which might have suggested itself to him in the first place; and another was that if he could not get men in British Columbia for the ordinary pay given to soldiers, he should pay the price that labor was worth in the country, and put some British Columbians into the school. However, I congratulate him on having obtained some men to keep the guns company this year; they used to be very lonesome.

Mr. ELLIS. I called attention last year to the very large expenditure for drugs in the Fredericton school. I see it was somewhat smaller last year, but it is still very large. Fredericton spent $698 for drugs, while St. John's, P. Q., with just about the same number, spent $386, and Toronto, where there is a somewhat larger number, spent $226. I think there must be some mistake about this, because Fredericton is quite as healthy as Toronto and more healthy than St. John's, P. Q. The hon. Minister told me that he would give me details of the figures, but he has no doubt forgotten them. He will, perhaps, be able to give some assurance that this expenditure will be stopped, because it is evident that it cannot all be for drugs.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am sorry to say that I did overlook the matter. The expenditure seems to me large, especially in a locality like Fredericton, which is perfectly healthy. However, I shall get all the information and let my hon. friend know exactly how matters stand.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to ask another question. Is the bread furnished to those schools the same all over the country?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, the same.

Mr. ELLIS. Then, I would like to call attention to these figures. In Quebec the rate is from $2\frac{1}{2}$ to $2\frac{3}{4}$ cents per lb., in St. John's, P. Q., $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents, in Toronto $2\frac{1}{2}$ cents, and in Fredericton 4 cents. If that proves anything, it proves that bread must be much more expensive at Fredericton than in the Upper Provinces.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We call for tenders for all the supplies, and the lowest tender is accepted.

Mr. AMYOT. I beg to thank the hon. member for Shelburne (Gen. Laurie) for the kind remarks he has offered about the 9th Battalion, which I had the honor to command in the North-West. I must say that I am happy to recognise his kindness to the militia there, especially to my battalion, and I am glad to have a living witness here to contradict the false impression that may have been formed, perhaps, on account of some correspondence which passed between myself and the hon. Minister of Militia. The hon. member for Shelburne knows personally under what circumstances those cipher telegrams were sent. He knows that they were not intended as official criticisms of the manner in which the war was conducted, but as private information sent from friend to friend under secrecy, and they were not due to cowardice, as has been suggested, but they were sincere expressions as to the way the war was being carried on in some respects, and as to the expenses which were being incurred. I am glad to have a living witness who is able to give those telegrams their true meaning, and I am glad to take this opportunity of saying that, by the efforts of the hon. member for Shelburne there, many of the expenses were curtailed, and his services were most valuable to the country. Now, I rise to draw the attention of the hon. the Minister of Militia to an important matter in connection with these infantry schools. They are most useful and indispensable, although, in my opinion, the old military schools were still better. But a great many young gentlemen, students from the universities and elsewhere, are unable to attend them because in the months of July and August, when they would be free to attend, the schools are closed, as that is the time chosen for the holidays. The hon. Minister would do a great service to the force if he would keep those schools open during July and August, and a short time in September, and allow the officers to take their holidays at some other time. I have received letters giving the names of some young men who are ready to go and qualify themselves for the militia, but who cannot go except during those months. Another plan would be to send a detachment from the schools to Quebec, Montreal, Toronto and other cities to afford an opportunity to the young men to qualify themselves during those holiday months. I hope the hon. Minister will consider that suggestion.

Mr. PRIOR. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Militia if the officers and men of "C" Battery get the same pay as those of the other batteries. If they do, I do not think it is fair to them, because living in British Columbia is from 25 to 33 per cent. higher than it is in eastern Canada, and if they only get the same amount of money, I do not see how they can get along on it. They are a splendid body of men, whom we in British Columbia are very proud of indeed. I know that it is a better climate than that in the east; they have that advantage; but they cannot live on climate, and I hope that the hon. Minister, if it is in his power, will give them better pay or, if he cannot raise their pay, make some allowance to them so that they will be placed on the same footing as their comrades in the east.

Gen. LAURIE. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) has alluded to a matter that happened when I was not in this House or in this country; I believe I was actually at the time in eastern Europe. I do not wish to reopen the matter; I simply wish to say that when I was in the North-West I found that the expenses were far exceeding anything that the hon. Minister himself, or any other member of this House, had any idea of, and I took the opportunity of asking every member of Parliament who was associated with the force to come and see for himself the enormous transport train that we required, and to ask him when he came back to this House to stand up in his place and bear testimony to the necessity that existed for an enormous expenditure, and to be prepared to justify the Government in the outlay, after having seen for himself how it was called for. Amongst those whom I saw and conversed with was the hon. member who commanded the 9th Battalion, a battalion that I have been pleased to refer to as being most efficient. I pointed out to those gentlemen that the expenditure was enormous; and in the conversation no doubt ideas passed between us as they will between two men who compare what is with what might be, if they have any intelligence; and I believe from the conversation I had with the hon. gentleman that in the correspondence between him and the Minister of Militia, the views of each were to a certain extent misunderstood, and this misunderstanding gave rise to allusions, which, in cooler moments, would not have been made by the one to the other, and expressions were indulged in and, perhaps, conveyed in such a way that they were misinterpreted and misunderstood, and I am sure the original impressions intended to be conveyed were altogether misinterpreted.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In answer to the hon. member for Bellechasse, I may say that the matter which he has brought under my notice, I fully acquit him of. It is very difficult, as I understand, for young gentlemen who are following their legal or medical course in the universities, to be able, during the ordinary time which is fixed for the training of the militia, to leave their ordinary avocations for the purpose of following a short course or a long course in a training school. He must remember, however, that the officers in those different schools are worked very hard. Some hon. gentlemen who have not looked into the subject, may believe they are not, but I can tell the hon. gentlemen that the officers in the training schools are worked very hard, and it is necessary they should have some holidays. But I believe, without making a definite promise, that it is possible to arrange in some way or other, so that in July and August, and possibly the beginning of September, there might be a special course, under certain regulations prepared by the department. I shall give my attention to that point. To the hon. member for Victoria, I must say, that besides the advantage to "C" Battery of living in that delightful climate and enjoying the hospitality of the people of British Columbia, they have better pay than the "A" or "B" Batteries or the ordinary corps. It was considered that the labor market being very high, it was necessary to give more pay to the men, and, framing the regulation, we allowed ten cents extra per day, but the ten cents are paid at the expiration of every period of enlistment, provided the men remain in the corps. A man in leaving the corps and returning to civil life will thus have a considerable amount of money to start his new life with. Under the circumstances I do not think it is possible for the department to go beyond giving extra advantages to one battery over the others.

Military Properties..... $97,000

Mr. BRIEN. I would like to ask the hon. the Minister of Militia if in this appropriation there is any vote to supplement the amount appropriated by the municipality of Essex Centre for a drill shed there. The hon. gentleman is well aware that application was made last year, that a deed of the land was passed, and that the municipality has complied with all the requirements of the department. They are very anxious to know whether this appropriation will be made this year or not. It is very necessary in the interest of the 21st Battalion, a battalion which is second to none in the force, that this appropriation should be made, and I know that the men were very much discouraged last year at the appropriation not having been then made. If there is anything more required to be done by the corporation or by the officials in that section, I would like to know.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We have provided in this vote the money required for the six drill sheds. There was some delay, no doubt, as we had to get reports, and negotiations were going on between the Government and the municipality. However, I understand from the officers of the department that we now have all the reports we require, and I hope that in a short time, we shall be able to make the distribution of the money voted by Parliament, and to do something for that drill shed, and so meet the views of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There was some correspondence which took place in regard to the caretaker at Bedford, Mr. J. G. Corbett. I think he draws only $176. He was under the impression that the caretakers of other rifle ranges were paid a larger amount, and I find that the caretaker at Ottawa receives $456, at Quebec, $391, and at Montreal—I suppose it is the one referred to as marker—$358. It seems to me that it would be only fair that the caretaker at Bedford should receive the same amount as that given in other places. I hope the Minister will see his way to put him in the same position.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The difference is simply that the caretaker here in Ottawa works in the stores in the winter, and he is paid for that. When he is looking after the ranges in the summer, he does not receive any more than the caretakers of the other ranges. I cannot say now, positively, whether the caretaker at Bedford has any other occupation now or not, but I will look into the question, and give the hon. gentleman information on concurrence.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What about the payment of the caretaker at Quebec, $391.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is the same thing. It may be that he has to look after stores, but the caretaker at Point Lévis is also the caretaker of the fort. He occupies the two positions.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). In regard to the amount of $75,000 for construction and repairs of military properties, I should like to ask how much of that is to go into construction, and where?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The manner in which that amount is distributed is between the different districts. London gets $400; Toronto, $4,875; Kingston, $19,404; Ottawa, $1,676.50; Montreal, $3,900; Quebec, $30,378; Fredericton, $7,856; Winnipeg, $3,745; Victoria, $2,490, and Charlottetown, $275. Of course, in places like Kingston, Quebec and Point Lévis, where we have these extensive forts, the expense is much greater than in other parts of the Dominion.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It was merely in regard to new work that I was enquiring about.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The new works will appear in the estimates brought down by the Minister of Public Works. I merely look after the repairs of the different buildings under the control of the Department of Militia.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). But this is put down for construction.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, it is construction and repairs, but it is only small construction. Any heavy expenditure as far as buildings are concerned, will appear in the estimates of the Minister of Public Works.

Canadian Pacific Railway construction (chargeable to capital) $190,000

M. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is this—for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is a revote, with the exception of $10,000. I explained last year that the object of that appropriation was to complete the work on the Canadian Pacific Railway which the original contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company bound us to do. The additional amounts are for an engine-house on the Pacific coast $27,000, flattening slopes, $153,000, and estimated balance of arbitration expenses, $10,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I thought that, by the agreement made in November, 1886, subject to any adjustment of deficiencies which might afterwards be discovered in the Government work on the Canadian Pacific Railway, the company accepted all the work on that line, and I understood that the only question left was any possible deficiency in what is known as the Onderdonk contract, which might not be complete, and which the Government might have to supply.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. This work has always been admitted by the department to be within the terms of the contract, and this expenditure is required in order to do the work that the Government agreed to do in conformity with its contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Of course the hon. gentleman may be correct, but I formed my opinion upon the report of the chief engineer, which says:

"On the 2nd of November, 1886, an Order in Council was passed authorising the closing up of all the matters outstanding between the Government and the company, and a final agreement was signed, accordingly, on the 15th and 20th of that month, comprising the acceptance by the Government of the work executed by the company, as fulfilling the conditions of their contract; the transfer to, and acceptance by the company of the portions of the road constructed by the Government, subject to adjustment by the Government of deficiencies, if any, in respect of the construction of the western section."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Very well; the work of the Government was accepted by the company, and so all these matters were closed, subject to the adjustment of any defiiciencies in the construction of the western section, and I understood that was confined to the contract which is known as the Onderdonk contract, and that it was contended by the Canadian Pacific Railway that that contract was not properly carried out, or not carried out in such a manner that they felt they should accept it. The chief engineer made his report, but that question has been referred to arbitration, and I have no doubt that a large sum of money will have to be paid on that account.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will see that we were bound to construct an engine house; that is a part of the original contract, and it has never been constructed, and $27,000 of this vote is for that purpose. The hon. gentleman will see, therefore, that this $153,000 is for flattening the slopes. It was hoped that the slopes would stand in the mode in which they were taken out, but it was subsequently found that increased expenditure was necessary, which was estimated at $153,000, to flatten those slopes in such a way as would meet the contract. That is a part of the $190,000, $27,000 for the engine house on the Pacific coast, which we agreed to build in the original contract, $153,000 in order to make the slopes stand, and in order to carry out the contract as originally provided, and no single dollar of this is connected with any shortcoming on what was termed the Onderdonk contract. This was not a lump sum, the hon. gentleman will understand. The contract which was made with Mr. Onderdonk for a lump sum was for the last 86 miles. No portion of this whatever is for that contract, but for work performed on the four sections known as the Onderdonk contract, and which was paid for. Therefore, it has nothing to do with the shortcomings. It is simply for that amount of work which was not performed or paid for in the original contract, and that is now found to be necessary in order to make the road of the character we agreed it should be with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Some of the slope cuttings have not stood as well as was anticipated. We hoped it would not be necessary to expend this money, that the slopes would stand, but they have not stood as well as was anticipated when they were taken off, and this sum is for the purpose of cleaning down these slopes or cuttings, and taking down the loose rocks. An arbitration between the Government and the company is in progress in connection with the western section of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the $10,000 which forms a part of this sum, is for the expense of that arbitration. The Canadian Pacific Railway has claimed that the work is not performed properly, that the road has not been completed in conformity with the contract which the Government made with them. That question is under arbitration. But no question whatever arises concerning the contract between Mr. Onderdonk and the Government.

Mr. DAVIES. I think I understand the matter, and that my conception of it was correct, that this contract was made by the Government with Mr. Onderdonk according to certain specifications and agreements, that it was taken off his hands and certified to by the chief engineer of the Government as having been completed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so.

Mr. DAVIES. It was then accepted by the Canadian Pacific Railway contingently.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES. They say: We are not satisfied; this certificate he gave that the road was correct has turned out not to have been correct. The Canadian Pacific Railway Co. contend that the slopes have to be enlarged, and they have, I believe, either done the work, or are doing it, and the arbitration is for the purpose of determining how much you shall pay. The chief engineer of the Government took over this road in a condition which the Canadian Pacific Railway Co. would not accept, and we have to lay out this money in putting the road in a condition that they will accept, and, practically speaking, Mr. Onderdonk should have done the work which we are now voting money to have done.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken, and I think I will be able to satisfy him of that. Had this work been a lump sum, had we made a contract with Mr. Onderdonk for a lump sum, and taken the work off his hands as completed, then the hon. gentleman's contention would be correct. But such was not the contract. The contract with Mr. Onderdonk was to pay him for every yard of work performed, and if he had performed it, this $153,000 now asked for to flatten the slopes would have been in his pocket. The work has not been done, he has not been paid for it. We hoped it would not be necessary to make this expenditure, and, consequently, we did not call upon him to do it. He has not been paid for doing it. The Canadian Pacific Railway Co. claiming that the work is not in the condition that the contract with us required, in order to relieve ourselves from any responsibility before the arbitration, from any claim before the arbitration, we ask Parliament for this sum of $153,000 to flatten the slopes still more. If they had stood, it would not have been called for. But the hon. gentleman is entirely in error in supposing that Mr. Onderdonk has the slightest interest in this question whatever. He has not. If that work had been done by him, he would have been paid $153,000 more under his contract than he has been paid. We have the money, and we are called upon to do the work.

Mr. DAVIES. I think I understand it pretty well. I want to ask the hon. gentleman if he is able to assure the House that this $180,000 we are now voting will place that road in a condition that the Canada Pacific Railway would accept if they had no award?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. DAVIES. On what is this estimate based?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is based on the chief engineer's conviction of what is necessary to complete our contract thoroughly, so that in the arbitration the Canada Pacific Railway Co. will not be able to obtain a dollar. We admit that, under the circumstances, experience has proved that it is necessary to do this amount of work, and therefore we say that we are ready to do that amount of additional work over and above what we have done; and the hon. gentleman will see that if it went to arbitration, without our consenting to make this expenditure, to build this engine house, which was a part of our contract, to make the slopes, as we admit, under the circumstances, they are entitled to claim at our hands, we would be in the wrong, and the arbitrators would be in a position to find against us. This estimate which the chief engineer makes, is to complete the work entirely in conformity with the contract made between the Government and the company, and which he holds will entirely relieve us from the possibility of any award being found against us.

Mr. DAVIES. Then it just comes down in plain English to this: that the chief engineer of Government railways accepted the work from the hands of Mr. Onderdonk in a certain condition, and he certified that that work was perfect and complete in itself, and fit to be handed over to the Canadian Pacific Railway Co., that everything had been done by Mr. Onderdonk which was required from him. But now he says that he was wrong, and in order to put that road in a condition to justify him in handing it over to the Canadian Pacific Railway Co., he must ask Parliament to expend $180,000. Now, my contention was this: that we are paying $180,000 for an error in judgment on the part of the chief engineer. The hon. gentleman explained that this was not a lump sum, that we were paying so much for the excavation of these slopes. I am not speaking at all about the building in British Columbia, because I do not know the facts, and I will not say anything about that. I admit that what the hon. gentleman says is correct, that by our contract we are bound to complete that road, and to build that engine house. But when the contract was entered into with Mr. Onderdonk, the cutting of the slopes was to be done in a certain way; that part of the contract was afterwards altered by the chief engineer, and Mr. Onderdonk was allowed to make the slopes very much less than they were required to be made by the original contract. If the original contract had been carried out by Mr. Onderdonk, there would have been none of those disputes existing which now exist between the Government and the company, and we would not have been called upon to pay more money.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; but the hon. gentleman will see that it would have been paid long ago.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman will excuse me. I think I will show him that he is not exactly stating all the facts on which an outsider would form an independent opinion. Now, he lessened the slopes, and in lessening the slopes he made a certain allowance from the amount which was to be paid to Mr. Onderdonk if he had carried out the original contract. He did not pay him nearly so much as he would have paid him otherwise. Now, it is calculated by those who know, that his estimate was altogether below the mark, and that Mr. Onderdonk made a very large amount of money out of the change in that contract made by the chief engineer. It just comes back to this, that he altered the contract and allowed Mr. Onderdonk to make the slopes very much less than they were originally intended to be. He now finds that he made an improper alteration, he now finds part of the road not in a condition fit to hand over to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and we have to pay $150,000 more. He now finds an expenditure of $150,000 to be necessary in order to place the road in a condition fit to be handed over to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. My own opinion, gathered from reading the reports and the information which has come before the Public Accounts Committee and otherwise, is that we shall have to pay a very much larger sum yet before the company will accept that portion of the road from our hands. I should like to know what claim the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have made against the Government. Is it not half a million of money? It is a very large sum and we should know what the claim is.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think there is no great advantage to be gained in discussing this matter, and I believe the hon. gentleman will agree with me. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have made a claim against the Government; the Government have resisted that claim. The Government say that this amount of money, in their judgment, will complete that road in every respect in conformity with the contract between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I have stated again and again to the hon. gentleman that if this work had been done by Mr. Onderdonk he would have had this sum of $150,000 in his pocket, of which he has not one dollar—the money is here and has not been paid, and if the work had been done by him he would have been paid so much more than he has received. The fact of his not having performed the work does not touch the question of the public interest in the slightest degree whatever. The company have made a claim, a large claim, I quite admit that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is it nearly a million?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not at this moment know what the claim is; it was made in my absence, it was resisted by the Government and arbitration was granted and that arbitration is being held. The Government claim that the expenditure of this money completes everything that they undertook, and places that work in a condition that is all which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company can ask at their hands. This is a revote, with the exception of $10,000, made last year after full explanations, and if the hon. gentleman talks all night it cannot alter the facts. He cannot change the fact that the Government endeavored to save, and that, if the slopes had remained, they would have saved, $153,000. They have not saved, and, consequently, we agree that we are bound under the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to spend this money, and having spent it we deny that the company have a claim for a single dollar, and I do not expect they will get one.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is no use the hon. gentleman saying I can talk all night and can do no good.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I said you cannot alter the facts.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I desire to get the facts properly. The hon. gentleman said that the amount was voted last year under full explanations, but that is not the case. I had not a thorough knowledge of the facts, but I have obtained it since. If the chief engineer has made as large a deduction from Mr. Onderdonk's original contract, if he had made a proper deduction and a full deduction, to cover all the costs of the work, nothing more would have been said. I know the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are making a claim to have the work done as we contracted with Mr. Onderdonk it should be done in the first instance, and the amount which they say is necessary is more than double what the chief engineer deducted from Mr. Onderdonk.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The chief engineer never deducted anything from Mr. Onderdonk. When Mr. Onderdonk did a yard of work, whether rock or clay, it was measured and he was paid for it. There was no deduction whatever. The Government did not require this work at his hands. Mr. Onderdonk complains that he was not allowed to do more work, but the Government's object was to do the work that was absolutely necessary to complete the road in the manner in which they were bound to place it before handing it over to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. If he had finished the work he would simply have been paid so much more. He was not called upon to do it, and he did not get the money—the money is in the hands of the Government for the purpose of completing it now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That might be all correct, and yet the country might be placed at a large additional cost in this way. Had this work which is necessary, by the Minister's own statement, been done when the original work was done, it could have been carried out a great deal cheaper than now; and in that way a very heavy loss would have been saved the country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is a point in that.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice in the Auditor General's report, page 175, we paid $29,600 for removing slides. Is that connected with work yet to be done, or will the country have to continue removing slides?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is in connection with completing the work. It was paid last year, probably, for the previous year. After the completion of the work no charge can be made on the Government for the removal of slides.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). At page 175 of the Auditor General's report, there is a payment, under the head of Canadian Pacific Railway account, of $74,525, D. O. Mills, balance rolling stock.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He was the contractor, and under the contract we were obliged to take over the rolling stock, and payment was made in connection with carrying out the contract.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that in addition to $250,000?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is part of the award.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. gentleman state, within a moderate limit, the total cost of that part of the road the Government built in British Columbia?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The figures I have here are as follows: construction of Lake Superior and western sections, total expenditures up to 30th June, 1886, $29,648,876. The items do not seem to be separated, but the Lake Superior and western sections are put together.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What the hon. gentleman means by that is that we have spent twenty-nine and a half millions on what we constructed ourselves.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, that is all expended by ourselves. We expended during the year ending 30th of June, 1887, $471,463.41 an expenditure during the seven months to 31st January, 1888, $18,122.11. Total expended up to 31st January, 1888, $30,138,461.62. That covers all the expenditure of the Government in connection with the construction of the Lake Superior and western sections from Port Arthur to Winnipeg, from Port Arthur to Red River, and in British Columbia.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. gentleman obtain a division of that so as to let us have it when we meet again?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I shall furnish the hon. gentleman with the exact amounts spent in British Columbia.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the total amount we have paid then is roughly about $70,000,000 is it not?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, about that. The surveys on the Dawson route were included.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That does not exactly belong to it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is always a charge on the Canadian Pacific Railway in the Public Accounts as the hon. gentleman knows. In all on the Lake Superior section we spent $30,038,461.69 and on the Dawson route $6,611,951.88, making in all $36,850,413.50, beside the $25,000,000 and the $10,000,000 for the purchase back of lands.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Have the arbitrators made any report?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They were out in British Columbia but no interim report has been made yet.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) This expenditure which the hon. gentleman asks is not on any recommendation of the arbitrators?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, it is on the opinion of the Government as to what will relieve us from that charge.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) How will that relieve you? The duty of the arbitrators is to determine how much money you pay the Canadian Pacific Railway to enable them to put this road in the order which they said it should be in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman understands this question much better than I do, being a lawyer himself. We say that this amount should be paid, and that no larger sum will be required, and in this way we intend to protect ourselves. We take it that it is impossible for them to establish a larger claim than that which we now ask for.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Of course I have not seen the submission to the arbitrators, but I presume they are asked how much money is required to put the road in the condition that it ought to be when handed over to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and in the condition that Onderdonk originally undertook to put it in. I presume we will have to do the work whether it will cost $300,000 or $500,000. They will be required to say whether those slopes were in proper order and possibly what it would cost to put them in proper order.

Mr. THOMPSON. By the terms of the submission, the arbitrators are required to state in what particular respects there may be a deficiency, and it is at the option of the Government to make those deficiencies good.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Then this is a matter of mere speculation as to what we require?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is based on the report of our engineer that possibly this sum will be required.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The Government admit that we have to pay this amount and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company say that it should be somewhere about a million dollars. If the arbitrators award $500,000 we have to vote it.

Mr. THOMPSON. It would be admitting too much to say that we will be required to expend any money for this purpose. Our engineer thinks that no more can possibly be needed. I do not think it is quite safe to say that we will be expected to pay this, but no more can possibly be needed in the opinion of our engineer.

Intercolonial Railway $349,500

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What is this amount required for increased accommodation at St. John?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. For filling in the spaces in the wharf, and laying tracks to facilitate ocean traffic at the deep-water wharf.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I thought that had been done before the election?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The time was too short to enable it to be quite completed.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Will the Government rebuild the freight shed which was destroyed by fire the other day?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That will be immediately rebuilt.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know, as a matter of curiosity, do the Government propose to charge the rebuilding of this freight shed to capital account?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Oh, no; all renewals, whatever they are caused by, must be charged to revenue.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Would the hon. gentleman explain the vote of $4,000 for increased accommodation at Spring Hill?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This vote is in consequence of the output of coal at the Spring Hill mines having increased so enormously during the past few years that the present accommodation is quite inadequate for the traffic, and it has become necessary to purchase additional land, to grade it for the track, and supply rails and a freight house. No additional accommodation has been afforded at this point since the road was opened in 1870. The output of coal at these Spring Hill mines is from 1,500 to 1,700 tons per day, so that the hon. gentleman will understand the necessity of this increased accommodation.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Are they still carrying the coal at three-tenths of a cent per ton per mile?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There has been no change in the rate.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Then, the more accommodation you give, the more loss you will sustain.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid it is not very profitable.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I understand that they paid one-half cent per ton per mile to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for hauling the cars from British Columbia to Nova Scotia, and now they are only charging three-tenths of a cent per ton per mile for hauling the coal over the Intercolonial Railway, while I believe three-quarters of a cent is the smallest rate charged elsewhere. I think it is hardly necessary to give them increased accommodation if thereby we are increasing our losses.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We are not giving them increased accommodation; we are giving it to ourselves.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The chief engineer reports:

"The rate at which this coal is carried is extremely low, and in addition to this the cars are hauled back to the mines empty, a distance of 600 miles, so that this business increases the expense without an equivalent increase of earnings."

Mr. Pottinger seems to be in accord with the remark of my hon. friend, that the more you increase the accommodation, the more you lose.

Mr. McMULLEN. Last year, when the rate for carrying coal was under discussion, the subject of carrying flour from Ontario to the Maritime Provinces was up also, and the Minister objected to meeting the demands of western shippers on the ground that to lower the rate would entail a loss. But if they are willing to carry coal for the Spring Hill Mining Company at a loss, and also to extend the accommodation with an anticipated increased loss, I think it but fair, that an attempt should be made to bring the trade of the western Provinces to the Maritime Provinces instead of letting it go through the States. The hon. Minister said to the hon. member for Kent—who I am glad to say will be here in a few days to repeat what he said on that subject—that the flour, if carried to Boston, could be carried in boats for a considerable distance, instead of being carried by our own line. It has been generally stated that the construction of the Intercolonial Railway was intended as an inter-provincial line to facilitate trade between the Provinces, and if that is the case its entire earnings should not be devoted to developing a coal mine, which is a continuous loss to a part of Ontario, while flour is altogether neglected.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That question will come more appropriately for discussion when we get to charges on income.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When we get the short line through Maine, perhaps my hon. friend's views will very likely be met.

Increased accommodation at Maccan Station $3,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A new line of railway there joins the Intercolonial Railway from the Joggins Coal Mines, and it is necessary to enlarge the accommodation at Maccan Station.

Increased accommodation at Moncton $5,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The excess on the amounts of contracts for building, over the appropriation $132; clearing the ground for building and track making $700; providing freight sheds, shifting foundations, &c., $1,200; roofing shop, &c., $400. Steam heating for paint shops, $1,100; inspection, $300; preparing floors, $60; advertising for tenders, $400; sundry fixings, $1,108; total $3,000.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Who prepares the plans?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The engineer engaged in the construction.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). In addition to his work?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; but where the work is chargeable to capital expenditure of course you cover the whole expense.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I thought you were going to make some alteration in regard to the station at Moncton?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

St. Charles Branch.....$ 188,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total cost of that branch to date?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am ashamed almost to say. This $188,000 is composed of a shed for housing the passenger cars, $7,000; car cleaning establishment and fittings, $1,500; building at Levis, $1,500; lands and damages, $170,000; legal expenses, $8,000. The total expenditure up to the 30th June, 1886, was $787,473.47. The expenditure during the year ending 30th June, 1887, was $230,103.78. The expenditure during the two months ending 31st January, 1885, was $55,042.83; total, $1,274,619.81.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. To which this $188,000 must be added?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So it will be close on $1,500,000?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the length?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Fifteen miles.

Mr. DAVIES. How much more will be required before the claims cease completely?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There are some claims in addition.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is no tunnel on this that I am aware of.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, it is an enormous cost, and principally consists of what is claimed as land damages.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yet we are told the price of property in Quebec is not improving.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Government resisted the claims in every possible way. They expended $8,000 for legal expenses, and even brought the cases to the Supreme Court.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In a sense this is satisfactory, as it shows that the value of land within a certain radius of the ancient capital is as dear as at any point of Ontario that I know of.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) What is the amount of the claims yet unpaid?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A very large sum indeed—over $500,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How much represents construction apart from the land damages?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have not the figures separating the two. Out of the total sum stated here, about $600,000 is for construction, the rest is upon the land. Out of this $1,274,000, about $600,000 is for actual construction, and the balance is for the land.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a claim of over $500,000 outstanding?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Altogether for land damages?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What quantity of land within the limits of the town of Lévis has been used?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A very small quantity indeed as there are no works there. I should think the railway improved the value of the property.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think so, or the greater part of it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And it was undertaken under the impression that it would be a nominal amount.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman remember the estimate at the time?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The cost up to date is $1,500,000, including this estimate of $500,000 for unliquidated land claims.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. These are claims we do not admit.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Well, $500,000 of possibilities. Unless my recollection is at fault, I think it was between $300,000 and $400,000 that it is estimated the work would cost.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was a very small portion of this, certainly.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know if the hon. gentleman can give me information as to the width of the track and the total quantity of the land within the limits of the town of Lévis?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is 40 feet of width of track besides a very small station, and the distance is one and a half miles.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to have had some land in Lévis, with that railway crossing it.

Mr. LAURIER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will not take any suggestion from me.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I shall only be too glad to do so.

¶ Mr. LAURIER. Perhaps not, when the hon. gentleman knows the one I am about to make. I say every case in which the Government appealed to the Supreme Court against the arbitrators, the Government were defeated. Whenever an appeal has been taken from the arbitrators' award, the award has been increased by the Supreme Court. I do not say it was the fault of the counsel, but perhaps the Government would change and employ new people. Every time, whether before the arbitrators or the Supreme Court, the Government have been unlucky, and the most outrageous demands made for compensation of land were acceded to. Very large amounts have been awarded, which I thought, were altogether in excess of the value of the land, though at one time, no doubt, when a large trade was carried on, the land along the track was valuable. To-day it has no value whatever.

¶ Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was all in a state of dilapidation.

Mr. THOMPSON. We have done much better than change our counsel. We have had the assistance of some of the best counsel of Quebec in all those cases, and in most of them the court decided that they were bound, on questions of fact, by the evidence given in the tribunal below. That evidence was taken in a very arbitrational way, in such a way that it was difficult to get at the right testimony taken before the arbitrators. The arbitrators, in many of the cases, disbelieved the testimony given. The tribunal thought they were legally bound simply by the evidence, and considered that, as professional men, they could not get rid of the evidence even though the arbitrators had ample reason for disbelieving the greater part of it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The total area is ridiculously small. Forty feet width for a mile and a-half is but little more than six acres all told, and as the Minister of Finance truly says but little ground was wanted at the time. I recollect perfectly the line this road takes going into Lévis, and unless it can be shown in the clearest way—and it did not appear to me that any real damage was done to the river property—that the property, to a great extent, on either side was utterly destroyed and rendered useless, which I do not think was the case, the Government has been fleeced in the most outrageous way.

Picton Town Branch..... $34,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Will that complete this branch?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will both complete it and furnish the rolling stock. The total cost is $449,872.47.

Dalhousie Branch..... $17,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That also is to furnish rolling stock. The total cost is $216,506.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I see that the steamer Admiral is charged to this railway. Does she run to Dalhousie or only to Campbellton?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Only to Campbellton.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the vote for the Indian-town branch?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is for rolling stock also.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What has been the cost of the Indian-town branch?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The expenditure up to date is $177,612.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Is that under lease, or in what way is it used?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Government is operating it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Does it connect with the Western road?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It does not yet.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman state what has been done in reference to the Moncton branch?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is leased to the New Brunswick Railway.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is this: construction, $7,000?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is original construction. It is a land claim at Newcastle.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand from the late superintendent of the Prince Edward Island Railway, who, I regret to say, died a short time ago, that it was contemplated to give increased accommodation—to give accommodation worthy of the name—at Charlottetown. The old railway station there gives very bad accommodation to the general public. I believe that has been under consideration and that an improvement has been very favorably reported upon. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether it is intended to do anything in regard to that?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no provision made this year in increased accommodation at Charlottetown. I think what has been asked is mainly to get the track to run along from the terminus. That is under consideration, but it is not provided for this year.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What is this at Newcastle?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is an unsettled claim for land?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Is it for the main line or for the branch, and who is the man?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is a ballast pit near Newcastle belonging to Mr. J. Ferguson.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Is that settled by arbitration?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The claim is for $20,000. It is not settled, but the amount placed here is the outside amount which the Government think should be granted.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). In reference to the item of $25,000 for heating cars by steam and lighting by electricity, does the Minister propose to light all the cars by electricity or only the Pullmans?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is proposed to light all the cars.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How do you propose to divide it? How much does it cost for each car?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The details are—supplying heating apparatus to thirty cars at $300 each, $9,000; engines at $75 each, $1,500; applying electric lighting to cars, $14,500; total, $25,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are they 30 Pullmans or 30 ordinary cars?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Both.

Mr. WELSH. I see that the whole of this vote is to go to capital account, and there has been a great deal of capital already invested in the Intercolonial Railway, and it seems to me that the more capital we put into it, the more we lose.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I suppose the hon. gentleman will admit that this is a capital change.

Mr. WELSH. Yes, if you admit that it should be extended to Prince Edward Island; but I do not see anything in that in regard to the Prince Edward Island Railway.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That will follow as a matter of course.

Mr. WELSH. I would like to see something in the Estimates about it, and I do not see a thing. I do not like to interfere with this Intercolonial Railway, but I would suggest to the Government that, when they find that they are carrying on a business at a loss to the country, they ought to put their rates up to a sum sufficient at all events to pay running expenses. It is all very well to develop the resources of the country, the mines and the minerals, but the Government ought not to carry things at a dead loss. I have already pointed out that they are carrying coal at rates which are a heavy loss to the country, and that coal could be carried just as well by shipping, and I understood the Minister to say that, when they got their branch constructed to Pugwash, they would carry coal more profitably. I think that this should be extended to Prince Edward Island. You surely do not want to leave us out altogether. If you left us out of the Dominion, it would be a different thing, but you have practically left us out in these Estimates.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As a matter of fact, how does the expense of heating and lighting these cars in this way compare with the ordinary mode?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is very much more expensive, but it is a question of safety.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I did not rise to object to it, but I wanted to know how the expense compares, apart from the capital charge.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We have not had sufficient experience to decide that yet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose this is supplied by the engine?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes. Do I understand my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island to suggest that we should light the cars with electricity on the Island, and heat them by steam, and that we should put up the rates on the Island railway so as to make itself sustaining?

Mr. WELSH. I would reply to the Minister that the Intercolonial Railway does not pay by a long jog. It is losing nearly as fast as the Prince Edward Island Railway. But if you charge the same rates as you do on the Intercolonial Railway, in proportion to the gauge, and in proportion to the cost, I am quite willing that the Island railway should stand on the same level. But our railway is a Lilliputian railway in comparison with the Intercolonial Railway, yet the rates you charge are just about equal to those of the Intercolonial Railway, whereas the expense of conducting it ought not to be nearly as great. But put the whole thing on a level, and I am willing Prince Edward Island should bear her share. The Intercolonial Railway is now losing a large sum of money, but if you improve the accommodation on this road we shall certainly expect you to make the same improvement on the Island railway. It seems to me, in looking over these Estimates, that Prince Edward Island is forgotten altogether.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You will see, before we get through the Estimates, that it has not been forgotten.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) From the remarks made by the Minister one would imagine that that part of the Government railways which paid less and which cost most, was the Prince Edward Island Railway. Now, that is hardly fair. The hon. gentleman knows that there is no Government railway run which is not a losing speculation, and he knows that the loss on the Island railway is less per mile than on any other railway that the Government operates. I find that the loss on the Intercolonial Railway per mile is $263; on the Eastern Extension road, which the hon. gentleman has done so much to complete, the loss is $377 per mile, while the loss on the Island road is only $230, which is $147 per mile less than on the Eastern Extension. While I have been in this House the last five or six years, whenever we ask for anything, it is flung in our faces that the Island road is not paying, and the inference attempted to be drawn is that the other government roads are paying. I say that the Island railway is operated at less loss per mile than any other government railway. More than that, the Island road has been built by the people of the Island themselves, while in other portions of the Dominion, and elsewhere in the Maritime Provinces, the railways have been built at the expense of the general Government. I agree with my hon. friend and colleague that if you deem it necessary to go to a large expense in making modern improvements on the Intercolonial Railway, which I do not at all object to, because I think the public have a right to all the modern improvements of heating and lighting—but if you vote $24,000 last year, and $25,000 this year, for that purpose, I think the Island road should be favored in the same way.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid the hon. gentleman has misapprehended me. I drew no invidious comparison between the Intercolonial Railway and the Island road. I did not say anything about which was the most profitable.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I think the hon. gentleman suggested it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I spoke solely in answer to the remarks of the junior member for Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Welsh) as he was asking to have these improvements extended to the Island road, and I asked him in a jocular manner whether he would like us to make the improvements and then charge such rates as to make the road pay? But I may say I do not believe we could improve the position of the country by increasing the rates on the Island railway. I believe you would lose money instead of gaining, and you would drive off the traffic we now have on that road, if you were to increase the rates materially. The object is to do the business of the country, that is the first consideration; and you do it at as small a loss as you can. In reference to government railways, I do not think we can attempt to make them pay. Our object is not to make a profit out of them, but to promote the trade and business of the country. In many instances I believe that instead of improving the position and decreasing the charge to the Government by a large increase of the rates, it would have a contrary effect, and you would not do as much business as you do now.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman is correct I think in that, and I should like to see the spirit of his remarks applied to the Island railway, because I know complaints are made that the rates are too high. The hon. gentleman threw cold water upon the suggestion of my hon. friend that we should have the same advantages extended to the Island on the ground that the Government could not grant them until the Island railway was made to pay. I am glad that the hon. gentleman's suggestion was more jocular than otherwise; but he is giving the Intercolonial Railway these improvements although the road is losing a very large sum yearly, and the fact that a smaller loss occurs on the Island road should not be a reason for withholding the improvements.

Mr. WELSH. I will oppose the item unless the Finance Minister will promise me that the Government will give the same improvements to the Island railway. I want a fair and square deal.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is intimidation.

Mr. WELSH. Well, no matter, I want a fair deal.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Last year when the amount of $318,000 was voted for rolling stock I enquired of the Finance Minister whether it would be sufficient to thoroughly equip the Intercolonial Railway with coal cars as well as Pullmans. The hon. gentleman told me it would be ample for that purpose. I desire to know what expenditure has been made for coal cars, because up to the present time the coal trade of Pictou is suffering as much as last year. Shortly before I left Halifax I had a conversation with several of the coal agents there, and they told me it was utterly impossible to get coal cars to bring the coal down, and the consequence is that much of the coal trade is going past them. The "bunkering" business is gradually passing away. One gentleman told me that he could have sold 20,000 or 30,000 more tons if he had had car accommodation. The hon. Minister also stated that the gondola cars were found much more suitable for coal traffic than were hopper cars. Gondola cars are, however, utterly unsuitable for the bunkering business of supplying steamers off Halifax as they cannot be used on the turntable owing to their weight, 20 tons. The small hopper cars must be used, weighing six to eight tons. The Gondola cars however are very well for the long haul or for our own local trade. The fact of having so few hopper cars is interfering most seriously with the business.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There has been a great increase in the traffic.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There has been enormous increase in the expenditure.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am now talking of the question of cars. What was a sufficient supply for the trade of last year would be inadequate this year.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There is no increase in the traffic over last year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There is more coal carried west.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, and it is the long haul which uses up the cars. What would have been a sufficient supply of cars with a certain quantity of coal to be carried would not be sufficient if there was a large increase in the amount to be carried, and if you have to carry it a long distance that consumes the car in capacity because it takes a long time to get the cars returned.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I understand that, but I was not speaking so much of that point. It is hardly worth while incurring a heavy expenditure for gondola cars to carry coal over the Intercolonial Railway at a loss. The coal coming from Pictou to Halifax for accommodation along the line and "bunkering" the steamers is carried at a much higher rate than when it is carried west.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is the short haul.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is much better for the Government to cultivate that business than to incur heavy expenditure for gondola cars to haul coal to the west at a loss. There has been a very heavy increase in the working expenses of the Intercolonial Railway last year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That will come up more properly under the head of income.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There has been a very large increase, amounting to $338,000, extending over every branch, and that will require very considerable explanation. I may ask, for what reason is the Eastern Extension worked separately from the Intercolonial Railway? It is very inconvenient, to say the least, for any one handling freight as we do as agents for a line of steamers to England where the lines have a pro rata rate on freight.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Eastern Extension was not made by Act of Parliament part of the Intercolonial Railway, and its accounts have to be kept separate, although it is working under the same management.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). But not under the same rates. The hon. gentleman will see the inconvenience caused to the trade, and the matter is one that should be remedied. Inward freight from Europe coming by steamer, where the Intercolonial Railway participates in a certain percentage, is charged an ordinary rate until it reaches Pictou Landing, and when it passes over the Eastern Extension the rate is very much increased. The two roads should be run together, and there is no advantage in keeping separate accounts, where practically they both belong to the Government. With respect to the work undertaken at Richmond wharf last year, I call attention to the fact that it was postponed, that all the best part of the season was allowed to pass without the work being carried out, and when autumn came we had steamers arriving with large cargoes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The explanation is that the parties had to get creosoted piles and there was difficulty in obtaining them. If this had not occurred the Government hoped they would have been able to carry out the work as intended.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I was prepared for such an explanation, but it is not a satisfactory one, because no effort was made all through the best part of the season. When an effort was made, no doubt the Government were disappointed. If, however, they had commenced to work early in the summer, the work would have been done and the trade would have been accommodated; but they were subsequently allowed to proceed with the work, by which the trade was inconvenienced, all being on account of the lack of proper attention early in the season. The work done last year was in a measure satisfactory, although there were great complaints on behalf of the importers of sugar that their cargoes were detained there a very long time. This arose from the want of rolling stock, as the hon. gentleman is aware.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There was a large increase of traffic unexpectedly thrown on the railway.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I was about to say that I would not blame the Government altogether because there was a large amount of European traffic which they were not aware of as likely to occur. Still they had not sufficient rolling stock to accommodate the inward traffic. We had no cause to complain of the despatch given to the European freight and the department made every effort in this direction and it was very successful.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear hear.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). When it was represented in England, as it was by interested parties, that the Intercolonial Railway was blocked, and there was so much freight remaining to be forwarded, this was attempted to be used against the Intercolonial Railway. The agents in Liverpool were able to issue a circular to the trade, which was a copy of the letter which was addressed to them by my associates who are agents of that line, which shows the despatch given by the Intercolonial Railway to the European freight, but it was at the expense of the other freight it is true. It shows, however, what good work the Intercolonial Railway can do under ordinary circumstances. I will read the extract from the letter:

"Oregon arrived at 7 a. m. Sunday, and mails and passengers were at once forwarded by special train. This steamer commenced discharging at midnight, and finished and sailed for Baltimore at 11 p. m. Monday, which we think was very good work. The railway also handled her cargo very well, having forwarded 25 cars, containing 550 tons, between midnight and 8 a. m. Monday, and a total of 70 cars containing about 1,300 tons by midnight, Monday, and the balance was all loaded and shipped by 6 p. m. Tuesday."

I mention that to show that the Intercolonial Railway can forward freight very promptly, and so far as my information goes we have no cause to find any complaint with the despatch over the line generally. If we only got sufficient rolling stock and sufficient accommodation there for handling so that the sugar cargoes might not interfere as they did last year, to a certain extent, then the Intercolonial Railway would be able to do work very satisfactorily. I hope the Government will push that matter of the rolling stock forward so that we shall have no reason to complain in this respect in the future.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is what we are trying to do.

Mr. ELLIS. As this is the last item in the Estimates for this purpose, I desire to draw attention to one or two matters which, perhaps, are not properly included in the item itself. There is great complaint at St. John with reference to discrimination in rates, and at the meeting of the Board of Trade recently,—

"Mr. Robertson, from the committee on freight rates, drew the attention of the board to some statements made before the Royal Railway Commission, with respect to discrimination in freight rates on the Intercolonial, in favor of Halifax as against St. John. As a board, said Mr. Robertson, we ask no favors from the Intercolonial Railway, the Dominion Government, or anybody else, but we demand fair play, and we intend to get it. What is the use of having a favorable geographical position if our interests are ignored? St. John is 99 miles nearer Montreal than is Halifax, and yet the same rate is charged from both places.

Halifax is blocked with freight, while St. John, with its open port and its many facilities, is discriminated against by the Intercolonial authorities, and the Government wharf is idle in consequence. It is time this Board should unequivocally and forcibly place this matter before the Dominion Government. The treatment of St. John in this matter was most outrageous."

As I understand it, sugar was brought to St. John and shipped to Montreal at a rate of 18 cents per hundred as against 20 cents from Halifax. When the Halifax people found out that, they insisted that the rate should be made equal and that is the origin of the difficulty. I regret that the Minister of Railways is not here himself, for I wish to call his attention to another matter. He says in his report:

"The mail train service during the summer has been carried on with the regularity which in the winter months, owing to heavy storms, it was impossible to maintain."

That is not exactly the fact, and if the Minister were here I could tell him from my own observation that during the early summer months the management of the road, so far as the carriage of mails was concerned, was simply shameful. The road was made to do duty to carry the outgoing population of Montreal and Quebec to the shore watering places, and their baggage—consisting of pots, and pans, and beds, and everything else—is carried along by the mail train. These were dumped at the railway stations and the train was delayed. That continued until the papers in the interest of the Government, as well as newspapers generally, took the matter up and made such remonstrances that it was to some extent improved. I think that the acting Minister of Railways should arrange that the mail trains should not carry this summer travel and freight from Montreal. Not only were the mails delayed in this way, but connections could not be made with the railways going to the United States, and a good deal of delay and trouble occurred. Again, there is a great difficulty in getting any person in authority to act. Whenever the slightest application is made by persons, at St. John or elsewhere, seeking to have business transacted with the railroad, it is referred to Ottawa, and delays occur which the merchants consider are very detrimental to trade. I wish to call attention to another subject. If you take up the accounts of the railway you will find a matter which has caused a great deal of discussion in St. John, and that is with reference to the Underhay purchases of oil; $13,804 worth of oil was purchased from Underhay, of Boston, in 1887. Underhay is not a dealer in oil but he is a broker, and I will just direct attention to a letter which will summarise this whole matter. It says:

"I enclose a short statement with reference to oil. The figures as to dates, quantities, and prices paid are taken from a return brought down to the House of Commons in 1886. I have added the prices for identically the same quality of oil our merchants would furnish it for. Those oils are lubricating oils and the Intercolonial Railway authorities will not purchase their oils by tender but purchase from Underhay & Co., and at prices double or treble what our merchants would charge. The mode of purchasing is very unfair to our people. If one of our merchants has goods in bond, the Government will not buy without duty being paid, but if they purchase from a man in Boston the goods can be brought in duty free. This puts a premium on a man having his place of business in Boston instead of St. John or any other Canadian city. If any change has taken place in this regard it has been very lately. You will notice in the enclosed statement that they paid $12,786.74 for what they could have bought in St. John for $5,753.10, in other words, there is considerably more grease than oil in the commodity bought."

The returns, for a half year, brought down in answer to the request of my hon. friend from the county of St. John (Mr. Weldon) show that $12,786 was paid for oil in six months which the St. John dealers had offered to sell for $5,753. The answer of the railway authorities is that there are some qualities in this oil not to be found in the oil sold in Canadian cities. Some of this oil has been taken to analysts in the United States, and it has been impossible, even by the keenest analysis of the oil, to find the slightest difference between it and the Canadian article. I trust that if this has not been rectified, it will be rectified, because it is a great injustice.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I would like to ask the hon. Minister what the Government propose to do with the vote of last year of $150,000 for increased accommodation at Halifax. An application was made by the city showing the mode in which Water-street could be widened and how the increased accommodation which was desired at the deep water terminus could be at the same time obtained. But so far as I am aware nothing has been done. At the request of the merchants of Halifax, the water line along the wharves has been surveyed, and a great many are anxious to have the railway brought down along the wharves, and, although some are opposed, a great many have offered their property free of charge, provided the work is carried through. But what I rose for was to ask whether the Government propose to acquire the property at the deep water terminus necessary for the increased accommodation? It is impossible to get on there without increased accommodation, and that can only be secured by taking some of the property opposite the deep water terminus. I should like to know what the Government propose to do, and how soon they intend to undertake the work.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I understand that there were two modes proposed—one, to take the property opposite the deep water terminus, and the other to run a railway along the wharves so as to afford facilities for doing business with these wharves. So far as I am informed, the general impression was that the latter would give the best accommodation to the city and to the people doing business, as well as be best for the railway. But while a large number of the proprietors are quite willing to facilitate that arrangement, there are other persons who would probably be disposed to take advantage of it for exacting a very large payment for the privilege of crossing their property, and the work has really been arrested with the view of getting those parties to consent to have the line run down on some fair arrangement under which the Government would not be required to pay large sums of money for what really would be increasing the value of the property and the business facilities of the persons making these demands.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am afraid that if the Government wait until everybody agrees, they will indefinitely postpone the work.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think a little gentle pressure of that kind will be sufficient.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I suppose arbitrators would only allow them a reasonable sum. For myself I have signed the document agreeing to give up my property, and a great many others are equally willing. I do not think the cost of the property would be a very large amount, and those who have given their property would be satisfied to see the others paid, in order to have the railway brought down to the wharves, even if they got nothing themselves.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that $32,000 of this has been paid for rolling stock. Is that charged to capital account?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was any rolling stock replaced last year?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes. Everything that is once put on the road must be maintained and kept good from revenue, that is to say, if a hundred engines have been provided, there must be a hundred maintained, and if one is worn out it must be replaced from revenue. It is only rolling stock that is required for the accommodation of increased business, in addition to what has been previously furnished, that is charged to capital.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). With reference to what fell from the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Ellis) regarding the Mr. ELLIS.

discrimination in favor of Halifax against St. John, I received a communication last week from a party in Halifax, complaining that a certain article was carried from St. John to New Glasgow for 12½ cents per 100 lbs. at the same time that the railway was charging 12 cents for carrying it from Halifax, and asking me to communicate with the department. With regard to inward freight, my hon. friend will see that it is a matter that rates do not control. The freight comes in the steamers which call at Halifax, and it would not go to St. John in any case.

Mr. ELLIS. Sugar would go to St. John.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). A small quantity of it might, but it is a question that does not amount to very much, because the great bulk of the freight comes by the steamers to Halifax under any circumstances, and would not go to St. John.

Mr. ELLIS. The complaint is not mine; it is that of Mr. George Robertson, a member of the Board of Trade, and a prominent Conservative; and I think he has some grounds for it, especially as to sugar.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I moved some time ago for some papers in reference to an accident that happened to a young man on the Intercolonial Railway. The complaint of his relatives is that after he was killed they went to the place and asked what time the inquest would be held. They were told on the following day. They retired about midnight, and in the morning they were told that a jury had been empanelled and had brought in a verdict at 2 o'clock in the morning, and they had not an opportunity of being present. I have got the affidavits to show that that statement was made to the brothers who were there, and while they were asleep in bed the inquest was held at 2 o'clock in the morning. They made application to the department for an investigation, and the answer was that an investigation had been made. The verdict was "accidentally killed," but they felt there should be more investigation, and the Sun newspaper spoke very strongly about it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will make enquiry into it. The only way I can account for holding the inquest at that hour was to accommodate witnesses who were employed on the train and could not attend during working hours.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The gentleman who made the statement to me is Mr. Wm. Lindsay Duncan.

Cape Breton Railway, construction $800,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is for construction and equipment. The length of the railway, including the branch and extension, is about 100 miles, which, at $24,000 a mile, amounts to $2,400,000. The expenditure to the 31st January, 1888, was $311,979. It will form part of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It will have to be run in connection with the Eastern Extension.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The whole thing, I believe, will have to be incorporated.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Which side of Bras d'Or Lake does it run?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It goes from Inverness up, running to Sydney by the Bras d'Or.

Oxford and New Glasgow Railway, construction... $750,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will this finish it? What progress has been made towards a settlement with the company?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No settlement has been made. The parties are here for the purpose of seeing if they can arrange with the Government. The Act gives them the right to obtain it in the courts or by arbitration.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It has been decided by the courts in favor of the Government ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not the question of compensation.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). But the question of the ownership of the road ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no question of that kind.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The Government took power last year to make an arrangement with them if necessary, but they led us to understand that they had no claim on the Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We put in the words "if any."

Mr. JONES (Halifax.) I objected to that at the time, because I thought it might lead to trouble.

Mr. THOMPSON. It does not arise from that at all, but the Government contended at the time the Bill was introduced that the mortgage was sufficient. Then proceedings were taken for foreclosure. The court in Nova Scotia decided in favor of the Government, and that was reversed in Ottawa, and the Act of last Session had to be resorted to in order to obtain the expropriation. The question now is whether the Government is liable or not to pay for these laborers, and so on.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What is the amount involved ?

Mr. THOMPSON. I think it is $150,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I thought this was all settled. The chief engineer says in his report :

" Under an Order in Council of the 14th August, 1885, a special commissioner was appointed, through whom a number of these claims were settled. In 1886, Parliament voted a further sum of $25,000 for the same purpose, and the commissioner has obtained full receipts and assignments from the company's contractors and other parties having interest in the road, the payments made covering liabilities of the company incurred for the construction of the road prior to the cessation of works in August, 1883."

I would imagine from that that the entire matter was closed.

Mr. THOMPSON. The receipts are not from the company, but from the company's creditors, and those were the persons for whose benefit the mortgage was taken. Now, the parties seek to repudiate that mortgage as not having been made under any competent authority. An injunction was granted by the Supreme Court here, but the question of what claims the company has is still unsettled.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is no proposition asking for any grant ?

Mr. THOMPSON. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) My hon. friend rather surprised me when he said this line was shortened forty miles, because I understood, in conversation with some gentlemen from New Glasgow last summer, that the distance which was shortened would be about only four miles ; that from New Glasgow to Truro, and then on by the present road to Oxford, the difference would not be more than four or five miles by the construction of this road which has cost such an enormous sum of money. If that is so, this expenditure is utterly indefensible. Of course, I am aware that the line runs through those three important counties, Colchester, Cumberland and Pictou, but it is at such an enormous expense that I think it would be better to allow the members representing those counties to be elected every time than to make this expenditure.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will get the actual measurements and give them to the hon. gentleman, either on concurrence or on some further item on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have long despaired of getting any information on concurrence.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I make the difference 19 miles.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I thought it was more than that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What will be the total cost of this road ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The estimate is $1,400,000.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will it be in operation this year ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Eastern Extension Railway $ 33,000

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) What is that for ?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is in reference to the road from New Glasgow to the Strait of Canso. It is for increased accommodation at Mulgrave. There is, for the station and siding, $8,000, and for water service, $25,000. When the Government bought this road, it was equipped with the Haggis water system, which works very unsatisfactorily when quick speed is required to be made.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to ; and House adjourned at 1.15 a. m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 7th May, 1888.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

LEGISLATION IN THE NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

LANSDOWNE.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, a memorial of the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Territories in Council, to His Excellency the Governor General in Council, praying for the introduction of a new method of legislation in the North-West Territories.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES REPRESENTATION.

Mr. THOMPSON moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 125) to amend the North-West Territories Representation Act. He said: The object of this Bill is merely to make the day of holding nominations and the day of holding elections in the North-West Territories uniform with those fixed for the rest of Canada. The Bill to amend the Dominion Elections Act, which was considered by the House a few days ago, is declared by one of its provisions not to be applicable to the North-West Territories in respect to which there is a special Act, and this Bill is in conformity with that Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DOMINION LANDS ACT.

On the notice for the introduction of Bill further to amend the Dominion Lands Act,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In consequence of the pressure of business, I desire to withdraw this notice, and have the Bill introduced in the Upper House.

The notice was dropped.

MANUFACTURE OF CARTRIDGES.

Mr. AMYOT asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to publish and distribute, for the information of the riflemen of Canada, the Report of the Commission appointed to enquire into the matter of the manufacture of cartridges? and if so, when may the report be expected to be published?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In answer to the hon. member I must say that the report of the commissioners appointed to enquire into the matter of the manufacture of cartridges shall appear in the annual report of the Militia Department next year; it cannot be published before.

QUEBEC HARBOR.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) asked, What is the total amount of the advances made by the Government to the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec, up to date, on account of harbor improvements in Quebec, and the tidal dock at the mouth of the River St. Charles.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The total amount of the advances made by the Government to the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec, up to date, on account of harbor improvements in Quebec and the tidal dock at the mouth of the River St. Charles, is $3,241,000. While on the subject of the Quebec harbor, I wish to correct an error which has crept into Hansard in connection with my answer to one of the questions asked me the other day by my hon. friend as to the advances made by the Government to the Quebec Harbor Commissioners for the purpose of constructing the graving dock. It will be remembered that I was asked what was the total amount of interest which had accrued on the amounts advanced for this purpose, and I see that I am reported as replying that the simple interest thereon payable in advance from the 17th December, 1878, to the 19th April, 1888, amounted to $204,454.32, of which no part had been paid. What I meant to say was that simple interest on the advances so made would amount to the sum mentioned. Hon. gentlemen will find, on reference to the Act 38 Victoria, chapter 56, under which the first of these advances were made, that the moneys were to be advanced to the Quebec Harbor Commissioners, to be by them expended in the construction of the dock; that the Harbor Commissioners were authorised to impose tolls upon the vessels using the dock, and that they were to pay over the net income received from such tolls to the Receiver General, who was to apply it, first, for the payment of the interest on the sums advanced by the Government, and, secondly, to the formation of a sinking fund for the payment of the principal, but if the net income received in any year from the dock was not sufficient to meet the interest, then the Harbor Commissioners were to pay, out of their general fund, a sum not exceeding $10,000 a year, until the debt of the Government was paid.

INVERNESS AND RICHMOND RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. CAMERON asked, Whether the Government intends to grant a subsidy to the Inverness and Richmond Railway Company (Limited)? If not, why not?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. At this stage of the Session it is not convenient to state what railways will be subsidised; but, with regard to this company, I may state that it appears from the application that the company has not shown that it possesses the means of carrying out the undertaking.

POSTAL SERVICE IN MEGANTIC COUNTY.

Mr. FISET (for Mr. TURCOT) asked, Who has been awarded the contract for the mail between Becancour Station and St. Julie de Somerset and between Inverness and St. Julie de Somerset, awarded on or about the 1st April, 1888? For what amount was the said contract made? Who were the parties that tendered, and what was the amount asked in each case?

Mr. McLELAN. The service at present is in the hands of Mr. Johnson. No action has yet been taken on the tenders sent in, and therefore I cannot give the prices nor the names of the tenderers at present.

Mr. FISET (for Mr. TURCOT) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to establish postal service between Coleraine Station and Bennett, in the county of Megantic?

Mr. McLELAN. It is not the intention to change the mode of postal service to Bennett.

Mr. FISET (for Mr. TURCOT) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to grant postal service twice a week in place of once between Lourdes and Somerset, in the county of Megantic?

Mr. McLELAN. It is not at present.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF MUSKOKA AND PARRY SOUND.

Mr. BARRON asked, Is the Government aware of Muskoka and Parry Sound having been formed into a Judicial District? If so, what arrangements (if any) have been entered into or made by the Government, or any member thereof, for the appointment of a County Court Judge for the district?

Mr. THOMPSON. The Government have been informed, indirectly, of the formation of a Judicial District there, but they have not received, according to the usual course, the patent creating the district. No arrangement has yet been entered into. I understand that the Act does not come into force until the 1st of July.

FISH TAKEN BETWEEN CAP CHAT AND GRAND VALLEE.

Mr. JONCAS moved for:

Copies of all reports of officers of the Fishery Department, letters and other documents, in relation to the falling-off in the quantity of fish taken near the shores of the St. Lawrence, between Cap Chat and Grande Vallée.

He said: My object in asking for the documents enumerated in this motion is to call the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, of the Government and of this House, not only to the fact, that of late years there has been a large deficiency in the quantity of fish caught along the shores of the St. Lawrence, from Cap Chat to Grande Vallée, but also to the fact that the different varieties of fish which formerly frequented these waters, are now fast disappearing. Hardly any fish at all are now caught from Cap Chat to Monts-Louis and from Monts-Louis to Grande Vallée, the deficiency in the catch is every year increasing. If we consult the reports of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, we will find in them the proofs of my assertion. Let us compare the reports of 1870 with those of 1886, and we will find that in 1870 the number of fishing boats along these shores was 507, and in 1886 only 353. We will find also that the number of fishermen employed in this industry was, in 1870, 1,220, and in 1886, 489, and that the number of quintals exported in 1870 from these localities was 15,797, while in 1886 it was only 5,421. We find further that in 1870 the number of barrels of mackerel, herring and caplin caught along these shores was 11,000, whilst in 1886 it was only 82. So that these fisheries which, in 1870, gave employment to 1,240 men, now employ but half that number; and their value, which, in 1870, was about $100,000, has now decreased to $25,000. To this state of things many causes are assigned, of which perhaps the principal is the presence in immense numbers along these shores of white porpoises, which are seen there not only by thousands but by tens of thousands moving lower down yearly towards the Gulf. It is in my opinion most important that the Government should enquire carefully into this matter, as the principal occupation and the principal industry of the population along these shores is the fishing industry; and unless an improvement occurs, these people will be obliged to emigrate. I, therefore, hope the Government, through the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, will give this matter careful consideration, and take the necessary steps to remove, if possible, the evil.

Mr. FOSTER. Whatever papers and correspondence are in the department will be brought down. I have already made some enquiry into this matter, and have had some conversation concerning it with my hon. friend, and I will take steps to have a special investigation this year, by not only special officers but also by our general fishery agents, and I have no doubt that by means of this information to be obtained from our officers in that section, and fishery agents, we will get at the facts of the case. With reference to the porpoise fisheries, that evil may cure itself in this way. There are some gentlemen now going into the industry of porpoise fishing on a large scale, and should they be successful in their venture this summer, which is largely tentative, it may serve to diminish the evil spoken of as one of the causes for the decrease of fish.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). My hon. friend, the mover of this resolution, will remember that during the course of a debate, in the earlier part of the Session, I took occasion to say, in reference to the fisheries, that the shore fisheries on the eastern coast of Nova Scotia had changed in about the same proportion as that indicated by him. Now, the hon. gentleman, I think, will have to go further than the limit he has put to his enquiry, to ascertain the real cause of the change that has taken place in the fisheries along the coast. From the best information that can be obtained, it appears to arise from two causes. The first is that the fish abound in much less quantities along the coast than formerly; and, in the next place, the mode of fishing has entirely changed. In so far as Nova Scotia is concerned, the fishermen who formerly fished in boats near the shore, now prefer to go out in bateaux into the deep waters. Those who fish in small boats along the coast find that their labors are not so well rewarded, although the toil is greater, as are the labors of those who go out into the deep sea in well equipped vessels. The latter is the mode now adopted in my Province, and I believe a similar mode will have to be adopted in the district to which the hon. gentleman refers. I can hardly imagine that the number of porpoises along the coast can have any effect in causing the decrease complained of. In my judgment, it is simply that the fish do not visit the shore as closely as they did in the old times, and therefore the remuneration is not as great as it used to be for the boats, and, therefore, they have changed their system of fishing.

Mr. JONCAS. The system of fishing has not changed in Gaspé as it has in Nova Scotia, and I do not think that the disappearance of the fish from the shores of the St. Lawrence is due to the fact that our fishermen have made any change in the mode of fishing. My hon. friend will find the reason why our fishermen of the Province of Quebec have not yet been able to change their mode of fishing in the remarks which I shall make on the next motion.

Motion agreed to.

PIER OR WHARF AT STE. ANNE DES MONTS.

Mr. JONCAS (Translation) moved for:

Copies of all papers, plans, letters, reports, and other documents whatsoever in relation to the building of a pier or wharf at Ste. Anne des Monts, in the county of Gaspé.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before allowing this motion to be granted, I beg to make some observations in support of it. I shall do it in as few words as possible, for I have no desire to take to no purpose the time of this House. Three or four years ago, I think, the Government, with a view—so at least they allowed us to presume—to the building, at Ste. Anne des Monts or at Cap Chat, in the county of Gaspé, of either a pier or a wharf, have caused surveys and soundings to be made by their engineers. And, if I may judge by the correspondence which then passed between my predecessor in this House, Hon. Mr. Fortin, and the present Government, they really intended at the time to provide for better facilities for those localities. Now, Mr. Speaker, these surveys and soundings have been completed since 1886 and nothing has been done yet. My hon. friend the Minister of Public Works will therefore allow me to enquire through him whether the Government intend to insert this year in the Estimates an amount whatsoever in order to start in those localities, the building of either a wharf or a pier. Ste. Anne des Monts and Cap Chat are two of the most important parishes of the county of Gaspé, each being inhabited by 2,000 people, but unhappily shut off from all communications. Lands in those places are excellent and very productive, but farmers, owing to want of facilities, cannot dispose of the proceeds of their farms and of their labor. They are compelled, either to consume them on the spot or to sacrifice them at ridiculously low prices. Their position becomes daily more difficult and the building of a wharf or a pier in those localities would be of an immense importance. I trust the Government will give this matter their whole consideration, for it is a painful sight indeed to daily witness the rapid depopulating of the finest parishes of the county of Gaspé, due certainly to no other cause than the want of facilities; for Gaspeia would offer to its inhabitants advantages equal, if not superior, to any other parts of the Province of Quebec, if only it were given roads of communication, if it could only get the means of reaching the great centres of the Dominion. Our lands are in no way inferior to those so much boasted lands of the St. Maurice, of the Lake St. John valley and others of the Province of Quebec. And alongside with farming, we have fisheries of an invaluable richness. In order that I may not be taxed with overrating when I assert here that the Gaspeia lands are equal, if not superior, to those of several parts of the Province of Quebec, I beg to quote some figures taken from the census of 1881. I shall take as points of comparison several counties deemed the most productive of the Province of Quebec and where farming is the more in honor. I shall, therefore, take the counties of Bagot, Megantic, Shefford, St. Hyacinthe, Rouville, Verchères, Huntingdon, and Champlain, in all of which counties the cultivated area is about the same as in Gaspeia. The following is a statement of certain products in the several counties:—

Counties.	Acres.	Wheat.	Barley.	Oats.	Potatoes	Hay.
Bagot.....	80,000	38,086	34,017	390,848	82,901	27,707
Megantic.....	74,273	27,309	34,927	284,971	218,523	39,000
Shefford.....	77,060	27,393	13,083	264,693	196,667	49,597
St. Hyacinthe....	78,000	23,186	93,904	383,091	83,740	18,997
Rouville.....	84,000	38,610	64,012	337,449	94,319	33,601
Verchères.....	73,000	17,051	80,527	462,823	95,221	36,279
Huntingdon.....	78,000	24,215	34,988	277,576	200,117	31,985
Champlain.....	79,000	46,823	19,136	767,708	253,888	30,911
Gaspesia.....	79,000	64,000	78,952	272,021	1,128,023	34,070

As shown by these statistics, Gaspesia yields twice as much wheat, as much barley, nearly as much oats, five times more vegetables, and as much hay as any of the counties with which I have just been comparing it. It is shown by these figures, which will perhaps astonish many hon. members of this House, that this part of the Province of Quebec which, unhappily, is not known enough, can favorably compare with the other parts of the Province. And, however, Mr. Speaker, in this comparison, it must be taken into account that the people of the Gaspé district, fishermen nearly all of them, devote themselves to farming only in a secondary way. Our fishermen hasten to sow their seed in the spring, before the opening of the fishing season, and they take very little care of it until autumn time; while in the counties with which I have just been comparing Gaspesia, rural labors are in honor, constitute the main business, the principal occupation of the people, and are managed with care, ability and according to all the notions of modern science. Now, Mr. Speaker, were I to further show that Gaspesia could become an agricultural part of our country, if it were only given the means of carrying to home as well as to foreign markets the proceeds of its soil, I would have but to quote the official documents which prove that fact, and I would quote in particular, the reports of the Government engineers who state that Gaspesia, with its 400 miles of coasts, contain a sufficient quantity of fertile and arable lands to keep in easy circumstances a population of 3,000,000 souls. But, in order not to take too much of the time of this House, I shall confine myself to quoting some extracts from a pamphlet published by Mr. J. C. Langelier, who has drawn from the very best authorities the information which he gives us about Gaspesia. At page 4 of this pamphlet, I read as follows:—

"Gaspesia has at present but 56,860 inhabitants, thereby clearly showing that it is a country into which the tide of immigration might abundantly flow without encumbering it great extent.

"Unfortunately it has always been ignored by immigrants, who would nevertheless find in it incontestable advantages which are not to be found in other parts of the Province of Quebec.

"In addition to its agricultural resources, the settler has in its fisheries a safe means of providing for the subsistence of his family. The fact is that the greater portion of its population lives on the fisheries, and lives comfortably. This comfort might be considerably increased if, in the moments of leisure left them by the fishing, the inhabitants were to give more care and attention to farming. Still, notwithstanding this neglect, the people of Gaspesia cultivate all the produce required for their consumption.

"According to the census of 1871 the yield of wheat, per acre, was 8.3 bushels in Rimouski; 11.9 in Bonaventure and 15 in Gaspé, or an average of 11.7 bushels for the three counties. This equals and even exceeds that yielded by the most fertile and cultivated regions in other sections of the Province. By the same census it appears that the yield of the following counties for ever acre sown with wheat was: Maskinongé, 7.11 bushels; Napierville, 6; Bagot, 7.69; Chambly, 6.73; Verchères, 6.19; Richelieu, 7.46; Brome, 13.41; Compton, 12.89. Gaspé, therefore, greatly excels, in the cultivation of wheat, the other localities, while Bonaventure and Rimouski show a yield 30 per cent. greater than the rich counties in the valley of the Richelieu."

And at page 5 are found the following words:—

"Colonisation has there a vast field for its operations, and if all the resources, the natural riches and facilities of settlement of this fine region were well known throughout our Province, and appreciated at their proper value by those who are in a position to render valuable assistance to colonization, finally, if these riches, these resources and facility of access to the inner parts of the county were made known to immigrants from Europe, it is beyond a doubt that the current of immigration would set towards that part of the Province in preference to the others, and that, at the next census, Gaspesia would have a population of at least 100,000 souls. Let Paspébiac be made a seaport by connecting it with the Intercolonial by a railway, and before ten years Gaspesia will be entirely changed and become one of the richest and most progressive parts of the Province, and even of Canada."

At page 40 of the same work, I read the following extract from a report by Mr. Alexander J. Russell, one of the most competent and best informed authorities, who says amongst other things:

"The soil of the county of Bonaventure is a rich warm loam, free from stones, even on the table lands on the mountains; and is unusable only where too steep to be ploughed. It yields heavy crops of spring wheat and of oats and barley, much superior in quantity to the acre, and in quality, to those raised in counties on the St. Lawrence."

"The coast of Gaspé is similar in soil. Its fisheries are very valuable. I found the interior, through to the St. Lawrence, on the route afterwards adopted by Major Robinson as a line for the Intercolonial Railroad, to be generally an arable, fertile country, judging from having had a hundred miles of it dug over in road making.

"This is the most healthful and romantic land within the compass of the Dominion. It has a winter temperature ten to fifteen degrees warmer than that of Quebec; and in summer its rich valleys and high swelling hills are fanned by the fresh breezes of the sea.

"Its rivers are uninterruptedly navigable by large scows drawn by horses from their mouths nearly to their sources; and freight from its ports to Europe costs about a dollar a ton less even than from Quebec; and every enterprise of sea and land is open to the settler on its shores."

Then let us see what another man says who is very well informed as to the importance of that part of the country: Commandant Lavoie, quoted at page 40 of Mr. Langelier's pamphlet:

"The counties of Gaspé and Bonaventure," says Commandant Lavoie, "should certainly be now the wealthiest ones in the country, had both the rich merchant and the poor fisherman understood formerly, as well as they do now, how important not only to themselves but to the whole country, was the cultivation of land where the soil was so fertile and so easy of culture from the facilities of procuring manure. The population of this part of the country where a large family can subsist on the produce of ten acres whilst one hundred would be requisite near the cities, are mainly poor in consequence of their dislike to farming. Experience will show them that by means of agriculture, they can become rich and independent. In his report for 1876, he adds: This region with a coast line of two hundred and twenty-four miles, offers throughout the greatest possible advantages to fishermen. The soil, which is equal to the best that can be found in our country, possesses advantages which cannot be found elsewhere, and the settler can find an abundance of food in the soil as well as in the sea and become wealthy in a few years, if he only knows how to properly divide his labor and his operations."

The conclusion of the pamphlet from which I have just been giving some extracts is particularly remarkable in point of accuracy, and I beg to read the first part of it:

"All the information given in these notes has been collected with the greatest care and things are represented exactly as they are. The data above given clearly show that Gaspesia offers to the immigrant undeniable advantages and the prospect not only of being able to live comfortably as soon as he arrives, but of acquiring a respectable patrimony within a short time, of securing the future of his children and even of becoming wealthy. How could it be otherwise when the country abounds in resources and riches of all kinds? The soil is everywhere fertile and easy to cultivate, and, as Commandant Lavoie very properly says, equal at least to the best land in the country. The forests have also their wealth and afford every opportunity of carrying on a large and profitable undertaking. The fisheries are abundant, easily prosecuted, open to all with their products which are rare of a market; they afford a revenue as sure as that derived from agriculture and which for more than a century has supported the greater portion of the population and enabled the merchants who trade in fish to accumulate millions."

To those hon. members of this House who hardly know anything of Gaspesia save the name of it, so to speak, these quotations and figures will be sufficient to show that that part of the Province of Quebec would offer real advantages if it were given the facilities it so earnestly asks for since so long a time, and which it needs so much. I said a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, that in addition to its farming, the county of Gaspé has fisheries of its own of great richness, a mine wherefrom every inhabitant of the district can, during six months of the year, daily draw not only the feeding, but also all that is necessary for the support of his family. Well, I do not hesitate to say that, presently, those very fisheries, however rich they may be, will become a source of ruin for both the capitalists who work them, and the fishermen who make the most of them, if the Government do not provide for energetic and immediate steps to come to their assistance. My predecessor in this House, hon. Dr. Fortin, whose zeal, patriotism and devotion to his country I am pleased to exalt here, more than once rose within these precincts to plead the cause which I am advocating just now. His voice often fell through. May be, Mr. Speaker, mine will not be more listened to, my endeavors may not be crowned with more success; I shall have at least the satisfaction of having done my duty. In several instances, and again quite recently, I had the honor of calling the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works and his colleagues, not only on the importance, but also on the urgent necessity of building on the Gaspésia coasts, at the more exposed places, harbors of refuge for the protection of our fishing boats as well as to facilitate our export trade and thus render more remunerative the so hard, so difficult, so dangerous and presently so ungrateful work of our fishermen. Let it be well known, Mr. Speaker, that our fisheries would not profit alone by the increase in wealth which these harbors of refuge would give us, for, with the increase in the products of our fisheries, the population of the Gaspé district, consumers nearly all of them,—and which presently numbers about fifty thousand souls,—would give larger orders to our manufacturers. Trade generally would profit by it as well as the public treasury, into which would pour a large sum from the duties on foreign products. But these are not the only reasons by which I am induced to insist with more force than ever, in this present circumstance, on the wants and necessities of an industry which is one of our most important sources of national wealth; an industry which yearly affords to our export trade goods to the amount of $6,000,000 and supplies, moreover, our inland trade with valuable commodities of which we in this country perhaps form an inadequate idea. Many hon. members of this House who are just now giving me their attention know how keen competition is nowadays on the fishing markets of the world. In several countries, the Government, in order to promote the working of fisheries, grant very large bounties to their fishermen and ship-owners, bounties which in several countries reach the sum of $1.75 for each cwt. of exported cod; and, unless our own Government extend to our manufacturers and exporters of the Province of Quebec an encouragement worthy of the importance of their labors, that industry, instead of progressing, will fall down and afford no more a living to a large portion of our maritime people, who will have to leave their country and go to the neighboring Republic for a bread always bitter, more especially so when soaked in tears one sheds when remembering the absent fatherland. From the Gaspé basin to Paspébiac, in Gaspésia, an extent of more than eighty miles of coasts, inhabited by a population of 8,000 fishermen, there is no natural shelter where our fishermen can take refuge during storms. So long as fish kept near the coasts, it required but small boats to catch it. But now that it has moved out from the shore, now that our fishermen are compelled to go seeking after it to twenty, thirty or forty miles out, boats of small dimensions are no longer adequate to the requirements of a more extensive working, and the result is a great loss of time, and notwithstanding their well-known ability and fearlessness, our fishermen are oftentimes compelled to quit the fishing grounds and give up the certainty of an abundant catch, in order not to be caught in a gale, which they would care very little of, were they manning good, large, solid boats. And when, driven away by the storm, they go back to their starting point, they have no alternative but to run their boats aground; their only place of safety is the sand of the shore. When the storm is over, a whole day glides away before they can sail out again, before the boats can be put again to sea for a new expedition, a day often favorable to fishing, but which, by the force of circumstances, is necessarily lost. And I am not mentioning here, Mr. Speaker, the very large pecuniary losses which our fishermen frequently experience. These losses figure up, annually, to thousands of dollars, and it often happens that our poor fishermen see the produce of many years of hard labor swallowed up in a single storm, happy indeed if they can save their own life, which, unhappily, is not always the case, for often, alas, there are disasters to deplore. The reports of our Department of Fisheries show, for these last years, a large deficiency in the quantity of fish caught by the fishermen of the Province of Quebec. Now, Mr. Speaker, this deficiency is solely due to the frequent gales which have visited our coasts these last years. There is no less an abundance of fish, on the contrary; but it is impossible for our fishermen, with the boats they are compelled to use owing to want of harbors of refuge, to compete successfully with the fishermen of the neighboring Provinces. It is therefore highly desirable and important, for the future of fisheries in the Province of Quebec, that the Government should take immediate steps to remedy the existing state of things, and I trust they will grant this year a few thousand dollars for this purpose. Now, Mr. Speaker, the want of harbors of refuge not only injures the very working of our fisheries, it also tends to completely paralyse our export trade. Owing to the want of better facilities, through railroads or otherwise, the fish of the Province of Quebec is still carried to the Mediterranean, the Brazilian and the inland Dominion markets by way of sailing vessels, and from the very place of supply. Now, cod caught in July and August cannot be dried and ready for export before October and November, and it is a very hard job, if not an impossible one, for our coasting vessels to come and load at that season of the year, so productive of gales and storms. Last year again, three or four, I think, of those coasting vessels were wrecked on our coasts, in the famous storm of October, the 21st. The result of this state of things is that our exporters, who could often get a very remunerative price at autumn time on foreign markets, are compelled to winter their fish and undergo considerable losses owing to a subsequent depression on the markets, losses wholly due, I may say, to the delay occasioned through want of harbors of refuge which would allow our coasting vessels to load at any time of the year. Moreover, our exporters have to pay an additional freight which often reaches 30 or 40 cents per cwt., intended to cover the risks run by vessels along our coasts. Add to that a higher insurance rate, the necessary expenses due to the fact that vessels can only anchor two miles from our coasts, and this House will understand the difficult position in which are placed our ship-owners and traders. I beg, Mr. Speaker, to read a letter written to me, on the 29th of January last, by the head of one of the leading commercial firms of Gaspésia, Messrs. Valpy and Le Bas. Here is what he says:

"DEAR SIR,—As you are shortly leaving for Ottawa to attend the meeting of Parliament, we would suggest to you the great importance of having some public works on this coast. From Gaspé Basin to Port Daniel, a distance of over seventy miles, there is not a bay or cove where a vessel loading the produce of the country can anchor in safety. The natural consequence is, they have either to go out at sea or go ashore. If the latter it places the shipper in a bad position, as if it is late in the season, in nine cases out of ten he is not able to replace the vessel. The consequence is that he has to winter his goods for a period of not less than eight months. If a perishable article, it simply means ruination to the unfortunate shipper. If you go into figures you will find that a large amount of products are exported from this part of the country, such as fish, lumber, grain, potatoes, which we assure you is not done without a great deal of money, inconvenience and anxiety on the part of those doing business here.

"We would also bring to your notice the fact that we are unable to charter vessels to load on this coast for foreign markets after the 20th October, owing to the want of harbors, and we have, moreover, to pay an extra 25 cents per cwt. on fish to all vessels loading on the coast. That is to say, a vessel loading part cargo at Gaspé Basin (which is a harbor) will carry fish at 2s. 3d. stg. per cwt., whereas the same vessel taking the remainder of the cargo on the coast has to be paid 3s. 3d. stg. This extra charge is to cover the risk of loading on an open coast. This of itself is a serious drawback to our trade, and the extra freight has to be paid by either the producer or buyer. It occurred to us last season (say 1886), owing to the lateness of the season and the want of harbors, to winter 6,000 cwt. of dry fish. The result was that we lost $8,000 on the market value of this article, which was only placed on the Brazilian markets in July and August, 1887. We may add that agricultural pursuits are growing rapidly and that large quantities of farm products could be exported but for want of facilities. Speculators were loath to meddle with them.

"We remain, dear Sir,

"Yours truly,

"VALPY & LEBAS."

I need not comment on this letter, and I trust the few remarks I have just made will show the necessity of giving better facilities to the Gaspésian trade. It is a matter which forces itself to public attention, and to which, I hope, the Government will give their whole consideration.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation). Mr. Speaker, before answering the hon. member, may I enquire of him whether, in his remarks about Gaspésia, he intended referring only to the county of Gaspé, or to the united counties of both Bonaventure and Gaspé?

Mr. JONCAS. (Translation). I referred only to the county of Gaspé. I may remark that in my statements about the agricultural products of Gaspésia, I gave the figures for the united counties of both Bonaventure and Gaspé.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation). Mr. Speaker, before proceeding further, I must congratulate the hon. member on the able manner in which he has brought this matter before the House, and tell him that after the two illustrations he has given us of his fitness to deal with highly important questions, he should not, hereafter, hide his talent, but, on the contrary, he should, at the next Session, apply his researches and studies to other questions that do not relate simply to his county, and thus add to his services towards his country and his Province in particular. The hon. member has just given us figures showing how much Gaspésia,—that is to say, the counties of Gaspé and Bonaventure—can yield and yields effectively in wheat, barley, oats and other cereals which are found in the most favored counties of the Province of Quebec. He has shown that in reality both the counties of Gaspé and Bonaventure yield as much, in point of grains and cereals, as certain counties he mentioned and, in certain cases, four and five times as much. It is a discovery for me, and I think it is also a discovery for many members of this House, who did not expect to hear of such results from Gaspésia. Gaspé being so far from the heart of the country, we are apt to presume that it is a country of ice, frost and snow, and that nothing else is to be found there but fish. The hon. member has just shown that, on the contrary, it is a country productive of grains alike and that it could produce more, were it more settled. He was equally right in saying that what is wanting especially—or rather what was and is still wanting to that part of the country—are facilities. The fact is Gaspésia has but lately entered in the way of transport accommodations, but it shall have more of them before long, when, for instance, the railway that is being built at Baie des Chaleurs shall extend to Percé and Gaspé. Of course, the hon. member cannot expect that all these great enterprises will be completed forthwith, notwithstanding his anxious desire to see his county and Gaspésia thriving. I notice that, in this respect, he has inherited the good qualities of his predecessor, hon. Mr. Fortin, whose departure from amongst us to occupy a seat in another House has evinced a general regret; but I am happy to notice that he has been replaced by a member who seems to take an equal interest in that section of the country. As I stated in several occasions to hon. Mr. Fortin, the Government cannot possibly do all at a time. These things must be done gradually. The wants of the county are stated with much force by the hon. member, and will not fail to attract the attention of the

Mr. JONCAS.

Government and this House. It is beyond a doubt that hon. Mr. Fortin, as well as the present hon. member for Gaspé and the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Riopel)—who seems himself to have shared a good deal in the inheritance of Mr. Fortin,—it is beyond a doubt that these hon. members have obtained, from year to year, as much as it was possible to get for those counties. And with regard to that, I take the liberty of saying that the hon. member was mistaken when he stated a moment ago that the hon. Mr. Fortin's voice had not been much echoed and he feared his would not be more so. If his voice can only get the fourth part of the echo raised by the hon. Mr. Fortin's, he may well be satisfied, for every year hon. Mr. Fortin always received a good deal for that section of the country and its fishermen. I shall not endeavor, Mr. Speaker, to follow the hon. member in the informations and figures he furnished this House with; but I must say that, as to the harbors of refuge referred to by him, it is impossible for the Government to build them all at a time. We are at work building some. There is one, I think, at the Magdalen Islands, which must be about completed. There is also a pier or a wharf, which, if not completed, will be so before long, at Percé, in the county of Gaspé. Other works of the same kind are presently carried on, on the coasts of the counties of Gaspé and Bonaventure. As to Cap Chat and Ste. Anne des Monts, the hon. member is quite right when he says that the Government have caused surveys to be made there. We, effectively, have had considerable studies made in those localities for two years. The question to ascertain was the practicability of building, at a moderate cost, a pier at Ste. Anne des Monts and another one at Cap Chat. It was shown that the works would be too expensive. Then they ascertained the practicability of the building of a wharf between the two parishes, in order to see whether it was possible to build there a wharf for the use of both localities. It was shown by the report of the engineers—as the hon. member will see, for he moves for the documents and papers relating to that matter—that the estimates for those works were so large that the Government did not venture to ask from the Parliament an appropriation for the works. Any way, the voice of the hon. member for Gaspé is eloquent enough to be heard again. I am satisfied that, with his energy and perseverance, he will not fail to return to the charge and to call on his friend the Minister of Public Works, in order to remind him of the fact that his county needs public improvements. I may say, in concluding, that I do not ignore the thing, but it is well sometimes to remind it to the Minister. The papers asked for will be brought down.

