POETRY.

Together.

The winter wind is wailing, sad and low,
Across the lake and through the rustling
sedge;
The splendor of the golden after-glow
Gleams through the blackness of the great yew hedge;
And this I read on earth and in the sky,
"We ought to be together, you and I."

Rapt through his rosy changes into dark, Fades all the west; and through the shadowy trees;
And in the silent uplands of the sky
It does but echo to my weary sigh,
"We ought to be together, you and I."

My hand is lonely for your clasping, dear,
My ear is tired, waiting for your call;
I want your strength to help, your laugh to cheer;
Heart, soul, and senses need you, one and all.

I droop without your full, frank sympathy—
We ought to be together, you and I.
We want each other, to comprehend
The dream, the hope, things planned, or seen, or wrought;
Companion, comforter, and guide, and friend,
As much as love asks love, does
I thought need thought.

Life is so short, so fast the lone hours fly,
We ought to be together, you and I.

SELECT STORY.

Pretty Miss Smith.

BY FLORENCE WARDEN.

CHAPTER VIII.—Continued.

I HAD skipped along so quickly that by this time I was well ahead of my conductor, and was able to grope about at my leisure. This floor was lighted by gable windows in the roof, which sloped up to a great height at the back of the house. The panes were very dusty, and the light was fading fast; still I managed to discover that the particular ventilator which I believed to be that of Mary's room was quite clean on the top, in striking contrast with the thick dust which lay on everything around. I was down on my knees beside it in a moment, and trusting that the intervening bales, cases, and barrels would enable me to play hide-and-seek with Hopkins for a few minutes longer. I raised the cover with some little difficulty, and putting my face down close to the wire-work underneath saw that my guess or my calculation had been a lucky one.

I was over Mary's room. Knowing very well that the girl's nocturnal tormentors whatever they were, had been introduced from this quarter, I next tried to raise the wire-work itself, and found that it had been pulled away from its fastenings, so that it could be raised and lowered as easily as the lid itself. This was enough for me. It was clear that to discover the identity of Mary's heartless persecutor I must watch this spot.

The question was—How to return late at night? I dared not confide in Hopkins, whose voice I heard calling to me, with exceedingly complimentary comments on my behavior, as he made his way among the lumber in search of me. I could not hope that I could remain here undiscovered in the meantime. The watchman was getting each moment more angry, and there was no doubt that he would summon half-a-dozen men to help him rather than leave before I was untraced.

"Mary! Mary! I say!" Then followed a growing volley of impressions as he hurt his foot against a pile of old metal that made a clanking sound. "Blest if I'll ever trust a girl again! Mary, Mary! here, come on, chuck it!" in a louder tone. Then again to himself: "Arry 'Opkins, you are a bloomin' jackass, and no fitter. Mary, my love, I'm that disconsolate without yer that I can't bear myself, and if you don't make tracks out of this in rather less than a brace of shakes, I'll ring the fire-alarm and raise — and Tommy about your ears."

I scarcely heard him. For I had found something; not indeed anything likely to prove of much value towards identification, but something which told me enough to fill me with doubt and amazement. It was part of a gentleman's riding glove, almost new and of the finest quality; one button was still attached to it. This strip had, I supposed, been partly torn off by the sharp corner of the ventilator, and had been wrenched from the rest of the glove and flung aside by the wearer into the corner where I found it.

I put the scrap of dogskin into my pocket with shaking fingers. There was no denying that the discovery pointed strongly in the direction of one solution of the mystery which I had scarcely dared to admit into my mind. Hilary Gold's conduct and manner had been so suspicious on the last occasion of my seeing him that it was inevitable that I should ask myself if he had not been altogether desolved in him. But was it conceivable that a man could take such a base revenge upon a woman for throwing him over, as to form a deliberate and cold-blooded plan for driving her out of her mind? My brain reeled with agonizing suspicions.

Suddenly Harry Hopkins' voice, much nearer than before, roused me to a remembrance of my strange situation. I, however, kept quite still, on the chance that he might pass me. He did. I heard him stumbling along, soliloquizing so loudly as to preclude the possibility of his discovering me by the aid of his ears, and using expressions of which I understood nothing save that they expressed the strongest disapprobation of my conduct and an acute desire to "have it out" with me. He went so far down the long room that the inspiration seized me to try to make my escape while his back was still turned.

