Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the answer is that this requirement will apply to all bonds whether issued by the federal government or by any other level of government.

I think I must correct the impression left by the words of the hon. member and tell him that out of all the federal bond issues in the last three years and eight months there is only one to which this resolution would have applied. There have been some extreme cases with respect to provincial and municipal bond issues that have led to the introduction of this proposal.

Paragraph agreed to.

On paragraph 12.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, on paragraph 12 there is an amendment of which notice was given on February 2. Again I would ask my colleague the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys if he would move the amendment.

Mr. Comtois: Mr. Chairman, I move that the Income Tax Act resolution be amended by striking out paragraph 12 thereof and substituting therefor for the following:

"12. That for the 1961 and subsequent taxation years a student in full-time attendance at a university in a course leading to a degree, or in full-time attendance at a college or other educational institution in Canada in a course at a post-secondary school level, be permitted to deduct in computing his income for the year, fees for his tuition paid to the university, college or other educational institution in respect of a period not exceeding 12 months commencing in the year and not included in the calculation of a deduction for such fees for a previous year (except any such fees paid in respect of a course that did not require his full-time attendance for a period of at least three consecutive months), and that the said tuition fees also be deducted in computing the income of the student for purposes of determining whether the student is a dependent."

The Deputy Chairman: Hon. members have had notice of the amendment. Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Before it carries, Mr. Chairman, I wish the minister would explain precisely how this clause as amended will work.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, it will be remembered that the proposal in its original form dealt with the case of the student in full-time attendance at a university in a course leading to a degree and in that case the amendment proposed would have permitted him in computing his income to deduct the tuition fees paid by him in the year to the university and also that the tuition fees should be deducted in computing the income of a student for the purpose of determining whether or not he was a dependent. That matter, of course, affected the question whether his parents are entitled to the $500 deduction in the case of dependents 16 years of age or over.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The year does not run from September, does it?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The year in question in the original resolution applied to the year 1961. The purpose of the amendment has been to widen very considerably the scope of the original proposal.

In the first place, as to the number of students who will qualify within the scope of the amendment, this definition is now broadened to include students whether in a university in a course leading to a degree or students in full-time attendance at a college or other educational institution in Canada in a course at a post-secondary school level. That is the enlargement of the class which will be benefited by the resolution.

The resolution is also broadened with respect to the application of the principle. Where in the original resolution the effect dated from January 1, 1961 and applied only to tuition fees paid on or after that date, the amendment now contemplates the inclusion in the scope of the amendment of tuition fees paid for a period not exceeding 12 months commencing in the year and not included in the calculation of a deduction for such fees for a previous year, except any such fees paid in respect of a course that did not require full-time attendance for a period of at least three consecutive months. I believe those are the leading elements in the broadening of the benefits of this proposed amendment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make one brief observation. I approve of this proposal in its amended form as I approved of it in its original form but I would point out, just the same, that it does underline the fact that those students who need help most get none at all and that if the student earns a considerable sum he gets a certain amount of additional help from the government, but if he does not earn that much he does not qualify for assistance and—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the hon. member will agree that that other class would not be a matter to be dealt with under the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the minister would allow me to finish my own sentence, I was going to say that in addition to providing help for those students who were fortunate enough to earn a relatively larger amount it underlines the need of a proper program of scholarships and bursaries on a national basis for those who were not fortunate enough to come up to a sufficiently high level of income to enable them to qualify under this clause.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, the amendment certainly improves the application and intention of the resolution. Would the minister inform the committee from what sources he received representations with respect to this amendment and state whether he has received any from organizations or institutions suggesting a further widening of the deductions permitted under this clause of the resolution?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, there have been resolutions received from time to time broadly relating to this subject. Sometimes they have come from student organizations. Since the introduction of the supplementary budget on December 20, I have received a number of communications from student organizations and educational bodies expressing most cordial approval of the recommendations. Some of them proposed extensions such as those that are now put forward in the amendment.

There are some colleges that are not affiliated with any university but which are well-recognized educational institutions at post-secondary level. Their case was very carefully considered and it seemed to my colleagues and myself that it was a fair case they had put forward. Representations of that kind led to the broadening of the resolution.

There were some representations received from individual students. In every case these have been carefully studied and I think that the resolution in its amended and broadened form will cover and accede to practically all the representations in this field that we have received.

Business of the House

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) seconded by Mr. Churchill, moves that the said resolution be now concurred in. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Pickersgill: On division.

Motion agreed to on division and resolution concurred in.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-72, to amend the Customs Tariff.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Pickersgill: On division.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a second time?

Mr. Pickersgill: Never.

Mr. Speaker: Next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-73, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, in view of the ruling of the Chair in committee that the announcement made by the Minister of Labour today could not be discussed on the income tax resolution, I should like to suggest to the leader of the house that he call the estimates of the Department of Labour tomorrow so that this matter can be discussed in view of the great public interest in it and its urgency.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, we always give careful consideration to suggestions from the other side but so many people are waiting to discuss another matter of great public interest, namely, agriculture, that I think perhaps we should go on with the estimates of the Department of Agriculture tomorrow as announced earlier this week.

Mr. Pickersgill: In that case would the leader of the house allow me to make an alternative suggestion, that the government move on Monday to go into committee of supply in order to give the opposition an opportunity—

Mr. Monteith (Perth): You had it last week.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the minister would not interrupt, it would be appreciated. May I suggest that the government on Monday move to go into committee of supply in order to give the opposition an opportunity to discuss the announcement made today which there was certainly no opportunity to debate before today.

Mr. Churchill: In view of these suggestions which will be given careful consideration, I will not announce any business other than that for tomorrow.

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

LAKE WILLIAMS, N.S.—REPORT ON DROWNING

Question No. 108—Mr. Tucker:

What is the result of the investigation referred to by the Minister of Transport in his answer to the question regarding lake Williams, Nova Scotia, as reported in Hansard for Friday, August 5, 1960, at page 7598?

Answer by: Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport):

Question

A Department of Transport report of the inquiry into the accident to Piper J-3CG5 aircraft, CF-DGT, at lake Williams, Nova Scotia, on May 22, 1960, revealed that the accident occurred because the pilot in command failed to see the sailboat until too late to avoid a collision while he was taxiing his aircraft at high speed into the sun.

Seaplane operations at lake Williams, Nova Scotia, have been thoroughly investigated by officers of the Department of Transport and those operations are, and will be, kept under strict supervision in order to make certain that the air regulations are being observed and that such operations are being conducted in a safe and orderly manner.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

STATEMENT ON AGENDA AND CANADIAN PERSONNEL

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) asked me yesterday whether I would have a word to say with reference to the commonwealth prime ministers' conference and the Canadian representation at that meeting. I would advise that I shall be leaving this afternoon and, as already announced, I shall visit Belfast on the way at the invitation of the Prime Minister of Northern Ireland. On the 5th and 6th of March I shall be in Dublin as a guest of the Irish government for discussions with the Prime Minister of Ireland, Mr. Lemass.

I can assure hon. members that I shall take with me the warm wishes of this house and of Canadians generally, and I shall pay tribute to those of Irish blood who have made so great a contribution to Canada.

Sir, in regard to the prime ministers' meeting, it will commence, as hon. members know, on March 8 and continue until March 16. I shall be accompanied by the Secretary of State, and next week the Minister of Justice will also proceed to London in connection with the meetings.

These meetings of prime ministers are indispensable in commonwealth affairs. They exemplify the process of consultation which lies at the heart of the commonwealth relationship. They represent and are a recurrent symbol of the partnership and diversity of the commonwealth. They provide each national leader with an opportunity to understand the problems and the hopes of the other member nations.

As the Leader of the Opposition knows from personal experience, there is a candour in these meetings which ensures that they are profitable for all who participate. In the past 15 years since the war the commonwealth has undergone a transformation in membership which has not only increased its usefulness and its opportunities in world affairs, but which has at the same time brought about new complexities and problems into the association.

This meeting of prime ministers will face problems of far-reaching significance, the most conspicuous of these being the continued membership of South Africa. I take it that in general the views of the parties in the house were set out in detail last March and April during the discussions that took place here. Since then the leader of the C.C.F. has given the views of his party. I take it that the Leader of the Opposition holds, because he has said nothing to the contrary, much the same views that he expressed during the debates nine or ten months ago. However, if there is any alteration in that viewpoint I would welcome hearing the hon. gentleman express his views in this regard at this time.

The essence of these meetings is that there shall be serious discussion without predetermined positions being taken. I can only express my conviction that the prime ministers will be inspired by a determination that in what they do the commonwealth will be preserved and strengthened and will be made an association even more effective as a vehicle of international partnership than ever before.

We sometimes fail to realize the tremendous diversity of opinion because of geography, size, culture, race and colour that is convened in these conferences. No one attending them can but have a greater knowledge of the problems faced everywhere in the world because of these diversities. Indeed I repeat what I have said on other occasions, that this body, transcending as it does the boundaries that ordinarily separate peoples of various races and colours, has a message for all mankind.

It is a practice in these meetings that the prime ministers should discuss the most urgent international issues of the day. I expect that there will be a very full review of the Congo situation and that in Laos, which are of concern to nations everywhere. Then there is the question of disarmament, which demands the attention of peoples everywhere. In this connection I shall naturally be bringing before the meeting the strong conviction of the Canadian government that there should be no relaxation of the effort to achieve progress in disarmament, and will emphasize, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs has done so effectively, that the middle and smaller nations have a definitive role to play in this process, a role which cannot be discharged by the greater powers by themselves.

There will be before the conference the question of the admission of Sierra Leone. There will be an application for membership from the republic of Cyprus. Beyond that I know the house would not expect me to go. However, immediately on my return I will report the progress made at the conference and, in general, outline and discuss the attitudes taken by the conference as a whole without, of course, revealing the discussions which in the interest of frankness are regarded as confidential.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I am sure all hon. members will have listened with great interest to the Prime Minister's statement on the forthcoming commonwealth prime ministers' conference. There is no doubt that in the long list of such conferences this will be one of the most important because the problems it will face are difficult and complex and will require all that flexibility of approach, wisdom and understanding which, I think it can be said, have been displayed at prime ministers' meetings in the past.

It was intriguing to me, Mr. Speaker, to read in the London Times this morning a dispatch from its diplomatic correspondent which I think should be given all the authority usually attached to such dispatches, giving the agenda of the forthcoming meeting, not in exact terms but as subjects which would be discussed. It was interesting to learn from that dispatch—and I am sure the Prime Minister's words this morning confirm it—that among the most important subjects of discussion will be disarmament so that if possible the commonwealth, can, at discussions at the United Nations, present a united front on this subject. Particular reference was made to the atomic test ban. In addition, the limitation of membership in the nuclear club is something the commonwealth prime ministers should discuss, especially in view of the fact that when a resolution on this subject was introduced at the United Nations by the Irish delegation last December the commonwealth delegations were badly split, Canada joining, I believe, with some of the Asian and African members in accepting that resolution limiting the nuclear club to countries now in possession of that weapon, while other members of the commonwealth abstained on it. This is one of the things in respect of which the commonwealth could bring about at least a greater measure of unity in its members.

According to the Times correspondent there will also be up for consideration the admission of communist China to the United Nations. Indeed, I am sure that the whole future of the United Nations will be discussed in London again to see if the commonwealth can present a united front in constructive proposals that will strengthen our world organization.

Our Prime Minister has mentioned the question of membership in the commonwealth. I have no doubt, of course, that this will be not only among the most important but also among the most difficult subjects up for consideration in view of the necessity of agreement being reached within this conference in regard to new members; or in regard to a member which has changed its status to a republic, seeking membership in the commonwealth. I, of course, refer in the last category to South Africa.

The position of the official opposition in regard to race discrimination and the policy of apartheid as practised in South Africa remains as described by myself in this house when this matter was discussed previously. I have no doubt that the effect of policies of racial and other forms of discrimination on membership in the commonwealth will have to be discussed at this meeting. I do not propose to go any further than that at this time.

The admission of Cyprus is another problem which the Prime Minister has mentioned. It is interesting and encouraging to realize that not very long ago many of the people of Cyprus were in arms against the United Kingdom. At this conference, after a tremendous majority in the legislature, Cyprus will be asking for admission to the commonwealth, and it may well be that Archbishop Makarios himself may turn up at a meeting of commonwealth leaders. Nothing could better express the flexibility, vitality and enduring strength of our commonwealth than that kind of situation.

The problems of increased membership in the commonwealth, however, are also complex. Perhaps at this meeting some consideration will have to be given to the question of whether institutional arrangements are now required in a commonwealth which is growing so fast and which will soon comprise 16, 18 or 20 members of varying degrees of size, strength and responsibility.

I have no doubt that the prime ministers will be devoting all the attention they can and bringing to bear all the wisdom and energies they possess to the question of commonwealth action in the direction of increasing the strength, co-operation and unity of this association in the search for international peace and security; and that they will do everything they can to ensure the freedom, without discrimination of any kind, of all peoples within the boundaries of the member nations.

In so far as any progress can be made in that direction—and I am sure our own Prime Minister will do what he can to contribute to that progress—the conference and the Prime Minister will, I know, receive the support of all Canadians, as he will certainly receive and deserve the good wishes of the official opposition.

We wish the Prime Minister a pleasant journey. It is starting off well in that he is going to visit Ireland first. Perhaps he will be able to do something to help realize the vision of a united Ireland. Perhaps also he will visit Blarney castle. We wish the Prime Minister a pleasant journey and a most useful sojourn in London, and a safe return to Canada.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the prime ministers' commonwealth conference will be discussing many important questions. One of the most important in my opinion will be the economic well-being of member nations of the commonwealth. This will mean a discussion of trade and ways and means of expanding trade, and I would hope as well a discussion of a more far-reaching program to provide economic assistance to the underdeveloped nations in the commonwealth.

Canada should take a lead in this field. I suggest that in recent months there have been indications that Canada is falling back in this role. Instead of increasing, our economic assistance is decreasing at this time. I would hope—

Mr. Green: On a point of order, this is an inaccurate statement and really should not be made. No doubt the hon. member read it in some newspaper article, but the statement is not correct.

Mr. Argue: A further supplementary estimate will have to be brought down to make it an inaccurate statement. I hope the government will take action to show that the minister's statement is correct. There is certainly room for a vast expansion in economic assistance, and whether we are falling slightly behind or going slightly ahead I suggest the Canadian people feel that the government should be taking an active lead in this field.

Second, I suggest that in international affairs the government should continue a firm stand in opposing any expansion of the nuclear club. It would be a great mistake for more nations to have nuclear weapons. I would hope also that the commonwealth would take a firm stand in opposition to further nuclear tests. At this time, when there are reports that France is considering a fourth nuclear explosion, I would hope that this subject would be on the agenda for discussion by the commonwealth prime ministers, and that the weight of the commonwealth should be in opposition to further nuclear tests.

The Prime Minister has made special reference to the South African situation. I think the position of this group is rather clear. We have been and are very much opposed to discrimination in any form. We feel that Canada should speak out and the Prime Minister should speak out for Canadians in expressing that opposition. South Africa has had a vote and has decided to become a republic. She will perhaps be asking for admission to the commonwealth as a republic. I suggest that it should be made clear to South Africa that her policies must be changed before sympathetic consideration can be given to bringing her into the commonwealth of nations. I suggest that such an attitude and such a policy would increase the chances of discrimination in this nation being reduced.

We all wish the Prime Minister a successful journey. We hope the conference will be successful, and we shall be looking forward to the report he makes to parliament on his return.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I be allowed to say to the Leader of the Opposition how very deeply I appreciate his gracious words, and may I express my thanks to the leader of the C.C.F. for his good wishes.

The Leader of the Opposition mentioned the constitutional developments that are taking place. This question is one that will naturally exercise the minds and thoughts of those in attendance. As he pointed out, membership in the commonwealth is increasing so rapidly that it may in effect deny that intimacy and closeness of relationship in discussion which has been characteristic of the past. At what point do you or do you not draw the line? Shall a member nation have a given population or more? These are problems that face the commonwealth. In the light of the developments that are taking place, the commonwealth will have to decide whether it would not be appropriate for the meetings, while held generally in the centre of the commonwealth, might, not on a rotational basis but from time to time, take place in other capitals of the commonwealth.

Again I express my thanks to the Leader of the Opposition and to the leader of the C.C.F.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—STATEMENT OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I should like to make a statement with regard to the Columbia river treaty, and with particular reference to the report of the British Columbia energy board. I do so in response to requests from many members, including in particular the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke, as well as in response to the request which was made yesterday.

The government has now secured the text of interim report No. 1 of the British Columbia energy board, and has had an opportunity to analyse it. I can say at once that there is no point raised in the report that did not receive exhaustive consideration in the course of Canada-British Columbia discussions and in the course of the negotiation of the treaty. I should like also to emphasize that the British Columbia government were directly represented and participated fully at every stage of these discussions and negotiations. They participated fully in the working out of all provisions, and accepted every section and word of the treaty. Their engineers and technical advisers, including two of the members of the British Columbia energy board, participated fully in the determination of all figures and estimates on the basis of which the treaty was recommended. The British Columbia government accepted the conclusions reflected in the treaty on every one of the points now raised by the British Columbia energy board's report.

The energy board's report suggests that the treaty should not be ratified "without prior consideration" of certain factors. The essential point I want to make is that all these factors have received exhaustive prior consideration over a period of 17 years. Among other things the board suggests that discussions "have not yet proceeded to a point where any precise estimate can be obtained of the actual nature and quantity of power which will reach the B.C. load centres". This is a quotation from the board's report. A reference to the treaty and the annexes will show that the utmost precision possible at this stage has been introduced for the determination of precisely these matters at the only time they can be determined with complete certainty, when the treaty is in effect and operation has begun.

These are the kinds of matter that can only be determined finally when actual operation commences. To suggest that ratification and thus commencement of construction be delayed until a precise determination is obtained on all these points would mean therefore that nothing would ever start. The advance information and estimates on the Columbia project are at least as full and detailed as those available at the stage when other major programs were committed for construction; for instance, the St. Lawrence seaway.

[Mr. Fulton.]

In general, the British Columbia energy board's report asks that everything be determined precisely in advance, whereas in the nature of this kind of development some things can only be finally determined at a later stage. The treaty provides especially rigorous principles and procedures for making this determination.

The British Columbia energy board's report also seems to suggest that storage projects should only be brought in at the theoretically ideal time. This might be an engineer's dream, but it is simply not possible to ensure in a negotiated arrangement of this magnitude where commitments and plans have necessarily to be made far in advance. The British Columbia government is well aware of the reasons for the timetable for the Canadian projects included in the treaty. They know that any difference sequence or timetable would detract from the great value secured for all these Canadian projects.

What matters now is what the British Columbia government intends to do about this report. The real question is whether or not British Columbia and Canada are going ahead with the Columbia development. If it is to go ahead, ratification must take place without any unnecessary delay, and a start on the projects must be made just as soon as possible. Surely nothing should be allowed to jeopardize not only the power benefits but also the many millions of man hours of employment and the general economic stimulus waiting to be realized through the treaty project. If the British Columbia government is going to impose further delay on the basis of some of the points that have been raised again by the board's report, there is grave danger that this will imperil the treaty and the entire Columbia river development, not only for this year but perhaps forever.

The United States Senate will commence its consideration of this treaty as early as March 8. Let there be no doubt that the government of Canada stands ready to proceed with ratification at once.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the minister has made what I think is a very important statement on this matter. We on this side were of the impression, having regard to what the Prime Minister said some weeks ago, that consideration of this treaty by this house and by the committee to which it would presumably be submitted, and action by this parliament, would not be taken until suitable arrangements had been made with the provincial government concerned.

Having said that, I should add that yesterday in reply to a question I put the Prime Minister did say that no decision had yet been taken as to whether the agreement would be brought forward before the event to which the hon. gentleman made reference.

Now, Mr. Speaker, of course the negotiation and ratification of treaties is the responsibility of the federal government. Although in accordance with a convention of our constitution treaties are submitted to parliament for consideration and approval, once a treaty is ratified, the federal government has an international obligation in respect of that treaty vis-à-vis the other signatory country or countries. While that is true of the implementation of the treaty, nevertheless in so far as that implementation deals with matters under provincial jurisdiction it is the responsibility also of the provincial government concerned. If we proceeded in this house with consideration of this treaty, and with action in regard to it, before those matters had been concluded with the provincial government which are essential to the implementation of the treaty, we might find ourselves in very grave difficulties indeed. I do not want to be dogmatic or final about the matter, but I do want to point out one of the implications in the minister's statement, as I understood it.

Mr. Fulton: I thank my hon. friend for drawing to my attention the implication he has taken, because I do think this should be cleared up. My statement is a statement of the position of the Canadian government; that is that the Canadian government has confidence the treaty represents the best advantage to Canada, and stands ready to proceed with ratification. This statement is quite consistent with what the Prime Minister said because, as the hon. gentleman has pointed out, it is important to know exactly what the position of British Columbia is and that, of course, will have to be determined before a final decision is made by the government of Canada. My statement is a statement of the position of the Canadian government, a position about which there should be no doubt. We stand ready to ratify this treaty at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): We wish to thank the minister for his statement in respect to report No. 1 of the provincial energy board. I have no hesitation in saying that events have proven that the member for Kootenay West was right when he said this government was naive in signing this treaty before reaching an agreement with the government of British Columbia.

I received a copy of this report this morning, and I have read it carefully. When I see the names of prominent engineering firms from the United Kingdom attached to opinions indicating that further information is required on the physical aspects, the engineering aspects and the economic aspects of the question before anyone can make a satisfactory decision, I am more than ever convinced that the government acted with haste and without full knowledge of the facts.

I am not alone in that belief. This matter is causing a great deal of concern among the many people I have the honour to represent. I do hope, Mr. Speaker, that this delay and this reconsideration will cause a modification in this treaty which will make it possible for Canada to enjoy the greatest power potential without the unnecessary flooding, as General McNaughton said in his evidence before the external affairs committee, of the territory along the Arrow lakes, and the environs of Revelstoke.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF REVISED MINING REGULATIONS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like at this time to announce the promulgation of revised Canada mining regulations which apply to the Northwest Territories and certain other federal lands.

The regulations for the disposition of mining rights in the Northwest Territories and on other federal lands outside the provinces and the Yukon have been completely revised and modernized. Formerly known as the quartz mining regulations, they had not been basically revised since the early thirties. In the interim, changes have taken place in exploration and production techniques and in other facets of the industry which required recognition in new regulations.

About two years ago my department began a basic revision of this mineral disposition law. Wide consultation was held with industry while the revisions were being studied. Public meetings were held on two occasions in Yellowknife, Edmonton and Toronto, with large numbers of the mining fraternity attending. Three separate sets of drafts were distributed for comment and over one hundred briefs were received from associations, companies and individuals. This active co-operation from industry has been of great help to us in drawing up suitable regulations.

The revised regulations rest on two principles; first, to encourage exploration, development and production, and second, to protect the interest of the people of Canada in the valuable resources which are administered under these regulations.

I would like to outline a few of the main changes brought about by the new regulations. There are, of course, a great many other revisions in the regulations which are of a technical or administrative nature which I will not mention at this time.

It is the policy of this government to ensure that Canadians have an opportunity to participate in the ownership and development of our resources. This policy is made effective in these regulations by providing for Canadian participation requirements at the lease stage, just as in the Canada oil and gas regulations. A lease to hold or produce minerals will only be issued to Canadian citizens or corporations incorporated in Canada in which at least 50 per cent of the issued shares are owned by Canadians, or whose shares are listed on a Canadian stock exchange, and in whose financing and ownership Canadians have an opportunity to participate.

The maximum claim tenure period for new claims is set at ten years to avoid the problems inherent in long claim tenure without activity. If the ground is to be held beyond ten years, claims must be converted into leases and, as I have said, leasing is mandatory whenever production starts. Leases are for a 21 year period with a privilege of renewal, and lease rentals may be offset by exploratory work.

In place of the rather unwieldy reservation system in our former regulations, we have introduced a prospecting permit system. These permits are for a maximum three year period and require minimum fixed exploratory expenditures each year, guaranteed by deposits. There will be no special arrangements with individual companies or payments or rentals to the crown. They will be issued on a "first come, first served" basis and only in the winter season, in order that everyone may know the areas granted well before the beginning of the prospecting season.

A large area around Great Slave lake where prospecting is active will be exempted from issuance of permits and, in fact, permits will not be issued in any areas which are being actively explored. They are designed for the more remote areas which have not been actively explored and where exploration over a larger spread of acreage for a short time, using modern methods, is justified. It is confidently expected that this permit system will encourage exploration in remote areas.

Areas not actively under permit will, of course, be open to normal staking and in no event can more than 12 per cent of the permit area be retained in claims by the permit holder.

The new regulations contain transitional clauses framed with the utmost care to protect and confirm rights given under former regulations, to assure that they are not abrogated.

There are a great many other changes which will cut red tape and reduce costs to the prospector and developer.

I am confident that the new Canada mining regulations will provide a sound basis for investment in the exploration and production of federal mineral resources, and will also protect the rights of the Canadian public, the owners of these resources, in line with the government's policy of northern development.

(Translation):

Mr. Armand Dumas (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, that very important statement made by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Dinsdale) will certainly please the whole population of the Northwest Territories.

However, before being in a position to commit ourselves definitely on the contents of those amendments to the act, I think it would be wise to consider them in fuller detail.

I wish to congratulate the minister for that initiative, and to assure him that the measure will indeed be welcomed by the people concerned.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

COLOMBO PLAN—TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE TO UNIVERSITY OF MALAYA

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make an announcement concerning a new type of Colombo plan assistance which has been arranged with Malaya and Singapore. At the request of the government of the federation of Malaya and of the government of the state of Singapore, the government of Canada has approved a project whereby the University of British Columbia will establish and develop, in the Kuala Lumpur and Singapore divisions of the University of Malaya, courses in accounting and business administration. The University of British Columbia will also undertake the necessary research in business and industry in the federation of Malaya and in the state of Singapore with a view to adapting these research findings for teaching purposes.

This is the first occasion when a Canadian university has undertaken a program of technical assistance as the agent of the government of Canada. The project, subject to annual review, will continue over a period of five years, and will involve sending out to Malaya and Singapore members of the faculty of the University of British Columbia for research and teaching duties.

When the program is well launched in the two universities abroad, it is proposed to bring to Canada selected students from the universities at Kuala Lumpur and at Singapore for training at the University of British Columbia and elsewhere in Canada. Upon completion of their training these students will return home to replace successively the teaching and research staff of the University of British Columbia in the University of Malaya. When this program is in full progress there will be six faculty members of the University of British Columbia at the Kuala Lumpur and Singapore divisions of the University of Malaya, and six students from the University of Malaya who will be pursuing their studies in Canada.

The costs of this program, including salaries of the professors of the University of British Columbia abroad, the training of these students from Malaya and Singapore in Canada, travel, and the necessary equipment including library books, business machines and other supplies, will be met from funds voted to finance Canada's participation in the Colombo plan.

It is thought that this project undertaken by the University of British Columbia on behalf of the government of Canada may be the first of a series of such arrangements whereby a Canadian university or other institution would undertake a specific program of technical assistance on behalf of the Canadian government. There are obvious advantages in concentrating Canada's aid programs upon specific and demonstrable needs abroad—there is a great lack of accountants and business administrators in Malaya and in Singapore—and it is clearly an efficient procedure to entrust such a project to a university in Canada well equipped to plan and carry it out with its own specialized research and teaching staff.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, this announcement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be received by the house and the country, I am sure, with great interest. It is noteworthy that the minister should have made this statement today in view of the interest that was shown yesterday by the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) when he suggested that consideration might be given to emulatting the plan now being established in the United States in establishing a peace corps in undeveloped lands.

This, of course, is not precisely the same concept, but it has many similar features. The arrangements made for assistance to Singapore and the federation of Malaya as announced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs continue arrangements that were first established, I think, in 1956. It is important that this aid to these two states, Singapore and the federation of Malaya, should be of a generous character because of the need for assistance.

It is interesting that the great University of British Columbia, on the Pacific coast, should be the first university to participate in this interesting and, I am sure, useful venture. It must have been a matter of great pride to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, coming as he does from Vancouver and British Columbia, to make this announcement in so far as the University of British Columbia's participation is concerned.

However, the minister will not mind my saying to him, as one University of Toronto man to another, that it is to be hoped that in the pursuit of this plan that university, as well as the university in Windsor, Assumption University, and other universities in Canada, which are devoted to Asian studies, will be given an opportunity to contribute at some future date.

In this particular one should not forget that the first Asian study department to be set up in Canada was at McGill, under Professor Smith. If anyone doubts the catholicity of my university interests, this statement will clearly remove that doubt.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I say that we all understand the envy and jealousy of the hon. member for Essex East. However, may I say that we in British Columbia take a different attitude from the hon. member. Anything from Canada is good and we are proud of it, irrespective of the province or the university participating. However, you will of course understand the great interest with which I listened to the statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, because I also come from Vancouver and British Columbia. We are exceedingly proud, of course, that there has been an arrangement made on this most important matter of assistance to other states and countries whereby the University of British Columbia is able to be of help.

I am in particular very happy about the announcement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs because, although I take no credit for it, it is in line with a speech I made in this house during the last session as a result of information given to me in Singapore and Malaya on the occasion of the visit of the official Canadian delegation to those countries. It was impressed upon us by the people of Singapore and Malaya, Indonesia, Thailand, Iran and other countries that they felt the greatest help Canada could give would be to have our technicians and university people go to their countries, understand them, help them in their countries in educational, administrative and business methods, and then have, on the basis of that understanding and knowledge, the acceptance of students from those countries into our own universities.

I have nothing but the highest commendation for the initiation of this policy whereby Canadian universities first send people to these countries to understand and assist them, and then follow up with their students coming to our country. We are, of course, very happy about the announcement of this policy and, being human, we are very proud that the first university in this field is U.B.C. We hope to see, and we have every hope that this will be so, the policy extended and that the university about which the hon. member for Essex East is so concerned will have an opportunity to learn from the experience of U.B.C.

[Later:]

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the catholicity of the hon. member for Essex East when he was referring to the University of British Columbia plan for assistance, he overlooked the fact that a similar plan is already in the process of arrangement at the University of Toronto, in which our own fellow member for York Centre (Mr. Stinson) has played an important part. It is going ahead on the same general lines.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege may I simply note that fact as being so. I neglected to say that in some of our French Canadian universities progress is being made in this connection also.

POLYMER CORPORATION

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW PLANT FOR PRODUCTION OF POLYBUTADIENE

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce to the house the plans of Polymer Corporation Limited for a new plant at Sarnia for the production of polybutadiene. Construction will commence during the summer of 1961, with a view to being in production before the end of 1962.

This plant is estimated to cost between $8 million and $10 million and will be the first commercial unit in Canada for the production of stereo-specific rubbers, a new family of rubbers made possible by advances in special catalysts developed in the last eight years. These rubbers are of particular interest in heavy duty truck and bus tires. Polymer has already been producing substantial quantities of polybutadiene in its plant located in Sarnia. Large quantities have been used for factory evaluation.

This is the second unit of the expansion program for Polymer which I announced last fall, and emphasizes the continuing growth and diversification of the company's facilities in Sarnia.

SPORTS

CURLING—WINNING OF LADIES' CHAMPIONSHIP BY SASKATOON RINK

Mr. H. F. Jones (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. It gives me a good deal of pleasure to draw the attention of the house to the presence in Ottawa of four very charming, gracious and beautiful ladies from Saskatoon, distinguished beyond all others in Canada in that they have won the Canadian ladies' curling championship. I might say that in their sportsmanship these ladies, Miss McKee, Miss Fedoruk, Mrs. McNiven and Mrs. McFee, are a credit to Canada and especially to that most famous of cities, Saskatoon.

Mr. Winch: Also the runners-up from British Columbia.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether there are other questions of privilege in connection with other contenders. Undoubtedly it is a question of privilege, and a privilege which the hon. member for Saskatoon very much enjoys.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CRITERIA FOR DEPRESSED AREAS—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I ask leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the inadequate and restrictive character of the criteria to be used as a basis for the designation of depressed areas.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to say a word on this—

Mr. Chevrier: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —the Department of Labour estimates will be called next week—

Mr. Chevrier: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the hon. gentleman would maintain silence—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Prime Minister is quite in order in speaking to the question of urgency of debate, which is the matter involved in the leave which the Leader of the Opposition has requested.

Mr. Pearson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, is it not customary to give the member who moves the motion a chance to explain why he considers it important to raise the matter at this time?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, and in due course the Leader of the Opposition will have his opportunity.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Apparently the hon. gentleman is somewhat frightened that my intervention may end any argument in that connection on his part. I was simply pointing out that the question of urgency has to be determined by you, Mr. Speaker, and aside from every other consideration, next week when the estimates of the Department of Labour are called an opportunity will be given for the fullest discussion of this question. Hon. members opposite have been asking for the labour estimates to be called, and that is the reason I rise now, to say that within a very few days they are going to have the fullest opportunity to discuss in most ample measure a subject which has been dealt with over and over again, this particular aspect being, however, a phase of the subject discussed earlier in the month of December.

For these reasons I suggest there is no urgency such as must necessarily be established in order to permit a motion to be moved for the adjournment of this house.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I rise on a point of order. I think when a member rises in accordance with standing order 26, wherein the practice is clearly established that the member desiring to make the motion for adjournment rises in his place and asks for permission to do so, Mr. Speaker deals with the matter before anyone else is allowed to intervene and give reasons why in his opinion there will be opportunity for discussion at a later date.

Subsection 3 of standing order 26 reads as follows:

> He then hands a written statement of the matter proposed to be discussed to Mr. Speaker, who, if he thinks it in order, and of urgent public importance, reads it out and asks whether the member has the leave of the house. If objection is taken, Mr. Speaker requests those members who support the motion to rise in their places and, if more than 20 members rise accordingly, Mr. Speaker calls upon the member who has asked for leave.

This was not allowed to be done. The Leader of the Opposition asked for leave to move his motion and I think he should have been allowed to complete his statement.

Some hon. Members: He sat down.

Mr. Chevrier: He did not. He rose several times. I say, with respect, that he rose several times but the Prime Minister was on his feet and Your Honour saw the Prime Minister. I am not objecting to the statement made by the Prime Minister, but it should not have been allowed at that time in accordance with the rule as I understand it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Laurier has, I think, misunderstood or perhaps misinterpreted the practice. As I understand it, when a member asks for leave to move the adjournment of the house it is, of course, the responsibility of the Speaker to determine whether it is a matter which comes within the scope of rule 26, and in regard to which the house should be asked whether leave should be given. But before the Speaker makes up his mind, as the hon. member will recall from past instances, it has been his practice to hear members of the house who are prepared to assist him on the question of urgency of debate. It was on that account that when the Prime Minister rose immediately, wishing to speak on that subject, I was pleased to have his views on that question; and I shall be glad to hear the Leader of the Opposition now on the question of the urgency of debate.

Mr. Chevrier: May I draw this point to the attention of Your Honour. It seems to me that the practice has been to allow a statement, as you have allowed it, but only after you have put into effect the provisions of subsection 3 of standing order 26.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): May I speak on that point of order? It seems to me the Leader of the Opposition was so hesitant in his advocacy that instead of proceeding he sat down.

Mr. Speaker: I have already determined that the point of order is not well taken. I am prepared to hear the Leader of the Opposition in support of the urgency attaching to his request that he be given leave to move the adjournment of the house.

Mr. Pearson: It has just been said that I was so hesitant about this motion that I sat down after reading it out. I sat down so that Your Honour would have a chance to read the motion, and in order that the Prime Minister and the leader of the C.C.F. party might have a copy of it. If I did not resume my statement immediately it was through courtesy to the Speaker, to the Prime Minister and to the leader of the other party, not through hesitancy. In doing so I followed the normal practice of this house for years.

The Prime Minister has already indicated that he does not consider this matter to be one of urgency. There can be no question, of course, about its importance. It deals with a concrete proposal which has at last been advanced by the government in order to alleviate unemployment. But this proposal, as we have understood and studied it, is in such uncertain terms that it is already causing uncertainty and uneasiness in the country with regard to its application. Surely, therefore, it is necessary to clear up at once the nature of this proposal, the manner of its operation and the effect it will have on the economy.

We did our best last evening to have a discussion on this matter but it was ruled by the Chair to be out of order. I am not complaining about that, but there was no possibility of our continuing the discussion of it on the budget resolutions before the house which, according to the Minister of Finance, had nothing whatever to do with this matter. Therefore we had to find some other way of discussing the subject at once.

When the house rose last night my friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who asked what the business was to be for the next day, suggested that perhaps we could discuss this matter today on the estimates of the Department of Labour; or, if that was not possible—and the leader of the house said it was not possible—possibly we could discuss it on Monday on a supply motion. That has not been found possible, either—and I am not complaining about that—but in view of the immediate urgency of getting this question cleared up so the country may know what these regulations mean and how they can be applied at once to the unemployment situation, surely it is not necessary to wait until some time next week when the government brings forward the estimates of the Department of Labour.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): It seems to me Your Honour has to make a ruling which is difficult because of its qualitative nature. Because of that, it seems to me that what you really want is an honest opinion as to the question of urgent public importance. I can only say for the C.C.F. party that we have been stunned by the haziness and inadequacy of the statement made yesterday by the Minister of Labour. Speaking for my constituents and my party I certainly feel this is urgently important. We know something about the criteria mentioned in this motion, and for this reason we would urge Your Honour to allow it.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on the question of urgency I think you have to take into account that a request such as this asks the house to set aside the business arranged for the day in question. Now, the business which it is intended to bring before the house today is consideration of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, and I do not think anyone would wish to argue that this does not constitute urgent and essential business to be considered by this house because of the economic factors which will be determined by the acceptance or otherwise of the government's program for agriculture for the year.

The second point to be considered is this. This question was discussed last night. In our opinion the hon. member for Essex East was out of order, but we permitted him to go ahead without interruption for a full 30 minutes discussing this particular subject. We could easily have interrupted the hon. member and asked him to refrain from comment but we did not do so, and so the matter was considered by the house last night. The hon. member for Port Arthur similarly without interruption followed on the same subject for about 15 minutes. Therefore we have heard the views of the opposition with regard to this important problem.

Hon. members on the opposition side asked that this matter be taken up on Monday and Tuesday. Consequently they were of the opinion last night that it was not of such urgency that it had to be discussed today. It so happens that Monday, under our rules, is a private members' day and is so set out. We are consequently going ahead with that.

Finally, the Prime Minister has pointed out that the estimates of the Department of Labour will be up for consideration next week. They will be called, and I think I can safely give the assurance now that they will come before the house on Thursday, which will give ample opportunity for full debate on this particular problem on Thursday and on Friday if necessary. Hon. members of the opposition were prepared to discuss this question on Monday and Tuesday of next week, so it is only a matter of our making the suggestion that these matters be discussed on Thursday.

I would conclude by saying that I think it would be wrong to interrupt the business of the day to discuss this particular problem when there will be an early opportunity to debate it.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the practice that has been established in the house is, I think, clearly set out, as Your Honour knows, in Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 100. Before Your Honour entertains a motion of this character he must be assured that there are four elements present.

The first is that the matter is one of the administrative responsibility of the government, and I believe there is no doubt about that.

The next is that it is a matter of definite, urgent public importance, and I think that has been admitted by the statement which the Prime Minister has made.

The third and perhaps the most important element of them all is that of the urgency of debate upon which Your Honour, generally speaking, seeks advice from both sides of the house. It is to this point that the house leader addressed himself, namely that it would not be wise in his opinion and that of the government to adjourn the business of the house which is going to be under consideration shortly to discuss this matter.

That reference to urgency of debate is the basis upon which we on this side of the house differ completely from the house leader. The reasons are that when the ordinary opportunities provided by the rules of the house do not permit of the subject matter being brought up early enough, then there is urgency of debate. It is all right for the Prime Minister and the house leader to say that the estimates of the Department of Labour will be called, but for the last two weeks we have been asking that these estimates be called and have received no satisfactory reply to that request. If our request had been complied with earlier perhaps there would have been an opportunity of discussing some of these matters, but we were not given that opportunity.

Another thing we ask is that we be given the opportunity of discussing the matter on an amendment to the motion to go into supply. We are told that Monday is a private members' day and that therefore we cannot discuss this matter on Monday. Why should we have to wait until Thursday, when even then we do not know whether some other matter of importance will come to the attention of the government and it may decide then not to call the estimates of the Department of Labour.

It is not the statement by the house leader that this will be done on Thursday that determines the urgency of the debate. It is the question which is before the house, namely the statement made by the Minister of Labour yesterday. It is no answer for the house leader and those who sit on the other side of the house to say that we had an opportunity of discussing this last night. That is not so. There was no opportunity of discussing this last night—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member was not here. The discussion lasted for three quarters of an hour.

Mr. Chevrier: —because when there is an opportunity for discussing a matter, I presume that means there is a responsibility on the other side to at least reply to some of the statements made. There was no opportunity to discuss it in that sense because the Deputy Speaker determined that it was a matter which should not be discussed within the rules of the house, and perhaps he was right.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I invite the hon. member to read the discussion commencing at page 2600 and following of yesterday's Hansard.

Mr. Chevrier: I have read the debate very carefully and there is no doubt in my mind, I say with respect to the Prime Minister, that there was not last night an opportunity of discussion afforded within the meaning of the words "urgency of debate" as is meant under the rules.

The fourth criteria that determines this matter is that of opportunity. There will be no opportunity to deal with this matter before Thursday at the earliest, if one accepts the statement made by the house leader. In view of the importance of this question and in view of the uneasiness and anxiety in the country because of the application of this criteria, I submit with deference that we should now be given the opportunity we seek and that the motion should be accepted so that we may discuss these matters of urgent public importance.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in this respect.

Mr. Speaker: I shall be glad to hear from the hon. member on this point if he thinks it is necessary after I have concluded. One difficulty—and it is one to which the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) could perhaps address himself—is the possibility that if the motion is permitted it might anticipate a matter which has been previously appointed for consideration by the house. I do not see that this matter has been appointed for consideration.

The subject matter of the request, namely "the inadequate and restrictive character of the criteria to be used as the basis of the designation of depressed areas" arises out of the statement of policy made yesterday by the Minister of Labour, which is found at page 2569 of Hansard. I take it that it was purely a statement of government policy, an administrative decision, and I do not see that it necessarily comes before the house for debate under any of the orders now on the order paper. It is true that it might be discussed on the labour estimates.

With respect to the suggestion that it could have been or was discussed last night, I do not accept that proposition because it is agreed that if it had been discussed last night the discussion would have been out of order, and I do not think opportunity for debate which would be out of order can be considered opportunity for debate.

The matter having arisen yesterday and it being a matter of national significance and importance, it seems to me that as far as I have gone with the assistance which I have had from hon. members, and for which I thank them, if this is not a matter which has been appointed for debate so that we would be anticipating a debate which will necessarily occur in the course of this session, I might very well accept the proposition.

If the hon. member for Essex East wishes to say anything on that point or if any other hon. member can assist me on that point, I would be glad to hear him now.

Mr. Chevrier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: In the absence of advice to the contrary I think I cannot consider that if this motion were permitted it would be anticipating a debate on the matter which the Leader of the Opposition wishes to have discussed. Therefore I feel I must put the request before the house in the terms of standing order 26, and so that all hon. members will understand it I shall read it in so far as it has not yet been read. Subsection 3 of section 26 reads:

> —Mr. Speaker, who, if he thinks it in order, and of urgent public importance, reads it out and asks whether the member has the leave of the house. If objection is taken, Mr. Speaker requests those members who support the motion to rise in their places and, if more than 20 members rise accordingly, Mr. Speaker calls upon the member who has asked for leave.

Accordingly I shall read the request which has been presented.

Mr. Churchill: May I just ask a question with regard to your earlier remarks, sir? I understood you to say that this matter has not been appointed for discussion in the house, but surely it is not the practice of the house to provide immediately an opportunity for a discussion of matters of urgent public importance. The statement of the Minister of Labour was made just yesterday afternoon, and it is not normal for the government, following a statement, to immediately name the period at which that statement may be taken up for debate. I think it is rather pressing things a little far and will establish a difficult precedent if, whenever an announcement of government policy is made in this house, someone from the government side must state when it will be available for debate.

I might draw your attention to the fact that this morning we had, I think, five statements, some of which concern government policy. Am I now obliged to name the date on which those will be taken up for debate? These concern the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Defence Production and the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. They are all important matters, and it would be extraordinarily awkward to have to immediately name the date and the hour when those matters would come up for consideration.

I suggest that we are in the same position here. The Minister of Labour made a statement yesterday declaring government policy, and I have now suggested that the opportunity for debating it will occur early next week. I doubt very much whether I should be called upon to do more than that. I think you could argue urgency of debate with regard to the other matters that were announced as government policy this morning, and we might then continue day after day, at the wish of the opposition debating those matters. Yet in the ordinary course of the organization of business there is always ample opportunity to debate important matters in the house. In this particular instance it is only a deferment of, say, 48 hours beyond what the opposition suggested as the time for debate. Therefore I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that further consideration might be given to this particular problem.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): May I follow up what the leader of the house has said by referring to May's Parliamentary Practice, 16th edition. This particular point is discussed at page 374, where we find the following:

> Matter must conform to general rules of order.

The text continues:

> Permission to move a motion under S.O. No. 9—

Which is the corresponding British order to our standing order:

> —has also been refused on the following grounds.

I refer to ground (c):

> That another occasion for raising the matter is provided for under practice and the standing orders.

Then illustrations are given, such as that it may be raised by way of complaint of a breach of privilege, or it may be raised under paragraph (ii):

> Arrangement of government business.

Therefore you have in May, where the rule being discussed is virtually the same as ours, the statement that the motion has been refused where the matter sought to be raised can be discussed on another occasion which would be provided for in practice under the standing order.

I said this was in support of the position of the leader of the house. He has pointed out that these matters of government policy which are announced from time to time can all be discussed on the estimates of the appropriate departments, and that is the normal way to do it, both under the practice and under the standing orders, because the estimates of the departments have to come before the committee and the matters may be discussed there.

As I understood the minister, he said that the estimates of the Department of Labour will be up for discussion next week—

Mr. Chevrier: Next Thursday.

Mr. Fulton: That is the appropriate time at which to discuss this matter. I submit to you on the basis of the authority of May that this motion should be declared out of order, since there is another occasion for raising the matter provided for under the practice and in the standing orders.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I say a brief word on the point to which the leader of the house has referred, and which was inadequately dealt with by the Minister of Justice. On the question of anticipation, I think one should seek to understand the authority under which this announcement of policy will be carried out. If the government chooses, this matter need not be discussed in this house in the future, because under the Income Tax Act the government now has the authority, subject to a decision of the governor in council, to proceed with this plan of double depreciation. Therefore, on the question of anticipation, nothing will be before the house unless the opposition seeks to raise the matter on the estimates of the Department of Labour, or in some other way. That is the situation. There is no question of anticipation of this matter in the sense envisaged by rule 26.

On the question of urgency, it is true that last night I did discuss this matter, but at the end of my time, when I was proceeding with my argument, which had only really begun, I was precluded from doing so by a ruling of the Chair that I was out of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member need not deal with that point, because I have no doubts in my mind that the discussion of last night is in no way an answer to the opportunity for debate which is now being sought. If he has anything further to add I should like to hear him.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was simply going to point out that the reason I mentioned what took place last night is that there were certain questions put to the government which dealt with this matter of anticipation and to which it has not replied. There is no way by which we could get answers if the government did not choose to bring before the house the legislative authority under which it has acted. It has that authority now. Therefore the question of anticipation does not really arise.

Hon. W. J. Browne (Solicitor General): In his previous statement to the one he just made, the hon. member who just sat down gave the answer to that. He said "unless the opposition seek to raise the matter in a discussion of the estimates of the Department of Labour". According to the leader of the house, they are to come up on Thursday, and that should satisfy him. But what I want to draw to your attention, sir, are two statements in particular which are to be found in Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition, at page 91. Paragraph 8 reads:

> Standing order 10 of the United Kingdom house, in force since 1882, also provides that a member may propose the adjournment of the house "for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent public importance".

This is similar to our own rule. Half way down the paragraph we find this:

> —the Speaker said: "I do not think that, under the standing order of 1882, a motion on a subject of this kind, having such a very wide scope, was ever contemplated. What I think was contemplated, was an occurrence of some sudden emergency, either in home or in foreign affairs."

This is a matter which has been under consideration for a long time; it can hardly be regarded as an emergency. Then, sir, I take you back to the preceding paragraph which says:

> In doubtful cases, the question of urgency and of importance are left for the house to decide, by giving or withholding its support.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): May I point out one thing in connection with the matter of urgency which has not yet been mentioned. This is a motion in connection with double depreciation under the Income Tax Act which, when implemented, is intended to attract industry into areas of surplus manpower. I feel it is quite obvious that industries are not going to move into these communities tomorrow, the next day or next week. This movement will take some time, so I cannot see how there is much urgency to debate this matter at this time.

Mr. Speaker: If I am correct in my understanding of the matter desired to be discussed, it is the method proposed by the government under which areas will become entitled to the benefits of double depreciation under the income tax regulations. Is that the significance of the matter? The matter to be discussed is the declared formula or criteria for determining what are depressed areas.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, will you oblige by reading the words of the motion?

Mr. Speaker: The proposed matter of urgent public importance is the inadequate and restrictive character of the criteria to be used as a basis for the designation of depressed areas.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): On that point, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that this motion hinges on what are referred to as government measures or criteria for the designation of depressed areas.

Mr. Speaker: The criteria to be used as a basis for the designation of depressed areas.

Mr. Starr: The motion in its present form deals with something which does not exist. The government has issued no criteria, devised no measures, to deal with depressed areas. There is no mention in the statement I made yesterday of depressed areas. I do not see anything in the statement that relates to that phrase or any similar phrase. My statement sets out very clearly that double depreciation for taxation purposes would be considered for industries establishing in areas where unemployment is a chronic problem.

Mr. Pearson: On that particular point, may I say it is quite true that the Minister of Labour in his announcement yesterday did say, as he has indicated, that the regulations were to deal with the selection of areas eligible for double depreciation under the program announced in the supplementary budget on December 20, 1960. What was that program announced in the supplementary budget of that date? The Minister of Finance said, in referring to these areas, as reported at page 1007 of Hansard for December 20, 1960:

> In some areas changing economic conditions have created a degree of chronic unemployment which requires special action.

An area which has such chronic unemployment as to require special treatment surely must be considered as a depressed area, and that is the meaning attached to it in our motion.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the force of what was said by the house leader, that merely because a matter of government policy is declared and there is no immediate opportunity for debating it, rule 26 must necessarily be invoked. As the house is aware, in my interpretation of rule 26 I have not seen very many matters which I considered warranted the use of the rule. This case, which has been discussed at considerable length this morning, seems to me to be a definite matter in that there was a declaration of criteria. If I understood the announcement of the Minister of Labour yesterday, it concerned criteria for determining what areas may come under certain tax provisions, which are still before the house for consideration, it is true. These criteria are said to be inadequate, insufficient or improper, and as they are the basis for action by the areas themselves at a time when there is unemployment, it seems to me I must accept the view that this is urgent.

I have not seen that there is necessarily any debate on this matter which will come before the house. It is true that it would be in order, I think, to raise the question of policy on the labour estimates, and perhaps it could be more completely discussed at that time. However, it does not seem to me that that would preclude the use of rule 26 at this time for an immediate discussion of the matter which would come before the house at a future date in the course of the discussion of the estimates, even though the co-operation of the government has been assured in the calling of the labour estimates for Thursday.

Mr. Churchill: May I interrupt just for one moment, Mr. Speaker? I regret having interrupted you, but does this resolution not fail because of a fatal weakness in its terms? The motion refers to the character of the criteria to be used as a basis for the designation of depressed areas. There was no mention whatever in the minister's statement of government policy for the designation of depressed areas. This is a different topic which the opposition is attempting to introduce. Consequently there is a fatal weakness in the motion which should make it invalid.

Mr. Speaker: Do I understand the minister's point to be that the statement made by the Minister of Labour yesterday did not relate to the matter which is sought to be discussed?

Mr. Churchill: That is my point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If I may refer to the statement of the Minister of Labour, which is to be found at page 2569 of Hansard for March 2, 1961, I find that he refers to areas in which there has been a substantial degree of unemployment over the years. Then he says:

> Areas which meet the following criteria may qualify under this program.

If I am not mistaken, that is the program for double depreciation under the budget proposals of the Minister of Finance. Then the Minister of Labour said:

> They are broken down into two categories; areas with a labour force of 10,000 and over—

And so on.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): With respect, sir, I never announced or foreshadowed any program that corresponds to this description. The Leader of the Opposition referred to the terms I used on December 20—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Shame.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —in relation to this proposal for double depreciation. The expression "depressed areas" never entered into this matter at all. Consistently certain members of the opposition have tried, in their questions in the house, to introduce this expression. They want to tag it on to somebody. It has never had relevancy to the government's proposals.

With great respect, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be highly out of order if you, in your place, were asked now to make an identification of the two subject matters, one that has been referred to in a government statement and one that has been used by the opposition. I do not believe it is proper under the rules of the house, if I may say so with great respect, to expect the Chair to make that identification. If hon. members seek to bring forward a motion and make it in order in relation to something that has come from the government by way of a statement, then they must not leave it to the Chair to make that identification. The identification must be made in the terms of the motion itself.

Look at the effect of this, Mr. Speaker. If you, in the chair, are asked to make this identification you are, in effect, being put by the opposition in a position of placing an interpretation on a statement of government policy, an interpretation that the government has consistently rejected.

Mr. Chevrier: Order. I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is speaking to a point of order?

Mr. Chevrier: I think this statement made by the Minister of Finance is entirely out of order. He has been lecturing you, Mr. Speaker, and telling you what you should do under these circumstances, and I object to that.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of Finance has been indicating that, as a consequence of putting this matter before the house, I am accepting the term "depressed area" and thereby giving the authority of the Chair to that. That is only an argument and one which I do not think I have to accept. I do not think there is a point of order there.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I make it quite clear, Mr. Speaker, that far from my thoughts was any intention of lecturing the Chair. I was seeking to put certain considerations before you, and to say that the Chair should not be put in the position of making an identification, which has been the object of the efforts of the opposition, which have been properly resisted by the government.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, this is an attempt by the Minister of Finance to create a distinction between the motion which has been made and the statement made by the Minister of Labour. I submit with all due deference, sir, that there is none. There is only one difference; the Leader of the Opposition used the term "depressed areas" and the Minister of Labour stated "areas of chronic unemployment". Are we going to discuss the difference between the two when there is a substantive motion before the Chair? This is a technical objection taken by the Minister of Finance which should be dealt with on its merits, a technical objection which tries to divert the attention of the house from a matter of urgent public importance.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Minister of Finance has a point, and I would like to be sure of what will be debated if this matter is proceeded with. The wording is "inadequate and restrictive character of criteria to be used as a basis for the designation of depressed areas". I take it from what has been said—and the Leader of the Opposition who asked for leave will be able to clear up this matter so there is a definite matter before the house —that by "the designation of depressed areas" he refers to the designations under the statement made by the Minister of Labour yesterday. If I am not correct in that the whole basis of my thinking on this matter will have to be revised. I assume that what he is asking the house to discuss is the criteria to be used as a basis for the designation of what the Minister of Labour referred to yesterday as areas eligible for double depreciation under the program announced in the supplementary budget of December 20, 1960. Is that right?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, your assumption is quite correct. I used the expression "depressed areas" in relation to the minister's statement yesterday that these are areas which would be eligible for double depreciation under the program announced in the supplementary budget of December 20, 1960. The minister went on then to explain his own interpretation of these areas by referring to them as areas where there has been a substantial degree of continued unemployment over the years. He laid down certain criteria to cover that definition.

Then, Mr. Speaker, the budget speech of December 20, by the Minister of Finance, which he seemed to have repudiated this morning, refers to these areas as areas where economic conditions have created a degree of chronic unemployment which requires special action. This was said by the Minister of Finance. These areas that are covered by that definition are depressed areas, and we are talking about depressed areas within the meaning of this statement made by a representative of the government.

Mr. Speaker: I have taken undue time of the house, I am afraid, in making up my mind about this, but it is partly due to the wording of the request itself. I have no hesitation in saying that as I understood it, and as it has been explained now, it relates solely to the criteria announced by the Minister of Labour yesterday, and in processing this matter for consideration of the house I am not in any sense adopting the expression "depressed areas" or giving any significance to it. I put the matter before the house on the clear understanding that what will be debated will only be the criteria announced in the minister's statement yesterday.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, may I intervene again. I appreciate your explanation in regard to the words stated by the Leader of the Opposition, and that you are not interpreting them as expressed in the motion before us; but unfortunately, sir, this motion goes down in the Journals and proceedings of the House of Commons and stands there in exactly the wording which has been put forward by the Leader of the Opposition, without any necessary explanation following thereto. This will stand there as a motion accepted by the house using words which, as I and others have mentioned, are completely not in accordance with the statement made by the Minister of Labour yesterday. This raises an entirely new subject.

Mr. Speaker: I think there is some significance in that point. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition would be willing to use the words of the Minister of Labour, "areas eligible for double depreciation under the program announced in the supplementary estimates", instead of "depressed areas"; if so, it would remove the objection which has been made.

Mr. John Drysdale (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, with respect I do not think it is the function of the Speaker to bring into order an amendment that is out of order by making a suitable suggestion. I would also draw to your attention the fact that when this announcement was made yesterday and members of the opposition spoke in regard to the matter, not one of them used the words "depressed area" or referred to the areas as such. I would therefore suggest that by their very comments at that time they are estopped from bringing it before the house now. I think it is most invidious to suggest that after drafting a very loose, rambling reference they can ask you, sir, to bring it into order.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, we on this side have confidence in you as to what should or should not appear in the Journals of the house. I do not think you need any advice from government or opposition spokesmen on that score.

Your suggestion, Mr. Speaker, to bring the wording technically and literally in accordance with the words used by the Minister of Labour yesterday is, of course, quite agreeable to me as the mover of this motion, and the motion can be changed in that way. But, Mr. Speaker, I must of course reserve the right, in the discussion of this matter, to refer to these areas as what I think they are, areas of chronic unemployment over the years and therefore depressed areas.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition, is of course, free to use the language he likes in debate, but I do not want this matter to come before the house in any air of uncertainty. Therefore I shall not put the matter unless it is worded to correspond with the words used by the Minister of Labour. There is no question in my mind as to what the Leader of the Opposition is asking the house to do. The words I have suggested are "areas eligible for double depreciation under the program announced by the supplementary budget of December 20, 1960". I take it the Leader of the Opposition is prepared to accept those words.

I have heard the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond, but as the matter has not yet been put before the house it is quite open to the member who proposes it, and to the Chair, to accept a change. Accordingly I read out the following request—

Mr. Drysdale: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, before you put the motion—

Mr. Speaker: —of the Leader of the Opposition, that he be given leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the inadequate and restrictive character of the criteria to be used as a basis for the designation of areas eligible for double depreciation under the program announced in the supplementary budget of December 20, 1960.

Is the house prepared to grant the hon. member leave?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, an issue has now been raised which goes beyond the terms of this present motion. It concerns the authority of the Chair, without any leave from the house, to accept an amendment of a motion that has been introduced.

What is being proposed by you, Mr. Speaker, as I understand your remarks, is that the Speaker has authority, with the leave of the mover of the motion, to amend the motion. With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, I submit that no such authority is reposed, under our rules and practice, in the Speaker of the house. Once this amendment has been presented to the house and read—and it was read—it is then in the custody of the house. While the house, by unanimous consent, can permit an amendment, the only other way an amendment can be disposed of, if it is in order, is by decision of the house on vote.

With great respect, Mr. Speaker, I say that the course which you proposed, if I correctly understood it, is one that goes beyond the authority which the house has conferred upon the Chair. This motion, having been introduced in the form which the mover of the motion chose, has been presented to you and you have presented it to the house. The motion is then in the custody of the house and cannot be amended in the way you propose, simply by direction of the Chair with the leave of the mover.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, on this point—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I need not hear the Leader of the Opposition on the point, because I am satisfied the point is not well taken. There is no motion before the house. If the Minister of Finance will recall what took place, the Leader of the Opposition rose and asked for leave to make a motion for the adjournment of the house, under standing order 26. He asked for leave, and that is all that the house has before it so far. It does not even have that request for leave before it, because I have not yet read it from the Chair.

It was proposed in terms of a written request which I have before me, and prior to dealing with the request, as I have to deal with it under standing order 26, I heard argument as to whether the rule was satisfied. In my view the rule was satisfied, except that the wording of the request which was proposed lent itself to some misinterpretation. I therefore propose to reject the statement which the Leader of the Opposition has introduced and to go no further on my own initiative. If the Leader of the Opposition wishes to proceed from there, he is at liberty to do so.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I hope the Leader of the Opposition realizes the significance of what I have said. It is that I do not accept the statement in the wording in which he has submitted it, but as I have indicated to him, I am prepared to accept it in the terms which I took the liberty of suggesting would be sufficient to clarify the matter before the house.

Mr. Pearson: Again, Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to you for having brought this discussion on the point of order to an end, and for having accepted this motion in the terms in which you have now put it forward to the house.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition will have to put it forward in the terms which I suggested, before it can be moved.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I now ask leave, in accordance with your suggestion, to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the inadequate and restrictive character of the criteria to be used as a basis for the designation of areas eligible for double depreciation under the program announced in the supplementary budget of December 20, 1960.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition asks for leave to move the adjournment of the house, under standing order 26, for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the inadequate and restrictive character of the criteria to be used as a basis for the designation of areas eligible for double depreciation under the program announced in the supplementary budget of December 20, 1960.

Has the hon. member leave to make his motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The rule is satisfied. Mr. Pearson, seconded by Mr. Chevrier, moves the adjournment of the house.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: One o'clock.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this motion we have made to adjourn the house was put forward for the purpose of dealing with a matter which is, we think, not only of very great importance but also of immediate urgency because it deals with a proposal put forward by the government in the hope that it will alleviate the unemployment situation in certain areas. We all know the seriousness of that situation generally, but it is of particular seriousness in particular areas. Presumably, to deal with that aspect of the situation, the government brought forward yesterday certain regulations laying down criteria to be used—and I am quoting from the motion—as a basis for the designation of areas eligible for double depreciation under the proposals of the budget of December 20.

When the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) introduced these resolutions yesterday he stated that these areas eligible for double depreciation under that program would be areas where there had been a substantial degree of continued unemployment over the years, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in his budget statement of December 20 referred to those areas as areas of chronic unemployment. The budget about which the Minister of Finance was speaking when he made that statement was that which included the policy referred to by the Minister of Labour yesterday in announcing these regulations and putting forward these proposals.

We think it is quite reasonable to refer to those areas not only as areas of chronic unemployment, as the government has done, but as depressed areas. An area of chronic unemployment within the meaning of the terms used by the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Finance is, in our view, a depressed area. We do not see why there should be any squeamishness attached to the use of this expression. It is a word commonly used to characterize certain unfortunate areas. It has been used in the hearings before the Senate committee on manpower and unemployment. Indeed, it was used in the statement made before that committee by Professor Judek of the University of Ottawa on February 2. Professor Judek is no doubt well known to the Minister of Labour and, in fact, I believe his services have been used by the Department of Labour. In his own report to that committee the professor uses as a heading to one of his subparagraphs the phrase "full employment and depressed areas". So we think it is not improper to use that expression.

But it is not the expression itself that matters or how we designate these areas; it is what we are going to do in order to take them out of this condition of employment depression. For that purpose the government, at long last, yesterday produced some regulations. The purpose of these regulations and the policy behind them were announced as far back as December 20, 1960 when the Minister of Finance in that statement to which I have already referred had this to say as reported on page 1007 of Hansard:

> As a powerful incentive—

I say at once that we do not think these regulations constitute a very powerful incentive. But the minister said:

> As a powerful incentive to these ends—

The ends mentioned were the encouragement of initiative and enterprise and employment.

> —I am pleased to announce measures to fulfil three major purposes: first, to assist new industries in areas where there is a substantial degree of continued unemployment over the years; second, to aid the development of new products from processing operations not hitherto carried on in Canada; and, third, to encourage the production of new types of goods. Double depreciation will, at the option of the taxpayer, be allowed in respect of capital expenditures incurred in the first year for these purposes but may be applied in any of the first three years.

Then the hon. gentleman went on, and these are the words I have already referred to:

> In some areas changing economic conditions have created a degree of chronic unemployment which requires special action.

Presumably the regulations introduced into the house yesterday by the Minister of Labour are designed to constitute that special action. It may be special, but it is not likely to be effective in the light of the problem with which it is meant to deal. Furthermore, at any time since December 20, or indeed before that date, this action could have been taken by the government. I know that the Minister of Finance, when we urged the designation of these areas and when we urged that action of this kind should be taken, replied by saying: we have to deal with the budget resolutions first. He abandoned that position last evening when he said as reported on page 2611 of Hansard:

> —the matter is one for executive action within the terms of the existing legislation.

If that means anything at all it means that this kind of action could have been taken as executive action at any time since December 20 last by the government. If the government on December 20 or even previously, had an appreciation of the seriousness of the situation, as we on this side have had, surely it would have taken that action before now.

We did our best at that time to prod the government into action. We asked question after question as to when these areas were to be designated, how they were to be designated and which minister was to be responsible for implementing the policy in the statement of the Minister of Finance on December 20.

We asked if the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) was to be responsible and we could not get an answer. We asked if the Minister of Labour was to be responsible and we could not get an answer. We then asked if the Minister of Finance was to be responsible and we could not get an answer. I think it was on Tuesday of this week when we asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and that hon. gentleman said, finally, that the Minister of Labour would be responsible for this matter and yesterday the regulations themselves were introduced and put on Hansard by the minister.

This kind of laboured, indecisive and late action is in startling contrast to that which has been taken quickly, decisively and effectively in Washington by the new president of the United States. This could have been done by the government at any time within the last three years. It was done in Washington within a few weeks of the accession to office of the new president who almost at once submitted to congress a measure not only dealing with general principles of assistance to depressed areas but designating 99 areas of the United States as depressed areas, taking the responsibility for them and asking congress to deal with them in legislative terms.

That is how action could have been taken in this country under existing legislation at any time since this serious unemployment problem confronted us. However, yesterday we did get the regulations. It is our contention that the regulations as they were put forward by the minister are inadequate and indefinite. To the extent that we can understand them they seem in some cases to be entirely unworkable and they are, in the light of the problem that faces the needy areas, surely quite unsatisfactory. They apply double depreciation to the specified areas established by the criteria laid down, but double depreciation is to be applied for one year and one year only. That year is to begin from any one of the first three years when the industry moves in.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what kind of incentive is that for an industry to move into an area which is already depressed? The government proposes to extend double depreciation for one year only. But the regulations as we have them before us are not likely to accomplish the purpose that I know the minister has in mind in putting them forward. They appear in dramatic contrast to the stand that this party has taken more than once in the last three years that this weapon of tax depreciation, if it is to be used against unemployment, should be used vigorously, quickly and decisively and that its application should be more comprehensive than is indicated in the proposal introduced yesterday and now before us.

Before leaving the regulations themselves let me say that we expect during the course of the afternoon to hear from the Minister of Labour what the regulations actually mean in terms of application. We hope that the hon. gentleman will be able to clear up some of these difficulties of uncertainty that have already begun to make themselves felt throughout the country and to remove at least some of the disappointment that is being experienced concerning the inadequacy and ineffectiveness of these regulations.

Not only are the regulations inadequate but the procedure for their application to accomplish the purpose the government presumably has in mind is very difficult to understand and surely it represents a further abdication of responsibility by this government.

Who takes the initiative in this matter? Who starts the ball rolling, even this ball? It is not the federal government which does so, but the municipalities; they take the initiative. "Do it yourself," says the government to the municipalities. "If you feel you are a depressed area, tell us you think you are a depressed area and then we will see whether you fall under the criteria which we have laid down in the regulations. Ask us to investigate," says the government.

The government has this responsibility now. As I said a few moments ago, the government at any time in the last three years could have taken the initiative by order in council in accordance with the criteria which it has laid down in designating depressed areas and taking the necessary action to get them out of that category of depressed areas. The government has not done that. So far as we know, no order in council has been passed.

We pressed the Minister of Finance yesterday to find out whether any orders in council had already been passed under the income tax legislation which is now in effect. We have the right to deduce from the minister's silence that no action of any kind has been taken. We ask the minister now, how is action going to be taken under these regulations? Is there going to be a general order in council covering all applications which would simplify matters or is there to be required a separate order in council for every municipal request for assistance of this nature which has been found acceptable under these regulations?

We would like to get an answer from the government to that very important question and I am sure the municipalities would like to know that at once. That is one of the reasons we have pressed for discussion of this matter this afternoon.

In explaining these regulations yesterday, as reported at page 2569 of Hansard, the Minister of Labour had this to say:

> Hon. members of this house will recall that one objective of this program is to assist new industries in areas where there has been a substantial degree of continued unemployment over the years.

We will find out in a minute what "over the years" means and how this will limit the applications of some of the areas of this country which need help most. The minister continued:

> Areas which meet the following criteria may qualify under this program.

Presumably if an area does not meet these criteria it cannot qualify under this program. The minister then proceeded to set out the criteria. He said:

> They are broken down into two categories; areas with a labour force of 10,000 and over, and areas with a labour force of less than 10,000. In those areas where the labour force is 10,000 and over the criteria are first, the area must have been classified by the Department of Labour in a surplus labour market category—

A surplus labour market category is a category that has already been established over the years by the Department of Labour and presumably that would be the category that would be used now. The minister continued:

> —the area must have been classified by the Department of Labour in a surplus labour market category for 75 per cent or more of the 48 summer months—

Those are months when unemployment is lowest. I continue:

> —from May to October, 1953-1960. Second, industrial employment must have declined over the period 1953-1960.

That is presumably over a period of eight summers.

Then, he went on:

> Areas with a labour force of less than 10,000 must have been classified by the Department of Labour as in a surplus labour market category—

Again, we know what that means.

> —for 50 per cent or more of the 48 summer months May to October, 1953-1960.

It is interesting to note the distinction made in these words. The words used are not:

> Second, industrial employment conditions must have declined over the period 1953-1960.

That is what was stated to be necessary in the case of areas of 10,000 and over. The words used here are:

> Second, industrial employment conditions must have generally deteriorated over the years.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Let me interpret in more specific terms and in accordance with the practice of the Department of Labour, Mr. Speaker, what these words apparently mean. First, the ratio of applications for employment on file with the national employment service to be paid workers including those looking for work must have exceeded 7 per cent for 24 or more summer months from May to October, 1953-1960. I ask the minister to inform the house how the Department of Labour is going to calculate that ratio in relation to areas below the 10,000 population? How is the Department of Labour going to do that? Is there any method now by which that can be done under the procedures already followed by the Department of Labour?

I call attention also to the fact—and it was mentioned last night by my hon. friend from Essex East—that the calculation is presumably to be made in relation to the applications for employment on file in the national employment service. This is a calculation that has been rejected by the government in relation to unemployment discussions in this house. They will have none of it. The bureau of statistics random sampling is to be the calculation accepted, and we in this house have accepted it as the basis of our discussion of unemployment and we use it as the statistical evidence of unemployment. But it is not used in these regulations. For some reason or other the government goes back to that calculation which it had rejected and uses now the applications for employment on file with the national employment service.

The second calculation is that industrial employment must have generally deteriorated over the years. I ask the minister once again what does he mean by that? How is that calculation to be applied to municipalities under 10,000 and then, again, in the areas of 10,000 or more? The principles enunciated by the minister seem to mean that the ratio of applications for employment on file with the national employment service to be paid workers including those looking for work must have exceeded, according to the Department of Labour, (a) 6 per cent in industrial areas of 25,000 or more for 36 or more months from May to October, 1953-60; or (b) 7 per cent in areas below 25,000 and above 10,000 for 36 or more months from May to October, 1953-60, and industrial employment must have declined over the period 1953-1960.

Let us take the latter criterion first. To qualify for this kind of help, inadequate though it will be, in depressed areas as an incentive to getting new industries in those areas, industrial employment must have declined over the period 1953-60.

When the minister was putting these regulations forward yesterday he gave two examples of communities which in his opinion would qualify under the regulations. He mentioned Elliot Lake and Springhill, Nova Scotia. I should like him to explain to the house how under this criterion Elliot Lake could possibly qualify for this kind of assistance, although goodness knows no community in Canada, as an area of depressed conditions and unemployment, needs more assistance than Elliot Lake does at this time. Elliot Lake did not exist as a community in 1953, and yet to qualify for help Elliot Lake will have to prove that industrial employment declined during the period 1953-60. It is going to be very hard to prove decline from zero, because there was no employment in Elliot Lake in 1953.

I ask the minister how Springhill qualifies under these regulations when the disasters which have attacked Springhill in recent years began, not in 1953 but in 1956? I remember, also, Mr. Speaker, that in the application of this criterion the government has taken a period of eight summers. Four of those were good summers of high employment and prosperous conditions. They took four peak summers and four not so good. If they are to use the years after 1956, they have to qualify by averaging out the employment in those earlier years with the years of recession. I ask the minister how he is going to reconcile that kind of criterion with communities like Elliot Lake and Springhill?

These preliminary observations show how inadequate, how ineffective and how indecisive these regulations are. They have all the earmarks of something having been thrown together in a hurry because something had to be produced in this house. After three and half years of unemployment conditions and of recession, the government finally comes to this house and says, yes, we will do something about the depressed areas; we will do something by regulations that are now introduced this week, in March 1961. They are regulations which are entirely inadequate to meet the problem before us and which indeed are very difficult for any person to understand, let alone the municipalities which are given the responsibility of initiating action, a responsibility which should be that of this government.

Mr. Brunsden: Will the Leader of the Opposition permit a question?

Mr. Pearson: Yes.

Mr. Brunsden: He has referred to Elliot Lake. Will he admit that the Elliot Lake program was initiated by the government of which he was a member?

Mr. Pearson: Indeed, I will admit it, Mr. Speaker, and I am glad the hon. member has reminded me of it. He has brought the subject up and I will be glad to deal with it.

Mr. Brunsden: May I finish my question?

Mr. Pearson: Yes.

Mr. Brunsden: Will he admit that part of the Elliot Lake trouble today is owing to the fact that there was not a definite long term contract for the marketing of uranium?

Mr. Pearson: I would be glad to explain that to my hon. friend. Elliot Lake as a community originated because of the initiative and enterprise of the preceding government in working out a contract with the United States for five years, a contract which was criticized in this house by the opposition of that day because it covered too long a period.

An hon. Member: For five years.

Mr. Pearson: For five years, and the leader of the opposition of those days criticized us because we were tying up our uranium for such a long period. I recall that very well, and I have Mr. Drew's observation very clearly in my mind.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member who initiated the questions and the hon. member in replying are getting away from the point of the matter in debate. It is true that the present condition of Elliot Lake is in issue, but not the negotiation of the uranium contract and subsequent events.

Mr. Pearson: Surely if the question is in order, Mr. Speaker, you will permit me to answer it. The only thing I wish to say to my hon. friend is that the responsibility for the situation in Elliot Lake today rests entirely on the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must point out to the Leader of the Opposition that the question really led away from the proper subject of debate. It was not properly in order. Because the question was asked I have allowed the Leader of the Opposition a reasonable time to deal with it, but it would not be in order to go further into the matter.

Mr. Brunsden: On a point of order may I say this. The Leader of the Opposition mentioned Elliot Lake as a specific example. I felt I had a perfect right to ask a question with respect to the initiation of that community.

Mr. Speaker: It is true that Elliot Lake has a connection with the matter under discussion, namely the qualification of areas for double depreciation. That is the context in which it is relevant to the discussion to mention Elliot Lake.

Mr. Pearson: Would it be permissible to discuss the question of why Elliot Lake is a depressed area today and is in need of this assistance?

Mr. Speaker: I would think not; that is why I rose.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Over the past number of years, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) has been given a certain modicum of respect and admiration because of his geniality and his obvious sincerity in dealing with the matters that come under his department. I am afraid there will be a detraction from that stature to which he rose by reason of the fact he has obviously become a pawn of the cabinet in the game of trying to mislead—

Mr. Speaker: Order; the hon. member's argument is directed entirely to the person of the minister and not to the subject under consideration. The geniality of the minister is not in issue.

Mr. Howard: I was attempting to lead into a discussion of the responsibility of the government and the responsibility of the Department of Labour. Inasmuch as he is the minister, genial though he may be, who introduced this particular item yesterday, I felt it was necessary to relate the functions of the department and the minister's role in the cabinet to the cabinet as a whole. Over the past few years we have seen an increase in the role the Department of Labour is apparently playing in economic matters. This department was given increased authority and was supposed to be a new powerhouse in so far as the economy was concerned. The announcement made yesterday, I think, was an indication of the inability of the Department of Labour to meet this increased responsibility that has fallen upon its shoulders. I am of the opinion that there is practically no one in the department who is able to assess the effect of all the forces upon the economy and come up with any sensible approach to these problems. The announcement made yesterday in connection with this double depreciation factor is an indication of this.

The director of economics and research, I believe it is, of the Department of Labour, Mr. Dymond, appeared before the Senate committee on manpower and employment. He presented a well worded brief dealing with the economy of the nation. However, he made no conclusions, or no recommendations and the brief was not of an analytical nature. Almost any grade 12 high school student could have written this type of brief about the economy.

The announcement concerning this double depreciation that will be allowed indicates also that we have a government that has a great love of the past but relatively little understanding of what might take place in the future. The setting of the period 1953-60 as the base period for determining whether or not an area will be eligible for double depreciation may be quite all right, but there is not one iota of sense in forgetting about the growth and expansion factors in the economy or those people who will be in the working force of our nation in 1961, 1962, 1963, and later years.

I feel that it is extremely unfortunate that the government has brought this matter forward in this form. It is extremely unfortunate for the areas that might be involved, and for the economy as a whole. It is an indication I believe of insufficient concern—I will not say lack of concern—or insufficient knowledge of the factors at play in the economy. It is an indication of insufficient concern for the welfare of the working force of the nation in those areas to which this double depreciation system may apply. The result of this provision will be to place those few areas in which it might apply in a sort of economic strait-jacket. I do not believe any straight statistical formula can be devised which would enable one to say: if you meet this test you may get some assistance; if you do not meet it, then you will not. I think it is unfair and discriminatory in that it seems to apply a mechanical and arbitrary test to depressed areas which did not become depressed areas as a result of any mechanical or arbitrary methods in the first place.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) has dealt with the question of the government's selection of the months over the past eight years in which employment was high. I should like, then, only to mention it briefly in passing in order to emphasize that the months of June, July, August and September, the four months referred to, are the ones in which we have the lowest number of unemployed. What the minister is saying is that the government feels it will assist those areas which meet these tests that are based on a period when unemployment was the lowest, and it was only during the last four of those years that a high degree of unemployment actually emerged. With respect to some areas, the minister is saying that the four last years have to meet the test, and I think he is a little closer to the truth in that test because those were the years during which this government was in office. I am not implying that the Liberals were any better.

In any event the minister is saying, in effect, that this proposal which purports to be a solution to the problem is repealed before it is enacted because it will not matter that much, the snap of a finger, in many places. As a matter of fact, the statistical requirement is coupled with a demand that there be a general decline in employment over the years. This assumption is entirely contrary to what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) said during the budget debate last year. He told us then that the problem of unemployment was solved. When we question them about unemployment, the answer which we regularly receive from this government, because they have not the intestinal courage to face up to the facts, is that the number of those employed has risen. We are told that there has been a regular increase in the number of people employed. If this is the case, then why tie these statistical criteria to a decline in employment in these particular areas? Either the hon. gentlemen were not being forthright in the years past and in the months past when they said there was an increase in the number employed—this was the answer to those who were accused of harping and carping about the number of unemployed—or else the indication in this plan that there must be a decline is not going to be an effective test at all.

In my opinion, this is just another mess of Tory garbage which means nothing. This announcement is designed to hoodwink the workers of this nation into thinking that this government has finally, after four years, come up with a solution to the problem of unemployment. Here is a government which has said over the past three or four years that there was no unemployment problem, but now it has finally come up with a solution to this problem. When the workers of this nation study the proposal, they will find there is nothing in it; it will prove to be just as empty as are the promises this government made before it got into office.

The only practical way in which this question of depressed or chronic unemployment areas can be dealt with is by making an assessment of the essential causes of the unemployment in these areas. This must be done before anything positive can take place. We must make a detailed examination to find out the original causes, because there are a variety of causes in different parts of the country. In one area the unemployment may result from one thing and in another it may result from something else. There are a variety of factors responsible for this increasingly difficult situation.

The plan announced by the minister does not take into account the fact that unemployment is caused by different factors. His announcement suggests that Canada is equal in so far as concerns its chronic unemployment areas. Each area in Canada must meet the same set of circumstances before it can qualify for relief from its distressed condition. The government in its announcement has not taken into account any of these varying factors and the plan is only to be instituted for an interim period of time.

Has any thought been given to technological changes? Is this fact reflected in the statement made by the minister? Displaced workers who require new skills in order to secure employment have not been considered. Has any consideration been given to the decline of industry in certain areas? Is that something which should be taken into the picture? Some areas have experienced migration of industry because of a disappearance of resources, transportation difficulties and other similar changes. As reflected by the announcement of the minister, no account has been taken in this regard. Certainly there has been a depletion or exhaustion of certain natural resources in some areas, and this situation should be considered in order to arrive at equitable relief. Has any consideration been given to these various conditions as reflected in the minister's announcement? No, Mr. Speaker, no consideration has been given. Has the government considered the change in imports and exportations and the effect these changes have upon certain areas? This again is not reflected in the statement of the minister. Has any consideration been given by the government to the lay-offs that have taken place in the last year? No, this has not been taken into account. We have in this country certain areas that rely on the establishment of one industry, such as the oil industry, the steel industry, or in my own area of Kitimat, the aluminum industry. Has any account been taken of the situation that exists in this regard? No account has been taken of these factors at all. Has any consideration been given to population shifts, higher wages, social capital, decline in revenue, the existence or non-existence of local community facilities such as roads, streets, electricity, sewage and water facilities? The minister's statement does not reflect any consideration in this regard. Has the effect of the government's fumble bumble fiscal policy been taken into account? No, Mr. Speaker, it has not.

These items I have enumerated represent basic causes for the existence of the many depressed areas. In his statement the minister is proposing to disregard all of the factors. He says in effect: let us come up with a formula that will sound nice and read well in the newspapers and hope it will be acceptable to the country before it finds out that we have hoodwinked it, and before it finds out that we do not have much concern for the difficulties which exist.

The economic decay that has existed in some communities as a result of chronic unemployment will certainly not lead to the attraction of industry to those communities regardless of the double depreciation of which the minister speaks. This is a malignant social sickness that exists in some areas of chronic unemployment resulting from the factors I have mentioned. Some industries will not locate in areas regardless of the chronic unemployment and regardless of the incentive of a depreciation nature put forward on behalf of the government. Industry will always look for a community or area in the light of existing facilities such as transportation, communication, closeness to markets and natural resources, living and social conditions, roads, bridges, electricity, sewerage systems and the like. Those are the factors which influence the location of industry rather than this double-talk about double depreciation. The double depreciation will have much less ininfluence on the location of industry than will the existence of the facilities I have outlined.

This announcement is a great disappointment which has been foisted upon parliament and the people of Canada. Apart from the fact that his department is obviously unable to cope with the economic situation, and apart from the fact that it may help in some small way, this stingy policy of the Minister of Finance is a great disappointment. Double depreciation on a set formula varying only as between 75 per cent and 50 per cent in regard to the over-10,000 population areas and under-10,000 population areas is based on the assumption that every depressed area in Canada is equal in so far as concerns the conditions resulting in chronic depression, but this is not a fair approach. It is true that these areas are equal in so far as the depression is concerned, but it is not true that they are equal in so far as the cause of the depression are concerned except for the fact that the people in the areas are living under a Conservative government.

Mr. Speakman: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Howard: I will not permit a question at the moment in view of the shortage of time. If the hon. member will wait until I have finished my remarks I shall be pleased to listen to his questions, provided he agrees not to distort my answers in the way he usually does.

An hon. Member: You cannot take it.

Mr. Howard: We are getting side comments from my divorce partner down at the end, Mr. Speaker. He is from an area falling perhaps in this category and he of all people should be concerned with its problem. My hon. friend from Cape Breton should also be concerned in regard to these areas of depression.

Mr. MacInnis: I will have a question to ask when you are finished.

Mr. Howard: It is obvious that my friend from Cape Breton has only questions and no answers.

Mr. Brunsden: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member referred to my colleague as his divorce partner. His divorce partner is his own party.

Mr. Howard: I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that I have more independence in my party than the hon. member has in his. We do not operate in any political strait-jacket as do the Tories. Mr. Speaker, these interjections are obviously contrary to the rules and are leading me away from the point I was dealing with.

Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, in order to deal with this question we must have a full and complete investigation in regard to the various areas which are depressed. An announcement such as that which the Minister of Labour made yesterday will have relatively little effect on this problem. Surely there exist somewhere in a government agency or in the Department of Labour itself, individuals who are capable of dealing with this question. We must have an assessment of the causes of unemployment which lead to the chronic depressed areas. We need an assessment and investigation of the causes for these areas becoming chronic depressed areas. We must find an answer based on the elements of the unemployment, not an answer directed to creating incentive. The second suggestion I would make, and we have been advocating this for many years, is the creation of a national development council with money and authority at its disposal which could base its actions upon the results of inquiries, which are necessary in order to improve the situation.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order. As I understand the motion now before us, it is to discuss, in the words of the opposition, the inadequate and restrictive character of the criteria to be used as a basis for the designation of certain areas. It does not follow along the lines that the hon. member is now pursuing, advocating some other method of dealing with problems in the country. The debate should be restricted to criticizing, if necessary, the criteria that have been proposed and suggesting alternative criteria. It should not go any further than that.

Mr. Howard: Perhaps I may speak on the point of order before you deal with it, Mr. Speaker. Those of us in the C.C.F. party are by past practice and guidance inclined to think in positive terms rather than in negative terms. So we must then look toward alternate systems.

The criterion that is established is a statistical one. The criteria that should be established should perhaps be partially statistical, but should also reflect these other factors. The criteria should be, government policy dealing with the question of lending money, grants to local authorities to improve their facilities, loans to industry, transporting workers from one area to another, acquiring sites and the establishment of crown corporations if necessary.

These are alternative criteria for dealing with the question of chronic unemployment, and there should be an announcement of government policy on this important matter.

Mr. Churchill: They are not alternative criteria; they are alternative methods.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The subject of debate is really much narrower than the hon. member for Skeena is now defining. The point of order having been taken, I give the hon. member my opinion that it is limited to the basis for the designation of areas which are eligible for certain tax treatment; that is, the criterion by which those areas may be ascertained or named.

It does not include the remedies for unemployment in those areas or anything of that kind, but only the method by which the areas which are to receive this special treatment may be ascertained. In discussing the national productivity council, which was a very limited diversion, on his part the hon. member was entering some outside field. I did not consider it worthy of intervention; but since the point has been taken, I have defined the limit, as I see the debate.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I may be wrong about this, but I thought you assumed that I had mentioned the national productivity council. I did not do so. In any event, as you yourself said—and I agree with you here—the motion before us cannot deal with remedies for unemployment. This is obviously so, because the plan announced yesterday does not deal with remedies either. I agree wholeheartedly with that suggestion.

Inasmuch as I am prevented from going into the positive field because of the objection of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who obviously does not wish positive suggestions to be made because they are embarrassing to a government that has none of its own, I will deal very briefly with the criteria themselves.

I mentioned that the reason they are restrictive is that they assume that in all cases the reasons are the same. They take the months of the year in which there is likely to be the lowest level of unemployment. They take a sufficient period of time so that the bad years under the Tories, when we had high unemployment in the summer, will be counterbalanced by the years preceding them when there was less unemployment in the summer

If you are going to use a statistical system, I suggest this should happen. Perhaps I could make reference to the announcement of the minister yesterday. He said that the second requirement, in so far as areas over 10,000 are concerned, is that industrial employment must have declined over the period 1953-60. I say that condition should be eliminated. I say that because it is one of those conditions which will very seldom be met, if there is any truth in the remarks made previously by the minister that employment has been increasing. I say this condition should be eliminated and should not be part of the statistical requirement.

In so far as areas of less than 10,000 are concerned, I do not know what the difference is between these two references, but one refers to the fact that industrial employment conditions must have generally deteriorated over the years. I do not know whether that means over the eight years mentioned, over the years to which the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) referred, or to what years it does refer. But in any event this should not be part of the statistical requirement. It is restrictive and will prevent many areas from participating.

In so far as the 75 per cent and 50 per cent are concerned, this government would be much closer to dealing with the problem and would be much more able to gloat about what it does if it were to take a straight percentage figure of the total labour force in the area as compared, perhaps, with the national figure. The government should take a total figure of, say, 4 per cent or 5 per cent as a yearly figure and then deal with it on that basis, rather than, as I said earlier, practically repealing the plan before it even comes into effect.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member who has just resumed his seat permit a question? Since he has made reference to the bungling of this government, I should like to ask the hon. member whether he now places himself on the side of a company which has refused further government aid in order to alleviate the unemployment problem in my area.

The hon. member has a choice here; he either supports what the government tries to do, or he supports this company. I ask him what his choice is.

An hon. Member: There are a number of things wrong with this sort of question.

Another hon. Member: These is nothing wrong with the question.

Mr. Howard: There is something wrong with the person who asks it.

An hon. Member: Personalities do not enter into this.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member who has just resumed his seat has said there is something wrong with the hon. member who asked the question. It seems to me that casts a slight on the hon. member referred to, and surely the hon. member for Skeena appreciates that this is unparliamentary.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is unnecessary for another hon. member to deal with the point of order. I would think one would have to be very susceptible indeed to take objection to a generality of that kind. If the wrongness were specifically designated, there might be a question to be considered.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, for the edification of my friend from Bow River, may I say that it was a political wrong.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, if I may—

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer the question.

Mr. MacInnis: I will ask another question that is more civil.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has asked his question and the only thing that would be in order at the moment would be an answer from the hon. member for Skeena, if he wishes to answer. Otherwise I will see the next hon. member who wishes to speak.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, what is wrong with the question is that it does not elucidate anything; it does not tell me what the company is, what the arrangements were, or anything else. Apart from that, the hon. member should know that the rules—as you, Mr. Speaker, have previously told the house—are such that if I were led into answering a question which was out of order, I would get halfway through the answer and would be stopped. The answer would be incomplete, and this would not be desirable.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I did not intend at this time to make any remarks on this particular question, but I should like to say this for the benefit of my friend who has just resumed his seat. Considering the problem with which we in Cape Breton are faced, it very surprising to me to find someone from the C.C.F. party standing up in this house and saying that they are not aware of this problem.

Mr. Howard: That is not what I said, and you know it.

Mr. MacInnis: I have asked a question. I have stated my point. They have on occasions tried to place themselves on a pedestal as far as the miners of Cape Breton are concerned, and now we have a member of that party telling the people of Cape Breton that they are not aware of what the problem is.

To the hon. member in the far corner, who implied in his speech that I was the fellow with all the questions but none of the answers, I might also say that I put forward my solution to this problem and I contacted members from all parties of this house. I might also add that the members from his party, who persist in saying that they are interested in the Cape Breton coal miner, did not even have enough courtesy or enough interest in the miners to answer this correspondence.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. MacInnis: This is the party which so freely admitted here that they are not aware of what our problem is. I have made many efforts in this house to put that problem before them—

Mr. Howard: I should like to raise a point of order, if I may. May I say that if the hon. member directed a communication to me he did not address it correctly or he did not send it, because I received no communication whatsoever.

Mr. MacInnis: I never indicated at any time that I had addressed any communication to the hon. member for Skeena. I value my time a little more than that. However, from the members of the hon. member's party to whom

I did direct this correspondence I have received no co-operation of any kind.

Mr. Howard: Name the members.

Mr. MacInnis: That would not be in accordance with the rules of this house, either.

Mr. Argue: There was no correspondence.

Mr. MacInnis: I think there was, and I would respectfully advise the leader of that so-called group in the corner to consult with his colleagues. He will find that there has been correspondence directed to several of them. I should like to see every one of them get to his feet and deny that he received such correspondence.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): The hon. member is straying from the resolution before the house. There is nothing in the resolution about correspondence between various parties.

Mr. MacInnis: As I said when I rose, I did not intend to take a very active part in this debate, but I should like to refer for a moment to the remarks of the Leader of the Opposiiton. While the hon. gentleman was speaking he indicated that the Minister of Labour had implied that Elliot Lake would be one of the areas which would qualify. I should like to point out here and now that the Minister of Labour said no such thing. He cited examples of areas which might qualify but at no time did he indicate that Elliot Lake was one of the areas which would come under consideration. That is as far as I intend to go at this time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the hon. member a question? In view of the high level of unemployment prevailing in Cape Breton and particularly in the hon. member's own constituency does he not think that area should be included within the terms of this proposed policy? Is he not aware that Cape Breton and the hon. member's constituency are not included and cannot qualify?

Mr. MacInnis: If I were to take the statistics of the hon. member for Essex East and refer for a moment to the accusation he made with respect to the city of Sydney in this house some months ago, the hon. gentleman would recall that he was very emphatic on that occasion and tried to drive home the point that Sydney was a depressed area—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It certainly is.

Mr. MacInnis: The hon. member says it is. He had much to say last night about which areas were depressed, and I notice from the account in Hansard—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It does not qualify.

Mr. MacInnis: —that the hon. member has eliminated it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government has eliminated it.

Mr. MacInnis: The hon. member insisted it was a depressed area, yet last night he left it out.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Does the hon. member not realize that if I did not include his constituency it was because the policy announced by the government which he supports does not include it?

Mr. MacInnis: From that statement am I to take it that the hon. member for Essex East is now withdrawing the statement he made in this house several months ago?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I withdraw nothing. You should be looking after your unemployed.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Coming as I do from the constituency of Bow River, I am interested in this motion because of a particular situation which exists in that area. May I say, first of all, that I am well aware of the terms and conditions of the present debate. I know this is a motion which, in effect, criticizes the conditions set out by the Minister of Labour on November 2 last with regard to the application of double depreciation allowances to certain localities. I can speak with some feeling on this subject because I come from an area where there has been unemployment in the coal mines for between ten and 15 years. I am referring to the Drumheller area.

These coal miners are engaged in mining what is known as soft domestic coal and because of competition from natural gas and petroleum fuels they have been thrown out of work and kept out of work for a number of years. So it is not my intention, as far as that situation is concerned, to blame anyone for what has occurred. Surely, what all of us should be asking is this: what can we do to help in a situation of this kind? Let us make no mistake about it. The situation as far as unemployment is concerned existed when this government took office; and I am sure as I stand in my place today that the workers of this country whether they live in western Canada or in the rest of Canada have confidence in the Minister of Labour and in this government.

An hon. Member: Call an election and let us find out.

Mr. Woolliams: We have heard that cry about calling an election before. The opposition asked us to call an election in 1958 and the C.C.F. almost got wiped out. It is only by the grace of God that a few of them are left.

Returning to the terms of the motion, I think this would be a good time to review exactly what the Minister of Labour said in reference to the criteria which have to be established in connection with this double depreciation allowance. He said this as reported in Hansard on page 2569:

> Hon. members will recall that one objective of this program is to assist new industries in areas where there has been a substantial degree of continued unemployment over the years.

That is the first point I wish to make. There has been substantial unemployment over the years in the area of Drumheller where the coal miners have been mining soft domestic fuel. The Minister of Labour has come to grips with the situation and set criteria defining those areas to which we intend that industry should be attracted. No one is going to say in this house today that there are no areas in which serious unemployment exists. There was serious unemployment in 1955 and in 1957 and there is serious unemployment in 1961. There is, too, serious unemployment in the United States, as the hon. member for Essex East mentioned last night when we were discussing this subject.

The areas affected are broken down into two categories: areas with a labour force of 10,000 and over, and areas with a labour force of less than 10,000. In the minister's statement we find the following:

> In those areas where the labour force is 10,000 and over the criteria are, first, the area must have been classified by the Department of Labour in a surplus labour market category for 75 per cent or more of the summer months from May to October, 1953-60.

That is the first criterion applying to the first group. Here is the second one:

> Second, industrial employment must have declined over the period 1953-60.

Those are the criteria in the first category set out by the minister on March 2. Let us take the second category, that of areas with a labour force of less than 10,000. In the first place, these must have been classified by the Department of Labour as in a surplus labour market category for 50 per cent or more of the 48 summer months May to October, 1953-60. In the second place, industrial employment conditions must have generally deteriorated over the years.

Last, but not least, applications may be made by the municipal authorities. That is the part of the statement with which I want to deal for a few minutes. If we set out in law those areas to which this formula should apply, it would be too rigid and there would be no flexibility. That is the very thing about which some of my hon. friends in the corner spoke with respect to another matter. They thought it was not flexible enough.

If you attempt to set out in law specific, designated areas there is no question but that it would be highly improbable that you could designate all the areas without missing one or two or more and would make bad exceptions. That is the point.

Under the present proposals the question will be handled in a democratic way with the initiative and suggestions flowing from the municipal level to the federal level. After all, in the democratic system it is important that all levels of government, federal, provincial and municipal, co-operate for the common good. Who knows local conditions better than do those at the municipal level? The municipalities can and may make application on the basis of their knowledge of the local conditions.

Let us take the municipality of Drumheller as an example. They have already written me as their member expressing the hope that the application will be placed with the appropriate officials as soon as possible so they can comply with the stated criteria. That, to me, seems to be a point that argues strongly in favour of the criteria as set out by the Minister of Labour. If the measure is approved by parliament it will make a significant contribution in attracting industry to depressed centres and in creating additional employment opportunities.

There is, however, a second point which I feel is very important. The introduction of this measure illustrates that the government demonstrates its belief in the freedom of enterprise. The government believes in the ability of free enterprise to solve the problems of unemployment. It has demonstrated this belief by giving an advantage to industry. Through the advantage of double depreciation industry can enlarge and expand their capital. Industry will be attracted to various areas and that in itself will create employment in those areas that need it. I do not think we should lose sight of those two facts to which I have referred.

The subject which is being debated this afternoon is one which was dealt with last night by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) and if it is in order to talk about it at all, it is surely in order for me to comment on what the hon. gentleman said. In so doing, in all likelihood I will be dealing with the subject he touched upon.

The hon. member's criticism of this measure was that the criteria do not go far enough. The hon. gentleman suggested that we should have followed the course followed by President Kennedy in designating specific areas as depressed areas. I remind hon. gentlemen of the Liberal party of the fact that there will be greater flexibility as a result of the manner in which the Minister of Labour has handled this matter. The criteria introduced by the minister will make the formula flexible and workable.

I observed that the hon. member for Essex East pounded his desk when I made mention of the course followed by President Kennedy. I suppose that the hon. gentleman likes the victory of President Kennedy. We all like to see people successful in politics and particularly we Conservatives because we were successful in 1957 and again in 1958. Just as President Kennedy was successful in the recent United States election so our national leader was successful in 1957 and 1958.

Of course, it is an old trick of the Liberals to applaud success. They were happy to climb on the coat tails of Roosevelt so they could get back in power in 1935. Of course, this is not a new trick and the reason why hon. gentlemen opposite refer in terms of praise to the proposal of President Kennedy is that my hon. friends have nothing new to offer. With respect to the unemployment problem my hon. friends have nothing to offer at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. Once again, I must ask the hon. member to relate his remarks to the motion now before the house.

Mr. Woolliams: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; when you hear me out, you will see I am in order. What I am saying is that my hon. friends in the Liberal party have no alternative to the criteria suggested by the Minister of Labour and therefore they naturally want to climb on the coat tails of president Kennedy in the hope that in the future they may become victorious in an election in Canada and form the government. My hon. friends are not interested in solving the unemployment problem or in suggesting constructive proposals or altenatives.

Are my hon. friends absolutely and flatly opposed to the criteria suggested by the Minister of Labour? Do they say this formula will not solve the problems in those areas where there is serious unemployment?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes.

Mr. Woolliams: I heard the comment of the hon. member for Essex East and it is important because as I understood the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) this afternoon, he did not criticize the purport of this measure but said we were wrong in the fact that we did not designate certain areas. The hon. gentleman did not really find fault with the criteria but said that we should have designated areas and not placed the onus on the municipalities.

My answer to that occupation—and I will repeat it—is that we believe that the local levels of government are important in democracy. For the federal government to designate areas would be imposing dictatorship from the top level down to the bottom level. Suggestions should come from the bottom to the top and so we have in this proposal a true example of democracy in operation in this country.

I now return to my argument. It seems to me the crux of the situation is that the hon. gentlemen opposite do not argue that the criteria are inadequate but that they protest the way in which the proposal is going to be administered. Let us examine how it will be administered.

In my opening remarks I said that I felt the workers in this country have confidence in the Minister of Labour. I believe the minister, as he has in the past, will prove his ability to administer this proposal accurately and justly. After all, in dealing with a scheme of this nature and magnitude, we have to have expert administrators to administer the laws and that is why the formula should be flexible. If the depressed areas were categorically set out in law the formula would not be as flexible as it otherwise would be; in that way bad exceptions and bad examples would creep in and problems would be created.

Let me return to my own area of Drumheller about which I spoke earlier. The municipality can make an application. If the application of that area is approved, industry will be attracted to that centre and the coal miners who have been out of work over the years can find employment in another industry and live with their families in dignity.