Motion agreed to.

CHEESE BRANDING.

Mr. SPROULE moved:

That it is expedient to provide by Bill, or otherwise, for the branding of cheese, the product of the United States, when the same is exported through or from Canada, in such a manner as to indicate the country of manufacture.

He said: My object in moving this resolution is to call the attention of the Government, and the House, and the country to a practice, I might almost say a fraudulent practice, which prevails at present, and which, if allowed to continue, must very seriously impair, if not destroy, one of the most important of the industries of our country, I mean the dairy industry. I refer to the practice of shipping United States cheese into Canada, and then through Canadian ports to Europe with our Canadian cheese. There it is sold as part and parcel of the manufacture of this country. It has been found of late years that—with the attention of our farmers to the manufacture of cheese, and the education of the people in that industry—the quality has improved very materially, and as years advance we are still commanding a higher price for Canadian cheese in foreign markets. It has also been noticed that in consequence of the adulteration of United States cheese and butter, their market has been falling off, and I apprehend it is for this reason that the United States cheese does not command as high a price as Canadian cheese, but this is carried on, and they are trading on the good name of our cheese, and they realise nearly as much as we do when they ship their cheese with ours. If this is continued, it will materially tend to destroy the value of our cheese in the market. Some hon. gentleman may possibly be inclined to ask whether it is known in the European markets that there is any extensive adulteration of American cheese. I will read what took place in the English House of Commons on the 20th March last :

"It was announced in the House of Commons to-night that the Colonial Office is about to enquire of Canada whether the alleged adulteration of imported American cheese also relates to the Canadian product, especially as regards the practice of using animal fats in making cheese."

I believe that enquiry has gone on; and I find afterwards, in connection with that subject, that the home Government have been moving in the matter. I have another extract here on the same subject :

"HIBERNIA CHAMBERS,

"LONDON BRIDGE, S.E., April, 1888.

"In consequence of the rigid construction which has been put on the recent Act of Parliament entitled 'The Merchandise Marks Act,' by the officers of Her Majesty's Customs, the Home and Foreign Produce Exchange deem it desirable to inform the various Chambers of Commerce and Exchanges on the American continent, as well as various shippers, that it is most important that all classes of provisions should bear on the package the name of the country of production.

"The following further suggestions are offered for cheese or butter: The box or package should bear the brand 'Canadian product.' For bacon, hams, etc., the package should also be branded with the name of the town where the meat is packed. If the meat itself is branded the brand must include the name of the country of production. Goods will not be admitted if marked with any English emblem, name or sign or with & Co., unless the name of the country of production is also clearly marked thereon."

This was done for the purpose, I think, of, if possible, securing fair play for the British colonies, and also to enable the English consumer to distinguish between the products from a foreign country, which is unhappily very much inferior and very much adulterated, and the product from Canada, which, in the English market, is noted as being far superior. What grounds have we for believing that this adulteration goes on? We have the very strongest grounds. We have the report of a committee of the House of Representatives in the United States, a committee of which was appointed to enquire into the adulteration of food, and, after investigating the matter closely, that committee says :

"The subject-matter embraced in this Bill is one of great magnitude and grave importance. The jurisdiction over it by this committee was conferred by a direct vote of the House, and imposes a responsibility fully appreciated, but which the committee have endeavored to discharge fully and conscientiously."

"The Committee on Agriculture has given the subject a patient and so far practicable and exhaustive examination, and in the course of that investigation have listened to arguments by representatives of the National Butter, Cheese and Egg Association; the Iowa Butter and Cheese Association; the Baltimore Produce Exchange; American Agricultural Association; the New York Retail Grocers' Union, the American Agricultural and Dairy Association; Hon. Norman J. Coleman, Commissioner of Agriculture, and Dr. Loring, ex-Commissioner of Agriculture, of the United States, as well as the representatives of the manufacturers and dealers in oleomargarine;

"That they find in the United States that over 150,000,000 cows producing annually over 1,000,000,000 pounds of butter, and 300,000,000 pounds of cheese and that the product is worth $250,000,000, that about an equal amount of milk is consumed as milk, so that the product of the dairy in the United States is worth $500,000,000 annually;

"That cows were worth on an average $40 per head until the introduction of counterfeit butter, and are now worth but $30 each, making a total loss of $150,000,000 in milch cattle alone;

"That during last year there were slaughtered in Chicago alone about 300,000 milch cows, or an average of a thousand per day; that there are from four to five million American citizens engaged in the business, and that they must all abandon it and be driven into some other already overworked branch of industry unless they can be relieved from the present ruinous competition with cheap imitations of butter and cheese;

"That the dairy interest is a necessity to all other branches of agriculture, as it is the cheapest and most reliable means of producing or continuing the conditions of soil necessary to the production of crop, of grain and grass; that the cost of producing the usual imitations of butter is from 7 to 8 cents a pound, and the cost to the consumer has been and is about equal with the price of genuine butter;

"That such imitations are not only disastrous to the dairy interest directly and to all branches of agriculture indirectly, but that they are detrimental to public health, being the fruitful cause of dyspepsia and other diseases.

"From the best and most reliable information obtainable, your committee believe that about 200,000,000 pounds of spurious and imitation compounds and mixtures are now being manufactured annually, which not only takes the place of so much butter, but stops the consumption of much more by the demoralisation of the trade.

"Your committee further believe that the unrestricted traffic in counterfeit butter is demoralising in its effect upon the people; that the existence of such base counterfeits has already seriously impaired our export trade, and will result in still greater damage if not checked. It further appears, from all the information before your committee, that at least nine-tenths of the people of the United States demand this legislation."

Now, in reference to the introduction of these articles that are injurious to health, I have also before me another report from the Committee on the Adulteration of Food, and from which I will read some extracts :

"I have spoken of glueose as a giant which has grown in a few years to colossal proportions."

And I want the House to remember that oleomargarine, as it is spoken of here, does not relate to butter alone, because it is a product that is largely used to adulterate cheese as well as to represent butter. It says :

"It is not only filling our markets in the shape of butter, but also as cheese. Many creameries and large dairies, as I am informed, are now mixing 25 per cent. or more of oleomargarine oil with their cheese."

It goes on to say :

"Mr. Michels, of New York city, a well known microscopist and editor of a scientific journal, testifies that oleomargarine is simply uncooked raw fat, never subjected to sufficient heat to kill parasites which are liable to be in it; that those who eat it run the risk of trichinae from the stomachs of animals which are chopped up with the fat in making it. He states that he has found in it tissue and muscle, and cells of suspicious nature, and that Mr. Taylor has also found in it positively identified germs of disease.

"Mr. Michels further states that all they call fat of oxen brought to New York city in a week, would not supply one factory four days, yet there were then seven factories in New York city, and he asserts that there can be no doubt that fats and grease of various description are used in making oleomargarine.

"The eminent English chemist, Prof. Church, states that he has found in it horse fat, fat from bones, and fats such as are ordinarily used for making candles.

"But the gentleman whom, probably, more than anyone else has written upon this subject, is Dr. R. U. Piper, of Chicago, concerning whom the Chief Justice of the Superior Court of that city and three other judges certify that the testimony of no other scientific gentleman of that city would, in their judgment, be entitled to higher respect.

"Dr. Piper says his attention was first called to the subject by an article published by Mr. Michels before referred to in the American Journal of Microscopy. Since then he has examined a large number of specimens. He testifies that while no true butter can carry trichinae, eggs of the tapeworm, &c., he has found in oleomargarine not only organic substances in the form of muscular and connective tissues and various fungi, but also living organisms which have resisted boiling acetic acid, and eggs resembling those of the tapeworm; these he has preserved to show to any who may desire to see them, and he has also microscopic photographs of them. He thinks these may get in through the stomachs of pigs and sheep used in making the articles, though he has found in it specimens of uncooked meat. His conclusion is that it is a dangerous article, and that he would on no account permit its use in his family."

The committee goes on to say :

"In view of the great and increasing magnitude of this business, and the report of the French Academy of Medicine; and the discoveries of the scientific gentleman before named; and the danger of using the raw fats and the stomachs of diseased animals and of those that die on the cars, which number hundreds of thousands annually; or of pleuro-pneumonia, or of cattle fever, or of hog cholera; I think we have no reason to rejoice over the erection of these enormous factories which are now supplying the tables of our hotels, restaurants, boarding houses, private families, with oleomargarine, butter and cheese. A new article of butter and cheese has recently made its appearance in western markets containing from 50 to 75 per cent. of hogs' lard."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I only give this for the purpose of drawing the attention of the Government to this feature of the case, and I think the evil can be reached by the law that provides for analysing foods that are supposed to be adulterated; and if these spurious compounds are being brought into our country and cannot be reached in any other way, and if, on being analysed, they are found to be adulterated to anything like the extent represented here, they ought to be kept out of the country, or at least dealt with by such restrictions as will enable those using them to know that they are not of Canadian manufacture. Now, I will point out what the effect of this is upon the Canadian manufacture. We find that for a great many years the product of the United States in cheese and butter have ruled in the English market much the same as ours, but of late years ours has been gaining the ascendancy very largely. For the last few years the best brands of American cheese and Canadian cheese have stood pretty much the same in the foreign market, but the large quantity of this spurious product of these vile compounds that are so much adulterated, that has been sent over, has reduced the price of American cheese in foreign markets to that extent that when mixed along with ours and sold in a lump lot, it very materially reduces the price of our cheese. I find, according to the report furnished me by Kirkpatrick & Cookson, Montreal, that in 1886 the best brand of American and Canadian cheese realised 50 shillings per hundred in Liverpool, last year they realised 63 shillings per hundred, and the Canadian product realised one shilling a hundred more than that of the United States. But I say that this is not a fair test of the injurious effect on prices of these vile compounds being sent in along with our products, because it only represents the price realised for the very best parcels of ours that are sent out of the country, and the very best of theirs. They manufacture, no doubt, a great deal of cheese that is comparatively good and free from adulteration. I find that in the month of April last year we realised in England, 65 shillings per hundred for our cheese, in July we realised 47 shillings, and in October, 57 s.; but all through last year we realised one shilling a hundred more for our best cheese than were realised by the Americans. Now, this only applies to the very best parcels of our cheese that have been sent over separate from the cheese manufactured in the United States. If we look at this industry we must consider it a very important one, and therefore one demanding our earnest attention, in every line, for the purpose of preserving to the Canadian farmer all the advantages he may reap from it. It is an industry that has this indirect advantage connected with it: the farmers who engage in it keep on their farms a large number of cattle; that means a constant improvement of the soil that has been worn out by grain growing. This means the constant enriching of the soil by manure, and the indirect advantage to the farmer of keeping the soil in a rich condition by which he is able to raise more grain than he otherwise could do had he not kept that large number of cattle. Again, as an industry it is very important because it has been a profitable one to the farmer. The direct return has always shown a profit to the farmer; if such had not been the case, the industry would not have grown to the large proportions it has attained at the present time. I have a return showing the increase from year to year of the products of cheese manufacture in Canada, and with the permission of the House I will give the statistics in order to show the importance of the industry:

If we look back to 1860 when we exported only 6,000,000 lbs. of cheese, and look at last year when we exported 73,000,000 lbs. and brought back in return for that product $7,108,918, we see at once the importance of this industry. I find during the last two years the Americans have shipped cheese in considerable quantities through this country to England. In 1873 they sent into this country, and shipped from Canadian ports to England, as we believe for the purpose of mixing it with the Canadian product and thus enhancing the value of their product in the English market, 5,299,000 lbs.; in 1884, 6,080,000 lbs.; 1885, 6,924,000 lbs.; 1886, 7,074,000 lbs.; 1887, 5,176,000 lbs. This cheese was brought into this country by way of Brockville, or Kingston and other ports, and sent to Montreal, from which port it was shipped to England with a large quantity of our Canadian cheese. I understand that some of our own people are engaged in this business, because they can buy American cheese cheaper and bring it over here and ship it with our own Canadian cheese, and thereby realise a profit. In Ontario last year we had 770 cheese factories in operation. We had, according to Mr. Blue's report, 750,000 milch cows in the Province, and if we take half the estimate given by the Americans, and I do not believe they over estimated it, because they appear to have gone into the subject exhaustively and very minutely, if we take half the estimate that shows a loss in Ontario from the evil complained of, not taking the other Provinces into consideration, of not less than $3,750,000 annually. I hold it, therefore, to be of the utmost importance that we should do something to protect, as far as possible, this important trade to our farmers. I would suggest, as a means to accomplish that result, that we should compel the branding of all United States cheese entering this country as the product of the United States, and we should not use the word "American," because that is not sufficiently distinct for European buyers, but it should be branded as United States cheese. That could be accomplished either by legislation or otherwise. It should be provided that Canadian cheese be branded not only on the packages, but also on the cheese itself, giving the Province in which it is made, and stating that it is a Canadian product, and then no misapprehension could exist. This would be in harmony with the suggestion of the Board of Trade of England, and it would enable foreigners who buy our Canadian produce to understand where it is made, and to be satisfied that they obtain Canadian cheese, and therefore an unadulterated article. The same system should apply to butter. Whether it would require legislation to accomplish this or not I cannot say; but I think the Minister of Customs, and the Minister of Inland Revenue, perhaps, without legislation might be able to make regulations in their different departments to accomplish this result. If the evil cannot be attacked in any other way it can be attacked under the regulations of the Act for examining foods supposed to be adulterated. The American product can be analysed, and if it is found to be injurious, as it is alleged to be, and I believe it is, then it can be kept out of the country. The evil can also be attacked by the customs regulations providing that any article brought into this country must be branded as the product of the country in which it is produced, and that on leaving the country it must bear the same brand, so that no mistake can be made. This provision indeed might be extended to other lines, as was suggested by the Board of Trade of England; it could be extended to hams, meat, butter, cheese and all other lines of food produced in our country and shipped to England. I believe that, just as we found it necessary to preserve the English market for our cattle trade, it is necessary to preserve that important market of the Canadian farmer for his butter and cheese by some such regulations, because if we do not adopt such measures to meet the necessities of the case we shall find in a few years our farmers will be suffering from the consequence of our inaction in a similar way to the manner in which the American farmers are suffering to-day. I hope, understanding as the Government must do the importance of this industry to this country, and knowing as they must know that the farmers all over the country, finding other lines of agriculture not so profitable are engaging largely in the line of dairy products, not only for the purpose of getting a direct compensation for their labor but also an indirect benefit from their being able to keep up the condition of the soil so as to produce profitably other crops. I hope the Government will take action at a very early date and provide means for protecting this important industry to the Canadian farmer, so that it shall not be destroyed by spurious compounds brought into this country and shipped from our ports ostensibly as Canadian products, and sold as such when they reach Liverpool. With the permission of the House I beg to amend the motion so as to make it read as follows:—

That it is expedient to provide by Bill, or otherwise, for the branding of cheese, the product of the United States, when the same is exported through or from Canada, in such a manner as to indicate the country of manufacture, and also for the branding of cheese made in Canada as Canadian product.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I shall not occupy the time of the House further than to say that I endorse every word spoken by my friend the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). Living as I do on the banks of the River St. Lawrence, just opposite the State of New York, I am able perhaps to speak more authoritatively than my friend from East Grey in reference to the shipment from Canada of American cheese. Nearly every week last year I saw from one to two cars laden with cheese manufactured in the State of New York, carried across the river by steamer, loaded on board the Grand Trunk, and shipped to Montreal for the purpose of export to England, I have no doubt as the product of Canada. As soon as reference was made to this, by the press drawing the attention of the Canadian Government to the fact that an enquiry was being instituted in the old country as to whether Canadian cheese contained the product of animal fat, a number of men in my section of the country interested in the business, held meetings and passed resolutions on the subject. Many of these resolutions have been forwarded to me, and I intend to read a few of them to the House. I sincerely trust that the Government will deal as effectively with this question of cheese as they did with the question of oleomargarine, which I had the pleasure of introducing to the notice of this House some two years ago. I have also on the notice paper a motion dealing with the question of lard in the same connection, and I trust the Government will deal with it at the same time that they are dealing with the matter now before the House. I do not know that the motion in reference to lard will be reached this Session, and while we are discussing this, a somewhat kindred subject, one or two words may be said on it. I will read a letter which I have received from the president of the Gananoque Board of Trade on the subject:

"GANANOQUE, 14th April, 1888.

"GEORGE TAYLOR, M.P.

"DEAR SIR,—I have been requested by the president of the Gananoque Cheese Board of Trade to forward you a resolution passed at a meeting of the Board and to ask if you would be so kind as to bring the matter before the notice of the Minister of Agriculture and ask that some action be taken that cheese manufactured in Canada will be known as cheese manufactured and shipped in bond from New York State, when shipped from Montreal to Europe.

"I have the honor to remain,

"Your obedient servant,

"JOSHUA LEGGE."

"Moved by Charles Gray, salesman of Gananoque Cheese Factory, seconded by Edward Emerson, salesman of Woodburn Cheese Factory: "Whereas, it has come to our knowledge that a large quantity of cheese manufactured in the United States, of inferior quality, is brought into Canada, in bond and shipped from Montreal to the Liverpool market and there sold as Canadian cheese thereby materially affecting the reputation and standing of Canadian cheese and the price thereof.—Be it resolved that this Gananoque Cheese Board of Trade resolves and authorises the secretary of this Board to communicate with the hon. Minister of Agriculture, for the purpose of having such action taken as may be deemed expedient to prevent this serious grievance to our cheese producers and dairymen. This Board would suggest the stamping of all cheese boxes by the customs officials at Montreal containing American-made cheese and that all Canadian manufacturers should be obliged to stamp their cheese boxes before shipment.—Carried.

"ALEX. RICHARDSON, President.

"JOSHUA LEGGE, Secretary."

"CHEESE BOARD OF TRADE HALL,

"GANANOQUE, 14th April, 1888.

"Moved by J. R. Dargavel, seconded by E. V. Halladay, that in the opinion of this meeting the Parliament of this Dominion should be asked to pass such legislation as will prevent the United States cheese passing in bond through this country without being branded as such, and would further recommend that all Canadian cheese be stamped in such manner that it will be known to be of Canadian make.

"At a meeting of cheese manufacturers and cheese factory patrons held at Elgin in South Leeds on the 16th day of April, 1888, the foregoing resolution was passed, and a copy ordered to be sent to the member of Parliament for this riding.

"B. L. HALLADAY,
"Chairman."

"Moved by William Dargavel, seconded by John Singleton, that the Dominion Parliament be asked to enact such legislation as will compel all American cheese being shipped from Canadian ports to be branded as such, and that in the opinion of this meeting all Canadian cheese should also be branded as Canada cheese.—Carried.

"I certify the foregoing to be a correct copy of a resolution passed at a public meeting of cheese manufacturers and cheese patrons held at Newboro', this 17th day of April, 1888.

"T. C. SINGLETON,
"Secretary."

I may say that it is of the utmost importance to Canadian cheese makers, that only Canadian cheese should be sold on the English market as the product of Canada. It does the Canadian trade a great deal of injury that cheese from the United States should be shipped from Canada, going into England as it does free of duty, and placed on the market there and sold as Canadian cheese. The only way I see in which we can deal with the matter is either that the customs authorities insist upon all cheese passing through Canada in bond, being branded both on the cheese and on the boxes at the port of shipment for England, in either Montreal or Quebec as the product of a foreign country, or if it is necessary that legislation should be enacted, which would compel all cheese manufacturers in Canada to brand their cheese as a Canadian product. As my friend the member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) has made some remarks in reference to oleomargarine, I may say that I received a letter a few days ago from a friend of mine who now lives in Michigan, and which tells of the manner that oleomargarine is affecting the farmers in that country. I will read the letter:—

“SANLON CO., MICHIGAN, 23rd April, 1888.

“MY DEAR TAYLOR,—I am glad to hear you took such an interest in the welfare of Canada. I understand that you brought a Bill before the House of Commons to prevent the making in Canada, or the importation of oleomargarine. If the Government had not stopped it the farmer would not get more than 10c. or 13c. per lb. for their butter while now they get 20c. to 25c. In Michigan in 1886 we only got 10c. per lb. for our butter, in 1887 we only got 13c. per lb., and I do not expect it will be any better this year. This oleomargarine butter is ruining the farmers of the United States, for dairying is our principal business out here. It would be well for the United States if we had a few more members that would take such an interest in our affairs.

“I am, yours truly,
“HENRY McPHERSON.”

I may say that Mr. McPherson, who is a farmer, lived in my county for a number of years and emigrated to Michigan some three or four years ago. We have here what he reports as being the state of affairs in that country owing to the farmers having to compete unfairly with oleomargarine. He tells me that this oleomargarine is sent all over the country in prints of a-half, three-quarters, and one pound and that the result is that farmers can only get 12 or 13 cents for genuine butter. The same state of affairs would exist in Canada if oleomargarine had been allowed to be made or brought into this country. I again express the hope that the Government will deal as effectively with the cheese and lard questions as they did with the oleomargarine.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to occupy the time of the House, because this subject has been fully discussed and a statement of the case has been made exhaustively and forcibly by my friend the member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). In supporting the motion, I wish to say that we in the North-West take a great interest in this question, and desire to see a conservative policy pursued in regard to our Canadian cheese. It will interest the House to know that at Moose Jaw we have a cheese factory that turns out a large quantity of cheese, which, in quality, will compare advantageously with any cheese manufactured in any part of Canada. As you know, Sir, our grasses are rich, and it has been proved by tests that the milk of a good yielding cow in the North-West will produce 6½ or 7 pounds of butter to the 100 pounds of milk which is a very high yield indeed. I merely wished, Sir, to give the support of my district to my hon. friend in pressing this matter upon the attention of the House.

Mr. BROWN. I wish to take the opportunity of reading a letter which I have received from a constituent of mine in relation to the adulteration of lard. I am sure that the country is greatly indebted to the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) for the manner in which he has brought this subject before the House. I do not propose to make any remarks at all on the question, seeing that it is the desire of all hon. members at this stage to expedite legislation; but I desire to let the House know what the large packing firm of Thomas Lawry & Son, of Hamilton, have to say on this question:

“The question of lard adulteration now before you in the House is of great importance to Canadian packers. In reference to same, we would request you to use all your influence in either prohibiting the importation of adulterated lard or allowing Canadian packers the privilege of bringing in such adulterations as are used free of duty. Under the present state of affairs it is impossible for us to make any money in this line, as American packers fill our markets with adulterated goods at prices we cannot touch. In fact, at the present time Toronto and Montreal are full of this so-called lard, at prices 1½ cents per lb. less than we can make the pure article for without any profit. In our estimation a great deal of this lard imported is not lard at all, but a mixture sold as lard. In the States the same question of lard adulteration is before Congress, and upon analysis of some lard they find no traces of hog's product at all.

I have simply to join in the hope that has been expressed by hon. gentlemen who preceded me, that the Government will take hold of this question with the determination to see that our country does not suffer by the adulterated lard which is brought in as a competitor against the honest production of Canada.

Mr. HESSON. I desire to add a few words to what has been said by the gentlemen who have preceded me on the subject of this resolution. I think, Sir, that the House and the country are very much indebted to the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) for having brought this very important subject before the House. I am satisfied, that the importance of the question to the agricultural interest of this country is a sufficient excuse for occupying the time of the House in its consideration. If, as has been stated by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) and the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), the Americans are exporting cheese through this country for the purpose of having it placed upon the English market as a Canadian product, while its quality is inferior to that of our own cheese—if the great cheese product of this country is to be imperilled by the bad manufactured cheese of the United States, which is continually sold at a lower price in the British market than our superior cheese, I think it is high time for the Government to consider whether it is possible for them to find a remedy for the difficulty. I understand the difficulty that stands in the way is requiring that an article in transit through our country should have a certain brand upon it; but I feel that it is quite possible for the Government to insist that Canadian manufacturers of cheese shall stamp their own brand upon their product in such a way as to make a guarantee in the British market that the cheese is an honest Canadian product. The hon. member for East Grey has taken a great deal of trouble to give the House the evidences of the enormous growth of that great industry; and we know how necessary it is to guard and protect that industry, in view of the fact that the production and export of grain and animals has not proven to be as profitable to the farming interest of this country as the export of cheese. I feel that we shall have to depend more and more in the future on our exports of cheese and butter, for as far as grain is concerned we are likely to have great competitors. But we have the home for the production of the best quality of cheese and butter, and I trust that the Government will devise some means by which the article under consideration, so very material to the success of the farmers of this country, shall be protected in the British markets under its own name and character.

Mr. SCRIVER. I desire to say a few words on this subject. I have no doubt whatever that adulteration in the manufacture of cheese has been the practice in some parts of the United States for some time past; but I doubt very much whether in the region from which importations into Canada are chiefly made, adulteration is practiced. My hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) who lives very near the border, must know something of those counties in northern New York from which the importation into Canada is mainly made, and I suppose he knows what takes place there. I suppose he knows that buyers representing large Montreal houses are constantly there during the cheese making season, attending the weekly meetings of what are called the boards of trade, at Ogdensburg, Canton, Little Falls, in Herkimer County, and some other towns in the northern counties of New York; and he must know that the prices paid there by Canadian buyers, who I am sure know their business, and know good cheese from poor cheese, rank equal with those paid in Canada.

Mr. TAYLOR. Generally half a cent less.

Mr. SCRIVER. Sometimes half a cent more; and I speak from personal knowledge, for I have watched the market very closely, and I have seen the reports in our local and other papers of those sales. I think my hon. friend knows that those are very fine dairy districts. I do not know whether he is acquainted with the factories and the methods of manufacture pursued there, but I can say that I do. In St. Lawrence County, a man named Crapen introduced the practice into factories controlled by him of adulterating the cheese with lard. The hon. gentleman may know that he did not find the business profitable, and he has discontinued it, I think, altogether. My own belief, both from my personal knowledge and from the fact that the prices which I have mentioned are paid in that region generally, is that the cheese made in that region will compare, upon the whole, favorably with that made in Canada; and that cheese forms the bulk of the exportation of the American article, from Montreal at least. I am not aware that in any other part of Canada there is much importation of American cheese. Therefore I believe the evil, so far as the exportation of American cheese from Canada to the United Kingdom is concerned, has not been very great. What may be done in the future it is impossible to say, and I can see no harm, though I cannot see much good, to be derived from such a regulation as that suggested by the mover of this motion.

Mr. McMULLEN. I agree, to a very large extent, with the remarks of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). The cheese industry in Canada is undoubtedly very important, and it is highly desirable that the Government should this Session, do something in the interests of the farming community by protecting this industry. I am rather surprised that the Government have not taken steps in this direction before now. It is quite clear, from the remarks of the hon. member for Leeds, that he has been aware of the fact that cheese has been imported from the United States into Canada for the purpose of exportation to England as Canadian cheese, and I am sure he must have communicated his knowledge to the Government and the Government must have been aware for some time that this practice is in existence. I am disappointed, therefore, that the Government did not introduce this Session some measure for the purpose of protecting the Canadian farmer in this particular line. I am glad to say that our cheese has, in England, secured a very high reputation, and hon. gentlemen will admit that it is desirable we should prevent that reputation from being diminished by American cheese of inferior grade being allowed to be shipped to England as the Canadian article. I hope, therefore, this resolution will pass, and that the Government will bring in some legislation on this subject before prorogation. Every one must recognise the great desirability of our passing a measure that will prevent our farmers being injured by the export of American spurious cheese as the Canadian product. I do not wish to detain the House longer, but felt it my duty on this important question to urge the Government, even at this late hour, to bring down a measure that will protect this important Canadian industry.

Mr. MARSHALL. I rise merely for the purpose of corroborating the remarks of the hon. member for East Grey and the hon. member for Leeds with reference to this most important agricultural industry. As this subject has been gone into thoroughly by these hon. gentlemen I will not detain the House by discussing it at length, but I feel it my duty to read to this House a resolution which has been forwarded to me by the London Cheese Association, and which this is an opportune moment to lay before the House. The following is the resolution passed at a meeting of the London Cheese Association on the 14th April, 1888:—

"Moved by John Geary, Esq., seconded by James O'reighton: 'That the Dominion Government be asked to have all dairy products of the United States of America as soon as it arrives at a Canadian port for shipment to Europe branded as a product from the United States of America; in the case of cheese, both on the cheese itself and on the box containing it, and in the case of butter on the package containing it; and that an Act be passed compelling all manufacturers of Canadian cheese to brand it as such with the words 'Canadian Manufacture,' and the name of the Province in which so manufactured on the outside of each cheese and on the box containing it with indelible ink, and in the case of butter the package containing it to be branded in a similar manner, and that a copy of the resolution be forwarded to J. H. Marshall, Esq., M.P., for East Middlesex.'"—Carried.

I do not think it is necessary that I should discuss this matter further, as I believe the House are fully aware of its importance. The hon. member for East Grey has shown that our Canadian cheese is worth a shilling a hundred pounds more in England than the American product, even when handicapped by the exportation of the adulterated cheese made in the United States as Canadian cheese and by its being mixed up with our cheese. It is time that this should be put a stop to, and the Government should take steps to protect in some way this important industry by having the cheese branded as suggested by the hon. member for East Grey, and I hope the Government will, during this Session, bring down legislation in that sense, if in their power to do so.

Mr. BOWELL. Before this motion is adopted, I desire, on behalf of my constituency, to thank the mover for having brought this subject before the House. It is gratifying to every Canadian to learn the extent of this trade and its importance, and how necessary it is that every step should be taken to protect the Canadian manufacturer of cheese against the spurious American article. But the request made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) to stop and demand the branding of all products of American dairies when they reach Canada is altogether impracticable, and it is a grave question whether it would not, in addition to the fact of the difficulty of stopping American cheese, interfere with the arrangements that exist between the United States and Canada regarding the transport of American products through Canada in bond. It is well known that over any articles sent from the United States in bond through Canada to any foreign port, we have no control further than to prevent its entering into consumption in this country, and that all we can do is to see that the bonded car, when it enters a Canadian port, is properly locked and sealed by the customs officers, and that the seal is only broken when the cheese is transferred from the cars to the bonded warehouse and thence on board vessel for transportation to a foreign country. So far as that request in the resolution is concerned, it cannot well be adopted. The suggestion, however, that all Canadian cheese and butter should be stamped so as to indicate the country of production, is in the hands of the manufacturers themselves. They could by rules and regulations provide that in all cases the Canadian cheese which is made for exportation should bear not only the name of the factory, but also the words "Canada," or the words "the product or manufacture of Canada." When I was in Liverpool last summer, in looking through the warehouses there, I found that in many cases the boxes were not properly marked or stamped, and my attention was called to it by our agents in that city, who pointed out the absolute necessity, not only in order to give Canada the prominence it should have in the markets, but also to secure that no spurious article from other countries should take the place of the superior qualities manufactured in Canada and so obtain a ready sale in that market, that our packages should be marked. Having pointed this out, and having made it clear to my hon. friend, and he having had the opportunity of bringing it under the notice of the House and of the country and of the Government, I have no doubt he will be satisfied and will not press his motion. The fact of lard coming into the country and being adulterated can be dealt with by my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue. If the cheese which is imported from the United States is adulterated and is entered for consumption, it would immediately come under the control of the officers of the Department of Inland Revenue, but when it is entered in Canada only for transportation to another country, it is a matter over which the Government could not have control unless they took the very violent step of interfering with the transport trade; and, if we did that, no doubt the same course would be followed in the United States, and that would interfere very much with the transport trade of Canada to foreign countries. I can assure my hon. friend that, as to the question of lard or any other article which is not what it is represented to be, it will be closely looked after by my hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue, whose officers will receive instructions to confiscate the articles or to punish the parties who are placing them upon the market and attempting to sell spurious articles.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That is when entered for consumption?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

Mr. SPROULE. I have already said that, although the Canadian manufacturer might choose to stamp the article, if any article was not stamped, nothing would be accomplished; but a law might be passed compelling the manufacturers to stamp all packages of this kind. In regard to cheese passing through Canada in bond, the hon. gentleman knows that they must break bulk in Montreal when they put these packages on the boats, so I would suggest that this compulsory stamping should be carried out.

Mr. BOWELL. That question will receive the consideration of the Government. Of course, that might be done in regard to Canadian cheese, but we have really no control over the cheese which is sent from Montreal and transhipped for carriage to England.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. One would almost think that the interests of the Canadian manufacturers would induce them to mark their own manufactures in this country, without the necessity of passing a law, as it is so evidently in their own interests. Still, if it is thought that the cheese manufacturers will not put the stamp of their own native Canada upon their cases or boxes or whatever vehicles they may be, we can easily pass a law to compel them to do so, though it seems to be a somewhat violent measure.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Does the hon. gentleman think that this Legislature has any power in this matter to compel the marking of such boxes?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I doubt that very much.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I do not believe we have any power whatever in the matter.

Motion withdrawn.

NORTH-WEST REBELLION OF 1885.

Mr. DAVIN moved:

That it is desirable that the claims of those who were engaged, either as scouts or police or volunteers, in putting down the rebellion of 1885 in the North-West, or guarding places liable to attack, while holding themselves in readiness to march to the front, should occasion demand, should be reconsidered.

He said: This is changed from the motion of which I gave notice at the suggestion of the Minister of Militia. I have already, in committee, taken the occasion of expressing what might be said in support of this motion.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What is the extent of these claims?

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What are we to pledge ourselves to by this motion?

Mr. MACDOWALL. In supporting the motion of my hon. friend from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) I desire to say a few words which may explain the question as to the extent of these claims. I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister of Militia the claims of the Battleford home guards, wrongly so called. They were authorised to enroll at the time of the outbreak, under the highest authority then in the North-West, for there was no militia authority at that time, under the authority of the mounted police officer to enroll, and they did so enroll. Their homes and their property were destroyed during the trouble. They might have gone out of the country, but instead of that, they came and enrolled themselves as a militia regiment, though they are erroneously called a home guard regiment. They acted under the police authority until Colonel Otter came in there in command of the militia, and they then connected themselves with the militia force. Some of them were detailed for the Cut Knife fight. They were not allowed any artisan pay. During the time they were under arms they were regular militia. They were not dismissed or disbanded, but they received a notice to the effect that their services were dispensed with until further required. Up to this time, three years after this occurred, these men have retained their arms and have never been disbanded, and they have been paid as regular militia, and the amounts so paid can be found in the report of the Auditor General. They were not protecting their own property, because that was already lost, but they were simply acting as valiant and patriotic citizens, fighting for the establishment of law and order in the North-West. They were erroneously called home guards, and because of that, it has been decided that they were not entitled to the same reward as the other militia who fought in the North-West. They did regular militia duty. It is true that they were not in the field, though they were detailed for the expedition to Cut Knife; and, simply because it was found that too many had been detailed for that expedition, these men were left out. They were and they still are in every respect regular militia up to to-day. I think these men ought to receive scrip. They ought to receive some reward for their patriotic conduct, as well as every militia man who left the older Provinces of Canada to fight for their country. I myself am familiar with their daily life and habits, and I know that no more intelligent men could have been employed for such duties. They were familiar with the country, and on this account were especially useful. They did their duty, as the militia did theirs, and therefore I think that the Minister of Militia should recognise their services by granting them scrip in the same manner as scrip has been awarded to other militia men. I also desire to say a few words in favor of the mounted police, which force supplied a certain number of men who were in the field. I consider that the North-West Mounted Police has a special claim on the Parliament of Canada for recognition, because many years ago when the force only consisted of some 350 men, they went across the whole of that wild territory and encountered what were considered as the most dangerous tribes of Indians, the Blackfeet and Piegans, and established with them such friendly relations that they were enabled to enforce the law of the white men amongst them without the shedding of blood. The newspapers of that day throughout Canada were filled with accounts concerning a single officer of the mounted police with, perhaps, two or three men at the outside, who had gone into a large Indian camp of two or three thousand Indians, and arrested some of the chiefs who had committed an outrage against the law of the country, but these policemen have not received any scrip, although they did their part in the field at the time of the insurrection, in common with the militia and the volunteers, who have received their reward. It may be urged that the police are not entitled to scrip because they are organised and paid for defending the interests of the country in the North-West, whereas the militia was sent from the older Provinces, and therefore, as it were, sent into a foreign land. But I believe that if we look at the custom in England we shall find that, when any great vote is taken in Parliament, the officers and men of the Indian army participate in the reward as much as the officers and men of any of the regiments which are sent out to India, therefore, on the same ground, I think the mounted police ought to participate with the regular militia in receiving scrip and medals. I am also in favor of recognising their services on the ground that to the mounted police, to a great extent, is due the credit of having kept the peace of the country for so many years. The Indian Department was not established for many years after the mounted police had gone into the North-West, and to that small body of men is due the sole credit of having preserved the peace among the Indian population; therefore I hope the mounted police will also be considered whenever the case is re-opened.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I object to this on the point of order. It involves a public charge if the motion succeeds.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. My impression is that it is merely an abstract affirmation, not proposing a definite charge. In that sense it cannot be objectionable.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think Parliament pledges itself to anything.

Mr. WELSH. The Government, no doubt, will take the matter under consideration. I shall support any motion for rewarding the services of any person having a just claim against the country. Although I do not know the particulars of this case, I think it ought to be well considered by the Government.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The point of order which the hon. gentleman raised, it seems to me, is a little more than an abstract motion. As the motion was originally submitted to the House it read:

"That it is desirable that no delay should take place in settling the just and honorable claims of those who were engaged, &c."

Now, it has been amended so as to read "That it is desirable the unsettled claims of those who were engaged should be reconsidered," the hon. Minister having previously stated that he had considered and rejected them. The House now affirms that it is desirable his decision should be reversed. I think if we look at the amended form of the motion, there is a little more in it than a mere abstract affirmation of an abstract principle. It really and practically pledges the House to the proposition that the judgment already given by the hon. Minister is a wrong one, and the House thinks that the claims ought to be reconsidered in the sense which the House is now affirming, that is, by allowing them. It would be tantamount to an instruction to the hon. Minister to pay these claims.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, the motion states that the best consideration should be given to the subject again, otherwise it would mean that the previous decision was wrong and should be reversed. This does not say so; it simply says that the question should be reconsidered. I do not suppose there is any harm in reconsidering it. It certainly does not bind Parliament to anything, although I must say that abstract resolutions, generally, should not be encouraged.

Mr. LAURIER. What are these claims for?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have not the slightest idea.

Mr. DAVIN. I may inform the leader of the Opposition that in one case there is an alleged legal claim under 48 and 49 Victoria, for scrip, and in the other case there are claims on behalf of scouts and teamsters for land warrants and scrip. These claims have not been acknowledged by the Minister, and the resolution affirms that the question as to whether these claims should be admitted or not, should be reconsidered. It does not pledge the House to any charge whatever.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know on what principle the hon. gentleman who moves this motion, proposes that teamsters who, if I remember aright, were engaged at daily salaries, should be entitled to scrip for their services in putting down the rebellion. Our scouts, police and volunteers have good grounds to be considered, but the hon. gentleman just mentioned the class of teamsters. Well, I for one, unless better advised, would object to allowing teamsters—who, as I say, received daily wages probably, four or five times in excess of those of the volunteers—scrip for their services. I do not see on what principle it could be defended.

Mr. DAVIN. If they have no claim, the claim would not be allowed. But there is the case of a teamster who was actually under fire, who fought as gallantly at Cut Knife as any of our soldiers, and I say that a case like that ought to be considered. Of course, if the Minister is bound by the Act, he cannot go outside of it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I presume the question of order will not be seriously pressed. In regard to the point raised by the hon. gentleman in the motion: as there appears to be some discontent, or rather some claims which it is said have not been fully considered, I do not see any harm that can arise from having those cases reopened and reconsidered, and if a good case in an individual instance or cases covering a number of individuals can be established, and if it is shown that just claims have been neglected they will be granted.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman has changed his tactics: there is disallowance in the North-West.

Motion agreed to.

POST OFFICE AT INGOLDSBY STATION.

Mr. BARRON moved for:

Return of all petitions and correspondence asking for or relating to establishing a Post Office at Ingoldsby Station, on the line of the Victoria Railway, in the Township of Snowden, in the County of Haliburton.

He said: My object in submitting this motion is not only to obtain the papers requested, but to draw the attention of the House and especially of the Postmaster General to what the people of North Victoria consider to be a grievance, the fact of their having been neglected so far as postal facilities are concerned. In the particular case covered by the motion I am told that the post office at Ingoldsby has been moved to a distance of two or three miles nearer the other post offices, the consequence of which has been that the people who hitherto have been accustomed to have the post office at the station have no accommodation without going a considerable distance. If that was the only case in North Victoria I would perhaps be inclined to think that the fault rested with the people themselves—that they were complaining too much, as I am afraid some people are in the habit of unnecessarily complaining; but I find that in several other cases in North Victoria, since I have had the honor of representing the riding, the people have not received the attention they should have obtained in so far as postal facilities are concerned at the hand of the Government and especially of the Postmaster General. In regard to this particular case I request permission of the House to read a portion of one of the letters I have received, for I have received a great many on this particular subject, from a very prominent gentleman in that locality. He writes :

" We petitioned the Postmaster General about the 1st November. A paper was sent me by Mr. Griffin, of Kingston, Post Office Inspector, asking certain questions which I answered, but we hear no more about the matter. Our Ingoldsby post office is now half a mile further removed towards Minden, and is of little use to us, Haliburton and Gelert being more in the line of business. Ingoldsby Station is the proper place for a post office, and it is only a matter of time as to its being located there. From this point the mail should be carried to Ingoldsby and also to Allsaw post office. It would accommodate about thirty-six families, and since the post office at Ingoldsby has been removed west, a large number on the telegraph road are as anxious as those in Egypt to have the new office established."

Not only have the people reason to complain at not having their request complied with, but they have special reason to complain that they can obtain no reply to their petition. One would suppose that the Government, acting like business people, would say yes or no to any request sent in. It would be imagined that the Postmaster General would have the matter investigated, and if it was a proper request to be granted he would accede to it, and if not he would decline; but it appears that the petitioners have not been able in this case, and I know the same has occurred in other cases, to obtain any decision one way or the other. Hon. gentlemen opposite seem to be perfectly dumb so far as answering requests made by the people are concerned, at all events so far as regards granting better postal facilities. I do not think that is a proper course to pursue. I do not say that all the complaints made from time to time are justified, I am free to confess that people are apt to complain sometimes when there is no ground for complaint; but when the people ask for better postal accommodation they should be answered one way or the other, either yes or no, as business men would do in their own private transactions.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman has read a letter referring to the post office mentioned in the motion, and I may say the matter was referred to the inspector to make inquiries respecting the post office at Ingoldsby. All applications that come to me for increased postal facilities or new offices or new postal routes are sent to the post office inspectors to report upon, and if the reports are at all favorable the petitions are granted. The report in regard to this post office has not yet been laid before me; when it is I will give a decision either yes or no.

Mr. BARRON. You have had it since last November.

Mr. McLELAN. It was in February when the petition was sent in.

Mr. BARRON. No; it was in November last, and the letter was written in February.

Mr. McLELAN. The inspector may have delayed it until the time of the writing of that letter. However, the papers will be brought down.

Motion agreed to.

FRAUDULENT PRACTICES ON FARMERS.

Mr. BROWN moved :

That a special committee be appointed to enquire into the fraudulent practices which have prevailed, and still prevail, in various parts of the Dominion, by which farmers have been and are induced to give their promissory notes and securities to a very large amount in the aggregate, for seed, agricultural implements, and other goods and merchandise, by various false pretexts; the goods in some cases never being delivered, and in other cases being comparatively worthless, the makers of such promissory notes being obliged to make payment, while the perpetrators of these wrongs evade justice; and that such committee have power to send for persons, papers, and records, and be instructed to report what remedies exist in such cases, or what further remedies should be provided,—said Committee to be composed of the following: Messrs. Amyot, Barron, Brown, Carpenter, Cochrane, Desjardins, Fisher, Hill, Henderson, McMullen, Marshall, Mills (Annapolis), Montcrieff, Rowand, Smith (Ontario), Wells, Wood (Brockville).

Mr. BARRON.

He said: This resolution speaks for itself. The press has taken up this subject of frauds on farmers. It is very well known that frauds to an enormous extent are perpetrated on farmers all over the country in respect to seed wheat, farm implements, hay rakes and goods of all descriptions. These persons evade the law with great ingenuity, and the object of my motion is to appoint a committee with a view to endeavor, if possible, to ascertain some means by which this evil can be remedied and the farmers be saved from being swindled by these rascals going through the country. I would have offered remarks at greater length except for the fact that it is almost six o'clock and I desire the resolution to be placed before the House and allow the Committee to get to work.

Mr. LAURIER. Before this motion is adopted I should like to know if the Government has anything to say on this question. First of all, I do not know how far we would have jurisdiction in this matter. Of course, if the offence is made criminal, that would bring it within the scope of our powers. I think it will strike the hon. gentleman and the Premier himself that we cannot appoint this committee at this late stage of the Session, with any hope of a possibility of making it a success, or even satisfactory.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I do not know if the First Minister is aware that a commission has been appointed by the Ontario Government to examine into this matter as far as the Province of Ontario is concerned?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I was not aware of it but I am glad they have done so. I do not think that the appointment of this commission would interfere with the Ontario Commission. My hon. friend seems to think that at this period of the Session the committee cannot do much. They could enquire at all events into the extent to which those fraudulent practices prevail. I understand from information that has come before me, although it has not been specially pressed on my notice, that those fraudulent practices do prevail to a very large and lamentable extent, and that our farmers are being continually robbed and plundered by such practices. I think it would be an assistance to any commission that is sitting, if the extent of those fraudulent practices was ascertained. If they are frauds of course they are misdemeanors and they can only be dealt with as such by this Legislature.

Mr. LAURIER. If the motion is to be adopted I would suggest that Mr. Barron should be placed on the committee, with the consent of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no objection.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) If this question is to be examined into I may say that those regrettable practices to which the hon. gentleman refers, prevail to a large extent in Prince Edward Island. The hon. gentleman has hardly a man from the Maritime Provinces on the committee at all, and I think it is desirable that the Maritime Provinces should be more extensively represented on it. Unless you have a member from Prince Edward Island, you cannot get any information as to the extent to which the evil prevails there.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I wish to make the same remark as regards New Brunswick. Extensive frauds prevail in that Province, but in something of a different line from those in Ontario.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Hale and Mr. Mills of Annapolis are on the committee. We can put Captain Welsh on, and have the rule suspended so as to add those additional names.

Mr. WELSH. I wish to make a few remarks, Mr. Speaker. Since the intention of the Government is to sail ships on dry land, I am going to drop my naval title and take that of major—major in the army, as there are quite a number here, and really I think I could put my claim for colonel.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You are a young man, you have not attained your majority yet.

Motion agreed to.

After Recess.

CLAIM OF JAMES KING.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. On 16th April last a committee was appointed on a motion made by the hon. member for Pictou (Mr. Tupper) in the absence of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), to investigate the claim of James King. According to the motion, the mover was to be a member of the committee. Of course, it was the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) who was intended, and not the hon. member for Pictou. Therefore, I move that the name of Mr. Weldon of St. John, be placed on the committee instead of that of Mr. Tupper.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT AMENDMENTS.

Mr. TISDALE moved that Bill (No. 6) to amend the Canada Temperance Act (Mr. McCarthy) be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for further consideration.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the object?

Mr. TISDALE. The object, so far as I am concerned, is to make some verbal amendments in section 9, which was added to the Bill on my motion. It was drafted rather hurriedly, and it is necessary to change some words in it, which will not change its principle, in order to give it effect.

Mr. HAGGART. The further object, of course, is to add the amendments, of which I gave notice, to the Bill of the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson). I propose to move the addition to this Bill. Its object is to allow chemists and druggists and doctors to sell certain official preparations.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. HAGGART. I beg to move the following amendment:

Provided also, that nothing in this Act shall be held to interfere with the purchase or sale, by legally qualified physicians, chemists or druggists, of the following articles, that is to say:

1. The official preparations of the authorized pharmacopoeas when made of full medicinal strength, and sold only for medicinal purposes.
2. Physicians' prescriptions containing spirituous liquors if sold in quantities of not more than ten ounces at any time.
3. Any patent medicine, unless such patent medicine is known to the vendor to be capable of being used as a beverage, the sale of which is a violation of "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878."
4. Eau de Cologne, bay rum, or other articles of perfumery, lotions, extracts, varnishes, tinctures or other pharmaceutical preparations containing alcohol, but not intended for use as beverages.
5. Alcohol or methylated spirits, for pharmaceutical, chemical or mechanical uses.

Each such sale to be recorded in a book kept for the purpose, giving the name and address of the purchaser, the quantity and name of liquor, the medical man prescribing the same, the purpose for which it is required, and the said book to be open for inspection by the county inspector under the Canada Temperance Act at all times.

Mr. EDGAR. Does the hon. member for North Lanark consider the amendments desirable and proper?

Mr. JAMIESON. I have voted against these amendments before and am still prepared to oppose them, because I think that the facilities for the sale of liquor now are too great, and they ought to be curtailed rather than enlarged. The first amendment, that which allows medical men to dispense liquor in shops, is directly opposed to the spirit of the Act. The Act provides that when liquors are required, (sub section 4, section 99) for medical purposes, they can be procured on the certificate of a medical man having no interest in the sale. Under the proposed amendment, a medical man can prescribe in violation of the spirit of this clause of this Act, and I fear it will open the door to abuses much wider than it is opened at present. The committee should hesitate before opening any wider door, under the Scott Act, for the purpose of permitting the sale of intoxicating liquor. Now, with regard to the sale of pharmaceutical preparations, I am not aware of any case, nor do I know that the hon. member for South Lanark is aware of any, where difficulty has arisen under the law, as it now stands. I am not aware that any chemist or druggist, in Ontario at all events, has been prosecuted for the violation of the Act. It seems to me that the better authority is that at present many of those preparations can be sold without constituting a violation of the Canada Temperance Act. I am informed that, some years ago, an opinion was procured by some of the chemists of Ontario that the sale of some of the preparations mentioned in this amendment would be a violation of the law, but I do not think that there is a single instance of a prosecution having been had under the Act, and it will be time enough, when a difficulty arises under this section, to discuss the advisability of an amendment such as the one proposed. Throughout the whole Dominion the contention is that there are too many facilities for the sale of liquor; and in the interest of the Canada Temperance Act, it would not be at all wise to pass the amendment suggested.

Mr. FISHER. I must take upon myself to oppose the amendments proposed by the hon. member for South Lanark. I am not aware whether that hon. gentleman gave notice that they would be introduced into this Bill at this stage, but I was under the impression that they were to be introduced into the Bill of the hon. member for North Lanark, which we are not now discussing. I do not believe, therefore, that these amendments are in order, but still I do not care to meet the hon. gentleman on that point, and would rather discuss his amendments on their merits. I fully endorse the words of the hon. member for North Lanark, who has just said that those who desire to violate the Scott Act have too great facilities for doing so, and that if there is any change to be made in the Scott Act, it ought rather to be made in the direction of giving those who wish to enforce it greater power to do so. Should the amendments of the hon. member for South Lanark be carried, every licensed chemist and druggist in a Scott Act county will be able to sell liquors for medicinal purposes, and a medical man will be able to sell them even on his own certificate. That I certainly take to be a monstrous proposition, and one which is unfair in every possible way. I do not know exactly how it is in Ontario, but I venture to say that, should these amendments be adopted, there would be a large increase in the number of druggists who have obtained that license or who have procured clerks that have obtained it. I believe this is not intended to supply the people with more chemicals or more drugs, but is simply intended to supply them with more liquor. I think this amendment is against the spirit of the Scott Act, and would be very detrimental to the working of the Scott Act. I believe it is the opinion of this House that the Scott Act should remain on our Statute-book, and, that being the case, I believe it is the duty of the House to maintain that Act in its integrity, and not to impede its working. I believe the result of this amendment would be disastrous to the working of the Act. We know that we had a very strong expression of opinion in the Province of Ontario not long ago against the Act, and I believe that that result is largely due to the fact that the people have found that the Act has not been properly worked, that they have not been able to enforce it; and I think, in view of that fact, this House should do nothing which would impede the working of the Act, or make it of less force. Therefore I call upon the committee to reject this amendment. I have no desire to interfere with trade, and, if it could be done without interfering with the working of the Act, I should be glad to allow upright druggists and chemists to carry on their business. That class of man thinks it is not fair that one druggist or chemist should have the right to sell these liquors for certain purposes when another, who is his rival, is not allowed to do so. When a deputation of those chemists and druggists came to me a short time ago, and asked me to support these amendments, I suggested to them that the best way to avoid what they complained of was that there should be no druggist or chemist given a license at all in any Scott Act county, and that in that case no one could complain that his rival had been unduly favored. I believe that suggestion has not been favorably received, and, therefore, I believe that the chemists and druggists are not in favor of what I suggested. While a large number of these gentlemen, no doubt, are honestly and rightly endeavoring to carry out the principles of the Act, there is a danger that this amendment may contribute towards the drinking of liquor in Scott Act counties, and, therefore, I cannot support it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I cannot agree with my hon. friend as to the effect of this amendment. The hon. member for North Lacombe (Mr. Jamieson) has admitted that in Scott Act counties the druggists have been selling large quantities of liquor, but none of them have been fined. I understand that these amendments simply provide that it shall be legal for druggists to sell these preparations. As I understand the object of these amendments, it is that medical men may have liquor to be used in the preparation of their medicines and may prescribe the use for their patients only. My hon. friend beside me (Mr. Fisher) thinks this may interfere with the working of the Scott Act. I have had letters from prominent supporters of the Scott Act in my county who have a different opinion. At present, one vendor has a license to sell liquor, and he is not allowed to sell anything less than 10 ounces. You can see that, where 1 oz or $\frac{1}{2}$ oz of liquor is prescribed, it becomes necessary to purchase 10 ozs. and that is kept in the house, because the Scott Act requires that a small quantity cannot be purchased. My hon. friend has referred to the unpopularity of the Act in many of the counties of Ontario. I feel that this is one of the reasons, because the Act has been found to work unfavorably in this respect. The committee will remember that, when this question was discussed on the same amendment in the Session of 1885, a legal opinion was furnished from a very distinguished legal firm in Ontario stating that, under the provisions of the Act, all druggists were liable to be prosecuted for selling the preparations referred to in these amendments, and that Mr. Blake at that time, in speaking to these amendments, stated that he was not prepared to disagree with that opinion, and for that reason he voted for the amendments which were similar to those now moved. Those amendments were then carried in this House by two to one, after being very carefully and fully considered. I think it would be in the interest of the community generally if these amendments were supported by temperance people in Scott Act counties and I hope the House will support them, as they did before, by a large majority.

Amendment negatived by 59 to 34.

Mr. HICKEY. I wish to propose another amendment. In some Scott Act counties where the Act has been repealed, there remains a large sum of money from the fines collected, and the counties have no authority for using the money under the law except for the enforcement of the Scott Act, and I move the following resolution to meet that difficulty:—

Mr. FISHER.

In counties in which the Canada Temperance Act shall have been repealed, such moneys as have been or shall be hereafter paid to any municipality for the purposes of the Act, under the provisions of the Order in Council dated 15th November, 1886, made in pursuance of the Act, 49 Vic., chap. 4, intitled: "An Act respecting the application of certain Fines and Forfeitures," shall be appropriated, first, to the payment of any expenses which may have been or may be hereafter incurred for the enforcement of the Act, and the balance, if any, shall be disposed of for county purposes:

(a) Such moneys as have been or shall be paid to the officers of any union of counties shall be distributed among the united counties for the payment of such expenses as aforesaid, pro rata according to the proportion of fines collected in each of the united counties."

Mr. ROOME. Would it not be well that that should apply to all counties? In the county of Middlesex there is a large sum of money in the hands of the treasurer, and we want some way of distributing it among the people from whom it was taken. Why should our case not be included in that motion, until that Act is repealed in the county? I hope the Scott Act will be so amended that it will not require to be repealed in Middlesex; at the same time we want some way of disposing of that money.

Mr. SCRIVER. If I understand the meaning of that amendment, I do not think it is framed so as to meet the hon. gentleman's object. He says: "in the counties where the Act shall have been repealed." I understand him to refer to the counties in which the Act has been repealed as well.

Mr. HICKEY. Where the Act has been repealed; I do not say anything about the counties where it is to be repealed. In our counties there is a sum of money that cannot be appropriated until we have power from this Parliament to dispose of it. It must remain there for the enforcement of the Scott Act, and there is no Scott Act in force.

The CHAIRMAN. It is proposed to make the amendment read "in counties in which the Canada Temperance Act has been repealed, or shall hereafter be repealed."

Mr. JAMIESON. I do not know how that will consort with the statute passed last Session in the Ontario Legislature. I do not remember just now the provisions of that Act, but there was an Act passed last session providing for the appropriation of money which was paid in under the Canada Temperance Act. Of course that amendment goes this far, that before there is any surplus to be paid over to the county for county purposes, all claims upon the funds for the enforcement of the law must be fully met. It is only, as I understand, with reference to the balance which may remain in the hands of the county treasurer after all these claims are met. As the money came from the people of the county it was not an unreasonable proposition that it should be returned to them, that is provided there is a safeguard.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). It strikes me that, however this money came into the hands of the county treasurer, this Parliament has no jurisdiction to legislate as to how the money should be applied. It is wholly a matter that falls within the jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislature.

Mr. HICKEY. The Act of 1886 provided that fines under the Scott Act were payable for the public use of Canada. Then an Order in Council provided that municipalities should make use of the fines for the enforcement of the Act, and they must be relieved and authority obtained to expend it for other purposes.

Mr. TISDALE. From the discussion that has already arisen there is evidently some doubt in regard to this amendment. While I have no objection to any amendment being fully considered by the committee, I hardly think it is fair to the Bill that, when all the clauses up to the ninth have been passed without any serious objection being offered, anything should be done that would tend to prevent the Bill passing both Houses, so that it might come into force immediately. A discussion has arisen on the amendment, and doubts have been raised as to the jurisdiction of this Parliament. Under these circumstances I would ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw it, and have it discussed on the Bill next on the Order paper.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is of importance that this Bill now before the committee should pass, and there should not be attached to it any resolution of this kind. I do not mean to speak in favor or against it, or say whether it is good or bad; but there is considerable doubt in respect to it, and it perhaps may lead to the Bill being lost. I think, therefore, the hon. gentleman should withdraw his motion for the present.

Mr. FISHER. I hope the First Minister will not act differently now from the way he acted a few minutes ago in regard to the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart). He allowed clauses which were protested against most emphatically to pass without remonstrance, and now, when an amendment is moved by the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey), he objects to its passing, while the only objection raised has been a purely technical objection, not an objection against the principle of the Bill, whereas in the other case there was a most emphatic protest against the principle, not only by members on this side, but from hon. gentlemen opposite. That motion the hon. gentleman allowed to pass without an objection.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Because I was in favor of it.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. gentleman is quite willing to support the introduction of amendments when he is in favor of them, but when he is not in favor of them he objects. I understood the First Minister was not going to express an opinion as to whether he was in favor or against this amendment, but that he objected to it on the general principle that it was introducing extraneous matter, which was apparently quite within the power of the House. The hon. gentleman has made fish of one and flesh of another.

Mr. TISDALE. Hon. gentlemen have mistaken my suggestion. In regard to this amendment there is a doubt as to whether we have jurisdiction.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Where is the doubt?

Mr. TISDALE. There is a question as to our dealing with the funds, there is a doubt raised as to whether we have the right to interfere in that matter—I am not saying whether we have the right or not. In the other case it was purely a question of principle, and that amendment was therefore one which the committee could deal with. In this case, however, the question of jurisdiction has been raised.

Mr. LISTER. How do you argue any doubt in the matter?

Mr. TISDALE. Not any further than that one hon. gentleman has doubted about the disposition of the money and another member has pointed out that in the Province of Ontario there is already some law dealing with the funds. I am not deciding whether these doubts have any foundation or not, but hon. gentlemen have raised them and have raised the question of jurisdiction. For these reasons I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw the motion so as not to have in the Bill any provisions about which there is question.

Mr. JAMIESON. I referred a few moments ago to an Act passed at the last Session of the Ontario Legislature. The statutes are not issued yet, but I read a copy of the Bill a few days ago. My recollection of it is that all moneys which were paid in for fines and forfeitures to the county treasurer under the Canada Temperance Act were appropriated under the Act for certain purposes, one of which was payment for a police magistrate for the county for the purpose of enforcing the law and the balance was applied for payment of the inspector and certain other purposes. I am sorry I cannot place my hand on the Act, but its terms might perhaps be seen in the Ontario Gazette; but the most serious objection I see to the amendment is the fact that these moneys are already appropriated specially in Ontario under the law to which I have made reference.

Mr. HICKEY. In deference to the opinion of the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), who I greatly respect, I withdraw the amendment.

Amendment withdrawn.

Committee reported.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The effect of that amendment has hardly been considered by everybody. I think the hon. gentleman in charge of the Bill might say it will be read to-morrow.

Mr. TISDALE. That would do, if the hon. gentleman is prepared to take the responsibility of saying that this Bill should not pass this Session.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Why?

Mr. TISDALE. Because there is no other day. The Government have all the other days.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not object if that is the case. Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

PROTECTION OF RAILWAY EMPLOYÉS.

The Order being called, House in committee on Bill (No. 5) for the protection of railway employés.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. McCarthy had charge of this Bill, but I believe it was understood it would be taken up in connection with the Government Bill on railways. I move that the Order be discharged, and that said Bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on Bill No. 24—the general Bill on railways.

Motion agreed to.

CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 10) to amend the Canada Temperance Act.—(Mr. Jamieson.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 5,

Mr. JAMIESON. There has been an amendment inserted in the Bill of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), which renders this amendment unnecessary, and I will therefore ask the permission of the committee to strike out that clause, and re-number the other clauses in the section.

On section 6,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. member explain the change?

Mr. JAMIESON. In this clause there are two changes from the original text. One change has reference to the quantity of liquor which may be prescribed. Under the Act not less than one pint can be prescribed, and we propose to leave the quantity in the discretion of the medical man. There is no necessity I think for limiting the prescriptions to a pint, because in many cases much less than a pint would be sufficient. The next change in this clause imposes a penalty on a medical man giving a colorable or fraudulent certificate. Those are the two changes from the original text.

Mr. TISDALE. If the hon. gentleman proposes that the law shall remain, that there shall be no appeal from the decision of a magistrate in offences under the Scott Act, as there is in every other class of offences, I shall object to this clause. If he consents to eliminate this from the Bill I shall not oppose this clause. I do not believe that the class of men, such as the physicians and surgeons of this country are, should be subject to be taken up, and fined or imprisoned on the decision of magistrates who will have absolute jurisdiction in those matters if there be no appeal. If the hon. gentleman will consent that we may amend the original Act, by giving the same right of appeal as there is in all other offences under the general laws of the country, then I have no objection to this clause. If he will not do that I must move that part of it which proposes a penalty on physicians or surgeons shall be struck out of the Act. I contend that if the general laws of the land are not sufficient to ensure justice in all classes of offences of a like nature, then we should amend the general laws of the land. I do not believe that in temperance, or any other legislation, exceptional laws should put power that may injure the character and reputation of a man, in the hands of a class of magistrates who under this class of legislation would be the sole judges. From such experience of judgments and decisions as I have seen to my personal knowledge, where according to any light that I have, and that any reasonable man would have, of what the law of evidence should be, that a doctor should be, without appeal, taken up, and fined, his reputation blasted and in some cases sent to gaol if he does not pay the penalty, solely at the will of the magistrate, whether there is any evidence to support the charge or not. If the hon. gentleman will leave this Canada Temperance Act as it is, I shall do as I did last Session; I shall vote that it remains on the Statute-book, in all those counties where it is declared by the will of the people to be in force, until they have a chance to repeal it, as I believe they will do, as they did in my county after an experience of three years. I object to giving this star chamber power, and I will oppose any clause that gives such special power to any court, without the same right of appeal that is to be had in other cases. Therefore, I move, unless the hon. gentleman will say that he will consent to have that struck out of the other Act, that all that part of the section that imposes a penalty on these physicians shall be struck out of the Act.

Mr. JAMIESON. I do not quite understand the drift of the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down in reference to the right of appeal. If the hon. gentleman examines the Canada Temperance Act, he will find that when a conviction is made before two ordinary magistrates or justices of the peace, there is the usual right of appeal. It is only where the conviction is made by a stipendiary magistrate or a police magistrate, who ordinarily has the power of two justices of the peace, that there is no appeal. Now, I think that the safeguards which are already thrown around the rights of parties who may be prosecuted under the law are quite sufficient. I grant that if one ordinary justice of the peace had power without appeal to convict, there would be something in the contention of the hon. gentleman; but inasmuch as there is an appeal from the decision of two justices of the peace, and in other respects the prosecution must be before a stipendiary magistrate or some officer having the authority of two justices of the peace, I think the hon. gentleman's contention falls to the ground. So far as the medical profession are concerned, this is not a slur cast on respectable medical men. I have no doubt that every medical man in this House, who occupies an honorable position in his profession, will fairly consider this amendment, and say that it is not unreasonable; but there are in the medical profession, as well as in every other profession, black sheep, and we have to provide against them. Why, not longer ago than this afternoon I was informed of a case in the Province of Ontario, of a medical man who had lost caste in his profession, who was in the habit of giving certificates for two or three gallons of liquor to persons keeping houses of public entertainment. It is for the purpose of meeting cases of this character that this amendment is required, and I earnestly hope that the committee will stand by it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I support entirely the view taken by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale). The hon. gentleman who has just spoken says there is an appeal from two justices of the peace, and that there is no appeal from a stipendiary magistrate. If the principle is good in the one case, it is in the other. I know from my own personal knowledge that stipendiary magistrates have decided on evidence which the judges of the Supreme Court declared did not afford the slightest foundation for a conviction. If a stipendiary magistrate who is strong in his views chooses to enforce the Act strictly, and without due regard to the evidence, the party who fails has to bear the consequences; and we all know that when a case goes before a higher tribunal, although the judges themselves may feel that they would have come to a different conclusion if they had tried the case in the first instance, they generally do not interfere with the judgment of the court that had the witnesses before it. I think it is in the interest of justice and the liberty of the subject that that section should be repealed, and I will cordially support the motion of the hon. member for South Norfolk. But I agree with him in his suggestion that, if the hon. member for North Lanark will agree to that section being struck out of the Canada Temperance Act, this section might go as it is.

Mr. TISDALE. With the permission of the committee, I will withdraw the amendment, because it would, perhaps, be wiser and fairer, on the whole, that to these clauses should be added a clause, which I will draw afterwards, giving the right of appeal which is provided for ordinary proceedings by the Summary Convictions Act, in all cases of penalty under the Scott Act. I have no objection to fining anybody who offends against the principle of the Act, provided that the fine can only be enforced under the ordinary laws of the land. In moving such an amendment, I am quite prepared to take all the responsibility of it. I believe that in the Legislature, as in other places, a man should have the courage of his convictions; and while I wish to be understood as being a temperate and a temperance man, I am not a total abstainer, and I think there are thousands of men in this community who are as earnest in their convictions in one way as I give the hon. gentleman credit for being earnest in his way; and in this or any other free country, where exceptional legislation is attempted on the ground that it is necessary to the Act, you may depend upon it that the sentiments of the people are so much against that Act that you cannot enforce it under the ordinary laws of the land. That being the case, I ask the temperance men to pause, in the cause of temperance, because, as the recent nine elections have illustrated, the majority of the people believing in temperance, many of them in prohibition, have found by experience, by attempting to enforce the Act by this class of magistrates, by star chambers, as I call them, by such scenes of perjury in the courts, and riots in the community, such going back on the quietness and the temperance that had existed before, that they rose in those counties and repealed the Act that had operated so badly. I believe that freedom is guarded by making general laws for the enforcement of crime. Therefore, if I were alone in my contention, I would say, change the general laws of the country if they are not sufficient to punish crime; do not give exceptional powers, for the moment you do you impair the liberty of the general classes of the community by allowing any one class to say that exceptional offences shall be enforced by other than the ordinary safeguards which all free countries say should be open, namely, the ordinary right of appeal. I feel this strongly for this reason: I have given some attention to the question of jurisprudence, and I have always found, as far as I have been able to examine it—and particularly in the history of this temperance question as illustrated in the neighboring Republic where the same kind of legislation has been tried—that the result has been that, in the end, the general tendency to settle difficulties on broad general principles has been more effective than any exceptional legislation entrusted to any special class of men. Therefore, if the Scott Act can be enforced by applying the same general principles to it as are applied in the enforcement of any other class of criminal offences, surely it is a mistake to try and restrict the application of those principles by any special provision of this sort. If the general laws of the country dealing with crime are not strong enough to meet the class of offences enumerated in this Act, let us then discuss the advisability of changing the general law, but let us not have one special law applicable to one class of offences and another to another.

Mr. LISTER. Will you submit your amendment?

Mr. TISDALE. I submit the spirit of it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The first proposition of the hon. gentleman, if applied, would render the whole section null, and I understand him to withdraw that proposition. If the hon. gentleman would confine himself to an amendment declaring that an appeal should lie from a conviction under this section, I would perhaps feel inclined to support it; but his argument, if good for anything, went to show that the Act should be entirely repealed. If his amendment, the spirit of which, he says, he has given to the House, should carry, the result would be to strike a severe blow at the enforcement of the Act altogether. The hon. gentleman knows that witnesses, who can be obtained for summary conviction, are not the class of people who will wait three or four months until an appeal can be heard; and if you give an appeal in all cases, you will find that in fifty per cent. of them the witnesses will not be forthcoming, as they will either have been spirited away or will have business elsewhere. Experience has shown that where an appeal lies from a summary conviction, it is almost impossible to get, after a delay of three or four months, the witnesses at all. We have had some experience of the working of the Summary Convictions Act before stipendiary magistrates, and I think that the people, in the Maritime Provinces at any rate, have sufficient confidence in those magistrates as judges of the fact to dispense with the necessity for an appeal. Should these magistrates go beyond their jurisdiction, the proceedings can be reviewed by means of a writ of certiorari in the Superior Court; and it would be a great mistake to adopt the amendment suggested by the hon. member unless we would repeal the Act altogether.

Mr. TISDALE. As far as this particular offence is concerned, I will accept the hon. gentleman's suggestion, but I wish him to understand that at a later period, I will, if some one else does not, move to repeal that section.

Mr. JAMIESON. I wish to say in reply to the hon. member for South Norfolk that, as stated by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I., it would be more advisable for him to move for the repeal of the law altogether. Any person who has anything to do with the enforcement of the law, knows that a very great difficulty arises in procuring the attendance of witnesses and in securing a conviction at all; and even if an appeal should be permitted from the decision of the stipendiary magistrate, or police magistrate, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, there would be scarcely a witness procurable at the time of the appeal. If the magistrate exceeds his jurisdiction or acts without jurisdiction, there is already, on general principles, the right to remove the conviction by certiorari, and have it quashed if it is in any way irregular, and, as a general rule, the police magistrates and stipendiary magistrates are men versed in the law and of considerable experience in the working of the law, so that in very few cases has there been any injustice done by them. The fact of the matter is that great difficulty has been experienced in securing a conviction, even in cases in which everybody is convinced that an infringement of the law has taken place. So far as cases where the character of a medical man is involved, are concerned, I would not object, although I have not heard of any cases of that kind, to an appeal being had to the judge sitting in Chambers; as regards the Province of Ontario, and in the other Provinces, with whose legal machinery I am not familiar, there might be an appeal to some court of appellate jurisdiction. But I am certainly opposed in toto to allowing an appeal generally.

Mr. ROOME. Being one of those who would be affected by this clause of the Act, I must say I agree to a great extent with the hon. member for Lanark. It is evident that the Scott Act has not been working in the interests of the temperance cause or it would not have been repealed, as it has been a few weeks ago, in so many counties. Therefore it is right this House should try to amend that act so as to make it workable. In this case, I admit there are some medical men who assist in the violation of that Act. I have seen during the past year many cases in which physicians had prescribed liquor by the gallon at a time, which liquor was afterwards sold by the parties who had obtained it. We ought therefore to put some clause in the Act whereby such physicians will be amenable to punishment. Such a clause would not apply to physicians who carry out the law, but there are in the medical profession, as in every other, men who endeavor to evade the law, and with these we should have some mode of dealing. I propose to move the following amendment in respect to the offences by this clause enacted:—"appeal will lie as in the ordinary cases under the Summary Convictions Act." That will give us a chance to prevent this abuse of which I have spoken. I would not like to place myself in the hands of the magistracy of the country to any great extent without a chance of an appeal. There are some of them whom I do not consider trustworthy and at times it might not be safe for medical men to be placed at their mercy if deprived of that right. By an appeal we would have some safeguard against an unjust decision. One of the great drawbacks to the working of the Scott Act has been the arbitrary action of justices of the peace and stipendiary magistrates, and I venture to say that, if it is carried out in that way, it will be repealed in every county in Canada. It is on that ground that I move this amendment.

Mr. FISHER. I think it would be dangerous to introduce a clause by which the trial of medical men would be made appealable from the decision of the stipendiary magistrate. We have a good deal of difficulty in carrying out the provisions of the Act, and I think it is most important that the working of the Act should be as simple as possible. If an appeal is allowed in certain cases, and no appeal lies in similar cases, it would be very difficult to decide in which case it should be allowed and in which case it should not be allowed. I think the present provision is quite sufficient, that there should be an appeal from the decision of two ordinary magistrates, but it is a different thing when the case is tried before a stipendiary magistrate. The stipendiary magistrates are generally men who are well known as lawyers, and their ability to try such cases is well known. They are generally of the same class as that from which police magistrates are chosen in cities to try cases under the Summary Convictions Act, and I think that is a sufficient safeguard to prevent the necessity of an appeal. I am not a lawyer, and I do not propose to deal with this from a technical or legal standpoint, but, knowing the difficulties which exist in regard to prosecutions under this Act, I should be sorry to see any weakening of the mode by which these prosecutions are carried out. The hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Roome) has admitted that many medical men have lent themselves to the breaking of the Act, and I think it would be in the interests of the profession to have any such men punished for such a heinous crime as a deliberate breaking of the law.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). My hon. friend speaks of the stipendiary magistrates being lawyers, but, in my Province at all events, except in the city of St. John, as a rule they are not. Perhaps they are superior to and more experienced than justices of the peace, but at the same time they have extreme views in many cases; and cases have occurred, where, in spite of clear evidence to the contrary, they have convicted parties in a way which would not stand in any ordinary court of justice. If the principle of appeal is correct in one case, it is correct in all cases, and no man should be deprived of that right unless in some matter of exigency, where the private right should yield for public reasons. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) speaks of an appeal involving a re-hearing. I do not agree with him in that, but I think the party should be allowed to have the decision revised by a superior tribunal. The general rule is that the Superior Court will not interfere with the decision of the magistrate except where the evidence is of such a character or is so weak as to show that the magistrate had wrongly convicted. When we come to the case of medical men and make them amenable to a fine, I do not think they should be subject altogether to the decision of one magistrate without any appeal or without any opportunity to have the decision revised by a superior tribunal. The question is, is the power to appeal a right one? If it is in other cases just that the parties should have the right to appeal to a higher tribunal, surely it is just in this case also.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I would suggest this amendment:

Provided that the 119th section of the said Act, taking away the appeal, shall not apply to any such conviction of a medical man.

Mr. LANDRY. Will that allow the appeal to go before the County Court, or will it necessitate the question going again before the jury?

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) It simply takes away the prohibition contained in the 119th section, declaring that no appeal shall lie from the decision of a stipendiary magistrate. The other clauses declare to what court the appeal lies, if it lies at all. There is another section of the Act, section 103, which declares how the prosecution shall be brought, and the subsequent sections declare how the appeal may be taken.

Mr. LANDRY. That is the Summary Convictions Act, and that will cause it to go before the jury again.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Not in our Province.

Mr. WELDON (St. John.) It might be by a writ of certiorari.

Mr. JAMIESON. We propose to repeal sub-section 4 of section 99, and that amendment might be held to apply to the whole section.

Amendment (Mr. Davies) agreed to.

Mr. HICKEY. I beg leave to move that the word "two" in line 31, be struck out and the word "one" be substituted therefor. At present the law requires that a man wanting liquor must get a certificate signed by two justices of the peace. This is frequently found to be very inconvenient, I propose that one justice of the peace be sufficient.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. JAMIESON. This is a part of the original Act, and we do not propose to change that. I think it ought to be allowed to remain in the state it is.

Mr. ROOME. I agree with the hon. member for Dundas (Mr. Hickey) that this should be changed. In many cases in rural sections of the country, a man may have to drive ten or twelve miles to find a second magistrate before he can purchase three or four ounces of alcohol. This inconvenience prejudices many men against the Temperance Act, and if it were removed the Act would be more popular.

Mr. FISHER. I must protest against this change in the Act. The original Act provided there should be two magistrates so as to give greater respectability to the court, and also to make sure that on no occasion should a magistrate be chosen who would be especially in the interest of the liquor party. It is very essential that a safeguard should be thrown not only around those who are prosecuted, but also around those who are prosecuting.

Mr. LISTER. There is no difficulty about working this section. There is no reason why the act should be changed from two magistrates to one magistrate, because if liquor is required for medicinal purposes the certificate of a magistrate is not required at all; if it is required for the purpose of art or manufacture, then and then only is a certificate required.

Mr. HICKEY. What is the good of two? Sometimes farmers come in and want to get whiskey to make whiskey pickles. I have been applied to frequently by people who do not know where to go, who do not know where the magistrates live, and perhaps they have to go two or three miles to hunt up two magistrates. Why bother people and compel them to hunt up two magistrates.

Mr. LISTER. I think my hon. friend will agree with me that the Act does not contemplate whiskey pickles at all.

Mr. HICKEY. It says art.

Mr. FISHER. At first I misunderstood the scope of this amendment, but I still object to it, although it has not the same force that I supposed at first. I think it would be very easy indeed, in many districts, to get one magistrate who would give a certificate for almost anything. We know that many magistrates are appointed without any particular care, and it would no doubt be easy to get a single magistrate to sign a certificate for anybody to get liquor.

Mr. HICKEY. If you can get one, you can get two.

Mr. LISTER. It is hardly likely there would be two of that kind of magistrates in the same district.

Amendment negatived.

On section 7,

Mr. JAMIESON. I find the courts have construed the law in such a way as to obviate the necessity for this section, and I would ask that it be struck out.

Section struck out.

On section 8,

Mr. JAMIESON. In this section we have made one general rule over the whole Dominion. Under the law as it at present stands there is a special rule for each Province. Now, I think the only official whose name has been omitted, of those before whom a prosecution can be brought, is that of the sheriff. In the Province of Ontario I am not aware that the sheriff has any judicial function, but I am told that in the Province of Quebec he has the authority of two justices of the peace. If that be so, they would still have jurisdiction under this section. It has been found that in many cases in the Province of Ontario, one officer named in the Act has ousted the jurisdiction of another. For instance, the mayor in a town has been held to oust the jurisdiction of a county magistrate, and this has led to a great deal of confusion, at all events in Ontario. I cannot speak with reference to the other Provinces.

Mr. LISTER. What is the nature of the section for which this is intended to be a substitute? I have explained that the original Act provides a special rule for each Province; it sets out the name of each magistrate, and this provision is to apply a general rule for the whole Dominion, at the same time making very little change in the law. I think the only change is omitting mayor and sheriff, and the mayor in Ontario has been held to possess a magistrate's jurisdiction.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The old section was specific and well understood. It was provided in each Province that prosecution should be brought before some civic officers named in the section. We knew exactly who they were, and no doubt had arisen as to jurisdiction. Now we are making a general provision to apply all over the Dominion, and it is very difficult to use such apt language that doubts cannot be raised in regard to its meaning. I see several points that might be raised.

Mr. LISTER. I agree with the hon. member who has just spoken, and I think it is a mistake in the interests of the Bill to press this section.

Mr. JAMIESON. I have gone carefully into the matter, in which I have had the assistance of some eminent legal gentlemen, and this section is the result of our deliberations, and we consider it will be a decided improvement.

On section 10,

Mr. MASSON. I object to this section in its present form. It is carrying the rule laid down in section 104 a little further, and to that I object. In Ontario—I cannot speak for the other Provinces—a few years ago a large number of magistrates were appointed at the request of the temperance people. By allowing the prosecutors to select from the magistrates of the county any two before whom to lay an information, and to confine the trial to those two magistrates so chosen, is to allow the prosecutors to select those whom they consider prejudiced in their favor, and the effect would be to shut out all the other magistrates of the county who have equal jurisdiction with them. Under section 104, where officials are of higher standing, such as the recorder and the police magistrate, they having in themselves the authority of two magistrates, information can be laid before them, as in section 104, a provision to which I have no objection; but where the prosecutors have power to go over a whole county and select two magistrates before whom to lay information—and I know of instances where information has been laid before magistrates twenty miles distant from the place where the offence was alleged to have been committed and the parties were dragged from one end of a large county to another—I think great injustice will be done. In such a case great hardship would be done if a prosecutor was allowed to select his own judges even though distant twenty, thirty or forty miles before whom the case should be tried, without there being an opportunity to ask other justices of the peace to sit with them.

Mr. LISTER. I do not think this section is at all necessary. It has been held, at all events in Ontario, that the justice of the peace before whom the information was laid is the justice who has the right to determine the subject-matter of the information; that while, as a matter of courtesy, he asks his brother justices to sit on the bench, still any judgment they may come to, if opposed to the one he arrives at, must fall and his judgment is the one that governs. I cannot agree with the contention that when an information was laid before one or two magistrates it would be wise to permit other magistrates to come in and sit on the bench with the magistrate before whom the information was laid. I remember cases in which justices of the peace—it happened more than once—who issued the information were overruled by magistrates who took seats on the bench in the interests of the accused, and who discharged a man who ought to have been convicted. One can readily see that, if what the hon. gentleman suggests is carried into effect, it is possible such a state of things would occur again, and it is infinitely better to entrust magistrates who have issued information in the case to deal with it rather than permit the accused to have his friends on the bench for the purpose, perhaps, of frustrating a proper decision. At all events I do not think the section is necessary.

Mr. MASSON. I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. gentleman that the section is unnecessary, and if it remains at all, the latter part should be struck out. If this was an ordinary case, there would be no reason to find fault, but if special legislation is to be enacted for the benefit of the prosecution in cases under the Act, the accused should have the same rights as in other cases.

Mr. JAMIESON. I do not quite understand the contention of the hon. gentleman, but every party who has any grievance and lays an information before a justice of the peace has the selection of his own tribunal. This is, therefore, not any innovation. You cannot oblige a man in case of an assault or any other case, to go to certain magistrates and lodge the information; he can go to any magistrate or justice of the peace in the county and lodge it. This clause is simply for the purpose of preventing a grievance which has occurred time and again, when attempts have been made to pack the bench for the purpose of frustrating the ends of justice. It is simply to avoid anything of that kind, but so far as giving a party a right to select any magistrate in particular the prosecutor has that right at the present time, and it is impossible to deprive him of it. This section is simply to prevent the frustration of the ends of justice.

Mr. TISDALE. I agree with the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) that the clause is quite unnecessary and that the law is already settled in regard to it. I, therefore, move that the clause be struck out.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I agree with the opinion just expressed by the hon. member. I have had this section before the Supreme Court of New Brunswick and the Supreme Court of Canada, and the judges differed as to what was the meaning of the clause.

Mr. FISHER. I think the opinion given by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) is a very strong argument in favor of the clause. My hon. friend has just said that he has had that section before the judges of New Brunswick, and that they could not make head or tail of it, or words to that effect. If that is so, it is very important that some amendment to this section should be made. The section in the present Bill has been carefully gone over, by my friend from North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) and Mr. Maclaren, counsel for the Alliance, in the framing of this Bill. I think it would be dangerous, at all events so quickly and on the spur of the moment, as has been shown by this slight discussion, to deliberately strike out this section. I think it would not be safe for us to allow the motion of the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) to pass.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think it would be better to leave it in the Act, and there is no harm anyway.

Mr. JAMIESON. I think not.

On section 11,

Mr. JAMIESON. I believe doubts have arisen in some courts as to the power of the magistrates to enforce the penalty, after the conviction. The section is intended simply to remove that doubt.

On section 12,

Mr. JAMIESON. I want the committee to permit me to make a slight change in this section. After this section was framed I ascertained, on looking into the law, that the courts had interpreted those words which occur in the fourth line of the section: "in respect to which an offence has been committed" to mean an offence for which conviction has taken place, and I simply ask to strike out those words: "in respect to which an offence against the second part of the Act has been committed," and to substitute those words, "are kept for sale in violation of the second part of the Act." If the Act is allowed to stand in its present shape without this change, it will be quite useless so far as facilitating the enforcement of the Act is concerned. I would explain further, that the courts have held, especially in Ontario, that the search warrant under the Act shall issue only after a conviction has taken place, and the object of this clause is to amend the law so as to permit a search warrant to issue in the first instance, which was undoubtedly the spirit of the legislation. After a conviction has taken place, the issue of the search warrant would be quite ineffectual to prevent an infringement of the law. I propose that in the 35th line the words "in respect to which an offence against the Act," and in the 36th line, "has been committed," be struck out and the following words inserted, after the word "liquor" in the 35th line "as kept for sale in violation of the second part of this Act." I propose also to add "or the Temperance Act of 1864." That amendment was in the Bill which was passed by this House three years ago, and was accidentally omitted in drafting the Bill. I believe there is only one county in which the Dunkin Act is in force, and the object is to apply the search clause of the Canada Temperance Act to the Dunkin Act.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The hon. gentleman will see that this will make a great change in the Act. Under the Act as it now stands you must obtain a conviction for having sold liquor or having liquor for sale. Immediately you get a conviction they can seize the liquor for any offence for which the defendant has been convicted and you can destroy the liquor. The hon. gentleman proposes to add the words, "that any liquor is kept for sale." You may go and seize it, but when you seize it what are you going to do with it? You cannot destroy it until you have a conviction, and you must have a conviction with respect to that very identical liquor. As the clause is now it may be defective in a sense, but it is clear that if you have a conviction you can immediately issue a warrant. You may find no liquor, and I dare say you will not, but if you do find it you can destroy it.

Mr. JAMIESON. The destruction can follow. It is a prima facie case if you find the liquor.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It seems to me that it is interfering with the rights of property. If you can seize, on the statement of any person that he suspects there is liquor in a private house, it looks like an encroachment on the subject.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) He can seize the liquor, but what is he going to do with it afterwards? I do not see how you can make those two sections agree.