Cautiously stealing out of my hiding-place, I crept along the uneven floor, praying that no incautious tread, no preventible stumble would discover me to my pursuer. Only once did I trip, and at that moment, by good fortune, he tripped too; and as I bore my mishap in silence, while he did not, I was able to limp on unheeded while he was uttering more quaint maledictions in his piping voice.

At last I got to the door, slipped through and down the rough ladder staircase. Now, where should I hide myself? If I had only been lucky enough to come through the door unheeded by him he would be searching for me among the lumber while I had plenty of time to secure myself securely on the other side even if he heard me. He would probably imagine that I had gone back into the house, satisfied with having played him a trick. On the whole I decided, therefore, that I might, with a good chance of remaining undiscovered, secure myself among the sacks of grain which the floor was filled.

Then, when Hopkins had given up his search as hopeless, I could creep out and decide from what point of vantage to watch for the man who was slowly discovering poor Mary's mind.

I had scarcely squared myself behind a pile of fall sacks near the wall, as far as possible from the ladder staircase by which I had just descended, when Harry Hopkins, more furiously angry than ever, burst open the door and began to come down.

Oh heavens! the dust from the grain sacks was choking me! I was going to sneeze!

CHAPTER IX.

By the help of that lucky star which seemed to be protecting me through my adventures, I was able to stifle the coughing and sneezing I could not altogether repress, so that the night-watchman could not hear me.

He continued to call me in alternating coaxing and threatening tones, now informing me that I was "the light of his bloomin' eyes," and anon that he would "get me the sack next day, blast if he wouldn't." To all the blandishments, however, I of course remained mute. There was a dogged obstinacy about his tones, however, which convinced me that I was not yet out of danger of discovery. There was no key to the attic-door, so he pulled an end of string out of his pocket and tied the latch to a nail in the wall. Then, running down the steps, he detached them from the book which kept them in place, and removed them to some distance.

"Now, Miss Cle-ver," he said to himself in a low voice, with spiteful emphasis, "if you're up there still I give you leave to try to come down when my back's turned. If you can't burst the string, you can just stay there till you're small; and if you can, by Jingo you'll stand a good chance of breaking your neck. And serve you jolly well right too!"

"You little wretch!" I said to myself. But he was not content with this mean attempt at revenge. Unlocking the door which led into the house, he went through, evidently with the object of ascertaining whether I had gone back. Now was my chance if I wanted to find a safer place of concealment. But though I felt sure there were plenty of nooks and crannies about the works where a person who knew his way about could hide without fear of discovery, I had such a strong feminine horror of "machinings" that I dared not go by myself through those rooms full of vats, and pipes, and cogged wheels, and stills with curly chimneys. So I only crouched down a little lower behind the sacks, and picked holes in them to find out what was inside.

I hoped I should not have to stay long in my hole though, for already I was getting cramped and stiff, and covered with dust and flour, which got down my throat and half stifled me. There was a window very near my back, too, and, although it was summer time, the draught which came through the chinks and between the boards of the unceiled floor were bad enough to give me a stiff neck for a month. Besides, I hate mice even worse than black-bettles, and the very mention of a rat makes me scream; and all the time I could hear the creature scamp, scamper and gnaw, gnaw all round me, and thought every moment that I should have one on me, in which case no philosophy, no caution, would have prevented me from shrieking myself hoarse.

In the prolonged absence of Hopkins, who, I doubted not, was taking the opportunity of exercising his fascinations in the servants' hall. I was getting absorbed in these minor terrors, when I became suddenly aware of a noise which was not that of a mouse. Someone was coming, with slow and, as it seemed, stealthy footsteps, down the long staircase from the distillery. The tread was so soft, so cat-like, that if the boards had not been old and loose, I doubt not whether I should have heard it. As it was, my thoughts, instead of turning to the human persecutor for whom I was on the watch, flew to "ghosts" and the stories about the house being "haunted." No man, however careful, could tread as softly as that; besides, from time to time I detected a faint, rustling sound, like the noise of a silk skirt brushing against some object as it passed.