I should like to cite this as an example. When I went to that area in 1955-1956 I saw large numbers of houses of the miners boarded up and the mines closed down. There was and is a surplus labour pool in that area. That surplus labour pool is looking for new industries in that area. It is for that reason that I rose this afternoon to speak in support of this remedy for unemployment and in support of the criteria that have been set out by the Minister of Labour. The result of the passage of this measure will closely affect the people I represent in the community of Drumheller and those in Canmore, Alberta.

Miss Judy LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to participate in the debate on this subject, but that was before the announcement was made by the minister to deal with areas which he has styled as areas of surplus manpower. However, I am required to rise to protest the definition of the criteria which have been placed before us as anything which is indicative of an acceptance by the government of its responsibility in answer to those in need in various communities in Canada.

On a previous occasion I have styled as a depressed area the riding which I have the honour to represent. This has met with incredulity on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and with indifference on the part of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr).

We have before us not a formula to assist depressed areas but, at the very best, a formula to assist in disaster areas. If any area can qualify under the criteria presented to this house yesterday, it must be an area so badly hit already that this crumb which the government offers can in no way assist in its economic recovery.

There are many areas such as those I represent, and particularly the two larger areas of Fort Erie and Niagara Falls. They are, or were, largely industrial. One of their industries, of course, is the tourist industry which is most important in the summer months. Were my area in a position to qualify under the government's criteria, the fact that we have an influx of tourist dollars coming into the country in the summertime for a period of two or three months every year removes them from what the government will now be describing as an area of surplus manpower.

Nevertheless, over the past three or four years the number of unemployed has continued to rise. I refer to the chronically unemployed. The Minister of Labour visited my riding as recently as October of last year. I have already placed on Hansard the minister's remarks at that time and the fact that he said he intended to do something for the people in that area. Apparently the sort of thing which he intends to do in this riding and indeed in that represented by the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Pitman) is, at times of election, to throw in one contract but otherwise disregard the people of the area.

I would suggest that this government has indicated no way of assisting particular areas such as mine where a certain industry is in serious trouble. In my riding the silver industry, the workers on the railroads and in the aircraft industry in particular are suffering and increasingly so. It is true that we have attracted some industries, are still attracting them. However, we have plants which have been employing as many as 2,500 people and which are now down to 250 employees; and the new industries which we have attracted employ only five or six people. Weekly and monthly the figures mount. The government listens not to the cries from this and similar areas. I think this is another indication that this government and in particular the Minister of Labour have neglected and forgotten that which they are so proud of, namely their humble origin. Perhaps nothing in the world has been seen to equal the arrogance of this government and its indifference to the people since Marie Antoinette said, "Let them eat cake".

I suggest to the government that if, as was indicated in the speech that was made on December 20 last, this government has a real interest in the people and in assisting particularly areas which have been affected by a number of economic factors, what is now offered is just not enough. In fact, I would suggest to the government that there is not one area in Canada which can qualify under this criterion. I would further suggest that it is interesting to know that the government has taken the period from the year 1953. If the government will amend its criterion in order to take it back only to the summer of 1957, it will be in a better position to tell how many depressed areas there are in this country under this administration.

I have little to say, Mr. Speaker, nor can I expect any consideration for the people I represent or indeed the people of Canada. However, I would entreat the Minister of Labour to rise in his place and give us his views rather than to leave it to the fringe area of his party to speak on this most important issue. I would ask the Minister of Labour to detail to us the areas in Ontario and in each of the provinces his experts in the Department of Labour have told him this formula will apply to, if any. I challenge the government to indicate that there is any area which will qualify under this criterion. I ask the government to consider the fact that the municipality—for it is the municipality which must apply—must call itself a depressed area. I ask the minister also to consider that when it calls itself a depressed area it is likely to drive away prospective new business, new industries and new residents. It is likely to frighten away any sort of industry. When that area feels that it needs special assistance it throws itself upon the government and says, "We are depressed; assist us", and then finds that it is not only necessary to be depressed but to be destroyed in order for the regulations to take effect.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, it is apparent that in this particular parliament there is a coherent attempt. which I think is praiseworthy, on the part of the government to give to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) and his department a larger role in the economy. I have been complimentary before, and I may still be complimentary to the minister for making positive public statements in the past that this government accepted the responsibility for unemployment in this country and was prepared to face that responsibility. But this acceptance of responsibility, it seems to me, indicates a need to have some procedure by which the problem can be met.

It seems to me that the two main sources of power and influence in our economic pattern in this country in the federal government have been in the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Finance. Therefore I, like I am sure a number of other hon. members, have been waiting to see a shift to the Department of Labour that will enable it to give the leadership in facing the unemployment problem that the Minister of Labour has conceded. All I can say about these regulations, following the statement of the Minister of Finance, is that it is very apparent that the shift of power to the Department of Labour is not taking place in any effective way. I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) or the Department of Finance is still holding the course.

My first point about these regulations is that they are a very minor concession. This has already been underlined by the Leader of the Opposition, but what kind of concession is it to give double depreciation for one year out of any three years? In essence, it is a pittance when compared with the concession that the mining companies have in Canada. I think it does work as an incentive to give the concession and to have no income tax or corporation tax on the first three years of operation. It seems to me that kind of incentive, because it is both general and generous, has had some real effect as compared with this very narrow concession.

One of the other factors about this concession, it seems to me, is that it ignores the places in Canada where capital accumulates and from which it is controlled. If the area of Sydney qualifies for this assistance—and according to the statistics I have been able to find, it might qualify; it is right on the boundary line—where is the corporate structure in Canada that has the capital that is going to take advantage of the situation in Sydney to get the double depreciation? I insist that that capital is in the main controlled in and the exploitation takes place from the large metropolitan centres such as Montreal and Toronto.

If one takes a map something like the one I hold in my hand, which sets out the labour surplus problem and clearly marks the labour areas, 1953 to 1959, one has to speculate on large organizations such as Abitibi or McIntyre-Porcupine, looking at this map and saying, "Oh, there is a dark area; surely the one marked is the one where we can get double depreciation; that is where we will go and set up a plant". I think this is incredibly naive when I think of my own area and all of the persistent attempts that have been made by the northwestern Ontario development association, the integrated chambers of commerce, both of Port Arthur and Fort William, and of northwestern Ontario to get industries to come in. These people have made movies and shown them all over Europe and the United States. They have sent off representatives at their own expense, paid for with money that they raised themselves. They have sent them all over the United States and Europe in order to make contacts and to get industry to come into their area; yet in the main, as far as I can discover, despite all this tremendous effort, in the last five years, we have had almost no new industries. I know that in 1960 we obtained at the head of the lakes one new industry, a concrete culvert plant that employs four people. My point in this is that we have had a region that is marked off roughly by the Department of Labour as a certain area, Port Arthur and Fort William, that has had a tremendous need for initiative and drive. I am not a man to suggest—

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say this. Interesting as the hon. member's remarks are, the debate here is on the criteria mentioned by the Minister of Labour. The motion refers to the inadequate and restrictive character of the criteria to be used as the basis for the designation of depressed areas. In the interest of orderly debate I think the hon. member should limit himself to dealing with the inadequate features and the restrictive nature of the criteria, if that is his opinion, and suggest alternatives. I believe that a description of the hon. member's own area or a discussion of corporate matters is beyond the scope of the motion.

Mr. Fisher: On the point of order, may I ask who it is that is going to take advantage of the double depreciation provision? Will it be Port Arthur or Fort William? It is nonsense to suggest that. It will be the corporation that will take advantage of it. I have tried to explain that our region has gone out after industry and has not been able to get it to come in. We have asked the province of Ontario and this government repeatedly to give us some incentive to bring industry into the area. I am suggesting that the incentive contained in this provision does not come close to meeting the need. It is largely a useless one.

I am suggesting that the corporate structure of our country is such, with power concentrated in certain places and in certain organizations, that you have to offer something much more attractive than this provision in order to get corporations to move into these areas.

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order. We are not here discussing the incentive of double depreciation. We are supposed to be discussing the criteria, and whether or not they are adequate for the purposes outlined by the Minister of Labour. The subject of the debate is not related to incentives.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): The point of order taken by the house leader is quite in order. I am sure the hon. member for Port Arthur realizes that. This is quite a restrictive amendment which is before the house, and the debate is strictly on the criteria for double depreciation. I wish the hon. member would come back to that.

Mr. Fisher: I have gone through the statistics in connection with labour and the information which has been filed before the Senate committee, and I find that my particular region will not qualify under these particular criteria. My point is, Mr. Speaker, that here is an area that knows it is in deep trouble. It has tried to do something on its own initiative. It has requested incentives but the criteria that have been introduced by the Minister of Labour really do not mean very much to this area.

Aside from the fact that the incentive itself is insufficient, one must consider that we are dealing with percentages that vary up and down and that they must be related to the past. It seems to me that you have to have a most marked trend, an almost completely hopeless situation, before you can hope to get any advantage from the criteria that have been established in this provision. I insist that we have in Canada today a number of regions that are right on the edge of this test, and ours is one that could not qualify under this 1953-1960 standard. We have an annual average of 10 per cent of the registrants for employment who are unemployed; that is the average. The percentage over this particular period is not quite high enough to qualify us as a surplus labour area. The reason this area cannot qualify during the summer months is the change that has taken place in the woods industry. In former years employment in the woods was concentrated in the wintertime, but within the last few years that period has changed to the summertime.

The other thing about these criteria, Mr. Speaker, is that they make no allowance for what are universally acknowledged to be the new reasons that we are having labour surplus areas. This is what is known as structural unemployment, and it comes upon a region fairly quickly. The power saw, in effect, has been the greatest revolutionizer in our industry, but in 1953 the power saw was not an important factor. However, since 1956 and 1957 it has changed the whole bush employment picture in our area. There have been other developments such as the carry-lift loader, drop loaders and what we call slashmobiles which have been introduced within the last few years and have cut the need for workers. However, the effects of these developments will not be reflected in the criteria we have here.

I was talking the other day to the head of one of our large labour unions, the northwestern Ontario lumber and sawmill workers union. He was saying that a few years ago they had 17,000 members. This is a tough mill and trade union which is feared, respected and hated in various sections of our part of the country. It is not a trade union that allows the membership to get away very easily. No one has come in and taken away any of the members; there have been no raids or jurisdictional squabbles. However, during the last four years the membership has dropped from 17,000 to about 11,000 today. I am not saying that they are protesting the changes that have taken place in the woods industry in our area, but their membership is going to go even lower. They are not squawking about this particular situation. What happens to the men who are uprooted and put in a difficult position? As a result of this our whole economy in northwestern Ontario has been affected by these changes in the woods operations in the last few years as well as the dieselization that has taken place on the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific.

The Minister of Labour knows very well that dieselization has only become a crippling factor in employment terms within the last two or three years. In my constituency there are eight different railway divisional points, so the magnitude of the effect of dieselization upon employment is very apparent there. However, this factor, again, will not be reflected in the period 1953-1960 with any great effectiveness. This particular region is considered to be, then, from what I can gather, a normal labour market area. However, we know that it is not. This is the difficulty when you set up criteria that go away back into the past.

I recall how critical I felt when listening to some of the farmers who were criticizing the agricultural prices stabilization board set-up and the fact that prices were going to be set on the basis of a 10-year period. Some hon. members were pointing out the inequity of this, but that provision related to inanimate objects, farm products. The problem with which we are faced here relates to human beings. You have to deal with it with much more compassion than you do with such things as butter and eggs. I suggest that the measure is just not good enough; but if that is out of order, I suggest the criteria are much too severe to be useful to us. I know, Mr. Speaker, that much feeling will be aroused over this in our part of the country.

I have a great deal of sympathy for the fact that Cornwall qualifies under these criteria. I hope this does Cornwall some good. But what about all the other places in Canada that are going to be just below Cornwall and will not qualify? The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) was talking about flexibility and how much flexibility we have here. All I can say about the marvelous criteria is that they delimit the provision and make it so narrow that an area has to be in an almost helpless position before it can receive any assistance from the proposal of the Minister of Labour.

There is one last point I want to touch on, Mr. Chairman, and that is the point raised by the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis). He has mentioned the fact that he has received no response from members of this party in relation to the specific unemployment problem that exists in Cape Breton. I might say to the member that I have received his correspondence but have not as yet answered because—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I do not think that subject is a proper one to discuss on the motion that is before the house.

Mr. Fisher: I just mention this because the hon. member brought the subject to my attention this afternoon. I had no intention of interrupting the hon. member at the time but wanted to mention why I had not written to him. I took the matter into consideration, discussed it with the manager of a local thermal plant and was informed by the manager that the suggestion of importing coal from Cape Breton to Port Arthur was a fantastic one in view of the fact that the source of United States coal is much closer. I have no influence with the Hon. Leopold Macauley or Premier Frost and would assume, party ties being what they are, that the hon. member for Cape Breton South would be much more able to accomplish something in this regard through his own party structure than through me.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not at all surprised to find that the opposition posed today and presented a motion to the effect that the criteria set up for double depreciation in certain areas in this country are inadequate and of a restrictive character. This is something that we as a government expected. We have been endeavouring to do everything possible to put forward measures and legislation in this house since November 17, 1959, to help alleviate the situation. We find every time that members of the opposition rise as one with the cry that this is not enough and is restrictive. They have done this on some twenty five occasions since November 17th. When there is an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, for the opposition to approve or disapprove they rise as one and say, yes, it is a good measure but it is not enough. I am not surprised of course in this regard; that is the job of the opposition. It does not matter what the government brings forward, the cry is always the same: it is not enough, it does not go far enough, it does not include enough area, even though we must bring in measure after measure to deal with the situation.

The measure that was announced yesterday is designed to help certain areas in this country. The criteria may be criticized. There could be 1,001 different criteria. This is not criticism in regard to the criteria put forward by the government alone; this criticism will be put forward in any case. We are criticized in regard to this criteria being wrong. It is suggested that we should use some other criteria instead. This is the type of criticism we have heard today. I gave three examples of localities in Canada which I said—stressing very emphatically—that they might qualify under this criteria. Today the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) says that already he has received communications from right across this country to the effect that the writers do not understand these criteria. Mr. Speaker, I have not received any communication from any area or municipality to that effect at all. I believe that this statement in regard to the receipt of letters is made in order that something critical of this measure is brought forward.

I feel that the Leader of the Opposition is doing an injustice to Elliot Lake in saying that in his opinion Elliot Lake cannot qualify under these criteria. Surely, the Leader of the Opposition should not undermine the thinking of the municipal authorities by saying they cannot qualify under these criteria. I think this is an injustice. Certainly the municipality of Elliot Lake has every right, as any other municipal area in this country has, to make an application to the Department of Labour which will investigate, along with the officials of the national employment service very rapidly, the situation in order to ascertain whether the applicant area qualifies for double depreciation, as set forth, for industries which locate in the area.

The hon. member for Niagara Falls (Miss LaMarsh) has also stated that she does not feel that Niagara Falls would qualify. I would suggest that if it does not qualify, that is all to the good. Why should an area such as Niagara Falls qualify when it has experienced the expansion of industry that many other municipalities have not experienced for some years? Just a few moments ago we had figures produced in regard to the industrial development in that area. We heard about the encouragements put forward in an attempt to attract new industry, with a fair amount of success. We are very happy that Niagara Falls is an area that is progressing, and that industry feels it can locate in the area.

We have heard criticism in regard to the summer months limitation. The reason for this requirement, Mr. Speaker, is obvious. The seasonal unemployment in winter months would have a great effect on the situation. If we intend to get a true picture in regard to unemployment declining generally we must consider the employment situation during months when the seasonal aspect is not evident.

Before I go on I might say a few words in regard to the statement respecting the measures announced by President Kennedy in the United States. All the credit in the world should be given to him for implementing the proposals he has made. I am sure I would be out of order, Mr. Speaker, if I dwelt and enlarged upon a comparison of the measures taken by the two countries; but if I were to make such a comparison it would be interesting to note that of the 12 immediate measures proposed by the President of the United States we would find, Mr. Speaker, that here in Canada 11 have already been put forward. As I say, I will not go further with that comparison because I feel I certainly would be out of order. However, I would certainly enjoy the opportunity at this time of making a comparison of each and every one of those measures.

The motion before us today is a peculiar one. The opposition has moved the adjournment of the house because of the exception they have taken, Mr. Speaker, to certain criteria set up by the government in its announcement of the policy for permitting double depreciation in certain areas that request it. What lies behind this motion, Mr. Speaker, is the opposition's desire and determination that the government shall in this Canada of ours set up certain areas as depressed or distressed areas; and from their point of view, the more depressed and distressed they are, the better.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister has just said that it is our view and position that the more depressed and distressed an area is, the better. These words are entirely false and I ask the minister to withdraw them.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the Opposition assures me that that is not their intention, and that is not what is behind this motion, then I certainly do withdraw those remarks. Certainly that was the inference I drew from what was said yesterday, which was out of order, and again today. It certainly gave me that impression.

Mr. Pearson: A false impression.

Mr. Starr: However, if the Leader of the Opposition says that is not true, then of course I withdraw that charge. But the opposition seems to be determined to take this undemocratic approach to the problem. It is certainly not the approach that has been prevalent in this country, whereby there is a certain amount of respect for those governments which are not at the high level of the federal government. The opposition says that we, as the federal government, should tell municipalities and areas, "Here you are. We put a stigma upon you, whether you want it or not, and designate you as a depressed area". That word was used by the opposition.

I have been connected with municipal affairs for nine years, and I know that other hon. members presently in this house have been connected with that level of government. I know they will agree with me that this is a matter for consideration by the municipal authorities. It is a matter for the municipal authorities and the elected members of those municipalities to determine. When they have determined that in their opinion they qualify to have industry brought into their areas, then the way is open to them to apply to the Department of Labour. At that time representatives from the Department of Labour and the national employment service will make a thorough examination. If they qualify, they will be so designated by order in council, and only then. I think that is a fair approach to this problem.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question. He has mentioned one point which I raised. Is the minister now saying that there will be a separate order in council for each municipality designated as an area of surplus labour?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the area or locality will be designated by order in council.

Mr. Pearson: Each one?

Mr. Starr: Whether it will be a separate order in council or whether two or three areas might be included in one order in council is a matter that will depend on the circumstances. If we receive a report simultaneously from two or three areas that qualify, then I think we could cut down on our orders in council by designating them in one order in council.

There must be a basis upon which to set criteria. How were these criteria arrived at? Since January, 1953, every month the Department of Labour has classified labour market areas according to the degree of manpower utilization in various areas across this country. Because the labour market classifications of the Department of Labour have been published since 1953, it was felt they would be more acceptable than any other approach which might be devised for this purpose.

Since 1953 labour market areas have been classified into four groups: substantial surplus, moderate surplus, balance, and labour shortage. In the criteria used for classifying surplus manpower areas, the term "surplus labour market" refers to both the substantial surplus and the moderate surplus classifications.

I submit that this motion has been brought about in order to say once again that the measure is no good. That has been the case with other measures that this government has brought forward, as it has promised to do, and it will continue to bring forward measures to alleviate the situation. That is why the opposition says these are not the proper criteria. They say, "If we had been asked, we would have given your criteria". It does not matter whether we have 1,001 criteria; there will always be something wrong with them. This government is trying to deal with the situation for the good of this country and for the good of the working man and woman of this country.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) began his remarks by stating that he was not surprised at the criticism levelled at the government for the policy which he announced yesterday. I must say to him now that I am extremely surprised at the reply he has made to the questions, suggestions and criticisms concerning that policy.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member used the word "suggestions". I have yet to hear any suggestions as to the type of criteria that should have been adopted.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour could not have been listening, because the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) put on record a suggestion in connection with this matter. If the minister had been listening he would not have interrupted me a moment ago.

Coming back to this statement made by the Minister of Labour, I am indeed surprised that the minister did not take the opportunity to explain in greater detail and at greater length the so-called criteria to which he referred yesterday.

A number of members on the government side of the house have risen in support of this resolution, but has any member of the house, including the Minister of Labour, told us this afternoon what these criteria mean? The Minister of Labour had an opportunity to deal with this matter in the few minutes at his disposal. He could have taken the requisite time to tell us the meaning of this order in council, and he spoke for barely 12 minutes. Why did he not, as the minister responsible for this policy, explain in detail to the House of Commons what is meant by the criteria and by the division of the two categories?

Mr. Starr: If I had done so, would that have satisfied you?

Mr. Pearson: That is your job.

Mr. Chevrier: We would at least have known what is in the mind of the government. As it is now, we certainly do not know what is in the mind of the government, because it is as clear as mud.

In the discussion of this motion of the Leader of the Opposition to adjourn the house reference was made to a statement of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) during the course of his supplementary budget speech on December 20, 1960. As found at page 1,007 of Hansard the Minister of Finance said at that time:

> As a powerful incentive to these ends I am pleased to announce measures to fulfil three major purposes.

The Leader of the Opposition has put this on the record and I shall not repeat it. That was a positive statement by the Minister of Finance that powerful measures would be announced, and we had every right to believe that those powerful measures would soon be introduced in the House of Commons. But it took over two months for that to be done; and then it was done by this puny little measure, this timid measure announced yesterday by the Minister of Labour. Not only were there very substantial and serious delays, but there was confusion because it was impossible for a long time to know which of three departments would be concerned with this matter.

That is why the Minister of Labour is so timid about the whole thing. The reason is quite clear. When this announcement was made on December 20 the government had not determined its policy. It was only later, I suggest, perhaps a day or two ago, that it was decided to follow this method which was announced in the house. That is why the matter has been thrown into the hands of the Minister of Labour, who should have been able to rise in his place this afternoon and explain to the people of Canada what is meant by these criteria. I say to the Minister of Labour that these criteria are unsatisfactory and that he should have explained to the house what was meant by them.

Who is going to designate the areas? The Minister of Labour in reply to criticism which was directed at him, when he stated that we had an undemocratic approach to the problem, asked: why should the municipalities not have the responsibility of making application? During the budget speech and during the course of debate on a number of occasions we had clear-cut statements by representatives of the government that they intended to assist those who were suffering from unemployment and that they were ready, also, to assist the depressed areas or areas of so-called chronic underunemployment. Why were not those undertakings carried out? Why was the stand taken in the budget speech and by other ministers in the course of debate not carried out save and except in the words of the Minister of Labour who so mildly attempted to reply to some of the criticisms which were made?

I believe the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Miss LaMarsh) was quite right when she referred to a statement made by a former queen of France, "Let them have cake". I add to that a statement made by one of the ministers of the government, "Let them have bread or games, bread or circuses". That statement was made on more than one occasion and that is exactly what is happening in this situation. It seems to me that it is up to the Minister of Labour to take the initiative in designating areas which are entitled to these double depreciation allowances.

It has been said here that in order to assist industry to locate in a community certain advantages must be offered; and one of the advantages which the government proposes is a double depreciation allowance for a period of one year extending over a period of three years. How can an industry establish itself in a community when it does not know whether it will be entitled to the double depreciation allowance and cannot know until a decision has been confirmed by order in council? How long is it going to take before this information is available? How long will it take the municipalities to convince the Department of Labour or the governor in council that they qualify under these criteria? Moreover, the criteria are such that it is almost impossible for them to know what the position is.

The minister made great play about the fact that he had not stated that Elliot Lake and Springhill could qualify but had said they might qualify. Why should the minister not tell us whether they do qualify or not? If he or the officials of his department do not know, then how in the world can the municipalities of Elliot Lake, Springhill or Cornwall for that matter, which is in a difficult situation as the minister is aware, be expected to know?

The government and the Department of Labour have had three months in which to find out what the circumstances should be in the application of this formula, yet it is only yesterday that we had the announcement concerning it. I say to the minister that this formula is so restrictive that it leaves many communities in the lurch and outside the benefits, if there are any, which flow from the terms of this policy.

I think the Minister of Labour cannot avoid telling the house either now or at a later date what these areas are in order to avoid the delays which must otherwise attend the application of this policy. Where are these areas of chronic unemployment? Certainly the Minister of Finance during the course of his speech on the budget, in the course of answers to questions we asked in the house and in the course of other debates led us to believe that we should be given this information. There was no one on this side of the house who for a moment did not believe that this information would be forthcoming in clear and definite terms. As it is now, I challenge the minister to tell us what this thing means. Although, as I said earlier, two members who support the government have risen to tell us something about this proposal, to tell us they are in favour of it, no one, including the Minister of Labour himself, has told us in clear and definite language what these criteria mean and how they can be applied.

There is another matter about which I think the house should be informed and it concerns the manner in which this proposal is going to operate. I urge the minister and the government to change and improve these criteria which are faulty. We believe that the figures of total population instead of paid workers should be used to calculate the percentage of unemployment, because our population statistics on a regional basis are much better than the figures on the paid workers basis. Moreover, the period selected is certainly unsatisfactory because it includes four summers of prosperity and four summers of recession. The period to be used should be the last three years because chronic unemployment really started at the end of 1957.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: It certainly did. Look at the figures.

Mr. Chevrier: During this debate the question has been asked: what can we do to solve this problem? We are all in support of what measures may be taken to solve this problem but I tell the government and its supporters that they will not solve it by this puny method. They will not solve anything by refusing to define what is meant by an area of chronic unemployment.

Another statement which has been made in the course of the debate is that the former administration is responsible for the present unemployment situation. Let me tell the house that the present government has now been in office for almost four years; and if the situation has reached the point which it has reached today, they and they alone are responsible for the conditions. They should be able to stand on their own feet and cease blaming an administration which has been out of office since 1957. But no; they are not prepared to do so. I notice that the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion) who does not say very much in this house was down in the province of Quebec the other day saying that the high degree of unemployment in this country was the responsibility of the former government. I am telling members opposite that they will not solve the problem of unemployment by statements like this. They must do it by policies. They must do it by bringing in measures which they themselves said they were going to bring in. We waited for nearly three months for a definition of these areas and we had it only yesterday.

I was saying that the period to be used should be the last three years, because chronic unemployment actually started at the end of 1957. If you look at the figures, Mr. Speaker, you will see that unemployment in this country then was very little over 3 per cent. Areas may have enjoyed prosperity and boom conditions between 1953 and 1957 but after 1957 they may have experienced heavy unemployment. In that case they would not qualify under the government's program. That is another fault which we on this side have to find with the summer months definition. It is well known to every member in this house that during the period 1953-56 if not, 1953-57, there were boom conditions in certain areas of this country. That certainly was the case, in large part, in the city of Cornwall because of the construction of the St. Lawrence seaway, but after that because of the closing down of several cotton industries no less than 2,000 people were put out of work. Reading this definition as carefully as I can I am still unable to say whether or not that community will be able to qualify. I am also sure the minister is unable to say and certainly he has thrown no light on it today.

I submit that the definition of the two categories, the one having to do with an area with a labour force of 10,000 and over, and the other having to do with one with a labour force of 10,000 and under, should be more clearly set out by the government. On the basis of the statement put on the record by the Leader of the Opposition I think it is clear that it is going to be almost impossible to determine how a community with a labour force of under 10,000 will be able to apply. In the case of the category of a labour force of 10,000 and under the situation will be unworkable as was pointed out by the Leader of the Opposition and by others who have spoken.

In his remarks the Minister of Labour said that the government is bringing in measure after measure to deal with the unemployment situation. I am not free, any more than was the minister, to deal with those measures because of the restriction in the debate but I have yet to see brought in by the government since the session opened in 1960 a measure that will deal with the unemployment situation during the course of the present winter. Surely the present measure is not one which will be of much use during the course of the present winter season, because after an application is made time will be required to consider and study it and the industry in the community which will be waiting will want to be given some advance notice of whether or not it will be entitled to double depreciation.

I ask the Minister of Labour and hon. members of the government what industry is going to be tremendously enticed to come into a community if it will receive only one year of double depreciation during a period of three years, unless it is already there and wants to add to its facilities. That is what the Minister of Finance called a powerful incentive. If it is a powerful incentive, it was weakly and inadequately defended by the Minister of Labour.

I say to the minister that even now he should tell the house what the areas are; and unless and until the hon. gentleman does that I submit to him with deference that it will be practically impossible for those municipalities who want to make an application to know where they stand.

It seems to me it is the responsibility of the government in office to take action and instead of exercising that responsibility it has shifted it on the municipality. The government is saying in effect to each municipality: "You tell us whether or not you are a depressed area; we do not know. But having regard to the two criteria that were placed on Hansard you tell us whether or not you are a depressed area and, if you qualify under our criteria, then we will perhaps act under the circumstances."

In his statement yesterday, as reported at page 2569 of Hansard, the Minister of Labour stated the criteria as being these:

> —first, the area must have been classified by the Department of Labour in a surplus labour market category for 75 per cent or more of the 48 summer months from May to October, 1953-1960. Second, industrial employment must have declined over the period 1953-1960.

Who is going to satisfy the government that industrial employment has declined if during four of the years there is a boom of employment, then suddenly it disappears and there are serious conditions which indicate a substantial deterioration in the community? Who is going to make that determination? Is the onus on the municipality? Must the municipality prove a prima facie case before it can be qualified under these criteria or are the officials of the Department of Labour to determine that matter?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has just asked me a question. In reply let me say I think I set that out very clearly in my statement yesterday and again in my remarks this afternoon. I said that upon receipt of an application the officials of the Department of Labour and of the national employment service will go to that municipality, make assessments at first hand and ascertain very quickly whether the municipality qualifies under the criteria.

Mr. Chevrier: But, Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is satisfactory.

Mr. Starr: The hon. member is free to hold that view. I attempted only to answer the hon. gentleman's question. What does the hon. member want?

Mr. Chevrier: I am being asked what I want and I will tell the minister. The minister has the figures right here in the Department of Labour. The minister need not tell me that he does not know what the position is in every Canadian community as far as labour is concerned. If the minister does not know, he certainly should know. The hon. gentleman has those figures. Those figures are in the possession of the minister and he should be the one to take the responsibility instead of shifting on the municipality the onus of proving a prima facie case as to whether or not industry has deteriorated in that area. I certainly do not accept that explanation from the minister.

If the Minister of Labour does not have the figures he certainly can obtain some of them from the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees), some from the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) and still others from the Minister of Finance. The figures are all here in various departments of government.

If the government had wanted to do so it could, of its own volition have determined all these questions beforehand; but instead of doing that the government is going to waste a lot of time and has shifted the responsibility to the municipalities in asking them to tell the government whether or not they are depressed areas. That is why we repeat now what we have said so often: It is too little and too late. You have been talking now about all the great things you were going to do—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Address the Chair.

Mr. Chevrier: You were talking about them in the speech from the throne. Hon. members of the government during the course of various debates repeated ad nauseum what the government was going to do to meet the unemployment problem. This is another step in that program and from what has been said I presume it is the last step for the time being at least. All these items are supposed to assist in meeting the unemployment problem.

I repeat what I said a moment ago. Again I urge two things upon the minister. I urge that he clarify still further either by a statement in this house or outside what is meant by the criteria and that he take into consideration the other suggestions I made a moment ago.

Mr. Grant Campbell (Stormont): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed astonished and surprised that hon. members opposite should take the position that the criteria announced by the minister will actually deprive those communities which need it most, such as Cornwall which I have the honour to represent, of the maximum benefits of this legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I am sorry, but I did not realize that the hon.

member was not in his seat. If the hon. gentleman wants to be heard in the house, will he please return to his seat?

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): This is only typical of what I would expect from some of those opposition members, some of those centralizers, who would impose on municipalities even without their consent the stigma of depressed areas. It is important that the municipalities themselves, which are in a position to know best their needs, have the onus to determine whether it is more to their benefit to have this double depreciation as an inducement to attract new industries or whether it may be counterbalanced by the adverse publicity attracted to the area. I have personal experience of this particular problem. Some weeks ago a Toronto paper published what I would say was a lengthy prejudicial article on my home town of Cornwall with the headline, "Cornwall, City of Idle Men". I must say that many people in my area took great and violent exception to this adverse and to some extent unwarranted publicity, although far be it from me to underestimate the degree of the consequent damage of unemployment either in my area or in others. However, I think that point must be clear.

This government is not going to impose any stigma on municipalities. They themselves must decide what is in their best interest and act accordingly. They are the ones who must initiate this aspect of the matter. If they decide that it is to their benefit to do so, I have no doubt that the Minister of Labour will give them every assistance in providing the necessary statistics to substantiate their case; but the onus must be where it should be, namely on those independent units of government, which are the root and base of the democratic organization of government.

Finally, if every community is going to be entitled to double depreciation, if every community has this additional inducement to attract industry, then those areas which require it most will not derive any special advantage. As I understand it, the chief reason for this legislation is that those whose need is greatest derive the maximum advantage; in other words, they derive some special advantage to attract industries into areas where they are most needed.

This whole process of decentralization of industry is long overdue and very necessary for the over-all health and balance of the national economy. There should be a large measure of decentralization, and this is one measure directed toward that end. I repeat, if every community is entitled to this special attraction, those who deserve it most will not derive any special benefit from it and the whole purpose of the legislation will be defeated. Presumably, from the facetious criticism of this legislation, it would appear that this is what the opposition is demanding, either inadvertently or by design.

I repeat, those areas which need these special inducements most are the ones which should receive full benefit from them. Obviously, if everybody gets them there is no special advantage to any area. I insist that this government had this matter obviously very much at heart when it devised this criterion having to do with the special benefit of double depreciation. Also, the thing that this government would never adopt is a dictatorial centralizing policy of imposing, if you want to call it that, the stigma or designation of depressed area on any community without that community's consent, or without that community knowing and saying that it is in its best interests that such be done and initiating action for the government to follow.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask a question of the hon. member who has just taken his seat? Does he not realize that governments now and for years past have been stating that certain communities in this country are labour surplus market areas? That is what we are talking about. That designation is being given by the government every day of the week to certain areas.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): It is a different thing entirely. Furthermore, in reply to the question of the Leader of the Opposition, does he not realize that there is a very valid distinction between a depressed area and an area of chronic unemployment?

Mr. Fisher: What is it?

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): There are some areas such as the maritimes where the general level of income might not correspond as compared with an area such as western Ontario and therefore they might be considered to be relatively depressed; but in certain areas that may be considered relatively depressed in that sense there may or may not be chronic unemployment. There is obviously a very real difference between the two.

Mr. Speaker: May I call it five o'clock? It being five o'clock, it is my duty to interrupt this debate in accordance with the standing order so that the house may proceed to the consideration of public and private bills, the former having precedence, pursuant to standing order 15, section 3.

Industrial Relations

APPLICATION OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING TO CROWN AND EMPLOYEES

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-14, to amend the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act (application to civil service).

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is getting to be a sort of perennial bill of mine. Its primary design has been explained in other years; it is to make the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act applicable to employees in the public service, with certain exceptions which I will enumerate in a moment.

The provisions of the act would apply to the employees in the public service in so far as certification of a bargaining agent is concerned. It would make applicable also the provisions relating to the negotiation of collective agreements, the conciliation procedures and the like except in so far as the operation of the conciliation board is concerned, and except in so far as strike action is concerned. I will explain all this in a moment.

The current procedure, which has been in existence for many years for that matter, is for the various organizations representing the employees in the public service to prepare demands, as it were, or requests, to the government in office for adjustments in their salary structure, hours of work, holidays and the like, and then to wait in attendance, with cap in hand, usually upon the minister of finance or the cabinet itself to make up his or its mind.

Last year we saw what I considered to be a most unfortunate system of establishing the salary structures of civil servants in that certain groups were selected for particular increases which were at variance with increases granted to other groups of employees, and in certain instances no adjustments whatever were made. This leads to a situation in which charges could be made of favouritism or of lack of knowledge on the part of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) or somebody else in attempting to bring the various salary structures of the various groups and types of employees in the public service into equity. In my opinion, it is the fundamental right of employees of any employer in this nation to be able to form into a union or an association, whatever they might call it, and to find through that union or association a means of solving the problems that arise as a result of their working conditions.

I do not believe we should draw too much distinction, although apparently in some instances it is desirous or necessary to do so, between employees who work in the public service of Canada, or what is classified as the civil service, and employees who work in industry or for crown corporations. However, a distinction is made. The employees of crown corporations and of private industry are able to band together and form a collective unit, apply for certification and sit down with their employers to negotiate collectively the terms of an agreement or contract covering their wages, hours, working conditions and the like. Employees in the public service do not have this right.

The employees in the public service are and have been considered by the government as being in a sort of second class position. They do not have the rights, privileges and responsibilities of other employees in society, namely those working in private industry or those working for crown corporations. This situation does not apply to wages alone, although I suppose in a material society this would be the first consideration of employees. There are other matters to be considered such as grievances, conditions of employment, hours of work, holidays, vacations with pay, sick leave, seniority rights and so on. All of these things form part of an employee's working conditions.

Apart from the fact this is a contradiction of our concept of that phrase made famous by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), "human rights and fundamental freedoms", I think it is bad psychology for a group of employees to have no outlet for their feelings in so far as management is concerned, no method of redress for their grievances, no manner of attaining what they consider to be correct hours, wages and working conditions. I suggest it is bad for a small group of employees to have their final destiny rest in the hands of a political figure who can tailor these working conditions to suit what he considers to be either budgetary measures or some political purpose. I feel that this outlet should be given to these people in order to draw them more directly into equity with the employees who are not working in the public service of Canada.

During the last session I introduced a similar bill and there was a great leal of discussion on it. It seems to me that the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Chown) participated in the debate, as did a number of other hon. members including the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Creaghan). At that time I do not believe there was much objection to the basic desire of providing the people in the public service of Canada with bargaining rights, but it was felt there was some infringement of the rights of parliament. The bill I introduced last session contained a provision that the report of the conciliation board established under the act would, in fact, be an arbitration board the decision of which would be final and binding both upon the government and the employees in the public service. The major objection to the measure revolved around the point that parliament was supreme and should remain supreme in its authority to control the expenditures of this nation. Yesterday, of course, we had an example of how this parliamentary authority had deteriorated a little bit when the resolution of the Minister of Finance on tariff matters gave the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) authority to vary taxes without any appeal.

However, the bill introduced during the last session contained a provision that the conciliation board report would be final and binding and objection was taken because it was felt parliament should have the final say in the expenditure of public moneys. Since I felt that the argument had some merit, I altered the bill this year in that respect. Otherwise, this bill is the same as the one introduced last year. When a conciliation board is established, and it completes its hearings and writes its report, that report shall be tabled by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) in the House of Commons either forthwith or, if the house is not sitting, within 10 days after the sittings commence. The House of Commons would be in a position then, in keeping with parliament's right to spend the money, either to accept or reject, amend or do as they liked with this report of the conciliation board.

One other matter was raised last session in connection with this proposal to establish a conciliation board. It was said that the appointment of a conciliation board under the circumstances envisaged in this bill would be weighted in favour of the government because, presumably the Minister of Finance would appoint one member of the board, the union of public service employees would appoint another, and if they could not agree upon a chairman then the Minister of Labour would appoint the chairman. As a result, two members of the board would be government appointees. However, I might say that, in this instance, I wanted to keep as much as possible within the provisions of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act and I would not want to malign the Minister of Labour in that way by suggesting that he would select a chairman of the conciliation board who would be favourable to the government's point of view.

In any event the report of that conciliation board would eventually be the document tabled in parliament, debated in parliament and decided in parliament, so that parliament would retain its hold on the purse strings of the nation so far as expenditures are concerned, and would also be, by the same token and at the same time, an arbitration board in respect of negotiations among the employees of the public service of Canada and the crown.

The bill is designed to bring justice, equality, fairness and decency into play in the relationships between employees in the federal services and the crown itself, and to assure as much as possible that employees in the public service are not looked upon and treated as second class citizens. The bill is designed to prevent decisions in regard to incomes and working conditions from being made on a political basis, which would continue their existence in a half state of being partly employees and partly not employees. I feel that the people of Canada, and particularly those employed in the public service, at the time of the passage of the bill of rights looked forward to the day when there would be equality of rights and opportunities. I feel that this bill is designed primarily to bring about just that situation.

Mr. W. L. M. Creaghan (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, on February 5, 1960, we had a similar debate in regard to Bill C-9 introduced last year by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). That bill was a little different in form although it had the same title. There was very little opportunity at that time for debate and, unfortunately, we are now in similar circumstances today.

I had the opportunity at that time of speaking for approximately two or three minutes during which time I mentioned that the bill would conflict with section 28 of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. I am afraid we are faced with the same problem in regard to the bill being discussed today. The hon. member for Skeena mentioned the difficulties in regard to section 28 and I feel that he is correct in his statement. The present Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act provides that before a conciliation board can be appointed management—in this case the government—must appoint a member; the employees association must appoint a member and, in the event they cannot agree within a period of five days, the Minister of Labour must appoint a third member as chairman.

Unlike the hon. member for Skeena I cannot assume or believe that such a board recommended by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) would be necessarily fair to the civil service association. In order to overcome that difficulty in this bill it will be necessary to add to part II of the act, a new section setting up a board of conciliation specifically designed to consider disputes between employees and the government, as apart from those between employees and private industry. I believe an amendment such as that which I have described should apply in regard to crown corporations as well as to the civil service association because it is possible that wage earners, particularly C.N.R. employees, could find themselves in the same position as do civil servants.

Last year, Mr. Speaker, the government introduced a bill to increase superannuation payments to civil servants. That bill was then referred to a sessional committee of the house. I would suggest that when a similar committee is formed this year the bill now under discussion should be referred to a committee in order that it can be considered by civil service associations and members of parliament.

On March 2, 1961, the Minister of Finance moved first reading to Bill C-71 which is entitled "An act respecting the civil service of Canada". Bill C-71 is a complete revision of the Civil Service Act. I understand it contains a proposal closely related to collective bargaining. I should like to refer hon. members to the March 1 edition of the Ottawa Journal which contains reference to this new step. The main article was written by Richard Jackson, and the opening paragraph is as follows:

> An important step in the direction of collective bargaining for Civil servants is being taken in the revised Civil Service Act, the Journal learned today.

The article continues as follows:

> This is a concession that staff associations for years have sought and has been included in a brief filed by one of the big civil service organizations with the Glassco Royal Commission on government organization.

In the same newspaper at page 4 there appears an extract from interviews with some of the heads of the civil service associations. Mr. Fred Whitehouse is quoted as follows:

> "—if the report is correct, it is certainly a step forward."

Hon. members will realize that Mr. Whitehouse is president of the Civil Service Federation of Canada.

Mr. J. C. Best, president of the Civil Service Association of Canada was also interviewed and is reported as follows:

> "If the report is correct I am very happy to learn the government has recognized the weakness in the previous bill".

Because of the length of the session last year, it was impossible to have a further debate on Bill No. C-9. I understand that Bill C-71 provides that the civil service commissioners shall consult with civil service employees associations with respect to pay and conditions of employment. If this is a provision of the new bill it will mean that meetings will soon take place at the request of the civil service association rather than only at the direction of the minister or the civil service commission. This is a step towards collective bargaining, and I believe it is a welcome one. There seems to be a trend towards collective bargaining for all employees in Canada. Whether or not there will be full collective bargaining in the civil service in the immediate future remains to be seen, but much progress has been made in this direction during the past three years.

The annual report of the civil service commission for the year 1959 shows that during that year there were ten meetings of the advisory committee on pay research. When one realizes that this committee is composed of one of the commissioners and representatives of the staff associations and treasury board, one can see that not only have the Minister of Finance and the civil service commission an opportunity to bring forward recommendations, but this opportunity also exists for the employees.

I do not think the bill introduced by the hon. member for Skeena would be operative, but I wish to state that I am in complete agreement with that part of it which deals with collective bargaining. However, I do not think it would be possible for a conciliation board to solve the problem. Unless the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) extended the provisions of the act, it would be necessary for the conciliation board, when handling a federal employees' wage dispute, to submit a report within 14 days. That would be an impossibility when one realizes that there are approximately 1,900 staff classifications.

If the bill were passed in its present form it would mean that members of parliament would become bargaining agents for the civil service. We would be charged with the responsibility of negotiation in connection with the salaries of the civil service. Clause 1 of the bill provides that this house would have the responsibility, after the report had been submitted, to accept, reject or amend it. This is a complete change from what I understand to be the type of government we have under our constitution.

Hon. members realize that we have an executive and a legislative type of government. If the responsibility rested with the House of Commons, there would be taken away from the executive its responsibility of determining what was a decent wage. I feel that when the sessional committee is set up to review the Civil Service Act introduced on March 2, the subject matter contained in this bill will be fully studied by the committee, and the staff associations will once again insist upon some sort of collective bargaining.

In conclusion I should like to quote from the magazine Saturday Night of December 5, 1959, which contains an article on the civil service. The article is entitled:

The civil service: Pay it well or cut its numbers.

In that article the author quotes the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) as follows:

"For many years it has been generally accepted that two main principles should guide the determination of salaries in the service. First the salaries must be enough to do the job, that is to attract enough of the right kind of men and women into the service and keep them in it; second, they must be fair as between civil servants and people outside the service, the taxpayers if you will, which means that the salaries we pay for any class of work should be comparable with those paid by private employers for similar classes of work, taking into account the other terms of employment that are necessary to make a fair comparison."

Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that the civil service commission, the pay research bureau, the advisory committee, treasury board, the staff associations and the members of this house will always recognize those two principles as fair and proper in all wage negotiations.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, to begin with, I believe the time has come when some sort of collective bargaining for the civil service should be seriously considered. The hon. member who has just resumed his seat referred to the bill introduced yesterday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). I secured a copy of this bill from the table, but I think it would be out of order at this time to discuss it. In the first place it would be anticipating debate on second reading and discussion in committee, and in the second place it would raise some doubt as to whether we should be discussing the bill now under consideration.

The civil servant is in a unique position because as an employee of the crown he is actually a part of the crown and is entitled to the many rights and privileges which the crown enjoys, particularly as to salary exemptions. Furthermore, under the Civil Service Act the civil servant has reasonable security of tenure, which people in other branches of the labour force would very much like to have, particularly in this present age of shifting employment opportunities in this country and throughout the North American continent.

On the other hand, I do not think the position of the civil servant is properly understood by the general public. The general public sees him as a person who is sure of his job and salary, and who will be paid regardless of the duties he may have to perform from time to time. Another disadvantage that the civil servant has is that he must take the consequences of policy decisions and must try to carry them out in dealing with the general public.

I think the civil servant suffers more than does any other person from the inefficiency of persons higher up in his particular department. In ordinary commerce and business, if a person is not doing a job satisfactorily he is transferred or dismissed and someone else is put in his place. In the set-up of the civil service at the present time it is most difficult to do this. If you have one person in the chain of command who is inefficient, it brings about inefficiency and dissatisfaction on the part of those who are beneath him in that particular department, and civil servants become disgruntled and discouraged with their position.

In other lines of employment in the commercial world dissatisfaction with pay or working conditions, or with persons who are supervisors, results in strike action if the situation is not remedied. However, by tradition strike action is not taken by civil servants; it is against the policy of the service. In this connection I should like to quote from a leaflet put out by the National Defence Employees Association in connection with this very problem. This magazine was issued in August, 1960, and it contains on page 2 an article by a member of the executive committee saying that the association has assured the government that civil servants will never consider strike action come what may. This puts the association and its employees in a difficult position because they have very little bargaining power when their ability to strike is completely impaired. Yet this embargo on strike action is imposed not by any outside authority but by the voluntary action of the association itself. I should like to quote from the article on page 2:

Let me say this, and I speak as a past president of a union and a member of the CLC, I have opposed strike action by the NDEA and for the following reasons:

We civilians who work for DND in teamwork with servicemen in uniform, have a responsibility to the defence and security of our great nation. We should never forget this.

We have civilians guarding our frontiers alongside service people in technical capacities in remote areas of our land.

We have cipher clerks, typists and mechanics working at alert stations of Navy, Army and Air Force, prepared at a moment's notice to defend our country. Whether they are administration, messing staffs or tradesmen, each by their responsibilities, from the cleaner to the Minister of the Department, are making a contribution to the whole picture of defence.

The enemies of a free and democratic society would be pleased to see a strike against Canada's defensive structure. It could be an invitation.

Thus we find that this restriction has been placed on civil servants generally by their own action and by their own association. Therefore, we must consider what outlet these people have when they have a complaint to make in connection with their treatment by their employers.

Regardless of what might be said by various people or organizations, I believe that the government has been most fair in its treatment of its civil servants as to salaries. There are those who would not agree. There are those in categories which did not qualify for an increase who would not agree at all. Yet looking at the over-all picture we find that this government has brought about increases fairly generally across the board. In order to back up this assertion I looked into some figures on the labour force employed by the federal government and the latest information I can find is contained in the December 9 issue of the weekly bulletin put out by the dominion bureau of statistics. I am quoting from the article on page 6 under the heading "Labour".

> Federal government employees in September this year numbered 346,084 and their earnings totalled $121,983,000, according to advance DBS figures that will be contained in the September issue of "Federal Government Employment". Excluding staff employed outside Canada by agency and proprietary corporations and other agencies, the total for the month was 337,643 employees versus 342,621 a year earlier and earnings were $118,137,000 against $113,444,000.

I note from the figures that there were fewer employees of the federal government in September, but that they earned more money. The figures indicate an average of $350 in salary per month for government employees. I continue the quotation:

> Employees in departmental branches, services and corporations numbered 199,884 in September this year as against 197,743 in the corresponding month last year and had earnings of $67,822,000 versus $60,967,000. Earnings for the half year April 1 to September 30 increased by $23,900,727 to $391,021,388 as compared to a year earlier owing largely to salary increases announced at various dates during this year. Most of the salaried employees in the federal service had received increases by September 30.

Those quotations from the dominion bureau of statistics show, I believe, that reasonable increases have been granted almost across the board to persons in the government services. However, that is not the point at issue. The principle is not whether this government treats its employees well or whether some future government will do so, or whether some past government did so. The point is whether the civil service is to be completely subject to the whim of any government without any opportunity for consultation or any opportunity of putting forward its view on salaries or working conditions to a body such as an arbitration board.

Yesterday, the Minister of Finance introduced Bill No. C-71 in the house. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, I do not think I should discuss that bill but I may, perhaps, mention that there is in it clause 7 which seems to go some way along the line I have indicated. However, that bill will be discussed at some later time and maybe it will be found suitable to the situation. It may be that some amendment will be brought in to make it more suitable, or that other action may be taken by the house and the committees of the house.

In the meantime, to deal with the bill presented by the hon. member, I should like to say that the idea behind it is, in my opinion, to be commended. I think it goes too far in relating the civil service to the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act and in making civil servants subject to it. I believe that any question of working conditions and salaries ought to come under the provisions of the Civil Service Act. For this reason I think a final decision on the bill before us, Bill No. C-14, should not be made until after the house has had an opportunity of examining and discussing the bill relating to the civil service commission which was introduced yesterday.

Mr. J. T. Richard (Ottawa East): For many years civil servants have been seeking a greater voice in deciding the problems which affect their working conditions and their salaries. The bill which is now before us is a repeater and members of this house who have been here for some years are familiar with its content.

As the last speaker said, I think we all find the purpose of the bill to be commendable in that it would give a greater voice to the civil service in deciding matters which affect them. However, at this stage it would be a little premature to agree entirely with the provisions contained in the bill. In the first place I am not at all impressed with the idea of making use of the House of Commons as a final court of justice in deciding all the problems of civil servants because I think we could have sessions which would last a full year in which the time of the house would be employed doing only that.

If I were to draft a bill according to my own views I would rather stop right there and say that once the report had been made it would be final. In that way there would be at least some finality. There would never be any finality if the report were subject to debate in the House of Commons. I am sure there would be large sectors of the house that would never want the question to come to a vote or to make their own views known with any finality on some of the problems that would be brought before the house.

I do not agree that the House of Commons should be the final court of judgment as stated in the bill. I do agree, however, that the time has come when there will have to be not only consultation but some provision under which civil servants and the government could agree to have a board or some meeting place where there will be an opportunity to make their representations and to have some finality in the decisions.

I would speak to greater length on this subject were it not for the fact that we have on the order paper Bill No. C-71 which we cannot discuss here today but which I hope in a short while will be considered not only in the house but in a committee. At that time we will have the views of the various civil service organizations in Canada and we will be able to express our own views.

To my friend the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) I say that I agree with the principle of the bill but in view of the fact that we will be discussing Bill No. C-71, perhaps at an early date, there will be ample opportunity then to make known our views and to find out exactly what means the different organizations of civil servants in Canada are able to suggest to remedy a situation which must be corrected.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the house has expressed general agreement with the purpose of the bill through previous speakers. I feel that the views expressed by the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard) come close to what we all think with regard to this matter.

I want to give credit to the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) for amending his bill this year in an effort to answer some of the criticisms which were made of it last year. I feel, however, that his effort to make these changes has led him into even more trouble. I simply point out the fact that the hon. member has chosen the wrong way in which to deal with this problem.

I disagree with some of the expressions the hon. member used in his opening remarks when he spoke of members of the civil service and their representatives waiting on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) usually with cap in hand and when he used the expressions "inequality in pay schedules result in favouritism" and "the lack of knowledge on the part of some political figure" meaning, of course, the Minister of Finance.

The hon. member knows very well that pay schedules are recommended through the pay research bureau of the civil service commission and that the commission is in charge of setting up classifications and minimum and maximum wages which will apply to each classification and is supposed to be in the position of reviewing these classifications.

Referring to the debate of last year I find that at page 801 of Hansard of February 5, 1960 the hon. member for Skeena used expressions which do not help the cause he is championing. He said, for instance, as reported at that page:

> This government in its dealings with its employees, is just about as cheap and chiselling as any private industry I have run into.

He spoke about the employees being treated with scorn and disdain. He described them as second-class citizens. In his remarks today the hon. member said that the civil servants were in second-class positions and were second-class citizens and that their income and working conditions were decided upon by a political figure for whom one can only assume the hon. member has not much respect. That is certainly not the climate in which to present a bill the object of which is felt to be good in its intention. The bill itself, however, is a poor measure.

In dealing with that portion of the bill relating to a conciliation board the hon. member pointed out that the board would be composed of one member nominated by the Minister of Finance and one nominated by the employee association or union. If the nominees could not agree upon a chairman, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) would nominate the chairman. As I read the bill the report brought in by this board would be binding upon the employees but not upon the employer.

In his remarks last year the hon. member indicated that the intent of this bill was to cover civil service employees and the employees of crown corporations. As reported at page 801 of Hansard of February 5, 1960 the hon. member said:

> If there are rights and principles to be established so that justice will be equitably applied, these rights and principles should apply across the board to all employees whether they work for the Department of Labour under the direction of the Minister of Labour or whether they work for Canadian National Railways, Trans-Canada Air Lines or any of the other crown corporations.

We know that at least the employees of the C.N.R. are served by some of the soundest unions in Canada. As I read this bill the hon. member is now saying to those employees and unions, in effect, "You shall now have compulsory arbitration which will be binding on you, the employees, but which will not be binding on your employers."

I wonder how anyone who claims to have been a union official and who claims to speak on behalf of the unions can put forward a proposition of that nature which takes all rights away from the employees and vests them in a board which, according to the hon. member's statement, in respect of the government nominees would be composed of a member and perhaps a chairman nominated by people on whom the hon. member seems to have no reliance and in whom he has no trust or faith.

The report of that board must be binding on the employees if it is accepted by parliament under the terms of this bill. What if parliament wants to amend the report? What if there were any increases or changes to reduce any benefits that might be given? Parliament could make those changes and those changes would be binding on the employee.

I remember that in the estimates committee we reviewed the workings of the civil service commission. It does seem to me that within the civil service there are many areas where employees have just grievances, and there is no opportunity for them to air their grievances and to bring them out into the open or to get corrective action. I would refer to one instance only and that is in regard to rating cards for civil service employees. There should be uniformity throughout the service, but we find that one department will have a supervisor rate an employee and show the rating to the employee. In another department an employee is rated and he can never see the card, or find out what his superiors said about him. He has no idea what his rating is in that department. There is the right of appeal, of course. But, as we heard, in many instances the right of appeal did not mean very much. In any service as large as the civil service of Canada, you are bound to run into cases of favouritism, bias and discrimination. It is those areas of working conditions which hurt just as much as does the matter of take-home pay.

As the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) has pointed out, on March 2, Bill No. C-71 respecting the civil service of Canada was introduced. This is in keeping with the speech from the throne which said that a bill to revise the Civil Service Act would again be submitted to parliament. The bill is now before us. As the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka indicated, we cannot discuss the details of the bill but it contains provisions which will give us opportunity for a full discussion of how there shall be consultation and meetings between representatives of staff organizations and the civil service commission or such persons as may be appointed by the Minister of Finance to take care of those problems which concern the various service organizations. When that bill is up for discussion there will be ample opportunity to debate this section and others which have to do with the setting up of pay scales. There will be opportunity for full debate on second reading, and when the bill is referred to the special committee, as the hon. member for Ottawa East said, there will be opportunity for the civil service associations to appear and make their views known. There will be equal opportunity for hon. members to find out what are the facts and then in their judgment to decide how the house should deal with those particular problems. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, there is really no particular point in discussing this bill at this time.

I can remember the time a year ago when the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. McLennan), other British Columbia members and I met with the joint action committee. There we met with the chairman of that committee, Mr. Stan Stonier, one of the finest civil servants it has been my pleasure to meet. I can truthfully say that when tempers ran highest these were reasonable men who had a spirit of give and take and with whose aspirations I have the fullest sympathy.

I regret that we should be discussing a bill such as this and that the remarks made on its introduction should be so out of keeping with the spirit of the bill. We have a bill before us and we shall have a committee which will give it full consideration. In addition we have a royal commission which is to make recommendations for better operation of the civil service and perhaps within their recommendations many of the points covered by the hon. member will be taken into account.

I move the adjournment of the debate, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Howard: On division.

On motion of Mr. Broome the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I have an indication from the house leader of what the business will be for next week?

Mr. Churchill: Monday will be private members' day. On Tuesday we will commence with item No. 11 on today's order paper, which is a resolution in the name of the Minister of Finance dealing with the tariff board.

The second item on Tuesday is No. 1 on today's order paper, second reading of Bill No. C-47, to amend the Fire Losses Replacement Account Act. The third and fourth items on Tuesday will be items No. 5 and No. 6 on today's order paper dealing with certain insurance companies acts, and these will be referred to the banking and commerce committee, so I expect that there would not be a prolonged debate on those two items. That is a firm arrangement for Tuesday.

For Wednesday I am not able to be as specific. This is subject to change, but on Wednesday we will likely be considering the Civil Service Act, which in its turn will go to a special committee as it did last year.

Next is the agricultural development resolution which we were dealing with the other day—it is No. 16 on today's order paper—and the income tax bill, which is No. C-73. Members should be prepared for these items next week, but I will know more definitely on Monday night whether these are the items and, if so, in what order they will come. If we make any progress with the legislation on Tuesday and Wednesday, then on Thursday, either at the beginning of the day or shortly thereafter, we will carry on with the estimates of the Department of Labour, unless the opposition wants to change to something else. We will carry on with these estimates on Friday. In view of the fact that the opposition changed the order of business today, I hope they will not mind if I change the order of business next week.

Mr. Chevrier: We may want to change it again.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 6, 1961

The house met at 2:30 p.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

STANDING ORDERS—CONCURRENCE IN FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. R. A. Webb (for Miss Aiken) moved that the fifth report of the committee on standing orders, presented to the house on Thursday, March 2, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Third report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. McCleave.

UNITED NATIONS

CONGO—STATEMENT ON CLASH AT MATADI

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the house will wish me to make a statement about the incident which took place over the week end in the Congo when Canadian soldiers were involved in fighting between United Nations forces and Congolese troops at Matadi, a port city on the Congo river some 160 miles southwest of Leopoldville, and the chief sea supply centre for United Nations operations in the Congo.

At about noon on Saturday, March 4, Leopoldville time, elements of the Conogolese army attacked a United Nations force stationed at Matadi. This force consisted of Sudanese infantry and a detachment of the Royal Canadian Corps of Signals which was operating the communications station for the United Nations command at that centre. The United Nations force returned the fire. The building in which the communications station was housed was hit by anti-tank, mortar and small arms fire.

Direct communications between the United Nations headquarters in Leopoldville and Matadi ceased at about 4.30 p.m. Saturday, Leopoldville time.

As soon as information of the attack was received in Ottawa on Sunday morning the Canadian permanent representative in New York, under my instructions, got in touch with the secretary general to try to establish the facts and to express the grave concern of the Canadian government about the fate of our men.

I also instructed the Canadian consul general in Leopoldville to see President Kasavubu and the Congolese central authorities to express the anxiety and indignation of the Canadian government at the treatment of these and other Canadian personnel sent out to the Congo as part of the United Nations effort to restore stability and order. He was instructed to call upon them to do everything in their power to ensure the safety and protection of Canadian personnel. He was also to approach the representative of the secretary general in the Congo and the United Nations commander to obtain the release of our men.

Yesterday afternoon I received a report from our permanent representative in New York that a cease-fire had been arranged by the United Nations authorities with the Congolese at 11 a.m. local time on March 5. A period had been arranged for the exchange of prisoners and for the restoration of order, and for this purpose a mixed United Nations-Congolese commission was being set up. This report gave the names of the Canadians involved in the fighting as follows: Captain G. E. Belanger, Staff-Sergeant L. H. Harris, Sergeant F. B. Wood; Signalmen C. G. Bates, R. M. Beggs, C. B. Bostwick, G. A. Janules, D. J. Murphy and H. B. Strike.

In this initial report no Canadian casualties were listed but seven Sudanese troops were reported missing. It was stated that the secretary general had sent a protest direct to President Kasavubu about the Canadian and other detainees. Yesterday afternoon I received a further report from the Canadian permanent representative who had been informed by UN headquarters in New York that eight of the nine Canadians whose names I have given had been released and brought from Matadi to Leopoldville by United Nations plane. Three of our men were described as slightly wounded.

It was stated that Captain Belanger had not been included among those released by the Congolese forces to the United Nations. Captain Belanger had gone out to arrange a cease-fire at about four o'clock Congo time, March 4, and had not been seen thereafter. He was therefore listed as missing and action was taken to have his next of kin informed.

However, according to a report received half an hour ago, Captain Belanger has since arrived unhurt in Leopoldville. After the anxiety caused by the prolonged uncertainty about his fate, I am sure the house and Canadians everywhere will share my relief at this good news.

At this time I can only add that the Canadian government is deeply conscious of the indignation which must fill the hearts of all Canadians at the way in which Canadian troops have been treated by the Congolese forces. The Canadian government, through the United Nations Congo advisory committee in New York, is consulting with other governments which have forces under the United Nations command about the serious situation resulting from the apparent lack of control by Congolese authorities over their own troops, and about measures which can be taken to remedy the situation.

The United Nations is taking steps to build up the strength of its forces, and it is hoped that the presence of reinforcements will enable it to give increased support to its operations, especially in outlying areas.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I am sure all members of the house will have heard with both interest and relief the statement the minister has just made about the position of our Canadian troops with the United Nations forces in the Congo. There has, understandably, been created during the week end anxiety about that position in view of the reports which have come from the Congo; and while I think all Canadians realize that our members of this force have to face difficulties and dangers in an unprecedented operation of this kind, especially when facing troops of the local governments who seem to get out of control much too easily, nevertheless we all feel that whatever security can be given to them by the United Nations should be given. In particular, I think, anxiety was created by reports in the press to the effect that United Nations forces in defending themselves against the attacks were at times runing out of ammunition.

We can all join the minister in the tribute he has paid to our forces in the Congo, who have shown courage and discipline beyond all praise.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I am sure all Canadians were concerned over the reports which were being received over the week end, and on that account we particularly appreciate the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Also, I might say, we congratulate him on his prompt inquiries into this situation which so greatly concerned the Canadian people.

I am sure everyone is relieved to know that all the personnel who were mentioned are now safe. I am certain it is correct to say that this incident highlights the fact that Canadian troops and forces in the Congo are taking risks and making great sacrifices for a cause to which we are all devoted.

[Mr. Green.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUBSTITUTION OF NAME OF SPONSOR OF MOTION

Mr. O. H. Phillips (Prince): By unanimous consent it has been agreed that the name of Mr. Macquarrie (Queen's) be substituted for that of Mr. Macdonald (Kings) as sponsor of the notice of motion No. 7 as set out in the routine proceedings and orders of the day.

Mr. Speaker: The house has heard the request which has been made. Is there unanimous consent forthcoming for the change?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ORDERS IN COUNCIL FIXING DUTIES

Motion No. 50—Mr. Benidickson:

For copies of orders issued by the Minister of National Revenue since December 1, 1958, under the provisions of section 38 of the Customs Act for the purposes of fixing duties.

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister, who has not completed the examination of the documents, may I ask that this motion be allowed to stand.

Motion stands.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COVERAGE INSTRUCTIONS—FORESTRY

Motion No. 61—Mr. Racine:

For a copy of coverage instructions C-411, C-440 to C-444 inclusive, and of any amendments thereto, with regard to employment in forestry, as contained in the new insurance coverage manual issued in October 1955 by the unemployment insurance commission, together with the corresponding instructions contained in the insurance coverage manual issued in January 1950.

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister may I ask that this motion stand.

Motion stands.

ACCESS ROAD, WERNER LAKE, ONT.

Motion No. 67—Mr. Benidickson:

For a copy of all agreements and correspondence between the governments of the province of Manitoba and the province of Ontario and the federal government since May 1, 1957, relating to the construction of an access road or a road to resources to serve the metal properties situate near Werner lake, northwest of Minaki in Ontario.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable subject to the usual reservations.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister would indicate the reservation he has in mind, in accordance with our discussion of the other day.

Mr. Dinsdale: The main reservation, Mr. Speaker, has regard to the agreement of the provinces. Also, some of these documents have been tabled on previous occasions and in this case will be excepted.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the explanation is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

NAME FOR INTERPROVINCIAL BRIDGE OTTAWA-HULL

Motion No. 68—Mr. Caron:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, contracts, agreements, and any other documents exchanged between the federal government, the provincial governments of Quebec and Ontario, and the municipalities of Hull and Ottawa, since June 1960, with respect to a name for the bridge to be erected over the Ottawa river connecting the cities of Hull and Ottawa.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, this motion is quite acceptable subject to obtaining the agreement of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario.

Motion agreed to.

BRIDGE CONSTRUCTION, OTTAWA-HULL

Motion No. 69—Mr. Caron:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, contracts, agreements, and other documents exchanged between the federal government and the provincial government of Quebec, since November 15, 1955, concerning the construction of a bridge over the Ottawa river between the cities of Hull and Ottawa.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this order is acceptable subject to obtaining the consent of the provincial government.

Motion agreed to.

CKY-FM STATION, WINNIPEG—STATEMENT BY B.B.G. CHAIRMAN

Motion No. 70—Mr. Benidickson:

For a copy of the statement of the chairman of the board of broadcast governors referred to by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Revenue, February 27, 1961, (Hansard, page 2448) relating to an application by radio station CKY Winnipeg, for authority to establish an FM broadcasting station.

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, this motion is quite acceptable.

Motion agreed to.

DRUGS—REGULATIONS RESPECTING QUALITY CONTROL

Motion No. 71—Mr. Howard:

For a copy of the proposed regulations by the food and drug directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare regarding the control of the quality of pharmaceuticals, and for a copy of all telegrams, correspondence, submissions, and other documents received by the department or the directorate regarding the said proposed regulations, and for a copy of all communications exchanged between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the director of the food and drug directorate or any other person regarding the said proposed regulations, since July 1, 1960.

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister I would ask that order No. 71 stand.

Motion stands.

OTTAWA—EVACUATION PRIORITIES IN EVENT OF NUCLEAR WAR

Motion No. 72—Mr. Fisher (for Mr. Regier):

For a listing of names and addresses on a priority basis of all those people who are supposed to be moved out of Ottawa to a supposedly safe place of refuge in case of a nuclear war.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might say a word about this motion. On August 10, 1960, the Prime Minister reported to the house—his statement is to be found in Hansard at page 7943—on provisions for continuity of government in wartime. He said:

> Provision must be made for suitable accommodation and essential communications. The functions to be carried on in an emergency must be determined now and individuals who will be concerned must be selected and trained.

The various federal departments involved in plans for continuity of government have been engaged in selecting the required key personnel. They would staff the central emergency facilities, together with personnel of the Canadian army. They would endeavour to meet those responsibilities arising in the emergencies of nuclear war.

It is not considered in the public interest that the names of those officials or their functions be publicized at this time. I am sure hon. members will appreciate that should this terrible emergency arise, it would be very unfortunate if enemies were able to take steps beforehand simply because of some information of this kind having been disclosed to the house.

Mr. Speaker: In the absence of the hon. member in whose name this motion stands on the order paper I cannot very well ask that it be withdrawn. I suggest that it stand until he is present, when a request for withdrawal might be in order.

Motion stands.

Inquiries of the Ministry

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

REPORTED STATEMENT OF PRIME MINISTER OF MALAYA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister a question arising out of a statement attributed to the Prime Minister of the Federation of Malaya on reaching London to the effect, and I quote, "There is some understanding between Mr. Diefenbaker and me". He was referring to the South African question now before the prime ministers' conference. Can the Acting Prime Minister give the house some indication of the nature of this reported understanding?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course this was a newspaper report, and the statement may have been made as the result of a question, but so far as I am aware there is no understanding between Canada and any of the other countries as to what will be done at this conference.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ESTABLISHMENT OF PEACE CORPS TO AID UNDERDEVELOPED COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the general support of Canadians for economic and technical assistance to underdeveloped countries, has the government given any consideration to the establishment of a specially trained corps for work in underdeveloped countries, along the lines of the peace corps being established by President Kennedy?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, Canada has been very active in promoting various types of assistance, including the training of personnel from other nations, and in the sending of Canadian personnel abroad. I announced in the house on Friday a new plan under which a Canadian university would be co-operating with the University of Malaya. We are doing everything we can to extend technical assistance of every kind which is at all feasible. I think there are also some volunteer activities being undertaken, for example, in Toronto, but we have not adopted the plan announced by President Kennedy. We are following it with great interest, and the hon. member can rest assured that, if feasible, any plan that seems to make common sense will be of great interest to the government.

Mr. Argue: A supplementary question. Can the minister inform the house what assistance the federal government is giving in the provision of French speaking teachers for various parts of the world from which such requests have been made recently?

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the hon. member has not been able to give notice of this question. It seems to me it is one of those which would require statistical information. It might well go on the order paper.

Mr. Argue: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs is well acquainted with this field and with the requests that have been made.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, we are trying to work out a plan under which assistance of this type will be given. I am not yet in a position to make any announcement, but we are very much interested in such a plan. There would seem to be a very big scope for Canadian assistance to the new French speaking nations.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

BOMARC MISSILES—INQUIRY AS TO USE OF ATOMIC WARHEADS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. In view of the statement by the minister that the two bases now under construction at North Bay and Mont Laurier will provide an effective defence shield against an attack on major Canadian industrial areas, a statement which he made at a mess dinner in Montreal on Saturday as reported in the Gazette this morning, does this mean that the government has now decided to equip the Bomarc missiles with atomic warheads?

(Translation):

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question, I must say that, in fact, I did state Friday night that the Bomarc missiles were considered an effective defence against bomber attacks. In the course of my speech, I did not develop any point other than the one I just mentioned.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? In view of the statement he just made, may I ask the minister at what time nuclear weapons will become effective for the protection of industrial areas in this country?

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the supplementary question of the hon. member for Laurier, I should like to tell him that it has been stated quite often that the Bomarc missile can be equipped with a nuclear or conventional weapon. As to the possible use of conventional weapons or nuclear missiles, I refer him to the many statements made in this house by the Prime Minister on this matter. I think that the hon. member for Laurier is familiar with those statements.

(Text):

PETAWAWA—INQUIRY AS TO RESULTS OF INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence a question. Because of the great interest created across Canada by the announcement that he had sent an investigating team of three staff officers to Petawawa to look into certain matters of interest, and in view of the fact that, according to the press, they made their report last Friday, is the minister now in a position to inform the house and others who have a great interest in this matter as to the findings of the investigating team he sent to Petawawa last week?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker. The officers concerned have not yet made their report to me.

AIRPORTS

WINNIPEG—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON NEW TERMINAL BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gordon Chown (Winnipeg South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Transport, which he can take as notice. Would the Minister of Transport obtain a progress report on the construction of the new terminal building at Winnipeg's international airport, with particular emphasis on the use of Canadian content, the settlement of the access road problem and the status of the tenders to construct the main building, which were opened at Ottawa on November 25, 1960, with the lowest bid being by Commonwealth Construction Limited?

Hon. George H. Hees (Acting Minister of Transport): In the absence of the Minister of Transport I will take the question as notice and bring it to his attention when he returns.

TRANSPORT

BORDEN, P.E.I.—ACCIDENT TO CAR FERRY "PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. H. Phillips (Prince): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Transport. Is he in a position to report on the accident suffered by the car ferry Prince Edward Island on Friday last?

Hon. George H. Hees (Acting Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. The management of the Canadian National Railways advise that due to difficult navigation and weather conditions the car ferry Prince Edward Island struck the pier at Borden. The extent of the damage to the ship is not known at the moment, but an inspection is now being carried out which will determine whether or not drydocking will be necessary. The management add that the motor vessel Abegweit is capable of maintaining the service between the island and the mainland satisfactorily.

FISHERIES

NEWFOUNDLAND—REPORTED OPERATION OF FOREIGN DRAGGERS AT NIGHT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Will the minister please advise the house whether an investigation was made by the destroyer Sioux to ascertain whether foreign trawlers have been fishing within the three mile limit of the cost of Newfoundland? If so, what was the result of the investigation?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, about a week ago, owing to reports of a number of foreign fishing vessels operating near our territorial waters in the general area of Port aux Basques and Rose Blanche, I asked assistance from the Department of National Defence for patrol work in that area. They provided an aircraft and the assistance of the destroyer Micmac for several days. I have not received a full report from the Micmac (as yet). When I have received it I will report to the hon. member. There is nothing further I can add at the moment until I have a further report.

SINCLAIR REPORT—INQUIRY AS TO TABLING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries and ask him whether today is that long awaited and eventful day on which he will table Doctor Sinclair's report.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

REQUEST FOR PRINTING OF ILLUSTRATIVE TABLES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): In the absence of the Minister of Finance I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary whether he would be willing to table and seek permission of the house to have printed in Hansard the three illustrative tables, the names of which I could give but I do not think he would ask me to do so, that were distributed at the same time as the Prime Minister's proposals to the federal-provincial conference and were made public at that time, so they will be available in Hansard to hon. members for purposes of reference.

Mr. Richard A. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): I shall draw the hon. gentleman's request to the attention of the Minister of Finance, who will be back in the house tomorrow and will be able to deal with it.

UNITED NATIONS

CONGO—REQUEST THAT SPECIAL ALLOWANCE FOR SERVICE PERSONNEL BE RETROACTIVE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. Payne (Coast-Capilano): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. It has been reported in the press that the commander of the Canadian forces in the Congo has asked that the special allowance authorized for Canadian troups in that area be made retroactive to the date of the establishment of the force. Has the government given any consideration to this recommendation?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The house will recall, I think, that based on a treasury board recommendation it was announced on February 10 that all ranks serving in the Congo would receive a special allowance of $100 a month in addition to their normal pay and allowances, retroactive to December 1, 1960.

Now, after consideration of all the factors involved, the government has decided to make the special allowance payable to all Canadian forces who have served in the Congo, effective from the date of their arrival in that area.

At the present time the Canadian army has some 280 soldiers serving in the Congo and the Royal Canadian Air Force has approximately 30 officers and men stationed there.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Is the minister not aware of the fact that when this question was asked of him from this side a short time ago he said that no change was contemplated.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I have not the Hansard before me, but I do not think I said that no change was contemplated at that time. However, whether or not that is the case, a change has now been made.

TRADE

URANIUM—INQUIRY AS TO REVISION OF U.K. CONTRACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Drysdale (Burnaby-Richmond): Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce indicate to the house whether he has received any inquiries from the United Kingdom government or the United Kingdom atomic energy authority concerning possible cancellation or renegotiation of a uranium contract involving 24 million pounds of uranium, delivery to be made commencing March 31, 1963?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian government through its crown corporation, the Eldorado company, has a firm contract with the British atomic energy authority. I have received from the British authorities no indication that they do not intend to honour this contract. In fact I would be greatly surprised and even amazed if I received such an indication from them, because in my opinion the British government has always been a government which honours its obligations.

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER SALES TO CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): In the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I should like to ask a question of the parliamentary secretary, arising out of a report that the general manager of the Australian wheat board is going to Peking from Hong Kong in order to discuss further sales of wheat to communist China. My question is this. Is the Canadian delegation now in Hong Kong for the purpose of negotiating a further contract also going to Peking to this end?

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): I have no knowledge of this matter, Mr. Speaker. However, I will draw the question to the minister's attention.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO ALTERATION IN RATES ON FOREIGN PUBLICATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Postmaster General a question, of which he has had notice of a kind. Has the government under consideration statutory changes which would alter either the classification or the postal rates paid on foreign published and printed periodicals which are transported by various methods into Canada and mailed here to Canadians?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Until such time as the report of the royal commission on publications is presented and we have had a chance to study it, I do not think we can come to any decision in such a matter.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED NEW PLANE EXCHANGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the fact that a team of government representatives are in Washington ostensibly to negotiate an exchange of defence sharing contracts, as announced over the radio, will the minister comment on this announcement?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be advisable for me to comment on the announcement.

Mr. Chevrier: I have a supplementary question. Will the minister say whether these negotiations concern the deal whereby Canada would be producing the F-104's for NATO countries and getting in exchange the F-101's from the United States for our NORAD squadrons?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I am not either going to confirm or to deny the hon. member's newspaper reports.

Mr. Chevrier: May I just say to the minister that it is not a newspaper report; it was an announcement over the radio. I was wondering whether the minister would comment.

FORESTRY

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING TO DISCUSS FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CO-OPERATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean-Paul Racine (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Forestry. Did the minister become acquainted with the decision taken by the Ontario, Quebec and New Brunswick ministers of lands and forests at a meeting held in Quebec city on February 17, which asked that the provincial governments concerned should have their say in the joint preparation of plans with the federal government, in dealing with federal co-operation and the expansion of the forest industry? If the answer is yes, would the minister care to make any comments?

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Beauce for giving me notice of this question. I have received a communication from the minister of lands and forests of Quebec asking for a meeting with himself, the minister of lands and forests for Ontario, and the minister of lands and mines for New Brunswick, for the purpose of discussing joint agreements already in force in the three provinces whereby federal financial assistance is extended for the preparation of forest inventories, reforestation of vacant crown lands, the purchase of capital assets for forest fire protection, and the construction of access roads.

A meeting of the three provincial ministers I have mentioned, together with their officials, was held in Quebec city on February 16 and 17 at the invitation of the minister of lands and forests of Quebec. Our Department of Forestry was invited to send observers, and two of our officials were present. One of the chief subjects discussed concerned arrangements between the provinces for mutual assistance in forest fire protection.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN

CRESTON, B.C. AIRPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I intended to address a question to the Acting Minister of Transport, but he has just vanished. I will ask the parliamentary secretary, or if there is not a parliamentary secretary I should say the former parliamentary secretary. Exactly a month ago today I moved a motion for the production of papers with respect to the proposed establishment of an airport at Creston. That motion was adopted by the house. Can the appropriate person inform me whether these documents will be tabled prior to prorogation?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should not be as pessimistic as that. I will have the situation checked.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

STATEMENT ON CARGOES LOST AT SEA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last the hon. member for Kootenay West asked the following question:

Has any cargo being transported by his department—

Meaning my department:

—in the northern parts of Canada been lost at sea recently?

I have had the matter investigated and the incident to which the hon. member refers seems to have occurred six months ago, when a boat was temporarily submerged. Toward the close of the shipping season last fall a small vessel, the Ithika, on charter from North Rankin Nickel Mines Limited, bound for the settlement at Rankin inlet, went aground outside Churchill. Its cargo included some departmental equipment, two electric generators and a small quantity of prefabricated housing material valued at approximately $21,600.

I understand that the bulk of the cargo was salvaged and that all our equipment—that is, the department's equipment—was recovered, except for a small quantity of repair parts valued at approximately $1,000.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Could the minister assure the house that this was the entire cargo that was lost?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, according to the information at my disposal that was the entire cargo that was lost.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, in deference to the minister I will tell him privately what was lost.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REPORTED STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON TAX SHARING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the statement made by the Prime Minister at a political convention in Quebec on Friday, according to the Montreal Gazette, that no province would receive less under the tax sharing arrangements than it had been receiving, applies to the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all the statements the Prime Minister makes are accurate.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask whether this statement applies to Alberta and British Columbia.

Mr. Green: I have not seen the report of the Prime Minister's speech, and the hon. member knows very well that sometimes there is quite a difference between statements made and reports on those statements. But I repeat that the Prime Minister is in the habit of making accurate statements.

SHIPPING

NEWFOUNDLAND—REQUEST FOR ICEBREAKER SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. M. Batten (Humber-St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Transport. Has the minister received representations from Woody Point, Bonne Bay, Newfoundland, requesting the services of an icebreaker? If so, could the minister advise what action has been taken?

Hon. George H. Hees (Acting Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not. I used to receive those inquiries in the old days but, as hon. members can well imagine, I have not been receiving them this winter.

In the days when I used to receive them I found that the department always acted very quickly on them to give the Canadian people who were interested the required service without any delay. I am sure that practice is being carried on at the present time. I will check on this matter for the hon. member and confirm what I feel sure is the case.

WATER RESOURCES

WATER POLLUTION—STATEMENT ON PROTECTION OF GREAT LAKES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on February 28 the hon. member for Laurier asked me the following supplementary question concerning water pollution:

My recollection is that the recommendations by the international joint commission to which the minister has referred applied to international waters. Have these recommendations approved by the two governments been implemented?

The answer is that the 1950 report of the international joint commission on the pollution of boundary waters and connecting channels was accepted by the governments of Canada and the United States. Canadian acceptance was given after consultation with the Ontario government.

We believe it is the responsibility of the province to implement the commission's recommendations. The government of the province of Ontario has taken an active interest in the matter and on March 28, 1956, legislation was passed in Ontario providing for the establishment of the Ontario water resources commission. This commission, which maintains liaison with the public health engineering division of the federal Department of National Health and Welfare, deals with sewage pollution in the great lakes and connecting channels.

Another supplementary question was asked by the hon. member for Lambton West, as follows:

Can the minister report to the house whether there has been any progress in the negotiations between the governments of Canada and the United States respecting the dumping of oil and sewage by ships using the great lakes system?

The answer to this question is as follows. The hon. member will recall that I have already referred to the regulations regarding the discharge of oil by ships operating in Canadian waters of the great lakes. To this I would add that the governments of Canada and the United States are aware of the problems associated with the disposal of waste, both from pleasure craft and from vessels employed in traffic on the great lakes and inland waters. Studies are being carried on by both governments to determine the suitability of existing methods of disposal. If suitable disposal methods are found, then consideration will be given to the possibility of drawing up the necessary regulations for implementation.

REQUEST FOR LIST OF OUTSTANDING RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Secretary of State. Has the hon. lady had a report as to whether the list of returns not complied with by the government, for which I asked about a week ago, has yet been compiled; and if not, could the hon. lady endeavour to expedite it?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this is not one of the matters that came to my attention today, but I will be very pleased to inquire.

PRIVATE BILLS

AURORA PIPE LINE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. S-2, to incorporate Aurora Pipe Line Company—Mr. Woolliams—Mr. Flynn in the chair.

On section 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Broome: Mr. Chairman, this bill was intensively considered on second reading. Many statements have been made in regard to it. Some of the statements have been made almost on the assumption by the speakers that it was a government bill, when everybody in the house should know that, as a private bill, the government is not involved in it in the slightest degree.

The chief government whip made this quite clear when he interrupted the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam on February 13 and said, as is reported in Hansard, that the party whip was in no way involved in the decisions that are taken by hon. members in the private members' hour. There is no party whip on this bill. All members are entitled to speak on this bill as they think right and proper. When I spoke on second reading I said I would vote for the bill so it would go to committee, so that the questions which I wanted answered could be answered in that committee and we would obtain all the details on the bill.

The hon. member for Calgary South, speaking on second reading and asking the support of the house to give this bill second reading, said, as reported at page 1131 of Hansard, that if he was a member of the committee—

—I also intend to make a searching analysis once we have the witnesses before us.

He said further on the same page that after the committee submitted a report, this house would make a searching analysis of the report of that committee.

If I may refer to the minutes of the committee, I will deal first with the financial structure of this company. I would refer you, sir, to page 45 where, at the top of the page, the hon. members for Calgary South in directing a question to the witness spoke as follows:

You have already indicated to us certain basic principles of your financial structure. You have outlined the American participation and have made certain references in your opening paragraphs. You must have examined and given considerable thought as to why you wanted to proceed on the basis you have. Would you please elaborate on the details in your statement in regard to the necessity for this?

May I ask you one other question? Of course, you are aware of section 44 (d) of the national energy board—that in the final analysis, before a permit can be granted to you, the energy board must take into consideration the financial responsibility, financial structure, the method of financing, the extent to which Canadians should have an opportunity of participating, and so on. You are familiar with this section?

Before I go on to quote the reply given by Mr. Burgis I should like to return to the point at which Mr. Burgis set out the basic principles of the financial structure of the company in question. It is to be found on the opening page of the report:

Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited was incorporated under the laws of Canada in 1926 and its shares are listed on the Toronto stock exchange. Approximately 10 per cent of its outstanding shares are owned by some 12,000 public shareholders, 22 per cent by the Hudson's Bay Company and 68 per cent by Continental Oil Company. Despite the disparity in shareholdings of Hudson's Bay Company and Continental Oil Company, each have by agreement equal voting rights and equal representation on the board of directors. The present board of directors consists of three Canadian directors representing the Hudson's Bay Company, three American directors representing Continental Oil Company, two Canadian directors representing the public shareholders and two senior officers of the company.

That is the basic financial structure of the company.

Now we come to the reply made by Mr. Burgis to the question asked him by the hon. member for Calgary South. He replied as follows:

Yes. We take the point of view that this is a relatively small line, and it would be quite usual for an oil company to build it as part of their normal operations. In terms of public financing, back in 1957 our directors did offer public participation in the ownership of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas, when there was no public clamour for ownership.

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): You say in 1957?

Mr. Burgis: Yes.

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): But, what was the final result?

Mr. Burgis: 9.6 per cent—approximately 10 per cent—of the outstanding shares are owned by some 12,000 public shareholders.

It is not only what is said in evidence given before the committee; what is not said is also of importance. The question asked by the hon. member for Calagary South was quite clear in its intent. Although the witness answered in part, he did not give a complete answer, because a complete answer would have left an impression entirely different from the impression left by the answer as printed in the report of the committee proceedings. The proper answer is that prior to 1957 the ownership of the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company was 75 per cent with Continental Oil Company and 25 per cent with Hudson's Bay. The inference given here is that they offered shares to the public which were only taken up to the extent of some 9.6 per cent. Well, shares were not offered to the public. There were rights. I refer to the Financial Post survey of oils for 1958. On page 129, under the heading "Rights", that paper states:

Shareholders of Continental Oil Company and Hudson's Bay Company were given the right to subscribe to 1,744,592 company shares in September 1957—

This is what the witness was referring to.

—at the rate of one share for each 15 of Continental Oil held or one and one sixth shares for each 15 shares of Hudson's Bay Company held. Any shares not taken up under the rights offered were subscribed to by the parent companies.

Well, the shares offered were 10 per cent of the total number of shares in that company. Before this offering there were no shares of the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company on the public market and there were no shares held by any citizens of Canada or, indeed, by citizens of any other country as shares in that company. But after this offering, 10 per cent of the shares of the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company were available to those people who had shares in either Continental Oil or the Hudson's Bay Company, and because of the provision of one for 15 in one case and one and one sixth for 15 in the other case, all the shares were taken up except some 34,623 which were not subscribed to, mainly because they represented fractional rights.

Thus the implication in the minutes of the committee that there are two Canadian directors representing public shareholders is hardly sustained, and I ask hon. members to note that the witness is most careful to say "public shareholders" and not "Canadian shareholders". They represent those people who were formerly shareholders of Continental Oil and Gas and Hudson's Bay Company. When the witness says there was no public clamour for ownership the implication is that they were ahead of public thinking in this country, but this is just not so.

I suggest that with regard to offerings of shares in pipe line companies—and this is tied in with this particular pipe line company and the operations of its parent companies—the people of Canada are as prepared to put their money into risk enterprises as are the people of any other country in the world. In support of this contention I should like to quote from a clipping which appeared in the Vancouver Sun of April 29, 1960. This states:

Alberta Gas Trunk Line Company hasn't formally announced its new $30 million preferred stock and debenture issue yet but local investment men are already worried about how they will fill the anticipated demand . . .

Investment dealers here say they expect to receive only small slices of the two $15 million issues and will be rationing the pie right from the start.

I would refer also to the financing of the Alberta Natural Gas Company a few months ago, when shares were oversubscribed two or threefold, and to the Trans Mountain Pipe Line Company whose shares, when made available to the public, were also oversubscribed three or fourfold. I suggest that at no time has this company in question given the Canadian people the chance to participate in its operations even to the extent of one share, no matter what inference Mr. Burgis may have left with the committee. This does not strike me as being a searching examination of the operations of this company.

Now I should like to go on to another point which is referred to several times in the minutes of the committee. Section 44 of the National Energy Board Act, paragraph (d), is the pertinent part, and it states that as to financial responsibility the structure is designed to allow Canadians the opportunity of participating in the financing, engineering and general construction of the line. I think I have dealt with this subject sufficiently by mentioning that in regard to the financial end the Canadian people will not be allowed to participate even to the extent of one share.

What is the situation in regard to the construction of the line? I feel I am being fair to the sponsor of this bill, as I have informed him of the information I have at hand. If I say something with which he disagrees he can correct me. I assume that he has been in touch with his principles. The information I have in regard to the construction of this line in Canada is that 41 miles is to be built by the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company, as well as the spur which goes across the border. There is only a half mile section to be built by Aurora Pipe Line Company. The contract for construction has been let to the R. H. Fulton Company of Lubbock, Texas. This was a negotiated contract and there was no chance whatsoever for any participation in this work by a Canadian company. When I conclude my remarks I hope the hon. gentleman will be able to correct me as to the accuracy of my information.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Could you reveal the source of the information which you are quoting now?

Mr. Broome: I have said that I received my information as the result of a telephone call to Calgary, and that is as far as I will go. I believe it is for the hon. member who is sponsoring this bill to put the facts before the house. He has not done so up to this time.

The Chairman: I would remind the hon. gentleman for Vancouver South that I have not found out as yet the purpose of his remarks at this stage of the procedure. I do not know whether his remarks are relevant and, unless he indicates what his conclusion will eventually be, I have no way of deciding upon the relevancy.

Mr. Broome: I am attempting by my remarks to add certain information to the evidence given before the committee. I am adding information to the statements made in this house on second reading. Everything I have said pertains to the discussion on this bill. We have heard references made time after time to the effect that this company would be subject to the rules and regulations of the national energy board and the Alberta conservation board on oil and gas. The remarks I am making at this time have regard to the propriety of some of the statements made in the committee. I am elaborating on those statements in order to provide this house with certain information. I am very happy to be able to give this information at this time, because I feel that it should be brought to the attention of this house. It has been said that there would be a searching examination conducted in respect of the operations of the company, and I feel that that examination did not go far enough.

There were questions asked of the witness as to why Bill No. S-2, which we are discussing, carries a capitalization of $10 million when the Aurora Pipe Line Company intends to build only one half mile of this line at a cost of $15,000. The hon. member for Victoria also asked at that time if the construction of the one half mile section was all that company intended to do. It was brought to the attention of the committee that a latter part of the bill contained a request for permission to build pipe lines within Canada in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia and in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. Evidence was given that eventually the line might be extended into these areas, but at this time the company wished to secure the privilege of doing so in order to obviate the necessity of coming back to parliament at a later date.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the hon. member read the pertinent section?

Mr. Broome: I will read Mr. Burgis' answer, if that is what the hon. member desires. His answer is reported as follows:

> At the moment, sir, we have nothing else specifically in mind. However, we are, as are many of the other oil companies, in the pipe line business. Frequently, when we consider moving crude or condensate from one field or one market to another it might involve consideration of crossing interprovincial boundaries and at that time we conceivably could use Aurora to build more facilities, let us say, from the Yukon or Northwest Territories into Alberta or something like that.

I think I have read enough of the answer to give the sense of the situation.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I was referring to the portion where Mr. Burgis went on to say that it is customary to include such a clause in the bill.

Mr. Broome: I agree that it is the customary thing to do. I am not referring to those subjects which come within the purview of the Alberta natural gas and oil conservation board. I am not trying to show that this line is economically sound, whether the reserves are sufficient, or to discuss any other item in this regard. I am now referring only to the basic foundation of this pipe line and how its application fits into our concept of ownership, control, construction and those items which are covered in the regulations of the national energy board, as well as the concept of the fundamental principles of this party and, I believe, of this government.

If this pipe line company intends to build only one half mile of line and then intends to make a connection with a line in another province I suggest the total expenditure would only be in the neighbourhood of $100,000. I suggest that the connection between Alberta and Saskatchewan would run only to $15,000; the connection between Saskatchewan and Manitoba, $15,000; the connection between Manitoba and Ontario, $15,000; and the connection between the Northwest Territories and Alberta would be in the neighbourhood of $15,000 each. Using this same reasoning, Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Limited would be a company involving only $50,000.

In view of what I have said, I have asked myself why the Aurora Pipe Line Company is not in a position to build the 41 miles which will be built by the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company, and why they intend only to build the one half mile section. I have come to the conclusion that this is simply a device to allow freedom of action, away from the control of the national energy board, for a major section of pipe line. What this bill in effect says is that the company is going to spend $15,000 but will capitalize itself at $10 million in order to have some spare capital. This does not add up, in my estimation.

When we think of the discussion which took place in this house on second reading of the bill it is simply fantastic to me that from the very start the standing committee did not take minutes of its proceedings, particularly when we recall the criticism which was levelled at the committee in the other place. The committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines commenced its sitting at 10.30 a.m., and for 50 minutes the session proceeded without a shorthand reporter being present. At 11.20 a.m. the committee recessed when the hon. member for Yukon made a motion that the committee should recess until a shorthand reporter was available. The committee resumed its sitting at 11.30 a.m. and adjourned at 12.25 p.m., 55 minutes later. The committee tried to pick up the statements which had been made, but so far as the minutes of proceedings are concerned half of the work of the committee is a blank.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That is not true.

Mr. Broome: It is not on record. I should like to say at this time—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): On a point of order, I think the hon. member has certainly left this committee under a false impression. At the beginning of the committee meeting Mr. Burgis read a statement, which took somewhere between 15 and 30 minutes, and that is all reported in the evidence that the hon. member has on his desk. It is true that about 15 minutes of the proceedings of the standing committee are not recorded in written evidence, but that is about all, and certainly not over half an hour.

Mr. Winch: That is not true.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The evidence is there.

Mr. Broome: I did say the committee tried to pick up the lost ground, but Mr. Burgis' evidence takes up a page and a half. If it took 15 minutes to read a page and a half of evidence, then Mr. Burgis must have been reading awfully slowly. The point I should like to make is that right from the start I myself requested the committee to take evidence. I do not want to labour the point, but I did so because I was interested in the bill and I wanted to know what was said in committee. When this bill was before the other place there appeared as witnesses—

Mr. Winch: Did the hon. member say he sent a letter to the chairman of the committee which was not read?

Mr. Broome: No, I did not say that. I said that I advised the chairman and I advised the committee that I thought a record of the proceedings should be kept.

Mr. Chown: When?

Mr. Broome: I simply advised the committee that I thought minutes of the proceedings should be kept.

Mr. Chown: When?

Mr. Broome: Who wants to know the answer to that?

Mr. Chown: I do.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to know the answer to that.

Mr. Winch: Does the hon. member happen to have the letter that he sent to the chairman of the committee, and would he read it to this house?

Mr. Broome: Mr. Chairman, all I wish to say is that I asked the committee to keep minutes of the proceedings. When this bill was before the other place the same witnesses appeared there, but at that time there was also in opposition Mr. James Scott, president of the Pembina Pipe Line Company, and in attendance but not heard were Messrs. Charles Crawford and A. Douglas Armour.

It is the responsibility of anybody who wishes to oppose a bill to make his wishes known to the chief clerk of committees, and then a meeting will be held so that those who oppose a bill may be in attendance. I wish to point out, however, that second reading of this bill took place on February 13 and the committee held its meeting on Tuesday, February 21.

I hold no brief for the Pembina group; I am not saying that this particular pipe line will or will not hurt them. I am not going to say whether, as between these two as operating companies, we should make a decision; but I do say that, on the point I am trying to make with regard to Canadian participation in financing, engineering, construction and the whole works, the Pembina people seem to me to have a much better record than the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company for the reasons I have already outlined.

In the committee meeting many hon. members and the sponsor of the bill, the hon. member for Bow River, pointed out that this bill simply gives the company the right to incorporate, and that members of parliament in effect are exceeding their duty when they check into this in any great detail; that it is really none of their concern. At page 30 of the committee proceedings the hon. member for Calgary South, in questioning the hon. member for York North, who appeared before the committee, made the point that the hon. member for York North was not qualified to pass judgment on the technical aspects of this bill.

Mr. Woolliams: And he admitted he was not.

Mr. Broome: At page 44 the hon. member for Winnipeg South made this statement:

> I was just going to say that if they were strenuously objecting, they would be represented here by counsel. However, I think they realize this is a mere technical execution of a function of parliament and, undoubtedly, in the course of time they will appear before the energy board, if they feel disposed to do so.

It will be a sad day, Mr. Chairman, when we start to think of the operations of committees of this house and of the house itself as merely technical executions of a function of parliament. I say that every member has a right to ask questions on any bill, private or public, that comes before this house or before any committee of this house and try to ascertain the truth of the matter—

Mr. Woolliams: That is irrelevant.

Mr. Broome: —and that is what I have been trying to do. In regard to the operation of the committee itself, I should like to draw your attention, Mr. Chairman, to citation 491(1) of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition, which discusses voting in committee, and which reads:

> The names of the members attending each committee are entered by the committee clerk in the minutes; and when a division takes place, the clerk takes down the names of the members, distinguishing on which side of the question they respectively vote; and such lists are to be given in, with the report, to the house.

These minutes of the committee appear to me to be the report to the house, but the direction as laid down in this citation was not followed. There was a vote in committee; it was a vote in which the hon. member for—

The Chairman: Order. I must inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

Mr. Winch: Let him proceed.

The Chairman: Is the committee giving its consent to the hon. member proceeding further?

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Yes.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Broome: I wish to thank the committee for its courtesy, and I shall try not to trespass on the patience of hon. members any longer than necessary. As I said, Mr. Chairman, there was a motion in the committee moved by the hon. member for Westmorland and seconded by the hon. member for York East. The intent of the motion was to defer clause by clause consideration of Bill No. S-2 for a period of at least one week in order to give interested parties the privilege of appearing before the committee at the adjourned meeting. The said motion was negatived on the following division: Yeas, 5; nays, 8, or a total of 13 votes cast.

Two of the members who voted on the motion in the committee have an interest in the bill. I do not mean that they have a financial interest or anything of that sort; they have an interest in the bill because they have been sponsors of it. First of all, the hon. member for Winnipeg South sponsored the bill in place of the hon. member for Bow River; then later the hon. member for Bow River came back into the picture. Section 2 of citation 292 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms reads as follows:

> A member has been substituted for another on a committee of the Canadian Commons on account of the member originally appointed having acted as counsel for the parties interested in the matter before the committee.

I do not know whether a sponsor is in the position of acting as counsel, but when you have a very close vote of eight to five and two out of the eight are interested because of their sponsorship of the bill, the margin is very narrow. There is also the point that for the first time that I can recall the quorum of this committee is 10 members. According to the standing orders of the house the quorum of a committee of 60 members is 20. As all hon. members know, the quorum is then reduced to a more reasonable figure, usually to 15 members. This time the quorum was reduced to 10 members. This has nothing to do with the bill, except that a very limited number of members have made a decision with regard to whether time should be given for parties who may be opposed to the bill to appear before the committee and express their objections in the same way they did before the committee of the other place.

In no case, Mr. Chairman, am I supporting the viewpoint of the C.C.F. with regard to the economic feasibility of the line. I am simply talking about the matter of Canadian participation in financing, in construction and in the operation of the line. In this respect it seems to me that the Pembina group who opposed the bill in the other place—and I have no interest in that group—is operating more in keeping with the National Energy Board Act and with what that act says a pipe line company shall do than is the case with the company that is now before us.

I think I have pointed out that answers have not been full and complete. In my opinion it is ludicrous that we should have all this talk about a $15,000 project. It is nothing of the kind. As the sponsors and the people behind the bill know, they are asking for a capitalization of $10 million, yet what they are going to do is build a $15,000 pipe line.

It is too bad that this matter was not investigated more thoroughly in the committee. It is too bad that when the proposed Pembina pipe line construction is to cost $40 million, as I understand from the letter filed by the hon. member for Vancouver East, these people should talk about a $15,000 pipe line. In sponsoring the bill the hon. member for Bow River made this statement on February 13, as found on page 1979 of Hansard:

> I should like now to refer to this red herring, as I call it, which relates to our position in so far as United States capital and United States companies operating in Canada are concerned. My answer to that is briefly this. I have never considered any words used by any members of the cabinet or any members of the government as being against capital coming from anywhere, whether it was from the United States or any country in Europe.

