CHATHAM, JANUARY 6, 1881.

"Advance" Scientific Miscellany.

An electric railway experiment is proposed for Paris.

Teris seriously asserted by a French scientist that the application of a magnetic sand from the Isle of Bourbon rapidly restores diseased plants.

Here Renault, a German writer, has described an elevated wooded valley in the Rhine Province, in which the passage of the wind produces musical tones wonderfully like the chiming of bells.

A scientist of Japan has found that the skin-furrows at the tips of the fingers vary in different individuals; and he thinks it quite possible markings may be traced in those furrows peculiar to different races of people.

A great Russian cavern, 145 feet wide and 68 feet deep, has been explored, and found to contain the remains of a prehistoric workshop for the manufacture of stone implements, the whole belonging to two distinct periods in the development of primeval man.

According to Mr. S. E. Peel, several varieties of ants possess the power of producing distinctly audible sounds. He has heard some of these insects at a distance of twenty or thirty feet, the noise being produced by the scraping of the horny apex of the abdomen three times in rapid succession against the dry leaves of the nest.

The solar engine, invented by M. Monchot, has been so improved by W. P. P. that eighty per cent of the sun's heat is made available for use, while M. Monchot has been able to utilize more than fifty per cent. The increase of efficiency is due to change of the form of the reflectors and the heaters. With a receiver having a surface of about one hundred square feet, under a clear sky, M. P. P. boils twelve gallons of water in less than forty minutes.

The phenomenon of phosphorescence has been observed in France. Some cutlets of raw pork shone so brightly in the dark that it was possible by the aid of the light thus furnished to tell the time by the watch. The meat did not otherwise differ in appearance or odor from common meat. The phosphorescence disappeared on the sixth or seventh day. Entire freshness seemed to be a condition of the luminosity, so that when the meat began to smell its brightness ceased.

The fan is of very ancient origin. Tracing its history, the Journal d'Hygiene states that the papyrus was one of the first plants used in making fans. In ancient Greece, the first fans were made of branches of myrtle, acacia or plane-tree. It was not until the fifth century B. C. that the peacock was known in Greece, and from this epoch dates the use among Grecian ladies of the peacock's tail as a new and elegant kind of fan. As the tail-feathers are not discarded, the use of feathers alone cannot be discarded, as they were found to be so durable, and the idea was conceived of placing between each pair of feathers a thin strip of wood. Fans are often mentioned in Latin authors. Plautus refers to the Aboliveria or female slaves, who carried parasols and fans to shade and drive away flies from their mistresses. Fans of peacock's feathers remained in fashion through the middle ages up to the seventeenth century, not only in Italy but in England and France. Fans of ostrich feathers came into favor gradually, excluding those of peacock feathers, and such fans appear in Titian's pictures. Leaves of palmettes reeds and odoriferous woods are among the substances of which fans are now made in foreign countries.

A late scientific writer defines instinct as "something else than an obtuse remembrance of experience."

They were made by earlier generations. A clear remembrance which extends over the boundaries of our individual life, has, it is true, not yet been found among men, but this does not prove anything against the above assertion. Such a remembrance we do not possess even for the complete period of our present life. Our memory does not extend back to the first years of our infancy. It is interrupted by sleep; it may be strengthened by exercise, or weakened by neglect; it may be interrupted by many abnormal states by which life itself is interrupted. Whether in dreams, or in conditions of abnormal nervous excitement in hysterics or other sickness memory is increased, so that it really extends over the period of our so-called individual life, is a question which, although much abused by humbugs and impostors, might at least arrest the attention of the human race to the contrary may be proved, it nevertheless, might be possible that some animals are endowed with a memory which reaches far beyond their so-called individual existence.

Instructions to Advertisers by a Yankee.

You see, goods are like gals—they must go when they are in fashion and good-looking, or else a yoke of oxen won't draw 'em off afterwards. The man that advertises most does not last long, because he don't make one stock to last one lifetime. I know a merchant in this district who has changed three different batches of goods within a year from Europe, and now he is nearly sold out again. How do we and his partner get rid of so many goods? They advertise more than all the others put together—that's how! I will prove it. If you want to borrow money—if you want to find money—if you want a farm to rent—if you have one to sell—advertise. If your horse, pig, cow, calf, sheep, or oxen go astray, advertise them right off, and not run a chance of losing them together, or having to pay as much as they are worth to change for their keep. If you are a farmer, tailor, or blacksmith, wagoner, or any kind of useful mechanic, show 'em that you are not ashamed of being a mechanic by advertising. If you keep an hotel make it known. When people see a man advertise, they know he is a hustler. The world is full of wants. Some want to sell, some want to buy, and the only way to meet these wants, and make money, is to advertise. Advertising is like honesty—it pays well if followed up. Merchants that make nothing of paying forty dollars for one sign, with nothing but their name on it. Well, that's the way you think of having $100.00 dollar signs a week in a newspaper! If it can show you your whole establishment to the country every week.

