BRITAIN'S RAILWAY DEATHS.
Last Year's Terrible Total of Killed and Injured.

A gruesome tale of death and maiming is unfolded by the new Board of Trade return of railway accidents during 1900, says the London Daily Mail.
One in every 18 shunters employed on our railways suffered some sort of injury, yet automatic couplings are still the exception rather than the rule. Of all the railway men, the shunter's life is most in jeopardy. Last year 130 men were killed, and 2,316 injured while so engaged were lost in the shunt and lives and limbs of all railway servants was 333 killed and 4,335 injured. The shunter's life is the most perilous occupation after the shunter's is the brakeman's and the goods-guard's. Of these, one in every seventeen was injured. Among the men killed and injured otherwise than by the movement of vehicles, there was a death total of 601, while 15,998 were injured.

The passenger's peril is slight by comparison. Out of 1,000,000,000 journeys undertaken by railway travellers—and this is exclusive of season ticket-holders, who numbered 1,750,000 in 1900, and must have taken between them many millions of journeys—only sixteen terminated fatally. Twelve of the lives were lost in the shunt and Glasgow accidents. The passengers injured were numbered 368. But, taking the killed and injured from all causes, and not from accidents to passengers, maiming and everybody on or about the railways, there is a total sacrifice during the year of 1,325 lives and 19,373 limbs, or parts of the same.

Collisions were by far the most frequent form of accident, and the most frequent cause was carelessness or mistakes of the companies' servants. The highest number of accidents was on the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, where there were eight during the year. Next came the South-Eastern and Chatham, with six.

The severe snowstorm of Feb. 15 accounted for three accidents, of which one was caused by the weight of snow on the wires lowering the signal. The report says that some better system of fog signalling should be earnestly sought for, to cover the interval between the coming of the fog and the fog-signalmen.

INGENIOUS.
"Look here," said the capitalist to his secretary, "this 'Blood-stained Bowie' copper mine is costing me a heap of money. If you can look about and make a saving somewhere I'll raise your salary $25 a month."
"Well, I've tried to figure it out myself, and I cannot see where I can save a cent. If you can figure it out, I'll raise your salary $25 a month."
The young man overhauled the accounts, but he failed to find a single expense that could be cut down. Finally it occurred to him that he was drawing $80 a month for acting as secretary of the mining company. "You can save $2.50 a month," he informed his employer next day. "I have taken that amount out of the salary of your secretary."

Daddy's Tick-Tack.

There was a pale, anxious face at the window of a comfortable semi-detached house in the Finley Road. The man at the window was about thirty-five, with fair hair, and an almost girlish look.

At a stout, doid man, with a silk hat on the back of his head, pushed open the gate, and went wearily up the stone path to the front door, the pale face at the window brightened, and a thin hand flashing with rings was raised.

The stout man let himself in with a loud bang, and the woman met him at the door.
"How is she?" he asked, in a husky voice.
"A little better," answered the woman, helping him off with his dust-coat. "You may do as you please with her, but she's a very pronounced pattern, and calculated to attract attention."

"I'll go up and see her," whispered Billy Greene, in the same husky way. "Lost your color, didn't you, dear?" asked the woman.
Her husband nodded.
"Go up, my dear, if you'd be shouting the odds on a course ever since you took to me," he said.

Sitting on the last stair, he removed his boots, and stepping very lightly, considering his bulk, went up to a room on the first floor. A sheet, soaked in some acrid smelling disinfectant, hung over the door, and the room was almost bare of furniture. Carpets, curtains, and bedsteads had been removed, and the apartment had a monastic austerity. On a small bed in the middle of the floor lay a child of seven years, her fever-bright eyes fixed on the ceiling.

"How are you, love?" said the big man, sitting on one corner of the bed.
The child looked at him listlessly and turned away with an impatient moan. The man's face was troubled, and he was breathing about the bed with a few clumsy words of tenderness and cheer. He tipped out a red-hot brick, and a bottle of Bess awaited him in the room below.