No one will disagree with that statement. That is true. We welcome foreign capital in this country. However, the hon. member went on to say something really pertinent with regard to such capital. He said:

> The only thing for which this government has stood, and I am proud to be a Conservative in that regard, is that Canadians can compete on equal terms with capital coming into this country from other sources.

If the hon. member would change the word "compete" to "participate" so that the statement would read that Canadians can participate on equal terms with capital coming into this country from other sources I would be 100 per cent in agreement with him. What I have tried to do is to show that that right is not being given to Canadians under the proposed incorporation of this company, and no matter what the witness said it has not been given in the past. I think the bill deserves a much more searching examination in committee of the whole house than it received in the standing committee. I want to say right now that when the bill comes to a vote I will vote against it.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Chairman, we have heard an exposition with regard to Canadian participation in the development of our resources in western Canada. The bill now before us concerns me particularly, because in my constituency in Alberta probably more oil and gas are produced than in any other constituency in western Canada. As a matter of fact the technical people who are opposing the incorporation of the Aurora Pipe Line Company, the so-called Pembina group, have their headquarters in my constituency and are now operating Pembina Pipe Line Company in that area. However, the Pembina field is only one of the fields in the area. The Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company also operates a number of fields in my constituency, particularly in the Whitecourt block, so-called, and they have been active recently in developing extraction plants and pipe lines in this area.

There is one other point which should be brought to the attention of the committee. Just recently hearings before the Alberta conservation board were completed with regard to the application of the Pembina group to do what they want to do with the by-products for all of Alberta. Essentially they have proposed that they will build a pipe line system in Alberta and export up to 75,000 barrels per day of by-products into the Chicago market. These people who have come to us for incorporation under the name of Aurora Pipe Line Company have suggested that they have a market for something like 11,000 barrels per day through their marketing system in the United States. I am one of those who feel that we should try to develop any possible market for our petroleum industry and also for the by-products industry.

Several things were brought out in Pembina's presentation to the Alberta conservation board of which I think the committee should be made aware, and which in my view make it necessary for the house to pass the bill we are now considering. First of all, I should like to refer hon. members to the statement of the hon. member for Bow River with regard to incorporation. I think the principle of the bill is whether or not we are going to allow these people to incorporate. I believe in competition, and I think it is vitally important in this instance. However, in my opinion the bill does bring up a number of problems which we as members of parliament should be considering.

First of all, may I say that we have a tremendous amount of by-products which are going to become available in western Canada, very quickly, particularly in Alberta. I feel that we should be making representations to both levels of government with regard to doing more research into the utilization of these by-products in Canada, and in Alberta or Saskatchewan in particular, or wherever they may be. We should be encouraging the national research council to be doing work on the utilization and the marketing of these extremely valuable by-products.

In the second place, may I say this. This was one of the things on the application of Pembina. When hon. members think that this 75,000 barrels per day is a guaranteed market, they are not correct. This is a question of allowables. I would remind hon. members that a by-product is in essence a competitor with petroleum and therefore will have to be regulated by the conservation board in the same manner as is petroleum; and Pembina, to fulfil their obligations, will require a permit from the Alberta conservation board to delete the 75,000 barrels per day from the other allowables.

There is another matter about which I am particularly concerned, and I should like to say that I have no financial interest in any pipeline or oil company. However, as a member of parliament representing the constituency of Jasper-Edson I have some concern for the people who are working on this pipe line and for the farmers in my constituency who will want to use some of these by-products locally. I am alarmed by the statement of another Canadian company, namely, Canadian Hydrocarbons, that if Pembina gets what it wants to get, it will be in a monopoly situation and the domestic users in Canada will be hurt by their scheme. These are things which must be given consideration.

There are other means by which some of the by-products will be transported out of the area of production. We have before us another bill to allow the Canadian Pacific Railway to complete an extension into the Rimkey-Home-Glen extraction plant in order to transport these by-products. It is interesting to note that in the recent hearing almost 25 per cent of the producers who were allied with or who had contemplated selling the by-product to the Pembina western oil group, came out against allowing them to do so because they felt that this would put the Pembina group in a monopoly position.

Something has been said by the hon. member for Assiniboia about Texas buccaneers. I want to say to you, Mr. Chairman, that I am not too much concerned about putting any monicker on them. However, we in western Canada are against any kind of buccaneers whether they happen to come from Toronto or from south of the border. I want to say that in my constituency I have a great number of people who have come up from Texas and who are becoming able Canadian citizens. The solution of the question, therefore, is not quite as simple as has been suggested by the hon. member for Vancouver South but rather is an extensive proposition relating to an industry which will mean hundreds of millions of dollars a year and thousands of jobs. We therefore cannot just pass it off and say we are going to vote against this bill because of the technicality which the hon. member has brought forward; and that is the only reason that he brought it forward, as far as I can see. I would remind the hon. gentleman that the Pembina group have incorporated Foothills to build a little chunk across the border and the rest of the group will be doing the other part. That course in turn suggests to me that inside the Pembina group there will be little chance for any open tendering or bidding on any of the pipe-line construction which will be done by them.

I should therefore like to leave with the members of the committee what I think are three salient factors in this discussion. First of all, we want to see to it that as much use as possible is made in Canada of these by-products. We want to make sure that the people who want to use propane, butane, methanol and condensates in Canada have an opportunity to do so on a basis of equality with anybody outside of Canada, if not on a better basis. I would remind my hon. friends that we have a potential market in the grey wood soils in Alberta for a tremendous amount of this sulphur which is going to be produced in this plant in order to upgrade the soils.

In the second place—and I agree with the hon. member for Vancouver South in this regard—we must make sure that Canadians are given an opportunity in the development, financing and construction of these lines and facilities. In the third place our policy must be dedicated to the general good not only of Alberta or Saskatchewan but of all Canada. I would remind hon. members that just recently, by resolution, the legislature in the province of Alberta has commended this government for its national oil policy and has upheld it 100 per cent. I do not think that we shall assist by defeating a bill to incorporate a pipe-line company which wants to make application along with several other competitors. It is not only a matter of the Pembina group versus Aurora. Husky, through its affiliated companies, would also like to have a network of pipe lines gathering in the by-product and taking it into the Chicago market. I also understand there are one or two other groups which would also like to do this.

However, as I said before, by defeating this bill we are not going to do anything that is going to help in any way. We have locally the Alberta conservation board which must pass on this application and which must set up the allowables. They report directly to the Alberta government. We have a national energy board which we spent a great deal of time setting up. At the time we did so we as members of parliament said that we are not capable of knowing all of the technical problems which are involved, and therefore we gave to the national energy board the power to sift these applications. We gave them certain criteria by which they were to operate. I am not going to repeat them now because other hon. members have done so, and I am sure the hon. member for Bow River will be able adequately to put them on the record.

I wanted to say these few words because it is most important in my area that some of these things be brought to the attention of the members of the committee. We shall not help the development of my particular part of the country by being restrictive or by trying to keep out United States capital. We will only help if we go forward and allow these people to incorporate. After that they have to prove their worth; they have to prove they are going to allow Canadian participation in financing construction and everything else.

This is what I think we should do in this regard. We should allow them to go ahead. We want a free country; we want a free industry. We can best develop the resources of western Canada by free, competitive enterprise, as has been clearly shown by the development of Alberta to date as compared with that of the neighbouring province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I know we have all listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks just made by the hon. member for Jasper-Edson. It was a truly magnificent demonstration of how to sit on the fence, present arguments on both sides and deny your own government's philosophical policy on Canadian development. There were quite a number of arguments as to why this bill should be defeated, and then it was sanctimoniously said, "Because of my constituents"—who are not even affected by this bill—"I shall have to vote for it". Then in the last sentence the hon. member referred to Saskatchewan, which is not even concerned in the bill now before the committee.

When this bill was first introduced in the House of Commons I opposed it on principle and on the basis of my understanding. I opposed it in committee. I am opposing it now in this stage of discussion, where we can discuss its principle. I have no hesitation in saying that as long as I am in order, on every stage of this bill as it goes through, I will oppose it. I will oppose it because it is a disgrace to parliament that we, the members of the House of Commons, should be asked to give our stamp of approval to the incorporation of a company which is detrimental to the good of Canada and detrimental to the good of the province of Alberta, as it is.

The only way to discuss and understand the import of this bill is to relate it to the oil industry of Alberta, not particularly as a straight petroleum production but only what this bill deals with; that is, the utilization of the by-products of the petroleum industry. I refer to the methanes, the butanes, the propanes and the condensates, none of which are now utilized in the province of Alberta.

The hon. member for Jasper-Edson, if I heard him correctly—and I think I did—indicated that Aurora Pipe Line Company or its parent company, Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited, will be utilizing some of these things in Alberta. If that is what he meant, then I say that is the exact opposite of what we were told in the committee by the four representatives of Aurora Pipe Line Company who appeared before us in the railway committee room.

I asked a direct question. It will not be found in the record of the first half of the proceedings of the committee meeting because that portion was not covered by a reporter, but you will find that the question was asked of the four men representing Aurora Pipe Line Company, "Do you intend to utilize, or have you any plans for utilizing the butanes, the methanes, the propanes, the condensates, any one of the by-products, in any existing industry in Alberta, or do you intend to establish any by-product industry in Alberta?" The answer was one word, "No".

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Chairman, may I just inform the hon. member that when I was talking about the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company I mentioned very specifically the fact that they had an interest in what we call the Whitecourt field and that they were, along with other companies, at the moment building extraction plants at Winfield, Whitecourt and Edson in Alberta. The by-products which they are producing there have nothing to do with Aurora at the moment.

Mr. Winch: This bill concerns Aurora Pipe Line Company.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Yes, but when I was making some general remarks I mentioned that Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company did have interests in other gas fields in the province of Alberta in this particular area. I said that these by-products would be available and are available for Alberta industry and Alberta farmers. That is all I said.

Mr. Winch: Then if what the hon. member for Jasper-Edson says is correct, this committee is being led astray, the provincial government of Alberta is being led astray and the people who invest money are being led astray. I say this because the hon. member has just said it has nothing whatsoever to do with the bill now before us for incorporation of this company and—

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I was talking about the general by-products industry.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Winch: You have had your say; allow me to have mine. At the moment I am concerned with facts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Winch: We have before us a bill to incorporate Aurora Pipe Line Company, a subsidiary of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company. Everything that we are being asked to approve in this bill is concerned with the collection and the export, not from Alberta as a whole but only from the cream of the oil area of Alberta, the southwestern area.

I am sorry; my hon. friend shakes his head. He had better not shake it too hard because it is empty and it will fall off. Obviously he does not know what this is all about.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Winch: I am sorry; you can ask questions when I have finished. When this bill was before the committee in the railway committee room the four men who represented Aurora Pipe Line Company were asked, "Are there by-products of methanes, butanes, propanes and condensates?", and the answer was, "Yes".

They were asked, "In your planning and in the money you are going to expend are you going to assist any by-product industry in Alberta?" The answer was, "No". Then they were asked, "Is every collection for export to the United States?" The answer was, "Yes".

Then the question was asked "What is the anticipated export?" The answer was, "We anticipate 11,000 barrels".

This House of Commons is being asked to give its stamp of approval to a company that first of all has no interest in Alberta. Everything will be exported for secondary industry in the states of Idaho and Montana. I presented the plan to these four men and said, "Is that where it will go" and the answer was, "Yes, Idaho and Montana".

This is a company which will be exporting 11,000 barrels, and although incorporated for $10 million, their total expenditure, according to the evidence given before the committee, will be $1½ million. This is a company which, as was admitted by the proposer of the bill to the committee—and the evidence, of course, is completely conclusive—is owned very largely by outside interests. Aurora Pipe Line Company is owned by Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company and Continental Oil Company. Continental Oil Company owns 68 per cent of the shares and 22 per cent of the shares are owned by the Hudson's Bay Company. Only 10 per cent of the shares are owned by the public. The hon. member for Vancouver South demonstrated with facts and figures that it was not owned by Canadians at all; it was owned by shareholders of either Hudson's Bay Company or Continental Oil Company.

Therefore we have to consider this collection from only one section of Alberta for 100 per cent export to the United States, the states of Idaho and Montana. The company is owned 68 per cent in the United States. The hon. member talked sanctimoniously about free enterprise and competition in this connection. This is a company to which we, the members of the House of Commons, gave our stamp of approval two years ago.

May I say I have no interest in Aurora Pipe Lines, nor in the Hudson's Bay Oil Company nor in Continental Oil Company, in Pembina or, indeed, in any other company. I have one interest only, and that is in the Canadian financing, Canadian control and Canadian development of Canadian resources.

Mr. Argue: That is the way you people opposite used to be, too.

Mr. Winch: Yes, that is the way hon. members opposite used to be and it is the way they are supposed to be now, the way set out in the speech from the throne. I ask the committee to remember that only two years ago, for the collection and utilization of oil by-products of Alberta as a whole, for the use of these products in Alberta and in Canada, and for their export only in the case of surplus, we granted the incorporation of the Foothills Pipe Line Company. In case there are Conservative members here who have forgotten, that company is owned 90 per cent by 2,000 Canadian investors, and of those 2,000 Canadian investors 50 per cent are citizens of Alberta. Moreover, 95 per cent of the company's financing—its debt financing—is from Canadian sources.

Is that company talking about a $15,000 short pipe line to be constructed at a total cost of half a million dollars? The answer is, no. Have they been able to get contracts to guarantee the money to finance the Canadian and American project? The answer has been supplied. The answer is, yes. One and a half million dollars—no, not one and a half million dollars—but $130 million. As well, they guarantee priority demand and supply for anything that can be required or developed in secondary industry in Canada as to the use of petroleum by-products, and in addition give an undertaking that only the surplus shall be exported to the Chicago market.

How different this is, reflecting the interest of all Alberta, not a segment of Alberta. The priority goes to Canadian industry first; export comes only second. It is a Canadian owned and controlled company, not an Amerian owned and controlled company. It is a company with $150 million, not one and a half million, and one that has contracts now. My hon. friend over there shakes his head. He cannot figure out why a socialist is speaking this way in a capitalist world. Well, it is because we have to face the realities of this world we live in, and in the transitional period from the old, decadent system of free enterprise to the new socialist era we shall assist in any way whatsoever where something can be done for the Canadian development and financing of our own Canadian resources.

An hon. Member: Amen.

Mr. Winch: The hon. member does not know the meaning of the word "Amen". He does not even know the meaning of "O Canada" or the Lord's Prayer, because if he did it would be Canada and the people first, always. Just think it over some time. I should like to meet the hon. member on a platform some day on that subject.

We ask the committee to make a ledger and put Aurora on one side, with all that it means, and put the other company and all it means on the other.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): There is room in Alberta for them both.

Mr. Winch: I do not know. I would like to see you and a couple of others try to get into one telephone booth.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): They got 17 in one.

Mr. Winch: It depends on the circumstances and it also depends on the circumference. We are now discussing the development and utilization of the petroleum by-products resources of Alberta.

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad you told us.

Mr. Winch: We say that anyone who is realistic, anyone who does not take a parochial view but a provincial and national view, will have to agree after a study of the facts that the introduction of the bill before us now was an absolute disgrace. It cannot result in a betterment of Canadian interest or in a more efficient development of Canadian resources. Behind it is only one thing, the fact that there is no capital gains tax in Canada, and this is another racketeering manipulation of a stock and corporation for the benefit of individuals; another group of Texas buccaneers who this time are called Continental Oil.

I am amazed that so many hon. members on the other side should have forgotten the words the Prime Minister used when he was on this side of the house in regard to certain oil company transactions. I take great pride in the fact that an hon. member from British Columbia should have risen first this afternoon and, as a Conservative, expose this bill asking that all of us should oppose it, as responsible members, and turn it down. That is the only right, honest and decent thing to do.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I did not intend to speak on this bill, but having listened to the frantic speech of the hon. member for Vancouver East proclaiming Canadian ownership I am tempted to intervene.

Certainly I am in complete support of Canadians having some say in the planning and development of their country, but I certainly welcome additional capital to help in this development and that is what is taking place in the present instance.

Mr. Winch: Fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Well, $15,000; but they are still going to provide a market for 11,000 barrels of our product a day. In their speeches on this subject on first and second reading the hon. member for Timiskaming and the hon. member for Vancouver East went on and on talking about the development of secondary industries. I know we must study this export picture because we do not want to export anything which could possibly be used to greater advantage here in Canada.

What is the actual content of it? I asked Mr. Burgis what the makeup of this product is and he replied that 90 per cent was gasoline. Certainly hon. members of this committee will not argue with the fact that there is a surplus of gasoline in Canada. We should try to create for this product as large a market as possible. That is precisely what we are doing through this bill. The hon. member for Vancouver East said that by supporting this $1 million expenditure we would do away with the possible expenditure of $150 million. Nothing could be further from the truth. There is a great demand in regard to the exportation of oil products in Alberta. The Pembina Pipe Line Limited would like to export 75,000 barrels per day. Certainly exporting 11,000 barrels per day would not do away with that proposition on behalf of the Pembina Pipe Line Limited.

What did the socialist party have to say last year when a similar bill was introduced in this house by the hon. member for Kindersley, a bill to incorporate the Northern Pipe Line Company which intended to export oil and oil by-products from Saskatchewan? There existed at that time a company exporting oil and oil by-products from Saskatchewan but this was an additional company intending to operate in that province. In a speech made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam he is reported at page 4381 of Hansard for May 31, 1960 as follows:

> I should like to hear him, either when he concludes the debate or maybe this information can be made available when the bill is referred to the committee, on the reaction of the government of Saskatchewan in regard to the application for incorporation of this company.

The main concern of these socialists was to find out the opinion in this regard of their socialist friends in Saskatchewan. The hon. member for Kindersley at page 4381 of Hansard of the same date is reported as follows:

> I will see that that matter is taken up with the proper parties.

The hon. member for Kindersley is reported earlier in the same paragraph as follows:

> I am quite sure my hon. friend agrees with me that the government of the province is most interested in the development of the resources of the province and will do everything it can to co-operate with us in getting this company incorporated—

That was the only concern of the socialists at that time. They would be satisfied if it was satisfactory to those people in Saskatchewan. There was no great expenditure involved. I understand it amounted to some $12 million, but as long as the Saskatchewan government agreed then the hon. members here had no objection.

What do we find in their opinion today? We find that they are trying to make a mountain out of an ant hill. There is a $15,000 expenditure involved but they are trying to blow this up out of proportion and trying to claim that because we are going to grant permission to export 11,000 barrels per day we will disturb the possibility of exporting 75,000 barrels per day. I feel that any suggestion along this line is sheer nonsense.

What did Mr. Burgis say with regard to Canadian participation in this company? He said the board of directors consisted of three Canadian directors, representing Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company; three United States directors, representing the Continental Oil Company; two Canadian directors representing the public shareholders at large, and two senior officers of the company. I would suggest that the Canadians on that board of directors certainly have the right to participate and direct the affairs of the company. Certainly hon. members cannot object to the composition of that board of directors.

Those hon. members who object to the passage of this bill are attempting to create a monopoly as far as I can see. Nothing endangers democracy more than the creation of monopolies. The socialist party would like to create a monopoly and then get into power and take over this monopoly. Perhaps that is the reasoning behind their actions. I fail to understand what their main objection to this bill is except that they are perhaps attempting to raise a political fuss about it. The hon. member for Assiniboia appeared recently on television and said that if the party to which he belonged was in power it would socialize pipe-line companies. He said that the government under the direction of that party would build its own pipe lines. If he intended to spend $15,000 I would suggest that he would not socialize much of this country.

I would certainly solicit the support of every hon. member in regard to this bill in an attempt to help create greater markets for the oil and gas industry in Canada. I feel there is sufficient gas and oil in Alberta to enable the Pembina Pipe Line Limited as well, as this company to export from Alberta.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): The remarks I wish to make are few. Just because the devil is against this particular bill is not sufficient reason for me to support it. I think it is very salutary that this committee should scrutinize very closely any controversial bill coming before it. Some hon. members have said that it is only a bill incorporating a pipe line and it is purely a technical thing. I must say that we are not incorporating a laundry or a peanut stand or anything of that type but a pipe line. I feel that a pipe line or a railway or any public utility is of vital interest to the public and that it is incumbent on hon. members of this parliament to scrutinize the incorporation of any public utility very closely.

I understand that the building of a pipe line involves the powers of expropriation of private property and exploitation of natural resources. These are of extreme interest to the public and should be examined thoroughly at each stage of our proceedings. I say therefore that it is a salutary thing that we scrutinize this bill closely. This parliament or the government must not abdicate its responsibilities in favour of any board or commission even of its own creation. In the final analysis parliament is responsible and must accept that responsibility be it for ill or for the good of the Canadian people.

I have very little knowledge and certainly no interest in the substance of this bill but I think it is very important at this stage, as at every stage, that we scrutinize it. This is a responsibility we cannot abdicate, as I have said. I feel that we must look further into the matter regarding Canadian participation in comparison with other competing pipe lines. I do not think we can dismiss this as a technical matter and depend upon a provincial board or commission in regard to the establishment of a public utility such as a pipe line.

Mr. Howard: I have heard a few very interesting points raised so far in this debate. One point just made by the hon. member for Stormont had regard to the basis upon which we should look at bills of this nature. He suggested that we should examine the bill so as to find out if it serves the best public interest.

This is what we in the C.C.F. party have said in regard to this particular bill. We have been accused of having various ideas but those accusations are not true. We are attempting to make sure that this proposal is in the interests of the public. This is what we have been doing at each stage, and what we have been doing through the amendments which we have proposed at the different stages of the consideration of this measure. We have sought to find out whether this particular company if incorporated would in fact serve the best interests of the people of Canada or would in fact serve the interests of some other company in North America to a degree which would be detrimental to Canada. This was the sole basis of our discussion of the bill on second reading and indeed in the standing committee and in this committee also.

Regardless of hon. members on the government side of the house who have objected to this course and who have attempted on a number of occasions to raise points of order that would deter us from this course of action, like the hon. member for Stormont, we feel that we must at all stages closely scrutinize the company, its relations with other companies and with our industry and our economy, not only in Canada as a whole, but in the province of Alberta also, and its relationship with other countries.

In this regard I think we cannot be too careful, nor do I think we should be deterred from that course in quoting extensively from the provisions of the legislation setting up the national energy board. We should not say, as some hon. members from Alberta have said, "Well, after all, the national energy board has been established; it has certain functions to perform and accordingly we think we should give just a quick look at the bill before us and leave everything to the national energy board". We in the C.C.F. of course refuse to go along with the approach that merely because we establish a commission or a board with certain authority we should abdicate all of our responsibility and give to that board or commission the right to do everything.

As I said, I believe there are some hon. members from Alberta who advocate this approach. I do not think it is necessary to mention their names because it is not an issue in this particular instance. All hon. members know to whom I am referring. Their remarks are in Hansard, and in the record of proceedings of the committee, for everyone to read.

We approach this particular bill to incorporate the Aurora Pipe Line Company from this point of view. Will it serve Canadian interests? When I say "Canadian" I mean all of Canada. Will it serve Canadian interests to the fullest possible extent, or is it merely a smokescreen to serve the interests of others who are not Canadians, those for whom the Prime Minister apparently has great affection, contrary to the opinions he held about them a few years ago?

After listening to the two hon. members from Alberta who have spoken today one would think that each of them is putting in his oar for the leadership of the Social Credit party. I refer to their references to the welcoming of capital—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Tim Buck is supporting the hon. member.

Mr. Howard: My hon. friend knows full well that Tim Buck does not support me.

Mr. Hodgson: Yes, he does.

Mr. Howard: My friend knows full well also—perhaps he does not know, but I will tell him—that the commies have supported the Conservatives in many instances that I know of.

Mr. Hodgson: Not Tim Buck.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Not publicly.

Mr. Howard: No, they do not dare do it publicly; they want to help you, that is why.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Tim Buck says he will support you.

Mr. Winch: I will be amazed if the hon. member is not paying him to do what he is doing.

Mr. Howard: I know my friend has a one track mind and likes to cast aspersions whenever he gets the opportunity.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The hon. member is doing a very good job.

Mr. Howard: This is typical of a fascist-minded individual, to grab onto the tar brush and smear everybody and everything when he cannot defend his own position in supporting a certain line of action, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The hon. member has cast aspersions on some other hon. members and now he is objecting when something is said about his party or himself.

Mr. Winch: If you live in a glass house, don't throw stones.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I don't live in a glass house.

Mr. Howard: I am trying my best to proceed in an orderly way but certain things get in the way from time to time. It amazes me but the hon. gentleman, and I am using the singular, appears to have a screw loose in his head; it is the one which controls his tongue. The hon. member for Acadia interjected his comments, and perhaps I should deal with one or two of them. I did not particularly intend to deal with them, but what he said earlier in this debate made me wonder whether he had in fact read the speech from the throne or heard about it, because it was the speech from the throne that contained the reference to Canadian control of corporations. The hon. member is advocating something entirely contrary to that in that he is advocating the establishment of the Aurora Pipe Line Company regardless of Canadian control or of the speech from the throne. I do not know whether he heard the references in the baby budget to Canadian control of corporations.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Don't put words in my mouth.

Mr. Howard: The hon. member's approach to this question is obviously contrary to the announced policy of his government.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It certainly is not.

Mr. Winch: That is a fact; the hon. member may as well take it.

Mr. Howard: I did not realize that the hon. gentleman had such an effect upon the government. I did not realize that the government supported this particular bill, but obviously it does and it did not mean what was said in the speech from the throne about Canadian control if we can believe what the hon. member for Acadia says. Obviously, the Minister of Finance did not know what he was talking about in announcing government policy about the Canadian control of industry. We have just had word about the government policy in this regard but apparently it was not correct. I know the Prime Minister says a lot of things from time to time, but I did not realize that he was quite so off base as he apparently is in this regard.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has implied that I said something which I never said. In my speech a few moments ago I read from the committee proceedings the amount of participation that Canadians would have in the direction of this company. There would be three Canadian directors and three United States directors; there would be two Canadian directors at large and two directors at large from the company. Certainly this points out that Canadians will have good participation, in fact a better participation in this company than their share holdings would warrant. Certainly Canadians will have a fair amount of control of this company.

In my remarks I said that this government and Canadians wanted to have some say in connection with the development of their natural resources, but certainly we welcome financial capital and aid in the development of those resources.

Mr. Winch: The Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company is 67.8 per cent controlled by Continental Oil Company of the United States of America.

Mr. Howard: I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has the inside track on those things or whether he is misinterpreting what is contained in the committee's report, but let me read from the Financial Post's survey of industrials for 1960. Let us keep in mind, Mr. Chairman, that the Hudson's Bay Company is the parent company of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited, the company sponsoring this particular Aurora Pipe Line Company bill, the gentlemen who were before the committee. What about the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited which is the company sponsoring the Aurora Pipe Line? It is owned to the extent of 22.6 per cent by the Hudson's Bay Company and 67.8 per cent by the Continental Oil Company of the United States of America. I am reading from the Financial Post's survey of industrials.

If that is not sufficient indication, may I point out that information about the ownership of this particular company was also given by the hon. member for Winnipeg South, the co-sponsor of the bill, and by Senator Thorvaldson who sponsored the bill in the other place. Whom am I to believe? Am I to believe the rash and brash hon. member for Acadia or am I to believe the hon. gentleman who appeared before the committee?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): There again, this is in the evidence. If the hon. member did not believe it he should have asked Mr. Burgis to clear it up. The hon. member was at the meeting of the committee and he did not raise the matter at that time. He sat there like a bump on a log. Now he gets up and speaks just to take up the time of the house.

Mr. Howard: If it is a question of taking up time without contributing anything, obviously we have just had a good exhibition of that. If the hon. member for Acadia wans to engage in side issues of this sort I would ask him to remember that I said initially that it is the approach of the C.C.F. that we do not want to give up our responsibility and do not think that parliament should give up its responsibility, as the hon. member for Stormont said, to committees or boards or commissions or other bureaucratic organizations that are established. We do not believe in quoting extensively from the acts establishing these boards to show that they have certain powers and then saying that we do not have to do anything except to give the bill a cursory examination and then pass it. That is what the hon. member for Acadia said as found on page 39 of the proceedings of the committee. I will read the whole paragraph so I will not be accused of misquoting. He said:

> Mr. Cathers and I agree on a lot of things. I agree with him in his theory—

In his theory.

> —that parliament should not pass on to boards anything which would be within the jurisdiction of a member of parliament. I have a gross dislike of how boards have used people at times. In this case, however—

Now he qualifies it.

> —a company is here asking to be incorporated. What if the company already was incorporated and wished to export this product? It would not come to parliament at all. It would go to the national energy board. In other words, the national energy board is set up to serve a function. You and I would not have a voice in this if the company had been incorporated already. In other words, a company which already is incorporated and which wished to compete with Pembina could present argument and you would not have an opportunity to say too much about it.

There is this twofold approach again, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I disagree.

Mr. Howard: —obviously designed to overcome his remark on second reading when he said the same thing only more definitely, that we should give up this responsibility—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I never said anything of the kind.

Mr. Howard: —that we should not concern ourselves too much with the full effect of the incorporation of this company. His attitude was: Let us not look too carefully into the effect this is going to have. After all, we have the national energy board. Let us just pass the bill without too much argument. Let us not inquire too much into the effect it is going to have. After all, we have got the national energy board, a Tory appointed—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is again putting words in my mouth in saying that I made this statement for a reason. I presented an argument to the hon. member for York North who had put forward an argument against the bill and had said that the committee should investigate it fully. I placed a proposition before him. I asked him whether, if the company had already been incorporated, parliament would then investigate the matter and his answer was "no doubt not". I just used an example to try to point out to the hon. member for York North that the national energy board had a purpose and a function. The hon. member for Skeena has gone on to interpret my remarks as meaning something that I certainly never said and certainly never meant to say.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time we have seen hon. members opposite interpret what they said initially and which they wish they had not said in the first place. An example, of course, is the veterans affairs committee where hon. gentlemen opposite practise politics and wish that they were not on the government side. That is just another indication. In any event, I suppose the theory is that if you are on the government side you should not worry too much about anything—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That is absolutely false and you know it.

Mr. Howard: —or inquire into anything too much. My friend is going to get apoplexy if he is not careful. Even when I am speaking in general terms he seems to think that what I say applies to him. I cannot help that. If the hat fits he will have to pull it right down over his ears and make it quite obvious that he thinks of himself in these terms which I have only used generally.

The hon. member for Jasper-Edson made one reference which I should like to have cleared up, and I am sure he will be able to clear up any misunderstanding on my part in a more gentle way than has been the case in the last few moments. The hon. member for Jasper-Edson referred to Pembina, the other parent company of Foothills, and I understood him to say that Pembina would in fact be a monopoly and that this would be injurious to the people living in the Whitecourt field and that part of the country around Edson and Jasper. I would ask the hon. member to let me complete my statement before he replies. I understood him to say that under Pembina there would be no open bidding on the pipe line itself because it would be a monopoly that would operate to the detriment of all concerned including those who might want to bid on the supplying of pipe, I presume, or on the construction of the line. I understood him to say that there would be this rigid, monopolistic control which would not be advantageous to everyone concerned. I see that the hon. member is rising and perhaps he may want to clear up that point before I proceed.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I appreciate the opportunity to clear up the hon. member's misunderstanding and I assure him I will do so gently. First of all, I said that the representations before the Alberta conservation board created some doubt and that some of the people opposing Pembina's application felt that if it were granted Pembina in effect would have a monopoly on the by-products industry in Alberta. I mentioned particularly Canadian Hydrocarbons, the local domestic distributors of propane, butane and associated by-products.

I might tell my hon. friend that this has nothing to do with Whitecourt field which is in essence another gas field now being developed and which will be linked up with the export of gas to California. Various by-products will be available from that field. This has nothing at all to do with Pembina.

What I did say was that there was some fear in Alberta that if Pembina were granted a licence to do what they wanted to do they would be in a monopoly position. It is also a well known fact that Pembina is connected with a pipe line contracting firm. As a matter of fact, their agreement with Standard Oil was filed before the Alberta conservation board and it sets out that Standard will look after the engineering and construction of the pipe line for Pembina. I do not know whether the hon. member is aware of the arrangement that Pembina and Foothills have with Standard of Indiana.

Mr. Howard: I gather that the hon. member asked me whether I was aware of the arrangement that Pembina had with Standard Oil. That was dealt with rather extensively at another stage. It is interesting that one point has been cleared up by what the hon. member has just said. Notwithstanding all his earlier remarks about his own constituency, we can see now that Aurora Pipe Line Company has absolutely nothing to do with it and that it is far removed from it. That is the point I wanted to clear up.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): We were discussing the by-product situation in Alberta generally.

Mr. Howard: I want to point out also that, if we are going to draw inferences—and I think we must do so in this instance especially in view of the comments of the other member of the hon. gentleman's party who is rather closely related to him—the inference is that Pembina is by itself of not much value to Alberta because it is a monopoly.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Not at all.

Mr. Howard: All right. Pembina is not a monopoly or will not be a monopoly.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I think this matter should be cleared up, Mr. Chairman, because I do not want the hon. gentleman saying things which he knows are false.

Mr. Howard: Oh, I would not do that.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Not unless you could get away with it. What I said was that evidence was brought before the Alberta conservation board to the effect that if Pembina and associated companies received a permit to do what they wanted to do, they would in fact have a monopoly. I did not say that I said they had a monopoly. I said that qualified people who appeared before the Alberta conservation board had said they might have a monopoly. I would appreciate it if the hon. gentleman would at least stick to a few facts.

Mr. Howard: I am always interested in facts, but there is no sense in getting excited about the matter.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): I am not excited.

Mr. Howard: The hon. gentleman said, if I have it correctly this time, that apparently qualified experts who appeared before the Alberta natural gas conservation board said that if Pembina gets a licence it will in fact be in a monopoly position.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): That is correct.

Mr. Howard: I do not know whether the hon. gentleman, in making that reference, agrees or disagrees with it. I think we all know that we tend to draw forth factual statements in order to support a particular position of our own. I hope the hon. gentleman does not agree—he may do so; I do not know—but I should like to know whether he agrees or disagrees with the comments of those qualified experts, namely that Pembina will be in a monopoly position.

This is an extremely important matter, Mr. Chairman. I do not want any member in the opposition to misunderstand my position. I tried to clear up this matter on second reading and I tried to make it quite clear in my opening remarks today. My position and that of the C.C.F. with regard to this matter is not one of Pembina versus Aurora or Foothills versus Aurora or whatever the name might be. It is a matter of which is going to be to the greatest advantage of Canadians and of Albertans; in this instance, their interest is one and the same. I want to have that point particularly clear because I do not want hon. gentlemen opposite later on to be going out and accusing me of supporting a monopolist corporate structure. That is why I want to get this particular point clear. But if it has been made clear that the hon. member for Jasper-Edson is not in fact himself saying that Pembina will be a monopoly or in a monopoly position—

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Of course I am not saying that.

Mr. Howard: —but is only saying what others have said—

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): That is right.

Mr. Howard: —then we have that point cleared up; and I hope that later on no one—because he may say that I opposed Pembina or opposed Aurora—will make the accusation that I was in fact supporting a monopoly. I want to get that point clear—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Oh, oh.

Mr. Howard: —because there are other people, like the one who has again broken the rules by speaking from his seat, who may make these accusations and cast reflections on what people do at every turn of events, every time they get the opportunity to do so; and even when they do not get the opportunity, they are prone to do this.

In any event the point of view from which we must approach this matter is this: Is it or is it not beneficial to Canada, compared with other circumstances, to have this particular company doing the things it seeks to do under the corporate powers which it seeks and with the financial structure it seeks to have? Moreover, is there something additional that it seeks to do or that it might do with these corporate powers and with this financial structure? This matter we can deal with a little bit later.

At this time I should like to say this. I do not see the hon. member for Vancouver South in the chamber at the moment. He may be unavoidably absent. However, I should like to say that the hon. member for Vancouver South in his initial comments did a decent analytical job on this Aurora matter and outlined his position quite clearly. When this bill was before the house for second reading it will be recalled that those of us who wanted to find the full implications of it were told that we would get the full story and the full picture in the standing committee. We were told that one of the reasons why standing committees existed in so far as private bills were concerned was that people would have an opportunity of appearing and of presenting their case, and that committee members would have an opportunity of querying them about all and sundry matters in which they might be interested.

In this particular instance—whether by coincidence or by design, I do not know—it was unfortunate that one of the major organizations, or rather the other major corporate organization concerned about the particular bill was not able to be there. We know they appeared before the committee of the other place, although that committee kept no record. We almost kept no record either, not having done so until we were part way through. In any event we know that Aurora and Foothills appeared before the committee of the other place and I think every hon. member of the house expected that they would also appear before our committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines which considered this particular bill. Unfortunately, they did not do so. This failure to appear left a fairly large gap in the evidence which was presented.

As the hon. member for Vancouver South said, it is not always so much what is said in a committeee that matters but rather what is not said. I am quite sure that the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas people who were there were presenting information—I do not say they were hiding anything—and arguments which would support their particular application and that they would not in fact present arguments which would support Pembina's stand if it was opposed to them. This is a natural course for people to follow. However, we reached the committee and we did not get the information in full or complete form.

Perhaps this is a good time at which to mention that possibly what we need on these committees or attached to them is a staff of research people who will be able to go into these subjects and advise members of the full impact of things so that all members of the committee and of the house will have a better opportunity of assessing the effect of them. However, perhaps this is not the point at which to deal with that matter.

In the committee the hon. member for Westmorland attempted to do what I think was the decent thing to do. It is unfortunate that it was not carried out. As found at page 46 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the committee—and this was fairly well at the completion of the evidence of the Hudson's Bay Oil people—he moved as follows, and I quote his words so that I will not be accused of paraphrasing them. He said:

> But, I move that before going on with the clause by clause discussion, that the meeting be adjourned to a later date in order that anybody who might oppose the bill will have an opportunity to give evidence before the committee.

Then he went on further to state as follows:

> However, I think it is our duty to give the public ample opportunity to get here, and for that reason I am going to move that this committee hearing be adjourned for a period of one week before we take it clause by clause.

I think this was the decent and correct thing to do, especially in view of the earlier evidence which was given by the hon. member for York North. I make reference to him only in the sense that he appeared and gave evidence. It is quite true that he mentioned the fact that he had a particular axe to grind in that he was a shareholder in the other company which had opposed this Aurora Pipe Line Company bill before the committee of the other place. I will quote what the hon. member for York North said as reported at page 37 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the committee. This was after we finally got shorthand reporters there. The hon. gentleman was not reported in his initial evidence. In any event, he did say:

> It is in answer, I think, to a remark by Mr. Winch about how this was advertised. I would like to add that the Pembina people had intended to be here, but the hearing is going on today in Calgary before the conservation board, so they could not be here.

I subsequently asked him whether they desired to appear, and so on. He claimed that he would not know because he appeared, as I understood it, not as an agent or representative of Pembina but as an individual shareholder. In fact, when he finished his evidence I think he said something to the effect that perhaps Pembina would rather he had not come.

However, the hon. member did point out at the committee meeting on Tuesday, February 21, 1961, that the Pembina people had on that day intended to be here but they were before the Alberta oil and gas conservation board. That was extremely unfortunate.

Following upon that the hon. member for Westmorland moved that the meeting be postponed for one week. There was then some argument as to whether or not the meeting was adequately advertised. Reference was made to the fact that advertisements had been placed in the Canada Gazette and the newspapers. Undoubtedly there was advertising in connection with the formal notice of petition for a private bill, without reference to the actual date of the meetings of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

I should point out in this regard that it would be pretty difficult for those advertisements to have contained the actual date of the meeting of the committee.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired. Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am quite sure that the hon. member for Skeena would like to continue. I will just say a few words and then he can carry on. I think we were indeed fortunate in this house, and in the committee, to have people on the committee who were not concerned with hearing only one side of the matter. We were indeed fortunate to have on the committee such people as the hon. members for Vancouver South, Vancouver East and Skeena. These members were interested in seeing that both sides of the story were presented.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question? Does he know how great a part the hon. member for Skeena took in the committee? Does he know how many questions the hon. member for Skeena asked in the committee? Has he read the committee proceedings?

Mr. Howard: I will tell you.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member for Skeena is quite capable of telling you himself how many words he spoke in the committee, if that is what you want to know. However, although I am not a member of the committee, I did sit in on the committee meeting and listened to the discussion. I think these three hon. members put forward a fairly comprehensive argument in support of the contention that the application of Aurora Pipe Line Company was not all that it seemed to be, nor was it all that the sponsor of the bill indicated.

I am suggesting that hon. members of this committee who did not have the opportunity to sit in on that committee, and who have not taken the opportunity of reading the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the committee, would have been quite impressed with the presentation made on behalf of the opposition which should, in my opinion, have had an opportunity of being there.

In this regard I should also point out that the hon. member for York North brought quite a number of points to the attention of the committee that would not otherwise have come up. I think the members of this committee and those who are interested in pipe lines being built by Canadians for the distribution of Canadian products for the benefit of Canadians would have been quite impressed by the presentation that was made on their behalf.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, perhaps it may be an interesting sort of diversion if I counted the words I used in the committee, as required by the hon. member for Acadia; but I do not intend to do that. He knows the answer to that question as well as I.

I think that on the question of personal participation as between himself and myself in the committee, he was perhaps more verbose than I. There is no doubt about that. This applies in the house also.

However, I was dealing with this matter and I should like to continue. I had raised the matter as to whether or not there was a full opportunity for interested parties, particularly Pembina, to attend this committee meeting. That day they were unfortunately before the Alberta oil and gas conservation board. Because they were unable to attend that committee meeting, I wonder whether they should not now be given the opportunity of appearing. This could be done by the committee undertaking—perhaps we should do this in a formal way later on, Mr. Chairman; I merely toss out the idea as a suggestion—to rise and report progress and recommending that the bill be referred back to the committee. In that way interested people who were prevented from appearing earlier could now appear.

There was some argument about this. Pembina were obviously the major corporate organization that was interested; they appeared before the committee of the other place which dealt with this particular bill. The hon. member for York North, who appeared as a witness, stated that Pembina intended to be in Ottawa, but unfortunately they had to appear before the Alberta oil and gas conservation board on that day. There was quite a discussion in the committee about advertisements. It was said that even though there was no date in the advertisements pointing out when this committee of the house would be meeting, nevertheless anybody who wanted to find that out could do so.

This is quite true. Anybody who wanted to find out when the committee was meeting could do so. I do not wish to quote the words of the hon. member for Acadia, who told somebody else that he had no vital interest in it and then mentioned to my hon. friend for Vancouver East that he could have found out and that other people could have found out, but the words are there. It is a fact that if something is to be presented before a committee of this house, and it is set down for hearing, anyone who is interested can in fact find out when that committee will meet. It is published in the Journals, a letter to a member of parliament will obtain this information, or it can be obtained by a communication to the clerk of the committee. There are a number of ways of discovering when a committee is going to meet.

However, the fact of the matter is that on February 13 this year this bill passed second reading in the house. After extensive debate, on February 13 it passed second reading and was referred to the standing committee. One week later, on February 21, the committee met to consider the bill. There was only one week between the time the bill was read a second time and its perusal by the committee.

The Pembina people, who had a vital interest in this matter, who the hon. member for York North said were going to appear and who had appeared before the committee of the other place, could not be here on February 21. Why could they not be here? It was because they were appearing before the Alberta oil and gas conservation board. They obviously could not be in two places at once.

Even if the Pembina interests had known—and I am not saying that they did not know—that February 21 was the day set for the hearing, do you think they could have prevailed upon the Alberta oil and gas conservation board to postpone its hearings so that they could come to Ottawa? I think not. The Alberta oil and gas conservation board undoubtedly has a number of people appearing before it in connection with applications for licences. Undoubtedly they have a number of hearings and have to set a schedule and keep to it as much as possible.

The decent thing would have been to follow the suggestion made by the hon. member for Westmorland and postpone the actual clause by clause consideration of the bill for one week in order that interested people could be there, and specifically in order that one interested group of people—and I am not advocating their case at the moment; I am merely pointing out that they were an interested group, Pembina and the Foothills company—could be present. It would have been proper to postpone the clause by clause consideration for one week in order that the Pembina people could have come forward to present their point of view, put forward their ideas and participate in eliciting information from the Aurora people, and vice versa, in order that some of the unanswered questions which are still in the minds of hon. members might be answered so that at this stage the committee of the whole considering this bill might have a more complete picture than the one-sided picture we have at the moment.

I do not wish to cast any reflection on the action taken by the committee, because that action has now been taken, but I think it was regrettable that this course should have been followed when postponement of the discussion for one week could have meant all the difference in the world. As I suggested before, I do think this committee of the whole might reasonably express the view that an opportunity should be given to the Pembina people to appear and present their point of view. I do not know whether this should be done in any formal way at the moment. In fact, I do not know even if it would be in order to move the particular motion which I have in mind.

Perhaps before any action of this kind is taken, the sponsor of the bill who has worked hard and assiduously to promote its passage through the house might care to comment on this suggestion that the committee of the whole might report its considerations to the house, one of those considerations and recommendations being that the bill be referred back to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines in order that it might go more fully into these particular questions.

I know one could level the accusation that this is a delaying tactic and that anything which consumes time is a means of delay, but in this particular instance I submit that would be an incorrect conclusion to reach, because one of the things I am concerned with is the right of people to present their views and their ideas. The Pembina people were denied that right. There is no question about that. Of course, they could have appeared before the committee on the day which had been advertised, had they known about it, and thereby foregone their right to appear before the Alberta oil and gas conservation board, but they could not have been in two places at once. In the circumstances the proceedings before the Alberta board were, perhaps, more important for that company since they involved licensing. In any event, the company chose to put forward their case before the Alberta board on the same day as our committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines was meeting.

It seems to me that this committee might profitably follow the course I have suggested, bearing in mind that we are not attempting to postpone things or to call things off but merely trying to give these interested people an opportunity to appear before a standing committee of this house, an opportunity which was previously denied them because of circumstances over which, I am sure, they have no control. Action along the lines I am suggesting would preserve the undeniable right of individuals to appear before a standing committee and present their views on particular questions, whether in opposition to them or in favour of them is immaterial to me, the major principle involved being the right to appear. I think this committee will agree that by force of circumstances, if for no other reason, the Pembina people did not have the right to appear before the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines on February 21.

Possibly, following such an appearance we would be in a position where the doubts which have been felt by some hon. members here would have vanished to the point at which they are no longer doubts at all. The suspicions which some hon. members may have with regard to the Aurora Company might be seen to be without foundation and it might appear to be in the best interests of Canada and Alberta for Aurora Pipe Lines to proceed. At the moment, however, when we have been presented with a one-sided picture, one party—an interested party—having been unable to appear before a committee of this house, I think the only decent and correct thing we can do is to provide that such an opportunity be given. Perhaps at another stage, later on, after we have had some discussion on this point, it may be logical to move a motion to that effect, but before we actually reach the formal stage of doing so we may, perhaps, have the opportunity of hearing the comments of one or two other members and learn whether or not they think it would be the correct thing to do.

Mr. Howe: In view of the fact that there have been some allegations that proceedings of the committee of which I am chairman were not carried out in a proper and orderly manner, particularly in connection with the fact that a certain body was not allowed an opportunity to appear before the committee, perhaps I might briefly intervene at this stage.

The hon. member for Skeena made reference to the fact that the committee hearing was advertised in many newspapers. Advertisements giving notice of the meeting to discuss the matter of a private bill for incorporating a company known as Aurora Pipe Lines appeared in at least 12 and, possibly, 15 papers in September of last year. The company concerned had a perfect right to petition the committee and ask for the privilege of appearing before it at any time but we did not get an application of that type from the Pembina people or from the other pipe line company affected.

In fact, knowing the opinions of the hon. member for York North, a member of our committee, on the very day when this bill was passed on second reading and referred to the committee I asked the hon. member for York North if he would like to have his people appear in opposition to the proposal before the committee. They were notified, at that time, when the committee meeting was to be held but after that there was no indication from the Pembina people that they wished to offer any opposition to the bill. Therefore, I maintain that at no time were they denied the right to appear. They had a perfect right to appear before the committee and we could have changed the date of the sitting if they had indicated they wished to come. No indication was given that they were going to be in attendance and we did not think it was necessary to postpone the meeting. The meeting was then called for February 23.

Mr. Howard: I have just one comment to make, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the remarks made by the hon. member for Wellington-Huron who was the chairman of that committee. I understand he just referred to February 23 but I did not catch what he said following that reference.

Mr. Howe: I was referring to the date set for that meeting. Perhaps it was February 21, 1961.

Mr. Howard: I take it the hon. member was referring to February 21, 1961 the date the committee was to have heard the witnesses representing this company.

I was referring to the advertisements that were made in regard to the petition for incorporation, as the hon. chairman of that committee said, sometime last September. These advertisements did not, in fact, mention that the committee was to sit on February 21, 1961 to consider this particular bill. As I understand it there was no advertisement to that effect. Perhaps my understanding in this regard can be cleared up. Were there any advertisements in regard to February 21 being the day upon which the meeting would sit for the purpose of considering this bill?

Mr. Howe: The hon. member should realize that committee meetings are not advertised in newspapers. These meetings are advertised in the Votes and Proceedings of this house.

Mr. Howard: Yes, I understand that was the only method of advertising. I wanted to make sure that was clear.

As I have said, there was a considerable amount of discussion regarding newspaper advertisements. I think the hon. member for the Yukon mentioned that he had seen an advertisement in the Whitehorse Star. I am sure that this was widely advertised, as is required by the rules of the other place.

Unfortunately I was not quite able to hear what the hon. member for Wellington-Huron said in regard to the hon. member for York North being in touch with the Pembina people respecting the proposed hearing date. Would the hon. member indicate what he said regarding the hon. member for York North?

Mr. Howe: I did not indicate what the hon. member for York North had said. I did indicate the proposed date and time of the meeting and suggested that he might get in touch with the Pembina people in this regard. He intended to inform me as to their wishes in respect of appearing before that committee. If these people wished to appear before the committee it was indicated that a day would be set to correspond with their wishes.

Mr. Howard: These difficulties have probably risen through unfortunate circumstances.

At page 37 of the minutes of proceedings of that committee, I asked the chairman a question which is reported as follows:

> Mr. Howard: Because of his close association with Pembina perhaps I might ask Mr. Cathers whether they would desire to appear before the committee following the hearings in Alberta before the oil and gas conservation board.
> Mr. Cathers: I would not know.

I took this to mean that the chairman did not know if the hon. member for York North had received an indication that the Pembina people wished to attend or did not wish to attend. I want to have this situation clear. In view of the fact that the hon. member for York North is, I gather, our only contact in a formal or informal way with the Pembina people, I would like to know whether or not he intended to convey the impression that they wanted to appear or did not want to appear. I feel that perhaps in view of the fact that he is only a shareholder and not an official acting on behalf of the company we should perhaps refer this back to the committee in order to find out whether or not these people, who perhaps through unfortunate circumstances, were not in a position to participate in the hearings, wish to appear.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have enjoyed listening to the debate which has taken place this afternoon, and it seems to me a fundamental difference in opinion has been revealed. Perhaps this is one of the occasions when the members having this difference of opinion should refrain from taking part in the debate.

The difficulty involved in regard to a pipe line operation is the fact that it is transmitting a natural resource from one place to another. In this case it is seeking to transmit condensates which are very similar to crude oil. We are faced at this time with the fact that one company has already been giving fairly extensive coverage across the provinces in the distribution of oil and oil products. I am referring to the Pembina Pipe Line Limited, whose officers appeared before us a couple of years ago. They were given at that time what has amounted to almost a monopoly. I would suggest that we look into this situation and find out if this monopoly is in the public interest at this time.

In handling any natural resource a transportation factor is involved, because of the necessity of providing highways, railroads and pipe lines, some of which are built at the public's expense. I think that this is perhaps an argument in favour of putting railway services under a public utility monopoly. I feel that each time we deal with natural resources or the transmission of them we should take a look at the distribution history of other natural resources. I believe that if we did so we could only come to the conclusion, as many people did in 1957, that the transmission of natural resources should be controlled by a public utility board.

There does exist in Canada today one pipe line company distributing oil and oil products from the western provinces and it seemed to me at the time this company was incorporated that it would eventually expand perhaps to the extent that it could look after the market developing in the Chicago area. Anyone belonging to the C.C.F. party believes that there should be exportation of natural resources. It seems to me, however, that this company is only interested in the exploitation of natural resources, particularly oil and oil products, through the transmission of these products, using a branch line running into the Chicago area and that there would be very limited expenditure necessary. It seems to me this company is interested in the exploitation of the oil industry through milking off very rich profits from a very short distribution line which will send the product to a trunk line running into the Chicago area where a very limited amount of expenditure will be necessary.

We have heard conflicting stories about $15,000 being enough to make the connecting link across the international border. If this is true, if the Canadian people are going eventually to fit their export market into this kind of action, then it would have been a very nice thing, in my opinion, if we had built this line as a public enterprise and as a public utility. If we had built this $15,000 link across the international border we would have had complete control of distribution into the export market.

Those who talk about exploitation should bear in mind that they are federal members; that they represent not only a small oil area of Alberta but all of Canada. They are not elected here as the representatives of a particular area but as members for all of Canada. This point has been argued by prominent parliamentarians down through the years and I do not intend to duplicate the argument at all. It is an established fact that members represent not only a very limited area or a limited interest but the country as a whole.

Bills of this kind have to be sponsored. There is no kick against anybody sponsoring these bills. According to parliamentary procedure they have to be sponsored by somebody. It may be quite an honour and an opportunity to sponsor a private bill, I do not know. I hope it never falls to my lot to sponsor one in which I am vitally interested or concerned because I think it would be very difficult to remain impartial and still be closely connected with the particular industry concerned.

In this committee there are a number of hon. members from Alberta who are vitally concerned with the production of oil and the sale of oil, and particularly with the money which will result from and flow back into their own areas because of the sale and export of oil. I have no kick against that, Mr. Chairman. Probably they are doing their duty to their constituents; that is what they should be doing. But there is a great deal to be said on behalf of all the other people in Canada.

I have been interested in the stories we hear about our having too much oil. It is said that we have too much gas and too much of everything. In northern Ontario we pay over 49 cents for a gallon of ordinary grade gasoline, and we pay 51.9 cents for grade one gasoline. It would appear to me that there probably is quite a spread between the cost of the production of the gas that is exported across the border into the Chicago area and the gas that reaches me in northern Ontario. I looked up the Canadian Statistical Review, which is probably a pretty shoddy way of finding out how much petroleum products is exported and how much is imported because it is not broken down in a way which would give you that information. If we were more closely conversant with the various factors in those condensates we would probably come up with a little more accurate figure. The committee was told that in its natural form these products are made up of about six parts condensates, one part butane and one part propane, and when they are processed through the plants the various condensates end up as four parts condensates, one part butane and one part propane. We were also told that they were a very high type product; they are the basis for high grade gasolines and oils; they are a competitive product with crude oil that is being imported into the country.

It was interesting, in looking at this copy of the Canadian Statistical Review, dated January, 1961, to find out that with respect to petroleum products, in 1958 we exported $6.4 million worth; in 1959 we exported $6.7 million worth, but at the same time we imported $6.5 million worth in 1958; and $6.5 million worth in 1959, of the same petroleum products. This would indicate to me that there is a large market in Canada for these products. If we are importing petroleum products to this extent, then there is an opportunity for processing some of these products into gasoline and oil, and that is what I am particularly concerned about.

Northern Ontario is completely a natural resources area. It has no major secondary industry development; it has had very little in the way of transportation. We are not blessed with any large bodies of water or other natural geographic features to enable us to be anything other than a natural resources storehouse, and this area has produced very little industry over the years other than industries based on the natural resources. In this respect, our resources are phenomenal and have contributed to the development of such cities as Toronto, but we get very little benefit from the production of our natural resources. In the very early days perhaps there was some justification for the buccaneers coming in and exploiting our natural resources.

People from the Ottawa valley have come into our area and cut down the trees. They have floated them down the waterways and taken them out of the area completely. It is advantageous for some to say, "Let us take the condensates out of the area; we have no plants that will manufacture them". A secondary industry development is necessary to put these petroleum products on the market in a form in which they can be used. We in northern Ontario have not this development. I for one would not like to see other areas develop where exploiters would come in and exploit the area. We should do everything we can to see secondary industry developed as close as possible to the source of the natural resource.

If it is necessary to spend $15,000 to build this pipe line, then goodness gracious, surely the Canadian people could afford to do this, if it would give them the key to the complete control of the Alberta oil fields and the export markets. If this is the gateway into the export market, then let us get control of this and export only what we cannot develop for ourselves.

I think we should learn a lesson from other areas. Let us look at northern Quebec where we have a fabulous iron industry, as we have a fabulous oil industry in Alberta. This country is not getting much advantage out of the iron industry in northern Quebec. It is true that a few miners are employed, and the few people who are connected with the development that takes place in this type of industry. If we had kept the gateway of Seven Islands we would have the largest steel mills in the world situated in that area. I think the same is true with respect to these condensates, if we took control of them. If they are as important as they appear to be, let us keep them in Canada and develop them as far as we can in Canada. Let us sell the finished product to the United States public who will be demanding it as they are demanding other natural resources. I think it is this simple.

In recent months I have been impressed with some of the statements that have come from the Conservative hierarchy in which they have said, "Let us put some control on the exploitation that is taking place by the use of United States capital. Let us retain some of these advantages for the benefit of the Canadian people." This matter has not only been discussed. A few controls were instituted not long ago with regard to the establishment of companies and that may be in part the reason why Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company did not itself ask for a charter that would have extended its rights and allowed it to construct this pipe line. These controls may have had some effect and it may be of interest to some of the financial geniuses to sit down and figure out how much less money will be derived from taxation because of the establishment of this new company than would have been the case if the development had been carried out by the parent company or one of the other companies participating in this development along with the parent company.

In my opinion these are all problems that cannot be dealt with by the national energy board. It has been said that the national energy board is going to make the final decision on a number of these matters. That is true but it cannot make any decision on where we put secondary industry in Canada. If we have secondary industry the board can only decide that a certain amount of the product must be available to Canadian plants and for Canadian development. If we are to do our duty in parliament we must put some roadblocks in the way of those from outside this country who would exploit us so that we will be able to develop our own products. I think the national energy board then has all the authority it needs to see that industry we establish on the Canadian side of the border will be able to function to some advantage.

We have heard a great number of charges levelled today about whether there was a proper hearing when the bill was considered by the standing committee. I was surprised at the vote that took place in that committee. I am not disclosing anything that is not known. I was not a member of that committee and the fact is reported in the procedings of the committee. I was interested to see that again in my opinion party lines were drawn so as to forestall a number of members who wished to have a delay which would have allowed the chairman of the committee an opportunity to ascertain whether the opposition, the Pembina group, was interested in appearing before the committee and opposing the bill.

I think this is again an example of one of the great failings in the functioning of committees of the House of Commons. We do not have any source of making information available to people who might be involved and in many cases we do not know who is involved. I think many members of the standing committee were surprised when they found a member of their own party standing up in that committee—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Lambert: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I am sure that the Chair will support me when I say that the hon. member is entirely out of order at this time in speaking about the general conduct of the committee.

Mr. Peters: I was not a member of the committee. I was present as a member of the general public and I fail to see how I am bound through participation in the committee when I was not a member of it.

Mr. Argue: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that what the hon. member has been doing is perfectly in order. He has been referring to a decision made in the committee. That decision is public knowledge. It has to do with the bill under discussion. All afternoon there have been repeated references, and very properly so, to evidence taken before the committee and to decisions taken by the committee. I realize that an hon. member cannot impute motives and I do not think that is what the hon. member was doing, but surely a reference to a decision of the committee having to do with the bill now before us is very much in order.

The Chairman: It is permissible to quote from the evidence given in a committee but the hon. member knows it is not permissible to discuss any decision taken by the house or by a committee or to refer to the conduct of hon. members in a committee or in the house.

Mr. Argue: Surely if the decision in the committee has to do with this measure it is quite proper to refer to what happened in the committee. It would be a very foolish rule that would allow us to refer to the evidence leading up to a decision but would make it impossible for us to refer to the decision. The motion moved in the committee had to do with the bill now under discussion and I suggest that the hon. member is very much in order.

Mr. Peters: I should like to suggest that the hon. member for Edmonton West jumped to a conclusion with regard to what I was saying. I did not intend to mention how anybody voted. What I was referring to was the fact that in my opinion the committee does not have the power I think it should have with respect to allowing people to come forward and oppose a measure. In this regard perhaps I might refer to the miscellaneous private bills committee. In that committee we have never been able to ascertain to our own satisfaction that the people involved in various measures have necessarily been served with the proper notices. In the case of the bill now before us we did not know who the participants were going to be. I point out that one member appeared as a participant in opposition to the bill and that this was a surprise. In all fairness I think I should point out that the chairman of the standing committee would have no opportunity of knowing that this particular gentleman should be notified that there was going to be a hearing on this particular day. In this case the hon. member in question has informed us that he did know about the hearing but this would not apply generally.

I suggest, for instance, that if Husky Oil had been interested in this matter they would not have known about the hearing. I presume that most companies do not subscribe to Votes and Proceedings and would not see much advantage in subscribing to it. If we are to take it that Votes and Proceedings contains notice to a company as to an opportunity to oppose an application, I think we can be certain that the company would not find out until the hearing had been held and the information had been made public.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Peters: Before the recess hour, Mr. Chairman, we were trying to point out that this type of application has implications that are far-reaching, that there is a difference of opinion and that the difference of opinion is rather a fundamental one. We are trying to make our position clear. Our position is that this is a large natural resource that is being tapped; that although this company has made application for a small and inconsiderable program, it comes to parliament and asks for wide powers for a large corporation and that this can be a large and influential segment of our economy as it affects the oil industry.

[Mr. Argue.]

A great deal of responsibility has been left with the national energy board. I think most of us can and do agree with the hon. member for Vancouver East when he pointed out that in setting up this particular company you are setting up a new type of distribution that is going to have only as the basis of its initial program the distribution of oil not through Canada but into the export market of the United States.

Some of the hon. members who have participated in this debate have pointed out the Canadian content in this particular company and how it is comprised. I believe that we have an obligation, particularly in view of the many statements that have been made from the Conservative party and the C.C.F. party. I believe that, from the C.C.F. point of view, consideration should and must be given to using our national resources for the advantage of all Canadians and that, from the Conservative party's point of view, greater consideration should be given to Canadian control and Canadian ownership. In both these respects this company fails to meet the requirements.

We have been told that the national energy board will protect both these interests, that all we have to do is to pass this bill and we shall have accomplished only the setting up of a company or a corporate body, and that then the national energy board and the conservation board of the province of Alberta will make the decision as to whether it is in the interests of the Canadian economy or of the Canadian people and as to the extent of the export licence that this company will be given. I think it is interesting to note however, what has been said about the application of the energy board act to this particular company. The sponsor of the bill, as reported at pages 37 and 38 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the committee, quotes part of the National Energy Board Act, refers to Section 27 and states as follows:

> Section 27 says:
> Except as otherwise provided in this act, a company shall not begin the construction of a section or part of a pipe line until
> (a) the board has by the issue of a certificate granted the company leave to construct the line.

In this respect we have been told what has been done by this company which just does not exist in fact, although the sponsor of the bill talked about the flexibility of the law, the flexibility of legal arguments and certain other flexibilities. This company does not and will not exist until this bill is passed. Yet they have already gone to one of the boards, namely the board in Alberta and have asked for certain considerations. However, actually in fact there is no such company.

An hon. Member: In that respect it is just like the new party.

Mr. Peters: There may be some similarity; I do not know.

Mr. Woolliams: I hope not.

Mr. Peters: There is the analogy that both of them are meeting with stiff competition before they are born. There may be some similarity in that respect. Then he goes on to show what is necessary; and I am quoting from the statement of the sponsor of the bill:

Section 44 sets out the kind of evidence which shall go before the board:

The board may, subject to the approval of the governor in council, issue a certificate in respect of a pipe line or an international power line if the board is satisfied that the line is and will be required by the present and future public convenience and necessity, and, in considering an application for a certificate, the board shall take into account all such matters as to it appear to be relevant, and without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the board may have regard to the following:

(a) the availability of oil or gas to the pipe line, or power to the international power line, as the case may be;

(b) the existence of markets, actual or potential;

(c) the economic feasibility of the pipe line or international power line.

On those three points, when and if this bill is passed and if this company is formed, the board is going to have a great deal of difficulty in assessing even the limited information that is now before the committee. We have by law set up one organization in this field of public utility. We have set up an organization which came before us and asked for a distribution and collection system of pipe lines that fairly well covered the whole area and which at that time indicated that it could more than meet the supply that was available at the time. Now we are increasing the decision that will have to be made by the board because we are saying to the energy board, in effect, that we feel that one company was not able to meet one of the requirements and that the second company was needed. We are also deciding that we are having to have a second company because of the existence of markets either actual or potential. If we have not filled the markets which the original company agreed to fill, I would think that we are giving to the national energy board a direction to the effect that here is another company that must be given part of the potential that may arise in the future.

As to the economic feasibility of the pipe line, if it is only a matter of $15,000, I think even the Canadian government could afford at this time to build that small section of the pipe line. I therefore assume that with a large company having the opportunity and the resources of revenue that they obviously have and the money that is available for pipe lines, there is not much question that they will be given the opportunity under this section to produce the line. The sponsor of the bill then goes on to say this:

(d) the financial responsibility and financial structure of the applicant, the methods of financing the line and the extent to which Canadians will have an opportunity of participating in the financing, engineering and construction of the line;—

Under section (e) parliament stated, when setting up the national energy board, that it would have the right to choose as follows:

(e) any public interest that in the board's opinion may be affected by the granting or the refusing of the application.

I would assume that the national energy board would take into consideration the fact that we have decided there should be a second company competing with the first one in this particular field. They would have no alternative but to say, "If the government is going to give them a licence to set up a new company, we are going to have to give them a licence to allow them to make some use of this particular company".

Mr. Fairfield: Are you advocating a change in the powers of the national energy board?

Mr. Peters: I do not think we ever intended to give the national energy board the right to say what was in the interests of the Canadian people from one period of time to another. I should think that when the legislation was passed setting up the national energy board the Conservative party was not on this anti-American kick that they are on now. Times change and direction changes. I assume that parliament itself is the body that should decide what is to be accomplished, and it should not be left to a board to make that decision.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the hon. member is imputing that the Conservative party has certain underlying motives with respect to the oil and gas industry in western Canada.

This is a bill to incorporate a company. We have a national energy board. As far as we on this side are concerned, we have every confidence that the national energy board will take care of the various problems referred to it in the best interests of all Canadians. I very much resent the implication of the hon. member with respect to what this government may have in mind.

An hon. Member: Is this a speech or a point of order?

Mr. Brunsden: It is a point of order.

Mr. Peters: I believe parliament should be supreme in deciding what the position is going to be in relation to the wishes of the Canadian people. We, as the representatives of the people, should interpret the wishes of the people and make changes if necessary. But a board is not in a position to make these changes.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, we are taking this opportunity to make our views known—

Mr. Woolliams: Very interesting.

Mr. Brunsden: As always.

Mr. Argue: —on this bill. We are doing our part to point out the weaknesses in the legislation before the committee, the reason why this bill should not be passed and the fact that the government in recent years has completely changed its attitude to legislation of this kind.

I think the bill now before the committee should not be here at all. When we were discussing the bill on second reading some of us pointed out what we thought to be very great weaknesses in it. We were told by some hon. members opposite that the bill was merely to set up a corporate entity, that it had nothing to do with policy and that it was merely for the establishment of a company that, under certain other laws and regulations, would appear before the national energy board.

We were also told that second reading of the bill was not the stage at which to obtain detailed information about the company. We were told that the proper place for this to be done was in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines where all information would be made available, where witnesses would be called, where hon. members would be given every opportunity to inquire into the bill, to obtain particulars of the proposed company to be incorporated and, in general, to satisfy themselves that this legislation was in the interests of the people of this country.

That committee met. Very little evidence was adduced and very little opportunity was given to hon. members to find out the details of the measure involved or to find out to their satisfaction whether this legislation should be passed. But there was some information obtained in the committee, and if there had been any doubt about United States control before the committee met, there was certainly no doubt after the evidence of Mr. K. H. Burgis, the vice president of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company.

Mr. Burgis had this to say in his opening remarks:

> The application for incorporation of Aurora Pipe Line Company is being sponsored by Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited. Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited was incorporated under the laws of Canada in 1926 and its shares are listed on the Toronto stock exchange. Approximately 10 per cent of its outstanding shares are owned by some 12,000 public shareholders, 22 per cent by the Hudson's Bay Company and 68 per cent by Continental Oil Company.

Therefore, the fact is on record that we are dealing with a company which is largely United States-owned and which is and will be largely United States controlled. Hon. members opposite are saying to us that this is not government policy, the government has not given its stamp of approval to this legislation. I suggest that the government has approved of this legislation. I suggest that the government clearly demonstrated that it is 100 per cent behind the legislation, in that when the vote was taken on second reading the cabinet lined up solidly in support of this measure.

This is a rather startling disclosure in light of the stand taken by the Conservative party when in opposition. Not only did the Conservative party in opposition oppose United States control of companies like this one, but when the Conservative party was in opposition it opposed measures which had to do with this very company in question and went on record in opposing this kind of United States control.

Mr. Woolliams: Nonsense.

Mr. Argue: That is not nonsense at all; that is a fact.

Mr. Woolliams: A fact to you is not a fact to anybody else.

Mr. Argue: The Conservative party has had many leaders in the past; they change quite regularly. In 1956, when they had one of the temporary leaders of that party, the Hon. George Drew, he had this to say, as reported at page 2177 of Hansard:

> The present distribution of the ownership of this enterprise shows also that the control is in the hands of financial interests in the United States; that it is definitely under the control of these immensely powerful financial interests: Canadian Gulf, Hudson Bay Oil and Gas and Tennessee Gas Transmission,—

These were the all-powerful United States companies that were so opposed by the Hon. George Drew in his day but which are taken to the bosom of the Conservative party in power. This company is given the blessing of the government and the great battle put up by Mr. Drew in former years has gone by the board. This government, in practice and in office, has disowned and disclaimed everything that he said in relation to United States control of gas pipe lines.

The Hon. George Drew went on to say this in regard to the same question:

> Contrary to what the Minister of Trade and Commerce has said, this is the occasion to focus attention on our resources. This is the only place to do so and this is the opportunity to declare our economic independence of the United States.

That was the song in opposition. The theme in government is, ostensibly, the same but actions speak louder than words and the party in power is now prepared to turn over this pipe line monopoly to a United States company.

Mr. Fairfield: Would the hon. member permit a question? I wonder if he would mind reading the rest of Mr. Burgis' evidence at page 35 of the proceedings in so far as voting rights are concerned.

Mr. Argue: If I may conclude my sentence, I should be very glad to comply with the request which has been made. I was saying that the government in power is now turning over this monopoly to a group of United States interests controlled by the Texas buccaneers to which the government made such grave objections in days gone by.

Now I am asked to read from Mr. Burgis' evidence following the quotation I have made. This is from Mr. Burgis:

> Despite the disparity in shareholdings of Hudson's Bay Company and Continental Oil Company, each have by agreement equal voting rights and equal representation on the board of directors. The present board of directors consists of three Canadian directors representing the Hudson's Bay Company, three American directors representing Continental Oil Company, two Canadian directors representing the public shareholders and two senior officers of the company.

Having regard to the distribution of the shares and the measures for the control of the company as they have been set forth, there is no doubt that this company will be United States controlled as well as United States owned.

I had expected that this committee in dealing with this legislation would have held a great many hearings and would have called to appear before it a great many witnesses so that all the details of such an important bill might be inquired into. Unfortunately this is not what occurred. Those of us who are not members of the committee learned this afternoon that the proceedings of the committee during a substantial part of the time were not recorded and transcribed, with the result that the evidence as far as we are concerned is just hearsay evidence. No record was kept, and the hon. members on that committee did not take action soon enough to have that evidence taken down in order that members of the house might have the advantage of the record before them. This certainly makes a mockery of the statement made on second reading that the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines would provide an opportunity to bring forth evidence so that hon. members on all sides of the house might be able to peruse it and learn all the details about the company which was to be incorporated. I am flabbergasted that the committee has been so slipshod in its proceedings, or that the committee should have been so disinterested—

The Chairman: Order. I am sure the hon. member realizes that he is criticizing the proceedings of the committee. That is contrary to our rules.

Mr. Argue: I think I went a little far under the rules when I said they had taken a slipshod attitude. That expression might be a good one for horse dealers but it is not good as far as a committee of the house is concerned. I will say, then, that apparently this committee did not consider this legislation of sufficient importance to think it worth while having all the evidence transcribed. I would say that the committee failed to perform its functions in such a way as would be most helpful—perhaps that might be in order, Mr. Chairman—to hon. members of the house. It is one thing to be able to go over evidence that is available; it is quite another to have evidence given of which no record at all has been kept.

I do not understand why the committee was not prepared to call additional witnesses. I do not understand why the committee was in such a terrible rush to get this legislation back to the house unless, perchance, it was because if it were sent back soon, or immediately, the legislation would not be dealt with at very great length and thus, in the opinion of the sponsor, have a much greater chance of being passed during the current session.

None of us, I am sure, is happy or would prefer to use private members' days to discuss private bills at very great length but we are not masters of the rules. The rules are as they exist in the various editions of Beauchesne and we must govern ourselves accordingly. So we have the opportunity during this whole day to discuss this bill and its provisions and the very great lack of evidence of a worth while nature which has come from the committee to this chamber. We all know that this company is not designed to do something which could not have been done if the company had not been brought into existence. We are all aware that there is another company involved in the same field—the Pembina company.

An hon. Member: Are you in favour of the other company?

Mr. Argue: I am not in favour of one company as against the other.

Mr. Brunsden: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Argue: Gladly.

Mr. Brunsden: I want to ask one cardinal question. Is the hon. member in favour of marketing this tremendous resource of the province of Alberta provided only that no expense to the federal treasury is incurred, or does he wish to retain it for posterity?

Mr. Argue: That is a very pertinent question and it was put very directly by an hon. member who is probably the most persistent questioner in the house. Certainly he runs interference with most members who are speaking.

The answer is simple. We are in favour of marketing all the surplus of Canada's natural resources on a planned basis in such a way that will bring the greatest benefit for this and future generations. We are not only in favour of marketing those resources now, where there are surpluses, and net surpluses; we are in favour of getting the greatest possible return for the Canadian people and we are interested in marketing those resources in such a way as to avoid selling out our country to United States interests and United States pipe line companies. We are no more interested in 1961 in selling our country to these pipe line operators than were the Conservatives when they were in opposition in 1956. The main difference is that the Tories have changed their policy and we have insisted on maintaining ours.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): Is the hon. member suggesting that by passing this bill we are indeed sanctioning the marketing of these resources?

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, when the government majority, sometime during this session, pushes this legislation through the house I suggest that they will be taking a course that is not the most preferred one, a course that is not necessary, and one which will in fact be insulting to parliament and to the Canadian nation.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): Would the hon. member make a comment as to the national energy board in that same regard?

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, the national energy board is apparently bailing out the Tory party from all the mistakes it is making in regard to this particular measure. I do not think the responsibilities of the members of parliament can be foisted on the national energy board. I am speaking of the responsibilities of the members of parliament to examine bills coming before this house, and the responsibility to decide whether or not a given company should be incorporated. After we have made that decision the national energy board will make its own subsequent decision.

I suggest that this measure before the committee should not be passed. I suggest that it be turned down in the interests of Canadians. I suggest that there are alternative means by which the fuel products involved can be marketed and we can do more in the interests of Canadians by turning down this bill at this time than we shall do by passing it.

Mr. Chairman, the bill was before the committee and was apparently given some consideration. I am unaware of any presentation urging amendments to this proposed legislation. I am not aware of any amendment at all being suggested by the committee. I would suggest that the committee gave, in a very hurried manner, a rubber stamping to this legislation, and hurried it back to the house but failed to bring forward the kind of information that was in order.

Mr. Brunsden: On a point of order. When the hon. member refers to the committee rubber stamping the desire of the government he certainly is not in accordance with the practices of parliament.

The Chairman: I have warned the hon. gentleman that he should not speak disrespectfully of any decision made by the committee or the members thereof. I would ask him again to be more careful in his wording.

Mr. Argue: Perhaps I should not use the words "rubber stamping". I should use the words that were used so often by the Hon. George Drew, "trained seals". There is considerable evidence that they did not need the party line laid down for them by the whip in the house, they were able to gather from the united stand of the cabinet which way the party winds were blowing, and the bill had no difficulty whatsoever in the committee.

Mr. Brunsden: I rise on a question of personal privilege. The hon. gentleman is calling me a trained seal. I am not a trained seal. I am just as independent in my thinking as is any member of the hon. member's party. I am interested in developing western Canada's oil and gas industries. I am trying to approach this problem very dispassionately and will not accept the hon. member's suggestion that my thinking is done for me by someone else.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a comment. The hon. member for Medicine Hat very strenuously objects to being called a trained seal. I apologize. He is an untrained seal who is learning very quickly. I think if he is here much longer he will be a trained seal, and will be just as efficient as the hon. members of the previous administration who were accused so often by the Hon. George Drew of being trained seals.

The Chairman: I would suggest that the hon. member in correcting his first remark has made it worse and would warn him to be more careful. If I understood him correctly in his first remark he referred to a group generally. I did not think he was referring to the members of the committee. If he did so this would be too specific a remark. In apologizing to the hon. member for Medicine Hat I feel he has gone too far and would suggest that an appropriate rectification is in order.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I think that I was in error if I applied this terminology to the members of the committee because it has much broader application. This applies to the members of the government party opposite who, in a few short months in office, have become just as well trained as the seals in in the former administration as they were referred to by the then leader of the opposition.

The bill before us deals with the incorporation of the Aurora Pipe Line Company. Some of us thought this company was going to build a pipe line 41 miles in length. We now find that it is going to build a pipe line one half a mile long. We thought that this was a measure—

Mr. Hodgson: May I ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Argue: When I sit down.

Mr. Hodgson: A few minutes ago the hon. member was talking about a pipe line that this party dealt with some years ago. How much difference in mileage is there between these two lines and where are the lines heading for?

Mr. Argue: I would think if the hon. member wanted to he would find it much easier to oppose this little joining one half a mile in length which is so important to this country than opposing the trans-Canada pipe line. Surely if the principle was bad in 1956 the principle is just as bad today.

I was suggesting that we thought—

Mr. Hodgson: The pipe line considered in 1956 was to go into the United States and the provinces of Ontario and Quebec would have received no oil at all if the government at that time had its way. This little gathering line does not amount to very much.

Mr. Argue: It is a little gathering line all right and is going to gather something: 700,000 common shares and 60,000 preferred shares as well as a most fabulous amount of money to build a half a mile of pipe line. This company is not content with building the pipe line. They do not want to build just half a mile of pipe line. Incidentally, I thought the witness when appearing before the committee was in contempt of that committee and parliament in saying as follows, as reported at page 43, when asked a question by the hon. member for Acadia, and I am glad at this time that I can quote that hon. member. This reads as follows:

> Mr. Horner: There is one question which comes to my mind: Did Aurora Pipe Line oppose the Foothills application before the Alberta oil and gas conservation board last week?
> Mr. Burgis: Yes sir, we did.

This parliament has not passed this bill incorporating the company but we find its officer has already testified before the oil and gas conservation board. Representatives of this company have given evidence. The hon. member for Vancouver South this afternoon said that the contract to construct the line had been let. We have not passed this bill yet but the company has appeared before the Alberta conservation board, according to their own witness, and he should know. I was not there to twist his arm or to put words in his mouth. He made the reply "Yes sir, we did". This afternoon we are told that the company has already let the contract for the construction of the pipe line. This is contempt of parliament.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the hon. member permit a question. Is he suggesting that Aurora has let the tender for the pipe line of the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company for the 41 miles or does he know the difference?

Mr. Argue: The Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company owns this little company, does it not?

Mr. Woolliams: You are absolutely wrong.

Mr. Argue: This company has not been spawned yet. However, it has already appeared before the conservation board. It has not yet been born but it is giving evidence. The hon. gentleman who sponsors the bill asks, "Don't you know that the company that is letting the contract for the 41 miles is the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited and that the half mile is to be built by the Aurora Pipe Line Company?"

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Argue: I was asked a question and I propose to answer it. I do not mind a question but I dislike questions superimposed upon others. Oh, Mr. Chairman, the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited has let a contract—

Mr. Woolliams: Are you sure of that?

Mr. Argue: —in the words of the hon. member for Vancouver South, to build 41 miles of line down to the point where it meets the half mile, and they have so much faith in the legal efficiency of my hon. friend from Bow River who is sponsoring this bill in such a fine parliamentary fashion that they know the rubber stamps will be put on the right places and that they are running no risk at all in letting a contract for 41 miles of pipe line, the economic existence of which requires this house to pass this bill.

I think Mr. Burgis was in contempt of parliament, if what he says is in fact correct, namely that the Aurora Pipe Line Company, before its incorporation, appeared before the Alberta oil and gas conservation board to give evidence.

We think this bill is bad on many counts. We feel that it should not be passed by the committee at this time, but that a great deal of examination should be carried out and much more evidence given before hon. members agree to pass the legislation at all.

The hon. member for Calgary South told the committee what in his opinion was the duty of the committee. In questioning another hon. member, he said:

> Do you not feel, therefore, that you should reserve the right to make a decision on these technical problems?

United States ownership is a technical problem. I continue with the quotation:

> Do you think that you, as a member of parliament, are qualified to pass judgment on this?

The answer reads:

> I do not think I am qualified to pass on the technical aspects. However, I took an interest in this; I went to the hearings before the Senate, and I was here during the hearings on the Foothills bill. I am not speaking with any expert knowledge, but I think it is my right as a member of parliament, when this comes before us, to pass my judgment and to object.

I think there is every reason why hon. members of the committee should object, not only to the terms of this bill but to the way in which it is being proceeded with at this time.

[Mr. Argue.]

A very simple motion was put before the committee which asked that since witnesses could not come from the Pembina Pipe Line at the time, that the proceedings of the committee should be postponed for a week in order to give interested parties the privilege of appearing before the committee at the adjourned meeting. This motion was turned down; the guillotine was applied; closure was applied at the committee stage and no further evidence was called.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but, according to the standing orders, his time has expired.

Mr. Woolliams: I hope I can be brief this evening. As sponsor of the bill I should like in my introductory remarks to say that this bill is sponsored by me as an individual member of parliament. It has nothing to do with the government or other hon. members except that I seek their support for the incorporation of a company having to do with the petroleum industry in Alberta. When any of the hon. members who have spoken today say that this is a government-sponsored bill I want to assure them that in sponsoring this bill I am doing so as an individual member of parliament.

It seems to me that the criticism of this bill boils down to two points. I should like to answer both of these points individually. If I understand my good friends who have spoken against the bill, it seems to me they are opposed to it because they find that there are United States interests behind the company which is asking for the incorporation of the company in question. Second, if I understand their arguments aright, they are against the export of the by-products of natural gas from Alberta.

Let me deal with the first point first, and I do so sincerely. I appeal to hon. members. I emphasize that we are merely asking for the incorporation of a company. Whether hon. members like it or not, in 1959, when the National Energy Board Act came before the house, hon. members supported it. I should like briefly to review the sections of the act which they supported. Whether they like it or not, or whether they stand in their places tonight and say that we are going to hand over this particular jurisdiction, the facts are that, according to the National Energy Board Act, they did in fact and in law hand over that particular jurisdiction to the national energy board.

Mr. Peters: Now we are taking it back.

Mr. Argue: We are exercising that right now.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not want to get into an argument; if my hon. friends will hear me out, they have asked for some information and they will get that information. If they will listen to me I will endeavour to set out some of the facts and I will try to do it in the most courteous manner I know how. I am not going to get into any political argument with my hon. friends. They have asked for information and if they will hear me out I will endeavour to give that information to the best of my ability as a backbencher in this house.

I want to go back to my original argument before there was a digression and deal particularly with three sections of the National Energy Board Act, namely sections 10, 27 and 44. As I said before, when I spoke on second reading of this bill, section 10 of the National Energy Board Act sets out that the board is a court of record. As I said on that occasion, a court of record hears evidence either by documents, verbal evidence or any other kind of evidence, and from that evidence it makes certain decisions. What is the decision that the national energy board makes? It makes this decision. It decides whether the company can have a certificate to build a pipe line, whether a half mile, 41 miles or how many miles it is. That is the specific function of the national energy board as set out in the National Energy Board Act which all hon. members, I believe—and if I am wrong I wish somebody would correct me—supported in this House of Commons in 1959.

What does section 27 say, Mr. Chairman? Section 27 says that provided the evidence is satisfactory—and I am not going to go into what kind of evidence is necessary—then a certificate can be granted to build a pipe line. If there are four or five applicants certain considerations arise and I want to come to that point in a few moments.

We have heard a lot about Foothills Pipe Line Company—this seems to be the darling of the C.C.F. or of somebody—and they come before the national energy board and they set out the facts. They say that 95 per cent, if that is the correct figure, is capitalized by Canadians. Our company has set out the facts honestly and fairly—I do not think anyone can deny that—that 68 per cent of the stock of the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited will be owned by Continental Oil Company of the United States of America and 22 per cent by Hudson's Bay Company and 10 per cent by the public at large. These are the facts taken into consideration. If these facts meet the standard set by the national energy board whose chairman is Mr. McKinnon, who was for years chairman of the Alberta conservation board, then someone, a pipe line company, will get a certificate to build a pipe line. That is the first point.

Let us look at the kind of evidence that has to be produced under section 44. I am not going to go over all of it but one of the most important things that have been emphasized in this argument—and I come right back to the first point I talked about—is the question of United States financial interest in this particular company if it is granted incorporation by parliament. Under subsection (d) of section 44 the board must have regard to the question of financial responsibility. That will be considered. It must have regard to the financial structure of the applicant. That will be considered. It must have regard to the methods of financing the line. That will be considered. It must have regard to the extent to which Canadians will have an opportunity of participating in the financing, engineering and construction of the line. That will be considered.

Those are the functions of the national energy board which was established by the members of this house, and all supported, the board's creation and jurisdiction. When they supported it they created a court of record to consider these things in a technical manner, in a manner in which all the evidence and all the pros and cons are weighed. If the national energy board considers that one company has more Canadian financing that is one of the ingredients that will be taken into account. In fact, it is not one of the ingredients that may be taken into account. Using "may" in the sense of "shall", the act says it is one of the ingredients that shall be taken into consideration.

Let us get down to the facts of the line itself. It is true that it is half a mile of line. In order to comply with the regulations and the National Energy Board Act, which embraces part of the old Pipe Lines Act, it was necessary for us, being interested in this particular project, to come forward and ask parliament to incorporate a company to build a particular pipe line. If this company is incorporated by parliament and their application is approved by the national energy board, then Hudson's Bay, of course, would consider the building of 41 miles of pipe line. No one in their right sense would suggest tonight that they would commence to build the line first before this company was incorporated and until their application had been approved by the national energy board to build the half mile of line joining the Canadian line across the boundary with the United States line.

Let us get down to facts. We have heard a lot about facts today. I think true facts are very important. Never in my life have

I listened to any set of facts usurped or twisted as they have been today with reference to this particular application. There is no question in my mind that the facts have been usurped and twisted, and in my opinion this is just proof of one thing. It is proof that the seven or eight hon. members in the corner are going to conduct a filibuster and talk out the bill so the company will not be incorporated. That is why I say the facts have been usurped.

I have heard the hon. member for Assiniboia make the same speech on several occasions and his effort was much worse tonight than on previous occasions. He talked about letting the contract for 41 miles of pipe line. He was whistling Dixie. He has whistled Dixie in this house before with regard to many other facts but tonight he was far more wrong than he generally is because he works in the house to get a good press. I went to university with him and occasionally he does get a good press but there is one thing about him that is most irresponsible in that he continually feeds the press a line of incorrect information, as he did tonight on several occasions, to get a good press for himself.

Mr. Argue: I learned it from you in my early days.

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad the hon. member for Assiniboia wants to talk. I can talk at the same time and just as loudly as he can. If he will bear with me, and I know he will, I want to read a letter dated March 3, 1961, addressed to me by Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited. The letter reads as follows:

> I understand you have been advised that Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited has let a contract for the construction of its proposed pipe line from the Pincher Creek-Waterton area to the United States border.

That is the 41 miles of line about which we are talking.

> I wish to advise you that this allegation definitely is not true, and that we do not now have, nor have we at any time in the past had, any commitments whatsoever to any contractor with respect to construction of this line.
> In the event that we are awarded the necessary permits to construct our line, including the portion across the international border which would be owned by Aurora Pipe Line Company, it is our firm intention to follow our established policy—

What is that established policy?

> —which is to use Canadian contractors, labour, materials and equipment to the greatest extent possible. We will call for competitive bids from Canadian pipe line contractors under the foregoing policy and will award the contract for construction of the line to a Canadian contractor.

Yet the hon. member for Assiniboia in opposing the bill tonight set out facts that were untrue or at least facts that he never tried to check or he would have never made the statement he did. He could not have appeared before the committee and made under oath the same statements he made tonight because there are rules contained elsewhere that apply in such instances.

Mr. Peters: Could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Woolliams: I am not finished with the letter. Perhaps the hon. member will sit down and listen. He has wanted to hear the facts for two or three days and if he will listen he will learn because he has been misstating the facts up to now. I continue with the letter.

> No construction of course can be undertaken unless favourable action on the required permits is taken by both the Alberta oil and gas conservation board and the national energy board.

The letter is signed by G. T. Pearson, president of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited.

I am sorry that the hon. member for Vancouver South is not in his seat because I wish to answer a point he made in his speech this afternoon. He said that a contract, in referrence to the 41 miles of pipe line had been let to Fulton. That fact is untrue, and I am advised by the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company that the facts as set out by the hon. member for Assiniboia are untrue. His statements are not even a facsimile of the truth. Surely if you are going to oppose anything one of the first things you do is to get your facts straight. I want to go into the second part of what I wish to say.

Mr. Peters: Will the hon. member permit a question now?

Mr. Woolliams: Would you mind waiting until I finish? I have told you that before and I do not know how many times I will have to tell you again. You have been asking for facts and I am going to try to give you the facts because I have done considerable research. I try to put my mind in gear at the same time as my thinking processes, which the hon. member fails to do. Let us take a look at the by-product itself. For years the province of Alberta has been bulging with natural gas. In fact, the Borden commission found that there are 23 trillion, and some odd billion cubic feet of natural gas as a proven reserve in Alberta. As a by-product of natural gas there is condensate. We have heard a lot about these other by-products but again the facts have not been given by hon. members in the proper way.

What is condensate? I do not know whether there was a reporter present in the standing committee at the time this was said. However, it was set out there that condensate is really crude petroleum. If ever a westerner stands indicted in his place tonight, it is with reference to any statement about keeping our crude petroleum within our borders in Alberta and Saskatchewan.

Let us look at that matter for a few moments. Condensate will make one and a half times the gasoline that people use for their cars. We are only producing 50 per cent of our capacity in the petroleum industry today in the province of Alberta. We want to produce 100 per cent under the proper rules of conservation which we have. I cannot believe that these people can be serious in wanting to keep 50 per cent of our petroleum production at home. Let me draw this analysis. Would you keep 50 per cent of your wheat at home in the bins when you can sell it or 50 per cent of your cattle in the foothills when you can sell them? Here is a by-product that we can sell, crude petroleum. Ever since I have been a member of the house we have been wanting to export crude petroleum to the United States. I have not been a member as long as the hon. member for Assiniboia. Experience is a wonderful thing and we can all gain it but some take longer than others and my hon. friend is no exception.

To come back to my point, we have been wanting to export crude petroleum to the northwest states in the United States. That is the very foundation of the national petroleum policy that was announced. If we cannot raise the market volume up to 600,000 or 800,000 barrels per day we are in trouble in our petroleum industry in western Canada. We are only asking that the condensate, which is really just plain ordinary crude, be exported across the line to the United States where it can be used in Montana and Oklahoma.

The hon. member for Vancouver East said that this was not fair to the province of Alberta. Let him go through the province of Alberta and talk to the residents of that province. They will decide what is fair for the province. They want to sell what they produce, whether it is wheat, cattle or petroleum.

I submit in all seriousness and in all sincerity that the thing that would be fair to Alberta is to export the commodities we have so that we can build up our trade and give full employment to our people in that province which enjoys fuller employment than any other province.

Let us now deal for a few moments with the other argument about United States financing. My good friends in the corner know as well as I do, Mr. Chairman, that the same companies that are developing the petroleum industry and likewise the natural gas industry in Alberta in the last few years, after long years of negotiation are developing the same industry in the province of Saskatchewan. The deals that are made in reference to petroleum are that a company on a gross basis gets 87½ per cent of the profits and the government gets 12½ per cent. That is the reason there has been a flourishing budget in the province of Alberta. That was the reason why, after long negotiations, and after losing out on drilling rigs in the province of Saskatchewan, Tommy Douglas began to realize that the petroleum policy of Alberta had something they wished they had. Now the same people, the only C.C.F. socialist government, are making deals in which 87½ per cent of the gross profits go to those companies. I put it to him in all seriousness tonight, if he is serious and honest about the subject, that 87½ per cent of these profits are going into companies which are United States companies. He knows it, I know it and my hon. friends in the corner know it. This talk we have heard is just plain hogwash and a red herring in order to smother this bill.

Mr. Argue: Don't mix your metaphors.

Mr. Woolliams: Don't worry about my metaphors. I have seen you mix a lot of things and they have not been metaphors.

I now come back to one important thing, namely the question of whether this by-product should be exported. I said that we are trying to gain the market in the northwestern states. Here is a company that comes forward legitimately—it is true that it has some United States interests; it is true that there is United States capital in it; we have not hidden anything in any way—and has asked to incorporate a company in order to be able to go before the national energy board, first to get leave to build a pipe line and, second to export through the pipe line a substance which is plain ordinary crude petroleum. The matter is just that simple. Yet we have heard all these facts on this subject and most of those facts have been obscured in that regard. Not one fact has been laid before the house in a straightforward way by the C.C.F.

Let us deal with this great lover boy of theirs, namely Foothills Pipe Line Company. This was their first love; it is hearts to them. I would refer them to an agreement which was signed on December 14, 1960. Who were the parties to this agreement? This is not something I am raising tonight for the first time. People in the public gallery or the press gallery might believe that this information did not come out. This information was laid before hon. members in the standing committee which considered this bill. When they say that this was not fair and that was not fair, may I point out that one of their members asked only four questions. There was nothing to prevent him from asking 44 questions. If he had wanted knowledge, we had four of the finest experts from Alberta that could have been obtained. Those eight fellows in the corner of the chamber scream about the petroleum industry but they shut up like clams in the said committee and did not ask for information. What was the reason? The reason was that they wanted to do in this chamber exactly as they did today. They did not want the facts.

Mr. Argue: No, no.

Mr. Woolliams: That is the situation.

Mr. Argue: How did you vote on the motion with regard to Pembina?

Mr. Woolliams: I am going to quote from the agreement.

Mr. Argue: Tell me how you voted. You voted for closure. You did not want answers. You moved the bill and then stopped discussion.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, we all cannot talk at once. I know that you are having difficulty in hearing me.

Mr. Argue: Not for lack of volume.

An hon. Member: Send for Tim Buck; you need him.

Mr. Woolliams: Who were the parties to this agreement? The parties were Pembina Pipe Line Ltd., Standard Oil Company of Indiana, Westalta Products Pipe Line Ltd., and Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd. On page 13 of this agreement, we find this. I have not time to read it tonight nor do I intend to read it. However, on page 13 we find that a little deal was entered into and that this matter came before the Alberta conservation board. It came to light by a slip of the tongue of one of their counsel who appeared before the Alberta conservation board.

What does it say? This is the C.C.F.'s first love; this is their only love of the pipe lines in this particular area. Provision was made that 50 per cent of the directors of Foothills Company must be from Standard Oil Company of Indiana—that is what the agreement says—and that 50 per cent must be Canadian and that the chief executive officers must be Americans. Here are these great Canadian supporters who are supporting Foothills Pipe Lines Ltd. when 50 per cent of the directors, as set out by the agreement, must be Americans. Are the Americans in control?

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Argue: That is false.

Mr. Woolliams: You may deny it now. You may deny all that was said this afternoon. However, the facts will speak for themselves because they are now on record.

Mr. Argue: Red herrings.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Woolliams: The fact is that if they do not want Foothills to export condensate and do not want Aurora to export the condensate, then the C.C.F. want to keep it at home.

Mr. Argue: Oh, no.

Mr. Woolliams: What do they want, then, Mr. Chairman? They cannot have their cake and eat it too.

Mr. Argue: We want a publicly-owned company.

Mr. Howard: The hon. member is just about as good as the Prime Minister. Let him keep it up.

Mr. Woolliams: That is exactly what they want. They want the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan to go to bed with petroleum and natural gas just as Alberta went to bed with the coal because some Albertans were afraid that we did not have enough coal with which to look after the people in Alberta. The people were so few that it was necessary to have a six-man jury instead of a 12-man jury. The answer is that they have got to use either one company or another. But all their arguments are hogwash and I am going to come right back to the point from which I started. The fact is that all we are asking to do is to incorporate a company. What I submit is this. Suppose a company came to the House of Commons as petitioners and asked to incorporate a pipe line and did not say where they were going to build their pipe line. Is there anywhere anything in law that says that any of these members on that side of the house can suggest that the certificate of incorporation should be turned down? Is there anywhere anything in law that says that you must set out particularly where you are going to build the pipe line?

Mr. Peters: If you do not do so, you will not get a licence.

Mr. Woolliams: The fact it that all we are asking for is this. We are petitioning parliament to incorporate a company. My hon. friends say we cannot do it because some United States money is being used. Let me say to my good friends that there are very few companies—I do not know the percentage but it would be negligible—that have not United States capital and British capital. Just as the United States was developed by British and French capital, so is this country and particularly the petroleum industry of Alberta being developed by United States capital. To my hon. friends I say this as a private backbencher. I hope that capital continues to flow into the province of Alberta even if it dares not go into the province of Saskatchewan because it is frightened out by the socialists. If we had the socialists in power—

Mr. Howard: Good old Social Credit.

Mr. Woolliams: We think we have problems of unemployment now. But if we had the socialists in power, in Canada or anywhere, they would drive out capital and we have no idea what would happen to our economy. What would the rate of unemployment be?

In conclusion may I just say this. I appeal to the common sense of the members of the House of Commons. We are merely asking—and I repeat this—for the incorporation of a company. All of these facts that have been argued and submitted by the C.C.F. Mr. Chairman, may I submit with the greatest respect to you, are out of order. The fact is that those facts, questioned by the C.C.F. come before the national energy board which has the jurisdiction to consider the matter; and before the application reaches that board it must receive approval from the Alberta conservation board.

We have those two boards set up by law, one by this parliament and we have not temporarily handed over any jurisdiction; we have handed over that job to the national energy board. They have their engineers; they have their technicians; they can weigh the pros and cons of the evidence.

When the hon. member for York North was asked, "Have you the knowledge in reference to this matter?" he said, "No, I have not". He answered fairly the question put by the hon. member for Calgary South. The fact is that the board was set up to decide these things.

I ask the hon. members in the far corner who have been filibustering to look at this bill. I ask them to make their statements in accordance with the facts in question and direct their arguments to the bill. When they say I should be ashamed of myself for presenting this bill, let me say to them that I am proud to bring forward a bill for freedom of enterprise and for the development of the industry in my home province. As the hon. member for Jasper-Edson said, "We have the roughnecks; we have this man and that man, all engaged in the petroleum industry. All these fellows are working in our industry. Keep it healthy, keep it competitive, and we will have a healthy economy in the province of Alberta".

Mr. Peters: And keep it American.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, I have only a few brief remarks to make on this bill to incorporate the Aurora Pipe Line Company.

After the dispute that has been going on since the beginning of the afternoon between the partners of 1956, the C.C.F. socialists and the Progressive Conservative members, I think a few remarks are in order at this point.

What a strange reversal of things. During the discussion on a pipe-line, we hear once more the terms of filibuster, obstruction, guillotine, Texas buccaneers. Now, that C.C.F. filibustering reminds me of a proverb:

He who sows the wind shall reap the whirlwind.

Today, the Conservative government reaps what it has sown with both hands in 1956. It is appropriate to note that the C.C.F. party was schooled and trained by the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) and the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) during a similar debate in 1956. As a matter of fact, it was when he was denouncing the "Texas buccaneers" that the desk of the hon. member for Eglinton was adorned with the union jack. But I would hardly think that the former associates of the Conservatives would go as far as that in ridicule today.

Anyhow, Mr. Chairman, the Progressive Conservatives have changed their policy. They now adore what they burnt in 1956. As far as we, Liberals who remained logical and consistent in our policy, are concerned, we denounce once again the confusion, and the lack of consistency and logic this Conservative government has shown in its various stands since 1956.

(Text):

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I wish to make just a few brief remarks regarding what was said by the hon. member for Assiniboia about this government changing its mind. He was referring to these hon. members changing their minds.