Holding my breath, I tried to peep out. There was scarcely any daylight left, and no window on the opposite side of the storeroom for some distance down. Peering between the cornsacks, however, with straining eyes, I fancied I could distinguish the figure of a woman, gliding very slowly along, like a grey shadow in the gloom. The window behind me was so blocked up with sacks and boards that scarcely a ray of light came through, and I was asking myself whether my imagination had not carried me away when I heard the handle of the door which led into the house softly turned. The door was locked, however, and presently I heard the handle rattled impatiently—and the door shaken with some violence. Almost at the same moment I heard Harry Hopkins' voice, within the house, humming a comic song in respectfully modulated tones. As this sound, the intruder fled back into the storeroom—scarcely in time. As the watchman opened the door, he caught sight of the intruder, whom he mistook for me.

"Hallo! There you are, ma'an, are you? Well, you don't get away this time!"

Taking a whistle from his pocket, he blew it three times, the shrill sound making the windows rattle in their frames.

In a few moments a tall, broad-shouldered young man, carrying a lantern, appeared at the further end of the storeroom.

"Hello!" he said. "What's up?"

"There's a girl, the new girl at the 'ouse, a wanderin' somewhere about the place," said Hopkins, in a half-grumbling, half-excited tone. "I am afraid she'll get me into trouble, fall down the lift 'p'airs, or something."

"I see. It don't matter for the girl," said the younger man drily.

"Well, she'd have brought it on herself, yer see."

"You're always a-running after the girls, 'Arry, but you might have known better than to take this one for a s-e-a-v-a-n-t."

I was astonished, but pleased by the young man's discrimination. The next moment, however, my vanity had a fall.

"I took her for a lady at first," the young man went on, "but the minute after I see'd there was somethin' wrong about her."

Something wrong about me, indeed! What on earth did that stupid fellow mean?

He went on: "So that when she asked for the manager, I guessed she might be meaning you, and I let her go up."

"Let her go up!" repeated Hopkins, who was walking down the storeroom with the other, "Why, who do you mean?"

"A tall lady in a grey silk dress and black bonnet, who came through the yard ten minutes ago, and asked to see the manager, as I tell you."

Hopkins stopped short in amazement. "Well, of all the bloomin' rum things as ever 'appened," he ejaculated softly. "Then there are two women, Bill, a-playin' hide-and-seek about this 'ere place, as sure as my name's 'Opkins'!"

"Rivals, eh, 'Arry? A-bustin' to tear each other's 'air out, all on account of the same young spark?"

Hopkins seemed not displeased at the suggestion, though he affected to reject it, and proposed a search of the storeroom to begin with. But the younger man laughed at the notion, told him it would take a dozen men to make the search properly, and added his confident belief that the girl, or girls, in hiding, would come out fast enough if they were left alone.

"A girl keeps out of the way of a chap like you because she knows precious well you'll run after her," said Bill, contentiously. "Now if it was me she'd never let me alone, because, if she did let her alone, that's all the difference. Girls know, bless you!"

And having succeeded in restoring the calmness of his chief somewhat, Bill left the storeroom, swinging his lantern, and Hopkins, after a few minutes' hesitation, slowly followed him.

After this there was a long period of dead silence but for the night-noises, which seemed to grow louder as the darkness came on, and the wind blew colder through the cracks and crevices. Every bone in my body ached with the strain of remaining so long in a cramped position. I felt at last that I must come out of my hiding place and move about a little, when suddenly I thought I could distinguish sounds of voices in the distance. They came nearer. I distinctly heard "All right; thank you, sir," in Hopkins' voice, and then, after a short pause, the door at the further end of the storeroom opened quietly, and I heard a man's tread along the creaking boards.

A Cheerful Face.

Next to the sunlight of heaven is the cheerful face. There is no mistaking it—the bright eye, the unclouded brow, the sunny smile, all tell of that which dwells within. Who has not felt its cheering influence? One glance at this face lifts us out of the mists and shadows, into the beautiful realms of hope. One cheerful face in the household will keep everything warm and light within. It may be a very plain face, but there is something in it we feel, yet cannot express, and its cheery smile sends the blood dancing through the veins for very joy. Ah! there is a world of magic in the plain, cheerful face, and we would not exchange it for all the soulless beauty that ever graced the fairest form on earth. It may be a very little face, but somehow this cheery face ever shines, and the shining is so bright the shadows cannot remain, and silently they creep away into dark corners. It may be a wrinkled face, for that, and none the less cheerful. We linger near it, and gaze tenderly upon it, and say: "God bless this dear happy face! We must keep it with us as long as we can; for home will lose much of its brightness when this sweet face is gone." And even after it is gone, how the remembrance of the cheerful face softens our way!