"I might as well be a bottle of Bess waiting for me," said the man, leaning fondly on the back of his chair as he ate.
"Can't you be a little more cheerful?" said Billy Greene cheerfully. "Only one favor. Feel the weight of that."
The man was able to take Billy away when she's better," she said. "The sea air would do the child a world of good."

"So it would," assented her husband. "She shall go by all means." "I'm terribly sorry for daddy's tick-tack all day," said Mrs. Greene. "She is fairly mad after that watch of yours."

Her husband laughed, and put his hand to his waistcoat pocket. Suddenly his face changed from its usual healthy ruddiness to a dull purple. His eyes were staring, and his lips moved, no words came from his space.
"What ever's the matter with you?" cried his wife.
"The hounds!" he burst out at last. "They've been down here. They've got it."

"Not your watch?"
"Yes, your watch!" he lost Billy's tick-tack for any money! Oh, the beast! They'd no earthly right to do that to me!"

The big man fairly sobbed in his grief. "Can't you get it back?" asked the woman anxiously. "Try, there's a dear."
"Will, too, if it costs me fifty quid!" cried Billy Greene, banging his fist on the table. "Get me a cab."

"Where are you going?" demanded his wife. "Never you mind, my dear," retorted the bookmaker dully. "I'll be back in an hour." "An hour later Billy Greene stood in the promenade of a big West End music-hall. The usual crowd of well-dressed and well-to-do people strolled backwards and forwards with the usual bored listless look.

Billy Greene leaned against the partition dividing the circle from the promenade, with his broad back squarely to the stage. He was watching the shifting crowd with his little eyes. He had not changed his dress, and his boots were white with the dust of the race. Presently a tall, slim man in evening dress strolled up to him. The man's eyes were fixed on Billy's blue eyes, and a long tawny moustache, which he often caressed with a well-kept hand, was raised.

"Hallo, Billy!" said he cheerfully. "Hallo, Frank!" returned the other.
"Been down there to-day?"
"Oh, yes; I've been down there to-day," quoth Greene, with a twitch of his head in what he supposed to be the direction of the racetrack. "I assure you, I have. And nicely they've done it on me down there to-day. I can tell you."

"Get out!" returned the man in evening dress. "Been down you?"
"They have!" cried Billy Greene explosively. "And that's more, they've got my clock."
The other man whistled.

"Look here!" he said. "Jack Leroy's in the bar. Let's tell him, and have one at the same time." Greene assented, and they walked into the long, crowded bar, where the man they sought was conspicuous by his loud voice and general behavior. Jack Leroy was about the same age as the man called Frank. He had a heavy, animal face, the lips and within a narrow of Leroy, and a short beard of dark brown. His attire was distinctly horsey, and included a white tail hat and a pair of brilliantly-yellow boots.

"I'd give fifty quid to get that watch back," said Greene to the man called Frank, just before they were within arms of Leroy, who crashed out a rattling Sousa's march, and the crowd of promenaders across the stage. The man called Frank, just before they were within arms of Leroy, who crashed out a rattling Sousa's march, and the crowd of promenaders across the stage.

"What'll he spring?" asked Leroy, in a low tone.
His companion looked hard at him with his clear, honest blue eyes. "Twenty," said he quietly.
"I'm on it!" said Leroy, with decision.

Jack Leroy strode lightly down the Strand the next morning, nodding here and there to an acquaintance. He was wearing a dark suit, and a white shirt with a red tie. He was looking at his watch, which he had just bought from the man called Frank.

"Turning up a narrow, ill-paved passage, he pushed open the swing door of a public house. He stepped in. In one corner sat a thin, young man, with a cloth cap at the back of his head, and a pair of sporting paper with the aid of a dirty finger.

"Jack caught his eye, and gave a scarcely perceptible jerk of the head. The thin young man instantly sprang up, and followed him out into the passage.
"Look here, Joe," said Leroy. "Could a duck swim?" retorted "Well, old Billy Greene had his clock taken on the course yesterday. He was wearing a watch, and he lost it. He's got it, though."
"Some of the boys, of course."
"He's got it, though!" retorted "None of the boys would touch old Billy Greene. They respect an old man's property. He's got it, though!"