Mr. JAMIESON. If the hon. gentleman will take the 109th section he will find that any kegs and barrels can be destroyed, so that I do not see any difficulty would arise under this.

Mr. FISHER.

Mr. TISDALE. I move to strike out the words "at any hour." Under the general law relating to this class of offences you cannot search a man's house at night time, and, I think, following out my amendment, that this class of offences should be treated under the general law. Under this clause, if a search were permitted at night, all that would be necessary would be for an informer to swear that he believes there is liquor in a man's house, and the police could go at night and turn him out of bed and search his house. The Act as it stands merely says that a search warrant shall be issued, and I suppose that the advocates of this amendment are not satisfied with that. It is the general law that search warrants shall only be issued in the daytime; but I suppose this amendment is in pursuance of the general argument that the law cannot be enforced without some arbitrary power that the general law does not recognise.

Mr. LISTER. Where is the law that a search warrant can only be issued in the day time?

Mr. TISDALE. It can only be issued in the day time for petty offences; in cases of crime and felony it is different; but my knowledge of the law is that in this class of offences a search warrant cannot be issued in the night; if it can, why is it necessary to ask us for this power?

Mr. LISTER. The courts have held that every class of offence is a crime.

Mr. TISDALE. Will the hon. member for Lambton tell me the cases in which he has known search warrants to be issued at night for petty offences?

Mr. LISTER. I think they have a right, if they can get into a man's house, at any time.

Mr. TISDALE. On the contrary, I have known many search warrants to wait until morning in order to be enforced. I am distinguishing crimes and felonies from misdemeanors or petty offences; and I say that by asking us to give the same right of search that exists in the case of a felony, the advocates of this amendment confess that they have not that power now. No case is made out for this arbitrary provision, and it is a case in which we ought not to allow it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In the Summary Convictions Act no hour is named. It says that where any larceny or felony is committed, the warrant shall issue.

Mr. McDONALD (Victoria, N. S.) I quite agree with the promoter of this Bill that it is quite necessary, for this Act to have any effect at all, that there should be a clause providing for a search, and I think it is necessary to leave in the word "dwelling house." But I think the hon. gentleman requires a little more machinery than he has now. In the case of the Nova Scotia License Act, which was passed by a House in which the extreme temperance element was represented far more strongly than it is in this House, they did not go quite as far as the hon. gentleman proposes to go in this bill. That Act gives the right to search in any dwelling house and take away any liquor found there; and if the quantity found is more than is needed for the use of the family, it is quite competent for the defendant to come forward and show that it was not kept for the purpose of sale. If he does not do that, he is liable to a fine. I think the promoter of this Bill will find it difficult, with the clause as it stands, to carry out the purpose of the Bill, and I would suggest that some such provision as I have mentioned should be added to it.

Mr. JAMIESON. As I understand the Canada Temperance Act, the finding of liquor under a clause of this kind, is simply prima facie evidence, just as it is under the provincial statute to which the hon. gentleman refers. The hon. gentleman did not tell us whether he had looked into the law and seen whether the right of search was simply in the day time. I cannot speak in reference to other Provinces, but I know that in the Province of Ontario the right of search exists under the Crooks Act at any time, and that without any search warrant at all.

Mr. LISTER. Legislation is necessary to grant that power. The question here is whether an officer has a right to enter a dwelling or other place after night with a search warrant?

Mr. JAMIESON. I quite understand the reference made by the hon. gentleman, but I am told that this is innovation in the law. The fact is that such a provision is one of the most essential requirements for the enforcement of the law. I suppose it is as true now as it was when the book was written that "men that are drunken are drunken in the night." Liquor is consumed and carousals take place in the night time, and when the daylight comes the liquor disappears, and it is utterly impossible, under the Canada Temperance Act, as it is at the present time, to get at the perpetrators of these infringements of the law; and I hold that this provision is absolutely necessary, and is no innovation, but a much milder provision than that contained in the license law of Ontario.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to enter my protest against this provision, along with the hon. member for South Norfolk. I quite agree with him that the very arbitrary provisions of the Scott Act have done more to make it unpopular than anything else, and I believe this provision to allow constables to go to a man's house at night, and rouse the whole household out of bed, in order to see whether there is liquor there or not, is a very arbitrary one. My impression is that if you adopt this, you will make the Scott Act still more unpopular.

Mr. JAMIESON. It would popularise the Scott Act, if we are enabled to enforce it, and we cannot possibly enforce it under the present procedure. I would like any hon. gentleman to point out a single instance of hardship under the Crooks Act in which the provision is much stronger than this.

Mr. THOMSON. I am in favor of improving the Act in any way in which those gentlemen who have so well studied the subject will suggest, but I would seriously ask their attention to the question whether it is desirable to insert this provision with regard to a search warrant. It is giving, in relation to an Act which does not certainly attempt in any part of it to give to an offence against it the character of a felony, a procedure which ought only to apply to cases of felony, and a procedure which, as far as my recollection serves me, is at present only applicable to cases of felony. It would subject the Act to more odium than it has yet had to suffer from, and would make its operation exceedingly unpleasant.

Mr. FISHER. I think that the fact that such a power as this is contained in the Crooks Act, which is constantly being held up to this House as a model license law of the Dominion, and on which the Dominion license law of 1883 was largely modelled, is sufficient to show that this is not an unusual or extreme provision, and I think that the hon. member for North Lanark has sufficiently pointed out that it is really necessary a search warrant should be allowed during the night time.

Mr. THOMPSON. Of course, in all Licensed Act there must be the right to visit a suspected house for the purpose of finding out whether the license law is violated or not. But this does not provide for a mere visit. It is a kind of search warrant and allows the property to be seized.

Mr. JAMIESON. The provision in the Crooks Act is to the effect that any justice of the peace, upon information given by any officer that there is reasonable ground for belief that spirituous liquor is kept for sale in any house contrary to the provisions of the Act, may grant a warrant and it shall be lawful for the person named in such warrant, at any time within ten days from the date thereof, to enter by force the place named and examine all the premises, and for this purpose he may, with any assistance necessary, break open any door or lock. We simply want the same provisions in this Act. We want that the officer may have power to enter at any time with a search warrant and search the suspected premises.

Mr. LISTER. No doubt the section proposed here is not as strong as the section in the Crooks Act. The section of my hon. friend has the same effect as this, but in this the additional power is given to the officer to enter at any time without a search warrant at all. The plea of the temperance people is that they are not able to enforce the Act because the evidences of guilt are made away with by the time they have succeeded in getting a search warrant. Taking everything into consideration, the committee ought to rise in view of the fact that Russell has been carried by over 400 majority

Mr. THOMPSON. This provision in the Crooks Act does not change my opinion as to the desirability of the clause at all. It appears that the Ontario Legislature, with the view of enforcing its license laws, has inserted a provision like this. But this Parliament, which has charge of the whole criminal law, has not thought it necessary to adopt such a provision in the class of offences created by this measure; and the action of a Local Legislature with regard to mere petty offences ought not to be taken as a precedent here for the insertion of a provision like this in a statute of a criminal character, especially when the policy of this House has been declared otherwise in the whole course of its legislation.

Mr. MASSON. In the Crooks Act, the justices of the peace can only give a warrant on the information of an officer, policeman or constable or inspector. But under this provision, he may issue a warrant on the affidavit of any credible witness, so that a person who has a spite against his neighbor may lay information against him and have his house searched in the night. Such a provision, I believe, would do more to embitter the people against the Scott Act than anything else that could be done.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In the Crooks Act, form 9, and in the schedule, a search can only be made in the day time, and the warrant can only be given on the information of some official. Here, however, anybody who is credible, may obtain a warrant on his own certificate. This puts great power into the hands of irresponsible people. Under the Crooks Act, the affidavit must be made by an official who must give the reasons for the asking this extraordinary power.

Mr. TISDALE. These officials, under the Crooks Act, the Local Government are responsible for. The two classes of legislation are naturally different. In the one case, the Ontario Government regulates the enforcement of license inspection by their officials, who are responsible for them. The other is an attempt to apply the punishment for felony to a class of offences which this law has created, and I think the whole clause should be struck out.

Mr. JAMIESON. I cannot accept the distinction that has just been made. I think the clause which has just been proposed is necessary in the interests of the temperance law. So far as the inspector or other officer laying the information is concerned, I apprehend that it makes very little difference, because in a great many cases, at all events, the inspector or other officer will have very little knowledge of what is going on in different neighborhoods in the county, and some persons who have that knowledge will have better knowledge of the fact. The Ontario Act is very much stronger than anything we propose in this Bill, and I cannot see any reason why this should not be adopted, nor have I been convinced by anything which has been said in opposition to it, and I insist upon it.

Mr. TISDALE. Moved that in the 39th line of the clause the words "at any hour" be struck out.

Amendment carried.

On section 13,

Mr. JAMIESON. The change is this. Under the Act, it is provided that the amount of liquor confiscated, or 20 gallons thereof, may be destroyed. We think that all the liquor confiscated under the Act should be destroyed. I also ask to amend this by adding after the word "Act" the words "or the Temperance Act of 1864," as was done in the preceding clause.

Amendment carried.

On section 14,

Mr. JAMIESON. That is simply to conform the law to the amendments already made to the Bill.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I move that the 119th section of the said Act be hereby repealed. That section provides that there shall be no certiorari and no appeal. The sense of the committee has been already shown in favor of this provision applying to this Act as to any other, and I can state from my own knowledge that the clause which gave the magistrates this power has been abused to a very large extent. I think the revising power should exist and that the parties should have the right to appeal.

Mr. JAMIESON. I will not argue this matter, but I suggest that the hon. gentleman had better introduce a clause repealing the Scott Act.

Mr. MASSON. I certainly agree with the motion to repeal this section. As has already been stated, the clause is entirely exceptional and we have already passed very exceptional provisions in this Act. I desire to correct a remark of the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) as I have here the authority. I find that, in Regina vs. Milne, 27 U.C.C.P. page 74, an information was laid before a magistrate who had called in two other magistrates to join with him. The case was heard, and the magistrate thought the man should be fined while the other magistrate thought he should be dismissed. The one magistrate signed a conviction and issued his distress warrant. The matter went up by certiorari, and it was held that the men who were called in had made the judgment and not the other magistrate.

Mr. LISTER. This is not the point at all.

Mr. MASSON. I think the hon. gentleman, in saying that any person has a right in other cases to choose his own judge, is not exactly correct, not according to the holding in that case. Reading from the digest I find the principle was clearly laid down, "that the conviction was clearly bad and must be quashed, Sing having no exclusive right to deal with the case merely because he had issued his summons." Now, this is an exceptional right of dealing with the case; the law has been amended by one of the sections already passed. If they have the right of choosing their judges, surely they have the right of appeal.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It must be remembered that the right of appeal is only taken away in case a man sues before a stipendiary magistrate, and it is taken away because these men are supposed to be skilled in the hearing of evidence.

Mr. MASSON. We know they are not very skilled as a rule.

Mr. JAMIESON.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) They may not be in the Province the hon. gentleman comes from, but in my own Province they are skilled and good men. I think myself that the hon. gentleman for Lanark was not very far astray when he said that you would defeat the operation of the Act by this amendment. If you sue before a stipendiary magistrate, and get a witness on whose evidence you can base a conviction, and there is an appeal for three months, when you come to look for that witness you will find that he will be non est, and the appeal will be dismissed for want of evidence, unless you make a provision that there shall be an appeal on the evidence of the magistrate, and not a rehearing at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman is "that section 119 of the said Act is hereby repealed." I am inclined to think that it is not competent for the hon. gentleman to propose that amendment. The committee have already affirmed in an amendment to the 6th clause the existence of the 119th section, and the amendment now proposed by the hon. gentleman is quite inconsistent with the action taken previously by the committee, and I do not see that it can be properly entertained by the Chair. Of course it is competent for the hon. member to bring it up in the House, or at some other stage, or by instruction of the House to refer it back to the committee.

Mr. TISDALE. I made a reservation and the committee assented to my reservation. I confess I am not skilled in the rules of procedure. I said that I would move the main motion, and an hon. gentleman asked me to confine it to this section, and I said I would do so upon the understanding that when we came to the proper place, I should move the main motion; and that having been accepted without objection, I think it would be hard to prevent me from doing so now. I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, to change your ruling, as the committee understood we were to have a vote upon this section.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know how far the committee can be bound by understandings, or conversations, or incidental remarks made by gentlemen across the House, as to what they might do at some future stage; but it is very evident that this proposition is quite inconsistent with the formal and definite action of the committee.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman is hardly fair in supporting his case. I stated that when a man had issued his warrant, and the person charged was brought before him, other magistrates had no right to go upon the bench and outvote him and discharge the accused against the authority of the magistrate who issued the conviction. I hold that to be good law still, and the statement made by the hon. gentleman upon the strength of this decision does not prove the contrary. These other magistrates came to the court and sat upon the bench. The case was being tried before three magistrates as bench of magistrates, and therefore the conviction of a majority of them would be a binding conviction. It is not an analogous case to the one cited by me at all. The minutes of evidence taken down by the clerk were headed as in a case before three justices, and "it was held that the conviction was clearly bad."

Mr. MASSON. Read on.

Mr. LISTER. There is nothing more to read.

"That the conviction was clearly bad and must be quashed, S. having no exclusive right to deal with the case merely because he had issued the summons."

Mr. MASSON. And the judgments bear that out.

Mr. LISTER. The judgment bears nothing of the kind. They sat with him as associate magistrates. It was a bench, and the decision of the majority governed. It has been decided in our courts that wherever other magistrates come upon the bench without the wish of the magistrate who issued the warrant, the conviction of that one magistrate is the conviction.

Mr. TISDALE. I would ask you, Mr. Chairman, to reconsider your ruling when I came to consider the reference to that section. We said that if that section became law, 119 should not apply to it. Now, that is not recognising section 119. We do not say that 119 is law, we say that amendment shall not be applied to 119. Surely referring to a section is not recognising it as law?

Mr. SCRIVER. I think it must be evident to any one who has seen anything of the working of the Scott Act that if the motion for a repeal of that section is carried, we may as well carry a motion for the repeal of the Act itself. I will venture to say that if that clause is repealed, the Act cannot be made effective, and the only effect of repealing that clause would be an attempt in the House to restore it when the House is full. I think a good many friends of the Act are absent just now, and I doubt whether the Act is getting fair play; therefore I would appeal to the hon. gentleman not to press the Act now, but if he does this and carries, it will be necessary to bring the question up again on the motion for the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to emphasise one point which has been brought up in the course of the debate and that is this, that this clause against which the amendment is proposed is the essential clause in the Canada Temperance Act so far as the carrying out of the Act is concerned, and no one knows that better than the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon). I am quite conversant with the history of the Act and especially with its adoption in the Maritime Provinces, and I have no hesitation in saying that there is no one clause which was more powerful in carrying that Act than the 119th, which takes away the indiscriminate power of appeal, not the power of appeal if a case is tried before two magistrates, but when a case is tried before what is generally supposed to be, and what I think is, a competent authority, a stipendiary or a police magistrate. I have simply to repeat what has been said by several other hon. members already, that if section 119 is repealed the House might as well repeal the Canada Temperance Act. I think we should not rush to a conclusion too rapidly from the result of two or three elections in Ontario. This Parliament has had several discussions on the Canada Temperance Act, and it has time and again refused to repeal this Act or to impair the Act to any extent. It is not at all conclusive that because seven of the counties in Ontario have repealed the Act the other fifty or sixty counties may not retain the Act, and speaking for the Canada Temperance Act so far as adopted in the Maritime Provinces, I believe the sentiment is there so strong that the Act will be retained. They have adopted it, they have refused in every case to repeal it, although that has been tried time and again, and they have a vested interest in that Act and will keep it on the Statute-book; and I ask that the committee will calmly and reasonably consider whether it will be wise to strike the Act in so vital a part and take it away from the large number of counties which have adopted the Act because of their faith in that one strong essential clause. My deliberate opinion is that it would not be well to do it, and I ask hon. gentlemen, reasonably and calmly, to think over this matter before they decide to, as I believe, render the Act totally ineffective by repealing the section under discussion.

On section 15,

Mr. JAMIESON moved that it be withdrawn.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. JAMIESON moved that the following be added as a clause:—

“That the forms M and N in the Schedules of this Act are hereby substituted for forms M and N in the schedule of the Canada Temperance Act.

He said: It is simply to make the form conformable to the alterations which we have made, and we have to substitute such new forms or make such changes in the old as to render it intelligible.

On section 16.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I object to this, that one half the penalty shall be paid to the prosecutor. It is a temptation to prosecute, and I hold that the entire penalty should be paid for the benefit of the public treasury.

Mr. FISHER. That may work very well in certain instances, but not in this, whereas frequently is the case the onus of the enforcement of this Act is thrown on the ordinary public. I believe that the properly constituted authorities should carry out the provisions of the Act, but this has not been done, and ordinary individuals have to enforce the Act. It is very essential that they should be allowed some means by which they can enforce it. One of the greatest difficulties in the enforcement of the Act has been the want of money. While private prosecutors, if successful, can have their expenses covered by the court inflicting costs on the defendant, yet cases may arise where the prosecution fails perhaps through no fault of their own. Even when the prosecution is successful, they have to pay the fees of their counsel as well as other expenses. When private individuals undertake to enforce an Act, the enforcement of which I believe to be the duty of the properly constituted authorities, they should be allowed, not heavy expenses but a just and fair division and at least one half of the funds should be paid them. As a matter of fact the Order in Council under which the fines are paid gives the entire amount to the county council, and I know of many instances in which the county council being in favor of temperance have put the fines wholly into the hands of the prosecutors, in order that they may enforce this Act.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). By what authority?

Mr. FISHER. By the Order in Council they can apply the fines any way they choose, and by passing a resolution in the county council, in certain instances I know of, the fines have gone towards the enforcement of the Act. Unfortunately the councils are not always in favor of temperance, and sometimes they have refused to give the fines, and have thus aided and abetted those who break the law.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I agree with the member from St. John (Mr. Weldon), as I believe the funds should be paid into the treasury of the county council entirely, and not be held up as a reward for this one and that one to prosecute the rum sellers. It would result in a great deal more hard feeling, litigation, and, perhaps, pistol shooting than anything else you could put on the Statute-book in regard to this Act. In Annapolis county, where the Act has worked very nicely, the county council has taken hold of the matter, and has authorised the prosecution of all those who infringed the Scott Act. It has authorised the inspector to employ counsel, and they are paid out of the treasury of the council. It looks more as if the temperance people were in earnest when they put their hands into their own pockets, and carry on the prosecution of the infractors of the Scott Act by some sort of association, if the Local Government or municipal council will not do so; and then the opponents of the Act cannot accuse the temperance people of any selfish motive like a desire to obtain filthy lucre from these prosecutions. I entirely agree with the hon. member for St. John that the whole of the fines should be paid to the county council. Then there would be a chance for temperance people to get the sentiment of the people up to such a point as to compel the county councils to enforce the Act as they should.

Mr. KIRK. That would do very well if all the county councils in the Dominion of Canada where the Canada Temperance Act is adopted were in favor of the Act; but unfortunately that is not the case. In the county from which I come there are two municipalities. The council of one of these has proven itself favorable to the Act, and it has furnished all the means necessary to carry on the prosecution; but the other council has refused to do so, and private parties have had to furnish money to carry on the prosecutions, and the work has cost them pretty severely. If we were sure that the municipal councils would appropriate the money for the purpose of enforcing the Act, then I should say that the money should be paid into the treasury of the county council; but I fear that many of the councils would not use the money for that purpose. Therefore I think it better to leave the clause as it is in the Bill.

Mr. FREEMAN. I beg to differ from my hon. friend from Annapolis. He thinks the temperance people should be forced to put their hands into their pockets and work up their temperance enthusiasm in order to do what? To carry out the laws which this Parliament has put on the Statute-book. This Parliament has given the people a law to suppress vice, to suppress an evil which it declares exists in the country; and instead of the makers of the law enforcing it, they leave its enforcement to the people. I am sure that the temperance people of my county have spent hundreds and hundreds of dollars which they have taken out of their own pockets to enforce this law, and I think that those who do spend their money for this purpose should have a little return from the fines collected. I therefore think the amendment proposed by my hon. friend should pass.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I cannot see why a distinction should be made between this fine and other fines. Other fines are not divided with the prosecutor.

Mr. FREEMAN. This is about the only law that the lawmakers do not enforce. There is an invidious distinction with regard to this Scott Act, the people are left to enforce it, and there should be some distinction made in respect to the disposal of the fines.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member for Annapolis said that the enforcement of this Act ought to be in the hands of public prosecutors, and that private individuals ought not to be encouraged to act as prosecutors. If he examines this section, he will see that where there is a provincial or other proper officer to carry on the prosecutions, the fines will be paid to him, and he will be able to use them for that purpose. It is only where there is not a proper official to do this work, and where the public are called on to do it, that it is proposed they should obtain such remuneration out of these fines as to pay their expenses. I do not think it at all likely that such cases will arise of people carrying on these prosecutions to make money out of them.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I have known dozens of them to arise.

Mr. FISHER. The experience of those who have done so is that they have lost money. I know that in my county the temperance people have had to put their hands in their pockets to pay the expenses of prosecution. It is all very well for the hon. gentleman to call on people to show their interest in the law by doing this; but I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if he is willing to put his hand into his pocket to enforce the license law and other laws, and if he is not, I do not see why temperance people should be called on to put their hands into their pockets to carry out this law.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not want to vote for the clause as it stands, and I do not want to vote against it. I think the whole difficulty could be met by striking out that part of the clause which provides that in one case the whole penalty shall be paid to the prosecutor, and in the other case only one-half shall be paid to him. The hon. gentleman who have spoken in favor of the clause plead that that is the only way in which the expense can be met. Anyone who looks at the end of the clause will see that the part paid to the municipality in which the offence was committed is to be applied to the enforcement of the Act. Why not provide that the whole penalty shall be paid over to the municipality for the enforcement of the Act? It is said that it is necessary that these prosecutors or informers should have this money for their compensation; but if it is provided that the money shall be paid over for the enforcement of the Act, the person who is entitled to expenses will be paid out of it. I object to placing a premium on informers. We have had experience in the past of men who have perjured themselves and resorted to the most infamous means to secure convictions in order to get their share of the fines; and if this clause passes, you will be just placing a premium on the most worthless people in the community, and encouraging them to perjure themselves in order to make money. Now, I think, the whole difficulty can be met if the promoter of the Bill will consent to have the whole fine recovered paid over to the municipality to be expended in the enforcement of the Act.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). I hold that where an informer has one-half of the penalty, it is an inducement to him to inform in order to make money. I had a party come to my office and ask me to undertake the solicitorship of a Scott Act case on condition that if he succeeded he would pay me out of the share of the fine, and that if not I should be paid nothing. I, in effect, kicked the fellow out of the office, and when my election came on some of the temperance people, who were opposed to me in politics, brought that circumstance up as an argument why the temperance people should not vote for me, saying that I refused to assist the temperance people to prosecute the Scott Act. That is one instance, and I know where the same thing has been done in other instances. The first fine is $50, and if the informer gets $25 out of that and has an easy prosecution, it pays him very well. Should the whole fine, however, go into the municipality, it would work some good; otherwise it will not.

Mr. FISHER. If the fine goes into the county council, as proposed by the hon. member for Annapolis, some safeguard should be provided, so that the fund thus created may be drawn upon by anybody who undertakes a prosecution. I know that in my county the county council, for some time, would not pass any resolution authorising the distribution of these fines. The fines were paid into their hands and remained there, and it was only last winter that I obtained the passage of a resolution which enables anybody who has been instrumental in getting a fine inflicted to draw upon the fund for the payment of his expenses. If this plan were adopted, there would be no difficulty in the way of a man getting his expenses, as he would be assured of having a fund to draw upon to meet them. But to accept the bald proposition that the money should be put in the hands of the council to dispose of as they like in the enforcement of the Act would be a dangerous proposition, and would lead to defeating the intention of the Act.

Mr. BOWELL. Why give the whole of the penalty to a public prosecutor and not to a private one?

Mr. FISHER. Because the public prosecutors are appointed by the Government.

Mr. BOWELL. I could understand if the hon. gentleman provided that a part of the penalty should be paid to the prosecutor and the balance be paid into the funds of the municipality; but in this case you give the whole of the funds to the prosecutor.

Mr. FISHER. That first part of the section is not what I am discussing.

Mr. BOWELL. If he is a public prosecutor why should he get all the money, and if a private prosecutor only one-half?

Mr. FISHER. The provincial authority which controls him, will make him apply the fines to a proper purpose.

Mr. BOWELL. No provincial law can take the money out of his pocket.

Mr. MASSON. I agree with the hon. member for Huron that the centre part of the clause should be struck out. I think it meets the objection raised by hon. gentlemen in support of the clause introduced, the principal objection being that there were some local municipalities which were not in favor of the Act. I do not think there is much in that objection, because if the Act is in favor in a municipality or county, it is not at all likely the officers of the municipality, who conduct its business, would not be in accord with the majority of the county; but if such an objection has any weight, it is met by the last clause introduced. I would move that clause 17 be amended by striking out all the words after the word "shall," and inserting the following instead thereof:—

Be paid over to the treasurer of the county council or the city council of the place in which the offence has been committed, to be applied to the enforcement of the Act.

Mr. JAMIESON. I do not see the necessity for that amendment, because it is the law already. The statute gives the Government authority, under Order in Council, to appropriate these fines just in the manner indicated by the hon. member for Grey. What we propose is very reasonable and simple. We propose that where the provincial authorities undertake the duty of enforcing the law, they should have the benefits derived from these penalties, and, in other cases, where the provincial authorities and their officers will not take steps to enforce the law and it becomes necessary for the temperance people to do so by the appointment of a private prosecutor, they should have the benefit. I think that is a very reasonable proposition. I know of no case where a prosecution has been instituted by a private prosecutor simply on his own motion. They are appointed by associations and are amenable to those associations, and the funds are used for the purpose of enforcing the law and do not go into the pocket of the private prosecutor.

Mr. KIRK. Who does the hon. gentleman mean by public officers?

Mr. JAMIESON. In the Province of Ontario—I cannot speak for the other Provinces—the burden of enforcing the law has been undertaken by the Government, and in the other Provinces perhaps the county council or some other body may appoint a public officer for the purpose of enforcing the law, and in that case the amount would be paid to him.

Mr. KIRK. Then it will mean somebody appointed by the county council?

Mr. JAMIESON. Yes, or by some competent authority.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not think the promoters of this bill have given any reason why the officer should receive the whole penalty. In some of the Provinces, the inland revenue officer is appointed, but, supposing a postmaster were appointed or a customs officer, or any officer not directly connected with the enforcement of the Canada Temperance Act, why should he put into his pocket the fines, amounting in some cases to thousands of dollars? It is said that in one county, the fines for one year amounted to $8,000. This provision would make the whole of that amount the absolute property of that officer. It may be said that the Provincial Government might dismiss him unless he refunded the amount or unless he paid over a certain proportion of it, but, with that in his pocket, he might very well afford to say good-bye to the Local Government. I do not think it is any answer to the point which has been taken to say that, after we have put that amount in his pocket, he is to be made amenable. We ought to remember that such an officer is supposed to be sufficiently remunerated for his duties by the Government or municipality which appointed him.

Mr. JAMIESON. I know simply that in Ontario—and I know nothing about the other Provinces—there is a statute declaring how the fines shall go.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). If the fines are to be handed over to the prosecutor, under this statute, they must go to him. The result will be that, where there is a public prosecutor and a private prosecutor, there will be a race between them as to who is to get the fines.

Mr. FISHER. I think the municipal order or the Provincial Act appointing the public prosecutor could instruct him to keep these fines for the purposes of the Act, and so enable a fund to be created for the purposes of the Act. I do not pretend to say whether that is a matter which is competent to the local authority, but if it is not, there should be an amendment to this Act, I think, so as to provide that the prosecutor should not put the fines into his own pocket for his own purposes. In supporting this clause, my object was not at all that the prosecutor should receive the fines himself, but that they should create a fund under the local authority which chose to undertake that work, out of which a public prosecutor could be paid by the local authority.

Mr. JAMIESON. I suggest that, after the word "prosecutor," there should be inserted the words "to be applied for the enforcement of the Act."

The CHAIRMAN put the amendment of Mr. Masson.

Mr. JAMIESON. That is the law already. There was an Order in Council passed by the Government under the authority of the statute.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Has the hon. gentleman got the Order in Council?

Mr. JAMIESON. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Can he tell us what the effect of it is?

Mr. JAMIESON. Surely the Minister of Marine can tell us.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) This section as it stands now would not suit the Province of Prince Edward Island at all. The Act is in force in the two cities and three counties in that Province, and the fines are paid into the city treasury in the cities, and outside of the cities they are paid to the Provincial Government, because we have no municipal councils at all. The Act works very well there, and I should be very sorry to see the present arrangements disturbed in that island. This section could not apply to us at all. I think that paying these fines to the prosecutor personally is a mistake. With us, he is paid a salary, and the fines go into the city treasury or the provincial treasury, as the case may be. I think as the matter stands now, the Act works very fairly, and in regard to Prince Edward Island, the clause would have to be amended in any case.

Mr. JAMIESON. This change is proposed in order to meet cases where the inspectors do not enforce the law. There are some county councils in the Province of Ontario which have thousands of dollars in their treasury, but have never taken one step to appropriate that money for any purpose. Only the other day, I was told by the treasurer of the county of Lambton that he has thousands of dollars on hand, and has never been called upon to pay anything.

Mr. MONCRIEFF. They all obey the law in that county, so there would be nothing to pay.

Mr. HAGGART. I move that clause 17 be struck out, and leave the law as it is.

Mr. DAVIN. In regard to this proposal I can give the committee some information of the way this law is carried out. We have this system in the North-West, and the result is that the informer sets traps with a view of getting half the fines. We have had some very detestable instances of treachery, and I should be sorry to see any such law introduced in any part of Canada where it does not now obtain.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The matter was considered very fully before in the House, and the Government framed an Order in Council very carefully, which applies to all parts of the Dominion, and I think it is unnecessary to legislate anew about it every Session.

Mr. JAMIESON. We consent to let it go. I now move that forms M and N, in the schedule to this Act, be hereby substituted for forms M and N in the schedule to the Canada Temperance Act. I would explain shortly that owing to the change which has been made in the law of search, the old form of information for search warrants, and the search warrant itself, are not suitable, and I propose to add two new forms, "M" and "N," as substitutes for the forms in the original Act, with the changes which are made necessary by the altered state of the law. The search warrant simply follows the information.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I understood the hon. gentleman to put in his new form M the cause of suspicion. It is very important that a man should set out in his information on what he grounds his suspicions.

Mr. JAMIESON. "And the causes of suspicion." That is in, but it is in parentheses.

Mr. TISDALE. I move that section 114 of the Canada Temperance Act be struck out. Under the general law of evidence a husband and wife are excluded from giving evidence for or against each other. As long as the general law is in here, it is objectionable that in this class of offences a man should be compelled to give evidence against his wife and the wife against her husband. Further, it is contrary to the general law that a person shall convict himself. I may say to those gentlemen who are strongly in favor of the Scott Act, that I do not know of any one thing that more embitters the people against that Act than this clause.

Mr. JAMIESON. This Bill is for the purpose of amending the law, not for the purpose of destroying it. If the hon. gentleman had the faith which he professes to have in his amendment, he would have put it in the form of a Bill, and given us an opportunity to fight the matter out. This Bill is for the purpose of amending the law and making it more workable; the amendment proposed by the hon. member for South Norfolk is for the purpose of destroying the efficiency of the law. This feature of it is the law in the Province of Ontario, and will soon be the law in the county in which the hon. gentleman resides after they have repealed the Scott Act. It is the law under the Crooks' Act, and it has been found to be very necessary for the enforcement both of the license law and the Canada Temperance Act. It would be a most unfortunate thing if the amendment of the hon. gentleman should receive the sanction of the committee, and I trust it will not.

Mr. JAMIESON.

The CHAIRMAN. I am informed that the vote is a tie, and I will give the benefit of the doubt to the promoter of the Scott Act by voting against the amendment.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have an amendment that section 100 be amended by adding the words "purchaser or" after the word "who" in the first line.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish to call attention to the section that has been adopted in regard to prescriptions by medical men. That section conflicts with the section inserted in the other Bill. We have already passed a Bill, and it has gone to the Senate, permitting every chemist and medical man to give the full prescription, and in this section of the present Bill we have limited the prescription and imposed heavy penalties if the chemist or medical man should obey the provision of the other Bill. I think it would be better to drop the section out of this Bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If this section is allowed to pass the Act will be simply useless as a temperance measure, as it will be unworkable. It is desirable that the suggestion made by the Minister of Justice should be carried out.

Mr. HAGGART. I intended to move on the third reading that the clause should be struck out.

Mr. JAMIESON. I do not take the same view as the Minister of Justice. Perhaps I am wrong, but here is the amendment: "Provided nothing in this Act shall prejudice the sale of by legally authorised physicians or surgeons, &c."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That applies to qualified druggists, licensed by the colleges.

Mr. THOMPSON. The amendment the hon. gentleman has just read refers to medical men who sell articles of this kind, if they form part of a prescription. This section which he proposes says: If that is done, he is liable to summary conviction under a penalty.

Mr. HAGGART. It seems to be the unanimous wish of House that section 6 should be reconsidered. I move it be struck out. It seems to me a perfect farce, that in the same evening within two hours, we should pass one Bill contradictory to the other in reference to giving power to druggists and physicians to sell.

Mr. JAMIESON. There is a great deal in this sub-section which does not conflict. It will not take long to remodel it so as to make it conform.

Mr. HAGGART. I move that clause 6 be struck out, as it is provided for in the other Bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman is now placed at a disadvantage, and I think it would be well to give the member for North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) time to consider it.

Mr. JAMIESON. The disadvantage is that our Bill was framed first, but I hold there are some things in the sub-section that should be retained.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not quite sure, from closer examination that those two Bills conflict at all. When the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) moved his amendment the effect was to give legally qualified physicians power to sell medicines composed in part of liquor in the manner he prescribed in the section. The Bill has reference to the sale of intoxicating liquor when mixed with other medicines. This clause in the Bill now before the House relates entirely to the sale of intoxicating liquor pure and simple.

Mr. JAMIESON. I think the hon. gentleman from Queen's (Mr. Davies) is quite correct.

Mr. HAGGART. Read the 6th clause and you will find that druggists cannot sell even a bottle of eau de cologne without a prescription.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) It is quite clear that that does not prevent the sale of eau de cologne because that is provided for in the Bill. If a medical man sells brandy, rum or gin he must have the certificate provided by this section. If on the other hand he sells brandy, rum or gin without mixing in the manner prescribed by the Bill passed in the early part of the evening he is exempt.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course the Bill is contradictory.

Mr. FISHER. Instead of repealing the section why not make it apply to everybody who by this other amendment were allowed to sell? We can in this way make the two sections coincide.

Mr. BOWELL. The former resolution does not provide for licensing every one it gives the absolute right to qualified physicians.

Mr. JAMIESON. I move to strike out of the 6th section the words, "by such licensed druggists and vendors," and substitute therefor the words, "by any person duly authorised to sell the same."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. When the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) moved his amendment, there was a condition added to it that is not printed here, so that the conditions passed in the other Act will vary from the conditions here.

Mr. HAGGART. The amendment just moved restricts the clause to those who are licensed to sell, for they are the only parties who are duly authorised to sell.

Mr. FISHER. By your amendment you have authorised them all.

Mr. HAGGART. This is not an amendment to my Bill. It is an amendment to the Canada Temperance Act.

Mr. THOMPSON. That would be so undoubtedly, as this section is to be read into the Canada Temperance Act, and form part of it; but inasmuch as the Act we have passed to-night is an amending Act, it seems to me that it removes that difficulty. I would like to study the two in order to harmonise them; but as this is probably the last opportunity we shall have to consider this Bill, I think that we had better pass these amendments. I do not think there is any harm in them.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think there is either.

Committee rose and reported, and Bill read the third time and passed.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Copies of all complaints made respecting the right of certain Indians on the Kettle and Stoney Point Reserves to occupy land on the said Reserve, and to participate in the annuity moneys; a copy of all instructions given to any person or persons appointed by the Government to investigate such claims, and a copy of all evidence taken in support of such complaints and in opposition thereto, and any report or reports made to the Government respecting the same.—(Mr. Lister.)

Copies of all correspondence and telegrams between the Department of Railways and Messrs. Sims and Slater, contractors for the eastern section of the Cape Breton Railway, between Grand Narrows and Sydney.—(Mr. Flynn.)

Copies of all correspondence between the Government of Canada and village of Midland, the Grand Trunk Railway Company, or other parties, in reference to the harbor improvements at Midland, and all letters, reports, or other papers connected with such harbor improvements.—(Mr. Lister for Mr. Cook.)

Copies of all correspondence respecting the construction of a lighthouse at the north end of Stag Island, in the River St. Clair.—(Mr. Lister.)

Sr HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. EDGAR. I wish to mention to the Government that I intend to bring before the House in going into Committee of Supply some day after to-morrow the question of the grievances of the half-breed settlers of Breslau in the North-West Territories.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.30 a.m., (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 8th May, 1888.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE TERRITORIES REAL PROPERTY ACT.

Mr. THOMPSON moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolutions:—

Resolved, That the salary of the Inspector of Land Titles office to be appointed in connection with the carrying into effect of "The Territories Real Property Act" shall be paid out of moneys provided by Parliament for that purpose.

Resolved, That it is expedient to substitute the following for subsection two of section 133 of the Act above cited:—

"2. Except as herein otherwise provided, there shall be paid, together with the fees under this Act which are from time to time fixed by the Governor in Council, of one per cent. on the value of the real property registered, if such value amounts to or is less than five thousand dollars, and one-tenth of one per cent. on the additional value, when such value exceeds five thousand dollars."

Motion agreed to.

SATURDAY SITTING.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved:

That when the House adjourns on Friday next it do stand adjourned until the following Saturday at one o'clock, and that Government measures have precedence on that day.

Mr. LAURIER. Does the hon. gentleman propose to adjourn at six o'clock next Saturday?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not if we can induce the House to sit after six.

Mr. LAURIER. I have no objection.

Motion agreed to.

THE PUBLIC DEBT.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved:

That the House resolve itself into Committee on proposed Resolution (p. 1136) to authorise the raising by way of loan such sum or sums, not exceeding $25,000,000, as may be required for the purpose of paying the floating indebtedness of the Dominion.

He said: It will be in the recollection of the House that when making my financial statement a few days ago, I explained to the House that, owing to the changes made in the regulations affecting deposits in the Government savings banks, reducing the amounts that depositors were allowed to deposit there, and owing to a certain amount of stringency that prevailed in the money market, causing increased inducements to be offered by the banks to depositors to place their funds in the banking institutions of the country, the Government did not receive nearly so much money as they otherwise would have had reason to expect. And, consequently, we were obliged to meet the capital expenditure which would otherwise have fallen on the money raised in that way from the current revenue, and in order to meet the difficulty by a certain amount of floating indebtedness, which was incurred to the extent of about one million pounds sterling. I might say that a very interesting question arises in connection with a motion of this kind in regard to the public indebtedness of this country, and I wish to draw the attention of the House, for a few minutes, to the fact that our indebtedness would not seem to be so great, relatively, as it might at first sight appear to be. I regret that the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) is not in his place on an occasion of this kind, especially as I stated to him that I proposed, on this resolution, to call the attention of the House to what he referred to as the great increase of the indebtedness of this country since 1878. Of course, the debt of Canada is tolerably large, but it must not be forgotten that, with the exception of a single item, this indebtedness is represented by valuable public works and by the development of the country. That single item is the amount of \$5,897,256.66, which was caused by the unfortunate outbreak in the North-West. While the national debt of England and the national debt of the United States have been to a large extent caused by disastrous wars, Canada is in the fortunate position of having its debt caused only by the efforts of successive Governments to develop the country and to place its public works in such a position of progress that they would contribute in the future to the greater development of the country. It is true that we have a large indebtedness, but we are able to point to most valuable assets for our expenditure; we are able to represent by those public works the amount of that indebtedness, because these amounts of indebtedness have been incurred in such a way as to add to the revenue of this country. I am sure that every hon. member of this House will find it a matter of gratification that, if the indebtedness of this country has increased, as it undoubtedly has between 1877 and the present time, we have the best evidence that that increase in the indebtedness has contributed to the construction, or in fact has caused the construction, of a great national work which must in the future, as it has done already, tend to the development and progress of the whole country. But I desire to point out that the indebtedness of Canada is not as great as it would at first sight appear to be. I mean the actual indebtedness, because hon. gentlemen are aware that the borrowings of this country are not intended to be paid, that is, that when an amount becomes due, when a loan is floated for the purpose of constructing public works, we go to the money market of the world, and put our securities on the market, not with the expectation that this comparatively new and young country will be able to pay the debt at present. What is understood is that, when these obligations mature, the country will put other securities on the market in their place, and so it may be regarded as a continuous indebtedness, to be replaced by putting a new loan on the market. The House will therefore see that everything relating to the actual indebtedness of Canada is to be measured not by the nominal amount of the debt, not by the actual sum represented by the debt, but by the sums which the country has to pay in the way of interest, and the amount of the interest which has to be paid is an indication of the credit of the country. It might have been anticipated that the credit of the country would have been strained by the construction of one of the most gigantic public works that any people of our numbers have ever attempted in any part of the world; but, instead of our credit being injured, although many were afraid that the enormous expenditure required for that work would result in loss of credit to the country, the credit of Canada has steadily increased and has kept pace with the advancing indebtedness of the country. Consequently, as the actual liability of the people of Canada is not to be measured by the amount which we owe, but by the annual charge on our revenue which it entails, if our credit has steadily risen instead of falling, if it has steadily risen as the indebtedness of the country has risen between 1877, the year to which attention was called by an hon. gentleman on the other side, and the present time, we have nothing to fear. I think I shall be able to demonstrate to the House, that we will actually save fifty-three millions of dollars of our indebtedness out of the amount of the increase between 1877 and the present date, on account of the enhanced credit of the country, which enables us to replace our maturing debts with securities which will effect an actual saving to the country of over fifty-three millions of dollars. In making this comparison in such a way as to render it plain and clear, not only to every hon. member in this House, but also to the general public, who are so much interested in this question, I propose to deal with what it cost us to borrow money in 1877, and what it costs us to borrow money now, and in order to deal in the most practical and clear way with that important point, I propose to leave out the question of commissions and everything of that kind connected with the floating of a loan. I propose to take the price which we had to pay for money in 1877, in consequence of the then position of the credit of the country, and the position in which we now can go to the money market of the world to float any sums we require in that way. When the loan of 1876 was floated in England, taking away altogether the question of commission, it may be stated that the charge for interest upon that loan was about $4\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. While money can be obtained at our present credit—I am not speaking of what our securities are at this moment bringing in London, but I am speaking of what we could float any loan for, such as we would be likely to require, at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.; I say that the enhanced credit of the country represents the difference between $4\frac{3}{4}$ per cent., which Canada was obliged to pay in 1877, and $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., the rate at which, at this moment, she could obtain money. If all our debt of 227 millions on the first of July last, was in England, and if we were not committed to any rate of interest for any time, it is evident that the result which we are endeavoring to obtain, would be reached by multiplying 227 millions by $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. and dividing the sum thus obtained by $4\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. in order to make the contrast between the period at which the loan was floated in May, 1877, and the present time, the debts being in proportion to the actual charges. The result is \$155,300,000 instead of 227 millions; that is to say, the enhanced credit of Canada practically reduces the indebtedness of Canada to the difference there would be in that case, assuming that the debt was all due in England, and it would make the difference between 227 millions and \$155,300,000. Now, to illustrate this mode of reasoning by figures which will bring out even results, and place it in the power of any ordinary arithmetician to make the calculation for himself, I propose to take, as an illustration, a debt of £7,600 with interest at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. in perpetuity, which is the same as a debt of £5,200 with interest at $4\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. in perpetuity, both entailing an interest charge of £247 per annum, and £5,200 is obtained from £7,600 by multiplying by $3\frac{1}{2}$ and by dividing by $4\frac{3}{4}$. Consequently an individual who can borrow money, assuming that it is borrowed as our loans are, practically in perpetuity—a person who could borrow money at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. could obtain £7,600, if his credit would enable him to borrow at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., with the same facility that another person could borrow £5,200 at $4\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. But the debt of 1877 was, as the existing one is, only partially held in England, and, unfortunately, what is now held in England does not mature for twenty years on an average, and almost all of it bears 4 per cent. in the meantime. The debt of 1877 may be considered as having been composed of 116 millions of money borrowed in England, 8 millions Dominion notes held above the amount of specie, 7 millions held in the Savings Bank, and 2 millions of Trust Funds, beyond current balances due on other accounts, making a debt in 1877, of 133 millions composed of the various sums. Now, Sir, our present debt is composed of the following items: 1st, money borrowed in England, 150 millions; 2nd, Dominion notes above specie, 12 millions; 3rd, Savings Bank, 40 millions; 4th, 12 millions, Canadian Pacific Railway guarantee, the amount of money deposited by the company with the Government, and on which we agree to pay, for a certain period, 4 per cent. interest, and to pay it out to the shareholders as their dividends become due; and 5th, 13 millions, the amount due to the Provinces and Trust Funds, making a total of 227 millions in these five different clauses. I shall now proceed to deal with each of these clauses by itself, and to show what the actual indebtedness is, as represented by these various amounts. First, the 150 millions now due in England, considering that it has twenty years to run—I am speaking of an average—at 4 per cent., I shall assume that it is obtainable at not more than $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. thereafter, and I think we may assume that seeing that the credit of Canada has steadily risen until our securities stand third among the various securities of the world, considering that it has risen step by step while we were obliged to make enormous expenditures for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway and other public works, considering that our credit has risen until we can borrow money now at $3\frac{1}{2}$ with the same ease that we borrowed it before at $4\frac{1}{2}$, in fact with much greater ease, I think we may fairly assume that our credit will continue to improve, and that instead of being obliged to borrow on less favorable terms, we can borrow on more favorable terms hereafter, I take it, at the present value of our securities, and the rate at which we could now go into the market to effect a loan; so that 150 millions, considering that it has 20 years to run, at 4 per cent. interest, and that it can be replaced by money obtained at not more than $3\frac{1}{2}$, is, by actuarial calculation, equivalent to 114 millions; so that our actual indebtedness in regard to that amount may be treated not as 150 millions but as practically 114 millions.

An hon. MEMBER. Strike out some more.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am quite certain there is not a member of this House but must listen with the most profound satisfaction to this statement. I am not dealing with this matter as a party question at all; it is above and beyond party. I am not saying that this improved credit of Canada is in any manner due to the present Administration. I am leaving out everything but the gratifying fact that such is the enhanced credit of Canada that we are enabled to stand before the world, not as having increased our indebtedness, valuable as are the works for which that indebtedness was incurred, not as having increased the actual indebtedness to the amount that would appear at first sight, but I say that, taken in connection with our improved credit, our increased indebtedness is much less. I am sure that is a statement in which, dealing with it purely as a financial question, purely as regards the financial credit and standing of Canada, in which we all have an equal interest on both sides of the House. I am making the statement, I hope, in a manner not to challenge party criticism in any sense of the word, either in one case or the other. I am making the statement in such a way as to assure the House and the country that we have great reason for the most profound gratification that in incurring such a large indebtedness for purposes that we believe warranted that indebtedness, our credit has so appreciated as practically to render that indebtedness a great deal less than it otherwise would be. I hope that the view I am taking of this matter will not be misunderstood by any hon. member, because it is put forward solely with a view to its influence and effect upon the credit of Canada in the money market of the world, and if the statements I am making are sound, if the deductions I am drawing from the actual state of things are legitimate deductions, they will be of great advantage to Canada in relation to its credit, and the terms upon which we can go to the money market of the world for the purpose of floating a loan. Now, as I have said, the sum of \$150,000,000, capable of being replaced by money borrowed at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., only represents \$114,000,000, which would bear $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. in perpetuity. That I state as a mathematical problem actually demonstrated, and placed beyond any controversy or beyond any question; and I invite the attention of the most able accountants and actuaries on both sides of the House to the most close analysis of the calculations I am submitting to the House, because if there is any error I should be very glad to know it, in order not to commit myself to a statement which may be found not to be thoroughly sound and reliable. I now take the question of Dominion notes. Dominion notes bear no interest. The only charges on the country are interest on the specie reserve and cost of management, and consequently, as the cost of management is less than one-half per cent., the House will see that every Dominion note we are able to float is money obtained without any cost to the country whatever, that is that every note we are able to float over and above the specie reserve that Parliament has decided must be held for the security of that money is actually found money, free from anything except a charge of less than one-half per cent. for management; and therefore, as we have increased the amount of Dominion notes, maintaining the specie reserve required by law by a considerable amount since 1877, and as no doubt in the future that will go on increasing, so in order to make an exact calculation, as I am endeavoring to do, as to the whole charge on the country of the present indebtedness, I am quite right to take that into consideration. Any change that would occur in regard to that item would strengthen my argument necessarily, because as the country develops and population increases there will naturally be an expansion, and we will go on floating Dominion notes upon the specie reserve to a larger amount as the case may be, so that will not be subject to any deduction, but it will be an item presenting a better aspect in future than it does now. You take that question: the cost of management is less than one-half per cent.; as the Dominion notes floated in 1887 were \$8,000,000 above the specie reserve and as the Dominion notes to-day are \$12,000,000 above the specie reserve, so the House will see that although we have increased our indebtedness nominally by those \$4,000,000, the amount between \$8,000,000 and \$4,000,000, instead of its costing the country $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., it is costing the country only one-half per cent.; consequently \$420,000 is the entire charge resting upon the country for that increased indebtedness of \$4,000,000, as will be seen at a glance. We get an additional \$4,000,000 for a sum which at $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. would be \$4,000,000 multiplied by one-half and divided by $4\frac{1}{2}$, or for \$420,000 a year; that is the entire charge resting on the country for that difference between the Dominion notes over and above the specie reserve at the present day as compared with 1887. The difference between that sum of \$420,000 and \$4,000,000 is therefore no less than \$3,580,000, which represents the reduction that is to be made on that class of indebtedness; that is to say, that although nominally you have \$4,000,000 of increased indebtedness, you have practically for all purposes, measured by the cost to the country, the burden on the people for that debt, instead of \$4,000,000 only \$420,000, making a clear difference and saving, when you come to deal with the actual indebtedness, of the country as compared with the nominal indebtedness, of no less on that item of \$3,580,000. The increase in the deposits in the savings bank of \$33,000,000, if changed as it may be to a debt bearing $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest, and at any time Parliament wishes that amount for which we are paying 4 per cent., \$33,000,000 may be obtained at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., or we could require the depositors in the savings bank to accept that rate which it now costs to obtain money, $3\frac{1}{2}$, instead of 4 per cent. which the depositors are now receiving, and the difference will at once be seen to be very considerable. The increase in the deposits in the savings bank of \$33,000,000 if changed as it may be to a debt bearing $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest, would be represented by the result after multiplying by $3\frac{1}{2}$, and dividing by $4\frac{1}{2}$, or about \$22,500,000. The \$12,000,000 of Canadian Pacific Railway guarantee has six years to run at 4 per cent.; the money to meet it will be borrowed at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., an average of three years from this date. This amount will be represented by not more than \$8,300,000. The difference between the charge now borne, paying 4 per cent. on that amount—and I separate it for the reason that I am dealing with all these items as the amount of charges that actually rests upon them—will be shown by the reduction to \$8,300,000 by paying it off, as we can do it, at an average of three years, with money borrowed at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. There will be no change in the fifth class of debts, because, as the House is aware, this class amounting to \$33,000,000 is due to the Provinces under a statutory guarantee that we will pay 5 per cent. on the money, and therefore there will be no deduction made on that class because whatever may be the terms on which we can borrow money we are obliged to continue to pay to the Provinces, under the statutory agreement made with them, 5 per cent. on whatever amount belonging to them is in our hands. That item of \$13,000,000 is, therefore, unchanged. The result of these statements I may summarise as follows. The nominal debt of \$150,000,000 represents a real debt of \$114,000,000, taking it in connection with our increased credit. The nominal debt of \$12,000,000 represents a real debt of \$8,420,000—that is to say, the \$12,000,000 of Dominion notes floated above the amount of specie reserve which Parliament requires to be held.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). At what rate?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. At one-half per cent. for management, and the increased indebtedness of \$4,000,000, for I have only been dealing with that, which stood at \$8,000,000 now stands at \$12,000,000, and that \$4,000,000 would possibly increase the management only in this one-half per cent. All those sums, whatever their character, whether Dominion notes, for which we are answerable, whether money in the savings banks or money deposited for any cause whatever, all appear in the actual amount of indebtedness; and those Dominion notes for which we practically pay nothing, for the amount we float over and above the specie reserve, while it only costs us half per cent., it stands in the nominal indebtedness just in the same position in the public accounts as the money we borrowed in England. The nominal indebtedness of \$10,000,000 in the savings bank, as represented in the calculations which I have made by a real indebtedness of \$29,500,000. The \$12,000,000 of the Canadian Pacific Railway guarantee, which is payable at an average of three years from the present date, and which will be replaced by money at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., represents practically only \$8,300,000. The \$13,000,000 which we owe to the provinces, and for trust funds, over and above balances on the other side, is susceptible of no reduction because we are obliged to continue to pay it. Therefore the \$227,000,000 of nominal indebtedness—the amount that the public accounts show we are indebted—practically represents, taking in connection with the present rate on which Canada is able to borrow money in the markets of the world, \$173,220,000, or a difference of \$53,780,000, as I said before.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Would the hon. gentleman state at the end of his speech, how he manages to reduce the savings bank debt from $40,000,000 to $29,500,000?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, I have explained that to the hon. gentleman and I will repeat the explanation. That is done by the fact that the \$33,000,000 of increase in the deposits of the savings bank, if changed to a debt bearing $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest; that is to say, to-morrow we can say to the savings bank depositors that all that money costs us is $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Do you propose to notify them to that effect?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman asks me if we propose to notify them. At this moment certainly not, but I do propose to ask the sanction of the House to a measure that will enable us to deal with that question as the interests of the country may require, and I do not think that any fault can be found with the Government if we say to the parties who deposit their money with us for safe keeping: We think it is in the interests of the country to reduce the amount of interest, provided we pay you the same amount as that for which we can borrow money.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The reduction must be solely by reducing the interest to the depositors.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, it would be.

Mr. MACKENZIE. You convey a wrong impression to the public as to the value of the debt.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid my hon. friend has not exactly understood me. What I have stated to the House is this: that when we speak of the burden that rests upon the country, we must take into consideration not merely the nominal amount of indebtedness that Canada has been charged with at the present moment, but we must take into account the reduction that we are compelled to effect in that indebtedness by the enhanced prestige of the country. Of course the hon. gentleman will see that if we were obliged to pay $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. now to the public to obtain money, that he can readily understand that we could not ask the savings bank depositors to take $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. But I think the hon. gentleman will see that no just ground of complaint can be made against the Administration, if they were to say to parties who wish to deposit their money with us: We will give you the highest rate of interest that money costs us. And as it is in our power at any moment—I am dealing with a mere hypothesis, for there is a sum that we can practically reduce at any time from \$40,000,000 to \$29,500,000 by changing the rate of interest which we are paying on that money, or replacing it by money at the rate at which we are obliged to borrow it. I hope the hon. gentleman does not suppose that I would wish for a single instant to mislead the House. I am treating it from that standpoint, and I am only making to the House what I trust will be received as a gratifying statement. That is, that our increased credit will enable us—as the burden of the country is to be measured by the annual charge of money, that it is practically borrowed in perpetuity—it practically enables the Government of the day to reduce the nominal indebtedness of \$227,000,000 down to \$173,220,000. That is all that I propose to say in reference to that matter. I have mentioned to the House that we incurred a floating debt of five million dollars during the last year owing to the causes which I explained when I rose. The House is aware that Parliament has imposed liabilities upon the Government to the extent of about \$6,000,000 more, by the aid and subsidies given to railways.

Mr. MITCHELL. How is that?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is six and a quarter millions, but I am assuming that perhaps a quarter of a million may not be required. Therefore I am treating that as $6,000,000 instead of $6,225,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. Covering what period of time?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is covering the last four or five years I should say.

Mr. MITCHELL. Present outstanding grants?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, it is the subsidies; under the authority to subsidise railways.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The Government imposed that on Parliament, and not Parliament on the Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman says that the Government imposed this on Parliament. I was glad to have my hon. friend's assistance—and most valuable assistance it was—in imposing it on Parliament, because I had the good fortune to be able to show that that hon. gentleman, in the discharge of what he held to be his duty to the country to assist in expanding and developing our Dominion, very kindly, and in my judgment very judiciously, furnished the iron to a number of railways for the purpose of enabling them to get into operation when otherwise they could not get into operation.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I only lent that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid the hon. gentleman's loaning was something like our borrowing. I am afraid he was loaning them in perpetuity. When you lend a steel rail until it wears out, it is a very long loan. I know my hon. friend's good nature too well to suppose, that if the time came when he was compelled to ask them to return those rails, the last thing he would have done was to tear them up, and take them back into the possession of the Government. The hon. gentleman, I say, did a valuable service to the country in assisting these struggling lines of railway to open up and develop the country; and I, taking advantage, as I have been delighted to do, of the example set by the hon. gentleman, not only followed him in that particular, but I went a little further. I went so far that, as I have frankly stated to the House, I am afraid that the time has come when we are obliged to check that policy a little, and that we shall not be able to realise the expectations of the House and the country this Session as we have done in the past. However, as I have said, that involves a charge of something like $6,000,000. Then, the Estimates this year provided for an expenditure on capital account of something like $5,000,000 more. So that, under these circumstances, I find myself obliged to ask for increased borrowing powers with a view to meet these various liabilities; and I have only ventured to take up the time of the House on the present occasion—first, for the purpose of reassuring the House and the country as to the fact, that although there has been a very large increased indebtedness between 1877 and the present time, it is not actually so great as it appears at first sight to be.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Does that $6,000,000 embrace any portion of the ship railway guarantee?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It does not; and I am again reminded that when I brought forward that project my hon. friend did not give it any opposition. That guarantee was not given by a party in this House, but was given by the whole House; and I am only sorry that when that measure was attacked somewhat vigorously by my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) the other night, when it was brought forward, not as a new project, but simply in order to give effect to what had been done some years ago in this House, I understand, jointly—

Mr. MITCHELL. Not at all; I always protested against it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is the view I take. I am only sorry that my hon. friend, Mr. Mackenzie, was not here on that occasion to show that, having permitted that liability to be assumed when he was leading the Opposition in this House, he felt it was not unreasonable when no additional charge was proposed, that a little extension of time should be given in order to see whether Canada should not set an example to the world of leading in a great enterprise of that kind. I do not intend to detain the House further than to say that the primary object I have had in making this statement, as the Finance Minister of the Government, to this House—a statement that I have taken great pains to verify by the most careful actuarial calculations—was that I felt that it would be not only gratifying to the House and the country at large, but would be of use to Canada when, as I suppose will occur at an early day, we ask in the money markets of the world for an additional loan.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a very few words in reply to some of the points made by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. The hon. gentleman informs the House that we may fairly assume that the credit of Canada will continue to improve. Well, Sir, that assumption can only be fairly based upon the assumption that the affairs of this country will be economically and prudently managed. Now, I think there is something in the condition of the financial affairs of this country, even at the present moment, that warrants us in pausing to consider whether we are not going too far and too fast in the way of increasing the public debt of Canada. We commenced twenty years ago with a net public debt of somewhat less than $76,000,000 in round numbers. When my hon. friend's proposition to borrow $25,000,000, in addition to what we already owe, becomes law, and the money is borrowed, the debt of this country will be $252,000,000 in round numbers. That is an increase in the public debt in twenty years of $176,000,000, or an increase of 230 per cent.; and while the debt has been increasing 230 per cent., the population of this country has increased in round numbers 40 per cent. In other words, the increase in the public debt has been six times more rapid than the increase in the population. Now, Sir, I cannot believe, if this ratio of increase is to be continued, that we have any right to assume that our credit will continue to improve, or even to be maintained. Our taxation on customs in 1868 amounted to $8,578,000; last year it was $22,378,000, an increase of $13,800,000 in round numbers in twenty years, or an increase of 160 per cent., an increase in taxation four times more rapid than the increase in the population of this country. In 1868 we expended, chargeable to the Consolidated Fund, in round numbers, $13,500,000; we are told that our expenditure this year will be $37,000,000; that is an increase of $23,500,000 in twenty years, or an increase of 170 per cent., an increase over four times more rapid than the increase in the population. Now, Sir, if this is the condition of things, if we have increased our taxation from customs four times more rapidly than our population has increased, if we have increased our debt six times more rapidly than our population has increased, if we have increased our expenditure four times more rapidly than our population has increased, and if this alarming rate of increase is kept up, if, in fact, it is accelerated, as the policy of the Government leads us to expect it will be, I do not think we can flatter ourselves with the consolation that our credit is to improve in the future. We are taking the very course to impair our credit; and prudence dictates that we should pause in the course that this country has been pursuing for some years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is just what we propose to do.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. gentlemen takes one rather curious view of the situation. He seems to infer that every reduction in the interest paid on our debt is a reduction in the debt. He tells us that this money is borrowed in perpetuity. I hope that is not the case. I hope the public men of this country have not adopted a policy that does not look to the future liquidation of that debt—that does not look to the time when Canada shall be out of debt. No matter how much the interest on the debt is reduced, the principal of the debt remains; and when we come to pay that, we shall have to pay $250,000,000, if this resolution is passed, and the burden will be just as much when we come to pay that as it would be if the interest was 4, 5 or 6 per cent. We must bear in mind that our affairs are very intimately connected with those of the United States. I am sure the hon. Finance Minister will admit that that is the case.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. Now, the United States are rapidly approaching that period when they will not owe a dollar, for they are rapidly reducing their debt. Their net public debt to-day is something under $1,200,000,000. They owe per capita $19, while we owe per capita $50.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman take into consideration that outside of that public debt the United States are at this moment obliged to pay $70,000,000 a year of pension fees, and that instead of decreasing, they are increasing every year?

Mr. CHARLTON. I am quite aware of that fact; and notwithstanding that the United States have a pension list of $75,000,000, and that next year it will be much more, they are using $2.03 per head less from customs in defraying the expenses of their Government, the pension list included, than we are using for our expenses. And notwithstanding its pension lists, the expenses of that country chargeable to consolidated fund are not one-half as great per head as the expenses of Canada, and it is this feature of the case that renders it so much more necessary for us to be prudent in the course we pursue with regard to incurring increased debt. Now, I do not rise for the purpose of discussing this question from a party standpoint, but I do rise to urge upon the Government that the time has come when they should, in the interests of the country, go slowly, when they should adopt the policy of prudence and economy. The country does not desire that we should keep borrowing in perpetuity; the country does not desire that we should place upon our shoulders a burden that is to rest there forever. Those who have the interests of Canada at heart desire to see this country, at some future day, free from debt and able to engage in the race of progress on equal terms with the United States; but if the present policy of the Government be continued we will never be able to reach that position. Now we are told by the hon. the Finance Minister that although our debt is large, although we have borrowed a good deal of money and have rapidly increased our public debt, our debt has been incurred for purposes that warrant this increase. I must dissent from that assertion. I must state that it is my belief that the money has been expended for public purposes which do not warrant the increase of debt. I must state that we have comparatively little to show for that debt. We have expended $45,000,000 on the Intercolonial Railway, and we could not, even if we gave that road away, find responsible parties to take it and run it properly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do not say that.

Mr. CHARLTON. Yes, I do say that. We are paying every year interest on all the money that has been put into the Intercolonial Railway, and, in addition, a further sum to make up its running expenses. Therefore on that road there has been an expenditure of between $10,000,000 and $50,000,000, which has not been judiciously invested.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is because the road has been mismanaged.

Mr. CHARLTON. That may be true, but I would like to see any one who could manage it so as to make it pay. Our canals, although the expenditure on them is more justifiable than any other expenditure, pay in return almost nothing. We have invested in the Canadian Pacific Railway $70,000,000 in cash and the net land grant besides, which amounts to about 19,000,000 acres, and it is proposed to grant to that company terms that may amount to the equivalent of a gift of from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000 more. That, I contend, is not a judicious investment, because with that money we could have built the road ourselves and owned it and retained the land. I must entirely dissent from the assertion that the debt has been incurred for purposes which warranted our incurring it. The truth is we have not been prudent. We have increased our debt too fast, we have pursued a reckless course, and the time has come to call a halt; and whatever Government may be in power, that Government should endeavor to place Canada in a sounder financial position. The endeavor of whatever Government may be in power should be to reduce the debt; it should be to lessen the burdens that rest upon the people; and no policy contrary to that is a policy conceived in the interests of this country. The hon. gentleman, and I was a little alarmed at the remark he dropped with regard to Dominion notes, told us that every Dominion note we floated was found money.

Mr. MITCHELL. Less one-half per cent.

Mr. CHARLTON. Less one-half per cent. That is the old doctrine of fiat money.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend must not misrepresent me. I stated that every note Parliament authorised us to float over capital or specie reserve was practically found money, because it cost the country nothing except one-half per cent.; but we cannot issue a note except in conformity with the law of Parliament, after Parliament has carefully settled the rate to which we should go above the specie reserve, and we cannot go beyond that.

Mr. CHARLTON. Supposing Parliament should authorise the Government to issue $100,000,000 above its specie reserve, would that be found money? The policy pursued leads on to the gulf of fiat money; if a Finance Minister felicitates himself that every dollar of Dominion money issued in excess of specie reserve is found money, why then the temptation will be very strong, should we ever get into financial difficulties, to avail ourselves of that found money to a very large extent, and whenever we go beyond the safe limits of issue, we will have adopted the doctrine of fiat money—and that is the danger. Whenever our financial necessities may induce some Finance Minister in the future to make large issues of Dominion money, we will be face to face with the great disaster that results from an irredeemable currency. I hope, therefore, the hon. the Finance Minister will be satisfied with a very small amount of this found money, and will not endeavour to get himself temporarily out of financial difficulty in the future by adopting the fiat system. I would say one more word with regard to railway subsidies. The hon. the Finance Minister has informed the House that he has copied his policy from that of my hon. friend on my right (Mr. Mackenzie). He tells us that the leader of the former Government (Mr. Mackenzie) inaugurated this system by practically giving railway grants, in the shape of railway iron or old rails, to railways in the Maritime Provinces, and he can see no difference between giving rails and giving money. Well, even if the rails were given, and that statement is denied by the leader of the late Government, who holds that the rails were simply loaned—but even if they were given, there would be this difference between the circumstances of the two cases. In the one case, the Minister had a large quantity of rails for which he had no use, and, in the public interest, he might very properly justify himself in lending or giving them to be made use of; but in the present case, has the Government a large amount of useless money lying idle that it has no use for except to give to some railway corporations?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend is doing a great injustice to the leader of the late Government when he says that he could make no use of our steel rails, because the hon. gentleman knows that every ton of those rails represented just the cash expended on its purchase, and there was no more saleable article in the country.

Mr. CHARLTON. The business of converting old iron into money is a sort of junk business that governments do not often go into. The Government then had old rails on hand for which it had no use, and loaned them to railway companies, but the Government to-day has no surplus of money in its Treasury for which it is difficult to find use; and for every dollar granted as subsidies to railway corporations, the people must be taxed. This system of granting railway subsidies is open to another objection. It is open to the serious objection that the money is used by the Government to promote its own political interests, and that these grants have been made in places where they would do the most good politically, and without reference to the public interests. The whole system is essentially bad, and the sooner it is abandoned the better. It is fortunate if circumstances have forced the Government to abandon it at present, and it will be still more fortunate should the Government conclude, upon principle, to abandon it altogether. I did not rise to make any lengthy remarks on the subject, but, upon the spur of the moment, it struck me that it might be well to point out some of the salient points in regard to our financial position. We are paying out too much, our taxation is too high, the debt of the country is beyond our resources, and the Government should have in view, as its great aim and desire, the necessity of reducing the burdens of the people and pursuing an economical and thrifty rather than the extravagant policy that has been pursued for many years past.

It may be said that the Government of my hon. friend (Mr. Mackenzie) was responsible for the increase of the debt to a very large extent, and that the debt increased under his administration as rapidly as it has increased since.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not say anything about that.

Mr. CHARLTON. I say it may be said. It is true that the debt increased under the Government of the hon. member for East York by some $34,000,000, but that was consequent upon the policy of their predecessors, and upon the contracts which they had made, the expenditures they had provided for, the engagements which their successors could not fail to carry out. They had the Intercolonial railway to complete, they had contracts with regard to the public buildings to complete, they had the contracts in reference to canals to complete, they had to proceed to some extent with the scheme of giving the great North-West connection with the East; and, in view of the duty resting upon them to carry out these obligations of the previous Government, which pledged the country to almost every dollar of that amount, it is evident that almost the whole of the increase of $176,000,000 on the net debt of Canada, if this resolution carries, which has been incurred since the Confederation of the Provinces, is due to the action of the present Government or to that of the Government which preceded that of my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie)—I mean the Government which existed previous to 1878. I hope the Finance Minister will take this matter into his serious consideration, and will see that an increase of our debt six times more rapid than the increase of population is dangerous, and that an increase of taxation more than four times as rapid as the increase of population is dangerous, and that he will in future pursue an economical and a careful policy so as to preserve this country from the dangers which threaten it.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think there is one fallacy of which the hon. gentleman who has just spoken has been guilty. He bases his whole comparison on the population of the country. He must see that that comparison is altogether without proper foundation in this matter which is now in controversy, because the wealth of any place does not depend altogether upon its population. For instance, the wealth of the city of London does not depend upon the fact that it has a population of five millions; and, if we had not had the North-West handed over to us, it would not have been necessary for us to spend this money on the development of that country. It is really because we have not the population which we require that compels us to spend this money which we have expended. That is the reason why we have to expend more money in proportion to the population than those countries which have a larger population. Therefore, I think that the hon. gentleman's argument on that point entirely fails to meet the case.

Mr. LAURIER. I am desired by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) to offer his apology for not being in the House to-day, especially as the hon. the Minister of Finance was kind enough to notify him to-day he would bring this very important subject before the House. My hon. friend would have been here but that he was called away upon important business, and his intention is to resume this discussion at a future stage of the measure which will be brought before the House. I was exceedingly gratified to learn from the statement of the Finance Minister that our public debt has decreased actually to the tune of \$53,000,000, but I was very sorry to learn that this is only a figure of speech after all, and that the amount of our debt remains just what it was, and that the ratepayers will have not a cent less to pay than they now have on the liabilities of the country. The only fact which we have really learned is that the rate of interest has been decreasing, but while the rate of interest was decreasing, we find that the Government were taking advantage of it to sink the country further into debt every year. In connection with this, if I followed the argument of the hon. gentleman correctly, I may say that I am not sure that he is a believer in his own theory. I compared his speech with the resolution which has been placed in your hands, and I do not think they are consistent, for he states that the debt is reduced by \$53,000,000 because the rate of interest is reduced to $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and I cannot understand why, in that case, he should be authorised to make a loan at the rate of 4 per cent., because in that way, according to his own theory, he will lose so much.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is nothing like a margin.

Mr. LAURIER. I know there is nothing like a margin for the present Government, but the hon. gentleman is taking the margin in another way. He says he wants this amount to pay the public debt of the country and the expenditure on public works carried on by the Government of Canada. If I understand him aright, he has taken a margin of no less than $30,000,000. He stated that the floating debt was only $1,000,000.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Pounds.

Mr. LAURIER. I understood him to say dollars, but if it is pounds, then that is $5,000,000. He has in that case not taken quite so large a liberty. He says he wants $5,000,000 for floating debt, liabilities incurred in regard to railway subsidies, $6,000,000, and public expenditure provided for this year, $5,000,000. That would be $16,000,000, and the hon. gentleman asks power to borrow $25,000,000. I hope the hon. gentleman will give some explanation of that to the committee before he carries this resolution.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You are not obliged to borrow the whole amount which Parliament gives you the authority to borrow, and the hon. gentleman will find, if he looks back on the Acts which have passed, that the Government have always had parliamentary sanction for borrowing a larger amount than that which was actually required.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is there any unexhausted amount now?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; there are about $11,000,000 authorised which have not been used.

Mr. LAURIER. I suppose that is on the theory of a wide margin.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) has protested against this measure, but he and his party have admitted that all the improvements and all the undertakings of this country are due to the gentlemen who sit on this side of the House. The hon. gentleman says that the expenditures made by the Government of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) were engagements entered into by the Government which preceded that. Therefore he admits that all the undertakings, in regard to public works in this country, are due to the gentlemen who sit upon this side of the House, and who are now conducting the affairs of the country.

Mr. MITCHELL. And conducting them very badly, too.

Mr. McLELAN. The hon. gentleman says that they are very badly conducted. I do not think it matters much what opinion the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) has of the way in which they have been conducted. We will not admit that he is a very good judge of what is done, well or ill, but we will go to other authorities. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) says that it depends altogether upon the way in which matters are conducted, as to what credit we can have in the money market. From 1878 to the present time, the public credit has been steadily and rapidly rising, and therefore, according to the view of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), that is evidence that our position has been improving.

Mr. LISTER. Have not the Australian colonies and others improved their credit as well as we have?

Mr. McLELAN. Not nearly to the same extent, and I think they have run in debt to an extent of $2 or $4 to $1 of ours. Their taxation is stated by English authorities as being at least three and a half times the amount of the burden which is placed on the people of Canada. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) says that our taxation has increased four-fold in proportion to the population. Let us turn to the taxation from customs and excise, or at least the amount received which is regarded as taxation. In 1875, the taxation per head from customs, excise and stamps amounted to $5.30. In 1887, notwithstanding all the expenditures which had been made, and which the hon. gentleman says is four-fold what it was in 1867, yet from 1875 to 1887 the receipts from customs, excise and stamps have only amounted to $5.79, as against $5.30 in 1875 per head.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not wish to misrepresent me. I stated that the increase in taxation from customs had been four times more rapid than the increase in population; and my comparison between the increased debt and the increased expenditure was based upon the comparison between the increase in that amount and the increase in population.

Mr. McLELAN. I am taking the taxation from customs, excise and stamps in 1875, and I am comparing it with 1887, and I find that there has only been an increase of 49 cents per head of the population. Now, with all that has been accomplished in these twelve years, with all that has been accomplished since the present Government resumed the reins of power, I think the country has reason to be gratified that there has only been this small increase of taxation. I shall not prolong the discussion at the present time. I only make these remarks to show that the taxation of the country has not increased beyond what would be warranted by the expenditure.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There is one statement made by the Finance Minister which, I think, he ought not to have given utterance to, and that is, that Canada, in effecting these loans, in increasing this debt, is borrowing money that she never intends to pay. If that idea becomes prevalent throughout the country it will lead—in what direction? It will lead in the direction of carelessness and ultimately to repudiation, and instil into the minds of the people the idea that all they have to do is to go to the money markets of the world and borrow money, and that they will never have to pay it. Some future generation may, but we are not to concern ourselves about that at all. Whenever we find ourselves in a tight place, after having recklessly wasted money, finding that our credit is good, we will borrow with the intention of never paying. I say, Sir, that is a sentiment that it is not desirable to encourage in the country. Why, Sir, other nations have been in debt, and they do not teach their people that they never intend to pay their debts; other nations have contracted an enormous debt, and they have gone on reducing it until soon they will have wiped it out altogether, and its burden will be lifted from the people. But we are being instructed in the doctrine that all we have to do is to go on and spend money recklessly and extravagantly in this direction and in that, our credit being still good in the money markets of the world, we will go on and borrow, never intending to repay at all. Then I want to make one remark about what was said by the member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) who, alluding to the argument of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), said that you were not to measure the wealth of a country by the population that was in the country. My hon. friend for North Norfolk based an argument upon the undesirability of greatly increasing the public debt, or of increasing it in a far greater ratio than the increase of population. His argument amounted to this: that if your population was increasing in a like ratio, as it is not, with the increase of your public debt, the burden upon your people would not become greater, and therefore could be renewed with more safety. But the hon. member for Muskoka says that does not follow, that the wealth of the country does not depend upon its population, that they may be more wealthy and better able to bear taxation, even if your population has not increased in the like ratio. There is this fundamental mistake that the hon. gentleman made, to which I wish to call attention, and all the sophistries of the Finance Minister in reducing this debt, as he does, simply by his paper arguments, will not overcome the fact that it is not the wealth of the country that is taxed to pay the interest on the millions we borrowed, but it is the people of the country who are taxed. The system of taxation that is levied upon the people of this country, by which we raise the interest that is to be paid for these sums we are borrowing, is a system that bears not upon the wealth, but it bears upon the inhabitants of the country, and more unequally and more unjustly upon the poor than it does upon the wealth of the country. The Finance Minister has lost sight of this fact, and while he speaks of the improved credit of Canada, perhaps it would be as well to take into consideration that there has been a plethora of money, and the rates of interest have decreased. Take his own argument. He says we have deposits in the savings banks. People are depositing their moneys at 4 per cent., and that is their income, that is their wealth. He says that we can reduce that to $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The moment it is reduced to $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., are these depositors not $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. poorer, and that much less able to pay the additional burden placed upon them? And so this fallacy is running all through his arguments. A man might very well afford to pay his share of the public debt at 4 per cent. with wheat at \$1 and \$1.25 per bushel, but when his wheat brings but 70 to 75 cents per bushel, then ask him if he is just as able to pay $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. as to pay 4 per cent? Ask him which position he would rather be in? Sir, the position you have to face is this: A time has come in the history of our country when the earnings of the people are less than they were, when the agriculturist is not receiving the profits that he once received, when the business man is transacting his business on a smaller and slimmer margin; a time has come when wages have been increased, but when the additional taxation, the burdens that have been levied upon him by this Government, take more from him than the additional amount that he receives in wages; and the result is that to-day you have a people in Canada less able to bear the rate of interest now existing, reduced though it may be, than they were a few years ago when the interest was higher. Sir, these are things to be borne in mind. I may have borrowed \$2,000 upon a building, and the builder may think it is worth somewhat more, and I wish to put an increased loan upon that building. What would the lender say to whom I would go? Would not he judge it by the rent that I received, by the revenue coming in from that building? Would that not enter into his calculation as to whether it was a safe investment to loan any more money upon it? Therefore when you are considering our credit, when you are considering the sums that we have paid for public works, as the Minister tells us, as a reason for our enhanced credit and I agree with him in part—the question does come in as to whether your money has been invested in such public works as will repay you, as will be profitable to you, as will give you an increased value on which you may make your security better. Sir, I think, looking at it in that light, we can scarcely congratulate ourselves to the extent the Finance Minister has done, with reference to the public works, which, he says, have almost wholly entailed this debt upon us. It has been pointed out that at any rate 40 or 50 millions of that money, in the Intercolonial Railway, is not to-day a paying investment, but that taxes are actually taken out of the people in order to make the two ends meet. Then it will not be claimed that up to the present time the expenditure on the Canadian Pacific Railway has been a paying investment so far as bringing an additional population into the country is concerned, that will help the present inhabitants in paying the debt. With reference to our canal system I regret to say that so far as income is concerned, it is much in the same position. But there is a ray of light in the statement we have heard from the Finance Minister to-day; there has dawned upon his mind the fact that the public debt of Canada is something alarming, even without his proposed addition of \$25,000,000, and therefore he comes to Parliament with a nicely prepared statement, fallacious in many respects, in order to lead the people of Canada to believe that, though nominally they are already indebted to the extent of \$227,000,000, and he proposed to add \$25,000,000 more to-day, yet after all, he can figure out on paper that it is \$53,000,000 less than that sum, upon which you will have to pay interest, and so, after all, you need not be so alarmed about it. The very statement made by the Finance Minister shows that the fact has at last dawned upon him that the public debt of Canada, in proportion to her population and resources, is such as to make men pause and think, and when the hon. gentleman comes to this House to ask for power to increase that debt by \$25,000,000, I am glad to see that he finds it necessary to make the explanation he has offered. I tell him that with a public debt including these \$25,000,000, amounting to no less than \$252,000,000, with a population of not more than 5,000,000 to pay the interest, and with a system of taxation so levied and adjusted that it does not bear on the wealth of the country, but presses on the great mass of the people, the country feels it difficult to bear the burthen, and as years go on, unless there is an addition to the values of our products and increased remuneration paid for labor, it will find the burthen still more difficult to bear. It is time the Ministry and this House, and the country, too, to seriously consider the position of affairs in which we stand. I was led to make these remarks only by the statement of the Finance Minister that the Government were borrowing money which they never intended to pay. Such a statement will tend to recklessness and extravagance instead of to a policy which I think the best interests of the country demand, a policy of prudence and economy in the management of our public affairs.

Mr. FERGUSON (Welland). One statement has been made by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) which I should not like to go to the country unchallenged. He said the public debt had increased between 1867 and 1878, from $76,000,000 to $252,000,000. He was not candid enough to say that $109,000,000 of that increase was debt owing by the Provinces of this country, and assumed by this Dominion, so that the net increase of the public debt, that is the increase in the debt of the country should properly be reduced by the amount of debt owing by the Provinces assumed by the Dominion. Deducting that amount of $109,000,000 from $252,000,000, which the debt will be after this loan of $25,000,000 is made, only gives an increase of $143,000,000. Deducting from this amount of $73,000,000 which the Dominion was in debt at the time of Confederation, there appears an increase of only $67,000,000, or 88 per cent. instead of 238 per cent. as stated by that hon. gentleman. I conceive it to be a duty to myself not to allow this statement to go to the country unchallenged. The $75,000,000 paid in pensions on the other side of the line, and which is a burden on that country, represents a capital of about $2,500,000,000, which the hon. gentleman may add to the public debt of the United States if he desires to do so.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman has not corrected the statement of the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), whose argument was based on our net debt. Our debt, according to the admission of the Finance Minister, will not be less than $300,000,000.

Mr. DAVIN. I was very sorry to hear my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson) make what seems to me to be a demagogic speech on a subject like this.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh!

Mr. DAVIN. I say a demagogic speech on a subject like this. It was the sort of speech which the hon. gentleman has probably recently made, one that he has probably made many a time from a platform; but I say it is not the sort of speech which should be made on a financial question like this.

An hon. MEMBER. You make one.

Mr. DAVIN. Yes, if the hon. gentleman will have the courtesy to listen to me I will try to make one. I listened to the statement of the Finance Minister with critical care, and I say that every statement he made and every calculation he made will bear criticism. As to the statement made and the figures given in regard to what might be called the real debt and the nominal debt of Canada, you will find a counterpart of the history which the Finance Minister has given in the history of finance in England, and if you turn back to the speeches made by Mr. Gladstone in the earlier days of his financial statements, you will find him pointing to exactly the same thing having taken place in England,—that while the debt had increased the credit of the country had increased, that its borrowing power had increased, and by consequence, though the debt was at a given figure, it was, in view of the power of England to meet that debt, a lower debt considered as a burden than it stood at actually in the books. That is what the Finance Minister comes to us and points out, that although the debt be $227,000,000 it is not so terrible as it appears to be, because the credit of the country has advanced, and whereas twelve years ago we had to pay 4½ per cent, we can now borrow at 3½. With reference to the statement of the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) that the Minister declared that we were borrowing money never to repay it, I understand the Finance Minister to have made no such statement as that. What I understood the Minister to say, and I think I understood him correctly, was that when we go into the money market to borrow, we look forward to a time when we shall go into the money market again when we want to pay the debt with another loan made at a better price, at a lower rate of interest than we had to pay for the loan previously obtained and which we desired to pay off. And so we go on in the same course of finance that has distinguished every country where the science has been well understood. It is a statesman-like exposition of our condition, and does not justify the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) declaring to the country that we stand before the world ready to repudiate our debts. The hon. member for Brant is great on illustrations, and is especially strong on concrete illustrations. He is one of the most effective members on the Reform side when an election fight is on, and he likes a concrete illustration. He gave us an illustration. He said: Suppose I have a house and I think it is worth $2,000, I go to a man to borrow money on the house, but he is not prepared to advance as much as I ask because he does not think the house is worth quite what I think it is worth. Look at the position—we are in exactly that position. But our solvency is the converse of that assumed to be ours by the hon. gentleman. We go to the lenders in the money market. We say: We have a great Dominion, we have built great public works for the purpose of enriching our country—because no doubt the hon. gentleman, who is ambitious to be one day Finance Minister, knows that money is not wealth. What do we find? As the Finance Minister tells us, our credit is rated third in the money markets of the world, and we are able to borrow at a lower rate than ever before. So the illustration that the hon. gentleman gave turns back on himself and refutes the loud-mouthed fallacy he gave this House. The hon. gentleman also said that the Canadian Pacific Railway had not produced the results that were anticipated, and he very properly mentioned population. It is by adding to the population of this country undoubtedly that the Dominion will progress and our burdens be diminished. But has the Canadian Pacific Railway had time? I understand that at the present moment emigrants are flowing westward.

Mr. DAVIN.

No doubt a few years hence my hon. friend will not come here and say, the Canadian Pacific Railway is doing now much more than it did a few years ago. He will come here and find some new reason for denouncing the Government of the day. I have referred to the state of our finances in England. We know if you take up an English newspaper, the Times for instance, and look down its monetary column, some of the prominent words that meet you there are “consols,” “reduced threes,” “new threes” and so on. What, Sir, do “consols” mean? They mean that in 1751, or thereabouts, a lot of debts that had been incurred on account of wars and what not, had been consolidated at a lower rate of interest. The same thing is true of “reduced threes,” and the same thing is true of other financial items in the English money market. That is the history of one of the most successful financial nations in the world, which nation has been expanding at a rate of wealth that probably has never been equalled. History, comparing great things with small, leads us to expect a similar state of affairs in this Dominion of Canada. The public credit to-day stands high. The hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) made a statement which my friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson) controverted, and there again I rather think he misrepresented my hon. friend from Muskoka. I apprehend that my hon. friend did not say that population had no relation to wealth, but what I understood him to say was, that great public works had to be projected and carried out because we had a vast extent of country through which those lines of railway should run, in order to bring them within a civilised condition and to ultimately increase the population of Canada.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Yes, I said that. I also meant to say that population was only one of the elements that had to be taken into account, whereas the hon. gentleman treated it as the only element.