In May last year the hon. member's party supported the private member's bill to incorporate Northern Pipe Line Company. Who financed that company? The answer to that question is to be found right here in Hansard. At page 4379 of Hansard for May 31, 1960, the hon. member for Kindersley is reported as having said:

—the principal beneficial shareholder is Minnesota Pipe Line Company, a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Delaware—

He went on to say that its principal office was located at Saint Paul, Minnesota. Certainly hon. gentlemen opposite did not oppose that bill at that time, and they now appear to be trying to paint a picture of consistency in this regard. They are consistently painting a picture of a bunch of fools talking of something about which they know nothing.

The hon. member for Assiniboia said that the committee was ineffective and he deplored the ineffectiveness of the committee. He said it took no action whatsoever, it said very little and reported the bill back in a great rush. What part did the hon. member for Skeena play in the committee? As is reported at page 42 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence, he asked four simple questions when trying to review some statement made in the house at an earlier time. Four simple questions represent his great contribution to the committee. It may have been five; he may have asked another question somewhere else. But if the committee was ineffective, as has been said, why did not the members of that socialist party take a greater part in it? They had counsel with them. The hon. member for Timiskaming sat in the background listening to the proceedings and giving them his great counsel.

I would only say in conclusion that this bill differs greatly from the one debated in 1956, if I remember correctly, although I was not in the house at that time. The matter then under discussion was the trans-Canada pipe line and the government of that day suggested a loan of something like $380 million to a United States company. That question would have concerned me had I been in the house at that time. There is no such question in this bill. This is a private company wishing to build a 41-mile pipe line, and there is no comparison whatsoever between this bill and the one debated in 1956.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make just one or two remarks in connection with what the hon. member has just said. He questioned the role which I played in the committee. He and others are usually quite pleased to accuse me of speaking too much.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I have never accused you of that.

Mr. Howard: Oh, oh, the hon. member says he has never accused me of speaking too much.

An hon. Member: Hansard is telling stories again.

Mr. Howard: Here, on the one occasion perhaps—and this is for the benefit of those who have made this accusation, untrue as it is—when I got to a committee to listen attentively to all the proceedings and to absorb as much as I can, the hon. member for Acadia jumps up and says I should have made just as big a fool of myself there as he is doing here. I can appreciate how he in particular, and others, can get off on this wrong track. When it is not possible to justify a position, wild statements are made in this house.

I have only one further comment in connection with the remarks made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont. The hon. member referred to the inconsistencies apparent in the committee today.

Mr. Deschatelets: Be careful now.

Mr. Howard: I would say to my hon. friend that I am always careful, especially when I am speaking through you, Mr. Chairman, to such an astute and capable member. However, I would point out that the fact is that the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont belongs to a party that is consistent; it is consistently in favour of the Texas buccaneers, pirates, and so on, whom they favoured when they were in power.

I should like to make a comment or two about some of the things which the hon. member for Bow River so flamboyantly poured into this committee a while ago. The hon. member began by saying that he was going to provide us with some factual information. He wound up by saying that he was back where he started from. In the whole process he did not go anywhere. But he did make one very interesting comment. He used one very interesting—I wonder whether it is revealing—phrase when he was talking about the Foothills company, I believe it was, which would go before the national energy board, would have to prove certain things and produce certain information, and so on. Then he said, "Likewise our company", referring to Aurora Pipe Line Company, the company with which we are presently concerned. I think it is important that he should qualify what he means by "our company". Does he mean a company with which he is associated, if he is associated with it? Does he mean the company which is silently endorsed by the government? This is important because it could have a bearing on the voting of the hon. member on a previous occasion. If the hon. member meant by the phrase "our company" the Aurora Company or the Hudson's Oil Company, a company with which he is associated through share capital, then he should not have voted previously on this bill. This is one matter into which we should inquire immediately before we proceed any further. I think that possibly this was only a slip of the tongue and the hon. member is associated with this company simply by being the promoter of the bill.

Mr. Woolliams: I appreciate the hon. member having brought this to my attention. If I did use the phrase "our company" I did so as the sponsor of this measure only. I can assure the hon. member that I have no financial interest as far as this company is concerned and I certainly was not speaking for the government. I made that clear, and I think the hon. member knew exactly what I meant, too. But if he wishes me to clarify my statements I am always happy to do so because hon. members in that corner of the house are always so exact.

Mr. Howard: The hon. member is jumping to conclusions if he imagines people can always understand what he means. The word "our" is capable of various interpretations but, as I said, it could have been a slip of the tongue.

I should like to point out one other thing to the hon. member for Bow River. The hon. member made reference to the national energy board as a great protective agency. He told us how it kept the interests of the Canadian people always in mind and implied that all we had to do was to follow his ideas blindly and say: this is a good company, and the energy board would then carry out whatever it has to carry out in the best interest of Canadians and everybody else.

The hon. member made reference to the National Energy Board Act, sections 10, 24 and 44. He referred also to those sections in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. In fact he quoted from them and read them into the record. There is an interesting part of this operation which was conveniently glossed over, but it is contained here in the act and it is, I think, worthy of consideration when people talk so much about the national energy board being paramount in these matters.

We are told that this agency is one which works independently in the best interests of Canada—that it is an entity to which certain authority has been given, that there is no interference with those powers, and so on. But what does section 44 say? I recall some objections being raised about this in committee of the whole when the national energy board bill was before parliament.

I am reading now from the evidence at page 38 and I am assuming that the hon. member for Bow River, when he read this, read correctly from the act. I am quoting now from his own statement of what the act contains. If I am wrong, I am sure the hon. member for Bow River will correct me, admitting at the same time, that the error was originally his. I read:

> Section 44 sets out the kind of evidence which shall go before the board.
> The board may, subject to the approval of the governor in council, issue a certificate in respect of a pipe line or an international power line if the board is satisfied—

And so on. So it is not the board which acts as the final agent in protecting the interests of Canada as we have been led to believe or misled into believing; it is the governor in council, or, in other words, the cabinet, which decides.

The board is not, in fact, an agent free of political interference. What could be easier than for this cabinet, this government, to have given its blessing already to the Aurora Pipe Line Company or Continental Oil or whoever their friends are in the United States oil industry, knowing full well it would have to appear before the board at which time the cabinet would approve the granting of permission to build a pipe line? All this talk about the board being an agency to protect the people of Canada is so much nonsense. It is the governor in council who is going to make the decisions, and I think that should be understood.

The hon. member for Bow River was generous in his accusations against the hon. member for Assiniboia. I see they are sitting close together now.

Mr. Woolliams: Don't blame me for that.

Mr. Howard: I know the hon. member for Assiniboia has aspirations to sit on those benches. Perhaps that is why the hon. member for Bow River is there too. In trying to seek out—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Howard: In any event, the hon. member for Bow River did level in a generous way these accusations against the hon. member for Assiniboia. He accused the hon. member of not knowing what he was talking about. Perhaps the hon. member for Vancouver South started all this. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Vancouver South, a member of the hon. gentleman's own party, was the first speaker today. It was he who said that Aurora Pipe Line Company had already let a contract for the half mile of pipe line. That contract was let to a firm named R. H. Fulton of Texas. This was the comment as I took it down while the hon. member for Vancouver South was speaking.

Mr. Woolliams: I know the hon. member would not wish to be wrong about this but what I understood the hon. member for Vancouver South to say was that the contract had been let with reference to the 41-mile pipe line. In fact the hon. member had mentioned that to me outside the committee.

Mr. Argue: The hon. member is not a cabinet minister. He cannot speak from there.

An hon. Member: A few moments of glory.

Mr. Howard: I jotted down the words of the hon. member for Vancouver South and I took them to apply to Aurora Pipe Line. My note says that with regard to the half mile section to be built by that company a contract had been let to the R. H. Fulton Company, a Texas firm. It is true the hon. member did at the same time make reference to the 41-mile section and the two sentences were close together. It could have been he was referring to that. This is the question to which I think the hon. member for Bow River should have addressed himself instead of going off at a tangent and accusing the hon. member for Assiniboia of making incorrect statements.

The hon. member for Bow River was the one who left the impression a few days ago that the Pembina people had withdrawn their application to the Alberta gas and oil conservation board. The hon. member for Bow River left the impression by way of a question and because he left this impression by way of asking a question it was impossible for us to deal with it. We have since found that this was not a true impression. The hon. member for Bow River who sponsored this bill did not know what he was talking about in respect of at least one of these companies and for him, of all people, to accuse the hon. member for Assiniboia of making incorrect statements, particularly when that hon. member was basing his statement on the information given to this house by the hon. member for Vancouver South, is certainly very improper.

I suggest it is improper for the hon. member for Bow River to follow this procedure in presenting a bill to this house. It is also improper for that hon. member to level accusations against the members of this party in saying that we are supporting the Foothills company in favour of the Aurora company. It was made clear from the beginning that that suggestion was not to be read into our remarks. We are concerned, as I have said before, with that which is in the best interests of Canada, the oil industry and the general economy of the nation. We are concerned in regard to the rights of interested people and, in this instance, I am referring to the Pembina company.

It certainly was not in the best interests of that company when it was denied the right to appear before the committee of this house on February 21, 1961 when this matter was partially dealt with, even though this may have resulted from unfortunate circumstances. That is the type of thing we are concerned with. We do not feel it is simply a question of whether it is a good thing or a bad thing. We have grave doubts and misgivings in regard to the Aurora company and the manner in which it has dealt with certain questions.

Certainly there are grave doubts raised by a letter dated January 10, 1961 appearing as appendix A to the minutes of proceedings of the standing committee. This letter was addressed to my colleague, the hon. member for Vancouver East and signed by Mr. James A. Scott, president of the Pembina Pipe Line Limited. The letter consists of two printed pages. I would like to read a portion to this committee so that all hon. members will be familiar with the situation outlined therein. I feel that I am entitled to read these portions because reference has been made to the Pembina pipe line company this afternoon and the request which was made regarding their appearance before this standing committee. I will read the last paragraph rather than just the sentences of importance so as to present the complete context. The last paragraph reads as follows:

> Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited (Continental Oil Company) is now trying to compete with Pembina by offering to take the surplus gas by-product liquids—

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Argue: You cannot rise on a point of order, you are in the wrong seat.

An hon. Member: We are now in committee, and hon. members can speak from any seat.

Mr. Brunsden: The hon. member for Skeena is confused as to the oil company. It is my impression that we are discussing the Aurora pipe line bill and I am wondering why we are now considering Pembina Pipe Line Limited.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I agree that perhaps the discussion regarding the Pembina company is not relevant but this subject was raised in the first instance by the hon. member for Vancouver South. It has been referred to by the hon. member for Vancouver East as well as by myself on earlier occasions. There has been ample reference to this company and I feel, Mr. Chairman, that if you enforce the rules strictly it would be unfair because we would then be left with an impression which is coloured or flavoured but not necessarily accurate. I would not be allowed to contradict those statements and we would be left with an improper comparison.

The Chairman: I feel that the contention made by the hon. member for Skeena is an accurate one. I do not intend to ask him to refrain from discussing this particular matter but I must say that I feel the debate has strayed from that which normally takes place in the consideration of a clause in a bill. I would say that almost every hon. member who has spoken in regard to this bill has been guilty of straying from the subject matter.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to go into this at great length but I would like to refer to the last paragraph because it bears relation to the company which the bill is designed to incorporate.

The last paragraph reads as follows:

> Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited (Continental Oil Company) is now trying to compete with Pembina by offering to take the surplus gas by-products liquids from the extreme south of the province of Alberta into the Continental facilities in the United States. They state that they have no present intention of extending the Alberta facilities to handle production from gas fields to the north. If this is taken at face value, Hudson's Bay is prepared to skim off the easy cream of the product at the expense of the other production in the province. Further, such action if permitted might well imperil our comprehensive and equitable system because of the lack of an economic pipe line volume. If it is the Hudson's Bay ulterior intention eventually to extend north into the province, they intend to duplicate what we have been proposing for many months. It is for such a purpose that Hudson's Bay are endeavouring to incorporate a special act pipe line company comparable to our Foothills company.

I have read the entire paragraph so that the important sentences will appear in their context and hon. members will appreciate how they fit into the paragraph as a whole. The main two or three sentences read as follows:

> They state that they have no present intention of extending the Alberta facilities to handle production from gas fields to the north. If this is taken at face value, Hudson's Bay is prepared to skim off the easy cream of the product at the expense of the other production in the province.

I assume that this statement means that, if this is a correct assessment of the intention of the Aurora pipe line company, it would be detrimental to the interests of Alberta. That is at least the point of view which is put forward by the Pembina company in this letter. They suggest that if the Aurora company is going to channel the condensates south into the United States without going north they will in fact be skimming off the easy cream of the product at the expense of the other production in the province. If this is a factual statement I would suggest that the whole situation should be explored further. I do not know whether this is a true statement. I know that it appears in this letter dated January 10, 1961 written by Mr. James Scott, the president of Pembina Pipe Line Limited. If it is the intention of the Aurora company to skim off the cream at the expense of the other production then this will not be beneficial to either the companies concerned, the citizens of Alberta or the citizens of Canada generally.

I think this situation should be clarified. I feel that the officers of the Pembina company should be requested to appear before a standing committee of this house and explain their reasons for arriving at the conclusion as set out in this letter. The Aurora people being there would be able to say, "Well, this is not correct, and this is how we disprove it", because, as I said before, the main concern is what is most beneficial to Canadians and Albertans and to our economy. This is the thing that we want to do. These are some of the questions that still have not been answered. It is quite true that questions of sorts were posed to one of the gentlemen from Aurora in the committee and he said, no, that is not so; it will not be skimming the cream off the crop. I cannot offhand find the particular reference in order to quote it verbatim, but I do recall that it was dealt with to a slight degree.

There is another matter of concern in so far as Aurora is concerned, and it has to do with their future intentions, and whether or not they do intend to proceed further northward into Alberta and perhaps even further north than that. Mr. Burgis of the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited did give some evidence to this effect, which appears at page 48 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the standing committee where, in answer to a question posed to him about what else they had in mind besides this little $15,000 line, said:

> At the moment, sir, we have nothing else specifically in mind. However, we are, as are many of the other oil companies, in the pipe line business. Frequently, when we consider moving crude or condensate from one field or one market to another it might involve consideration of crossing interprovincial boundaries and at that time we conceivably could use Aurora to build more facilities, let us say, from the Yukon or Northwest Territories into Alberta or something like that. But specifically we have nothing in mind at the moment. We put that in, as most companies do, when they are setting up a corporation which is going to have an indefinite life, to make it more flexible and to have more flexibility to cover future things that might happen.

In so far as it is possible for this gentleman to see into the future, I suppose this does to a degree endorse what Mr. Scott of Pembina said when he took them at their face value in saying that they have no present intention of extending the Alberta facilities for the production of gas and oil into the north. Mr. Burgis said in effect that for the present that is quite true, although at some time in the future they might very well want to go up there. In fact, he did mention that in answer to a question of the hon. member for the Yukon who asked about the authority and powers to start pipe lines in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

The hon. member for the Yukon asked about activities in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon and Mr. Burgis said:

> I will be glad to answer that. We have undertaken a fairly extensive exploratory program in the Yukon and Northwest Territories which we hope will be successful in finding oil and eventually might need to build a pipe line or assist in building a pipe line to get the oil out to market. We certainly do not need it yet. We have undertaken a fairly extensive exploratory program in that area.

The witness went on further to say that they had exploration permits there, and that they were active in their search for oil and gas in both the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. I think this goes to prove the comments of Mr. Scott of the Pembina Pipe Line who assessed it in this way, namely that there was a lack of intention on the part of Aurora to extend north into Alberta. Perhaps he was correct in taking it at its face value. In two specific places before the committee Mr. Burgis mentioned that they had nothing specific in mind except building this half mile pipe line across the border into Montana and that, as far they could see, they had no intention at present of going north into Alberta to tap other lines or of going into the Northwest Territories.

I think we must take that at its face value and that it is not the intention of Aurora to go north. If that is so, then I think we should query the conclusion and I think the Pembina people can also, when they say that by so confining themselves to this section of the province they are not skimming off the easy cream at the expense of other production. Apart from the slight reference made to this in the committee, I do not know whether it is so or not, but from the very brief reference in the discussion that was held—

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I was very interested in listening to the remarks of the sponsor of this bill who outlined in glowing and evangelistic terms the righteousness of his company and the relationship that they have and the wonderful job they would be doing for all of the people, particularly of Alberta. It seems to me there is a touch of selfishness developing in some of the hon. members. It seems to me that instead of our friends supporting the buccaneers who were mentioned in the house three or four years ago, perhaps we should start protecting the buccaneers from Texas and from some of the other places because some of this selfishness would appear to me to be not in their favour.

Here we have a little itsy bitsy company which, according to the sponsor of the bill, should not make any difference at all. He sounded like one of those great Social Crediters who go around with the bible under one arm and with the other hand picking the pockets of the people through exploitation.

It seems to me that we have been told by the sponsor we have this little itsy bitsy company which has only 1 million common shares at $1 a share and 60,000 preferred shares at $50 a share, making a capitalization of $10 million, to build this little itsy bitsy pipe line of one half mile. No matter how the argument goes, I think the sponsor will agree that the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company has already decided that it is going to build the 41 miles. The sponsor is quite right in making the statement that Aurora has not let this contract. I do not imagine they will ever let it. At the present time they have provision for spending only $15,000, and they are going to build just one half mile of pipe line, which is the key half mile crossing the international boundary.

Do hon. members not think that we are pretty naive if we expect this company to go into the United States where they intend to raise $10 million to capitalize a company which is going to spend only $15,000?

Mr. Woolliams: Will the hon. member permit a question.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member would not allow one but I will.

Mr. Argue: We are democratic.

Mr. Woolliams: We know that. When Foothills Pipe Line was incorporated in 1959 by chapter 64 of the statutes the capital stock of the company was to consist of 10 million shares at a par value of $5 per share, and if they built the pipe line in question it would cost $160,000. What is the difference between Aurora pipe line and the Foothills pipe line in question? It is a matter of form and the hon. member knows it. It is all set out that way in the incorporation of the company.

Mr. Peters: If we make a mistake once we do not have to do it again. We do not make the situation any better by making the same mistake again. I am not sure that we made a mistake.

Mr. Woolliams: Did you vote for it? Did you support Foothills? I thought you did.

Mr. Peters: I cannot remember if I was here that day.

Mr. Woolliams: The hon. member's memory is bad.

Mr. Peters: I know I have shown some consideration for western members when they have been interested in the building of pipe lines. I was quite impressed with the attitude of the Conservatives two or three years ago when they wanted to build pipe lines in Canada. I am not so impressed with some Conservatives when they get up and want to build another pipe line before the first one has had a chance to operate. I am not so impressed when they want to build another pipe line for the specific purpose of not allowing any of the product of the first line to bring benefit but rather of taking all the product and shoving it through a second pipe line into the United States.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): You don't know what you are talking about. You have absolutely no knowledge of the situation.

Mr. Peters: I am not alone in that. I have heard these flexible legal interpretations made. I have heard the sponsor of the bill tell us tonight how he wanted to put the facts on the record. I also heard him stand up and interject not long ago at which time he certainly did not state the facts because he told us the application for another pipe line had been withdrawn and therefore there was no reason—

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, that question was raised in the committee. If the hon. member will read Hansard he will see that I asked a question and I said it was alleged from the knowledge I had that a certain application had been withdrawn. When that question was asked in the committee it was said under oath that the application was withdrawn. He should read the sworn statement and stay with it instead of running away from the facts in the manner he has been.

Mr. Howard: If I may speak to the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out what the hon. member for Bow River did in the house, and the hon. member for Timiskaming is quite correct in this regard. The hon. member for Bow River interrupted in the house to ask a question. He did not ask a question but made the bald-faced statement that it was his understanding that Pembina had withdrawn their application.

Mr. Woolliams: That is not true.

Mr. Howard: This was on the very day that Pembina was supposed to appear before the Alberta board. In the standing committee I asked a question as to what had happened with regard to this application and whether it had been withdrawn. As found on page 42 of the proceedings of the committee there is the following:

> Mr. Howard: Within the last week or two Pembina and the people—your associated companies—appeared before the Alberta board?
> Mr. Burgis: Yes.
> Mr. Howard: They did not withdraw their application?
> Mr. Burgis: No, sir. They withdrew only their application to duplicate the portion that we have indicated in green.

That is entirely different from what the hon. member for Bow River led this house to believe—I am speaking to the point of order—not by way of an explanation or formal speech but by way of a back door question. He introduced this information in that way at that time obviously in an attempt to lead those who were speaking then into believing there was no point in inquiring any further into the matter because the Foothills company had withdrawn their application. That was not true. It was only true in respect of that section that was outlined in green. We have not got the map here to show hon. members but that was the situation.

Mr. Woolliams: I think I should put what I said on the record. As found on page 1815 of Hansard I said:

> May I ask a question at this stage? These are the facts, though I have not yet had an opportunity to substantiate them—the information was communicated to me by telephone.

I set that out and the hon. member who has just spoken has not set out the facts. I continued:

> In all probability the oil companies of which the hon. member speaks have withdrawn their applications in respect of this particular project before the Alberta conservation board.

Under oath before the committee it was stated that this particular application had been withdrawn. I do not see how the hon. member can stand in his place and say anything different. I went on to say:

> I wonder whether the hon. member has given any consideration to that?

Those are the facts and the hon. member knows those are the facts. If he wants to make statements that are not in accordance with the record, as he has done all afternoon, that is his privilege. The record will speak for itself and the people will know what the record says.

Mr. Howard: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that both the hon. member and myself are now stating facts.

Mr. Woolliams: I will take my facts.

Mr. Howard: However, I doubt very much whether he can recognize them.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have been stating what happened and as I was not a member of the committee I suggest now that the hon. member has put forward exactly the same facts from the letter that he read tonight as he put forward the other evening and that they are probably no more reliable tonight than when he got them over the telephone the last time because I imagine they come from the same place. I am surprised he has not got a more coherent story to tell the committee as a result of the many communications he has had with the same source of information. It seems to me that the situation is still very confused as far as the sponsor is concerned. May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): No, it is not ten o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, one hon. member indicated in his remarks this evening that there were no political implications in this or any other committee. If I have time I should like to put on record what was said by a Conservative member in another committee because it deals directly with the point in question.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member will be happy to learn that it is now ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder whether I could ask the house leader to indicate the business for the next three days, if he is in a position to do so.

Mr. Churchill: For tomorrow and Wednesday, Mr. Speaker, there are six items of legislation that we would like to see considered by the house. The first one is No. 11 on today's order paper, the resolution in the name of the Minister of Finance dealing with the Tariff Board Act. The second item is No. 1 on today's order paper, second reading of Bill No. C-47. The third item is No. 5 on today's order paper, second reading of Bill No. S-5. The fourth item is No. 6 on today's order paper, second reading of Bill No. S-6. The latter two will be referred to a committee. These four items stand in that order for tomorrow.

The other items I have in mind are the second reading of Bill C-71, an act respecting the civil service of Canada, and the second reading of Bill No. C-73, an act to amend the Income Tax Act. I am not certain tonight whether they will be taken in that order. If there is a change I will inform hon. members on the other side of the house before 2.30 tomorrow afternoon.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 7, 1961

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

Fourth report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. Mandziuk.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ANNOUNCEMENT THAT UNITED KINGDOM BATTALION TO TRAIN IN CANADA

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, at the request of United Kingdom authorities the Canadian government has agreed to an arrangement whereby a battalion of the British army will train for the month of July at Camp Gagetown, New Brunswick. The name of the battalion designated for this training exercise will be announced by the United Kingdom. Royal Air Force transport command will airlift the battalion in Britannia aircraft to and from Canada as part of their joint service air mobility training.

In Gagetown the battalion will undergo normal training with the 3rd Canadian infantry brigade group under the direction of the general officer commanding eastern command. The cost of this exercise including the provision of Canadian rations will be borne by the United Kingdom. A similar announcement is being made today by the Secretary of State for War in the United Kingdom House of Commons.

PRODUCTION OF ILLUSTRATIVE TABLES

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked if I would produce three illustrative tables which were laid before the recent dominion-provincial conference by the federal government. I now produce two copies of each of these three tables. If it is the wish of hon. members that these tables be inscribed in today's proceedings, there would be no objection to that course.

Mr. Pickersgill: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the wish of the house that the documents just tabled be printed in today's Hansard as an appendix?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For tables referred to above, see appendix.]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EDUCATION WEEK—PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF REPRESENTATIVE OF HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, on a matter of privilege I would ask, through you, the indulgence of the house at this time to bring to your attention a matter of great public importance in this country; that is, the observation throughout our country of Canadian education week. Under the auspices of the Canadian conference on education a student representative of our high school students in Canada, known as "Jimmy", has been chosen. His name is, in fact, James.

I would draw the attention of the house to this fine young citizen who I am very happy to report is from Moosomin, Saskatchewan, and who is in the gallery today. James Zondervon is a 15-year old farm boy from Moosomin, Saskatchewan who represents some 785,000 high school students in Canada. His example, and the example of the support we all give him this week, I hope will bring to the realization of our youth the necessity for the furthering of their education and the great advantages attending thereto.

UNITED NATIONS

RED CHINA—REPORTED STATEMENT BY MEMBER FOR CALGARY SOUTH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he has any comment to make on a statement attributed to the hon. member for Calgary South, a member of the Canadian delegation to the United Nations, to the effect that an approach should be made by Canada to Peking to find out the precise terms under which communist China would accept membership in the United Nations.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I presume this statement was made in the course of a speech, and it would be quite impossible for me to comment on the speeches made by different members of the house.

Mr. Pearson: A supplementary question, Mr Speaker. Is the minister not aware that this particular member is a member of the Canadian delegation to the United Nations assembly that is now meeting, and that this puts his speech in a special category?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, I cannot even comment on the speeches made here by the delegates to the United Nations. One of the hon. member's followers is a delegate and I would hate to have to comment on his speech.

Mr. Pearson: No, he is not.

[Later:]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs whether I understood him correctly in his reply to the Leader of the Opposition to say that the government no longer took the responsibility for statements made by official delegates of the government at the United Nations.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate as usual is a little twisted. I did not say that at all. The speech in question was not made at the United Nations; it was made in Canada. The hon. member realizes just how terrible it would be if we, for example, had to answer for the speeches he made in Canada or even in the house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he agrees with the point of view of the hon. member for Calgary South?

Mr. Green: I have already said I am not commenting on the speech that was made by the hon. member or by other members. I make my own speeches on these questions.

CONGO—REPORTED THREAT TO OPERATIONS THROUGH SHORTAGE OF FUNDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he would care to comment on a press report which appeared in this morning's Globe and Mail, which indicated that the whole operation of the United Nations in the Congo is threatened by current bankruptcy of United Nations funds. Has the Canadian government given any consideration to a substantial increase in its contribution to this fund for this purpose?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that the financial situation is difficult in this regard, largely as a result of some nations not paying their fair share or, for that matter, paying at all. Canada has been very careful to pay its own share of the cost and will do so in the future.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Argue: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since this appears to be an emergency situation partly arising because of the reason given by the minister and partly because of the need for increased funds for the Congo operation, has Canada given any consideration to enlarging its contribution?

Mr. Green: No, Mr. Speaker, but this question will be discussed in the fifth committee in the United Nations. I can assure the hon. gentleman and other members of the house that Canada has done more than her share.

PUBLIC SERVICE

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL—APPOINTMENT OF CLAUDE JODOIN AS MEMBER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Acting Prime Minister a question based on the announcement in the March 4 issue of the Canada Gazette, as follows:

His Excellency the Governor General in Council has been pleased to make the following appointments:

February 15, 1961.

The following persons to be members of the national research council for a term of three years, from 1st April, 1961, to 31st March, 1964.

Included in the list:

Claude Jodoin, Esq., president, Canadian Labour Congress, Ottawa, Ontario.

Before I ask my question I want to compliment the government on their impartiality in this appointment. As I understand it, this is the first occasion in Canadian history on which a member of the national committee of an opposition party has been appointed—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Herridge: I now come to the question. I think it is a precedent of pristine significance. Will the Acting Prime Minister inform the house whether Mr. Jodoin's appointment has been confirmed by the national council of the Canadian Labour Congress?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): I really am not in a position to answer that question for the hon. member, but I do suggest to him that if he expects this New Party to be a success he had better bring about a better contact with the Canadian Labour Congress, because they should have this information. All I can say is that Mr. Jodoin was appointed to the national research council on an individual basis and with the knowledge that he would make a worthwhile contribution.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

BOMARC MISSILES—INQUIRY AS TO USE OF ATOMIC WARHEADS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in order to remove, if possible, the misunderstanding created in the matter by recent government statements, may I ask the Minister of National Defence whether the position of the government in respect of nuclear warheads for the Bomarc missile remains as set out by the Minister of National Defence on June 23, 1960, before the defence expenditures committee, namely that the Bomarc anti-aircraft missiles to be effective would require nuclear warheads?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated to the Leader of the Opposition and to two or three other people on that side of the house on several previous occasions, the whole question in connection with nuclear weapons remains as it was stated by the Prime Minister, I believe it was in 1959, and on several subsequent occasions since that time, and there has been no change in that regard since I last answered a question along this line.

Mr. Pearson: A supplementary question. Is the government's position, then, that which was stated by the Prime Minister on February 20, 1959, as reported at page 1223 of Hansard, as follows:

> The full potential of these defensive weapons is achieved only when they are armed with nuclear warheads.

That was in the Prime Minister's speech.

Mr. Harkness: That is a straight factual statement with which I do not think anybody can disagree.

SALARY INCREASES FOR PREVAILING RATES EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. I apologize for not having had the opportunity to send him notice. Would the minister care to comment on complaints that prevailing rates employees of his department have received no increases during the last two years, although they feel such increases should have been forthcoming?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not able to comment on this matter, because I am not aware of any specific complaints in this regard.

SHIPPING

NEWFOUNDLAND—STATEMENT ON REQUEST FOR ICEBREAKER SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): In reply to the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's I would advise that representations have been received for the services of an icebreaker at Bonne bay. Owing to heavily rafted and ridged ice on the western coast of Newfoundland, it is not feasible to attempt an entrance into Bonne bay at the present time. However, ice reconnaissance flights over this area are being undertaken, and at the first easing of pressure an icebreaker will be dispatched.

AIRPORTS

WINNIPEG—PROGRESS REPORT ON NEW TERMINAL BUILDING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Winnipeg South asked about the contract for the construction of the new terminal building at the Winnipeg international airport.

When tenders on this project were opened late last year it was found that the lowest tender was substantially above the cost estimate which had been provided to us. Accordingly, treasury board directed that we review the project to see if further economies could be made which would bring the cost more into line with earlier cost estimates. In view of the size and complexity of the project this review has been a rather lengthy and complicated undertaking, but I expect that it will be completed shortly and that I will be able to make a further recommendation to treasury board in this regard. I can assure the hon. member that full and sympathetic consideration is being given to the use of Canadian labour and materials.

As for the access roads, while we have, I believe, heard from the municipalities of Winnipeg and St. James, we are at present awaiting comment from the recently established metropolitan authorities.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INTERNATIONAL SERVICE—ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT FOR DISPLACED EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on February 27 the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked a question of the Minister of National Revenue in connection with alternative employment for persons who might be displaced by the curtailment of the international service of the C.B.C.

I have the following information. I am informed by the C.B.C. that some of these people have been transferred to fill vacancies in the national service and that the remainder are being considered for other possible assignments. This is a matter which has received and is continuing to receive attention from all levels of management in the corporation. The actual cut-off in international service is scheduled for March 31, 1961.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Since the minister gave the same answer in the house some days ago, I should like to ask whether any additional people have obtained employment in the meantime.

Mr. Lambert: Not to my knowledge.

FORESTRY

STATEMENT AS TO ARRESTING OF DUTCH ELM DISEASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked me whether the department was making any progress in finding a means of arresting Dutch elm disease. I replied that I had no up to the minute information but would take the question as notice.

I am pleased to advise as follows. The Dutch elm disease occurs widely in Ontario and Quebec and in the upper Saint John river valley area of New Brunswick. The causal fungus is carried from diseased trees to healthy ones by bark beetles. Spread of the disease can be reduced by sanitation programs to remove weakened elm trees and branches in which the beetles breed, by spraying with d.d.t. to prevent the entry of beetles into healthy trees, and by prompt felling of diseased elms, with destruction of the bark, to prevent emergence of fungus-laden beetles. An effective control program may require use of all three lines of action.

The Department of Forestry carries out continuing insect and disease surveys, and keeps municipalities and the public informed of areas of known distribution of the Dutch elm disease. The department is conducting research on host-parasite relationships as an aid to formulation of improved control procedures. It also provides a diagnostic service so that occurrence of the disease in suspect trees may be confirmed before expensive felling operations are undertaken.

Responsibility for the application of control measures rests with the owners, usually municipalities or private citizens. The department provides information and advice to such owners on the organization of control procedures.

This is a disease of foreign origin and as such comes under quarantine regulations administered by the plant protection division of the Department of Agriculture. Officers of my department co-operate fully with the plant protection division in the exchange of information leading to appropriate quarantine regulations. In the event the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate does not have publication No. 1010 on Dutch elm disease, I am sending him a copy.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. Can he say whether the zinc oxide treatment has been found to be effective?

Mr. Flemming (Royal): I would not be able to answer that at the moment.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

PROCESSING OF BEEF FOR DEFENCE CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister received a submission from J. J. Howlett, president, united packinghouse workers Ontario council, protesting the installation by the defence department of a $50,000 machine in the plant of Essex Packers at Hamilton for the processing of dried beef for defence contracts? If so, would the minister care to inform the house if an effort could not be made to instal these machines in an organized plant rather than in the plant of a low wage non-union firm?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have received a letter from Mr. Howlett in connection with this matter, as well as a letter from another gentleman. Perhaps I might say that the defence research board was instrumental, with army support, in setting up a program to investigate a new food process known as freez-dry. In the course of their investigations, defence research board evaluated a series of firms to ascertain their capabilities to work this process. As a result of these investigations they recommended, from a purely technical aspect, either of two companies.

From that point on, of course, the matter was in the hands of the defence production department. As most members of the house are aware, all contracts for the defence department are made by the defence production department. I shall have to leave it to the Minister of Defence Production to deal with the other elements of this question.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WOOLLIAMS—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE ON MARCH 6

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. At page 2708 of Hansard for yesterday there is recorded a reference by me to the fact that 50 per cent of the directors of Foothills Pipe Lines Limited must be from the United States, 50 per cent from Canada, and the chief executive officer must be from the United States. At that point there is recorded an interjection by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), "That is false."

I should like to read from the agreement made on December 14, 1960, page 14:

> —fifty (50) per cent in number of the members of the board of directors of each of Foothills, Dakota and the fractionation company, each of which boards of directors shall always, be composed of an even number of directors, shall be persons who have been designated by Standard—

That is found on page 14 of the agreement. I would not make this point of privilege if I had heard my friend from Assiniboia say that that was a falsehood.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): On the point of privilege that has been raised, I should like to say that I naturally accept the statement of my hon. friend. However, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that I am glad he has raised the point. I have no objection to it at all, but I wish to raise the question of whether it is in fact a genuine question of privilege to rise in the house to correct statements that have been made in prior debates. This might well have been done in the debate this afternoon between five and six o'clock.

Mr. Woolliams: On the point of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has made an explanation which he wished to make as a matter of privilege, and I think that should close the matter. Where there was no opportunity at the time I have occasionally permitted members to make explanations that referred back to previous debates, but I hope this will not be necessary very often.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DEFENCE EXPENDITURES—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government to set up at this session a defence committee or a defence expenditures committee of the house?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been no decision on that point as yet.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REPORTED STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON TAX SHARING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether a statement made by the Prime Minister at Quebec, as reported in the Montreal Star of March 4, 1961—and it appears in quotation marks—"no province would receive less than it had been receiving", would apply to the provinces of Alberta and British Columbia.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I have not seen the text of the Prime Minister's statement, but I presume it is an allusion to the guarantees that were provided in the proposals submitted by the federal government to the dominion-provincial conference 10 days ago. The first of these guarantees was that no province should receive less in any year than the sum of money received under the present agreements averaged over the last two years of the present five-year period.

There was also the additional guarantee extended to the provinces whose yield from the proposed four sources of revenue was below the national average, that no such province would receive less in the new period than it would have received had the present arrangement been carried into the new five-year period.

I presume the reference in this case is to the first of these two guarantees.

TARIFF BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING MEMBERSHIP, PROVIDING FOR SALARIES, ETC.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Tariff Board Act to increase the number of members of the board from five to seven, and to provide for the salaries of the new members; and to provide further for consequential amendments designed to facilitate the adoption by the board of a panel system.

Motion agreed to, and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, in introducing the supplementary budget on the evening of December 20, 1960, I made the following reference to the subject matter of the resolution now before the committee, as reported at page 1013 of Hansard:

> In view of the heavy program of important work which awaits the tariff board, the government proposes to enlarge the board and to provide for expediting its work. The government is fully aware of the urgent need to modernize sectors of the tariff which have become out of date. At the same time we consider it important to provide for careful investigation and public hearings before major tariff revisions are introduced. This permits all interests and all points of view to receive full consideration. We believe that the tariff board is the appropriate body to undertake this task, and that in order to do so expeditiously the board should be enlarged sufficiently to permit it to adopt a panel system.
> Accordingly I am placing on the order paper a resolution looking toward a bill which will provide for an increase in the board's membership from five to seven. Additional membership will make it practicable for the board to operate normally as two separate panels, and to proceed simultaneously with two inquiries or appeals. In addition to authorizing an increase in the membership of the board, the bill will provide also for consequential amendments designed to facilitate the adoption and operation of a panel system.

The bill to be introduced pursuant to this resolution, when adopted, will accordingly provide for an increase from five to seven in the number of members of the tariff board. The increase in membership is proposed in order to facilitate the operations of the board. It will enable the board to sit at the same time in two panels, each with a minimum of three members. This change should permit the important functions performed by the board to be discharged more expeditiously, while at the same time ensuring that adequate account is taken of all relevant considerations.

Having regard to the nature of the problems with which the tariff board deals, I think it will be agreed that it is important that each panel be large enough to reflect the possibility of differing points of view. For this reason it has not seemed appropriate for the tariff board to operate with one-man or two-man panels, although such panels may be perfectly satisfactory in some other fields. There would be serious objections, I take it, to having even a two-man panel deal with an important tariff board reference or appeal.

It is contemplated that in future the board will normally sit in two panels, one presided over by the chairman and the other by the first vice chairman. The amendments to the act which are proposed will not, however, restrict the wide measure of freedom which the chairman now has and always has had, throughout the period since the board was first established in 1933, to arrange the board's internal business as he sees fit. For example, it will be possible for all seven members of the enlarged board to sit on any reference or appeal if, in the judgment of the chairman, the importance of that appeal or reference justifies such a procedure.

The proposed bill will provide also for minor and consequential amendments flowing from the proposal to increase the membership of the board and to adopt a panel system. These consequential amendments relate to such matters as the designation of the persons to preside at sittings of panels, revision of some of the provisions relating to the powers and functions which may be exercised by the chairman, vice chairmen and members of the board, and a new provision authorizing each member of the board to administer oaths and take and receive affidavits, declarations and affirmations.

The Deputy Chairman (Mr. Rea): Order. Before the hon. member rises, I wonder whether hon. members would please lower their voices when talking. It was very difficult to hear the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, it is true that in the speech from the throne there was a suggestion that the tariff board would be divided into panels, as I recall it, and also in the budget proposals of December 20 last. In a speech which I made on December 21 I said that on the face of it this had merit.

The tariff board has been of great service to this government and to governments that have preceded it. On the other hand, by reason of legislation recently introduced by this government, I think one might wonder whether in the future this tariff board will have the same jurisdiction, the same influence and the same importance as it has had in the past. A great many members on this side of the house showed resentment in a recent debate, to which under our rules we are not allowed to refer in the course of this discussion. However, I would refer the minister only to his words about erosion. We feel that aspersions have been made toward the existing tariff board, and we think this is of some importance in this debate and consideration of the new legislation before us today despite, as I know, the limitation regarding reference to previous debates during a current session. I know that the hon. member for Ottawa West very strongly resented the fact that possibly the tariff board, which we are now asked to enlarge, had in the last decade been charged with an erosion which was contrary to parliamentary will. I cannot go into recent debates, but hon. members will recall that these matters have been discussed.

I simply want to say in this instance and in this context that the tariff board was for 17 years, from 1940 to 1957, I think, presided over by one of our most exemplary and distinguished public servants. It happens that the same individual was asked to represent his country in international trading negotiations, including the GATT agreement of 1947. One of the matters that have bothered me this session has been the assertion on the part of the government that there could possibly be any erosion on the part of the past tariff board of Canada's interests in the last decade, when we had presiding over the tariff board for almost 17 years this same gentleman, whom I will name. I refer to Mr. Hector McKinnon, the gentleman who led our delegations years ago when we were treating with other countries for trade opportunities.

I just cannot believe that under the presidency of Mr. Hector McKinnon such a thing like erosion in law could occur in the last decade. I am again, perhaps not properly, referring to another debate. I think it is just impossible for this House of Commons to believe that the late head of our tariff board for this period, who was also concerned with our trade negotiations for 17 or 20 years, could in any way in this dual capacity erode parliamentary decisions or the interest of this country. I scoff at this suggestion. In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, I want to remind you that after retirement this gentleman who was accused—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member is not discussing the resolution at all. He keeps referring to a debate that went on last month for seven days. With respect I make this suggestion to you. Can we not confine the discussion to this resolution? It is clearly against the rules of the house to keep referring in this way to a previous debate of this session.

Mr. Pickersgill: My friend the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River referred to a matter which arose in a previous debate and which has to do with the whole character of the tariff board which we are now being asked to enlarge. Surely the minister is going to justify his conduct in asking us to increase the size of this board which he himself in another debate this session accused of disregarding the law made by parliament. Having made such a serious charge against this board, when he asks us to increase the board against which he made these charges surely he is not going to circumscribe our right to debate his own proposal.

Mr. Benidickson: I have indicated, Mr. Chairman, that I am not speaking in any way in contradiction to what I suggested on December 21 was a proper course. I think we should have a panel system in view of the increased responsibilities of the tariff board. What I want to say, however, is that the government cannot have this both ways. They cannot accuse the tariff board over the last decade of having been an opponent of parliament, of having in its decisions eroded the intent of parliament, and then ask at the same time that this board be continued and increased to two panels, without a proper discussion in this committee.

In addition I want to say this with respect to my view. It would not have been possible for the tariff board of the past to have eroded the intent of parliament, in view of the fact that this government felt that even after the retirement of the gentleman of whom I have spoken, after 17 or 20 years in office, the chairman of the tariff board—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, may I ask you to rule on the point of order. The hon. member is discussing something entirely outside the scope of this resolution. He keeps referring to what has been said in the course of a previous debate at the present session. Surely that procedure is clearly out of order. We are here discussing a resolution that contemplates an increase in the number of members of the tariff board.

Mr. Benidickson: In the past debate, Mr. Chairman, I have never referred to the particular matter I am discussing at the moment, nor do I recall anybody else having done so. We are discussing only the tariff board. We are discussing its enlargement and the possibility of creating two panels. In that connection I am referring in my remarks only to the chief architect in recent years of that board Mr. McKinnon who was serving Canada. I am saying there is a possibility that whoever is appointed to the tariff board from now on might be put in a dual and perhaps unfortunate capacity. I think the past chairman of the tariff board has not been treated properly in references made by the minister in debates this session.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Order.

The Chairman: Order. I thought the hon. member was making only passing reference to the former chairman of the tariff board. As he is doing more, I must agree that the point of order raised by the minister is well taken. The resolution deals only with the increase in the number of members of the board. The application of the Tariff Board Act or the conduct of the tariff board, when these matters are not related to the number of members of the board are not subjects relevant to the resolution.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, if those appointed to this board are likely to have a dual responsibility; if on one hand they are given responsibility to represent Canada in trade treaty negotiations and then on the other hand are to be asked to be members of a board, I think you would at once agree that my remarks are relevant.

Mr. Argue: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest—

Mr. Clancy: I rise on a point of order.

The Chairman: Order. I have recognized the hon. member for Assiniboia.

Mr. Argue: On the point of order may I say this, Mr. Chairman. Under a measure of this kind which asks parliament to approve an increase in the membership of the board, surely it is in order to discuss the competence of the board as it now exists. If the board is wholly competent to deal with all questions put before it, then perhaps it may follow that we do not need this increase in number. However, if it should be correct, as has been said, that the board for particular reasons has not been able to do the best kind of job, in the opinion of the Minister of Finance, then that would be an argument for enlarging the board.

I think it is out of order to quote at this stage statements that have been made in a previous debate. However, when the Minister of Finance in the budget speech itself and since that time has made many statements about the conduct of the board, surely it is in order to discuss the conduct of the board. What is the increase for? If the board has been completely competent to do and completely efficient in doing everything put before it, why then ask for an increase in the board? Surely the chairman is not going to say, "You can just discuss a roman numeral, numeral V or numeral VII."

Mr. Benidickson: That was the point I had in mind.

The Chairman: Is the hon. member speaking on a point of order?

Mr. Benidickson: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am speaking on a point of order. Surely it is relevant to discuss erosion on the part of the last tariff board in a debate relating to a bill which is going to increase the number of members of the board to perform duties in the same sphere.

Mr. Clancy: Mr. Speaker, I take strong objection to the breaking of the rules of this house by the opposition. If you are going to enforce the rules they should be enforced for everyone.

The Chairman: This problem of relevancy, as all hon. members realize, is always a very difficult one. In the view of one hon. member a subject may be relevant but in the view of another hon. member it may be out of order. I must say that relevancy must be real and not simply the result of imagination. An hon. member can claim that his remarks relate to the resolution under discussion because that hon. member desires to discuss certain aspects of a problem which is of peculiar interest to him, but I must say that hon. members should realize that the resolution preceding a money bill is only to be considered in principle in regard to the expense involved and therefore the scope of the debate should not be enlarged to include a discussion regarding the function of a board or the members thereof. It may be that an hon. member in order to make a certain point which is relevant must discuss a problem which is perhaps not strictly relevant, but I think members should remember that in general they should not use such a debate as an opportunity to discuss some irrelevant problem.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I think when we are considering the composition of a government board we are entitled to look to the work which has been done by that board in the past and any criticism that has been made with respect to it. Unfortunately the criticism with respect to this board has been made this session by the Minister of Finance, when he referred to erosion by this board. I realize there is a rule, Mr. Chairman, that we are not supposed to discuss any previous debate—

The Chairman: I want to point out to the hon. member that if the problem of erosion, as he describes it, has something to do with the number of members it is relevant, but if it has nothing to do with that it certainly is not relevant.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, on that point I think I can demonstrate in a few sentences that it is highly relevant. We are being asked in this resolution to decide whether it is expedient to expend more of the taxpayers' money by appointing additional members to this board. If the work of that board is detrimental to the country we should not be adding to its membership, we should be abolishing it. The Minister of Finance made certain suggestions in another debate, and it is true that if he had made those suggestions outside of this house no one would question their relevancy. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has not once quoted that debate; he has merely alluded to the fact that in a particular place the Minister of Finance made criticisms which, if he had made them any other place, would have been indubitably relevant. I suggest a mere technicality of the rules does not make it irrelevant in these particular circumstances. The fact of the matter is that if this board has been disregarding the law made by parliament we should abolish it, not add to it, unless this is a measure to pack the court. I say this is a most fundamental thing. We have not come here to say whether there should be nine, six or seven bodies; we are here to discuss what this board is going to do.

The Chairman: I feel that it would be relevant if put in the words of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, but that is not the way the member for Kenora-Rainy River has put it.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, surely the question was whether or not the board up to now had eroded the will of parliament. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has suggested that this subject should be included in the question before us. He has asked why should we have additional members on the board when there is the possibility that they will not serve parliament's will.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I would briefly suggest, having listened to this discussion with some interest, that one appreciates the difficulty in which Your Honour finds himself, though I believe a careful analysis of what the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has said would warrant the conclusion that he has not transgressed the rules. His use of the word "eroded" might psychologically give the impression that there has been a violation, because of the use of that word in another debate. But I would suggest to the Minister of Finance, if he would take advice, that if he showed some patience in the matter he would find that facility of debate would be unimpeded. However, if he takes the occasion to interrupt us at every opportunity he not only thwarts discussion but provides an obstacle to his own objective.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I would be out of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Finance said he was out of order. I do not think that is the function of the Minister of Finance. I suggest to him, simply as a friend, that he withhold his anger and display some patience, and he would realize then—

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If the Minister of Finance followed my suggestion he would give the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi an opportunity to again interrupt from his seat. I suggest that the Minister of Finance refrain from resorting to these tactics so that he might facilitate the course of the debate.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I hope the house will make note of one thing that has happened this afternoon. I am referring to the successive points of order raised by the government side and by the opposition side. By a series of points of order the opposition members have placed upon the records of this house that which they have been told could not be placed on the records in normal debate. I suggest, sir, that these tactics are being consistently used by the opposition to override the ruling of Your Honour time and time again. The opposition members, by raising successive points of order, have referred to that which Your Honour has ruled against in the course of normal debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi takes his seat I would like to ask him whether he was in the gallery during the pipe line debate.

Mr. Grafftey: I would inform the hon. member that I was not in the gallery during the pipe line debate, and that I am discussing what has been going on this afternoon. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that there has been a flagrant disregard of the rulings made by Your Honour which has created a great waste of time in this committee.

The Chairman: I have tried to inform hon. members what I think is relevant in regard to the debate so far. I am quite sure the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River will do his best to limit himself within the boundaries which I have indicated.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for your ruling. I did not think I was inconsistent in referring to the question of past aspersions on this tariff board when we are discussing its enlargement, but I will stop there in any event.

I do, however, have a number of other matters to raise at this time. I would like hon. members to look at the speech of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance made last Thursday. He boasted at that time that this tariff board was the creation of one of his heroes, the late Lord Bennett. I think he said that the tariff board was created in 1931 under Lord Bennett's Conservative administration. The parliamentary secretary did not tell the house that the findings of the tariff board were to be subject to ministerial approval. That provision was taken away by a Liberal administration subsequently, and that is part of the effort that is being put forward in connection with another matter, not necessarily this—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Order.

Mr. Benidickson: —and I stop there.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): After being out of order for the last three minutes.

Mr. Benidickson: I do not think I was out of order, because I was referring to the tariff board and its history. The parliamentary secretary claimed that it was in Lord Bennett's time an exceptionally good board, and helpful to the Canadian public. Actually under Lord Bennett's regime it was subject to ministerial veto. I say it is important to remember this when we debate this matter at this time.

While it is not in order to refer to another debate, I wish to say that the tariff board has a definite relationship to our very important obligations to the general agreement on tariffs and trade which was negotiated in 1947. I ask those who may speak subsequently on behalf of the government, to tell us to what extent we are obligated under our so-called GATT agreement to maintain a tariff board, and whether in their opinion, or in the opinion of those associated with them under that agreement, as a result of legislation that has been recently proposed by Canada, a breach has been made in that agreement.

The Chairman: Order. I must say that certainly part of this discussion is entirely irrelevant to the matter under debate, and is not within the scope of the resolution which we are discussing at the present time.

Mr. Benidickson: I feel somewhat restricted but I should like to refer to article X, section 3 (b), which I have quoted in a previous debate, and which I think refers to something equivalent to a tariff board. It says that those who are associated with GATT must have what I think we are dealing with in this debate, namely something in the nature of an appeal board that is free from restriction or intimidation above the bureaucratic or administrative level. It reads:

> Each contracting party shall maintain, or institute as soon as practicable, judicial, arbitral or administrative tribunals or procedures for the purpose, inter alia, of the prompt review and correction of administrative action relating to customs matters.

I say that this is very important. In conclusion I simply wish to say that I am no expert in this field of tariff administration, although I have had some years of experience in parliament. It is a complex problem that has bothered all of us, but I have been persuaded by the opinion of a number of experts who tell me that if they were the minister of national revenue—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Who are these experts?

Mr. Benidickson: —and were given the arbitrary powers that were given to the minister of national revenue by this parliament, with the massive majority he has on the other side, that in 1958, for valuation of products entering this country, and the arbitrary powers which are likely to be given to the minister again in the additional legislation of 1960-61, they would feel that any recommendations of the tariff board to the Minister of Finance with respect to a change of rates on tariff items would be a nullity. I am completely persuaded that these arbitrary powers, which are subject to no appeal, will add to that result.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, it is interesting that the government should want an increase in the number of personnel of the tariff board at this time, and should want what is quite a revolutionary amendment to allow the tariff board to sit in two panels. What I think this does in effect is to make two tariff boards, or it makes it possible for a board consisting of seven members to sit simultaneously as two panels, discuss questions before each panel and decisions to raise or lower tariffs on the basis of their decisions.

I think this is part and parcel of the government's policy, which is to increase tariffs and to make legislative provision for changing the rules so there can by an across the board general increase in tariffs, not by means of specific amendments but by inserting the little word "approximately" in the definition of goods of a class or kind.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Order.

Mr. Argue: I am not out of order. The result is the government has decided that it needs to enlarge the tariff board to make it more efficient, to allow a greater number of cases to be appealed to the board and decisions to be made so they can facilitate this general Tory increase in tariffs. It is not long since the number of members of the tariff board was increased by parliament. In 1956 a bill was presented to parliament containing an amendment whereby the membership of the tariff board was increased from three to five. It is now provided under the law that three members of the board are sufficient to hear an appeal. Therefore two can take a rest while three are working. It seems to me that under this three who are working and two who are resting formula the board as it is now constituted should be sufficiently large to deal with the normal number of cases that may be appealed to it, though perhaps not large enough to deal with the very large increase in cases that will undoubtedly come before the board because of the other steps being taken by the government to allow a broader classification of goods for the purpose of bringing about higher tariffs.

I do not think a case has been made for the passage of this legislation unless one accepts the attack of the minister on the tariff board. I take it that it is in order to refer to those portions of the budget speech having to do with this particular measure, and I would point out that in that speech the minister made it perfectly clear that in the view of the government the present tariff board has not been doing a job.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Nonsense.

Mr. Argue: As a matter of fact he has accused the tariff board—

Mr. Benidickson: Of eroding the law.

Mr. Argue: —of undermining the law itself—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Nonsense.

Mr. Argue: —of so undermining the law by what the minister has called erosion that it has been necessary on the one hand to amend the law and on the other hand to make provision for the tariff board to sit in two panels. The all-out attack by the minister on the tariff board, in which he accused the board of eroding the law, and the subsequent move to increase the number of members of the board and allow the board to be divided into two panels, are in my judgment evidence of a very disturbing policy. It is very disturbing that the government has embarked on the road of higher tariffs and more tariff increases.

The minister has said that such a host of applications are pending before the tariff board that the board must be divided into two panels so that cases can be heard simultaneously. When one takes this legislation in conjunction with the government's general attitude and the statement of the minister, I suggest that this is part and parcel of a Tory high tariff policy that is being implemented day by day to the great detriment of the people of this country.

Mr. Speakman: You do not believe that yourself.

Mr. Argue: Therefore we feel that this legislation is unnecessary, or that if it is necessary it is made so by these other bad policies of the government which are increasing the burden of work on the tariff board and the number of appeals that will be made. We believe that we are justified in opposing the resolution and the legislation to follow because in so doing we are opposing the government's high tariff program.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Just plain buncombe.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Chairman, we have listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and the hon. member for Assiniboia. Apparently they have lost consciousness of the fact that we are living in an expanding country. There was a time when parliament met for four months in a year, but we now meet for ten months. Our tariff problems are becoming more and more complex and more and more manifold. My office in this building is on the same floor as that of the hon. member for Assiniboia, and I say to him that his own secretariat has been increased several times in the last few years.

Mr. Argue: That is not true.

Mr. Brunsden: Oh, yes, it has.

Mr. Argue: It has been reduced.

Mr. Brunsden: Oh, tut, tut.

Mr. Argue: It has been reduced.

Mr. Benidickson: Dave Lewis and Stanley Knowles have reduced it.

Mr. Argue: Oh, no. It has been reduced by this economy-minded government.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Chairman, my thought is that we have a population explosion and an industrial explosion. We are in a period of great development. We are in a period of transition with respect to manufacturing and trade. I cannot conceive of any logical reason why the tariff board should not be increased by two members for the reason that it is one of the hard-pressed organizations of government. I do not mind admitting quite frankly that I have a few problems respecting manufacturing in which tariffs are involved and, without any criticism of the tariff board, may I say I have not been able to get decisions because there are so many other people ahead of me.

I welcome the idea of the board sitting in two panels. I welcome the idea of expedition of decisions, regardless of what the decision may be. When the hon. member for Assiniboia casts aspersions on the government, I say to him that he certainly is not thinking of the good of Canada.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has made a case against expansion of the tariff board, and I listened to him with a great deal of respect although I do not agree with him. I think we need an up-to-date tariff board which will render decisions as soon as possible after cases are heard, and it does seem to me that this enlargement of the board will give us that expedition.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who has just spoken, and who was not unkind to me, said that I opposed an additional tariff board panel. I never said that. I said that on December 21, after hearing the minister propose a two-panel system, I had approved of what the minister suggested. What I said was that I would regard all tariff board activities, even under the proposed enlargement, as a nullity if appeals are denied in the way they are denied under the new 1958 legislation and as proposed in this 1960-61 legislation.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): When did the hon. member say that on December 21? Would he mind pointing it out?

Mr. Benidickson: Well—

Mr. Pickersgill: You would not ask him to refer to a previous debate.

Mr. Benidickson: Under the rules I am not allowed to indicate that, but I have been told that I did say that. If I did not say it I certainly intended to say it and would have said it except for the criticism I received on that Friday afternoon from the hon. member for Carleton, who said it was time I sat down.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Oh, no. The member for Carleton made no such statement at any time.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, in speaking on this resolution may I direct the attention of the committee for a moment to the reference made by the minister in his supplementary budget to oilseeds and vegetable oils. He stated that representations had been made to the government by growers of rapeseed in the west and by soybean growers in the east with regard to the tariff on these products. For this reason the minister decided that the best course would be to increase the number of members of the board from five to seven in order to facilitate study by the tariff board of the problem of edible oils and the expediting of their findings.

The minister mentioned also that a point of view concerning the appropriate rate of duty for these products had been expressed by soybean growers and by feed manufacturers. Because of the wide interchangeability of oilseeds and their products for a variety of agricultural and industrial uses, modification of the duty for some items without compensating others would be disruptive of production and trade.

The statement of the Minister of Finance, as outlined in the terms of the resolution before the committee, is most welcome and coincides with the representations of farmers and farm organizations right across this country. The rapeseed producers—

Mr. Argue: The farmers did not ask for an increase in the tariff board.

Mr. Rapp: I base my remarks on the briefs and representations that were made by these farm organizations. If the hon. member for Assiniboia will contain himself for a moment I shall put those briefs and representations on the record.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

The result of this change would be that the rapeseed producers in the west would be able to sell a little more rapeseed oil on the domestic market in competition with United States rapeseed and soybean oil coming into this country tariff free. I may remind the committee also that one pound of rapeseed replaces one pound of soybeans. As a result of this fact we were able to get a little higher price for our rapeseed meal in the west, and we were able to sell our rapeseed oil at a reduced price. The biggest single factor working against the use of this oil in Canada is the fact—

The Chairman: Order. I must tell the hon. member that I have difficulty relating his remarks to the resolution before the committee.

Mr. Rapp: The hon. member for Assiniboia advanced arguments as to why the number on the tariff board should not be increased. I think I should be given an opportunity to make my point that the number on the tariff board should be increased to coincide with requests made by farm organizations and by farmers themselves.

Mr. Pickersgill: I completely agree.

Mr. Argue: If I might say a word on the point of order, Mr. Chairman, although I do not accept the statement that has been made by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort or the arguments he has been putting forward, I believe his statement on the point of order is accurate. If we are dealing with an increase in the personnel of the tariff board, it should be in order to point out some of the work that may be given to this tariff board. I do not follow the argument of my hon. friend, however, to the effect that if a matter is referred to the board this will mean an increase in the tariff. I do not know that one can prejudge the work of the tariff board.

With that observation, however, I feel it is in order to make some reference to the work the tariff board may have to do.

Mr. Pickersgill: I rose at the same time as the hon. member for Assiniboia, and I was going to say almost the same thing he has said. I do feel that if there is any case to be made for spending more of the taxpayers' money on this tariff board, surely hon. members are entitled to make that case. This is all the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort was seeking to do. He was seeking to argue that this was an important matter that should come before the tariff board, and it might not be disposed of so quickly if there were not two panels.

Mr. Benidickson: May I speak to the point of order? I do not support the argument that was advanced that the possibility of increased membership on this board would take care of the problem about which the hon. member has been speaking. What has surprised me is the fact that he has been the only member from western Canada who has not been silent, slavish and tongue-tied with respect to tariffs.

The Chairman: I agree that the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort should be able to make reference to some of the work that could be submitted to the tariff board, enumerating the problems that could be submitted. However, if the hon. member seeks to discuss each problem in detail, that is another matter. This was the trend of his remarks when I interrupted him.

Mr. Rapp: The minister outlined, in his supplementary budget, the reasons for increasing the membership of the tariff board from five to seven. Some of these reasons related to representations that were made by some farm organizations. I should like to put on record the fact that the Saskatchewan oil seed conference made representations in favour of certain trade practices. They have requested that a reciprocal tariff be imposed much more in line with the tariff imposed by the United States.

Mr. Argue: That is out of order, definitely out of order.

Mr. Rapp: The hon. member was not out of order when he said that the board should not be increased because high tariffs were not in the best interests of the country. I am saying this reciprocal tariff is in the best interests of western agriculture and agriculture as a whole in Canada.

Mr. Argue: Western Canada is for lower tariffs, not higher tariffs.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Finance proposes that there should be an increase in the personnel of the tariff board. He proposes that we should increase the personnel from five to seven. The tariff board is a very important instrument in the work of the government of this country, and we should not summarily dismiss a recommendation of this kind as the hon. member for Assiniboia did, if I may say so, in a most irresponsible manner.

Mr. Argue: What did I dismiss?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I said that I do believe—

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, what I said was that I had no knowledge of farm organizations asking for the two panel system.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not believe my statement was an exaggeration in any way, in the light of the reply we have just received.

The point I am seeking to make is that the hon. member for Assiniboia referred to this as a proposal that should be opposed without establishing, in my judgment, a basis for his opposition. As a matter of fact he did not offer any argument at all. I believe that the Minister of Finance, however, should explain to the committee in a more precise way his reasons for feeling it is necessary to recommend an increase in the personnel of the tariff board, and to have two panels instead of one.

Mr. Benidickson: Particularly when he is cutting down on the appeals.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, particularly when the appeals are being cut down. I thought the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, which were held by you, Mr. Chairman, to be out of order, were valid. The Minister of Finance cannot have it both ways, particularly in the light of the position he takes in another context.

Since the tariff board was first set up in 1926 as an advisory body under the chairmanship of the late W. H. Moore, and later given more definite judicial as well as advisory functions under the late Mr. Justice Sedgewick, it has performed valuable services for Canada. The hon. member for Assiniboia should not dispose of the whole matter just so summarily. I think the Minister of Finance should deal with that argument. He should indicate what is the backlog of cases, if there is one, and I presume from what the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort has said that this is the case. The instance that he himself mentioned as one of the reasons why the board should be increased is an argument on this point. As one who comes from the soyabean district of Canada, I can well appreciate his interest in this matter. I urge the Minister of Finance, instead of spending all his time in raising points of procedure, to deal now with the argument of the hon. member for Assiniboia—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Give me a chance and I will. I am waiting to do so.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister says, "Give me a chance". I am now urging him to do this. He could have pointed out in the beginning that these cases cannot be heard unless a new panel is set up. If that is the case, we ought to know about it. I do not know whether that is the case, but I presume that is the situation. I think the Minister of Finance ought to give us the reasons which he feels are present and justify the course which he is advocating at this time, particularly in view of what he had to say in another debate about the conduct of the board.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I am glad to have now the opprtunity to deal with this subject in detail. The fact is that the proposed enlargement of the personnel of the board is very necessary, it is urgently necessary, because of the very large backlog of work now awaiting consideration by the board. At the present time that backlog consists of no fewer than eight references, and 69 appeals. The chairman of the board, in urging an enlargement of the board so that it may make some progress with this very large backlog, has informed me that according to his present estimate it would not be possible for the board to deal completely with this backlog of business within a couple of years.

It is just as true in this area of the nation's business as it is in the courts, that justice delayed is justice denied. Persons who have important matters within the scope of either appeals or references to the tariff board are entitled to have their business transacted before that board with a reasonable measure of dispatch.

The case that has been cited by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale is a case in point. The reference, No. 131, concerning oilseeds, vegetable oils and related products has been directed to the tariff board by myself, as I indicated I would do in the supplementary budget speech of December 20 last. Unless there is an enlargement of the personnel of the board, and if the board is compelled to go on as presently constituted, with only one panel, it will be a very long time before this reference can be heard.

Persons in this country who have important matters to put before the board in the course of hearings of references or appeals should have these matters dealt with as expeditiously as possible. Under present circumstances these matters are being delayed.

I think it is high time this action was taken. Far from questioning the importance of the board, the course that the government has followed enlarges the importance of the board. The course that I indicated earlier this afternoon, in accordance with my supplementary budget speech on December 20, points out the intentions of the government in regard to the review of the Customs Tariff and the modernization of many of its provisions, which by present-day standards are quite antiquated and badly need to be modernized. Undoubtedly a very large volume of work awaits the board, not simply the backlog to which I referred, but also further references and other business which will undoubtedly come before the board from time to time.

At the present time it is estimated that one reference alone will occupy the time of the board for two years. This is the major reference on the chemical items in the Customs Tariff. These hearings have already been proceeding for several months, but much remains of this major undertaking on the part of the board. As long as the board is compelled to continue sitting as only one panel, there is simply no hope of the board reducing the backlog of work; on the contrary, it is likely that the accumulation of work will increase rather than be reduced.

Therefore the resolution now before the committee is intended to bring aid and assistance to this important tariff board, to enable it to transact more expeditiously the appeals and references which it has to hear, all of them of very great importance and in every one of which all interests concerned are entitled to a reasonably expeditious hearing and transaction of their business.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the minister has recognized that the official opposition has not opposed the setting up of a second panel which would perhaps review some of the tariff considerations that will be referred to it. However, the minister —as you observed, Mr. Chairman—did not deal with the point that I raised, that in consequence of the arbitrary opportunities given to the Minister of National Revenue in legislation passed in 1958, and again proposed this session—which are non-appealable to the tariff board—perhaps their activities will not be so great. The minister has not commented upon that matter.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, may I lend my support to this resolution. I feel that parliament itself should examine the situation of the various boards it sets up. The tariff board is just one of these. We have heard from the minister and others about the tremendous backlog of work facing this tariff board. This is something that should be cleaned up right away. We must give the board the means to clear up this backlog. I would refer to the speech of the hon. member for Medicine Hat. It is not as though we in this country are always in a static condition. This is a growing country. I think he should have mentioned one thing further; that is the complexity of tariffs and our tariff dealings with other countries, which are coming more and more to the fore. Our manufactures are growing, and if we do not have the facility of a tariff board to handle these questions as they come

CANADIAN FEDERATION OF MUSIC TEACHERS' ASSOCIATIONS

The house in committee on Bill No. S-8, to incorporate Canadian Federation of Music Teachers' Associations—Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North)—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, would the sponsor of this bill inform the committee whether an organization similar to the one proposed in this bill is incorporated in Canada?

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Chairman. To my knowledge there is no similar organization.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On clause 2—Objects.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the sponsor of the bill would answer a question in connection with clause 2. It is my understanding that this bill proposes to deal exclusively with associations and organizations of teachers of music in order to promote the efficacy of teaching and the advancement of music.

Clause 2, dealing with the objects of the bill, reads:

(a) to encourage and assist all movements designed to improve standards of musical education and the training of teachers of music, to encourage and assist in the organization of music teachers' associations in the provinces of Canada and to stimulate the acquisition of all-round musicianship—

And so on. While I do not advance the cause of James C. Petrillo of the United States federation of musicians, this clause does say:

—to encourage and assist in the organization of music teachers' associations—

I wonder whether the sponsor would say whether or not one of the functions of such an association of music teachers could, under this bill, be the regulation of relationships between the association of music teachers and the group or organization which might employ those music teachers? Is it the intention of this bill to involve these people in any way in the field which is generally classified as labour-management relations?

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): No, Mr. Chairman, I do not think that is at all one of the purposes envisaged by the association.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the sponsor of the bill one question. As a general rule a national federation is formed as a result of separate provincial organizations which desire to get together in order to achieve national expression. Would the sponsor of the bill name the provinces which at the present time have an organization of music teachers? Also, would the hon. member say whether they are part and parcel of a group, in all provinces where they are organized, sponsoring the formation of this federation?

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that these associations now exist in the various provinces of Canada and that this bill, as the hon. member has pointed out, is to bring the various provincial associations together as a federal organization.

Mr. Winch: Do I understand that there are no provincial associations of music teachers west of Ontario, because I notice that there is no mention of any in this bill.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): I believe there are some west of Ontario, but I am not sure of that.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, in the objects of the federation as set out in clause 2, there is included:

—and to stimulate the acquisition of all-round musicianship—

That is a rather ugly use of the English language. Would the sponsor of the bill inform the committee the name of the gentleman of the legal profession who drafted this bill? That is a very unusual term.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): I am not quite sure who drafted it. Counsel on the bill was a very renowned gentleman in the city of Ottawa, Mr. E. H. Coleman, who I know has had a very distinguished career as a lawyer, and in years gone by as an official of government. He headed one of the best law schools in Canada, the Manitoba law school.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, could I also ask the sponsor what is the intent behind paragraph (c) of clause 2, which deals with the promotion and extension of music credits in the schools and universities of Canada?

A school curriculum is completely within the jurisdiction of the provincial legislature. To the best of my knowledge nearly all provinces have school credits under the curriculum of the province. Is this an interference with the jurisdiction of the provinces with regard to the curriculum of schools and the ratio of credits in all their forms of study?

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): I do not believe that could be construed from the wording of paragraph (c), which is:

—to promote the extension of music credits in the schools and universities of Canada;

Of course, everyone realizes that the curriculum comes under provincial jurisdiction.

However, there is nothing to prevent anyone promoting credits in addition to those that now exist, or from promoting credits that do not in fact exist. Because one is promoting credits, this does not necessarily mean one is forcing the legislature to include them. Promoting the extension of music credits does not, I think, in any way interfere with provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, paragraph (d) reads:

—to promote and maintain the status of professional music teachers in the community.

Would the hon. member mind explaining to the committee just how this federation intends to promote and maintain the status of professional music teachers in the community. How would it proceed?

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): I should imagine it would proceed possibly along the same line as some other associations which promote and maintain the status of members of parliament in the community.

I should think that a music teacher in a community is a very highly respected person, and because of the contribution he is making to culture and the arts it would be desirable that his status in the community should be such as to attract people and students to participate in various aspects of music in order to promote culture in the country.

Mr. Herridge: I am rather interested in that explanation because it almost implies that the promotion would be along the same line of activity as is carried on by a political association, which is usually organized to elect a member of parliament and not to maintain a professional status.

Have any standards been established in this desire to promote and maintain the status of professional music teachers in the community? Have any definite standards been established to which they work or aspire?

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): I am not aware that there are any set standards, but I would assume that each individual teacher, or each association of teachers would have its own standards. I am quite certain that they would be very high standards. If the hon. member is worried about those standards, I can assure him that the persons I have met who are interested in this matter certainly have the highest standards. I am quite sure the hon. member has nothing to worry about in this regard.

Mr. Herridge: Then I am correct in understanding that the hon. member means they will promote the highest professional standards as far as music teachers are concerned?

[Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North).]

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): Yes, I would assume that is so.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Membership.

Mr. Winch: Clause 3 deals with membership, and it is interesting to note that the wording is as follows:

The membership in the federation shall comprise the members of the association and all others who are from time to time admitted to membership under the provisions of the by-laws or rules of the federation.

I am not now implying that this consideration was in the mind of the hon. member who sponsored this bill or those who drafted it. In the past over the years we have seen the introduction of legislation of this type which on the surface seems to be excellent and to have the highest motives. Then as time went by and amendments were brought in and regulations were brought down, it was found that it was used not only on a restrictive basis with regard to membership but also with regard to licensing. Can the hon. member tell us whether he has any indication of the rules and regulations that will be promulgated under clause 3 and whether there is any intention whatsoever that the power of the association with regard to the restriction of membership or otherwise will be used in any way so that music teachers will be compelled to belong to the federation or be licensed by it in order to practice their profession?

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): I have no information as to the rules which are now in existence or which may be in existence in the future. I have no information whatsoever on that matter.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 4 agreed to.

On clause 5—By-laws and regulations.

Mr. Herridge: This is a rather interesting clause. It has to do with by-laws and regulations. I refer to paragraph (c). I should have said that it is an interesting paragraph. It reads as follows:

(c) the time and place for holding general or special meetings of the federation and the notice and other requirements thereof, provided that general meetings shall be held only once in every two years unless the federation decides that they shall be held more frequently;

Can the hon. member inform us as to the reason for the rather unusual provision that general meetings shall be held only once in every two years? That is a rather unusual provision in by-laws.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): I would presume that the reason for that provision is the distance that a great many people attending the meetings would have to travel. It was probably also felt that the amount of business to be done at a general meeting would be of such a nature that a meeting every two years would be all that would be required. A saving clause, of course, is there, namely that they may meet more frequently if the federation so decides. I would presume the reason for the provision, or possibly one factor in connection with it, would be the distance various people attending would have to travel.

Mr. Herridge: The hon. member mentioned the fact that this saving clause is here:

—unless the federation decides that they shall be held more frequently.

Does that mean the membership, the executive or the heads of the provincial section? What is meant by the words "unless the federation decides"? Who makes that decision?

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): I admit that the term is somewhat ambiguous but I would presume that the interpretation would be that the members of the federation would decide or possibly a substantial number of them; because without members the federation, of course, cannot exist. Although, as the hon. member indicates, the wording is slightly ambiguous, I would presume that it means the membership of the federation.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. Howard: With respect to clause 6 I have only a general query, noting that these are what you might call special or additional powers, as I take it, requiring the consent of 75 per centum of the members present at a general or special meeting, in order to purchase land, borrow money and to do the other things listed thereunder. I wonder why there is the provision with regard to 75 per centum of the members present. Is this a normal percentage to have in organizations of this sort; is this provision at variance with what we normally believe to be the majority decision of members; or is there any particular reason why 75 per centum is listed as the differential number having regard to the members present?

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): I think that the clause is quite normal. There are a great many associations that require the consent of 60 per cent of the members present in order to transact certain business, to amend the constitution and so on. I do not think that provision is contrary to any established practice. Indeed, I think it is the established practice, for certain decisions that any association makes, to require the consent of a certain percentage of the persons present in order to make those decisions.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 7 agreed to.

On clause 8—Constitution, by-laws, etc. of association to continue until amended or repealed.

Mr. Herridge: Clause 8 reads as follows:

The existing constitution, by-laws and rules of the association, in so far as they are not contrary to law or to the provisions of this act, shall be the constitution, by-laws and rules of the federation until amended or repealed at a general meeting of the federation.

My question is this. Has the sponsoring member a copy of the constitution, a copy of the by-laws or a copy of the rules? If so, will he read them to the committee?

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): I have not a copy of them with me but I should be glad to obtain them and forward them to the hon. member as soon as possible.

Mr. Herridge: That is rather unusual, Mr. Chairman. We are being asked to pass a bill covering a certain constitution and certain by-laws and rules without the proposed legislation coming before the House of Commons. With regard to the bill respecting the incorporation of the Legion, copies of the constitution were provided. It seems to me that we are passing a bill here without having full knowledge of what is contained or implied in clause 8. Has the hon. member sponsoring the bill any knowledge of the constitution, the by-laws or the rules or has he read them? If so, can he assure the committee that in his opinion they are appropriate in relation to this bill?

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): I should be glad to give that assurance, Mr. Chairman.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 9—First general meeting.

Mr. Herridge: This is another rather unusual clause, Mr. Chairman. It reads as follows:

The first general meeting of the federation shall be held within eighteen months from the time this act comes into force at such time and place as the present executive committee of the association may determine.

Here we are incorporating a formerly unincorporated association. This clause provides that the first meeting need not be held for 18 months. Can the sponsoring hon. member indicate why there is this unusual delay in calling the first meeting?

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): I do not think there is any delay, Mr. Chairman. The clause provides that the meeting must be held within 18 months. Eighteen months is the maximum. I think the hon. member might possibly be misinterpreting the clause. It does not say that the meeting will be held 18 months from now. It says that it must be held within 18 months. A previous provision in the bill states that the annual meeting need be held only every two years. This is a maximum limit of 18 months. It must be held within that time. I daresay it will possibly be held much sooner than 18 months. However, 18 months is the limit.

Mr. Howard: While it is quite true that the first annual meeting or the first general meeting could be held next week if this act is proclaimed to be in force by that time, or it could be held the day after the act comes into force or it could be held 18 months afterwards, this is the thought I had in mind. Why have the maximum of 18 months? Why not have a shorter maximum in order that the association may get under way and in order that the executive will be placed in a position of having to call the first general meeting within a relatively short period of time rather than within the 18 months?

It was my thought that such a first general meeting would be held as soon as possible. Surely one is entitled to come to this conclusion because the federation is being established and there has been undoubtedly a great deal of preparatory work involved in the promoting and fostering of this measure. I would think that the 18-month period is too long. I wonder if there is some particular reason for a period of 18 months rather than a period of six months in this regard.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): I believe there was an explanation given in the committee in regard to the meetings of the directors coinciding with a biennial convention to be held within the next 18 months.

Clause 9 agreed to.

On clause 10—Federation vested with rights and assumes obligations of association.

Mr. Herridge: The corporation created by this act is vested with all the rights and assumes all the obligations of the association. Could the sponsor inform us what the rights and obligations of this association are?

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): Mr. Chairman, my recollection is that there was no similar inquiry made in the committee and I was unavoidably absent at that time. My information is that this clause was explained to the satisfaction of the members of that committee.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Herridge: Perhaps the hon. member would explain the rights and obligations of this organization in general because perhaps some of us do not know what they are.

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): I understand that the obligations refer to the debts of the present unincorporated body and that the rights would refer to the right to collect moneys and fees presently owing to the body.

Mr. Herridge: Am I to understand from what the assistant sponsor has said—he was a member of that committee and I appreciate his helpfulness—that this clause is related to rights in respect of the assets and liabilities and not in respect of other wider rights?

Mr. Smith (Simcoe North): That is my understanding.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY AT KINGSTON

The house in committee on Bill No. S-7, respecting Queen's University at Kingston—Mr. Macdonnell—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, this is a rather intriguing bill from an historical point of view. Am I to judge from the answers to questions made by the sponsor when the bill was given second reading that the sponsor gave a rather detailed account of the reasons for this rather unusual bill so far as the powers of the university are concerned when the bill was considered by the committee?

Mr. Macdonnell: Yes. The counsel for the university stated those reasons at some length. He referred to a statement made by the dean of the law faculty at the university who explained that this particular measure had reference to questions of administrative organization and was therefore not transgressing the rule that education is a matter for the provincial government to deal with. This is a matter of administration which goes back to the original act of 1882 now being amended. I was sorry to find that there is apparently no record of any debate at the time of the passing of the original act in 1882. The information regarding the matter of administration was apparently given and accepted in 1882 at the time that the statute was passed.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the sponsor whether he has any vested or personal interest in this bill as a result of being a former student at the university in question?

Mr. Macdonnell: I have a personal but not vested interest, if I understand correctly the meaning of those words. I certainly have a personal interest in regard to the passage of this bill because I think it would be of help to the present administration of the university. I point out this is not a mandatory matter but a permissive one. We all believe in flexibility and I would suggest that the passage of this bill will lead to flexibility in the position of the trustees in regard to their action from time to time.

Mr. Herridge: Would the sponsor agree that I was correct in suggesting a vested interest if I explained that the vested interest was as a result of the contribution this university has made to Canada generally?

Mr. Macdonnell: Yes, I imagine that would be right. From my point of view the university has made a great contribution. I would repeat the old saying, "it pleases he and it don't hurt I." I do not think this change does anyone harm but will do a lot of good.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I raised certain questions on second reading but regret to say that I was not able to attend at the meetings of the committee to hear the answers. I did notice in reading the bill and also from what the hon. gentleman has said that this legislation was passed in 1882. It occurred to me as a historian that in 1882 Sir John A. Macdonald was prime minister of this country and that the Tories at that time believed in a unitary state and centralized form of government which perhaps explains why the legislation was passed without question by the parliament at that time. I have heard that some Tories in different parts of this country take a rather different view today. I wondered if the hon. member had sought to advise his colleague, the hon. member for Roberval, in regard to this bill before its presentation or if the hon. member for Roberval had taken any interest in regard to it at any stage of the proceedings?

Mr. Macdonnell: As far as I am concerned the answer is in the negative. I am sure that any opinion from the hon. member would be of great interest.

THE CANADIAN GENERAL COUNCIL OF THE BOY SCOUTS ASSOCIATION

The house in committee on Bill No. S-11, respecting the Canadian General Council of the Boy Scouts Association—Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke)—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Change of name.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Godin: Perhaps the hon. member sponsoring this bill could enlighten the committee on why in the petition a request is made to adopt the English name for the association as well as the French name. I believe the sponsor of the bill is aware that certain difficulties may arise from this. I should like him to enumerate the problems envisaged that are solved in the sense that the various associations interested in this one movement are satisfied that there may be a charter available for those who have developed a Catholic section of the scouts du Canada and therefore the request before the committee is for the adoption of those two names. It is possible that in the eyes of many hon. members this legislation takes away the privilege of that association in obtaining a charter for a similar purpose?

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I do not believe there is a conflict here, Mr. Chairman. The Canadian Boy Scouts Association has within its membership a very large number of French-speaking boy scouts. The federation in the province of Quebec is affiliated with this association and works in conjunction with it at other points, and consequently, since there is a large number of French speaking Catholic boy scouts and other French speaking members who are affiliated with the boy scouts association it seemed logical that the two languages should be designated in respect of the name of the association, as it will be used in either language in Canada. As for any possible future event that may occur, I do not see that the designation of the French name of the association creates any possibility of conflict, at least in the way suggested by the hon. member.

(Translation):

Mr. O. J. Godin (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member might perhaps explain why the French translation is not identical, or at least why we have not here a literal translation of Boy Scouts of Canada, as, in this request, there is only the mention Scouts du Canada, though, literally, it should be Garçons scouts du Canada.

Moreover, the hon. member might explain why, under the circumstances, a French label is suggested which is not necessarily a translation of the English designation.

(Text):

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Because, Mr. Chairman, where the phrase is used in French throughout the world and where the phrase "fédérations des scouts catholiques de la province de Québec" is used the phrase "boy scouts" is not used. At the present time in the province of Quebec where there is a French-speaking federation affiliated with the boy scouts association the word "boy" or "garçon" is not included. It is not used wherever boy scouts exist in the French-speaking world. I believe this is correct and is the explanation.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, in the explanatory note to this bill I find the following:

> The present name, the Canadian General Council of the Boy Scouts Association, was established when this association was, in effect, a branch of the boy scouts association incorporated by royal charter in London, England, on January 4, 1912. Since that time the Canadian association has become an independent member of the international boy scout conference.

Then, it goes on to give reasons for changing the name. The question I wish to ask the sponsor of this bill is, how has this association functioned since the time it became an independent member of the international boy scout conference? How did it operate legally? Was it incorporated on a national basis, and were its reports made under its act to the appropriate federal official, or was it incorporated under provincial legislation and the reports made to the provincial officials? If the hon. member's research into the bill is sufficient, I would like him to explain to the committee how the organization operates in Canada in relation to the provinces and the federal government under a royal charter granted in Great Britain in 1912?

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Since that time the boy scouts association of Canada was incorporated in Canada under an act of this parliament, an act which happened to be amended last year and is now before the committee. My recollection is not absolutely certain on this matter, but I think the original act was passed by parliament in 1924. In any event, for a good many years the boy scouts association has operated under the terms laid down by an act of this parliament.

Mr. Herridge: That was my point. I was just interested in it. I am not suggesting the hon. member has all the information at his fingertips. How did it operate legally as an independent body and a member of the international boy scouts association prior to incorporation by an act of this parliament?

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): The international boy scout conference as a formalized organization is relatively new. Probably when the original change was made at that time the international conference was not contemplated. In becoming a member of the conference probably the Canadian association never considered that no change of name might lead to a misunderstanding as to its independent status; but now it is felt that it would be desirable to identify the organization as distinctively Canadian and wholly responsible to a Canadian association rather than any association outside the country. It was to clarify that point that this suggested change was made.

Mr. Howard: I wonder whether I am correct in assuming this. Perhaps this is somewhat of an answer to the query posed by my hon. friend from Kootenay West. On the left-hand side of the bill before us, right opposite the preamble, there are some notations listed, and I give one of them, namely 1914, chapter 130. I wonder whether this would not be the reference to the initial statute that established the Canadian general council of the boy scouts association as an independent member and as a distinct entity, one operating under the royal charter rather than under the legislation which was passed in 1924, which I believe was the date given by the hon. member. The year 1917 and chapter 73 would indicate to me that that was the year when the amendment of the initial 1914 statute was made. This is the year when it was initially established by virtue of a private bill, I assume.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): It could very well be.

Mr. Godin: Possibly the hon. member could satisfy the committee that complete understanding exists between the federation, which I understand is not necessarily affiliated with the Canadian general council of the boy scouts association, and the boy scouts association. I understand there is a letter of understanding between them to the effect that the federation operates according to its own regulations in the province of Quebec and those other parishes where there are groups of Catholic youngsters who have similar objects and follow the rules generally except as those rules are amended in accordance with the religious training of the youngsters. In the event that Les Scouts Catholiques du Canada would like to obtain a charter, can the hon. member assure us that there would be absolutely no objection on the part of this organization which now wants to be known simply by the name Boy Scouts of Canada? Can he assure the committee that this association will have no objection to a charter being granted to another group with similar ambitions such as Les Scouts du Canada.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I regret that the hon. member was not in the committee the other day when the chief executive commissioner for Canada was present. He is the man to whom this question perhaps should have been directed. However, I do know from my own experience over a good many years that there has been the closest co-operation between the federation and the Canadian Boy Scouts Association, that they maintain continuous consultation on all matters affecting both English-speaking and French-speaking boy scouts, and that both organizations recognize allegiance to the chief scout of Canada. Consequently, I think it is safe to assume that this very close co-operation and harmony will be maintained.

JEAN GEORGE LIPSMAN

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. SD-1, for the relief of Jean George Lipsman.—Mr. McCleave.

Mr. Speaker: In the absence of the sponsor of these divorce bills, shall they stand?

Mr. Mandziuk: Mr. Speaker, I request that all divorce bills on today's order paper stand.

Mr. Speaker: Order No. 4 covers divorce bills SD-1 to SD-53. Orders Nos. 5 to 26 cover bills SD-54 to SD-75. Shall these bills stand?

Mr. Howard: Without consolidation.

Mr. Speaker: Without consolidation. Perhaps the house would concur in taking all the divorce bills together even though it means taking them out of order. The purpose is not to consolidate them but so as to deal with them all at this time because I understand the request is being made that all divorce bills stand. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN PIONEER INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-10, to incorporate Canadian Pioneer Insurance Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, there is very little I can usefully say in further explanation of the bill. It is a clear-cut bill in complete conformity with the regulations and the legislation covering the incorporation of insurance companies. What is being sought in the bill is the incorporation of a fire and casualty insurance company which is to be known by the name of Canadian Pioneer Insurance Company and, in French, La Compagnie d'Assurance Pionnier Canadien.

The required procedure of publication in newspapers has been followed and the Department of the Secretary of State has approved of the name of this particular company. Perhaps it might be useful for the house to know that the incorporation of this company does not mean an increase in the number of fire and casualty insurance companies in Canada. As a matter of fact, it merely replaces a company that existed previously, the London and Provincial Marine Insurance Company, which ceased operation as of last December. The sponsor and financial backer of the Canadian Pioneer Insurance Company is the Yorkshire Insurance Company of London, and the London and Provincial Marine Insurance Company was a subsidiary of Yorkshire of London.

As hon. members know, the Yorkshire Insurance Company of London has been established in Canada since 1907 and has operated since that time. In December Yorkshire withdrew the London and Provincial Marine Insurance Company from operation and has assumed all of its payments and in its place is sponsoring the Canadian Pioneer Insurance Company.

The capital stock of the company will be $2 million divided into shares of $100 each. Before the company can commence operations the capital stock subscribed and paid for will have to be approximately $620,000. In the bill there are also some special insurance clauses and for the company to commence operations under those provisions a further amount of money will have to be paid with the result that the company will be able to commence full operations only when at least $1 million in stock has been subscribed and paid for.

I have been informed that when the Canadian Pioneer Insurance Company is completely organized and fully operating it is the intention to allow Canadian participation in the company. The bill has been submitted to the other place and to a committee of the other place. It has also been studied and approved by the superintendent of insurance.

Inasmuch as the bill is not necessarily a controversial one, I hope that the house will permit it to go to the banking and commerce committee without delay.

Mr. Howard: I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question before he technically resumes his seat. I understood him to say it was the intention of the company to allow Canadian participation in the ownership of the company. Could he explain what he meant by the word "allow" or in what way this will take place?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Chairman, rather than allow Canadian participation I understand that the company would encourage Canadian participation to take place both financially and in the administration of the company.

Mr. Howard: I should like to ask one more question. I have reference to one of the clauses of the bill and I will not refer to it in detail. Under clause 8 it is provided that the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act shall apply to this company. I wonder if the hon. gentleman could explain what this Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act is, and what would be the relationship between that act and this company once it has been established?

Mr. Cardin: I do not know that I can go into all the details concerning what is included in the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act. What is meant by this particular clause of this bill is that once the company is incorporated it will be subject to the provisions of that particular act.

Mr. Howard: Is that a public act, the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act?

Mr. Cardin: Yes.

Mr. Howard: Oh, fine.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY

Mr. J. S. Speakman (Wetaskiwin) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-13, respecting Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

He said: After waiting some considerable length of time, I finally have the opportunity of moving second reading of this bill. I am afraid my time is going to be rather restricted. I had hoped to go into some of the historical background of the district in which this spur line would be constructed. However, I should like to say that during the construction period of this 8.5 miles of spur line, which will provide a service to a new gas extraction plant, employment will be provided for about 20 to 25 men in grade construction for a period of about two months. Employment will be provided for 60 to 70 men in the actual laying of the ballast and the rails for another period of a month and a half. For a period of approximately three and a half months, therefore, employment will be provided for something in the order of 60 men.

As I have said, this new spur line will service a new gas extraction plant of the British American Oil Company at a place called Rimbey, where gas will be produced for the trans-Canada pipe line. There will be 326 million cubic feet of raw gas daily going into the pipe line. In addition to this, Mr. Speaker, there will be 68,000 gallons of propane; 98,000 gallons of butane; 325,000 gallons of pentanes plus and 233 long tons of elemental sulphur. This will result in a considerable amount of traffic. The propane will result in approximately 10 carloads per day, the butane approximately 17 carloads per day, the pentanes plus approximately 50 carloads per day and the sulphur about 5 carloads per day.

The movement of these products will provide employment for two railway men daily at the plant and will call for the addition of three train crews in the division in which the spur line will operate. If one considers there are about four men to a crew, one can see that the increase will cover about 12 men. In addition, a section crew of four men will be needed. During the construction period, therefore, an average of 60 men will be employed for about three and a half months and permanent employment will be provided for something in the neighbourhood of 25 years for about 18 men.

I would ask the house to give second reading to the bill as quickly as possible so that it could go to a committee and be reported back to the house without delay. This matter is of considerable importance to the district I represent, to the oil industry and the economy of Alberta as well as to the economy of Canada generally when we consider that the export of this amount of natural gas will do a great deal in helping to correct our imbalance of trade with our neighbour to the south.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I want to ask one question of the hon. member, but I was a bit slow in getting to my feet. However, the hon. gentleman has the privilege of speaking again to close the debate, so perhaps he could take advantage of that opportunity to answer this question I have in mind. The debate will be concluded before six o'clock because there is not a great deal of controversy about this matter.

up, I suggest we are derelict in our duty. I think we should do something about it.

The remarks made by some hon. members are typical, but I cannot help but go back to what the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort said in regard to rapeseed oil and his long fight to have this reference brought forward. Naturally, he wants to have this matter brought to a head. He wants to see it given consideration, and this reference should be dealt with as quickly as possible after his long fight for it.

Certain references were made by the hon. member for Assiniboia which left me a little cold. I would remind the hon. member about this. He talks about the Tory party and high tariffs and he says this will mean a general increase and high tariffs across the board. I would remind the hon. member that the last three budgets produced a total of 392 changes, 203 of which were more or less formal changes of an administrative nature, and only 65 increases were put into effect. Also, there were 124 reductions.

In the light of these figures it is perfectly stupid to say that the Tory party wants high tariffs. We do not. We are out to give a little protection to industry and growers—

Mr. Argue: Tell that to the farmers out in the west.

Mr. Benidickson: Just a little the government says.

Mr. Pugh: When you talk about the western farmers not wanting protection, do not tell that to the people in the Okanagan who are fruit growers, because they will not believe you. They will run you out if you say that.

Mr. Chairman, I have said all I wished to say. I have given my views on this matter, and I definitely support the resolution.

Mr. Benidickson: You said it, just a little.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I was surprised that the Minister of Finance, after raising points of order in the debate, should himself have transgressed the rule of the house by anticipating the conclusion of a debate on the bill introduced to this house by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort. That bill would have the effect, of course—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not refer to any bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: —of adding to the name of his constituency. But the bill has not yet passed the house and the historic name of Tisdale has not yet been added to that constituency.

I just draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that the Minister of Finance has broken one of the well known rules of the house, namely the one to the effect that you must not anticipate another debate on a motion that is before the house. Having made that important and pedantic point I intend to address myself to the resolution. However, I just thought that I should first point out that even Homer nods.

I think the minister, in his reply to my friend the hon. member for Essex East made a quite compelling argument for adding an additional panel to the tariff board. There is no doubt that if that number of cases is outstanding—and I do not question for one second the statistics given by the minister—or if that number of references and appeals is outstanding, it is important and urgent that this business should be dealt with as expeditiously as possible consistent with the efficiency of the operation. But that is no quarrel on that between the government and the opposition at all. Indeed, I imagine that there would have been little discussion on the part of the opposition with regard to this resolution we are now considering had it not been for the reflections which, in other circumstances, have been cast upon the existing board and upon its conduct in the last ten years by the minister who himself is now introducing this resolution.

It is hard to feel that the government can be entirely happy about asking us to increase the size of a board which the government has found to be so inefficient and so disregardful of the will of parliament. That is the only question that arises in our minds; and it does not really arise very seriously in our minds because we on this side of the chamber do not believe that the tariff board has disregarded the will of parliament at all. We believe that the tariff board has followed the will of parliament as faithfully as a conscientious man like Mr. Hector McKinnon can do so.

Mr. Benidickson: You are absolutely right.

Mr. Pickersgill: In our view, there is no question about that matter. That is not to say that some of their decisions may not have been wrong. They are mortal; they are human; and probably some of their decisions were wrong. However, we believe that they have consciously and conscientiously tried to carry out the will of parliament. If we could be quite sure that men of the calibre of Mr. Hector McKinnon, Mr. Buchanan and some of the other distinguished people who have served and are now serving on the board were going to be appointed, there would be no question in our minds about supporting this resolution enthusiastically. On balance, I think we have no choice but to support it in any event because so long as we are going to have tariffs—and I do not think there is anyone who does not think we are going to have tariffs in this country for a long time to come—it is of great importance that the tariff law should be administered fairly and, as the minister has said, as expeditiously as possible. About that matter I think there cannot be any difference of opinion.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is all this resolution is.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Carleton says that is all it is or all that the resolution does. I say that we would be a great deal happier if this resolution was really designed without arrière-pensée, without equivocation, to carry out what the minister said was one of the objectives of expanding the board in his baby budget speech of December 20; I want to quote one sentence from that speech. As reported at page 1013 of Hansard the minister stated:

> At the same time we consider it important to provide for careful investigation and public hearings before major tariff revisions are introduced.

We agree wholeheartedly with that view on this side of the chamber. But the thing we cannot understand is why the government is increasing the membership of the tariff board and establishing two panels and at the same time trying to limit and restrict its jurisdiction.

Mr. Benidickson: And while reducing public hearings.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is the thing we cannot understand. We cannot understand this shocking inconsistency. That is where all our difficulty lies. Of course, I may say that the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary may be impressed by the fact that 20 horses equal 20 mice, but we are not impressed. To say that so many increases were made in the tariff and so many decreases were made and that consequently that fact proves that the government is low tariff or high tariff is simply nonsense. As everyone knows, you may increase the tariff on an item with a huge volume of importation and you may decrease it on an item that is never imported at all. To call that equal is, as I say, the kind of arithmetic that we think—

Mr. Pugh: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: —unfortunately too often characterizes the performance of the Minister of Finance.

The Chairman: Is the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary rising on a point of order?

Mr. Pugh: Yes, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the references to the number made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, the last reference to the increase in volume et cetera; my remarks were strictly for the hon. member for Assiniboia who said that this was another Tory attempt to increase tariffs across the board. The figures that I submitted merely showed that there was a change. What the form was, I do not know, and I do not think it enters into the question at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: Although there was no point of order involved, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Pugh: I think the chairman will decide that matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was going to say, Mr. Chairman, that while there was no point of order involved, I was happy to allow the hon. gentleman to interrupt me in order to make his clarification. I must say that it is a clarification that I would expect the hon. gentleman to make because I think he is the kind of member who can add two and two and get four. My point is this.

Mr. Argue: You do not agree with him.

Mr. Pickersgill: No; I do not agree with the minister in using the illustration in the first place.

Mr. Argue: You do not agree with the hon. member that tariffs have gone down.

Mr. Pickersgill: I try to be fair to all hon. members.

Mr. Argue: He said so.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the hon. member for Assiniboia would not mind replying to me when I have finished instead of interrupting every sentence halfway through.

Mr. Argue: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is the greatest interrupter in parliament.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, I will not attempt to compete with the hon. member for Assiniboia in this or in any other field. I may say that I have not perhaps the same compulsions on me at the present time as has the hon. gentleman and I am prepared to make due allowance.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): May we be sure of that?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman can be quite sure. No one has ever accused me of the lack of candour. However, I want to get back to the minister's arithmetic since the subject has been introduced by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary. I want to get back to that matter. I am afraid the minister's illustration with regard to so many items in the tariff being increased and so many being decreased is rather characteristic of the way in which the minister does arithmetic with the public accounts and with everything else, as the provincial governments have recently had reason to find out. That was not in this chamber, so that the allusion to it by way of analogy will, as Your Honour realizes, be completely in order.

But to come back again to the resolution itself, may I say this. Before this resolution passes—as I think it will and should pass—I think the minister should answer the question that was put to him by my friend the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. The minister was asked to give some estimate of the amount of the volume of work of which the board is to be relieved as a result of certain changes, if they are made, that are now in contemplation. This is a directly relevant factor. The minister said there had been a welter of appeals. The Minister of National Revenue said there were very few of them.

Mr. Benidickson: In the past.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, in the past. I am talking about history. I am not talking in the least about what is going to happen in the future. I am asking a question merely about what is going to happen in the future because the need for this extra panel will be to some degree determined by whether or not the other legislation is going to reduce the work load, if I may use a horrible phrase, of the tariff board. However, sir, I think we should have a serious estimate of the amount of work of which the board will be relieved.

I have one other question I would like to propose to the Minister of Finance. I think this is a proper question, sir, in view of one or two analogies to which I intend to make reference. I would like to know whether the government has any competent people in mind who will be appointed quickly to this board once parliament has passed this legislation. I am not referring to a kind or class of person but to competent individuals in themselves. I do hope that we will not be kept waiting three months as we were in regard to the appointment of members to the productivity council before the government makes its appointments which, as the minister quite properly said, are very necessary and urgent.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I am rather interested in the last few remarks of the member for Bonavista-Twillingate when he asked when these people were going to be appointed and who they are likely to be. I am interested in knowing if they will likely be appointed under civil service procedure or by the minister himself. We are asked legislatively to make provision for the appointment of additional members to the tariff board. We know that we will be asked at another stage to enlarge the directorate of the Canadian National Railways. We know to date that this government has appointed two treasurers of the Tory party and a defeated candidate to the directorate of the Canadian National Railways. Will this same type of judgment be exercised in connection with appointments to the tariff board? I feel that the Minister of Finance should answer some of these questions.

The Chairman: I would advise the hon. members for Assiniboia and Bonavista-Twillingate that if they wish to pursue a conversation they should do so elsewhere.

Mr. Macdonnell: I would like to suggest that one chairman is sufficient to carry on with and that the other chairmen who have been so busy this afternoon should limit their activities.

I would like to comment on the fact that the opposition must by now have exhausted itself in raising various matters of various degrees of irrelevancy.

Mr. Argue: Who is the chairman now?