"Daddy's tick-tack!" she cried, in a weak little voice, hoarse with fever, physical hot, small hands grasped the coveted thing.
"She'll do now," murmured Mrs. Greene, with a sob in her voice. Her husband nodded, and handed her, she stood looking down upon the small, flushed face—London Answers.

VERY SWEET.
Sweet is the thrill of paternal love At the clasp of baby fingers, Awakening thoughts of childhood's days Which still in memory lingers.

Sweet is the opening breath of morn, And the scent of new-mown hay. As the sun peeps o'er the mountain top Through the dewy gates of day.

Sweet is the ruddy glow of eve, The sign of a bright to-morrow. And sweet the grasp of a friendly hand Which does not attempt to borrow.

But sweeter far—old bachelor Brown From a long experience tells— The sweetest thing is a woman's heart, With its honeycomb of cells.

About the House

KEEP THE HOGS THRIVING.
I came to the conclusion several years ago that hemlock boards were cheaper than corr, so built a hog house 24 x 30 feet with 13 feet posts and a ventilator through the roof. writes Mr. John McMullen. I double boarded with matched boards, putting heavy paper between the boards. I put three windows in the east side and two in the south side. These admit plenty of sunlight, which I think is very essential to the comfort and health of the hogs.

I divided it into eight pens, 10 feet deep, with an alley 4 feet wide in the centre, which makes it very handy about feeding. A door opens from each pen into the alley, which makes it very convenient about removing the hogs. There is also a door between each pen, so that four pens can be turned into one if necessary, which I do when not in for breeding sows. The upper part of the building I made into a pig house, with a glass front facing the south and an outside entrance to keep it separate from the hog pens. The entire building cost $250.

I keep about six breeding sows of no particular breed. They are fed on corn except when suckling pigs. Then I mix in wheat middlings or barley meal, the latter preferred. I have the sows farrow in March and August.

After weaning I feed the pigs skim-milk and barley meal or middlings, till they are two months old, give them all they will eat. At the end of that time substitute whey for the milk, but continue the meal with the addition of a few ears of corn. The object is to keep them growing as fat enough to kill at any time. I market them in May and October, my experience being that pork brings the best price in these two months.

I let them run in a large yard in the summer and have never had any trouble with lame pigs. I usually keep about 200 in summer and the same in winter.

I keep a summer and a winter sow, so that I have whey the year round. I sell my skim-milk at the separator for 10c per 100 lbs and get the whey back, which I think is the most profitable way.

There are four things necessary for the profitable keeping of pigs, viz., cleanliness, a warm place, good dry food, and plenty of water. When they are dropped till the day of killing, I feed them regularly three times a day, and never have equaling hogs.

My neighbors sometimes remark, "How do you make money on hogs? It costs me $2 to make pork for forty dollars. I get better for my hogs. I inquire their way of caring for their hogs. It is no mystery to me. You can raise a pig through any cracks in their pens. They feed only when they happen to hear the pig squeal, and wait until hearing the pen in the fall to fatten them. They dump in enough green corn in the morning to last all day of the year. One-third is wasted. I would rather feed two bushels old corn than three bushels new for fattening purposes.

POULTRY BUSINESS.
The poultry business is not a stick man's job. The person who is unable to endure considerable hard work need not hope to succeed in handling fowls, whether for pleasure or profit, or both, unless he can have some one to do the work for him. Entirely too many have the opinion that any old place, kept any old way, will do for raising poultry. This is far from the fact. Keeping poultry for profit is a business, much like livestock keeping of any kind. It requires capital, strength and experience to succeed. Strength, coupled with experience, will succeed better without the capital than will capital alone. Too many hold the opinion that all that need is to go into the business and sit down and let the hen do the rest. On such ventures, sickness and lice usually get the whole outfit, and the business the blame for the loss. Good common-sense, health and experience, combined with enough capital to carry on the plant, will succeed and pay a good per cent. profit, providing all three are well applied. Often the same methods used in a bank, on a farm, or in a store that are applied to the hen business would make many or all of them a failure. The man, the methods and the capital usually combine to make or break any business, and it is just the same with poultry.