Mr. DAVIN. The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) made a statement that has often been refuted in this House, and on the platforms in this country. It is refuted every day in the press, refuted in the well known sentiments of the people of this country and refuted by the fact that on three successive occasions the present Government has been returned to power. He makes the statement that taxation is pressing on the poor and not on the wealthy. He makes the statement that wealth can go “scott free,” although if he examines our tariff it will show him, that it is actually contrived to press rather on the middle and wealthy classes than on the poor classes with whom he pretends to have so much sympathy. The poor man does not suffer by it; the votes of the poor men carried the day, but there is a two-fold proposition in this, there is the proposition that if they were in power again they would conduct the affairs of the country in such a way, as not to press on the poor man and that the present administration presses hard upon him. If the present Administration in Canada is pressing on the poor man why do they return it to power? Are the people all gone mad? What is the meaning that in three successive elections they have returned this Government to power with large majorities? I believe that on an occasion like this, we ought to discuss a great financial question such as the Minister has presented to us, free from party feeling and the disturbing passions that belong to party controversy. For myself I can say that I never attacked a man in all my life, unless he richly deserved it, or a cause or a party either, and it is always unpleasant for me, especially on an occasion like this, to deal with it in any other way than purely as a question of what is beneficial to the interests of the country. I repeat what I have said in the beginning, and it has been my business all through my life to criticise and discuss and write about financial statements. I say that the statement made by the Minister showing that our credit has advanced is irrefragable and that you cannot assail it successfully. The Minister of Finance has shown that although our nominal debt is at a given amount, our liabilities as compared with our capacity to meet them—the relation between the burden and the potentiality of dealing with the burden is such at present, that our debt is actually not as greatly in excess of the debt of ten or twenty years ago as it seems at first sight to be.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am sure that the Finance Minister was highly flattered to find that his financial exposition has received an endorsement, so able and so clear, from the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat. I should like to have heard the opinion from the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Perley) as to some of the statements he made, as to whether he was really so generous or so chivalrous in his attacks on other people. I was present the other day at an entertainment given by Canada's humorist, Mr. Bengough, and among other amusing sketches he drew, was one in which the Prime Minister was holding in his hands a portfolio, and opposite it, holding out his hand was the figure of my esteemed friend from Assiniboia who was offering to carry this portfolio. It is quite evident, I think, from the speech we have had to-day that the views of the member from West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) are changed in regard to the particular portfolio he deserves, or which he would desire to have. It is clear that the rumour having become prevalent that the Finance Minister wishes to remove from his present sphere of operations, the hon. gentleman wishes to show his qualifications to assume that important, vacant portfolio. I am sure that the very clear, the very concise, and the very easily understood speech he has delivered will be a sufficient recommendation to the hon. the First Minister as to the member for Assiniboia's (Mr. Davin) qualifications for his appointment to that position when it unfortunately becomes vacant. I have only risen for one purpose, and that was to refer to the statement the hon. gentleman has made, and which has been endorsed by my hon. friend who has just taken his seat. The Finance Minister has presented to this House, cleverly no doubt, a hypothesis as if it were tangible and real. We know the other day that the Finance Minister of Great Britain, converted her three per cent. console, into two and a half, and by that financial operation, successful as it was in the money market, he made a brilliant stroke and saved a large amount of money to the people of the country. But the hon. the Finance Minister is aware that it is not in his power to convert our six or five per cent. debt into three per cents. This debt stands in the shape of bonds payable years hence, now bearing a fixed interest. Whether the interest is five and four per cent. interest, it will have to be paid for the next ten or twenty or thirty years. The hon. the Finance Minister cannot change those bonds into bonds bearing three per cent. If we were in a position to convert those into three per cent., I would say you are making a great saving in your debt. The hypothesis might be easily understood as the member who sat down said it was, but he knows that those abstract calculations cannot be grasped in a moment. Further my hon. friend says he followed them with critical appreciation, and I can understand very well that some men are naturally clear and apt in appreciating points of that kind. I have no doubt my hon. friend was able to understand him, but I do not think the general public will understand him. I think the hon. leader of the Opposition summed it up in a phrase when he said that while he was delighted after he heard the speech, his delight was turned into sorrow when he reflected that it was after all only a theory, which could not be carried into practice. Our debt remains the same, and will be the same during the coming year. No change will be made by the hon. gentleman in the interest we now pay, but 4, 5 or 6 per cent. will continue to be paid for the next five or ten years, because you cannot convert the bonds bearing those rates into bonds bearing a lower rate of interest; so that even if the hon. gentleman's contention were correct, you could not apply it to reduce the debt. There is another remark that I would make. The hon. gentleman stated that he was making this financial statement, not merely for this House or this country, but for the money market of the world, where he was going to borrow, and he argued that our net debt was only $227,000,000 in round numbers. There is this to be said however, about it, and it is well to be frank: Our total debt is $273,000,000, which we reduce by certain assets which we say we possess. The hon. gentleman knows that a large number of these assets are merely nominal; and he knows that he has resolutions before this House for wiping out millions on millions of these very assets, such as the Quebec harbor works, the improvements in the St. Lawrence, and the St. Charles tidal dock. I think it is hazardous for a man to express any settled opinion as to the value of these assets; but having gone over them from time to time, I think the hon. gentleman will bear me out in saying that at least $10,000,000 or $12,000,000 of our assets are merely paper assets, and nothing more. We have no right to assume our debt to be $227,000,000 net. It is nearer $240,000,000 net; and we have no right to assume that we are only paying 3 or 3½ per cent., because the interest we shall have to pay for many years to come is fixed at a higher rate, and we cannot convert it into a lower rate. The hon. gentleman expects that he will be able to borrow this money at 3½ per cent.; but if he does, he is certainly not pursuing the policy which his predecessor did, and which I imagine would be good policy. If he takes power to borrow at 4 per cent., that is pretty good evidence that he does not expect to get the money at a lower rate. However, I do not criticise the hon. gentleman's method; I leave that to others more familiar with such matters. I join in the expression of regret given by the hon. leader of the Opposition, that the hon. gentleman did not take the House and the country more into his confidence, and tell us all the purposes for which he wants this large sum. He has given us items amounting to $16,000,000, and he has a margin of $11,000,000 remaining from the authority to borrow which he previously obtained; and in addition there is $9,000,000 of this amount, making in all $36,000,000. I think we have a right to be taken into the hon. gentleman's confidence to a much larger extent than he has taken us as to the purpose for which he wants to borrow that large amount of money. I am inclined to agree with the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) that in giving the Finance Minister unlimited authority of this kind, we are only encouraging extravagance, and inviting hon. gentlemen behind the hon. Finance Minister to press him for extravagant grants for all kinds of objects which he should not make.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down has expressed my views so well, that I do not think I will travel over the ground which he has traversed. I may, however, make some slight reference to two or three matters. The hon. Finance Minister this afternoon—and he has done it on more than one occasion this Session—twitted hon. members on this side that they had assented to certain propositions, notably the Chignecto Railway and the Pictou Railway, because we did not get up and divide the House on them. Now, I am not going to attempt to divide the House on this scheme of the hon. Minister of Finance, although I think it is the duty of the Government, when they submit a scheme to Parliament for their consideration, to state fully and explicitly the objects for which they demand the assent of Parliament. Especially when asking for such an enormous amount of money as is involved in this scheme, I think it was the duty of the hon. Finance Minister to enter, in greater detail and greater particularity, into the matter, not only for the information of this House, but for the country. Why, Sir, he has given us only three or four items, and these in gross and general terms. As I understand the position stated by the hon. gentleman, we owe \$227,000,000 net. The hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) looking at our so-called assets, a portion of which are of such a class as we have in the Quebec harbor bonds, and at what has been said about the Intercolonial Railway, claims our net debt to be \$240,000,000. Practically there is about \$300,000,000 of gross debt standing to-day against this country, and if we had to realise on our assets, I am afraid they would not reduce the gross debt to any great extent, and that we would find that our net debt amounted to nearly the full amount of our gross debt. I am not one of those who have taken the position that expenditure for public purposes, even when not reproductive in the way of revenue, were not valuable to the country. I have not taken the view of hon. gentlemen on this side of the House with reference to our expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway, the outlay for the Pacific Railway and the canals; but when we begin to talk of these as an asset which is convertible to pay the debt of this country, I claim it to be a fallacy. We ought to look the thing in the face, and not allow ourselves to be deceived. The hon. gentleman has asked this House for a credit of \$25,000,000; in other words, he asks us to give him power to go into the markets of the world and borrow that sum. In addition to that he admits that he has an unused authority to borrow \$11,000,000, which, added to the \$25,000,000 makes \$36,000,000, which he asks this House to give him authority to borrow in the British market. Now, Sir, what do we want of \$36,000,000? Is there any necessity for it? With the taxes increased as they have increased—with the people suffering—with every industry in the country feeling the effect of the high taxation, not only upon the food and the clothing which the workmen wear, but on the materials which go into the production of their manufactures, I say it is no time to ask this House to give authority to the Ministry of the day to go into the British market and borrow money to the extent of \$36,000,000. I am not going to follow the hon. gentleman in the different explanations he made. I may, however, say this in regard to what he said about the savings banks account, that he admits himself that he is not prepared to ask this House to enable him to borrow the money at once for the purpose of recasting that debt, but states that he may possibly ask the House for authority to do it. But if he were prepared to ask this House for authority to reduce the interest on deposits in the savings banks from 4 to $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and thus save a certain sum to the Government, no doubt it would save money to the Treasury, but it would reduce, as my hon. friend for North Norfolk said, the earning capacity of the men who have money invested. I would not oppose the proposition, however, on that ground. I am not prepared to say that the suggestion ought not to be carried out. I am rather inclined to think it should. I am also inclined to think that the post office savings banks, which were established mainly for the benefit and advantage of the poorer classes, have been largely utilised for the purpose of investment by the rich, and that the country would save, while, at the same time, the poor man would be protected to a certain extent, though he would not get as much as he does now, he would get all that the Government can afford to pay, looking at what they have to pay to the public when they go into the money market of the world. My hon. friend from North Norfolk spoke about the Intercolonial Railway. I feel it necessary, because it will be said by-and-bye, should this Government attempt to sell that road that I assented by my silence, and I am credibly informed that negotiations were in operation during the past year with the view of selling it to a syndicate, and that the hon. the Finance Minister carried on those negotiations.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will my hon. friend allow me to say that there is not the slightest foundation for that statement. I have never had any proposal made to me for the purchase of the Intercolonial Railway. I have never been a party to any negotiations of any kind whatever in that view, nor am I aware of any such negotiations having taken place.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad to hear that statement. I was credibly informed by a person whom I believed when he made the statement, and I saw a book printed with the whole thing set out as a prospectus, and I am told, moreover, that one of the persons projecting the purchase and that the promoters of the scheme had costly engineers upon that road for months gathering statistics in reference to it, and that a conference was held in London, with three, if not four, Cabinet Ministers present, in which a discussion was held as to the advisability of the Government prosecuting a sale to that syndicate. I am glad to hear the hon. the Finance Minister say he has never had anything to do with it, but the information came in such a direct and positive manner that it impressed me as true and I believed it.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. My hon. friend never had the information, which he states he had, from anybody. He never had the information that any proposal of the kind was made in England, when three Ministers were present.

Mr. MITCHELL. I tell the hon. gentleman he has said what he does not know.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. He has stated what he does not know. How does he know I never had information to that effect? How can he state it? I tell him he said what is not correct.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think what my hon. friend, the Secretary of State, means to say is that no such thing ever took place, and, therefore, it was not correct information that was given to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I have said, and I said it knowing what I was saying, that the information the hon. gentleman may have had was another information, that he never had the information he has given this House.

Mr. MITCHELL. What was the information I had? If you know more about it than I do, tell us what it was.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I know the hon. gentleman had some information in Montreal before the interview which took place.

Mr. MITCHELL. Then there was an interview?

Mr. CHAPLEAU. We had an interview. My hon. friend may have had information of a certain gentleman, whom he knows and I know, but I say he never had from him the slightest insinuation or information that anything of the kind concerning the Intercolonial Railway was spoken of at that conference in London; and I know that he had not.

Mr. MITCHELL. I can tell my hon. friend that he is stating what he does not know.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. I know it.

Mr. MITCHELL. You do not know it, and you are undertaking to tell us what you do not know. I repeat that I had the information, and I had it from a gentleman whom I believed to be telling the truth, and I have seen the prospectus or book which was printed—a very expensively got-up book—and it was intimated that they could get the Intercolonial Railway, which cost $45,000,000 for $15,000,000. That I heard, and I had my information pretty direct. And my hon. friend seems to know something about the meeting in London. He admits there was a meeting, and yet he has the audacity to state that I had not information, that I do not know—

Mr. CHAPLEAU. You do not.

Mr. MITCHELL. I say I do; and if it was parliamentary to use stronger language, I would use it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Perhaps my hon. friend will allow me to say that I was present at an interview at which were present my hon. colleagues the Minister of Customs and the Secretary of State, in my office in London, that Mr. Kamper, the gentleman to whom the hon. member refers, was one of the parties present. That was an interview with a syndicate of gentlemen connected with the iron industry, who came to London for the purpose of laying before me a proposition for the manufacture of steel rails in Canada, and that during that interview, or any other interview of any kind, not one word was ever said with reference to any negotiation or proposal for the purchase of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. MITCHELL. The gentleman to whom the hon. the Minister of Finance refers was not the source of my information, but it was that gentleman who conducted the negotiations, as I was informed, for the purchase of the road. I learned that negotiations for the establishment of steel works was the subject of the meeting also, and, as an adjunct of it, the purchase of the Intercolonial Railway for the purposes of transport was a feature of the scheme; and it was told that intimations came also from another Minister, who was not there, that $15,000,000 would be considered not an unacceptable offer, if made for the purchase of the road. One of the objects I had in rising was to protest against that road being sold for any sum to any private or speculative corporation for any purpose. That road is part of the charter by which the Maritime Provinces are tied to the Dominion. It is part of the agreement by which we of the Maritime Provinces were induced to enter Confederation for the purpose of making a practical connection, not a mere paper one, as it would have been if we had not the Intercolonial Railway; and no man knows better than the hon. the Finance Minister, who formed part of the conference held in London, as I did myself, which created the document that bound the Maritime Provinces to this portion of Canada, that the road was built, not for the purpose of making money out of it, not for the purpose of drawing revenue, but with the national object of creating a union; and when the hon. member for North Norfolk points to the road as a non-payable asset, I say to him: Why, it is not an asset at all. It is part of the national constitution; it is in the British North America Act, and forms part of the constitution of this country. I have risen on this occasion for one purpose amongst others, for the purpose of letting these hon. gentlemen opposite understand that if there were negotiations in London—and I believe there were, and elsewhere, too, and perhaps the hon. the Secretary of State knows more about it than he likes to say—these negotiations were striking at the root of this union which is binding the Maritime Provinces to old Canada.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. What do you know about it? That road was built under a solemn contract. It formed part of the bargain, and it was because it formed part of the bargain that we entered Confederation. Any attempt, therefore, to sell that road or to put it into the hands of private corporations for speculative or other purposes, or to pass it out of the hands or the control of the Government in any way, would be a violation of the contract by which these Provinces are bound together, and would be a fair ground for the Provinces to contend that the compact was at an end. I am not one of those who would like to see anything of the kind. We are bound together; I desire that we should remain together, and I want to see our constitution made as perfect as possible, and the attempt to sell our road is a violation of that contract; but I fear we are running too much into debt. Our debt has now reached nearly $300,000,000, and with the power to borrow $36,000,000, $25,000,000 by this resolution, and $11,000,000 by the authority to borrow under previous resolutions, yet unused, besides $15,000,000 which we will be shortly asked to guarantee for the Canadian Pacific, we may well look with alarm to the increasing debt of the country. What does it mean? The increase of indebtedness must mean the increase of the cost of living not only to the rich, but to the middle classes and to the poor of this country, and the cost of living is now very far beyond what it should be in relation to the earning powers of the people. My hon. friend the Minister of Finance made a very specious case when he said that, because he can borrow money for 3½ per cent. for which we are now paying 4 or 5 or 6 per cent., that would reduce the amount of our indebtedness by $53,000,000. That is a fallacy. It is true that, if we never intend to pay the debt, it would reduce the amount we have annually to pay, and he almost said what would amount to that. Then, it would make very little difference. But upon that hypothesis, I am afraid the credit of the country would not stand very well in borrowing any further amount in the money market. We may assume that the $53,000,000 which he proposes to save by the reissue of bonds at the reduced rate of interest of 3½ per cent. instead of 4, 5 or 6 per cent. would be a reduction in the interest. But the debt is not reduced at all. The debt is the same. It may not cost as much for interest, but the debt remains, and it is well understood that we have to pay these debts some time or other; and, unless we announce that fact and admit that fact, we could not borrow any money at all. There is another hypothesis upon which he proposes to go into the money markets of the world and save money to us, and that is that when these debts mature he will be able to obtain new loans at a less interest. How does he know that? He may have to pay 6 per cent. We have no assurance that money will not go up in value in a few years; a threatened war or a general disturbance in Europe would disturb the whole proposition; and yet the hon. gentleman says that he is going to save $53,000,000. The Postmaster General has chosen to challenge my authority as to the mode of governing this country. He says that he questions whether the authority of the member for Northumberland is very good in reference to the government of this country. I will only say one word on that subject, and it is this, and I will leave it to hon. gentlemen who sit around him as to the truth of it: that, if I was not a better administrator than he has been, if I gave no better satisfaction to the hon. gentlemen who sat around me and to the public than he has done, I would have very little to boast of to-day.

Mr. MULOCK. I think the House cannot too strongly emphasise its disapproval of the new doctrine of the Minister of Finance, which is neither more nor less than a policy of repudiation. The hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) appeared to agree with the Minister of Finance in all his utterances, but I doubt if he apprehended the full effect of his argument. The hon. gentleman prepared a statement which was intended to show that our public debt, instead of being $27,000,000, by his species of financing, was $53,000,000 less. To-morrow, no doubt the Minister of Finance will be telling the country, through the newspapers, that our debt is only $175,000,000, because, when our liabilities mature, they are renewed at a reduced rate; but you are taking credit to-day for what may or may not be the outcome of the future, you are assuming that the country will never be called upon to pay this $53,000,000. How did the $227,000,000 fall to $175,000,000? It is in that way and to that extent that the Finance Minister is teaching the people the doctrine of repudiation. In that amount which he says the country will save, there is included $8,000,000 of promissory notes, that is, legal tender notes owing by this country. Does he mean to say that the country does not owe the amount of these legal tenders? Does he mean to say that those cannot be exchanged for gold? If he does, I venture to say that the notes will be exchanged for gold to-morrow. He says that these are not a legal liability, but the fact of his stating that may make them an instantaneous legal liability. The member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) refers to the case of England. It is well known that England has been able frequently to renew her debt, and that there are many who contend that the national debt of England is an advantage to the country, but on what ground is that? It is on the ground that the bonds are held by the people of the country themselves, that it binds the country together, and makes the people in favor of the preservation of the constitution, but is it not very different here? Here, as the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) should see, we should establish such a condition of affairs that we should not be transmitting millions of dollars a year out of Canada to pay the interest on our debt. Is that for the interest of the people of Canada? Is it for the interest of our people that we should educate them to believe that it is a good thing to borrow all you can, to mortgage all your property, and to create an interminable debt which will be continuous as time itself, by which the energies of the people shall be taxed for all time in order to remit money abroad? I look forward to a time when our people will be in a better position than to require them to remit money abroad, and it is not in the interest of Canada to encourage extravagant expenditure on the idea that there never will be a pay day. The only check against extravagance and improvidence is the idea that at some day or other these liabilities have to be paid; and, if the Finance Minister does not desire his doctrine of what I claim to be repudiation to lead to its natural results, let him get up and state that there was no ground for his statement that our debts should not be paid. Let us have some stability in this matter. In 1884 he declared that if we gave him $30,000,000 he would do away with the policy of disallowance. We gave him the money and in 1887 the hon. Minister and all his party, assisted by the member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) repudiated that. They repudiated in 1887 what they promised in 1884, and this year they have repudiated what they did in 1887. You do not find the same policy, but it is practically repudiation in regard to all their principles, and they are carrying that out in regard to the national debt now. I think we cannot, as a House, take too strong ground in favor of the view that Canada intends to pay her debts when the obligations fall due. That is the obligation we want to live up to, and, whether it be soon or late, let it be understood that it is our policy to pay off our national debt and so to make the people of Canada a free people.

Mr. MADILL. Is the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) in favor of the Government assuming the debts of the Provincial Governments to the extent of $107,000,000? Is he in favor of the Dominion Government assuming those provincial debts as part of the national debt?

Mr. MULOCK. Am I in favor of what?

Mr. McMULLEN. In my opinion, we are called upon to consider the most important matter that has been brought before us during this Session. We are now considering the very large increased indebtedness that rests upon this country. A great many people in this country know what it is to get into debt, and there are many people, who, from their personal experience, would be able to realize the fallacy of the argument that has been presented by the Minister of Finance to show the manner in which he would reduce the public debt of this country. Now, Sir, I hold that the question before us of giving the Government power to borrow in the British market such a very large amount of money, is a very serious one. During the last general election when the hon. gentlemen opposite appealed to the country, they made the statement that the national debt was \$196,000,000, and that the interest per capita was \$1.65. They went on to show that, comparing that sum with what the people paid during the regime of the Mackenzie Government, they were only paying 3 cents a head more. But when we came to find out the exact facts, when Parliament met, we ascertained that the debt of this country, instead of being \$196,000,000 it was \$227,000,000, and that the per capita interest, instead of being \$1.65, was at least \$1.98. We found that the Government succeeded so far in secret- ing from the people the true financial condition of this country that, on the strength of that statement, they were able to get back into power. Now, they come down and virtually confess to this House that they require to borrow a very large increased sum in order to pay the debt which they secreted from the people, and which will raise the per capita drain upon the people's resources from \$1.98 to \$2.27. If we take their own statement made during the elections in 1887, we find that they now virtually confess that inside of one year they have found it necessary to increase the per capita tax by something like 62 cents. Now, it will be remembered that the leader of the Opposition of that day drew the attention of the House and the country to the consequences that would naturally follow the recklessness of hon. gentlemen opposite in connection with the different public works that they had undertaken, and notably the Canadian Pacific Railway. We are all quite prepared to admit that it was desirable that road should be built, but we contend that the extravagance in which they indulged in building that road, has largely increased the people's burden beyond the sum that was necessary to construct that line if it had been economically done. The leader of the Opposition from time to time endeavored to impress upon the House and the country the fact that the debt was going to increase to a very large amount, and although he did that forcibly and pointedly, as well as others who associated with him, hon. gentlemen opposite presented such a condition of things that they were enabled to exact from the people of this country a lease of power for five years more. Now we are having the evidence that the statements made by the leader of the Opposition were correct. Sir, I say that the statement presented by the Minister of Finance is a most fallacious statement, and it will tend largely to mislead the public in regard to our true financial condition. I would like to ask what effect it would have upon the farmer, for instance, who has got a mortgage upon his farm of \$2,000? That mortgage, we will suppose, was produced a few years ago when interest was at 8 per cent., for a period of 20 years. The interest has dropped until now he can borrow that money for 5 per cent., and in the place of looking upon his mortgage as \$2,000, he calculates what it would cost him at 5 per cent. to mortgage it again, and he says to himself: At the rate I can borrow money now, I would only have to pay \$100 a year, at 5 per cent., on \$2,000, instead of having to pay \$160, at 8 per cent., on \$2,000, and consequently the principal of my mortgage is only \$1,250, and I look forward to the day when I will be able to place my mortgage again and get the money at a reduced rate of interest. But in the meantime, for the balance of the 20 years, he has got to pay \$160. It is just the same with us. The Finance Minister points us to a period when our bonds, that are now floating on the London market, will mature, and he will be able to replace them at, as he says, $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., and by an operation of that kind, he says he will be able to reduce the annual drain upon people's resources. Well, that is a very good thing to look forward to, but it is very poor encouragement to the people of this country, who are struggling hard to make a living for themselves and support those depending upon them—it is poor encouragement for them to look forward to a period 20 years hence, when, perhaps, they will be buried in the dust, and when the prophecies made by the Finance Minister, even if realised, will be of no benefit to them. Now, I say it is unfair to mislead the public mind in this manner. The remarks that were dropped by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) are very true, that although money at the present moment may be low in the English market, and Canada is able to borrow on fairly good terms, we are not certain that that condition of things will exist in five years, in ten years, or in twenty years. It is very foolish on our part to congratulate ourselves upon the fact that we can borrow now any amount at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The unfortunate thing is that we are now committed to an annual drain upon our resources, in some cases at 5 per cent., in some cases at $4\frac{1}{2}$, and in some cases at 4. In connection with this resolution, I was glad to get from the Finance Minister a statement of what the rebellion in the North-West cost us—I think he said it was some \$5,860,000. Well, Sir, it is very unfortunate that we should have had to increase our national debt by that amount. If hon. gentlemen opposite had been anxious and earnest in the discharge of their duty and their endeavor to govern this country, we would not have been called upon to add these \$6,000,000 to our national debt. Now, Sir, according to the statement of the Finance Minister, our national debt will be \$252,000,000. The interest on that amount at the present rate is over \$11,000,000 a year, which is a great drain on the resources of the country, and it will continue so long as our bonds remain out bearing the interest they now bear, so although hon. gentlemen opposite look forward hopefully to being able to reduce the annual amount for which our people are made subject, the drain will nevertheless continue. From the admissions of the Finance Minister it appears that the present Government have increased the debt at the rate of \$3,000,000 a year since they took office, equal to \$667,000 a month or \$22,000 for every day they have held power.

An hon. MEMBER. What was the amount in 1878?

Mr. McMULLEN. Our total indebtedness in 1878 was $174,957,268. Adding the amount now proposed to be borrowed, our present debt is $252,000,000, which gives an increase of $8,000,000 a year from 1879 to the present time. The hon. Finance Minister has not told the House all the purposes for which the money is required. I suppose the Government have a large number of railway schemes on hand. They have spent considerable money during the past few years in these enterprises. In some cases they were desirable and the Government were to a certain extent justified in giving them money, but in a great many cases they have subsidised lines running alongside roads already constructed. I do not look upon that as a very wise policy in the face of the increased burdens proposed by the Finance Minister. I hold that the whole system is wrong, and I am sorry the Finance Minister was called upon to make such a statement as he has made. We are undoubtedly in a most wretched and deplorable condition in this country; it is a most humiliating position for us to be placed in, that this country with a population of $5,000,000, and the population increasing very slowly, should be increasing its debt from year to year until now it has beyond doubt reached the enormous sum of $252,000,000, which is far in excess of the debt of any of Her Majesty's colonies in any part of the world. The Postmaster General said the Australian colonies were more heavily burdened than we are. But those colonies built all their own railways and issued their own bonds for that purpose, and if you take our entire indebtedness and add to it the indebtedness for bonds held in England for the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Grand Trunk Railway and other railways, our debt will exceed that of the Australian colonies, and it was, therefore, not fair for the Postmaster General to present the statement as he did. The prophecies of the Opposition during the past seven or eight years have been fulfilled to-day. The statement of the Minister of Finance is a frank confession that the results we predicted during the last ten years have come to pass—and they are the natural results of spending money in building railways where they were not wanted, of expending money extravagantly on public works and undertaking different enterprises until we have reached the period when the drain on the people's resources has become enormous. I felt it to be my duty—I care not what others in the House may do or what others on this side may do—to enter my solemn protest against this increase of the country's indebtedness. It is the duty of every member of the Opposition to criticise the Government's actions, particularly in regard to expenditures and increase of debt, and before the Speaker leaves the Chair I hope the Minister of Finance will submit a more minute statement as to what he intends to do with the money he proposes to borrow and where every dollar is to go. With respect to savings banks deposits, I myself advocated years ago that the rate of interest should be reduced. I held that the country should not be called upon to pay 4 per cent. interest on deposits, and the Finance Minister of that day acknowledged that it cost about 1 per cent. to handle that account, thus making the rate of interest 5 per cent. To-day the Finance Minister proposes to avail himself of the advantage of being able to pay off our post office bank indebtedness, that is to people having deposits there. I well remember when the First Minister came west and addressed different meetings, that he took me very seriously to task for having dared to suggest that the interest on such deposits should be reduced. He said those savings were the earnings of the poor laboring classes, mechanics and others, and it would be grossly unfair and unjust to pay less interest than 4 per cent. Now the Government have changed their policy in that as in many other things. This Session will be remembered many years hence as the Session in which the Government changed daily their policy. One day they favor the National Policy completely; another day exceptions are made to it; and to-day we have another change, and that is with regard to the rate of interest to deposits in the post office savings bank. No attempt has been made to defend the Government policy as expressed by the Finance Minister, except by the Postmaster General. He attempted to prove that our condition financially was not so serious after all as we made it out to be. I believe the statement he made is in keeping with the statements he has made year after year. The people are becoming wonderfully accustomed to humbug. They have been humbugged for many years, they were humbugged at the time of the general election.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Six o'clock.

An hon. MEMBER. Go on, go on.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am quite willing to go on if the hon. gentlemen on the opposite side wish. I have noticed, however, that when the hands of the clock pointed not so near to six o'clock as it does at present, and when a member on that side of the House was speaking, he was generally allowed to call it six o'clock. I do not think they should refuse to a member on this side of the House the courtesies we extend to members on the other side.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. McMULLEN. Before six o'clock I was about giving some reasons why we thought it was imprudent, that the Government should ask this House, without a more extended statement of facts by the Finance Minister, to give its consent to the borrowing of this money. The Minister of Finance in his statement offered some general explanations with regard to what is going to be done with the sum he intended to borrow, but we did not get it in detail, and I think a considerable sum has got to be accounted for out of the $25,000,000 that it is his intention to borrow.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have not made any such statement as that. I have asked for power to borrow, but I have not stated that it was the intention to borrow $25,000,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. I understood across the floor of the House that the question was asked from the Finance Minister as to what he would do with the money he intended to borrow, and he mentioned some items he wanted to wipe out. For instance he stated there was the floating debt of $5,000,000 and some other items too. Yet he did not account for the balance, or what he intended to do with it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite so.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am glad to know it is not the intention of the Finance Minister to borrow to the extent of $25,000,000. I hope in the interests of the country he will not have to do that. I have tried to give some attention to the statement of the Minister of Finance, and I find in the first place that he says there are four millions of money payable to this country at a half per cent. which is practically the cost of issuing the Dominion bills. If that is a true statement, and if we have that money that has been drawn from the pockets of the people (for undoubtedly the bills must represent something) would it not be wise to borrow in Canada the $25,000,000, if we can get it at a-half per cent. in place of going to England and paying 3½. If the hon. gentleman can manage an issue of Dominion bills and when the interest will only cost the people of the country only one-half per cent., I should think it would be prudent not to ask power to borrow abroad, but to borrow the money at home. He acknowledges we owe $150,000,000 in England on which we pay 4 per cent. His statement to the House is that the actual cash value of the indebtedness would be $114,000,000, counting what we would be able to borrow at 3½, but he admitted that we cannot redeem those debentures for 20 years hence. Let us suppose that a man in business fails, and he calls a meeting of his creditors and says: "There is a mortgage on my house for $2,000, and that mortgage bears 10 per cent. interest. It is not due for ten years but the money to day can be borrowed for 6 per cent., and I claim that in giving me credit for my assets you should only value that at $1,200, because the reduction between 10 and 6 per cent would be 4 per cent., and 4 per cent. on $2,000 would be $80 per year, which, in ten years, would amount to $800, and I contend you should reduce that from the amount of the mortgage on $2,000." I would like to know if any meeting of honest and intelligent men in this Dominion would listen for a moment to any such statement as that, yet that is practically the argument the hon. Minister of Finance has presented to the House to-day. I do not believe there is any man in this House who would dare to present to an intelligent people, a statement based on such a fallacious argument as he has made to this House with regard to the actual cash value of this Dominion. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman prepared the statement, but I must say that whoever put it in his hands must have thought that he was able to present a statement of this kind with all the ingenuity and powers that he is acknowledged to possess. I contend that our national debt at this present moment is a very serious consideration for the people of this country, and I wonder how the hon. gentleman has attempted to get around the fact which stares us in the face. I do not think in the future the hon. gentleman himself will say that the debt is less than he acknowledged it will be; that if he should use those borrowing powers it would virtually be $252,000,000, on which we have to pay a rate of interest which would average about 4 per cent. in the meantime. Of course, if the money market continues to be favorable, but there is no guarantee that it will be so because it fluctuates; when those debentures mature he will be able to reduce the rate. In the meantime the Finance Minister is trying to comfort the representatives in this House and the people of the country that to-day if we borrow money we can borrow it at 3½ instead of 4 per cent. That means that it would take every bushel of fall wheat grown in this country during the last year, at the regular market price, to pay the annual interest on our public debt. According to the returns brought down, the yield of fall wheat last year was 14,440,611 bushels, which at 78 cents a bushel would amount to $11,263,676, just about the amount we have to pay in interest every year; and this will tend to increase the annual expenditure, which I presume will now amount to $40,000,000. I do not know how long the people of this country will keep patient under this sort of thing. They have borne wonderfully with it; but possibly they will wake up after a while, when I am afraid, judging by the condition of things into which we are drifting, it will be too late. It will be like locking the stable door after the horse is stolen. Hon. gentlemen opposite charge us with having annexation sentiments. My impression is that we shall be glad to join any country that is in a better financial position than we are if things go on as they are going at the present time. There is not another state or union of states on the continent of America that has so deplorable a financial condition to present to the world as Canada has at the present time, and hon. gentlemen appear to think nothing of increasing our debt. We do not hear so much to-day about an increase of $25,000,000 as we used to hear about an increase of $1,000,000. However, I suppose, as we are in a minority, we shall have to consent to it

Mr. ELLIS. I have endeavored to get from the Public Accounts some idea of the effect of the borrowing system upon the country, and to discover its advantages. I find that in the whole period since Confederation, the charges of all kinds on the debt, including interest, expenses and sinking fund, have amounted to $161,590,432. There are to be deducted from that sum the earnings of investments, amounting to $16,193,048, so that the total debt expenditure over earnings amounts to $145,397,384. Well, Sir, what have we borrowed? Our debt in 1867 was $75,728,612. At present it is $227,313,911, the increase being $151,585,270, which I presume it is fair to infer represents what we have borrowed. We have not received all that amount, however, we have only received $143,430,021, the balance, $8,155,249, being the discount on the loans, the commissions, the cost of bringing the money out, &c. So that the actual net result appears to be that we have received $143,430,021, and have paid out $145,397,384, leaving a balance against us of $1,967,363. I take it, from the financial statements furnished to the House, that that is a fair statement. I have gone over the figures fairly on both sides, and I cannot reach any other conclusion but that we are actually borrowing money to pay the interest on the debt. Looking at the matter from another point of view, the result is the same. The debt of the whole period as I have said is $151,585,270; we have paid out in interest and other charges $145,397,384, and we have paid in discounts on loans $8,155,249, making a total of $153,552,633,

The inference derivable from these figures seems to be a plain one. The country itself is quite capable, if it got a rest, to recuperate and to overtake the burdens laid upon it. It seems to be perfectly useless to go on borrowing money, while we practically pay more than we receive in interest, in the cost of management, and in the cost of transference from the other side of the water to this side; and that is one of the main objections to going into debt on the other side of the water. The hon. the Minister of Finance in his statement left out reference to the premium, discount and exchange as simplifying the financial operation in which he explained; but in the meantime we thus lose sight of the heavy charges involved in having to carry this heavy debt in England. It seems to me to me that is the reason why the gentlemen in charge of the finances of this country should consider whether a new financial arrangement could not be made instead of going into the markets of the world to borrow money. If we could stop borrowing for a while, and let the country rest and recuperate, there would not be the necessity of this heavy drain on the resources of the country which the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) who preceded me has so forcibly depicted.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I have frequently observed that the hon. Minister of Finance, when he finds himself in a rather difficult position, always adopts a mode of directing public attention away from the real question, and indulging in some imaginary and glowing picture of what is going to happen under certain peculiar circumstances. We have become accustomed to that mode of tactics in this House. I remember last year, when the hon. gentleman found that it was necessary that the Government should have an increase of revenue to the extent of a million or a million and a half in the iron duties, he indulged this House for a few hours in describing the great resources of this country and what great manufacturing industries he was going to build up if the representations made to Parliament were accepted. No one knows better than that hon. gentleman, when that statement was made, that there was very little probability indeed of his expectations ever being realised. Those duties were imposed more with the view of enabling the Government to collect a million or a million and a half of additional revenue which the Government stood so much in need of than with the expectation of developing the iron manufacturing industries of this country. In a previous year, when the changes were made in the sugar duties, the hon. gentleman or his predecessor did not inform the House that the change involved an increase of taxation to the extent of $7,500,000. Now, this mode of dealing with public questions before the House is extremely unsatisfactory. The hon. gentleman, on the present occasion, has indulged in one of those flights of fancies for which he is celebrated; drawing on a fertile and powerful imagination, he has endeavored to lead this House to believe that we will be none the worse off by the adoption of this resolution, but that we will be the better of it. I would say to the hon. gentleman that if he possesses the power of forecasting financial events for ten or twenty years, he is wasting his time in this country. If he can look ahead fifteen or twenty years, and tell this House that those obligations, which are maturing, are going to be renewed at three and three-quarters per cent.,—if he can only persuade the bankers and financiers to believe in his powers of forecasting financial events to that extent, he will become an authority in the London market, and his services will be paid for at a much higher rate than they are paid for in this country, or in England when he is there. But the absurdity of that forecast must be apparent to the hon. gentleman himself. He told us that when these various bonds became due, they could all be renewed at so much less interest than they are bearing at present, but he did not inform the House that it was not in his power or in the power of the Government to obtain the immediate control of those bonds.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I stated in the most explicit terms that the debt in England had an average of about twenty years to run.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Exactly.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then, you must not say I did not state it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Yes, but the hon. gentleman did not say that the Government could obtain possession of those bonds and renew them at a low rate of interest, and thereby secure the advantage he so eloquently pictured. Of course, he stated that the bonds would mature in twenty years, but the bonds are not in the possession of the Government. They are in the hands of the monied men of the United Kingdom, who will hold them until maturity, unless they can make a better investment in the meantime. At all events, the bonds will not, under any circumstances, go into the possession of the Government. The hon. gentleman must see the absurdity of the position he has taken, and absurdity is not too strong an expression to use with regard to explanations such as those with which the hon. gentleman has favored us to-day. It is quite within the range of probability—nay, I may say, it is more than probable—that within the next ten years or twenty years, when these obligations are maturing, a war cloud may pass over Europe, and instead of interest being at 3 or 4 per cent., the rate will have gone up to 6 or 7 per cent., so that when these obligations are falling due, the successor of the hon. gentleman, on going into the money market in England to negotiate a new loan to pay off these bonds, may have to pay 6 per cent., and therefore, according to the argument of the hon. gentleman, instead of reducing he will increase our debt by 50 per cent.; and the debt, instead of being \$227,000,000 as at present, will be \$340,000,000. If the argument of the hon. gentleman holds good in one case, it must hold good in the other. This shows the complete absurdity of any public man attempting here to forecast for ten years or fifteen years, or even one year, the rate of interest in the old country. I venture to say that if the speech of the hon. gentleman were placed before the financiers of London, they would treat it with perfect contempt, and would justly consider a gentleman occupying the high position of Finance Minister of this country, who would thus seek to mislead public opinion, unworthy of public confidence. Were the bankers and financiers of London to analyse the speech of the hon. gentleman and expose the fallacies in which he has indulged, they would have a very small opinion of the intelligence of the people and the Parliament of Canada in allowing themselves to be deluded by such a representation as the hon. gentleman has made to-night. But the hon. gentleman must not imagine that he can test our credulity too far. Another view taken by the hon. gentleman was a very unfortunate one to be adopted by any gentleman occupying the position of Finance Minister of this Dominion. The hon. gentleman has told us that we need never expect to pay these debts, as when they fall due we can make a new loan, and so go on ad infinitum. Well, I confess that if the finances of this country should be under the charge of a Finance Minister holding the views of the hon. gentleman, the probability is that we will go on borrowing until our credit will have reached a point beyond which we can go no further. The hon. gentleman says all we have to do when our obligations fall due is to renew them. We all know what renewing an obligation means in ordinary financial circles. We know that a man need never expect to obtain a renewal of his obligation unless he has kept his credit intact, and his credit depends altogether on the position in which he stands when asking for a renewal and not at all on that which he occupied when he contracted the debt. The hon. gentleman reminds me of the witty Irishman and all Irishman are witty, like the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), who, when he had given his note for a certain amount and signed it, said: There, thank Heaven, that is paid. That is about the soundness of the argument of my hon. friend. The hon. gentleman when referring to the interest, should have reminded the House that the interest payable on our debt to-day is about \$4,000,000 more than it was in 1878; so that no matter how much the rate of interest may have been lowered, the amount on which we are compelled to pay interest has reached such a figure that our annual payment is \$4,000,000 more than it was when this Government took office in 1878. Now, Sir, there is another feature of the statement made by the hon. the Minister of Finance which I think was of a very dangerous character, coming from a gentleman in his high position. He led this House to believe that we had extended and probably might extend still further the issue of Dominion notes without any great injury to the country. He pointed out that, in issuing \$4,000,000 in excess, after the \$8,000,000, it only cost us $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The hon. gentleman knows that there has been a feeling among a certain class in this country, and we have listened to debates in this House in times gone by, to the effect that the Government should take the issue of notes into their own hands, and should issue Dominion notes for whatever amount the Government might require. Suppose, instead of proposing this loan to-night, the hon. gentleman had asked the House to issue \$25,000,000 of Dominion notes, we know very well that, with the support which the Government have on that side of the House, or we have every reason to believe, his supporters would have as readily agreed to a proposal to issue \$25,000,000 of notes as they will agree to give him this authority to raise \$25,000,000 by way of a loan.

Mr. HESSON. Why not?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am very glad to hear the hon. gentleman say that, as it only shows what is underlying a great deal of ignorant opinion in this country, of which the hon. gentleman, I suppose, is an exponent. It is an ignorant opinion to imagine that we can issue a large amount of Government notes in this country without finding them in a short time below par, and, if the Finance Minister would desire to bring the credit of Canada to the position of that of San Domingo, Cuba, or Honduras, or some of these countries, where their notes are at a discount of from 20 to 40 per cent., he could not adopt a more effective mode than by adopting the suggestion of the hon. gentleman behind him.

Mr. HESSON. How about the American greenbacks?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is a dangerous idea to promulgate, because the time may come when the Government—I mean any Government in this House—might not be strong enough to resist a strong feeling in this country on the subject, and might be compelled to yield against their better judgment, and so practically ruin the country. If $25,000,000 can be issued in notes, why not $100,000,000? I think the hon. gentleman has done a great injury in letting it go abroad from one occupying the high position he does, that the expansion of the paper issue can be made—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is putting a statement in my mouth for which he will find no foundation whatever. What I said was that the amount of Dominion notes issued in excess of the specie held had increased from $8,000,000 to $12,000,000, and that the additional $4,000,000 cost us $420,000 a year; and I said that, instead of expecting that we would lose the advantage of that, as the country expanded, it would probably expand, and there was not the slightest suggestion from me that there should be any large issue of Dominion notes. The hon. gentleman knows that every one of those notes is as good as gold.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That is exactly what I said. I gave the hon. gentleman's own statement that, by an increase of 50 per cent. on the paper currency of the country, no injury had arisen; and I said that his argument led to the conclusion that you might extend that to any degree that a parliamentary majority demanded. That was my argument.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is not my statement.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I did not say that he made that statement, but I was arguing from his statement that the increase of 50 per cent. would be of advantage to this country; and certainly the hon. gentleman indicated then, as he has indicated now, that this issue might be expanded from time to time.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, not that we could increase it now, but that the expansion of the country might lead to a similar increase.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Yes, that it would keep pace with the expansion of the country.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is correct.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Therefore I was arguing that, in my judgment, and I believe in the judgment of every well regulated banking or commercial mind in Canada, the hon. gentleman was taking a ground that would be detrimental to every interest in this country. If he adopts that, he cannot limit it. The power is behind him, that is his majority in the House, and that power may force him, or may compel any Government to make a larger issue of Dominion notes than I think would be consistent with the credit of this country. It is in that sense that I regret exceedingly that the hon. gentleman should have made such a reference. Then as to this loan, the hon. gentleman indicated the way in which he anticipated the appropriation of about $16,000,000, but he also stated, in reply to my hon. friend in front of me, that about $11,000,000 of a previous loan remained unappropriated. That would give him a credit of $36,000,000 supposing this vote is passed. That is a credit of $20,000,000 more than he can show any necessity for. It is a most unusual and unconstitutional proceeding. No Finance Minister in this country or in any well-governed country would ever venture to come to Parliament and ask to pledge the finances of the country to such a large amount without being compelled to lay on the Table of the House a direct, positive, detailed statement as to how that money was to be appropriated, and I think the hon. gentleman is not dealing fairly with the House or the country or following the rule which has always been considered necessary in this House in regard to financial affairs, if he does not, before the final stage of the Bill, show a detailed statement of how this money is to be appropriated. What does he want it for? Is it for any public purpose which he cannot state? Is it to cover up any deficiencies? Is it in regard to any expenditure of money which he cannot state to this House?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Must the hon. gentleman be told that not one single dollar of the money appropriated by the Parliament of Canada can be used except under an Act of Parliament or a resolution of this House?

Mr. MITCHELL. Every one knows that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman does not seem to know it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Cannot the hon. gentleman state something new?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman for Halifax knew it, it is entirely unpardonable that he should suggest that this amount was to be applied to some purpose of which Parliament was ignorant.

Mr. MITCHELL. My hon. friend said that the money cannot be applied except as Parliament directs. Why, Sir, with the hon. gentlemen behind them, with the voting power behind them, we do not know but that to-morrow they will come down with some Chignecto Railway scheme, or something of that kind, that will swamp the whole of this money.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. member surely has a very short memory. He would lead this House to believe that not one cent of this 20 millions can be appropriated without the special sanction of this Parliament. Why, does not the hon. gentleman remember that only last Session he brought down special warrants for nearly three millions of money, after the money was spent, and what could Parliament do but sustain and sanction the action of the Government? Was the House consulted respecting the appropriation of one cent of that money, a large portion of which was most improperly spent? I say, Sir, there never was a greater abuse of executive power than was shown last year when nearly 3 million dollars was expended by the Government under Governor General's warrants, which was never contemplated when that permission was given by this House. The hon. gentleman knows that the authority of the Governor General's warrant is only used when some great public work has to be rapidly constructed, or when some public calamity occurs which calls for the immediate action of the Government, like the fire at St. John, or an accident on a canal, or an accident on a railway, or a public building being burnt down. But there we had a long detailed statement of expenditure of a character that could have waited and for which there was no necessity, at least for the largest portion of it, being spent until Parliament met. I dare say the hon. gentleman next Session may come down with Governor General's warrants for a good share of the $20,000,000 which he asks us now to place at the disposal of the Government. I repeat that this is an unusual and unconstitutional act on the part of the Government. If they have any use for it in view, if they think they will require this money in the public interest, we are bound to know what it is, and we should not be called upon to place this money at the disposal of the Government when they may abuse their discretion, and fritter away a large portion of the money under Governor General's warrants, for purposes of which we know nothing now. I hope, Sir, that the hon. gentleman will retrace his steps, that he will see that it is necessary to regard public opinion, that he will have enough respect for the usages of Parliament, enough respect for his own position, enough respect for the people of this country, not to ask permission to make a loan of $20,000,000 without letting the people know what it is for. I hope he will yet give us some explanation before the Bill passes its final stage, for he will find that if he does not, there will be further discussion, and we shall endeavor, whether we succeed or not, to persuade other hon. gentlemen, if we cannot the hon. gentleman himself, and his Government, that they are pursuing a course which may lead to very unconstitutional procedure in the future of this country. Hon. gentlemen who are charged with the Government of this country can only conduct its business within prescribed limits and rules, and the moment the Government, through their Finance Minister, attempt to take a power which the constitution of the country and Parliament never contemplated, and never sanctioned, they will find that there is enough intelligent opinion in this country to express a very strong disapproval. I hope, therefore, that the hon. gentleman, with regard to that point, will give us some further information before he proceeds to take the final stage.

Mr. COOK. I wish to call the attention of the leader of the Government to the fact that his Finance Minister has made a statement to this House that he is going, with one stroke of the pen, to reduce the debt of this country by 53 million dollars. He was not in his place when that statement was made.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I heard that.

Mr. COOK. Well, Sir, I would call upon the right hon. leader of the Government to retain that heaven-born statesman and keep him here. He should not allow him to go to a foreign country, because he will find difficulty in replacing him unless he calls in the services of the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), who, I believe, would be the only man who could perform such a feat besides the Finance Minister himself. My hon. friend, the senior member for Halifax, says that we should have a statement of the purposes for which this money is to be expended. He need not concern himself about that matter, because this Government will find ways and means enough for spending that money. Now, it has been stated that our net debt is $227,000,000 and this $25,000,000 will increase it to $252,000,000. Our gross debt will then be about $300,000,000. Although we have some assets, and they may be very good assets, still we cannot realise upon them sufficiently to pay off the balance, and, therefore, this money being borrowed will have to be paid back, unless we adopt the plan that the Finance Minister has just proposed, and which hon. gentlemen opposite seem to approve by the way they cheer him on. They did not cheer him yesterday at the result of the election which took place near this city under the very nose of the hon. gentleman, although the Ministers exercised such an influence in that constituency that they expected to carry it by a large majority, but fortunately for this country the people thought differently. Well, Sir, our gross debt will be increased to three hundred million dollars, and our interest will amount to over $11,000,000 a year. When hon. gentlemen opposite were on this side of the House some years ago, I remember a statement made, either by the present Finance Minister or by Mr. Tilley, that the business of the country, under the Government of Mr. Mackenzie, should be conducted upon a sum of $23,000,000 a year, and that the public expenditure should be kept at that point. But since they came into power they have increased the annual expenditure to $35,000,000, being an excess of $12,000,000 over the sum expended by the Mackenzie Government. I was somewhat amused and alarmed at the statement made by the hon. gentleman with reference to the issue of bank notes. It is within the recollection of hon. gentlemen in this House that some of their friends, a few years ago, were advocating what was known then as the "rag baby." It is also known by the hon. gentlemen in this House that the bank charters expire in 1890. The Dominion elections will not take place, if the hon. gentlemen keep in office to the expiration of their time, till 1892, which will give them an opportunity of ascertaining the feeling of the House and country as to whether the "rag baby" will be a good card to play at the next general election. Hon. gentlemen have been feeling their way for some time in this respect. This action of the Finance Minister will go out to the papers and be spread throughout the country, and we all know how unscrupulous some political papers are, particularly those supporting hon. gentlemen opposite. We shall probably see in the papers to-morrow or in a few days that the Finance Minister has reduced the debt by $53,000,000; the larger papers on the Conservative side will make the statement and the smaller papers will follow, and an effort will be made to impress on the people, who read nothing but Tory papers, that the Finance Minister has followed in the steps of the first financier of England, Mr. Goschen. But there is a difference between financing in this country and in England. We have to borrow our money from a foreign country, while in England they have it at their own doors and they lend money to other countries that require it. It has been stated that our debt will increase. Certainly it will increase. It is the policy of this Government to increase the debt, it never decreases anything where public expenditure is concerned, and although the papers will endeavor to make the people believe that the debt has been decreased by $53,000,000 by a stroke of the pen made by this heaven-born financier, the result will be really an increase of $25,000,000 by the loan now asked. The money will be spent. The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) need have no doubt on that score, they will find a way of expending it, because that is their way of doing business. They have increased the people's burden, but they should learn a lesson from the late elections in Missisquoi, Kent and Russell. Supreme efforts of hon. gentlemen were put forth in those elections, and in almost every township they made a scheme by which to advance the interests of the people of the locality. Notwithstanding all the efforts brought forward to corrupt the electors of the constituencies it had no effect. They have humbugged the people a little too long, and they know that if there was an appeal to the people to-day they would not come to this House with a corporal's guard. They know that, and I advise them to make hay while the sun shines. Mr. Mackintosh, the Conservative candidate in Russell, openly made the statement that he did not know how long they would be in power, and he said: "You can rest assured I will look after myself and make hay while the sun shines." So I advise hon. gentlemen to make hay while the sun shines, because their lease of power is very short.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Good hay in Scotland.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On resolution 1,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Perhaps the Finance Minister will take the committee into his confidence and state the objects for which he seeks to borrow the money and whether he really requires the amount mentioned. We understand that beyond the amount stated by him to be required there will be a balance of $10,000,000, and he has already a margin of $11,000,000 under authority already received from Parliament.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not suppose that hon. gentlemen opposite were really serious in asking for an explanation as to how we proposed to expend the amount for which we ask borrowing power from Parliament. If they will look at past legislation they will find that every Government has been armed with borrowing powers largely in excess of anything they require for immediate use. How is it that at this moment we have an unused borrowing power of $11,000,000? That very fact will show hon. gentlemen opposite that taking the authority of Parliament to borrow to a certain limit does not at all involve using that power; but it might at any moment become extremely inconvenient not to have a considerable margin of borrowing power. Hon. gentlemen will understand that fact at once when I state that at this moment we owe the savings banks $40,000,000. Every dollar of that sum is on call, so that if at any time the banks offered a larger interest than the Government were paying we would be liable to lose the deposits, and hon. gentlemen opposite would not want the Government to be unable to pay such claims. I merely mention this, not as a thing likely to occur, but in order to show hon. gentlemen that asking for borrowing power does not at all involve an intention to use that power or to borrow money materially in excess of the requirements of the country. It is not sufficient, as I have explained, to meet the liabilities that have to be provided for. There are $5,000,000 for the floating debt, $6,000,000 for railway expenditure authorised, $5,000,000 for expenditure for capital account, public works, and I do not myself know at this moment what amount will be required or what amount it will be found at the moment judicious to place upon the market. The Government of India a very short time ago floated a loan for £7,000,000 sterling without requiring a single dollar for expenditure this year. I merely mention this to show that the Government should be armed with borrowing power to use in the interests of the country at the right time and for the right purpose. I have already explained that to give power to borrow money is not to give authority to expend it, and that the authority of Parliament must be obtained for every dollar of expenditure. If the Government to meet the wants of the public service, as provided by law—because the Governor General's warrant is issued under the authority of the law—require to resort to the Governor General's warrant, they take still greater responsibility than when they lay a vote before Parliament, because they are held strictly to account by Parliament for every expenditure made without its previous sanction; and, therefore, that does not affect the question. The amount asked is not with a view to take advantage of that borrowing power, but it is asked in conformity with the past practice of Governments on both sides of this House to arm themselves with such borrowing powers as may be required, and which it will be extremely inconvenient in the interests of the country at any time not to possess. I explained to the House in the first instance the amount on which we propose to make a loan at no distant date. In doing that we have followed the uniform practice in taking a considerable large margin, to meet any exigency of the public service.

Mr. MITCHELL. The illustration which the hon. gentleman has given is one eminently unsatisfactory to this House and to this country, as a reason why we should pass this Bill, and give in addition to the borrowing power of $11,000,000 the Government already possesses, $25,000,000 more, making in all $36,000,000 that this country is expected to be responsible for. He has stated as a reason for that that the Government of India have taken borrowing powers for about seven million pounds sterling.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not say they had taken powers, but that they floated a loan, although they do not require the money, to the extent of seven millions sterling.

Mr. MITCHELL. Very well, they floated a loan although they do not want the money. But my hon. friend forgot to tell this House, what most of the gentlemen know, that the Government of India control a population between 250 and 270 million souls, and is it because the Government who control that population have borrowed $35,000,000, or seven million pounds sterling, it should be a justification, that the Government of Canada, controlling a population of only 5,000,000 of people should borrow $36,000,000. The hon. gentleman has told us he is following the precedent that other countries have pursued. Will he point to a precedent in any country, for the borrowing of such an enormous sum as that, without any statement in detail whatever having been given to the House? The Government has already power to borrow $11,000,000 and why should the hon. gentleman come to this House and ask for $25,000,000 more? If any extraordinary occasion should arise, this Parliament can be called together at a fortnight's notice, and at all events unless we dissolve, we will meet in nine months from this. The hon. gentleman now comes to this House with reasons which are eminently unsatisfactory to the country, and asks for this increased borrowing power, notwithstanding the circumstances which I have pointed out. I would be recreant to the duty which I owe to my constituents and to my country, if I did not protest against this, and that we in this House allowed the hon. gentleman to taunt us next Session, as he has taunted us before, with the remark that we consented to those borrowing powers and allowed him and the Government of which he is a member to get this permission to borrow money to expend as they pleased without dividing the House. The hon. gentleman has told this House that they cannot use a dollar of that money until Parliament votes it. I know that, but my hon. friend the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) pointed out the fact that $2,000,000 were used last year by the Government on Governor's warrants without the consent of Parliament. The hon. gentleman says: Oh, we are authorised to issue those warrants by law. Yes, that is so; but the authorisation is only in the case of great national emergencies, and the Government was not authorised to issue such warrants for the purposes they used them for last year, and yet they did it. I am afraid that the fact of issuing those borrowing powers may injure the credit of this country in the markets of the world. People will naturally ask what do we want with the money? Do we want it for public works, or do we want it to promote the interests of the country? If we do want it for those purposes let the hon. gentleman come down with a statement and show this House how the money is likely to be expended during the coming year. We will then be able to judge if he is justified in asking for those extraordinary powers. He says that this House is bound to grant the money before the Government can expend it, but we know that any proposition the hon. gentleman, as Finance Minister, brings down will be carried through this House. We know it is not the voluntary will of the House, but that it is the majority that rules, and the hon. gentleman knows that he has a solid majority behind him to sustain him in any proposition he may make.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. Let me say to those gentlemen who are so ready to say "hear, hear" that we know what extravagance has been committed in connection with the public works of this country. Let us get borrowing powers to the extent of $36,000,000 and what will the hungry men behind the First Minister say? You will find that one and all in every county from Vancouver to Cape Breton will be pressing their demands on the Government.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Cape Breton did not get much.

Mr. MITCHELL. Cape Breton has got a pretty good slice already. Every one of the hon. gentlemen behind the First Minister will be pressing their demands on the Government to get a share of this money, and it will be useless for the Government to refuse them. We know what the combination in "No 8" did a few years ago, and when the pistol was put to the head of the Government we know how the money went in the past, and it will go the same way in the future. Before the authority to get this money is voted by the House we should have a specific statement of how it is to be expended. I would not say in great detail, but in general detail, as to what the hon. gentleman intended to do with it, and where the necessity exists for asking the House for such an extraordinary vote.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) There was, I think, no disposition on the part of any hon. gentleman on this side of the House to require anything like an accurate statement, showing within a million dollars or so, what the hon. gentleman wanted this money for. I was really under the impression that Canada had some contingent liability falling due in England which the hon. gentleman wished to meet, and that he was going to take advantage of the favorable money market, to raise the wind and discharge that liability. The answer of the hon. gentleman to my question convinces me that there is no necessity for this money being borrowed. He suggests a contingency which he ought to be the last man to suggest in this House. That contingency is of the most impossible character—a contingency that there may be a run on our savings banks, and that we will be required to pay the money that people have loaned us. I have not the slightest doubt that the people who have the money in the savings banks, have the greatest faith in the stability of the country. There is not the slightest danger of a run by the depositors, for they know they have the best security that can be obtained on this continent for their money. That reason puts the hon. gentleman at once out of court with his argument. We are face to face with the fact that the Government are seeking powers from this House to borrow $36,000,000 and that they only require $16,000,000, or in other words they want the power to borrow $20,000,000 more than they can suggest any reason for spending. The committee should seriously consider whether they are doing a wise thing by investing this unlimited power in the Government. There is no special phase in the money market which renders it desirable that hon. gentlemen should borrow $20,000,000 extra. If the hon. gentleman could show that the present time was a peculiarly favorable time for floating a loan, more favorable than twelve months hence would probably be, there would be not a word said on this side of the House against his proposal. But we stand face to face with the fact that the Government are asking for $20,000,000 more than they require, and, under those circumstances, I think the hon. gentleman is not acting wisely in forcing his resolution upon the House. We do not need to be told that the money cannot be expended without a vote of this House; but I reiterate the statement of the experienced gentleman, the hon. member for Northumberland, who has been in this House since 1867, that if the Government borrow $20,000,000 and have it on hand, there are lots of gentlemen sitting around them who will bring pressure to bear to have it expended. It is not right that a surplus of money should be in the hands of the Government, the existence of which may be used by hon. gentlemen behind them as a reason for the demands they make being acceded to. There is no doubt that they will say, judging from the elections which have been held during the last four or five weeks, that the Liberal party are coming into power, and that the sooner you spend the money the better.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh!

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Hon. gentlemen may sing out, but I think the result of the last five or six elections have brought a truth home to their minds that they are very reluctant to believe.

Mr. MITCHELL. What did Sir John say at the Quebec meeting, that he would not leave a dollar in the treasury?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think that unless the hon. gentleman shows us that he needs this money in the near future, or that this is a specially favorable time for borrowing, the House should not give him the power to borrow it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). If there is a run on the savings banks, the credit of Canada will be in such a state that the Government will have great difficulty in borrowing; but so long as the credit of Canada remains as it is to-day, there will not be a run on the savings banks. No doubt a prudent Government will have a certain margin to meet contingencies; but the hon. gentleman is asking power to borrow a sum equal to the whole revenue of the country for a year. That is too much power to place in the hands of any government, and we should not entrust them with it until it is required. It has been pointed out that we have had experience of Governor General's warrants being used for purposes entirely different from that authorised by the statute. During the administration of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) whenever that power was used, the reason was stated for using it; but when warrants were brought down last year for nearly $3,000,000, the Government refused to give reasons for them. We know that the requirement of the statute was not complied with, that the urgency which should exist as a justification of a Governor General's warrant did not exist at all; and these Governor General's warrants were used for purposes coincident with the general election of 1887. I would ask the hon. Minister of Finance whether this $5,000,000 includes the New Brunswick 6 per cents that falls due this year?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. CASEY. It does seem to me that this is the most unprecedented demand that has ever been made on Parliament in the last 17 Sessions, at all events. As nearly as I can understand, the hon. Minister has only accounted for about $16,000,000 of the $25,000,000 which he asks power to borrow. In regard to the other $9,000,000, the only excuse I have heard is that he wishes to provide for such a casualty as a run on the savings banks. Setting aside the absurdity of the supposition that there could be a run on the savings banks, for whose solvency the credit of this Dominion is pledged, and supposing for a moment that there might be a run on them, the hon. gentleman has not shown the ghost of a reason why he should be given this unusual borrowing power. We have seen in the past that when an extraordinary emergency arises, the arrangement of Governor General's warrants, as my hon. friend has shown, has given every facility to the Government for spending money; and they have been able to expend it even when emergencies have not arisen. We know that at the present time, on the hon. gentleman's own statement, there is a floating debt of $5,000,000 or thereabouts. It is perfectly clear from both of these considerations that the Government are not likely to be in a pinch for money, seeing that they have been able to borrow $5,000,000 as a floating debt without any bonds or debentures being issued at all, and that they have been able in one year to spend over $2,000,000 under Governor General's warrants. Then what excuse have they for asking power to borrow $9,000,000 above the present needs of the country at any time, without consulting the House? The constitutional course would be, if a pinch occurred, to exercise the power of borrowing as far as possible, and to use the Governor General's warrants, and as soon as possible thereafter to call the House together and state what they had done with the money, and ask the House to give them power to borrow sufficient to cover the floating debt; just as the hon. gentleman is doing with regard to this $5,000,000 which he is now asking power to cover by a loan.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is mistaken; every dollar of that was voted by the House.

Mr. CASEY. But it was borrowed without the special authority of the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. We have general borrowing powers by the statute.

Mr. CASEY. Exactly. I say that that was borrowed without making a special application to the House, and the hon. gentleman could do it again. He has given away his whole excuse.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; I cannot borrow $16,000,000 with power for $11,000,000.

Mr. CASEY. Certainly not. I am not objecting to the $16,000,000 if the hon. gentleman tells us what it is for. I am objecting to the enormous margin of $9,000,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But the hon. gentleman forgets that we have had a margin of $11,000,000 year after year on the Statute-book, and that it has not been used.

Mr. WELDON (St. John).

Mr. CASEY. Why does the hon. gentleman want a larger margin? What has become of the $11,000,000? Has it all been used up?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, we have had the borrowing power, and used it for years.

Mr. CASEY. Why not use that?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Because $11,000,000 will not get $16,000,000.

Mr. CASEY. Then you only require to ask for power to borrow the difference between $11,000,000 and $16,000,000. On the hon. gentleman's own confession, he only needs power to borrow $5,000,000, and he is asking for power to borrow $25,000,000. He has made the case worse for himself by his interruption; he has made it more clear than I could have made it in half an hour's speech. I do not pretend to be a phoenix of finance like the hon. gentleman, I do not pretend to be able to prove that the more we borrow the less we owe, I do not pretend to be able to juggle away our debt by the means of finicking calculations on the basis of the interest paid, I do not pretend to be able to prove that because money is cheaper all the world over now than it was twelve years ago, therefore the credit of Canada has been vastly advanced by the hon. gentleman's Administration.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not say so.

Mr. CASEY. These are the very things the hon. gentleman has been proving to-day. I do not pretend to be a pre-stidigitateur of finance like the hon. gentleman; I do not pretend, therefore, to be able to put his position in regard to this margin as clearly as he has put it. With that inciviveness, which is his special forte, he has shown there was no need whatever for asking the power to borrow this tremendous margin over what is needed. The hon. gentleman only needs $5,000,000 more to meet the existing wants of the country, and he asks power to borrow $20,000,000 more. If this resolution passes he will have the power to borrow $25,000,000 and $11,000,000, which makes $36,000,000, leaving a margin of $20,000,000 which he can borrow at any moment without asking Parliament for special authority. I say that is an extraordinary and unconstitutional course, a course which no House that respected itself and respected the constitution of Canada, or the rights of the people of Canada, would for a moment endorse. The reasons for asking this tremendous blank cheque from the country we must seek for ourselves, since they have not been given to us. We must imagine that the hon. gentleman expects a new rebellion to spring up of three times the dimensions of the last rebellion. We must imagine that he expects possibly a general election to come on suddenly, and the $20,000,000 would not be too large in that case to enable the hon. gentleman to retain his party in power, for it would take that and more to accomplish that end. But, of course, such contingencies as these are only speculations of our own. Let hon. gentlemen who interrupt read over the speech of the Finance Minister to-morrow, and show me where there is the ghost of an excuse for our giving this tremendous blank cheque to the Government, and I will admit this side of the House is wrong and that the constitution of Canada, as understood hitherto by every Canadian statesman, has no foundation.

Committee rose and reported.

MONTREAL HARBOR COMMISSION.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider resolution (p. 1031) respecting the Harbor Commission of Montreal. He said: In rising to move the resolution to provide for the assumption by the Government of what is familiarly known as the Lake St. Peter debt, I will detain the House but a short time, as this question has been so frequently before the House, that it is familiar to hon. gentlemen on both sides. The River St. Lawrence, a few years ago, would only admit vessels drawing nine feet of water to the harbor of Montreal. It was then determined to endeavor to deepen Lake St. Peter and remove obstructions, so as to improve the navigation of that river, and, from time to time, money has been appropriated by this House for that purpose and advanced to the Harbor Commissioners, who recouped themselves for the interest by the tolls or tonnage dues levied upon steamers, and by wharfage dues. The efforts that have been made, I need tell the House, have been successful, so much so, that the entire amount appropriated for that purpose by the Parliament of Canada has reached the sum of $3,005,000.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he proposes to abolish the wharf dues?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; I have not come to that part of the subject at all. I said that the Harbor Commissioners had recouped themselves for the interest payable on the money advanced by the Parliament of Canada, to deepen Lake St. Peter and the River St. Lawrence, by tonnage dues on vessels and by harbor dues. The Commission have been discharging, I need not tell the House, two duties—as Harbor Commissioners and as Commissioners for the deepening of Lake St. Peter and the River St. Lawrence. I say that the amount of money altogether advanced by the Parliament of Canada has been $3,005,000, and that there remains unexpended $279,475, which has been appropriated by Parliament to the use of the Harbor Commission. It is estimated—and I may here say that I believe no public body in this country have ever discharged a duty imposed upon them with greater ability or greater success than the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal, and I believe they have been singularly fortunate in being able to command the service of so eminent and able an engineer as Mr. Kennedy, under whom these important works have been carried out—that with an amount of only $20,000 over and above the estimate and appropriation of Parliament the entire work of deepening the St. Lawrence, so as to allow the passage of vessels drawing 27½ feet of water will be completed. To widen the channel which has been thus constructed, so as to furnish the most complete facilities for navigation, it is estimated that $195,000, or, in round numbers, some $200,000 more will be required to perfectly complete that work. Now, the Government feel that the time has come when the question of that liability should be fairly considered. They feel that the time has come when it is in the interest of the whole of this country that this great water-way should be made free so far as tonnage dues on vessels are concerned, whether inland or ocean; they feel that the time has come when the great port of Montreal, the great commercial centre of this country, should be made practically a free port, so far as tonnage dues upon ocean or inland vessels are concerned, and the Government have arrived at the conclusion that if there is one public work in this country that may fairly be assumed by the Government and the Parliament as chargeable upon the public revenue, it is the deepening of Lake St. Peter and the River St. Lawrence, thus furnishing a means of bringing ships drawing 27½ feet of water up to the city of Montreal. They believe it is not a question of the city of Montreal alone. They believe it is a question in which the whole tonnage of this country is more or less interested; they believe it is a question of importance to the whole trade of Montreal and to the whole trade of the country lying to the west of it, which will be greatly facilitated by taking this course. They believe it is a question that intimately touches this great water-way which lies between the Strait of Belle Isle and Port Arthur, giving facilities for the expansion of the trade and commerce of this country. They believe it is in the interests of this country that this port in the great commercial centre of this country should be placed in such a position as to be able to compete with the Atlantic ports in the neighboring Republic where there is a great and sharp competition in the ocean-borne traffic and that of the great lakes down to the ocean. Under these circumstances, it is not necessary that I should detain the House, familiar as it is with the circumstances, at any length, in showing that it is desirable that this great public work should be assumed by the Parliament of Canada as a public work, in view of the objects to be attained. Therefore, we propose that the advances which have been made should be made a charge on the consolidated debt of this country, but we couple with that proposal to assume this indebtedness the entire removal of all tonnage dues, so that Montreal shall be made in that respect a free port. We ask by these resolutions that Parliament shall assume all the advances that have been made to the Harbor Commission for deepening Lake St. Peter and the River St. Lawrence. We ask that Parliament should agree to cover the amount of interest, which has been punctually paid by the Harbor Commissioners out of the revenues collected from the shipping at the port of Montreal, so that the deficit of $37,000 which occurred in consequence of their having to pay the last instalment of interest, should be assumed by us, so as to take that altogether off the harbor proper of Montreal.

Mr. CHARLTON. What will be the entire amount assumed?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The amount appropriated is $3,005,000. In addition to that there is the amount of $200,000 for widening the channel which has been deepened and $37,000 of interest which is a deficit caused by the last payment of interest. In that way the Harbor Commissioners are relieved from any obligation or burden imposed upon them in that way.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the Government undertake the responsibility of going on with improvements in the harbor?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Under the resolution this work can be completed by the Harbor Commissioners themselves, or directly by the Government, under the management of my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. MITCHELL. But, if you take away their revenues, they will have no money to go on with.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We have provided the money to carry the work to its entire completion, and all we propose to take away from them is the tonnage dues.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What about maintenance?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There has been an expense of $600,000 for new plant which becomes the property of the Government, and will cover the $220,000 additional that Parliament has already appropriated.

Mr. MITCHELL. But who is to improve the harbor and the wharves, and matters of that kind?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That will remain with the Harbor Commissioners.

Mr. MITCHELL. Where will they get the money?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The harbor of Montreal has never been chargeable to the extent of a dollar on the revenue of this country. The interest on the money we have advanced has been obtained from the tonnage dues on vessels and the wharfage dues. We do not propose to touch the wharf dues, which will not only leave in the hands of the commissioners the money required to maintain the harbor, but will give them a considerable margin to enable them to improve the harbor of Montreal or to make a large reduction in the wharf dues. Do I make myself understood?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, the hon. gentleman makes himself understood, but I would like to know if the tonnage dues are abolished and there are still to be wharf dues, how it can be called a free port, but, if they are all abolished, the commissioners will not be in a position to go on with the improvements?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If my hon. friend looks at the report, he will find that the commissioners will not be in the least degree embarrassed in relation to that matter. He will see that the expenditure of the Harbor Commissioners for the calendar year 1887, apart from the amount chargeable to capital account, was $327,000, and that their net revenue was $289,885. If you relieve them, as you do, they only had a deficit of $37,000, and that was only caused by their paying nearly $100,000 of interest. Consequently, being relieved from any charge for interest, they have a large revenue left, which will enable them, from the charge on wharfage on goods at that port, either to make a reduction in the wharfage dues, or to carry on the improvements in the harbor. The effect of making this a free port, as far as the tonnage dues are concerned, will make Montreal more attractive, and will enable the St. Lawrence, as a great route of intercommunication, to compete much more successfully with other ports and in that way will greatly increase the revenue of the harbor. Now, Sir, I do not intend to take up the time of the House longer, as at this stage of the Session I know how impatient the House is to proceed with public business. As this subject is so familiar to the House, I do not think it necessary to say more upon it than to make the brief statement I have to the House.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think the resolutions before the House are of a rather startling character, looking at the amount of responsibility we are going to assume, and looking at the amount of assets which we are going to release, assets which heretofore have been considered of a sufficiently satisfactory character to be continued from year to year against the public gross debt of the country. Let us examine for a moment how it is going to work out, and let us see, if we can, what amount the Government propose, under these two resolutions, to ask the House to sanction, and what amount they propose to release. In the first place, I desire to say that I sympathise very considerably with the views propounded by the Minister of Finance that the expenditure on Lake St. Peter for deepening the channel to the sea and for admitting shipping of a much larger draft of water to Montreal, may be regarded in the nature of a public work in the interests of the country. At the same time we must not lose sight of the fact that this amount has been incurred and expended to build up the city of Montreal as against the city of Quebec, which, geographically speaking, should have been the natural shipping port of the St. Lawrence. However, I am not going to enter into a discussion of that aspect of the question, but confine myself as closely as I can to the arguments the hon. gentleman has adduced in support of these resolutions. I admit, as I said before, that the expenditure of money for deepening Lake St. Peter, and for bringing commerce to Montreal, may be regarded as a public work in the interest of the country at large. The people of the west are interested in having their produce shipped as cheaply and economically as possible, and if by deepening Lake St. Peter ships of large capacity and of large draft of water can frequent Montreal, there will naturally be greater competition for the freight west, and it will naturally lead to a cheaper rate of freight. Under these circumstances I think we do not require to justify ourselves to Parliament or to the country in supporting a public work which, in my judgment, may be fairly considered in the interest of the public at large. The Lake St. Peter debt, as shown by the hon. gentleman, is of course of some magnitude, and the amount expended, according to the return given by him the other day, in answer to the hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Davies) was, according to the Hansard report, $2,725,504; balance of the appropriation to be spent, as given by the hon. gentleman to-night, and as given at the same time the other day, $2,794.95; amount estimated to complete the work to 27½ feet draft of water, and to straighten the channel, $220,000; that is the amount which the hon. gentleman has mentioned to-night; the amount of $37,405, as mentioned by the hon. gentleman, is also the amount given as the loss on last year's operations in deepening the harbor. It was that amount, I suppose, which led the president of the Board of Trade there, as quoted here on a previous occasion, to intimate at a meeting of that board, that the Harbor Commission of Montreal was in a state of bankruptcy, and that unless the Government came to their rescue, they would be in a very embarrassing position. The amount of $37,405 has therefore been assumed to relieve the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal from the position of bankruptcy, which the president of the Board of Trade said was threatening them. Then, again, the Minister of Finance the other day, in reply to my hon. friend, gave the amount of $107,187 as the annual expenditure on the work in deepening the lake. Now, this amount, it must be remembered, is more than it would appear to represent, and from our experience with regard to the expenditure of public money by the Government, I am afraid that we cannot flatter ourselves that under their management, no matter how well they may be able to conduct it, it can be anything less than the amount which the Harbor Commissioners themselves expended last year. On the contrary, I think there is moderate ground for apprehension that the annual expenditure in keeping up the Lake St. Peter channel will be larger than was made by the Harbor Commissioners last year, $107,187. Now, remember, Mr. Speaker, that this amount has to be capitalised, and taking it at 4 per cent., it will be equal to a capital of $2,675,000, which, added to the previous items as given, will make the sum of $5,937,404 which this House is called upon to assume for taking charge of deepening Lake St. Peter and the channel of the St. Lawrence. This of itself is rather of a startling character, but we must remember that whether it can be justified locally, we can take the view of it here that it is in the interest of the general commerce of the country. This amount capitalised, added to the expenditure already incurred, will, as the hon. gentleman sees, be equal to an appropriation of $5,937,404 for the Lake St. Peter and Montreal debt. Then the amount covered by the other resolution which I will discuss in connection with this, respecting the graving dock of Quebec, as given by the hon. gentleman the other day, is $38,000, interest to date on that amount $20,454, and expenditure on work which we cancel or assume under the last clause of this memorandum is $493,706.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope the hon. gentleman will postpone his remarks on the graving dock until we reach that resolution, which will be, I hope, in a few minutes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman prefers it I will confine my observations to the resolution before the House, which, as I have shown, calls for the assumption of a debt equal to $5,937,000. Hon. gentlemen will remember in this connection that the amount spent last year, according to the report of the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal, was a sum considerably larger than that mentioned by the Minister of Finance. The amount mentioned for channel operations, as given in that report for last year is, I say, considerably in excess of the amount given by the hon. gentleman in reply to the hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Davies), the other night.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is the same.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The report says: New channel operations, $192,204.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I called that in round numbers $200,000 in my statement just now.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Not the other day.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, in my answer I gave before.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I thought there was a difference between the annual expenditures given. I understood the hon. member to give the amount as $107,187.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No. That was the expenditure of last year. I gave this answer.

"The Harbor Commissioners estimate that it will take the whole of this amount and $20,000 additional to deepen the channel to 27½ feet at low water, and that to straighten and widen it so as to make it easier of navigation, would cost say $200,000 more."

Mr. JONES (Halifax). According to Hansard the hon. gentleman is reported as saying—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is the expenditure of last year; it has nothing to do with this.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). This is the report of last year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is another answer. $220,000 is applicable to the harbor and $187,000 is applicable to the channel. That was in answer to a question as to how much we spent last year.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Exactly. We are quite on the same line; but the hon. gentleman in his reply said it would be $107,000 applicable to the channel.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I have not capitalised that amount, and it would therefore be so much the worse.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is all included in the $3,005,000; everything is included in that except $20,000 and $100,000.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman will refer to the report of the Harbor Commissioners he will find under disbursements last year: New dredging plant, $5,000; new channel operations, $192,214—instead of $107,000. That is the point to which I wish to draw the hon. gentleman's attention. If such is the case, unless there is an error in the Harbor Commissioners' report, which is not probable, I think the hon. gentleman has not given us the amount which would be required to be expended on the channel to keep it open year by year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is nothing to be spent year by year on the channel.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Does the hon. gentleman mean nothing to keep that channel open? The hon. gentleman must know better than that. We can hardly venture to make a statement of that kind in face of the fact that there is a strong current there.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is just what will keep it right.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). And a sandy bottom.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. JONES (Halifax.) It is not worth while for the hon. gentleman to make predictions as to future expenditure, because every nautical man knows that it will not be safe to keep the channel at 27 or 27½ feet unless there is constant dredging going on, and therefore no matter what opinion he may have, I am sure that no one familiar with the work of the locality will doubt that an expenditure will be required year by year to keep the channel open to its present depth. I, therefore, estimate that the amount will be in the neighborhood of $6,000 when we capitalise the annual expenditure. However, I will not make any further observations with regard to the subject, but I will wait till the other resolution is before the House, because I then propose to contrast the grants made in previous years to Quebec and those called forth under the resolution now proposed to be submitted, and to ask this House whether in view of the large amount given to Quebec during these years under peculiar circumstances hon. members from other Provinces of the Dominion are not justified in asking that a proportionate sum should be distributed for public works of an equally necessary character in other Provinces. That is the view which I intend to submit to the Government when the other resolutions come to be discussed. In the meantime, on the face of it this is a more justifiable expenditure than that covered by the other resolution which will shortly come before us.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman has certainly made a mistake in his figures when he capitalised the sum of $107,000 or $192,000, I did not understand which amount, and added that to $3,005,000 which is the amount of the debt advanced by the Dominion to the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal for the channel through Lake St. Peter. The hon. gentleman was mistaken in that statement. The amount the Minister of Finance mentioned as the amount of interest on the debt itself was $112,000. When the hon. gentleman now speaks of $192,000, which is given at page 32 of the report of the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal, for new channel operations, he seems to believe that this means for operations to keep the channel open and is an annual expenditure. It is not so. This is an amount which has been expended by the Harbor Commissioners to go on with the work of deepening, and it is taken out of the amount advanced by the Dominion to the Harbor Commissioners. It is a capital expenditure, not an expenditure to keep the work open. It is to complete the work which they have undertaken to do. That is to say we get a channel of 27½ feet deep, and, therefore, there will not be an annual expenditure. The sum of $279,000 remains in the hands of the Government to complete those works. Of course there must be in all works of this kind some annual expenditure. You have a wharf, or you have a pier which requires care, but I think the hon. gentleman is quite mistaken in thinking that it will cost $107,000 a year to keep it up. This work has been well executed, and when the $279,000 in the hands of the Government has been expended to give us the required depth of 27½ feet, then there will be only $20,000 more to complete the work as undertaken. The commissioners in their report have stated that in addition to that, in order to make it a perfect work and to prevent the sharp curves in the channel interfering with the navigation by the large steamers that come to Montreal, we will have to spend $200,000 more to make it a more direct channel than it is now. This will complete the work. My hon. friend when he speaks of $6,000,000 as being the amount we assume was quite mistaken. When we have expended the money which is now in our hands, the amount will be $3,005,000 and $220,000 more will be required to complete the work in the direction I have stated. Those sums together will make $3,225,000. We will then have in our possession the plant which has cost over $600,000. Of course that plant will not have a value of $600,000 when those works are completed, but they will have sufficient value to cover the $225,000, beyond the $3,000,000 of the debt. When the works are completed and when the plant is disposed of, we may say that the debt will be $3,000,000.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Who will attend to buoying and dredging the channel?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As far as I can recollect, the placing and removing of those buoys was done by the Harbor Commissioners for the Department of Marine and the commissioners received $7,000 for executing that work. If we choose, it can continue in their hands on the same conditions or we can have it done ourselves for the money we are paying for it every year.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). There is the dredging in summer.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was not for the dredging but for keeping the buoys in order, and removing them and placing them in position.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). You will have to dredge the channel or it will never keep open.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We will probably, in the spring, have a tug to pass down the channel, to see if there is any accumulation, or if the ice has left any boulders. If there is any obstacle found we will do what we do for all other works and have it removed.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Minister allow me to suggest that he will have to have dredges constantly employed working on the wharves?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We will have nothing to do with that.

Mr. MITCHELL. Who will do that?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Harbor Commissioners.

Mr. MITCHELL. Where do they get the funds?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. From the duties on goods, and wharfage dues.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman will remember that the channel in the centre of Lake St. Peter, and the harbor of Montreal are two distinct things. The harbor of Montreal goes as far as a point called Ruisseau Migeon as my hon. friend knows. From that point downwards towards Quebec is the channel the Government will have under control if those resolutions are adopted by the House. From Ruisseau Migeon westwards to the Lachine Canal, will be the harbor of Montreal and that will be under the direct control of the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal. It will be their business to look after the channel in the harbor, to deepen it and keep their wharves in order.

Mr. MITCHELL. Out of what funds will they do that?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There are two funds from which the Harbor Commissioners derive their resources, by which they are able to proceed with the works in the harbor of Montreal. There are the tonnage dues on the vessels, and out of those the Harbor Commissioners pay the interest on the advances made by the Government, that is to say, $3,005,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is abolished now.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; that is abolished now. Beyond that the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal collect a large sum for goods on their wharves.

Mr. MITCHELL. Do you know what amount?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Wharfage on goods inwards, amount to $128,000 and outwards to $72,000, so that those two sums make over $200,000. The Harbor Commissioners will have this money to go on with their works in the harbor of Montreal. Hon. gentlemen need not be uneasy; for the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal will have quite enough to deepen their harbor, when it is required. In addition to this, they have the right to borrow money to extend their wharves, and build new piers, and those new piers will give them revenue sufficient to pay the interest on the money expended.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Mr. MITCHELL. Has the hon. gentleman received an estimate of what it will cost to keep those wharves in repair; to do the dredging necessary, to keep the channel in front of the wharves deepened, and to perform the duties the Harbor Commissioners are expected to perform within the territorial limit described by the hon. gentleman? I have myself seen from 100 to 200 men in the employ of the Harbor Commissioners clearing off the ice in spring, and it generally takes them a couple of months to get the wharves in repair in consequence of the damage done by the ice. I am greatly mistaken if $200,000, will even begin to do all that work.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think their revenues are more than $200,000, but the reason why I say the amount will be quite sufficient for the purpose, is that I have put together the revenues they derive from tonnage dues, from wharfage and from goods inwards and outwards, and so on. The Harbor Commissioners had quite enough revenues to keep the harbor of Montreal in perfect order, to pay all expenses, and to pay the interest on the advances made by the Government. But last year they found that the advances made by the Government to them had so increased by the deepening of the channel, that their revenues from tonnage dues and other sources were not sufficient to pay the interest by $37,000. Then they said, we cannot get along, and we must be fair and candid with the Government, and tell them at once what position we are in. So they ask us to come to their relief by assuming the debt for deepening Lake St. Peter, which they consider to be a portion of the canal system of the country. We will relieve them of last year's deficit of $37,000, assume the debt, and extinguish the interest they were paying to the Government this year to the amount of $112,000. The balance of their revenues, amounting to about $250,000, will be quite sufficient, as they were last year and the previous year, to pay all their expenses in the harbor of Montreal proper.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What is the length of the channel of Lake St. Peter?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I suppose the distance must be 110 miles from the harbor of Montreal down to Cap à la Roche. I do not know the length of the excavated channel.