Wise Words.

The poorer a man is the oftener he goes to law.

A rolling stone gathers headway, but it doesn't moss.

Lovers may laugh at locksmiths, but it shudders at janitors.

When a woman hates a man it is a sign she once loved him.

It is usually the case that the man who is most willing is least able.

Time is a sort of money which brings in something more than small change.

A soft answer may turn away wrath, but it usually arouses supreme contempt.

Women will love men they cannot respect; but with men their respect must go far in advance of their affection.

If a man is good it is either because he has to be or because he enjoys it. No man was ever good from a sense of duty.

There is one good thing that may be said about faults; it is always the man you dislike most who has the most of them.

When a woman cannot reform a man his salvation is impossible. When she cannot destroy him his destruction is not possible.

The reputation you have been a life time in earning you can throw away in a moment—unless it happen to be a bad reputation.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., DECEMBER 11, 1891.

Teachers' Association.

The annual meeting of the Teachers Association for Inspectorial District No. 5 (King's and Hants) is to be held at Hantsport on Dec. 17th and 18th.

On Thursday evening, a Public Educational Meeting will be held, to be addressed by A. H. Mackay, Esq., B. A., B. Sc., Superintendent of Education, and others.

The object of the Association is to promote the efficiency of the teaching service within the limits of the District. According to the regulation of the Council of Public Instruction, the means to be employed for securing this object shall be conversation and discussion of Educational methods, preparation and reading of papers on special subjects and illustrative exercises.

While the meetings are intended principally for teachers they may afford pleasure and profit to any one interested in the progress of the common schools in the country; and the meetings are therefore open to the public and all are welcome who wish to attend.

In 1892 the United States will have 444 electoral votes; necessary to a choice of President, 223. Four years ago the number of electors was 401.

So far the outlook in Brazil under President Peixoto appears to be pacific. Nearly all the provinces have announced their acceptance of the new situation.

The rapid growth of the population of India is shown by the fact that in the last ten years the natural increase has been 27,500,000.

Nova Scotia Poultry Association.

The annual meeting of the Nova Scotia Poultry Association was held at Halifax, on Thursday evening, Dec 31, at which quite a number of enthusiastic members were in attendance.

The executive committee would be pleased to receive communications from residents of different parts of the province in relation to the varieties of pure bred poultry required in their different sections. This would materially guide the association in making their importations for the spring of 1892.

Notes from Berwick.

Mrs Grace, wife of Thomas Grace Esq., died very suddenly on Friday last. Edward Marshall, Esq., of Clarence spent last Sabbath in Berwick.

During the past few months, four new places of business and a Real Estate Agency have been opened in this town. Berwick is evidently in a prosperous condition.

The dedication of the Oddfellows' new hall was the occasion of a large gathering on Tuesday evening, Dec. 1st. The impressive ceremony was conducted by J. P. Edwards, G. M., G. L. of B. N. A., assisted by the officers of the Grand Lodge.

We are in receipt of an advance copy of the Christmas Dominion Illustrated, and cannot but feel proud that such a magnificent issue is (as we are informed) entirely the product of Canadian skill and enterprise.

The number itself is a beauty. It contains 40 pages of stories, poems and articles from the pens of some of our most brilliant writers. Almost every page contains an exquisite illustration, printed in colors; no less than five different tints are used in the press-work of the volume.

At least half a million tons of Cape Breton coal were delivered in Montreal since the opening of navigation. This is an increase of fifty thousand over last year.

The Canadian Northwest.

THE IMMENSITY OF CANADA. The area of the Dominion of Canada is estimated at 3,397,000 square miles, or including its water surface, 3,519,000 square miles.

CANADA'S INLAND WATERWAYS THE MOST EXTENSIVE IN THE WORLD. Some idea of this immense country and of its great water-ways—the most extensive in the world—may be had when we state that its coast line on the Atlantic measures 10,000 miles, and over 7000 miles on the Pacific; that, 2000 miles from the ocean, the traveller may lose sight of land and be prostrated by seasickness; and that with one transhipment at Montreal, loads can be landed at the head of Lake Superior, to the centre of the continent, 4000 miles from Liverpool.