Mr. Macdonnell: I am addressing myself to the chairman. I want to say that I understood the hon. member for Assiniboia to refer to the addition of an extra panel resulting in two panels busily grinding out higher tariffs. That is the impression I got from his remarks. One must assume therefore that the tariff board has been doing that in the past. Perhaps that is an unfair impression but I do not know why the hon. member for Assiniboia should suppose that the tariff board is going to change its whole character, which it would have to do to accomplish what he suggests. I would suggest there is nothing in the past history of the tariff board to suggest that it has been grinding out higher tariffs. I have not made a mathematical calculation in respect of that matter, but I understand that the tariff board has been a very judgmatical board in its actions. It has been doing anything but creating higher tariffs.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I am disturbed by the thought that the setting up of two panels will result in the grinding out of decisions for higher tariffs. I have a very good reason for thinking that, namely the proposal of the government to change the definition of "goods of a class or kind" to "goods of approximately the same class or kind". Instead of having the whole series of decisions of the board, to which the board itself can refer for guidance, the whole basic rule is being changed. In regard to the word "approximately" and goods custom-made—

Mr. Benidickson: There will be henceforth no appeal to the board.

Mr. Argue: The decision as to the consumption in Canada has no appeal but I do not think the government has wiped out all appeal, as the hon. member has just suggested. I suggest that changing the whole definition—in the words of the Minister of Finance broadening the definition—makes up for the errors of erosion brought about by the decisions of the tariff board in the past. I suggest that is the basic reason the government is now bringing in an amendment providing for two panels; so that more decisions can be made. These decisions, in my judgment, are very likely to be nothing more than decisions resulting in higher tariffs because the complaint of the minister is that the decisions of the board in the past have eroded the law and have not provided the tariff level which, in his opinion, we should have. He is suggesting a change in the law which will result in such a deluge of applications—because the definition will be changed —that he thinks we must provide for two panels to meet simultaneously to deal with the backlog which presently exists and the backlog he has suggested will undoubtedly exist in the future.

Mr. McMillan: I would like to ask the Minister of Finance a question. I believe he said there were six references before the tariff board and 69 appeals.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I said there were eight references and 69 appeals.

Mr. McMillan: I would like to know how many of the 69 appeals refer to the class or kind items which will be covered under the provisions of Bill No. C-72, where the minister's decision will be final and therefore not appealable to the tariff board?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have no information on that particular subject.

Mr. McMillan: I feel that information would be of value.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, perhaps at a later stage in this legislative development the minister would provide that information.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not see what relevance it has to this debate.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the Minister of Finance does not know the relevancy I think I can tell him. This deals precisely with the question I put to the minister which he has not attempted to answer. I asked him whether or not the work load of the board is likely to be reduced if cases of this description now being referred to the board will not be so referred in the future. It is very important to know whether in the existing backlog there are many such cases which would presumably not arise in the future or, at any rate, to anything like the same extent.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is strictly a matter of speculation.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not asking the minister to give us this information now but I feel the request of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is a reasonable one. We are not opposing this resolution but merely seeking information. If this resolution is adopted there will be another stage at which the minister could quite readily give us this information, and I assume the tariff board could easily supply the minister with it. Surely that type of information is not secret.

Mr. Benidickson: Would the Minister of Finance give us some undertaking in regard to supplying this information because it will have some bearing upon our judgment with respect to the desirability of enlarging the board to look after an increased work load. I know it is difficult because it involves another piece of legislation this session which we are not supposed to discuss at this time, but I think the minister should undertake to at least make inquiries of the board regarding the number of appeals which relate to the items which, under the proposed legislation before this committee, would not be appealable to the tariff board.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That certainly is a very fair question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It invites me to speculate and I must decline to speculate on that matter. The statistic that I am dealing with now has to do with appeals pending before the board. These appeals are pending on the law as it stands today.

Mr. Benidickson: The minister whom I admire for his legal talents and his usual preciseness knows that appeals to the tariff board are made under certain sections and under certain defined precise violations of the sections of the Customs Tariff. Surely, the minister knows that appeal procedure is adequately accurate to determine whether or not appeals of this kind would be possible in the future if the legislation having to do with another act which is now before us is passed.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, whether the minister is willing to speculate or not, sir, surely it is not an unreasonable request to ask the minister to tell us at a later stage of the discussion of this legislation how many of the appeals which are now before the board relate to class or kind items.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is a very different question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That was the question put.

Mr. Pickersgill: That was the question asked by my hon. friend from Welland in the first place.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): No it was not.

Mr. Benidickson: It is exactly what he meant.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman,—

Mr. Benidickson: Are we going to have trouble here? Will the minister indicate—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Peters: I wanted to ask a couple of questions. For one thing, I should like to know how many of the present members of the board, if any, are due for retirement? If some are due to retire it appears that there are people available for appointment to the board who have the required knowledge to fill this type of position.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There are no retirements until 1967.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member for Welland asked a question. The Minister of Finance paid no attention to that question. Later the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate paraphrased the same question, and the Minister of Finance said, "Oh, well, that is a different matter altogether", thereby implying that in his judgment the question deserved an answer and would be answered. The Minister of Finance has not answered it. The minister shakes his head and by these nods seeks to suggest confusion. But this is a simple matter; this is something the minister must not dodge. He acknowledges now that the question is a proper one; it is one that does not call for speculation; it is one to which he can make reply. We are asking the minister to make that reply.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, so far as the question was properly and clearly asked I made it quite clear that I have no such statistical information as to the particular questions involved in the 69 pending appeals. This is business before the tariff board; it is not business before a government department. I have the information which I have given to the committee that there are eight references and 69 appeals pending before the tariff board and I have no analysis of all these appeals. Surely, the hon. member is not going to expect that I will go through all of these 69 appeals and analyse all the issues involved in them.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No one is asking the minister to do that. The minister is the minister in the government to whom the tariff board reports, and it should be a matter of no great inconvenience for the minister or his officers to ascertain before the passage of this bill what is the statistical reply to the question originally put by the hon. member for Welland and later insisted on by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. The minister surely cannot take the position that because he is not on the tariff board he should refrain from giving, or he should not be asked to give the house statistical information that will enable hon. members of this house, to determine whether or not the recommendation for an increase in the personnel of the tariff board should be acquiesced in.

That is the situation. I think the minister is taking an impossible position for any minister to take. I know the minister is an overburdened man. I realize that, but nevertheless the fact that he is overburdened does not relieve him of carrying out obligations which are his as a minister of the crown. Among those obligations is the one of answering questions that may assist hon. members in determining whether his proposals should be accepted. Does the minister take the position that this information should not be given to the committee? No one is asking him to sit down with pencil and paper and determine how many cases are of this kind or of that. All we are asking is that his parliamentary secretary, for instance, now leave the chamber, go to the telephone and ascertain from the registrar of the board what are the facts.

The problem is not any more difficult than that, and yet the minister sits there in his arrogance today and refuses to give us this information.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely the minister is going to get this information for us.

Mr. Montgomery: How can he? If the hon. member stayed in his seat he might get the information.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Victoria-Carleton who has just made a speech from his seat is an old member of this house who sat on this side of the house in the days when some of his friends at least did a lot of talking, and none more loudly than the present Minister of Finance, about the right of members of parliament to information and the right of members of parliament to speak.

Mr. Ricard: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: There was no point of order from the other side then; they had all the chances to speak that they could possibly desire.

Mr. Benidickson: And there were no flags.

Mr. Pickersgill: We are being asked to vote the people's money; that is what we are being asked to do, to vote the taxpayers' money to increase the size of this board, and we seek to get some information, which ought to have been forthcoming in the first place, about the scope of the work the board now has. We are not speculating about its future work; we are talking about its present work. As my hon. friend from Essex East just said, the parliamentary secretary could earn a bit of his salary by going and telephoning to the board. We are not being unreasonable. We are not asking to have this information this afternoon; we are merely saying that at the next stage we should be told how many of these appeals are appeals on class and kind items; that is all. Surely somebody in the board knows that, or between now and the next time this matter comes up somebody in the board would have time—busy though they are, some clerk in the board would have time—to count them. I assume they can count to 69. It is not a tremendous problem.

If the minister had to do the counting himself we perhaps might have some doubts about it but, as the hon. member for Essex East has said, we are not asking the minister to do the counting himself; we would not think of asking him to do it. We are simply asking him to ask the board for the information and to give it to parliament whose servant he is supposed to be. This seems to be the hardest lesson for him to learn.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is matter of great importance. I hope the minister is going to deal with it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, of course, Mr. Chairman. However, the minister is not going to undertake to supply information until he knows that the information is available and in existence. If the information is available and in existence I see no reason at all why it should not be given to the committee at the proper stage of the proceedings.

Until I know it is in existence and available I do not think any hon. member should ask me to undertake to submit it. I hope I have made myself clear, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member has asked me to make inquiry. I will ascertain if the information is in existence and available.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister has made a concession which up until now he was reluctant to make. He has now undertaken to ascertain whether or not this statistical information is available. We thank the minister for this very generous attitude with regard to trying to supply parliament with information which we had presumed, of course, was already in the minister's mind, when he decided to make this particular recommendation to his colleagues in the government and to parliament. I say that because I would think that the minister could not possibly determine whether the tariff board should be increased from five to seven members, unless he had some appreciation not of what the situation is likely going to be in the future in this context but of what the statistical record is to date with regard to this type of case that has come before the tariff board.

The minister, obviously stung by the question of the hon. member for Welland, now realizes the most unfortunate position in which he has allowed himself to be placed. While we have been urging the production of this information, the country should know what the attitude of the Minister of Finance is regarding this question. We have not asked merely what in the minister's opinion is likely to be the number of cases in the future—

Mr. Argue: Why would you not ask that?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —but rather what is the approximate number of cases of this type that the board has been engaged in considering up to now. The answer to that question certainly would dispel even the argument of the hon. member for Assiniboia who, without any rhyme or reason, said he was going to oppose the bill.

While we have been asking and are asking now for this information, what does the minister do? He has before him two very able officials. On his right is his parliamentary secretary. All around him in the house are many hon. members of the Conservative party who complain that they have not got enough to do. Surely between the officials, the parliamentary secretary and the hon. members who sit behind the minister, a telephone call could have been made to the registrar of the tariff board to ascertain how many cases of this type they have dealt with in the past. That information is available and has already been given to the house on other occasions.

Mr. McGee: Why don't you call them?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member for York-Scarborough says, "Why don't you call him?". Why does the hon. member for Essex East, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, the hon. member for Welland, not leave the house and go to the telephone booth and therefore provide that the data which the opposition should give to a measure such as this? That is the attitude of hon. members of the Conservative party. This simple example indicates their disregard for parliament.

Mr. Speakman: Yes, teacher.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member, who sits in his seat in the back row and whose only contribution is by way of interventions from his seat, says, "yes teacher". We are dealing now with an important principle, one that used to engage the attention of the Prime Minister when he was the private hon. member for Prince Albert, and later when he was the leader of the opposition. We asked the Minister of Finance to give us some information which he refused to give and with regard to which he said later that he would be glad to look into the matter and at some later date, if the information is available, he would give it to the house. That is the attitude of the government, and I regret that the Minister of Finance should be the instrument in this particular instance of the government's insolence and arrogance.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I think the request that has been made is a very reasonable one. I do not understand why the Minister of Finance tried to evade the question or why he should tell the committee that unless the information is available he is not going to have the necessary research done that will disclose the information. On the request of hon. members of this house surely the minister should have a search made of the applications before the board to find out how many are class or kind appeals.

It is interesting to note that the hon. member for Essex East was relatively quiet this afternoon until recently and that he has made it clear that he and the other hon. members of his party support the resolution. They say now that they have not enough information and they want more. They say that we have pre-judged the matter. They have pre-judged it because they now admit that they came into the committee without adequate information. Now, in a great storm of indignation, they are telling the minister to produce the information because they need it but they have already said that no matter what information may disclose they are tying themselves in with the government and are voting for a two-panel system even though they do not know whether it is needed or what the present situation is.

They go on to say that they are not asking the minister to make an estimate of the number of cases in the future. The minister must have made an estimate of the work that will come before the board in the future because surely the legislation that is before the committee is based on that estimate. I suggest that class or kind cases are likely to constitute a very substantial portion of appeals and references to the board. With the sweeping change in the definition a deluge of appeals on this very point will come before the board in the future. Members of the Liberal party say they are against the change in the definition, the widening of the rule, and they have proved they are against it, but they are prepared to facilitate the evil consequences of widening the rule by voting for the minister's measure and without having the necessary information. I think this is an indication of complete irresponsibility on the part of the official opposition.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to reply in any detail to the remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia. I spoke on the resolution and I think everybody knows that this is just one of perhaps five stages in which this type of proposal will be advanced. I spoke with some knowledge of the value of the tariff board. I spoke with some knowledge of the delays in decisions following the deliberations and studies of the tariff board. I indicated during the debate—and I think the member for Assiniboia may have been absent—that this matter was referred to on December 20 and that I replied thereto during the budget debate.

The hon. member says that there was a lack of knowledge on the part of the official opposition but from a scrutiny of previous debates during the present session I think it is obvious that is not the case. We were courteous to the government. If the Minister of Finance had not, as usual, been rather truculent and had simply agreed to make inquiries as to the availability of this information, perhaps we would not have had a 45-minute debate that may not have been too helpful.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-74, to amend the Tariff Board Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FIRE LOSSES REPLACEMENT ACCOUNT ACT

AMENDMENT EXTENDING APPLICATION OF ACCOUNT

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-47, to amend the Fire Losses Replacement Account Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill No. C-47 is to make the provisions of the fire losses replacement account available, subject to the approval of the treasury board, to certain proprietary crown corporations in addition to government departments and certain designated agency crown corporations that may now be granted advances from it. The act, which is chapter 28 of the statutes of 1953-54, establishes a fire losses replacement account and authorizes the Minister of Finance, with the approval of the treasury board, to make advances from the account up to a maximum of $5 million at any time to restore, rebuild or repair property administered or controlled by departments and certain agency crown corporations that had been damaged or destroyed by fire. The purpose was to ensure that when a fire loss did occur and the replacement or repair of the property destroyed or damaged was urgently and immediately required, and there was not sufficient money available in the appropriation for the service suffering loss, authority and funds could be obtained to proceed with the repair or replacement without delay, on the understanding that the account would be recouped subsequently by charges to the appropriation for the service concerned.

At present, the account is available to, (a) government departments as defined in the Financial Administration Act, except those departments or portions thereof excluded by regulation, and (b) agency crown corporations named in schedule C to the Financial Administration Act and designated by regulation for the purposes of the act. Under (a), to which I have referred, only the director of the soldier settlement and the director of the Veterans' Land Act have been excluded, while under (b), all agency crown corporations except the national harbours board have been designated. I may say that the national harbours board has its own self-insurance fund.

The proposed amendment would provide that proprietary crown corporations, such as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which are dependent upon parliamentary appropriations for the financing of their capital programs, might conform to government general policy of underwriting its own fire loss risks, and be able to deal expeditiously with the repair or replacement of property damaged or destroyed by fire by drawing accountable and reimbursable advances from the account. It is urgent that this provision be made since such agencies as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation have no recourse except to the Department of Finance appropriation for miscellaneous minor or unforeseen expenses, which could prove seriously inadequate if a major fire loss occurred.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

The bill, Mr. Speaker, is a short one consisting of changes in only two sections of the act.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I believe this is the first amendment to this measure since the legislation was introduced by the previous government in the session of 1953-54. I was a bit disconcerted for a moment because I do not believe the minister made any reference to a possibility which I had in mind, namely that the principle involved in this amendment had been discussed in a parliamentary committee. I must confess that I thought it had. I am not going to name any names, but across the way I see one or two hon. members with whom I have a recollection of sitting in a committee—I cannot remember whether it was public accounts or an estimates committee—in which they asked whether or not crown companies were insuring their properties through private insurance agents. I did make inquiries yesterday from the Clerk of the house and he could not confirm my recollection. I have made inquiries, also, of the treasury board and the offices of the comptroller of the treasury, and they did not confirm my recollection. Perhaps before this debate concludes, hon. members opposite who have an interest in this subject might confirm my recollection.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member, but was that not in connection with public liability rather than fire? I think the hon. gentleman will find such is the case.

Mr. Benidickson: The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) may have sat with me on that committee and have an even better recollection of the matter than I have because I know it was during the period in which he had responsibility as parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance.

However, perhaps when we come to a later stage of our debate the minister would indicate why in the public accounts for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960 the fire losses replacement account on page K-21 has a blank opposite it. I know that this is an account under which the proper officer of the crown makes advances for expenditures and those advances are recouped in the same year. I am not for a moment suggesting there is anything improper about the fact that when one looks at item 8 there is a blank in the public accounts.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but it is five o'clock and the house will now proceed to a consideration of private and public bills, the former having precedence, pursuant to standing order 15, section 3.

way to those in the insurance industry, to those who are policyholders and investors in the insurance industry and to all hon. members of the House of Commons who will feel a very heavy responsibility, after having heard the minister, and who will realize the importance of the amendments we have before us.

I am not going to review the salient features of this 36-clause bill. It is a very important bill. I think the Minister of Finance has reviewed in a proper fashion the important changes that interest the public at large. However, I do wish to emphasize that there are many features of the bill which are of the utmost importance to the people to whom we are responsible, quite apart from the people who actually direct the insurance companies of this land.

Having said that, I should say that I do not think insurance companies in any country in the world enjoy the reputation for financial success and integrity in their operations that is enjoyed by the insurance companies of Canada. I think that fact is generally recognized.

The minister has referred to certain new features that are introduced in this bill. I am not going to refer to certain increases in investment allowances, such as the basket type increase that the minister and I discussed informally a few months ago. This allowance is to increase from 3 per cent to 5 per cent those investments that are not to be specially mandatory for insurance companies.

I think there is merit in the suggestion that in connection with real estate insurance companies should normally be allowed to increase the loan proportion in relation to the cost of the property. I say this because we know that our own government agency, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, has pretty high opportunities in this field. I think there is nothing wrong in the proposal to increase here from 60 per cent to 66⅔ per cent.

There are other features of the bill which deal with a single loan, the maximum possibility of which is increased. I am always somewhat leery about this. However, I know that this is related to a percentage of total assets. Our companies are growing very large. Therefore, perhaps my worry here is not one of substance. I think there are very few individuals who could persuade a board of directors to give a single loan of an amount that would approach that referred to in the present bill.

I think that this House of Commons, having a very close connection with the people of the land, should look very carefully at the new item which the minister has described. I refer to the revision of the insurance act with regard to the variable annuities. This has been a feature in the country to the south of us for some years. This is a new permissive thing in Canada. I know that the House of Commons, through the banking and commerce committee, will look very carefully into this matter. We will have a opportunity to go over again not only the bill that is presently before us but its companion bill, the Foreign Insurance Companies Act, after they are both reported upon by the banking and commerce committee.

I simply ask that we do not enter into this matter with any haste, in as much as the insurance industry was not itself questioned by the committee of the other place. I urge again that we ensure that we have a representative of this important industry present at our committee to explain to us some of the terms in the bills amending these two acts.

My understanding is that the insurance companies have no strong objections, or perhaps no objections, to these amendments. However, representing the people as we do, I think we should make sure that we hear not only our efficient superintendent of the insurance department but also representatives of those who have the conduct of these tremendous capital assets in insurance companies across the land.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few brief remarks on this bill. I would not for a moment presume to make a lengthy analysis of its terms and import.

I listened with interest to the minister's detailed, and I thought quite thorough statement on the purpose and intent of the bill. It is a measure that covers, shall I say, the technical aspects of the administration of insurance in Canada, which to many of us sound as dry as dust. But it is a very important bill, related to the proper administration of something over $9 billion worth of investment in this country, investment upon which millions of Canadians depend at least for a measure of security in various respects.

I have had but a short time to glance through the bill. I must say that life in this parliament provides insufficient time to adequately study this type of bill. That is why we are very fortunate in being able to refer these matters to committees. However, in the short time I have had to read through the bill and, shall I say, digest it with my very slow-working mental digestion, as far as I can see the principle of the bill is to be found in clauses 12 to 16. These clauses make it possible for insurance companies to enlarge their investment powers, by providing a greater choice as to the type of investments in which they can indulge. I think that on the basis of experience, and particularly in view of our expanding and developing economy, that is a very wise and progressive provision.

As far as this group is concerned, I think it is quite safe to say that we hope this measure will increase Canadian savings, and that as the result of increasing Canadian savings it will increase Canadian ownership in these companies. As far as I can discover from reading the bill, that should occur as the result of these amendments.

As I said before, this is a technical, complicated piece of legislation. It requires specialists who actually understand this matter to explain and administer it. However, regardless of that it is a measure of great importance to millions of Canadians who find, through insurance of various types, a measure of security surrounding their daily lives and their future.

I am glad the minister has suggested that the bill should go to the banking and commerce committee where it should receive a thorough study. I agree with what the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) had to say. He said that not only should the committee listen to the superintendent of insurance and other capable officials of this government, but the committee should take this opportunity to hear evidence from those who are active in the administration of insurance companies and should be provided with an opportunity to question them.

I suggest there is no necessity for haste in dealing with an important, technical measure such as this. I suggest that the committee should take all the time needed to examine the officials, to hear evidence from those who administer or take part in the administration of insurance companies and to examine them. This is an extremely difficult and complicated question for any person to deal with if he is not closely connected with it from day to day. When the bill is reported to the house, I trust that the committee report will contain information that will be of value to us and will enable us to criticize constructively or to offer amendments to the various clauses of the bill with at least a greater understanding and a greater knowledge than is possible at the present time.

Mr. L. D. Crestohl (Cartier): When the minister concludes the debate, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether he would be good enough to say a word in explanation of the new definition given to a British company. Perhaps he already did so and I missed it. I do not want to refer to any sections of the act; we cannot do that at this stage. However, at the very outset I find a rather basic change in the definition which is now suggested. The old definition reads as follows:

"British company" means any corporation incorporated under the laws of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland or any British dominion or possession other than Canada,—

And so on.

This makes it a fairly limitative objective in dealing with British insurance companies. The suggested amendment changes this definition to read as follows:

"British company" means any corporation incorporated under the laws of the United Kingdom or any other commonwealth country including any political subdivision or dependent territory thereof—

Of course the minister may have a full explanation as to why we are now expanding the latitude. For example, we can conceive that there may be members of the British commonwealth whose position in the commonwealth is not as sound as we should like it to be. For example, if a republic is to be admitted into the commonwealth, a new status is created in these countries in having whatever priority, protection or preference they might have which formerly British commonwealth countries or British possessions actually had. In the new definition I see an extension of that category. I hope the minister will offer some explanation of that matter.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am really not going to speak on anything except one aspect of this bill and, strictly speaking, I am really not doing that on my own. My hon. friend from Trinity (Mr. Hellyer) was absolutely not able to be in the house this evening. Since he was not able to be here to do it himself, I wanted to draw attention to a few observations he made in March of last year—on March 15, to be precise—almost exactly a year ago, about one subject that is touched upon in the bill. I think it is of sufficient importance that it ought to be considered in committee on this bill. Its importance to the economy as a whole is such that I think it warrants some mention in the house on second reading.

Since I do not pretend to be an expert on this subject and have never done so, I make no apology for quoting briefly from the remarks of my hon. friend from Trinity as reported at page 2084 of Hansard of March 15, 1960. He stated as follows:

The third suggestion—

That was a suggestion about the housing act.

—is that the government introduce amendments to the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act to permit conventional mortgage loans to a maximum of 80 per cent of the appraised value rather than 60 per cent as at present. I have taken the trouble to inquire into the experience in other countries where they have larger ratios of loan to appraised value, and the result of this survey is quite conclusive. The experience in the United Kingdom, where their building societies collect money from the public and lend it against the security of housing, is very interesting. I understand that after the war they made mortgage loans as high as 95 per cent of the appraised value, and many at 90 per cent. Even now they are making loans at 80 and 85 per cent of the appraised value. The losses resulting from this policy have been practically negligible. In the United States the experience is similar under the federal housing administration and the veterans housing administration.

At that point the Minister of Public Works interjected a question:

Mr. Walker: May I ask the hon. member a question there? Are these conventional loans you are speaking about, through insurance companies and trust companies?

Mr. Hellyer: No, they are loans made, at least in Britain, under the auspices of the building societies. In the United States they are under the F.H.A. and the V.H.A. However, what I am saying is that the experience of all mortgage loans over a long period of time has been very good and leads one to the conclusion that a higher proportion of loan under the conventional system would have an equally excellent record so far as losses are concerned. The risk is practically eliminated.

As my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) pointed out, it is true that under the provisions in the bill at the present time the 60 per cent is to be raised to two thirds. Of course, as my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River has already said, we would certainly support that increase. However, in line with the experience referred to by the hon. member for Trinity in the United Kingdom and the United States which should not be so different from what we might expect in this country, I think it would be desirable to give consideration to the possibility of raising this figure, if not to 80 per cent which the hon. gentleman suggested, at least to 75 per cent.

Mr. Benidickson: Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation goes as high as 95 per cent.

Mr. Pickersgill: My hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River has pointed out that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation itself goes as high as 95 per cent. These companies would not be compelled, of course, to go up to the full limit; it is just a permissive limit. If it would have the effect of making the financing of additional housing a little bit more practicable, particularly in times like these, it seems to me it would commend itself to everyone in the house. I therefore commend to the attention of the minister, the government and the committee the suggestion made just a year ago by my hon. friend from Trinity.

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I should just like to ask the minister a question. He spoke about deposits being left with the government of Canada to guarantee Canadian policy holders. I think they were $2½ million or whatever the amount was. I wonder in what form this deposit is carried. Is it carried in securities or in the statement of the government of Canada is it shown as an asset and also as a liability?

Mr. Benidickson: And at par.

Mr. McMillan: And at par.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members who have spoken on this bill for the observations they have made upon it. I entirely agree that this bill should have the most thorough and painstaking examination in the banking and commerce committee. Indeed, one reason why I proposed that the bill should go to that particular committee is that a better opportunity will be afforded in that committee for that type of scrutiny than is afforded in the larger committee of the whole. There will also, of course, be opportunity to call before that committee whatever persons or representatives may commend themselves to the hon. members of the committee in that regard.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) referred to the representation before the committee of the other place on banking and commerce and expressed the hope that Canadian life insurance companies would see fit to be represented in the hearings before the banking and commerce committee of this house. I also hope and indeed am quite certain, that they will. I think it may have been overlooked by the hon. member that the companies were represented at the sittings of the banking and commerce committee of the other place.

Those individuals who appeared there include the following: Mr. J. T. Bryden, vice president and general manager of the North American Life Assurance Company. He is the first vice president of the Canadian life insurance officers' association and attended in the absence of the president, Mr. D. E. Kilgour, who is general manager of the Great-West Life Assurance Company of Canada. Also present were Mr. A. Ross Poyntz who is president of the Imperial Life Assurance Company of Canada; Mr. A. M. Campbell, vice president of the Sun Life Assurance Company of Canada; Mr. A. H. Lemmon, vice president and treasurer of the Canada Life Assurance Company and Mr. J. A. Tuck, Q.C., general counsel for the Canadian life insurance officers' association.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, on this point, does the hon. minister recall that I indicated that these people were present but did not give evidence before the committee of the other place?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes. The chairman of that committee asked Mr. Tuck if he wished to make any observations regarding the bill. Mr. Tuck contented himself with stating that the companies favoured the bill. These were his words:

> Mr. Chairman, we favour this bill and have no changes to suggest in it.

He did not ask to be called but expressed a willingness to answer any questions members of that committee might wish to ask. I think there is no doubt at all about the views of the life insurance companies with respect to the bill. They like the bill. They have asked for changes in the legislation of the kind that are embodied in the present bill and they have no further changes to suggest in it. However, I am quite sure that it will be the wish of the committee to hear representatives of the Canadian life insurance officers' association as in the past and that the association will be present and represented, and will be, as it has in the past, glad to be of assistance to the committee of the house in studying insurance legislation.

I was asked several questions of a rather specific nature which perhaps can be dealt with more suitably in the committee. A question was asked about the type of deposit to be accepted. While the legislation deals with the particular types of securities that are admissible in lieu of cash for deposit purposes with the Minister of Finance or with such trust companies as he may designate for that purpose, these are not assets of the government but are simply held in trust as deposits for these companies to assure the protection of policyholders.

Mr. Speaker, I think these are the principal questions that were raised in the course of the brief discussion. The hon. member for Cartier (Mr. Crestohl) asked a question which, if I am not careful, might take me into the realm of dealing specifically with a particular clause of the bill which would be quite out of order. I may say, however, in general terms that the change in the definition of "British company" became necessary in the light of the evolution of the commonwealth since the present definition was first inscribed in the act. The purpose of the change in describing the commonwealth in more up-to-date terms is to ensure that companies incorporated in countries that are within the commonwealth may be registered under the act.

Again I wish to thank hon. members for their comments in respect of the bill. I think we may look forward to a very useful review and scrutiny of this legislation in the banking and commerce committee.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, before the minister concludes the debate would he indicate to the house whether or not he thinks that some accompanying or similar legislation will be necessary to amend the trust and loan companies act?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is a question which has not as yet been decided, Mr. Speaker. It can perhaps be dealt with at a later date. If it is desired that I should enlarge upon the answer I gave to the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McMillan) I may say that deposits for British and foreign companies, for the protection of Canadian policy holders, are in the form of Canadian government bonds, municipal bonds, corporation bonds, mortgages, stocks and real estate, being essentially the same kind of investment that Canadian companies are authorized to make.

Mr. Benidickson: I would like to ask a supplementary question with respect to Canadian government bonds and their acceptance. Are they recognized at par value or at market value?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): At the time of deposit, of course, they will be recognized at market value.

Mr. Garland: I would like to ask the minister a question before he resumes his seat. To the extent that this legislation will encourage additional investment in housing, I wonder if this can be taken as an indication of the government's intention to assume a more residual role in respect of National Housing Act lending as far as general policy is concerned?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am sorry, there was an interruption and I was unable to catch the hon. member's question. Would he please repeat it?

Mr. Garland: To the extent, Mr. Speaker, that this present legislation encourages the investment of additional funds in housing, does that mean that the government intends to retreat to a more residual role in respect to lending for house building?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is no retreat on the part of the government proposed here, Mr. Speaker. This is a matter of re-wording in more realistic terms the present limitation on the lending value of a property for the purpose of mortgages taken by life insurance companies. There have been upward movements in this regard in the past and this increase in the limit from 60 per cent to 66⅔ per cent should make it possible for the companies that choose to do so to make larger loans on property. This does not affect the position of the government in relation to its residual lending.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

FOREIGN INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CLASSES OF ASSETS THAT MAY BE HELD

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-6, to amend the Foreign Insurance Companies Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-71, respecting the civil service of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, hon. members will not need to be reminded that last session the government introduced in the house a bill entitled "Bill No. C-77, a measure respecting the civil service of Canada to amend, revise and consolidate the Civil Service Act."

At that session the measure was not carried beyond first reading. The bill was distributed and the wish was expressed in the house that more time should be afforded for study of the bill and that it should not be pressed further at that session. That view commended itself to all sections of the house and accordingly the bill was not further proceeded with at the 1960 session. It is now my honour, Mr. Speaker, to bring forward a similar measure which is intended to have precisely the same purpose, namely to amend, revise and consolidate the Civil Service Act.

I stated briefly last year the background of the measure at pages 5128 to 5130 of Hansard of June 20. I pointed out there that the measure:

> —touches all aspects of the appointment, classification, tenure, rights and responsibilities of the civil service of Canada, and the powers and duties of the independent civil service commission charged with responsibility in relation thereto.

I made comment upon the history of our legislation in this respect. May I refer briefly to what I said in that regard, as follows:

> The present Civil Service Act enacted in 1918 is a landmark in Canadian history. It was a major advance over all the legislation which preceded it, including the acts of 1868, 1882, 1885 and 1908. At a stroke it placed the recruitment, promotion, classification and organization of the civil service of Canada beyond the reach of partisan political interference, and laid the foundation of what has come to be known as "the merit system". For many years the Civil Service Act has been the bulwark of this principle.
> This principle, however, has not withstood all the tests to which it has been submitted. During world war II overriding legislation was adopted which permitted both the principles and the provisions of the act to be ignored and practices and procedures to grow up at variance with the letter of the law. During the post-war period it became increasingly clear that strict adherence to the provisions of the act prevented the civil service commission from giving such service to departments of government as it was required and indeed desired to give, particularly in the fields of organization and classification. In these latter fields the expansion of the country and the enlargement of the federal government's commitments posed special problems.
> Since 1918 the functions of the civil service have undergone a transformation and proliferation. Its tasks have become infinitely more diverse, more complex, more technical and more specialized in keeping with the vast extension of the public business and the activities of government. More and more it has been recognized as essential to good government that Canada should maintain a public service of the highest competence in many fields and of unchallenged integrity.

Having sketched the background of the measure in these terms I refer to something that I am sure is fresh in the minds of all hon. members, namely the undertaking by the civil service commission itself of a review of the entire field of personnel administration in the public service with a view to the revision of the Civil Service Act. This request was first made to the commission by the Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent in 1957, and that request was renewed to the commission when the present government took office later in that year. The report of the commission, which has taken its name from the chairman of the commission at that time, Mr. Heeney, was presented to the government and was tabled in parliament early in 1959. It attracted the widest interest across Canada and I am sure its contents have been studied by hon. members. I take advantage of the present occasion, Mr. Speaker, as I did on June 20, 1960, to pay a warm tribute to the members of the civil service commission, Mr. Heeney, Miss Addison and Mr. Pelletier, for the monumental task they performed in the writing of that report. It takes its place among some of the reports of leading importance in recent Canadian history.

I do not wish to detain the house by reviewing considerations that I am sure are fresh in the minds of hon. members from the discussion which was held some eight or nine months ago in this chamber. On that occasion, as I have indicated, I referred to the history of the act of 1918, and to the circumstances surrounding the decision to have the act thoroughly revised. It was after due consideration that the decision was taken not to proceed with the bill at that session, and in the course of that consideration and the discussions that were held in the chamber it was quite clear that all parties in the house recognized the measure as one of outstanding importance.

In introducing the present measure, Bill No. C-71, which closely resembles Bill No. C-77 of the last session, I propose to do no more than recapitulate very briefly some of the leading elements in the measure for the purpose of giving continuity to the present proceedings without traversing the same ground step by step.

The report of the civil service commissioners on personnel administration in the public service, known, as I have indicated, and fittingly, as the Heeney report, contains recommendations which have by and large been carried into the present measure so far as it was considered practicable to do so. There are two principal exceptions. The recommendation that government agencies at present outside the civil service should be brought within its compass and their personnel made subject to this bill has not been considered either practicable or desirable at this time, nor indeed is it likely to be acceptable to those who would be most directly affected, at any rate without a great deal of study and consideration.

In the second place, the recommendation of the Heeney report as to the application of the veterans preference has not been incorporated in the bill. The government has considered itself bound to maintain the privileges enjoyed by veterans with overseas active service to their credit which have existed in their favour during the past 15 years, and the recommendations in the Heeney report which would have abridged the veterans preference have not been carried into this measure, nor were they carried into Bill No. C-77 which was introduced at the last session.

I shall, Mr. Speaker, make only a brief allusion to those other features of the bill upon which I commented in more or less detail on June 20, 1960. Perhaps I need do no more than enumerate them now:

1. The limiting of the absolute authority of the civil service commission in matters affecting the organization of departments to that of an advisory role.

2. The provision of greater flexibility in recruiting procedures in the sole discretion of the commission.

3. The provision of the right of transfer into the civil service and the right to compete in promotional competitions in the civil service to be conferred on the public service as a whole.

4. The establishment of the principle that an employee is paid as a matter of right rather than of grace, as has been the statutory rule hitherto.

5. The establishment in the bill of the right to appeal from administrative decisions of departments and in an extended number of situations to the commission itself. In this respect there were some misapprehensions evidenced in the discussion of the measure last year. I hope these misapprehensions have since been removed and that it is now clearly understood by all hon. members who participated in the discussion at the last session that the appeals are not, as one of them thought, to a body outside the commission but will be appeals to appeal boards appointed by the commission and acting under the authority of the commission.

6. The commission is also authorized to give a preference in selection, in cases wherever in its opinion effective service to the public requires it, to those who are skilled in the use of both the English and French languages.

I have no doubt that all hon. members have familiarized themselves with the terms of the earlier bill and this earlier study will unquestionably be of benefit to the select committee to which it is proposed that the present bill shall be referred after second reading.

Perhaps I might say a word briefly about changes introduced in the present measure compared with Bill C-77. Most of the changes, and they are numerous, are minor and of administrative significance only. They were suggested in various quarters and were studied by the government during the months which have elapsed since the earlier bill was introduced in June, 1960. I shall not dwell on these minor amendments.

There are, however, two changes which are matters of policy and to which the attention of the house might well be drawn. These give a clear indication of the spirit in which the government has considered the measure and the representations which were made to the government concerning it. A good deal of publicity was given to the views of the civil service staff associations concerning the terms of clause 7 of the 1960 bill, C-77. That clause established in statutory form for the first time in our history recognition of the proposition that consultation should take place between representatives of the government and the commission and representatives of the staff associations on questions of pay and conditions of work. This clause was criticized on the ground that it reserved to the Minister of Finance and the civil service commission the right to initiate such discussions and that the right to initiate these discussions was not extended to the staff associations.

I should have thought that it would be accepted that no government of Canada would deny to the representatives of the civil service staff associations the right to initiate such discussions or that it would have been considered necessary to make statutory provision that on such initiation by the representatives of the civil service staff associations the government or the civil service commission, as the case might be, would sit down and discuss these matters with them. In this regard it is well to bear in mind, I think, that in the United Kingdom the system of Whitley councils, which is frequently referred to as a model in these matters of relationship between the government as employer and civil servants as employees, rests on no legislation at all. Therefore, one may ask if it is strictly necessary to dot all the i's and cross all the t's in a situation of this kind.

However, Mr. Speaker, the present measure is intended to remove all doubts in this regard. Unity of purpose and good faith are taken for granted on the part of both parties by the government in the drafting of the present measure, and it is as an earnest of this good faith and, I believe, unity of purpose that in the present measure clear provision has been introduced to provide recognition of the right of the staff associations to initiate discussions with either the government or the commission on the subjects I have mentioned.

The other major change relates to the definition of what are known as the prevailing rates group of government employees in the manipulative trades and occupations traditionally outside the classified civil service. Here it appeared that the definition might open the door to the enlargement of this group by the process of excluding certain classes from the civil service itself, without any control being exercised by the civil service commission. Accordingly, the bill has been drawn to make it clear that this was not the intention of the government and to make it equally clear that action in relation to prevailing rates employees cannot be taken without a recommendation to such effect proceeding in the first place from the civil service commission itself. I wish to make it quite clear that there can be no suggestion whatever of taking outside the civil service those who come within the category of prevailing rates employees unless the matter is commenced by a recommendation from the civil service commission itself.

I do not propose, nor is this the time, to enlarge further upon the contents of the bill. I thought it fitting to refer in a general way to what I said on June 20 last and to indicate briefly and in outline the points on which the present measure differs from its predecessor. It may, however, be appropriate to repeat that the general purpose of the present measure is to reaffirm the principle of the merit system, to safeguard the independence of the civil service commission and of the service itself within the compass of legislation designed to meet the many administrative problems which have arisen in the course of the life of the act of 1918, without permitting any compromise of the principles for which the act has stood and which have earned universal approbation for more than 40 years in this land and beyond our shores.

It will be recalled by hon. members that at the 1960 session a special committee was appointed by the house for the purpose, as originally intended, of studying both Bill No. C-77 and the kindred bill to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act. The committee was set up and the bill to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act was referred to it. However, Bill No. C-77 did not reach the point of second reading and consequently was not referred to that committee. May I say of that committee that it was an excellent committee and it did very useful work in relation to the superannuation act amendments.

If it were to meet with the approval of the house I would propose, at the appropriate time, to move the reappointment of a similar committee. It was not a large committee. It was a committee of very suitable size for the task that was entrusted to it. I have placed on Votes and Proceedings of the house today, a notice of motion that a special committee be appointed to consider Bill No. C-71, an act respecting the civil service, with power to send for persons, papers and records and to report from time to time; that the committee have power to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable or necessary; that the committee consist of 15 members to be designated by the house, and so on.

A committee of this size I think will be regarded by the house as appropriate for the type of intensive study that will be called for in relation to this measure. I will say no more about the importance of the measure. I think that importance was widely recognized in all parts of the house last year. Both as to its subject matter and as to the physical size of the bill, undoubtedly this measure will be a major piece of legislation and, perhaps in terms of size, the largest government measure to be before the house at this session.

It is in no perfunctory sense that I say the civil service of Canada holds a position of the highest respect, not only in the eyes of this country and this parliament but indeed its position and its prestige have been recognized in other countries as well. It is the senior element of the public service of this country that is best known in other countries. Our senior civil servants come frequently into contact with the senior civil servants of other countries, more particularly the countries of the commonwealth. One cannot attend these international meetings, particularly commonwealth meetings, without being frequently impressed with the high regard in which our civil servants are held in these other countries.

Last year I made mention of the increasing complexity of government and the burden which that increasing complexity casts upon the civil service. This has meant that our civil service, while expanding in numbers as it has over the last 20 years, has had to become infinitely more diverse, more technical and more specialized in keeping with the very great expansion of the duties cast upon it. It must be a civil service of the highest competence in order to discharge the great variety of tasks that fall upon it.

The first requisite of the civil service at all times must be unimpeachable integrity. While of course in a civil service as large as ours there will be, from time to time, derelictions I think it is a matter of very great satisfaction to all parties in this parliament that these cases are very rare indeed in relation to the very large numbers of persons involved.

It has been, I think, a matter of satisfaction to this parliament to have taken important, and may I say notable, steps to improve the conditions of the civil service. Within the past year, parliament has made it possible to provide substantial increases in salaries. Within the past year, the medical-surgical benefits have been introduced throughout the civil service. The amendments to the superannuation act which this parliament enacted at the 1960 session likewise brought very considerable benefits to the civil service and repaired situations that were calling for remedy. This present parliament also provided increases in superannuation benefits for those civil servants who had retired before the present parliament was elected. Those, Mr. Speaker, are the expressions on the part of this parliament of its due appreciation, in the name of the Canadian people, of the outstanding services rendered to this Canadian nation by the civil service of this country.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): May I call it ten o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the house leader would just confirm the business for tomorrow?

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow we start with the bill based on the resolution that was passed earlier dealing with the tariff board. Upon completion of that matter, we will resume the debate on the item with which we are now dealing, Bill No. C-71, an act respecting the civil service of Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is quite clearly understood that we go on to the labour estimates on Thursday?

Mr. Churchill: I thought if things moved rapidly tomorrow and the debate on Bill No. C-71, respecting the civil service of Canada were close to completion, we might finish it early on Thursday. However, perhaps we might leave that to the judgment of the house tomorrow.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Since I am not familiar with the area in Alberta in which this railway spur line will be constructed, I wonder if the hon. member could relate this area to the area considered by the royal commission on the Great Slave railway. Are the areas comparable, that is the area to be served by this spur line and the area considered by the royal commission?

Mr. Speakman: There is no relation—

Mr. Speaker: Order; I should caution the house that if the hon. member speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Speakman: There is no relationship. The only reason for presenting this bill to the house is that the proposed extension is over three miles in length and, therefore, the board of transport commissioners has no power to grant approval without reference to parliament.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

FIRE LOSSES REPLACEMENT ACCOUNT ACT

AMENDMENT EXTENDING APPLICATION OF ACCOUNT

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) for the second reading of Bill No. C-47, to amend the Fire Losses Replacement Account Act.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, when the business of the house was interrupted at five o'clock we were discussing the proposals to amend this act. I think this is the first amendment since 1953-54, when legislation was introduced with respect to crown fire losses. I have some questions to ask that may perhaps arise more appropriately when we come to consider the first clause of the bill at the committee stage. However, I do wish to indicate certain matters which I would like clarified.

Has the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) ascertained whether any parliamentary committee has recommended that crown companies should follow the procedure generally laid down for other sections of government administration? I think this is a very desirable policy. I recall at one time being associated with the minister in a committee in which this matter came up. I think the procedure in relation to crown companies should take the same form. This risk should be borne by the government on a national, overall basis, without payment to any intermediates such as agents or representatives of the normal insurance companies.

I did indicate to the minister before five o'clock that I wondered under what authority —although I did not question that the authority existed—the public accounts for the year ended March 31, 1960, contained a complete blank in so far as a dollar and cent item was concerned under this fire losses replacement account. I wonder whether the minister would answer this question and relate it to recent years.

I am sure the minister understands that I am concerned about the looseness in the estimates for individual departments which suffer fire losses. Perhaps the minister will tell me whether I am right or wrong in regard to this question. Was the $5 million fund created under this enactment for the purposes of making it possible for departments to go ahead without delay in the event of a fire loss, in the absence of authority from parliament?

It occurs to me when I see a "nil" item in the public accounts, such as there was for last year, that perhaps the estimates granted to each department are just not as tight and close as the minister boasts in so many public speeches, when he says that never before has treasury board been so strict in its administration and authority over the various departments. I know that fire losses have been incurred by a number of departments and I have available the reports of the dominion fire commissioner.

I find that this provision was legislated in 1953-54. It was enacted to provide departments with a fund so that they could go ahead, if necessary, with construction rapidly after incurring a fire loss, when parliament could not vote the sum necessary to replace that loss. If last year no department of government required assistance under this legislation from this fund, either on a temporary basis or on a basis longer than the fiscal year, I wonder whether some of these remarks of the minister are valid, that there are under this government less lapses in expenditure estimates than there have been in any other government.

I think that in fact there must yet be looseness in the departments, if during the course of the fiscal year last reported upon by the auditor general, no money was needed for this particular provision. In other words, I suggest there were lapses. There was an excess fund in every department when a fire occurred so that they either replaced that loss or decided that there was no immediate requirement to proceed with replacement until the next fiscal year or until parliament could provide the necessary appropriation.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Benidickson: May we hear from the minister as to the intention? Is it perhaps to avoid the placement of insurance with private companies by crown corporations? What is the minister's intention when he advances this bill?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The effect of this bill, when adopted, will be to make it possible to bring within the benefit of the fire losses replacement account the proprietary crown corporations listed in schedule D to the Financial Administration Act. Up to the present time, so far as the crown agency corporations are concerned, the benefit applied to those in schedule C to the Financial Administration Act. The effect of the amendments in the present bill will be to bring the proprietary crown corporations such as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, within the benefit of the fund. That being the case, it will be possible for these corporations, acting on the same principle that the government follows in relation to carrying the risk of fire losses on its own property, to have recourse to the fund at any time subject to the approval of treasury board, in the event of loss through fire.

While I am on my feet I perhaps might deal with the point raised by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River this afternoon in relation to the public accounts. He drew attention to page A-21 of the public accounts for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960 and commented that the accounts showed no monetary figure against the fire losses replacement account. The answer to the hon. gentleman is that the fire losses replacement account is not an account in the ordinarily accepted sense. The fact is that no funds accrue to it. The fund has $5 million provided for it under section 8 of the Fire Losses Replacement Account Act, chapter 28 of the statutes of 1953-54. This, under section 5 of the act, is an account in the consolidated revenue fund. Therefore the answer briefly is that the $5 million is not a fund in the ordinarily accepted sense of the term. It is really a limiting authority as will be seen when regard is had to the provisions of section 8 of the main act. Thus, if an advance is made at any time during the year, it remains against that account until it is repaid by an appropriation within the same current year, as required by the act.

Mr. Benidickson: I thank the minister for his answer to my inquiry contained in his last remarks. There was a nil report in the year ended March 31, 1960. However, in the previous year, for example, I think there was referred to an item of $186,000. To me it was a somewhat unusual and, I admit, somewhat ununderstandable situation in that it had a minus item of $186,000 related to this fund as compared with the most recent year which had no figure whatsoever and to which the minister has kindly referred.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The explanation of that $186,000 item, which of course I have not had the opportunity to check, would be this. There had been a charge to the fund in that amount which had not been repaid at March 31 for some reason or another. In that event, the charge would go over to the following fiscal year and would be repaid. That would be the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959. From the public accounts for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960, it is evident that this advance was repaid.

Mr. Benidickson: I believe that crown fire losses are reported by the dominion fire commissioner. Is that right?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Mr. Benidickson: I know that he is not an officer that reports to the Minister of Finance. I think he reports to the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is correct.

Mr. Benidickson: When I inquired, I found the last report of crown fire losses referred, I believe, to fire losses in the fiscal year ended in 1959. I know the Minister of Finance is one who is greatly interested in saving anything that has dollar value to the crown. Has he inquired as to whether or not the dominion commissioner for fire losses is late in reporting, having regard to the fact that the last available report refers to the year ended March 31, 1959. I do not expect the minister or his advisers would know about this matter at the moment, but will he inquire as we proceed before later steps in this legislation?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I speak now only from memory in saying that, according to my recollection, the commissioner reports by the calendar year. That would account for the fact that the report for the year 1960 is not yet available. I am told that the compilation of his report is an extremely complicated matter. This would be a reason that it is not yet available for the year 1960.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Benidickson: No, Mr. Chairman. May I say this in connection with the proposed amendments. I think we are advancing in a proper course. However, in his remarks the minister indicated that everything was only permissive. In the remarks he has made so far I saw nothing that might indicate that even he, let alone the government, might have some influence in the course of events with respect to crown companies. Perhaps he would indicate to the committee that he and his colleagues have given this matter some thought. Perhaps he would also indicate whether or not he thinks the government might intimate a will or a desire to assure that crown companies in the future are not going to deal with private insurance companies with respect to fire losses.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Included among the proprietary crown corporations under schedule D to the Financial Administration Act are two that are commercial corporations that do not operate in close relationship with any government department. For instance, in this list are Polymer Corporation Limited and Trans-Canada Air Lines. It is obvious that in this regard those corporations operate in very much the same manner as do corporations that are under private ownership. But in the case of corporations that have some relationship to the government in the matter of appropriations such as the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the intention would be to bring them within the scope of this principle and within the benefit of the account.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, could the Minister of Finance inform us who were the agents for insuring the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation last year?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am informed that they were not insured last year but carried their own risk.

Mr. Crestohl: Could the minister inform the committee whether it would be theoretically possible for a crown corporation to sustain a loss that might not be considered adequately covered by insurance?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): To what kind of a crown corporation does the hon. member refer?

Mr. Crestohl: I am referring to any one of the crown corporations falling under this act.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the hon. member is begging the question by giving that answer. The agency corporations listed in schedule C of the Financial Administration Act are now within the benefit of the Fire Losses Replacement Account Act. The purpose of the present amendment is to make the benefits of the account available to proprietary corporations under schedule D, so it would be necessary for the hon. member to indicate to me a particular corporation or at least under which schedule the corporation he has in mind falls.

Mr. Crestohl: I was not referring to any particular corporation. I referred to the quantum of loss. Assuming there is a catastrophe and a tremendous loss results would it be theoretically possible for the loss to have been so great that it would not adequately be covered by this fund, or is the protection limitless?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member must be talking about a corporation that is outside the benefit of the Fire Losses Replacement Account Act. He is speaking, I take it, of some crown corporation that has been carrying its own fire insurance, and that is in a realm outside this bill entirely. We are dealing here with government departments and those crown corporations which are governed in relation to fire risks by the principle on which the government operates, namely they carry their own risk. If the hon. member is asking about a crown corporation that lies outside the scope of this bill and outside the benefit of the fire losses replacement account it remains in each case a matter for the advisers of the crown corporation to advise the corporation as to what is considered to be an adequate amount of fire insurance to carry. I think that in a matter of this kind the hon. gentleman would have to be more precise in indicating to me the particular corporation to which he refers because I have just given an instance of one of the proprietary crown corporations which falls under schedule D of the Financial Administration Act which, even before the enactment of the present amending bill, has already been operating on this principle of carrying its own risk.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, I know the minister will be willing to place on the record in connection with this debate those crown corporations that would be referred to hitherto in Hansard as falling under schedules C and D of the Financial Administration Act. I do not think they are referred to in this amending bill.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, schedule C of the Financial Administration Act reads as follows:

Canadian Arsenals Limited, Canadian Commercial Corporation, Canadian Patents and Development Limited, Canadian Sugar Stabilization Corporation Ltd., Commodity Prices Stabilization Corporation Ltd., Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, Defence

Construction (1951) Limited, Federal District Commission, National Battlefields Commission, National Harbours Board, Park Steamship Company Limited.

In relation to the second last corporation mentioned, I made a comment this afternoon that the national harbours board has its own fund.

There are a dozen corporations listed under schedule D of the Financial Administration Act. Schedule D reads as follows:

Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Canadian Farm Loan Board—

That board has of course been superseded by the Farm Credit Corporation. I continue:

Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Limited—

That corporation is in the course of being wound up. To go on with the list:

—Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation, Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, Eldorado Mining and Refining (1944) Limited, Export Credits Insurance Corporation, National Railways as defined in the Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Act, Northern Transportation Company (1947) Limited, Northwest Territories Power Commission, Polymer Corporation Limited, Trans-Canada Air Lines.

As I indicated earlier, the corporation in this list which we have immediately in mind to bring within the account is the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

CANADIAN AND BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING INVESTMENT AND OTHER POWERS

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-5, an act to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Bill No. S-5, an act to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act is in a sense associated with the bill which is next to follow according to the announcement made last night by the leader of the house, namely Bill No. S-6, an act to amend the Foreign Insurance Companies Act. While we of course do not attempt to discuss two measures at the same time or in the same debate, I think it may be said and understood by all hon. members that while the first of the two bills covers a wider area than the second, the points that are raised for discussion are similar.

At the conclusion of the debate on second reading, if it pleases the house to give the bill second reading, I shall propose that the same course be followed with respect to both bills, namely that they be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce. The superintendent of insurance, Mr. Kenneth MacGregor, will be available to that committee to offer such testimony concerning the details of both measures as the members of the committee may desire.

These bills, I may point out, have already been passed by the other place and were carefully reviewed there particularly at the committee stage. There is, of course, much in both bills that is highly technical. Our insurance legislation has not been comprehensively revised at regular intervals. The last major revision of our insurance legislation took place in 1950 but, as I shall point out later in my remarks, there have been three amendments since that time. The revision embodied in the bill now under debate is one that has been sought by the insurance companies themselves which are governed by it. There are important changes proposed to the insurance legislation in these bills. Perhaps the most important consists of the provisions for enlarging and broadening the powers of investment of the companies. Indeed, it may be said that the purpose of the measure in this regard is to enlarge the freedom and flexibility of the insurance companies in relation to their investing powers. An important new provision is introduced in relation to variable annuities or contracts. So much by way of introduction.

There are very few persons in Canada whose lives or property are not affected, directly or indirectly, by insurance. The protection afforded by insurance is interwoven throughout the fabric of our modern mode of living and our economic structure. Insurance eliminates or reduces risks that would otherwise cause great distress or disaster. Insurance provides a bulwark against the hazards of accident, sickness, old age, death, fire and a multitude of other contingencies. It also stimulates savings, and some forms of insurance, especially life insurance, give rise to the accumulation of very large funds for investment. Consequently, the manner in which insurers carry on business in Canada and their investment policies, their stability and their solvency are of vital importance and concern to the entire Canadian public.

At present, there are 410 companies and 50 societies within the description of Canadian, British and foreign insurance companies and fraternal benefit societies registered under the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act or the Foreign Insurance Companies Act to transact business under the supervision of the federal government. These companies and societies do actually more than 90 per cent of the insurance business in Canada, the remainder being done by provincially licensed insurers operating exclusively under provincial jurisdiction. Indeed, apart from Lloyd's, these are all provincially incorporated companies or societies.

The companies and societies that are federally registered have an aggregate annual premium income in Canada exceeding $1.6 billion. There is approximately $46 billion of life insurance in force in Canada, and this amount is the largest in proportion to national income among all the countries in the world.

The two insurance acts to which I have referred, the Canadian British Insurance Companies Act and the Foreign Insurance Companies Act apply to the entire operations of Canadian companies and societies but only to the Canadian operations of British and foreign companies and societies.

The total assets of Canadian insurance companies and fraternal benefit societies now exceed $9 billion, and the total assets now on deposit in Canada, either with the Minister of Finance or with trust companies under agreements approved by the minister, for the protection of the Canadian policyholders of British and foreign companies and societies, amount to $2.5 billion. The magnitude of these figures gives some conception of the importance of the provisions of the two statutes and especially their investment provisions. In addition, these investment provisions are frequently adopted as a standard for the investment of many private pension funds, endowment funds and other funds, so that their application and effect are very broad.

Investment provisions must permit sufficient latitude to result in ample diversification plus a good yield, thus enabling insurance costs to be kept as low as possible, while at the same time ensuring the safety of the funds invested. In a very real sense, Mr. Speaker, insurance funds are to a large extent virtually trust funds and certainty of payment of all obligations upon the happening of the various contingencies insured against is essential to this business.

In addition to these aspects from the policyholder's point of view, the manner in which these large funds are invested is obviously of great importance in the national economy. For example, in world war II, investment policy was naturally directed toward aiding the war effort in every possible way, with the result that at the end of 1945, one third of the total assets of Canadian life insurance companies both in Canada and out of Canada was in the form of government of Canada bonds amounting to more than $1 billion. Since the war, the proportion invested in such bonds has declined to 5 per cent while investment policy has shifted mainly toward mortgage lending. The proportion of the total assets of Canadian life insurance companies invested in this manner has risen from 8 per cent at the end of 1945 to 35 per cent at the present time. The latter represents mortgage loans aggregating about $3 billion, more than four fifths of which is in Canada.

Since federal insurance legislation was first enacted in 1868, the various insurance acts enforced from time to time have necessarily been revised and amended many times to keep pace with changing conditions, but except for amendments dealing with matters of particular concern in 1951, in 1956 and in 1957, there has, as I mentioned in my introductory remarks, been no general revision of these acts since 1950. In addition to amendments that are particularly desirable now in order to bring the acts into closer conformity with current conditions, several other desirable though minor amendments have been accumulating since the last revision. All of these matters are dealt with in the present bills. So far as investment provisions are concerned, the proposed amendments will afford a broader choice among the various prescribed classes, some extension of limits applicable to particular classes, and greater freedom to invest in real estate for the production of income, bonds, and stocks, subject only to each company's own discretion.

I shall mention only a few of the more important changes proposed in the present bills. The remainder can, I am sure, Mr. Speaker, await examination in the committee. One important change is proposed in the limit on mortgage loans in relation to the value of the property securing the loan. At present, companies may, of course, make mortgage loans on real estate but the amount of the loan must not exceed 60 per cent of the value of the real estate. It is proposed to raise this limit from 60 per cent to 66⅔ per cent. By reason of the present general practice of amortizing mortgage loans by monthly payments, it is believed that the higher limit will not involve any material lessening of safety as compared with the safety afforded by the lower limit at the time it was adopted many years ago when regular amortization of mortgages was the exception rather than the rule. The proposed higher limit will also have the beneficial effect of reducing the burden of the higher costs usually associated with any second mortgage financing.

A change is proposed in the proportion of a company's assets which may be invested at its own discretion. At present, a company may invest up to 3 per cent of its assets in investments other than those of classes specifically described in the act. The principle underlying this measure of freedom of investment was first adopted in 1948. It has since proved to be of great value in permitting companies to invest in new types of securities and experience has shown that this freedom has been carefully exercised.

Mr. Benidickson: Will the minister permit a question? For the record, will he outline the type of assets that he is now referring to, namely those in the so-called basket?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That will be evident, I think, as we proceed. We are speaking now of the investments which are permitted under the so-called "basket clause".

At the present time no company is using the existing freedom to the full extent permitted, but from time to time some companies have approached the present limit. It is now proposed to increase this limit to 5 per cent of a company's total assets.

Considering Canadian companies as a whole, since their total assets exceed $9 billion this means that such companies can make investments in real estate for the production of income, or in any kind of bonds not in default, or in stocks regardless of their dividend record, subject only to the wisdom of the companies themselves, up to a maximum amount of approximately $450 million. It is believed that the additional margin is justified on the grounds that the present freedom has been responsibly used and that the higher limit will permit a desirable participation by companies in new types of investments without the necessity of frequent amendments to the act to change the specific kinds of investment authorized and will permit the making of sound investments even though they do not meet the specific requirements of the various prescribed classes set forth in the act.

Changes are proposed in the provisions relating to real estate purchased for the production of income and leased back to a corporation that has a dividend record up to a prescribed standard, under a lease meeting certain minimum requirements. The act at present limits any particular investment of this type to half of 1 per cent of the book value of the total ledger assets of the company. It is proposed to increase this limit on any one parcel to 1 per cent of the company's total assets.

Furthermore, the act in its present form also limits the aggregate investments of a company in real estate for the production of income, whether of the particular kind just mentioned or any other kind, to 5 per cent of the book value of the total ledger assets of the company. It is proposed to raise this limit to 10 per cent of the company's total assets. This type of investment, first authorized in 1948, has proved to be sound and profitable and particularly popular in a few companies that are approaching the present limit. A substantial degree of experience has been gained and it now appears that a higher limit can be adopted without weakening the general quality of the asset portfolios of the companies.

Another change relates to so-called equipment trust certificates. At present, companies may invest in equipment trust certificates issued by a trustee to finance the purchase of transportation equipment for a railway company incorporated in Canada or the United States and secured by such equipment. It is proposed to extend this provision to include transportation equipment for use on public highways. Equipment trust certificates have generally proved to be of high quality in both Canada and the United States.

Mr. Benidickson: Would that include air transport?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, I said transportation equipment for use on public highways.

It is proposed to authorize, as a new specific class of investment, the guaranteed investment certificates issued by Canadian trust companies, either federal or provincial, where such companies have a dividend record as good as the dividend record required to make the debentures of any other kind of company qualify as eligible investments.

Several other minor changes respecting investments are dealt with in the bills but their purposes are, I think, apparent from the explanatory notes printed in the bills.

Leaving the subject of investment powers, may I now touch upon a matter relating to the corporate powers of insurance companies in the pension and annuity field as well as the investment of funds arising under certain kinds of pension and annuity schemes.

Life insurance companies transacting business in Canada have expressed the desire, through representations made by the Canadian life insurance officers association, to make group contracts for the financing of employer-employee pension plans in such terms as to result in the contract holder receiving the full benefit or burden of investment gains or losses. Under such contracts, there would be no guarantee of investment return and the obligations of the insurance company would, in general, rise or fall with a rise or fall in the market value of the securities earmarked for contracts of this kind. For such contracts also, the companies wish to have greater freedom of investment than is now permitted under the present legislation. It is well known that many employers prefer to see their pension funds invested in common stocks to a greater extent than the 15 per cent limit applicable to insurance funds as a whole and have set up trust funds for this purpose.

At present, Canadian life insurance companies have the corporate power to issue "annuities of all kinds", and to make contracts of "insurance providing for the establishment, accumulation and payment of sinking, redemption, accumulation, renewal or endowment funds". These companies thus have the corporate power to make such contracts provided there is some element of insurance in them but the act is not clear how such contracts should be dealt with in the accounts of the company. It is also doubtful whether this type of contract could be used to any appreciable extent within the present limitations on investments in common stocks applying to the life insurance funds of the company generally. So-called variable annuities, involving annuity payments varying from time to time in accordance with the investment results of a fund invested substantially or wholly in common stocks, fall in this same general category and since companies have the power to issue annuities of all kinds, they have the power to issue variable annuities, although few companies have yet expressed much interest in them.

If companies begin to issue contracts of the general kind to which I have just referred, under which the obligations to the policyholder vary with the market value of the investments held for the benefit of such contracts, it is of the utmost importance that such contracts should be dealt with in a manner completely separate from the normal life insurance business of the company.

It is therefore proposed to amend section 81 of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act so that if any such contracts are made by Canadian companies—and this would include so-called variable annuities—they shall be dealt with in a separate fund or funds and the assets belonging to any such fund or funds shall be segregated from the other assets of the company. Similar proposals respecting British insurance companies will be found in this bill and in the other bill. It is also proposed that the investments in any such separate fund be relieved from the existing limitations on the proportion that may be invested in common stocks or in real estate for the production of income. Investments would not, however, be relieved from the usual requirements with respect to kind and quality.

In this connection, I might mention that there is not complete unanimity amongst the companies concerning the desirability of offering contracts of this general kind. Views have been expressed to the effect that life insurance companies should refrain from issuing any type of policy which does not provide benefits of guaranteed amount, lest unfavourable variations resulting from a fall in the value of the investments might detract from the public confidence now placed in the life insurance companies, a confidence that has been built up on the strength of guaranteed benefits.

To give effect to this view would require a narrowing of corporate powers at present enjoyed by Canadian life insurance companies. This would scarcely seem appropriate having regard to the fact that this view is seemingly held in a very few companies only, that provincially incorporated companies are already transacting this kind of business, that British companies apparently have the necessary power to do so, and that many United States companies are acquiring powers of this kind.

Instead, as I have already mentioned, the course proposed is to require separate funds and separate assets with, of course, separate accounting for such business in order to keep it quite separate from the regular life insurance and annuity business of the company. If life insurance companies are careful to explain the different nature of this kind of contract when it is made, the possibility of misunderstanding should be reduced, if not eliminated; and the availability of this kind of contract will enable the companies to meet a strong demand from various segments of the public to have funds arising under pension plans invested to a greater degree in equities than is otherwise permitted. Although no specific requirement is proposed at this time concerning the proportion of any such fund that should be invested in Canadian securities, it is taken for granted that where the fund is held for the benefit of policyholders in Canada it will be invested mainly, if not wholly, in Canadian securities, including Canadian equities.

I turn now to another field in which life insurance companies have for many years been quite active. I refer to personal accident and sickness insurance.

At present, a Canadian life insurance company is permitted to transact classes of insurance other than life insurance if it has the charter power to do so or acquires the necessary power in accordance with the provisions of the act. It is required, however, to maintain the funds, accounts and securities held in respect of its life insurance business in a manner completely separate and distinct from the funds, accounts and securities for any other class of business. Up to date, the only other class of business of any importance is personal accident and sickness insurance.

If a Canadian life insurance company wishes to engage in personal accident and sickness insurance, it must establish a separate fund for that purpose and the act permits the transfer from the life insurance funds of an amount not exceeding 25 per cent of the surplus of the company or $100,000, whichever is less, in order to create any such fund. However, having regard for the size of the large life insurance companies and the enormous growth in personal accident and sickness business, particularly with respect to group insurance, the amounts so available are no longer considered adequate. Furthermore, the act now permits a transfer only for the creation of the separate fund. There are no means whereby further transfers can be made from the life insurance funds to the accident and sickness fund even if such transfers should be necessary to maintain the solvency of the latter fund.

It is therefore proposed that the present limitation on transfers be changed to permit transfers either to establish or maintain the fund and, in addition, that the limit on the amount of transfers be increased for the larger companies to 10 per cent of the surplus. This will still retain the advantages of a clear separation between these two kinds of business but at the same time will afford some degree of flexibility in sustaining the accident and sickness fund, if necessary, in times of adversity.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, it is desirable to revise and rearrange several sections of the present legislation for greater clarity, to adapt their provisions better to meet current conditions and to remove minor defects or anomalies. Also, there are a few provisions which have become obsolete and should be repealed. The changes proposed in these respects are indicated in the bills themselves, and can be further discussed in the committee on banking and commerce. I say nothing concerning the other bill to amend the Foreign Insurance Companies Act, except to indicate that the amendments are, in general, virtually identical.

The house has had the benefit, through its banking and commerce committee in times past, of opportunities for studying insurance legislation with the very competent and highly valued assistance of Mr. Kenneth MacGregor, the superintendent of insurance. I have no doubt that the review of our existing legislation offered by the two present measures will be of very great benefit to our legislative efforts in parliament.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I know the house will be grateful for the thorough, and properly thorough, statement the minister has made with respect to two bills before us. I believe his remarks would apply not only to the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act amendment bill but to the Foreign Insurance Companies Act amendment as well. We can regard them as companion bills.

I believe this house will regard it as fortunate that those in the Senate received these particular bills before we did. There are many in that place who are experienced in the insurance business and the trust and loan business, so these bills did receive already very careful consideration, not only in the chamber of the other place but in their banking and commerce committee as well. I think quite a number of the hon. members of this house will have read the evidence that was presented on these occasions. I will not refer to this; indeed, perhaps I am not permitted to refer to it.

While those in the other place did receive evidence from the much admired superintendent of insurance, Mr. MacGregor, to whom the minister has referred, my reading of what has taken place in the other place would indicate that although a number of representatives of the insurance industry were in attendance there they did not give evidence before the banking and commerce committee of the other place. I do not mean to imply that the hon. members of the other place denied any member of the public an opportunity to make representations.

However, I would hope that if the hon. member for York North (Mr. Cathers) president of our banking and commerce committee is present he will regard this as a very important operation in so far as this House of Commons committee is concerned. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has indicated, this legislation relates to some $9 billion worth of assets. We all know that those assets are, for all practical purposes, assets that do not belong to the managers of the companies. Those are assets that have been accumulated by the people of Canada at large and, to that extent, I think there is a greater than usual obligation on our commons to consider these amendments which involve such an important element of capital in our country.

I would hope that the chairman of the banking and commerce committee would not be in haste to deal with this legislation, but that he and the clerk of the committee would give adequate notice to the public that these revisions are proposed. In this way, in due course we could have a discussion in the committee that would be satisfactory in every

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

CREDIT ADVISERS, VETERANS' LAND ACT

Question No. 94—Mr. Boulanger:

1. In each of the provinces: (a) how many credit advisers were employed by the Veterans' Land Act administration? (b) since February 1, 1960, to date, how many of these credit advisers have resigned, and how many have been replaced?

2. In the province of Quebec, between December 31, 1959, to January 1, 1961: (a) how many appraisements have been made? (b) how many loans have been made, and for what amount?

Answer by: Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs):

1. (a) All field staff (other than construction supervisors) employed by the veterans' land administration, prior to May 1, 1960, were classified as settlement officers. A new classification series, farm credit adviser, was authorized by treasury board on June 2, 1960, effective May 1, 1960. The duties performed by the field staff in this new classification relate substantially to the full time farming provisions of both the Veterans' Land Act and the Farm Credit Act. Those performed by the majority of field staff still classified as settlement officers mainly relate to veterans who are settled or are seeking financial assistance as part time farmers or under the house construction provisions of part II of the Veterans' Land Act. The following table shows the number of V.L.A. field staff who, on February 1, 1960, were classified as settlement officers and the number who, on May 1, 1960, were performing the duties and responsibilities of farm credit advisers:

	Feb. 1, 1960	May 1, 1960
British Columbia	28	16
Alberta	39	43
Saskatchewan	44	42
Manitoba	23	22
Ontario	56	40
Quebec	16	8
New Brunswick	10	5
Nova Scotia	8	4
Prince Edward Island .	4	3
Newfoundland	2	—
Total	230	183

(b) Since May 1, 1960, to date, 14 veterans' land administration employees who were performing the duties of farm credit advisers have resigned as follows:

British Columbia, 2. One resigned on promotion to credit supervisor on the strength of the farm credit corporation. One has been replaced on the strength of the farm credit corporation.

Alberta, 1. Resigned on promotion to credit supervisor on the strength of the farm credit corporation. Replaced by a credit adviser on strength of the veterans' land administration.

Saskatchewan, 1. Resigned on promotion to credit supervisor on strength of the farm credit corporation. Replaced by credit adviser on strength of the farm credit corporation.

Manitoba, 1. Resigned on promotion to credit supervisor on strength of the farm credit corporation. Replaced by credit adviser on strength of the farm credit corporation.

Ontario, 3. Two resigned on promotion to credit supervisor on the strength of the farm credit corporation. All have been replaced by credit advisers on strength of the veterans' land administration.

Quebec, 4. Two resigned on transfer to the farm credit corporation, on whose strength they continue to perform the same duties as they carried out when employed by the veterans' land administration. One resigned after promotion to a position in the veterans' land administration district office in Montreal. He was replaced in the field by a credit adviser on the strength of the farm credit corporation.

New Brunswick, 2. One resigned on transfer to the farm credit corporation, on whose strength he continues to perform the same duties as he carried out when employed by the veterans' land administration.

2. (a) A total of 322 appraisals were made by the joint field staff of the veterans' land administration and the farm credit corporation, of which 128 were made between April 1, 1960 and January 1, 1961, relative to loan applications under the Farm Credit Act.

(b) 344 loans were made under the Veterans' Land Act in the aggregate amount of $2,641,036.00.

MILORAD V. COP

Question No. 117—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Have representations been made to the government for assistance in freeing Mr. Milorad V. Cop, a Canadian citizen, from prison in Czechoslovakia?

2. If so, has any progress been made toward having this Canadian citizen released from prison?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs):

1. Yes.

2. No.

REQUESTS FOR ORGANIZATION AND METHODS SURVEYS

Question No. 119—Mr. McGee:

1. Have any departments of government requested surveys from the organization and methods division of the civil service commission during 1960?

Questions

2. If so, which departments?
3. How many surveys were made for each department?
4. What were the dates on which the results of the surveys were forwarded to the department concerned?
5. What were the estimated measurable annual savings which resulted from each survey?

Answer by: Hon. Leon Balcer (Acting Secretary of State):

1. Yes.

2, 3, 4 and 5: Replies are set out in the schedule hereunder.

Present formula—total receipts projected to 1962-63 assuming 5 per cent per annum rate of growth in tax yields (including standard taxes at 13-9-50, equalization and Atlantic provinces adjustment grants)	29,035	7,331	41,418	35,645	239,528	293,118	42,173	42,694	60,186	75,334	866,462
Present formula—estimated total receipts in 1960-61 (including standard taxes at 13-9-50, equalization and Atlantic provinces adjustment grants)	27,033	6,882	38,265	33,028	217,259	265,867	38,252	38,725	54,590	68,330	788,231

NOTE: This projection is based on standard taxes of 16-9-50, i.e. on rates equal to the federal withdrawal. The provincial governments will be free to levy higher or lower rates than these and if they do so their receipts will be correspondingly higher or lower. In this connection, the projected yield of 1 per cent of the individual income tax for 1962-63 for all provinces is $19,427,000 and the projected yield of 1per cent of the net taxable income of corporations for 1962-63 for all provinces is $34,441,000.

(1) Does not include the additional grant of $8 million per annum to Newfoundland.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FURTHER ANNOUNCEMENT ON VISIT OF UNITED KINGDOM PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on February 17 the Prime Minister announced that Right Hon. Harold Macmillan, Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, accompanied by Lady Dorothy, would be paying a brief visit to Ottawa on April 7 and 8. Hon. members will have heard with great pleasure on today's news broadcast that the visit is now to be of longer duration. As a result of talks which Mr. Diefenbaker had yesterday in London, the dates of the visit are now arranged for April 8 to April 12.

Mr. Macmillan and Lady Dorothy will be the guests of Their Excellencies the Governor General and Madame Vanier during their stay in Ottawa. As they are arriving here on a Saturday it is planned that they shall spend a quiet week end, which will then be followed by two days of talks with ministers on questions of mutual concern.

The United Kingdom Prime Minister will be arriving in Ottawa from Washington, where he will just have completed talks with President Kennedy. As the right hon. Prime Minister said in the house on February 16 when he first expressed the hope that Mr. Macmillan might visit Canada, it has become a welcome custom that whenever the United Kingdom Prime Minister has visited the president of the United States for consultations, he has almost invariably visited Canada either before or after. Such visits are not only useful but give us a great deal of pleasure, and I am sure all members of the house will welcome the news that Right Hon. Mr. Macmillan and Lady Dorothy have found it possible to spend a few days with us here in Ottawa.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all members of the house will have welcomed the statement made by the Acting Prime Minister. I know that the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and his wife will receive the warm welcome which is traditionally accorded prime ministers of the United Kingdom, and I hope their stay in Canada will be both useful and pleasant.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, since the visit of the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom is to be of longer duration, and since parliament will be in session for part of that time, I would hope that it might be possible for the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, as I suggested earlier, to address a joint session of both houses of parliament.

I would think these talks could be very useful, particularly on the return of the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom from the United States. As we all so well know, there are many urgent outstanding world problems that require the attention of the leaders of the world. I am certain that discussions between our own Prime Minister and Prime Minister Macmillan regarding trade questions and questions involving the peace of the world would be particularly useful following his discussions with President Kennedy.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the house will bear with me with regard to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Assiniboia to the effect that Mr. Macmillan should be asked to address the members of the Senate and House of Commons. I am not yet in a position to announce whether that will be possible, but I am hoping it will be.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF REGULATIONS RESPECTING ACCELERATED DEPRECIATION OF ASSETS

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the house that the regulations providing for special capital cost allowances have been printed and are being distributed today to members of both houses and other interested parties. These regulations provide that accelerated depreciation may be claimed in respect of most types of assets acquired after December 31, 1960, if the assets are used in making a product not previously produced in Canada or in a surplus manpower area. Such assets are eligible for double depreciation for one year on the basis of the capital expenditure incurred for such equipment. The extra allowance can be applied in any of the first three years after the asset is acquired.

Companies acquiring assets which they believe may be eligible for special capital cost allowances should communicate with the depreciation certification branch, Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa. Copies of an explanatory memorandum, the regulations and application forms will be sent to them. This material is available in French and English.

Municipal or area authorities wishing to have their localities or areas designated as surplus manpower areas should communicate with the Department of Labour, which will be responsible for receiving and studying such applications.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister of Trade and Commerce will not expect us not to be surprised by the announcement he has just made, in view of the reply he made to me last week when I asked him if he was going to have anything to do with this program. He said no.

Mr. Hees: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Later the Prime Minister informed the house that the Minister of Labour would be charged with the administration of this matter and, indeed, in that connection the Minister of Labour did make an announcement, not satisfactory, of course, in content; but now we are told by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, notwithstanding his disclaimer, that he is in fact going to have something to do with this program which we should have an opportunity of discussing at the earliest possible moment.

I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that until such time as we have given further study to the announcement made by the minister, the fact that he has made this announcement only indicates the confusion and uncertainty on the government benches.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): We are glad the government is showing some progress, in that it has now announced in a more specific way certain terms of the policy that was first indicated in this house some days ago. We make the suggestion, Mr. Speaker, that the formula requires further study; that it should be a formula which would allow this kind of depreciation in localities where there is a surplus of workers today, in depressed areas, and it should be much different from the formula which was announced in this house. In applying this formula the government should make certain that the main depressed areas of this country can comply with this double depreciation provision.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this announcement the hon. member for Essex East—

Mr. Chevrier: On a point of order Mr. Speaker, Your Honour decided the other day very clearly in connection with other statements which were made that once the minister had made a statement and there was an opportunity for reply, there should be no further opportunity for re-reply.

Mr. Speaker: That is correct. I am not sure why the minister is rising, but I shall find out in due course.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I might use the device used every day by the members of the opposition, when they rise on questions of privilege, to clarify an erroneous statement made by the hon. member for Essex East. He claimed that I said something the other day which I did not say—

Mr. Chevrier: That is not privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the minister feels that a misinterpretation has been put upon his statement I have said before, and I repeat, that he, as any member, has the right to rise to correct an erroneous interpretation which has been put upon a factual statement. If it is limited to that I do not think I should prevent him from making that correction. However, it is well settled that he would not be in order simply to reply to a comment which had been made on the original statement.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, when asked that question some time ago by the hon. member for Essex East I said that it had to do, as I remembered it, with the designation of surplus manpower areas. At that time I said that was not my responsibility but the responsibility of the Minister of Labour, and that, of course, is the case. My responsibility and the responsibility of my department is to deal with new products and new processes, and I have never for a moment said that was not a responsibility of my department.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PETAWAWA—STATEMENT ON RESULTS OF INVESTIGATION

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on March 1 I advised the house that it had been decided to send three officers to Petawawa to look into the matter of the Canadian Guards regimental sailing club. As a result of this investigation it would appear that some degree of compulsion was used to secure the payment of membership fees in the club, and that the information sent to headquarters, on the basis of which I answered questions in the house, was not accurate.

These are both serious matters which warrant a more formal investigation. The chief of the general staff has convened a board of inquiry to inquire into and report upon allegations of irregularities regarding membership in the Canadian Guards sailing club and the accuracy of the reports submitted in that connection. In fairness to all concerned, I do not believe that any further statement should be made until the results of this inquiry are known.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the view of the minister now is that there was some evidence of compulsion, and that he therefore is now ordering a further investigation in that regard?

Mr. Harkness: If the hon. member will read my statement when it appears in Hansard I believe the situation will be quite clear. I do not think there is any need for me to make any further statement in regard to the matter.

GRAIN

REPORT ON CONFERENCE TO EXPEDITE MOVEMENT THROUGH PACIFIC COAST PORTS

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to give the house an interim report on the conference held in Vancouver on Monday and Tuesday and continuing today with regard to expediting the movement of grain through west coast ports. There were some 40 senior officers representing 18 different organizations in attendance, and it is my belief that this was a perfect example of a productivity council in action. The grain gathering companies from the prairies, the two great railway companies, the two labour unions affected, the merchants exchange, the grain exchange and the government agencies concerned pooled their information, and as a result I believe I am able to say now that there will be an increase ranging from 15 to 25 per cent in the movement of grain out of these ports in the next few months.

I was asked at the meeting to correct an erroneous statement by the hon. member for Vancouver East which appears in Hansard for last Wednesday, the day I announced the conference. At that time he said, as found on page 2593 of Hansard:

> It is many, many years since there have been any extensions to the port of Vancouver. As a matter of fact, the facilities of the port are less now than they were as a result of a fire many years ago. The facilities lost then have never been replaced.

I simply want to say at this time that when I was in Vancouver I was given enough information by people there who are very proud of their port to indicate that this statement was wrong, and I will give the hon. member all the statistics I have to that effect. I simply want to say that there have been many facilities added to the port in the last few years, including storage for grain to the extent of an additional capacity of three or four million bushels.

Finally, may I say that I think the conference will result in a permanent body being set up for liaison and the co-ordination of the movement of grain through the western ports. A permanent body will also be set up, I hope, to handle public relations that involve several organizations.

Mr. Winch: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister to tell us what additional facilities have been added in the past few years.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would ask his question on the orders of the day.

Mr. Winch: I certainly will, sir.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is he in a position to report to the house on the recent conference in Vancouver relative to the loading and shipping facilities in the port of Vancouver, especially with reference to wheat? Can he advise the house what recommendations were made as a result of the conference he called, and his reaction to those recommendations?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): First of all, Mr. Speaker, the person making the recommendations to the conference was the Minister of Agriculture. I asked the representatives of these 18 organizations to see what they could do about speeding up the movement of grain through west coast ports in view of the market situation. I suggested several things to them and they promised their co-operation. The meeting broke up into committees yesterday afternoon and those committees are continuing to meet today and possibly tomorrow. I will not know until the meetings have been completed just what final steps will be taken. However, from what I heard yesterday I believe I can assure the house that the suggestion I made of an increase of 15 per cent to 25 per cent in shipments through the port will be realized.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask a supplementary question of the minister. Has he any comment to make on the recent complaints concerning the movement of wheat out of the port of Vancouver, namely that one ship was delayed 28 days in loading, while three Russian ships had been waiting 11 days before they could be loaded? The delay in the first case cost approximately $30,000.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): In answer to that question I may say that the handling of grain through any port is a very complicated business. Before the conference I was under the impression that there was a lack of co-ordination in the handling of this movement as among these 18 organizations, but I think the conference established that these things can be ameliorated.

In so far as the tie-up of ships a week or 10 days ago is concerned, I think that can be explained to some degree by the fact that a number of ships arrived at once. As an illustration of this point, may I say that today we expected five ships to enter the harbour. They did not come because of storms on the Pacific. They are expected in today or tomorrow, but there are three berths lying idle today. We are not loading to maximum capacity. These things cannot be prevented by any amount of planning. What we are trying to do is to set up a permanent liaison group which will funnel information to all the groups concerned so there will be no tie-up for which we can be held responsible for lack of planning.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister comment on statements made in Vancouver that the government, not the board, made the sale to the Chinese, and the government failed to advise the board about these special requirements?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I do not think the press reports are altogether accurate. We made the announcement publicly in the house, which would be the first official warning they would have of the sale. The responsibility in the next stage would be that of the agents hired by the Chinese resources company to make known when these ships were going to arrive. A responsibility then would devolve upon the Canadian wheat board to berth these ships at the various berths where the grades required were available. Of course it is the responsibility of the board to get these grades into the port ahead of time.

I believe that as a result of suddenly moving the port up to capacity a number of things happened about which we have heard. I cannot guarantee that there will not be more of these tie-ups. It is my judgment that there will be more than we have had in the past, because we are trying to use the facilities to maximum capacity and when you do that there are bound to be these tie-ups.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wonder if I could ask the minister a supplementary question. Can he say whether representatives either from the city or from organizations in Prince Rupert were invited to this particular conference?

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle).]

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): The representatives who would take care of the interests of the elevators in Prince Rupert were the national harbours board, which handles the whole operation in connection with the harbour, and the board of grain commissioners which operates the elevator at Prince Rupert. I did receive a telegram from the mayor of Prince Rupert, and I should like to assure the hon. member that Prince Rupert will be used to full capacity this year.

Mr. Winch: May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister inform us whether the reported statement is correct that Canada would have been able to sell more wheat to Asian countries if the port of Vancouver had been able to handle it? This statement appeared in newspapers, and I wondered if the minister would say whether or not it was correct.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes, I think the statement is generally correct, and for this reason. We received more orders for delivery through Vancouver than we could handle, and had to try to divert these orders to other ports.

[Later:]

Mr. Winch: May I take advantage of a most unique opportunity and direct a question to the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Acting Prime Minister, and ask him whether, in all his capacities, he has noted the answers given by the Minister of Agriculture as to a conference held in Vancouver. May I further ask the hon. gentleman whether in view of the answers which were given to the effect that certain sales have been lost by Canada because of the lack of facilities—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question seems to present a glimpse of the obvious, because the Acting Prime Minister sat through all these proceedings with the rest of us.

AGRICULTURE

FARM MACHINERY PRICES—CONTINUATION OF INQUIRY BY STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Government notices of motion:

March 6—The Minister of Agriculture—The following proposed motion:—

That the standing committee on agriculture and colonization be empowered to continue its inquiry into the question of prices of farm machinery as recommended by the said committee in its fourth report presented to the house July 28, 1960, and that the committee's minutes of proceedings and evidence with regard to this inquiry at the last session be referred to the said committee.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21, this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

STARRED QUESTIONS

RECEPTIONIST, SUNNYBROOK MILITARY HOSPITAL

Question No. 167—Mr. Hellyer:

1. Is it the intention to dispense with the position of receptionist at Sunnybrook military hospital, Toronto?
2. Have any representations been received on this point?
3. If so, from what organizations, and what reply has the government made?

Mr. H. F. Jones (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs):

1. Yes.
2. Yes.
3. The united council of veterans associations of Hamilton and district. The reply given was that the decision was made only after very careful consideration of all the factors involved.

"EDITION SPECIALE"—MODERATOR'S TRAVELLING EXPENSES

Question No. 169—Mr. Tremblay:

1. Does the moderator of the program "Edition Speciale", televised on the French network each Sunday night, receive special remuneration for travelling expenses?
2. If so, what is the amount of such remuneration?

(Translation):

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is no. As far as the second part is concerned, there is no answer.

(Text):

C.B.C. BUILDING, MONTREAL—ALTERATION TENDERS

Question No. 170—Mr. Tremblay:

1. Has the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation invited, during January 1961, public tenders for alteration work to its building located at 1425 Dorchester boulevard, Montreal, Quebec?
2. If so, what are the names of the tenderers, what is the amount of each tender, and to whom was the contract finally awarded?

(Translation):

THE C.B.C.—PUBLIC TENDERS

Question No. 170—Mr. Tremblay:

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is the following: Four companies were invited to submit tenders. With regard to the second part of the question, the answer is that the following companies have been invited to submit tenders: Cook & Leitch, Deschamps & Belanger, Raymond Matte, Robert M. Miller.

The contract was awarded to the lowest tenderer: Cook & Leitch.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation feels that it is not in the public interest to reveal the amounts of the tenders received.

CKY-FM, WINNIPEG—PROTESTS

Question No. 171—Mr. Benidickson:

1. How many communications have been received by the board of broadcast governors from (a) known T.V. service persons wanting to instal antennas, and (b) other persons, protesting that approval of an application by CKY Winnipeg, for FM broadcast rights on frequency 103.1 might interfere with reception by viewers in Manitoba from Pembina, North Dakota, T.V. station KCND?
2. Which frequencies other than 103.1 might be provided under international treaty arrangements or otherwise for assignment by the board of broadcast governors to a Winnipeg area applicant seeking a licence for a frequency modulation station?
3. (a) Has the board of broadcast governors received any information that a new U.S.A. defence radar station near Baudette, Minnesota, will be utilizing an FM frequency likely to interfere with T.V. reception from Channel 7, Winnipeg, to the detriment of Canadian T.V. viewers in the Rainy river district of Ontario? (b) if so, does the board of broadcast governors understand that a decision respecting frequency 103.1 unnecessarily inconsiderate respecting United States T.V. station KCND, North Dakota, would tend to nullify Canadian protests to the U.S. government against the proposed American use of a frequency at Baudette, Minnesota, that would eliminate reception at Rainy river of T.V. programs from a Canadian source?

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is rather lengthy and I would ask the permission of the house to have the reply printed in Hansard without reading it.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give its concurrence to the suggestion of the hon. parliamentary secretary?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

1. The board of broadcast governors has received six letters and three telegrams, one of which was signed by 52 radio and television dealers from known T.V. service persons wanting to instal antennas and 85 letters and petitions and 62 telegrams from other persons protesting that approval of an application by CKY, Winnipeg, for FM broadcast rights on the frequency of 103.1 megacycles might interfere with reception by viewers in Manitoba from Pembina, North Dakota, T.V. station KCND.

2. I am advised by the Department of Transport that the following frequencies other than 103.1 megacycles would be available to any person making an application for an FM station in Winnipeg:

Starred Questions

Channel Number	Frequency—Mc/s
221	92.1

The foregoing are in accordance with the present international agreement.

It is possible that additional channels could be allocated if needed but there would have to be special negotiations conducted with the U.S.A.

An applicant seeking a licence for a frequency modulation station selects a channel for the station on the advice of his broadcast engineering consultant, usually from the list of channels available. Some channels are more desirable than others from the standpoint of freedom from interfering effects and this can be taken into account by the engineering consultant.

3. Although the board of broadcast governors understands that a new U.S. military radar station is being built near Baudette, Minnesota, it has no information as to the technical aspects of this station. These matters would be in the responsibility of the Department of Transport and the Department of National Defence and any formal information on the station would come to the board through the Department of Transport.

Question No. 173—Mr. Chevrier:

1. Did Autair Helicopter Services Limited obtain a contract or contracts from the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys for the continental polar shelf project and for topographical work in 1960?
2. What was the amount of such contract or contracts?
3. How much was paid to Autair Helicopter Services Limited in 1960?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): This question is in three parts, Mr. Speaker. The answer to part No. 1 is that Autair were awarded one contract for helicopter services required on the polar continental shelf project in 1960.

The answer to part 2 is, estimated $183,500.

The answer to part 3 is $137,551.36.

AUTAIR HELICOPTER SERVICES LTD.—1961 CONTRACT

Question No. 174—Mr. Chevrier:

1. Has Autair Helicopter Services Limited a contract or contracts from the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys for the continental polar shelf project for 1961?
2. If so, were tenders called, and who were the other tenderers?
3. Did Autair submit the lowest tender?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, this question is also in three parts. The answer to part No. 1 is, no. A letter of intent was, however, sent to Autair on February 23, 1961 pending, and subject to, final consideration by the treasury board who, on March 2, 1961, approved our proposal.

The answer to part 2 is that we do not call tenders in those cases where rates are filed with the air transport board. We do, however, review the rates of all companies considered capable of performing the service before making our selection.

The answer to part 3 is that an economic assessment of the applicable air transport board rates and associated costs made by my department indicates that the services of Autair would result in the lowest over-all cost to the government of Canada.

AUTAIR HELICOPTER SERVICES LTD.—TOPOGRAPHICAL SURVEY

Question No. 175—Mr. Chevrier:

1. Has Autair Helicopter Services Limited a contract or contracts from the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys for a topographical survey in northern Canada?
2. If so, were tenders called, and who were the other tenderers?
3. Did Autair submit the lowest tender?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, the question is again in three parts. The answers given to the previous question, namely No. 174, apply to this one also.

GATT—ADJUSTMENTS FOLLOWING CUSTOMS TARIFF AMENDMENT

Question No. 176—Mr. Benidickson:

Which contracting countries signatory to the general agreement on tariffs and trade up to the date of reply, have intimated to Canadian government representatives in Canada or abroad, that they will expect Canada to negotiate compensatory tariff adjustments or give trade concessions, in the event that the Customs Tariff is amended in accordance with the terms outlined in a resolution therefor introduced by the Minister of Finance on December 20, 1960?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): To use the language of the question, Mr. Speaker, I would say that "no contracting parties signatory to the general agreement on tariffs and trade ... have intimated to Canadian government representatives in Canada or abroad that they will expect Canada to negotiate compensatory tariff adjustments or give trade concessions in the event that the Customs Tariff is amended in accordance with the terms outlined in a resolution therefor introduced by the Minister of Finance on December 20, 1960".

There have been discussions, as I think I intimated on an earlier occasion, with both the United Kingdom and the United States governments concerning the significance of the proposed amendment. Some of these discussions actually date back to the time before the terms of the proposed amendment were made known.

The United Kingdom government has intimated that it will be interested in the administration of the proposed amendment, and reserves whatever rights it may possess.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS LONG DISTANCE CALLS—SECRECY PRECAUTIONS

Question No. 177—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. What precautions are taken by the government and by the Department of External Affairs to ensure privacy and secrecy in long distance telephone calls between Ottawa offices and Canadian missions outside of Canada, particularly at the United Nations?

2. Has the Canadian government a private telephone line to the Canadian mission at the United Nations, or must long distance calls go through the United Nations switchboard?

3. Has any instance been reported to the Canadian government of a leak of private or secret information as a result of telephone discussions between government officials in Ottawa and members of Canadian missions at the United Nations, or elsewhere?

4. If so, what were the circumstances, and the location, in any such instance?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the various parts of this question are as follows:

1. Telephone communications, including those extending beyond Canada generally are considered to be insecure. Users of the telephone, therefore, are cautioned not to discuss sensitive classified matters on this medium of communication. There are, of course, adequate and secure means by which the Canadian government communicates with its representatives abroad, including the Canadian delegation to the United Nations.

2. The answer to both parts of this question is no. However, when delegates receive telephone calls at the United Nations headquarters, these obviously go through the United Nations switchboard.

3. The answer is no.

4. This question has been answered by my reply to question No. 3.

C.N.R. PENSIONS, RETIRED EMPLOYEES

Question No. 178—Mr. Argue:

1. How many retired employees of the Canadian National Railways are in receipt of pensions of less than $25 per month?

2. How many are in receipt of only the basic pension of $25 per month?

3. How many are in receipt of non-contributory service pensions (a) $25.01 to $29.99 per month (b) $30 to $39.99 per month (c) $40 to $49.99 per month (d) $50 to $59.99 per month (e) $60 to $69.99 per month (f) $70 to $79.99 per month (g) $80 to $89.99 per month (h) $90 to $99.99 per month (i) $100 to $124.99 per month (j) $125 to $149.99 per month (k) $150 or over per month?

4. How many are in receipt of pensions in part basic and in part contributory (a) $25.01 to $29.99 per month (b) $30 to $39.99 per month (c) $40 to $49.99 per month (d) $50 to $59.99 per month (e) $60 to $69.99 per month (f) $70 to $79.99 per month (g) $80 to $89.99 per month (h) $90 to $99.99 per month (i) $100 to $124.99 per month (j) $125 to $149.99 per month (k) $150 or over per month?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is in the form of a statistical table. I wonder whether it could be printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give its concurrence to the suggestion made by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The statistical table referred to above is on p. 2776.]

U.S. RESTRICTIONS ON TOURIST IMPORTS

Question No. 179—Mr. Badanai:

1. Has the government given any consideration to the effect which the lowering of the exemption of returning American tourists from $500 to $100 has on Canadian business?

2. Is the government considering some representation to the Washington administration with regard to this legislation, especially in view of our unfavourable trade balance with the United States?

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing to add at this time to the answer given by the Prime Minister when he replied to a similar question on February 7, as recorded on page 1795 of Hansard.

R.C.A.F. REPAIRS, FAIREY AVIATION PLANT, VICTORIA

Question No. 180—Mr. Badanai:

1. Have any representations been received by the government from the labour unions in Victoria, B.C., requesting that R.C.A.F. planes be serviced for repairs at the Fairey aviation plant, Victoria, B.C.?

2. If so, what bodies have made such representations, and what reply has been given by the government?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, the answers to the two parts of the question are as follows:

1. Yes.

2. Representations have been made by the Victoria labour council and by the international association of machinists.

I wish to have printed in Hansard copies of telegrams and letters addressed to the Prime Minister and myself and the answers

NOTE: In a number of cases the above figures do not indicate the total pensions payable to employees for railway service. Pensions payable by the C.N.R. to international employees (service in both Canada and the United States) relate to their service in Canada only. Such employees also receive annuities payable under the U.S. railroad retirement act or the social security act for service performed in the United States. For example, in the group receiving pensions of under $25 from the C.N.R., there are over 60 former international employees who also receive U.S. railroad retirement or social security annuities in respect of C.N.R. service rendered in the United States. The balance of this group consists of employees who elected early retirement (before age 65) with reduced basic ($25) pensions, and employees who had very short service and small contributions. that have been forwarded to the international association of machinists. I would ask to have this correspondence printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Will the minister indicate the extent of the correspondence?

Mr. O'Hurley: Five pages, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the correspondence asked for in this question be printed with the answer?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

January 18, 1961—Telegram to the Prime Minister from Mr. Angus Keiller, president, Lodge No. 456, I.A. of M., c/o Fairey Aviation Company of Canada Limited, Patricia Bay airport, B.C.

"It is come to our attention that twelve Neptune aircraft based at Comox BC will be flown out of the province for painting at Victoria airport Fairey Aviation has all the men and facilities for carrying out this work as you are aware the unemployment situation in the Victoria district is acute and if Fairey Aviation were forced to close due to lack of military work it would be disastrous as most of our members are employed by Fairey Aviation the only aircraft overhaul plant on Vancouver Island would you sir on our behalf intervene to divert at least some of this work to Fairey Aviation trusting this meets with your favourable consideration."

January 26, 1961—Telegraphic reply from the secretary to the Prime Minister to Mr. Keiller*

"With reference to your telegram of January 18 I would advise you that the awarding of the contract for the painting of eleven Neptunes based at Comox was decided as the result of competitive tenders and the lowest tenderer is being awarded the contract stop all firms in the western area who are considered to be in a position to complete this work satisfactorily were invited to tender and in each case the firms were suffering from serious cut-backs in employment stop the competitive tender is the normal way for the Department of Defence Production to do business stop I can assure you however that with respect to any other work that may arise which Fairey Aviation at Patricia Bay are capable of carrying out this company will be invited to tender under the normal practice stop"

January 18, 1961—Letter from Mr. A. W. Toone, secretary treasurer, Victoria labour council to Hon. Raymond O'Hurley:

"This council has in the past requested the allocation of work on behalf of the Department of National Defence to the plant of Fairey Aviation Company of Canada Limited, Sidney, B.C. may we again urge that consideration be given to this.

We are given to understand that painting, servicing and overhauling of aircraft of the Department of National Defence in this area is sent out of this province to be done, when the facilities for such work are available at the Sidney plant within a very short distance of the aircraft base.

Over the years, this plant has obtained the required tools and experienced personnel to deal with such work, without which both the industry and the jobs will be lost to this area, with the resulting increase in unemployment.

In view of the overall economy, we believe that this industry should be encouraged on Vancouver Island, and every effort made to maintain the craftsman in employment.

We therefore trust that favourable consideration will be given to the allocation of work to this plant; and we look forward to your assurance in this regard."

February 6, 1961—Reply letter from Hon. Raymond O'Hurley to Mr. Toone—

"I have your letter dated January 18, 1961, in which you request that consideration be given to the allocation of defence work to the plant of the Fairey Aviation Company of Canada Limited, Sidney, B.C. You refer specifically to a recent requirement for the painting of eleven Neptune aircraft which, as a result of competitive tender, was allocated out of your area.

In reply I would state that as this requirement had never previously been carried out by any of our western contractors it was decided by my department that the requirement should be thrown open to competition. An additional consideration leading to this decision was the progressive decline in workload, with resultant lay-offs, at all plants west of and including Winnipeg. My department was of the opinion that a competitive tender would serve a dual purpose, in that it not only would result in the utmost in economies, but would also bolster the morale of the contractors concerned by affording them an opportunity to gain additional work on their own merits. The Fairey Aviation Company of Canada Limited was one of three companies invited to tender, but quoted a figure considerably higher than the lowest tenderer, who was ultimately selected to perform the work.

Starred Questions

We concur in your general comments concerning the overall economy of the area, and in particular to the need for ensuring that the Fairey Aviation Company of Canada Limited be given every opportunity to compete for such work as they are qualified and equipped to perform. You have my assurance that these considerations will always be borne in mind by my department when dealing with future requirements in your area."

February 1, 1961—Letter to the Prime Minister from Mr. A. W. Toone, Victoria labour council—

"I enclose a copy of a letter sent from this office to the Honourable Raymond J. M. O'Hurley, Minister of Defence Production, to which I have received no reply to date, but which will give you information on the subject matter of this letter.