PROFIT IN RAISING SHEEP.
The first essential in sheep husbandry is to have a large, warm dry basement facing the south and sheep must be kept in it. It must be of untold benefit in keeping the sheep quarters in good condition. It is also very desirable to have the sunlight for sheep and lambs during the cold weather. If you have 100 ewes, divide your barn space into four parts. When the lambs begin to come transfer the ewe and lamb to another pen and keep filling up the pens as fast as the lambs appear, keeping the older ewes together. This will prevent injury to the young ones. See that the pens are well bedded with straw and that the ewes get plenty of salt and fresh water. Silage from corn is probably the best feed for sheep. It should be cut after the corn has grazed. Feed this morning and night and at noon feed roots and hay. Do not give more than the sheep will eat up clean every time.

The lambs should begin to come about the middle of December or January 1. The basement should be warm enough so that the temperature will reach 65 degrees during the warm part of the day. Of course, sheep must have plenty of fresh air, but be sure that drafts do not strike them. Let the lambs sun out in the yard as much as possible and when old enough to wean put them into a pen by themselves and give them corn meal, and all the silage they will eat. By this treatment, the lambs will be ready for early marketing.

MOLASSES FOR HORSES.
Molasses as an article of diet has been used and recommended from time to time for both horses and cattle. The result of some recent experiments in France by a chemist and a veterinary surgeon goes to show its value as a food and arousing interest in it. These men assert that chopped hay or grass mixed with molasses is an excellent cure for colic, and furthermore that it

PETS OF POTENTATES.
Potentates have their pets as well as other people. Pope Leo is especially fond of his dog, and his better diplomatists around me. He said recently to a foreign ambassador, "than my horse." My visitors, after I have given them audience, go away praising me for my affability; but the truth is they cannot bear half what I say, since my voice is frequently drowned by the whining of my dog's pet.

The King of Portugal's favorite animal is a huge baboon. A hideous wicked animal it is, and excessively fond of strong drink, but at the same time it is very intelligent. Cockatoos, parrots, and humming-birds are the pets of the King of Belgium, and many fine specimens of them are to be seen in the aviaries of his palace.

The Sultan of Turkey is fond of guinea pigs, more than any other animal. For years Queen Wilhelmina of Holland has had a colony of white mice, to the nurture and care of which she has been obliged to devote all the time that was necessary.

The Queen Regent of Spain, reserves all her favors for a herd of sheep-goats; while Queen Alexandra is especially devoted to dogs.

A SIMILAR EXPERIENCE.
"Have you ever tried to write a novel?" asked the young woman.
"Yes, indeed," answered the young man. "I wrote several."
"What are they like?"
"They remind me somewhat of a wicked old woman."
"Which one?"
"Those that weren't appreciated until after they were dead."

AN ADVANTAGE.
"How do you like your new cook?"
"Very much, indeed," answered the youthful housewife.
"I must say she doesn't look very strong."
"That's why we like her. She can't do so much damage if she gets angry."

There is peace and plenty in the land.

And no time has there been a more widespread and intelligent interest in agriculture than at present. The mineral resources of the province which have lain dormant for years are being exploited as they were never before. It was during the administration of Mr. Blair that the seeds of our present magnificent agricultural growth were first sown. Prior to the passing of the act subsidizing cheese and butter factories, agriculture was considered of secondary importance in the province. and county has not been fairly and equitably divided among the different centres. That being the case it would scarcely be necessary for Mr. Treadwell to send an emissary to this city to talk over the alleged discontent among the Roman Catholic supporters of the government.

The only occasion between Mr. Treadwell and Mr. Lawlor is that they came from the same town and are personal friends. It happened that Mr. Lawlor had come to St. John on legal business and as he had to remain over a day or two, and during his absence from home it also happened that an anniversary in which he and his wife were deeply interested occurred, he brought the lady along with him. This made his visit more of a social one than usual.