If you are wise, Just rub your eyes, And go to work and advertise.

Gymnastics and the Bath.

A physician writes to the New York Times: For years past I have been convinced that the means for gymnastic exercises, athletic developed plants, muscular power has been productive of a great deal of harm. Years ago the theory in vogue for gaining health was dieting, and hundreds of people died of this into insanity or the grave. Now the mania is for exercise, and hundreds of young men, and (although it may seem to be a ridiculous statement) young women are also killing themselves with "exercises." Nature releases all "knotted" muscles, and requires the full payment of a serious penalty whenever the folly is perpetuated of developing muscles as business, through the swinging of dumb-bells and Indian clubs. The long walks, which are taken too frequently and with quite too much vim, under the influence of a spirit of emulation or to win a bet, are productive of far more injury than benefit. But, most of all, I wanted to call the attention to the idea of daily bathing. The body is literally scrubbed out of existence. Nature guards her outposts very jealously, but she can not double duty in one direction without signal failure in another. Consequently, when the surface of the body is daily denuded of the outside under the vigorous application of the balustrade "course towel," she must repair damages at the expense of the digestion or the natural elimination of morbid matter; some organ loses the harmony with its fellows which is necessary to a perfect whole. Cleanliness is not only "next to godliness," but a very large part of it, and it is highly important that bathing should be employed as a hygienic habit; but not the usual bath which produces an answer slowly waking from an unnatural sleep, and so-called when the day's duties have exhausted both mind and body. To change the clothing frequently and permit a thorough airing, to expose the entire surface of the body for a few minutes to the action of a shower and retiring, a light brushing with a soft brush or a fine towel, and a good bath once or twice a week are all that an American can endure and retain health. Light exercise of these muscles is not called for in the daily routine in the desirable, but it should be elastic, not gymnastic, and should not include a vigorous pounding of the chest, than which nothing can be worse for the lungs.

The exercise which a light heart and a clear conscience will require of men and women, will generally be found in the use of all the goods of good health. If the system is enervated by excesses and deranged by the use of stimulants, the will may be nullified to the body to motion. If over-work has caused the relaxation, surely no wisest teacher in nature, when she draws the poor body irresistibly to the couch and beneficently closes the weary eyes to the infatuation of dumb-bells and the paraphernalia of the Indian club man.

For Many a Season.

Have you any excess of suffering with Dyspepsia or Liver Complaint? Is there any reason why you should go on from day to day complaining with Sour Stomach, Sick Head ache, Habitual Costiveness, palpitation of the Heart, Heart Burn, Windiness, Grimacing, and greasy joints at the pit of the Stomach, Yellow skin, Coated Tongue and disagreeable taste in the mouth, Coming up of food after eating, Low spirits, &c. No! It is positively your own fault if you do. Go to your Druggist and get a Bottle of GREEN'S VEGETABLE BILE BEGONNERS, and you will soon be a certain, but if you don't try, get a sample Bottle for 10 cents and try it. Two doses will relieve you.

Ayers Apple Cure is the only medicine in existence which may be considered an absolute antidote for fever and ague, and kindred diseases. It not only affords immediate relief, but it eradicates the malarial poison which produces the disease, without leaving any enervating or injurious effect, as is the case with many of the ague medicines advertised.

Erasmus Dawkins' New Year's Eve.

It was the last eve of the old year, and Erasmus Dawkins, broker and speculator, sat in his counting-room in the Queen's Buildings, examining the returns of the day.

"A prosperous week," he commented, turning his hand through his iron-grip locks, a large white hand commiserated with a great seal ring, a gemstone antique that matched well the dead gold buttons confining the wristbands of snowy linen.

"Yes, a very prosperous week. Well, Maps," impatiently addressing a figure who had just that moment entered the room with a halting footstep and a look of almost painful embarrassment on his thin, closely-shaven face, "what can I do for you tonight?"

"Mr. Dawkins, sir," began the newcomer in a quavering voice, lifting the thin book form, "it is eight upon twenty years since I first entered your service. A look of terror stole over the man's face as he saw the old man's eyes fixed upon him, and he went to a stool near the door, where he sat with a quivering lip and a look of almost painful embarrassment on his thin, closely-shaven face, "what can I do for you tonight?"

"Where is my daughter—your daughter?" asked his master, impatiently. A look of terror stole over the man's face as he saw the old man's eyes fixed upon him, and he went to a stool near the door, where he sat with a quivering lip and a look of almost painful embarrassment on his thin, closely-shaven face, "what can I do for you tonight?"