Mr. MITCHELL. My hon. friend has given his explanation very clearly. But I wish to state that the harbor of Montreal is far too cramped to enable the business coming to it to be done properly. It will require to be extended, and a much larger amount of money than the hon. gentlemen expects must be provided. I am not an engineer, but I know from the constant statements of persons connected with the port that such is the case. I would like the hon. gentleman to bear that in mind, because if he takes away the tonnage and the wharfage dues, I am afraid there will not be enough left to extend the harbor. The railways coming in there demand a larger amount of accommodation, and I have heard merchants complain of the deficiency of wharf accommodation.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have no doubt that in consequence of the abolition of the tonnage dues the business of the port will increase largely—that a much larger number of vessels will come up the St. Lawrence and contribute a larger revenue to the resources of the Harbor Commission. But the commissioners foresee that they will have to expend within three or four years about $900,000. They expect that they will have out of their ordinary revenues, which are increasing every year $40,000 or $50,000, which will help them in meeting the interest on that amount. The new wharves and piers, at which the vessels will be moored, and on which merchandise will be landed, will also give a large revenue to the Harbor Commissioners. They do not seem to be uneasy about that at all. They will have power to borrow that money; but as prudent and honorable men, they did not wish to borrow money in order to proceed with other improvements until they were sure that the Government and Parliament of Canada would relieve them of this debt and of the deficit, and thus give them an opportunity to meet the interest on the new debt.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is the hon. Minister quite right in stating that the revenues are likely to increase? I notice that the figures for the past few years show an increased tonnage, but a reduced revenue:

Year	Tonnage	Revenue
1878.....	397,000	$ 63,000
1879.....	506,000	106,000
1880.....	628,000	156,000
1881.....	531,000	70,000
1882.....	554,000	68,000
1883.....	664,000	65,000
1884.....	649,000	51,000
1885.....	683,000	28,000
1886.....	809,000	68,000
1887.....	870,000	69,000

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A large reduction was made both in tonnage dues and wharfage dues some years ago.

Mr. MITCHELL. I doubt if the revenue from wharfage is very likely to increase.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As I stated just now, the wharfage on goods inwards and outwards amounted to a little over $200,000. My hon. friend will see that the interest which the commissioners paid out of their revenues to the Dominion Government was $99,187. They did not pay that out of capital, but out of the revenues of the harbor. They will be relieved of that, and also of $27,000 of a debt which they would have had to pay to the Government.

Mr. JONES. They would not be worth the whole of that $99,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, the whole of that, leaving $5,000 that the Government will pay or will expend there. The remainder of their debt is not due to the Government but to outsiders, who bought their debentures, and, therefore, the interest on those debentures will be paid as heretofore out of ordinary revenue. On these resolutions becoming law, the Harbor Commission of Montreal will be relieved of $99,187 at once, which is now paid out of their revenue. With the tonnage dues on steamers and sailing vessels amounting to $48,000, that with the $5,000 will make, say $53,000, which deducted from the $99,000, will leave the commission a nice margin of over $40,000, which added to their ordinary revenue, will give them ample means to meet their annual expenditure on their harbor and besides a portion of the interest on the new debentures they may have to issue. With these explanations, the principle being admitted that this is a work which is not only for the harbor of Montreal but for the country at large, the House should agree to this resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL. I notice that the harbor expenses, including harbor repairs, expenses of management, &c., amount to $261,323. Assuming the expenses to be no more in the future, that would leave only $40,000 for repairs, which will not amount to anything.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The deficit last year of the Harbor Commissioners, after paying $99,000 of interest to the Government on this debt, of which we are now relieving them, was $37,000. Is it not, therefore, evident that on relieving them of the $99,000 interest, their revenue will be ample to meet the service to which the hon. gentleman refers.

Mr. MITCHELL. No, because this $261,333 is for the actual working of the harbor. Then they have the interest on the debentures to pay to be added to that, which will amount to more than the balance.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. After paying everything and doing everything a harbor requires, after making all the expenditure necessary, after paying $99,000 out of their revenue besides, the commissioners had a deficit only of $37,000. Then, if we relieve them of the $99,000, and the deficit was only $37,000, when they had to pay that amount, and also performed all other services, that will leave a balance of $62,000 in their favor.

Mr. MITCHELL. Provided you have a finality; but if you expect to go on improving the harbor as the necessities of increased railway business demands, where is the money to come from? I am not going to delay this resolution, but I think it my duty to call the attention of the Government to the fact that they will have to give some additional facility to the Harbor Commission to enable them to get these improvements, if these improvements are to be made. True, they may raise money on bonds.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. After making Montreal a free port, so far as tonnage dues are concerned, the increased business of the port ought to give ample revenue.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The hon. member for Northumberland has addressed himself boldly to some contemplated improvements with respect to the harbor of Montreal proper. He is afraid that after the Harbor Commissioners have been relieved of this $3,250,000 which he proposes to relieve them of and to assume ourselves, they will not be able to carry out certain grand improvements which they have in view. If the hon. gentleman will turn to page 14, he will see that the chairman of the board is not under any apprehension on that score, because he says that, "if relieved from the interest on our advances to the Government, the board will be able to meet all the necessities of the harbor without unduly burdening trade. I hope there will not be the smallest end of the wedge inserted here to lead to the hope that any sum of money may be obtained for those contemplated improvements in the harbor of Montreal proper. I have read the report of Mr. Kennedy, and I have no doubt he is a most able engineer, but it is quite apparent that the improvements in the harbor, which he has in view, will involve the outlay of an enormous sum of money, an outlay required not for any project of national importance but simply to improve the harbor of Montreal proper. That is not the exact question before us to-night. We are assuming, as the hon. gentleman for Halifax put it very clearly, an enormous liability added to the general liabilities of the country. Had this proposition been made a few years ago, it would have been received with a great deal of, I will not say fear and suspicion, but of disapproval. When this proposition was made to the House, I turned up the different statutes under which advances were made to the Montreal Harbor Commission. We began the work in 1873, when we authorised the Government to advance $1,500,000 to the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal for the purpose of deepening Lake St. Peter channel to a depth of 22 feet. It was understood then there was no fear at all of the country ever being called on to pay this money, and the money was voted. A few years afterwards the commission came before Parliament again, and asked an additional grant of $218,000 to carry on the work. Parliament gave that allowance on the further assurance that the country was not undertaking any liability, but was merely making an advance to the commissioners to enable them to carry out much needed improvements. Then, in the year 1883, the hon. the Minister of Public Works comes forward with another proposition, that they should deepen the channel from 21½ feet, which was the proposition, to 27½ feet, and for that reason we should advance nearly a million more, and the hon. gentleman managed to carry that through the House. At that time, one hon. gentleman, at least the former representative of Montmagny, stated that there was an agreement between the Government and the Harbor Commissions of Quebec and of Montreal, that these works should not be undertaken at the Government expense. That statement was not contradicted here, and the general impression of the members who were voting these enormous sums of money was that the country was not assuming any liability, but was simply enabling the Harbor Commissioners to carry out an improvement which was much needed in the city of Montreal. This may or may not be a work of national importance, I think there is something to be said for it, but it is well that we should understand the enormous liability which we are assuming, and I hope the hon. gentleman from Montreal will not in future put forward any claims for the improvement of this harbor. I am not sure that the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Jones) was wrong when he said that the amount which had been advanced was $2,725,704. We assume that and make it part of the debt of the Dominion. Then there is another matter which is hardly defensible, and that is the amount of $37,000. I do not see why we should assume that amount which is the deficit on the last year's operations of the Harbor Commissioners. I should like to ask if that has any relation to the works in Montreal proper?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, but we do not want the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal to have any claim on the Government for anything in connection with the deepening of Lake St. Peter, and, as that deficit arose in a year when they paid $99,000 for interest, it is evident that, if it had not been for that, they would not have had that deficit, and we want to start them with a tabula rasa.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) They paid that on the amount we had advanced to them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That was on the channel debt.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) We advanced the money, and the tolls were allowed in order to enable them to pay that back. I think I am correct in saying that the $37,465 is the total deficit of the commissioners as to the channel debt and also as to the Harbor of Montreal.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is so.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) So, practically speaking, there is no deficit on the deepening of the channel, but it is in connection with the works in and around Montreal. I am not satisfied myself that it is quite fair. However, it is a small matter to haggle over $37,000 when you are voting millions. It appears that we are to assume a debt of $3,242,404.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is $3,222,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is not very much difference, we will say three millions and a quarter. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Jones) asked if this was the full extent of the liabilities, because, from the answers to questions which I put the other day, because we were trying to find what the extent of the liability was which we were assuming, the hon. gentleman said that the commissioners divided their expenditure, that $220,123 was applicable to the harbor, and $87,000 to the channel, and the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) naturally assumed that to be the amount of our annual expenditure on the work. I find, on page 14 of the report which has been laid on our Table, that the commissioners support the statement given in response to the enquiry of an hon. member. In that statement, it will be found that the ordinary charges for management, lighting, &c., were $108,000. Taking that in connection with the answer of the Minister of Finance that the proportion applicable to the channel was $107,000,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

I do not think my hon. friend was very far wide of the mark. I believe it is true that every year the channel will be silting up that mud. It is stated that at one point the incoming tide meets the flow of the river, as I am instructed by shipmasters who know that river well. What we have been doing is to dig out this channel, but there will be silting and filling up of that channel every year. I am not objecting to this, but I think we had better understand what we are assuming. We are taking over all the dredging plant, and why? Because we will require it for dredging every year. I am not going to oppose this proposition at all, whether right or wrong.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mostly all wrong.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I had some conversation with some of the representatives of this work, and I find that $14,000 has been expended for buoying, and lighting, and matters of that kind. I do not think my hon. friend is far astray in putting the annual cost of management at $107,000, and that is in addition to this three and a quarter millions.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That includes $99,000 of interest.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman is wrong there. The hon. gentleman will see that, if we have to dredge that every year, the cost cannot be much less than $100,000, so that we are practically assuming a debt of $6,000,000 for the harbor at Montreal. The Minister of Finance said that we were giving facilities for traffic from the Straits of Belle Isle to Port Arthur. That is not certain. We are simply improving the approach to the city of Montreal proper. Nature has provided a port for the Dominion at Quebec, and all the vessels that come down our canals could go to Quebec without deepening this channel at all. The hon. gentleman knows that our canals are only made at present for 12 feet vessels; barges of 12 feet can go down our canals already as far as the city of Quebec. It is not an enlargement of our canal system, otherwise we would have to enlarge the canal system to the proposed depth of 27½ feet. It is to enable large sized vessels and steamers to go to the city of Montreal that otherwise would have to stop at Quebec.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Inland navigation.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes, it may be defensible. Gentlemen who know more about the resources and wants of the country than I do, seem to think it is; I am not one to raise my voice against it; but I want to know exactly what we are doing. I remember here, two or three years ago, these votes slipped through the House without being fully understood, in obedience to the suave manner and persuasive tongue of the Minister of Public Works, and scarcely no objections at all were made to them. A year or two ago we were told that Montreal was all very well, but Quebec was to be the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and in a very grandiloquent speech the Minister of Finance came down and told us that it was essential to the interest of this country, and a matter of national importance, that they should maintain access for the Canadian Pacific Railway to the great national port of Canada. No use to talk about your inland ports, you must go to the great natural harbor of Quebec; and the hon. gentleman invited us to spend over two millions of money in purchasing the North Shore Railway to prolong the Pacific and to make Quebec one of its termini; and now, having voted two millions, you are asked to assume the debt.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A million and a half, $970,000 and $530,600; that makes a million and a half.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In the first place there was the $954,000 which we returned to the Government of the Province of Quebec in consideration of their having constructed a railway from Quebec to Ottawa, and for the portion between Montreal and Ottawa, 120 miles, $1,440,000; that is over two millions; and again a million and a half in 1885, as an hon. friend reminds me.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. For what did you say that $1,440,000 was for?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) For the portion between Montreal and Ottawa.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But that has nothing to do with it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It has a great deal to do with it. The hon. gentleman, I say, when he brought down his resolution, asked the House to give him that money, because he said it was necessary that the Canadian Pacific Railway should be prolonged to its natural terminus, the city of Quebec.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was at Montreal then.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman took a vote from this Parliament to recoup the Province of Quebec for money it had expended in building this railway. Now, what are we doing? After doing that you turn round and say you ought to assume the debt of $6,000,000 in order to build up a rival port.

Mr. CURRAN. Make it $12,000,000.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not exaggerating it. I have given the hon. gentleman the figures, and I say they come to six millions, and if the hon. gentleman can contest the accuracy of any of them, I am perfectly willing to hear him after I sit down. There is no desire on my part to exaggerate, and there should be none on his part to minimise. I say that having voted this two or three millions for that purpose, you now turn around and assume the debt of six millions, which will render nugatory the purpose for which you voted these large sums six years ago. Still, I am not going to oppose the motion, because it is alleged by those who have a pretty good knowledge of it, that it is, perhaps, not unfair, that it may be construed, in one sense, as part of a great national work. But I hope we will not hear anything more hereafter from the great rich city of Montreal about not having its share of public expenditure. I hope when some outlying Provinces ask for some small grants from time to time, for necessary improvements in their harbors, and in the construction of their public works that the representatives of that great metropolitan city will not be continually taunting us with our demands on the public exchequer. Montreal is making a haul to-night that no other city in Canada has ever made before, and I will venture to say that no other city will ever make again. There is no doubt, as an hon. gentleman says, that Quebec will come to the front. In a few minutes we are going into a resolution—I do not want to anticipate a discussion,—to give some millions to Quebec.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Quebec gets nothing at all.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Well, we will discuss that directly. I am anxious we should understand the resolution, I want to be clear in my mind as to our share of the responsibility in assuming this debt.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not object at all to the line of criticism the hon. gentleman has adopted; I think in the main it is very fair, but I do protest against his constantly swelling an appropriation of three millions into one of six. I protest against it because it is most misleading. I will show my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Jones) in a single moment that he is entirely mistaken as to the capitalisation of the amount outside of the $3,005,000. The $220,000 in addition to that will be more than covered by the value of the plant, if the plant was sold when the work was finished; therefore I call the debt assumed by the country three millions, and I will show my hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) that that $107,000 which I gave in answer to his question, contains $99,000 of interest. I said, in answer to him, that the expenditure of the Harbor Commissioners for the calendar year 1887, apart from the expenditure on capital account, was, according to statements made by them to the Government, $327,290. That is the whole of their expenditure chargeable to revenue. They divided their expenditure as follows, that is, their expenditure apart from capital: $220,123 as applicable to the harbor, and $107,187 as applicable to the channel, and out of that amount they paid over $99,000 of interest to the Government, and they charged $8,000 as the proportion of the expenses of the board which would be applicable to the channel, to make up the $107,900. I know the hon. gentleman does not wish to misunderstand me, and I want to make that point clear.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman will see that he is not yet quite accurate, because at pages 32 and 33 of the report the total expenditure of the Harbor Commissioners that year was $31,739, which included $237,000 debentures paid, a certain amount for construction and the cost of management. There was for salaries $26,300, and $14,000 for buoys and beacons. Those items are connected with the channel. I wish to ask the hon. gentleman what will be the cost of dredging the channel from year to year and lighting and buoying it?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think the Finance Minister is laboring under a misapprehension with regard to these items. Here is an account of the disbursements. There is for new dredging plant so much, new channel operations $192,214.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That has nothing to do with the point we are dealing with. I am dealing with charges to revenue apart from capital. I said the amount of $107,000 is composed of $99,000 interest and $8,000 management.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is only an assumption.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is according to the report furnished to me by the Harbor Commissioners of the port of Montreal. They furnished me with a statement that their whole expenditure was $327,000 and they divided it as $20,123 applicable to the harbor and $107,377 applicable to the channel. That is chargeable to revenue and it includes interest as I have said.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). By referring to the report of the Harbor Commissioners, which I accept in preference to the statement furnished by the commissioners to the Finance Minister, it is stated that new channel operations cost $192,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is an entirely different subject. $192,000 is chargeable to capital expenditure and has nothing to do with the other. It is included in the $3,005,000, and you must therefore not capitalise it over again.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is the amount which the Harbor Commissioners had to expend in that way. They reduced it afterwards, according to the statement, to $107,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. One is capital and the other is revenue.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It does not form any part of the charge which they put down.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Entirely so; but the hon. gentleman must not capitalise $192,000 as the amount spent on the channel when that amount is already embraced in the $3,005,000. The hon. gentleman must not capitalise it twice.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It was the amount they spent that year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But it was part of the $3,005,000.

Mr. GIROUARD. I was astonished by the remarks made by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), when he said that he hoped this was the last time any claim would be made by Montreal with respect to the Lake St. Peter debt. I do not pretend to represent the city of Montreal and I do not speak for that city; no doubt we shall hear from the members of the city reasons why the resolution should be adopted. I desire to offer some remarks from an independent point of view, and as the representative of the county which has some interest in Montreal, but not to the extent that the views of the county may be influenced by the interests of Montreal. It has been admitted by all the speakers this evening that the deepening of Lake St. Peter was a Dominion work. If it was a Dominion work I do not see why so much time should be spent in inquiring as to how much the Government would be required to spend in future in order to maintain that work. It matters very little what amount is necessary, unless Parliament is going to lay down the doctrine that a Dominion work must be shut up. I admit that works should be closed if they are of no use, but no one will question that this work is a necessity to the commerce of the country. I hold that instead of getting too much, the city of Montreal is far from obtaining full due by the resolution now before the House.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Hear, hear.

Mr. GIROUARD. I hear the hon. member for Halifax say "hear, hear." When I visited Halifax last summer I saw many improvements there that had been carried out by means of the public funds of the Dominion. Is it not a fact that the breakwater in front of the city of St. John, N. B., which I also visited last summer, was built by the Dominion at a cost of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Only $100,000.

Mr. GIROUARD. I said several hundred thousand dollars, so it was twice the amount I indicated. That breakwater is in the very heart of the city, and in fact the harbor of St. John could not exist without it. It is astonishing that hon. gentlemen should declare that Montreal is getting too much. It does not obtain one-half what is due to it, considering its importance from a commercial standpoint. If it is admitted that this is a Dominion work, why should we not get back interest for the past? If the work should have been built by the Dominion from the very beginning, why should we not get that interest? I say that we are entitled to it, and if the representatives of the city want to get some support, I am willing to give it to them in the future, in order that they may obtain that claim, and so long as Prince Edward Island receives injury, or any other portion of the Dominion, that portion will get my support. Let us now see how the matter stands in regard to Quebec. It has been said that the channel was commenced with a view to establishing a rivalry between Montreal and Quebec. There is no foundation for that statement. The deepening of Lake St. Peter was commenced in 1873. What was the position then of the city of Quebec? Was it in the position of the first sea port of the Dominion? There was no railway communication with Quebec at that time.

Mr. MITCHELL. What about the Grand Trunk Railway?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. GIROUARD. It was on the other side of the river, not in the city of Quebec. There were no harbor improvements to accommodate the whole shipping of the Dominion. Quebec did not give sufficient accommodation for importers in order to distribute from it trade throughout the Dominion. The city did not have a back country to maintain a large trade; but what has been the worst drawback to Quebec is the ship laborers, whom the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot), in this House last Session, declared to be a conspiracy and a perfect nuisance in Quebec. That organisation has been the greatest enemy of the port. I agree to a certain extent with the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) that the revenue of the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal will be cut down by the resolution. Some of the dues will be abolished, but the people of the country will at once receive compensation from the adoption by the Dominion of the Lake St. Peter debt. The public will receive immediate compensation: they were paying $107,000 a year tonnage dues for interest on the Lake St. Peter debt, which in future they will not pay, but the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal will surrender the charges which were imposed on the shipping of the country, and the people of the country will thus receive compensation for the outlay. The hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I., said that the chairman of the Montreal Harbor Board said that if the Government would assume the Lake St. Peter debt, they need not trouble themselves as to where to get the revenue in order to meet the ordinary expenses of the harbor. The report of the chairman of the Harbor Commissioners does not intimate that the Harbor Commissioners expected that the tonnage dues are going to be abolished. The chairman expected that while the Government would assume the debt of Lake St. Peter, all the sources of the revenue of the Harbor Commissioners would be maintained—that the tonnage dues would be continued, if they were needed, and also that the wharfage dues would be continued. It is impossible in the position the Harbor Commissioners are left in to-day, to say that they will be able to improve the accommodation for all the trade of the Dominion in the port of Montreal. As I said a moment ago, the city of Montreal does not get its whole due. We ought to get the interest paid in the past. As has been done in most cities of the Dominion, they should have got certain assistance for the improvement of the harbor. They should have got it as it was given to Halifax and St. John, and a great many other ports in the Provinces of the Dominion of Canada. I wish to say that I will gladly vote for the resolution before the House. Although Montreal does not get full justice, it gets a portion of it, and I believe that in one or two sessions full justice will be done to the city of Montreal.

Mr. AMYOT. I agree with the speaker who has preceded me that this is not a question of rivalry between Quebec and Montreal. It is a question of business and justice. I am in favor of digging out our rivers, completing our canals and having inland navigation as far as possible. That is a right principle and I am in favor of it. I am glad to see Montreal going ahead so fast in the march of progress, but I am not in favor of justice being done at the expense of other places, or that injustice should be committed for the sake of doing justice. What will be the position now? In Quebec we have built some works which have caused the Harbor Commissioners to be indebted to the Government, and they will remain indebted to the Government, so that in order to enable them to pay interest they will be forced to charge tonnage dues on the ships entering that port. Quebec harbor will not be a free harbor, and it is not the fault of Quebec that such is the case. It is the fault of the Government which has organized the Harbor Commissioners, or the majority of the commissioners who have proposed those works, and imposed on the Harbor Commissioners the obligation of borrowing money from the Government. We have now to force the commerce away from Quebec, by charging tonnage dues on the ships coming to the port of Quebec, so as to pay the interest on the remaining debt. Under this proposition Quebec, as well as the rest of the country, has to pay to deepen the St. Peter channel, and when ships arrive at Montreal they will not be charged with any tonnage dues. Shipping will therefore have more interest in going to Montreal than to stop at Quebec, and in this way you are taking the public money to chase the ships from Quebec and send them to Montreal. You take the public money to ruin Quebec and that is not fair justice to Quebec. We contend that Quebec is a natural port, and that no means should be taken to remove from Quebec the advantages it possesses of being a natural port. You will in this way take the ships from Quebec, in spite of its being a natural port, and by means of the expenditure of public money send them to Montreal. I say it is very unjust and very unfair. I am told by an hon. member that the ship laborers in Quebec are the cause of the diversion of trade from that port. To some extent I admit that they are, but who is responsible for that? I say the Government is responsible, because they have not put an end to that state of things. They know that the sailors coming from other countries have contributed to organise that condition of affairs, but why do they not pass the legislation that I and the city of Quebec asked them to pass, to prevent that organisation of the ship laborers to do harm. The members who represent the city of Quebec cannot agree to this proposition, because Quebec remains loaded with a debt useless to itself, in favor of Montreal, and which burden on Quebec will have the effect of chasing the commerce from that natural port. I draw the attention of the Minister of Public Works to that point, and I am sure that it will only suffice to remind him of this injustice to Quebec, in order that he may remedy it. He has said that the business will increase in Montreal, and that the fact of its becoming a free port will make the port more attractive, but at the expense of what other place is this done?

Mr. CURRAN. New York and Boston.

Mr. AMYOT. It will take away from Quebec what trade remains there, and bring it to Montreal.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will enable Montreal to compete with New York and Boston.

Mr. AMYOT. We crush the trade of Quebec with a debt on account of useless works there, and give the whole of the advantage to another city. You leave Quebec burdened with a debt, and you open another port where you create a free tonnage. Under those circumstances this policy is good for Montreal, and good for the country, but for Quebec it is a ruin.

Mr. CURRAN. Mr. Speaker, the task which falls upon me at this moment is certainly one that is extremely light and were it not for some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Davies), I should not attempt to say one word in defence of the policy which has been so ably placed before this House by the hon. Minister who has it in charge, and by his colleagues as well. We have been told by the hon. member from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) that he hopes this is the last time we shall have the city of Montreal coming here and begging, or, on the other hand, clamoring against those who from other cities may come here and ask for grants from the public treasury. I have not been very long in this House; this is only my second Parliament, but during the five or six Sessions I have been here, I know that neither I nor any of my colleagues from Montreal have risen in our places to urge the slightest objection to any grant being made to any city in any Province whatever, and I think, as one of my hon. friends says, we are all pulling together Montreal tries to pull with the whole Dominion. We are anxious to see the whole Dominion prosperous. We have no jealousy of any other port either in the Maritime Provinces, in our own Province or in any other Province. We are delighted to see public money expended in a manner that will benefit the country at large, and I am not aware that any member from the city or district of Montreal has ever raised his voice in opposition to any scheme that had the slightest feasibility on its face. But I will say this, that Montreal as a harbor has never received one cent from the Dominion of Canada. Montreal has paid its own expenses and the cost of its own improvements. The work on Lake St. Peter was originally a Dominion work.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How about the harbor police?

Mr. CURRAN. The police have nothing to do with the city, but they are paid out of the shipping and their duties are on the wharves and in the harbor.

Mr. MITCHELL. The shipping actually pays a tonnage tax for that expense. The shipping pays it, not the Government.

Mr. CURRAN. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the report of the hon. Minister of Public Works for the year ending June 30, 1887, he will find that the harbors of Toronto, Owen Sound, Kingston, Goderich, Cobourg, St. John and Halifax, have all received considerable sums of money for the internal improvements of these ports, but not one cent has been contributed for the internal improvement of the port of Montreal. Now, with regard to my hon. friend's assertion that we as a Dominion are assuming a debt of $6,000,000, there is no gentleman in this House who has heard the explanations of the hon. Minister of Finance, and there is no gentleman in this country who will read his explanation in answer to both the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) and the hon. member for Queens, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), who will not admit that these gentlemen are both in the wrong in making that assertion, and that the amount assumed is exactly the amount named in this resolution.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). The hon. gentleman, I am sure, does not want to misrepresent me, but does he contend that there will be no annual expenditure required for maintaining this channel?

Mr. CURRAN. My hon. friend may take my word for it that there will be comparatively no expense for maintaining the channel. What I said was that he was contending, and was giving the public of Canada to understand, that we are assuming a debt of $6,000,000 when it is only $3,000,000 and a fraction.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I capitalise the probable expenditure at $100,000.

Mr. CURRAN. That expenditure has nothing to do with maintaining the channel open. It was for operations carried on at Cape à la Roche, and when they are finished they will be finished forever. As the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) has pointed out to those gentlemen, it has not a sandy bottom, but is of the hardest of rock almost, and will not require any dredging. On the contrary, it will be kept perfectly clean by the natural flow of the water, and the only work to be done, as the hon. Minister of Public Works has pointed out, will be the removal of perhaps an occasional boulder that may be driven into the channel by the ice shove. Now, I am sorry that the hon. gentleman who spoke last should have taken the view he did of this question as one affecting the sister city of Quebec. I can assure him that there is nothing but the kindest feelings towards that city in the city that I have the honor to represent; there is no spirit of unfriendliness there towards the city of Quebec; and if the hon. gentleman has read the memorandum with appendices on the St. Lawrence route, submitted to the hon. Minister of Public Works in February last, and distributed to the members of this House, he will find that the most eminent men of this country, those occupying adverse positions to each other on every public question—such men, for instance, as the vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the general manager of the Grand Trunk Railway, the president of the Board of Trade of Montreal, the representatives of all the great shipping lines that come to our Canadian ports, both Montreal and other ports, the representatives of the importers and the exporters, the representatives of the Chamber of Commerce, in fact every great commercial authority in the country—

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). In Montreal.

Mr. CURRAN. Does the hon. gentleman suppose that the Grand Trunk Railway is confined to Montreal alone? Does he suppose that the Canadian Pacific Railway is confined to Montreal alone?

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Their headquarters are in Montreal.

Mr. CURRAN. If they are, it is because they find it to their interest to have them in Montreal. They are not there for love of Montreal. It is no matter of feeling or affection with them. They go where it best suits them to go; and each one of these gentlemen says that the question is not one of rivalry between any two Canadian cities, but the question is whether Canada shall hold its trade or whether that trade shall go to Boston, New York and other United States ports. The assumption of this debt is not a question that affects Montreal alone. It is impossible that it should be assumed without Montreal benefiting; but the great benefit will redound to the shipping and commerce of Canada. The city of Montreal is alive to the importance of this question. As the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) has said, Montreal did feel that there was a reimbursement due to it for what it had expended in the past in the shape of interest. However, there is no use of opening up a question that is not before the House. But the city of Montreal as a corporation is fully alive to the importance of coming forward and aiding, even to the extent of more than its share, more than has ever been done by any city in the Dominion of Canada, in pressing forward the great improvements which are absolutely necessary for the development of that harbor, in view of the great accession to our trade that is likely to come in the early future. My hon. friend has shown exactly what we have done in the past; and with regard to the matter of the police, and matters connected with the revetment wall and other expenses which the city has no right to assume, I have the assurance of the chairman of the Finance Committee that the city of Montreal is prepared to come forward and do nobly that which its citizens feel devolves upon them as an enterprising and go-ahead people. For my part, I am satisfied that some hon. gentlemen to-night have shown that they have come to this question with far more interest in it than they have shown in the past; and I am glad that the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), has made the admission that this is really a Dominion work, and that he does not take the same view of this question that he did on another occasion and at another Session of this Parliament. I am satisfied that these resolutions will carry. I am sorry to have detained the House at this late hour, but I felt it due to the city I represent that I should say these few words in vindication of what I conceive to be the justice of the position we occupy.

Mr. MITCHELL. I rise simply for two objects. One is to set myself right with regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I., implying that I was advocating that money should be expended from the public treasury to improve the harbor of Montreal. I expressed no opinion about that. In the remarks I made, my object was only to ascertain exactly what the position of the harbor trust would be after they were divested of their tonnage dues and relieved from the liability of $99,000. That was my sole object, and it was not for the purpose of drawing from the Government in any way a statement pledging them to expenditure for Montreal. When the senior member for Halifax and the hon. member for Queen's took exception to this large sum being given for dredging out the channel of the St. Lawrence, they talked as if the question was a new one. Why, I recollect that in the early days of my occupation of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, this very question was a ripe one, a question to which the public were alive. Delegations came from the harbor of Montreal, and a committee of the harbor trust came up for the purpose of settling this very question, and the Government of that day were prepared to do exactly what the Government are doing to-day. They were prepared to assume the responsibility of deepening the channel of the St. Lawrence and Lake St. Peter, but the harbor trust did not feel disposed to let the patronage and power resulting from the execution of the work pass out of their hands, and they undertook to do it themselves and to pay for it by levying tolls on the shipping.

Mr. DESJARDINS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. My hon. friend will remember the circumstance. It was a mistake on the part of the harbor trust not to accept the proposition of the Government of that day. It came within the prevision of my duty as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to discuss that matter, and I submitted a scheme twenty years ago, by which the Government were to assume the responsibility of doing this work. No man should object to this; no man should object to our making this great artery, one of the greatest in the world, of as great capacity as possible, so as to admit all shipping. I hope no jealousy will exist between the ports of Montreal and Quebec. The Government have been liberal to ports all over the Dominion. In this case it is not asking too much, that this, the greatest of the whole of them, this great artery into the interior of the continent carrying out the flow of a water shed of thousands of miles, a water territory of millions of acres, be made navigable for the largest shipping. True, the question of the increase of harbor accommodation is entirely distinct from this, and if the commission have not means enough, it may be that they will come back to this House, but that is not the question before the House, and my object was not to get a pledge from the Government, but to understand how much and to what extent the assistance given the Harbor Commissioners would go and to what extent they had to rely upon their own resources to improve and maintain the harbor. My hon. friend seems scarcely to realise the importance of the trade of the country of having additional facilities in Montreal. Montreal has not one-half the accommodation she requires, and if we look at the large additional trade that will be brought in by the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with their elevators which exist and those they have yet to put up, and with their cattle yards, perhaps the finest in the world, should the harbor of Montreal not be in a position to accommodate that trade, it will go to Boston, New York, Portland and other American cities. It behooves the merchants of Montreal to take the matter in hand in time, and before the trade gets diverted to make such improvements as are required, and if they cannot do what is necessary, it will be time enough then to approach the Government and see what can be done.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I did not intend to make any remarks on this resolution but to reserve them for both resolutions, but as the hon. member for Jacques Cartier has brought into the question the harbor of St. John as one on which a great deal has been expended, and has stated that the harbor would not be a harbor without the break-water, I tell him the harbor existed long before the break-water was put there.

Mr. GIROUARD. It was not necessary then.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It was necessary for the smaller vessels.

Mr. GIROUARD. Is it not within the limits of the port?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). True, it is within the limits of the port, but since Confederation all that has been expended on the port is $422,000, and by-and-by we will show that we are thoroughly entitled to further consideration at the hands of the Government with regard to our harbor. The question now is with regard to the assumption of this debt created by the deepening of the St. Lawrence and Lake St. Peter. I pointed out that the river police at Montreal and Quebec are sustained by the Federal Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. If they are, the tax is raised off the shipping which is collected by the Federal Government.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The collector of customs pays over the tonnage to the Harbor Commission, and there is no charge in the Harbor Commissioners' accounts for paying the harbor police.

Mr. MITCHELL. Having managed this business for seven years, I may say that was always the general practice of my administration, and I think that there has been no change since.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I will admit my hon. friend is right, but if that was the arrangement why should it not be put under the control of the Harbor Commissioners, instead of dividing it between the Federal Government and the Harbor Commissioners. The Federal Government, it seems, receives a certain amount of money to be expended back on the port of Montreal.

Mr. MITCHELL. Whenever the fund, which varies increases faster than the expense requires, we reduce it. We reduced it twice during my administration.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Probably my hon. friend is correct. I have no objection to Montreal getting a fair share of the public money or to the improvement of the ship channel, but we find that even the canals of the St. Lawrence are practically for the benefit of Montreal. The expense for harbor police was, I find, $17,400, and the receipts for police dues $10,000, showing the expenditure over the receipts to be about $7,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. When we found the receipts were larger than the expenses, we reduced the amount of the dues, and the present Government may have allowed that to remain.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I have no objection as far as that goes, this being the great highway to the west. It is necessary, however, for us to understand the burdens we are undertaking. The Minister of Finance has taken exception to the figures used by the member for Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Davies), as to the amount of capital which we say will become a liability of the Dominion. It is clear that the amount is $3,225,000, and, in addition to that, we will have $200,000 for deepening the channel to 27½ feet.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, that covers everything, and you have $600,000 worth of plant after next year.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Would it not be necessary to keep a large staff and a large plant there all the time? I see that the expenditure on buoys and beacons was about $15,000, of which the Dominion pays $7,000, so that will increase the burden by $8,000. We have not had any information as to what will be the annual expenditure to keep the channel clear. Up to this time I find that everything has been put down to capital account, and, when the capital account is closed, what amount will be necessary to keep the channel in order. We all know that every year a considerable amount of dredging has to be done.

Mr. SHANLY. I may inform the hon. gentleman that so far, since the dredging operations were commenced in Lake St. Peter, there has been no indication whatever of the dredged channel silting up.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I was informed differently, but no doubt the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly), with his experience, is right. I should think, however, that there must necessarily be some deposit, if that channel is anything like the rivers in New Brunswick. We know, in our own harbor of St. John, what an immense amount of deposit is brought down by the freshets, and there we have a very strong flow of water, and in St. Peter's, where, as I understand, the river meets the tide from the sea, and the flow of water is not so rapid as it is on the St. John River, it would seem that there must necessarily be an expenditure every year to keep the channel clear. At present, we cannot tell what that is because everything has been put down to capital account. In the spring of the year, the dredge is put to work immediately after the buoys are laid down in order to bring the channel down to 27½ feet, and we cannot tell what will be necessary for scouring and cleaning that channel every year. Judging from the experience of other rivers, it must necessarily amount to a large sum and the dredging plant must be kept. Does the Minister of Finance say that we are to take over the whole of the plant from the Harbor Commissioners?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; all the plant used for the deepening of the channel.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). And that used for the deepening of the harbor?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We have nothing to do with that, but we simply take over $600,000 worth of plant used for deepening the channel.

Mr. MITCHELL. There are two classes of plant, one suitable for the deepening of the river, and more particularly where it has a stone or shelvy rock bottom, and the other different altogether and suitable for scooping out round the wharves and the harbor. As I understand, the one goes to the Government, and the other is retained in the harbor.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Yes, but I see that three spoon dredges belong to the harbor fleet were used in the channel. I understand that the only plant taken over is that which is purchased for the channel. It seems to me that the Government will have to keep that for contingencies which may arise. Then there are the buoys.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman is getting on the wrong track. The buoys have had to be sustained for years past as they will have to be in the future.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I have put the amount down at $15,000. The Government has paid $7,000 and now that the Dominion must take the whole that will be an increase of $8,000. I find that tugs were employed last year 110 days going up and down and watching where it was supposed that there might be a wreck. In that case they have to take it out of the way, and it is clear that a staff and plant must be kept for that purpose. I want to know whether any estimates have been made as to what that cost will be. I think the sum of $108,000 includes the interest paid to the Government of $99,000, which leaves $18,000 and then there is an additional expenditure of $10,000. I presume the expenditure will not be less when this is in the hands of the Government than it was before, so that represents so much more capital which will become a liability of the Government. I am not opposing the grant. I mean by-and-bye to put forward other claims in regard to this matter.

Mr. DESJARDINS. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) has been speaking of that question as if it was only a matter of expenditure without any compensation. As I understand it, it is a measure to settle the question whether the trade of the Dominion will go to the American ports or will remain within our own territory. It is well known that at present, on account of the dues exacted by the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal to meet the interest on the debt and keep up the harbor and the channel, the steamers that come into that harbor are charged four times what they are in the harbor of New York. I think when we see the State of New York relieving the internal shipping from any dues on the canals, and other maritime cities of the United States doing everything they can to attract shipping into their ports, it is time for us to take up this matter as a Dominion question, and to relieve Montreal of the charge. We could do no less than relieve the harbor of Montreal of that charge upon it when it was acknowledged to be a Dominion work. The question of competition between Montreal and Quebec, or any other harbor in the Dominion, has nothing to do with this question. The deepening of Lake St. Peter is acknowledged to be a Dominion work, and the Government is only assuming a debt which was created, not for the benefit of Montreal harbor alone, but for the advantage of the traffic of the whole country. That is so much the case, that it has always been claimed by the other Provinces that Quebec was not entitled to the whole credit of the income derived from customs on imports coming into Montreal, but that those receipts should be considered as spread over the whole country. And so on many occasions in the past, whatever increased the trade of Montreal was considered as benefiting the trade of the Dominion, so that the Government, in assuming this debt, is not assuming it for the advantage of a locality, but for the advantage of the Dominion.

Mr. GILLMOR. This discussion is taking a different course from what I expected. After my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Jones) admitted that it was important this should be done in the interest of the Dominion, I saw no necessity for any further discussion. The discussion has all been on the details. If you admit that this should be done in the interest of the Dominion, then everything else is of minor importance, and we are discussing details which do not amount to much. I thought the discussion was to be upon the point whether it was the duty of the Dominion to assume this liability. This seemed not to have been the opinion of Parliament heretofore. They thought it was a matter in which the city of Montreal was especially interested. The city of Montreal wanted to make certain improvements in their harbor, and instead of going into the money markets of the world to borrow money, they came to the Government, and the Government agreed to loan them so much money. I think myself that perhaps the Government are about the best capitalists to whom any locality can go to borrow money, because they never pay it back to the Government. This has been running on for twelve or fifteen years, and now new light seems to have dawned upon the Government and upon Parliament. My hon. friend from Halifax gave away the whole case when he agreed that it is in the interest of the country that it should be done. Now, it was in the interest of the country in 1873 that it should be done, therefore you have been taking interest from Montreal that you had no right to.

Mr. WELDON (St. John).

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is wrong there. The trade of the country has paid it; Montreal has not paid a dollar.

Mr. MITCHELL. The shipping paid it.

Mr. GILLMOR. Now, I am not yet convinced that it is the duty of Parliament to assume this debt. I know that my hon. friend from Halifax says it is all right, and my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) who seems to understand the question so well, does not dissent from it, nobody seems to dissent from it. I am not convinced that Montreal, situated as it is by nature in the most important position of this Dominion to derive great advantages from commerce from all parts of the world—I do not yet consent to the idea that it should shift its responsibility upon the shoulders of the Dominion. It is deriving, at least, the cream of the benefit from that commerce. Montreal is the centre of the wealth and of the population of this great Dominion, and I do not see why the whole Dominion should assume all the cost of making it more easy for her citizens to become wealthy. It may be said that whatever facilities are given to any port to increase its commerce are in the interests of the Dominion. Now doubt about that. But although I have not been convinced that it is our duty to assume that responsibility, I think there are arguments on both sides. There is one point that I would like to see explained. A question has been asked, perhaps it is impossible to answer it. We are not only taking upon ourselves the debt, but the yearly expense that will be entailed upon the Government in the future. I think it must entail a yearly expenditure to maintain those works, and we do not have the revenue that the commission have now, because they tax the shipping. As I understand the argument, so far as it has been advanced, they do not have the revenue because they make it a free port, so far as certain charges on the vessels are concerned. They will not have the tonnage to recoup the Government for any expenditure they may make. I think the sediment, or the silt, as it is called, settles in rivers, and I think it must continue, in the very nature of things, to settle in the St. Lawrence, as it has done in the past, and there must be a yearly expenditure entailed upon the Government, if they assume this responsibility to keep the channel open. Of course I know it is a foregone conclusion not to oppose this resolution, because it seems generally agreed to be in the interest of the Dominion. But it is a bad principle that does not work both ways. If it is in the interest of the Dominion to assume this charge and the amount due from Montreal, it is right to do so for every other port of the Dominion, for all are important in their degree.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is not in the port at all.

Mr. GILLMOR. Then it is in the river. But nature placed Quebec at the mouth of the river, and my hon. friend seems to forget that while they are doing a great work for Montreal, they are deepening the channel of the river in order to induce vessels to go further up the St. Lawrence than the city of Quebec, which is, by nature, the natural sea port of the St. Lawrence. There is no doubt about that, and they are trying to overcome natural obstacles in favor of Montreal.

Mr. CASEY. We have heard a great deal from the east in regard to this question, and as representing Western Ontario I feel it my duty to say something in regard to it. I feel it my duty to do so particularly because it has been asserted most positively that this measure has been adopted as much in the interests of Western Ontario as of Montreal or any other part of the Dominion. The Minister of Finance put it in the broadest terms, that this was not done for the benefit of Montreal, but for the benefit of the Dominion at large, that the whole

Dominion had an interest in it. If we all agreed to that proposition I would stop discussing the question and let the vote come on. But I feel bound to traverse the very first proposition. The Minister asserts that this measure is taken in the interest of the Dominion at large. I hold that the channel between Montreal and Quebec was deepened specially for the purpose of attracting ocean steamers to Montreal instead of to Quebec. Quebec was the natural port; Montreal was no port at all for ocean steamers until the channel was deepened. It would be no port without this expenditure, which in fact is necessary to make it a port. Who originated the deepening of the channel in the first instance? The merchants of Montreal, for their own advantage. The Hon. John Young agitated the question, brought the scheme to completion and got the Harbor Commission appointed by the Government in order to have the channel deepened. We remember how far he saw it perfected before he died, and we know how much has been carried out since. It was a magnificent work as showing the enterprise of Montreal. Why did they do it? Was it for the interests of the Dominion? No, but for their own interests, in order to bring trade from Quebec to Montreal, and they have made Montreal the commercial metropolis of the Dominion at the expense of the old metropolis. I give Montreal all credit for it; the people did a very smart business transaction as the Americans would say. But instead of doing it in the interests of the Dominion, they did it in the interest of their own pockets, which they have filled, and they have reaped their reward. What did it cost them? It cost them nothing, because they had money advanced by the Government, and the interest on the loan was paid by tonnage and wharfage dues collected on ships coming into port. These people had two advantages: they drew a large amount of shipping to Montreal, and they did not pay for getting it there. If they had spent three millions and a quarter and paid the amount themselves, it would have been a good investment for the city; but instead of doing that, they collected tonnage and harbor dues to pay the interest, and the money has been advanced to them by the Government at a low rate of interest. The Government after keeping the people of Montreal to carry out the improvements, after allowing them to rob the sister city and to collect tolls to pay the interest, turn around and declare that there is no object more worthy of Dominion support than this improvement, and they come forward and ask Parliament to assume the responsibility of maintaining a channel constructed for the benefit of one city and not for the benefit of the Dominion at large. It is no difference to us in Ontario whether grain is shipped at Montreal or Quebec. It can be sent by water all the way. A small amount of freight goes down by rail, but the difference of 180 miles from Montreal to Quebec would make a very slight difference between the cost of water carriage and rail carriage. If the argument of the Minister of Finance to-day is true, why was it not equally true last year and for several previous years? This is no new thing. Year after year the Harbor Commissioners have asked to have this thing done and they have been refused on the very ground I have stated, that the work was not constructed in the interests of the Dominion but in the interests of Montreal. What new light has come to the Government in regard to this question? It all arises from the monopoly clause in the Canadian Pacific Railway charter. When that monopoly was granted we told the Government that it would lead to endless complications. Now they have to confess that they have had to buy up the monopoly. We are granting to the Canadian Pacific Railway an immense amount of money for that purpose, and Montreal naturally comes to the Government and says that the result is that the abolition of monopoly might possibly injure their city, and that something must be done for them. The Government having been forced by circumstances to accede to this view, the people of Quebec next come forward and say

"having done this for Montreal you must do something for us." The Government say yes, and forthwith propose to assume the debt for certain works at Lévis. So we have to pay three millions and a quarter to Montreal and over three millions to Quebec, all on account of that injurious monopoly in the North West, and it is done to enable the people of Montreal and Quebec to vote with a clear conscience for the Canadian Pacific Railway resolutions. That is the whole matter in a nutshell. The people of Montreal and the people of Quebec, feel that they were aggrieved by the tremendous expenditure elsewhere and they must have something to make it possible for them conscientiously, to vote for the other scheme. I do not blame them. I say they have a perfect right to come here and ask for this when the public money is going the way it is. But the Government are going beyond what is just and fair, going beyond what is constitutional, and what is tolerable, when they lay on new burdens in this way, in order to enable them to get out of the scrape they have deliberately put themselves into by inserting that monopoly clause in the Canadian Pacific Railway charter. It is to save themselves they are doing this and not to help the country. If this action is in the interest of the country now, it would have been just as much in the interests of the country years ago when they refused to do it. They do it now simply because they are in a tight place, and have to do it. No thanks are due them from the people of Montreal, or from the people of Quebec who have been refused this year after year. They do not expect gratitude I suppose, for they do it to save themselves. The people of Western Ontario, the people of Manitoba, the people of the North-West and the people of British Columbia, are taxed to relieve the people of Montreal and Quebec of certain duties, and why? Simply because the Government bound themselves to do a thing which they found they could not carry out; to maintain an absolute monopoly for the Canadian Pacific Railway for a number of years. They have been compelled to give that up, and in consequence of that the taxpayers of this country, from Cape Breton to British Columbia, are to be burdened with millions of money in order to get the Government out of a scrape. The pretense that this is done through patriotic motives will not go down with the people of this country. Let my hon. friends from Cape Breton, or British Columbia, or Nova Scotia tell the people that this is not a local scheme, that it is not a scheme to relieve the Government from the trouble they got themselves into, and that it is a broad, patriotic scheme to make a great water-way to get their goods nearer to market. If my friends go home and say this they will be told that it is all nonsense.

An hon. MEMBER. Carried.

Mr. CASEY. If the hon. member wants to be carried perhaps some person will carry him out, but the question is not going to be carried just yet. We are told here to-night that this expenditure is analogous to the expenditure on the Welland and St. Lawrence canals. I say there is no analogy at all. The expenditure on those canals was entered into in order to enable the farmers to get their grain to the nearest point which they could, to the port of shipment.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman forget that there is no way in which we can add so much to the value of grain, as to make the great ocean port at which it will be shipped a free port?

Mr. AMYOT. Make Quebec the same thing.

Mr. CASEY. My friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) has anticipated me. The statement is true that a free port adds to the price of grain, but why spend three and a half millions to make Montreal a free port instead of Quebec? There is a natural port at Quebec and if the Montreal people want to make Montreal an artificial port, as the people of Liverpool did make the port of Liverpool, let them do it. Were the people of England taxed to make Liverpool a free port? No, the people of Liverpool paid for it themselves, and why should the people of Canada be taxed to make Montreal a free port, instead of having the free port at Quebec as nature intended it should be? The pretended analogy between this port and the canals does not exist. The canals were deepened to bring the grain to tide-water, but this simply affords greater advantages for large ocean vessels to come to Montreal. It builds up Montreal and ruins the other port. It renders no appreciable benefit to the country west of Montreal, and to pretend it is a benefit to the country, east of Montreal, is nonsense. I do not think anyone can get up in the House and say that it is. The subject is a large one, but considering the late hour I wish to cut my remarks short at this point.

Motion agreed, to and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec.) I would like to have some explanation on one or two points, one of which has already been raised by the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) and that is to ascertain the amount of liability we assume. There is a fixed amount of three and a quarter millions for the present debt of the Harbor Commissioners, and no Minister on the other side has stated definitely what is the estimated cost of keeping that harbor in order. The question has been put by several members on this side, but it has not been answered yet. The Minister of Public Works has stated it would not cost so much as estimated by the senior member for Halifax, but he did not state in his opinion what would be the expenditure for keeping the channel in order. Nobody on the other side has pretended it would cost nothing, and it is important to know whether it was fifty or one hundred thousand dollars. It will cost something surely, and I would like to know how much the Government estimate it will cost to keep that channel clear. That is to say, to do what has been done by the Harbor Commission in Montreal. The Government must have some data of the public expenditure.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN I am not in a position to give figures in answer to the hon. gentleman. He must see that as long as those works have been going on as they have been going on, and as they are now going on, the keeping of the channel, or the improvements of the channel, as the case may be, has been carried on with the other works of deepening, and so on. Therefore, it is an impossibility for me to say to the hon. gentleman what it would eventually cost, but, nevertheless, I will take care, before concurrence is asked on those resolutions, to have some data on that point in order to answer the question.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec.) I know there is a good deal of misunderstanding about this. I heard it stated by the member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly) that no dredging is required for the St. Peter channel. Everyone is speaking as if there was only the channel in Lake St. Peter; but there is the channel from Quebec to Montreal. I have seen the channel of Lake St. Peter, and it would be against all the laws of nature and all experience were no silt deposited in it. It just starts where the tide ends, and the channel is not a straight one, and does not follow the direction of the stream. If it did, no silt would be deposited, or it would be carried away by the stream, on the same principle that Captain Eads proposed to apply to the Mississippi. He proposed to narrow the channel so that the natural current being increased would carry away the silt and the sand. But the case of Lake St. Peter is quite different. It is a widening of the St. Lawrence to about 20 miles, the river being about two miles in width up to that point, and it is easy to understand that the flow of the water must be much lower, and that much more sand and silt must be deposited there than where the river has a narrower channel. If that is not the case, the ordinary laws of nature are not followed there. There is another objection. I have seen that channel in 1883 and 1884, when it was supposed to be 25 feet deep, and I have observed that instead of following the natural direction of the stream, it goes from one side of the river to the other—from Sorel on the south side straight across to Three Rivers. I asked the pilot on that occasion why the channel had been made in such a crooked way. He said it was not made in that way for the pleasure of making it crooked, but it was made so to save money. He said that those who made the channel had followed some holes that had been made by nature in order to save excavation; but everyone must see that such a channel must be much more exposed to be filled up by silt than a straight channel which would be in the natural direction of the stream. Then, there is another point on which I would like to get some information. I have heard the statement made, in answer to a question put by a member on this side of the House, as to the probable cost of completing the deepening of the channel between Quebec and Montreal, that the estimate given to the hon. Minister was about $225,000. I would like to know on what data the Government rely for such an estimate. I have heard different statements made by people who are good authorities on that question. I have spoken very frequently on the subject with pilots who pilot ships between Quebec and Montreal. I asked one of the oldest pilots there how much he thought the deepening of that channel would cost. He said that nobody could say, for although the engineers might give a rough estimate, they had touched rocks at the bottom, and in many places they had found a bottom of solid rock, so that instead of having to blast rock for 100 or 150 feet at one place, they would have to blast it for a mile or a mile and a half. From what I have heard, I do not think it is possible for the Government to fix any amount as the probable expenditure for deepening the channel between Quebec and Montreal. There is another objection which to my mind is a very serious one. A great deal of the expenditure is being made to remove certain rocks at Cap à la Roche, some 60 miles from Quebec. If that is done, it will most probably necessitate the deepening of the channel all the way from that point to Montreal in all places that are a little shallow. The reason is that Cap à la Roche is a sort of natural dam which keeps the water from that point to Montreal at a certain height. If it is excavated sufficiently to allow ships to pass at low tide, the water will probably be lowered in the whole channel between Cap à la Roche and Montreal. These are observations that I have heard from pilots and others who know the channel between Quebec and Montreal much better than an engineer could know it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman must not forget that the Government have not come here without the necessary information. This is not a work that has been done by pilots or mariners, but by scientific men, engineers.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). In Quebec we have learned not to have much confidence in scientific men.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Well, I have no doubt the House will have confidence in scientific men for scientific works. While a pilot may be skilled to guide a vessel safely into a port, I would not care to depend on his judgment as to now a work of this kind is to be carried on. The channel is not in a straight line, but nature has made nearly all rivers to wind about, and in this case we had to take advantage of the long stretches of deep water which had been formed by nature, and the channel was made in a diagonal line. It would probably be more scientific and more handsome to have a straight channel, but it would cost probably ten times as much as this has cost.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I think I have been misunderstood by the hon. Minister. I was not blaming those who did the work. I was only discussing the situation of the channel.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It has been discussed by scientific men, and it has been considered that we should take advantage of these stretches of deep water, in order to avoid spending large sums of money. That is the reason why this channel is not in a straight line from Montreal to Quebec. Cap à la Roche is a portion of the channel. It is an elevation of the bottom of the river there, and is really rock, but it is such a rock that with the very powerful dredges which the Harbor Commissioners have there, the rock is removed in large pieces, pieces four times as large as these desks, and as hard as the hardest you can find anywhere. The engineers say that this portion of the river had to be deepened, in order to get 27 feet of water from one end to the other. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman that the removal of this rock will allow the water to come down with such velocity that we will have to begin again and deepen the channel from Cape à la Roche to Montreal. The hon. gentleman wants to know where we get our figures about the future cost of the work. I take them from the engineers employed by the Harbor Commission. A few years ago, we advanced the amount of $900,000 to the Harbor Commission to deepen the channel from 25 to 27½ feet. Later on we found that to deepen that portion called Cap à la Roche, an additional amount was required, and an additional sum was advanced to the commission. They have expended during the past four years a large portion of that, and the balance remaining in our hands is $279,000, which has yet to be expended in completing the works. The engineers say that $20,000 additional will be required to complete it. Besides that, in order to make the channel more perfect and facilitate the ascent and descent of large steamers, we will have to widen it at certain points. That is estimated to cost $200,000. Add that to the $20,000 further required and the $279,000 not expended, and you will find it will take nearly half a million dollars to complete the work.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). This expenditure has always been spoken of as if it was only expenditure incurred or to be incurred for the deepening of the channel of Lake St. Peter. But it seems to be the whole expenditure on capital made by the Harbor Commissioners at Montreal.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, if the hon. gentleman will look at page 33 of the Harbor Commissioners' report, he will see at the first line, "interest on debentures $115,750," showing that they have a debt which I would suppose must be $2,500,000 if not $3,000,000. That is the debt they have incurred for the harbor proper. The amount of $3,005,000 is purely for the works outside the harbor.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is evident that the Government are not in possession of such information as will enable them to state with accuracy the amount that will be required to complete this dredging of the St. Lawrence. Any one familiar with the work must be satisfied that the Government will be required to keep up the dredging continually, and that if they get off with an expenditure of $100,000 a year that will be the best they can expect. My hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Lovitt) who has travelled over that district many times and is familiar with it, can give you information as to the operation of the tides in that river. Then, as to the completion of the work, the Government are equally in the dark. Have they received an estimate with sufficient accuracy to decide what amount is required to complete that work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The Minister of Public Works says "yes." I have no doubt he believes it, but I do not, and I do not believe that any engineer, no matter how skilled he may be, can make an accurate estimate as to what is required to complete that navigation. We know what the estimates of engineers have been from time to time, and the hon. gentleman knows probably better than any member in this House that the estimates of engineers are about as reliable as a good many other things in this world. I do not say that they purposely mislead you, but they give always a sanguine tone to their reports, and that leads the Government to believe that a certain thing will be done for a certain price. The hon. gentleman will probably propose only $200,000 in one year, in another he will want $150,000, and every year you will have a different estimate, and there is no telling when the end of it will come. I venture to say that for five or ten years to come the hon. gentleman will have an annual vote for this work in addition to the annual expenditure for keeping it open. I do not say the Government are blameable for not giving this information, because they have not got it themselves, but I blame them for leading the House to believe that in their judgment this expenditure is going to be confined to the narrow limits which they have marked out.

Mr. LANGELIER (Que.) I desire to say—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Question.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). If we are going to vote this blind, let us know it, but if not, I think I should be allowed to make some remarks.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There has been plenty of opportunity for discussing this question.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). The Government are acting on the supposition which they have never admitted before, that this is a Dominion work. It is very important to distinguish between the work done in the harbors of Montreal and Quebec and the work done in the channel. Everyone is aware that the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal have spent a lot of money in improving that harbor and in building very expensive wharves almost from the Lachine Canal to Hochelaga. They have received large amounts for that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not a dollar.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Who is going to show the difference? When they have these large advances from the Government, how can anyone tell that they do not apply a part of them to these works?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Because they are honest men and have given a report every year of every dollar they have expended. The Harbor Commissioners have provided, altogether apart from any assistance they have received from the Government, all the expenditures which they have made on the harbor of Montreal. They have issued their own debentures, they have paid the money and paid the interest, and they have given an account every year of the expenditure of every dollar which has been voted by this Parliament.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Where can we find the distinction between the expenditure of the money voted by this Parliament and the money of the harbor of Montreal proper?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The matter was investigated by an officer of my department, and he was allowed to investigate the books of the commissioners and there was an amount voted which was deducted from the amount claimed by them, and that was left as a portion of their debt. The subject was well looked into, and there was no hiding on the part of the commissioners of any of their documents. They left their books open and there was no question as to the accuracy of the investigation.

Resolution reported.

QUEBEC HARBOR COMMISSION.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider resolution (p.) respecting the Quebec Harbor Commission.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). You are not going on with that to-night.

Mr. McMULLEN. If you do, it will take till 6 o'clock.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If hon. gentlemen opposite intend to prevent the conclusion which we have already arrived at of having an early prorogation, if they have changed their minds and have determined to occupy night after night and day after day in lengthy discussions, we must sit late at night or abandon any such hope.

Mr. JONES (Halifax.) That is hardly fair, because in the early part of the discussion this evening I stated that I had some observations to make on the policy of the Government in reference to these matters, which would involve a discussion of some length, but, as I did not then wish to take up the time of the House, as I might have done, I think an opportunity should be given at another day.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I quite admit that, but the hon. gentleman knows that, although he was good enough to refrain from going on with the Quebec question, other gentlemen have not done so, and the subject has been elaborately discussed. If we go on with the discussion of the Quebec question now, we shall avoid going over the same ground to-morrow. Gentlemen will not, to-night, and repeat the same speeches they have made, but, if this is postponed to another sitting, we shall have the whole thing over again and shall simply waste another day in covering the same ground. The hon. gentleman has his speech prepared, and I shall be happy to sit here and listen to him as long as he chooses to discuss the matter.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not think we cannot very well entertain the hope to which the hon. gentleman has referred. So far, during the Session I think we cannot have had any more important question than we have now before us. When this is over, I do not see anything left on the paper to keep us for any length of time.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think we might pass the resolutions now and take the discussion on the next stage, when there will be the same opportunity as there is to-night.

Mr. MITCHELL. The discussion on the Quebec resolution is entirely different from the Montreal question.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. AMYOT. Will the hon. Minister state what will be the net amount of the debt that the Quebec Harbor Commissioners will owe to the Government, at 4 per cent., after remitting a certain amount of bonds?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will answer the hon. gentleman presently. These resolutions propose to assume the graving dock at Point Lévis entirely as a public work. Hon. gentlemen are aware of the circumstances under which the graving dock at Point Lévis was undertaken. The money has been advanced to the Harbor Commissioners, they undertaking to pay, on the completion of the graving dock, $10,000 a year, if it was required, over and above the net receipts from the work, until the debt was extinguished. It is now proposed to treat the graving dock of Quebec in precisely the same manner as we treat the deepening of Lake St. Peter, that is, to assume it as a public work. We consider that a graving dock at so important a point as the harbor of Quebec, the first great harbor that is reached in the St. Lawrence, may be fairly treated as a national work, may fairly be put upon the same footing as the the graving dock in British Columbia, which has been constructed as a public work by the Dominion, with the aid of the Imperial Government. Under these circumstances, we propose to relieve the Harbor Commissioners from any responsibility in regard to the obligation to pay $10,000 a year, in a certain contingency, in connection with that work. We propose to assume the entire cost of that work, to have it placed under the charge of the Minister of Public Works, the receipts obtained from it to go towards the cost that it has been to the country. So far as the graving dock is concerned, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) will see that we are putting it on precisely the same footing as we have put the deepening of the channel of Lake St. Peter.

SIR HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Mr. AMYOT. We have no objection to it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That, I presume, will be acceptable to my hon. friend, and I think it will be acceptable to the House. I think the House will consider that a graving dock at so important a point as the entrance to the first great harbor on our national inland navigation, as the St. Lawrence undoubtedly is, may fairly be treated as a national work. Then with reference to the harbor improvements, my hon. friend will remember that there was a sum, of $723,000 advanced long ago to the Harbor Commissioners at Quebec, before any work in reference to their tidal dock was undertaken. On that sum of $723,000 the Harbor Commissioners have paid, out of the revenues of the harbor, regularly, the interest and sinking fund down to the present time, that is, $36,150 a year. Then there was a further sum provided for the Quebec Harbor. In connection with the new tidal dock and these extensive harbor works at Quebec, a sum in all of $3,975,000 has been authorised by Parliament to be expended on the works, and of this sum $3,241,000 has been advanced by the Government to the Harbor Commissioners at Quebec, so that there still remains available of the amount provided by Parliament the sum of $734,000.

Mr. LAURIER. That is to say, the commissioners are entitled to receive that amount?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The commissioners are entitled to receive that amount of $734,000 which has been appropriated by Parliament for that work. That is assumed to be the amount that will be required to complete that work. There was an arrangement that interest should be paid at the rate of 5 per cent., and a sinking fund of 1 per cent. That interest and sinking fund have both been paid out of capital. There was no other source of obtaining it. The works are not so far completed as to enable any revenue to be derived. Consequently, the Harbor Commissioners have been charged with the interest and sinking fund, and we hold the debentures of the Harbor Commissioners for the interest and the sinking fund. We propose, by these resolutions, to wipe out all the charge upon the Harbor Commissioners for the sinking fund and for the interest, from the commencement of the work down to the present time.

Mr. GIROUARD. Is that work within the port of Quebec?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid my hon. friend is not asking for information.

Mr. GIROUARD. I am very familiar with the port of Quebec, but I suppose some hon. members are not.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec Centre). The port of Quebec goes down to Portneuf, some 300 miles below Quebec.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If my hon. friend is asking for information I will tell him frankly that this work is in the harbor of Quebec.

Mr. GIROUARD. How far from the city.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is immediately opposite the city, it is in the river. As I said before we propose to return to the commissioners the debentures we have received to cover the interest and sinking fund down to the present time, and to reduce the interest to 4 per cent. per annum in the future; so that they will be liable for the principal amount and for the interest from the present time, at 4 per cent., the amount of interest and sinking fund having been remitted.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec Centre). Is the interest to be reduced to 4 per cent., also, on the whole amount of $700,000?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not remember at this moment what that interest is.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec Centre). That amount is due on account of the redemption by the Government of the old debentures, bearing 8 per cent. interest, and I think they are now bearing 5 per cent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can only say that if they paid that interest it would be only fair to reduce the interest on that additional amount to 4 per cent. in the same way. The simple interest payable on advances on the graving dock from 17th December, 1878, to 19th April, 1888, amounts to $204,454.32, of which no part has been paid. The amount paid out of capital by the Quebec Harbor Commissioners to the Government for interest and sinking fund on the bonds deposited with the Finance Minister as security for advances made by the Government on account of harbor improvements in Quebec and the tidal dock at the mouth of the River St. Charles is estimated $493,706.64. That is the amount we propose to remit. The amount actually paid out of their revenues by the Quebec Harbor Commissioners for sinking fund on the last-mentioned bonds is, so far as can be ascertained, $98,621.59. The graving dock is in addition, the amount expended being $338,000 and simple interest $204,454.32 more.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) There appears to be some discrepancy between the figures given by the hon. gentleman and those given in the Public Accounts. Taking the amounts for the tidal dock we have authorised $2,822,298. I desire to enquire whether any amount has been authorised since 1886?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, a year ago there was an advance.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman wishes to discuss this matter to-night, but before we take the next stage I should like him to look up the early history of appropriations made for harbor improvements at Quebec. And I hope he will be able to tell us whether the five cents a ton imposed for the purpose of paying interest on harbor improvements is still to be collected on shipping stopping at or passing through Quebec.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I presume so. There is no engagement in these resolutions that touches the revenue of the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec.

Mr. MITCHELL. This is a very serious question in the interest of the whole trade of the St. Lawrence, not alone at Montreal but as far as inland navigation extends. The history of the matter may be briefly summarised in this way: An application was made to organise a harbor trust in the Province of Quebec. The figures I am not prepared to give just now, but to supply funds a tax of five cents a ton was imposed on every vessel coming into the port of Quebec either stopping there or, I believe, in passing. We are recasting these measures now and the Government is giving up a great deal and is about to pay a large sum of money. Is it right that vessels coming to Quebec or passing through it to Montreal, Sorel or Three Rivers should be called upon to pay toll at Quebec? We are dealing with this trust on considerations of equity, and in doing so we have taken away a portion of the revenue of the port of Montreal in the interest of the public to make it a free port. Why should ships coming to Montreal pay toll on passing Quebec?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that if a vessel passes through the port of Quebec it has to pay toll?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, that is my belief.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, I think only those vessels that stop in Quebec or stop there to discharge some part of their cargo are taxed.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman may be right. There may have been some change since the matter was brought to my attention some eighteen years ago. I should like before the next the stage is taken the Minister of Public Works to be able to state how navigation will be affected by the arrangements proposed. I have not very much confidence in the management of the port of Quebec in regard to harbor improvements. I have nothing to say against the Minister of Public Works, in whom I have great confidence; but in the first step taken with respect to harbor improvements the money was thrown away. Instead of making improvements the commissioners bought a parcel of old wharves. They borrowed money at from 5 to 8 per cent.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). All at 8 per cent.

Mr. MITCHELL. While I was Minister of Marine and Fisheries they got into terrible difficulties and had to apply to the Government, and the Government agreed to take over some of the debt. An arrangement was made by which the parties agreed to take 5 per cent. per annum, the Government took over the debt and afterwards they got the Lévis dock and the St. Charles River improvements. The Minister of Public Works will no doubt be able to justify all those things. I would like, however, when he does attempt to justify them he would give us all the information that we want.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid there will be great difficulty in touching any portion of the revenues of the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec. Including the $36,000 unpaid, and the original amount for the old works before the new works were undertaken, as I understand it they had a small deficiency last year. If you take any portion of the revenues from the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec you would leave them without the means of discharging the liability.

Mr. MITCHELL. How can we make Montreal and the River St. Lawrence, and Quebec that cheap port my hon. friend pictured so beautifully in the earlier part of this discussion. If we desire to make the River St. Lawrence a cheap port for the business of the world, we should not start at the entrance and charge five cents a ton on vessels coming to the port of Quebec, if Montreal is to sustain her own harbor and Quebec hers also. I am not going to press the matter, but I would call the attention of the committee to the fact that we should not burden the shipping with five cents a ton in that port, if it could be avoided.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There will be the usual charge for vessels using the dry dock?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course.

Mr. AMYOT. There is no difference between the Lévis dock and the new dock. It is clear to my mind that the Government should assume the charge of the Lévis dock. It is not intended for the ships coming to Three Rivers, or Quebec but the ships of the whole Dominion can use it. A certain amount paid on the Quebec dock is given back to the commissioners in the form of debentures. I want to know what amount remains in the hands of the Government on which the Harbor Commissioners will have to pay 4 per cent. in the future.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. $3,975,000.

Mr. AMYOT. You see from that, the immense amount of interest Quebec will have to pay every year, and that it will be necessary for it to charge tonnage dues.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is the total amount including interest and sinking fund, it will not amount to that.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It will be about $3,400,000.

Mr. AMYOT. It will be a large amount on which to pay interest. Quebec will have to charge tonnage dues and the port will be at a disadvantage, because it will cost less for the ships to go to Montreal and load and unload. Quebec was the natural harbor, but on account of public works paid for by the Dominion, you have prevented Quebec from being the natural port.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman will see that the small tax of 5 cents on the shipping in the port of Quebec—not that shipping passing through, because I think it would be unjust to tax those vessels passing through and if it is done we will have to change it—the small tax of 5 cents is $15,000 a year to the Harbor Commissioners.

Mr. AMYOT. How will that pay the interest?

An hon. MEMBER. They don't intend to pay it.

Mr. MITCHELL. What are those dues on the harbor of Quebec?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The total is about $53,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. There will be a deficiency of nearly $70,000 per annum.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. When the tidal dock and the wet dock are completed at the end of the year, those docks will give a large revenue, I have no doubt.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will you promise never to come here for any more money?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I never make any such promises.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). If the Government were proposing to abolish those tonnage dues in the harbor of Quebec I would see no objection to what is proposed for Montreal, but the practical result will be that there will be a discrimination in favor of Montreal.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. You have tonnage dues of 5 cents in Quebec and none in Montreal, but you have heavy dues in Montreal on goods, and those dues are very small in Quebec. Therefore if we want to have a change in the Act we will have to put taxes on the merchandise as we do in Montreal.

Resolutions reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 1.25 a.m. (Wednesday).

Mr. MITCHELL.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 9th May, 1888.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

DEBATES COMMITTEE.

Mr. DAVIN. In the absence of Mr. Desjardins, the chairman of the Debates Committee, I beg to move the adoption of the second report of the Committee appointed to supervise the official report of the Debates of this House during the present Session. That report is as follows:—

"The committee would recommend that the salary of Mr. J. C. Boyce, assistant to the chief reporter, be increased to $1,000, to take effect from 1st January, 1887, and that Mr. Boyce's salary be paid to him monthly, as are the salaries of the official reporters; also that Mr. Brewer be granted an annual allowance of $100 from 1st January, 1886, for services rendered; and that the clerk of the committee, Mr. E. P. Hartney, be granted $200 for past services and an annual allowance of $50 from the 1st January, 1886."

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This matter came up the other day, and the chairman of the committee was asked to put it off for a few days. The report refers to three officers. Mr. Boyce is an officer appointed by the committee, and his appointment was sanctioned by the House. The other two officers, Mr. Brewer and Mr. Hartney, are officers of the House of Commons, and I would suggest that the portion of the report which relates to Mr. Boyce may be adopted, and the balance of the report may be referred to the Commission on the Internal Economy of the House of Commons. Thus we will keep the officers of the House in the hands of the Speaker and the members of that Commission, as has been done up to the present time.

Mr. LAURIER. I think I would agree with the suggestion of the Minister of Public Works. I think it is a proper thing to deal with Mr. Boyce, who is an officer of the House itself, while Mr. Brewer and Mr. Hartney are employed in another capacity. At the same time, I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that Mr. Brewer gives very valuable services to the Hansard, and that his case should be favorably considered.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I understand that, and it is my intention to call the attention of my colleagues of the Commission to Mr. Brewer's special services. I would move, or perhaps it would be better that the hon. gentleman himself should move, that the first portion of the report should be concurred in, and the second part should be referred to the Commission on Internal Economy. As a motion has already been made, I will move in amendment:

That the first portion of the report in reference to Mr. Boyce be concurred in, and that the second portion of the report relative to Mr. Brewer and Mr. Hartney, be referred to the Commission on Internal Economy.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think I may say that the proposal which has been made by the Minister of Public Works will meet with the approval of all the members of the Debates Committee. It is quite evident that the point taken by that hon. gentleman is a proper one. So far as Mr. Boyce is concerned, it was felt that he had a case peculiarly deserving the consideration of the committee, and that that was the only case of hardship, and we desire to have that dealt with, and I therefore cheerfully support the amendment of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. DAVIN. As my hon. friend has informed the House, the amendment will meet entirely with the approval of the committee, especially as the chairman of the committee, as I understand, has been informed that the cases of the two other gentlemen will be considered by the authority to which they are referred. With regard to Mr. Brewer, I may say here, that, while the Debates Committee may not be in a position to deal with his case, we would strongly impress on the Government the desirability of considering it favorably, because his duties are responsible, they are strictly responsible duties, and the responsibility is not merely such responsibility as is generally thrown upon any officer who has to perform duties requiring intelligence, but it is such a responsibility as implies integrity as well as intelligence.

Mr. COLBY. I may say in addition, and I do not know if the Minister of Public Works is aware of it, but the case of Mr. Brewer engaged the special attention of a sub-committee of the Hansard Committee. They examined his work, which he has been doing for years, and the nature of it, and they reported to the committee that the work was very considerable, that it was onerous, and very responsible, and they felt that it should be recompensed in some shape.

M. MITCHELL. While the subject is up, I may as well say what I think about the Hansard business. I must frankly state that I think it has never been conducted more satisfactorily or more correctly than it has been this year. I think the staff, one and all of them, have shown very great aptitude for their duties, and a great deal of efficiency and ability in performing them, particularly Mr. Boyce, whose duties have been very arduous, and with whom I have been more frequently brought into relations than with the others. I have always found the utmost courtesy and civility from the whole of them, and apparently they bring to bear, in the performance of their duty, as great efficiency as could be expected from any set of gentlemen.

Mr. SPROULE. I do not rise to make any objections to the consideration of these cases. But I think it involves a bad principle in going back and increasing the salaries, and giving a lump sum for past services, and then commencing to count an increase of salary from a past date. In the case of Mr. Brewer, for instance, there is an allowance of $200 for past services, and an annual allowance of $50 from the 1st of January, 1886. That is not only going back more than two years, but it is commencing to count an increase of salary for more than two years back. If Mr. Hartney did the work that entitles him to this additional consideration, I think it is likely that it must have been brought to the attention of those whose duty it was to see that his salary was increased. But I do not think that either in respect to superannuation or the increase of salaries, it is a good principle to go back and not only give a bonus, but commence to count the time from a date long since past, during which an increase ought to be given.

Mr. DAVIN. I ought to inform the House that we went fully into the reasons for making the recommendation, and this recommendation ought to have been presented last year in the case of Mr. Brewer.

Amendment agreed to, and motion, as amended, agreed to.

RAILWAY PIER AT POINT TUPPER.

Mr. MACDONALD (Victoria) asked, 1. How many tenders were received for the extension of the railway pier at Point Tupper, in the county of Richmond, Cape Breton? 2. To whom was the contract awarded, and for what sum? 3. What length of time was allowed by notice in Cape Breton newspapers to enable intending contractors to tender for the work? 4. Was there any correspondence with the Railway Department complaining of the length of the notice given, and asking for an extension of the time for tendering?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I may say in answer to the questions, three tenders were received. 2. The contract was awarded to Messrs. Isbester & Reid for $14,500. 3. The advertisement was dated 7th January, 1888; the time for receiving tenders was named therein as the 21st January, 1888; upon application the time was extended to the 27th January. 4. Yes.

SESSIONAL CLERKS.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, The number of sessional clerks employed in 1874, 1878, 1879, 1882, 1888, and the full amount paid and the wages per day or session?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government has nothing to do with the sessional clerks, therefore I am not in a position to answer the hon. gentleman.

I.C.R.—BRANCH LINE TO MATANE.

Mr. Fiset asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to grant a subsidy in land or in money to any company undertaking to construct a branch railway from a point on the Intercolonial Railway to Matane?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (Translation). In answer to the hon. member, I must say that to my knowledge, no such request has been made to the Government; but, at all events, the hon. member must wait till the supplementary estimates are laid before the House.

LETTER-CARRIERS IN BARRIE, ONT.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, Whether there is postal delivery by letter-carriers in the town of Barrie, Ont.? If so, what are the gross receipts of the office, and the number of inhabitants of the town?

Mr. McLELAN. There has been one letter-carrier making parcel delivery in the town of Barrie for a year or two. The receipts were $9,179.58. I have not the last census of the town of Barrie, and cannot give the balance of the information asked for.

PRIVILEGE—CASE OF JOHN T. HAWKE.

Mr. DAVIES. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to call the attention of the House to a matter of some importance, of which I gave notice a day or two ago, and before I conclude my observations I shall make a motion, to put myself in order. I refer to the imprisonment of John T. Hawke, editor of the Moncton Transcript, by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, for alleged contempt of court. Although hon. gentlemen are generally acquainted with the circumstances of the case, I will give a short summary of the main outline of the facts, before proceeding to make a few comments on the judgment itself and the imprisonment of Mr. Hawke. The alleged libel for which he was prosecuted before the court, arose from the election trial of a petition presented against the return of the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood). The hon. gentleman's opponent, a gentleman named Emerson, on the 7th day of April last, presented a petition to the court charging that a large number of acts of bribery and corruption had been committed by the agents of the hon. gentleman, and asking that his election be voided. When Mr. Emerson consented to contest the election in the first instance, he gave public notice that he intended himself to conduct it on strictly legal principles, and notified his opponent that any breach of the law in any respect would be prosecuted by him in case he was defeated. He was defeated, and so on 7th April he filed a petition in the election court. On the 16th there was a second petition filed by a supporter of Mr. Emerson called Caldwell on the same grounds, and the reason for filing the second petition was that there was some doubt whether the first petition had been correctly entered before the court. The second petition was not served; the time of serving was extended till 1st July and it was served on 27th June. On 14th April the first petition against the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) was at issue; on 3rd July, the second petition was at issue. On 5th July Attorney General Blair, acting for Mr. Emerson, applied for an ex parte order to Judge Fraser to set down the case for trial. Judge Fraser granted the summons, returnable on 15th July. On the return of that summons objections were taken by the counsel for Mr. Wood to the order asked for, and Judge Fraser took time to consider those objections; but with respect to the day asked by the counsel for fixing the trial, the learned judge, as I gather from the sworn affidavits presented to the court in this prosecution against Mr. Hawke, stated that if he overruled the objection he would fix the day for 20th September. On 20th August he did so; but in overruling the objections he said he would fix December 6th as the day for trial. As soon as that fact was communicated to Mr. Emerson his counsel went to Fredericton and protested against 6th December being fixed, on the ground that it would put the petition out of court, because it was more than six months from the time that the petition was filed, and counsel contended that there were more than grave doubts whether the petition would not be entirely thrown out if the learned judge fixed the day beyond 20th September. The learned judge, after looking over the statute, as counsel in an affidavit swears, assented to the validity of the objection and promised to fix the day for 20th September. He intimated at that time to counsel, after looking over the statute, that he thought there was good ground for the objection taken, and if he had fixed 6th December it would have put the case out of court, as the time ought to be fixed within six months. A formal order was drawn up by the counsel for Mr. Emerson, in pursuance of what the judge had held, and it was presented to him for signature two days afterwards. When the order was presented to the judge for signature he again changed his mind, and said that after hearing what the opposing counsel had to say he had determined to reverse his decision, and to again fix the trial for December 6th. The counsel would not take out an order for that day, and Mr. Emerson again sent a gentleman from Moncton to Fredericton to remonstrate with the learned judge. He went to Fredericton and urged the same objections, and after a long argument Judge Fraser finally overruled the objection and fixed the date for November 8th. As a matter of fact November 8th would be somewhat about six months after the filing of the petition. The learned judge thus intimated, in the first place when the matter came before him, that he would fix September 20th; after hearing counsel for the sitting member he changed his mind and said he would fix December 6th; after it was pointed out that December 6th would throw the case out of court, he said he thought the objection was a good one, as it would throw the case six months past the filing of the petition, and again intimated his intention to fix 20th September for the trial. After hearing counsel for the sitting member a third time he changed his mind again, and said he would not fix the date within six months and eventually he did fix it beyond six months, viz.: November 8th. On 22nd October, immediately the six months had expired, counsel for the sitting member, the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Wood), immediately applied to have the case thrown out of court because the judge had fixed the day for the trial beyond the six months, and he applied to rescind the order of Judge Fraser setting down a day for the trial. That application was argued before the Supreme Court of New Brunswick on 5th November. Judgment was given by the Supreme Court sustaining the objection of the counsel of the hon. gentleman opposite, and throwing the case out of court, in which judgment Judge Fraser concurred. Of course there can be no objection to the sitting member or his counsel seeking to have the trial placed for some day beyond the time which the law allows. He had a perfect right, I suppose, to use such arguments as he thought proper to get a day fixed at a time when the trial would be utterly useless, when the proceedings would be ultra vires, and when the court could order the petition to be taken off file and the whole proceedings cast to the winds. Moreover, no doubt the judge of a court has a perfect right to change his mind in regard to the law after hearing the argument of counsel, but in this particular case there seems to have been an amount of vacillation on the part of the learned judge which certainly is most extraordinary. After a solemn argument, after having had his attention called to the fact that to fix the date beyond the six months would probably throw the case out of court, he virtually assented to the validity of the argument and thought it was a good one, and he decided to fix the trial within the six months; he afterwards reversed his decision and did not think the argument was a good one and decided to fix the date beyond the six months, stating that he was right in the first instance and wrong in the second. Ultimately he decided, as one of the full Court, that he had committed a fatal error in fixing the day of the trial beyond the six months, and concurred in the judgment of the court dismissing the petition. That is an extraordinary state of affairs, and it was on the facts as I have stated them that the editor of the Moncton Transcript made the statements he did for which he is now in prison. I think it will be fair to the House and to the judges of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick to read those parts of the articles of which they complained and for the publication of which they imprisoned Mr. Hawke. The judgment was given on 5th November, throwing the case out of court because the day fixed by Judge Fraser was fixed beyond the six months. On the evening of the same day the judgment was given the following telegram appeared in the Daily Transcript, and this is one of the telegrams for publishing which he was imprisoned:

"A scandalous outrage. The New Brunswick Supreme Court dismisses both the Westmorland election petitions. Advice from Fredericton state that the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, mainly comprised of defeated Tory candidates, has dismissed both the Westmoreland election petitions, on the ground of lapse of time. The lateness of the hour, 5 p.m., at which this news is received, prevents any comments on the judicial outrage, but on Monday in these columns will be exposed the most disgraceful judicial scandal the details of which have ever stunk in the nostrils of a free people. Who are the men who have done this gross wrong? For the answer see Monday's Transcript."

On Monday the 7th, a leading article appeared in that journal, headed "Miscarriage of Justice," in which the facts are reviewed, and the following paragraphs complained of appear:—

"Mr. Justice Fraser was the election court judge, and he insisted, as will be seen from a perusal of the affidavits published in another column, and from Mr. Emerson's address to the electors, which also appears in this issue, that the postponement of the date of the trial till November 8th would not prejudice the petition. His attention was directed by the petitioner's counsel to the possible interpretation which could be placed upon section 32, and was asked in Mr. Emerson's interest that to remove all possibility of danger, the trial be brought on at least a month earlier.

"Mr. Justice Fraser at first appeared to think there was a danger and agreed to hold the trial on September 20. Afterwards, at the instance and upon the representations of Mr. Wood's counsel, he postponed the date of the trial till November 8, and again allowed it to be understood that the date would not prejudice the petitioner's case. Now on Saturday he is represented as ruling with his other colleagues of the Appeal Court that the petitions were out of court because the date which he fixed for the trial was too late. What does Mr. Justice Fraser mean by his extraordinary conduct and decision? He certainly owes some explanations to the public for his own sake, as well as for the credit of the judiciary to which he belongs."

In the same issue the following editorial paragraph was inserted:

"A JUDICIAL POOH-BAH.—In Gilbert & Sullivan's comic opera, the Mikado, there is a character named 'Pooch-Bah' who holds many offices, and as the Lord High Executioner reverses the decisions of himself in the capacity of Lord Chancellor. Thousands of people on two continents have looked and laughed at this piece of comedy as an innocent play of sarcasm, but in this Province of New Brunswick to-day the electors are presented with the spectacle as a reality.

Mr. Justice Fraser, in the election court for the trial of the Westmoreland election petition, insisted upon fixing November 8 as the date of the election trial; the Liberal petitioner's counsel more than once pointed out to him that under the statute the postponed date would, under section 32 of the Controverted Elections Act, place the petitions in jeopardy, and with this view he first agreed. But when the orders fixing the trial for September 20 were presented to him for signature, he refused to sign them and fixed the latter date in spite of the protest of the petitioner's counsel, holding that under section 32 the time for commencing the trial did not expire till some time in December, as the time occupied by the last session of Parliament was excluded from the computation of the six months.

"This was the decision of Mr. Pooch-Bah in his capacity as Lord Chancellor, and in the Supreme Court of New Brunswick on Saturday the judicial Pooch-Bah, in his capacity as Lord High Executioner, reversed his former decision and ruled the petition out on the very grounds which he formerly held were incorrect. Such is Mr. Justice Pooch-Bah Fraser's conception of law and justice."

That is the second article. In the issue of the same date of the Daily Transcript, there was published a lengthy letter from the defeated candidate, Mr. Emerson, recapitulating all the facts of the case and making some rather severe strictures on the conduct of the judges. In the summons which was issued to Mr. Hawke, summoning him to appear before the court for contempt, this article on Mr. Emerson's was included, but I do not understand, as far as I can gather from the judgment of the court, that judgment was given against him for the publication of Mr. Emerson's card. If it was so I would consider the judgment a most outrageous one, because if Mr. Emerson, who is a solicitor of the court, and one of the counsel pleading before the bar of the court, published any libel or offensive thing concerning the court, the court ought to punish him and not the publisher. I do not want to encumber the case with any side issues, and I understand that the court did not punish Mr. Hawke so much for Mr. Emerson's article as for those I have read, and that which I am about to read. The following day, November 8th, an article appeared in the Transcript—

Mr. SPEAKER. I beg to remind the hon. gentleman that it has been the invariable rule here, as well as in the House of Commons in England, that hon. members were not allowed to impugn the conduct of the judges of the land, and I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman to that rule and ask him not to make any comments which would be an infraction to that rule. I do not know what he aims at now, but I would ask him not to impute corrupt motives to a judge of the land in the discharge of the duties of his office.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I would remind the Speaker that it has been done in this House before.