Mr. Lawlor is a gentleman who is well and favorably known in St. John, as well as on the north shore where he has his home. He knows many people in St. John, some of whom are co-religionists of his own and some are not, but Mr. Lawlor is not a politician, although like all good citizens he is interested in the politics of the province. It is a pure fabrication to say that he was here as a representative of anybody or tried to act as a go-between between the Premier and any portion of the supporters of the Provincial Government because, as already explained, the services of a go-between were not necessary. Those who know Mr. Treadwell and the members of his government here, are aware that they are always ready to rectify any real grievance which may be brought to their notice by their constituents. If we were to go back to the scriptural days of old, the Premier might be compared to Job, who, when he was sorely tried, had three friends come from a distance to mourn with him and to comfort him. Our great friend of the Globe might well take the place of Eliphaz the Temanite, while Brother Hawks of the Montreal Transcript, who is a truly pious man, would represent Zophar the Shuhite, and the anonymous and saintly Scott of the Sun could fill the role of Zophar the Namsantheite to a nicety. These three worthies of old sat with the suffering Job for seven days and seven nights and spoke not a word, so the chronicler says. The modern Eliphaz, Bildad and Zophar are less considerate than their prototypes of old. They have no respect for the grief of the Premier, if he has any, but start right in with their criticisms, of which they have quite as many to offer as their patriarchal ancestors. But Eliphaz, Bildad and Zophar failed to shake the faith of Job and we are told that they then ceased to answer him.

The fate of these critics of old should prove a warning to the modern production, for they called down upon their own heads the wrath which they prayed might rest upon the shoulders of Job, and it was the prayers of him whom they regarded as beyond the pale that finally saved them. What fate finally befell these ancient soothsayers is not revealed, but if we are informed that he prospered exceedingly and lived a hundred and forty years after his three candid but critical friends had drawn themselves into their own shells.

Premier Treadwell and his colleagues have been criticized and misrepresented in many things by Elphaz the Temanite of the Globe, by Bildad the Shuhite, of the Transcript and by Zophar the Namsantheite of the Sun, but they continue to govern the province well. There is peace and plenty in the land.

And no time has there been a more widespread and intelligent interest in agriculture than at present. The mineral resources of the province which have lain dormant for years are being exploited as they were never before. It was during the administration of Mr. Blair that the seeds of our present magnificent agricultural growth were first sown. Prior to the passing of the act subsidizing cheese and butter factories, agriculture was considered of secondary importance in the province. Now, agriculture is a leading place, thanks to the beneficent policy of Mr. Blair which was so ably seconded by the assistance given to wheat growing by the administration of Mr. Emerson. A decade ago New Brunswick imported all the cheese and most of the butter her people consumed. Now we not only produce all of these commodities needed for home consumption, but we have developed a large export trade in both, and in a few years more this province will produce every barrel of flour her people consume. But this is not all. By the wise legislation introduced by Mr. Emerson, the old fields which have been known to exist in this province for years, have been exploited and although it is known that they are already to justify the belief that the soundness of Western and Albert and many other sections of New Brunswick have held untold wealth for ages.

Short as has been the administration of Premier Treadwell he has started in to open up the coal fields of Queens county from which great results may follow. There is no lateral strike in the objection, every member of which has but one object in view, the highest development obtainable of the government in strong-stronger than it was when Mr. Emerson appealed to the people in 1898. There is no sign of wavering anywhere along the line, and with this state of things exists it is little for a handful of agitators in St. John to imagine that they can harm the government by attempting to alienate any part of its support. Supporting it was possible by a false cry against the government to draw away a part of the support and endanger the return of the government candidates to St. John, which we do not believe can be done, wherein would the benefit follow? The test of the province would remain solid for the government and St. John would be without a voice in the administration of the affairs of the province and unable to press for her rights.

The people of St. John have so much sense to be led into a position where it would be possible to have their fondest aspirations gratified. Mr. Hawks may not be pleased with Premier Treadwell because he is not of the same political stripe as himself, but the people of the province, as a whole, do not care what the political affiliations of the different gentlemen composing the government may be. What they want is good government—a wise expenditure of the public moneys and the development of the resources of the province. All