"Your mistress, fellow?" demanded his master again, in alarm at his singular behavior. "Where is Alice?" "She went out at dusk," said the man, at length, "and we have not seen her since."

"Went out at dusk?" repeated the father, in bewilderment. "Was she alone?" "No, she was not alone," answered the man, sulkily.

"Erasmus Dawkins raised his right arm as if to strike, but dropped it again and strode into the library, muttering in inarticulate rage. There was no fire on the hearth; a bunch of hot-house flowers were withering in a crystal vase; a dainty blue and gold volume lay on the table, a white embroidered mark between its cream-tinted leaves. A single light was burning in the chimney-piece, and in the corner the great safe loomed, its iron door ajar, and the key hanging from its handle.

voice of Maps answered in his ear, "Mr. Dawkins, sir, the clock of St. Paul's had just chimed the hour of eleven, and in a trice the New Year will be upon us. I don't like to work you, sir, but the time is very late."

"Bless my soul!" cried Mr. Dawkins, starting up from his cushioned chair, "is it really you, Maps, wondering, 'Where should she be?'"

"Gone away hours ago, broken-hearted at the loss of his situation and the sting of your bitter words."

"Yes, yes, poor fellow—I mean poor girl," interrupted Mr. Dawkins, hastily. "Maps, my man, hand me that ink and paper. You have been a faithful servant for twenty long years, and I am ungrateful master not to have remembered it. Take this check for one hundred pounds, not as a present, but as your just due for services rendered and make poor Milly a happy woman."

Erasmus Dawkins a second time went into the quiet London streets, but now it was brilliant star-light. The solemn chords of the grand organ, mingled with the chant of heavenly voices rose on the air as he passed old St. Paul's, where the white-robed choristers were celebrating the beautiful midnight service.

From the windows of his own house gleamed a faint light, and on the steps stood a manly figure, with a cap drawn far down over his yet boyish face.

"Forgive me, Mr. Dawkins," the frank young voice said, "but I am going away tomorrow for my native land, perhaps forever, and I wished to catch but one glimpse of her whom I love, that I may carry the memory of it with me over the wide blue sea, and bring the long uncherished years that now elapse before we meet in a land where parting is unknown."

"Arthur, my boy," said the elder with a curious tremble in his voice, "that made the other start with amazement, 'for many years I have been a kind foolish man. Come in, and sit with her who bids you bid you go—' If not remain, and be to me the son of my old age."

"A happy New-year, father," cried pretty Alice Dawkins, clad yet in her hennin-dress of pale-blue, with soft white lace draping neck and sleeves.

"Why, Arthur!" blushing to the tips of her little pink ears, as she caught sight of the familiar form in the doorway.

"He has come to claim his New Year's gift," explained Erasmus Dawkins, looking proudly down at his beautiful daughter; and as the vision of a sadder homecoming crossed his memory, he put his hand on the bright young head, and said softly, "God bless you, my dear, and keep you from sorrow, and ruth through this and every year."

As if in benediction, the chiming of St. Paul's rang out, and was answered by the bells of Trinity St. Ann on the Thames, and stately St. Stephen's peal louder than all the rest, till they seemed mad with their own all-very noise; and from happy households went up the prayer of Erasmus Dawkins, "Lord, keep us from sorrow and ruth, through this and every year."

Months must have fled ere the poor brain recovered consciousness, and when the blind eyes opened again it was in an hospital ward, where the sunbeams crept lightly over the whitewashed walls, and low-voiced attendants flitted about among the lowly cots, soothing away pain with gentle ministrations. All day long the eyes of Erasmus Dawkins had gazed vaguely about him. All day long after his awakening in the morning from that dreamless sleep, his memory had been at work. When the shadows of the winter day began to lengthen, a sudden strength seemed to come to his enfeebled frame, and he said to one who bent over him with kind inquiry, "I think that I can go forth; but they had me rest yet another day, and then put garments on my shrunken frame and gave him his freedom."

How strange seemed the life and bustle of the busy streets, and the voice of men calling one to another. The hurry and turmoil made his weak brain swim. The passers looked askance at his tall, gaunt figure, and hurried on, making no reply to his mute question. Presently the streets grew more and more deserted. The fog came down heavy and damp, hiding all objects in a dreary mist, and causing "his teeth to chatter, dimly." Finally a second footfall echoed on the cold hard pave, and a figure thinner, gaunter, more wretched, if possible, than his own, loomed behind him in the gloom.

Obedient a dumb impulsive, he paused till the form had overtaken him, and peering under the latticed, rimless hat, recognized the well-known countenance of—Maps.

"Where is Alice, my daughter?" gasped Erasmus Dawkins. "Tell me, for the love of Heaven."