Mr. SPEAKER. But I have stopped it. I have ruled that it was out of order already.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Was it a formal ruling?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes, a formal ruling.

Mr. BOWELL. That was on a motion by the member for Ottawa, on a petition presented to the House alleging certain complaints against the judge, and upon that petition the member for Ottawa made a speech.

Mr. MACKENZIE. And this will be on the motion of my hon. friend.

Mr. DAVIES. A petition cannot affect my proceedings.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not say that. I am speaking as to the question before the House on a previous occasion; and as I understood, the hon. gentleman proposed to end his speech by a motion for the adjournment, which would certainly not be to refer the conduct of the judge to a committee of the House.

Mr. MACKENZIE. In Judge Prefontaine's case there was no petition for impeachment; there was a petition for relief.

Mr. THOMPSON. If there is a rule against attacking the character of a judge in this House it surely cannot be evaded by moving the adjournment. I take it, from what I know of the matter, that that is not the hon. gentleman's intention.

Mr. DAVIES. (P. E. I.) My object is misconceived. I am neither impugning the motives nor attacking the conduct of the judge. I am simply drawing the attention of the House to the facts. I do not know it has anything to do with Judge Fraser at all, because the judgment I am going to draw the attention of the House to was a judgment in which Judge Fraser took no part. I thought this was fair to the House when I was calling its attention to the fact that the editor of a newspaper had been imprisoned for alleged contempt of a New Brunswick court; and I do not wish to import any bitterness or any party feeling whatever into it. I should be sorry if in this matter, which I consider one of paramount importance, party politics should be included in it in any way whatever. I should be sorry that prejudice or feeling of any kind should be imported into it, for there is, I consider, a very important principle at stake, as to whether this man's imprisonment should be taken notice of by this House or not. I thought that in fairness to the court I should read to the House the articles that were complained of, and I assume that if I did not read them some hon. gentleman might say: You are acting unfairly, you have not given to the House the articles that the Supreme Court complained of. I desire to deal frankly and fairly in this matter, and, as far as I can, in a judicial spirit.

Mr. THOMPSON. I think the point which arose was when the hon. gentleman was proceeding to comment on the Supreme Court in reference to Mr. Emerson's letter. I think we can avoid any doubtful matter of that kind, if it were agreed that the judgment of the court is not based on Mr. Emerson's card.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have not ruled that the hon. gentleman was out of order, but I merely drew his attention to the facts which I have stated. I might cite to the hon. gentleman some rulings of Speaker Brand. The following is reported in Speaker Brand's decisions, page 85:—

"CHARGES AGAINST THE JUDGES.

"Charges against the Judges are unbecoming to be made, as there is a proper course open if their conduct is to be challenged.—The Queen v. Castro.—The expenses of the prosecution.—Observations.

"Mr. Whalley having said:—The petitions which had been presented to the House showed the petitioners believed there had been gross corruption and injustice on the part of the judges who tried the case; and he was prepared, to the best of his judgment, to prove that there was ample ground for the complaint."

"Objection taken."

"Mr. Speaker said that the question before the House was that the House should go into Committee of Supply—a question on which great latitude was allowed; but the hon. member was very severely trenching on the privileges allowed to hon. members and taxing the patience of the House. Although the hon. member was not, strictly speaking, out of order, yet it was unbecoming to charge the judges with improper conduct as he had done, for, if he desired to challenge their conduct, his proper course was to move an Address to the Crown for their removal."

Here is another decision:

"An hon. member may comment on the conduct of the judges, but he is not in order in using language that is disrespectful towards them."

This is the reason why I stopped the hon. member—in order to prevent him, if possible, breaking the rule in using disrespectful language towards the judges. Of course, he is perfectly free to expose his case, but within proper limits.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) With every respect to you, Mr. Speaker, and with a desire at all times to be respectful to the Chair, I think it is hardly fair to me to imply that I was about to use disrespectful language towards the judges. I stated when I opened my remarks, and I state now, that I am not here to bring a charge against the judges, and I have no intention of doing so. My object is not to bring the judges or the courts into contempt, but to vindicate the great principle which I think has been violated. The other day, in the English House of Commons, the action of the Appeal Court in Ireland, in increasing the sentences passed on some prisoners under the Land Act, was brought before the House of Commons, and the greatest constitutional authority living, Mr. Gladstone, not only said that he thought it was proper that the conduct of the judges in imprisoning men under the Land Act should be overhauled in the House of Commons, but he thought that that was the proper place to discuss all the facts connected with the imprisonment of these men. Why, Sir, is there a divinity-hedging about the conduct and actions of these judges which prevents anyone criticising their conduct in this high court of the land? I repudiate such a suggestion. If I were afraid to impeach them and were trying in an underhand and improper way to throw disrespect on the court or the judges of the court, I would understand a reprimand coming from the Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. I made no reprimand.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand that you did not, Mr. Speaker, but you impliedly reprimanded me, because you assumed that I was about to violate the rules of this House.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. The hon. gentleman mentioned that the judgment was outrageous.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; I said nothing of the kind. I said then what I repeat now, that I understood that the judgment was not given for the publication of the Moncton Transcript of Mr. Emerson's letter, and as Mr. Emerson was a counsel in the court and amenable to the court, it would have been outrageous if the court had punished the editor for having published the letter written by the solicitor; but I understood the court did nothing of the kind.

Mr. CHAPLEAU. When I made the interruption I thought I had heard the word outrageous, and that it was applied to the judgment of the court. I am corrected by the hon. gentleman, and I think it proper that we should understand each other.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) On the 8th day of November, as I was saying, there was a further article published under the head of "Dismissed Petitions." I think the only paragraph in which it was used by the court of New Brunswick in condemning Mr. Hawke was the following:—

"It would be interesting for somebody to explain why the judges of the Supreme Court of this Province cannot within reasonable time make up their minds upon the construction of a few lines of English in a statute which has been in operation in the Dominion for a decade? Will somebody also explain why it is that the judges of this Province, the majority of whom are defeated political candidates, and at least one or two of whom, it is within the bounds of possibilities, had agents in their elections who spent money freely, should now manifest such hostility to election petitions? It seems almost impossible, in the Province of New Brunswick, to bring an election petition to trial, and though we do not say that that fact is due to any hostility on the part of the judges to the Controverted Elections Act and the principle which it embodies, yet we do hold and maintain that it is a perfectly fair comment to point to that circumstance and contrast it with the other one, that petitions are invariably rejected in this Province before they reach trial, upon some pretence or other.

"If the Dominion Controverted Elections Act is not to apply to the Province of New Brunswick, for the judges of this Province, in their wisdom once declared that the Act itself was unconstitutional, then it follows that special provision should be made by the Federal authorities for the trial of the election petitions in New Brunswick.

"It is absurd for anyone to contend for a moment that all the counsel engaged in drawing up petitions in this Province make such mistakes as to invalidate the petitions. We know, of course, at the present time, the Tory press will find it convenient to say that it is contempt of court to comment upon the decision of these judges; but we hold that no divinity encircles these men, and that their decisions are just as open to public criticism and discussion as are the decisions of any other class of public officials. The public interest demand it, and no journalist would be true to the duties of his position if he hesitated for one moment in condemning the general attitude, with an honorable exception here and there, of the judges of the Province of New Brunswick with respect to election petitions."

There was one more article and one only, in the Transcript of the 12th, and this is the article on which Judge King based his judgment in favor of committal for contempt:

"What induced Mr. Justice Fraser to change his opinion? Why did he, after selecting September 20, and allowing that date to be announced broadcast over the country as the date of trial, change his mind and determine upon a date in December? What were the arguments and what were the reasons presented to him out of court, to induce this change of mind, and his refusal to sign the order for the trial on September 20? Who was it that represented to Mr. Justice Fraser that that date would be inconvenient to him? Unless Mr. Powell is done a gross wrong, Mr. Powell was the attorney for the sitting member, Mr. Wood; it is reported around Sackville that he boasts of having induced the judge to change the date from September 20 to suit his convenience. Mr. Powell thinks it honorable, having induced the judge to change the date to suit his convenience, to avail himself of a legal quibble to prevent that trial, because of the lapse of time. It is a piece of sharp practice, and discreditable even to a Tory lawyer. The desire to induce Mr. Fraser to change the date of trial must have emanated from those interested in the Conservative candidate's cause; and then when Mr. Emerson's counsel discovered that the judge was bent upon changing the date, he directed his attention, as stated above, to the fact that, by a possible construction of the statute, that date would throw the petitions out of court. The judge ruled that it would not. The moment the judge had changed the date, rumors began to circulate around Sackville, evidently emanating from Mr. Powell, that, as a result of the change of date, which it is believed he induced the judge to make, Mr. Emerson's petition would be thrown out of court. Then, to the surprise and astonishment of everybody, Mr. Justice Fraser went back on his own interpretation of the law, performed his new notorious judicial somersault, and was the pantaloons of the comic pantomime to Mr. Powell's clown.

"It is to this judicial farce that judicial decisions in the Province of New Brunswick have been reduced."

I think these are all the articles of which the Supreme Court complained. I understand, from reading the newspaper reports of the judgment, that Chief Justice Allen and Mr. Justice Palmer based their judgment in favor of committing Mr. Hawke upon the ground that the article known as the Pooh-Bah article was a contempt of court—that it amounted in point of fact to imputing corrupt conduct to Mr. Justice Fraser, and that the use of the expression Pooh-Bah necessarily implied that when he changed his mind as a judge he did so from a corrupt motive. The learned judge said he understood that to be the meaning of the term, and he gave judgment accordingly. Now, the old doctrine in the law with respect to libel was that the judges of the land determined what was and what was not a libel, and the only fact they left to a jury to determine was the question of publication. Well, we know the struggle that took place under the lead of that celebrated jurist Erskine, to abolish that old system; we know that happily that old system has long since passed into the era of forgotten things, and that under our present system of jurisprudence, which has existed for many years past, not the judge alone, but the jury, is to determine whether a charge is libellous or not. The old idea that a judge should determine what was libellous and that it should only be left to the jury to determine the question of publicity, is an exploded one, and to the jury to day is committed the whole question of libel or no libel. It will be seen, however, by the proceeding under discussion that while we have remedied the evils which existed under the old law, the judges of the land, in seeking to exercise what they claim to be their jurisdiction in punishing for contempt of court, claim the power to determine what is and what is not libellous, without the intervention of a jury. In this case, we have Mr. Justice Palmer giving his judgment declaring the calling of Judge Fraser Mr. Justice Pooh-Bah to be necessarily an imputation against him of corrupt motives,

I do not think a jury could be empanelled in the Province of New Brunswick or in any part of the Dominion that would come to similar conclusion. I would not myself say that the use of this term, which is, in common use, applied to anybody who occupies two or more offices, no matter how high in the state, would have this meaning. This expression is in common use; we see it applied every day to those gentlemen who hold several offices, and the press are not afraid to use it in such cases, as a term of ridicule, without implying any corrupt motives. Why, I have seen the Finance Minister spoken of as Pooh-Bah, because he holds the office of High Commissioner in England, and, at the same time, of Finance Minister here, and nobody ever supposed that the application of that name to him implied that he was moved by corrupt motives. The wildest fanatical opponent of his has never imagined that a newspaper which used with reference to him those epithets, intended to imply that he took money in one position for doing work in another. The thing is ridiculous and absurd. The phrase is in common use, and its popular meaning is that the man to whom it is applied holds a variety of offices, and is enabled to reverse a decision in the one which he gave while holding the other. Mr. Justice Fraser held and determined that on a certain day the trial should be held and that in computing the six months the time of the sitting of Parliament should not be counted, but that the trial, which was fixed for the 8th November, should proceed on that day. Afterwards, in his character as one of the judges of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, he reversed his own decision as judge of the electoral court, and the editor of this newspaper called him Mr. Justice Pooh-Bah. The question came up as to whether, by the application of that term, the editor intended to impute corrupt motives to Mr. Justice Fraser, and the majority of the court held he did, Mr. Justice King dissenting. The latter declared that there was no intention to impute corrupt motives, but he bases judgment on this article which I have just read, in which the editor stated that Mr. Powell had induced the judge to change his mind. On this ground, Mr. Justice King came to the conclusion that the editor, in that article, implied that Mr. Justice Fraser had been induced corruptly to change his mind. Well, I think that is one of the most forced constructions that ever was put upon a newspaper paragraph. I have read the paragraph and re-read it; I have submitted it to some of my friends who have no interest in the case, who did not know the parties, and who read it dispassionately, and not one of them could give that meaning to the article. Now, the question comes before us in this way—whether the House will be satisfied to recommend the Crown to exercise its prerogative and release Mr. Hawke. I am not here to argue, it is not necessary in this case to argue, and I hope the argument will be avoided as far as possible, that the press are to have unlimited license in the discussion of matters relating to election trials. I do not argue that a newspaper editor should be allowed to publish libels against the judges or against anybody. I do not argue that such license is in the interest of the press or of society at large. I am not contending that Mr. Hawke was justified in the language he used, nor am I concerned in defending here his language. A part of that language is strong, stronger than many of us think was necessary or desirable. A man has the right to publish what he likes, but if he does, he does so at his peril. If he infringes the law, if he publishes language calculated to bring the judge or any other dignitary or person into contempt, he runs the risk of being brought before the proper court and of being tried in the proper way for his abuse of that liberty, and of being punished for it. That is not the question before the House. We are not to determine whether Mr. Hawke was guilty of having used proper or improper language; we are not to determine whether his language was libellous or not. I contend that there is one and only one tribunal in this country competent to pass an opinion on that point, and that tribunal, I contend, is twelve sworn men empanelled as a jury. That is the only tribunal which has the right to determine cases of this kind; and, Sir, I fear that some of those who have heard the language used would say that Mr. Hawke went too far and used language altogether indefensible. Perhaps he has, but that does not touch the point. The point I wish to submit to the House is this: Have the judges of this country the power, after a cause has been finally determined, in case newspapers should publish comments upon their judgments, arbitrarily and summarily to bring the editors or publishers of those papers before them, and, without the interposition or the intervention of a jury, punish them by fine and imprisonment? That power, I say, does not, in my humble opinion, exist under the British Constitution. That power, at any rate, if it does exist, has become obsolete. That power should not be exercised, and as far as I can find, with the exception of this case in New Brunswick, has not been exercised for many years. Now, we must remember that, during the past fifty or sixty years, the law of libel in this country has undergone great changes. Perhaps I cannot summarise the matter as well as it is summarised in the language of Lord Justice Cockburn in the celebrated case of Wason and Walters. Lord Justice Cockburn said:

“Our law of libel has in many respects only gradually developed itself into anything like a satisfactory and settled form. The full liberty of public writers to comment on the conduct and motives of public men has only in very recent times been recognised. Comments on Government, on Ministers and officers of State, on members of both Houses of Parliament, on judges and other public functionaries, are now made every day which half a century ago would have been the subject of actions or ex-officio informations, and would have brought down fine and imprisonment on publishers and authors.”

Now, the language I have quoted, for which Mr. Hawke has been imprisoned, was language used by him as editor of a newspaper, in commenting on a legal decision which had been given and which settled an election trial. The judicial proceedings were over, the judgment was given, the election proceedings were out of court, and therefore there could be no possible interference with the administration of justice; and the proposition I lay down is that after a trial is ended and judgment is finally delivered, no comment, however strong, no language, however violent, which a newspaper editor may choose to publish, can be punished by the judges, except through the ordinary channels and in the ordinary way. Every man has the right to be tried by twelve of his peers; and to hold for a moment that there exist numberless Star Chambers in this country which can send a man to prison at their own discretion and judgment, because he has published language which the judges may hold to be libellous, would be to turn back the wheels of time some hundreds of years, and replace us in the state in which we then were, and out of which fortunately we have emerged, thanks to the struggles of such men as Erskine and others. We might be asked if there is any remedy for a judge who is attacked for giving an improper judgment, is brought into ridicule or contempt. I answer, yes, there is a remedy. He can prosecute the man for libel, and there is no doubt that he will get full justice in that case, not only from his brethren on the bench, but from those that are called upon to act on the jury. There is, however, the right of every court to protect itself from libellous calumny by summarily punishing the offender that should be confined to comments upon pending litigation, where a newspaper editor, during the progress of a case, publishes matter tending to impede or interfere with the administration of justice. From time immemorial, it has been held that in such cases in the interest of justice, judges must have the power of immediately punishing those persons who interfere with its administration. If a man goes into a court and insults the court, everyone agrees that the court should have the power to punish him summarily. It is the same in regard to any interference with a jury, the court should have the power of awarding summary punishment. And, if any man publishes an article which is calculated to interfere with the administration of justice by turning the verdict of the jury in one direction or the other, or prejudicing the opinion of the judge one way or the other, that man should be punished. It is necessary that the wheels of justice should not be clogged or stopped or impeded by any such interference, but the position which I take, and which I think is endorsed by the best legal authorities, is that, when the case is over, when the jury are dispersed and the judge is off the bench, the judge stands in the eye of the law in the same position as any other man; he is no higher in position than the Minister of Justice, than an Archbishop of the church, than any minister of the church or any member of Parliament or any other citizen. I have no right to abuse him or slander him, any more than I have to abuse or slander any other citizen, and, if I do that, I may be punished, but it must be in a legal manner in the courts, and it would never do to admit that a judge of a court of record, if he has given a judgment and comments are made afterwards on that judgment, has the right to hale the man who makes the comment from his home, and to determine that the article he has written is libellous, and to imprison him for contempt of court. I hope no member of the House will understand me to impugn the necessary and inherent powers which all courts of justice possess, and ought to possess, to prevent the administration of justice being thwarted and interfered with. I believe these powers are rarely exercised, but they are as essentially necessary in order to preserve order and decorum in the courts, and to prevent the stream of justice being fouled. I simply take the position that, when once the judgment is delivered, that power does not exist, and, if any man libels the judges afterwards, the judges stand in the same position as other men. In regard to that matter, I should like to cite one or two authorities, but I will not do so at any great length. Hon. members will recollect the celebrated case, in Upper Canada, of Regina vs. Wilkinson, in which an application was made to commit the late Hon. Geo. Brown for an alleged libel on the Court. That libel was published after a criminal information had been applied for, but before it had been granted, and the two learned judges differed in opinion in regard to their power to punish summarily for contempt, Chief Justice Harrison affirming and Mr. Justice Morrison denying the power. The alleged libel was on one of the learned judges, Mr. Justice Wilson, who took no part in the judgment on the application to commit for contempt. It will be remembered that the application was made to punish Mr. Brown for contempt in publishing libellous language, as was said, pending certain proceedings then before the court. The criminal information had not been filed, and Mr. Justice Morrison remarked:

"In the case of Birch v. Walsh, an application for an attachment for contempt was made. The Master of the Rolls, in giving judgment, reviewed all the cases of constructive contempt prior to that period (1846). He referred to a case decided by Lord Hardwicke, who committed the editor of a paper, and after observing that the course pursued of committing for constructive contempt led to much observation, he quoted the following remarks of Mr. Hardgrave: 'If the doctrine of contempts be thus wide; if any of the great courts of Westminster Hall may construe what they please into contempt, and may under such denomination, without trial, by jury commit all persons accused of crime and also have an indefinite power of punishing by fine and imprisonment; and if all this when done be unappealable and unexamined, what is there but their own wisdom and moderation, and the danger of abusing so arbitrary a power, to prevent any court, under shelter of the law of contempts, from practising all the monstrous tyranny which first disgraced and at length overwhelmed the Star Chamber;'"

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

The learned judge quoted that extract with approval as showing that, in his opinion, judges could not punish for constructive contempts of court. The newspaper criticism published in regard to a judge after the judgment is given is termed a constructive contempt. The learned Judge Morrison went on to say:

"I now proceed to the most important point raised by this application; whether the applicant failing to sustain his rule for a constructive contempt affecting himself, is now entitled to ask the court, upon his own suggestion and at his instance, to punish his adversary for a direct contempt of court itself by the publication of the article in question—a contempt committed five months before this application—a publication which the court did not deem worthy of notice, did not think it necessary to call on the publisher to answer for. I have been unable to find any precedent or authority, or even suggestion for such a proceeding, although this arbitrary power of the court has existed during many centuries, a power, as Tindal, C. J., said, coeval with the courts themselves; and Mr. Robinson had to admit, no doubt, after the most diligent search, the absence of authority. When we consider the nature of the proposition, I should have been surprised if authority could have been found. I am certainly not disposed at this day to create a precedent for such a proceeding. On the other hand, I feel, in the interest of the administration of justice, that such an application should be met with a decided refusal. To assent to it would be opening a door to a species of application hitherto unknown—one pregnant with mischievous results, and which would be resorted to, not with the object of upholding the dignity of the court, but for serving private or political ends, or other purposes quite foreign to such an object. This is the first occasion the court has been invoked in a matter of this nature. My duty as a judge is to administer the law as I find it, but if I am at liberty to express any personal opinion upon the expediency of exercising the power of the court to summarily punish contempt not committed in its presence and not calculated to obstruct the course of justice, but by the publication of libellous matter, unfairly criticising or impugning the action of the court, or imputing unfair or corrupt motives to its members, I would venture to say that in such cases the exercise of this arbitrary power would be a questionable remedy, either for maintaining respect for the court itself, or vindicating the characters of its members. As it is an arbitrary power and its exercise cannot be questioned, it will always be regarded with jealousy and with great distrust if, unfortunately, the exercise of its power is involved, no matter how remotely, with the struggle of political parties."

This language is peculiarly apt when applied to the case which I am asking the House to consider. The passions and feelings of parties in that county of Westmoreland were unduly excited, owing to the political campaign which was going on. One party contended, rightly or wrongly, that the successful one had carried the county by the most corrupt and flagrant acts of bribery. They charged that a petition was filed in the court alleging that over 500 specific acts of bribery and corruption had been committed. One can well understand that when a judge gave as many different judgments as Justice Fraser did, one day fixing the trial within six months, another day fixing it beyond six months, and eventually placing it at a day which justified the court in throwing it out, one can well understand that the passions and feelings of those who were directly interested in that conflict, would not be very calm. They would be prompted to use, and I have no doubt they did use, language exceedingly strong; but for the court to take it up and say that their dignity required that the person who used that language should be punished summarily, and that this old power which they allege they possess, should be invoked to punish the parties, is, in my opinion, most unfortunate. The learned judge goes on to quote:

"It is far better that the judges of the courts should endure unjust criticisms and even slanderous accusations, than to interpose, of their own motion, to redress the offence against themselves when the offence committed is not committed in their immediate presence. * * *

"In every case I have been able to refer to, I find the greatest reluctance in the courts taking any step of this kind, and that the power now invoked has only been exercised when it was essential or necessary to prevent justice being obstructed or to protect suitors."

That is the principle laid down by Mr. Justice Morrison, and that is the principle which I believe to be the only sound, or defensible, or permissible principle on which courts can act; and I have no hesitation in stating myself that if it is found, eventually, that the courts possess this absolute power, that they are Star Chambers, possessing power to send a man to prison whenever they please, without trial or appeal, it will not be long before the Legislature will intervene to take that power away from them. I do not believe they have that power, but the misfortune in this case is that when the judges claim to exercise a power of this kind, their judgment is unappealable. They are arbitrary and responsible to no one. They give a judgment, and it is alleged that from that judgment there can be no appeal; and therefore it is that I have found it necessary to bring this matter up in Parliament, that Parliament may give expression to its opinion upon it, and if that opinion is expressed strongly, I have no doubt it will bear good fruit. Now, I find that in 1883 a Contempt of Court Bill was introduced into the English Parliament by the Lord Chancellor, which came on for the second reading, and several of the law Lords, several very eminent men, expressed themselves upon this matter. I will call the attention of the House for a few minutes to the language used by Lord Fitzgerald, a judge of very great experience and learning; and as he is a very distinguished jurist, perhaps I may be permitted to read his remarks at some length. He is speaking of contempts of court, and drawing a distinction between contempts which frustrate or interfere with the administration of justice and those contempts which can properly be called merely constructive contempts of court. He says:

"But there was in addition another class of contempts, which, to distinguish them, he might call criminal contempts, for which, in many cases, the persons committing them would be liable to punishment, either summarily or by indictment, for a misdemeanor. For instance, there was the misconduct of persons in open court. A man might be guilty of conduct in open court which impaired the dignity of the court, and the court would immediately take cognizance of that which took place before the court itself, and inflict summary punishment. That, however, was a power which it was rarely necessary to enforce. He had had the honor of a seat on the bench for twenty-two years, embracing periods of great public excitement, and he had never had occasion to exercise that summary authority, but he had always felt that it was the knowledge of the existence of that power which enabled him to maintain the order and dignity of the court. If they conferred jurisdiction upon a judge, they impliedly furnished him with authority to enable him to enforce that jurisdiction, and to preserve order and dignity in its administration. He was far, therefore, from objecting to the summary jurisdiction as it at present existed, for contempts in open court, with a fine limited to £500, and a period of imprisonment for three months. But behind that class of contempts there was another still more important, which was popularly known as 'constructive' contempts of court. They arose, not in the presence of the court, not in open court, but outside the court, and not in the presence of the judge; and as to them, time and place had no application. They arose sometimes from speeches, but principally from the publication of newspaper articles in reference to some trial about to take place, or which was then actually going on."

You see his Lordship confines his definition of constructive contempt of court to the comments made with reference to a trial about to take place, or with reference to a trial which was then actually going on.

"This constructive contempt depended entirely upon the inference that the party speaking, writing or publishing, intended, in some way, to interfere with and impede the administration of justice, and they had been known to our law for a very long period. It was unnecessary to consider when the practice arose—as far back as Edward III they had it in practice—and from that time down to the present, though it was a power which was rarely exercised in modern times. There was one recorded case of a reverend gentleman, John Barker, who, having called a meeting of his parishioners in the churchyard, made a speech on local affairs, in which he spoke disrespectfully of the King's Bench, and for that was called up and sentenced summarily to a term of imprisonment; and in another case where, in a petition to the Corporation of London, the party libelled the Aldermen, and used words disrespectful of the King's Bench. He was indicted for the first and tried before a jury; but was summarily imprisoned for the last. No doubt these cases would not now be followed. In modern times this power of commitment had been confined solely to articles in the newspapers which were thought to interfere with the administration of justice. The doctrine of constructive contempt was one which he was not inclined to favor. It appeared to him that if dealt with at all, it should be dealt with on some broad foundation. The present course of proceedings was exceedingly objectionable. If an article in a newspaper appeared which was alleged to be such a contempt, and which was one from which an inference could be drawn that it was intended to interfere with the administration of justice, the party was called up summarily and the matter enquired into, the judge being at once judge of the law, of the fact of the intention, and of the sentence, and his decision was without any power of review. That was most unsatisfactory, and there could be no doubt that the doctrine had a tendency to unduly fetter the freedom of the press, and in that light was important to them all. No doubt there was a difficulty in dealing with it; but he would rather see the doctrine done away with altogether than continue to exist in its present form. There was no such law in any of the American States. The New York Code said:

"Every Court of Record may punish summarily disorderly, contemptuous, or insolent behavior in the immediate presence of the court, tending to interrupt its proceeding and impair the respect due to authority."

"But it could not punish for publication out of court, for the remedy was by indictment; and he believed such a practice as ours of summary punishment for constructive contempt did not exist in any other country. Its effect was to enforce silence on the part of the press where the public interests required the fullest publicity and the closest criticism of what was going on. He had such an objection to the doctrine and practice, that he should prefer being guided by the maxim 'Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere.' He need not say that constructive crime was in all cases contrary to the genius of the English law, and that in such cases it was usual to interpose a jury for the protection of the subject. The objections to the present system were that it was uncertain, undefined and depending on capricious discretion. There would be great difficulty in defining constructive contempts, but he would suggest that it might be hedged around with some protections, and that in all cases a right of appeal should be given to the Court of Appeal. The effect of that would be to render the judges more cautious, while it would leave them free in their action; and above all, in time a series of decisions would be built up which would regulate and control the discretion of the judges in the exercise of their summary power."

It will be seen from his Lordship's remarks that while he was strongly opposed to summary punishment for constructive contempt, he was very careful to limit constructive contempt to the publication of language used either before a pending case came on for trial or during the pendency of trial, and he intimated and stated strongly that no publication after the trial could ever be construed by any judge into a constructive contempt of court. If the language used by Lord Fitzgerald is correct, the judgment given by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick has proceeded upon a false basis, and the judges acted upon an assumption that a law was in force in this country which does not exist. But I find that as lately as within the last two months this point was raised and a decision given on it in an English court. This case I refer to is reported in the Times of 27th March last. It was an application made in regard to the publisher of the Era newspaper in London for contempt of court in ridiculing the jury for having given a certain verdict in an action for libel. Notice of application for a new trial had been given, and it was contended in this application that the action was still pending, and therefore, inasmuch as the action was pending, the publication of language calculated to throw ridicule on the jury was contempt of court. The article suggested that but for the stupidity of the jury they would not have found the verdict for the plaintiffs, and the judgment delivered by Mr. Justice Field and Mr. Justice Stephen are instructive, because they show that in their opinion no language written or spoken of the jury or the judge after the proceedings are terminated can by any ingenuity be construed to be constructive contempt of court. This is the latest decision that has been given, and as it seems to be apropos of the case before the House, I will trouble hon. members with reading it. Mr. Justice Field said:

"The article complained of the jury that they had not found a proper verdict, and the writer used language which he had better not have used, and which was not in good taste. It was not wise or right when a jury had given a verdict to hold them up to ridicule. The writer should consider that the jurors had endeavored to do their duty, and if it was merely a question of censure, he should be disposed to concur in the observations made by Mr. Murphy. But the court was asked to punish Mr. Ledger for this article, and they must have strong grounds for taking that course. Now the proceeding for contempt was for something serious, a contempt in the face of the court or an interference with the course of justice. Suppose, for instance, this article had been published on the morning of the trial so that it would be in the hands of the jurors, it would be an interference with the course of justice, and would merit summary punishment. But this was a jurisdiction to be exercised with care and caution, and upon grounds which did not apply here. There was an undoubted right to make comments upon the conduct of judges or jurors, and Mr. Murphy, with his usual fairness, admitted that if the article had been published before the notice of application for a new trial it could not have been complained of. But surely the liability of the writer could not depend upon a notice having been given of an application for a new trial. Suppose the new trial refused by the court and an appeal brought. Is the right of a public writer to be in suspense for two or three years. The case would have lost all interest by that time. In that view the right of comment would not be of much value. What then was the principle to be adopted? It must be this, that the article must be such as to influence the trial of the case and prevent the tribunal from coming to a just and impartial decision."

The learned judge lays down the law very clearly in conclusive language, and shows that no application after proceedings are terminated can be construed to be a constructive contempt of court. Mr. Justice Stephen, an eminent judge, followed. He said:

"He thought that the power possessed by the court of committing persons for contempt for articles in newspapers, calculated to prejudice the fair administration of justice, was one of the utmost importance and essential to the due administration of justice. But it was a power which ought to be used as seldom as possible and almost entirely with reference to the interests of justice. No doubt the principle in which the power was to be exercised was very vague, and unavoidably so. All that could be said was that the court must be satisfied that there had been something to interfere with the course of justice or likely to do so. Suppose, for instance in a case which affected a political party or a religious body, there was an article strongly pressing that the jury ought not to give a verdict in favor of or against such party or such religious body. That would be a contempt of court, undoubtedly, which would merit severe punishment. But when the trial had taken place different considerations applied. The court had then done its work, the jury had given their verdict and they were given over to criticism and comment, and of that they could not complain."

The learned judge there gives the whole thing in a nutshell. After the judge and jury have done their work and a verdict has been given and their duty discharged, they are liable to the same criticism and comment as other public officers, and if that criticism and comment is unfair and unjust and transgresses those limits which the law prescribes, the parties complained of can be punished by proceedings being taken in the proper way, by criminal information or by an ordinary suit for libel, and they can be punished, I submit, in no other way. The learned judge goes on to say:

"That was so in the present case, and though it was said defendant had given notice of an application for a new trial, if it was granted a considerable time must elapse before the second trial, and then it was not probable that anyone who had the article would be on the jury or that he would recollect or be influenced by it."

So in this case I am quoting, although there had been notice of an intention to move for a new trial, that was not held to be a reason for the exercise of this summary and arbitrary power, inasmuch as justice had already been administered, and therefore the court would not take knowledge of that language as a constructive contempt of court, and they left it to those who thought they had been wronged to initiate proceedings in the ordinary way. There is a remark made by the eminent Master of the Rolls, Jessel, who, in trying the case of Plating Company vs. Farquharson, 17th Chancery Division, 55, gave his opinion on this point in these words:

"Unless the court is satisfied that the publication is a contempt which interferes with the course of justice, of course the court ought not to interfere."

These authorities are more than sufficient in support of the position I take that after judgment had been given by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, dismissing the election petition, the judges who gave that decision were then open to the same criticism and comment on the part of the press as any other public officials. If the comments exceed the fair bounds of legitimate criticism they can be punished, but they ought to be punished in one way and in one way only; by invoking the authority of the courts through their ordinary channels and empannelling a jury to decide on the libel and so punishing the defendant when he has done wrong. I make no claim for immunity from punishment of any editor who libels another man. I make no claim for a license of the press, which would interfere with the free, fair and fearless administration of justice by those to whom this great and essential duty is entrusted. I do not desire even to call in question the arbitrary power of the judges of the land, summarily to punish those who, during the pendency of litigation, publish articles calculated to impede, delay, or defeat justice. Such powers are necessarily inherent in the court, and their maintenance is essential for the proper administration of the law. It may be that Parliament may see fit to limit and define the powers of the judges in this regard, as has been done in the United States and in England; it may be necessary to regulate this power by providing in all such cases an appeal to a higher court, and I think it probable that Parliament may interfere before long in that direction. But my contention is that the inherent, necessary and admitted power of the courts should not be allowed to be extended to the punishment, arbitrarily and summarily, of those who, after the termination of the legal proceedings, discuss the conduct of either the judge or the jury. When they have discharged their functions they stand in relation to the press on the same footing as other citizens. If an editor libels them he should be punished. But he should be punished only after a trial by his peers and by the ordinary process of the law. The doctrine that he can be dragged before the judge whose conduct he has commented on, and be summarily punished, heavily fined and sent for months to prison, without any of the safeguards which the law throws around the meanest citizen is a relic of barbarism, is opposed to the genius of our constitution, and calculated to inflict a mortal stab upon that freedom of public discussion which our forefathers sought so hard to establish, and to which we owe so much of our highly prized liberties. Judges are only mortal. They are subject to the frailties, passions, and prejudices of ordinary men. They often do wrong; sometimes commit great injustice, and must be subject to that open and fearless discussion which is our greatest safeguard against wrongdoing on their part. If either a judge or jurymen misconducts himself, it is intolerable that such misconduct should go unrebuked. It is intolerable that the judge himself should without any appeal, and without trial by jury, arbitrarily and summarily determine, first whether the criticism is fair, and next what punishment should be awarded. It is necessary in the public interest, it is desirable for the proper maintenance of the dignity of the bench itself, it is essential in the interests of the freedom of the press, that any decision upon the fairness or justness of the criticisms should be determined by the ordinary tribunals in the ordinary way. If any man, occupying a distinguished public position is unjustly libelled and attacked, the law is open and there are deputies; let him implead his accuser. If a governor general, a prime minister, an archbishop, or bishop, or clergyman, is assailed in the press with libellous vituperation and abuse, he cannot arbitrarily and without trial hale the offender to prison. Such a power, if asked for, would be met with a shout of derision. A judge must not stand in any different position and excepting in the case when the attack interferes with the administration of justice, he must stand on the same level with the ordinary citizen. We cannot afford to revive or tolerate the revival of numberless Star Chambers or allow in the present day the application of the pernicious doctrine that the greater the truth the greater the libel. An independent judiciary is one of the bulwarks of our civil liberties, but freedom of public discussion is another. Both can co-exist. To allow the judiciary under the pretence of maintaining its independence to muzzle the press by conceding to it the right after the determination of legal proceedings arbitrarily to decide without trial by jury how far criticism may go would be to strike a fatal blow at both bulwarks. It would destroy one and change the independence of the other into tyranny. No modern precedents can be found to justify the latest assumption of power by the court of New Brunswick. You will seek in vain in the records of the tribunals of justice in England, in the United States, or in Canada, for any justifying precedent. The imprisonment of Mr. Hawke for comments made by him upon the conduct of the judge who tried the election petition against Mr. Wood, after the final determination of that trial, is unjust and indefensible, and such an arbitrary and tyrannical stretch of the powers of the court as in my opinion justifies and demands the interference of this Parliament, as the highest inquest of the land. No man should be allowed to publish articles scandalising any of the courts of the land. It is safer, however, to allow such publications, than to tolerate their arbitrary and illegal punishment. I am not concerned in justifying all the language used by Mr. Hawke—much of it was very severe. Some of it might be hard to justify, but no one acquainted with the facts will deny that the circumstances called for severe and searching criticism, or that the conduct of the judge was reprehensible. If Mr. Hawke had offended, if he had libelled or scandalised any member of the court, he could have been prosecuted in the ordinary way, before the ordinary tribunals, and, if convicted, would have been punished like any other offender. But what I claim, and all I claim is, not immunity from punishment, but a fair, honest, impartial trial. I deny that he got or could expect to get that in the way he was tried. A jury and a jury only could determine whether his criticisms were libellous. His judges were his accusers; the offence was a charge of libelling those very judges and of scandalising their court. The trial, therefore, offended against that first principle of British law that "no man shall be a judge in his own cause." It cannot be said to come within the rare exceptions which allow that principle to be invaded. The prisoner was denied the right of having his case submitted to a jury of his countrymen. He was tried and punished arbitrarily, summarily, and, I venture to submit, unjustly. He is in my humble opinion unjustly imprisoned. The sentence was bitter, unnecessarily severe, and if the position I have taken is correct, involves a violation of some of our most cherished rights. He has no appeal but that which every alleged criminal has, an appeal to the Crown for justice. In my opinion the prerogative of the Crown should be exercised in his behalf, the fine remitted, and the prison doors thrown open, and it is with the hope of obtaining such a result that I have ventured to bring the case before this House. I move the adjournment.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great attention to the observations which the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I., has made to the House, and I recognise to the fullest extent the importance of the question, from the point of view from which he has treated it. I can understand that sympathising as he does with the editor who has been imprisoned, and taking a professional view of the case, it is reasonable to expect that he should go into the subject with some minuteness and care, and give to the House the benefit of the views which his training and experience enable him to present. But I am unable to understand the logic of the hon. gentleman in pressing the House earnestly for nearly two hours, for the purpose of making a case for the interference of Parliament and concluding that speech—referring it must be remembered, to the case of a man, who is now lying falsely imprisoned, as he says,—concluding that long case, which he has made for the immediate and prompt interference of Parliament, by a motion that the House do now adjourn. In so far as the hon. gentleman has intended to present his argument in favor of executive interference in the case of Mr. Hawke, I submit to his own judgment, that his argument was not well founded or well addressed, and for these reasons: The hon. gentleman based his contention entirely on the ground that the decision of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick was against law and oppressive to the subject who is now confined. I pass by for the moment the circumstance that if Mr. Hawke is falsely imprisoned, as the argument of the hon. member would lead us to suppose, he may have an ample remedy. He has, in the first place, his writ of habeas corpus from the judges of the Province of New Brunswick. The hon. gentleman will remind me that these were his accusers and these were his judges, notwithstanding which, by the mandate of Parliament, they are obliged to grant the writ under an enormous penalty for its refusal. But if he should fail to obtain his writ for any reason from them, he has the right of application to five other judges in this city, far removed from the Province of New Brunswick, everyone of whom has concurrent jurisdiction with the judges of the Province of New Brunswick. But passing by that question for the moment, as I said I would, as to whether Mr. Hawke has not a sufficient remedy for a legal wrong done to him, without coming to the executive, I would remind the hon. gentleman that, in so far as his argument is based on the contention that the judgment of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick is wrong, the executive of this country cannot be regarded as a court of appeal from the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. The constitution of this country divides the Government of this country into three branches, the legislative, the executive and the judicial, and every one of these branches is entirely free from the control of the others. I can no more advise His Excellency to reverse the decision of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick on the ground that it is against law than the Supreme Court of New Brunswick can decide that we ought not to pass a statute.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How did the hon. gentleman act in the case of the imprisonment of an editor in Calgary by Judge Travis?

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman is addressing himself, not to the case of a conviction by a stipendiary magistrate, as was the case he has just referred to, but to the case of a decision of five or six judges constituting the Supreme Court of the Province of New Brunswick from whom there is no appeal whatever; and I do not hesitate to say, in so far as I can bind myself by any opinion I may express as regards the ground on which executive interference may be suggested on my part, that I refuse every application which is based purely on legal grounds, when the person suffering under sentence has an opportunity of seeking the decision of the highest court of this Province on the legal question he wishes to raise, or having had that opportunity, has availed himself of it, and has had judgment pronounced against him, I think it would be the height of presumption in me to go to His Excellency tomorrow and say that, notwithstanding that the Legislature of the Province of New Brunswick in their wisdom have made that court supreme in these matters in that Province, I ventured to advise His Excellency that their judgment should be summarily reversed by him, and the punishment which they have thought it their duty to impose should be undone, without a single observation to present to His Excellency from anything the hon. gentleman has said this afternoon, indicating that there was a single mitigating circumstance surrounding the offence when committed, or a single sign of contrition on the part of the offender. Now, in order that the House may be satisfied as to what the circumstances of this case were, I feel compelled, not merely in justice to the accused person, but especially in view of the high position of those whose conduct and judgment have been arraigned this afternoon by the hon. member for Queen's, to detain the House for a few minutes in narrating the circumstances which gave rise to this judgment, and the circumstances which immediately accompanied it. I feel the more bound to do so because I do not understand the facts of the case to be as they have been set forth by the hon. member for Queen's. When the hon. gentleman was good enough a few evenings ago to inform me that he intended to bring this matter to the attention of the House, I asked him to give fair time in order that I might communicate with persons at a distance; but I am able to say to the House that in the few observations I will make, I will present the facts to the House solely on the statements furnished by Mr. Emmerson, the candidate against the sitting member, not using any facts furnished to me either by his opponent in the litigation or by the judges of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, with whom I have had no communication on this subject whatever. Now, Sir, there was an affidavit made, in the first place, by Mr. Emmerson, the petitioner, and another one by Mr. Gregory, his counsel; and in so far as I am stating the circumstances connected with the disposition of this case, I am stating circumstances which are detailed in these affidavits; and in so far as I am questioning the existence of other facts, I am questioning them because these affidavits contain no allegations of them. We know that it was of vital importance to the petitioner that he should make out the best case he could, and present all the facts he could to strengthen his petition when these affidavits were made. As the hon. gentleman has said, there was an election in Westmoreland county, in which the sitting member, Mr. Wood, and Mr. Emmerson were the candidates. There was a petition against the return of Mr. Wood, and a cross-petition against Mr. Emmerson. Those petitions having been got ready for trial, an application was made to Mr. Justice Fraser to fix a day when they should be tried, and on the 15th of July Mr. Fraser sat in the first instance to hear a motion to fix a day of trial, and he sat afterwards, on an adjournment, on the 9th of August to hear the conclusion of the argument. When he sat to fix the day of trial, the counsel for the sitting member came before him, and urged certain objections to the regularity of the petitions and of the notice to fix the day, and certain objections as to the right to have a day fixed at that stage of the proceedings at all. Mr. Justice Fraser heard those objections and he reserved judgment upon them. But it is true, as the hon. member has said, at least I assume it to be true, because it is so stated in the affidavit of Mr. Emmerson, that at the argument against fixing the day of trial, it was mutually agreed, and assented to by the judge, that if the day should be fixed, it would be the 20th of September. On the 13th of August, four days after the arguments on those objections were concluded, Mr. Justice Fraser gave judgment against the objections, and it only remained for him to fix the day of trial, which, if matters stood as they were when the application was made to him, would have been the 20th of September. The counsel for the sitting member contended that those objections were so well sustained by the authorities which he presented to the judge, that he ought in fairness to have the right of appeal, and that if the judge fixed the 20th of September his appeal would be cut off, as the trial of the petition would be going on before the appeal could be heard. The judge being impressed with that view, intimated that he was disposed to fix a day in December instead of the 20th of September, in order that time for an appeal might intervene, and there can be no imputation against his good faith in taking that step. The day he proposed to fix was the 6th of December. Now, let me call the attention of the House to the provision on which the fate of this petition really turned. The 6th of December would be more than six months after the date on which the petition was presented, and the statute on this subject provides:

"That the trial of every election petition shall be commenced within six months from the time when such petition has been presented, and shall be proceeded with from day to day until the trial is over; but if, at any time, it appears to the court or a judge, that the respondent's presence at the trial is necessary, such trial shall not be commenced during any Session of Parliament."

And these words were added:

"And in the computation of any trial the delay allowed for any step or proceeding in respect of any such trial or for the commencement thereof as aforesaid, the time occupied by such Session of Parliament shall not be included."

Now, what was the action of the petitioner, Mr. Emmerson? He urged, it is true, to have the earliest possible day fixed; he wanted the 20th of September fixed, and if that day could not be fixed, he wanted an earlier day; and he instructed Mr. Gregory, in Fredericton, to make the same contention before the judge. He did so, not because in the slightest degree he held that the six months would include the period of session, for he entertained no fear that the petition would be thrown out in consequence of the time of the session counting. It was simply because he wanted urgency for his petition, and wanted it to be proceeded at the earliest possible day. I have Mr. Gregory's affidavit here, and find from it that, as far as he is concerned, all that was said when this subject was broached was that there might be a doubt upon the subject, and that it would be better to be on the safe side and have the trial proceeded with within the time. There was no argument upon the question; that question was never presented to Judge Fraser, and let me call the attention of the House to what the right of the petitioner was, at that time, if he had entertained any doubts. It is known that the judge, by his own action, threw the case over the six months period. All that Mr. Emmerson then had to do was to ask the judge, under those circumstances, and in view of an appeal being pending upon the judge's decision of the preliminary objection, to extend the time for bringing on the trial. The provision of the statute is as follows:—

"The court or a judge may, notwithstanding anything in the preceding section, from time to time enlarge the time for the commencement of the trial, if, on application for that purpose, supported by affidavit, it appears to such court or judge that the requirements of justice render such enlargement necessary."

There was ample ground in the existence of this appeal and in the fact that it could not be heard whether by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick or of Canada or by whatever court to which the appeal might be taken, until the six months period had expired, for making this application, but Mr. Gregory attached so little importance to this that although he intimated to the judge it would be better to keep on the safe side, he never moved to have that extension of time allowed; neither did Mr. Emmerson mention the subject to the judge or anybody else, and he had so little idea that he was losing his right by the fixing of a later day and so little idea of urging that contention before the judge, that we find in a letter which he published over his own signature, dated the 7th November, 1887, these words:

"My own opinion is that the construction given by Mr. Fraser"—

The counsel for the sitting member, I presume—

"to section 32, when seeking an extension of time for the trial on Mr. Wood's behalf is the correct one, and lawyers quite as able as any who appeared before the court on the argument of the question agree with my view; but unfortunately a majority of the court, including Judge Fraser, who has reversed his first decision, have decided the other way, and unfortunately there seems to be, under the law, no appeal from this judgment to a higher court."

Mr. LANDRY. It is to Mr. Justice Fraser, the writer refers, and not to counsel.

Mr. THOMPSON. Perhaps so. The hon. member for Queen's (P. E. I.) was so misled by the information he got on this subject that he presented the case to the House in this way: That the petitioner's counsel were endeavoring to have the difficulty avoided, as regards the six months, and that Judge Fraser insisted on forcing that difficulty on them; whereas, when the matter went before Judge Fraser, Mr. Emmerson declares he was of opinion that that made no difference whatever. There was no application whatever made to extend the time, and that question was never argued before the judge at all.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am sure the hon. gentleman does not wish to misrepresent me. It is not essential to the argument, but the statement I made, and which I based on Mr. Gregory's affidavit, which the hon. gentleman says he has before him, was that he went first to Fredericton and raised the preliminary objection to the judge, and when the judge intimated that he would fix the day beyond the six months, he raised the objection that the hon. gentleman is dealing with.

Mr. THOMPSON. He drew attention to the fact that doubts might exist on that subject; and although I am strictly within the mark in saying what I said, I do not want to press the argument further than this, that while that subject was mentioned, as I think it was, it was never argued before Judge Fraser. It would be, of course, very satisfactory if judges could always know what the true interpretation of the law is, without the assistance of counsel at all and without opportunity for reflection. But unfortunately judges are fallible like other people, unfortunately they not only have to change their opinions sometimes, but they require the assistance of counsel, in arguing cases before them, in order to enable them to come to a right conclusion. Judge Fraser, when acting on this point, was acting on one of the most difficult portions of our statute law. He was acting on a provision, on which I confess my own deliberate and unbiassed opinion changed two or three times before I came to the conclusion I now have reached, which is that he was distinctly right in his last judgment. He was acting on a section on which judges in almost every Province have differed as to its true meaning; he was acting on a section on which I believe the judges of Ontario are now utterly at variance in opinion as to its true interpretation; and he was acting on it without having had the advantage of the question being argued before him, for an expression only had been given to a doubt, and he believing, as the affidavit shows he did, that the time of the Session would not count, in consequence of the strict words of the proviso I have read, fixed the later day. It surely will not be assumed that he did so for the purpose of defrauding the petitioner of his right, but that, as he avowed in the presence of both counsel at the time, he did so for the purpose of enabling an appeal to intervene, in order that he might be corrected, if wrong in the judgment he gave on the objections which were taken. Having fixed the 6th December, believing he was safe in so doing—and so did the petitioner believe, as he tells us in the letter I have read—the objection was taken that the time fixed for the trial was beyond the six months limit, and that the time of the Session must count, because there had been no judicial determination that the presence of the respondent was necessary at the trial. Under these circumstances, the question was brought before the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, and by the judgment of the whole court, it was decided, as it has been decided by the Supreme Court of Canada, and by the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia, and by some of the Ontario judges and some of the Nova Scotia judges, that the time of the Session must count, under such circumstances as existed in that case, and the petitioner lost his right. Now, it is true that Judge Fraser concurred in that decision. It is unfortunate that, in the first instance, he made a mistake, and there can be no doubt that he did make a mistake. It was a mistake, however, in which, as I have shown, not only many other judges, but many other eminent lawyers in Canada, concurred; and it was a mistake as to which the petitioner in this case, after a full adjudication on the question, has declared solemnly, over his own signature, that he concurs in now. Now, the best thing and the most honorable thing that Judge Fraser could have possibly done was to correct his mistake, and to avow that he was wrong. We can easily see that the circumstances must have been exceedingly painful to him, as it always must be painful to a judge to know that a suitor, by a mistake of his, has lost his right, but that should be no reason whatever why the judge should not correct his mistake and inflict another wrong on the other suitor, who, in this case, was the sitting member. What kind of honor and consistency would Judge Fraser have had, if, after having made that mistake in fixing the day of trial too late to keep the petitioner alive, he had turned round, in order to cover his mistake, and said: "Well, I have inflicted that injury on the petitioner, but will endeavor to redress it by upholding my judgment in the interest of the petitioner, and at the expense of the sitting member, who, under a true construction of the law, has the right to represent the county for the next five years?" Now, under these circumstances Judge Fraser was violently assailed, and it does seem to me most important, having mentioned the necessity, in fairness and honor, of a judge reversing his judgment, when he finds it was wrong, even if he finds an injury has been done to a suitor, that then, if ever, in the interests of justice, calumny should be silenced, and the judge should not be subjected to insult. But in this case, what course did the convict take? I admit that he had a perfect right, not only as editor of a newspaper but as a private citizen, in letters or in any other way, to criticise the judgment of Judge Fraser, and to show that Judge Fraser was wrong. He had a right to urge that a judge who had made a mistake in law, as Judge Fraser did, should not sit upon the bench, although that would be very extreme, but, under the law of England, under the law of America, and under the law of Canada, and of every country where there is a free and independent judiciary, the one thing which he could not do was to impute corruption to the judge. Let me show the House what Mr. Hawke did say. I will endeavor to avoid any debatable ground in speaking of the several judgments of members of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, in which it was unanimously decided that Mr. Hawke was punishable for contempt. On the 8th November he had published an article which was headed "A Scandalous Outrage." I understand from the hon. gentleman opposite that in regard to some portions of that article some members of the bench did not regard them in the same light as other judges did, but, when I read the article, I do not think the House will think that this was anything but a statement that Judge Fraser was corrupt and had been influenced to change his opinion from right to wrong by corrupt influences, whereas the truth is that he changed his opinion from wrong to right, as we know by the decision of the highest legal authority in this country. The article to which I refer was headed, as I have stated, "A Scandalous Outrage." Then there was another heading: "A Judicial Pooh-Bah." In that article it is stated:

"This was the decision of Mr. Pooh-Bah, in his capacity as Lord Chancellor, and in the Supreme Court of New Brunswick on Saturday, the judicial Pooh-Bah, as Lord High Executioner, reversed his former decision, and ruled the petition out on the very grounds which he formerly held were incorrect. Such is Mr. Justice Pooh-Bah Fraser's conception of law and justice."

The hon. gentleman opposite intimated that these expressions were mere trifles, that we would consider them trifling if applied to us, accustomed as we in Parliament are to the greatest calumnies.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I spoke of the expressions in the public press.

Mr. THOMPSON. I mean expressions used to members of Parliament. The hon. gentleman intimated that no offence could be taken at the words "Mr. Justice Pooh-Bah Fraser," as the same term has been used in regard to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I said that no one could impute a corrupt motive to the man using that phrase.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is because public men in this country are unfortunately every day exposed to the vilest language, and he said that consequently a man should not be punished for applying that kind of language to judges on the bench. The hon. gentleman thinks that no punishment should follow in a case of that kind, because such terms have been administered in liberal doses to members who sit on both sides of this House. I have nothing to say now in regard to the propriety of such language being used to public men, but it is in the interests of the free administration of justice that the men who sit on the bench, apart from the hurly-burly in which we live and struggle day after day, should be free from such attacks. They have no reply and their vindication must depend very largely on the respect and confidence of the people among whom they live. It is contrary to justice and to fair play that they should be assailed by language such as that, and that the language which is permitted in regard to public men should be allowed to be used in regard to the judges of the land; and I think that the thoughtful and intelligent members of the press would not claim that they are entitled to use such language. The Chief Justice says:

"It cannot be denied that this article does, and was intended to bring Mr. Justice Fraser and his proceedings on the election petition into public ridicule and contempt to a very great extent. The very designation of him as 'Mr. Justice Pooh-Bah Fraser' would, even to those who had neither witnessed nor read the comedy, indicate that the term 'Pooh-Bah' was applied to him as one of contempt and of ridicule."

The hon. member is therefore mistaken in supposing that the Chief Justice signifies that this is punishable only as an imputation of corruption. It was sufficient that it was contemptuous and ridiculous for it to have all the characteristics of "contempt." The Chief Justice goes on:

"But I think it goes much further than mere ridicule; and, admitting that it was not so intended, the effect of it was at least to insinuate and to lead the public to believe that Mr. Justice Fraser was induced to change his opinion as to the completion of the six months for bringing the petition to trial for the same reasons that Pooh-Bah reversed his decisions from time to time, which anybody who has either read or witnessed the comedy would know to have been that he was bribed."

But that was not all. On the 12th November, this article was published, to which I ask the careful attention of the House:

"What induced Mr. Justice Fraser to change his opinion? Why did he, after selecting the 20th September and allowing that date to be announced broadcast over the country as the date of trial, change his mind and determine on a date in December? What were the arguments and what were the reasons presented to him out of court to induce this change of mind, and his refusal to sign the order for the trial on September 20?"

I think the hon. member will agree with me that, when it is stated that a judge is induced to decide any matter in court by what transpires out of court, that is an accusation of the lowest infamy that any judge could be guilty of.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think he was charged with that.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, he was charged with that—

"Who was it that represented to Mr. Justice Fraser that that date would be inconvenient to him? Unless Mr. Powell is done a gross wrong, it is reported round Sackville that he boasts of having induced the judge to change the date from September 20, to suit his convenience. The desire to induce Mr. Fraser to change the date of trial must have emanated from those interested in the Conservative candidate's cause; and then when Mr. Emmerson's counsel discovered that the judge was bent upon changing the date, he directed his attention to the fact that by a possible construction of the statute that date would throw the petition out of court, the judge ruled that it would not. The moment the judge had changed the date rumors began to circulate round Sackville—evidently emanating from Mr. Powell—that as a result of the change of date, which it is believed he induced the judge to make, Mr. Emmerson's petition would be thrown out of court. Then, to the surprise and astonishment of everybody, Mr. Justice Fraser went back upon his own interpretation of the law; performed his now notorious judicial somersault, and was the pantaloons of the comic pantomime to Mr. Powell's clown."

Now, I am under the impression that Hawke was charged with that article, but whether he was charged with that article or not, it was in evidence that he published that article, and he did not deny it himself; and I think the argument of the Chief Justice was a fair one, that it could be used in interpreting the expression "Mr. Justice Pooh-Bah Fraser" which was contained in the article, and which the hon. member for Queen's admits he was charged with having published. Now, as regards the imputations conveyed in that last paragraph, I fail to see the cogency of the hon. gentleman's argument that a libel is for the jury and not for the court, or the ground for his statement that there was no juror in the country who would have found that statement libellous.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I merely expressed my personal opinion.

Mr. THOMPSON. It was the hon. member's sincere opinion, I have no doubt. It is my sincere opinion that no juror in the country would say that was not libellous, who was not a perjurer.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) All I ask is that he should be tried in order to ascertain whether you or I are right.

Mr. THOMPSON. Well, fortunately, or unfortunately, for Mr. Hawke, and I think fortunately, he has not yet been tried for libel—perhaps he may yet be. He has been tried for a milder offence, and a penalty has been inflicted upon him which could not have been inflicted if he had been indicted for libel and a conviction had been found under that paragraph. Now, then, as regards the fact which transpired that the judge had committed an error in the first instance, in supposing the date would be in time. If he committed an error on a most difficult question of law, he committed an error that might have been avoided by the action of the petitioner himself, either in calling the judge's attention strongly to that point, and arguing it before him, or by asking to have all doubts removed by an extension of the time for bringing the petition to trial. Now, as regards the course which matters subsequently took, let the House observe that the condemnation by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick was not in vindication of Mr. Justice Fraser alone, it was in consequence of the imputation there conveyed against the action of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick itself as well. Mr. Justice Fraser was only one constituent member of that court, and he was not one of those who condemned Hawke. As regards the character and standing of the judge against whom this imputation was conveyed, of being influenced, either by political feelings or by other corrupt motives, to change his opinions from right to wrong, I feel bound to say, knowing Mr. Justice Fraser, and standing here in an assembly of gentlemen who do not know him, that while I admit he made that mistake, and while I regret that he did so, in consequence of any possible injury which may have been done to the petitioner, as well as on account of the strictures that followed, I feel bound to say, I repeat, in view of the imputations upon him, that if there is one man in Canada to whom those imputations could not be properly applied, it is Judge Fraser. I have known him before he went upon the bench, and I have known him since he went upon the bench, hardly personally at all, but as a public man, as a professional man, and subsequently as a judge; and I have known him to be honest, painstaking and scrupulous to the last degree as regards the rights and interests with which he had to deal. When this matter came before the court, let the House observe the position in which Mr. Hawke stood. Interrogatories were put to him by which he might, if he pleased, have avoided the consequences which subsequently fell upon his head. Mr. Hawke might then and there have done one of two things—he might have proved, as he could have done, that he was not a liar in the insinuation he made—that the charge was true, or if he were an honorable man and worthy to be a member of the press of Canada, he might have honestly disavowed the insinuations and expressed regret that he had made them. The House will understand the force of the appeal which has been made from the other side for executive clemency, when I say that down to this moment he has not offered a vestige of proof that the insinuations were true, or the slightest contrition for having made them.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The Minister of Justice, in justice to Mr. Hawke, whom he is assailing, ought to say that when these interrogatories were put to him he was in prison, and on the advice of his counsel, refused to answer, because he challenged the jurisdiction of the court.

Mr. THOMPSON. I have no objection to that statement being made, or giving Mr. Hawke the benefit of it. I am not speaking of the interrogatories which were put to him after he was imprisoned for the contempt. Before that he was only imprisoned by his own choice, for rather than give his own recognisance, he went to jail in order to give himself the solemnity of a martyr; and if he was in custody when these interrogatories were put to him, he was in custody by his own choice. He was just as capable of being free and answering them, or of taking any other ground of defence, as I am, or the hon. member is, at this moment. Now, Sir, I shall endeavor not to detain the House very long, but I must say that I disagree, from beginning to end, with the grounds which have been offered by the hon. gentleman for assailing the correctness, from a legal point of view, of the judgment of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. I have to say with regard to the authorities which he cited, to the quotations from Lord Fitzgerald, and the opinions which were cited from the judgment of Mr. Justice Merrison, and various others, in regard to constructive contempt, that there will be no difference between us except as to the definition of the words "constructive contempt." There has been a good deal of loose expression with regard to the difference between actual and constructive contempt. In the passage which he read from a speech of Lord Fitzgerald, there is a good deal of loose expression and confusion as to constructive contempts, and a good deal that would lead one to suppose that an actual contempt is a contempt committed in the presence of the court, and a constructive contempt, as distinguished from that, is a contempt committed outside of the court. Now, that is not, I think, the correct distinction. It is to be borne in mind, when we are considering these authorities who say that constructive contempt cannot be committed after a judicial proceeding is over, that there are, in the first place, those contempts which consist in throwing ridicule upon the court, or publishing libel upon it, and then there are those which, while not conveying ridicule or stigma, interfere with the course of justice. For instance, it is a constructive contempt, at certain stages of the trial, to publish the proceedings, to publish the evidence, or to make even a fair comment upon the evidence. It is a constructive contempt of court to arrest a witness who is on his way to a court of justice, or who is returning from a court of justice; it is constructive contempt of court to assail the character of a suitor, or to arrest a suitor in any way that will impede his prosecution of his suit, or to intimidate a jury or a grand jury. All these may not be actual contempts, but they are constructive contempts, because while showing on their face no derogation from the dignity of the court they really interfere with the freedom of its proceedings. But there are other contempts, especially those which convey imputations of corruption against the judges, or which are actual interruptions of the progress of the business of the court while the court is sitting, both of which, whether the former transpires after or before the trial is concluded, are actual and not constructive contempts of court. As regards the first, I have to agree with what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) has said, that they should not be regarded as constructive contempts of court if the proceedings in the cause are over, that after the proceedings are over and after the decision has been rendered, in the words of the decision cited by the hon. gentleman and which was given in March last, all the parties to it are open to public criticism.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Judge and jury.

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, judge and jury. As I have said this election petition being over, it was perfectly open to Mr. Hawke to say that the judge was wrong or was weak, or anything else within the region of fair criticism; but when he went out of the line of fair criticism and made a malignant attack on the personal character and motives of that judge he committed, not a constructive contempt, but an actual contempt, and so it was decided by the court. A contempt of that kind has been punishable by the courts in England on proceedings precisely like these, as the hon. gentleman read from the passage he quoted from Lord Fitzgerald, since the reign of Richard III down to last year, for I can cite, if it is necessary, English precedents down even to last year, and in the United States from the time that courts of jurisprudence in that country were constituted down to the present time.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Mr. Justice Stephen says he is unable to find the cases.

Mr. THOMPSON. No; Mr. Justice Stephen was not referring to actual contempts, but merely constructive contempts—that is to say matters which may be considered contempts only on the ground that they interfere with some proceeding and cannot so interfere after the trial is over; but attacks which vilify the court, or the judge, or the jury, or the grand jury, and which have a tendency to intimidate such officers or to decrease the respect due to the court after the trial is over, these frequently, and in late days, have been decided to be contempts of court. Mr. Justice Stephen did not mean anything else, because he knew that both in the judicial and in the parliamentary history of his own country there was the case, not five years ago, of Mr. Dwyer Gray. He was editor of the Dublin Freeman, he was high sheriff of Dublin and member of Parliament, and in his capacity as editor of the Dublin Freeman he made severe comments and reflections on the conduct of the jury which had just returned a conviction in the Hynes case. He had stated that their verdict was influenced by drunkenness, and, editor of the Dublin Freeman as he was, high sheriff of Dublin as he was, member of the House of Commons of the United Kingdom as he was, within twenty-four hours he was sent to gaol under a sentence of three months' imprisonment and a fine of £500 sterling, and he was ordered to find heavy sureties to keep the peace after he should come out of prison. Mr. Justice Stephen could not have meant anything else than what I have indicated, because a man of his eminence and learning, one of the greatest criminal lawyers of the present age, if one may not even extend that term to other branches of jurisprudence, he knows that that case is expanded on the parliamentary and judicial history of Great Britain. Dwyer Gray's case was made the subject of enquiry in Parliament, and on the committee that investigated the question of privilege which arose under that decision there sat some of the ablest men of England, Ireland and Scotland, and the effect of the report they made was that there was no necessity for pursuing the case further as a matter of privilege. But, in consequence of the notoriety which that case gave to the law of contempt, it was made a reason for the Government introducing a Bill in the Session of 1883, in the House of Lords, to amend the law relating to contempt of court. Now, the amendments that were proposed are significant, I think, in this discussion, in which we are told that it was an old and rusty weapon which was refurbished in this case, and one which should be put beyond the reach of the court. The amendments that were proposed were in these directions: they were, first of all, to give means for enforcing the decrees of the court without inflicting imprisonment for contempt; they were to limit the jurisdiction of the judges to commit for contempt to the extent of £500 fine and three months' imprisonment, and they likewise afforded an appeal in case of conviction for contempt. It may be that it will be wise to adopt, at some day, and, perhaps, at no distant day, a provision for an appeal in all cases of contempt; but, leaving this case out of the question, which I will not anticipate, there is certainly in the judicial records of the country no reason for saying that the power which has been vested in the courts from time immemorial for adjudging cases of contempt shall be removed, and there is no urgent reason for asking this House to adopt legislation, for in this country the limits which the Bill of 1883 proposed to establish have never yet been reached in any one case. And I observe that although the case of Dwyer Gray was made the subject of enquiry by a parliamentary committee it was not proposed by any member of the House of Lords—the Bill did not reach the House of Commons I believe, at all events it did not become law—to take away from the courts the power to punish for contempt even though, to use the hon. gentleman's expression, the court in a certain sense sat as judges in their own case.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is time they did it.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman may be of that opinion, but he differs in opinion from the wisest men of the Anglo-Saxon race in every part of the world who have given consideration to this subject.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not know that.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) That is not so.

Mr. THOMPSON. The reason is not very difficult to explain to the hon. gentleman. It has been considered necessary for the existence of the courts, and for their independence and for the proper exercise of their authority, that they should be clothed with these large powers—powers which it is true may be abused as all powers may be, but which are to be exercised under the strict responsibility which attaches to the judges in respect of all they do. It would be digressing to follow that argument just now, but I will return to it in a few moments. I was stating the case of Dwyer Gray for the purpose of recalling to the hon. gentleman's mind some modern instances in which this power has been enforced. In another case, the case of Craddock, these were the circumstances: He and another person were accused of a crime. He pleaded not guilty; his confederate in crime pleaded guilty, and was removed from the dock. Craddock underwent his trial and was acquitted. The other man stood aside for sentence, and as Craddock passed out he said: "When you get out I will get even with you for spitting on me." He went to prison that day, under sentence of a year's imprisonment, for contempt of court for interfering with the administration of justice. In another case which was decided only last year, or at all events not longer ago than 1883, these were the circumstances: It was a case in which a judge of the High Court of Justice was sitting in

Mr. THOMPSON.

Chambers, and two solicitors having a sharp legal argument before him, they took their departure and went down stairs, and one of them shook his fist in the other's face. Although the proceedings in which the dispute occurred were concluded the solicitor was punished for that contempt, and that was only a year or two ago.

An hon. MEMBER. Was it in the precincts of the court.

Mr. THOMPSON. No; not in the precincts of the court.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It was in the precincts of the court.

Mr. THOMPSON. The precincts of the court had nothing to do with it, but did not the hon. gentleman ask us what sacred line was drawn around the court house? Does the hon. gentleman mean to tell me that the protection which extends to the judge while on the court house steps, should not extend to him after he passes the court house gate, and that a judge is sacred on the bench but you can thrash him within an inch of his life when you get him outside the precincts of the court. Here is the case to which I refer as reported in the Law Reports:

"A solicitor who had attended the hearing of an application before a judge at Chambers in the Royal Courts of Justice, immediately after such hearing and while the parties were on their way from the judge's room to the entrance gate of the building, made use of grossly abusive expressions and threatening gestures to the solicitor on the other side in relation to such application.

"Held that such conduct in relation to proceedings before a judge at Chambers was a contempt of court punishable by attachment.

"Ex parte Wilton discussed."

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Does the hon. gentleman say the proceedings had ended?

Mr. THOMPSON. Certainly the proceedings about which the altercation arose had ended.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) The hon. gentleman will see that the man who made the affidavits swore that he was threatened and that made it a contempt. If it had not been for that it would not have been a contempt.

Mr. THOMPSON. Lord Esher says:

"It is not necessary to constitute a contempt of court that the contempt should be in court or that it should be a contempt of a judge sitting in court. All that is necessary is that it should be a contemptuous interference with judicial proceedings, in which the judge is acting as a judicial officer. This proposition is laid down in terms in a learned judgment prepared by Wilmot, C. J."

Further on he says that time and place have nothing to do with the matter. Now we come back for a moment to the contention which was suggested to me by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), and which is suggested indeed by another consideration, as to the ground on which this large power, as I admit it to be, is conceded to the judges. Let me recall it to the House for a few moments. In the first place the courts are armed with the power not merely for their own protection, but for the protection of the people who do business before them, for the protection of witnesses, and for the protection of suitors who resort there. Let me suppose the case of a suitor having no access to the press and another having access to the press, being the proprietor or controller of a public paper, able to attack and intimidate a judge on the bench, able to influence the opinions of a jury, able to influence the conduct and demeanor of witnesses and the freedom with which they should give their testimony. Is it to be conceded that the suitor who has access to the press should be permitted to use that, to the disadvantage of his opponent in that suit?

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. THOMPSON. Of course not, and the hon. member opposite says no.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does anybody else claim that?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, the hon. gentleman's own statement, that the judges should not sit in judgment on their own case, claims it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have not made any such statement, but I intend to deal with that before I get through.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. member had better consult Hansard before he says he made no such statement. He said the sooner the power was taken from them the better.

Mr. MITCHELL. I did say the sooner that power was taken from them the better, but you put words into my mouth that I have not uttered.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman need not trouble himself by saying that I put words in his mouth that he did not utter. Those are the words that came across to this side of the House, and if he did not mean to say that judges should be deprived of the power of adjudicating on contempts in their own courts, let him say so.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will tell you by-and-bye what was my language.

Mr. THOMPSON. I dare say the hon. gentleman will be able to say something by-and-bye different from what he said a few minutes ago.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will be able to set you right on what I said two moments ago.

Mr. RYKERT. Keep your temper.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will not have any Jesuitical interpretation of what words I used in this House.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 107) respecting the York Farmers' Colonisation Company (from the Senate).—(Mr. McCulla.)

Bill (No. 97) to amend the Act to incorporate the Board of Management of the Church and Manse Building Fund of the Presbyterian Church in Canada, for Manitoba and the North-West.—(Mr. Daly.)

Bill (No. 80) to wind up the Bank of London in Canada.—(Mr. Milla, Bothwell.)

Bill (No. 114) to amend the several Acts relating to the Board of Trade of the City of Toronto (from the Senate).—(Mr. Small.)

THE CASE OF JOHN T. HAWKE.

Mr. THOMPSON. A few moments before recess, while I was addressing myself to another branch of the argument, the hon. gentleman, who brought this matter to the notice of the House, made a suggestion across the House to me, which caused me to divert for a moment from the line of argument I was pursuing. The interruption or suggestion he made was to the effect that Mr. Justice Stephen, in giving judgment in a case in the High Court of Justice in England, two or three months ago, said that he had been unable to find any precedent whatever for holding that to be a contempt of court which was a comment upon a case after the case was concluded. That led me to refer more particularly to the case of Mr. Dwyer Gray; and before resuming the argument I was endeavoring to present when the House rose, I must revert to that case for the purpose of making one or two other observations, to show what appears to me to be the meaning and effect of that case. It is true that the ground on which sentence was pronounced against Mr. Gray was the view of the learned judge, Mr. Justice Lawson, that the severe strictures which were made in the Dublin Freeman on the conduct of the jury in the particular case in which they had just found a verdict of guilty, tended to impede the course of justice by intimidating jurors, who might be called to discharge duties as jurors in other cases during the commission that was then going on.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). That is exactly the difference; the commission was sitting.

Mr. THOMPSON. There are many differences in the case. But I am going to point out that the difference is not one of principle at all. It is simply one of detail in that case which I revert to for the purpose of making these explanations. It is true that, in all probability, the punishment was excessive. The judge himself probably thought so, because after the commission had adjourned he mitigated the punishment to some small extent. The point, however, is this: that that was a proceeding for contempt in which there was an adjudication that an article reflecting upon the conduct of the jury was a contempt, although it was published after the trial and proceedings were over.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman, I am sure, wishes to state the facts fully and clearly, and will not object to my interruption when I say that the contempt of court was in relation to the first case brought before the commission, and the learned judge held that the reflections made by Mr. Gray in the article, for publishing which he was tried for contempt, probably would affect the result of the other cases.

Mr. THOMPSON. The ground on which the judge proceeded was his view that the article tended to impede the course of justice at that commission, and the point I make is this: that he held that to be so, and that being so it was a contempt, notwithstanding the fact that it was a criticism upon a past trial. Now, the argument which was made by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), if it meant anything at all, upon that point of making a constructive contempt of observations upon a past trial—the pith of the argument presented to the House by him before dinner was that when once a trial was concluded, the judge, the jurors, and everybody connected with the case were handed over to public criticism and there could be no contempt; and that was the sense in which my hon. friend referred to the case decided in March last in the High Court of Justice. The answer to the argument that comments upon a past trial cannot be held even to be a contempt, is that there are numerous instances, and Mr. Dwyer Gray's case is one of them, in which comment upon a past trial has been held to be a contempt. I admit that the element was there that it impeded the due administration of justice, and this must be the effect in every case.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In the case of Mr. Gray, Mr. Justice Lawson was sitting on a commission appointed to try a number of cases, and the first case was one of the same nature as others which were to follow; and Mr. Gray having made comments upon the first case, which the judge thought was calculated to impede the administration of justice with respect to the remaining cases before the commission, he held that Mr. Gray was guilty of contempt of court.

Mr. THOMPSON. I thought the hon. member had understood me, but he evidently has not, and I will again state the case. Mr. Justice Lawson sat under commission holding the assizes in Dublin, to try a number of persons charged with having committed outrages in Ireland. The first was a capital case, in which the jurors arrived at the conclusion that the prisoner was guilty. The trial was over, and, according to the doctrine which the hon. gentleman presented to-night, the judges, the jurors, the witnesses, and everybody connected with the case, were handed over to public criticism, as they were in this case in New Brunswick; and the hon. gentleman's sargument went this far: that no matter what that public criticism might be, it could not be held to be a contempt, even constructively, and could not be held to interfere with the due administration of justice, because the trial was past and gone. Now, I mention that case as one in which a comment upon a trial which was past was held to be a contempt, was held to interfere with the due course of justice, and that solely because it passed the bounds of fair criticism.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I think the ground upon which that was held to be a contempt was that it was an interference with the course of justice.

Mr. THOMPSON. I might go further than that, and admit that there is no contempt unless it is an interference with the course of justice, and the only point of difference between the hon. gentleman and myself is, that I say that a comment upon a trial after it is over may interfere with the due course of justice, and that it was so held in the Dwyer Gray case. How it may interfere with the due administration of justice is for the court alone to decide. There were thousands of people in Ireland, and many people in the British Parliament, who did not see how the comments in that particular case could interfere with the due administration of justice, but it was held by Mr. Justice Lawson to interfere because it insinuated that the jurors had come to that conclusion by intoxication, and in this case, also, the question as to how this interfered with the due administration of justice was for the judges alone to decide. They decided it. In the one case, corruption was imputed to the judge, and in the other case, corruption was imputed to the jury, but both of these comments were after the trial, and although the circumstances were different the principle was the same. In the case in Ireland, the court held that this was a serious imputation on the jury affecting them in regard to cases which they might have to decide, and in New Brunswick in this case, the judges viewed with grave disapproval the attack on a judge who had simply made a mistake on a very different point of law, because it was an imputation on the integrity of the bench and an attempt to intimidate judges who might have to pronounce such decisions hereafter. I do not propose to sit in judicial review on that decision, because the judges must decide whether the due course of justice has been interfered with. If the hon. member will turn to the place in the English Hansard where that case is discussed on the motion for a committee of enquiry into the breach of privilege, he will find that, although that was a case in which one of the leading members of the Irish party in the House of Commons was subjected to severe punishment including imprisonment, the leader of the Irish party, Mr. Parnell, in discussing it, in regard to the limits which should be put to the action of courts of justice in contempt cases, distinctly admitted that in that case the judge was quite within his right, and was fairly within the law. I was about to call the attention of the House to the reasons which exist in the mother country, which exist in the United States, and which must necessarily exist here, for the maintenance of this power in the hands of the judges. Necessarily the courts are the guardians of the property and of the liberties of our people, and it is absolutely necessary that the humblest individual who goes into one of our courts should have the same protection as the greatest; that, when he goes into a court, although the whole tide of public opinion should be strongly against him, and the press too, he should have the same justice which is granted to any other individual; but, if the press can freely impute motives to the jury or to the judge who gives judgment in favor of the party against whom the public opinion and the press of the country have been aroused, then there will be great danger to the proper power and the impartiality of the bench. The oath of the judge, and the oath of the jurors, and the oath of every one who is connected with the administration of justice, is not only that he will administer it without favor, but also without fear. Everyone who is connected with the administration of justice is human. Everyone who testifies in the box, or acts as a juror, or sits on the bench, is amenable to public opinion, and, if, when giving testimony or giving judgment in favor of a person against whom the press has aroused public opinion, the witness, juror, or judge is open to such disgraceful attacks as had been made in this case, the due administration of justice must be interfered with, and I can understand why the judges of New Brunswick have so understood this libel. There were two remarkable cases in New York, in which two of the greatest criminals of modern times were concerned. One was the case of Tweed, who was convicted on a large number of charges, and was sentenced to severe penalties. Not only had the public opinion of that State been aroused against him, and organisations formed to punish him, but it took years to bring him to justice; and, although the whole public sentiment and the whole moral sentiment of that great commonwealth was against him, the judges were fearless enough, after the sentence had been pronounced, to set the verdict aside. Quite lately, another great criminal was convicted in that State. Public opinion pursued him with every weapon which it could use, and the press pursued him also, but immediately after his conviction, his sentence was set aside. It is with the view of preserving that same independence of the bench which will brave public opinion, and will brave the press also, that the law has surrounded the judges with the discretion of punishing calumny in regard to the bench. Another reason is that which I directed the attention of the House to before dinner—the fact that judges, from their position, have necessarily no opportunity of reply. We are accustomed in Parliament to be assailed in regard to our motives and conduct, but we are able to reply and defend ourselves, we have friends and party allies who can answer for us. But the judges must necessarily be removed from personal conflict and precluded from entering on their own defence. It is absolutely necessary that the judges should be in a position where they may give their judgments, not only without affection but without fear—as in the Tweed and Sharp cases in New York—and, further, it is necessary that a judge should be fearless in reversing, if he so desires, his own decision when he finds he is wrong, as Judge Fraser did in this case. But there could be no such independence on the bench if the judges are to be assailed as they were in this case by the imputation of the worst motives. If that is to be permitted, it will be found that the people who will accept judicial offices will not be the men most worthy of them. Now, I want to call the attention of the House again, as briefly as possible, to two or three authorities, for the purpose of showing to what extent the press has the right of criticism. I will read from the case which the hon. gentleman cited, Regina vs. Wilkinson, and from the opinion of Chief Justice Harrison. At page 101 he will find this doctrine laid down:

"In Huggonson's case, Lord Hartwicke said: 'There cannot be anything of greater consequence than to keep the stream of justice clean and pure, that parties may proceed with safety both to themselves and to their characters.'"

Chief Justice Harrison remarks:

"This language has been often quoted with marked approval."

Now, at page 92:

"While the right of public discussion in matters of public interest is important and should be protected, even while involving the publication of defamatory matter, it is not in the public interest to be permitted, unless conceived in a fair spirit, in the spirit of fair discussion and not in a spirit of reckless or inconsiderate imputation No public writer is allowed to impute improper motives to any man, unless there be something to justify the imputation—something more than the mere belief of the writer that what he wrote was true."

Again, at page 96:

"The judgment of the court, consisting of several judges, is the result of the opinions expressed by the several judges, or the majority of them. The result may be attained by different judges for different reasons. The honest expression of these reasons, whether the judge be in the majority or minority; whether reflecting on parties to the suit, witnesses or strangers, whose names necessarily appear in the proceedings, must be equally privileged and equally protected."

At page 97:

"The process of attachment for contempt must necessarily be as ancient as the laws themselves, for suits without a competent authority to secure their administration from disobedience and contempt, would be vain and nugatory. A power, therefore, in the supreme courts of justice to suppress such contempts by an immediate attachment of the offender, results from the first principles of judicial establishments, and must be inseparable to every superior tribunal. * * * * * The power is now held to exist in every court of record, whether of superior or inferior jurisdiction. If an inferior court attempts to usurp jurisdiction, a superior court may interfere and prevent it."

At page 107:

"The temperate and respectful discussion by the newspaper press of the determination of our courts of justice is not to be interdicted, but the mere invective and abuse, and still more, the imputation of false, corrupt, or dishonest motives to those who are engaged in the administration of justice, is not to be tolerated."

Again on the same page—and these are not the mere dicta of Chief Justice Harrison himself, but in every case he is stating the opinion of eminent English judges:

"It certainly was lawful with decency and candor to discuss the propriety of the verdict of a jury or the decisions of a judge, and if the defendants should be thought to have done no more in this instance, they would be entitled to an acquittal, but, on the contrary, they had transgressed the law, and ought to be convicted, if the extracts from the newspapers, set out in the information, contained no reasoning or discussion, but only declamation and invective, and were written not with a view to elucidate the truth, but to injure the character of individuals and to bring into hatred and contempt the administration of justice in the country.

"Cases may happen in which the judges and jury may be mistaken. When they are, the law has afforded a remedy; and the party is entitled to pursue every method which the law allows to correct the mistake. But when a person has recourse either by a writing like the present, by publications in print, or by any other means, to calumniate the proceedings of a court of justice, the obvious tendency of it is to weaken the administration of justice, and in consequence to sap the very foundation of the constitution itself."

I ask the consideration of the hon. gentleman to that, as he asked me, in contrasting this case with Dwyer Gray's case, how while in that case the cause of justice might be impeded in relating to future trials, the course of justice might be impeded here when this proceeding was passed, and no other petition was to come on.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman refer to the case he has just quoted?

Mr. THOMPSON. I am making that observation in reference to the effect which a criticism imputing improper motives may have upon the course of the administration of justice, whether past, present or future. The imputation of improper motives, according to the language of the Chief Justice, or a calumny on the proceedings of a court of justice, has the obvious tendency to weaken the administration of justice, and in consequence to sap the very foundation of the constitution. Lawrence, C.J., in an American case said:

"It is the power of the press, honestly, fairly and temperately to criticise the courts of justice in regard to cases which have passed from their jurisdiction, so long as the action of that court is correctly stated, and the official integrity of the court not impeached."

That is expressly laid down in reference to past cases, the limitation of fair criticism which exists in relation to libel, and in relation to other cases of contempt. In the same case, the same learned Chief Justice said:

"We wish to call the attention of the press to the limits which circumscribe their comments on judicial proceedings, and to remind them of the obligations imposed upon them by the great power which they confessedly wield, especially do we desire to keep the judicial reputation of the state free from the appearance of dishonor and to prevent the growth of distrust in the minds of our own people, that would certainly follow the circulation of articles like the one under consideration if permitted to go unrebuked."

Then at page 112, the language is this:

"Journalists as well as others, are prevented, in a country where law is properly administered, from taking the law into their own hands. A law which would permit a person aggrieved by an expression of opinion by a judge in the discharge of duty, to chastise the judge, would be worse than no law, whether the chastisement take the form of personal violence or vituperative language, there is equally an offence against the law."

I need not carry the argument any farther; I need not carry it to the limit which the hon. gentleman himself suggested by his arguments a little while ago, when he stated that in relation to a past trial there could be no interference with the administration of justice, and when he intimated that, at any rate, the offence was punishable only if it occurred within the precincts of the court. If the limit is to be drawn there, when the trial is over, and the court is closed, and the judge has left the precincts of the court, if the person who assails him is not punishable for contempt of court, then the effect is this: that every person who wishes to arouse popular feeling in a case in which the popular feeling is susceptible of being aroused, as we find to be often the case, he can bring that state of feeling to the point of inciting personal violence against the judge, and yet be free from punishment. Now, there are one or two other authorities which I must cite, because the hon. gentleman told me that Mr. Justice Stephen had been unable to find them, and I would here call his attention to the fact that he was mistaken in supposing that Mr. Justice Stephen had said that in his judgment.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I read the judgment verbatim.

