Dr. Rainford's Failure.

IT WAS WOULF, BUT IT DID HIM GOOD.

"As I look back upon my own ministrations, I know each reason why I succeeded was because, so far as God gave me light, I was willing to give up everything that stood in my way in order to be free."

"There is no denying a man who will get down on his knees, and say from his heart 'I am mighty God, I am willing to fall, if falling means the advancement of the Kingdom of God.'"

"My turn came after Father Hanson of Oxford. The whole place looked over for five or six minutes—twenty minutes—thirty minutes—and twenty minutes more. I am not exaggerating in this; I did not say one clear sentence that was not listened to."

"That was my first meeting with Phillips Brooks. Was it any wonder I loved him? I did not know until after his preaching, that he knew that a certain number of his hearers were looking for a rector, and that he had engineered my speaking at the Church Congress in Boston. Natural as the display made, the vestry did not say anything of me, and Brooks, out of his big heart, felt that his grey hair had lost its head and had determined to give his own chance at Trinity the next Sunday morning. I preached, and did nearly as badly. Brooks sat listening to me, and he was a very terrifying man to preach before."

He was a "Good Fellow." (Journal, St. Thomas, Ont.). A young man stood in a tall's shoe the other day looking well and prosperous.

Drowning Dangers.

BULLETIN ISSUED BY THE U. S. LIFE-SAVING CORPS.

There are so many lives lost every year by drowning that might be saved by a knowledge of how to act in case of emergency, that the U. S. Volunteer Life-Saving Corps has issued a regular summer bulletin to all persons who may be attracted to the coast themselves upon the water during the coming summer in any way.

Do not go out in any pleasure boat of small or large dimensions without being assured that there are life-saving buoys or cushions aboard sufficient to float all on board in case of an upset or collision.

With a party, be sure you are all properly and satisfactorily seated before you leave the shore—particularly so with girls on board. Let no one attempt to exchange seats in mid-stream, or put a foot on the edge or gunwale of the boat to change seats, or to rock the boat for fun. This, by rolling young people, has unfortunately caused a boat and lost very many lives every year.

In rescuing persons, seat them by the hair of collar, back and shoulders, do not strangle them, but let them drop under a moment until quiet, then tow them into the shore. If unconscious, do not wet a moment for a doctor or an ambulance, but begin at once first aid resuscitation by artificial respiration or mouth-to-mouth, or by the use of a rubber lung, or by the use of a pump movement kept over the mouth and nose.

WEEKLY MONITOR.

Practical Talks and Plain Precepts for Farmers.

Edited for the Farmer readers of the MONITOR by an Annapolis Valley Agriculturist

We invite contributions, criticism and questions bearing on agriculture or horticulture and will be glad to answer the latter, or will undertake to have them answered by experts. We want to make this a helpful corner of the Monitor and not only for the farmers but what will be of greater benefit, one by the farmers. (Ed.)

The City and the Country.

(By Wm. R. Miller in Mirror and Farmer)

Agriculture has suffered and has been given a low rank in the past by those engaged in other industries and the professions because judged by false standards which have been set in the minds of people in general on account of the inevitable failure of indolent and unskilled men engaged in it. Of course it would be fair to judge other industries by the appearance of those who follow in them, and to judge agriculture by this false standard.

Everybody familiar with rural conditions as they exist today, or have existed in the past, knows that there are careers, industries and a very large community whose chief aim in life seems to be to do as little work as possible and still get the most out of it. These men are not more numerous in agriculture, in proportion to the total number engaged therein, than in any other calling, but they seem to be looked upon by many city people as representative farmers. These shiftless, haphazard farmers are not typical of the farming profession as a whole, yet are often referred to as such. It is the reputation of these people that has caused the public to estimate the farmers' vocation and causes many unjust comments to be made on their farms, untruthful statements and spiteful ways.

There has been a drain of many of the brightest boys from the country to the city which in the past has tended to lower the average mental capacity of the boys remaining to till the farms. This has happened in the natural course of events in the development of the country, and is beyond the power of any individual to prevent, although in making farm life more attractive and making more profitable through the introduction of modern utilities and the means of obtaining an agricultural education.