The telegram sent from your office to the International Association of Machinists, Local 456, has been drawn to my attention and, in view of this, I hasten to write to you, urging that work be allocated to this plant of Fairey Aviation Company of Canada located at Sidney, B.C.

I am sure that you will understand our concern that this plant be given every opportunity to continue in operation; and trust that you will give urgent and favourable consideration to the above, and that, in the future, Fairey Aviation at Patricia Bay will be given every opportunity to tender on any work which they are capable of carrying out."

February 7, 1961—Reply to Mr. A. W. Toone on behalf of the prime minister's office by Claude Gauthier, secretary—

"I wish to acknowledge your letter of February 1st to the Prime Minister, enclosing copy of your letter of January 18 to the Minister of Defence Production with regard to the award of a recent contract for painting Neptune aircraft.

Please be assured that your representations have been noted and forwarded, at Mr. Diefenbaker's suggestion, to his colleague, the Minister of Defence Production. May I also repeat the assurance which was given in my telegram to the international association of machinists, local 456, that with respect to any other work that may arise which Fairey Aviation at Patricia Bay are capable of carrying out; this company will be invited to tender under the normal practice."

NATIONAL DEFENCE—TRANSPORT OF SUPPLIES TO PATRICIA BAY

Question No. 181—Mr. Herridge:

1. What firm or person has the contract for the hauling of defence department supplies from Comox to Patricia Bay?

[Mr. Speaker.]

2. Are building materials destined for Patricia Bay first shipped to Comox and then back to Patricia Bay? If so, what is the reason for this arrangement?

Mr. Egan Chambers (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): The answer is as follows:

1. There is no contract between the Department of National Defence and any particular firm for the transportation of material from Comox to Patricia Bay.

2. Records of the department do not indicate any recent shipments of building materials from Comox to Patricia Bay. If the hon. member has some information about a particular case he would like investigated, the department would be happy to look into such a matter for him.

T.C.A. LANDING FEES

Question No. 182—Mr. Badanai:

1. Is Trans-Canada Air Lines charging landing fees at Canadian airports?
2. If so, what is the charge for aircraft such as Viscounts, Jet air liners?
3. What are the landing fees charged to foreign air liners (a) Viscount class (b) Comet (c) Jet?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): The answer to part 1 of this question is that Trans-Canada Air Lines do not operate any airports and consequently do not impose landing fees.

The answer to parts 2 and 3 is that aircraft landing fees charged to air liners by the Department of Transport are based on rates per thousand pounds gross take-off weight and vary depending on whether the flight is domestic, transborder or transoceanic. The following fees will be assessed for the aircraft in question:

	Maximum Gross Take-off Weight	Domestic	Trans-Border	Trans-Oceanic
Viscount	64,500	$16.25	$ 16.25	$ 86.45
DC-8	287,500	86.40	100.80	434.90
Comet 4	162,000	48.60	56.70	244.65

BORDEN-TORMENTINE FERRIES

Question No. 183—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. What is the target date for the completion of the new motor vessel under construction at Halifax for the Borden-Tormentine ferry service?
2. Has a name been chosen for this vessel and, if so, what?
3. How many motors will the vessel have, and what is the horsepower rating of each?
4. How many propellors or screws will this vessel have?
5. Will it be possible to transfer all the power to one propeller or screw?
6. How many motor vehicles will the vessel accommodate, and on what length per vehicle is the accommodation calculated?
7. What is the over-all length of the vessel, and what is the draft?

8. Will the vessel be equipped with rails for the transport of railway cars?

9. How many motors has the motor vessel Abegweit, and what is the total horsepower rating?

10. How many propellers or screws has the Abegweit, and can all the power be transferred to one propeller or screw?

11. How many motor vehicles will the Abegweit accommodate, and on what length per vehicle is this accommodation calculated?

12. What is the over-all length and draft of the Abegweit?

13. How many motor vehicles will the S.S. Prince Edward Island accommodate?

14. On what length per motor vehicle is such calculation based?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): The answer to this question is as follows:

Part 1. November, 1961.

Part 3. Four propulsion motors, each 1,300 shaft horsepower.

Part 4. Four. Two forward and two aft.

Part 5. No. Full power (2,600 horsepower) can be obtained through two propellers either forward or aft, the power through one shaft being restricted by the 1,300 horsepower design limit in each propulsion motor.

Part 6. Sixty six 18.0′ vehicles.

Part 7. 279′6″ over-all length. Load draft 13′.

Part 8. No.

Part 9. The Abegweit has four propulsion motors, each 3,850 shaft horsepower for a total of 15,400.

Part 10. Four. Full power (7,700 horsepower) can be obtained through two propellers either forward or aft, the power through one shaft being restricted by the 3,850 horsepower design limit in each propulsion motor.

Part 11. Seventy 18.0′ vehicles when carrying 16 railway freight cars.

130—18′0 vehicles when carrying no railway freight cars.

Part 12. 372′6″ over-all length. Load draft 19 feet.

Part 13. Thirty five vehicles when carrying ten railway freight cars.

Seventy five vehicles when carrying no railway freight cars.

Part 14. Eighteen feet.

Any further information may be obtained from the architects.

QUEBEC—LIMITATIONS UNDER TAX-SHARING ARRANGEMENT

Question No. 184—Mr. Pickersgill:

In the tax-sharing arrangement provided in the legislation of 1956 and accepted by the government of Quebec, is there any limitation on the constitutional right of that province to levy and collect any tax it would have the right to levy under the constitution?

Starred Questions

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the form of this question, which reads:

In the tax-sharing arrangement provided in the legislation of 1956 and accepted by the government of Quebec, is there any limitation on the constitutional right of that province to levy and collect any tax it would have the right to levy under the constitution?

I presume that by his reference to the legislation of 1956 the hon. member means the Federal-Provincial Tax-Sharing Arrangements Act, but you will note, Mr. Speaker, the statement that "the arrangement provided in the legislation" was accepted by the government in Quebec. I am not aware of any arrangement accepted or any agreement entered into by the government of Quebec in pursuance of that legislation. On the contrary, the province of Quebec did not enter into any tax rental or collection agreement under or in pursuance of the terms of that particular statute.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. gentleman read the question correctly, then substituted a word which is not in the question. He substituted the word "agreement", which has nothing to do with the question whatsoever, for the word "arrangement". The hon. gentleman is perfectly well aware that the government of the province of Quebec did accept that arrangement and has been receiving equalization payments, and I suggest it would be desirable if, instead of misrepresenting the question, the hon. gentleman would answer it.

Mr. Speaker: There seems to be some difference of opinion about the facts, if facts are involved. It seems to me that the question asks for an opinion, and perhaps it should not have been accepted for the order paper at all.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The comment of the hon. member cannot pass unnoticed. The province of Quebec did not enter into any arrangement in pursuance of the terms of that legislation, and no play on words can change the fact.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I say Quebec did not accept any arrangement under the terms of that legislation.

Mr. Speaker: I think this matter should probably be deferred to a time when a debate can take place on it, because there seems to be a very distinct difference of opinion as to the facts.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Motion No. 61—Mr. Racine:

For a copy of coverage instructions C-411, C-440 to C-444 inclusive, and of any amendments thereto, with regard to employment in forestry, as contained in the new insurance coverage manual issued in October 1955 by the unemployment insurance commission, together with the corresponding instructions contained in the insurance coverage manual issued in January 1950.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): This is a request similar to one which appeared on the order paper under notices of motions for production of papers last week, and I can only offer my objection to it based on the decision of the unemployment insurance commission that the instructions which go out to the staff and which, taken together, constitute the manual of instructions, are of a confidential and private nature dealing with matters of internal administration which it would not be in the public interest to produce.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the explanation given by the minister, does the hon. member in whose name the motion stands wish to proceed?

Mr. Racine: I withdraw my motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

OTTAWA—EVACUATION PRIORITIES IN EVENT OF NUCLEAR WAR

Motion No. 72—Mr. Regier:

For a listing of names and addresses on a priority basis of all those people who are supposed to be moved out of Ottawa to a supposedly safe place of refuge in case of a nuclear war.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I dealt with this notice of motion on Monday. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is in New York and I understand he will not be back for some weeks. I wonder if this notice could now be dropped.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the difficulty, but perhaps it could stand until the return of the hon. member. I think it is irregular to drop a motion from the order paper without the consent of the sponsor.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): A question such as this might stand on the order paper for weeks or months. Would it not be proper either to vote on it now or to drop it? The hon. member concerned could reintroduce it upon his return.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): According to my present information the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is now in New York attending the United Nations general assembly meeting, but I understand he will be back within a period of not more than two and a half weeks. It is therefore only a question of waiting for about two or three weeks.

Mr. Green: I explained on Monday why the government cannot give this information, and I thought all the members of the house were satisfied.

Mr. Brunsden: On a point of order, as I recall it this question arose the other day and the hon. member who sponsored it agreed to withdraw it. I think, therefore, it would be proper for one of his colleagues to endorse such action today.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member has misunderstood the situation. Where a motion stands in the name of an hon. member who is absent it would be improper for the house to dispose of it without his concurrence, and the appropriate course which seems open is to allow the motion to stand even though that may cause some inconvenience. Perhaps it could stand until the hon. member returns.

Mr. Winch: I can assure Your Honour that the hon. member will be back in about two and a half weeks.

DISCONTINUANCE OF STEEL STATISTICS

Motion No. 73—Mr. Argue:

For a copy of all correspondence and other documents exchanged between the government and any person, organization, or industry since January 1, 1960, regarding the discontinuance of publication of statistical material, relating to steel operating rates and steel producing capacity, by the dominion bureau of statistics.

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, some doubts have been raised as to whether tabling of the information requested would be a violation of section 15 of the Statistics Act. Would the hon. member be agreeable to this motion standing until this point has been investigated?

Motion stands.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS, CASUAL EMPLOYEES

Motion No. 74—Mr. Roberge:

For a copy of a resolution of protest addressed by the chamber of commerce of St. Charles de Bellechasse to the Minister of Labour, with regard to unemployment insurance benefits denied to casual employees, and a copy of the minister's reply thereto.

Motion agreed to.

PROJECTION OF PROVINCIAL TAX RECEIPTS

Motion No. 75—Mr. Pickersgill:

For a projection for the fiscal years covered by the new federal proposal of the document entitled "Hypothetical illustration of provincial receipts for 1962-63 under federal proposal assuming growth of 5 per cent per annum in yields of standard taxes" which was made public on February 23, 1961, in connection with the proposal made to the federal-provincial conference.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, by this motion the hon. member is asking for the tabling of "a projection for the fiscal years covered by the new federal proposal of the document entitled 'Hypothetical illustration of provincial receipts for 1962-63 under federal proposal assuming growth of 5 per cent per annum in yields of standard taxes' which was made public on February 23, 1961, in connection with the proposal made to the federal-provincial conference."

There is some ambiguity here, Mr. Speaker, in referring to this document described within the quotation marks. I tabled yesterday the document that is described within the quotation marks, and it appears in the appendix to yesterday's Hansard at page 2765. That document was made public at the time of the conference a few days ago. If the words in the resolution, namely "which was made public on February 23, 1961" apply to the projection and not to the document, then I must say that the projection was never made public. Mr. Speaker, there were many calculations and projections on various bases that were prepared within the federal Department of Finance for the use and instruction of the delegates of the federal government to this conference. They were not made public; they were not made documents of the conference; they were not handed to the provinces; and there are very good reasons why these documents, having been prepared for the use of ministers, should not be made public. It would not be in public interest to do so.

Mr. Speaker: In the light of that explanation would the hon. member wish to withdraw and rephrase his motion with a view to clarifying the issue?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I do not really think that there is any ambiguity, and I can clear that point up at once.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. gentleman is satisfied with his motion I shall put it. I just raised the question whether he wanted, in view of the explanation, to withdraw and reintroduce his motion.

Mr. Pickersgill: I understood, sir, that the motion had not yet been put, and wondered if I might be permitted, as the minister was permitted, before the motion was put to make some explanation indicating precisely what I had in mind. If I might be permitted to do that I think I can—

Division

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think it would be in order for the hon. member, in view of what the minister has said, to explain what he meant by the motion before it is put to the house. If any hon. member wishes to raise a contrary view on a point of order I will hear it; otherwise I will hear the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, what I was seeking to get by this motion was simply the figures comparable to those in the document which is in Hansard of yesterday—the minister was good enough to make them public, and I thank him—for each of the four following years in the top part of that table, because any judgments that we might wish to make would be based upon those figures. I think it is clear enough what is meant by the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Does the minister accept or reject this motion with the explanation?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, for the reasons I have given the government cannot accept this motion.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Pickersgill), which was negatived on the following division:

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

REPORTED INTENTION TO INTRODUCE DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he can give the house some indication of the nature of the draft declaration of human rights which the Prime Minister has stated in London he will be introducing into the current session of the commonwealth prime ministers' conference?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is not my understanding of the situation. In the course of an interview upon arrival in London I think there was some discussion about the question of a declaration of rights but I do not believe there was any statement that such a declaration was going to be introduced.

Mr. Pearson: I am judging from the press reports, all of which gave that impression. So may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether such a declaration is to be introduced by the Canadian Prime Minister?

Mr. Green: I am not in a position to answer that question at the moment.

THE BUDGET

INQUIRY AS TO PROBABLE DATE OF PRESENTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I wonder whether the minister is able to inform the house when he expects to make his main budget statement to parliament?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious it is going to be later than usual. I would be in a position to indicate that it would be at an earlier date than I now can so indicate if we had made rapid progress in the house with the measures put forward in the supplementary budget of December 20.

Mr. Chevrier: You have been holding them up yourself.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, no. The opposition know the reasons. Quite a long time has been spent on these measures and, however the opposition may feel about them, the fact is that the longer the time spent on those measures the later necessarily will be the presentation of the main budget. Beyond that I cannot say anything at the present time. The sooner the business arising out of the supplementary budget is disposed of, the sooner the main budget can be introduced.

Mr. Argue: Can the minister say whether this means that the budget will be introduced after the Easter recess?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is a certainty, Mr. Speaker, that it would not be possible now to introduce the budget prior to the Easter recess.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GLEN EXELBY—INQUIRY AS TO EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. C. Henderson (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Labour tell the house the circumstances of Mr. Glen Exelby, who was depicted in the main role of the C.B.C. program "Close-Up" last night, and inform the house whether the national employment service is doing anything to secure employment for him?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was good enough to give me notice of his intention to ask this question and I checked immediately with the unemployment insurance commission office at Hamilton. They inform me that Mr. Glen Excelby is on file at their office. He registered there for employment on September 9. He had quit his previous employment as a salesman at $6,000 per year and had given the reason that there was "no future". On November 29 he was referred as a salesman at $350 per month to Service Steel and Engineering in Hamilton and worked there from December 13 until January 30 when he was laid off.

At about this time he answered an advertisement put out by the C.B.C. requesting a white collar worker for a television program. Apparently he was successful in obtaining this employment and I am informed that it was remunerative to the extent of $25 per day during the shooting of the program which, including rehearsals, lasted for a number of weeks.

On February 24 the unemployment insurance commission office in Hamilton offered Mr. Exelby a position as a foreman at Frost Metal Products which he turned down. He said at that time that he was considering three other offers and also indicated that he was not anxious to accept a position in view of the forthcoming appearance of the television program. I was informed this morning, Mr. Speaker, that as a result of his appearance on the program he has had offers of work in Montreal, Hull and Sudbury. He has informed the Hamilton unemployment insurance commission office that he will review the offers which have come to him as a result of the program and if none is satisfactory he will once again apply for work. I am very sorry that the program did not reveal these facts also.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether the facts he has just stated have been brought to the attention of the Canadian Broadcasing Corporation and, if so, has the minister received any observations from the corporation in connection with this program?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, if the C.B.C. wants any real facts before launching upon a program of this kind they can easily obtain them.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): As a supplementary question may I ask the Minister of Labour whether he brought these facts to the attention of his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue?

Mr. Starr: The Minister of National Revenue is away from Ottawa at this moment. I have ascertained these facts from our unemployment insurance commission office in Hamilton.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I should like to inquire of the Minister of Labour if the advertisement put out by the C.B.C. in respect of this telecast required a white collar worker to fill in on this particular program.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I personally did not see the advertisement. The information I have given to the house was supplied to me by the unemployment insurance commission office.

Mr. E. W. Brunsden (Medicine Hat): Will the minister take into consideration the question of advising his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, that the facts he has produced in this house should be promulgated through the C.B.C. in refutation of the program last night?

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. Will the minister ascertain whether or not this person reported his employment with the C.B.C. to the unemployment insurance office in Hamilton?

Mr. Starr: I can ascertain that.

[Later:]

Mr. Grant Campbell (Stormont): In the absence of the Minister of National Revenue may I ask the parliamentary secretary this question. I regret that I have not been able to give notice of it. The question is this. Do all C.B.C. extemporaneous interviews require several weeks of coaching?

Mr. Speaker: If the question were one of direct responsibility, I think perhaps it would not be so urgent that it might not go on the order paper. However, as it is a question for the C.B.C., perhaps the parliamentary secretary would take it as notice.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, that is a matter within the technical competence of the C.B.C. We will make inquiries.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION OF TREATY BY PARLIAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Senator John Sparkman, of the committee on foreign relations in the United States, announced that the processing of the treaty between the United States and Canada concerning the co-operative development of the water resources of the Columbia river basin would start before the United States senate at 10 a.m. this morning. My question is, when will the government place this matter on the order paper so that consideration may be given to it by the parliament of Canada?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): The situation with regard to the Columbia has already been explained to the house on more than one occasion within the last few weeks. As yet, there has been no agreement reached with the province of British Columbia.

REQUEST FOR LIST OF OUTSTANDING RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask the Acting Secretary of State what progress has been made in preparing the list of returns which have not been completed, a list which the Secretary of State agreed nearly two weeks ago to compile.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Secretary of State): I have asked for this information but as yet I have not received a report. I will pursue my inquiries.

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER SALES TO CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether he is in a position to answer now a question I addressed to his parliamentary secretary regarding the Canadian wheat delegation in Hong Kong visiting Peking in connection with wheat sales to that country.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): I am very sorry but I do believe that in the public interest I can say no more than I said in answer to the hon. member a short time ago. We did have representatives in that area. They are now back in Canada, and other representatives are going out shortly.

REPORTED U.S. LOBBY FOR TARIFF AGAINST CANADIAN BREAD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. N. L. Spencer (Essex West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that it has been reported that a group of bakers have renewed a campaign or lobby in the United States congress seeking to obtain the imposition of a tariff against the importation from Canada of Canadian-made bread, will he inform the house whether he is aware of this report and whether representations and a protest will be made to the proper authorities through the usual channels?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the ever alert member for Essex West for bringing this matter to my attention on behalf of the bakers of the city of Windsor to whom it is a real problem. I can assure him that my department is looking into the matter. I hope to have a satisfactory answer to give to him very shortly.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the ever alert Secretary of State for External Affairs if he will be good enough to make representations to strengthen the obviously weaker representation that might be made by his colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think we have already been working on this problem.

PROPOSED U.S. RESTRICTIONS ON TOURIST IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. It is based on a Canadian Press report originating in Washington on Monday to this effect:

> A congressional committee has deferred action on President Kennedy's proposal to reduce the maximum duty-free allowance on tourist goods to $100 from $500—

And these are the important words:

> —to permit further clarification of the Canadian position.

Can the minister say what position, if any, the government is taking on this important question, and what action has been taken to date.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): This question was also taken up with the United States government some time ago.

Mr. Garland: I have a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the minister responsible, namely, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources who I regret is not in his place today has said that this proposed legislation would have little effect, and in view of the fact that when the Prime Minister was in Washington on February 20 he said that he had heard of no objection by Canada, can the minister not say what position or attitude the government is taking? Is it opposed to this imposition?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister dealt with this question on February 7. The hon. member will find that at page 1795 of Hansard. My department is following up on this particular question and we will do whatever is possible in order to see that nothing is done which will harm Canada.

Mr. Garland: From that reply, can we take it that the government is opposed?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

USE OF U.S. MADE FOOTBALLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack Wratten (Brantford): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister aware of the fact that the directors of the Canadian football league recently decided to use a football manufactured in the United States, notwithstanding the fact that from the inception of this game in Canada the ball, hand manufactured and hand sewn by A. G. Spalding and Sons in Brantford—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will have to pay an advertisement tax if he continues his question. It is not really a matter relating to the administrative responsibility of the minister, even though it may be very interesting to the hon. member.

[Later:]

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might answer the question asked by the hon. member for Brantford.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister says it is part of his administrative responsibility and that I have been in error I will allow him to answer it.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, anything that involves the jobs of Canadians is very much of interest to my department.

I have been made aware of this situation by the hon. member for Brantford who gave me notice of this question. I want to assure the house that I am very much interested in this problem and that I am seeking further information in order that I may discuss the matter with the Canadian football league. The hon. member for Winnipeg South informs me that he is taking the question up with the commissioner of the Canadian football league in Winnipeg. I might add that from my own experience I always found the Canadian football to be 100 per cent satisfactory under all conditions, and I am sure all Canadians will agree that Canadian made sporting goods should be used in playing Canadian games, particularly when they are well made and fairly priced as in the case in question.

HOUSING

QUEBEC CITY—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT ON URBAN RENEWAL STUDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works, I should like to ask his parliamentary secretary whether the report on the urban renewal study conducted in Quebec city during 1959 and 1960 has been referred to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and if so, whether copies of that report will be tabled in the house.

Mr. Y. R. Tassé (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like first to thank my colleague from Levis for giving me notice of this question.

After making inquiries of the C.M.H.C., which is subsidizing this study, I have been informed that the commission which had been instructed by Quebec municipal authorities to look into the matter of housing and urban renewal in that most beautiful and interesting city has not yet submitted its report.

As to the second part of the question, I shall bring it to the minister's attention.

TRANSPORT

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—REPORTED INTENTION TO ABANDON B.C. SUBDIVISION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport with regard to a problem that is a football between the government and the transport board. In view of the announcement that it is the intention of the canadian Pacific Railway to abandon the Coquihalla subdivision of the Kettle Valley railroad; and in view of the united opposition of all the municipalities, organizations and persons affected in southeastern British Columbia; will the minister inform the house if the government intends to take any action to prevent this further failure of the company to recognize its responsibilities to the people of southeastern British Columbia?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, an application to abandon the operation of its Coquihalla subdivision has been filed by Canadian Pacific Railway company with the board of transport commissioners.

The board, according to its rules of practice, is allowing the prescribed time for submissions of those opposed to the application and for the railway company's reply. Following receipt of these, the board expects to hold a public hearing in the matter.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MONCTON—REPORTED INTENTION TO CEASE MAKING MAJOR REPAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last the hon. member for Kent, New Brunswick, asked if it is the intention of the Canadian National Railways to cease making major repairs to first class cars in Moncton.

The management of the railway advise that substantial reductions in revenue passenger miles over the past 5 years have brought about a corresponding substantial decrease in repair requirements. The acquisition of newer equipment has lengthened the average shopping cycle for passenger cars. In light of this it is the intention to gradually discontinue heavy repairs to passenger equipment at Moncton. Light passenger repairs will continue to be performed. The men so engaged in the heavy repair work are being transferred to freight car and other work. The matter is now in the discussion stage with the appropriate employees' representatives.

Mr. W. L. M. Creaghan (Westmorland): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Is the minister aware that as recently as February 18th the C.N.R. at Moncton announced that the space presently used by the passenger car shop and the freight car section would now both be used for the conversion of 200 steel frame box cars to livestock units; that coaches were to be converted to bunk and feeding units and that smaller box cars were going to be converted to work equipment? In view of that fact, I wonder whether the minister would ascertain from the C.N.R. if this announcement made in Moncton on February 18 has any relationship with the suspension of major repairs at the Moncton shops to heavy passenger equipment as anticipated in the minister's answer today.

Mr. Balcer: I shall be very glad to make that inquiry.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON LAMPREY CONTROL MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. E. Nixon (Algoma West): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Will the minister make a statement to the house soon as to what program his department has prepared in order to deal with the lamprey problem? I am especially interested in—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think perhaps the hon. member is anticipating something that might be dealt with on the estimates. A question was asked a few weeks ago about that matter, but it is properly a matter to be dealt with on the estimates.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

RESOLUTIONS REQUESTING BRINGING INTO FORCE OF SECTION 96(A) OF ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration of which notice was given. I wish to ask with regard to the present status of any resolutions by the Indian bands in British Columbia requesting that section 96(a), subsection 2, of the Indian Act be brought into force and the names of the bands which have submitted such resolutions.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, about 20 resolutions have been received from the bands. In accordance with subsection 5(b) of section 96(a) of the Indian Act six of those resolutions have been forwarded to the attorney general of the province. Some of the others had to be returned to the bands concerned for redrafting. When these are received in the appropriate form they in turn will be forwarded to the attorney general of the province of British Columbia. The resolutions which have been forwarded were from the Tsitsk band of the Babine agency; the Bella Coola band of the Bella Coola agency; the Kincolith band and the Metlakatla band of the Skeena river agency; and the Canyon city band and Gitlakdamix band of the Terrace agency.

Mr. Howard: I wonder if the minister would accept my congratulations for having wound her tongue around those difficult words with such facility.

UNITED NATIONS

DISARMAMENT—INQUIRY AS TO RESUMPTION OF DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Now that the second portion of the United Nations general assembly has begun, would the hon. gentleman tell the house what he considers to be the prospects for the resumption of the 10-power discussions on disarmament?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): It is too early yet for an accurate forecast to be made as to the date on which negotiations will be resumed or the forum. As the hon. member knows, there has been a considerable relaxation of tension and I think there are reasonable prospects that the United States and the Soviet Union will be willing to enter into negotiations on disarmament later in the year.

As far as the present session of the general assembly is concerned, the Canadian resolution co-sponsored by 19 countries is still in good standing and it calls for an early resumption of negotiations. It also recommends the appointment of an impartial chairman, possibly a citizen of Switzerland, and the setting up by the United Nations disarmament commission of ad hoc committees to assist the negotiators.

We are not yet certain when disarmament will be discussed in the general assembly but the whole disarmament picture looks considerably brighter today than it did before Christmas.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Can the minister tell us when the three-power talks with regard to the cessation of nuclear tests are likely to be resumed?

Mr. Green: The date is not yet certain either, but they will be resumed at a much earlier date than the talks on general disarmament. I hope it will be only a matter of a few weeks before the nuclear test talks are taken up again.

[Later:]

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him whether the Canadian position with regard to nuclear weapons remains as it was established last December, when the Canadian delegation accepted the Irish resolution on this subject?

Mr. Green: Canada supported the Irish resolution directed against the spread of nuclear weapons. That was in December, and at that time our spokesman at the United Nations explained that this position could not be held indefinitely but would depend on what progress was made in bringing about disarmament and a relaxation of tension. That is still the situation.

Mr. Pearson: Does the Acting Prime Minister consider that holding a position from December to March is holding it indefinitely?

Mr. Green: The Leader of the Opposition can be quite sure that the attitude taken by Canada on this question will be eminently reasonable and fair.

FINANCE

ESTABLISHMENT OF SECONDARY MORTGAGE MARKET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister say what progress is being made toward the establishment of a secondary mortgage market in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is raising a somewhat general issue affecting government policy which he can hardly expect to have declared in answer to a question on the orders of the day, particularly at this time of the afternoon.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO PURPOSE OF MAGAZINE "POSTMARK"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General with reference to a magazine entitled Postmark, printed by the Queen's printer, in which I see three pictures of the Postmaster General together with the pictures of six Tory members of parliament. My question is this. Has this magazine any purpose besides the carrying on of Tory propaganda at the expense of the hon. gentleman's department?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): The purpose of the magazine is to keep postal employees informed of what is going on in the post offices. If it so happens that the Postmaster General and other hon. members supporting this government take an interest in postal affairs and take the trouble to see what is happening, that is going to be reported. If the hon. member for St. Denis were to put his foot into a post office once in a while we should be glad to report that, too.

TARIFF BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS INCREASING MEMBERSHIP, PROVIDING FOR SALARIES, ETC.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-74, to amend the Tariff Board Act.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I do not intend to add at length to the remarks I made concerning this legislation when we were considering the resolution yesterday. On December 20 the minister indicated that the board had before it in addition to the normal number of appeals from the Department of National Revenue a substantial number of references covering a wide range of industries. The hon. gentleman listed some six or seven, I believe, and he referred to eight in his remarks yesterday. I would assume that the tariff board has, perhaps, completed its studies with regard to some of the subjects mentioned in December and perhaps the minister could give us, when we get into committee, a list of the references which are presently before the board in an incomplete state, the eight to which he referred last night.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I would be pleased to do that.

Mr. Benidickson: The tariff board, as we all know, has been doing a tremendous amount of work. The creation of a second panel should be encouraged so as to keep up with the work that is suggested it should do. I think it is much preferable to have tariff studies of representations made in a public way as they are through the tariff board after public notice of the hearings is given across the country than to have our changes in tariffs upward or downward depending upon the representations made secretly or privately to a minister of the government.

I think the tariff board, by the exhaustive studies which it has produced and which are printed, has impressed those individuals who read the studies in regard to the thoroughness with which these investigations are generally carried out. The minister has indicated that this increase in the board will accelerate the progress of the work which is necessary. I think those associated with me in this party will likely support the bill.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the bill sets out in some detail the provisions that were forecast in the resolution. The tariff board will be given the power to sit as two panels simultaneously, and there is a provision allowing the chairman to direct that any inquiries under section 4 may be made by any member or members of the board designated by him. It appears obvious, therefore, that when the measure is passed and becomes law the board, both in dealing with appeals and in making certain inquiries, will be in a position to do a much larger amount of work. We still feel that this bill cannot be separated from the other changes that are being made in the customs tariff having to do with the definition of goods of a class or kind, and that the insertion of the word "approximately" will mean that the tariff board will have a host of applications to deal with that it would not otherwise have. This seems a part of the government program, to change the rules on tariffs in such a way as to provide higher tariffs for a much larger range of goods. This underlines something we have suspected for a long time; that the present government is following an old traditional Tory policy in providing a higher level of tariffs.

When the measure was being discussed in committee certain questions were asked of the minister and I hope that he will give the house the information that was asked for at that time. He was asked how many applications before the board have to do with the question of class or kind and I hope that he will inform the house as to the statistics in this regard. I feel this kind of information should be brought before the house. I believe we are entitled to receive it and I hope that in closing the debate the minister will take the opportunity of presenting it.

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I am interested in receiving that information which the former speaker has referred to. I believe the Minister of Finance said yesterday that 69 cases were awaiting appeal and I would like to know how many of those refer to class or kind goods.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief. I shall be pleased to furnish the information requested by several hon. members, but feel the appropriate place to do so is in committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Flynn in the chair.

On clause 1—Constitution of board.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Welland asked how many of the 69 appeals now pending before the tariff board concern cases where the class or kind definition is involved. I am informed on inquiry that there are 17 such cases and three other cases where this question may possibly be involved either directly or indirectly.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River asked for a tabulation as to the eight references pending before the board. They are as follows, Mr. Chairman: No. 120 is the chemicals reference. The hearings on this important and very comprehensive reference began in 1960 and will probably continue throughout 1961 and perhaps beyond. The second is No. 123, the radio, television and electronics reference. No. 125 is the textiles reference: there have been several reports received from the tariff board in this regard but the reference is not complete as yet so far as reports are concerned.

The next is No. 127, in relation to nails. The hearings on this reference have been held but the report has not yet been submitted. The next is No. 128, a reference concerning engineers' and architects' plans, drawings and blueprints. The hearings in regard to this reference were held last month, but of course the report has not yet been received. No. 129 is the reference on tableware and glassware for decorating. The hearings on this reference are scheduled to commence on March 20.

The next is No. 130, a reference concerning machinery and equipment for use in the mining industry and the oil and gas industries. The hearings on this reference have been scheduled for May, June and September next. The next is No. 131, a reference respecting oilseeds, vegetable oils and related products. The hearings have not yet been held in this regard. Obviously the plans in relation to the scheduling of these remaining references will depend of course on the passage of the present bill and the ability of the tariff board then to commence sitting in two panels.

Mr. McIlraith: Is the minister in a position to indicate the extent to which he envisages the increased work of the tariff board will arise out of references from the government or from an increased number of appeals?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I am not in a position to indicate any further references at this particular time. I have given the committee a full report as to the backlog of both the references and appeals now on the board's docket and awaiting adjudication.

Mr. McIlraith: What I am seeking to get at is this. By the 1956 amendment and this amendment we are really more than doubling the capacity of the board. I wonder whether the minister would care to project his opinion as to how much of this increased capacity would be used in dealing with references, and how much with the appeal side of the board's work.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is very difficult to answer that question with any degree of precision, Mr. Chairman. I cannot foresee what may be the situation a year from now in respect of further appeals or further references, but it is quite apparent that the work load of the board has been increased very substantially. The committee is aware of the number of references that I have directed to the board in the last three years and eight months, and several of the references to the board have been extremely heavy. The chemicals reference which has been pending for several years is one of the largest ever directed to the board and it is anticipated that from the time the hearings commenced until the report of the board might be expected, as long as two years might be consumed.

The textiles reference was of very large proportions. It is nearly concluded but it has occupied a great deal of the time of the board.

Mr. McIlraith: I take it from what the minister has said there are no particular references that he proposes making to the board that will require this enlargement. He is enlarging the board to meet the general increase in work which is anticipated as opposed to some particular matters which he intends to refer to the board.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): If the hon. member would look at the discussion we had yesterday he would find that I explained that the immediate reason for asking parliament to enlarge the board is that the board may more quickly reduce the very large backlog of work now standing on its docket. It is so large a backlog that there is going to be, I think, prejudice resulting from delays unless this action now proposed is taken to enlarge the board so that it may sit in two panels.

This measure is the outcome of my discussions with the chairman of the board who has been greatly concerned over this backlog. It has been a matter of some anxiety to him that these cases should be piling up and that he, in arranging the work of the board, is compelled to confine the sittings of the board to one panel. He has given me to understand that there may be some considerable delay in disposing of the cases now on the docket, both references and appeals, unless the kind of help that this bill promises is forthcoming.

Mr. McIlraith: I thank the minister for his explanation but I think he will appreciate—if he will recall it—than in previous years, and I think each year, I made it clear that it was a desirable step to enlarge the board, but I did wish to get it clearly on the record that it was a requirement arising out of the ordinary work before the board for this to be done.

There is one other point, if I may make reference to it, concerning this clause, and it arises out of the proposed new section 3, the latter part of the clause. Can the minister advise us whether it is intended that the first vice-chairman or the second vice-chairman, as the case may be, should preside at sittings of the board in the absence of the chairman? There is a little confusion as to this.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the answer to this is to be found in subclause 3 of clause 3 of the act as it is proposed to be amended by clause 1 of the bill. The arrangement of the work of the board and the decision as to what members shall be designated to constitute the two panels is, of course, a matter for the chairman. The arrangement of the work of the board is, of course, eminently a matter for decision by him. It is, I believe, his intention that the first vice-chairman should ordinarily preside over the second panel and he, the chairman, should preside over the first panel to be set up.

Mr. McIlraith: May I just pursue the point a bit further. There is one very small aspect concerning the matter, and it has to do with the part of clause 3 coming immediately after (2)(c), which reads in this way:

> —and the chairman shall preside at any sittings of the board at which he is present and shall designate one of the vice-chairmen or other members to preside at any sittings of the board at which he is not present.

What I am coming to is this. I should hope that the chairman would in his absence designate that the first vice-chairman or the second vice-chairman should preside at any sittings of the board in those circumstances; but as I read this clause it leaves him quite free to designate any other member of the board to act as chairman in his absence, and I would hope that that would not happen because it could be the sort of thing that would weaken the administrative authority of the first vice-chairman or the second vice-chairman, as the case may be. It is on that narrow point, a very narrow one, admittedly, that I should like clarification.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I would invite the attention of the hon. member to the provisions of subclause 3 which provide that:

> If the chairman is absent or is unable to act or if the office is vacant, the first vice-chairman has and may exercise and perform all the powers and functions of the chairman, and if the chairman and the first vice-chairman are absent or are unable to act or if those offices are vacant, the second vice-chairman has and may exercise and perform all the powers and functions of the chairman.

As I also indicated, Mr. Chairman, it is the indicated intention of the chairman ordinarily to designate the first vice-chairman to preside over the second panel in ordinary cases.

Now, there must, of course, be some flexibility in these matters. Illness can overtake the chairman or the first vice-chairman and that is the reason why flexibility is retained. It is retained because of the duty that rests on the chairman to arrange the work of the board, but ordinarily, when the board is at full strength, you will find the chairman and two other members of the board sitting in the first panel and the first vice-chairman and two other members of the board sitting in the second panel.

Mr. McIlraith: Subclause 3 at the bottom of the page does not seem to deal with the point I raised, but the minister's explanation seems to set out a wholly satisfactory procedure in these cases. I should like to draw his attention to what may be a looseness of wording in the part I quoted, as follows:

> —and the chairman shall preside at any sittings of the board at which he is present and shall designate one of the vice-chairmen or other members to preside at any sittings of the board at which he is not present.

In other words, there is no limitation whatever on the circumstances in which he can designate, we will say for the purposes of argument, the newest member of the board to sit as chairman of the board in his own absence even although the vice-chairman and the second vice-chairman are available. It is a small point.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This language was written in a deliberately broad form because of the need of allowing flexibility and because of the responsibility that rests on the chairman for organizing the work of the board. We have a very capable chairman. I think all hon. members have confidence in the chairman of the board. I have had some high compliments paid to the board and to Mr. Audette by persons who had occasion to appear before the board as now constituted.

There must be flexibility here. It would be very easy to conceive of a situation where, let us say, the chairman, the second vice-chairman and one other member of the board are sitting on a reference in panel No. 1 and the first vice-chairman and two other members of the board are sitting in panel No. 2. Let us say the first vice-chairman is taken ill. It is not possible to disturb the composition of the first panel in the middle of what might be a quite extended and involved reference in order to take the second vice-chairman out of that panel so that he may then preside in the second panel. It might be only a temporary situation. Under these circumstances it might be necessary for the three other members of the board to be designated by the chairman to constitute the second panel. In that case I presume that ordinarily if the first and second vice-chairmen are not available for that second panel for such reasons as I have suggested, the chairman would designate the next senior member to preside in the second panel.

Mr. Hellyer: Can the minister give any indication as to how soon after the bill becomes law the new members of the board will be appointed?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I would hope reasonably soon because the chairman has been making some tentative plans in the hope that parliament would be passing this measure, and it would be my hope that the appointments could be made soon after the bill has received royal assent, if it pleases the two houses of parliament to approve it.

Mr. Benidickson: I should like to ask the minister what the present salary schedules are. I notice that we are creating a second vice-chairman for the first time. Will this involve any margin of salary beyond that of an ordinary member?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The present salaries are as follows: the chairman of the board, $16,900; the two vice-chairmen, $14,500 each, and members of the board $13,500 each. The bill does not make any change in the salaries, of course. The two vice-chairmen will become respectively the first vice-chairman and the second vice-chairman under the new measure and the new members would be entitled to the salary of members of the board, namely $13,500, until such time as that might be changed.

Mr. Benidickson: With reference to subsection 8 under subclause 2, what advantage is there in adding the word "functions"? We have had reference to the word "powers" before but now we are adding the word "functions". What is the addition of that word going to mean?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a study of the present act the draftsman thought that this was a desirable enlargement. I do not point to anything of a specific nature, but it was considered that the present expression referring to powers was not as broad as it might be and that the word "functions" should be added to indicate more broadly the responsibilities of the board and the way the board operates.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Inquiry made by one or more members.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, under the old subsection 8 of section 5 of the act it was previously deemed advisable to stipulate that at least two members would serve in the conducting of certain inquiries. I recall that those inquiries included inquiries relating to enhancement of prices or inquiries equivalent to those under the Combines Investigation Act. Under the amendment I notice that the chairman is not obliged to assign at least two members to inquiries of that kind and instead is seemingly given the discretion to assign only one member of the tariff board to such inquiries although parliament previously thought that inquiries of this type were of such public importance that at least two members of the board should sit in those circumstances.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member is aware that under the present statute one member can hold inquiries of certain kinds. In other cases two members are required to constitute a board for the purposes of the inquiry. As the hon. member is aware, it has been the practice after such a hearing for the whole board to participate in the decision.

So far as references are concerned, of course, the board has operated as a full board. Not fewer than three members have sat on the references. Again, the slight modification that is contained here is designed in the interests of flexibility and of trying to make the best use of the available manpower of the board having regard to the volume of work. It is not the intention of the board to reduce the size of panels conducting inquiries in pursuance of references.

As a rule, the appeals have been heard by one member of the board sitting alone and then the board as a whole has made a decision, but the hearing has been conducted by one member of the board. Therefore the modification that is made here is a very slight one indeed. It should not be taken as intended to do more than provide a slightly greater measure of flexibility and should not be interpreted as indicating any intended departure from the practice of the board according to its present procedures.

Mr. Benidickson: It is obvious, Mr. Chairman, that there must be some departure because under the old wording the chairman was bound to assign at least two members of the board if the inquiry related to combinations which enhanced prices or was an inquiry similar to those under the Combines Investigation Act. The third type, to which I did not refer before, is inquiries into matters referred by the cabinet.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the hon. member has overlooked the fact that since the legislation to which he has now referred was passed we have had a revision of the Combines Investigation Act and that power of inquiry has been vested in the restrictive trade practices commission. I think that is probably the explanation.

Mr. Benidickson: There are still two other types of inquiries which previously required a minimum of two members to preside over them.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am told that these other instances have practically never occurred.

Mr. Benidickson: I wanted to know why we were making it possible for the chairman at his discretion to have a single member preside over inquiries such as those to which I have referred, but if the minister indicates that these inquiries are no longer common and that he has given careful consideration to this matter I will not raise strong objection.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time, now?

Mr. Pickersgill: By leave.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) thereupon moved the third reading of the bill.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Before the bill passes, Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw attention to certain observations which were made yesterday by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) during the discussion of the resolution. The hon. member said, as reported on page 2727 of Hansard:

—I suggest that this is part and parcel of a Tory high tariff policy that is being implemented day by day to the great detriment of the people of this country.

Then, after an interruption by another hon. member, he went on to say:

Therefore, we feel that this legislation is unnecessary, or that if it is necessary it is made so by these other bad policies of the government which are increasing the burden of the work on the tariff board and the number of appeals that will be made. We believe that we are justified in opposing the resolution and the legislation to follow because in so doing we are opposing the government's high tariff program.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

I omit the comment made by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell), but he can make it again if he so desires.

Then, at page 2737 the hon. gentleman is reported as saying this, in making a reference to the position taken by the official opposition:

I suggest that class or kind cases are likely to constitute a very substantial portion of appeals and references to the board. With the sweeping change in the definition a deluge of appeals on this very point will come before the board in the future. Members of the Liberal party say they are against the change in the definition, the widening of the rule, and they have proved they are against it, but they are prepared to facilitate the evil consequences of widening the rule by voting for the minister's measure and without having the necessary information. I think this is an indication of complete irresponsibility on the part of the official opposition.

In view of this statement, sir, I must say that I was astonished to find, after having been called out of the house for a moment or two during second reading, that second reading had been completed. I am informed that the hon. gentleman did say, "on division" when the measure passed. The hon. member said:

We beleve that we are justified in opposing the resolution and the legislation to follow because in so doing we are opposing the government's high tariff program.

In view of the hon. member's assertions about this very deleterious measure I expected we were going to have a real crusade against this bill by the hon. gentleman and his friends. It is rather astonishing to find that the lion of yesterday has become the lamb of today.

Mr. R. H. Small (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to have had something to say yesterday about this measure, but since the minister was anxious to get the bill through I remained silent. Now that the matter has been raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, I will take advantage of this opportunity to say something about the bill. I have listened to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) make continual references to Tory protection and high Tory tariffs, as if there were some stigma attached to them. I have no apology to make to the minister or anybody else in this house because I believe in a certain amount of protection through tariffs and quotas. I do not believe there is anything to be ashamed of in that.

I am continually being beseeched to do something about the importations coming into this country from Japan, west Germany and other low wage countries which are undermining certain manufacturing industries in our country. I do not believe the hon. member for Assiniboia is presenting the point of view of labour. The hon. member also makes continual references to GATT. I have always questioned the value of the vague benefits that have been attached to GATT so far as this country was concerned. We went along with it and we gradually reduced the tariffs imposed by this country. We now find that we have probably gone too far and there should be a change in policy; we should raise our tariffs on certain things coming into this country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but I must say that if he is replying shortly to any argument that had been advanced by an hon. member, his remarks are not entirely relevant to the bill under consideration. However, although I would have no objection to a short reply I must indicate to him that the only purpose of this bill is to increase the number of members on the tariff board. A discussion of the whole policy of tariffs at this time, therefore, would be irrelevant. I would think that the hon. member has strayed from the subject of the bill under discussion and has also strayed a little bit from his own place in the house.

Mr. Winch: Stay with this bill, because I support one and I oppose the other.

Mr. Small: I must apologize, sir, but I thought we were still in committee of the whole. I had forgotten that we were considering third reading.

You, sir, have said that the bill relates to the matter of appointments to the tariff board. However, the hon. member for Assiniboia continually referred to the fact that the measure was introduced for the purpose of raising tariffs. He said that the tariff board was going to be used as the machinery for increasing tariffs. I thought I should like to refute the statements by the hon. member that this is the position this party takes.

However, we have no apology to offer for the fact that we did have to increase some tariffs and will do so in the future. If the hon. member will examine his own position in so far as agriculture is concerned he will find that with the agricultural prices stabilization legislation, deficiency payments, storage of grain, the Crowsnest pass freight rates, acreage payments, all these benefits and assistance amount to nothing less or more than protection. I am not opposed to them, and I am happy that agriculture has been granted these benefits. However, I would say that when he starts to talk about protection and high tariffs he should examine his own situation because those things I have mentioned amount to a high tariff policy and can be regarded in no other way, and labour should be informed of this free trade policy of the new party.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion is for third reading of Bill No. C-74, shall the bill pass?

Mr. Argue: On division.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the third time and passed.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) for the second reading of Bill No. C-71, respecting the civil service of Canada.

Mr. J. T. Richard (Ottawa East): This legislation, designed to improve the Civil Service Act, is most important because more than ever before a good civil service is absolutely essential to good government. The need for properly qualified civil servants can be attributed primarily to the increasing role of government with the result that we have to rely more and more on a number of experts, highly qualified administrators. Their position and prestige should be consistent with their new importance. The complex issues which government has to face require the advice of highly qualified people, although ministers must always take responsibility for public administration decisions on policy matters.

In parallel development our Canadian universities and other institutions have been producing for several decades an increasing number of experts in the social sciences and in various fields of government activity with the result that while the need for expert advice was growing rapidly in the government service, the number of Canadians highly qualified to meet that need was also increasing.

It is widely recognized that the Canadian civil service is one of the best in the world. It is composed at all levels of men and women who are well qualified to perform their important functions, who are devoted to the service of their country and entirely loyal to the government of the day; and those who give loyalty and service have a right to expect confidence, support and encouragement, conditions that will make them more effective.

The quality of our civil service is also due to our legislation which has been based since 1918 on the merit principle. The adherence to that principle has enabled the Canadian government to attract to the service highly qualified people in various fields who have decided to make a career in the public service and who very often refused better paid careers outside it.

Although the Civil Service Act has proved to be of great value to the civil servants and to the government over the years and has provided a general framework which has led to good relations between the government and its employees, experience has shown that the legislation enacted in 1918 needed to be changed in several respects in the light of the important changes in the role of government which have occurred in Canada since the end of world war II. As a matter of fact, there have been practically no changes since 1918. That is why at the beginning of 1957 the then prime minister, Right Hon. Mr. St. Laurent, asked the members of the civil service commission to review the act and the regulations and to examine the role of the commission in the machinery of government and to prepare a report including recommendations as to desirable changes to be made to our legislation.

It is a cause for uneasiness that so many top officials have left the public service in order to teach in universities or to work in industry or other professions. Whatever the reasons given to explain those resignations, they faced us with a disquieting situation; highly qualified personnel are leaving, and as a result serious damage is being done to the efficiency of public administration.

One cause of uneasiness has been the delay of the government in introducing legislation following the publication of the Heeney report. That report was presented to the government in December, 1958. Its recommendations were detailed and concrete, and legislation should have been introduced in 1959 for final consideration during the 1960 session. However, the government has delayed the introduction of its legislation until March 1961.

Another source of concern is the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), not the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion), is the government spokesman on matters related to the civil service and is introducing this bill. As we all know the Secretary of State has always been responsible to parliament for those matters. The fact that the Minister of Finance has become the champion and the defender of the civil service, after his performance on the salary issue last year, is a surprise to us and I am sure it is a source of concern for all government employees. At some stage during this debate I hope the minister will explain why he and not the Secretary of State is introducing this legislation.

We on this side of the house want to express our gratitude to Mr. Heeney and his two colleagues Miss Addison and Mr. Pelletier, for the most valuable report they have prepared on the subject of this legislation. We believe that their report will provide a most useful basis for the discussion and appraisal of the government legislation which is now before us.

The Heeney report contains recommendations regarding all aspects of the civil service including its relations with the government. I am sure that all of us in this house will agree with most, if not all, of the eight objectives set out in the report as the basis for this new legislation. The commission has made specific recommendations regarding organization and classification, compensation and allowances, recruitment, selection, appointment and promotion, transfers, discipline, appeals, the veteran's preference, languages, qualifications, and exemptions from the Civil Service Act, et cetera. That is all very well.

While we will want to discuss all the provisions of the bill, we intend to put special emphasis on the definition and the clarification of the rights of civil servants. I well recall that in a speech made before the institute of public administration of Canada in 1959, a member of the commission, Mr. Paul Pelletier, has this to say on this matter:

> —Since 1918, federal civil servants have had no legal rights whatever, except two. The first is referred to in section 45 of the Civil Service Act which provides that civil servants shall, on a mandatory basis, be granted certain statutory holidays. The second was only granted in May, 1953, with the enactment of the Public Service Superannuation Act—and that is the civil servant's contractual entitlement to pension under certain conditions. But otherwise, the civil servant has no statutory rights. He is not entitled to his pay cheque until it is in his pocket. He can legally be dismissed without cause and without notice. I would not wish to suggest for one moment that civil servants are dismissed frivolously. Quite the contrary. Nor would I suggest that any civil servant is in any kind of danger of not receiving his fortnightly pay cheque at the appropriate time. But the fact remains that his statutory rights are virtually non-existent. The commission felt that at the present state of our constitutional development civil servants should be given certain statutory rights.

We on this side of the house completely agree with that statement. We also feel that in this respect the bill does not go far enough, and at a later stage of the discussion we shall make specific proposals to the government regarding a fuller recognition of these statutory rights of civil servants.

I do not intend at this stage to discuss all the provisions of the bill. We intend to postpone this detailed consideration until the proposed legislation has been considered by the special committee. For the time being, I wish to confine my remarks to one issue only—an issue which I consider to be basic—namely, the question of collective bargaining, or, as I would prefer to call it, collective negotiation.

The lack of statutory rights is well illustrated by the way in which salaries in the civil service are determined. In 1959 the civil service commission decided to reconsider the salary question. After consultation with the staff associations and with the assistance of its pay research bureau the commission recommended to the Minister of Finance that a general increase in salaries be granted. After long delays, the minister announced in October that he could not accept the commission's recommendation. No adequate reason was given by the minister in justification of his stand. The report of the commission was not released, with the result that civil servants could not even know what increases in salary had been recommended by the commission and refused by the Minister of Finance.

Such a situation is intolerable in Canada and must be remedied. But the present bill does not provide any adequate improvement in this respect. I shall not refer in detail to clause 7, though the minister did refer to it last night, except to say that consultation is possible and can be initiated by the staff or by the minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Or by the commission.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): If the minister does not object, I will read the clause:

> The commission and such members of the public service as the Minister of Finance may designate shall from time to time consult with representatives of appropriate organizations and associations of employees with respect to pay and other terms and conditions of employment at the request of such representatives or whenever in the opinion of the commission or the Minister of Finance, as the case may be, such consultation is necessary or desirable in the interests of the civil service or the government.

This is not satisfactory. Even if under this new provision the staff associations were to be placed in a position to initiate consultations this new prerogative will be ineffectual. Consultations will never be a substitute for genuine negotiations. How are the civil servants to know that the government had adopted a course which requires consultation? The time has come to face the issue of collective bargaining squarely and frankly. In our country all municipal employees, including policemen and firemen, have obtained the right to collective bargaining. In the federal field the majority of the employees of crown corporations already enjoy such a right. But ordinary civil servants have no right whatsoever in this respect. This has become a serious anomaly and an unfair discrimination.

In Great Britain, Australia and New Zealand the right to collective bargaining has been granted in one form or another to civil servants.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): By statute?

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Yes.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is quite wrong.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): The hon. member can speak later and he will have plenty of opportunity because he is a know-all.

In the United Kingdom, the national Whitley council agreement on arbitration for the non-industrial civil service has now been in force more than 30 years. When that agreement was signed in 1925, the British government undertook to give effect to arbitration awards "subject to the overriding authority of parliament". In an article published in the autumn 1960 issue of the review Public Administration and entitled "Arbitration in the British Civil Service", Professor S. J. Frankel has described the scope, the machinery and the procedure of the British system. I would like to quote extensively from that article. Professor Frankel describes as follows the area where arbitration can be applied:

> Briefly, the arbitration agreement provided that claims falling within certain defined limits could, failing agreement, be referred to the industrial court on the initiative of either side. Claims which could be taken to the court were those affecting the emoluments, weekly hours of work and leave of a class of civil servants.

A basic salary line of £700 per annum was set above which claims could not be referred to arbitration without the consent of both sides. This figure has been modified over the years in keeping with the general movement of civil service pay.

The machinery of arbitration is simple enough:

> The original agreement had placed the machinery of arbitration within the framework of the industrial court. This was changed in 1936, when the civil service arbitration tribunal was established as a separate entity. The tribunal for any given case is made up of the permanent chairman who is appointed by the minister of labour after consultation with the parties to this agreement, one member drawn from a panel representing the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and one from a panel representing the staff side of the national Whitley council.

The procedure followed is informal and speedy:

> The first step is to determine the terms of reference or terms of remit. These are generally agreed by both sides and sent to the civil service arbitration tribunal. Where there is a failure to agree on the terms of reference each side may submit its own statement of the claim. The tribunal normally tries to arrange a hearing of the case within six weeks or receiving the terms of remit. In any event, it must give the parties at least 21 days' notice of the date of the hearing. The parties, in turn, prepare a full statement of their respective positions which must be in the hands of the tribunal at least 21 days before the hearing. The tribunal is thus well briefed on the substance of the case.

Procedure at the hearing is not overly formal. Each side has one spokesman who is assisted by a group of advisers. The spokesman for the claimant is first in reading his statement of the case. This is substantially what was submitted to the tribunal in advance except that in reading it there is an opportunity to amplify some points and amend any errors or inconsistencies that might have been overlooked. Members of the tribunal may interject questions during the course of the presentation. The claimant is followed by the spokesman of the other side, who usually begins by reading his statement of the case and ends with a rebuttal of the main points advanced by his opposite number. The first spokesman is then permitted to make his rebuttal. The hearing is adjourned and a written award is transmitted to the parties in due course.

According to Professor Frankel, more than 600 cases have been brought before the arbitration tribunal since 1925 and all but 25 awards were unanimous.

The Whitley council system, as applied in Great Britain, may not be completely suitable to Canadian conditions. This experience of 30 years shows, however, that the right to genuine negotiations and arbitration in the civil service is compatible with our system of parliamentary democracy and is conducive to good relations between the government and its employees.

The views of the official opposition on this most important issue can be summarized as follows:

1. We believe that the present Canadian system which provides only for consultations is completely inadequate to protect the fundamental right of the civil service for participation in collective negotiations, while our view is that the right to strike should not be granted to the civil service and that a strike should not be tolerated in the government service.

2. We believe that civil servants should be granted the right to joint negotiations and arbitration provided that the supremacy of the parliament is safeguarded.

3. We do not intend at this stage to put forward a concrete and detailed proposal which would embody those rights but we will suggest such a system, if necessary, when we reach the committee stage.

4. We firmly believe that this most important issue should be considered objectively and carefully by all hon. members of this house and that it should not become the subject of a partisan controversy.

The bill is one of the most important that can be submitted to any parliament because its purpose is to provide for the efficiency and the integrity of the civil service which is so essential to modern democracy. I want at this stage to quote the conclusions of Professor E. N. Gladden's book entitled "Civil Service or Bureaucracy".

The nation needs more than ever before a civil service capable of the highest devotion and sacrifice to its service and this presupposes an esteem, on the part of those who serve, much higher than exists today. We need a body of civil servants even more efficient than those of a past age and this presupposes professional standards far above anything visualized before. The officials of the future will need higher qualifications to deal with much more difficult tasks and situations. They will need to combine a sense of political impartiality as high as ever with an awareness of the world only achievable through the maintenance of a living interest in all that goes on in life in the broadest sense.

Such ends can no longer be achieved through a narrow oligarchic system admirably suited to a Platonic world. In the new civil service there will have to be embodied the principle of equal opportunity toward which the wider community is gradually moving. The community will not get its new civil service on the cheap, but from its efficiency it will derive an economy that mediocrity will never produce. Bureaucracy, whether of the efficient or the inefficient variety, will be dear at any price, as all history shows. Above all the new civil service, like the new world, will only emerge on the wings of a more liberal understanding.

Mr. Speaker, we intend to study the bill very carefully and see to it that the best possible legislation is approved by parliament. We owe it to the civil service to do so and in so doing we feel that we will render as well a great service to all Canadians who have been throughout the years so ably and faithfully served by a civil service second to none in any parliamentary democracy.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, this legislation should contain special instructions with regard to the use of the French language. This being a bilingual country, it is essential that the qualifications for positions requiring some knowledge of French or English be specifically stated.

A bilingual applicant should not find himself in an inferior position. An applicant must obviously retain his right of writing in his own language an examination for a position where a knowledge of his language is required, but after all, it seems to me that when an applicant is qualified in both languages, he should have priority over the others.

(Text):

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, we are indeed pleased to again have this bill before parliament and to note with interest some of the comments that were made by the minister. We are aware of the fact that the civil service in Canada has been built up from a very small beginning some years ago to a necessarily large but efficient force and that any change in the Civil Service Act must be studied carefully.

I am sure we are all aware that the civil service has done a service to Canada, and will continue to do so, but will be able to operate only in as effective a manner as is allowed under the legislation. I believe that we will find many faults in the suggested proposals and the operation of the act as it will be enforced because over the years the situation has changed very dramatically. I believe the foremost thought in the minds of parliamentarians at the time the Civil Service Act was last amended in 1919 related to the providing of a protection against political patronage. In spite of this government and previous governments the question of political patronage has not been a threat to the effective operation of the civil service that it was many years ago.

We are now faced with a changed time and a changing situation which might allow patronage to exist in the civil service. Patronage or a tendency to patronage generally exists in large organizations and therefore the necessity is self-evident for a strong grievance procedure, strong protection and strong agreements.

We believe that some change must take place in the operation of the civil service commission itself. It might even be suggested by the civil service commission that if it were to function as the representative of management in relation to wage negotiations and conditions of work, then it would not serve a useful function at all. The government is indicating in the changes it is making that the trend and the tendency may be toward delegating negotiating authority from the civil service commission itself to the departmental heads. I strongly suggest to the minister that this would not be a satisfactory situation. I suggest that in increasing the authority of the departmental heads we are opening the door to patronage in the civil service.

Patronage itself, even in a political sense, is not dead, Mr. Speaker. We all know that the messenger service and some of the other staffs around the House of Commons fall within the purview of patronage, and that you have to talk to a certain member to receive a job even as a messenger. I think these instances are remote and very few in number. I believe that in this respect the civil service has done a remarkable job in remaining beyond the field of political patronage. With this thought in mind, we strongly recommend that the government give a great deal of attention and active consideration in the committee to setting up a much stronger negotiating position and grievance procedure for its employees. If we delegate more authority to the deputy ministers and allow the deputy ministers to delegate their authority down through the ranks—which is sure to happen—then difficulties will arise which will be very difficult to solve. In the civil service we should have the same kind of relationship between the employee and the government of Canada as exists in any other type of plant in industry.

We are all aware that the situation in the civil service has been changing in the last number of years. Changes have been taking place which were not contemplated when the act was last amended in 1919. Part of this change has to do with promotions and the opportunities for promotions. When a department or a section of a department, was very small it was quite possible for a junior clerk coming into the department to look into the future and foresee the time when he could be the head of the department, how he could rise in his position and eventually reach the post of deputy minister. We are all aware, I am sure, of the special technical training that is essential to enable a man to fill some of the higher technical positions in the civil service. Because many of these positions are technical in nature it makes promotion difficult within the division.

One of the problems within the civil service, as I have heard it discussed, is the lack of opportunity for promotion of many employees in the lower ranks. When a job within a division is posted or advertised many of the employees are not concerned because they have not the training to fit them for that position. No opportunity is available to permit them to obtain the type of training that would put them in a position to compete with members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police or the armed services.

In the armed services we have given, at government expense, training in skills and specific trades to many of the personnel. When a competition is advertised the people who have been trained at government expense can make application for that appointment, and in many instances they will have a better opportunity to get the position than someone lower down the scale in that particular division for the simple reason that opportunities for training are not available to the civil servants, as they are to those in other services who are quite often in direct competition with them.

It has been suggested on many occasions that this type of training be instituted by the departments themselves; that opportunities should be made available to the civil servants to avail themselves of training to fit themselves for job promotion. What happens is that those who are not fitted for promotion at the present time drop whatever desire they may have had for saying that they are white collar workers and therefore are obviously in a preferred position. They now realize that they have a job of which the hours of work, the pay and the fringe benefits are the main features. Therefore they are insisting now, and they are going to increasingly insist in the future more than they did in the past on fair and reasonable terms and a much closer relationship between civil service rates of pay and fringe benefits and those of organized labour.

Unless we are willing to provide the machinery and set up opportunities to permit them to better their own station, and also handle negotiations in a much better way than we have in the last two or three years where hand-outs coming from the government pretty well dribbled down to one section of the civil service and then to another we shall find the civil servants very dissatisfied. These are not the types of negotiations or arrangements that we wish to have or maintain within the civil service.

This matter has been discussed in other countries. I think we should be very proud of the civil service and the job that they have done, particularly when we compare their pay with that received in other countries. New Zealand, Australia, Britain and many other countries have done a great deal more than Canada in establishing a workable type of pattern under which the civil servant feels that he has some rights; that his is not a patronage job; that he cannot be removed because somebody just does not like him; and under which he has grievance procedures which can handle his complaints on a fair and reasonable basis. We in Canada have been lax in this regard, but we have achieved a high degree of satisfaction from our civil service without doing some things that as a government we should have done.

In England in 1923 the Whitley council was established. It is known as the Whitley system. Under this system they have operated with satisfaction in so far as their relations with the government are concerned. Australia and New Zealand have developed similar methods of grievances and contract procedures. I believe that now is an exceptionally good time for the government to examine what has been done in those other countries, and then do something for Canadian civil servants.

One of the reasons that is always advanced as to why we cannot do right by our civil service in relation to grievance procedure and collective bargaining procedure—this has become an important factor—is that many more people are now in the class in which the civil servants felt they were many years ago, that is, they felt they were unique. Recently we have seen instances of industrial unions trying to organize bank employees, for instance, and to organize employees in the offices of companies where the unions have for many years had a bargaining relationship with respect to the industrial plants of these companies.

When someone says that there should be a grievance procedure, that there should be some direct method of negotiation with the employer, someone will immediately say that if the employees do not get what they want they will go on strike. Although the civil service associations have requested direct negotiation with the employer and the establishment of a grievance procedure, not one of these associations has ever asked for the right to strike if the differences of opinion involved cannot be settled. This right has not been sought and is not contemplated. When people raise the issue that to grant these requests would only result in strike action I think they have not given too much consideration to what has been done in other countries or to what has been done in this country with relation to white collar workers.

I think we should look at what the advantages would be if each employee felt he had the right to negotiate directly with his employer, the right to certain protection under a contract which would not be laid down for him by the civil service commission but which would be a contract in whose negotiation he had some participation and as a result would have some direct interest in the contract under which he was working. I believe the committee will give very serious consideration to the whole matter in relationship not only to what is being done in other countries but also what is being done in respect of employees in other fields of endeavour similar to the civil service of Canada.

Some consideration should be given to the situation as it has developed in some of our provinces. In Saskatchewan, for instance, civil servants have the right to collective bargaining procedures. They have the same right to the benefits of collective bargaining that other employees throughout the province have. This right has not resulted in any serious disruption of the civil service in that province, its relationship with the government of the province or its immunity from political interference.

We are certain that many of these matters will be discussed in the committee. I was pleased that the minister outlined his reasons for introducing the bill last year. I am also pleased that he listened to the representations that were made from many quarters and withheld the bill until there would be an opportunity for it to go to a small select committee which would be able to hear all arguments and make a decision that would not be completely a government decision but one that would take into consideration the views of the various associations and unions representing civil servants and the views of those who are not now immediately within the scope of the civil service.

There will be an opportunity for these organizations to appear and I am quite sure that this will result in a better act which will not only benefit the operations of the government but will make civil servants themselves feel that they have a greater say in their affairs and an enhanced opportunity for advancement with the result that they will have an increased desire to remain within the sphere of the civil service.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my remarks, I should like to refer to the brief submitted to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker) by the conseil de la vie française with regard to the ratio of bilingual or French-speaking Canadians in the federal civil service. Allow me to quote part of this brief:

> Since 90 per cent of bilingual civil servants are French Canadians and since, at the same time, the number of French Canadians in the civil service is only half of what it should be, it follows that in large sections of the public administration bilingualism is non-existent to such an extent that the language of communication within the departments is the English language and that the French Canadian taxpayer is often hard put to be served in his own language.
> In our humble opinion, an even more serious result stems from the influence of the civil service over the administration of Canada and the very life of the nation. Because the majority of civil servants have no knowledge whatsoever of one of the official languages and cultures in our country, the French speaking citizens are ruled according to standards of thought which are exclusively English. It is no surprise, therefore, that they are increasingly being excluded from the federal administration, the public services, the armed forces and the large crown corporations. In short, they are being deprived of the place to which they are entitled in their own country.
> Drastic reforms are necessary if Canada is to remain a bilingual and bicultural country, a country where Canadians of French origin will feel at home. Such reforms have been suggested on various occasions. We shall not go over them today. In the circumstances, one can readily understand that the French Canadians are hardly attracted to the federal service, in view of the fact that entry requirements are based exclusively on English standards and that they must give up their language in the actual performance of their duties.

Mr. Speaker, let me quote another excerpt of this brief:

> Nine departments have shown an increase of 2.3 per cent in the number of French Canadians, as compared to the total number of employees between 1951 and 1958. In 1951, French Canadians represented 10.3 per cent of the total staff of these departments, and they reached 12.6 per cent in 1958.

Mr. Speaker, I shall now give the list of those departments: veterans affairs, agriculture, the Auditor General, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, fisheries, national revenue, secretary of state, labour, national film board.

> On the other hand, the proportion of French-Canadian employees has dropped in 15 departments. The discrepancy is 3.6 per cent. Strange, but in the departments where the number of French-Canadians has increased, their contribution which was 10.3 per cent in 1951 became 12.6 per cent in 1958. In the departments showing a decrease, their contribution went down from 12.5 per cent in 1951 to 8.9 per cent in 1958, almost in reverse proportions.

Those departments are the following: external affairs and, if I may be allowed a digression here, I would point out that the proportion of bilingual Canadians within the Department of External Affairs is quite poor. You know who for many years was deputy minister of external affairs and later became Secretary of State for External Affairs.

I continue: citizenship and immigration, trade and commerce, civil service commission, national research council, national defence, finance, printing bureau, justice, mines and technical surveys, post office, resources and economic development, national health and welfare, transport and public works. As far as the crown corporations are concerned, their shortage of bilingual or French speaking employees is appalling.

> They can hardly be found in such crown corporations such as the Canadian National, the air transport board, the Bank of Canada, Canadian Arsenals, the industrial development bank, Atomic Energy of Canada, the department of insurance. They are non-existent in the Department of Trade and Commerce and in the finance department.

Those remarks, based on the brief submitted by the conseil de la vie française, are made for the sake of national unity and not out of any narrow-mindedness.

I am confident that government authorities and the civil service commission will undertake to correct this situation which constitutes a liability as far as national unity is concerned. By correcting this anomaly, we could more easily represent Canada to other nations as a bicultural and bilingual country.

I wanted to make those few remarks, and I should like to add this. I would be remiss in failing to point out that apartheid is not confined to South Africa; it is also found in the civil service generally. It may come as a surprise to some hon. members that in certain departments it is considered wrong to speak French; French-Canadian civil servants have to use the English language among themselves. That should not be.

It would therefore be well to investigate the matter with a view to exposing the situation and seeing that justice is done.

Indeed, I feel it is unthinkable that such a situation should be allowed to exist. If I am correctly informed—and I made a serious inquiry in the matter—I ask that the situation be looked into so that an end may be put to what I consider to be discrimination against one of the two official languages of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I think this bill concerning the civil service is not only timely, but overdue. The act has not been amended for the last 40 years. It was time that this government did something about it because there are very few acts in our statutes that have not been amended for the last 40 years.

This was not our job, Mr. Speaker, but since our predecessors have been neglectful on that point, this government has to take action.

I am not telling anything new when I say that all is not to the best in the federal civil service. Every year, many of our best civil servants leave the federal service and take up other jobs. This is not normal. Nor is it normal to let them go without doing anything to keep them, unless we want to maintain some sections of our public service as sanctuaries for complacent mediocrities.

However, in considering this very important bill, I believe the time has come to smash certain idols in the civil service, to cut down to size some of the demigods of high officialdom who think they can do anything because of their permanent status, and finally to reveal some of the scheming that cripples efficient administration and puts the whole civil service to shame.

Mr. Speaker, efforts are made to attract able people into the civil service. Why not first try to keep those who are already in the service, instead of treating like outcasts people who have proved their ability in related fields and who are scoffed at, ridiculed and deceived in the civil service, often by backward and incompetent officials.

I am not usually violent, but my association, two years ago, with the standing committee on estimates, enabled me to get acquainted with certain problems of federal administration. I took that opportunity to investigate matters and question people, and what we learned was not too nice. However, that unrewarding and disappointing work gained me the confidence of many civil servants who, in the hope of getting some improvement, took me into their confidence.

I received many letters and telephone calls, and many visitors. Some of those civil servants were acting from fear because they were afraid of reprisals in case it should be known that they had discussed their problems with a member of parliament. And I know that some section heads—not the more clever ones—will say: What does that member know about the civil service? What right has he to stick his nose into our business? To those people let me say in the first place that I was a civil servant myself for several years, during which I met, like anywhere else, men who were worthy of confidence, but also some very poor officials who were unworthy of the government's confidence. Let me also say that as an elected representative of the Canadian people, I have a right to know what goes on in the civil service and that it is even my responsibility to make sure that the government uses the people and the funds voted by parliament to give this country the first class service it deserves.

If the civil servants are not treated fairly by their superiors, they do right to talk things over with their representatives. It is our business to preside over the public welfare and to redress grievances. And I have known enough distressing cases to assure you that the need is there.

I have therefore been informed of many cases of injustice and maladministration brought to my attention by civil servants. Some of them were perhaps inclined to exaggerate, but most of them had a healthy attitude but were driven to desperation by the lack of understanding, indeed the incompetence of their superiors. I am under the impression that while our civil service includes an overwhelming majority of very good employees it also includes a distressing minority of political creatures who are an obstacle to efficient public administration and who tend to create a general atmosphere of fear and oppression. That must be stopped. An act of parliament, whatever its merits, will be of no avail unless we can change the morale of the civil service, unless we get rid of the deadwood, steeped in inefficiency and favouritism.

We have some very good civil servants, but there is a long way between that and blissfully accepting the hackneyed claim that it is the "best civil service in the world". That I cannot believe in view of the things I have been told in confidence.

I am quite prepared to admit, Mr. Speaker, that those may have been special cases. That was my own reaction at first. But today, I am convinced that there is in the public service a clique whose leaders are found among the political creatures who never could stomach the defeats of 1957 and 1958. I will not mention names at this time, but my colleagues know as well as I do about the wall that stands in our way whenever we try to get information or find out the reasons for a particular appointment or promotion. There are people there who protect themselves, people who care little about the efficient administration of public affairs but are more concerned with trying to work against the government, so that the people will turn against it at the next elections. I know, Mr. Speaker, that this is a serious charge, and I say it with severity, because we in this house are faced with a government within the government. When you have to ask two or three different questions to elicit information from witnesses appearing before committees, when witnesses plead ignorance of the facts or refuse to disclose some information, it looks bad. In my opinion, a reform is necessary.

No private industry could survive if it were administered as the government is in some departments. No businessman could keep from boiling over if he saw the favouritism and incompetence which prevail in some areas of the administration—and I am not referring to the fact that some civil servants hardly get 40 minutes off for lunch. Not one of us in this house would accept to work under conditions such as are the lot of some civil servants. How could we allow such a situation to endure and civil servants to be subjected to it without even having the right to complain?

Perhaps you would like some proof of my assertions; perhaps you want to know what the civil servants are silently complaining about, because they do not dare raise their voices lest they be ostracized or punished or cast aside. I could read many letters I have received; I could draw a long list of their grievances; and all this would be only the voice of those who have had the courage to protest a situation that this government has inherited from its predecessors who appointed to some key positions their minions and their sbirros.

Do you want to know what the complaints are about? They are about daily inequities; they are about maladministration in some departments; they are about the inefficiency and partisan spirit of some officials. And I limit myself strictly to the charges I felt bound to make because they concern the administration of public affairs.

I will spare you the petty or scurvy tricks and private spite which can develop into every day fare, and can be exercised particularly two or three times a year when the head of a branch prepares an efficiency rating concerning each of the employees under him.

That is the time when promotions are settled for those who knuckle down and hold their tongue, for those who work like slaves so that their supervisor may go to a higher official and brag smugly about the high efficiency of his department; but it is also the time when some are eliminated because they are not found fit for the job, but suited, not always on professional grounds.

If an underling dares offer a suggestion or make a protest against an injustice, it will be entered on his rating, unknown to him, that he is refractory and steps towards his dismissal will even be taken should a difficult situation develop. Afterwards any legal procedure before the courts will be carefully avoided if the civil servant who feels he has been wronged wants to appeal to the courts and to assert his rights as a free citizen.

This method of evaluating the conduct and efficiency of their staff can turn to be the most sinister weapons in the hands of devious supervisors. There are also complaints about the narrow-mindedness of some officials viciously persecuting employees who are only trying to do their duty on religious holidays—which they should do—and who grin and ridicule people who want to comply with the requirements of their faith.

Others claim that some officials tried to stop their subordinates from voting in the province of Quebec, claiming that the government of the day was led by a man with whom the federal Prime Minister was not on good terms. I hardly need to quote any names.

Moreover, there are protests against officials who tolerate a whole section considering itself above all rules and regulations, and who allow their favourites to arrive at the office at any odd time in the morning, whereas other civil servants have to take a cut in salary when they come late because of a storm or because they missed their transfer to another bus, or again, because of some stupid closing of the bridge to Hull. Neither do I need to quote any names here, for here again, those responsible for this discrimination will recognize themselves.

There are grievances against high officials who are never there when some decision must be taken or who make their subordinates work after regular hours out of sheer maladministration.

Others again claim—and this is almost unjust and even insolent—that all civil servants are not entitled to the same number of holidays and that leave is not in proportion to the working days. People complain that overtime, or additional time periods, are in most cases not paid in cash but that employees have to work three and a half hours on end to earn half a day's leave, which in many cases they would rather not have, in order not to be compelled to add those three and a half hours to their normal day of work. And again, overtime has to be calculated as from the moment when the employee signs in which means, if it is Saturday morning, that he may have to spend an hour in the bus coming to the office and another hour when he goes back home.

Some also claim that in the odd branch and the odd department, employees are prevented from taking their holidays when they please. There are some seasons when public servants may not be absent, and they live outside normal society. They are told that no one asked them to work and that they can go and find employment elsewhere. Is that a way of dealing with public servants? Would you and I accept to be treated in this way? After all, those people are our employees, and it is up to us to teach a lesson to some officials who are unfair to the minor civil servants.

Some claim, moreover, that civil servants cannot air their grievances, because the associations which represent them, though they are doing their best, do not have the authority of a professional organization.

These complaints had to do with ascertained and repeated inequities. I might also point out certain grievances no less serious but more difficult to eliminate, cases of obvious mismanagement. Civil servants wrote to me and came to see me to say that they are losing faith in civil service commission examinations because of the results and promotions. That is serious, and if you refer to some of the answers given last year in the committee of the house during the discussion of the operation of the civil service commission, you will find that the witnesses were unable to swear that all the positions under the commission had always been and are still being filled on the basis of competence. This is another thing we inherited from our predecessors.

How is it that applicants for the same examination, who all know each other, who know each other's ability and qualifications after working together for years often find that the less qualified candidates succeed, get promotions and are sent abroad.

How is it that it is often known beforehand that such or such an applicant, for reasons known to their competitors, will certainly be the only ones who qualify? And if unsuccessful candidates make enquiries, they are told to write to the secretary of the commission or to ask for a review of their examination sheets. And of course, when those sheets are reviewed, it is found that the examining officers have not marked them, that it is just a simple appreciation given by anonymous examiners and that it is a a foregone conclusion that the review will confirm the results of the original examination. It is a serious situation, Mr. Speaker, and I have received enough complaints to believe that such doings which are beyond even the commission's control, are the responsibility of a clique of examiners who form a kind of family compact and regard their jobs as a game preserve.

May I continue, Mr. Speaker? It is six o'clock.

(Text):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the hon. member shall call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members. No.

Mr. Winch: Is the hon. member through, Mr. Speaker? If so, I should like to have the floor.

Mr. Pigeon: No, Mr. Speaker. I will go on with my speech.

(Translation):

Some are complaining about the fact that, at the discretion of certain heads of departments some branches are left short of one or two civil servants who are granted extended leave without being replaced, in order that they can be given back their jobs upon their return, while their colleagues have to do the job of the employee who is away and who will be promoted ahead of them because he went abroad to study at their expense. There are complaints also to the effect that some civil servants—and among them some high ranking officials—who have used the installations in their laboratories or offices, on the government's time and for personal purposes, to do private work for other people or outside companies and for which they are paid.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire of the house leader what the business will be for Thursday and Friday?

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow, Thursday, we will commence with the estimates of the Department of Labour. On Friday, if it is agreeable to the other side of the house, I think it would be acceptable to us if we could complete the debate on this particular bill which subsequently will go to a special committee. If that is done in reasonable time on Friday, we would then continue with the estimates of the Department of Labour.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS

Question No. 113—Mr. Boulanger:

2. What is the total export of agricultural products, in value, on an annual basis for the period of 1957-60 inclusive?

2. What is the total export of agricultural products, in value, on an annual basis for the period of 1957-60 inclusive?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

1 and 2. Statistics of imports and exports of agricultural products are not available. Total imports and exports of products of "farm origin" for the years 1957-1959 are as follows:

(Statistics for 1960 have not yet been compiled)

Imports	$1,071,326,424	$1,055,389,192	$1,125,394,810
Exports of Canadian produce	986,901,003	1,113,147,947	1,063,717,735

NEW FEDERAL BUILDING, WOODSTOCK, ONT.

Question No. 115—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Did the Postmaster General authorize a statement made recently by the hon. member for Oxford to the mayor of Woodstock to the effect that a new federal building was to be built in Woodstock immediately?

2. Has a local official of the Department of Public Works in London, Ontario, been authorized to accept offers for the sale of certain property in Woodstock for the purpose of obtaining the land for the proposed new federal building?

3. What progress has been made in obtaining land for the proposed new federal building?

Answer by: Hon. Leon Balcer (Acting Secretary of State):

1. The Postmaster General did inform the hon. member for Oxford that a new federal building in Woodstock was to be undertaken as rapidly as possible, depending of course, on acquisition of a suitable site and the preparation of plans by the Department of Public Works.

2. Department of Public Works officials in Toronto and London have been instructed to investigate possible sites for a new federal building in Woodstock. In doing this, they are, as a normal practice, authorized to obtain offers for the sale of properties that may be suitable.

3. A preliminary report on a number of properties has been received, but a final recommendation has not yet been made.

CIVIL SERVANTS WITH SALARIES AND TRAVELLING EXPENSES OF $10,000 OR MORE

Question No. 121—Mr. Robichaud:

What is the total number of federal civil servants whose salary and travelling expenses totalled $10,000 or more for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960?

Answer by: Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance):

By agreement with Mr. Robichaud the question has been rephrased as follows:

What is the total number of federal civil servants receiving salaries of $8,000 or over, whose salary and travelling expenses totalled $10,000 or more for the fiscal year ending 1960?

1,689. This does not include members of the armed forces or the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

MAIL CONTRACT, ST. REMI-MONTREAL-HUNTINGDON, QUE.

Question No. 126—Mr. Dupuis:

1. To whom was awarded the mail contract covering the St. Remi-Montreal-Huntingdon territory, and on what date was the award made?

2. At what price was the present contract awarded?

3. What is the mileage involved in this contract?

4. Have new tenders been asked recently for the said contract?

5. On what date are these tenders to be opened?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1. Mr. Marcel Roy, 24th June 1957.

2. $13,901.12 per annum.

3. Night trip, 127.3 miles round trip; day trip, 133.4 miles round trip.

4. No, but steps are being taken to invite tenders in the near future.

5. Due date for tenders not known as yet.

REQUESTS FOR INVESTIGATION INTO STEEL PRICING POLICIES

Question No. 131—Mr. Argue:

1. Has the government received any requests since January 1, 1958, from any union asking the government to investigate the pricing policies of the Canadian steel industry?

2. If so, from whom were they received, on what dates, and what was the content of the request?

3. Has the government replied to any of these requests?

4. If so, on what dates, and what was the nature of each reply?

Answer by: Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce):

1. Yes.

2. In a memorandum submitted on behalf of the united steel workers of America, dated January 20, 1959, the government was urged to conduct an investigation of steel prices.

3. Yes.

4. A meeting was held between the Minister of Trade and Commerce and his senior officials and representatives of the union.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 9, 1961

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE

Ottawa, 9th March, 1961

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Patrick Kerwin, Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, 9th March, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your obedient servant,

E. Joly de Lotbiniere
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

STANDING ORDERS

Sixth report of standing committee on standing orders—Miss Aitken.

TRADE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF SIXTH MEETING OF JOINT CANADA-U.S. COMMITTEE

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make an announcement respecting the sixth annual meeting of the joint Canada-United States committee on trade and economic affairs. This meeting will be held in Washington on March 13 and 14, as was indicated in a joint statement by the Prime Minister and President Kennedy during the former's visit to Washington on February 20.

Canada will be represented by the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Agriculture. The United States will be represented by Hon. Dean Rusk, Secretary of State; Hon. George W. Ball, undersecretary of state for economic affairs; Hon. C. Douglas Dillon, Secretary of the Treasury; Hon. Stewart Udall, Secretary of the Interior; Hon. Orville L. Freeman, Secretary of Agriculture; and Hon. Luther H. Hodges, Secretary of Commerce.

This will be a regular meeting of this committee for the purpose of discussing economic and trade matters of mutual interest to our two countries. These meetings have proved valuable over the years in furthering understanding between the two governments on questions affecting their economic relations.

The last meeting was held in Washington on February 16 and 17 last year. The venue for these meetings has alternated between Ottawa and Washington. However, the committee is meeting again in Washington this year in order to expedite consultation and as a matter of convenience to the new United States administration.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as the Acting Prime Minister has said, over the years this committee has proved its usefulness, and no doubt when it meets next week it will have an opportunity to add to that usefulness because there are a great many immediately urgent questions in the economic relations between the two countries to which consideration needs to be given. I would hope that the Acting Prime Minister and the other members of the Canadian delegation to the conference will see fit to bring up such questions as tourist purchase exemptions, which are now before the United States congress and, indeed, the impact on United States-Canadian trade and economic relations of some of the new economic policies of the new United States administration.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I think this meeting is very much needed at this time to discuss some of the important economic problems facing our two countries. Particularly in the field of agricultural surpluses it is necessary in my opinion to have an understanding with the United States so that Canada, as well as the United States, will have the opportunity to increase its exports of agricultural products. I am also certain that on the agenda should be the question of oil exports from Canada, with the hope that we can increase our exports of oil to the United States. There are many other outstanding economic problems on which I do not need to elaborate at this time. I am hopeful that this meeting may bear fruit.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I would direct the minister's attention to the statement he made respecting the forthcoming annual meeting at the ministerial level with respect to trade matters between Canada and the United States.

I refer the minister to the general report after a similar meeting in 1959, when it was indicated that with respect to the sale of wheat abroad these two governments had reached an understanding that what might be known as sales under concession would not be made by the United States to Japan or western Europe. Is the minister aware that there is strong evidence that in recent times sales to Italy by the United States have been on a concession and not a commercial basis? Is the minister considering including this item among the items to be discussed when our delegation goes to Washington?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, it has not been customary to disclose the agenda for these meetings before they actually take place. There is wide scope to discuss all questions having to do with economic and trading matters during these conferences. A report will be made to the house as soon as the Canadian ministers return to Ottawa. I think the hon. member can rest assured that all such questions which are of interest to Canada will be discussed.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wish to address my supplementary question to the Minister of Finance, who is also responsible for the administration of the Bankruptcy Act. In view of the fact—

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, the administration of the Bankruptcy Act falls under the responsibility of the Department of Justice.

Mr. Herridge: Then I address my question to the Minister of Finance on account of the minister being a delegate to this coming trade conference. In view of the fact that a number of United States lumber companies in southeastern British Columbia have in recent years gone bankrupt under very suspicious circumstances, and in view of the fact that the Hilco Lumber Company at Fruitvale, recently went bankrupt leaving Canadian employees with wages in arrears for months—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Herridge: I am laying the ground for it. In view of these facts, will the minister discuss this problem—it is a serious one to many Canadians—at the coming conference on trade and economic affairs?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I would think a question of that kind should first be taken up with the appropriate Canadian authorities. If there is some question in regard to the law the matter should be brought to the attention of the appropriate department. It is not the sort of matter that would be appropriately introduced into a discussion until there has first been that kind of groundwork laid and investigation held.

[Later:]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the commercial attache to the United States embassy has expressed concern in regard to these bankruptcies and has offered his cooperation in an effort to correct this situation, would the minister place this on the agenda in the interests of Canadian citizens?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the question could be examined, but I might point out to the hon. member that even if the subject may not be ripe for inclusion as a specific subject on the agenda of the forthcoming conference that does not preclude representations being made through the ordinary channels if the facts warrant it.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

TABLING OF REPORT "PRIVATE AND PUBLIC INVESTMENT IN CANADA—OUTLOOK 1961"

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am tabling today the report "Private and Public Investment in Canada—Outlook 1961", which summarizes the results of a recent survey of capital spending intentions. The survey, conducted annually, is designed to cover the anticipated outlays for new plant and equipment, institutional and government facilities and housing.

Capital expenditure plans for all sectors of the economy, as outlined in this report, involve total outlays in 1961 of $8,336 million. This anticipated expenditure exceeds actual outlays of last year by more than $100 million and represents a continuation of the high and relatively stable level of capital spending realized in recent years.

Within the total program, the principal increases are anticipated in institutional building and government projects. New hospital building in particular will be sharply expanded. There is also the expectation of a somewhat higher level of house building activity. On the other hand, capital outlays by business establishments on the basis of stated intentions will be a little lower than in the preceding year. This reduction reflects mainly a smaller program in the transportation industry, with requirements for both permanent facilities and equipment being down. Outlays by commodity producing industries in total are approximately unchanged; larger expenditures related to natural gas developments are offset by reductions in certain other industries, notably iron and steel. Commercial construction for stores and office buildings is likely to continue at the high rate of 1960.

I should like to indicate also that it has been possible to include in this report a breakdown of the capital expenditure figures for provinces and major cities. In preceding years this regional material was not available until some time after the release of the national figures. The regional statistics indicate increased capital programs for 1961 in most of the provinces. In those provinces for which somewhat lower outlays are indicated, notably Manitoba and New Brunswick, unusually large expansion programs were completed last year.

The anticipated level of capital spending, if realized, will result in some net increase in demands upon the economy. An increase of 4 per cent in outlays for new construction is indicated. This will involve greater activity in the construction trades and related industries. On the other hand, the 2 per cent reduction in total outlays for machinery and equipment will affect mainly import items. Demands on domestic equipment producers should remain at about the 1960 level.

The results of the survey indicate that planned capital outlays, considered in relation to national output, will remain at a high level and will involve the continuing build-up in the capital stock of the economy.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): It is, of course, difficult to comment on an important statement of this kind which has just been made to the house and which we have had no opportunity to study, especially since it has been made in considerable statistical detail.

The planned capital expenditures, Mr. Speaker, are an important indication each year of the prospects for the economy for the current and forthcoming year. While there has been no opportunity to study the figures given by the minister, it is quite clear from what the minister has said that the plans for capital expenditures in this country this year are not such as to take care of the increased need for employment which will undoubtedly result from the increase in the labour force of this country.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): It is most difficult at this time to comment on the statement made by the minister without having been given any previous notice of it. I would say that I feel the statement is being made at the right time, since the labour estimates will be under discussion soon and we shall have a chance to relate the figures in this statement to the unemployment situation. As I heard the minister's statement I would say that while a small increase in capital outlay is forecast, it seems conclusive from the statement he has made that there will be no major upturn in the economy, certainly not sufficient to provide employment for those now unemployed.

We welcome the minister's statement at this time in relation to the debate about to take place, and will have further comments to make later.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT

MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER BILL C-71

On the order: Government notices of motion:

March 7—The Minister of Finance—The following proposed motion:—

That a special committee be appointed to consider Bill C-71, an act respecting the civil service of Canada, with power to send for persons, papers and records and to report from time to time;

That the committee have power to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable or necessary;

That the committee consist of fifteen members to be designated by the house;

That the committee be empowered to sit during the sittings of the house; and

That standing order 66 be suspended in relation thereto.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

UNITED NATIONS

ATTENDANCE OF MINISTER—DISCUSSION OF DISARMAMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Much as we appreciate the hon. gentleman's presence in this house, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could inquire whether it is his intention to participate in this portion of the general assembly of the United Nations. Is he in a position to say what the attitude of the government is regarding the statement made yesterday my Mr. Adlai Stevenson as to the desirability of postponing any disarmament discussion in the general assembly at this time?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): I hope to be going to New York in a few days' time. This week has been taken up largely with various discussions among the delegates and also in attempts to iron out the agenda for this resumed part of the assembly session. It is too soon yet to state just what plan will be reached. There has been an attempt to bring about the dropping of such controversial items as those relating to Hungary, Tibet, the U-2 incident and so on. Whether or not there will be any success in that endeavour, I cannot say. The general committee is meeting on Monday, and after that meeting we shall be in a better position to know just what the plans will be for this resumed session. I think there is no doubt that disarmament will be discussed during the session, but at what stage is not yet sure.

AGRICULTURE

CANNED PORK—INQUIRY AS TO TESTS OF QUALITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, notice of which I was able to give him just a few moments ago. Would the minister comment on a press report that federal government surplus canned pork being distributed in the Windsor area is unfit to eat? Has the government provided any check to test the quality of its canned pork still in storage so that its quality is assured before distribution?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): I should like to thank the hon. member for his interest in this matter. I am informed that the canned pork in question was part of a lot of 23,370 cases released at Toronto by the stabilization board to the Ontario department of welfare on April 1, 1960. Early in January, 1961 some 3,000 cases were sent to the social service authorities in Windsor. That agency has been distributing the product to needy people.

Reports that the product was faulty have been checked by officials of my department. They were informed by the office of the Windsor medical officer of health that samples were examined by the provincial health laboratory in Windsor and that the laboratory found no evidence of anything being wrong with the product. However, in view of the incidents of yesterday I have asked my department to check more thoroughly into the procedure followed with regard to this type of distribution.

There were also reports that some of the cans were bulging. Examination of several cans indicated that any evidence of bulging was due to overfilling, but I would have the department look into this further.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Is the Minister of Agriculture not aware that the ever alert member for Essex East inquired about this matter from the stabilization board this morning and was told that the question was one entirely within provincial responsibility? Is the minister not aware also that the member for Essex East asked the department to inquire whether or not the 30 million cans of pork which are now within the controlled storage of the Department of Agriculture, although they are already contracted for, might be made available in part to serve the needs of the city of Windsor?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Supplies of pork now in storage are, as the hon. member said, committed, not in part but in toto. To follow the hon. member's suggestion would mean that we would have to buy pork back or at least cancel the contract for it and I feel we should let our sales commitments go forward and sell the pork rather than make inroads on these stocks. If we are going to enter upon a distribution policy I think that should be done on a planned basis rather than on an ad hoc basis.

COMBINES

PACIFIC PRESS LIMITED—INQUIRY AS TO STATUS OF INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wish to address a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice and ask him whether any further investigations are being made by the combines investigation branch into the operations of Pacific Press Limited of Vancouver, or whether any court actions have been undertaken or are contemplated as a result of the report of the restrictive trade practices commission concerning the production and supply of newspapers in Vancouver and elsewhere in British Columbia.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): I shall have to take the question as notice and see that a reply is given as soon as possible.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CUBA—PROPOSED LABOUR DELEGATION FROM B.C.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the dynamic and forward looking British Columbia federation of labour has considered proposals for sending a fact finding delegation to Cuba, will the minister inform the house whether the government has any objection whatever to a fact finding group going on such a mission?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): There is no objection of which I am aware.

TRADE

REPORTED U.S. LOBBY FOR TARIFF AGAINST CANADIAN BREAD

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yesterday the honourable and alert member for Essex West directed a question to me concerning a report that a group of bakers in the United States was seeking to impose a tariff against the importation of Canadian made bread.

Canadian bread enters the United States free of customs duty. Its duty free status is bound under our trade agreement with the United States. Therefore a tariff could not be imposed on Canadian bread without our knowledge. We are aware of the bill in congress seeking a tariff on bread, to which the hon. gentleman referred. We are watching the progress of the bill, and if and when the time comes to make representations the house may accept our assurance that the views of the Canadian government will be made known to the United States government.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could I ask the minister whether bread is a custom made article or shelf goods?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, it just depends on the particular baker.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED ABUSES BY APPLICANTS FOR BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. C. MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, of which I have given him notice. In view of the present widespread abuse of the unemployment insurance fund in this country, whereby many thousands of men and women are drawing unemployment insurance when there is work for them in the industries which they follow, will the minister advise the house what steps the government is taking to correct this situation?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, there has been a general tightening up in the administration of the unemployment insurance fund. Regulations regarding casual employment and contract of service provisions are being strictly enforced. The addition of more than 40 enforcement officers to the staff has made it possible to extend spot checking operations.

As a result of these measures the incidence of fraud has been reduced. I might say that fraud or misrepresentation, when discovered, is speedily dealt with and punishment is meted out in accordance with the terms of the act.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Minister of Labour is now indicating what the government is going to do about abuses under the Unemployment Insurance Act, can he give the house some indication as to when we may expect the government to bring forward its proposals to replenish the fund?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, whatever policy is adopted with respect to the fund or the Unemployment Insurance Act will be announced at the appropriate time in the House of Commons.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister if he does not think it would be more beneficial to the unemployed if he were to direct his efforts toward providing employment?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question is, of course, just an attempt to make an argumentative assertion, which is quite out of order.

COPYRIGHTS

REQUEST FOR REVISION OF ACT THIS SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Secretary of State in the absence of the Secretary of State, arising out of a report appearing in yesterday morning's Globe and Mail in regard to a letter from the Secretary of State to Mr. D. W. Thomson, president of the Canadian authors association, which stated that it might be possible to introduce a new copyright act in the next session. My question is, in view of the urgency of this matter—and admittedly there was a legitimate case made by the Canadian authors association in a brief presented last week—will the minister give serious consideration to introducing a bill to revise the Copyright Act at this session of parliament?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this matter of course has been under consideration for some time and arises out of the work of a royal commission which examined the whole situation over an extended period of several years. Although this does not come within my own department I do know that the Department of the Secretary of State is vitally concerned, and every consideration is being given to expediting the introduction of a bill.

Inquiries of the Ministry

D.E.W. LINE—FORWARDING OF SUPPLIES THROUGH WINNIPEG AND CHURCHILL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier:) Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. I would ask him if he has taken cognizance of a statement appearing in the Winnipeg Free Press of March 6 to the effect that the United States air force will abandon its plan to supply the distant early warning line through Winnipeg and Fort Churchill if award of a contract is delayed much longer.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will realize that I have no jurisdiction over the air transport board, and that this is not a matter which comes within the confines of my department at all.

Mr. Chevrier: I realize that, Mr. Speaker, but I was going to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Transport. I asked the Minister of National Defence to comment as to whether this statement appearing in the Winnipeg Free Press is correct, and that the United States is likely to abandon its plan to supply the distant early warning line through Winnipeg and Fort Churchill.

Mr. Harkness: All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is I have no knowledge in connection with this report.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Transport. The chairman of the air transport board, Mr. Davoud, has stated that before he can make any commitment he must wait for his minister to arrive back in Ottawa. The statement simply said that the word from the east was that the United States air force is becoming increasingly impatient for the federal air transport board to nominate an air line to do the job. I wonder if the minister would care to make a comment in regard to this statement.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the article in question, but I can assure the house that the air transport board has been in contact with the Federal Electric Corporation and the United States air force in regard to this matter. Discussions have been taking place for some time. I think I will be in a position later today or perhaps tomorrow morning to announce the new contract. I can assure this house that there is absolutely no risk or danger, that this contract would not be carried on.

[Mrs. Fairclough.]

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON SMALL BUSINESS LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he can give us any information regarding the first month's operations respecting small business loans because of the usefulness this information will be in the debate we are to undertake in relation to unemployment.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): There is no report available as yet on this matter, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

AVAILABILITY OF EMPLOYMENT RECORDS OF UNEMPLOYED PERSONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. Is it possible for the Minister of Labour to procure information regarding the employment record of a person registered with the national employment service if he is requested to do so by a member of parliament?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I think it is evident that the hon. member for Welland refers to the reference I made yesterday in respect to Mr. Exelby. If that is so, Mr. Speaker, then I feel that if Mr. Exelby undertook of his own volition to disclose his personal affairs in great detail on a national television broadcast and in so doing created a completely false impression, it is quite proper for me to present certain facts of the same nature.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I would like to ask the minister whether he has ever read section 98 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, and if he is aware that he broke the law yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would suggest that if there are further questions regarding the administration of the Department of Labour they should be asked on the estimates, which are to be called as soon as the last question is asked on orders of the day.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege, sir. Since I cannot put a question, I draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member would state the question of privilege which arises perhaps I will hear what he has to say about it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am submitting, sir, on a question of privilege that a minister of the crown in an answer given in this house yesterday was in breach of a law made by this parliament. That is my question of privilege, and to substantiate it I should like to read a part of section 98 of the Unemployment Insurance Act of 1955. It reads as follows:

98. Information, written or verbal, obtained by the commission from any person pursuant to the provisions of this act or any regulation shall be made available only to the employees of the commission in the course of their employment and such other persons as the commission deems advisable—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that we were told yesterday not what the commission deemed advisable but what the minister caused the Hamilton office to supply, which parliament said should be kept secret in the same way that details regarding income tax are kept secret, and for the minister to gain cheap political advantage—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is correct in rising on a question of privilege but not in making the imputation he made. That is not a question of privilege.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the member for Bonavista-Twillingate has directed a question to the minister, and I think should be entitled to a reply.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has risen on a matter of privilege. The point he makes is that a minister of the crown in the house has not observed the conditions of a statute passed by the house. I think a matter of privilege properly arises under such circumstances, and the Minister of Labour should have the opportunity to discuss it.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I think I should also rise on the question of privilege at this time. The act clearly states that the information can be given if it is deemed advisable.

Mr. Pickersgill: The information can be given if deemed advisable by the commission.

Mr. Starr: The information can be given if deemed advisable by the unemployment insurance commission. The unemployment insurance commission in Hamilton is an office which operates under the provisions of this act. An employee of that commission at Hamilton is perfectly within his rights to use his judgment, and when a minister who reports to parliament requests certain information he is certainly doing his duty to supply the minister with it. In any event, Mr. Speaker, when there is any misrepresentation of any kind to the detriment of our economy I feel that as a member of this government it is my duty to reveal the true facts.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. As I have indicated to the hon. member who raised the matter, it is my view that in certain circumstances a question of privilege could arise. He has indicated his views and the minister has done likewise. It seems to me that is as far as the matter can be carried, in the absence of a motion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I see nothing to be gained in pursuing the matter unless the hon. member wishes to make an issue of it by bringing in a motion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, sir, in my view, under the rules of the house, the minister misrepresented what I had said.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member read the statute and the house heard it. The minister commented on it and expressed his views. I think the hon. member can hardly say that a case of misrepresentation arises when he himself has read the section concerned.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Flynn in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

General administration—

178. Departmental administration including a grant of $10,000 to Frontier College and the expenses of the international labour conferences, $1,373,104.