Mr. THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman said that Mr. Justice Stephen declared in that judgment that he had been unable to find precedents. I do not want to appear to be accusing the hon. gentleman—which I am not doing at all—of misquoting; therefore I refrain from reading the judgment of Mr. Justice Stephen, but the hon. member was mistaken. There was a celebrated case in Chicago in which the grand jury, having found certain bills against the publisher of a newspaper, was stigmatised and accused of improper motives in that finding, and as that is the land of liberty, and the centre of advanced principles, as regards personal rights and the rights of the press, let me ask the hon. gentleman's attention to what is there laid down. I am quoting from the Central Law Journal of 1876, vol. 2, page 250:

"The power to punish for contempt is inherent in every court and not derived from statutes. It is the power of self-defence, and without it courts could not resist aggression. It includes all acts tending to impede, embarrass or obstruct courts in the due administration of justice. All such acts are regarded in law as done in the presence of the judge, and are actual contempt. The position that courts can only punish as contempt acts done in the court room is supported by no authority, English or American. What is a contempt is to be determined with reference to the tendency of the act to obstruct the due administration of justice and not by reference to the place in which it is done. Constructive contempts are not all those committed out of the view of the judge. An act which has no tendency to obstruct justice, but only to wound the feelings or offend the personal dignity of the judge, is at most only a constructive contempt. A grand jury is a part of a criminal court, and while in session, engaged in the discharge of its official duties, is entitled to its protection. An editor of a widely circulated daily paper, making in it vindictive and virulent attacks upon the personal character of grand juries for their action in indicting him, which attacks he well knows will be read by them, while the grand jury is still in session, is guilty of conduct tending to obstruct justice."

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Hear, hear,

Mr. THOMPSON. The authority to which the hon. gentleman says "hear, hear," is directly in point, if he will only substitute "the court" for "the grand jury." In that case it is true the grand jury were sitting and were likely to read that statement, and to be affected by it. In this case the imputation was upon the court, which certainly has not ceased to exercise its functions. This opinion continues:

"Such acts tend not only to obstruct justice by improperly influencing the conduct of the existing grand jury but of the petty jurors when sitting in court, and who might be called upon to try the indictment tending against such editor. Such contempts are actual not constructive. Editors have the same and no greater rights and are subject to the same responsibilities as other citizens."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Hear, hear.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am glad I have succeeded in partially convincing the hon. gentleman. I hope to remove all his doubts. These observations were made by the Lord Chancellor of England on March 8, 1883:

"The jurisdiction in matters of contempt was in its nature a penal jurisdiction, and depended very much on the discretion of judges. It was exercised summarily, and in a manner which was entirely exceptional. It was impossible not to see that a jurisdiction of that kind was liable from time to time to provoke censure which, though it might be entirely unmerited, could not be met and answered by the distinguished public servants who were the subjects of attack. They could not vindicate their conduct; and it was therefore detrimental to the interests of the public service that they should be unnecessarily exposed in the discharge of their duties to such criticism. The considerations to which he had drawn attention appeared to apply with additional force when it was remembered that the power of committing for contempt might be exercised by every single judge of the Superior Court, and within narrower limits by the judges of inferior courts. There was yet another reason for legislation. A judge, even if he pronounced a sentence which might be severe, by no means wished to be more severe than was necessary, and would willingly diminish the severity of the sentence upon the submission of the offending party. Orders of imprisonment for contempt were generally indefinite, it being expected that the offender would make some apology of amends."

I invite the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to this statement:

"But there were men so obstinate that they would never make submission. They like playing the part of martyrs before any audience, however limited; and they would prefer to remain in prison for an indefinite time rather than submit themselves to the law. In such cases thoughtless people were apt to censure the judges. And when the contempt consisted in disobedience to the orders of the court the obstinacy of the offending party might entirely prevent that which was the main object of the punishment—namely to enforce obedience to the order of the court. The offender had the power by his obstinacy of still rendering the order ineffectual. If, therefore, their lordships while limiting the power of imprisonments could at the same time provide some better means of enforcing the orders of the court they would undoubtedly be doing a good thing."

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Is that the same debate in which Lord Fitzgerald took part?

Mr. THOMPSON. It is the debate on the Contempt of Court's Bill.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It was for ecclesiastical offences.

Mr. THOMPSON. No, not at all. That was the kind of contempt in reference to which it was proposed to substitute another penalty for imprisonment, but there was no such change proposed in relation to comments on judges and in relation to publications which obstruct the course of justice. If I must repeat the argument in order to remind the hon. gentleman of it, I say: although the subject of contempt was canvassed in the debate on the Bill which was founded on the case of Dwyer Gray, there was no proposal from anybody that the power of adjudicating on contempt should be taken out of the hands of the judges, or that the penalties should be made any less for an offence of this kind than had been inflicted on Dwyer Gray. The hon. gentleman made an argument to the House of this kind: He said that the same rule should apply to contempt as has been applied by the change of the law with respect to libel, and that the matter should in every case be submitted to a jury. The House will perceive at once, when it reflects upon the peculiar nature of contempt, the inapplicability of that remedy. In the first place, from the very nature of the offence the punishment, if it is to be inflicted at all, must be inflicted at once. It is intended quite as much with a view to prevention as with a view to cure; and I would like to ask this: Suppose we introduce into the law of contempt the principle which now prevails in regard to the law of libel, and that is that the prosecution should be taken by indictment, what position would the court occupy which found its jurors, suitors, witnesses, bailiffs, sheriffs and everybody connected with it maligned and the course of justice obstructed? They must, forsooth, submit to have the course of justice absolutely thwarted in all the proceedings that can possibly be affected and wait perhaps till next year to have the case brought before a jury in some other part of the country. There is this fallacy in the hon. gentleman's argument also: It would not apply to cases of what the hon. gentleman calls constructive contempt, where the contempt is a mere obstruction to the progress of justice by interfering with the officers of the court. But he would have this invidious principle introduced: If a man commit ordinary contempt of court, then, according to the hon. gentleman's contention, he might be brought up and punished at once under the law relating to contempt, because he says that would interfere with the due administration of justice. But if the offender was sufficiently bold to add to his offence that of libel, then summary proceedings should not be taken to punish him, but the proceeding should be by indictment. So the greater the offence—the more grievous the contempt—the greater immunity the offender would have, and the greater chance to escape, and the greater certainty of securing delay. Let me call the attention of the House one moment before I conclude, to the cases to which the hon. gentleman has called my attention—one of them decided in the High Court of Justice in March last, in respect of which the hon. gentleman was under the impression, and he gave the House the impression, that there was a decision that there could not be, in relation to a past proceeding, an adjudication that a comment was a contempt. I have read that case carefully, and I think the hon. gentleman will come to the same conclusion as myself, after a little reflection upon it, that it does not decide anything of the kind. That was an application made by a suitor, to have the editor who had made strictures punished for contempt. He made it after the verdict, and while the case was pending under an application for a new trial. The two judges, Justice Field and Justice Stephen, who delivered the judgment in that case, carefully abstained from saying that they had not the power to grant the application. On the contrary, there is every reason to believe they were convinced they had the power, but they merely decided that it was not a proper case in which to exercise that power. It must be admitted that upon an application of that kind made by a suitor in the court—I am distinguishing between proceedings for contempt which originate with the court itself, and those in which the suitor calls attention to the contempt—it must be admitted that the application is one for the discretion of the court. The judges there treated it so, and in the exercise of their discretion they declined to give the attachment which was asked for. But there is not a syllable in that decision from beginning to end to sustain the contention that a reflection upon the proceedings in a past trial cannot be treated as contempt. I must revert for a moment to two points which escaped my recollection, and which have just recurred to it now. To resume for an instant the argument with reference to the inapplicability of the libel proceedings, allow me to quote to the House again an American authority, and a very high one—the Albany Law Journal—which wrote on this question in 1871. It is all the more applicable, because it was stated that there were old doctrines, doctrines belonging to by-gone times in the old country, and that they had no application in this country at all. This is what the commentator says upon the proposition that the ordinary proceedings for punishing contempt must be abandoned, and proceedings by libel resorted to:

"The insulted judge must go to law before some other tribunal, with every one whom his decisions offend. He must quit his business in court, and leave the bench and travel to inferior courts and give his attendance upon them, neglecting in the meantime the duties which belong to his office * * *. No one would be afraid to offend; the delay of punishment and the numerous chances of escaping it, would disarm the expected punishment of all its terrors. Nor would the insulted court ever think of the attempt to cause the infliction of punishment under so many discouragements. No waver does he get through one set of controversies, than some other dissatisfied suitor assails him with equal courage and involves him in others. He must go again and forever through the same routine of vexation and trouble. Well may a judge shrink from the perpetual conflicts which he has to maintain in vindication of opinions in which he has no individual interest, and the unceasing calumnies to which he is exposed for the protection of others."

Now, the hon. gentleman cited to some extent the decision in the Brown case, from the opinion of Mr. Justice Morrison. Mr. Justice Morrison dissented from Chief Justice Harrison, and from my reading of the views expressed I find that Mr. Justice Morrison differed from Chief Justice Harrison solely on the grounds that the contempt which was complained of, being an attack upon Judge Wilson, had been ignored by Judge Wilson, had been ignored by the court, and was only brought to the notice of the court by the suitor who attempted to take up, in his own interest, the reflections cast on the court. Mr. Justice Morrison said that the delay which had taken place completely put it out of the power of the suitor to avail himself of such remedy, and all the comments which were read this afternoon, and the whole judgment of Mr. Justice Morrison, in dissenting from the opinion of Chief Justice Harrison, is based not upon the doctrine, at all, that there can be no contempt in relation to a past trial and no punishment for contempt in cases of that kind, but solely because the suitor who desired to avail himself of the power of the court in that instance was disarmed, because of delay and negligence in taking up the proceedings. The hon. gentleman asked me how I reconciled the view which I had expressed with the view I expressed on a former occasion, in reference to the case which occurred at Calgary. I have no hesitation in saying that the two cases have as marked a distinction between them as cases could possibly have. At the same time every case of the exercise of judicial powers of this kind must, I insist, depend upon its own merits. I admit that the powers of the judges with which they are armed in relation to punishment for contempt are severe; they are unlimited; they are exceedingly exceptional in the particular that they have to be exercised by the party who is himself aggrieved, and the very fact that those powers are so exceptional, so severe and so arbitrary, are reasons for attaching the highest and strictest responsibility on those who undertake to use them. Therefore, while I maintain, as I endeavored to do this afternoon, that those powers exist, and that their existence ought to be maintained, I am willing to go the full length of conceding that their exercise ought to be guarded with the strictest criticism on the part of those who have the right to criticise, and the strictest responsibility with regard to the consequences to the judges themselves. Assuming that those powers were possessed by the two judicial officers, the one class in New Brunswick and the other in Calgary, which I do not admit in regard to the last, except for the purposes of the present argument, we have to consider the cases in which they were exercised for the purpose of seeing whether they were exercised anduly. In the first place I was of opinion that the magistrate in the North-West Territories did not possess the high jurisdiction he undertook to use. He was an inferior magistrate, armed, it is true, with great powers by statute in relation to the administration of justice in the North-West Territories, but not possessing, I think, the inherent powers, in relation to the summary proceedings for contempt which he undertook to exercise.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Had he not the power of a court of record?

Mr. THOMPSON. For certain purposes, and not at all necessarily following that he has the summary right to punish for contempt. There are loose expressions as to the powers of courts of record, but when we come to consider them we will find that broad definitions do not work very well. There are many justices of the peace in this country who are entitled to hold courts of record, and are not entitled to send to prison persons who may criticise their proceedings. In that case, whether he had jurisdiction or not, the procedure by which he undertook to exercise it, was wholly irregular. It was a case, moreover, in which the judge was acting alone. In this case the powers have been exercised by the whole bench, and the judge himself, who was the aggrieved party, not sitting upon the determination of the case. The calumny which was made the subject of the proceedings for contempt in the New Brunswick case, were calumnies against Mr. Justice Fraser—it is true, indirectly they were a reflection upon the court itself, but they were directly imputations against the motives and integrity of Mr. Justice Fraser—and the adjudication has been made by judges of co-ordinate authority who constitute the full bench in that Province. Furthermore as to the reason why one might be disposed to review the decision of the magistrate in the North-West and decline to review the decision of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, on legal grounds such as were presented this afternoon, one might well take this distinction: that in relation to the proceedings in the North-West the editor was absolutely without any remedy, and there was even no habeas corpus. There was no appeal to the Supreme Court, either in relation to the proceedings for contempt—as to which I admit there was no appeal here but there was no jurisdiction in any judge of the Supreme Court of Canada to grant a writ of habeas corpus.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How would habeas corpus remedy the matter? They could not bring before them by a writ of certiorari the proceedings under which Mr. Hawke was imprisoned, and, therefore, they could not determine the legality or illegality of those proceedings. They would be bound by the recitals of fact that in the face of the warrant, and these recitals would not show whether the contempt was one they had a right summarily to punish or not.

Mr. THOMPSON. If the hon. gentleman is right in the contention he presented to us this afternoon, the court is absolutely without jurisdiction and he pressed that argument so far as to contend that this man was right in declining to answer interrogatories.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman will not surely put that in my mouth. I said that the court was within its jurisdiction if it imprisoned a person for contempt of court during the pendency of any proceedings, and that if he was brought up before the Supreme Court of Canada under a habeas corpus, the warrant under which the jailor would act would not show whether the contempt was committed before or after the end of the legal proceedings, and as that court had no power to bring up the proceedings by certiorari, they would be bound simply by the recital of facts on the face of the warrant itself, and could not therefore determine whether the court was right or wrong in imprisoning him.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is impossible for anyone to tell that without seeing the warrant under which he is committed. But when I spoke before dinner about an application for the writ of habeas corpus, I was answering the argument of the hon. gentleman, which was proceeding on the irregularity of these proceedings. That is not the point I am now dealing with. What I am insisting on with regard to the Calgary case is this: that as to the ground taken that there was no jurisdiction for the magistrate to inflict the penalty or make the adjudication, the editor was completely without redress, because, although the warrant might give him a release under the writ of habeas corpus, he had no right to apply for it to any judge of the Supreme Court of Canada. As regards the particular proceedings that took place in the Calgary case, the hon. gentleman put the question to me how I interfered in the Calgary case if I could not interfere here. I will state how the interference took place. The magistrate thought fit to communicate his decision to me for the purpose of getting my observations upon it; and, after the doubt as to his jurisdiction had presented itself not only to my mind, but I may say, perhaps without breach of confidence to the highest judicial authority in this country, I communicated to Mr. Travis by telegram a message like this:

"I think that the prisoner should be released, and your authority will be better preserved if his discharge is your act rather than that of the executive."

Now, it only remains to call the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite, who are pressing this case for the purpose of getting executive interference, to the point, before they press it any further, as to whether there is any authority for the executive to interfere at all in such cases. In the case of Mr. Green, which was discussed in the English House of Commons six or seven years ago, it was stated by the Home Secretary that enquiry had been made, and it was found that there was no precedent whatever for exercising executive interference in cases of contempt. That, it is true, was in relation to a proceeding in which the imprisonment was for the purpose of enforcing an order of the court; and the prisoner remained in contempt; but in consequence of the abolition of the court or some circumstance of that kind, it had been absolutely put beyond the power of the tribunal which imprisoned him to discharge him. Notwithstanding that, it was the opinion of the Home Secretary, after consultation with the highest legal authorities, that the power of executive interference did not exist. In a later case, I think that of Mr. Dwyer Gray, the Lord Chancellor of England stated in the House of Lords, that precedents had been searched for, and that there was no precedent whatever for executive interference in a case of contempt. It is true, there has been a distinction drawn between classes of contempt, cases which were in the line of compulsion and cases which were of a punitive character.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Criminal.

Mr. THOMPSON. Necessarily criminal. The distinction was established only by a decision of a recent date in the Court of Appeal in England. It is a modern distinction, and there is still no precedent whatever in England for executive interference in cases of contempt, whether punitive or otherwise. In all probability, the natural effect of the decision making that distinction would be that executive interference might be had in cases where the punishment was of a punitive character. At the same time, no distinction has in practice been established, and there is no precedent for a case of that kind.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I did not intend to take any part in this debate; but after the position taken by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice, I feel that, situated as I am, it is only right for me to address the House on this subject. The hon. Minister certainly has taken an extraordinary course in this matter. I would have hoped that, situated as he is, as Minister of Justice in this country, as the Attorney General holding a quasi-judicial position, he would have approached this subject in the judicial spirit in which my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) approached it. The question which my hon. friend put before the House was with regard to the exercise of the power by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, which my hon. friend questioned, not only because in his view it was improperly exercised, but also because, if there was such a power in the court, he thought the attention of the Government should be called to it, with the view of abolishing that anomaly in our jurisprudence.

Mr. THOMPSON.

The hon. Minister has devoted most of his attention this evening to points on which we do not disagree. He has made an elaborate defence of Mr. Justice Fraser, and he has also endeavored to point out that the exercise of this jurisdiction exists where there has been an interference with the administration of justice. On either point there has not been the slightest difference so far as we are concerned. I feel a certain delicacy in speaking on this subject. I do not intend to impugn or attack the Supreme Court of New Brunswick; but I must say that if this power does exist, it has been exercised, I will not say in an improper, but certainly not in a judicious manner. The members of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick are gentlemen before whom I appear as a practitioner, and they are friends of mine; and so far as Mr. Justice Fraser is concerned, I do not differ from the hon. Minister in regard to his high character. I have known that hon. gentleman as a judge; we were admitted to the bar together; we enjoyed friendly relations while he was at the bar; and while I regret that his conduct in this case has been a little injudicious, I must say that I have every faith in his honesty and integrity. In that respect, there is no difference between us in this House at all. I must say that the hon. Minister of Justice has not met the argument of the hon. member for Queen's. He has made an elaborate argument upon points on which we do not differ, and it seems to me that my hon. friend, whom I have seen at the bar and whose manner of arguing a case I have admired, was in the position of a distinguished friend of mine and a namesake of the hon. gentleman, when, before our court he was asked—after he had very elaborately before that court argued a point of law—by the Chief Justice: "Mr. Thompson, do you really believe what you are arguing?" "Well," he said, "if it comes to that, I do not, but I want to make the court believe it, if I can." I think my hon. friend is very much in that position, and I do not blame him for it. He is holding a brief and trying to argue it. I would be quite willing to leave it to the honest convictions of my hon. friend to say whether he is right or not, because I believe he is too good a lawyer to have any faith in the law he has expounded to-night. The first point my hon. friend put was with regard to the writ of habeas corpus. If any one of the judges of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick was called on to issue that writ, what would be the result? It would be simply the order or warrant upon which the party was committed, in order to ascertain if the court had the jurisdiction to commit him for the case which appeared upon that warrant. No court could go behind that warrant to ascertain why he was put there. My hon. friend knows that quite well.

Mr. THOMPSON. I know nothing of the kind without seeing the warrant.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I put it, that if, on a warrant of habeas corpus, the warrant was that Mr. Hawke was committed to the custody of the sheriff of the county of York for contempt of court, attested by the hon. the Chief Justice, signed by the clerk, and under the seal of the court, no court in this Dominion has the power to discharge him, and my hon. friend knows that.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not dispute that for one moment, but according to the argument addressed to us this afternoon, no such warrant could have been issued.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). That must have been returned. The return must have been a return to the sheriff of the county of York asking: By what authority do you hold this man in your custody? And the answer would be: By the authority of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick which committed him for contempt of court.

Mr. THOMPSON. That would not be the return at all.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I do not know if the hon. the Minister of Justice has seen a copy of the attachment which has been issued in this case. It was simply to arrest him for contempt of court. The attachment in Mr. Hawke's case I have not seen, but I have seen attachments in similar cases, and therefore speak of what I know. My hon. friend has put forward a defence of Mr. Justice Fraser as if he had been attacked for having changed his mind. Now, what I contend in this case is this: That his Honor Mr. Justice Fraser's attention was called to this point, and while the hon. the Minister of Justice is right in saying that the point was not argued before him at any great length—

Mr. THOMPSON. The question is whether in New Brunswick the writ of certiorari is available with the writ of habeas corpus.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think not. Do you ask to the court itself?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think not.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is in all the other courts of Canada, except the Supreme Court of New Brunswick.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). No doubt the writ of certiorari applies. The Court of New Brunswick and any Supreme Court has the right by writ of certiorari to bring up the record from inferior tribunals, but I know of no power in a court to bring up on a writ of certiorari the proceedings before themselves. The proceeding is in the Supreme Court. How then can it be brought up before that court on a writ of certiorari? The only case in which a court can bring up proceedings against itself is what is called a writ of error, coram nobis. Can a court issue a writ of certiorari to itself? I never heard of such a thing. What is the writ? It is from an inferior court to a higher court, to renew the proceedings of the former. I am not speaking of the effect of an appeal from Cæsar to Cæsar, but of the power of the court itself. My hon. friend informs me there is a habeas corpus, and has also put forward the statement that Mr. Hawke had the right to justify himself on the interrogatories. I am not going to discuss what he had a right to do on the interrogatories. What he did do was to dispute, not only the jurisdiction of the court, but he availed himself of what is the right of every man. He sheltered himself under the right to refuse to admit to what might lead to criminal prosecution. Put a man in an ordinary court of justice, and let him tell the judge that to answer a certain question might subject him to a criminal prosecution, and the judge will hold that he has a right to refuse to answer. Mr. Hawke refused to answer. On this point I would like to refer to the answer made by Mr. Horace Greely, when he was brought before a judge for contempt of court. His answer was this:

"For answer to the interrogatories filed and served on him says that he is now and ever since its formation has been the principal editor of the newspaper called The Tribune and is one of its proprietors, by being a stockholder of the corporation that holds the same. That, as such editor and proprietor he is subject to all the responsibilities that justly pertain to that relation. Believing that this avowal is a substantial answer to all the interrogatories propounded to him, he most respectfully declines to answer any questions that may expose any of his associates in the editorship and publication of said newspaper, in the discipline of this tribunal, preferring to abide the consequences, be they what they may."

I will add what the court did in that case. The court decided that no disrespect was intended, and discharged Mr. Greely. So much with regard to the points made by my hon. friend as to the question of interrogatories. Now, we come to the real, the serious question, which is the one my hon. friend intended to bring up. It is the question of the position of the courts, not only of New Brunswick but of the whole Dominion, with regard to this power. My hon. friend has pointed out that in days gone by, the judges held the decision of the question whether an article was a libel or not, was in their power to decide. The old doctrine, that the decision as to what constitutes a libel was a question of law with which the jury had nothing to do, and that the only question for the jury to decide was the publication, is now obsolete. When in Parliament the law was altered, we find that the question of libel was made a question for the jury to decide, and thus it is that the judges of New Brunswick, in order to sustain the position they have taken, have to go back to cases of remote date for the purpose of establishing a precedent to Chief Justice Wilmut in the case of Rex vs. Almon, when the latter was indicted as the publisher of Junius' letters, which for their language, their bitterness, and their calumny, if I may use the terms my hon. friend has used, far exceeded any of the articles now complained of. My hon. friend has failed to show any authority in the present day. He has read the language of the justices as to what is the right, and what we contend is that, in the present state of society, the present position in which we stand, it comes to the question of libel or no libel. We should come to the standpoint laid down by Erskine and Fox, and let a man be tried by his peers, and by a jury of twelve of his fellow countrymen. The hon. gentleman says that, if that were followed, the judges would have to come down from their high station and be tried by their inferiors. If Her Majesty's representative in this Dominion were libelled, he would have no power to commit a man for contempt, and, if judges are placed in that position, is it not for the public safety and for the freedom of the press that they also should seek the ordinary tribunals? I am not here to defend these articles or to say whether they were right or wrong. In my opinion, they were too strong and were not justified by the occasion, but that is not the question. The question is whether the courts should have that arbitrary power and should be accusers, judges and executioners. My hon. friend says that Mr. Justice Fraser took no part in the decision. It is true that he did not; he very properly retired from the bench at that time; but I was present in the court when the proceedings took place, and the first article which was read was a reflection upon the court, and it was so held, and consequently the judges were passing an opinion in regard to themselves. My hon. friend elaborated at great length the point that Mr. Justice Fraser did right in correcting a mistake. I agree with him in that. I think, when a judge comes to a conclusion that he was in error, he ought to correct the mistake; but, it is most unfortunate that, when Mr. Justice Fraser's attention was called to that mistake—and the Minister of Justice does not dispute that his attention was called to it—he did not give that consideration to it which he afterwards gave. No doubt in that he is fortified by the decision of judges in other courts who had taken the same view, and he had a perfect right afterwards to change his view and correct his decision, and I do not find fault with that, because we find that judges often change their opinions after hearing arguments. That, however, is not the question. The question is that, after the matter was disposed of, after it had become a matter of the past, a record of judicial decision which was past and gone, the court should be supposed to have a right to bring a party up who chooses to criticise them. If my hon. friend is right, there is no limit to that. Mr. Hawke might have waited for two years and then criticised the decision, and, according to my hon. friend, he could still be made amenable. I put it to the hon. gentleman, if that article had been written on the 1st May instead of being written in November, would Mr.

Hawke have been amenable to the jurisdiction of the court when six months had passed? In regard to the Dwyer Gray case, my hon. friend spoke as if the court was sitting when the articles were written. It was not. The court had closed. My hon. friend from Westmoreland seemed to be very much interested in that case, but it is very strange that his counsel did not appeal during the six months, but waited until the end of the term, and then applied on the ground that the time had elapsed. It was a very nice little catch.

Mr. THOMPSON. Had there not been a decision in the meantime by Judge Wallbridge?

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I have no recollection of such a decision, but it is singular that at the beginning of the term there was no application made, but at the end of the term it was made. My hon. friend used the term "convict" in regard to Mr. Hawke. I am not here to defend or justify Mr. Hawke or the position which he took. I think this matter takes a broader ground. It is based on broader grounds than the mere individual, but I think it is unfortunate that the Minister of Justice should have applied that term to him. He is not a convict. He has been fined and imprisoned, as Mr. Dwyer Gray was fined and imprisoned when he was high sheriff of the city of Dublin and a member of Parliament, but I do not think that term was ever applied to him. The hon. gentleman has referred to that case and also to the Johnson case, which he read from the January number of the Law Reports. That was a case of actual contempt of court, where, in going out of the court the man said, he would pay him off. That was committed in the aula regis, in the presence of the Crown, because the judges are supposed to represent the Crown, and he undertook to make a threat against the party in the aula regis, which was just as much a contempt as if he had struck the judge on the bench. In the judgment of Lord Esher, it is clear that the case was pending on an interlocutory proceeding in the courts, and that, an order having been served on a solicitor to produce papers, before he went out of the court, he made this attack on the other solicitor, and used this opprobrious language which they held was not a constructive contempt of court but an actual contempt of court. What I want to draw the attention of my hon. friend to is that the Johnson case was an interlocutory case, that it was a matter in Chambers, that it was a matter then proceeding, and, in consequence of the order of the court, this difficulty arose between the two solicitors. The court might have taken up the proceeding, because the man was an officer of the court, but it did not take that ground, but took the ground that it was an actual contempt of court. My hon. friend did not rely so much on that case, but he put forward the Dwyer Gray case as being exactly a case in point, and he turned up the Parliamentary proceedings in reference to the matter of privilege. But this is not a question of privilege, and in the Dwyer Gray case, what was the position? He was the sheriff, and had to summon the jurors in that case, and he used some extraordinary remarks in his newspaper. Mr. Justice Lawson had been appointed to try several cases of a similar character under a special commission issued for that purpose. Mr. Dwyer Gray, as editor of the Freeman, made strong remarks on the conduct of the jury in the first case tried. All the cases turned on the same point, and it was supposed that the language would bias the jurors in the other cases. It was not in reference to the case that was past, but it was supposed that it would bias and influence the jurors in the cases that were to follow. Now, when we come to the decision of Justice Lawson, we find that it does not support the proposition put forth by my hon. friend. In that case a panel of jurors was in existence from which the jury had been drawn and cases had been tried and convictions obtained, and similar indictments were drawn in other cases. After deciding that the articles were contempt of court, Justice Lawson said:

Mr. WELDON (St. John).

"I think the earlier ones containing these atrocious allegations about the exclusion of Catholics from the jury, are especially a contempt of court, and they are written for one purpose and one purpose only, to excite in the minds of the gentlemen of that persuasion, attending upon the jury panel, an idea that they are ostracised, or unfairly dealt with and the intention is that when any Catholics are called upon a subsequent jury there should be an impression left on their minds which would prevent them and interfere with them in the due and proper discharge of their duty."

Justice Lawson says that when the Catholics, who, Dwyer Gray says were ostracised—that when they went on a subsequent jury, the impression left by these articles upon their minds was such as would interfere with the proper administration of justice. He says:

"In my opinion jurors, of all persons in the community, require to be protected in the discharge of their duties. As to judges, that is not much matter; they are probably able to protect themselves; but jurors come here and act without fee or reward; they undertake, not voluntarily, but compulsorily, the most arduous duties."

Then again he says:

"I think the position of Mr. Gray greatly aggravates his offence. I think he owed a duty to the court which he has most seriously neglected. If there were imputations against these gentlemen, there was a mode of obtaining a proper enquiry; if there is an imputation against the Crown for having packed a jury, after the commission is over that may be enquired into in the proper place; but during the pendency of the commission, to attack the Crown for packing juries, and jurors for acting improperly on insufficient evidence, and to attack the judge for rejecting evidence which he ought to have admitted, that is a state of things which cannot be tolerated."

Mark the emphasis which Justice Lawson puts upon the case—during the pendency of the commission, not after the commission was over. Then we find that subsequently, when he reduced the fine, he said this:

"The power of the superior court to commit for contempt in part of the common law of England, and is essential in order to protect the free administration of justice. It should, however, be used strictly in defence of the proceedings of the court for the protection of suitors, and all those engaged in the administration of justice, including jurors, witnesses, and those engaged in the conduct of the prosecution and defence of criminals."

My hon. friend said it was a contempt of court to arrest a witness, and in seeking precedents, he brought forward the case of a witness arrested which was held to be a contempt of court. Now, I have had some experience at the bar with regard to witnesses being arrested, and I never heard that it was a contempt of court.

Mr. THOMPSON. I can satisfy the hon. gentleman on that subject in five minutes.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In our practice I never heard of such a thing. If I have a right against a man to arrest him, if he is protected by the process of the court, he simply asks the protection of the court. But how does any one know whether a man is a witness or not? If there is an attempt to arrest him, he applies to the court and gets protection. But that has nothing to do with this case. In the case the hon. gentleman cited it would come within the doctrine laid down, and upon which there is no dispute, because it would interfere with the administration of justice and prevent a man attending for the purpose of giving evidence. Justice Lawson goes on to say:

"If these are attacked, a prompt and immediate check must be applied, for to wait for the result of an ordinary trial of the offender would be to deny any remedy, because the mischief would have been completed before the remedy could be applied. It had been at all times used to check and restrain the publication of articles calculated to prejudice pending proceedings; and its exercise in the Tichborne and other cases in England, has had a very salutary effect, and the very knowledge of its existence, though it is not called into action, tends to check improper license."

Now, Mr. Speaker, Justice Lawson there refers to the Tichborne case. There was the case of Onslow and Whalley. While that case was being tried before Lord Chief Justice Cockburn, a number of gentlemen, members of Parliament, went down and made inflammatory speeches to prejudice the case, and they were brought up and fined on the ground that the speeches they delivered, although members of Parliament, were such as would tend to interfere with the administration of justice. After these gentlemen had been brought before the Queen's Bench and fined, on a decision of Justice Blackburn—no doubt the Minister of Justice is familiar with it—Mr. Skipworth, a barrister, chose to go down to Bristol, I think it was, and make a speech attacking the decision of the court in their finding, and he was brought up and fined and committed to prison, because at that time proceedings were pending in the case of the Queen against Tichborne. In the Dublin case Mr. Justice Lawson went on to say :

" During the course of my judicial experience, I have only had occasion to exercise it once before the present time, in a case at Belfast, to which I referred in giving judgment in the present case. I was presiding over an important commission, at which a great number of prisoners were to be tried for the Belfast riots. An article was written in a local journal after the first important conviction had taken place, impeaching the conduct of the proceedings and calculated to prejudice the minds of jurors and prevent them from the free exercise of their judgment in the other cases pending. It was brought before me, on motion, by those representing the Attorney General, and I visited the publisher with fine and imprisonment. An attempt was made to quash that order in the courts above, which failed, the result being that the fine was paid, having been with some difficulty and delay collected from his friends, and the injurious publication instantly seized. The proceedings of the court were carried on without further molestation, and Belfast was restored to tranquility. I regret to say that a precisely similar attempt was made with respect to the present commission, at a time when every legal and law-abiding citizen throughout the Empire was congratulating himself that at last a way had been found by judicious alteration of the place and mode of trial. Still adhering to the ancient lines of the constitution of escaping from the paralysis of justice under which, for so many years, complete impunity had been enjoyed by offenders of a certain class, and then the forces of the law seemed at last likely to cope unsuccessfully with crime and outrage, at that critical moment the publisher of a widely circulating journal endeavored, by a series of articles, to discredit the proceedings of this commission and to destroy the moral effect of unimpeachable verdicts, by representing that they were arrived at by packed juries selected on a principle of religious sectarianism, the publisher being himself the sheriff who was bound by his office to aid in the administration of the law."

So much for the strong case, in fact the only case by which the Minister has attempted to impugn the position taken by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), that after the proceedings are over, after the matter is closed, criticism by a newspaper is a subject for judicial proceeding. The Minister of Justice has said that when judges are maligned the offenders should not go unpunished. If the hon. gentleman will go down to the Supreme Court he will find recorded the case of a judge against a man for libel. Judge Walkem, of British Columbia, before he went on the bench, was attacked as Attorney General and charged with having committed gross frauds, and that he was therefore unfit to be a judge, he was asserted to be guilty of corruption as Attorney General and therefore guilty of corruption as a judge. What did he do? He did not seek the protection of the court, but he went before a jury and got a verdict and showed the accusation to be a scandalous libel. If Mr. Hawke had exceeded the limits, let an indictment or criminal information be laid against him, and if, after the jury decided that he had exceeded the bounds of just criticism and was guilty of a foul and scandalous libel, I think no punishment would be too severe in such a case in regard to libel on a judge. The hon. gentleman has referred to the case of Sharpe, and mentioned that after a long time Sharpe was brought to justice. After Sharpe's conviction, and when Judge Barrett had refused a new trial, his attorneys got an order, I think from Chief Justice Ruger, to stay proceedings before the Court of Appeal in New York. When the case was brought before that court, it was decided that the conviction was wrong, and they ordered a new trial. The articles in the press of New York, as compared with the articles written by Mr. Hawke, were extremely severe, and it was openly declared that Chief Justice Rutger and the Court of Appeal had been bought. Any lawyer who read the judgment of Judge Peckham, who delivered the judgment in the Court of Appeals, would not hesitate to say that the judgment was correct, and that evidence had been improperly admitted. No doubt the hon. Minister would concur in that decision, yet the press of New York had no hesitation in charging Chief Justice Ruger and the Court of Appeal with having improperly stayed proceedings and declaring, that if Sharpe had been a poor man the judgment of the court below would not have been reversed, and no attempt has been made by the court to bring those newspaper editors before them for contempt. The hon. gentleman referred to the court of New York and the case of Judge Lawrence. The code in the State of New York is this :

" Every court of record may punish disorderly, contemptuous or insolent behavior in the immediate presence of the court tending to interrupt its proceedings and impair the respect due to authority."

So the very case cited by the hon. gentleman shows that it is with reference to interference to the administration of justice. The Minister of Justice also referred to the case of Dallas against Ledger and the decision given by Mr. Justice Field and Mr. Justice Stephen, and the hon. gentleman put forward very ingeniously those decisions; but they put forward very clearly the view that judges and jury might be criticised after the case is over. The hon. gentleman also quoted a case in Chicago. The case was that while the grand jury were in session and during the continuance of proceedings connected with the administration of justice, a newspaper editor published an article which was calculated to interfere with the administration of justice or to bias the grand jury in that case, precisely as Mr. Justice Lawson put it in the Gray case, where there was an attempt to bias Catholics put on the jury in subsequent cases. This case is not, however, at all analogous to the case now under discussion, because in the present case it was after the proceedings had been closed, whereas in the Chicago case it was when the grand jury was in session. The hon. gentleman also referred to the Calgary case, and he said the judge was acting alone. I say he was a judge of record, and as such he had the same power as the judge of the highest court in the land. The hon. gentleman admitted that he was a court of record to some extent. If he was a court of record at all, I do not care to what extent, the same power that is possessed by the Supreme Court of Canada in this particular goes down to the lowest court of the Dominion. If Judge Travis sitting there as a stipendiary magistrate was a court of record he had the same power as the Chief Justice of Canada, whether sitting alone or in connection with his brethren on the bench. In that case I understand the Minister of Justice acted as a court of appeal and reviewed the decision; and the hon. gentleman has the same right to review the decision in this case, if he chooses to exercise it. I understand—and I believe the hon. gentleman was in power at the time—that some time ago a man was indicted in Quebec for a libel on the mayor of Quebec, who is the highest civic officer. It was a foul and slanderous libel on the occupant of the civic chair. The offender was convicted by a jury, not by the mayor himself, but by a fair and impartial tribunal and was sentenced to fine and imprisonment, and if I am correctly informed the imprisonment and fine have been remitted by the Dominion Government acting through the Minister of Justice.

Mr. THOMPSON. I suppose the hon. gentleman knows why. He knows I did not review that case; that the fine was not remitted, but that on medical certificate. I ordered his release, as I have already informed the House.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I accept the hon. gentleman's statement. I understand that when the imprisonment was remitted that involved the remission of the fine. A few words with regard to the power of appeal. The late Judge Ramsay, of Quebec, addressed a letter to Judge Drummond, and was fined. He took the case to the Privy Council and they ordered the fine to be remitted. Then the cases of Pollard, in Hong Kong, and Wallace, in Nova Scotia, were also in point. I simply wish to show that when these cases were brought before the Queen in Council the Judicial Committee recommended the Crown to remit the fines in those cases respectively. The matter has of course gone a little farther than what may have been intended. First, as to the right of the courts, I need not repeat again the language of those noble Lords who have been referred to by my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies), where judges of the standing of Lord Fitzgerald, have given their opinion, and Lord Bramwell who stands as one of the most experienced judges in England entirely agreed with Lord Fitzgerald. We find those judges saying that it was a power rarely exercised, and we find in a late case to which my hon. friend has referred, Mr. Justice Field and Mr. Justice Stephen speaking of it as a vague and undefinable right. The judges of New Brunswick are my personal friends and I know that they stand in high estimation for integrity in the Dominion. I do not impute the slightest vindictiveness to them, but I think it is unfortunate that this matter has been brought to the position in which it is now. In a case like this I would like if the court had been allowed to stand on its own high position and dignity. If judges fearlessly and honestly do their duty the people of this country will support them; no matter what libel or slander may be cast upon them, it will never stain the ermine if they do their duty fairly. There is no suspicion as regards the high integrity of the judges of the court in New Brunswick, and I would much prefer under those circumstances that they would have allowed this matter to remain as it was. I believe the true and correct position of the case is put forward fairly in the Empire of a few days ago. As I can use no better language in expounding what I believe the proper principle to be maintained in this case than that which is used in that paper, I will read it. In the preceding part of the article they express no sympathy for Mr. Hawke, but on the contrary they do not at all justify his course. The Empire says as follows:—

"While the common law stands as the justification of the courts for punishing contempt, we may expect it to be exercised from time to time. Some judges who have been attacked in the press, and not only their law but their motives questioned, have—as we think wisely—passed over the offence, relying upon their high character and their eminent public services as their shield and protection. There are, we believe, few judges in Canada who might not do the same. Judge Fraser of the New Brunswick Supreme Court, a gentleman of the highest reputation, might safely have done so. As matters have gone, there is now a personal contest into which party politics have largely entered, and out of which no good to the bench or the public can come. The editor of the Transcript might have written against Judge Fraser until doomsday without injury to the judge's reputation, whereas now he is elevated to an importance he does not deserve in the public eye, and the judges of the Supreme Court are practically put on their defence in connection with a case out of which can come no honor for them. The question too is raised as to whether judges should be allowed to punish journalists for expressions of opinion delivered in their newspapers after the public trial of cases of public interest. A judge's right to maintain order in his court when engaged in hearing cases is unquestioned; without the exercise of this prerogative, courts of law might be paralysed and their usefulness destroyed. In such cases committal to prison on the ipse dixit of a judge is right enough. But we think the time has come when men engaged in discussing public affairs of the nation in public journals should be relieved of the danger of being sent to prison as criminals on the personal order of a judge, without trial by their peers. There can be no doubt of the idea of judges sitting as accusers, judges and jury, all in one, being repugnant to the ideas of personal liberty and independence which prevail at the present day. The country is governed by intelligent public sentiment, and judges, like other officers of the Crown, may safely rely upon enlightened public opinion for their protection. Their public services, their impartiality, ability and high personal character form a better protection than can be secured through committing offenders to prison or the imposition of fines and costs. We recognise the fact that the law, while within the reach of judges, has been seldom appealed to, and that unjust criticism of the decisions of our courts is seldom seen. This is due not to the fact that the power of imprisonment is in the hands of judges, but to the general belief that the judges are fair minded," honorably, capable men, and to a general recognition of the social necessity that exists for preserving a bench without reproach. Under all these circumstances, it would seem to be time to declare that there should no longer be that anomaly in our constitution which enables one of Her Majesty's subjects, of his own motion, to arrest and imprison without trial another subject of Her Majesty for offences alleged to have been committed in connection with the exercise of the liberty of public discussion. The judges should, in our opinion, be placed on the same footing as other citizens. If they are libelled in the press, if they are falsely accused, let them appeal to the courts and to a jury of their fellow countrymen, who will not fail to see that ample justice is done."

Mr. WELDON (St. John).

I look upon that as an exposition of the proper position in which this matter should be placed. I am one who is prepared to uphold and maintain the dignity of the bench. I will be one always ready to defend that respect and honor which should be paid to the judges, but I do think it is an anomaly in our procedure that judges can sit as accusers, and as judges, and jury and executioners, over a matter where the party accused has no chance of being tried by his peers. I do not believe that such a proceeding is at all necessary for the maintenance of the dignity and the position of the bench. I quite agree with the writer of this article that the bench can sustain their own position, and that fair-minded and honorable judges will always maintain the respect of the public, and that by their dignity on the bench, by their judicial decisions, the judges will maintain that respect which should be accorded to them. If it is assailed, I believe that all right-minded men in Canada will rally around them and protect them. I believe that such protection as is guaranteed by the public opinion of the country, will be far beyond any punishment or fine they may place on any editor, or anyone else who chooses to assail them through the columns of a newspaper. I would like to have not said anything on this subject. I would have preferred to have remained silent in this matter, not only from my professional but also on account of my personal connection with the judges of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. I have the highest respect for them. I have been before them for a great many years, and notwithstanding what was said either against the court or Mr. Justice Fraser, I believe that if the matter had not been brought to its present position there would not be the slightest stain of any kind upon the bench, and that the respect in which they are now held by the people of New Brunswick would still have remained intact and untarnished by any remarks that were made.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). Everyone admits, Mr. Speaker, the undoubted privilege of a member of the House of Commons to challenge the conduct of the judiciary of any Province where there is supposed to be a case of hardship or inhumanity, as we are members of the high court of Parliament. We all recognise, however, that this great privilege is one singularly liable to abuse, and that we, in the exercise of our freedom, may pervert this privilege into an engine of mischief. We feel the danger the greater for the reason that the men accused are absent men, and that they are men the maintenance of whose exalted reputation is of supreme importance to the whole country. I think the House may be congratulated upon the excellent temper that has been shown by all the speakers who have taken part in the debate; although some weeks ago when this matter was discussed, we had occasion to regret that remarks so severe were uttered, as were then uttered. If the question before the House were a Bill for the amendment of the law of contempt, I might agree with one-half of what has been said by the hon. member for Queen's, P. E. I. (Mr. Davies) and the hon. member for the city and county of St. John (Mr. Weldon). But the matter before the House is not to amend the law of contempt, we are not in committee on such a Bill, and we are not discussing the second reading of a Bill in this direction. The precise question before the House is this: Shall we urge the hon. Minister to exercise his executive clemency in respect to Mr. Hawke, who now lies in the county jail in Fredericton?

I have followed the argument of the hon. gentleman who has moved in this matter, and the only reason he has given is this: That as the law of England stands to-day, there is no precedent in the English authorities for the imprisonment of one whose contempt is of the character of scandalising the court after the judicial proceedings have terminated. The hon. gentleman distinguished between three species of contempt—first, those which are contempts in the face of the court, and therefore obstruct business; second, those which are prejudicial to the interests of parties when the cases are sub-judice—and he agreed that these two classes were punishable in a summary manner; but in respect to the third species of contempt, which had the effect of scandalising the court, weakening its authority, and lowering it in the estimation of the people after the case was closed, he said there was no English law affirming the power of a court to commit. I affirm that the cases which the hon. the Minister of Justice has cited themselves abundantly support him in the position that there was power, and that the Supreme Court of New Brunswick rightly interpreted the English law, whether it be humane and wise or not, when it punished Mr. Hawke for the very strong and offensive words which he wrote in the Transcript newspaper. The hon. member for St. John county cited among his cases the case of Rex vs. Almon, and I will read a short paragraph from the opinion of Chief Justice Wilmot in that case in which our contention is affirmed. This is cited by Chief Justice Harrison in his judgment on the "Big Push" case:

"The arraignment of the justice of the judges is arraigning the King's justice; it is an impeachment of his wisdom and goodness in the choice of his judges, and excites in the minds of the people a general dissatisfaction with all judicial determinations, and indisposes their minds to obey them; and, whenever men's allegiance to the laws is so fundamentally shaken, it is the most fatal and most dangerous obstruction of justice, and, in my opinion, calls out for more rapid and immediate redress than any other obstruction whatever; not for the sake of the judges as private individuals, but because they are the channels by which the King's justice is conveyed to the people. To be impartial, and to be universally thought so, are both absolutely necessary for the giving justice that free, open and uninterrupted current, which it has, for many ages, found all over this kingdom, and which so eminently distinguishes and exalts it above all nations upon the earth."

I commend those sober and weighty words to the hon. members opposite. Reference was made once more to the Johnson case; and I affirm once more, despite what hon. gentlemen opposite say, that the Johnson case is a case of the third class, that of scandalising the court after the case is closed. It is the case of two solicitors, one of whom used abusive language and threatening gestures towards the other. Their conduct does not seem to have obstructed the business of the court; it occurred somewhere between the entrance to the building and the judges' room.

Mr. WELDON (St John). But while the case was proceeding in court.

Mr. WELDON. (Albert) The judge had apparently gone out of his room; but it did not obstruct the business and did not prejudice the rights of the parties in the case. Lord Escher affirms:

"It may possibly be that I have too much restricted the doctrine on the subject by suggesting that there would be a limit of time or space with regard to the question whether such conduct amounted to a contempt. It may be that there would be no such limit of time or space, provided the acts done or expressions used could be considered an interference with the course of justice."

I think it is within the spirit and the words of that ruling to consider that Mr. Hawke's articles published in the Transcript newspaper might be an interference with the current of justice. With reference to the case in the Law Times, from which the hon. gentleman cited the opinion of Sir Fitzjames Stephen and Mr. Justice Field, the hon. gentleman I know inadvertently stated that Sir Fitzjames Stephen had found no cases affirming the existence of any power for punishing this kind of contempt. The hon. gentleman was inadvertent in stating that, for Sir Fitz-

James Stephen said nothing of the kind. I have read the whole case. The case is not at all similar to this one. That was an action of libel against a newspaper, this is a case of contempt. There the words complained of were uttered on behalf of little children who were singing on the stage; the newspaper published them in the interest of humanity; it used strong but temperate language; and no one would attempt placing these words of the New Era side by side with what was written by Mr. Hawke. Let me read a few words more from the "Big Push" case. At page 111 are these strong words of Chief Justice Harrison:

"Let it be understood, once for all, by the press of this Province that a defamatory attack upon a judge of a superior court for a judgment pronounced by him with other judges in court, is more than a contempt of the judge who is maligned—that it is a contempt of the court of which he is a judge; and that the court has the power to punish an affront thereby offered to the court."

At page 113 reasons are given for the existence of the doctrine that we are laying down:

"There is no privilege for any man in Canada, under the pretext of the public good, rashly to assail in the public press any of our judges for his conduct on the bench, and to impute to the judge assailed conduct so wicked and corrupt as to render him wholly unfit to occupy the distinguished and responsible position of a seat on the bench."

These are the words of Chief Justice Harrison. He distinctly lays down the rule that newspapers are not privileged to make such attacks. The strongest case cited by the hon. member for Queen's in support of his position, that the third species of contempt is not punishable in a summary way, was that referred to in a speech of Lord Fitzgerald in the House of Lords five years ago. I have the Hansard from which the hon. member read, and let me say that immediately after the speech of Lord Fitzgerald is a speech of another eminent lawyer, the present Lord Chief Justice of England, Lord Coleridge, in which he dissects entirely from the view taken by Lord Fitzgerald. I will read a few words of it:

"He could not agree with his noble and learned friend behind him (Lord Fitzgerald) that a material alteration should be made in the law as to constructive contempt. Judging from his present experience, he thought the practical importance of the subject had been a good deal overestimated. He himself had never imprisoned but one man for contempt, and that was only for twenty-four hours; and he was a person who could not be got rid of without ordering his removal out of court in custody. But with regard to constructive contempt, his noble and learned friend had forgotten that offences were sometimes committed, not in the face of the court, which, nevertheless, impeded the administration of justice."

He goes on to speak of certain causes of offence, and says further:

"He had hardly ever seen persons committed for contempt except in cases where the contempt was outrageous; and he did not believe that instances of constructive contempt were at all common. He thought, therefore, it would be better to leave the matter where it was, and there was no reason to believe that judges would exceed their powers. A court of appeal could not be such a good judge of what particular act amounted to constructive contempt as the judge who had tried the action in which the contempt had been committed."

But let me say that the hon. member for Queen's misstated the views of Lord Fitzgerald. He said that Lord Fitzgerald declared that the law of England, in 1883, was that there was no power to commit for contempt after a case is closed. Now, Lord Fitzgerald, on the contrary expressly says that the law of England regards such acts as contempts.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.L.). I did not say that.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). You did. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, but I took his words down, because I knew that he was making an inexact statement of the law, and Hansard will show which of us is right. The hon. gentleman stated that he had read Lord Fitzgerald's opinion, and that Lord Fitzgerald's opinion was that the law of England to-day declares that there is no such power as this for committing for contempt after the case has closed, Lord Fitzgerald was asking for reform of the law, and he stated the law to be exactly the opposite of what the hon. member for Queen's has said it is, and Lord Fitzgerald's opinion is all the more valuable because he believed the law to be harsh and unwise, and required to be amended; and, at the time, he was speaking in committee on the second reading of the Bill to amend it. So that Lord Fitzgerald, the hon. gentleman's main witness, is an adverse witness. The real reasons given by the hon. gentleman, I will not follow. I think the question is one to be settled by authority, and I think the authorities in those five cases are clearly with us. But hon. gentlemen opposite have raised some imaginary dangers in this connection. They state that this is an alarming power with which to clothe the judges. In answer to that, I would say that with the experience we have had for years, we have not found that this power has been abused, we have not found that there have been any serious complaint regarding its exercise; and that though we have a long history in this country, no one can point to any abuse of that power. The judges are amenable to public opinion, they are chosen from the highest ranks, they are selected from the best men in the country, and they are in the highest degree amenable to public opinion; and I will hazard the statement that to-day the representatives of the leading papers of the country, the gentlemen in the gallery would much rather, if at any time, in the heat of temper, spurred by momentary passion and impatience, they should write what might be considered libellous, they would far rather have their case submitted to any of the superior courts of the Provinces for adjudication than to any jurors; and, like honorable gentlemen, if they had made a mistake, they would be willing, when they came to their sober minds and their party feeling had cooled down, to apologise for their attacks. Our English constitution provides sufficient remedies against the abuse of the power to commit for contempt. A judge is not above the law, assuming our theory is right as to this doctrine of contempt. Under the Imperial Acts of 1782 and 1818, which Acts have been declared by the Crown lawyers to be in force in colonies with constitutions like our own, the Governor in Council can remove an offending judge, if immediate action is required; and if not, it will be time enough to obtain a remedy when Parliament is sitting. He can be removed by the Crown upon a joint address of the two Houses.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Can a judge be removed without the addresses of both Houses of Parliament?

Mr. WELDON (Albert). No doubt he can under the Imperial Acts of 1782 and 1818, which have been declared to be in force in the colony of Victoria, which has a constitution in this matter precisely similar to our own. In the constitution of the colony of Victoria, there is a section similar to section 99 in the British North America Act, which provides that the judges can be removable on the joint address of the two Houses; and the opinion was given by Sir William Atherton and Sir Richard Bethell, the one Attorney General and the other Solicitor General in England, that in the colony of Victoria in 1862, and again in 1864, in New South Wales, these Acts of 1782 and 1818, which empower the Governor in Council to remove a misbehaving judge, were undoubtedly in force.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Statutes so late as those are not held to be in force in this country.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). If the hon. gentleman will give the matter more attention, I am satisfied he will come to a different opinion. Another material contention of hon. gentlemen opposite was that this power was unnecessary, and that a judge has a proper way of vindicating himself under the law of the land. They argue that a judge has an action of damages, and can institute criminal proceedings to vindicate his character. I answer that by saying that, under our constitution, a judge holds an altogether exceptional position. Our constitution declares that he shall not be dragged into the courts either to vindicate his rights or to defend himself, and, therefore, he is given this effective remedy. I can only express my regret that this trouble has arisen. An unwise young man went down to the east and brought into political discussions there an acerbity hitherto unknown. He ran amuck against everything and everybody, and by-and-bye ran amuck against the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, which has that sterling old English quality of self-respect. His friends say that he is a young fellow of good impulses, and I am not going to say a word against him. He is in jail, and can thank himself for it. He wanted to be a martyr and he has achieved martyrdom; and he is not entitled to as much sympathy as, under other circumstances, all generous hearts would feel for him, because, after his first offence he continued defiant, against the advice of his best friends, strong friends in his own party, who said to him: You have done wrong, your words were too strong, you have fallen under the ban of the law, and should apologise. But disregarding all these representations, he refused to retract what he had said, and consequently has gone to jail. I was glad to hear the manly words of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) in vindicating the character of Mr. Justice Fraser, and I desire to endorse what he said. For many years Judge Fraser's long, honorable, and useful life has lain before the public like an open book. When he was in politics, his life was by the consent of both parties held, in a singular degree, to be blameless. The foremost exponent of Liberal principles in New Brunswick—I mean no disrespect to any member from New Brunswick sitting opposite—for many years, the late Mr. William Elder, who was a member of the New Brunswick Legislature for years and was considered the ablest Liberal in the House, although he differed from Mr. Fraser in Dominion politics, had so high an admiration for his integrity and ability that he gave him his unwavering support, and his confidence in him was simply the tribute of respect to his high personal character.

Mr. LISTER. I shall ask the attention of the House this evening for a very few moments while I attempt to reply to the statements of the hon. the Minister of Justice and the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. I listened with close attention to the speech of the hon. the Minister of Justice, and I must say that, so far as I am concerned at all events, the speech made by him was disappointing. If the hon. gentleman had been applying to the court for criminal information against the gentleman now in jail, or if he had been prosecuting that gentleman under an indictment for libel, I could have understood his speech. I think he was hardly fair in the statements and arguments he made in answer to the speech of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies). That hon. gentleman opened his address by stating he was surprised that the hon. member for Queen's had not made a motion asking the Government to take some steps in this matter, but the hon. gentleman must know that, if the hon. member for Queen's had made such a motion and placed it upon the Order Paper, it could not have been reached this Session, and that if he had made this motion on going into Supply the supporters of the Government would have been bound to vote it down as a motion of want of confidence. My hon. friend from Queen's, in moving this resolution, has been actuated solely by the desire to have this case carefully and judicially discussed; and if it is shown that Mr. Hawke is improperly imprisoned, if it is shown that there is any doubt at all as to the right of the court which imprisoned him to grant that order, the object in bringing this case before the high court of Parliament is to have right done in the premises and to obtain the release of the gentleman in question. Now, hon. gentlemen have spoken of the high character and the integrity of the judges in the Province of New Brunswick, and the position they occupy. So far as these gentlemen are concerned, I have nothing to say. I know nothing against them, I know nothing for them, and I have a right to presume that, occupying the position they do, they are honorable men; but, in this case, there is a broader and a greater principle at stake which affects the liberty of the press in this country and the rights of the people, and the question is whether they shall be imprisoned by tribunals other than those which we have been accustomed to look to? That is the question which this high court of Parliament has to consider, and in arguing this question the hon. gentleman who has just spoken and the Minister of Justice have endeavored to justify the action of the court in New Brunswick on the ground that this man, who did not commit a contempt in the face of the court, who did not commit what is called by them a constructive contempt, was guilty of a contempt in scandalising the court after all proceedings had ended, and that that justified the court in exercising the great powers which the Minister of Justice says they possess. These are dangerous powers, powers which are dangerous to the safety of the people of this country, and, instead of extending them, the object of Parliament should be to contract them. They are a remnant of an age which has passed away, of a power which existed in the past of the judiciary of the country, and which should not exist in a free country such as we have. Rights have been granted to us, and one of those rights is that a man shall not be deprived of his liberty except upon the verdict of his peers and to say that the judiciary shall be encouraged in bringing a culprit, as they call him, before them, trying him without evidence, being themselves the prosecutors and the judges, to say that this should exist in this country is advancing a theory which is dangerous to the liberties of the people and should be restricted if it does exist. But I contend that no such power exists in the judiciary of this Dominion. I say that the right to commit for contempt exists where the contempt is committed in the face of the court, and where it is necessary for the preservation of order and the dignity of the proceedings that the person who interferes with the court in its proceedings should be committed, and it exists where a person slanders or libels the court in a proceeding then pending, and that for the manifest reason that such an article must be an interference with the proper administration of justice. To tell us that, because a man happens to be a judge, he is over and above the law, is to state an absurdity which will not find a resting place in the thinking minds of this day. It is for the preservation of the public and for the preservation of the dignity of the courts that this right is given to the courts, and the moment the object ceases, that moment the right of the court to inflict the penalty ceases also. To tell us that because a man is a judge of a court he has a right to take a power to himself that no other citizen of the country, whether high or low, possesses, is to tell us something which we cannot receive and which does not exist. Suppose for a moment that Judge Fraser had been a drunken judge, that he had been drunk upon the bench, shall it be said that the publisher or editor of a paper who is bold enough to come forward and denounce him shall be committed to prison for a libel upon that judge? Judges are but human, and have no greater rights than other citizens of this great country, and to say that because he is a judge he has exceptional power given to him greater than any other citizen enjoys is monstrous and absurd on the face of it. The hon. gentleman talks about a habeas corpus. He knows as well as I know that such an argument is absurd. To whom would they apply for the habeas corpus? To the very Judges who had already condemned the man to imprisonment and fine. The hon. gentleman knows that the warrant issued and that the commitment was for contempt and that the court at Ottawa would have no power to interfere because they could only look at the warrant and could not go behind that warrant. The hon. gentleman took up a great deal of time in proving that Mr. Hawke had committed the crime of libel, and that the judges were justified in finding him guilty of the offence. I repeat that it is of no consequence whatever whether a libel was committed or not. That is not the question before this House. The question is whether those articles, written after the proceedings had terminated, libellous though they may be, gave the judge a right to take upon himself summarily to find this man guilty of libel. Hon. gentlemen on that side of the House have failed to produce one single authority to show that the judges possess such a power as that. They do not possess the power, they never did possess the power, and they have never exercised it, and I challenge hon. gentlemen to produce a case parallel to this in the last fifty years where a judge has attempted to exercise this power in Britain or in the colonies. These decisions and authorities have been read to the House over and over again this evening, and I will trouble the House for a moment with an extract from the judgment of Mr. Justice Lawson in the Dwyer Gray case:

"It has been at all times used to check and restrain the publication of articles calculated to prejudice pending proceedings; and its exercise in the Titchborne and other cases in England has had a very salutary effect, and the very knowledge of its existence, though it is not called into action, tends to check improper license."

There is nothing whatever in this case to show that the libel for which Dwyer Gray was convicted was committed subsequent to the proceedings then pending. As a matter of fact, this shows that there were a large number of cases pending, and the questions involved were the same in each. The alleged libel was published in regard to the first case, and the effect was to interfere with the due trial of the cases which were to come on afterwards. In that case the libel was looked upon as affecting pending proceedings. He says again:

"Having regard, however, to the principle I have laid down, that the exercise of this power is intended only to protect and secure the due administration of justice, I am bound now, at the close of this commission, to consider whether the law has been sufficiently vindicated by what has already taken place. Mr. Gray has been now six weeks in custody; he must pay the fine of £500 which I shall not remit. The attacks upon the proceedings of the court ceased at once, and have not been since renewed, and I am bound to say that a considerable change for the better has taken place in the tone of the paper; the trials are all concluded, and the action of the law officers and my order have been effectual in preventing the course of justice from being impeded."

Such being the case, I charge that what has been done here by Judge Fraser is a direct attack upon the liberties of the press of this country. It is dangerous to the commonwealth for that reason; and I say that unless the law is clear and manifest that the judges had power to commit Mr. Hawke for that alleged offence, then the executive should step in and relieve him from the punishment which has been inflicted. I say that the power is one which this Parliament should not extend; it is a power which, if it ever existed, should be contracted by an Act of this Parliament. But if there is any question as to the power of the judge to inflict this punishment, then I maintain that it is the duty of the Minister of Justice to advise His Excellency that the penalty should be remitted, and Mr. Hawke released from jail. Sir, the case of Dwyer Gray shows that that course was pursued. It is not alleged that since these alleged libels were written, Mr. Hawke has printed anything further in his paper which can be called a libel upon the judges of New Brunswick. Such being the case, I say it is a matter which ought to be considered by the Minister of Justice, and that Mr. Hawke ought to be released from imprisonment. How can the Minister of Justice distinguish between this case and other cases which have come under his notice, and upon which he has acted? He has attempted to distinguish between this and the Calgary case. I say that attempt has been a failure. The judge in Calgary was a judge of a court of record, and being a court of record it had all the incidences of that court, and the judge had all the powers of that court; yet when he had committed the offender in Calgary, the Minister of Justice exercised his undoubted rights and advised the judge at Calgary to release the prisoner who had been convicted. Sir, let us come to the city of Quebec. There we find that Mr. Maguire had been convicted of a most scandalous libel upon Mr. Langelier, now representing one of the divisions of Quebec, and he was convicted by a jury of his countrymen. Did the Minister of Justice there refuse to exercise executive clemency? Did he then question the right of the executive to interfere with the sentence which had been passed by the court? No, Sir, he remitted the fine, I believe, and ordered that the person who had been convicted should be released from imprisonment. These are only two cases, and doubtless a number of other cases could be produced. Now, such being the fact, it being shown that the right which the Minister of Justice contended for, the right to convict this man before the judges of the court of New Brunswick for a libel upon that court, is according to his own contention, a doubtful one; as it is a doubtful power, and in the interest of the British subject, the Minister of Justice should exercise the undoubted power which he possesses of advising His Excellency to release Mr. Hawke from jail. Now, he says that if Mr. Hawke asked pardon, had apologised to the court, had withdrawn the accusations that he made, nothing further would have been done. Sir, when Mr. Hawke believed honestly that what he had stated was true, I ask any man here if it would not have been unmanly on his part to withdraw these statements. There was, as I said, a great principle at stake in this case and that was the freedom of the press. If he had done that, he would have admitted that the judges of New Brunswick had a right to fine and imprison him for the offence which he was alleged to have committed. I say it has not been shown here to-night that any offence was committed. The preponderance of authority shows that the judges of that Province, or of any other Province, in this Dominion, have no power to convict for a libel such as was written in this case, if it was a libel; because it was written and published subsequently to the termination of the proceedings before the court. Sir, there is a great principle involved in this case, there is the question of the liberty of the press in this country. We need not go back in history for more than a hundred years to see the terrible struggle that was made in those days for the liberty of the press against the tyranny of the Crown. Sir, are we to go back to those days again? Are the people to fight over the battles that were fought less than a hundred years ago to retain the liberty which they enjoy to-day? or are they to go back and restore the obsolete power which the Minister of Justice says that the judges of this country have to-day? Sir, it is a great advantage to the people of the country that the press should be absolutely free, and any attempt on the part of the administration here to strangle or to fetter that press, is a blow at the liberties of the people. Sir, I will read to you the words of Sheridan upon this question:

"Give me but the liberty of the press and I will give the minister a venal house of peers,—I will give him a corrupt and servile House of Commons—I will give him the full swing of the patronage of office—I will give him the whole host of ministerial influence,—I will give him all the power that place can confer upon him to purchase submission, and overawe resistance; and yet, armed with the liberty of the press, I will go forth and meet him undismayed; I will attack the mighty fabric he has reared, with that mightier engine I will shake down from its height, corruption and lay it beneath the ruins of the abuses it has meant to shelter.

Sir, that is what the press of this country needs, and if the pretensions of the Minister of Justice are correct, I say he is striking a fatal blow at those liberties.

Mr. LISTER.

Mr. DAVIN. If the ghost of Richard Brinsley Sheridan were in our midst this evening, I am sure that spirit would feel greatly complimented at the way his words have been dragged into this discussion. Sir, I think that the House is to be congratulated on the wide reach of historical knowledge, on the legal acumen, and the great regard for the liberty of the press, that the hon. and learned gentleman, who has just sat down, has displayed. With a delicacy which cannot be too much admired, after the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) had, in an elaborate argument, sought to grapple with the Minister of Justice, this hon. gentleman said he rose to answer the Minister of Justice, and my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon), and, Sir, he has made a magnificent answer. The way he made that answer was to take a case that had already been quoted and requoted, and he reshaped that single case. Then he stated that this was a terrible affair, because the liberty of the press was in danger; the palladium of English liberty was in danger. Why, Sir, what analogy is there between the small power a judge has of imprisoning for contempt of court, and the power of the Crown as it existed in Mr. Sheridan's mind, when he penned those magnificent sentences? Sentences that in that day were eloquent because they were appropriate, but quoted here in a case like this, it is like building a Corinthian portico to a hut or to any other building more contemptible still. That question as to the danger of the liberties of the press was a living question in the days of Sheridan; it was a living question when Robert Hall wrote his celebrated apology for the liberty of the press, of which, he said, if he used very strong language it must be remembered it was "an apology for a dead friend." It was a living question when Junius was imprisoned; but the time has entirely gone by, and the hon. gentleman's speech, and much of the speaking we hear in Parliament and out of Parliament, and much of the writings we find in our journals and in our books show that we are governed by phrases.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is that what you call them?

Mr. DAVIN. No, those are hon. gentlemen. I can bear the support or opposition of either the Conservative party or Liberal party, but when the "third party" rises in its might I am crushed. I can stand a good deal, but I cannot stand that. Seriously, can one imagine—I do not wish to use strong language or wish to be harsh—more intolerable buncombe than that sort of talk about the liberties of the press which we have heard here to-night? Why, we have come to a time when any thinking man will say this, that the great force in every English-speaking constitutional country is the press; that is the force which is actually at the present time without any restraint whatever; and if there is a danger to liberty in a great republic, in a country like this, in England to-day it is not from a crowned head, it is not from a government, it is from the tyranny of the majority, and in a free country such as we have here, where the greatest licence is allowed to the press, to talk of the freedom of the press being endangered is perfect nonsense. The real point is whether the freedom of the individual is not endangered. I am not going to travel over the legal arguments which have been presented by my hon. and learned friend, the Minister of Justice, in a speech that I say was the emanation of a master mind; I am not going over the cases discussed by the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon); I will not reason this as if I was arguing a case in banco, but, if I may dare to use the expression, if it is not presumptuous in my mouth, I will endeavor, during the few minutes I shall trespass on the House, to argue this case in the spirit of a statesman.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. I said if it would not be considered presumptuous—some hon. members seem to think it would be out of place; but I did not intend, if I should succeed in the effort, to erect a standard that would reflect on any hon. member. The proposition that was laid down by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) and by the hon. gentleman who answered the hon. Minister of Justice was this: that a contempt cannot be committed after the case is over. They argue that a contempt must needs sarily be an obstruction to the course of justice, and they seem to think that the course of justice could not be obstructed unless by something which should have reference to some individual case that was actually pending in court.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Or a similar case.

Mr. DAVIN. I say that the course of justice can be impeded if the Act tends to lower the dignity of the judges upon the bench. I once heard one of the best and most distinguished judges that ever presided in England—a man not only of great legal acumen, not a mere case lawyer, not a mere huxter of cases, but a man of eminent abilities, a man of wide reading, a man of great literary power—I mean the late Chief Justice Cockburn—say to an eminent barrister, who was using language that he thought disrespectful: "I do not care a pin about you, but I must remember my office." And what he meant was this: that he, the Chief Justice of England, could not in the interests of the people of the United Kingdom have allowed such language to be used, although personally, he could regard with condign scorn the language of that man. And I say the Chief Justice of New Brunswick, in the interests of the course of justice in that Province, could not have allowed such a course as Mr. Hawke pursued to go on unless he was false to his duty and to the claims of his position. Another proposition that was evidently in the minds of those hon. gentlemen was this: That for a couple of attorneys, or a couple of bellicose barristers, to have quarrelled within the precincts of the court, would be a grave contempt of court—a thing which, within my own memory and observation, has been punished, and punished promptly in Toronto—it would be a very grave thing for a couple of those gentlemen to have a quarrel within the precincts of the court, or for one to shake his fist in the face of the other, but it is no grave contempt of court for a man to write in newspapers which are circulated broadcast throughout the length and breadth of the community, statements calculated to lower the judiciary, not only calculated to lower it, but maligning it; not only calculated to injure the course of justice and to impede the course of justice and make the course of justice less efficient, but also calculated to inflict injury on the personal character of the judge, to reduce his authority in the court and his influence on the people in that court, and in cases brought before him to discount him to a very great extent. There is no comparison between the two cases. The one is a far greater contempt than the other; the one is far more injurious than the other; the one is a very serious thing indeed while the other might have no effect whatever on the course of justice. I suppose if there is a man in this House who would be jealous, I will not say more jealous, but if there is a man who would at all events be expected to be as jealous as any man in Canada, or in the three kingdoms, about the freedom of the press, it would be myself. But it is because I know what great things the press has done; it is because I know what the liberty of printing has done for the world; it is for that reason that here in this House, or wherever else I am, by pen or by voice, I will always protest against the view that the license of the press is synonymous with its liberty. The hon. gentleman from Queen's, Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies), in this House, referred to certain language intended to be contemptuous as applied to the hon. the Finance Minister, and he very properly said that politicians are accustomed to that sort of thing. They bear with that sort of thing, and there is a reason why they might be expected to bear it which does not apply to the judges. The judges cannot come into Parliament, or go on the platform and enter into a wordy warfare with persons who traduce and malign them, and try to lower their authority, while a politician can. But will any fair-minded man say that it is not a lamentable thing, that it is not injurious to the country, that it is not injurious to the press, that it is not a thing to be regretted, and which we ought to seek to reform, that the press of the country, in discussing its public men, never shows the least regard for truth? Is it not a lamentable thing that if a man devotes the best years of his life to his country, and wastes his time, as some people would think, and wastes his money, and seeks by eminent services to win enduring gratitude in the hearts of the people among whom he lives—is it not a lamentable thing that we must wait until he is dead to have one word of truth said of him by his opponents? I make these remarks merely in passing, because the hon. gentleman who preceded me has raised the question of the freedom of the press. There is no question of the freedom of the press here; there is no freedom of the press endangered here; we are not dealing with the power of a court, we are not dealing with a despotic king.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). We are dealing with a despotic court.

Mr. DAVIN. I am speaking of the political court. We are not dealing with a Parliament that is not firmly based on the people's will, but we are dealing with the power given to the judges to protect them, and to protect them in the interests of the public. The only question is this: has the court in this case exceeded its power, or has it not? Sir, I think that from the arguments and cases quoted by my hon. and learned friend the Minister of Justice, and by my hon. and learned friend the member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), no sensible man in Canada—and this is not a question of politics—can doubt but that the judge was within his right, and no sensible man, and no student of constitutional history can doubt but that the exercise of the power is one that is useful to the country. I will say in regard to the general question of the law of libel—because it has been glanced at and I want to show what my position is—as applicable to newspapers, that, if that question were before us, I would be prepared to suggest some amendments. Although, Sir, I hope whenever it does come up, this House of Commons will ponder well how far they ought to go and how closely they ought to watch this great power of the press—great for good, and like other institutions also great for evil if it be not directed by educated and by high spirited men.

Mr. MITCHELL. I did not intend to take any particular part in this discussion to-night, in relation to the question of whether Mr. Hawke was guilty or not guilty of the offence for which he has been committed to prison, but I may be excused after what has been said if I express some opinions in relation to that matter. My interest in this question was mainly directed to the doubt which the Minister of Justice assumed, in reference to what the press of this country could do and could not do; what they were justified in saying, and what they were justified in not saying in relation to questions which affected the judiciary of the country. I may first deal with Mr. Hawke. Before this afternoon's discussion I had given the matter very little attention beyond the fact that I had seen in the newspapers that Mr. Hawke had been charged for having committed some offences against the judiciary of the Province, of which for one of the counties, I am the representative. I happen to know personally and individually every member of the bench of that Province, and personally I have respect for those men. The particular judge whose conduct has been referred to in relation to this matter, was born and brought up within a mile of where I was born and brought up myself. I know him perhaps better than anyone in this House knows him. I have known him from boyhood and I was at school with him. I knew him during his studies. I have watched his course as a public man. I have known him upon the bench and I believe him to be an honorable man. Whatever may have been his faults in later years, if any, I will not speak of them—the press has spoken of them—but I say that I believe him to be an upright, honorable man, and one that I would have the most perfect confidence in were I before him in a trial in which I was personally interested. But Mr. Fraser is like other men of his class. Judges of the courts of New Brunswick, or of any other Province of Canada, or of the Supreme Court of this country, are all fallible men. It has been questioned whether, in the course of their judicial conduct, their actions may be criticised by the press of this country. I claim, Sir, as one of the members of the press of this country, that we have a right to criticise them, and I dispute the position taken up by the hon. the Minister of Justice in relation to this matter. Are we going back to a century ago and to what the law was then? Do we not know that the Parliament of England had privileges a century ago that they have not to-day, and dare not pretend to exercise to-day? Do we not know that men have been brought before the bar of the Parliament in England and have been arraigned there because of some imaginary offence against the privileges of the House of Commons of England? What is the fact to-day? Do you find men brought up there to-day and arraigned in the way they were arraigned 100 years ago, as gentlemen are trying to construe the power of the courts of this country to arraign men as they were arraigned a century ago? No, Sir, I recollect not very many years ago and my hon. friend the right hon. Premier will recollect, that one of his protégés insulted a prominent member who sat on the Opposition side, in the most gross and outrageous way. That man was arraigned and he was brought to the bar of this House; but it was a farce. This House while having powers recognised for centuries dare not exercise them. Do we not know that a returning officer of the Crown, a man who was charged and was known to have corruptly exercised the powers with which he was entrusted, was arraigned at that bar of the House within the recollection of many members here present, and when everybody knew he was guilty, what were the powers of the House? Did they exercise any powers over him? No, Sir; those imaginary privileges which existed a century ago dare not be exercised to-day in the Parliament of Canada. Why, then Sir, are those powers which the judges claim, this power for committing for contempt which they claimed a century ago, why should that be continued in force in the advanced and enlightened age in which we live? Whether Mr. Hawke was authorised in saying what he did say or not I do not pretend to know. My own impression is, from what I have heard to-day, that Mr. Hawke went too far in his criticisms on the bench of the country. I am frank to admit that; but, Sir, that the bench should have taken notice of them in the way they have done I do not believe. Sir, looking at the authorities which have been read on both sides of the House, I dispute the right of the court to commit any man for contempt for a transaction that occurred after the trial was over. That is the point on which I intend to speak to this House. I do not pretend that the press should have unlimited license. The press, like every other institution in this country, whether corporate or individual, is amenable to the laws of the land if it trespasses on the rights of anyone. If I, in the exercise of my rights as a journalist, assail my right hon. friend at the head of the Government, as I have done in no measured terms, and with some basis, I consider, of right and justice to the public, I am amenable for it, and he has a remedy. If, on the other hand, a judge attempts to exercise an authority over me which I conceive he has no right to exercise, and attempts to enforce a right which authorities two or three centuries old may have given him, and which he may attempt to resuscitate into existence in the present advanced age, I will endeavor to resist him; and I wish this House to understand that as one connected with the press of this country I shall never be deterred by the revival of those old laws from criticising public officials from the highest to the lowest in the land. The gentleman who is about to leave us, Lord Lansdowne, has been amenable to criticism in the columns of the Herald, as my right hon. friend has been, and whoever succeeds him will be subject to the same criticism; and if it should be necessary in the public interest to criticise the judges of the highest tribunals in this country, they would find that the Herald would, in the face of the opinion given by the hon. Minister of Justice, deal with them, but would endeavor to deal with them within the limits of those rights which the press is entitled to exercise. Sir, I do not pretend that the press has a right to criticise in an unfair or illegitimate way the conduct of public men. I say that right should be kept within reasonable limits; but when I hear the doctrine laid down by a Minister of the Crown that after a public trial has been completed, and after gross outrages have occurred in the conduct of that trial, the press of the country is not to criticise it, but that there is a sacred class in this country, a class of people who are above and beyond criticism, then, Sir, I must distinctly dissent from that doctrine; and I hope one shall not be bound by any rules such as the hon. Minister of Justice has laid down to-night. Sir, this debate is one of a much more serious character than it may seem to a great many hon. gentlemen. We are not alone testing the question whether Mr. Hawke shall be set at liberty or not; that is a matter which is an incident, from the standpoint from which I speak. We are discussing the right of free criticism upon our public men, upon our judges, our governors and those who rule over us; and if we, at this advanced age, permit the opinion to get abroad that a court, no matter how high they may be, can muzzle the press of the country, or summarily punish them at their own sweet will, and they themselves being the judges, then all I can say is that we have retrograded and gone back to the state of things which existed two centuries ago. Sir, it is useless taking up time in discussing the matter; but I could not allow this discussion to close without entering my protest against any such doctrine. I will not deal with the question whether Mr. Hawke is guilty or not, for it has already been dealt with most amply and I think most ably by the hon. gentleman who took up the gage in this matter, and who has reflected credit upon himself for the manner in which he has put Mr. Hawke's case before the country, I must say that upon the decision which this House may arrive at to-night—whether or not it will sanction the extraordinary doctrines of the hon. Minister of Justice, and the fulsome adulation which my hon. friend from Regina (Mr. Davin) has given to the Government of the day—whether it will adopt the views entertained by these gentlemen, or support the reasonable proposition put forth by the hon. member for Queen's—depends largely the extent of the freedom to which the press of this country will be entitled. Sir, the right of the press is one thing and the illimitable license of the press is another; but at this age we cannot limit the right of the press to discuss and criticise the conduct of public men, no matter whether their positions may be those of governors or ministers of state or judges; and I want to let these hon. gentlemen know that there is one man at all events in this country who will perhaps give them an opportunity of testing the question if the public interests demand it.

Mr. RYKERT. Name.

Mr. MITCHELL. You do not require me to name him ; you know who he is—one who will not hesitate to criticise them from the Chief Justice down to the lowest official. Sir, this discussion will arouse an echo throughout Canada ; and whatever may be the action of the Government in relation to the imprisonment of Mr. Hawke, whether he is granted his liberty or not, this discussion will arouse a public sentiment throughout this country ; and if the feeling of this House is against maintaining the liberty of the press and the right of free discussion, it will have an effect that some hon. gentlemen may feel at the next opportunity the public may have to deal with them.

Mr. CASEY. We have heard all sorts of arguments on this question. We have heard the legal argument advanced by the hon. gentleman who brought the matter up ; we have heard the very legal and very technical reply of the hon. Minister of Justice ; we have had the height of Irish eloquence from my hon. friend from the North-West ; and I think it is time for some one who is neither a lawyer nor an editor to have something to say on the question. It seems to me that the hon. Minister of Justice, and all the other gentlemen who have spoken on that side, have shown the highest degree of ability in avoiding the real question at issue in this case. The hon. Minister of Justice justified the proceedings of the judges, and attacked the statements contained in the alleged libels published by Mr. Hawke. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island stated clearly when he brought the matter up that he was not concerned to justify the statements of Mr. Hawke, and that he did not intend to attack the judges ; and, therefore, the matters treated of by the hon. Minister of Justice were entirely beside the question. The question is this, whether we shall allow the judges of our different courts to be prosecutors, witnesses and judges in their own case. Sir, I think the magnitude of this question fully justifies any discussion that has taken place, and would have justified even more vigorous action on the part of this House in the matter. My hon. friend from Perth pooh-poohs the question, and seems to consider that he could never be concerned in a matter of this kind. Now, it might possibly happen that even my hon. friend from Perth might have occasion to express his opinion on the action of the judge in some matter of this kind, and might very inconveniently be brought before the very man who considered himself insulted by the hon. gentleman, and who would be allowed under the law to avenge his own personal injury. I say this is a great constitutional question, and I am one of those who maintain that the action of the judge was unconstitutional, un-British, un-Canadian and outrageous, and I cannot denounce in too strong language the principle that any judge who feels himself personally aggrieved should have the right to wreak his vengeance on the offender by committing him to jail without the formality of a trial before any impartial tribunal—without taking the evidence and without having any process of law at all. This House knows that this practice, this relic of the barbarism of the middle ages, has gone out of use in England, and that in England, the home of prerogative, the home of tradition, the one country of all others where the judiciary is more respected than elsewhere, the judiciary has given up, of their own free will and pleasure, and their action has been endorsed by statute, this prerogative, which was intended in the rude middle ages to protect them from insult. If in England, that country which we call so old-fashioned, this prerogative has been given up, why should it exist in Canada ? And, coming nearer home, we find that in the United States this prerogative of commitment for contempt of court without a trial no longer exists. Why, therefore, should it exist in Canada ?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Why ?

Mr. CASEY. A number of hon. gentlemen opposite ask me why, but not one of them so far has said why. The hon.

the Minister of Justice himself has not said why. He devoted himself to justifying the action of the judges in the case which Mr. Hawke criticised, and he devoted himself to picking out flaws in the criticisms of Mr. Hawke. I do not say that those criticisms are justified, but I say that the action of the judges was none the less unconstitutional, un-British and un-Canadian, and that the Government should find means to prevent such action in the future. I am not attacking the judges for their action in the matter. I have no doubt that they suppose their action was sanctioned by precedent and by the law ; but if they were correct in that opinion, I urge that it is time the law was changed. We cannot afford to have a number of petty despots established in Canada with power to imprison for any time they like all those who, they may consider, have offended or insulted them. A number of years ago, a similar case came up in Ontario, the case of the Hon. Geo. Brown, who was charged with contempt of court for certain criticisms on Judge Wilson. The House is familiar with that case. It was established, as the result of that case, that the press had the right to criticise the action of judges, and that the judges have not the arbitrary right to commit journalists for contempt of court in consequence of such criticisms. The case was argued by Mr. Brown himself, who was not a lawyer, before the judges, and they concurred in his view and dismissed the decree which called on him to show cause why he should not be committed for contempt of court. That is the constitutional view of the case ; and if the law does not bear out that view, it is the duty of the hon. Minister of Justice to see that the law is changed. Publicity is not only the sole safeguard of our liberties, but also of the dignity of the bench. Some people may suppose that the action taken by the judges in New Brunswick, showing personal resentment for a personal attack, maintains the dignity of the bench, but I hold that such action lowers the dignity of the bench. It is only by agreeing to the proposition that the standing of the bench is so high that all its actions will bear the light of publicity, and the fullest discussion in the press and elsewhere, that the dignity of the press can be maintained. The only manner in which the dignity of our judges can be maintained, in which the right of free discussion which belongs to every British subject can be secured, in which the constitutional liberties of this Empire can be carried into effect in Canada, is to provide that, apart from the mere proceedings in court in regard to which the judge must have summary power, a judge is only an individual citizen like any other, and should have his remedy in law like any other for any libel he has suffered, and should not have the arbitrary power to avenge personal insults in the way adopted in this case. I am glad the hon. member for Prince Edward Island has taken up this case. I am glad there has been this full discussion on it. But I am deeply sorry to find the Minister of Justice has chosen to look upon this question rather in the light of a party question than in the light of a judicial question. I hope that he has only taken this course on the spur of the moment, and that, after mature consideration, he will see the force and justice of the points urged by the hon. member for Prince Edward Island, and I will conclude with the hope expressed by that gentleman at the close of his speech, that the ventilation of this matter will lead the Government to see that it is their duty, as the guardians of public and personal liberty, free discussion and the dignity of the bench, to exercise the clemency of the Crown and to relieve Mr. Hawke from the penalty which, however he may have deserved it, should not have been imposed on him in this particular manner.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am not at all disposed to prolong the debate. I am perfectly satisfied that the object I had in view has been obtained by our having had a free discussion upon the more salient points which belong to the case of Mr. Hawke; and I would not have risen at all at the close of the debate, but for a remark which the hon. the Minister of Justice made, and which I think was hardly fair to myself. The hon. gentleman stated that, after making a two hours' speech—he was only an hour astray, but assuming him to be correct, it would not make much difference—I had ended with a simple motion to adjourn, and he intimated that, if I was serious, I would have made a motion of a very different character. I think that was hardly fair or generous on the part of the Minister of Justice, because he knew that it was perfectly impossible for me to make any motion other than I did make. He knows that I could not to-day have made a substantive motion embodying the views which I hold in reference to the imprisonment of Mr. Hawke. If I had waited for the next motion to go into Committee of Supply, I might have waited until next week, and, if I had moved on that, I would have been met by the Government with the charge that I was not seeking to vindicate the freedom of the press as I understood it, but simply to embarrass the Government by putting forward a motion which must be met by them as a motion of want of confidence. My object was not to catch a vote of the House of Commons, but to elicit what the real opinion of the House of Commons was in reference to the arbitrary exercise by the Supreme Court of New Brunswick of this power which they claim to possess; and I think hon. gentlemen will do me the justice to say that, in my remarks, I did not once challenge the exercise by any superior court in this Dominion of the necessary and inherent powers which are essential for the maintenance of the honor of the court or the due administration of justice. There was a statement made by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) that the liberty of the press was a living question once but a perfect farce now. I did not quite understand the line of his reasoning, but I may say that the Star Chamber was a living power once, but it became dead. Thanks to the efforts of the friends of British liberty, after years and years of persistent effort it became dead, but its corpse has come to life in this Dominion, and we have the member for Assiniboia, who claims to be a Liberal exulting over the resurrection of that dead corpse. That hon. gentleman says that the course of justice may be impeded by the publication of criticisms after the proceedings have ceased, and that the language used by Mr. Hawke was calculated to bring the court into contempt. I will read one sentence from the judgment of Mr. Justice Morrison in the case of Regina vs. Wilkinson, which I think is a complete answer to the argument of the hon. gentleman:

"Respect to courts cannot be compelled. It is the voluntary tribute of the public to worth, virtue and intelligence, and while they are found on the judgment seat, so long and no longer will they retain the public confidence."

