THE BATTLE OF THE DRYGATF. (A Parody on the Battle of Hohenlinden.) In Drygate, when the sun was low, Some thirsty lads were " on the go;" And clear as crystal was the flow Of whisky drinking rapidly.

But Drygate saw another sight, When they got drunk at dead of night, And stagger'd forth, each drunken wight, Into the gasht scenery.

By gas and whisky fast arrayed, Were brandish'd filthy fists displayed, And loudly every toper brayed To join the dr adful revelry.

Then shook then rags by battle riven, And watchmen's lamps to shivers driven, Whilst blows and kicks were freely given To quell the red-nosed chivalry.

But redder yet shall be the glow Of blood that follows watchmen's blow, And bloodier yet the torrent flow Of noses bleeding rapidly.

'Tis morn, and fierce the drunkard's fun, The attic sleepers even dun, And hundreds to the fight now run, And shout for deeds of devilry.

The combat deepens, and each brave, In street filth does his carcase lave, Wave, watchmen, all your batons wave, And charge with all your chivalry!

Few, few can stand where many meet, For many sprawl upon the street, And growl among the watchmen's feet Coarse oaths and foul obscenity.

streets in abhorred wedlock. Scores, and even hundreds, of the most abandoned men and women are east into dishonored graves every year, and yet the moral leprosy is not stayed. Hundreds more crowd into their places, who seem to be ambitious to excel in the curious art of obliterating from their hearts and lives the last vestige of worth or virtue. Whence comes this delirum of viciousness-this recklessness of utter ruin? Whence the deadly miasm, as from a thousand Pontine marshes, infecting the moral atmosphere to such an extent that goodness and truth halt feebly along, or die asphyxiated. Reader, did you ever pass along our streets after nightfall? you look behind the screen of the beer saloon and the dram shon? Saw you that boy-ten, twelve, mayhap fifteen years old-as he turned off his ning of beer, and who, replacing his cigar, with a swaggering gait regains the street? Follow him a few steps, and he will enter the theatre, where scores of lads as young and vile as he, mingles in revelry and mirth until a late hour. Thus trained, we can reasonably expect nothing else of them but that they will fill up the ranks of libertinism, and conclude the life thus ignobly begun, in the felon's cell, or upon the scaffold.

The story referred to is of one of these swallows, which was seen to linger after the tribe had taken its usual flight to the tropics, apparently alone, through the autumn and winter. The following is the explanation:

Spring came and he was there. An occurrence so singular, and contrary to the habits of the migrating tribes, caused his motions to be watched with more attention. At length another head was observed protruding from one of the nests, which seemed to be the abode of the bird which had been remarked with so much interest.