The Chairman: This item will be found on page 37 of the blue book and the details on page 256.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, in these main estimates the total amount requested is $136,497,933. The Department of Labour is asking for the sum of $33,879,953 and the unemployment insurance commission for $102,617,980. Of the $33,879,953 for the Department of Labour, $26,600,000 is required to carry out the purposes of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act. This represents an increase of over $17 million in the amount provided for this program in 1960-61.

Honourable members will recall that when the new bill to expand technical and vocational training in Canada was introduced last November I spoke of the many compelling reasons for increased training in Canada. I should like to bring to the attention of the committee the fact that notwithstanding this substantial increase in our vocational training program, page 39 of the blue book shows a decrease of slightly over $12 million in the department's estimates from that which was voted in 1960-61. I should also explain that in the 1960-61 estimates column there is an item of $30 million which was voted for the municipal winter works incentive program, and there is no comparable figure in the 1961-62 column.

I wish to assure the committee at this point that this municipal winter works incentive program will be continued during the winter of 1961-62 should the extent of seasonal unemployment warrant it and should the government decide to do so. Moneys required for this purpose will be included in a later supplementary departmental estimate.

The other increases in the operational votes are generally speaking in the salary allotments, and are largely due to the general salary increases which were given to civil servants and authorized by the government last summer.

I should now like to deal generally with the main activities of the Department of Labour. When presenting my departmental estimates it has been my usual practice to speak briefly on the various functions of the department. My remarks will concern the highlights of activities which give rise to the financial requirements over the coming fiscal year.

First, we give every assistance possible to labour and management in developing constructive relationships and in improving the skills of the work force. Second, we assist in bringing into employment and training those who are unemployed. I assure you, Mr. Chairman, that in the campaign against unemployment we are mobilizing and will continue to mobilize all the resources at the disposal of the federal government. The points I wish to make today in assisting hon. members in their consideration of my department's estimates concern the programs of the various branches of my department and the positive contribution they make every day to improving the welfare of Canadians.

Today's manpower problems have established the changing and expanding work of my department. We have expanded and greatly intensified our work in those activities most directly concerned with dealing with unemployment through creating job opportunities and developing the skills of the labour force. For example, the experience of the first two years of our municipal winter works incentive program demonstrated to us that this program could create winter jobs. On the basis of this experience we greatly expanded the scope of the program and its duration, and as a result, Mr. Chairman, almost twice the number of direct jobs have been created through the program this year. We know that methods of construction and programming of work which were available before the start of our "do it now" program, but not used to any great extent, have become a well known and accepted part of Canadian life and this to me, Mr. Chairman, spells success.

We have found that a wide gap exists in the contribution of vocational training to the development of the skills and the requirements of Canadian industry. I have already mentioned the substantial increase in the amounts we are asking to be voted for this program during the coming year. The increase in our expenditures in support of vocational training programs from $9,197,600 a year ago to $26,600,000 for the fiscal year 1961-62 stems largely from the positive action taken by this government to provide facilities and programs to meet the requirements of industry and workers in such training.

I refer to the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act which received royal assent last December. Already the effect of this new legislation, with its realistic approach to the problems of training for trades and technical skills at all levels, are being felt. Financial impediments to the development of adequate training facilities have been removed. From the Atlantic provinces to the west coast important expansions are under way or about to begin. For example, at St. John's, Newfoundland, a new college of trade and technical training is being built at a cost initially estimated at more than $4 million. Nova Scotia has forecast the construction of a provincial trade school and a vocational high school. The province of New Brunswick is proceeding with the construction of a provincial technical institute and is planning three additional trade schools. Ontario's plans have not as yet been announced but very much expanded facilities are in prospect. Prince Edward Island is advancing plans for the construction of training facilities at a new centre, and we have received assurances that the province of Quebec will enter into an agreement with the federal government under the new act and will implement plans already made for construction of new facilities and expansions of many which are already in use. Manitoba is planning a combined institute of technology and a trade school at an estimated cost of $5 million. Alberta and British Columbia each have plans well under way for extensive capital projects.

This rapid development in capital expenditure programs represents a response by the provinces to the federal government offer made in this new legislation to assume 75 per cent of the capital costs of new facilities incurred up to March 31, 1963. More and better training facilities are needed and it appears, Mr. Chairman, that we are going to have them.

The cost of federal sharing in these capital developments during the fiscal year 1961-62 is estimated at $14,175,000, exclusive of Quebec. If Quebec completes an agreement this amount will undoubtedly be higher. In some cases facilities to accommodate additional trainees will be ready for use within the new fiscal year. Other projects while taking longer to complete, will provide early relief to our urgent training needs.

Immediate increases in the sharing of provincial expenditures for the operation of technical and vocational schools are promoting an immediate expansion of training enrolments to the limit of facilities currently available. In our estimates for the coming year we have provided $4 million for the training of unemployed workers compared with $1,310,000 for the fiscal year 1960-61. In 1960 the federal government offered to share with the provinces to the extent of 75 per cent of the cost of this training, once a minimum level of training had been reached. The program has gained momentum rapidly. In the fiscal year 1959-60 some 3,600 unemployed persons had been given training to January 31, 1960. By the same date in the fiscal year 1960-61 more than 7,000 had been given training. For the months of February and March marked increases in enrolments are expected as the provincial programs gain momentum. Training classes have been established in 385 centres in a total of 82 different occupations, and as additional facilities become available we expect to have a program extensive enough to cover all unemployed persons who can profit by training.

The program for training indentured apprentices is also continuing to grow. By the end of January in the fiscal year 1959-60 there had been just short of 10,000 new enrolments for apprenticeship. By January 31 this year there had been more than 11,100 new enrolments. The continued expansion of facilities for this training will provide for further increases in the coming year.

The foregoing are the largest items of expenditure for which we have budgeted in our estimates to cover the technical and vocational training program. The program of training of disabled persons, an effective means to restore handicapped workers to active careers of self-support, is continuing to grow, with a vote of $370,000 as the federal share of the program. Other programs for training in primary industries, as foremen and supervisors, for student aid and vocational correspondence courses will continue. An expanded program of assistance to students attending post-high school courses in science and technology below university level has been introduced. The need for technicians and other skilled workers at a level between that of the tradesman and the professional man has become acute in industry. It must be satisfied, Mr. Chairman, if our economy is to keep abreast of world competition.

A new program of assistance to persons training as technical and vocational teachers, supervisors and administrators is being developed. Too frequently our technical and vocational institutions have had extreme difficulty in recruiting competent staffs. Many Canadians wishing to prepare for careers in this field have had to seek their training in the United States or elsewhere. The expected growth in our vocational institutions will create additional and urgent staffing problems.

I had occasion recently to meet with representatives of the provinces at a conference called to discuss proposals for a new federal-provincial agreement to implement the provisions of the new Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act, and their response to the possibilities opened by the new act was most gratifying to me. The provisions of the agreements to be made under it and the programs authorized were generally acceptable. There appeared to be an air of satisfaction and eagerness on the part of all provincial representatives to get ahead with the training program which the new look in our legislation has made possible.

We are constantly developing our understanding of employment and unemployment and the more effective utilization of our manpower resources through the work of the economics and research branch. One of the principal functions of the branch is the continuing analysis of labour market conditions and the examination of the meaning of trends and events in labour markets for the demand and supply of labour. The value of this information is self-evident. Publication of a good deal of this information has proved of value to parliament, labour and management, provincial governments and the public at large.

Continuing work on the character of our manpower resources and their participation within the Canadian economy has facilitated a deeper understanding of the character of our employment and unemployment problems. For example, the publication this year of studies of seasonal employment and unemployment has made available to us new insights into the nature of this problem. It has strengthened the government's view that much can be done through the winter works program to provide employment for those who find themselves unemployed during the winter months.

The branch has also participated in joint studies with the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick for the purpose of examining the problems of seasonal unemployment in those provinces. These studies will reinforce other work going on in the branch concerning the nature of workers who are not able to secure continuing employment.

The field of manpower training is one to which much research has been devoted over the past several years, and this work has helped to shape the character of our new legislation on training. This work has involved a detailed investigation of shifting occupational and industrial needs within the labour force and of the required technical qualifications. Studies have been carried out on the effects of automation on manpower in specific industries and on the evaluation of a wide range of technological changes on manpower requirements. In the field of professional personnel, further work has been undertaken to determine the nature of supply and demand trends, particularly for scientists and engineers. One important aspect, Mr. Chairman, of the employment of workers is covered by the continuing work of the economics and research branch in the labour management field. Similarly, in today's world, the branch is investigating the important problem of the costs of fringe benefits and the significance of labour costs on the whole Canadian economy.

The regular work of the branch in connection with wages, working conditions and collective bargaining has continued, and publications have been issued on a regular basis. In addition to the general work in the field of employment and unemployment, there is provision in the work of the department for continuing programs in a number of important areas. I shall refer here, Mr. Chairman, to only four of these fields. Our women's bureau works closely with the national employment service and other groups in developing an understanding of the problems of women in the labour force and for the promotion of good employment standards for women. Through the special services branch, programs are administered in the farm labour field and in connection with the organized movement of workers between Canada and the United States.

The civilian rehabilitation branch, in cooperation with the Department of National Health and Welfare, the unemployment insurance commission and the vocational training branch, continues to co-ordinate at the federal level all these services that contribute to the vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons. It is assisting the provinces to organize programs or endeavours to bring together in an organized pattern all government and voluntary efforts that seek to remove the disadvantages experienced by so many of our handicapped citizens. The value of this program, Mr. Chairman, has been clearly established and, on the basis of provincial needs, we are asking for increased provincial support in this area of activity.

A division of older workers has been established within the civil rehabilitation branch. Through these efforts and the efforts of the unemployment insurance commission, we see evidence that many more of our employers are realizing the valuable contributions that the experience and maturity of the older worker can make. I have taken a very personal interest in the employment problems of older people in a variety of ways, and I am most encouraged by the response of employers to our efforts in this field.

The special services branch of the department co-ordinates our many significant activities in the field of winter employment. These include the winter employment program and the municipal winter works incentive program. Both these programs have grown out of a conviction on our part, through research in the seasonal unemployment problems of the Canadian economy, that a great deal can be done to develop employment during the winter months. The winter employment program, jointly administered by the Department of Labour and the unemployment insurance commission, has become the focus of national interest. It enlists the support of national and local organizations, of industry, of labour and of every available publicity medium in stimulating winter employment.

An example here, Mr. Chairman, has been set by federal government departments and agencies in carrying out maximum construction, maintenance, repairs and purchasing during the winter months. Public spirited citizens in the towns and cities from coast to coast deserve great credit for the time and effort they put in each fall and winter on behalf of the local "do it now" campaigns. Organizations, such as the Canadian Construction Association, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and other nationally known organizations are taking an active interest in the stimulation of winter employment and are intensifying their efforts each year. National advertising is contributing hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of public service support on behalf of the winter employment campaign.

We have found, Mr. Chairman, that for every dollar spent by the government more than $10 is spent by business and other groups on advertising and publicity to increase winter employment. This year's municipal winter works incentive program was enthusiastically promoted by provincial governments and municipalities across the country. Over 5,900 projects submitted by 1,820 municipalities and 44 Indian bands have been accepted. This program may be compared with the 2,600 projects previously undertaken by 861 municipalities during the winter of 1959-60.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the minister at this point if he has a table showing how these 900 projects are divided as among the various communities; how many work days and how many hours of work will be given to each individual, each project and so on? If he has, would he table it as he did last year?

Mr. Starr: I would be glad to table this but I have not a copy with me at this moment. I will get it.

At the present time, that is up to March 3, which is the last compilation available to me, total expenditures on projects undertaken during the period of the program, namely October 15, 1960 to April 30, 1961 inclusive, are approximately $185 million. The estimate of the incentive payments to the municipalities through the provinces for the program is now over $31 million. The approved projects under this year's program will provide on-site employment for over 100,000 workers, and at least an equal number of workers will be employed in the production of materials used on winter works projects. It is estimated that the projects that have been accepted so far under the program will provide 4,487,000 man days of work during the winter months. Applications under this program are still coming in from the municipalities at the rate of over 100 per week.

A variety of other activities of the Department of Labour have continued. For example, the department has provided leadership in Canada's work within the international labour organization. During 1960 Canada was represented at seven international labour organization meetings by tripartite delegations. Similar meetings are scheduled for 1961 including, for the first time in five years, an international labour organization American regional conference to which we will be sending a delegation.

The department undertakes a number of diverse activities which, in one measure or another, support the department's work as a whole. In today's world, where pensions have become the rule rather than the exception, we are sometimes inclined to underrate the value of the annuities program which also comes under my department. Individuals, not able through their employment to secure pensions, are assumed of low cost annuity plans. The group contracts by our annuities branch have also provided an effective and secure means of investment for employees in various industries across the country.

The annuities branch sells individual annuities, both deferred and immediate, and group annuities. At the close of the last fiscal year there were in force 116,057 individual deferred annuity contracts and 231,424 certificates for employees in group pension plans. In addition, annuities were being paid under 818,228 matured contracts and certificates at the rate of $43,403,649 a year. The net premium income for the fiscal year 1959-60 was $56,041,417, and the annuities account in the consolidated revenue fund totalled over $1,100 million as at March 31, 1960.

The industrial relations branch of the department is responsible for the administration of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, the Fair Employment Practices Act, the Annual Vacations with Pay Act, the Fair Wages and Hours of Labour Act and the promotion of labour-management committees in industry.

The function of the Department of Labour which has the longest history lies, of course, in the field of industrial relations. The Canada Fair Employment Practices Act continues to be a most effective weapon in the struggle against discrimination in employment. My department believes that not one application for employment form coming within federal jurisdiction contains questions contrary to the provisions of the act, though at the time of the passage of the bill the great majority of employers' application forms contained questions asking the prospective employee his race, religion, national origin or colour.

The labour-management co-operation service has continued to stimulate the development of labour-management committees in Canadian industry. Today there are in excess of 1,600 committees in industry across the country. The complex nature of our industrial relations system in Canada, the importance of many industrial disputes both to the country as a whole and to the thousands of individual workers and employers affected, is obvious. The responsibilities of labour and management to work together in securing the greatest possible benefit for their joint endeavours is great, and rests squarely on the shoulders of labour and management.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Shifting all responsibility.

The Chairman: I regret to interrupt the minister, but his time has expired. Do I understand that the committee gives unanimous consent to his continuing?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Starr: The hon. member for Essex East made a remark to the effect that I was shifting responsibility. I am sure that when he said that he misunderstood what I was saying. I will repeat what I said. The complex nature of our industrial relations system in Canada, the importance of many industrial disputes both to the country as a whole and to the thousands of individual workers and employers affected, is obvious. The responsibilities of labour and management to work together in securing the greatest possible benefits for their joint endeavours is great, and rests squarely on the shoulders of labour and management.

I am sure that when the hon. member for Essex East has considered that he will not wish to repeat his comment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I said that with regard to unemployment. The minister is shifting his responsibility.

Mr. Starr: I said nothing about unemployment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did.

Mr. Starr: As usual, then, the hon. member was out of order. Sometimes the gulf which appears to divide labour and management in this country seems difficult to bridge. It must be bridged. I have asked labour and management groups to meet and address themselves to problems of higher productivity, of technological change, and the whole field of joint interests. In this direction, I say, lies the solution to many of our contentious problems. Since we felt that an effort on our part could bring them together, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and I have asked representatives of industry and labour to meet here in Ottawa on March 15. We are sending out that invitation in the hope that we can create an atmosphere in which both labour and management can resolve the difficulties which they have faced and are facing.

I should like to say something now about the operations of the unemployment insurance commission, which administers the national employment service and unemployment insurance. As hon. members are aware, these operations are receiving a good deal of attention from both the government and the public; rightly so, since they are vital to the well-being of so many of our citizens at this time as well as to the prosperity of our country as a whole. This prosperity will be secured only through long range positive action, and it is in line with this conviction that the employment side of the commission's work has been consistently improved, especially of late. It is of the utmost importance that unemployed persons be placed in jobs with the least delay. It is equally important that such placements should be satisfactory not only to the workers concerned but also to their employers and to other workers.

In carrying out this program, officers of the service made more than a quarter of a million visits to employers last year in order to explain the facilities of the national employment service and to obtain orders for workers. In another direction, the employment service is constantly seeking out applicants with the skills required to meet employers' orders which cannot readily be filled from applications on file. As I advised the committee during the last debate on these estimates, steps were being taken at that time to strengthen the employment service staff, and these endeavours are already bearing fruit. We are thus engaged in an effort to improve the quality of the service and also to improve the use of the service by the public through a public relations program.

I am happy to say that this two-pronged approach, although of comparatively recent origin, has already produced results both tangible and intangible, particularly when measured against current economic factors. Thus, although placements for the calendar year 1960 were 2.8 per cent lower than they were for 1959, the last three months for which placement figures are available—November, December and January—show an increase of 16.7 per cent compared with the corresponding period of 1959-60.

During 1960 the employment service placed 950,300 persons in jobs and it is noteworthy, I think, that of this number of placements 120,134 were workers aged 45 and over. This has been brought about in part as a result of the older workers program in which I am particularly interested, and it emphasizes again the value of public information to which reference was made earlier. During the past year 300 employers employing some 60,000 workers have either raised the age limit specified on their hiring applications or removed it entirely.

Another direction in which progress has been made is the placement service to youth, including career counselling for young people in school or just entering the labour market. I may say that a considerable number of school drop-outs returned to school as a result of national employment service counselling.

Among the special services given by the commission are those for the physically handicapped and veterans, placement service to young Indians as part of their integration into urban life, to immigrant workers, and so forth. A sharp intensification of interest in vocational training has brought about many more directions of unemployed workers to courses of training by national employment service officers than ever before.

Taken separately, these things are of more immediate concern to some groups of citizens than to others. In their total effect, however, they are of fundamental importance for the Caandian economy as a whole. The commission believes, and I share this relief, that better placements will not only lead to better production but will also lead to the employment of more workers.

Hon. members will be interested to note that the commission's efforts to safeguard the fund against improper claims have been stepped up through a strengthening of the investigation division and an educational program. It is of course unavoidable that unlawful practices in the use of unemployment insurance stamps and in claims for benefit will crop up either as single incidents or as a rash of incidents. It is therefore necessary that the insurance provisions of the act, such as those relating to insurability, contract of service, availability for work and so on, be enforced and explained with both perseverance and understanding. As a result of the efforts on the part of the enlarged investigation division, the number of detected punishable infractions of the act rose from 17,279 in 1959 to 29,619 in 1960.

The commission's audit division, whose task is checking to ensure that employers comply with the act, completed 189,068 audits during 1960 and made 38,417 investigations, both figures being slightly higher than those for 1959. The number of registered employers in Canada subject to audit rose to 382,879, an increase of over 9,000 compared with the previous year.

The total amount required for the unemployment insurance commission is $102,617,980. This of course includes the government's contribution to the unemployment insurance fund of $57 million. The net increase in the commission's administrative costs is some $5,155,000. This increase is due primarily to salary increases and to an increase in personnel, notably in the investigation division.

Before concluding, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say something further about unemployment. This is, of course, one of the serious problems with which we have to deal at the present time. Hon. members are familiar with the fact that in a matter of months—as a matter of fact since November 17, 1960—this government has brought forward a wide range of positive and constructive measures to deal with the social blight of unemployment and to give an upward push to our economy. I have every confidence that the actions we have taken will produce the desired results and will have the desired effect. Unemployment is not something which can cure itself. It can only be cured and its consequences arrested by a massive attack across the whole field of the general economy—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: —and this is what we are doing.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, sir.

Mr. Starr: Results are becoming apparent in housing, municipal construction through sewage disposal aid, building of new trade and technical schools, strong impetus in export trade resulting from the new credit provisions and a restored confidence in the industrial and manufacturing sector of the economy.

The measures which have been brought forward relate to the work of every department of this government. They take in the fiscal and financial sphere of government responsibility. This is not, of course, the place for me to review in detail what has been done. I therefore confine my remarks to the work and responsibility of my own department, the Department of Labour. Meanwhile the concerted and sustained movement to bolster the economy will be kept up. On a number of occasions in this house and elsewhere there has been mention of what has been done in the United States. What has been done in the United States is good and will undoubtedly reflect favourably on our situation in Canada. But let me point out that we took action and have continued to take action, and that our action was both prior to and more comprehensive than action so far taken in the United States.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That, of course, is not so.

Mr. Chevrier: That is not so.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not the case.

Mr. Chevrier: That is just balderdash, and the applause is not going to strengthen the statement.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, now that the official opposition have run out of ideas as to what may be put forward, they want to copy whatever is being done in the United States, as they have always done in the past.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We want action.

Mr. Starr: As I have said, it would not be proper for me to dwell at this time on what has been accomplished under the jurisdiction of other ministers.

Mr. Chevrier: That is not much.

Mr. Jones: A great deal has been done.

Mr. Starr: I have dealt with the work of my department, and I trust that the picture I have attempted to present will commend itself to all hon. members of this committee.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, in opening my remarks on the work of the minister's department and the problems that face that department I should like to begin by paying a tribute to the efficient and selfless work of the members of the Department of Labour from the deputy minister down.

Perhaps I could say a special word about the deputy minister who retired this year, Mr. Arthur Brown. I confess that I am prejudiced very much in his favour. He and I entered university together at a very young age; we went to war together; we came back about the same time; we came to Ottawa about the same time, and I know something about the work he has done to serve his country over the years, and is still doing in another capacity after retirement from the public service of Canada. In wishing him well I should like to associate the members of this party with the good wishes that I am also extending to his successor, Mr. George Haythorne.

As I have a great deal to say that will be critical of the policy of the minister, perhaps I should say at the beginning that I, as do all hon. members on this side, respect his sincerity and his willingness to help us when we ask him questions. We also appreciate the important and complex problems with which he is faced as Minister of Labour.

Mr. Chairman, the discussion on item 1 of the estimates of the Department of Labour provides an opportunity to review the work of the department as well as to initiate a discussion of the problems that face it. The minister has given us the first, a review of the activities of his department, for which we are grateful, but he has dealt in an almost ludicrously inadequate way with the problems which face the department, and above all, with the problem of unemployment in this country to which he devoted two or three minutes at the end of his fairly long statement.

The minister explained in doing so that this was not a matter with which he felt it necessary to deal on item 1 of his estimates. The inadequacy of the minister's statement in this regard, especially in respect of unemployment, is discouraging and disheartening. You would have thought, that he was making a routine report regarding the activities of the Department of Labour during a normal year of full employment in this country instead of during a year when, in January, 11 per cent of the working force was unemployed.

In the face of that situation the minister did say that unemployment was one of the serious problems with which we have to deal. He also said that the government had mobilized all the resources of the federal government to deal with this problem. The result of that mobilization is reflected by the figure for unemployment that we received in January and will be reflected by the figure for February which we will be receiving within a few days.

The minister has given no indication this afternoon of the seriousness of this problem. He has not attempted to analyse the problem of unemployment. He has not put forward any new ways or means to deal with it. He has given us no policy statement at all regarding this matter. I urge the minister to rectify this omission before this item passes.

So far as I am concerned this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, my intervention at this point of our discussion is to address certain questions to the Minister of Labour in an attempt to bring out certain problems, as we on this side see them, with which we feel the government should be dealing. I intend to present our own analysis of the situation based on information we have received regarding unemployment and to ask the minister whether this analysis is sound and whether the information we bring forward to support this analysis is accurate. If the minister tells us that we are wrong in this regard we will ask him where we are wrong. I will mention some of these questions now which I intend to ask and which I hope the minister will deal with later.

The first question has regard to the rapid depletion of the unemployment insurance fund, in the face of mounting unemployment. I will ask the minister whether he agrees that the investment policy of the unemployment insurance committee by which the fund, through conversion of its victory bonds, has already been depleted by $30 million, and perhaps will be depleted to the extent of $70 million. I will ask the minister how he is going to explain this depletion to the other contributors to the fund, industry and labour.

My next question arose earlier in today's sitting and has regard to the government's intention to bring forth legislation to replenish the fund. This intention was announced by the government last November. I will ask the minister why nothing has been done in this regard since that time. I ask the minister when it is intended that action be taken in the face of this alarming situation. The government must have been aware for more than a year that legislation of this kind was necessary. So I ask the minister to give us a reason for the delay in taking action because the committee will soon have to unload more of its bonds and thereby incur further losses.

The next question I wanted to ask—and the minister has mentioned it in his statement—concerns the alleged irregularities connected with unemployment benefits and the alleged inadequacy of the national employment service. A great deal in this regard has been read into a memorandum submitted to the Senate committee on manpower and unemployment by Dr. James. In the discussion of this matter before this committee of the other place one of the senators—a long time supporter of the Conservative party—made certain statements. I will quote from the Senate committee reports of February 2 at page 461. This senator is reported as follows:

> May I suggest to you that if we were to speak about abolishing unemployment insurance entirely the unemployed would disappear by half as a good many of them have no wish to continue working steadily as long as this unemployment insurance is available for working part time.

That is an astonishing statement to appear on the records of a committee of the parliament of Canada. Even this afternoon, Mr. Chairman, we heard supporters of the government refer to widespread abuse of the unemployment insurance fund. The inference that is being drawn, and the impression that is being created throughout this country, is that hundreds of thousands of workers are cheating in regard to unemployment insurance benefits. This is a very serious impression to create and I am sure it has no foundation in fact. I ask the minister to say something about these reflections on the efficiency of the national employment commission and the honesty of the workers of Canada. If there is something seriously wrong, can the minister inform us what is going to be done to correct it, and to strengthen and add to the efficiency of the national employment service?

The third question to which I wish to refer deals with vocational training programs. The minister did have a good deal to say about this subject. He finally recognized last December that this program and its administrative operations needed to be improved. We on this side have been pressing for that improvement since 1958. We would like to know a little more about the program. The minister gave us some information this afternoon, but we would like to know if the minister is satisfied with the present administrative setup of the department in connection with the operation of this enlarged program. We on this side feel that a small branch in the department and an advisory council, however efficient, are not adequate to deal with this vitally important matter of vocational training.

There is another question on which the minister merely touched in his statement, namely the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. As far back as 1958 the minister admitted that this act required amendment and change. On August 15, 1958, as reported at page 3593 of Hansard he had this to say:

> Coming to the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, may I say that I have given notice of my readiness to consider amendments to this act and that a number of suggestions have been received and are being considered at the moment.
> I am still waiting for three major national organizations which have been requested to submit their recommendations, but to date I have not received them. However, on checking into the matter I find that they are in the process of completing their recommendations, and that they should be within my hands within the next few weeks.

That was August 15, 1958, but nothing has been done to carry out the intention of the minister. Since that time we have had merely postponement and delay. I ask the minister whether he still thinks this act should be improved and, if so, how does he explain the long delay in bringing forward amendments to it? Is he still waiting for the representations he expected in 1958, or has he merely shelved the whole matter? If he has not, when does he intend to introduce the amendments which he considered so desirable in 1958?

I now come to the most important of all domestic problems facing us at the present time, and one which is of particular interest and concern to the Minister of Labour who has a special responsibility for dealing with it. I refer, of course, to the question of unemployment. So far in this house, Mr. Chairman, we have been unable to get in this session or, indeed, in the previous session anything but superficial treatment by spokesmen of the government of the nature of the unemployment crisis that faces us; and of what can in fact be done about it. We on this side will keep pounding away at the seriousness of the problem even though this is subject to the cheap and tawdry response that we are prophets of doom and gloom, a reaction which we can characterize only as one of desperation on the part of the government spokesmen, a reaction on the part of hon. members in this house who in previous years on this side and in situations that were not nearly as dangerous as they are today, in terms of unemployment did not hesitate to use much stronger language in attacking the government of that day.

At this point may I quote from an editorial in the Montreal Gazette of February 28, a paper not notoriously friendly to the Liberal party, which reads:

> Just to hope that all will be well, and to refuse to mention that anything has gone wrong, may help a little, by creating an atmosphere of optimism. But it will never correct the underlying causes of what has gone wrong.
> It is not being neurotic to recognize that times have changed. No one is neurotic if he faces reality and seeks a constructive adjustment to it.

This is something which has not yet happened. A well known United States commentator, Mr. Walter Lippmann, put the same point in his column on March 4, which appeared in the Ottawa Journal, when he was dealing with the fact that people who try to uncover these difficulties and underline the seriousness of the situation are open to this kind of cheap criticism which I have mentioned, and he went on to say:

> They—

That is, the criticisms.

> —will be unwelcome to many. They will be unwelcome to those who take the view that with words of confidence and optimism a recession like this one can be talked away—

He is not afraid to use the word "recession". I continue:

> —and that the sombre truths should be glossed over and suppressed. There is everything to be said for keeping up the confidence of a sick patient. But an essential ingredient of that confidence is that the doctor is not deceiving himself. If, as seems so probable, we face a long hard effort to revive the American economy, the confidence of the people will best be sustained by convincing them that the economic doctors are not treating nice words as a substitute for real action.

Nice words, whether in Ottawa or in London, by Canadian leaders, are no substitute, and have never been a substitute, for real action. What Mr. Lippmann said in this regard about the United States has even greater application to Canada because relatively our situation is worse than that of the United States. Indeed, Mr. Coyne, the governor of the Bank of Canada, speaking in New York either yesterday or the day before—and it was a very interesting speech indeed—had this to say to his United States audience:

> Trends in the growth of national product, employment and unemployment, are rather less satisfactory in Canada than in the United States. Even disregarding the population factor, for the last four or five years gross national product has improved less in Canada than in the United States.

What, then, is the situation which I have described as serious for this country? In his statement today the Minister of Labour gave us no new reason for confidence that he is aware of what is happening to our economy, or that there has been any great departure from the position taken by the government in previous debates in this house on this subject that all we have to do is to be optimistic and all will be well; just wait. It is up to business and to labour, or even up to Mr. Kennedy. Our criticism of the government's ignorance of the underlying seriousness of this problem is, as I have said, not modified by anything that the minister has said or has not said this afternoon.

The minister did mention as an important contribution to the knowledge and understanding of the problem the proceedings of the committee of the other place on manpower and employment. Indeed, that committee is doing a most valuable work. It will be recalled that at the very beginning of the last session and the session before that we pleaded with the government to set up that kind of committee in the House of Commons so that the members of this house could participate in that kind of investigation and analysis and call before them the experts to explain the situation as they saw it.

The committee will recall that every time we tried to get this kind of investigation established in the House of Commons we were turned down. Even when we tried to persuade the government to associate the House of Commons with the investigation which had been set up through the Liberal majority in another place, we were unable to persuade the government to let us participate in what has turned out to be a most constructive and important work. It is largely on the basis of the reports before that committee that I have drawn my own conclusions of the seriousness of the trends in the economy in this country. When I talk about them, when I use the word "seriousness", I do not want anyone to think that this country will not eventually face up to and overcome those problems and once again remove that seriousness through expansion and growth. We have met very difficult and dangerous economic and employment problems before in this country and have overcome them, and we will overcome this one. But we will not do that in the way it should be done and in the time it should be done without strong, effective leadership and sound and strong policies.

Let us look at the situation, which was not explained to us by the minister at least on this occasion. We hope he may do so later. The figure I am about to give are all bureau of statistics figures which were used in reports made to the committee on employment in the other place. In the period from 1950 to 1960 there was a net increase in the labour force in this country of 1,230,000. That was accounted for to a very considerable extent by additional female labour, particularly married women, coming into the labour force, also by men under 20 and, of course, by new immigrants to Canada.

While the labour force increased by that amount during that ten-year period, the farm labour force decreased by 340,000 which threw a greater burden on industry to supply jobs to take care of this labour force increase. Yet during that period the number of persons with jobs in this country increased by only 992,000. There is the explanation for unemployment.

If we extend the trend of the last ten years forward over the next five years, as was done in the report to the committee of the other place by Mr. Denton, an economist, and if we take a low figure for increase through immigration during the next five years—he took a figure of 100,000 per year—with the present average unemployment to be absorbed during that five years we will need 1,020,000 non-agricultural jobs to take care of our growing labour force and our present unemployment.

Are we getting these jobs? Government spokesmen say, "Oh, yes, we are getting them because employment is higher now than it has ever been in our history". They quote figures every time they speak on this subject to show that the number of people employed in the country is higher than ever before and that, of course, is quite true. However, the significant factor is not the number of employed but whether the employed are increasing at a rate sufficient to take care of the increasing labour force. If that is not happening then we get more unemployed. This increase is not taking place.

In January, 1961, it is true there were 47,000 more jobs than a year earlier. That is an increase of less than 1 per cent while during the same period unemployment increased by more than 26 per cent. As we are not getting the jobs to take care of the increase in the labour force the result, inevitably and obviously, is an increase in the percentage of unemployment. Until the economy expands so that this increase in the labour force can be taken care of the unemployment problem will be with us in the serious way in which it is today. Perhaps the figures will decrease. We hope they will, and they ought to go down in the summer. However, as I have tried to show by averaging these figures over the years, we are going to be living with this problem for some time unless there is a decided expansion in our economy.

We have had four periods of what I might perhaps call abnormal unemployment and recession since 1947, the period of 1949-50, the period of 1954-55—I am taking two during the time when my hon. friend and his party had no responsibility for government—the period of 1957-58 and the present period from the summer of 1960 to where we are in 1961. In an analysis of these four periods of what one might call recession in the economy since the war the most striking feature is that in each successive slow-down, and we have had four, the rate of unemployment has risen higher than in the previous period and in each period of recovery we have had the rate of unemployment has fallen less.

There are three peak unemployment years, 1950, 1954 and 1958, and I think the statistics for those years will support what I have just said. In 1950 the average rate of unemployment was 3.6, in 1954 it was 4.6, in 1958 it was 7.1 and in 1960 it was just about 7 per cent. In the recovery year of 1951 unemployment fell to 2.4. In the recovery year of 1956 it fell to 3.4. In the recovery year of 1959 it feel only to 6 per cent. In January, 1961, a recession year again, the rate had reached about 11 per cent.

This indicates, I think, the validity, and importance, of an article which I read just a few hours ago during the lunch hour in the current issue of Life magazine by Dr. Heller, president Kennedy's chief economic advisor and chairman of the council of economic advisors in Washington. He is a very well known economist indeed. What he had to say on this particular point, is just as applicable, if not more so, to Canada than it is to the United States.

> The economy has not been taking up the slack after its periodic slumps and, going deeper, there is a disturbing slow-down in our rate of economic growth. The intervals between our recessions have been steadily shrinking. The up-turns have not regained the ground lost by the recession. The unemployment figures make this painfully clear.

They also make it painfully clear for Canada as well as for the United States; so clear that at the present time we have the highest percentage of unemployment in this country for 20 years and, I am informed, the highest in any industrialized free country in the western world. That, Mr. Chairman, is something to worry about.

This problem would be serious enough if it were evenly national in its impact but it is made more serious by its regional incidence, something which has been characteristic of our country ever since our country was born. The rates of unemployment are much higher in some parts of our country than they are in others. That gives us a regional problem to deal with as well as a national problem. The average in 1960 in the Atlantic provinces was 9.4 per cent and the average in Quebec was 8.5 per cent while the figures were much lower in the prairies and in Ontario.

All this shows, Mr. Chairman, that we have with us a persistent, deep-rooted problem which has, of course, no single cause and which will be susceptible to no single treatment. It is deep-rooted, it is chronic, it is regional and it is seasonal. The nature of the unemployment also adds to its complexity. A study that has been made—I confess this was a surprise to me—shows that the greatest extent of unemployment is now among young people under 20 years of age and the least extent is among women where the over-all rate of unemployment is less than half the male rate. Figures from the bureau of statistics show that whereas the average rate in 1960 was 7.3 for all ages, for women it was 3.3 and for men under 20 it was 15.6. As the minister mentioned this afternoon in his statement when dealing with vocational training, these figures emphasize the importance of vocational training and the strong relationship of education to unemployment.

A dominion bureau of statistics survey, taking the week of February 20, 1960, shows that of the people out of work 19 per cent had not completed their primary school education but only 3 per cent had completed their secondary school education. The gap, therefore, is from 19 per cent to 3 per cent.

In reporting to the employment committee of the other place, Mr. Denton summarized the situation as follows. I think this is a very good paragraph:

> In summary, then, the rates of unemployment have shown a tendency to increase with each successive recession since the war. In particular, the rates have been substantially higher for men than for women, and have consistently been highest among young people, the unskilled, and the less educated. The service producing industries have continued throughout the post-war period to provide rapidly expanding opportunities for employment, but in recent years the opportunities available in the goods producing industries have actually contracted. These changes reflect some of the basic forces which are operating in our economy.

This quotation reminds us of another very significant factor, the nature of not only unemployment but of employment in our economy today. This nature has changed considerably over the years, as the figures show. In 1950, the goods producing industries of this country were responsible for 58 per cent of the employment, whereas in 1959 they were responsible for only 48 per cent of the employment. In that category of the goods producing industries, agriculture was responsible for 20.4 per cent of the employment in 1950 and only 11.8 per cent in 1959. Manufacturing industries were responsible for 26.6 per cent of the employment in 1950 but by 1959 the figure had gone down to 25 per cent, not quite holding their own.

We know that nothing took up this slack completely, but what helped to take up some of the slack? The service industries provided 42 per cent of the employment in 1950 and 51.7 per cent of the employment in 1959. This explains among other things the increase in the number of jobs for women and the decrease in the number of jobs for men. Those manufacturing industries which are declining most in terms of employment such as gold mining, coal mining, motor parts manufacturers, farm implements, textiles and leather manufactures, are those which traditionally have employed men for the most part. All this helps to explain the nature and the seriousness of the problem that faces us. The basic reason for it, as I have already said, is a decline in the expansion of our economy. It has now reached a position of stagnation.

This afternoon, the Minister of Trade and Commerce produced a statement on private and public investment in Canada, the outlook for 1961. He gave the most optimistic interpretation possible to that statement. Since he had not sent me a copy of it in advance, it was only after I secured a copy of the press release that I had an opportunity to study it. I have had some chance to look at it while I have been in the chamber. It does not give any ground for encouragement that the situation which I have mentioned is going to be substantially corrected in the year ahead.

In so far as this particular report is concerned the minister said that, for 1961, it represents a continuation of the high and relatively stable level of capital spending realized in recent years. Well, I have just one or two comments to make on that. The proposed increase, if it is realized, will be only 1.6 per cent over 1960, and that is much too low to provide the job opportunities required by even the normal increase in our labour force let alone the high number of unemployed we have at the present time.

According to the minister's statement this afternoon, the proposed expenditures in 1961 amount to $8,330 million. This amount will actually be lower than the amount spent in 1957, 1958 or 1959 and, if expressed in constant dollars, the proposed expenditures will probably be lower than in 1960. Therefore, the declining trend which has been persistent since 1957 will unfortunately, in the light of this report, likely be continued. The report also shows that investment in business capital will be lower in 1961 than in 1960, but will be compensated by higher expenditures in the field of social capital. This does indicate the continued underlying weakness of the private sector of our economy. I hope that the forecast which we got this afternoon will not prove to be as wrong as the one that was made last year by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Last year the proposed expenditures were estimated by the minister at $8.77 billion, but we now see from the statement that the realized expenditures were only $8.2 billion. Instead of the forecast increase of about 4 per cent in 1960 as compared with 1959, we had a decline in 1960 of about 2 per cent as compared with 1959.

Mr. Benidickson: Would the hon. member permit a question? I believe the minister forecast an increase of 8 per cent in the private sector. Has that been realized in 1960?

Mr. Pearson: No, it was not. The minister was as inaccurate in his total calculations as he was in his break-down.

An hon. Member: What does all this show?

Mr. Pearson: All this goes to show that unless we get the kind of expansion in the economy about which I have been talking, then the economy is not likely to pick up in the way it should pick up to take care of this unemployment. The report which we got from the Minister of Trade and Commerce this afternoon does not give us very much ground for hope in that regard. Indeed, the reports for the last three quarters of 1960 indicated a decline in most of the significant indices of economic activity, including general industrial production even though the minister, early in 1960, claimed the recession was over.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that the annual increase in our gross national product in real terms from 1950 to 1956, inclusive, on an average, was 5.6 per cent but from 1957 to 1959 the increase was 1.3 per cent. Unemployment, as a percentage of the labour force during the same period rose from 3.4 per cent on an average to 6.2 per cent. This tells the story of what has been happening to our economy in the last three or four years. It reflects a slowing down of that economy, a pause or recession, call it what you like. The governor of the Bank of Canada and the President of the United States are willing to use this word "recession", but this government will not use it. I ask the government and the minister, in the light of what I have just said and the evidence I have brought forward, if they feel that this recession is likely to continue further in 1961 or is it likely to recede? If it is likely to continue and our unemployment problem is likely to be with us, what are they doing about it in any effective way?

What is the outcome in respect of economic growth and resulting employment? Will the minister tell us that before this discussion is over? So far the minister has left us completely in the dark. Yet we know he receives two reports each year from a branch of his department—the economics and research branch—the work of which he rightly praised this afternoon as being important and efficiently done. Now that we no longer have the report from the Department of Trade and Commerce—it is not only hidden but buried—perhaps the Minister of Labour could give us some information concerning what the experts of his department are telling him about the situation, the conclusions which he draws from that information and the plans he has as a result of those conclusions, if any. Perhaps he would also tell us how the plans to which he referred this afternoon are working out.

All we learned from the minister this afternoon is that President Kennedy is copying them; the plans which were put forward by this government in the autumn of 1960, three years after this unemployment problem hit this country. President Kennedy, not more than two or three weeks after his administration came to office, is carrying out plans which it took this government three years to put into operation here. On the face of it, that comparison does not make any sense. But even if the comparison were accurate, President Kennedy put his plans into effect two or three weeks after his election though it took hon. gentlemen opposite more than three years to do so. They took so long, it is obvious, because for three years they refused to admit there was any problem. When they took an attitude of that kind how could one expect them to adopt effective steps to deal with the situation?

All one has to do to realize the absurdity of the comparison which the minister has made with action taken by President Kennedy is to examine the proposals put forward by the president, and particularly the statement he made a couple of weeks ago to the national industrial conference in Washington; to examine the programs he is submitting to the United States congress, and compare them with the so-called emergency program which this government put forward last November and December.

Take, for example, the question of areas where there is chronic unemployment, depressed areas or whatever you may wish to call them; Mr. Kennedy is not afraid to call them depressed areas. Compare what he has done down there in three weeks, the action he has taken and the results which are already beginning to flow, with the statement we got from the minister the other day on the regulations which have been hanging fire for all these months to deal with areas of chronic unemployment here; regulations which have been well described by a paper which is traditionally a strong supporter of the government, the Globe and Mail. This is what that newspaper had to say about them on March 6th. I read from an editorial:

> They constitute a poorly thought out and thoroughly inadequate approach to a serious problem. The old saying about a mountain labouring and bringing forth a mouse applies.

I do not think President Kennedy copied this particular kind of approach.

Now let me ask the minister if he will tell with regard to one effective and exciting program, as he referred to it this afternoon. He said something about winter works. Well, we expect to learn a lot more about the winter works program than we learned from his opening statement. The minister indicated that it had given employment to 200,000 people. Let the minister break down that figure and show us the nature of the employment provided to these 200,000 people. How many man hours does it cover? How many municipalities are concerned? What about the municipalities which have so much unemployment and are so poor in consequence that they cannot afford to take advantage of the government's program? What about the suggestion we have been making over the years that some special consideration should be given to those municipalities which need help most?

Will the minister tell us how many sewer projects have been started; how many students residences are now being built by the universities; how many loans have been made to small builders? These are all matters which have been put forward by the government as part of its answer to the question of unemployment. It is in our view an inadequate answer but if the minister is convinced that it is a good and effective answer, then perhaps he will give us more information instead of the present approach which is ineffective, hesitant, belated, piecemeal. This country in the face of 11 per cent or more unemployment needs something bold and imaginative, something worthy of the seriousness of the problem.

I tell the minister that this problem will never be solved in the way it should be solved and within the time during which it should be solved by the kind of approach which this government has been making. I refer the minister to the order in council which was tabled yesterday by the Minister of Trade and Commerce dealing with income tax regulations and the question of depreciation. That was dated March 3. When my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River on March 2, the day before this order in council was passed, did his very best to obtain from the Minister of Finance some indication of what was being done in this field he could get no information at all from the minister. Yet the day after the Minister of Finance had refused to divulge that information, the order in council was passed giving all the details and it was tabled in this house yesterday. I do not know why we should have so much difficulty in getting information from the government about what it is doing in this important field unless the government has no information to give because it is not doing enough.

In Washington, where the new administration is tackling this problem with energy and vigour, they are worried whether they are doing enough. Professor Samuelson, a chief economic adviser to the President of the United States, said recently that an average rate of growth of 3½ per cent to 4 per cent—and that is a modest rate of growth to take care of the increased labour force in this country—would have to wait until the second and third years of President Kennedy's term of office. This is another indication of how seriously they regard the situation south of the border.

Another United States economist, Dr. Heller, who is chairman of the council of economic advisers said to congress as reported in the New York Times of March 6 that:

> Even if some success were encountered in improving the economic situation in the second and third quarters of 1961—

And we all hope that this success will be realized in terms of growth of the economy, and that the optimistic forecasts which are being made by some analysts will turn out to be right. I continue:

> —much more serious in the long run is the "chronic slack" in employment production and the potential rate of growth—the growing gap between what we can produce and what we do produce.
> Whenever it occurs the reversal of the recession is only the beginning, not the end, of the task of restoring momentum to the American economy.
> If the ratio of unemployment to the total working force increases from the present 6.6 per cent to 7 per cent by the end of the year our fiscal policies would have to be viewed with great concern.

Here is the chief economic adviser to the United States government saying that if the unemployment ratio of the working force in his country goes up to 7 per cent, their whole fiscal policy will have to be viewed with great concern. He went on to explain what he meant by that, indicating that some pretty important and even drastic actions might have to be taken. The figure he mentioned is 7 per cent. The ratio of unemployment in this country today is 11 per cent, or it was almost 11 per cent in January.

Even making allowances for perhaps the exceptional seasonal character of employment in this country at that time, which they may not have in parts of the United States, our ratio of unemployment will still be above the 7 per cent which the chief economic adviser to the United States government says requires drastic, effective fiscal action.

If that is true in the United States, it is even more true in this country because our situation—as I tried to show, Mr. Chairman—has certainly not been better, and indeed it has been more difficult, more complex and in some respects worse than the situation in the United States. It is deep-seated; it is deep-rooted; it is difficult, I know. It has expressed itself in this country in terms of 700,000 men and women being out of jobs in 1961, and it is time this government did something effective about it.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Chairman, would the Leader of the Opposition permit one question?

Mr. Pearson: Yes.

Mr. Brunsden: The Leader of the Opposition has remarked on the growing labour force in the United States. Will he recognize, or will he admit that the growing labour force in Canada, in its relationship to unemployment, might have been encouraged at least in part by the wide-open door immigration policy of the preceding government?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, there was no wide-open door immigration policy on the part of the previous government. There was a policy which admitted into this country new Canadians from Europe who could be absorbed in an expanding economy, and they were absorbed.

An hon. Member: That's what you think.

Mr. Pearson: If our economy today were expanding, we could absorb them. I have just pointed out to the committee that in the projection I made for the next five years I took the lowest possible immigration figure, and even on the basis of that projection the figures for unemployment are far too high.

Mr. Benidickson: In 1957 the present Prime Minister said that we should open our gates wider to immigration.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the frank admission of delinquency on the part of the Leader of the Opposition for that period of time when he and his colleagues were the government of this country. Surely to heavens, in view of the analysis that he has just given us, he should have been able to foresee these things when he sat on that side of the chamber. Perhaps if we had not had a moribund government at that time we would not have got into the difficulty that we are in today.

However, apart from that, the fact is that the opening remarks of the Minister of Labour were extremely disappointing. In view of the crisis that exists, in view of the things which we all hoped this government would be doing, to have a reference of perhaps two or three minutes duration on this particularly critical problem contained within remarks lasting for three quarters of an hour is, as I say, extremely disappointing.

The other parts of the minister's remarks about the expansion of the technical aspects of his department and its functions will undoubtedly be interesting and perhaps enlightening to a number of people, but they will not be of much help in this situation. The minister's department, so he has claimed, has in recent years been engaging in extensive research programs to assess what is existent within the economy, and to attempt to discover why the problem exists they have come up with all sorts of answers on different types of employment.

I do not recall them all offhand, but there are cyclical, seasonal, fractional and a variety of other descriptive words to classify types and reasons for unemployment. If this extensive research has been going on into the types and causes of unemployment, surely we could expect that the same sort of research would come up with some answers.

Perhaps they did come up with answers. Perhaps suggestions have been made and have been kept secret because the government did not wish to make them known to the public, thus indirectly admitting that there is a crisis existent in Canada today and that it has been in existence for a long period of time.

When there are no announcements of plans or programs in this regard, or for the reassessing of growth factors for the future, for this coming year and the following year, we can only come to the conclusion that the government has a barren and bankrupt mind on this particular problem.

The minister's comments in this regard were substantially the same as they were last year, the year before and the year before that. For all the time he has been Minister of Labour, including this year, the approach has been to gloss over the fact that there is a critical condition existing in the economy, and the government rests upon the hope that somebody else will be able to deal with it. "Let George do it", is obviously the attitude of this government.

I think this government fails to realize that the longer this crisis exists, the greater will be the destruction of the ability to work of individual, unemployed people. This is what existed during the depression years of the 1930's, when we also had a Tory government.

Long periods of unemployment in fact make psychological wrecks out of individuals who want to work more than anything else, who want to be employed, who want to do something constructive, who find regularly day after day after day that they are not accepted by society, they are not accepted by the economy, and the only place for them is in the soup kitchen or the breadline, begging for a hand-out or relying on welfare.

What does this do to the individual's ability to work? It wrecks, ruins and destroys it. It drives and forces that individual into a continual state of misery. This is what happens to individuals, apart from the fact that it is degrading enough not to have work. This is illustrated by the situation in Toronto, where children have to go, in effect, to soup kitchens for free meals because their parents obviously cannot find employment. I am referring to an account given in a newspaper that this is a situation which does exist.

An hon. Member: Make sure you read all of it.

Mr. Howard: My hon. friend says, "Make sure you read all of it". If my hon. friend would read as much about this problem as I do, and exert as much of his energies as he should in urging that action be taken by his colleagues in the cabinet, perhaps we would not be discussing this serious problem at this time. If he and his comrades had the intestinal courage to face the fact that there is and has been unemployment year after year, perhaps this condition would not exist.

These unemployed individuals will come to look upon themselves as outcasts. The Minister of Labour knows this full well; he should know it, if he does not.

What are the psychological problems the individual must overcome after he has been unemployed for a long period of time? I feel that such an individual psychologically will not fit into the economic structure. This problem arose following the unemployment of the 1930's and accounts for the great number of derelicts in this country today. The existence of this type of individual following a period of unemployment is of little use to the general economy.

I feel that this government simply does not have the courage to admit the unemployment situation. It has not had that courage since it took office. The government has continued to ignore the situation by saying that to admit it would be to lose face. The government sits back with the hope that the economic forces, upon which the government and the Liberals rely, will heal the economic situation and everything will be rosy again. The minister and his colleagues have fiddled around with this problem like a modern day Nero. There has been nothing done to deal with this problem in the way of concrete or lucid action. The taxpayers support inmates of penitentiaries to the extent of $5 a day while the government treats the unemployed workers of this nation as though they were members of an even lower class.

The minister refers to this exhilarating program including the productivity council, vocational training and double depreciation and the winter works projects, but they are merely ineffective first aid treatments for a very serious ailment and may be likened to treating a broken leg by the application of a band aid. The government has made no effort whatsoever to get to the basis of the problem. The minister speaks often of the incentive provided by the winter works program but admits by his actions in amending the program each year that it is not the cure-all it was supposed to be. He has brought this program forward again this year but suggests that if it is required next year it will be handled by supplementary estimate. He is in effect laying the groundwork for his answer to its failure.

I am sure that many individuals express the view that it is a waste of time for a member of parliament to stand here in this chamber urging the government to do something in respect of the unemployment situation. I am sure they feel that such an approach is an obvious waste of time in view of the government's blindness to the existing conditions. The government has done nothing to change this situation apart from putting into effect weak, ineffective measures such as those I have mentioned. I feel that we must persist in this approach in the hope that perhaps the government will take more effective action because one is alarmed by the fact that lives are being destroyed and children are without food because of the unemployment situation. Perhaps if we speak loud enough and long enough the minister and his colleagues will come to the conclusion that there is a problem and attempt to take steps to deal with it.

Mr. Chairman, my time is limited but I would like to mention two or three other specific items before I conclude. I am sure other hon. members will have an opportunity of dealing with the specific unemployment question from a philosophical base but I intend to limit my remarks to an attempt to convince the government that it has failed to deal with this question because of its political blindness regarding a society which is not working well, an economy that is not working well and a situation which needs a strong dose of socialist philosophy. I realize that this suggestion is repugnant to the government even though it is actually the only effective one.

I should like to deal now with a question which the Leader of the Opposition briefly touched upon this afternoon namely, the functions of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. Last year the Leader of the Opposition quoted rather extensively from an article appearing in Saturday Night regarding a new approach to collective bargaining. Unfortunately I was not present in the house at that time when there was some discussion between the Minister of Labour and the Leader of the Opposition as to whether I was the author of the article. I belatedly admit that I was.

Mr. Pearson: It was a good article.

Mr. Howard: I thank the Leader of the Opposition for his remarks of that time regarding the substance of the article itself and must say that I also think it was a good article. It was my intention when writing that article to deal with a different approach to negotiations.

The Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act provides for the payment of the expenses of the chairman and members of a conciliation board. The act provides for the payment of $30 a day but authorizes the governor in council to increase this amount. It is my understanding that the payments exclusive of expenses have been in the neighbourhood of $50 to $75 per day. I feel that conciliation boards are a waste of time and certainly involve a waste of the taxpayers' money. When one takes into consideration the value a conciliation board contributes to the resolution of labour and the management difficulties one feels that the taxpayers' money might well be saved in this regard.

I have several orders in council with me today in which the name of Mr. David Lewis appears. I am now looking at one dated September, 1958 which indicates an allowance of $50 a day payable up to 16 days. I must indicate of course that it makes little difference to me whether it is Mr. Lewis receiving this money or someone else; I feel it is a waste of money. I feel the abolishing of these conciliation boards is a means of saving the taxpayers' money. I feel that conciliation boards are not beneficial in regard to industrial-management disputes. I feel the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act is outdated and has outlived its usefulness. The province of British Columbia has a similar labour act which outlines steps similar to those in the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. There are differences between the two in regard to time limits but substantially they outline the same steps in regard to negotiations, a conciliation officer and board, strikes, lockouts and perhaps subsequent negotiations.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, I am very interested in the hon. member's views regarding the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act and Mr. David Lewis but I am wondering whether, before his time expires, he is going to make a single suggestion which will result in the employment of a single unemployed person?

Mr. Howard: My hon. friend and his uproariously applauding colleagues are perhaps in the same position as myself regarding research facilities but I will gladly sit up all night going through Hansard in order to supply him with specific references to suggestions I have made in this regard in the past.

As I said before, there are many people who think it is a complete waste of time to tell anything to a government that is deaf and blind to this particular problem, but I have made suggestions galore; specific, concrete proposals. They are all on Hansard. What happens? No interest is shown in them. They are there; they are still applicable.

My hon. friend may be interested in David Lewis and so on; maybe if this employment for David Lewis were cut off he might lose his income from conciliation activities. Nevertheless, I hope I am answering his specific question about proposals. They are on Hansard. I know how hon. gentlemen opposite dislike the truth, but it is there and if any hon. member wishes to read the numerous proposals I have made I will look through Hansard and pick out the positive suggestions which have been made, if that will do any good.

Let us get back to the conciliation board system. I am leading into industrial disputes and strikes. Unions and management have used the present system of negotiation toward the signing of collective agreements not for the purpose of bargaining in good faith—and I have used it myself, I am frank to admit—but for the purpose of delaying for one reason or another and wasting the time of the negotiating procedures either merely to get to the next step or in the hope that someone else will bail the two parties out of a difficult situation. This merely protracts and delays and takes them into a strike situation which is not too helpful.

But, in any event, the minister dealt briefly with this and, as I understood him, dealt with the accusation of the shifting of the responsibility which was levelled against him by the hon. member for Essex East. I think it is a shifting of responsibility if the minister says to those two groups, as he is prone to say to almost everybody else, "Do it yourself; get yourself out of this difficult situation". This is not only a shifting of responsibility, it is an abandonment of responsibility, just as it is an abandonment of responsibility for the government to do nothing concrete about the unemployment situation.

Certainly if there were any sort of sensible approach to labour negotiations within the Department of Labour we undoubtedly would not be in the awkward position we are today, and the major railway unions and the railways might not be in the awkward position they are today. They were put there by this government merely because it abandoned or did not recognize its own responsibility in this field.

If the previous announcement means anything we are, I suppose, to have amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. I should like to deal with the question of unemployment insurance for fishermen which is of prime importance to me not only because I have many fishermen in my constituency but by force of interest also. I think some pretty scandalous accusations have been levelled against fishermen because of their participation in the unemployment insurance fund.

Mr. Pickersgill: Hear, hear.

Mr. Howard: These accusations are based—

Mr. Starr: Who made the accusations, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That interjection by the Minister of Labour is most unfair. The suggestion is that the complaints that were made against the fishermen were made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. There is no stronger champion of the fishermen of Canada than my colleague the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Argue: Other than the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Howard: I thought the hon. member for Essex East was rising to a point of order. In any event, these scandalous accusations have been made against fishermen because of their participation in the fund. The accusations are that the fisherman takes out $9 for every dollar he contributes, because fishermen are singled out as one separate element, but this is a false and incorrect picture of the situation. The $9 of benefit for every dollar of contribution does not take into account—I asked this question of the minister the other day and the answer is on Hansard—the contributions that fishermen may make and do make while they are employed in a non-fishing occupation.

On the west coast we have many fishermen who also work in the logging industry. They alternate between the two. The statistical figure, however, takes into account only that contribution which they make in the form of those special, coloured fishing stamps; it does not take into account the contributions they make in the logging industry. This is a distortion of the true picture. If you took the loggers, or any other group of workers in seasonal employment, and singled them out of the unemployment insurance fund and looked at their contributions while engaged in that employment, and their benefits you would find somewhat the same picture. It would run between $8, $9, $10 and $1, which is a false and incorrect picture.

Mr. McDonald (Hamilton South): Eighteen to two is still nine to one.

Mr. Argue: Tory arithmetic.

Mr. Howard: That is about it. I do not see why people want to blame fishermen for this. In the first place, I think it was an incorrect way of dealing with them when the Liberals were in office. I understand that extreme objection was taken by the minister and the Department of Labour. It was done because one of the cabinet ministers at that time happened to come from the west coast. In using the approach—

Mr. Argue: Was it not the east coast?

Mr. Howard: No, the west coast; in fact, he was the minister of fisheries at that time. This was the incorrect method adopted. It singled out fishermen and put them in a group by themselves. They should have been integrated into the act. This is the main reason why we have all the difficulty and all these scandalous accusations, as I have said, that fishermen are using the fund when they should not use it. Unfortunately, I think what will come out of it—I hope it does not—is that this will be used as the basis for making the regulations against fishermen even more restrictive and putting them in an even worse position than they are today. I hope that when the amendments do come before us—if they do—steps will be taken, as they should have been taken a long time ago, not to distort further the Unemployment Insurance Act but to integrate fishermen into it so that they are an integral part of the act along with other workers.

(Translation):

Mr. Morissette: Mr. Chairman, in this debate that has been stirred up on the employment problem in Canada, I should like to attempt to bring out some of the underlying causes of the present uneasiness. In doing so, I shall stick to the facts as closely as possible in the firm belief that it is the only way to make a useful contribution to this type of discussion.

I shall not follow the example of certain members of the opposition in their demagogic efforts to please the electorate, especially the members for Essex East (Mr. Martin) and for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier). Those two members, deprived of their official prompter, would be hard put to state sound scientific arguments in the field of economics. I admit that this prompter, Mr. Maurice Lamontagne, enjoyed a good reputation at the time he was my teacher. Unfortunately, since he specialized in the writing of election pamphlets, he has lost track of economic realities.

Before starting my speech proper, I should like to denounce the blindness of all those who to better condemn the government define the present uneasiness solely in Canadian terms. This is either an outrageous aberration or a monstrous piece of dishonesty. The present unemployment is a problem throughout North America and the petty politicians who pretend to overlook this fact for vile partisan purposes, deserve to be denounced.

Only yesterday I read in the paper that the number of unemployed in the United States increased by 320,000 in February and reached 5,075,000, which is a record for the last 20 years. I read also that the 320,000 increase in February is three times the expected figure of 100,000. I only quote these figures, Mr. Chairman, to show the unfairness of these would-be politicians who, in a partisan spirit, have deliberately distorted the purpose of this debate.

A feature of the immediate aftermath of the war was the extraordinary development of private investment in Canada. This was only normal, since many big projects had been put off during the second world war. To illustrate this point, an economist mentioned the nearly complete dieselization of the railway systems in 1956 and 1957.

Industry as a whole had to make a huge effort in order to renew their plant and equipment.

There was new expansion of house building, which had been neglected for the sake of other industries of greater importance to our war effort.

There was a heavy demand for new houses, and thousands more were in urgent need of repairs. Canada turned to new production, to satisfy the demand from countries whose industrial equipment had been destroyed by war. This process has been excellently described by the president of the Montreal City and District Savings Bank, Mr. Guy Vanier, who stated in its 114th annual report:

> The ravages of war and the destruction of its means of production had made Europe dependent upon America. Owing to the tremendous accumulated demand, Canada was able to find outlets for all its products. That was an exceptional opportunity for a country with a great variety of raw materials but whose productive capacity was not yet up to the desirable level of development.
> And yet, in spite of its material losses, Europe was not without any resources. Its population is traditionally given to hard work, and has always been renowned for technical know-how of the highest calibre. Thanks to the liberality of the United States, the countries of Europe found themselves with a considerable buying power in the very midst of all their trials, and they systematically reconstructed their plants. Nowhere in the world today can better equipment be found; because of the skill of their workers, and the lower wages paid, those countries have not only become largely self-sufficient but have been able to take over markets which we had temporarily made our own. Instead of warring between themselves and weakening one another, the countries of Europe have grouped themselves into a Common Market with the result that today Europe is the most powerful industrial unit after the United States.

It is obvious, Mr. Chairman, that artificial post-war conditions have created an equally artificial prosperity. We are justified to-day in blaming those who were then governing the country, who let themselves be blinded by a spurious prosperity and, either through ignorance or laziness, failed to take the necessary steps for an adjustment.

The lack of care and of foresight shown by the former Liberal administration is largely responsible for our present difficulties. So much for private investment.

Let us now turn to the many problems created by what is known as automation, the bitter effects of which have been felt in recent years and constitute a major challenge for managers and businessmen at this time. To fail, as did our opponents, to take into consideration the many consequences of this new phenomenon is, to say the least, a sign of a lack of insight and of realism. The replacing of men by machines cannot be accomplished without shaking the whole economy. Studies published in Canadian Labour which, as everyone knows, is the official organ of the Canadian Labour Congress, reveal disturbing facts. I would like to quote a few of them.

According to these statistics a 25 per cent reduction in the number of railroad workers, that is 35,000 workers, has resulted from railway dieselization. By using jet planes, T.C.A. has been able to effect a considerable increase in the capacity of its aircraft and a 100 per cent increase in their speed. When one aircraft does the work of three, the effect on air line employment is readily seen. In the iron mining industry, production per man has gone up 250 per cent between 1952 and 1959, because of automation. From 1948 to 1958, the number of smelter workers has dropped 22.1 per cent but the output has risen 50 per cent while the value of production has almost doubled.

Let me quote a few other figures concerning the lumber industry, which I have found in a recent publication by the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association. The lumberman's average daily production has increased 38 per cent in the last decade due to improved equipment. If you take into consideration the total number of on-site workers the increase is 40 per cent.

According to Mr. R. Dymond, director of the economics and research branch in the Department of Labour, production increased 49.8 per cent in the car industry between 1949 and 1959. In the same period, the number of jobs available went up only 11 per cent. In the automobile parts industry, during the same period, production rose 19.7 per cent and the number of jobs available, only 6.8 per cent. In the electrical appliances industry, for the same period, production rose by 81.6 per cent, as compared to a 40.6 per cent increase in the number of jobs available. In the machine industry, the increase was 33.7 per cent in production and 16.8 per cent in the number of jobs. In the home appliances industry, it was 53.7 per cent in production and 19.3 per cent in the number of jobs. Those figures alone significantly demonstrate the effects of automation on unemployment.

The statistics I have just mentioned do not mean that I wish to over-simplify the problems created by technological developments and the introduction of modern mechanical, electrical and electronic devices. I do not want to dispute the fact that the development of improved means of production can, in general terms, represent a blessing for our economy. But it can never be too strongly emphasized that, over a short period, accelerated automation such as we have seen in recent years creates upheavals from which workers are the first to suffer.

The long term object of automation is increased output. It is a most desirable object for Canada whose main economic problem is to reduce the cost of production in order to successfully compete with foreign countries on the national and international markets. However short term policies must be adopted right now to protect workers displaced by machines.

May I insist on the fact that, in a country such as Canada, which is importing a large proportion of the new machines and new equipment, automation might well have particularly nefarious consequences for the workers. I like to think that the new productivity council will attach special importance to this problem. Problems of productivity cannot be divorced from those of the workers.

I see in the act providing for the establishment of a national productivity council that one of the objects of the council will be:

> —to foster and promote the maintenance of good human relations in industry, the use of training programs at all levels of industry, the use of retraining programs to meet changing manpower requirements.

When it has discharged those necessary duties, the productivity council which, when it was established, was so violently criticized by our opponents, will have been of outstanding service to the country's economy.

I should like now to continue with what I would describe as a brief social study of unemployed manpower. To properly understand the problem of low employment, it is necessary to break down the total figure of unemployment into its main components. For instance, how can we not be deeply impressed by the fact that about 20 per cent of the jobless are young people still in their teens? In fact, out of the 429,000 unemployed registered in November, about 80,000 are from 14 to 19 years old. Out of 100 young people leaving school before they are 20 years old, 10 per cent and more are unemployed the year round. I refer to the November figures but, relatively speaking, the problem remains the same throughout the year. The problem is becoming more and more important, while it may be explained by the fact that there are a greater number of young people in Canada, as a result of the higher birth rate about 15 or 20 years ago.

Young people of 15 to 19 years old today were born during the war when the birth rate was increasing. There were 60 per cent more births in the first five years following the war than during the five previous years. A great part of that surplus population is now overcrowding the labour market. I have given a few examples in connection with the number of unemployed among young people of less than 20 years old. We now see that the number of workers among young people of 14 to 19 years old, reached 593,000 on January 14.

Therefore, it is obvious that the labour market is prematurely overcrowded by thousands of young people who could more usefully prepare themselves for the tasks of life by attending school, because education, as was indicated to the Senate committee on labour and employment, is directly related to unemployment.

In February 1960, the dominion bureau of statistics made a special survey of the education level of the unemployed. The results were simply astonishing. Among those who had not completed their primary studies, the proportion of unemployed was twice as high as among those who had completed them. It was six times higher than among those who had been through high school.

Statistics have shown also that the proportion of unemployed is much higher among non-specialized workers than among those who have a trade. In the light of those facts, it is easier to understand all the advantages which will result from the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act and from the setting up of the productivity council.

I referred a moment ago to the possible effects of automation. I should like to stress here that automation is being felt in agriculture perhaps more than anywhere else. The obvious result was a transfer of the labour force from the farming sector to the non-farming sector of the economy. In the last ten years, the number of farm workers has decreased by 340,000. In 1950, it reached a million and it was less than 700,000 in 1960. In other words, the non-farming sector had to absorb a supplementary labour force of 340,000 people.

Now, that transfer of farm labour is noticeable especially among young workers. Children of agricultural families, after less than elementary schooling, leave the land to seek jobs. The rate of transfer among young men and young girls of less than 20 years old is extraordinarily high. Among young people of 15 to 19 years old who were living on farms in 1951, two fifths had left the land in 1956. These young rural displaced workers, going to cities, generally belong to that category of workers who are more tragically affected by unemployment on account of their lack of education.

This is an alarming problem and it is extremely urgent that we take all means possible to provide these young people with the education, vocational and technical training that will allow them to find jobs more easily. That would offer a very wide field for the application of the technical and vocational training program undertaken by the federal government in co-operation with the provinces.

Economists are unanimous in forecasting that while the farm labour force, especially on account of automation, has substantially decreased, the same trend will continue in the next few years. In the last five years, the farm labour force has dropped by 150,000 workers; it is expected that it will lose some 70,000 more in the next five years. It has been estimated that employment in the non-agricultural sector will increase by 18 to 20 per cent from now until 1965.

Another important factor to note here, which might somewhat explain the present situation, is the fact that, in the last few years, the labour market has been invaded by a very great number of women. The rate of unemployment among women is less than half the rate for men. The female population has provided, these last few years, almost half the labour supply, but it has suffered much less than the male population from economic fluctuations. This is a relatively new sociological phenomenon, which those who analyse the employment situation should consider closely.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to discuss briefly some of the problems resulting from the present employment situation in Canada. In describing these phenomena, I was able to show that their urgency and scope did not escape the government's attention. Ignoring the easy criticism and demagogy of political opponents who have been shamefully exploiting a serious problem and a difficult situation for election purposes, the federal government has adopted several long term policies, the advantages of which will certainly be felt in the future. I have mentioned more particularly the creation of the productivity council whose task it will be to try to solve the more basic problems in our economy. I have also referred to the legislation concerning technical and vocational training, which will also help to solve one of the most urgent problems of our times.

I shall not mention here all the legislation of more immediate application, which is also aimed at correcting the present situation.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) has just announced that the winter works program promoted by the federal government in co-operation with the provincial governments has supplied direct work opportunities to about 100,000 people. There again, you have a policy which was violently critized by our opponents.

At the beginning of my remarks I pointed out that the slowdown in private investment is at the source of our present situation. When private investment slows down, it is the government's duty to provide assistance.

The Conservative government has had the courage to apply a contract-cyclical policy of budgetary deficit. Its public expense program has been quite impressive and has produced impressive results. Let me state only one example in that connection. Members will recall the extraordinary impetus given to the home construction industry in 1958 through the policy of the Conservative government. Again this year, extensive changes have been made to the National Housing Act and are about to produce more development in that industry.

The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker) announced in the house on March 1, 1961 that due to widening in the scope of the National Housing Act loan applications have reached a peak which was never equalled in Canadian history, except for a short period of a few weeks in 1958. Here is what the Minister of Public Works had to say:

> Activity during the week of February 24, 1961 was extremely buoyant, with 1,205 requests for National Housing Act loans. This brought the total for the first eight weeks of the year to 7,381, compared with 650 in the same period last year. Of the 1961 total, the life insurance and trust and loan companies received 2,921 requests and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation 4,460.

The Minister of Public Works pointed out that once the loans are converted into starts, employment opportunities will be provided for 35,000 men, and this is only for the first eight weeks of 1961.

I have tried, Mr. Chairman, in my remarks to the house, to bring out the effort made by this government to face up to the difficult situation we are going through at the moment and indeed to the problems confronting North American nations at the present time. I would like everybody to realize perfectly that the government did not bank on chance to solve the problems. It could not, under the circumstances, take advantage of certain developments like that of war and post-war. The facts did not make it good and easy for the government, as they did for the Liberal administration—

We should recall in this regard that in 1935, when the Liberals resumed power under misrepresentations, they were to restore Canada's economy and put an end to the serious unemployment of that time; we know that in 1939 they had done so little that the employment situation was worse that it has ever been recently as shown by the figures the Minister of Labour gave us recently. But war came to settle everything, if I may put it this way; after that came the post war period and the Korean war. It is only later that came to light some indication of the difficulties the government had to readjust our country's economy to peacetime conditions; those indications multiplied later to the extent that, in 1957, alarmed and concerned about the result of the oncoming elections, the Liberals had to hide from the public a report warning them to take immediate measures to check the rising recession.

This proves the Liberals have never been able to control a situation. Improvisers by profession and necessity, they showed themselves unable to realize the magnitude of those causes which were to subject our economy to the disturbances of which we are now aware. I cannot see how they could have authority now to play the busybodies. They place themselves quite imprudently in the situation of their swashbuckling former colleague, the present premier of Quebec; he also, as his former associates are boasting now, was to eliminate all trace of unemployment. All he did was to increase it. So, it will be up to the people, under the circumstances, to choose between sincere politicians and power thirsty demagogues.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not intend to follow the hon. member for Rimouski who began by saying he was going to make an impartial and non-partisan speech and ended by blaming the present premier of Quebec for the unemployment in Quebec, saying, at the same time, that the government in Ottawa should not be blamed in any way for the unemployment in Canada. That represents un manque de logique que je ne comprends pas.

Moreover, I do not intend to waste any time, either, on the hon. gentleman's argument that when this government came into office the Liberals were responsible for the unemployment which, in fact, did not exist in Canada at that time, but they say was a heritage from the Liberals, although there was virtually full employment in this country in June, 1957, when this government took over. But now unemployment has nothing to do with this government, because it is a continental phenomenon. Perhaps the hon. member can explain that to his constituents, though I doubt it. I do not think he could explain to many Canadians that a government which went out of office when there was the highest degree of employment known in Canada is responsible for the unemployment in the United States which is, of course, the only logical deduction one could draw from the statements made by the hon. member for Rimouski. It apparently depends on who is in office, who is responsible for unemployment.

The hon. member for Medicine Hat asked the Leader of the Opposition at the end of his speech if it was not the unrestricted immigration permitted during the period when the Liberals were in office; that period, it would be recalled, when we were flooding this country with English immigrants according to the Secretary of State. The hon. member for Medicine Hat suggested that was the cause of the unemployment. But he forgot to tell the committee that his leader, the present Prime Minister, in May and June of 1957 was complaining because we were not, he said, allowing enough immigrants into this country. That was the program on which this government was elected. Hon. members opposite now say it was the immigration permitted under the late government which left them a legacy of unemployment.

The plain fact is that the most important single contributing factor, not to the original unemployment—because there was a recession, as everyone knows in 1958 and the most important contributing factor to the continuation and accentuation of the recession in this country—is the complete confusion and mismanagement of the affairs of this country by the hon. gentleman and the lady to whom they are at present entrusted. I do not say they are entirely to blame but they are apparently incapable of doing anything about the matter.

The Minister of Labour said that he would not take the time to recount all the things they had done. That would not have taken very long. I suggest the reason he did not recount them was because there was nothing substantial to recount.

The hon. member for Skeena made some observations with which in the main I completely agree. There is a campaign in this country at the present time—I do not know who is responsible for it—to try to deprive the fishermen of unemployment insurance by suggesting that the main drain on the fund has been what has been received in the way of benefits by fishermen since as a result of Liberal legislation they qualified for unemployment insurance. This is not true. The losses through the mismanagement of the fund by this government have been a very much more substantial drain on the fund than anything paid to the fishermen. The fact of the matter is the granting of the benefits of unemployment insurance to fishermen as to other seasonal workers was long overdue. The hon. gentleman said the Liberals did not do it in the right way. Well, I did not think it was perfect. I thought it could be improved but I was content with the best I could get at that time until it could be improved. That is what happened in those days.

I recall that the hon. member for Skeena had something to say about this, and I sent for Hansard of August 6, 1956. The hon. lady who is now Minister of Citizenship and Immigration had this to say about unemployment insurance for fishermen:

> I am sure the present regulations that are being brought in are in part due to the keen interest that was taken by the Minister of Fisheries and also by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

I was the minister of citizenship and immigration at that time and I am more proud of having had some part in that legislation than of anything else I have done as a member of parliament.

A member of the C.C.F. party a good deal more distinguished than I am afraid the hon. member for Skeena is ever likely to become, the late Mr. Gillis, one of the most respected members of this house in his day, also had this to say:

> I know that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration worked hard as well, but of course he has a motive in that a large part of his riding is a fishing area. He is working for his riding, and rightly so.

If I never do anything else for my riding and for the fishermen who are engaged in the first of all industries in Canada, I am proud to be associated with that legislation and I resent these efforts, wherever they come from, to try to sabotage it.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act to repeal certain laws relating to the signal station at Halifax.

An act to amend the Indian Act.

An act respecting the construction of a line of railway in the province of Quebec by Canadian National Railway Company from a point at or near mile 72 of the Kiask Falls subdivision in a northwesterly direction to a point in the vicinity of Mattagami Lake.

An act respecting Queen's University at Kingston.

An act to incorporate Canadian Federation of Music Teachers' Associations.

An act respecting The Canadian General Council of The Boy Scouts Association.

An act to amend the Pension Act.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rea in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

General administration—

178. Departmental administration including a grant of $10,000 to Frontier college and the expenses of the international labour conferences, $1,373,104.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, this afternoon, on the orders of the day, the Minister of Labour was asked a question by my hon. friend from Welland, the general purport of which was to this effect: could the minister, if any hon. member wished to have it, get the details of the application for employment of any person before the commission? The minister chose to identify this general question with that particular case about which he made a statement yesterday, and when he did that I made the charge that the minister in his statement of yesterday in answer to a question, which was not a spontaneous question and obviously had been planted by someone, was in breach of the law which was enacted by this parliament, namely section 98 of the Unemployment Insurance Act which reads as follows:

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Information, written or verbal, obtained by the commission from any person pursuant to the provisions of this act or any regulation shall be made available only to the employees of the commission in the course of their employment and such other persons as the commission deems advisable—

The minister told us yesterday—and I will not trouble to read his statement unless anything I say is challenged; I have it here if it is—that the information he imparted to the house he obtained from the Hamilton office of the commission. He suggested that the officer who gave it to him was a person authorized to do so. I again draw your attention to the words "such other persons as the commission deems advisable". The act is quite specific about who is the commission. It reads:

There is hereby established a commission called the "unemployment insurance commission" consisting of three commissioners, appointed by the governor in council, of whom one shall be chief commissioner.

It is straining our credulity well beyond the breaking point, sir, to suggest for one minute that the commission met yesterday morning and that three commissioners, after due deliberation, particularly when one knows that the chief commissioner was not in Ottawa yesterday, decided that it was advisable to communicate this information to the minister for the purpose of making it public in contravention of the act.

Mr. Baldwin: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Not until I have concluded what I have to say and then I will only be too happy to answer the hon. gentleman's question because, knowing him, I know it will be a sensible one.

I am seeking to make an argument and it is, of course, a well-known device to try to prevent argument by asking questions, not that I am imputing an improper motive to the hon. gentleman. I want to go on and say that under the law this information is communicated to the commission which was set up as a body to be independent of the day to day administration of the government.

If parliament had wanted the Minister of Labour to administer the Unemployment Insurance Act parliament would have given that job to the Minister of Labour, but parliament in its wisdom saw fit to create a commission for that purpose precisely so that it would not be used for political and improper purposes. Parliament decided in its wisdom that this confidential information about people's private lives would be used only for the purpose of assisting them to get jobs, not for the purpose of making political propaganda for any political party. I think, sir, in all my experience in parliament this is the most outrageous conduct I have ever seen on the part of any minister of the crown save one, and I shall have a word to say about that before I am through.

It so happens that yesterday also there was a motion on the order paper in the name of the hon. member for Assiniboia which was allowed to stand very shortly before the Minister of Labour made this outrageous statement. The hon. member for Assiniboia asked for certain correspondence regarding the discontinuance of the publication of statistical material relating to steel operating rates and steel producing capacity by the dominion bureau of statistics. What did the Minister of Trade and Commerce say about that? This is what he said:

> Mr. Speaker, some doubts have been raised as to whether tabling of the information requested would be a violation of section 15 of the Statistics Act. Would the hon. member be agreeable to this motion standing until this point has been investigated?

Now, that was a very proper attitude to take, of course, and the hon. member properly allowed his motion to stand. But consider the difference between the two. The Minister of Trade and Commerce was afraid that he might give some information which would be prejudicial to two or three great producers of steel, great corporations in this country. On the other hand, the Minister of Labour, thinking he could smear a Canadian citizen who was out of work, and thereby discredit all Canadian citizens out of work, broke the law, defied the law made by parliament in order to make political propaganda,—

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Pickersgill: —under his immunity in this house. In other words, if it is a poor unemployed person, you can disregard the law. If it is a steel company—

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. When the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate says that I used my immunity I say to him now, to tell the truth I tell it to the world, not only to the House of Commons.

Mr. Brunsden: On a point of order—

Mr. Pickersgill: I submit there is no point of order before the Chair.

The Deputy Chairman: I will have to hear the hon. member's point of order.

Mr. Brunsden: The point of order is that the hon. gentleman whom we all respect and admire is imputing motives to this government against the word of a self-confessed gentleman who—

The Deputy Chairman: Order; this is a question of argument; it is not a point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, sir, I ask the Minister of Labour this question. What would the Minister of National Revenue be likely to answer if we asked whether a member of the treasury benches had paid his income tax? If we demanded the papers about the income tax returns of a member of the treasury benches—say the Minister of Labour himself—what would they say? The government would cite section 133 of the Income Tax Act, which is well known to hon. members, which makes it an offence for any member of the income tax branch, and properly so, to communicate that information because it is the private affair of that person. Well, of course, if it is your income tax it must be secret, but if it is your chance to earn a livelihood you can be smeared in defiance of the law by a minister of the crown sheltering under his immunity in this house. I say, sir, this is an outrage.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): The telecast was an outrage.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have never, sir, in all the time I have been here, seen such a clear-cut revelation of the difference between the Tory mentality and the Liberal mentality, as was revealed yesterday in this house. When the minister got up with all his power and might to smear this poor fellow who had been trying to earn a living—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —what did they do? They all applauded with the greatest of glee. Why? Why did they do this? Because they want to discredit all the unemployed; because they have been trying for three and a half years to pretend there is no unemployment in this country. When their bluff was called in dramatic fashion it became a crisis and the Minister of Labour had to come into the house and break the law made by parliament in order to score a debating point and to smear the unemployed.

Now, sir, what did the minister say? He said today that the unemployment commission has an office in Hamilton which operates under the provisions of the act, that an employee of that commission is perfectly within his right to use his judgment and that when a minister who reports to parliament requests certain information the employee is certainly doing his duty in supplying the minister with it. Of course, that is not what the law says nor is it what parliament says but this minister, who thinks himself above the law, disregards the law. If the minister had wanted this information he should have gone to the commission.

Mr. Starr: May I ask a question on that point? Is the hon. member saying at this point that there should be no information issued by any of the local offices to any member of parliament, let alone the minister? Is that what he is implying?

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course, I might characterize that question in terms the minister is very fond of using by saying that it is a stupid question. However, that is not the way I deal with questions. That is what the minister does. I will answer the minister's question and I will answer it this way. If it is information that the law does not forbid them to impart there is no reason, of course, why they should not give it to the minister although the minister does his best to see that they do not give it so far as we are concerned. When we want statistics he makes it as difficult as possible for us to get them. But the law says that you cannot give details of an individual's case. It says that specifically and the minister chooses to break the law in order to make propaganda for the government and to exploit the suffering of Canadians.

Mr. More: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the allegation has been made by the hon. member that the minister has broken the law. It is my understanding that a charge of that kind must be supported by a motion and that it is out of order if it is not. The hon. member made the statement that the minister broke the law and I demand that he withdraw or support it.

Mr. Argue: C. D. Howe used to break it every other day.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. This is a question of argument.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no point of order at all, and if the hon. gentleman had been here when some of these paragons were over on this side of the house he would realize how ridiculous that sort of statement is.

An hon. Member: Watch your apoplexy.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I gather you support this type of thing?

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister says that I support this type of thing. I support observance of the law. In every circumstance in all my life I have supported observance of the law and the upholding the law. I may say, sir, that I could have obtained a cheap advantage many times when I was minister of citizenship and immigration—

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

An hon. Member: You did.

Mr. Pickersgill: —by revealing what was in the files of private individuals. There was nothing in the Immigration Act to say I should not, but I considered it would have been immoral to do so and I did not do so. But this is not just a matter of immorality; it is a matter of the law made by parliament and disregarded by a minister who took his oath to uphold it. What is the justification for this breach of the law? The minister gave it himself. He said, "In any event, Mr. Speaker, when there is any misrepresentation of any kind to the detriment of our economy..." Imagine this poor fellow going on television and being a detriment to our economy. It must be a pretty fragile economy if the television appearance of one man and his wife and three children is going to destroy it.

An hon. Member: Did you write the script?

Mr. Pickersgill: I suggest that the real destroyers of the economy are the gentlemen who are trying to prevent this sort of thing from happening. "In any event", said the minister, "when there is any misrepresentation of any kind to the detriment of our economy"—what the minister should substitute for that is "to the detriment of the Diefenbaker government", the government that was not going to allow anyone to suffer because of unemployment.

The minister went on to say, "I feel that it is my duty as a member of this government to reveal the true facts". The law says he cannot, but it apparently does not matter what the law says. No doubt some public relations adviser told the minister this would be a smart thing to do and this minister, who is above the law, disregards the law, disregards his oath of office to make a little capital out of the situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: How do we know, sir, whether or not what the minister told us was true?

Mr. Brunsden: Oh, for heaven's sake.

Mr. Pickersgill: A minister who would break the law would be quite capable of giving part of the story instead of the whole story. We do not know whether this statement is true and I am not saying whether or not it is true. But I do say that I have very grave doubts whether the minister gave us the whole truth. I have very grave doubts if the minister gave us the whole truth and, of course, he would have a marvelous precedent for not doing so because we remember well the debut of this government. We remember well how a page with the word "confidential" on it was torn off a document and how selected bits were taken out of that document misrepresenting it for the sake of producing some cheap political propaganda. If the head of the government can do that sort of thing, what would you expect of his disciples? Once you start on that road of bad faith—

Mr. Martineau: How well you know.

Mr. Pickersgill: —you can never stop. I say, sir, that we do not know, have no means of knowing and have no right to know whether or not what the minister told us was the whole truth. I am not accusing the minister himself.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am accusing him of a lot. I am accusing him of breaking the law, which he clearly did. I am not accusing the minister himself of suppressing any information given to him by the employment service but how does he know that he got the full story when he called them frantically and hysterically after caucus yesterday morning and had to arrange to have someone ask him what was an obviously planted question?

Mr. Henderson: That is not so.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege that involves every member of the house—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Henderson: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member says that the question was planted he is absolutely wrong.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, perhaps I might admit that it was planted in rocky soil and if it would do the hon. member any good I would say that the roots were visible. At any rate, I think we can all draw our own conclusions. I think it is perfectly obvious to anybody who witnessed what happened yesterday why this was done. I have no brief for the broadcast one way or the other. I know nothing whatever about it because I did not even see it but I do know there are tens of thousands of people in this country who are either unemployed and having a dreadfully difficult time or who are afraid they are going to be laid off next.

When the government realized that this performance was making an impact on the public they said: we must discredit the unemployed at once; we must give the impression that they are frauds and fakes because otherwise people might remember the Prime Minister's speeches all through this country in 1958 when he said, "No one will suffer". The suffering is going on now, sir.

An hon. Member: We are suffering right now.

Mr. Henderson: We are suffering listening to you.

Mr. Pickersgill: The fact is that suffering is going on now. This government has tried for 3½ years to hide this fact from the people of Canada and to pretend it was not there. However, when hon. members opposite can pretend no longer their next tactic is to try to discredit the unemployed. I say, sir, if you could ever find a perfect example of the difference between the Tory attitude and the Liberal attitude you had it in the conduct of the Minister of Labour yesterday.

Mr. Thrasher: Mr. Chairman, may I at the outset associate myself with the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon when he paid tribute to the retiring deputy minister of labour. I know that their friendship extends back for a long period of time, perhaps even before my advent on this earth. I have known the retiring deputy minister only for the short period since my appointment as parliamentary secretary but I have come to share the same high regard and affection for him that the Leader of the Opposition has.

I understand that when the Leader of the Opposition was speaking this afternoon he, in turn, associated himself with some remarks the minister made concerning the officials of the Department of Labour and the unemployment insurance commission. It is unfortunate that the Leader of the Opposition has not been able to inculcate in the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate this same high regard for the civil service of this country that he has. Yesterday the Minister of Labour rose in this house to defend the employees of the national employment service from a fraudulent portrayal of the type of service they are giving to the Canadian people. This afternoon the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate described this defence of the employees of the national employment service as a cheap political trick. In his remarks this evening he made the assertion that possibly the manager of the unemployment insurance office in Hamilton did not give the minister the whole truth.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Pickersgill: He had no right to give him any facts.

Mr. Hellyer: Remember the sailing club.

Mr. Thrasher: It is obvious that this hon. gentleman does not have any regard for the civil servants of this country, for their loyalty and their devotion. The employees of the national employment service for many years under the previous administration sought an adjustment in their rates of pay to bring them into line with those in other departments. The people sitting over there refused this request. The Minister of Labour, after a few years in office, was able to bring about an adjustment which resulted in these people being properly compensated. When the minister rose in this house to defend these employees, the hon. member gets up and calls it a cheap political trick.

Mr. Pickersgill: And a breach of the law.

Mr. Thrasher: The hon. gentleman is known as "jumping Jack", and I believe that name is consistent with his character. I would suggest to him that perhaps he ought to continue the law course he has been taking because it is apparent he is not too well acquainted with the law.

The hon. member during the course of his speech mentioned something about unemployment. Apparently he has lost his liaison with the premier of his province, Mr. Smallwood, who is now in ill health and forced to take a rest even while the house of assembly of that province is in session. I should like to quote now from the March 5 edition of the Newfoundland Herald in which the premier is reported as saying that 52,400 new jobs have been created in that province. If this is the case and these jobs have been created in that province, much of the credit must go to the federal government which provides over 60 per cent of the money expended by the province of Newfoundland as well as many millions more by way of family allowances, increased old age pensions, public works and so on.

I listened with interest this afternoon to the very admirable and scholarly address given by the Leader of the Opposition during which he analysed the present economic difficulties and the employment situation in this country. In his analysis he dealt at great length with the causes of this situation. He showed an admirable grasp of the subject. There was only one thing he forgot. He did not say anything about a cure. We were all interested—

Mr. Pearson: I will be speaking again on that.

Mr. Thrasher: —in hearing about a cure, but we heard nothing. We heard this speech a year ago, at which time we heard nothing about a cure, and I look forward to hearing it again a year from now.

[Mr. Thrasher.]

Mr. Pearson: Why don't you do something about it? You are a member of the government.

Mr. Thrasher: This afternoon the Leader of the Opposition asked the minister to comment on the manpower committee of the other place. Surely, he must know that it would be improper for the minister to make a statement on a committee sitting in the other place.

The Leader of the Opposition also made some reference to the unemployment insurance fund and to its depletion. Presumably, the unemployment insurance fund was established to assist people who were suffering from unemployment. This fund is bound to suffer depletion in a period when there is high unemployment. The opposition speaks from both sides of its mouth at once. It criticizes us for spending money out of the fund. Which way are they going to have it, Mr. Chairman? They cannot have it both ways.

The Leader of the Opposition also took exception to the Minister of Labour dealing with the affairs of this department. He apparently is not interested in such matters as vocational training, municipal winter works, civil rehabilitation and the other services provided by the department. If he were, he would have made some mention of them. He could hardly wait, Mr. Chairman, to give us a little lecture on the causes of unemployment. We are still waiting to hear about the cure, but I understand now that perhaps we will hear something from him later in this debate.

The Leader of the Opposition asked the minister about the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act, and wanted to know why it had not been amended. We are interested in hearing about the amendments he considers are necessary to this act. However, if he wants to know what the holdup is, I can tell him that labour and management have been so far apart in the amendments they have suggested it has not been possible to bring about any reconciliation in their respective views. One of the problems in this country may be that we have not been able to reconcile the views of management and labour. We are attempting to do so, Mr. Chairman, and we have called a meeting for that purpose for March 15 of this year.

The Leader of the Opposition spoke a great deal about President Kennedy. One would have almost thought President Kennedy was the new leader of the Liberal party, since the hon. member spoke in such glowing terms of him. I am not so sure President Kennedy would be prepared to accept such an honour.

However, I believe the reason why hon. members opposite do this is that what we have done to combat unemployment in all sectors stands out in shining contrast to their own dark and dismal record in this respect. They turn, therefore, to President Kennedy for a basis of comparison. Certainly this comparison is far more favourable than it would be if comparison were made with anything the Liberals had done.

I would point out, too, that President Kennedy is in the United States and we are in Canada. The Leader of the Opposition went to great lengths to quote the opinions of United States economists. This is quite all right and we do not take exception to it. However, I point out to him that the problem we have to solve is in this country and I would suggest that he turn his attention to what is happening here. I might add that we do not hesitate to compare our program with that presently being suggested by Kennedy. He is an energetic and aggressive young man with tremendous power at his disposal.

It is interesting in this connection to note that many of the things he is suggesting now are things that are already being done in this country or which are presently being introduced. Even the Leader of the Opposition will, I think, admit this. The other day President Kennedy said that labour and management must forget their differences and concentrate on areas of mutual interest. Apparently this statement has failed to come to the attention of the Leader of the Opposition.

On February 3, President Kennedy made certain proposals to congress. The Leader of the Opposition has invited an examination of those proposals and I hope he will not be disappointed by the results of that examination. There were 12 matters. The first dealt with expansion in housing. This we brought about two years ago and we are still taking action in this field. He proposed an extension of the unemployment insurance benefit period to 39 weeks. It may surprise the Leader of the Opposition to learn that at the present time in Canada unemployment insurance benefits can be collected over a period of up to 77 weeks.

As far as the opposition are concerned I think they are just bankrupt of ideas and have tried to hide behind President Kennedy's success. We had a 40-minute economic analysis this afternoon but we did not have a minute for the cure. I commend the Leader of the Opposition on his analysis; I commend him for his bedside manner. But I cannot commend him for any prescription he had to offer.

President Kennedy suggested before congress that the national employment service should be extended. This we have done, and the Minister of Labour made some reference to it this afternoon. The president recommended aid to dependent children of unemployed persons. One of the first things we did when we came to office was to extend the provisions of the Unemployment Assistance Act. He recommended aid to distressed areas. We have already taken action along these lines. It is clear from the attitude of the opposition in the speeches we have heard today that their psychology is one of depression. They have no real policy in this field. They ask what we are doing.

An hon. Member: What are you doing?

Mr. Thrasher: First of all, I will refer again to the suggestion regarding assistance to surplus manpower areas. We asked the municipalities, if they feel they are entitled to double depreciation allowances, to apply for that type of assistance. We would then investigate the situation in the light of figures available from the Department of Labour and the Department of Trade and Commerce. If we are satisfied in the light of this examination we shall grant double depreciation allowances to any new industries setting up in those areas. The opposition say they would not have done it this way. The real answer is that they would not have done it at all.

This afternoon the Leader of the Opposition quoted from Mr. Coyne. Apparently he overlooked Mr. Coyne's reference to the effect of United States tariff barriers on Canada's economic advancement. In his analysis of the economic situation the Leader of the Opposition pointed out that one of the softest spots in our economy was the manufacturing industry. He said the manufacturing industry had not kept pace with developments elsewhere. Why did he stop there? Why did he not take up Mr. Coyne's argument? He must be familiar with it, because apparently he read the speech. The reason is that the Liberals have put themselves in an untenable and indefensible position by opposing the legislation dealing with the revision of the definition of class or kind made in Canada. It seems to me that every time this government takes some action which will be of some benefit to the economy of the country we are told by the opposition that it is no good, that it is unsatisfactory. Yet this afternoon—and, I understand, not too long ago in Montreal—the Leader of the Opposition stated there was no one cure for the problem which exists in Canada today. Certainly this government recognizes that fact. That is why we are introducing a wide variety of measures to deal with this problem. But every time we introduce a measure in this house we are met with cries from the opposition that it will not do any good. They fail to relate the whole package. They take each individual effort, or part, and try to separate it from the complete economic program we are offering this country. They attempt to create fear in the minds of Canadians and to give the impression that Canada is going backwards instead of moving forward.

Recently in Windsor we saw a significant attitude displayed by the Liberal and C.C.F. parties in this country. I intend to quote, now, from a column which appeared in the Windsor daily Star of March 4, written by Mr. W. L. Clarke in which he said:

> Windsor has lost two big orders for transmission towers. The fabrication is to be done in Europe. The C.C.F. government of Saskatchewan passed up Windsor for one order.
> The Liberal government of New Brunswick passed up Windsor for the other order.
> As both the C.C.F. and Liberals have been harping on unemployment for months, it is surprising that they passed up these two golden opportunities to place manufacturing orders in Canada where Canadian workmen could do the fabrication.
> Perhaps they only like to talk about unemployment, but when they get a chance to do something to help, they turn the cold shoulder on Windsor and Canadians.

That is the attitude of the opposition, Mr. Chairman. That is the attitude of the people who sit on your immediate left. They attempt to sow in the minds of Canadians a fear that this country will go backward instead of forward.

An hon. Member: It is.

Mr. Thrasher: We are moving ahead, perhaps not at the rate all Canadians would like to see, and perhaps not at the rate that this government would like to see; but we are bringing in measures to deal with this situation and we shall continue to bring in measures which are suggested to this government as long as they are adaptable to the conditions which exist in this country.

May I say that the program of this government is the most massive program ever brought before a Canadian parliament to deal with the economic situation of this country. We are giving the type of leadership that is needed. I just mention in passing that my own university, Assumption University of Windsor, has an application before the central mortgage and housing corporation for a loan to make possible the construction of a new students' residence. That loan will be granted and it is another indication of what we are doing as a government to aid the economy of this country. It is also an example of what this government is doing to aid my own area, that is, the county of Essex.

Mr. Argue: Both the Minister of Labour and the parliamentary secretary have spoken of the government's massive attack on the unemployment problem. Yet every time statistics become available they show that unemployment is higher for the period in question than at any time since the end of the war. If this is the best the government can do, if this is its massive attack, then it is an admission of total and complete failure.

It is amazing to me that there should be so many references in this house to President Kennedy. From everything I have read and everything I have heard all Conservatives in this country have compared their party with the Republican party in the United States. As soon as the Democratic party comes into office with a new forward-looking president who at least has some ideas, they say, "Oh, we have switched horses. We are all for Kennedy and we are doing some of the things that he is talking about".

Mr. Hodgson: The Leader of the Opposition will not like your talking that way.

Mr. Argue: There has been a good deal of comment about the ethics of the Minister of Labour in revealing the circumstances of Mr. Exelby who appeared on this now very famous C.B.C. program. I do not condone any person going on public television to portray in any way a situation which is not in accordance with the facts. If that has been done, the gentleman in question has made a mistake and the C.B.C. with him has made a mistake. But even if those mistakes have been made, in my opinion that does not justify the Minister of Labour standing up in the house to smear the person in question, to smear the C.B.C., but more important than that, to bring into question the situation affecting 693,000 unemployed persons in Canada.

It actually matters not to the unemployment situation in Canada whether or not this program was aired. The fact is that all over this nation there are tens of thousands of homes in which there is real suffering, in which there is heartache; and this government hides behind an error of one person, if in fact it was an error. The Minister of Labour, as has been said so well already, has himself broken the law and contravened the statute, but this is not the first time this method has been resorted to. After all, when a number of cards came to hon. members of this house there was evidence—

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Argue: —brought to our attention that some of the people who had signed the cards had been brought into the unemployment insurance offices and a great deal of pressure had been applied to them. They found that the kind of gruelling they were given was not very pleasant. When the minister had this matter brought to his attention in the house he made some very far-ranging and far-sweeping statements. He smeared well-known people in the labour movement that day, and when I asked him whether this matter would be referred to the industrial relations committee there was no reply.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It never sits. It has a chairman, but it does not sit.

Mr. Argue: I suggest that this question should be referred to the industrial relations committee. I suggest that we call before the committee the trade union people in question and these loose-tongued employees of the national employment service. Let us get to the facts; let us bring the minister before the committee and let us confront him with the evidence that has been brought to our attention.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Argue: This question is now more important than merely whether or not there has been some misrepresentation in certain matters. The present matter concerns whether or not confidential information in the hands of the government affecting the lives and happiness of Canadians may be disclosed at any time.

Surely our society has not reached the point where Canadians dare not give truthful and confidential information to government employees for fear that the minister may direct that this information be made available. In reply to this charge the parliamentary secretary said, "Look; we increased their salaries". I think that is entirely beside the point. Does an increase in salary mean that an employee, on instructions, must disclose information of a confidential character to be made public in the House of Commons?

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Argue: When I sit down I will permit all the questions you wish to ask. This summer we are going to have a census in our country. There will be information requested of every Canadian citizen. If the Minister of Labour will disclose confidential information, what guarantee is there that the Minister of Trade and Commerce will not disclose confidential information of this type for political advantage?

I say that Canadians are not safe in reporting information to the government or information in the census inquiry just so long as any member of this government may disclose information of a confidential character. Where is the bill of rights? Where is the protection to ordinary Canadian citizens, when their private circumstances may be disclosed at any time by the Minister of Labour in the House of Commons and they have no opportunity to reply?

I suggest that this whole question regarding what took place at Galt should be brought before the industrial relations committee. Let us put on it the spotlight of a public inquiry, where one can hear the defence as well as the prosecution. The government's attitude to unemployment is apparently this. If the unemployment figures are high, they say, "We are making a massive attack to reduce unemployment and the main reason we cannot reduce it is because of what is said by the prophets of doom and gloom". Then they say, as a kind of last ditch argument, "Well, after all there are a lot of people who do not want to work. They have been forging names on cards. They have been offered employment, but they do not want to work".