The member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) may believe that the dungeon and the jail of Fredericton, and the imprisonment in the jail of those who dare to criticise the judgments of the courts, will compel respect and obedience from the general public of Canada, but he will learn in a short time that the late Mr. Justice Morrison had a truer appreciation of what constitutes worth, intelligence and virtue, and what will best command the respect of the public. There was also an argument used as to what I said in regard to the hardship of Mr. Hawke's case, and the Minister of Justice said that, Mr. Hawke had his remedies. Well, what remedy has he? The Minister of Justice says he has the remedy of an application for a writ of habeas corpus to the Supreme Court of Canada. I am so perfectly satisfied with the reply of my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Weldon) to that statement, that I will not even attempt to summarise it. He answered that proposition perfectly, but I will call the attention of the Minister of Justice to the case which he must well know, of Stockdale and Hansard. He will remember that the House of Commons caused the sheriffs of London to be imprisoned for contempt of their honorable body, because they had, pursuant to the writ of the Court of King's Bench, seized the goods of the Reporter Hansard convicted of libel. The sheriffs were committed to the Tower for that contempt, and when they were brought up before the judges of the land, under a writ of habeas corpus, what did the judges say? They were acquainted with all the facts, they believed they were improperly imprisoned, but they said they could not go beyond the terms of the warrant. According to the terms of the warrant they were properly imprisoned, and the judges said they could not go behind the warrant. As it appeared that they had been imprisoned by the House of Commons for contempt, the judges stated that they could not on habeas corpus enquire into the facts which, in the opinion of the Commons, constituted contempt but were bound by the recitals in the warrant, and as the warrant was good on its face they could not release the prisoner. It would be the same thing if Mr. Hawke were to be so ill-advised as to sue out a writ of habeas corpus and to come here. He would find that the reason for his commitment is stated on the face of the warrant to be simply a contempt of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. The judges would find that the jailer held him by virtue of a warrant from the Supreme Court of New Brunswick charging him with being guilty of contempt of court, and the Supreme Court of Canada would be powerless to release him, just as the Court of Queen's Bench was powerless to release the sheriffs of Middlesex when they were imprisoned for an alleged contempt of the House of Commons. It may be that this warrant has been altogether illegally issued, that the grounds could not be justified, but they cannot be enquired into, the judges are helpless, they are bound by the warrant, and they would have to remit Mr. Hawke to prison. If they had the power by certiorari to bring up all the proceedings under which that warrant issued, they might be able to enquire whether the warrant was legal or not, but they have no such power, and, unless the clemency of the Crown is exercised, there is no other power in this country by which Mr. Hawke can be released. The hon. gentleman asks if it will be argued that the Crown has power to interfere? I doubt very much the power of the Crown to interfere, but I remember the precedent which the hon. gentleman has set, and I know what a stickler he is for precedent and how carefully he must have enquired into all the authorities before he determined, as Minister of Justice, to exercise his power and release the prisoners who were imprisoned by the judges in Calgary. If he had the power in Calgary, I came to the conclusion that he must have the same power in New Brunswick. If Justice Travis imprisoned men improperly in Calgary, in the opinion of the Minister of Justice, and the Minister had power to review that decision, and did so, and released these men at Calgary, he must have the same power in New Brunswick, and I knew that the hon. gentleman could not be charged with exercising that power from political motives. At all events, I hoped not. I hoped that, in matters connected with the administration of justice, the hon. gentleman would carry out in the Department of Justice the traditions which he learned when he was on the bench of Nova Scotia, and I ventured to assume that, when he exercised the power vested in him in regard to these men in Calgary, he would exercise the same power in New Brunswick if he came to the conclusion that that man was improperly imprisoned. The only question, therefore, is whether he considers that he was improperly imprisoned, because, having taken the power in one case, I am sure that, if I have convinced him that this man is improperly imprisoned, he would exercise it in the other. Sir, I regret to say there is just a suspicion of party politics in this matter. I will not charge my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon), nor will I charge some other hon.

gentlemen opposite with entertaining such strong party views as would prevent them from doing justice. I think I do not go beyond the truth when I say that in their secret hearts they are glad that Mr. Hawke is imprisoned, because he reflected upon a judge whose actions resulted in preventing the Westmoreland case from being tried. That I believe, whether right or wrong, and I gave my reasons for so believing it in the afternoon, and I have not seen any reasons yet for retracting one of them.

Mr. HESSON. It was party views that induced you to bring this matter up. If it had been a Conservative who had written these articles you would never have found fault.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is an old and homely maxim that a man generally measures his corn by his own bushel. The hon. gentleman makes that charge against me, but I would like to know from him whether he could gather from anything I said to-day that I was actuated by political motives. I refrained expressly from introducing politics in the matter. The hon. gentleman knows—and if he does not, those who sit to the right of him can tell him—that I could have imported politics into this question, and personal matters, and matters of an acrimonious character, reflecting severely upon many gentlemen who occupy high positions in New Brunswick. I refrained from doing so because I wanted the great principle which underlay this case to be fairly discussed by this House apart from party politics altogether. If the courts of this land have power arbitrarily and summarily to imprison without the interference of a judge, anybody who comments upon their conduct, if they have power to determine when those comments go beyond just criticism and when they do not, and if this House of Commons is prepared to endorse the action of those courts, I am anxious, as a Liberal, to know it. I will dissent, and as far as my humble voice goes, I shall continue to raise it in protest against that old Tory and accursed doctrine. I hope and believe better things of the House of Commons. I believe to-day that if there is a sentiment evoked on behalf of the exercise of this power by the judges of the court of New Brunswick, it has been because party politics have been brought in to back up that sentiment, and not because they believe in the doctrine itself. Sir, we do not hear the Premier or any other leading member of the Government, outside of the Minister of Justice—who made an argument from a purely legal standpoint endorsing the sentiments which some hon. members on the back benches are prepared to cheer, and which the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) enunciated here, sentiments which were invoked by the Tory members of the House of Commons a hundred years ago, but which it was thought their descendants are now ashamed of. I have only a word to say in reference to the authority by which the Minister of Justice attempted to justify the position he took, the case of Dwyer Gray. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman could not have cited an authority stronger in favor of the position I have taken. The position I took was this: that comments are improper which were calculated to interfere with the proper administration of justice. In the case of Dwyer Gray, he was the publisher of a newspaper in Dublin, and he published comments reflecting severely upon the verdict of a jury at a commission held by Mr. Justice Lawson. Mr. Justice Lawson held a court, under a special commission, to try a certain number of cases, and he had on his jury Catholics and Protestants. One case was tried, and a verdict was given convicting the prisoner. Mr. Dwyer Gray came out with an article in his paper condemning most strongly the action of the jury. His language, was held to be intimidation of the worst kind, and so severe that unless it was punished summarily, the administration of justice during the existence of that commission would be paralysed, and no other verdict possibly be obtained. The court held that unless they were ready to consent to this paralysis in the administration of justice, they must step in, in vindication of their own rights, and assert the right of the court to punish the man who attempted to paralyse justice by the publication of articles intended to intimidate the jurors from giving a verdict. Sir, that case came within the very exception that I contended for in the proposition that I submitted to the House, namely, that comments which are calculated to impede or prevent the administration of justice in the courts of the land are comments which come within the rule of law by which the courts are enabled, by their own inherent powers, to inflict summary punishment. Those powers are inherent for one object alone, for the administration of justice, and to secure the administration of justice from being improperly obstructed. I think there never was a case cited in this House which could bear out more strongly the position I took, than the case of Dwyer Gray, and the reason which Mr. Justice Lawson gave for deciding it as he did. What does he say?

"I see perfectly well that the design of all these articles is one—it was to endeavor to destroy in the public mind the moral effect of this conviction; that was the object and nothing else, and to interfere with the trial of the subsequent cases, and to prevent juries from bringing to the discharge of their duties that free, that unfettered judgment, that judgment free from alarm and trepidation which every man should have when he comes to discharge this duty."

Mr. Dwyer Gray was guilty of that offence, he had been convicted, and although it was contended in the House of Commons that his arrest and imprisonment were a breach of the privileges of the House, nobody ever contended that the judge exceeded his duty, because everybody agreed that the articles were intended and calculated to intimidate the jury and prevent justice from being administered. But is there a man in this House who would dare to rise in his place and say that any one of the articles published by Mr. Hawke could possibly have the effect of impeding the administration of justice in New Brunswick? Sir, the election trial was closed, the Supreme Court of New Brunswick had adjourned, no other election trial was going on when these criticisms were passed, there was no similar case before the court, and hon. gentlemen opposite cannot argue that the criticism of which they complain was calculated to impair or impede the administration of justice in that Province. Not being so calculated it did not come within the summary power of the court to punish. I repeat now the proposition with which I started out in the early part of the evening, that in attempting to exercise that summary power, and punish a man without the interference of a jury, for having made a comment upon their judgment in that election case, after the election court had closed, after the Supreme Court itself had closed, and five months, mark you, after the proceedings were over, the judges were usurping a jurisdiction to justify which a precedent cannot be found, either in the laws of the old country of England, or in any of our colonies.

Motion to adjourn withdrawn.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12.05 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 11th May, 1888.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PETITION AGAINST MR. CHOQUETTE, M.P.

Petition from Philippe Landry and others, praying that Philippe Auguste Choquette, Esq., member for the electoral division of Montmagny, be declared an unfit and improper person to represent the said electoral division, and disqualified to sit in this House—being read,

Mr. LAURIER. I intend to object to the reception of that petition from Philippe Landry and others, but I do not see the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Royal) in his seat.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The motion for the reception of the petition can stand over till another day.

INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 126) to amend chapter 124 of the Revised Statutes, respecting insurance. He said: This Bill is simply to put the insurance companies incorporated in any of the Provinces of the Dominion on the same footing as insurance companies incorporated in the United States; that is, they are allowed, by making a certain deposit with the Government of Canada, to do business in fire and life insurance. As the law at present stands, companies incorporated in the Province, after making the deposit required by the Government as security, have not the power to do business except in life insurance. This Bill is to extend their business to fire insurance, the same as is done by American companies.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is optional?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, of course. It simply enables the Government to receive their deposit, and give them power to do business.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DEPOSITS IN GOVERNMENT SAVINGS BANKS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 127) relating to the interest payable on deposits in the Post Office and Government Savings Banks. He said: The object of this Bill is to enable the Government to reduce the rate of interest we are now paying, under the statute, to depositors in the savings banks, if the Government think the condition of the country should require it; that is to say, it is to enable the Government to regulate the interest and to pay a lower rate than is paid at present, if they find that the terms upon which money can be obtained from abroad, do not warrant the payment of so high a rate as we pay at present.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Would it not be better to abolish that Act altogether, and allow the Government power, from time to time, to act?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is just what this Bill is. It is an enabling Act.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved:

That on every Monday, for the rest of the Session, Government measures shall have precedence after Questions.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider resolutions (p. 1001) respecting a loan to be granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway. He said: Mr. Speaker, in rising to move these resolutions I am glad to know that the subject-matter is so familiar to every hon. member on both sides of this House as to render it unnecessary at this late period of the Session that I should detain the House long in referring specifically to what these resolutions contain. The House is aware that when this Government came into power in 1878 they found the Government of the country committed to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway as a Government work, and having taken such measures as they were enabled to do from time to time with the object of furthering that great work, they came to the conclusion that it would be very desirable if the proposal that had been made by their predecessors when they published advertisements asking for tenders for the construction of this great work, the proposal to transfer this great work to the hands of a private company, should be adopted; and in 1880 my right hon. friend the First Minister, the present Minister of Railways and Canals, (Mr. Pope) and myself were deputed by the Government to go to London for the purpose of ascertaining if it would be possible to obtain a company to take up the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The object of our mission, as the House knows, was no secret, it was publicly stated everywhere both in this country and in England that that was the object of our mission to London, and we spent a very considerable time in endeavoring to ascertain if we could obtain the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway through the agency of a company. We were in communication with a large number of capitalists, notably the president of the Grand Trunk Railway, upon this subject; we were in communication with other capitalists who had their attention attracted to the object of our mission, and we had an opportunity of discussing exhaustively with various capitalists the terms upon which it was possible to obtain the construction of that great work. I need not say that the result of those negotiations was to arrange with what was then known as the Canadian Pacific Railway syndicate for the construction of the railway. The contract, which was subsequently adopted by this House, contained a clause which says that:

MR. DAVIES (P.E.I.)

"For twenty years from the date hereof no line of railway"—

That is, from the date of the contract—

—"shall be authorised by the Dominion Parliament to be constructed south of the Canadian Pacific Railway from any point at or on the Canadian Pacific Railway, except such line as shall be run south-west or to the westward of south-west nearer than within fifteen miles of latitude 49; and in the establishment of any new province in the North-West Territory provision should be made for continuing such prohibition after such establishment until the expiration of the said period."

I have no hesitation in saying that without that condition we would have been obliged to return as we went, without being able to make any contract whatever with anybody for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It was known that the country through which that line of railway, involving as it did an enormous expenditure for its construction, was to a great extent unsettled, and that, in fact, the country would require almost to be created as the line was constructed; and attaching the importance that we attach to the great object of securing the construction of that line of railway which would bind the various provinces of which Canada was composed together and render a real as well as a nominal union and confederation, we had no hesitation at all in binding ourselves to this clause, which under other and different circumstances would perhaps be regarded as very objectionable. The policy contained in that clause, I need not remind hon. gentlemen opposite, was the same policy that was pursued by our friends on the other side of the House when they were on the Treasury benches; that is to say, to endeavor to adopt such measures as would prevent the traffic of the Canadian Pacific Railway so constructed from being drawn out of the country instead of being made subservient to the development and progress of our own country. I need not detain the House by going through the long history of antagonism to the policy contained in this clause, the excitement that was raised in connection with it; and I do not intend to raise the question which has been raised and which has been pressed, that inasmuch as we declared that the Dominion Parliament should not authorise the construction of the lines, the Government, clothed with the power of Parliament, assenting to the construction of lines in the established provinces, was open to question as to how far it was embraced in the terms of that clause. I do not propose to raise that question, because it is not necessary for the consideration of the subject. The House will remember, however, that a great deal of agitation having taken place in regard to the monopoly which is embodied in this clause, in 1884, when asking Parliament for a loan of $30,000,000 additional to what had been granted by the contract made by Parliament with the Canadian Pacific Railway, I accompanied that application to Parliament by a statement that the Government hoped, and the Canadian Pacific Railway hoped, that by the time the line was completed north of Lake Superior, they would find themselves in a position to warrant abandoning the policy of disallowance which had prevented the construction of the proposed lines of railway tapping the Canadian Pacific Railway and running to the American frontier on the south. I made that statement to the House in all candor; I fully believed, I fully expected that it would be realised, and that neither in the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway nor in the interests of the Government would it be necessary for the Government long to adhere to the policy originally proposed by hon. gentlemen opposite, and which we had adopted as a sound, reasonable and justifiable policy. But, as I stated to the House a year ago when this was under discussion, and when the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) moved a resolution upon this subject, I drew the attention of the House to some very important circumstances that had occurred between the time when I made my statement to the House in 1884, and the condition in which we found ourselves in 1887. I do not intend to waste the time of this House by going into the question as to how far the Government is bound by the policy it announces at one time and under one set of circumstances, to adhere to that policy at another time, and under other circumstances. I hold that true statesmanship requires the Government of the country, to meet the circumstances in relation to every question of great public importance under and in connection with the existing state of things; and if a different policy is demanded, and a different course of action required by the changed state of things in the country, I say that a Government would be unworthy of their position, and would not discharge their duty to the country, which did not take into consideration the changed circumstances under which the same question of public policy had to be viewed and treated. I drew the attention of the House to the fact that we had been all disappointed, and especially had the Government and gentlemen on this side of the House been disappointed, in relation to the development of Manitoba and of the great North-West. I drew the attention of the House to the fact that we had had three, I am happy to say, abnormally bad seasons, and I believe there is no reason to doubt that the reassuring condition of things witnessed last season, will be found to be the normal condition of the seasons in the North-West. We had, unfortunately for Canada, for the Canadian Pacific Railway and everybody concerned, and especially unfortunate for the people who have gone into that country, we had those three abnormally bad seasons. In addition to that there had been no doubt a want of acquaintance, on the part of strangers going into the country, as to the best mode of meeting difficulties of that kind, and a want of experience which led no doubt to those bad seasons having a much more injurious effect than they would have had if parties starting in that country had known as much then as they know now, as to the best means of counteracting and avoiding those difficulties; an acquaintance which would have told them that early seeding was necessary.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And good seed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, as my right hon. friend mentions, and good seed, too. In addition to those difficulties we had that which was unexpected. No person in 1884 had certainly the slightest possible reason to anticipate the outbreak which occurred—that disastrous, and unfortunate and lamentable outbreak, which occurred in the interim after 1884, when we had expressed the hopes as to the position we would find ourselves in on the completion of the line north of Lake Superior, and which outbreak had a most disastrous effect upon the settlement of the country, as every person can well understand. Under those circumstances we were obliged to reconsider the hopes we had expressed. We found ourselves in the position, that without sufficient traffic to maintain the Canadian Pacific Railway, without such a settlement and without such a return from the crop in the country as to furnish traffic for that road; we found ourselves in the position, that obliged us to hesitate, in the adoption of the abandonment of the policy that was intended to keep the traffic of our country upon our national line of railway. Under those circumstances we were compelled to ask the House to pause. We are compelled to ask the House not to oblige us to carry out what had been our confident expectation in 1884, but to allow that policy that had been continued up to that time, to be continued for a longer period and for the reasons I have stated. We asked this in what we believed to be the interests of the people of Canada as a whole, as well as the interests of that company who had undertaken and carried out so rapidly the completion of that great work. I may say, in passing, that those expectations which we held out to the House in 1884, have been given great importance to, because they were statements made in connection with an application to Parliament for a loan of $30,000,000 additional assistance to the Canadian Pacific Railway, in order that they might carry rapidly to completion that great work. I may remind the House that hon. gentlemen opposite told me, that if I would call that a gift, instead of a loan, I would be treating the House much more ingenuously than I was, and that I perfectly understood, and that the Government of the country understood that so far as that loan was concerned, not a dollar would ever be returned; that it would pass into the same category as the loan made many years ago to the Grand Trunk Railway, and of which never a dollar had been realised or returned to the treasury of the country. I have no hesitation in saying that the rapid completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway—suppose that loan had been a gift, suppose we had never received a single dollar of that money—I have no hesitation in saying that upon that eventful occasion of the disastrous outbreak in the North-West, on account of the rapid manner in which that work had been pushed forward, and above anything the contract obliged them to do, the country received full value for every dollar of that $30,000,000. Had it not been for the completion of that contract, not only would the disaster have been infinitely greater, but the additional cost to this country would have fully equalled the entire amount of that appropriation. I mention that, merely in passing, to remind the House of the position in which we stood. The House is aware that shortly after the Canadian Pacific Railway returned $20,000,000 of that loan in cash to the Government, and that we were paid the other $10,000,000 by taking land at $1.50 per acre; which hon. gentlemen opposite estimated, and had very good ground for estimating, to be absolutely worth from $3 to $5 an acre. So that we see that claim was entirely extinguished. I am happy to say that we find ourselves able to reconsider our policy this year; just as we were obliged to reconsider our policy a year ago; just as we were obliged to reconsider the expectations we held out to Parliament and to the country as to what we would be enabled to do in the abandonment of the policy of disallowance, and the permission of those railways that were so much desired to be constructed by the people of Manitoba. Just as a year ago we were obliged to reconsider our policy, and to a certain extent change it in the light of the changed circumstances that had occurred after that policy was propounded, I am happy to say we find ourselves to-day in a position again to reconsider our policy of last year, and for the same reason, but in a very different direction. Every hon. gentleman in this House knows now that instead of the Canadian Pacific Railway not having, by the want of settlement of that country and the growth of crops in that country, the means of being furnished with traffic; every person knows, and every person is delighted to know, no matter on what side of this House he may sit, that a return of the normal good seasons in that country have shown that its fertility has never been exaggerated, and that it certainly surpasses in its fertility of soil, and in its climate and its attributes as the great remaining granary of the world, all that which was claimed for it. That country to-day occupies a position that enables us to rest with the most unqualified confidence, upon its enormous resources, as the great remaining, and unoccupied grain field of the world. I may draw the attention of the House to this as it is a very important point, and as it has had the most vital bearing upon the position of the Government in relation to this question. The best and most reliable estimate I can obtain of the crop of 1887, showing the total crop and the number of bushels for export in the Provinces of Manitoba and Assiniboia, is as follows:—

	Total crop. Bushels.	For export. Bushels.
Wheat.....	12,860,000	10,613,000
Barley.....	2,263,000	1,130,000
Oats.....	3,780,000	2,890,000
Flax.....	180,000	150,000
Totals.....	19,083,000	14,783,000

The crop for export, independent of all requirements for the consumption of the country, amounted to no less than 14,783,000 bushels, which had to be forwarded by the railway. From the commencement of the movement of the crop of 1887, up to the 29th of April, 1888, there have been moved east from Winnipeg 6,887,000 bushels of wheat, and flour equivalent to 737,870 bushels more, or no less than 7,624,870 bushels of wheat or its equivalent carried east by the Canadian Pacific Railway from Manitoba and Assiniboia. Now, Sir, I need not tell the House that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, instead of being in a position to say that the country did not provide traffic enough for the line, stand in this position, that all their resources—and every person knows the extensiveness of their rolling stock—their elevators and other means of traffic have been entirely unable to deal with this immense traffic. Every member of the House can see that if the company had sufficient elevator capacity at Fort William or at Port Arthur, the trains could bring the crop forward and deposit it in those elevators and return; whereas if they were obliged, after the capacity of the elevators was exhausted, to go down a thousand miles further in order to reach means of storing the grain in elevators by the sea, the time expended in bringing the cars back would be such as to entirely disable them from handling the crop, as they would otherwise be able to do. But, Sir, as I said before, this fact has entirely changed the whole position of the question. I need not say that, from the first moment this was seen, our friends in this House—I will not say our friends only, but all the members from Manitoba and the North-West Territories, including the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), brought all the pressure possible upon the Government in connection with this question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

They declared, one and all, with one common voice from the first, that this great crop showed the inability of the Canadian Pacific Railway to handle the traffic, and brought forward that fact as an unanswerable evidence that the time had passed when it could be claimed that the country should be prevented from having other means of communication in order to handle the enormous crop that was already produced, and in order to provide for that which every person knows, in the nature of things, must in the future be demanded in that country. The fact that 16,000 farmers, all told, have been able to raise for export, over and above the entire consumption of the country last year, nearly 15,000,000 bushels of grain, principally of wheat, but also including barley which is known to be of the highest character, and oats which I believe will compare favorably with those of any other part of the world, shows the adaptability of the soil and climate for grain growing; and the moment that is known, everyone must see what a rapid development in that country must ensue, how capital and agricultural skill must be attracted, not only from the older Provinces, where the men best able to cope with the difficulties of a new country like the North-West come from, but from all parts of the world; and this must result in an enormously increased demand for the means of traffic. While on that subject, after having stated what last season has produced, I am sure the House will bear with me, if I give them the best evidence that can be obtained of the prospects of the crop for the present season. This is a telegram received three or four days ago from Winnipeg:

"Winnipeg, Man.:—The farmers throughout the Canadian North-West have no reason for sharing the feeling of despondency that prevails throughout Minnesota and Dakota owing to the unfavorable condition of the weather and backwardness of the season for seeding purposes, as following detailed reports will show:

"Carberry:—Seeding going on rapidly. Wheat about done and if present fine weather continues few days later all seeding will be completed.

"Battleford:—Weather very warm, thermometer 92 degrees in shade. Farming operations about completed. Wheat on many farms up. Every prospect for best harvest in years.

"Edmonton:—Seeding about finished and some field grain up. Farmers jubilant over prospects and sowing heavily. Weather very warm.

"Brandon, Man.:—Weather most favorable and farmers taking every advantage of it, thousands of acres being seeded each day. Wheat seeding nearly completed. A large quantity of wheat is above ground.

"Emerson:—Seeding operations in this vicinity progressing very favorably. Wheat is about all sown and up in some localities. Farmers report the land very dry, and warm rain would be beneficial just now. Prospects good.

"Glenboro', Man.:—Farmers are very busy seeding. The fine weather of the last few days has put them in excellent spirits. There will be about one-third more acreage under cultivation this year than last. Prospects, as far as can judge, seem very good. Wheat in many places already through ground. About two-thirds of seeding already finished.

"Moosomin, N.W.T.:—Seeding in this vicinity about completed. A few have some oats yet to sow but majority have finished, and general feeling is that there will be bountiful harvest. The seed bed has never been in better condition. Wheat fields are looking green, and all vegetation is rapid.

"Qu'Appelle, N.W.T.:—Farmers in this vicinity have finished sowing wheat and oats, and barley seeding under way. Roots will be put in about the 20th.

"Regina, N.W.T.—Seeding all done in Regina district. About twenty-five thousand acres seeding wheat, principally up, and looking well. Vegetation growing finely. Farmers are in good spirits, and looking forward to a bountiful harvest.

"Portage la Prairie, Man.:—Seeding progressing finely, and rapidly nearing completion. Wheat seeding finished, and farmers are now busily engaged in putting in their oats and barley. The present warm weather is favorable for vegetation, and many fields are already presenting quite a green appearance. The acreage will fully be one-third over that of last year.

"Morden, Man.:—Seeding is well advanced. Fully one-third area more under crop this year than last."

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Are these despatches all of the same date?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They all came three days ago from the different points. They are about the same date—I would not say to a day. I do not think it will be necessary for me to say more as to the fact that when the Government pressed upon the House last year our reasons for hesitating to carry out our original hopes and expectations in regard to disallowance, we felt it was a question on which the advocates for the discontinuance of the disallowance policy had very powerful and irresistible standing ground; and, under these circumstances, we felt obliged to give immediate attention to the changed condition in which this question presented itself,—a position changed in every possible respect from the position of the country when we stood here a year ago, when we were obliged, as matters then stood, to hesitate in the adoption of the policy that was so earnestly demanded by hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House. Well, under these circumstances, we naturally opened up negotiations with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. It may be said that we could have dealt with the Province of Manitoba, without regard to the wishes or feelings of that company. I have already said that I do not intend, for a single moment, to enter into a discussion of that question. It is a question upon which lawyers, and very eminent lawyers, hold different opinions; and because I have not the advantage of being a lawyer, I may be excused for saying that where lawyers differ on a question of that kind—and lawyers of high standing and character, as I happen to know, do differ on it—it is best if you possibly can, to avoid the contingency of these legal issues being raised and tried. Now, there was another point made, and that was that we were perfectly aware that at that moment we changed our attitude in regard to disallowance of the construction of railways in the Province of Manitoba, this would become a fair question in the great North-West, and that we would be charged with doing for Manitoba what we were denying to the settlers who, under still greater difficulties, were going out building up the North-West and making it productive. We were perfectly aware that that question would be raised in all its intensity, and that, in fact, it was of great importance to have at once a complete settlement and disposal of the whole of this agitation and of the whole of this question in connection with it, by obtaining, if we could, by an arrangement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the abandonment of that clause of the contract which the Government were compelled to make, giving them that twenty years monopoly, in order to get the road constructed at all. I need not tell the House that we were agreeably surprised when we came to negotiate that question with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, to find that they were extremely anxious this question should be disposed of at once and forever, because it was of vital importance to them that Manitoba and the North-West Territories should be settled up as rapidly as possible, and no person had so deep an interest in the development of that country as the Canadian Pacific Railway has. They knew how the country suffered; they knew how settlement was retarded by the agitation and the hue-and-cry passed all over the world that there was a gigantic monopoly there which prevented the development of that country and imposed great difficulties in the way of its settlement. I need not tell the House how entirely I disagree as regards the exaggerated statements that have been made on that subject, and how greatly I think the difficulties connected with that question have been exaggerated. But we have to deal with things, not as they ought to be, but as they are; and the Canadian Pacific Railway find themselves precisely in the same position, that they have to look at the question as it stands, and not at the question in the attitude and position they would desire it should occupy. What they stated to us was this: Feeling the importance of this question being settled, we are prepared to have this monopoly disposed of at once and forever, and to meet any competition that can be brought into the country, and further to give abundant security, security so ample as to remove the slightest possibility of doubt of the Government of Canada ever being called upon to contribute one dollar in relation to this question, if the Government of Canada will lend us their credit in such a way as to enable us to obtain upon our land grant the means of putting our road in a complete condition, the means of furnishing the necessary elevators and providing the necessary rolling stock to handle the crop. Now, the Government were very glad to find that they could settle this question upon terms that, I have no hesitation in saying, have been received by the people of this country, from one end to the other, with feelings of the most profound satisfaction. I have no hesitation in saying that we are indebted, no doubt very largely, to our friends opposite and to the newspapers representing their views, for that condition of things. These gentlemen and the newspapers opposed to the Government, held out to the people the assertion that we had fastened this gigantic monopoly upon the country, and that we would be compelled to buy it out by the actual payment of a very large sum of public money, and consequently—and I have no doubt that the opinion was honestly entertained by hon. gentlemen opposite and by the press opposed to the Government—they believed looking at the importance of that clause, looking at the fact that it had been a prime factor in obtaining the contract for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company not only felt that they held a very strong and powerful influence in order to induce the payment to them by the Government of a large sum of money, but felt that the abandonment of that monopoly was worth to the country a very large sum of money, and that consequently, as companies are not likely to part with anything they own without a quid pro quo they would compel us to pay a very large sum to at once sweep away and forever remove this monopoly which formed a part of this contract. After discussion, we found that, by giving a guarantee for fifty years for the payment of the interest on the Canadian Pacific Railway land grant bonds at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on \$15,000,000, we could obtain the consent of the company to take this clause out of the contract, and leave that country free and open to railway operations from any source whatever, and so entirely remove the whole difficulty connected with the question of monopoly. Then it came to be a question of what security they were prepared to give and how far their statement was well founded that not a particle of responsibility would rest upon the Government; that, while the credit of the Government for the interest on the bonds would enable them to go to the money market of the world and obtain this money upon infinitely more favorable terms than they otherwise could obtain it, the security being ample, it would furnish them, without imposing any responsibility on us whatever, with the means of putting their road and the entire system connected with their road in such a condition of efficiency as would enable them rapidly to develop that country and to compete with anybody in connection with this matter. The Government felt that Canada had a very vital interest in the expenditure of that money; that is to say, that the ground we have taken and the action we have taken has been inspired by the conviction that we owed it to Canada, after having expended such an enormous amount of public money to adopt means by which the traffic of that road would be brought down to the sea through our own country and would not be used to enrich the railway line and the ports of another country. We believe now that we have a vital interest, that the Government and the Parliament and the people of Canada have a vital interest in the Canadian Pacific Railway obtaining the means by which they will be able to hold Canadian traffic on Canadian lines and bring it down to the great ports in our own country, instead of its going down to the seaboard of the United States of America. It is fair and legitimate competition, and we believe that we would be warranted in contributing towards an expenditure which would secure objects so important to the trade and to the development of an enormously large section of Canada. We have gone carefully into this question. The amount of interest which is involved is \$525,000 a year to pay 3½ per cent. interest for fifty years. What is the security upon which this is based? That security is on the land still owned by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I may remind the House that the question of the value of these lands is not a new question in this House, it has been discussed again and again. When we gave a grant of 25,000,000 acres of these lands to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, hon. gentlemen opposite, in showing what an enormous subsidy we were giving to that company, undertook to place an estimate on the actual value of those lands, and the House subsequently deliberately passed an Act authorising the company to issue bonds to the extent of \$2 an acre, and I remember the then leader of the Opposition referring to my modest estimate of \$2 an acre as the value of those lands, as that "miserable \$2 an acre." It was so utterly below and beneath the estimation of himself and of other hon. gentlemen opposite of what these lands were worth; and the hon. gentleman, I am bound to say, made a very powerful argument at that time in showing that that estimate of \$2 an acre was a most miserable estimate and was very much below the mark. He took the adjoining country; he took Dakota and Minnesota, which are similarly situated, which are lying alongside our North-West, where the lands, and the climate, and everything else give a comparison in our favor as against theirs, and he showed what those lands had brought, and that, at no distant date, our lands in the North-West would become very valuable, and therefore he considered \$2 an acre a most miserable estimate. Well, we had the good fortune to buy back 7,000,000 acres of lands at the still more miserable price of \$1.50 an acre, and thus we did two things—we reduced the monopoly which we all felt to be objectionable in regard to the 25,000,000 acres, and we brought the percentage of value very much down by purchasing, as we had the good fortune to do, 7,000,000 acres from the company at that reduced figure.

Mr. CHARLTON. Do you not think they would sell you the rest at the same price?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will get his answer in a few moments, when I show that the average price received by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for all the lands they have sold has been over $3 an acre. The hon. gentlemen on that side had a good deal of reason to say that their estimate was not a very extravagant one on the information they had. The hon. member knows that the original land grant was 25,000,000 acres. Up to the 31st December last, there had been sold, of that 25,000,000 acres, 3,272,749 acres, at an average price, per acre, of $3.12. The number of acres sold to the Government for $10,000,000 was 6,793,014, so that the number of acres left is 14,934,237, which will be encumbered, that is including the fifteen millions about to be issued if these proposals receive the sanction of the House, deducting the $1,200,000 unpaid purchase money on accomplished sales from the amount of the land grant bonds in the hands of the public, to the extent of $17,271,000. So the average charge is not more than $1.15 per acre.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What did the hon. gentleman say was the amount of the bonds involved in this?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As I have already stated, the House has already enabled the company to issue bonds to the extent of \$2 per acre upon the whole 25,000,000 acres, and the outstanding land grant bonds in the hands of the public amount to \$3,463,000. From that you must deduct the amount due on sales of land already made, \$1,200,000, leaving a charge of \$2,263,000 in addition to the \$15,000,000 which we hold, which makes our charge \$17,263,000, which is less than \$1.15 per acre on the lands still unsold. That is irrespective of the \$1,000,000 of land grant bonds held by the Government of Canada as security, upon which there is no interest. We do not take that into account, because there is no interest payable upon that, and it is the property of the company. In reference to the question of security, I may say that this Parliament has deliberately pledged itself to the monetary public as to the value of these lands at \$2 per acre, because, if these lands were not worth \$2 an acre it was a great wrong for Parliament to authorise the emission by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company of \$50,000,000 of land grant bonds upon the 25,000,000 acres. In addition to that, we have the fact that the sales of between 3,000,000 and 4,000,000 of acres have averaged \$3.12 per acre. We have another important fact in connection with this, and everyone who knows anything of the construction of railways through these prairie countries is aware of it, that in almost all cases in the first instance the construction of railways upon land grant bonds has failed. Take for instance the most notable case, which is known to every member of this House, the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway. They undertook, with a very large grant, to construct a road there, and the result was that the Government free lands came into competition with the railway lands, and they could not sell their lands, and they broke down and utterly failed. I need not tell the House that Sir George Stephen, Sir Donald A. Smith, Mr. James Hill, the present president of that company, and a number of influential capitalists, went in and bought up the securities for a song of the railway that had failed, and made immense fortunes out of the sale of these very same lands. And why? Because the moment the Government lands were occupied as our Government lands are being occupied now, by free settlers, the moment these free lands were disposed of—every settler that was brought into the country went upon a free grant, and increased enormously the value of it for two reasons: first, they placed it out of the power of other people to come in along this line of railway and get land upon the same terms; and, secondly, because they created a settlement, and thereby gave a greatly enhanced value to the land. As I say, enormous fortunes were made by these gentlemen to whom I have referred, in connection with the enterprise, and that is the best possible illustration of the fact that you cannot construct railways by land grant bonds that are interspersed like these, for the House knows that every acre of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's lands, every square mile, was intersected by a Government section. What is the result? Why, Sir, they have been wise in their generation, and they found that it was impossible to compete with us and our free grants, and they have directed all their energy to advertising the free grant lands of the Government, and getting them taken up, in order to enhance the value of the lands which they hold. As these lands now are, to a great extent, occupied by free settlers, and are adjacent to the railway lands of the company upon which it is proposed to place a mortgage equal to \$1.15 per acre, they will be enormously enhanced in value, and the sales in future will be infinitely more rapid than in the past. I ask the House, under these circumstances, if there is a gentleman here, if there is an intelligent man in this country, that does not believe that, inasmuch as every dollar that is received for the sale of this 15,000,000 acres, in round numbers, of land, that still remains the property of the company, as every dollar of that money goes into the treasury of Canada, until the amount of \$15,000,000, which covers the mortgage, is provided—I ask if there is any intelligent man in this country who doubts that at no distant day they will be in a position entirely to wipe out this mortgage and leave the money upon which we have guaranteed interest, in our hands, at, as I have said, at a cost to the country of the interest which we will then be called upon to pay at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.? No person can question that the basis of security is undoubted, that the amount with which these lands will be chargeable, \$17,000,000, with the land at \$1.15 per acre, will be ample security for the payment of the principal, and we are taking care that the bondholders, that the persons who invest their money, shall have security for the payment of their principal, by the fact that every dollar received for the land shall be deposited with the Government under the control of trustees, of whom a member of the Government will be one, for the purpose of extinguishing the claim; therefore, I think no person can doubt that the principal is perfectly safe. Now, what about the liability for interest? We now come to a question that, I think, will admit of being demonstrated with as much clearness and as much ease as anything else. The Canadian Pacific Railway has surpassed all expectation as to the net returns that it has received; the enormous volume of traffic that has been created. Everybody knows that a vast extent of that line passed, at the time that contract was made, through an unpeopled desert, everybody knows that there was no town on the Pacific coast of any magnitude. Almost the entire line passed through such a country that I remember well my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie), when dealing with our original proposition to construct that railway in ten years, after looking at it in the light of all the sagacity that he possessed, and after looking at it in the light of all information that he possessed as Minister of Public Works, the hon. gentleman declared, in his place here, that all the resources of the British Empire could not build that road in ten years. Sir, why did he make that statement? He made the statement because it commended itself to the judgment of the great body of the people in this country, and he made it on the ground of the absence of population, on the ground of the enormous engineering difficulties, and above all because of the inaccessibility of that country in dealing with the engineering difficulties, and also because the country was unpeopled. But at present, no person can look at the returns made from year to year, of the traffic which had to be created as this road was constructed, and which now run up to eleven or twelve millions of dollars per annum, without feeling that our most sanguine expectations as to the settlement and development of that great country, have been more than realised. Sir, if you look at the development of the country, at the recent crop in the North-West; if you consider the inability of this road, with all its rolling stock and all its appliances, which were very great, to handle that traffic last year, if you look at the prospect for a crop this year and at the normal condition of that country as it will rapidly people up, you can come to but one conclusion, and that is, that every acre of these lands lying contiguous of the line of this railway, will become greatly enhanced in value, that they will sell with much greater rapidity in the future than they have in the past, for the reason that the Government lands, in the neighborhood of the railway, having been, to a considerable extent, disposed of, as the country fills up the lands will not only be enhanced in value, but you will have a traffic that will tax all the resources of the Canadian Pacific Railway, after they have expended these \$15,000,000 of money, under this arrangement, in the betterment of the road, and in furnishing it with rolling stock and elevators so as to handle that traffic. I believe that when they have expended that money they will still find that their great difficulty will not be to obtain traffic, but to handle the traffic that the rapid development of that country will throw upon them. Under these circumstances, I do not think that any person can, for a moment, doubt the sufficiency of the security. The surplus revenue of last year, over and above their fixed charges, was no less than \$253,884. It must not be forgotten that these figures are for the year 1886-87, which winter was one of extraordinary severity, the winter was one of unparalleled severity, and one which has not been experienced before or since. The cost of the operation of the line which was comparatively new, which was practically only opened, was under those circumstances very greatly enhanced, although the means adopted by the company for dealing with the avalanches of snow in the Rocky Mountains were found to be absolutely perfect, the snow-shedding, which is upon a scale that would astonish hon. gentlemen if they were to see in the solidity of construction, allowing these avalanches to come down from the Rocky Mountains and the Selkirks and elsewhere to pass over them without the slightest difficulty or without producing the slightest disturbance. But they did not possess the knowledge they have now as to how far these means of protecting the road would require to be carried, and, consequently, they had not been sufficiently extended. The traffic was blocked. The company was taxed with an enormous expenditure in the working of their line, which in future will be avoided, because they have supplemented their extensive works during the past season with such additions as will entirely remove any difficulty or obstacle from that cause. But the result is that for the first three months of this year the net profits have increased \$234,202 over the corresponding three months of last year. I am now speaking of the net revenue. The company had a surplus revenue last year of \$253,854, and for the first three months of this year a surplus, beyond all expenses, of \$234,202 over the same three months of last year, which indicate an increase of profits for the year of fully \$1,000,000; and that would afford, I think, sufficient margin to satisfy anybody. Not only from their inability to remove the crop produced in Manitoba last year, but from the short crop in Ontario the receipts of the company relatively for the portion of the line used in moving the Ontario crop, were affected very disastrously indeed, and I hope such an occurrence may not happen during coming years. But at this moment the company stand, taking a moderate calculation, in the position of having surplus earnings, this year, of at least a million. The House must not forget that this road is to-day in its infancy, that the initial difficulties which the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), which we and every one who took an interest in this great work felt, namely as to what the road would do until the time came when the country was settled and developed, have just been surmounted; and every person will recognise that if this road when it has just got fairly under way is able to have surplus earnings to this extent, when it obtains fifteen millions additional capital which will place it in a thoroughly efficient and complete condition to handle whatever traffic may offer, we can scarcely fix bounds to the steady and solid basis of prosperity on which this enterprise will rest. The gross earnings for the first three months last year were \$1,873,994, and for the year \$11,606,412. The increase in profits for the first three months of the year were \$234,202, and the profits would be \$1,450,000 for the present year, assuming that that ratio of increase were maintained. I have not, however, based my calculation on that as it might be regarded as somewhat extravagant, but we may fairly rely upon having an increase of \$1,000,000 net profits in the present year. If we can have such a return at the commencement of the enterprise to what may we not look forward to as the position of this great national highway in years to come, as year by year the country becomes settled, as discoveries of minerals are made along the barren and onward district north of Lake Superior? I ventured to predict years ago when speaking of the construction of this road—and I based my estimates on a careful examination of discoveries made in the past—that when this country was made accessible and the country could be investigated as it can be now done by railway, and I need not tell any one who has travelled on the Canadian Pacific Railway as to the comfort and luxurious character of their cars—when men of science and enterprise could travel through this desert, as it has hitherto been, for the purpose of making discoveries, surprising results would be obtained. Why, there is a copper discovery made in connection with the opening and construction of the line which has no parallel in the world. I took to the exhibition in London a barrel of the ore taken out of the mine as I saw it thrown up, for I went and examined the district, and I asked Professor Selwyn to place it in the hands of the most able analysts in London, in order to ascertain what it was worth, and the result was that they reported that the amount of metallic copper was no less than from 14 to 15 per cent. The ore of the Calumet and Hecla mine, the most valuable known in the world, the capital of which is so many millions, I am afraid to give the figures, but no doubt they are known to the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), yields only from 4 to 5 per cent. of metallic copper. There is this, however, to be said that the copper is of a finer and more valuable description than that found in the Canadian mine. But we have this fact, that at this moment we are drawing capital out of the United States for the establishment of enormous works at Sudbury on this line of railway, which will build up at that point a town of many thousands at a very early day. Then we have a discovery of a silver mine within a distance of 15 or 20 miles of Port Arthur and Fort William in which a large capital is now invested, and which is said to rival and even transcend anything that Silver Islet has ever produced. Irrespective of the discoveries during the past year along that line of railway there has been discovered at a distance not remote from that point the finest iron ore for making Bessemer steel; and so in that district, which we all supposed was going to offer the great cardinal difficulty in connection with the construction and operation of the Canadian Pacific Railway, we have these mineral developments that surpass anything which the most sanguine had ventured to predict. The fertility of the soil and the character of the climate of the North-West have placed beyond question the fact that we have the great remaining granary of the world for development, and all that is necessary in order to make that country a mine of wealth to Canada and to build up there a great, powerful and prosperous population is that capital and people shall be brought into it. I do not intend to detain the House longer. I think, familiar as every hon. member is with the resolutions, which have been a long time on the paper; ventilated as they have been in the public press of the country, which has discussed the matter in all its bearings, I do not intend to detain the time of the House longer, than simply to draw attention to the fact, that in addition to the undertaking to expend this money, in the way in which we consider it would be most important in the interests of the country, we have provided in the schedule to this agreement, that \$5,498,000 shall be used to pay the floating debt of the company, which was expended as I have said in carrying out those great snow-shedding arrangements, and for the betterment of the road during the past year, also that of the remaining amount, \$5,250,000 shall be expended in obtaining the most ample provision of rolling stock on the road, and providing locomotives, box cars, passenger cars, freight cars, tool cars, snow ploughs, &c., so as to put the line in a position to do what has been the vital point with this Government and with the people of this country to do, from the inception of this contract, that is adopting every means that we can devise by which this great expenditure the country has put itself to, shall inure to the development of our own country primarily, and to bringing the bountiful products of the North-West down through our own channels to the seaports of our own country, for shipment across the ocean. At this late period of the Session I will not detain the House longer, because I feel it would be unnecessary, and wearying them without any necessity in connection with this subject which I have placed as briefly as I could before the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. CHARLTON. There is one question I would ask the hon. gentleman before he takes his seat. What significance is to be attached to the following passage in the memorandum of the Minister of Railways:—

“The company are willing that all postal subsidies and other moneys payable to them by the Government of Canada may be set off against any interest which the Government of Canada may be called on to pay, and these moneys will, at no remote period, be sufficient of themselves to cover the interest guaranteed.”

I have not noticed that the hon. gentleman said anything about security for the payment of interest.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I felt it would be unnecessary after demonstrating to the House, as I trust, the absolute impossibility of our being called upon ever to pay a dollar of this interest, until the entire $15,000,000 were deposited with the Government as land sales. I felt that the impossibility was so great as not to require at all a reference to that. The hon. gentleman is aware that the Government of Canada requires the Canadian Pacific Railway to perform a very large amount of work for it. The hon. gentleman knows that at this moment we are paying an enormous sum to the Grand Trunk Railway for postal and other services for the Government, so in the same way our payments this year will very likely approximate to $400,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that will always be an increasing amount.

Mr. CHARLTON. What security is there?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am coming to what my hon. friend says. He wants to know what security we have for the appropriation of that, in case we should be called upon to pay. As I said, I did not feel it necessary to refer to that subject, because the possibility of our being called upon, was as I thought so remote as to render it unnecessary to make the slightest reference to that. But the hon. gentleman will see that the original mortgage given to the bondholders by Parliament, provides that they shall have the tolls and revenues earned by the road, and the question has been raised as to how far that would interfere with the Government appropriating in case they were called upon for payment of any portion of this interest before the land grant bonds were extinguished, and before we had all the money. The hon. gentleman need not be told that the tolls and revenues will not be earned until we owe the Canadian Pacific Railway for the performance of the work, and that, as we can have the half-yearly settlement with the Canadian Pacific Railway dated beyond the periods at which any amount of default would become obvious and we would be called upon; the hon. gentleman will see at once, that the tolls and revenues never would be earned, and never would become the property of any person else, while the parties who had done the work owed us the money. I will put the case to the hon. gentleman himself. Suppose the Canadian Pacific Railway owed him $100, and he got them to carry a certain amount of freight a certain distance for $150; the hon. gentleman would discharge all his liability to the company and hand over all that could inure to the original bondholders, when he paid $50 taking the $100 they owed him. That is a matter of account, and is perfectly simple. Of course faith would be kept with everybody. No persons are more interested in the betterment of this road, and in its being put in a position to earn those revenues in a most prompt, efficient and economic manner, than the bondholders themselves. There is no attempt to diminish in the least degree the security given to the original bondholders, nor is there the least possibility remaining, for the question being raised as to the Government of Canada being called upon to pay anything, in addition to that which at the time of settlement half yearly, from year to year, this Canadian Pacific Railway Company are shown to owe the Government for any service.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has endeavored to persuade the House that the liability which he has asked the House to undertake in favor of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, is truly nominal, that it involves no responsibility whatever, and that the people of Canada will never be called upon to pay one single dollar of the millions which they are asked to guarantee in favor of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Well, Sir, whatever this House may believe, and whatever this House may do, I venture to say that the people of Canada at large will accept, only with a large share of discount, the sanguine expectations which are held out to them by the hon. the Finance Minister. The professions of the hon. gentleman and his colleagues with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, have been so often falsified that there is legitimate cause on this occasion to apprehend that again, the result of the present transaction may be a heavy debt, to be paid by the people of Canada. With this expectation before us, there would be some measure of relief in the resolutions before the House, if it could be expected now that those new demands would be the last and final demands that would be made on the people of this country on behalf of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is finally final.

Mr. LAURIER. This is "finally final." That is not the first time we heard the statement from the same gentleman, and although it was "finally final," as was said, it never was final and that finality never was realised. There is reason to believe again on this occasion, that this will not close the account and that for us to expect even so little as that, is to expect too much. At no distant date we will have a repetition, and this "finally final" demand will have to be supplemented by some new favor on behalf of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Those resolutions are the pound of flesh exacted by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to relinquish the monopoly which they have exercised over the North-West portion of our country, and which if it has not ruined, has blighted the prospects of that country. It was felt from the first moment the contract with the syndicate was laid upon the Table of this House and communicated to the public, that of the many obnoxious clauses which the people of Canada were subjected to under this instrument, the most obnoxious of all was this monopoly clause. Indeed, public opinion recoiled against it; public opinion remonstrated against it; public opinion insisted at once that the monopoly would be an incubus upon the people of the North-West, which would crush their energies, and perhaps blight their prospects. Public opinion remonstrated in no uncertain tones, and many of those who were disposed to swallow the other terms of the contract, monstrous as they were, stopped at the monopoly clause. In fact, Sir, I am not exaggerating when I say that from the moment it existed, the contract was in danger. The Government understood that they had to speak on that subject to alleviate the anxiety of the people of the country; and then were uttered the famous words: "we cannot check Manitoba." The hon. gentleman tells us to-day that he will not discuss the question whether or not the obligation to disallow the railway charters granted by the Legislature of Manitoba was imposed on the Government by the monopoly clause. In so saying, he is eluding the very question involved to-day. What are the Government asking the House? They are asking the House to compensate the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for relinquishing the monopoly which they claim over the Province of Manitoba. I will not say at present, taking the hon. gentleman's line of argument, whether or not their claim was not justified in their own view; but they have claimed that monopoly and successfully claimed it, and to-day the Government ask us to compensate the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for relinquishing it. I say, Sir, that at the time when the contract was adopted, the Government committed themselves to a policy; they declared that they had no power to check Manitoba; and since the hon. gentleman has taken the position that this question is not to be discussed to-day, it becomes my duty to reiterate the words that were spoken on that occasion by the Government in order to secure a ratification of this contract. The hon. gentleman who leads the Government, and who led the Government at that time, felt bound to alleviate the anxiety of the people on the subject of the monopoly, and he did it in these words:

"In order to give them a chance we have provided that the Dominion Parliament—mind you, the Dominion Parliament—we cannot check any other Parliament, we cannot check Ontario, we cannot check Manitoba—shall, for the first ten years after the construction of the road, give their own road, into which they are putting so much money and so much land, a fair chance of existence."

Sir, these words were explicit. But it seems they were not explicit enough, and an hon. gentleman whose recent loss we all mourn, Mr. White, who though not a member of the Government at that time, enjoyed the full confidence of his party, was detailed to emphasise the words spoken by the Prime Minister, and he did it as follows:—

"But we are told now that because of the fifteen miles there never can be any railway into this country. To what does that apply? Simply to the Territories over which the Dominion Parliament has control. There is nothing to prevent Manitoba now, if it thinks proper, granting a charter from Winnipeg to the boundary line. At this very moment there is a company in course of organisation to build a railroad from Winnipeg to West Lynn on the boundary, and after this agreement is ratified. This provision does not take away from Manitoba a single right it possesses. In fact this Parliament could not take away those rights. It has the same right as the other Provinces for the incorporation of railway companies within the boundary of the Province itself, and there is nothing to prevent the Province of Manitoba from chartering a railway from Winnipeg to the boundary to connect with any southern railway. The only guarantee which this company has under the contract, is that the traffic shall not be tapped far west on the prairie section, thus diverting the traffic away from their line to a foreign line. But there is nothing to prevent a railway being built in Manitoba, within the Province that would carry the traffic to any railway that may tap it from the American side. That is the position with respect to this matter."

Well, Sir, this language was very explicit; it could not be more explicit. It conveyed the idea as plainly as language could convey it, that the Dominion Parliament undertook not to charter any railways which might compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway, but that the Government at the same time declared that they had no power over the Provinces, and that the Provinces were at liberty to charter as many railways as they thought proper for their own advantage; and, Sir, the compact was so understood by everybody. I cannot do better to show that it was so understood, than to quote a paragraph from a ministerial newspaper, the Hamilton Spectator, which commented on the language used by the Prime Minister and by Mr. White as follows:—

"Now observe it is the Dominion Government which is not to authorise any line to be built to the southward, except in the direction of south-west, or west of that, and not nearer to the border than 15 miles. But the territory from Winnipeg to the American border, for a good many miles east and west of Pembina, is Manitoba territory. Within that territory the Dominion Government have no jurisdiction in either the granting or withdrawal of railway charters, unless they pass into the territory of another Province, in which case the line becomes a Dominion one, and must have a Dominion charter. The right of granting railway charters within the territory of Manitoba and up to the boundary line of the Province is vested in the Legislature of Manitoba, and the Dominion Government have no power to interfere with that right either through a bargain with the Pacific Syndicate or in any other way. The Manitoba Legislature may grant charters for a thousand railways from Winnipeg to the Canadian boundary if it please, so long as the lines are within Manitoba territory. That point was clearly explained by Sir John Macdonald in the railway debate, and was not for a moment questioned by an Opposition member."

No, Sir, it was not questioned by any Opposition member, because every Opposition member understood the language spoken by the Prime Minister exactly in the manner in which it was understood by the Hamilton Spectator, and to be incapable of any other interpretation. Well, even with this restriction, that the monopoly clause applied only to the Territories, it still remained an obnoxious clause. But a great deal of the objection to it had been removed; the public anxiety had been alleviated, because a great many understood, and rightly understood, from what took place afterwards, that the development of the Territories would not be so active during the time the monopoly was to be in operation as to be seriously hampered by the monopoly clause. But, as we are aware, the people of Canada, especially the people of Ontario, had invested millions and millions of dollars in the Province of Manitoba, in lands and every form of enterprise, and everybody realised that if the monopoly was to apply to the Province of Manitoba, those investments would become comparatively barren, and the progress of the Province would be checked; and when the Government stated that the monopoly would not apply to the Province of Manitoba, those people felt that the future of Manitoba was beyond question. And, Sir, I ask now, what was the reason those statements were made by the Government when the contract was under discussion? Why, Sir the reason was obvious—it was in order to get the contract ratified; it was to quiet an agitation which would have been dangerous to the existence of the contract; it was to prevent an opposition which was brewing even in the ministerial members and the ministerial community at large. But, Sir, what took place? The ink which recorded that assurance from the Government was scarcely dry before the sacred promises made, the solemn pledges taken, were deliberately violated and broken by the very men who had made them. The Province of Manitoba which in the language of the Prime Minister could not be checked, which in the language of Mr. White could not be deprived of a single one of its rights, but could charter as many railways as she chose to the boundary line—the Province of Manitoba largely availed itself of that power, and granted charters for the construction of railways to the boundary line; and every one of those charters, one after another, was disallowed by the very men who had said that the legislative authority of Manitoba could not be interfered with. Well, I ask, Sir, whether a more barefaced deceit was ever practiced on any people? Were solemn promises ever more absolutely violated by those who made them than those promises were violated? But, Sir, bad as this was, worse yet was to come. One day, not long after that, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company came to this House, knocking at the door and asking for assistance. The Government determined to grant the company a loan of $30,000,000, and asked Parliament to authorise that loan. We remember the circumstance, well. They are still green, I believe, in every one's memory. We know there was strong opposition upon that occasion to that demand and to this new bounty being granted to the company. The Government understood the position, and decided they must speak at once strongly in order to prevent further opposition. The hon. gentleman who has just addressed the House, and who was then Minister of Railways, had charge of the resolution, and he openly declared, in presenting the resolution to the House, that by the year 1886, as soon as the line would be completed along the north shore of Lake Superior, the policy of disallowance would be abandoned. I do not quote the language of the hon. gentleman because it is fresh in the memory of every one of us.

Mr. LAURIER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I wish the hon. gentleman would quote it, because it is not quite so strong as he says it is.

Mr. LAURIER. If it can afford any pleasure to the hon. gentleman, I will be happy to give him the exact language he used. The hon. gentleman then said:

"I showed on a former occasion that the present Government had adopted the policy of their predecessors in regard to what is called the monopoly in the Province of Manitoba; that when the late Government undertook to carry on the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway as a Government work, they felt bound to protect the traffic of the road from being drawn off to lines to the south of us in the adjoining republic, and had consequently refused to issue a proclamation which would charter lines within the Province of Manitoba to connect with American lines to the south. I said that the present Government, when we came into power, adopted that policy; that we felt, as our predecessors did, that, grappling with as gigantic a work as the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, we were bound to adopt every possible means of protecting our own line against having its traffic drawn to lines to the south—and, mark you, this was at a time when we did not contemplate, at an early day, carrying the Canadian Pacific Railway further than Port Arthur. I said, further, that when we made it obligatory upon the Canadian Pacific Railway to extend, at once, the line north of Lake Superior, giving us an all-rail route from Montreal to the Pacific Ocean, or from Callander to the Pacific Ocean, we felt obliged to give to that company, upon which we imposed such onerous obligations, all the security that we had considered necessary, and that our predecessors in the Government had considered necessary for the protection of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

"But I am glad to be able to state to the House, that, although true to that policy, the Government refused to give assent to the construction of lines within the Province of Manitoba to connect with American railways to the south, such is the evidence presented by the operation of the line so far as it has gone, such is the conclusion arrived at by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself in regard to the ability of a through line of the Canadian Pacific Railway to take care of itself, and, by the inherent power of its own advantages, to maintain its position, notwithstanding any competition to which it may be subjected, we are now in a position to review and to reconsider the policy of the late Government and the policy of the present Government, as to the continued necessity for any long period of protecting the Canadian Pacific Railway against competition within the Province of Manitoba, and I am glad to be able to state to the House, that, such is the confidence of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the power of the Canadian Pacific Railway to protect itself, that, when the line is constructed north of Lake Superior, the Government feel it will not be incumbent upon them to preserve the position they have hitherto felt bound to preserve, that of refusing to consent to the construction of lines within the Province of Manitoba connecting it with American railways to the south. I can give no better evidence to the House and the country of the advanced position which we consider this great enterprise of the Canadian Pacific Railway has attained, than when I say that I feel it is consistent with what we owe to the people of this country and to that great national work, that the Government should not deem it incumbent on themselves to pursue the restrictive policy within the Province of Manitoba, which we have hitherto been obliged to maintain."

That was, it seems to me, not even diplomatic language. It was as forcible language as the hon. gentleman could well deliver. He distinctly stated that the Government had come to the conviction that it would be no longer incumbent on them to pursue the policy of disallowance once the line was completed on the north of Lake Superior. Well, the date fixed by the hon. gentleman came to pass, and the line was constructed on the north shore of Lake Superior. The people of Manitoba, once more relying upon the promises which had just been reiterated by the hon. gentleman speaking on behalf of the Government, thought they would avail themselves of the fact that at last their rights were recognised, and they chartered new railways to the boundary line. But I am sorry to say, and I am ashamed for my country to say, that these very promises, which had just been made on a solemn occasion, were again broken by the very men who had made them and the two charters were disallowed. That was more than the people of Manitoba could endure, and, indeed the people of Manitoba would have been less than men had they longer submitted to seeing their legislation torn into pieces by a despotic Government and the fragments thrown into their faces in contempt. They commenced the policy of resistance to the authority of the central government. All party lines were obliterated upon that question. "No disallowance" became the one and the only political cry in Manitoba. Even ministerial candidates for seats in this House had to adopt that policy or forego all hope of being elected, and even the Local Government, the Conservative Government of Manitoba, which had hitherto followed in the steps of the Dominion Government, were forced to change their course and to adopt the policy of disallowance. Up to that moment they had left the initiative of chartering competing lines to the Canadian Pacific Railway, to private enterprise, but they now determined to make this question a ministerial one. Not only did they make it a ministerial question, but they also made it a provincial question, and all party lines were obliterated in the Legislature of Manitoba. Mr. Norquay proposed the measure, which was carried unanimously, pledging the Government to undertake to construct a line from the city of Winnipeg, through the valley of the Red River, to the boundary line. That Act was disallowed, and the disallowance made it a dead letter. Still, in spite of the disallowance, the Government of Manitoba undertook to build the railway. In other words, they undertook to resist the Government. That was the third rebellion in the North-West. Not, I am happy to say, an armed rebellion, not a rebellion of poor half-breeds ignorant of their own rights, but a rebellion of civilised men; British subjects, who were determined that the spirit of enterprise should not be crushed out of their Province. What remained to be done by the Dominion Government? They had just disallowed an Act of the Legislature of Manitoba. The Government of Manitoba, backed by the whole people of Manitoba, undertook to set at defiance the authority of this Government, and there was nothing more for this Government to do, if they wanted to carry out the policy of disallowance to its legitimate conclusion, but to call out the volunteers and militia, and send them to Manitoba to tear up the railway works as fast as these were proceeded with. That was the legitimate conclusion of the policy of disallowance. There was another conclusion as well, which was open to this Government. That was for the Government to retrace their steps, to abandon their policy of disallowance, and to let the people of Manitoba build the railways which they deemed necessary for their own advantage. The Government did not care to take the first course; and, I am sorry to say, they had not the manliness to adopt the second course. They resorted to a third course. What was that? It was the course of granting more money, more advantages, and more privileges to the Canadian Pacific Railway; and hence, Sir, the resolutions which have been placed in your hands. Well, as far as these resolutions are concerned, they must be considered, first, as regards the abandonment of the monopoly in the Provinces, not only of Manitoba but of British Columbia, because British Columbia has also been subjected to this monopoly; and, secondly, they have to be considered so far as they contemplate the withdrawal of the monopoly of the Territories. So far as the Provinces are concerned, we, on this side of the House, protest against any compensation being given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for relinquishment of the monopoly in the Provinces, because we are certain that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company never had any legal right or legal claim to the exercise of any monopoly in the Provinces. It is true that, shortly after the contract had been ratified, in the month of October, 1881, the Pacific Railway Company presented a memorial to the Government complaining of certain charters which had been granted by the Legislature of Manitoba to lines which were to compete with them, and—

"Calling attention to the fact that one of the most essential of the conditions upon which the work was undertaken, and more particularly the eastern division of it, extending from the Thunder Bay Branch to Callander Station, was that no diversion of the traffic which the company might reasonably be expected to carry over that division would be permitted by the construction of railways tending to tap the traffic of Manitoba and the North-West."

Then there was but one answer to make to that pretension of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The only answer which it admitted of was, to say the least, that their claim came too late. They had heard the explanations given by the Ministers on the floor of Parliament; they had heard the interpretation which had been given to the contract by the Government when the contract was under discussion; they had heard the Ministers and influential members speaking for the Government, stating that the contract could not apply to the Province of Manitoba, that nothing could check Manitoba or interfere with her rights to charter railways to the boundary line, that Manitoba could not be deprived of the rights she enjoyed under the constitution; and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should have been told that, having heard those statements and never having protested against them when that discussion was received, it was nothing less than a piece of presumption on their part to ask the Government afterwards to do what the Government had said they would not do. But the Government ate their own words, and instead of saying what they had previously said to the company, they stated that they would do, and they did, the very thing they had said to the House they would not do. They disallowed the charter granted by the Legislature of Manitoba, a charter to compete with the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but the Government, it is due that I should say, felt the weakness, and the humiliation, and the shame of their position, because, in disallowing these charters, they did not pretend to say that they did it because they were bound by the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but they pretended that they were acting on behalf of the public interest, they said that the public interest demanded that the charters which had been granted by the Legislature of Manitoba should be disallowed, because, forsooth, if they were allowed to go into operation the result would be that the trade of the North-West would be diverted from Canadian to American channels. All I have to say upon this aspect of the question is that, if such were the views of the Government, if they were of opinion that it would not be conducive to the public interest to allow the charters to be granted by the Legislature of Manitoba to compete with the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, why did they not say so when that matter was under discussion? Why, instead of saying to Parliament, when the contract was under discussion, we cannot check Manitoba, cannot deprive Manitoba of any of her rights, did they not say we will check Manitoba, and will prevent her from granting charters to competing lines with the Canadian Pacific Railway, because it might injure the trade of the country? If they had spoken in that way when they were asking for the assent of Parliament to that contract, there would be nothing now to say. That would be perfectly legitimate, and the contract would have been ratified according to the views the Government now entertain, but what they did then was not what they did afterwards. When they said, we cannot check Manitoba, and we cannot deprive Manitoba of any of her rights, it was not open for them afterwards to prevent charters from being granted by the Legislature of Manitoba. However, I do not hesitate to say that these pretensions, which have been set forward by the Government at the fourteenth hour, that public policy and public interest demanded that these charters should be disallowed, are a mere sham, that the thing which they pretended to fear was never to be apprehended. What is it that they pretended to fear? They pretended to say that, if competing lines were built, in the valley of the Red River for instance, the trade would be diverted from Canadian to American lines—that is, from Manitoba to St. Paul and Minneapolis; but how many times did we not hear in this House—and the fact is true—that our geographical position is such that on the north side of the St. Lawrence, we must have not only the trade of our own North-West, but of the American North-West; not only the trade of Manitoba and the Territories, but of Dakota, Minnesota, and all those States of the Union. I could not do better on this point than to quote the opinion which was expressed in the month of December last in the Montreal Gazette, speaking of the completion of the Sault Branch of the railway. I do not quote this because I attach any particular authority to the newspaper, because the facts are well known, but I do so because it is a paper representing the Government:

"The distance from Minneapolis to Liverpool, via Chicago and New-York, is about 4,425 miles, while from the same point to Liverpool, via Sault Ste. Marie, it is only 3,916 miles, a saving in distance of nearly 600 miles. This saving constitutes the advantage possessed by the new system, through which it is enabled to compete successfully with Chicago lines for the traffic of the North-West. Traffic from the Canadian North-West will enlarge by leaps and bounds in the next few years, and with that flowing from the American North-West over the new system, should double the trade of the port (of Montreal) in a very short time. The Harbor Commissioners cannot longer prudently delay devising means for increasing harbor facilities and accommodation, they ought at once to determine on a policy of extension and enlargement of wharfrage and apply it to upon the opening of navigation next spring."

These facts are not new. They are well known. They express what everyone knows, that our geographical position is such that, even after the trade has arrived in Minneapolis or St. Paul, it must come back to the Canadian territory, because all the geographical advantages are in favor of that route. So the pretence set up by the Government is evidently a mere sham. There was never anything to induce the Government to believe that the trade could be diverted from Canadian to American channels; but the Government shielded themselves behind public opinion. They did not dare to say that they were acting at the dictation and bidding of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that they were acting not upon their own views, because I believe that, if they had been acting upon their own views, they would have given them in time, but they were acting at the bidding and dictation of the company to which they had given life and which proved to be stronger than they were. The Government were fishing for reasons, and they took up that one. They took up another one, and that is alluded to by the hon. gentleman in his speech a moment ago, that eminent lawyers had contended that the Province of Manitoba had not the power to charter railways to the boundary line. These views were set forth in many State papers, and in the latest, in a Minute of Council which was adopted on the report of the late Mr. White and the Minister of Justice, which is in these terms:

"The Sub-Committee submit that the distinction between works purely local and those of general interest, embodied in the above clause, is a very obvious one, and may be made more clear by reference to the sub-clause of the 91st section of the British North America Act, which confers upon the Parliament of Canada exclusive jurisdiction in all matters affecting the regulation of trade and commerce. To say that a Provincial Legislature shall not have power to legislate in respect of railways extending into another Province or into a foreign country would be mere surplusage, for the reason that no powers can be conferred by any legislative body for the construction or working of railways beyond its own boundaries. It is clear, therefore, that the exceptions in sub clause 10, of the 92nd section of the British North America Act, were designed to restrict the powers of the Legislatures to works of purely local concern, leaving to the exclusive control of the Parliament of Canada railways which, although situated technically within the boundaries of a Province, are intended to become, and are created with the express object of connecting with other railways beyond its limits, would thus become great arteries of interprovincial and international commerce."

Well, Sir, I am not to discard the legal proposition which is here set forth. There is something to say on both sides. I am not prepared to say that the contention that we ought not to charter a railway through a foreign country, is not a sound one; but I repeat what I have already said in regard to the other branch of the question, that if such were the views of the Government it was their duty to have abandoned those views when the contract was under discussion, but having taken the position they did, having stated to Parliament that they would not check Manitoba, when the Canadian Pacific Railway Company came to this Parliament and asked us to interfere and exercise the power of disallowance, then the Government should have said: No, we cannot do it, because we have pledged our word that we would not do it; thus they should have left the company to seek a remedy before the tribunals of the country. But that was a mere fishing for reasons. They again refer to the policy of public interest, and this is the way in which they do it:

Mr. LAURIER.

"It is most important on commercial, as well as national grounds, that the policy should be continued for some time longer. The Canadian Pacific Railway has already attracted a considerable trade between Canada, China and Japan, and the Atlantic markets of this continent. It has attracted attention as the most valuable highway, under British control, between the eastern possessions of the Empire. The Imperial authorities have become so impressed with its importance that they have agreed to grant a subsidy of £45,000 sterling per annum towards the establishment of a line of steamers on the Pacific Ocean to be run in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. In the struggle for the Pacific trade, the railway has already become a most important factor, being regarded as in some respect the most important of the transcontinental lines. Its chief competitor, the Northern Pacific Railway Company, of the United States, has been making great efforts to bear up against this new competition, and it is admitted that the efforts to strike the Canadian Pacific Railway in its centre, by an extension of the Northern Pacific Railway system from the international boundary line to Winnipeg, is not with the object of affording competitive rates to the people of Manitoba, but to secure a weapon by which to control the competition for transcontinental trade from the Pacific coast, now rapidly finding its way over the Canadian route, and thus retain it for United States Railways. It would be a most suicidal policy on the part of Canada to assist a foreign population in obtaining that weapon, to be used as it must be used, in hampering a trade from which the business men of the country have so much to anticipate."

Sir, these lines were written—when? No later than the 4th of January last. The Government then took the position that to allow these railway charters to go into operation would place in the hands of a foreign corporation a weapon to be used in hampering the trade and growth of the business of the country. Scarcely four months have elapsed and now the Government are forced to go back upon the policy which they then enunciated, upon the policy which they said at that time was still required in the best interest of the country. Sir, the Government to-day are giving the lie to the very arguments they used no longer than four months ago. We have proved out of the mouths of the Government themselves that they never had any justification for acting as they did, that their fears were purely chimerical. Sir, to say that no monopoly existed in Manitoba is to say something which cannot be admitted. A monopoly in Manitoba was an outrage, it was maintained against the constitution, it was maintained against the pledge of the Government, it was maintained against the best interests of the country, and now to ask Parliament to compensate the company for a monopoly which they never enjoyed, is a wanton sacrifice of the interests of the people of this country. But I frankly admit that the situation is altogether different with regard to the Territories. The monopoly legally exists in the Territories, Parliament granted the monopoly, Parliament enacted the clause which was cited a moment ago by the hon. gentleman, and Parliament did it in the plenitude of its power. But Parliament did this, in my opinion—indeed, the fact is now proved by the action of the Government—most unwisely, but still Parliament acted in the plenitude of its power; therefore, the contract is binding upon us, and like all contracts, must be dealt with in a just and fair manner. The contract has to be carried out unless it is cancelled by mutual consent, and upon a fair compensation to the party which renounces the advantages that it enjoys. So far as that goes, I would have nothing to say against the resolution. I admit that if the monopoly is to be wiped out as regards the Territories, Parliament should not do so except upon mutual agreement with the company, and I say without hesitation, except, also, upon compensation to the company for the advan tages which they may have under the instrument. The hon. gentleman says that under the terms agreed upon, Parliament would not have a single dollar to pay the company. Well, Sir, I venture to say that the Parliament of Canada do not want any favors from any of their creditors, whether it be the Canadian Pacific Railway Company or any one else. The people of Canada are prepared to discharge honestly all the liabilities which they may owe to any man, and if the company had come to Parliament and said they wanted compensation for the advantages derived from the monopoly, then coupled with the facts and data upon which we could base some action, I think we would have been placed in a position to discuss the terms proposed by the company. But we have nothing of the kind before us, we have no facts, we have no data to state the damage which may accrue to the company from the loss of the monopoly. It would have been more conducive to the public interest, it would have been more dignified in every way, that we should have had a plain demand from the company, and that the company should have been granted such a specific amount as would have been a fair compensation to the company for the loss of the monopoly. But this is not what has been done. We are asked to adopt as compensation to the company a proposition to assume an unlimited liability, a liability which is altogether contingent, under which we may not have to pay a single dollar, and under which we may have to pay $525,000 every year for 50 years, or a total of $26,000,000. Well, these are the terms which have been agreed upon by the Government, these are the terms which have been submitted to Parliament. The company proposes to effect a loan of $15,000,000 in bonds redeemable in 50 years, bearing interest at 3½ per cent. This involves a charge upon the country for interest of 525,000 every year for 50 years. As further security to the bondholders, the company asks the Government to become responsible, not for the payment of the capital, I admit, but for the payment of the interest. The Government have undertaken a contingent liability, and they have adopted a security against their own security. They have not adopted all the security which was granted to them, but they have adopted other security. We see in the report of the Minister of Railways that the company were prepared to give very large securities to the Government. The report says:

"The company are willing that all postal subsidies and other moneys payable to them by the Government of Canada may be set off against any interest which the Government of Canada may be called upon to pay, and these moneys will, at no remote period, be sufficient of themselves to cover the interest guaranteed."

That was the offer of the company; but the Government did not deem it, for some reason of their own, advisable to avail themselves of the company's offer. I have not, however, to look at this point at the present moment. They adopted other securities, and these are recited in the instrument which contains the agreement signed by the Minister of Railways and the president of the company. Let the House remember that we become guarantors of the debt. It is always a safe rule in business for any man who becomes security for another to measure the liability which he undertakes. The liability which we undertake, as I said a moment ago, is the same as the liability which is undertaken by any individual; under it we may not be called on to pay a single dollar or we may be called on to pay the whole of it, that is, $525,000 every year for 50 years. The Government have accepted other securities to recompense us for any expenditure which we may make under this agreement, and is contained in clause 5 of the contract, which reads as follows:—

"But if the company should at any time make default in the payment of any interest which may become due on any of the said bonds"—The Government have contemplated that this debtor like every other debtor might perhaps fail to carry out the agreement, and they very wisely foresee this event,—

—"then if required by the Government the company shall thereafter pay over to the Government all interest which it may collect, under uncompleted sales, upon the price of lands sold as well as the principal realised from the sales thereof, and the Government shall allow on the amount of such payments interest at the said rate, and shall apply all of such additional payments and the interest thereon as well as all interest accrued on the said principal fund towards satisfaction of the interest on the said bonds."

They say this security, accepted by the Government, is for any expenditure the country may have to make in the event of the default of the company. The company transfers certain moneys due to them upon lands sold but not yet paid for. It is remarkable how under this instrument we do not take the power to collect ourselves the money due to the defaulting party; but if the debtor is in default then we may go to the company and ask them to do for us what they do not do for others. I do not think these terms are very satisfactory. But it is well to look at what is the amount which is there set forth to be our guarantee. We find it stated in clause 8:—

"All land grant bonds which form part of the former issue by the company and now held by [amounting to $1,000,000] shall be cancelled, and the said mortgage hereinbefore mentioned shall be subject to the payment of such of the said land grant bonds as are outstanding, [in the hands of the public, amounting to about $3,463,000], but all sums due or to become due for unpaid purchase money to the company on account of lands heretofore sold, [amounting to about $1,200,000.] shall be applied to the payment of the said land grant bonds according to the terms of the mortgage securing the same."

These terms are very remarkable. The security accepted by the Government for any expenditure which we may have to make under this agreement, is equal to how much? We undertake to pay possibly $525,000 a year for 50 years, and the Government have accepted security of the value of $1,250,000, or to put it in figures exactly as they are, $1,252,857. This is all the amount which the Government have accepted for security in case we should have to make any expenditure on default of the company, if the company make default, we must pay $525,000 a year for 50 years, or $26,250,000, and we have placed in our hands security of the value of $1,253,857, that is to say, not more than two years' interest. The security is a perfect mockery. It is still more a mockery, because the security given to us in case we should have to pay on behalf of the company, these very moneys set forth here are already mortgaged to other creditors of the company to the extent of $343,000. If this proposal is not a mockery, I do not know what is. It would have been much better if the Government had accepted no security whatever but had trusted to the credit of the company, instead of accepting such a miserable, paltry sum as that named under such conditions, when even the security is a mere delusion and we have not, under the existing law, power to apply those moneys to claims which would arise in case the company made default. But the Government said, through the mouth of the hon. Minister of Finance, that it was perfectly useless to accept any guarantee from the company, that the terms were such that the lands would be perfect security and that there was no fear whatever but that the bondholders would be safe. I believe, and I must give my opinion candidly, that the bondholders under this agreement will be perfectly secure; I have no hesitation whatever in saying it; but the position of the Government is far different from the position of the bondholders. What will be the position of the bondholders? They have as a security 14,934,238 acres of land, which is the balance still remaining in the hands of the company out of the land grant. For how much would those lands sell to-day? The hon. gentleman says that the lands disposed of by the company have been sold at the rate of $3 12 an acre. That may be; but how much has been sold? The total amount of land sold is only 3,270,743 acres. One fact is quite certain and quite plain: those lands today would not sell for $1 an acre. It is true that in southern Manitoba some lands are held today at a prohibitory price, $5 or $10 an acre; but the whole of these 14,000,000 acres, if put on the market, would not sell for $1 an acre, in fact there is no price for them. This fact is proved by another fact, that the company have not selected the whole of the land to which they are entitled under the contract. If there was a demand for the lands they would have made their selection long ago, but there is no price for them at this moment; and this is the reason why the company, instead of selling them, have borrowed money upon them. I am bound to say I believe that in course of time, in course of the 50 years which the bonds are to run, the lands may perhaps be sold for $1 an acre and more than sufficient realised at all events to pay the principal, $15,000,000, issued on the security of those lands. So that the bondholders will be secured in this way; the agreement provides that the lands are to be placed in the hands of trustees, they will sell them from time to time, the money will be deposited in the hands of the Government and will constitute a fund exclusively for the benefit of the bondholders, and, as I said a moment ago, I believe in course of time the lands will be sold at a price sufficient to meet the principal. As to the interest, how is that to be met? This instrument provides that Government shall pay upon the moneys that are deposited in its hands interest yearly to the company, and it is to go towards paying the interest of the bondholders. It is quite evident; it is manifest indeed that for several years to come that the sales of land will be purely nominal; that there may not in fact be any sales of land, and, therefore, the interest shall have to be paid out of the other resources of the company. At all events it is of no concern to the bondholders, because if the interest is not paid by the company out of their other resources, then the interest will be paid by the Government, and so the bondholders are perfectly secured. But does the situation stand in the same manner with regard to the Government? Nothing of the kind. The Government will have to take their security out of these lands, and we must see what are the charges on these lands. First of all there will be $15,000,000 of bonds issued on this agreement; there are outstanding claims, on the former bonds of $3,463,000—I should say of $4,463,000, because we have learned the fact and the Government holds $1,000,000 of bonds in their hands, which are security for certain obligations contracted by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and therefore the amount is $4,463,000. Further we must deduct, I admit, the balance still outstanding upon lands sold, but the deeds of which are not yet delivered, $1,252,857; leaving a balance of $3,210,143, so that the capital charges against the lands will be $18,210,143. Now if we are to measure the liability which we have undertaken, we must see, as I said a moment ago, that we are liable to pay $525,000 every year for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, suppose the company should fail to meet that amount. If we have to pay that amount it becomes at once a charge on the capital, which will lay upon the land. That would amount in the space of 50 years to $26,250,000, or a total charge at the end of 50 years to $44,460,143. Now will the land sell for that amount? I question it very much, and I have no hesitation in saying that the lands will not sell for that amount unless the policy of the Government with regard to the North-West is completely reversed. What has prevented the company so far from selling their lands? What is the reason, as the hon. gentleman stated a moment ago that all our hopes with regard to the North-West have been deceived? There are two reasons why our hopes have been deceived. First by the monopoly, and next by the tariff—the National Policy. Those are the two causes which have impeded and retarded the settlement of the North-West. I am glad to say the monopoly will disappear, and must disappear whether those resolutions carry or not, because the people will no longer submit to it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. LAURIER. Yes, it will have to disappear. Does the right hon. gentleman pretend that the people of Manitoba will longer submit to the monopoly? Is it not a fact that all parties in Manitoba, even the friends of the hon. gentleman, have declared that the people of Manitoba will have competing railways, no matter at what cost they should have to obtain it. But, Sir, there is another blight on Manitoba and the North-West, and that is the tariff. There is no other section of this country which has suffered so much from the tariff as Manitoba and the North-West. If you want to sell those lands and to guarantee a rapid sale of them; if you want to settle the North-West with people, give us unrestricted reciprocity with the United States. Not only will unrestricted reciprocity settle the North-West with inhabitants, but it will give value to your lands. There is no country which would profit so much from unrestricted reciprocity with the United States as the people of those Provinces. There are only a few thousand of them there, perfectly isolated from the east, but in direct communication with the large and teeming population to the south of them. If you only give them the power to trade with those people, then, Sir, all the expectations which we were confident of a few years ago; all the expectations which the hon. gentleman was forced to admit have not been realised, all these would be revived. You will see that prosperity which we hope for in the North-West revived, and that country become, what it ought to be, the garden of Canada. I have but one further remark to make before I close. It is with regard to the application of these moneys. The agreement stipulates, as the hon. gentleman has stated to-day, that the object of the money so to be raised by the Canadian Pacific Railway, is to perfect the line from Quebec to Vancouver. How is it, Mr. Speaker, that this line is not yet perfected? The line has cost us already, as was stated a few days ago by the hon. gentleman, over $70,000,000. The people of Canada have given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, either in money or in the value of money, $70,000,000, and still the line is not yet perfect. I say the line ought to be perfect by this time and if the company had not misapplied their resources in duplication of lines in certain portions of the country—in the Eastern Provinces—and gridironing certain sections of the country with railways, the line would be able to do whatever is expected from it, without those $15,000,000 having to be applied for. If the company were raising their own money, they would be at perfect liberty to apply the money as they liked, but since they have asked the credit of Canada, since they ask the help of the people of Canada, the people have a right to expect that that money will be spent in a manner which will be most conducive to the interests of the country at large, and that should not be in perfecting a line which ought to be perfect by this time. But that the money ought to be applied in constructing branch lines in the North-West, and giving them to the country which has suffered so much for want of the expenditure on competing lines, for which they have been battling for so long a time. Those are the views which we on this side of the House entertain. In the first place we say that the House owes no compensation whatever to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, for the relinquishment of the monopoly in British Columbia and Manitoba where the monopoly so existed. In the second place we say, that the terms are unsatisfactory, because they are vague and because they impose further liability on the country, and in the third place we say that the terms are unsatisfactory, because they do not provide, as they should provide, that the money should be applied in the manner I have just stated; that is to say, securing branch lines in Manitoba and the North-West Territories. Therefore I beg to move the following amendments seconded by Mr. Davies (P.R.I.) :

That all the words after "That" to the end be left out and the following added instead thereof:

(1.) The exclusive privilege granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in virtue of article 15 in the agreement between Her Majesty and the company contained in the schedule to the Act 44 Victoria, chapter 1, do not apply and never were intended to apply to the Province of Manitoba as it existed at the time of the passing of the said Act, to the Province of British Columbia, or to any other Province but solely to the Territories over which the Parliament of Canada had exclusive and paramount legislative jurisdiction.

(2.) That the policy hitherto maintained by the Government of disallowing legislation by the Provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia authorising the construction within the limits of each Province, of railways to the boundary line of the United States was one directly at variance with the statements of the leader of the Government when submitting the agreement for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway to Parliament, and has been productive of great loss and injury to the said Provinces and the North-West Territories and of well grounded discontent on the part of the people.

(3.) That this House, whilst ever ready to discharge honorably all the engagements legally assumed by the Government of Canada with the company, regrets that the terms entered into by the Government and the company for the relinquishment of the exclusive privilege which the company claims under the said Act, involve Canada in enormous contingent liabilities without providing adequate security for the indemnifying of the Government against the payment of the interest it guarantees and may be compelled to pay, and that this House further regrets that such terms do not provide for the expenditure of the principal moneys to be raised on such bonds in the construction of branch railways of the Canadian Pacific Railway in Manitoba, British Columbia, and the North-West Territories.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 128) for the relief of Eleonora Elizabeth Tudor (from the Senate), on a division.—(Mr. Small.)

Bill (No. 129) for the relief of Andrew Maxwell Irving (from the Senate), on a division.—(Mr. Small.)

Bill (No. 130) for the relief of Catherine Morrison (from the Senate), on a division.—(Mr. Small.)

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not ask to divide the House now on these two bills, but I give notice to the promoters of them that when they are moved for their second readings, I will ask for a division of the House upon them.

ST. CATHARINES AND NIAGARA CENTRAL RY.

Mr. RYKERT moved that amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 61) respecting the St. Catharines and Niagara Railways Company be now read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. EDGAR. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain the nature of these amendments?