THE PLACE FOR FARMERS.

Notes for Horsemen.

The new 230 list numbers about 1,500. Splin predicts a mark of 2.00 for District.

There are 13,000,000 horses in the United States. Since his stud season Allerton has won $18,000 in two match races.

Malcom Forbes says he is willing to trot Nancy Hanks against Sunol in a race. Good!

Dr Bowles has lately become the owner of a six-year-old mare by Little Doctor, and when he gets her sharpened up a little look out.

Robert Bonner has owned four trotters that have held the world's record, viz: Dexter 2:17 1/2, Rarus 2:12 1/2, Maud S. 2:08 1/2, Sunol 2:08 1/2.

Dr E. P. Bowles purchased a few days since from G. E. Beales, Billtown, a weanling colt by Rampart, first dam Maud R., by Brothers Pride. The price is reported at $100.

Nelson, 2:10, will be bred to forty mares in 1892 and will then be placed in training to lower his record. His owner has announced that the horse will have a new driver next season as good as the best.

A year ago there were two trotters with records of 2:10 or better. To-day there are seven, viz: Sunol 2:08 1/2, Maud S., 2:08 1/2, Nancy Hanks, 2:09, Allerton, 2:09 1/2, Palo Alto, 2:08 1/2, Nelson, 2:10, and Jay-Eye-See 2:10.

Minnie W. is a brown, standard-bred filly, foaled May 12th, 1890, bred by J. C. Wisely, Esq., of York county, N. B., sired by Keinsage, (192), by Volunteer, first dam, Maud, by the Duke of Cambridge, second dam, Jessie, a sister of Senator, 2:26 1/2 and Charlie Morris, 2:30 1/2. She is now the property of Clarence H. Borden, Esq., this town.

The fancy sale and tea held by the "Beneficial Glaziers" Sewing Circle of the Methodist church, last evening, was a decided success. The evening was very pleasant and a most enjoyable time was had. We understand a creditable amount was realized.

The sermon of Rev. J. H. Robbins last Sunday in College Hall was an able effort. The theme was the reality and power of Christianity. The preacher pointed out that the great test as to the reality and power of Christianity was its results. There was an argument unanswered. The hall was crowded and the sermon made a good effect.

The Largest and finest assortment of Xmas goods ever shown here, just opened at the Wolfville Bookstore.

On last Saturday evening the members of Wolfville Division, on invitation, paid a fraternal visit to Acadia Lodge. A large number from both societies were in attendance, and the hall was well filled. A very pleasant evening was spent, the programme consisting of speeches, music readings, and an excellently performed dialogue. During the evening refreshments, consisting of ice cream, &c., were served. Both societies are now in a flourishing condition, and the best of feelings exist between them.

Happiness. Happiness often consists in reading a good paper, one that leaves a pleasant taste in the mouth, one that you can rise up from perusing with the knowledge that you have gained something of permanent advantage. There are papers which do not give this happiness, but which, while exciting for the moment, result in permanent evil, although the immediate effect at the moment may not be apparent. The Montreal Witness is a paper of the former class, it is good; it does good. The weekly edition is sent to subscribers for one dollar a year, the Daily for three dollars, and the Northern Messenger, a paper for the younger members of the family particularly and for Sunday Schools, for 30 cents a year.

The subscribers of the ACADIAN can have it and the Montreal Daily Witness for $2.25, the ACADIAN and the Weekly Witness for $1.75, and the Northern Messenger with either of them for twenty-five cents extra.

Fisk Jubilee Singers. College Hall was filled on Tuesday evening by a highly appreciative audience to listen to the world-famed Fisk University Jubilee Singers. Many were present from Hantsport, Kentville, Canning and other towns. A rich musical treat was expected, and no one was disappointed. The singing was both brilliant and sympathetic, showing the results of good training added to great natural musical gifts on the part of the artists. The programme was a long one, and frequent encores were generally responded to. We hope it may be the good fortune of a Wolfville audience to again have an opportunity of listening to this company of unsurpassed musicians.