Another cause for the unjust opinion that prevails in regard to the mental standing of the farmer is the caricature that appears in the great metropolitan papers from time to time, representing the farmer as a rough and uncouth person. A great wave of indignation has spread over the country among intelligent and representative farmers in regard to this caricature. It is not only a caricature, but it is a reflection of the farmer's life more attractive, more profitable and more enjoyable than it is shown to be.

Make country life more attractive; that was the cry of a few years ago. It was thought that rural delivery would help the cause by bringing the conveniences of the city to the country boy. But there are thousands who are already objecting to it because it is not only a nuisance, but it is a nuisance to the farmer's life. It is a nuisance to the farmer's life because it is a nuisance to the farmer's life.

It is not, as many suppose, a tendency that belongs only to the United States; the same drift is seen in England, in South America, in every part of the globe. It is a world movement. What is to become of the farms? The cry goes up steadily. Every year millions are lost because of the drift of the population from the country to the city. The country may call, but the cities do not hear.

The city is always calling and the country is always answering. In the very seasons where starvation stalks through the tenement and thousands are dying, the city is always calling and the country is always answering. In the very seasons where starvation stalks through the tenement and thousands are dying, the city is always calling and the country is always answering.

Under this head the American Cultivator discusses the qualities necessary for success as a president of an agricultural college, and among other things, says: "It is possible that in some rural centers, such as those placed on more scholastic and formal requirements for our college executive officers, there may be some one out of our agricultural college has suffered under the leadership of a learned list of touch with agricultural interests and unable to command the respect and full confidence of the farming class.

of investigators can be lined for the teaching farm. The real need is an executive head, who, while his book knowledge may be sufficient to command respect, is able, above all, to organize and direct his teaching effectively, and to arouse interest and enthusiasm among the kind of young men who come to the college and for whom it was intended. It would be more or less, year after year, from an agricultural college, might be more or less, year after year, from an agricultural college, might be more or less, year after year, from an agricultural college.

Moreover, there are within him the reserve force, the physical freshness and neatness, the heart and the soul to take hold of the heart of the student and to lead him to the top. His sense are not dulled by satiety; he has few apprehensions, he is at the age of twenty; his ambition, his eyesight, is trained for longer distances than the youth whose days have been spent between narrower walls.

He goes forth to seek and to conquer and he finds and he wins. But what is to become of the country? Who are to work the farms if the population continues to fall? Abandoned farms are found by the hundreds in New England. All about the hills and slope are tens of thousands of acres which are not producing. They are the greatest cities of the half hour's ride of our greatest cities are lands that lay in idleness through-out the season.

The cry from the great West is for labor. More fruit roots on the ground rather than sent to the city. Thousands of farmers have to buy hay from the cities in order to feed their stock. The great metropolitan papers from time to time, representing the farmer as a rough and uncouth person. A great wave of indignation has spread over the country among intelligent and representative farmers in regard to this caricature.

As the big black cherries are now almost in their glory, and as many good housewives wish to know how to make them palatable and enticing, the following approved recipes are printed.

SAUCE.—Melt a teaspoonful of granulated sugar in a very little water, pour it boiling hot over a quart of pitted cherries. Serve very cold with whipped cream.

IN SYRUP.—Melt three pounds of sugar in a pint of currant juice, add four pounds of pitted cherries, cook five minutes, stirring carefully. Set away until the next day, pour into a can, and seal.

WITH TAPIOCA.—Soak a teaspoonful of tapioca over night in warm water, move the starch by stirring with a spoon, put into a deep dish, and pour over the tapioca. Serve cold with whipped cream.

WITH QUAKER PASTE.—Stir half a pound of white flour and whole wheat flour, and a teaspoonful of a half of baking powder to each pint, and add a teaspoonful of salt.

Fill a pudding dish two-thirds full of stone and sweetened cherries. Mix two teaspoonfuls of baking powder with two teaspoonfuls of flour and a heaping egg, a teaspoon of milk and two teaspoonfuls of butter.

PICKLES.—Fill cans with ripe cherries on the stems, shake them down gently, then fill to the brim with very sweet, cold vinegar and salt.