How is it that so many Canadians became indolent and lazy during the time of this administration, when apparently there were so many less in this category a few years ago? If in 1956 the average unemployment was 200,000 persons, and we then heard no accusations that people were indolent, were sponging unemployment insurance and did not want to work, how is it that for last year the figure was up to 448,000? Does the minister say that 248,000 people are getting unemployment insurance in an illegal fashion?

We hear a great many excuses these days as to why there is so much unemployment. A few weeks ago the Minister of Finance said in this house that one of the reasons why there is so much trouble today with regard to unemployment is because of the wartime babies. He said there were too many wartime babies and they are now old enough to be on the labour market. He said, "We cannot deal with the love life of Canadians and the new citizens we have who are coming of working age. There were too many wartime babies". We asked why so many people are on the unemployment rolls. "Too many pregnant women drawing unemployment insurance who should not be receiving it". Some answer.

Everybody is responsible for the mess but the government, and it was this government that was going to clean up the mess; and there was a mess when the government came to office. The only trouble is that mess is bigger today and conditions are worse than they were before the government started this massive attack on unemployment.

The Minister of Labour and his parliamentary secretary apparently have the same scriptwriter. A lot of the same phraseology appeared in the text of both statements. But they say that the government is on the job. The Minister of Labour said this afternoon, "We are constantly developing our understanding of unemployment and are obtaining a more effective utilization of our manpower resources through the work of the economics and research board".

There is more understanding and knowledge but less done with that understanding and knowledge, with more unemployment. Then the minister played an old record with an old theme. I heard the Minister of Labour speak to the Canadian Labour Congress delegation and thought he made a rather impressive speech. He outlined a lot of things that the government said it was doing but his conclusion bothered me. He said that the government had done its job and it is up to management and labour to carry on. We have asked him in the house if he has done anything to bring management and labour together; his answer was no. We have asked him in the house if he has made any recommendations to management and labour; his answer was no, the government has done all it is going to do and it is now up to management and labour.

The government said it wanted some ideas. It said it is making a massive attack on unemployment but would like more ideas. I can give the government more ideas. I mentioned over 25 points this afternoon which the Liberal party had suggested last year and most of them had to do with conferences bringing people together in talk fests. I can remember when the Prime Minister was in the opposition and every time the government made a mistake he suggested it call a conference—let us have another conference—and it had so many conferences that the leader of the opposition of that day became Prime Minister. We can have too many conferences. We need some action.

I would suggest that one of the things the government should do is change the financial policies of this country so that the interest rates are reduced. Just imagine that three quarters of a million Canadians are unemployed. The minister may say that they are indolent, he may say that they are lazy and do not want to work, he may say they are falsifying their evidence and making false statements on television but the statistical fact is that three quarters of a million people are unemployed and the provinces and municipalities are having to pay the highest interest rates they have paid in 20 years in floating their debentures.

We heard this evening that the main trouble is that the provinces are not doing their jobs. Let the government cut interest rates in half and the provinces will be able to do a much more effective job than they can do when the government is choking provincial economies and choking provincial governments with this fantastically high rates of interest. I would suggest that this is the time for expansion in the money supply. This is not a time for tight money and high interest rates.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You are adopting our program.

Mr. Argue: I am not adopting your program at all. I am just saying that you were wrong when you were in government and the present government was wrong in opposition and that now they are just as wrong or perhaps worse in regard to interest rates than the Liberals were with their tight money policy. I would suggest that there should be a great national development program in which public money—the Liberals will never buy this one—should be invested in business and in industry. I would suggest that public money from the provinces be invested with federal moneys in a great national development program but the Liberals would not buy that program. That would be socialism and they do not want to have anything to do with socialism.

Mr. Pearson: We will not even talk about it.

Mr. Argue: After all, they have got Joey Smallwood and the leader of the Liberal party in Saskatchewan so they will never adopt a great public investment program.

An hon. Member: And you have got Tim Buck.

Mr. Argue: We are suggesting that this government should not be satisfied with embarking upon this one ribbon trans-Canada highway program that was started by the former administration. There should be a national highway program in this country and there should be public money invested in a main highway program in the provinces providing highways north and south. We suggest that the government should do something with the Clark report rather than allow it to sit on the shelf gathering dust.

An hon. Member: The government is studying that report.

Mr. Argue: The government is not studying it. The government has not opened it since it received it, or at least the Minister of Labour has not. He does not have a clue as to what it contains and has not told the Prime Minister what is in it. Nothing is being done in regard to the Clark report. It is just gathering dust.

We believe that there is a need for a portable pension system in Canada. We feel this is something that should be embarked on at this time. I have in my hand a report regarding the number of C.N.R. pensions being paid at various levels, which I received in reply to a question I asked in the house some days ago. This report indicates that there are 4,800 pensions being paid in the category of $100 or less. It indicates there are 2,708 individuals receiving a basic pension of $25 a month. This is an area where suffering exists. This is an area where purchasing power should be increased. We need a portable pension system, and that kind of system would not be a great financial drain on the public treasury. That type of pension system could be actuarially sound; money paid in during younger working years and taken out on retirement.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Argue: I thought you wanted some suggestions.

Mr. Brunsden: We are asking for some intelligent suggestions. We are discussing the labour estimates. My hon. friend, who is so loquacious, introduced the subject of portable pensions and national development programs. I am wondering if he is in order in doing so.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I should like to speak to the point of order. The hon. member for Assiniboia has been outlining a program which in the main is a very acceptable one but it is a program of this party. The hon. member for Medicine Hat is now objecting to a contructive proposal being put forward. Surely that is not a point of order. I suggest that is the characteristic well-known effort of government members, interfering with constructive suggestions made in this house.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, may I speak to the point of order.

The Chairman: I think the hon. member for Assiniboia should speak to the point of order.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the Chair would rule that the discussion regarding a portable pension plan under item 1 of the Department of Labour estimates is not in order. However, the member for Essex East would have been more convincing had some of the hon. members of his party put forward suggestions in regard to these programs which he claims are those of his party.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We have been doing just that for over three years.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, when these people are in opposition they have a program but when they were in government they did not have a clue. There is no doubt that this proposal is in order, but if it were not then it would be in order in reply to the challenge of the Minister of Labour and his parliamentary secretary when they asked for ideas. We have many ideas, Mr. Chairman, and we are now trying to give them to the government. We believe that they are good ideas. I feel it is a disgrace to Canada to have over 2,000 persons on C.N.R. pensions at a base of $25 per month, 747 persons with a pension of between $25.01 and $29.99. Surely this is a disgrace to the nation, to the government and to the Prime Minister who said he was going to do something about these very low pensions.

I would also suggest that the old age pension in Canada should be increased. People who live on $55 a month and pay rent, are suffering from malnutrition. Let us increase the old age pension to $75 a month. Our old people will not put the increase in a jam can, stick it under the bed and leave it there. They will go out and spend it, and they will buy some of the goods that could be produced in some of our idle factories.

Mr. Henderson: He's my boy.

Mr. Argue: I am glad the hon. member for Cariboo follows the practice of a former prime minister when he reached that age of accepting his cheque and cashing it.

Mr. Henderson: I will.

Mr. Argue: He will, but I suggest to him something that is very obvious. Most people who reach the age of 70 years and receive a pension of $55 a month do not have a supplementary allowance paid out of the national treasury of anywhere near the size of the allowance that is received by the hon. member, and I get the same amount less the $55. I am not casting any reflection on the hon. member whom I consider a good friend and who sometimes makes a pertinent contribution to the debates in this house.

I suggest that at this time the government should endeavour to put purchasing power into the pockets of our agricultural producers. Export the wheat surplus and you will start the farm implement factories in this country operating once again. Export the surplus of Canadian grain and you will put some of the unemployed automobile workers back to work producing automobiles and trucks. There is a need for more consumption of goods in our country. Two thirds of the people of the world need more goods. In the 1940's Canada waged a very successful war effort in a time of national crisis. We never want to see another fighting war, but I would suggest that now is the time for the government to declare war on unemployment and poverty in Canada and come to the assistance of underdeveloped countries by producing some of the goods that our idle factory workers would like to have the opportunity to produce.

Before I take my seat I should like to quote the words of a very famous Conservative, the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, who had this to say in a radio broadcast in January, 1935:

> I told you in 1931 I would end unemployment. That was a definite undertaking. By it I stand ... when I say I will correct the system, I mean that I will reform it. And when the system is reformed and in full operation again, there will be work for all. And in my mind, reform means government intervention. It means government control and regulation. It means the end of laissez faire. Reform heralds certain recovery.

I suggest that when the Prime Minister told the Canadian Labour Congress that come what may he was tied to the free enterprise system he admitted failure and until he starts putting into action these words which were given to the nation by a prime minister who was on his way out of office and which words were in fact a deathbed repentance, unemployment will be with us. We need a massive attack on unemployment. We submit the government has not yet started that attack.

Mr. Churchill: Will the hon. member permit a question? He said he will accept questions at the conclusion of his speech. May I ask him now to give the page reference in Hansard of his statement that the Minister of Finance said that there were too many wartime babies?

Mr. Argue: The Minister of Finance did not say that. I can look it up and if the minister will give me a few minutes I will be glad to do it, and I shall quote it to him. The Minister of Finance said that one of the reasons the government was having a difficult time achieving a full employment economy was the high birth rate during the war. If the hon. gentleman will read the remarks carefully he will find this in the speech.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, I have the remarks in front of me. They appear on page 1001 of Hansard, at the bottom of the first column. The Minister of Finance made this statement:

> However, the growth of our labour force is now more directly attributable to the coming of age, from an employment point of view at least, of the large number of babies who were born in Canada during and immediately after the war.

He said nothing about there being too many wartime babies. The hon. member for Assiniboia was quite incorrect in his statement.

Mr. Argue: No. He said that this was the reason unemployment was so high and he could not do anything about it.

[Mr. Argue.]

Mr. Churchill: He said nothing about the problem being so big at all. There is nothing there relating to the problem of unemployment.

Mr. Argue: Except there were too many people coming of employment age and the government could not do anything about employment.

Mr. Baldwin: Is the hon. member's description of the statement made by the Minister of Labour this afternoon in connection with Mr. Exelby based on a completely erroneous interpretation of the law by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate or did he himself come to that conclusion on his own?

Mr. Argue: It is based on my own knowledge of public statutes and on a long experience in the House of Commons, much longer than that of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Macdonnell: Will the hon. member permit a further question? Does he think that we should look to Saskatchewan for proof that it is desirable for the government to go into competition with private business?

Mr. Argue: I think the Saskatchewan government has made a wonderful success of its crown corporations.

Mr. Woolliams: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: All that I know of. The Conservative party and the Liberal party in the province say, "If we get elected to office we will not touch them, we will leave them alone". They have been paying a return on investment in excess of 10 per cent, and my hon. friend from Greenwood would agree that that is a reasonable and satisfactory return.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to be given this opportunity to take part in the debate on the estimates of the Department of Labour. My interest in this debate is precipitated by the remarks of some hon. members in the opposition, who state that our serious unemployment situation is unbearable in this country. But let me say right at the start that I am not minimizing the unemployment situation, far from it. I am just as much concerned as anybody else. Not one of us in the house enjoys the thought of men and women able and willing to work and unable to find it. At the same time, the cause of the unemployed people is not going to be helped when the impression is given in the country of a collapsing economy and blue ruin is shouted both here and abroad. Such far fetched distortions of gloom and doom undermine public confidence in our country and abroad.

To substantiate what I have just said let me give the committee an example. The other day I read a story in the Carillon News, Steinbach, Manitoba, of Friday, February 10, 1961, about a grateful refugee lady from Russia who secured permission to leave Russia just about two or three weeks ago after trying unsuccessfully for about 15 years. This story went on to say that she was on her way to Vancouver when she met another lady on the plane "Britannia", which took her to her destination. This lady from Steinbach, Manitoba, was able to speak her own language and conversation ensued. The refugee lady told the Steinbach lady her life story and how it came about that she was now in Canada.

But this is not what I wanted to tell you, Mr. Chairman. What struck me most in this story was what the refugee lady from Russia had heard about Canada while still in Russia. She told the Steinbach lady that she had heard so much propaganda about the terrible unemployment in Canada that she was astonished and amazed at the evidence of prosperity everywhere in Canada. She was particularly struck by the difference between the Russian plane that brought her to Amsterdam and the Canadian plane that brought her the rest of the way, and was particularly pleased with the good food and excellent service on the Canadian plane. She said that everything looked so nice and clean and tidy in Canada in comparison with Moscow.

This story from Russia about the terrible unemployment in Canada comes from a country where the people have very little chance to get the real facts about Canada. They have no opportunity of reading our Canadian newspapers or magazines or of visiting our country to see for themselves the terrible unemployment in Canada. This one-sided propaganda emanating from Russia can certainly give an untrue picture of Canada to the Russian people in their homeland.

But, Mr. Chairman, this story about our terrible unemployment not only comes out of Russia. One can hear similar stories that emanate from other foreign countries about our terrible unemployment. Our own Prime Minister while visiting Ireland on his way to the conference in London was asked whether it was true that Canada's unemployment situation was so terribly serious. Yes, you can read these stories in our own press and you can hear them from the mouths of our own people, some of them, I must say, in very responsible positions. And, above all, you can hear about our terrible unemployment in the House of Commons of Canada.

We are all aware of our seasonal unemployment situation. We know there are more Canadians out of work than any of us like to see and it is entirely proper that we should know about the situation and the reason for it. On the other hand, let us keep the record straight. How many Canadians, for instance, know that there is a labour force of 6,396,000 now in Canada, the highest in our history? It is 3.1 per cent higher than a year ago. How many know that in the last five years alone 800,000 people have been added to the working force? So much has been said about the rise of 165,000 in unemployed in January of this year but has anybody said that the employment figure in January was 47,000 higher than a year earlier? Has anybody said that 250,000 more Canadians have jobs today than at the same time three years ago or that more than 70 per cent of those without jobs have been unemployed less than three months, or that 60 per cent of the jobless come from families where one or more persons are still working?

Who would seriously deny the fact that there is much less hardship in being temporarily out of a job in these days of unemployment insurance than was the case 25 years ago? I can speak from personal experience because during the winter months at that time I had to work for board only and had to take care of my family at the same time. I am not citing these figures and facts in order to minimize the problem but they are relevant and significant facts and figures and they do make nonsense of the grossly misleading comparisons being made with the dirty 30's.

So, then, let us be clear on this point. If it is a serious problem, let us do something about it. Let us not only point a finger at the federal government and claim that unemployment is solely its responsibility and that the federal government should employ all those who are out of work. Let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, that all governments combined, federal, provincial and municipal, can only provide a very small portion of the jobs needed to keep our people employed. The great majority of jobs must be provided by industry engaged in the production of products that people will buy.

We must also realize that if we are to continue to have high employment in Canada we can only do so by industry producing products which will be competitive and will sell against competition. This is something which is clearly understood by the peoples of European and Asian countries and this is the reason why these countries are today our toughest competitors. If you ask them how they are able to do this, their answer is co-operation, co-operation between management and labour to bring about better design, higher quality and lower costs.

I must give them credit for that. These people are realists and they have always known that if a product is not competitive it will not sell and people will not be employed producing it. It is evident that such a result is not brought about by chance but by a planned effort by management and labour. Both these groups realize that by working separately they can accomplish very little whereas by working together they can accomplish a great deal. These countries are setting us an example which we would do well to adopt here in Canada.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, I believe that this co-operation can only be brought about by heads of companies inviting union representatives to study what is needed to increase sales, to make products more competitive and to work out co-operative plans to bring about increases in sales. If this co-operative planning and production were not possible to achieve in the past, it is high time that management and union leaders got together now. In an industrial world that is more competitive every day management, labour and government must work together as a team and, as a team, they can accomplish much.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, to provide employment we must produce goods either of better quality at the same price or of equal quality at a lower price than our competitors. Only then can we export our Canadian goods abroad and also sell Canadian-made goods in the home market at competitive prices. If we cannot compete effectively in export markets and if we cannot cope successfully with growing competition from imports in our own domestic markets, then I must say most regretfully that unemployment will stay with us for a long time.

Let us wake up to these facts and let us remember that the world does not owe us a living. We have to mould our own destiny and the sooner we realize this the better off we will be. Let us also remind ourselves that Canadians in the past have withstood many trials and tribulations but only when they were united in their efforts to overcome hardship and disaster. Let us never forget this.

We Canadians should not fail now when unemployment conditions are unavoidable and the government, with the best intentions in the world, cannot correct the situation immediately and consequently must rely on long range legislation to alleviate the unemployment situation.

The question is being asked, what is the government doing to help create work and combat unemployment? The answer to this, I would say, is that vigorous measures for combatting unemployment have already been implemented by the government. The winter works program is one. The Minister of Labour described the response to the government winter works program for immediate employment as phenomenal in all respects, but he also said that he did not regard this type of work as the final cure for the economy or for the problem of unemployment.

This new Bill No. C-49, an act respecting technical and vocational training assistance to provinces, introduced by the minister, is another important piece of legislation. It has been heralded by many as a timely step taken by this government to increase technical training, combat unemployment and foster national development. Canada has never had sufficient trained manpower to meet the needs of industry. In the past, this country has relied on immigration to meet the need for trained manpower. The demand for skilled and technical workers is increasing far more rapidly than employment generally. The fastest growing occupations are those that require a high level of training. These are the occupations that are being pushed to the fore by rapid technological changes.

There are two kinds of training jobs to be done. First, we must train those already in the labour market who have left the regular school system, and are now unemployed, and second, we must provide more training for those now in school to ensure that the ranks of the unemployed will not be increased in the future. This bill indeed merits commendation. It provides for a program of education that could be characterized as a co-operative program with the provinces. It is designed for the immediate present and also for the future.

This government also introduced Bill No. C-52, an act for the establishment of a national productivity council. The Prime Minister made the suggestion at a conference on unemployment held in Ottawa in October last that a productivity council should be established. This specific proposal, which outlined the need for such a council and the function it might undertake, was accepted by leaders from commerce, industry, labour, finance and education. It has now become law and members of the council have already been appointed. In making this proposal, the Prime Minister stressed the need for full and active participation of Canadians in all sectors of the economy.

At a time when markets at home and abroad are becoming increasingly competitive, it is essential that Canadian industry be as efficient as possible. The national council should act as a policy making body and should assist in the establishment of regional and industrial productivity committees. In view of the progress made by other countries in the field of productivity, Canada cannot ignore this field of endeavour. As in other countries where these councils have been so successfully used, Canada can achieve equally successful results if governments, management and labour co-operate fully to make Canadian products competitive in both quality and price.

Another thing that I should like to mention is the export trade promotion conference. Our trade commissioners from the 49 countries in which we have posts were called home so that they could advise our producers about the possibilities of selling their products in the various countries. Some 1,268 companies requested more than 10,500 interviews during the two-week period. It is too early to say what the conference accomplished, but we know that it enabled businessmen to gain information which it would have taken months of travel and an expenditure of thousands of dollars to acquire. It also convinced them that there is a market for their products abroad and that there is a far wider opportunity for selling their products in the countries of the world. These are some of the things the government is doing.

In conclusion, I should like to say that gloom should not pervade our spirits, even though we have many obstacles to overcome. With the co-operation of all governments, federal, provincial and municipal, as well as the people of our country, we should be able to overcome these temporary problems and build a better Canada for the benefit of all citizens of our country. Surely no one in this committee would deny the fact that this government, and in particular the Minister of Labour, is working toward this goal. If anyone questions this let him look at the minister's record over the last years and also at the record of this government since 1957.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, the debate this afternoon has been a most interesting one since it seems to have centred around a most peculiar point, that is the attempt by the Minister of Labour and those who sit on his side to take unto themselves the democratic President of the United States. There has been an attempt also by the hon. member for Assiniboia to take unto himself the mantle of the democrats in the United States. We in the Liberal party, Mr. Chairman, know with whom there has been a traditional alignment of the party to which the President of the United States belongs. I suggest to hon. members of this committee that they might consider the fact that hon. members opposite are led by a man whose name was not known and could not even be pronounced by the president prior to their first meeting.

This leader of the C.C.F. who, it seems, stands again for socialism, although the party to which he has long adhered has already expired—a party which has had to deny socialism in order to elect the most intelligent and interesting young member from Peterborough—

An hon. Member: They are going steady now.

Mr. Hellyer: His face is pink.

Miss LaMarsh: His face shows the colour to which he should properly adhere, the colour of all true radicals, namely red.

I consider, Mr. Chairman, that in debating the first item of the minister's estimates we should concern ourselves with what has been happening in Canada and not with the minister's attempts to mislead the people about what this government has been doing. He said this afternoon that unemployment is something which can be licked only by a massive attack. I suggest to hon. members of this committee that the sort of "no-cal diet" to which the government has been subjecting the people is not, by any definition, a massive attack.

Perhaps one indication of this massive attack is that panacea which was introduced last Friday by the Minister of Labour, double depreciation. The Leader of the Opposition referred to an editorial which appeared in a newspaper not noted for its support of the official opposition in this house. Some good points are made in this editorial and, oddly enough, some of them were touched upon by the hon. member for Port Arthur, who occasionally makes a remark worth listening to. On Your Honour's right are the hon. members who traditionally represent big business. However, through their spokesman, the Minister of Labour, they have shown a most abysmal ignorance of any kind of business, large or small, by attempting to say that this part of their massive attack, double depreciation, will in any way assist areas which need assistance.

Perhaps one of the things that is necessary is for hon. members of this committee to come to some agreement on the definition of terms. In my few short months in this chamber I have found it incredible that there was no agreement as to the meaning of words. One of the rather astonishing things, of course, was the speech from the throne in which the Prime Minister, through the Queen's representative, very carefully escaped using the word "unemployment". He carefully avoided using this until such time as he appeared on a television program and not before this house. Suddenly he decided that unemployment had made itself felt in the land and it was time he took his head from whatever snow bank it was hiding until the snow melted and the unemployment went away; and decided he had better at least acknowledge the word.

If hon. members opposite wish to say that they follow Kennedy I should like to draw their attention to an article which appeared in the New York Herald Tribune entitled: "Kennedy Spells it Out—and it Reads 'Recession'". There must be some things about which hon. members agree with the president of our good neighbours to the south but this apparently has not been one until they found he had the moral courage to come before the people and say: hold on, there is danger in the land; it must be dealt with now and over a continuing period.

I think that neither the Minister of Labour nor his colleagues on the front bench dared say there was trouble. I suggest that the Minister of Labour has a special responsibility to be candid with this house and with the country, to admit that there is a problem; it is also his responsibility, because of his ministry, once the problem begins, to initiate immediately not only short range but long term panaceas or answers, for it is his responsibility to look after the people of Canada. Well, when a minister is not permitted even to acknowledge that there is a problem perhaps it is small wonder that he cannot begin to do anything about it. But when he suggests that there has been a massive attack exemplified by this measure of double depreciation for one year, anyone who knows business knows that no industry can even find a site within a period of one year, much less amass its capital, survey the labour force which would be available and make its other necessary arrangements. Who would want to start a canning factory where the labour pool would be asparagus cutters?

Many matters must be taken into consideration before a new plant is constructed, and I suggest to the Minister of Labour that if he is really interested in using this gimmick it should not be limited to new plants entering an area which is already one of surplus labour but it should be allowed to be used, if it is worth anything, by plants which are already in that area but which have closed for one reason or another. In their modernization, in their capital expansion, in their assistance in a number of ways, real help could be given to a particular area which has suffered from chronic unemployment.

We have been worrying about words from time to time. We hear words such as "rolling readjustment" which have finally come to "a recession". We hear words such as "depressed area", "distressed area" and "area of surplus labour". It may be that men and women of good faith do not understand the same things by the same words, but I suggest to the government and particularly to the Minister of Labour that it is a simple thing to spell out exactly what is meant by an area which needs government assistance.

The Minister of Labour has only produced a gimmick which will be of assistance to areas which are so deflated, so flattened already, as almost to have passed out of existence as far as the general economy is concerned. There are in Canada a great many other areas which are in trouble, yet which are not so depressed or so distressed or so flattened as to entitle them to qualify under this niggardly definition, these niggardly criteria placed before us by the minister. Such areas in Canada cry out for assistance.

This problem is not a new one. The Leader of the Official Opposition gave figures this afternoon showing that there have been four recessions, each increasingly severe, from each of which we have made a poor recovery in the past five or six years. This is a problem which cannot be dealt with by nit-picking. Just a few years ago hon. gentlemen opposite were supposed to have a particular and sole advantage in dealing with this subject. Theirs was the vision, and I ask them now; where has it disappeared? The people of this country look to them because they made some of the most glowing promises ever made to an electorate; and they have sold out the people of this country. They have not attempted to deal with this problem in any way.

They have not attempted anything, but whatever attempts are made—and it may be they will be made by another administration which will take power at the next election—this problem is one which is going to take a long time to solve. First, one must acknowledge its existence, and, second, one must start to work on it, and I suggest that one of the greatest responsibilities of this government is to get down to a massive assault. This is a problem which it is said, probably arises from too many babies, and from my experience of hon. members of this house they have nothing against babies almost until the age of twenty one. This may be part of the reason, but there are a number of other factors represented by a number of studies, some undertaken in the United States and some undertaken through the sittings in the other place. This problem requires an attack from all sides and one which will be long drawn out. It requires the kind of attack, the kind of study, perhaps, first, which was made at the behest of the President of the United States, one which deals with a two-prong matter, short term and long term proposals.

An hon. Member: Would the hon. lady permit a question?

Miss LaMarsh: I would be very pleased to at the conclusion of my remarks. The report which was made was one of great length and if the Minister of Labour has not seen it I shall be glad to lend him my own copy. He has been asking the house for ideas.

We are grateful to the hon. member for Assiniboia for putting forth Liberal ideas. We are grateful that he has finally seen the light after sitting in the house and listening to the hon. member for Essex East, the hon. member for Laurier and the Leader of the Opposition for a year, for two years, for three years, telling those hon. members who are sitting to the right of the chairman what should be done and hearing the answer that nothing is ever told you.

I should like to offer the Minister of Labour the report which was made for the President of the United States. This report deals with a great many things, beginning with the most immediate sort of aid to those who are unemployed. I have no means of knowing whether this television program was another divertissment or whether it was intended to be factual. Perhaps it is not even important enough to concern hon. members of this committee. The reason that lies behind it is one which causes disquiet to every Canadian, regardless of his political affiliation.

There are those in this country who are in need of food. They are not, we can all thank our Maker, in the ascendancy. I suggest this is because of certain measures which have been in force for longer than the four years for which this administration is responsible. They are the measures which have kept people from starvation. However, there are those who need food. In this country there are great surpluses of food. The Minister of Agriculture is always trying to give away these surpluses. I saw today that they were giving away some of the surplus to a very well respected young visitor from the minister's own province, who was here for education week.

We want to use our food, and particularly we want to use it for those who are in need. One of the proposals made was that food be made available, on a proper nutritional basis, to those who needed it. Another thing which is necessary is housing. Arrangements have been made in the United States with respect to long term mortgages, a reduction of interest rates and a number of measures which will put housing within the reach of those persons still employed.

There are page after page of proposals to assist in the reconstruction of industry, in its automation and in relocation of industry in the United States. One of the things which is possible in the United States is the direction of defence contracts. In the last few years there have not been too many defence contracts coming into Canada. However, there are some. The Minister of Labour may remember promising at least one to my riding not long ago. That is another promise in regard to which he has yet to make good. This is a way in which certain areas that are suffering to some degree, particularly industries, can be assisted.

The government has available to it all the experts who can tell them what industries and what areas require a shot in the arm. Not only is the government in a position to do this, but it is its real responsibility. Too many hon. members opposite appear to think that to be elected once or twice is enough. They appear to think that in the achieving of office they have done all that is necessary. May I suggest to the Minister of Labour and his colleagues that it is necessary not just to achieve office but to do something once you have arrived there.

Ideas to deal with unemployment have been placed before this house. I have seen them and I have referred to them a number of times. Suggestions were made in this connection on March 3 and 4, 1960 by the hon. member for Essex East. Earlier this session, on December 19, as reported at page 953 of Hansard, the hon. member for Laurier detailed what was being done in other countries of the world, such as Belgium, Germany, Sweden and Great Britain. But the minister has not seen fit to adopt these ideas. Not only in this house, but across this country otherwise hon. members have been saying that there have been no positive suggestions from the opposition. I suggest that if the Minister of Labour is incapable of remembering from day to day what has been suggested, a collection will be taken up on this side of the committee and a list will be printed and placed before him daily so that he will not forget them.

In January of this year there was a great meeting in Ottawa the like of which it is not expected will be seen even this month. Here the people of Canada, through their representatives, put forward certain proposals. These proposals were of many kinds, dealing with many of the problems which lie before the Canadian people.

I had the honour to serve on one committee which dealt with some of the problems of unemployment. We passed a resolution which I realize hon. gentlemen opposite cannot have seen, since they are not liberally-minded Canadians. Therefore, I place on the record what the party I represent has declared it stands for in the matter of dealing with depressed areas.

It was said in that committee that a new Liberal government today would co-operate with provinces and municipalities in providing tax incentives to encourage industries to locate in such depressed areas. It would see that more credit was available to business in these areas. It would help to finance power, transport and other basic economic developments. Through programs for urban and rural rehabilitation it would see that both credit for private business and money for public improvement was readily available. I commend these things to the Minister of Labour.

There was, in addition, a resolution to deal with accelerated depreciation, but of a kind not contemplated by this government. The resolution was to the effect that a new Liberal government today would use the proven types of accelerated depreciation in order to help all business firms, not just new ones locating in an area, that are eager to expand and to put in new equipment. Such enterprises would thus, at a time when they most need cash, be paying lower taxes than firms that stand still.

The Minister of Labour said both today and in a speech he made to the advertising and sales club in Montreal on February 22 last that things are being done by this government, and they are things which have been followed in the country to the south. I refer to a remark made by the Minister of Labour during the speech to which I have just referred when he pointed out that the measures now proposed by President Kennedy were gratifying to the government in that they followed pretty well along the lines of what it had been doing in dealing with a very similar set of problems.

I wonder whether the Minister of Labour can tell us at what time he or other hon. members of his government forwarded to the President of the United States the intelligence necessary for him to take over leadership in the United States and the free world with such dizzy speed. The Minister of Labour also told us in this and other speeches that it is only necessary to wait until the massive program of this government has had an opportunity to make itself felt on the body politic.

I say to the Minister of Labour that the country cannot stand any more of the effects of the last three years. If this government is not now prepared to be candid, to be frank and to make a real effort to get this country moving, there is the great possibility that when the people of Canada have the opportunity to say whether or not they are satisfied with this government it will be too late for those of us who have ideas and are prepared to put them into effect to do anything.

Mr. Fisher: Call for an election.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Miss LaMarsh: An hon. member to my right says "Call for an election". I notice that this is the hon. member who has said on a number of occasions that he will not be standing when there is another election.

Mr. Hellyer: The question is, will he be sitting afterwards.

Mr. Benidickson: Even if he stands he will not sit.

The Chairman: Order.

Miss LaMarsh: There are those of us, Mr. Chairman, of the official and effective opposition who will be standing but not to Your Honour's left following the next election.

That which has been done by the Minister of Labour is something rather shocking to this committee. The Leader of the Opposition today posed question after question to the Minister of Labour, who sat only a few feet from him, and the minister made perhaps the weakest statement ever heard in such a debate. He countered these questions today with an ordinary routine speech about an ordinary routine department with no sense of urgency and with no realization of crisis in the country. The Minister of Labour may be content in his job and prepared to accept that the underbrush is being cleared, and that the massive program is sufficient to restore Canada's unemployed to full employment, but those of us who sit on this side are not prepared to sit silently while nothing is being done. Whenever, over the years, anyone rose on this side of the house to speak of the increasing unemployment figures it was not for political advantage.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Miss LaMarsh: I call the hon. members' attention to the numbers of members present in the committee of the number there might possibly be, and to the advantage that they might take in this chamber. This situation is impressed upon us because the members of the government appear not to notice or to care what is happening in the country.

Mr. Benidickson: Where there is no vision the people perish.

Miss LaMarsh: The only answer given to the country by the government was that we are glooming and dooming. We heard this again this evening from the hon. member who preceded me. Mr. Chairman, if glooming and dooming would put Canadians back to work those of us in the opposition would stoop to it. If what the government is trying to indicate to the people of Canada is that we are attempting to make them afraid and uncertain, that is not correct. We speak here in this chamber to those who at least temporarily have the responsibility of doing something about it. I suppose that next they will adopt the famous remark of another democrat, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who said to his people in the thirties, "We have nothing to fear but fear itself".

I would hope that as yet the Canadian economy has not been allowed in the last four years to slip so far that it cannot be recovered. If it has then we have considerably more to fear than fear itself. Those hon. members who sit opposite have a responsibility to the people and a responsibility which will not wait. I would suggest that rather than hon. members on the front bench travelling throughout this country making speeches and suggesting that the success of that administration to the south may be laid only to the fact that it has adopted the program existing in Canada, they should be here in this committee dealing with this massive attack of which they have so often spoken. If this cannot be done—

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but her time has expired.

Mr. McGee: I was wondering if the hon. member's enthusiastic embrace of President Kennedy's administration referred to the 50 per cent tariff increase on bicycles about ten days ago, and if she does not find this a little inconsistent with some of the suggestions made by hon. members in the front benches?

Miss LaMarsh: It may be that it is part of this massive attack to which the hon. members on the opposite side have referred so often in this house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if it is true that a member of the national employment service took part in the television program about which he claims there has been so much complaint.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Starr: No one has complained about the program and it is true that national employment service persons took part in this program. All I have done is attempt to give additional facts in order to keep the record straight.

The Chairman: Order.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what the business of the house is for tomorrow, and perhaps the house leader would also indicate what is planned for Monday and Tuesday of next week.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow by general agreement we will start with the debate on Bill No. C-71, an act respecting the civil service of Canada. I understand that there will only be two or three members speaking on that occasion. This bill will then go to a special committee to be studied there and then come back to the house to be studied in the committee of the whole. If it is agreeable to the house, and that debate is concluded in good time, we will follow it with the motion of the Minister of Finance to set up the special committee to consider that bill. We will then carry on with the estimates of the Department of Labour.

The forecast for next week, subject to change if unexpected circumstances require, is as follows. Monday will be private members' day. Tuesday we would like to consider item No. 2 on today's order paper, second reading of Bill No. C-51, an act to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, and then take item No. 9 on today's order paper which is my resolution dealing with the Army Benevolent Fund Act. The third item on Tuesday would be item No. 14 on today's order paper which is the motion in the name of the Minister of Agriculture, asking the standing committee on agriculture to inquire into the prices of farm machinery. Then, item No. 4 on Tuesday would be item No. 8 on today's order paper, the resolution in the name of the Minister of Labour dealing with the vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons.

On Wednesday we would commence with Bill No. C-73, to amend the Income Tax Act. Should that be completed, we would then follow with item No. 12 on today's order paper, the resolution in the name of the Minister of Agriculture dealing with agricultural development.

Thursday's business would be a continuation of the items that I have called for Wednesday. If they are finished the remainder of the time on Thursday and on Friday would be devoted to the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Benidickson: May I just make the record clear? Regardless of the completion of the business as outlined for Tuesday, would we start with the income tax amendments on Wednesday?

Mr. Churchill: Yes.

It being four minutes past ten o'clock, the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, March 10, 1961

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. FLEMING (EGLINTON)—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE ON MARCH 9

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Last evening when I was not in the house the hon. member for Assiniboia made certain statements which I think reflect on me. They are to be found on pages 2841 and 2844 of Hansard, and I read them:

A few weeks ago the Minister of Finance said in this house that one of the reasons why there is so much trouble today with regard to unemployment is because of the wartime babies. He said there were too many wartime babies and they are now old enough to be on the labour market. He said, "We cannot deal with the love life of Canadians and the new citizens we have who are coming of working age. There were too many wartime babies." We asked why so many people are on the unemployment rolls. "Too many pregnant women drawing unemployment insurance who should not be receiving it." Some answer.

That is on page 2841. On page 2844 the hon. member said further:

The Minister of Finance said that one of the reasons the government was having a difficult time achieving a full employment economy was the high birth rate during the war. If the hon. gentleman will read the remarks carefully he will find this in the speech.

And further, speaking of myself the hon. member said:

He said that this was the reason unemployment was so high and he could not do anything about it.

And again:

Except there were too many people coming of employment age and the government could not do anything about employment.

The remarks attributed to me, Mr. Speaker, have never been uttered by me. What I did say on this subject is a matter of record in the house and could have been quoted precisely from the record by any hon. member wishing to refer to my remarks in their proper context. They are to be found on page 1001 of Hansard and read as follows:

... the growth of our labour force is now more directly attributable to the coming of age, from an employment point of view at least, of the large number of babies who were born in Canada during and immediately after the war.

You will observe, Mr. Speaker, that the remarks attributed to me by the hon. member for Assiniboia bear no resemblance whatever to what I actually did say, and the best that can be said for his remarks is that they are an irresponsible distortion of what I said.

MR. STARR—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE ON MARCH 9

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We have a very sensitive government this morning.

Mr. Starr: I rise at this time because of remarks made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I did not rise last night, Mr. Speaker, because I wished to study the statements of the hon. member in the report of the proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the minister has given sufficient reason for deferring his objection. After all, he was in the house last night when the remarks about which he now wishes to complain were made, and I am very sceptical about the desirability of a practice which allows members to go back and pick up what has been said and debate the matter. The Minister of Finance was not in the house and in such circumstances where there is a real injustice or cause of complaint I have not objected to the matter being raised as a delayed complaint.

The rule is clear, however, that a point of order or privilege must be taken at the time it arises. If the Minister of Labour feels that there is any exceptional circumstance which takes him out of the rule I will hear him, but I would hope he would not want to establish a practice which, to my mind, would be very harmful to the proper conduct of the business of the house.

Mr. Starr: I always have great respect for the rules of the house, and I shall abide by your ruling.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

APPOINTMENT OF AMBASSADOR TO CERTAIN CENTRAL AMERICAN REPUBLICS

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): On January 20 I informed the house that the Canadian government and the governments of the republics of Costa Rica, Honduras, Nicaragua and Panama had decided to establish diplomatic relations. I now wish to announce the appointment of Mr. Jean-Louis Delisle as ambassador of Canada to these four Central American republics. Mr. Delisle will normally reside in Costa Rica but will pay regular visits to the other three countries to which he is accredited. The Canadian embassy in Costa Rica will be opened next week under a chargé d'affaires ad interim, pending Mr. Delisle's arrival in May. Arrangements are being made for reciprocal representation of the four republics in Ottawa.

Mr. Delisle, a native of Quebec city, is a career foreign service officer who has served Canada with distinction at home and abroad for nearly 20 years. He is a graduate in law from Laval University and holds a degree from Oxford, where he was a Rhodes scholar in 1939. Since joining the Department of External Affairs in 1942 he has served in Rio de Janeiro, Boston, and Warsaw, where he was chargé d'affaires from 1954 until 1957. In the following year he served as a member of the United Nations commission in Togoland which paved the way for that country's independence in 1960. Subsequently he served as head of the legal division of the Department of External Affairs and since September 1959 has been counsellor in charge of press and cultural relations at the Canadian embassy in Paris.

Central America has been until now one of the areas in which Canada was seriously under-represented, mainly because of the heavy demands that have been made on a growing foreign service in other parts of the world. The government's decision to expand Canada's relations with that area is a further step in a policy of fostering closer economic, political and cultural ties with Latin America as a whole.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): This further announcement indicates the expansion of Canada's diplomatic missions in Latin America. The minister does not say whether or not this appointment and the opening of the new mission is part of the government's policy of giving further consideration to membership in the organization of American states. On some other occasion, if not today, I would hope the minister might also deal with a matter to which he referred last session having to do with the opening of another mission, namely in Iraq in the Middle East.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): The announcement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs of this increase in the representation to South American countries will, without a doubt, increase the understanding between the nations concerned. We are, therefore, gratified to hear of the appointment of such able and experienced personnel.

[Mr. Green.]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GLEN EXELBY—EMPLOYMENT SERVICE CO-OPERATION IN C.B.C. PROGRAM "CLOSE-UP"

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask him how long he had known that the national employment service was co-operating in the production of the program "Close-Up" featuring the Exelbys before he made his statement in the house?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I did not know about this program until the evening when it was produced and I saw it.

Mr. Chevrier: I have a supplementary question. May I ask the minister whether the officers who co-operated in the program had read the whole script?

Mr. Starr: That I do not know, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister inquire and tell the house.

Mr. Starr: I shall be glad to inquire.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour. Has his attention been directed to a statement in a story in yesterday's Toronto Telegram by Mr. Peter Dempson in which the following appears—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member may have a proper question, but before he reads any factual material on which to base his question I think he ought to indicate something more than what he began with, namely "Has the minister's attention been directed to?" because that gives no lead at all.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In view of the statement made by the Minister of Labour the other day with regard to Mr. Exelby, will the minister now correct the great injustice he has done to Mr. Exelby?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The hon. member for Essex East is again trying to make statements, smuggling them into the record in the guise of asking a question. He has done nothing more than make a statement.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member's point of order is well taken. As I recall the phraseology, the hon. member for Essex East has made an assertion that the minister has done a great injustice to Mr. Exelby. He knows that the question period is used for the purpose of obtaining information, not for making debating points.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to point out to you that the Minister of Labour the other day used the orders of the day in order to make—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member had any complaint on that score he should have made it when the event took place. If there was a point of order involved in the statement made by the Minister of Labour in reply to a question, the appropriate time to complain about it was then. It is too late now for the hon. member to make that sort of statement about it.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With great respect, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I did not know until about an hour ago what the facts were. My point is that the Minister of Labour on the orders of the day attacked an individual—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have indicated to the hon. member what the limitations are with respect to commenting on the minister's statement of yesterday. If the hon. member has a question to ask the minister it would be in order to ask that question, but not to make an argument such as he was attempting to do, nor to comment on the previous answer.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am prepared to put my question, but I was dealing with the point of order and, with great respect, to the observation of Your Honour. I was simply indicating that until a short time ago I did not have any justification, as I now have in my hand, for the statement I made that the Minister of Labour—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I appreciate that the hon. member is entitled to make that comment with respect to the point of order, but in my view it does not alter the circumstance. Although additional information has come to the hon. member's knowledge, he was in the house when the statement was made—

An hon. Member: He was not.

Mr. Hodgson: How much has the Liberal party paid him?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether or not the hon. member was in the house. However, that is the view I hold about comment.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. The hon. member for Victoria (Ont.) has just said, "How much has the Liberal party paid him?" I wish to deal with that now. The Liberal party has paid nobody. This is a reflection on the Liberal party—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and it is a reflection on every member of this house because we seek to defend—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member raises a matter of privilege about a reflection on the Liberal party. Reflections on parties are, I think, too general to be raised as matters of privilege. But the remark was improper and should not have been made by whoever made it—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It was made by the hon. member for Victoria (Ont.).

Mr. Speaker: —without his having the floor and without it being relevant to some proceeding which was taking place.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he will now correct the statement he made about Mr. Exelby, in view of the fact that Frost Metal Products' personnel manager has said that the Minister of Labour was wrong about Mr. Exelby turning down any job, because he was not offered any job; he applied for it but did not get it. Now the—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —Minister of Labour has an opportunity of correcting an abuse against a private citizen of this country.

Mr. Speaker: Order. There are three members seeking the floor. Would the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka resume his seat, please.

Mr. Aiken: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the hon. member's point of order.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Essex East is going right ahead, in contravention of your ruling, and is reading the article that he was instructed not to read.

Mr. Speaker: I must say that the presentation this time of the question by the hon. member for Essex East is entirely different from what it was when the hon. member rose before on his point of order. I think it is quite in order for him to ask whether the Minister of Labour is prepared to correct a statement in view of an additional fact, and the point of order is not sustained.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the statement I made the other day in respect of this matter was based on information given to me by the manager of the national employment service in Hamilton. I understand that is a statement they are prepared to substantiate.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he is prepared to have the official who gave him those statements appear before the industrial relations committee to substantiate them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I have an answer to my question?

Mr. Churchill: It is not a proper question.

[Later:]

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the contradiction between the statement made by the Minister of Labour and that made by a reputable newspaper man, will the Acting Prime Minister call immediately the committee on industrial relations to hear evidence in connection with the matter?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would judge by all the questions which are being asked by the opposition today that the Minister of Labour got a bull's-eye when he dealt with this question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I regret the statement made by the Acting Prime Minister, for whom we all have very great affection and admiration, but the Minister of Labour made a statement that affects an individual Canadian citizen who is not here to defend himself.

Mr. Speaker: I am not aware that comments on answers made by the ministry to oral questions can be raised as a matter of privilege unless there is something in the answer itself which raises a specific matter of privilege. I heard the answer of the Acting Prime Minister and it did not reflect in any way on the conduct of any member which would entitle him to raise a question of privilege. I think the hon. member for Essex East has misconceived the opportunity that privilege presents.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With great respect, I would like to submit to you that when a minister of the crown in particular makes a charge or a statement that is harmful to an individual Canadian citizen, that individual should be afforded an opportunity of putting forward his side of the case.

Mr. Speaker: I understood the hon. member to raise a question of privilege relating to the reply given by the Acting Prime Minister. It appears that he is now referring to some statement made by the Minister of Labour and, in effect, is questioning the aptness of our procedure to deal with the matter. I can only say there was a debate of this matter last night and there will be other opportunities. In my view it is not appropriate to use this question period for the purpose that the hon. member has in mind.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

TARAS SHEVCHENKO—ANNIVERSARY OF DEATH OF UKRAINIAN POET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, may I have leave of the house to draw to its attention that today, March 10, 1961, is a day of great significance to Canadians of Ukrainian origin, being the centennial of the death of their greatest hero and poet, Taras Shevchenko. His name is worshipped by 45 million Ukrainians wherever they may be found, and by some half million of that race in Canada who have integrated themselves in the Canadian way of life and who can be counted as constituents of most of the members of this house.

Taras Shevchenko, the son of a Ukrainian serf, who was a free man for only nine years of his short life, died when he was 47. His pen proved to be more powerful than the decrees of the oppressors of his people, and by his unfaltering faith in the victory of democratic ideals, despite all obstacles he became the greatest poet and freedom fighter of the Slavonic world. He is not only a national figure among a given people but a luminous personality in the world course of contemporary history. His poetic works—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has asked for the leave of the house and by its indulgence has called attention to this very interesting anniversary, but if he is to take more time he must have the expressed leave of the house to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mandziuk: His poetic works deal not only with the oppression of his own people but also with the enslavement of every other nation raped by the white despot of his time and by the red imperialist of today. To his own people his works "Kobzar" are the national gospel and are to be found in nearly every home. His fiery words resurrected a nation thought to be dead; they inspired his people to deeds of heroism in their struggle for independence and give them hope and courage in bondage. He calls to all to "rise and break the chains" and, echoing a passage from la Marseillaise, to "spatter freedom with evil enemy blood". He calls for brotherly love among the Slav family of nations.

His works are not only popular among his own people. They have been translated into all Slavonic languages as well as into English, French, German, Italian and Swedish. To his immortal name those of his origin in Canada are erecting a monument in the grounds of the Manitoba legislature in Winnipeg because, as a poet, he not only enriched the literature of his own people but inspired them with new hope for freedom. What he sought for them he sought for the oppressed everywhere in the world. This monument is to be unveiled on July 15 of this year, and gratitude goes to the government of Manitoba for permitting its erection.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you and, through you, the members of this house for having given me the opportunity to make this statement.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): The house has unanimously agreed to lay aside its procedures in order to permit the hon. gentleman to pay tribute to one of the great poets of the Ukraine, Taras Shevchenko. It is appropriate that hon. members should join with the hon. member for Marquette in marking the anniversary of this great Ukrainian who in his poetry has given justification for the hopes of contemporary Ukrainians for the liberation of their homeland.

In doing so we can recognize that there are many Shevchenkos in every ethnic group in our country, who likewise give cause for hope of liberation from totalitarian oppression which has now taken hold of so many of them. The hon. member is a Canadian of Ukrainian descent. He may be assured that those of us in the Liberal party recognize the great contribution made by the Ukrainian people to the building up of this nation, as indeed we recognize the contribution made by so many other ethnic groups toward building up this country, the most envied country among the nations of the world, despite its current difficulties.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PARLIAMENTARY RESTAURANT—REPORTED SERVING OF UNDERSIZED LOBSTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. F. Legere (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): Friday is a good day for a maritimer to ask the Minister of Fisheries a question of which I have given him notice and sent him evidence. My question is this. Is the minister aware that undersized lobsters are being served at the parliamentary restaurant?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): I should like to thank the hon. member for having given me notice of this question and also for supplying me with the evidence. I am happy to report that an autopsy was performed in the department this morning and we found that although the lobster in question had a carapace measurement of $2\frac{3}{4}$ inches and would be below the minimum size limit in many lobster fishing districts, there are some other districts in which the minimum measurement is as low as $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches. Therefore it can be reasonably concluded that although this lobster came to its untimely death, or what would have been an untimely death, perhaps in Yarmouth, it did so completely within the law.

Mr. Legere: Will the Minister of Fisheries use his good offices to encourage the parliamentary restaurant to bring in a more typical maritime lobster than this baby food?

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question I should like to direct to the Minister of Fisheries. Will he undertake to promote the use of Queen Charlotte islands crab? He will find that none of those are under size.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege. I feel it should be brought to the attention of the house and to your attention, sir, because you have full jurisdiction up there, that the lobster in question was billed on the menu last night as baby lobster.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF INTERIM PAYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. I apologize for not giving notice, but some days ago he informed the house that a 10 cent interim wheat payment would be paid to the western farmers. Can the minister inform the house when these cheques will be mailed out to the farmers?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have not the definite information with me but I recall seeing a report dated March 3 which said that at that time over $16 million in cheques had been sent out. I would imagine the remainder would be out in the next two or three weeks.

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLIC SERVICE

FORESTRY—FAILURE TO APPOINT FRENCH SPEAKING SENIOR PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Forestry stemming from the rather chagrined comments made in the press of French Canada about the senior appointments in the Department of Forestry announced two days ago, which resulted in none of the top positions going to French Canadians. Was, or is, any consideration given to choosing men for such senior posts from the French language people in the service?

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, undoubtedly the utmost consideration is being given to that end.

Mr. Fisher: I did not hear clearly the answer given by the Minister of Forestry. I understand he said that undoubtedly consideration had been given to choosing French Canadians in the service. Since none was chosen, I wonder whether I can ask this supplementary question. In view of the fact that Quebec has such a large sector of its economy in forest industries, did the minister canvass within the forestry industry of that province for any of the senior personnel in his new department?

Mr. Flemming (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is more conversant than I with the general procedure under which appointments of that nature made within the department itself are, generally speaking, made by the civil service commission. The promotions, which I presume he has reference to, were announced yesterday, and they were made entirely from within the department, the transfers being made from the Department of Agriculture to forestry and from the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources to forestry.

The answer to his question in connection with whether or not the department will endeavour to find suitable personnel from the province of Quebec is obviously yes. The department is always looking for suitable men from all parts of Canada, and especially from a province which has such a great interest in the forest resources of this country.

FINANCE

AUTOMOBILES—REQUEST FOR ELIMINATION OF EXCISE TAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. It arises out of the 3 per cent sales tax imposed by the Frost government of Ontario, which would increase the retail delivery cost of passenger cars already burdened by a federal 11 per cent sales tax and a 7½ per cent excise tax. Can the minister inform the house whether consideration is being given to the elimination or reduction of the excise tax on automobiles?

[Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle).]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is dealing with a budgetary matter. I do not think he could expect budget policy to be declared in answer to a question before the orders of the day, when he recalls the secrecy that is always involved in such budgetary changes.

[Later:]

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Fort William. Will the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member is out of order. On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I understood you to rule the question asked by the hon. member for Fort William out of order; therefore a supplementary is not allowed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may ask a new question but not a supplementary to a question that was ruled out of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You ruled that this was a budgetary matter, Mr. Speaker, and I submit to you that my question will now indicate that it is not a budgetary matter. Will the Minister of Finance not exercise the powers that the governor in council now has to abolish by order in council the excise tax on automobiles, thereby contributing very fundamentally to an improvement in the unemployment conditions that prevail in the automobile industry?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government will continue as in the past to try to undo all the harm that was done to that industry and many others by the former administration of which he was a very vocal member.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Essex East asked a very argumentative question and he received a very controversial reply. I suggest that the matter be left at that point. The hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that cannot be left in that way.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member has a question that is within the rules he may ask it, but I have now recognized the hon. member for Skeena.

[Later:]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Finance if he will give consideration to the passage by the governor in council of the necessary authority to abolish the excise tax on automobiles?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has again overlooked the fact that it is parliament that makes the laws and imposes the taxes, not the government, and he has attributed to the government a power—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You have that power.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —which the government does not possess. After all, parliament is still supreme notwithstanding the hon. member's lapse of memory.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You have the power now, and you know it.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED INSTRUCTIONS TO CADET STUDENTS RESPECTING NUCLEAR DISARMAMENT CLUBS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. I regret not having given him earlier notice but the matter just came to my attention before the house met. In view of a report in the Winnipeg Free Press to the effect that C.O.T.C. and R.O.T.P. university students have been warned by letter from an armed forces co-ordinator to shun nuclear disarmament clubs or face elimination from public financial aid, would the minister indicate how he reconciles such an instruction, if it exists, with freedom of conscience and whether the armed forces co-ordinator's letter represents the policy of the Department of National Defence?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the report in the Winnipeg Free Press is quite incorrect. Therefore the question which the hon. member has based on it contains statements and assumptions that are also incorrect.

This is the actual basis of the matter. On the University of Manitoba campus there is apparently a ban the bomb organization and also an organization called the students' association for nuclear armament. Apparently some members of the latter organization, who are members of the cadet training corps, posted a notice on Department of National Defence property that a meeting of the association would be held there. As a result the co-ordinator for university military training wrote a letter to army cadets only indicating that regular force personnel—R.O.T.P. subsidized officer cadets and second lieutenants—are not permitted to become members of S.A.N.A., the student association for nuclear armament or to participate in S.A.N.A. activities. The letter went on to say that reserve personnel—U.N.T.D., C.O.T.C., U.R.-T.P.—who choose to belong to S.A.N.A. as private citizens must not participate in the activities of S.A.N.A. in their capacity as members of the armed forces and, finally, that the armed forces office is not to be used for meetings of the students' association for nuclear armament.

I think nothing was sent out to the students in connection with any other organization, and the only reason the letter was sent was that a notice had been posted on Department of National Defence property of a meeting to be held on departmental property. This action was taken in view of queen's regulations and orders, section 19-36 of which lays down among other things that no officer or man shall, without permission, publish his opinions on any military question that is under consideration by superior authorities. There were no specific instructions issued apart from these, so far as I know.

The whole story is really entirely incorrect. I understand that the reporter who wrote the story telephoned the R.C.A.F. staff officer, who was not in at the time, represented himself to the corporal on duty as an R.C.A.F. officer, and sought to get information in connection with this matter. He did not get any information. He then telephoned the public relations officer and did not get any information from him either. In spite of that he went ahead and wrote the story.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CANADA-U.S.—INQUIRY AS TO CURRENT SWAP DEALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. Has the minister any swap deals between his department and the United States air force cooking at the present time and, if so, can he tell us whether the temperature of the stew is tepid or beginning to warm up to a boil?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): The Department of Defence Production always has swap deals on hand. I am a kind of trader. I should like to tell the hon. member for Trinity that there are some deals cooking at this time which are really lukewarm.

COMBINES

PACIFIC PRESS LIMITED—INQUIRY AS TO STATUS OF INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice, as found on page 2808 of Hansard. The parliamentary secretary indicated that he would take the question as notice. I wonder whether it is possible for an answer to be provided now either by the parliamentary secretary or perhaps the Solicitor General.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the director has been sick. There is no information of importance at hand now but I will give a detailed reply on Monday.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FORT PEPPERRELL, NFLD.—TERMS OF REFERENCE TO SUPREME COURT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Minister of Justice whether the terms of the reference to the Supreme Court of Canada with respect to Fort Pepperrell have yet been agreed upon by the government of Canada and the government of Newfoundland?

Hon. W. J. Browne (Acting Minister of Justice): I am not in a position to say, Mr. Speaker.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT

The house resumed, from Wednesday, March 8, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) for the second reading of Bill No. C-71, respecting the civil service of Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, time ran out on me last Thursday before I could conclude my remarks.

I hope that the Glassco commission will make a complete survey of all improvements that can be brought to the operations of the Canadian civil service, not only for the good of the commission itself, whose general efficiency is recognized everywhere, but for that of the general economy of the public service of Canada.

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to reply to the speech made by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), because his remarks contained some very great truths that I must endorse.

However, I regret that his speech contained at least one part that I noticed in the English record—I trust he will excuse me—expressing views which I cannot share and I quote:

(Text):

—Jules Leger, who for many years was deputy minister of external affairs and later became under-secretary of state for external affairs.

(Translation):

He expressed regrets upon the fact that when the Hon. Mr. Pearson was deputy minister of external affairs, certain situations occurred. I must remind him that the Hon. Mr. Pearson was secretary of state for external affairs when a French Canadian, Mr. Jules Leger, was appointed deputy minister.

I therefore feel that it was quite inappropriate for the hon. member in those circumstances to blame the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker, I agree—

(Text):

I am just starting my speech, Mr. Speaker, and already the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) and this other member whose constituency I do not recall, are talking louder than I am. I hope they will be called to order at this time.

Mr. Martel: On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I would say that I may have been talking but the first question came from the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis). I do not say this to excuse myself, but the hon. member probably got caught in our crossfire. The hon. member for Hull should include the hon. member for St. Denis in his objection.

Mr. Denis: The hon. member is just like his own government; he puts the blame on somebody else's shoulders.

(Translation):

Mr. J. N. Tremblay (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate to you that I did not try in any way to interrupt the hon. member for Hull. I was just exchanging a remark with my colleague from Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, and I did not think that the hon. member for Hull was speaking, since I did not understand what he was saying. It was quite impossible for me to understand him.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I was not privileged to hear the three members who have risen to explain, but not to deny, that they have been speaking while the hon. member for Hull has the floor. It is not possible to carry on debate if members talk to each other or to the member who has the floor, while they remain in their seats, whether or not their remarks are audible to the reporter or to the Chair. I hope that hon. members will observe the proprieties and not converse in tones which are likely to upset or interrupt the debate.

Mr. Caron: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, we all agree that the act of 1918, though very well drafted, had become obsolete and needed some changes. We had hoped for that. Besides, it was the St. Laurent administration that had asked the civil service commission to inquire and determine what could be done to improve the situation. The minister is introducing today a bill that bears very close resemblance to the one introduced last year and in that regard we might say that if the former legislation had a white beard, this new bill is almost antediluvian, because instead of moving forward, it is moving backwards.

We note a bad and dangerous tendency in the new act because it might vest with increased powers the governor in council and thus the ministers and department heads, the deputy heads and their subordinates, without any provision enabling the civil service commission to interfere in order to prevent any abuses in that regard.

The Civil Service Association of Canada complained about this last year and I am convinced it will continue to do so, because this is what I read on page 5 of the C.S.A.C. journal for January 1961:

(Text):

This reference is to Bill No. C-77, not the bill we are studying today:

> Under the present Civil Service Act, (i.e. chapter 48 R.S.C. 1952) the civil service commission has the statutory power and obligation to report upon any matter pertaining to the organization or proposed organization of the various departments. As a protection to the merit principle, this would seem to be a wise provision, and experience over the years would indicate that every possible safeguard to this principle must be maintained in the law.
> The proposal in Bill C-77 takes from the civil service commission the authority or right to make such reports except at the request of the deputy head. We are opposed to this provision and urge that the right to make such reports still be vested in the civil service commission.

(Translation):

In fact, Mr. Speaker, that remark by the Civil Service Association of Canada is quite relevant; because, if wider powers were granted to the governor in council or to ministers, as well as to chiefs of departments, that is to say to deputy ministers or their subordinates, and if those powers were used in such a way as not to always satisfy the employees, the morale of the employees might suffer, and if the morale of the employees is not good, their work will be the less efficient.

The increase in the number of prevailing rates employees is another matter of concern and trouble in this bill. Civil servants regret that the government seems to wish to obtain that right, even if it does not intend to exercise it—I do not wish to impute motives either to the Minister of Finance or to the Secretary of State—but when powers are granted to them, there is always the danger that those powers be taken literally and that they may be used to increase the number of prevailing rates employees. I agree that under certain circumstances, it may be necessary, and I refer, for instance, to the census which comes once every ten years and which obviously requires a considerable number of supplementary employees, some for three months, others for six months, and a few others even for a year. Therefore, it is normal that those employees be considered as prevailing rates employees, but there should be no provision in the act to allow ministers, the governor in council, deputy ministers, or their subordinates, to suggest a too substantial increase in the number of those employees, because those who start in a department intend to make a career there, that is, to prepare their future and ensure their living for their old age.

What will happen to the security of employment in the civil service if it can be decided over night that the prevailing rates shall apply? This makes the situation intolerable for federal employees. It will surely be reflected in their work, and the qualified employees will seek employment in private industry rather than in the public service.

Besides, if we consider the report commonly known as the Heeney report, which is the report of the civil service commission, tabled in December 1958, we find concerning the morale of the employees, the following statement on page 10:

> Maintain good morale by clarifying the rights and obligations of employees.

It seems that the government scorned the wish expressed by the Heeney commission to see to it that public servants enjoy a greater measure of security in order to give better service.

The merit system is essential if we want our employees to enjoy the sound morale which will mean a better service. To this end, it is important to clearly define and allot the authority conferred upon each party. The cabinet should not be given the right to interfere too often in this field or to ignore the decisions of the civil service commission.

The commission should be and remain a lot more independent of the executive, because its members are not interested in politics. They are more interested in the smooth working of the civil service, because of their past experience.

We know that when the Civil Service Act was enacted in 1918 the commission hardly numbered 40,000 employees, with the majority of them working as clerks at different levels. However, in the meantime, the responsibilities of the civil service commission have increased. At the time we were merely a British colony, and, consequently had less responsibilities than we have now. With the passing of the Statute of Westminster in 1927, which was finally signed in 1931, Canada became an autonomous country and government departments grew larger and more numerous. This, in turn, increased the responsibilities of civil servants and, at the same time those of the civil service commission.

During the war, the number of civil servants grew to an almost terrific extent. Many of them accepted positions of permanent character because the country's new status was compelling the government to multiply its services.

The post-war period brought about the recognition of Canada as an international power and an unprecedented development took place in the Department of External Affairs thus requiring new categories of employees.

There was growth too in the research branch. A considerable number of scientists offered their services to the state to the advantage of all Canadians.

The number of federal civil servants grew so much that the civil service commission had to take special precautions in order to retain its employees of unusual merit.

Now that cannot be achieved unless the civil service commission remains free to establish its own regulations and to develop its services without undue government interference and, above all, provided it has the upper hand on the often arbitrary decisions, as they were described by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), of division heads and deputy ministers. Well, the line should be more clearly, more accurately drawn.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the hon. member for Hull must have misinterpreted my remarks. I did not mention deputy ministers. I said: a few officials, a very few services, a few heads. My remarks were of the general character. I wish the hon. member for Hull would report exactly what I said.

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, since I do not have Hansard here. I accept the correction made by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, and I say that a few minor officials use their authority to impose their views, sometimes unduly. Therefore it is necessary that the civil service commission have greater, instead of reduced powers. Besides, I see in paragraph 10, page 9 of the Heeney report, the following remarks:

> Clearer definition of the division of authority and responsibility for decision as between departments of government on the one hand and, on the other, the commission, to which, as a body independent of the executive, certain functions are assigned by parliament;

And further on:

> —subject only to such safeguards as may be necessary to maintain the merit principle—

And again:

> —a program that will, within a reasonable time, result in "One Civil Service" in which all are subject to the same standards of obligation and benefit;

And further,

> Greater participation by employees in the processes leading to the determination of their conditions of employment.

Those are conclusions of the Heeney report requesting the government to grant that recommendation and I am now requesting the same thing today. The sound administration of the civil service calls for a clear definition of those points and it is particularly necessary that the civil service commission retain its powers.

The commission should remain independent so that no minister or deputy minister may, alone, through a decision of his own, bring about changes without a recommendation to the civil service commission. Final decisions should never be left to ministers nor to deputy ministers or their subordinates.

There should be set up a board or court duly empowered to deal with the appeals of those civil servants who feel that they have been unfairly treated.

Admittedly such appeals are being heard at the present time but the Heeney commission did in fact recommend a widening of the grounds for appeal and an improved and more judicial procedure in this respect.

I think that at the moment, while grievances of deputy ministers and their subordinates are heard, proceedings are practically in camera, which means that those people are sent away and then the appellant or plaintiff is called without having heard what the other had said. They are thus being placed in a position of inferiority. Moreover, they are entitled to call on an employee or a member of an association to defend them, but they have not been allowed to call upon a lawyer to help them prepare their case.

I think there should exist in the civil service commission as in the unemployment insurance commission a tribunal before which any employee could bring his case and even be defended by a lawyer. Complaints would be made while the appealing party and the person involved in the complaint are present. In his examination the lawyer could, possibly through appropriate questions, bring out contradictions and ascertain whether the complaint is well-founded or if it is only because of some personal spite or grudge that the employee is in a difficult situation.

Both sides should be given a chance to explain why suspension or dismissal is recommended. Employees would then feel more secure especially as regards promotions.

Civil servants often complain—I do not say that they are right—that they were denied deserved promotions. Well, how can you prove whether they are right or wrong if there is no tribunal to hear complaints and find out if there was a well-founded reason for denying a promotion?

I know of a case of a person whom I know very well. He is a French Canadian who tried and passed every examination for a certain position. As he always came out first the head of the department applied to have the position abolished so that he would not get the promotion. If there had been an appeal tribunal, that man could have had his case heard before the abolition of that particular position, he could have found out why a competition had been opened and then, following the examination, why application had been made to have the position abolished.

This is one case in a thousand, because since I have been a member of this house I have received a voluminous correspondence telling me of the complaints of dissatisfied people. I do not pretend that this has happened only under this government—it existed before, but it is, however, a lack that should be filled now by an amendment to this new bill. That is why I suggest that the government disregarded the justified complaints of the small employees who are just as much entitled to be defended as the higher-ups.

Besides, if the appealing party could call on a lawyer, he would have much better protection, since it is not everybody who can state his complaint quite clearly; in fact, a civil servant may be a perfect clerk who perfectly knows his work, but when he has to appear before an appeal board where it is important to express himself well, not being used to public speaking, he cannot defend himself easily in a case of this kind, while if he had his own counsel, he could rely on him to relieve him of his sudden uneasiness and state his case much more clearly.

Besides, at page 16 of the civil service commission report, I read something about the appeals in paragraph 38:

> With these considerations in mind, the commission's proposals are designed to place firmly on the departments primary responsibility to maintain discipline while, at the same time, providing suitable safeguards against uneven or unfair treatment of employees.

Therefore, the civil service commission itself had realized there had been unjust treatment of certain cases, and that there had been no means to cure this situation because of the excessive power of certain divisional heads.

> Our proposals entail among other things,
> (c) that the scope of appeals to the commission in such matters be substantially broadened;
> (d) that dismissal be effected by the commission on the recommendation of the deputy head (instead of by an order in council); and
> (e) that, before an employee is dismissed on grounds of political partisanship, his case be fully investigated and reported upon by one or more commissioners appointed for the purpose under part I of the Enquiries Act.

As you see, Mr. Speaker, what I am saying has been provided for in the civil service commission report. So, it is not new, and I suggest that we should act upon this.

And here is another weakness existing within the civil service, and it is the famous rating. As far as this question of rating is concerned, the same standard should be applied by all departments without exception. When this rating of the employee is ready for submission to the civil service commission—the rating factor is important for promotion—it should be submitted to the civil servant for his acceptance or refusal. If he feels that his chief who has given him this rating was unfair, he should have the right to appeal to the civil service commission and that right of appeal should be recognized in the act, but it is not so now.

There is only one department that I know of—there may be others of which I am not aware—but we have the Department of National Defence where employees, accustomed to those efficiency reports in the army where a soldier, when shown his report, could appeal to his superior officer, maintained the same procedure. Since that practice existed in the army, it has been applied to the civilian staff of that department. They are asked to sign the report and if any objection is raised, then the report is discussed and often amended.

I can say that when I was myself an employee of the civil service in 1927, I have seen cases where there was an injustice because a head of department did not like a subaltern's mug. I suppose that the same situation still exists.

We live with men who unfortunately labour under certain human frailties and tend towards feelings of unreasond likes or dislikes. That is why, when the time comes to discuss this particular point, this should be corrected by standardizing the rating. In addition, the civil service commission should have the right to legislate in that field, to hear the appeal of the employee who feels he has been discriminated against, the appeal being heard in the presence of both the author of the efficiency report and the appellant to prevent any discussion behind closed doors. Thus one day, great and small will be able to be treated fairly in the civil service.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is the question of salaries. It has been brought up often during these last few years especially by civil servants who, I feel, were quite right in their complaints.

(Text):

Canadian civil servants have a right to play a definite role in determining their wages, salaries and working conditions. Clause 7—

That is clause 7 of the bill.

—does not provide even an elementary basis for a proper system of negotiation.

We would therefore urge, with all the emphasis we can muster, that this committee amend clause 7 to read as follows:

"The cabinet, or such ministers or minister, or officer or officers of the crown it may designate, is empowered to negotiate directly and consult with representatives of appropriate associations and organizations of employees of the crown on all matters of personnel administration in the public service, including remuneration and all other terms and conditions of employment under regulations and procedures drawn under the provisions of this act. Such direct negotiation and consultation shall be initiated by the cabinet or its appointees on the one hand, and by recognized staff associations and organizations on the other hand.

"The provisions of such regulations as may be drawn should also include provision for arbitration of issues which cannot be settled by negotiation".

(Translation):

I fully agree with the civil service association on this point.

Besides, I suggested last year, when Bill C-77 was introduced—it was later withdrawn—that whenever negotiations dealt with salaries or working conditions, civil service organizations should be called in and should have a representative sitting with the commission, in order that their views might be known. In this way, what happened in the past would not happen again, such as the issuing of a secret and confidential report which nobody knew anything about and to which nobody could refer before its publication. That famous report caused serious injustice. If I am not mistaken, salary increases started to be granted in April. One group of employees got their increase as of the 1st of April, another group on the 1st of May, another on the 1st of June and so on each month until September.

Raises were therefore granted class by class. They were retroactive only to the first of the month in which the recommendation was made to the house by the minister.

This means that employees of equal merit did not get their increase until September, and were refused those rights enjoyed by those who had had their raise in April, May or June.

That Mr. Speaker, was a glaring injustice which moved the employees to bitter complaint and properly so. Had they taken part in the discussions, had they been entitled to attend the negotiations, they would have known what was going on and they would have shared the secrets of the powers that be.

They could have then made representations to the commission, to the department and also put their case before the people of Canada through the newspapers, if they were being treated unfairly.

Moreover I find that my request is not in contradiction with the terms of the Heeney report. I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to page 132, appendix (b). The Heeney report is totally in agreement with this request since it says:

For 14 years, organized civil servants have possessed in the national joint council—

And further on:

The opinion is widely held that the council could play a more active role in this area with advantage to both employer and employees. We share this view and consider that the time has come for a re-examination of the terms of reference and procedures of the council, with the object of strengthening its position and prestige, and making it a more useful and effective body for joint consultation.

That recommendation of the civil service commission has been completely ignored, completely disregarded.

Yet, the minister told us that section 7 provided for meetings between employees, at their request, with the department or the commission. But those recommendations may be accepted or refused by the department. So, if it were enacted that employees are entitled to share in negotiations, the department could not turn them down; it could no longer say: "You cannot have this," or "You are not entitled to that", because it would have to accept it.

That is a recommendation made by the civil service commission after a thorough investigation of this matter. And in section 3 of appendix (b) we find this:

The last authorized view coming from the government was that of the Prime Minister, expressed on May 1, 1958,

That is the present Prime Minister, who is now in London. He expressed this view on May 1, 1958:

—in an address delivered before one of the large staff organizations:

Please note, Mr. Speaker, that I am quoting no less a person than the Prime Minister of Canada. Only a few years ago, he stated, and I quote:

I think that civil servants, through their associations' representatives, should have a greater say in the establishment of salary scales in the civil service. A more rational method should be adopted whereby your ideas and advice could influence the application of principles on which there is nearly full agreement in matters of salary.

The Prime Minister was in agreement. They were supposed to enjoy more consideration, but I do not know what happened to change that approach, because this is not included, as it was not included in Bill C-77, introduced at the last session.

Section 4 reads as follows:

On the side of the employees, the associations have, over a considerable period, advocated the introduction in one form or another of negotiating procedures and "collective bargaining". Some have pressed for the amendment of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act so as to include civil servants and open to organized government employees the processes of negotiation, conciliation and arbitration for which that statute provides. Some have advocated the establishment of a special arbitration tribunal whose awards, in the event of failure of agreement, would be binding on both sides. No recognized association has asserted on behalf of civil servants the right to strike.

Therefore, it is clearly established that no recognized association has claimed the right to strike, and I think they were right in that. Now, the right to strike under special circumstances is a sacred and a natural right of self-defence against abuse by certain companies. But government employees have a higher duty toward their country than certain labour associations. So civil servants have no intention of claiming the right to strike, but they do claim the right of association and even the right to arbitration.

To my mind this would not deprive parliament of any of its privileges because, in the final analysis, parliament would set salaries when estimates of the civil service commission are before us, so that the last word in the matter would remain with parliament. Furthermore, claims made by associations of civil servants and joint decisions reached may not be considered by nor will be binding on parliament except for the voting of estimates.

Section 5 has to do with joint committees and here is how it reads:

Although officials of the principal staff associations are in regular and frequent contact—

Allow me to point out, Mr. Speaker, that this is an answer to the assertions of the minister, an answer to section 7 of the bill now under discussion.

... are in regular and frequent contact with the commission on questions of pay, there has so far been no systematic procedure for discussion of these matters between representatives of the employees and representatives of the government. In our opinion, this is an unsatisfactory situation from every point of view. Civil servants compare their position unfavourably in this respect with that of other employees; neither side has adequate opportunity to explain its case; the inevitable consequence is the resort to pressure tactics and public controversy.

That is the whole point. Civil servants must be granted the rights normally enjoyed by human beings to have their representations heard regularly without having to go hat in hand to the cabinet or the commission, but through rights clearly defined in the act, they must be enabled to say: "We are coming here on behalf of those we represent, on behalf of associations, to ask for such conditions and such a salary." The final decision will remain with parliament, but we must give civil servants the right to make representations.

And further on, I read:

Representation of the employees affected would be provided from the staff association which, for the purpose, would have to establish suitable joint machinery.

We should supply the suitable machinery, and this is not something I have dreamed up, it is stated in the civil service commission report. The government should, through amendments to the act, provide the suitable machinery; it should not be a time to time affair, but machinery perfectly and clearly defined which would give civil servants the right to be heard when necessary.

Again on the same subject, here is what we find in section 10 of appendix (b):

> An important element in any such regime would be that the commission's recommendations subsequent to the conduct of discussions should be communicated simultaneously to the government and to the staff associations concerned. Final decision on the commission's recommendations would, of course, remain a matter for the government, subject to the ultimate will of parliament.

And in section 12, we read the following:

> We therefore recommend:

They are the recommendations of the civil service commission.

> We therefore recommend:
> That the government request the commission—

Listen carefully, for this is clear and explicit:

> That the government request the commission—commission, in consultation with officials of the treasury board on the one hand, and the staff associations on the other, to develop and institute procedures along the lines described above for the participation of government employees in the determination of compensation in the civil service—

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I am sorry to advise the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Caron: Forty minutes have expired?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): The hon. member started at 11.53.

Mr. Richard A. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, this bill, constituting as it does the first revision and modernization of the Civil Service Act in 43 years is of very high significance and vital, long range consequence. Since it is proposed that it shall be referred to a special committee for detailed study, a committee in which I hope to take an active part, my contribution at this time will be less extended than it would otherwise be.

I do not propose to refer in detail to the speeches which have been made earlier in the debate. My failure to do so is not to be interpreted in any way as an indication, even by inference, that I agree with all that has been said in the debate thus far. Indeed, with one speech which was made I profoundly disagree. I do not deny, sir, that abuses occasionally do occur in personnel administration. Civil servants are as human as any other citizens, but I do assert with the greatest of confidence that abuses are very much the exception rather than the rule. That is all I propose to say at this time in respect of that, sir. There will be an opportunity in the special committee where, if necessary, I will make my views known in greater detail.

The Civil Service Act of 1918 is a lasting monument to the government of Sir Robert Borden, and in its day it was the most advanced measure of public service reform in any country in the world. It firmly established the merit principle as an instrument of national policy; it banished the old spoils system, the nepotism and favouritism which had plagued us in earlier days. The mere fact that after 22 years of government by one party a change of government could take place, as it did in June of 1957, with the least upset to the civil service of any change of government in our history, is the best evidence of how firmly embedded the principles of the Civil Service Act of 1918 had become, and how firmly was the adherence of the Progressive Conservative party to those principles.

All but one of those who have spoken previously in this debate have emphasized how Canadians everywhere have reason to be proud of the standards and calibre of our civil service. I have said before in this house, and I repeat it now, that at international conferences and at learned societies as well as in the performance of day to day duties, our Canadian public servants can meet on at least equal terms the public servants of any other country.

In modernizing the Civil Service Act after 43 years I submit that parliament must be guided by two basic and associated objectives. The first must be to maintain and constantly improve the standards and quality of our public service. The second, and the companion objective, must be to make a civil service career at least as satisfying, as attractive and rewarding as any professional or business career. We must encourage a high proportion of our young people of exceptional talent to enter and remain in the public service. We must give to a civil service career the status and respect which will be an incentive, a stimulus to the young, highly educated men and women in the sciences, in the professions, in administration and in other basic fields to offer their services to the state.

Too often uninformed public opinion tends to look upon career civil servants as persons looking for an easy spot where they can avoid the stress of competitive society as in business or in a profession. Such a public attitude is, in my opinion, totally unjustified and unfair. I believe that the overwhelming majority of our public servants are conscientious, hard working and effective.

What I have been trying to say was put very neatly by Mr. Neil McElroy, former United States secretary of defence and now chairman of the board of Procter and Gamble Limited, in a speech last November 22, when he said this:

> We must recognize their contribution to our nation's progress and give them proper status in the public esteem.
> Moreover, they must be adequately compensated. No one expects a government career to offer wealth. It has its other valued compensations. Like teaching or the ministry, it is a dedicated service. It can offer satisfactions in personal accomplishments and fulfilment for which, for many, there is no substitute. Government service, if it means to us what it should, must have its justified place in the consideration of careers by the young people of the country.

That expresses, I believe, the attitude which parliament must adopt in this important task of modernizing the Civil Service Act. As parliamentarians, as the elected representatives of the people, we must recognize that it is to the career civil service that we must look for long range continuity and experienced competence in our government. However able may be the ministry, however dedicated and sincere may be the front bench of any political party, they can succeed in their tasks only with the loyal support, the objective and disinterested advice and administrative competence of thousands upon thousands of career civil servants. And so, sir, I hope parliament and the special committee will submit this bill to certain basic tests and ascertain if it does, as I believe it does, meet certain standards.

The first standard or test is the preservation intact of the merit principle. Upon that cornerstone we must build. There must be an assurance that it is in fact, however, a genuine merit system. Parliament wants the genuine practice of the merit system, not a system of lip service to it. The mere abolition of the spoils system, the abandonment and prevention of political patronage or favouritism, is not in itself assurance that the merit system truly prevails. The Heeney report speaks of what it describes as "bureaucratic patronage" as being less apparent but no less insidious and demoralizing than political patronage. With that I fully agree.

In this new act and in its administration I hope that that may be avoided. I hope we will have the assurance that appointments and promotions are made on the basis of an objective determination of the relative merits of qualified candidates. We have that assurance, and I think we must have an assurance as well that there will be safeguards against any internal abuses, against any favouritism, against what the Heeney report described, as I have said, as "bureaucratic patronage".

The second standard or test to which I think we must submit this bill is whether it preserves fully the independent status of the civil service commission. That it does, in my opinion. Since 1918 the commission has enjoyed a quasi-judicial status. That position, in my opinion, is fundamental to the establishment of sound principles of recruitment and promotion.

The third test to which the house and the committee will wish to submit this bill, in my opinion, is whether it will provide increased flexibility of administration as well as greater simplicity of procedures. As I read the bill, sir, the division of authority between the commission and the deputy heads will be more clearly defined, that of the commission in recruitment and promotion being reinforced whereas in direct managerial matters, for speed and ease of decision, which are very important factors, a greater authority will be vested in deputy heads. The house must always remember, I think, that organization and classification play as significant roles in standards and conditions of work as do recruitment, promotion or pay.

One of the results which I hope will flow from this legislation is a more positive use of planned transfers as between departments. The Heeney report spoke of this as a means of providing promising civil servants with more productive and more attractive careers, and with that I most heartily agree. It will avoid good men getting into blind alleys or following well travelled ruts. I hope that a positive program of interdepartmental transfers will be pursued in order to broaden the experience and increase the knowledge of promising young career men and women.

The fourth standard by which the bill must be tested is that which has had perhaps the greatest publicity, the question of increasing participation of civil servants and their associations in all the processes leading to the determination of pay and other conditions of employment. The amendment made to the draft bill as presented last year enables the staff associations to initiate consultations and discussions, and of that I enthusiastically approve. The basic issue that is before the house and will be before the committee is whether the techniques ought to be embodied in the detailed provisions of the law. Should the processes of consultation and the results to flow from consultation be spelled out in the statute?

As I see it, sir, parliament is embarking upon a totally new adventure in the field of employer-employee relations, and my own view is that the techniques, like freedom, ought to broaden down from precedent to precedent. My hon. friends from Ottawa East and Hull now profess a lifetime of undying devotion to the full application of the principle of collective bargaining to civil service employment. With respect, I suggest that their conversion has come somewhat late in life.

The hon. member for Hull sought to have the Liberal rally as late as January, 1961, endorse collective bargaining, and with what result? It was turned back by the subcommittee; it was referred to the policy committee for further study, and it has never yet seen the light of day. What that much vaunted Liberal rally refused to endorse my hon. friends place before the house as Liberal policy.

Mr. McIlraith: That is not a correct statement.

Mr. Caron: Completely false.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): My hon. friends will have an opportunity to deal with what I say. I have clippings here from both newspapers which indicate that this is precisely what happened.

Mr. McIlraith: I am telling you it did not.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Then my hon. friend must have his quarrel with Mr. Greg Connolley and Mr. Richard Jackson.

Mr. McIlraith: With the hon. member for Carleton.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I will allow my hon. friend to pursue his quarrel with them.

Mr. McIlraith: With the hon. member for Carleton.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): My hon. friend can have the clippings any time he wants them. I say to the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith) that during all the years he and his colleagues, the hon. member for Ottawa East and the hon. member for Hull sat on this side of the house they did not have enough influence with their own government to persuade that government to take one solitary step toward consultation in employment matters.

[Mr. Bell (Carleton).]

Mr. McIlraith: Will the hon. member permit a question on this point? Will he tell us when the national joint council was set up?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): If the hon. member is now saying that the national joint council is a process of collective bargaining, I have never heard him assert it before in the house. I say to him that now that a major and constructive step has been taken, hon. gentlemen opposite seek to criticize it and to pretend that they have always believed in something more. I have always found actions more convincing than professions.

What this bill does is to provide a framework within which procedures and techniques of consultation may develop and expand to the mutual advantage of government and civil servant. This is not a strait-jacket; it is a guide to future progress in a field fraught with not a few problems, and staff associations and others are aware of these problems. In my opinion these new provisions will call for constructive statesmanship on the part of the leaders of staff associations as well as representatives of the government. Responsible, temperate, accountable stewardship will lead to constructive results in the application of clause 7. Good will and cordiality will achieve what immoderation of language and action would simply throw away.

The bill in my view is the culmination of a series of major and constructive advances in civil service administration achieved under the leadership of the present Prime Minister. I give but a few examples; the establishment of the pay research bureau, increases for superannuated civil servants, revision of the Public Service Superannuation Act to provide inter alia a six-year average, the institution of a modern medical-surgical plan, the appointment on every practical occasion of deputy ministers from within the ranks of the service, the institution of a system of class by class salary increases with periodic reviews based on the principle of fair comparison, the appointment of the Glassco commission to study the organization of government generally, and now this bill.

This is the record of achievement under the leadership of the present Prime Minister with the support of the Minister of Finance. I believe that more genuine progress in civil service administrative reform, in conditions of employment and pay, has been made in the past three years than in any comparable period in our history.

This, I believe, is a good bill. It may well be that the conscientious, non-partisan study of the special committee can make it a better bill. From that study and from the bill when ultimately enacted I hope there will emerge a civil service act which will bring pride of status to every civil servant, and which will stand as a example to all legislatures in the world interested in the application of the merit system.

Mr. Hellyer: I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question. If he believes, as he said, that practice should proceed from precedent to precedent, will he then explain why he preferred a written bill of rights to the established system of following the British practice?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I do not know how ridiculous a question can be, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hellyer: It is just the inconsistency that amuses me.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make at this stage of the bill. I think it is a well known fact that the only political party in Canada that has had any consistent approach to collective bargaining rights for employees of the public service is the C.C.F., whether at the provincial level or the federal level. However, late as it may be that support comes from other quarters, and even though that professed support is really not a policy of the party itself and perhaps exists only in the minds of a few individuals, nevertheless we welcome the attitude of those progressively-minded Liberals such as the hon. member for Hull who have finally come to the conclusion that perhaps collective bargaining is the only decent thing we can provide so far as employees in the public service are concerned.

I think it is also a fact that generally speaking over the years employees in the public service have from time to time been given rather shoddy treatment by governments in office. I think this has primarily been so because the employees have not had the right of determination, the right that other employees and other citizens in this country have, the right to participate in forming a union and in bargaining collectively with their employer.

I think this must be done. The only end to which we should look is to ensure that the employees in the public service of Canada, and in the various provinces, obtain the right to participate in shaping their own destiny. I believe it is of paramount importance that the law of the nation applying to the rights of individual employees to bargain collectively shall be equitably applied, so far as it is possible, to the employees in the public service.

I have dealt with this subject on other occasions in presenting the ideas I may have in bill form, Mr. Speaker, and I do not intend to go over the same ground again. I believe that each employee, whether he works in the public service of Canada, a crown corporation or for a private concern, should be treated on an equal basis and should have the same rights, freedoms, responsibilities and opportunities, regardless of the particular group within which he may fall.

We can argue and quibble over details as to which system of collective bargaining may be more advantageous or more suited to a particular group of workers. We can say that the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act should apply; that, with some alterations, we can establish a system of collective bargaining within the Civil Service Act; or we can say that we should set up some special law relating primarily to the employees of the public service. I do not believe it matters too much what the system is so long as it is a system based on equity, so long as we think in terms of treating the men and women in the public service of Canada on the same basis that we treat employees in private industry or in a crown corporation. I am referring to the right to work, along with your fellow workers, in negotiating with the employer to reach a mutually satisfactory collective agreement. I feel this is the only matter with which we should be concerning ourselves in so far as bargaining rights are concerned.

If there is no opportunity of obtaining a mutually satisfactory agreement within the framework of the system we would like to see, then I believe the parties should have the right to proceed to an outside agency for assistance and guidance or perhaps an arbitrary decision that would resolve the differences. The hon. member for Carleton mentioned what he and others have classified as bureaucratic patronage. There is no doubt that this is a very difficult form of patronage to put your finger on, Mr. Speaker, even more difficult than political patronage. If an individual finds he is subjected to bureaucratic patronage he has no opportunity now of finding a solution to this problem. I believe that when the parties are working out a collective agreement they should make provision for some grievance procedure, perhaps for some outside body to argue the case just as some individuals in industry do now.

The special committee to which this measure is going to be referred has a most important function in assessing and reviewing the subject matter of the bill referred to it. I for one hope that, as the parliamentary secretary indicated, this will be a non-partisan committee and that the government members of the committee will act as they individually think and as their consciences dictate after studying the bill. I hope they will not act, as has been the case so many times in the past, as if they were mere puppets controlled by the Minister of Finance or some other government official.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The observation which the hon. member has made, I feel, is a reflection on those members to whom he referred who have been sitting on these committees. There is no member in this house who has ever acted as a puppet of the present Minister of Finance. The present Minister of Finance has never asked anyone to act as a puppet, nor would he wish any member of this house to act as a puppet. All hon. members of this house exercise their freedom in the light of their responsibilities, whether in relation to the committees of the house or the house itself, Mr. Speaker. I consider this is a reflection on the members of this house that the hon. member would not wish to leave on the record.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): On the point of order—

Mr. Howard: May I say a word on the point of order?

Mr. McIlraith: If I may say a word on the point of order, I would point out that the hon. member who was speaking did not say the members of the committee acted as puppets of the Minister of Finance. He said that they acted as if they were puppets of the Minister of Finance. There is quite a sharp distinction.

Mr. Howard: May I say a word on the point of order? I am quite prepared to leave the statement on the record. I would recommend to the Minister of Finance that he read the proceedings of the veterans affairs committee this session, and he will find that certain members condemn themselves in this respect by saying that they could not do anything else but support the government; that after all this was a measure introduced by the government and they had to support it.

Mr. Speakman: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): The hon. member is speaking to a point of order.

Mr. Howard: I was just mentioning the point of order which had been raised by the Minister of Finance. All one has to do is read the record to see that there was no reflection cast upon the Minister of Finance as being an active participant in a Punch and Judy show.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was the members, not the minister.

Mr. Howard: If the Minister of Finance, however, thinks that the remarks were personally directed toward him and no other individual member, then I suggest he is far too thin-skinned. May I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Speakman: On the point of order—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not take the remarks as directed toward me, but they were remarks that reflected on the members because the statement was that they were acting as puppets of the minister.

Mr. McIlraith: As if they were puppets.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is the same thing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Did the hon. member for Wetaskiwin wish to raise a question of privilege?

Mr. Speakman: The hon. member for Skeena is in haste now to call it one o'clock, having reflected on the members of a certain committee. Since I am a member of the committee to which he referred, I can say that the members of the committee acted independently and in good conscience. We did what we did because we had the interest of the veterans of Canada very much at heart.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, at one o'clock I had been mentioning that the committee which will be established and which will consider this particular bill has a great responsibility. I think the individual members of the committee must approach the bill and the presentations that are undoubtedly going to be made to the committee with a great deal of openmindedness. If the committee is going to be nothing more than a rubber stamp which will endorse the bill—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think we are debating the second reading of the bill, are we not, rather than a motion to establish the committee?

Mr. Howard: That is quite true, Mr. Speaker. I just said that the point I was getting at—

Mr. Speaker: I was just reminding the hon. member that he was not speaking to the issue before the house.

Mr. Howard: Yes, Mr. Speaker, you are quite correct. All I was doing was reiterating again—in order to put the matter in its proper context and as I had almost reached the end of my remarks—in saying that the bill undoubtedly, as we have been told, is going to go to a committee; and that if the committee acts as a rubber stamp for the government proposal, there is not much point in setting the committee up at all.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words with respect to this legislation which is important, as everyone will agree because it deals with improvement of the Civil Service Act which is designed to give government employees a fair deal as befits a good employer. Unfortunately, it is a charter which falls short of giving the men and women working for the government, who have proved their loyalty and capabilities over a long period of years, the consideration which they richly deserve.

I am sure there is no division of opinion in the house when I say that we are fortunate in having a civil service second to none in the world. Where there is a division of opinion, however, is as to the way in which we treat these faithful servants who, in many instances, have refused better paying jobs in business and in industry so that they may carry on and remain at their posts.

Since the introduction of this measure I have listened with more than passing interest to the discussion of the merits of its content, and also of the ways in which it fails to meet the expectations of the civil service. I am particularly concerned with that part of the bill which ignores the fundamental rights of employees to negotiate with their employers in a manner recognized as a standard practice by the trades and labour movement of our country. It is true that it contains a reference to the right of initiating consultations but in no way does it recognize the right to negotiate an agreement; and in the event of disagreement there is no provision for the appointment of an arbitration board.

Speaking at a banquet of the Civil Service Association of Canada a year or so ago, the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) made a statement which was generally understood to mean that the application of the principle of bargaining rights would be implemented in any future changes of the act. He said:

> What is needed is more opportunity and better arrangement for your representatives to sit down at a table with officials representing the government and with officers of the civil service commission.

It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that what I have just read commits the Prime Minister to a measure which will recognize bargaining rights for all civil service employees.

A year ago last November the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. MacLean) spoke at a mass rally of more than 1,000 federal government workers and took occasion to express the view that civil servants should have the right to negotiate with the government on salaries and working conditions. When he was asked if he would propose in parliament that these rights be granted, he replied that he would bring the matter up in the caucus of his party in order to obtain the views of his colleagues. I think he was sincere, but evidently he failed to convince the government that such a proposal was desirable or necessary.

In their submission the civil service association recommends that one of the clauses be amended to read as follows:

> The cabinet or such ministers or minister or officer or officers of the crown it may designate, is empowered to negotiate directly and consult with representatives of appropriate associations and organizations or employees of the crown on all matters of personnel administration in the public service, including remuneration and all other terms and conditions of employment under regulations and procedures drawn under the provisions of this act. Such direct negotiations and consultations shall be initiated by the cabinet or its appointees on the one hand, and by recognized staff associations and organizations on the other hand.

I submit that such an amendment would not constitute the conferring of privileges not enjoyed by nearly all other employed workers, including those working in city hall staffs, firemen and policemen. The latter two categories enjoy all bargaining rights except for the fact that their contracts do not allow them to strike. However, they have the privilege if there is a break-down in negotiations of asking that the matter be considered by a board of arbitration whose decision will be binding on both sides. I am confident that the civil service association would not object to having such a clause added to this measure.

Professor Saul J. Frankel of McGill University, speaking at a gathering of the professional institute of the public service of Canada, made some very pertinent observations on the status of civil servants in Canada. He was speaking about the negotiation and arbitration system in Great Britain. After giving an outline of the history of the movement to obtain collective negotiation rights for civil servants, the professor stressed that the establishment of a collective negotiation body such as an arbitration board contributed a great deal toward better relations beween the government and civil servants. He made the statement that there is much less friction today than there was before they had such a right. Both sides agree to abide by the findings of the arbitration board and therefore there should be no fear that at any time the government would be faced with civil servants going on strike.

Here we are primarily concerned with giving to a substantial and important segment of our people the same rights and privileges which other Canadians everywhere have taken for granted for more than 50 years. Let us ever be mindful of the fact that civil service employees, be they working in offices, government departments, income tax branches, as customs officials, immigration officers, whether they are serving on trains, steamships or in the far reaches of the north in humble but important tasks such as delivering the mail to our door, are giving their service to our government with loyalty and zeal irrespective of whether that government is Liberal or Conservative.

Of course, that is precisely what is expected of them, that they should serve no particular party but should simply perform their duties to the best of their ability and advise those in authority. Not the least of their functions is to counsel, because of their experience, on what may be best for the Canadian people.

I believe some dissension in the civil service is due to the fact that once an employee reaches the maximum salary for his particular position he must wait years before he can expect any salary increase. While it is true that civil servants may try examinations for a higher grade, it must be remembered that after ten or 15 years away from school the average man has forgotten much of the academic questions that appear on the usual civil service examination papers.

Although the civil servants may be able to step right into a better position and discharge his duties perfectly, he invariably finds himself teaching these duties to a student recently out of school. This student, by virtue of the fact that he still has the type of questions fresh in his mind, is usually able to pass the examination, whereas the older but much more experienced employee in the work actually required is often unable to pass. It has been the experience of some men to remain in the same salary bracket for 15 years and watch youngsters step out of school and into senior positions. In this case the older employee usually has to teach them the job.

At the present time it takes five years for a civil servant to reach his maximum salary rate. I wonder whether a plan could be evolved by which he would be kept in that position for another period of five years unless, of course, he successfully passed a higher examination at the end of this five-year period, so that he would automatically be promoted to a higher grade unless the head of the department provided the commission with excellent reasons why he should not do so. Once promoted, the same routine would follow until five years prior to his retirement.

Such a plan would not only bring an end to much of the dissatisfaction in the service but would also increase its efficiency by giving civil servants an incentive in recognition of their efforts. I have in mind the case of an ex-secretary of the board of grain commissioners in the city of Fort William who was appointed secretary to the board when the statistician's office was moved to Winnipeg. This chap was a graduate of a university but had no experience. He lasted about a year. A local boy with a grade 11 education, who had started working in the office when he left school and had learned the practical end of the job by serving his apprenticeship over a period of years, took over the job and has been a success. In that particular job the university graduate was a failure.

There are many positions in the civil service in which a university education is not an essential ingredient for efficiency and which can best be filled by an older employee with years of experience. It seems to be an obsession in some quarters that unless one is a university graduate he should not aspire to top positions in the service. I realize, however, that there are positions for which a specialized university education is necessary. I am speaking primarily of the vast majority of the men and women in the service whose jobs have been learned by hard work and long hours over the years.

I now wish to mention a rather touchy subject, the restrictive discipline imposed upon civil servants with regard to their rights as citizens in connection with federal elections. One of the sections of this legislation does not provide security for an employee who may be dismissed because he had the temerity to enter the committee room of a candidate during an election or attended a political meeting. He may have to suffer the consequences of being cast into the ranks of the unemployed because of the whim of a member of a political party or perhaps the whim of a member of parliament.

I recall an instance during the 1958 federal election. A person in my constituency who held a position with the postal service told me he had been warned that if he took any part whatever in supporting my campaign he had better look for another job. This is by no means an isolated case.

Mr. Churchill: Warned by whom?

Mr. Badanai: That man—

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Badanai: Yes.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the hon. member by whom his informant was warned.

Mr. Badanai: I am not stupid enough to answer that question. A man or a woman working for the government today is deprived of those rights which are fundamental to our Canadian way of life—rights which are now spelled out in the bill of rights—or does this measure not apply to civil servants? I am not suggesting that civil servants should take to the platform. What I am suggesting is that they should be free to support any candidate of their choice and to feel free to criticize government policies according to their own convictions.

Mr. Speakman: Would the hon. member permit a question? Would the hon. member accept criticism from his own employees in his own business?

Mr. Badanai: Yes. I can answer the question truthfully by saying that I do accept criticism from my own employees, and I have many of them. They are still there after more than 20 years.

This legislation fails to define clearly what are considered adequate reasons for dismissal. If these reasons were clearly defined, independence of action would be guaranteed to employees, so long as they properly carried out their duties, and the threat of being fired would no longer hang over their heads. In other words, what I am asking is that our civil servants should be given treatment comparable with that enjoyed by other Canadians. This would keep their morale high and encourage them to discharge their responsibility efficiently and in the best traditions of the civil service of Canada. That is all I am asking.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): In rising to take part in this debate I wish to open my remarks by expressing my appreciation of the objectivity which has been exhibited, generally speaking, by those hon. members who have preceded me. I think the general quality of the observations made so far has been of a very high order and I hope my own will not lower the standard in any respect.

I do not propose to go over the history of the legislation on this subject. That has been dealt with by other speakers. I think this legislation is a natural occurrence in relation to the developments of our times, bearing in mind that the original act was passed in 1918 and that great developments in government service, in these later years especially have made it necessary or desirable in the view of the former government and, now, of this government, that new legislation should be introduced. I was glad to see that the work put in hand by way of an investigation by the chairman of the civil service commission was continued by the present government although it had been initiated by the former government. I am glad to see that the value of the report has been acknowledged and that legislation based at least in part upon that report has been brought forward.

There is one major point that concerns me with regard to this legislation. Under the present Civil Service Act the independence of the commission is made very clear. That independence is guaranteed in several ways, among others by the fact that the commissioners are appointed for a term certain as to tenure and can be removed only by the governor in council on a joint address by both houses of parliament. This guarantee goes to the very root of their independence. Moreover, they report not to a minister of the crown as such, but to parliament itself, the method of reporting being through a minister designated for that purpose.

For the last number of years the minister designated has been the Secretary of State (Mr. Dorion) and so far as I know there has been no change made in that procedure; at least, no change has been announced to the House of Commons. I am therefore a little curious to know why this legislation now before us is presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) rather than by the Secretary of State. My concern arises from what I regard as the absolute necessity of the commission remaining an independent body in line with the principle established in the former act. I hope it is nothing more than a matter of convenience, but perhaps the Minister of Finance would clarify the situation when he speaks.

If the hon. gentleman were to indicate that an attempt was being made to make the commission more directly answerable to the minister—and I myself do not believe this is the case—it would, of course, give ground for real concern on all sides of the house. The minister has been accused on many occasions of bringing the C.B.C. too directly under his own influence because of his control over finance. While that may be a controversial point, I think it would be desirable for the minister to make it clear when he replies that there is no intention to take any steps to bring the commission more directly under ministerial authority. I may add that I see nothing in the legislation itself which would warrant such an inference, but I do think it is a point worthy of the hon. gentleman's attention.

In my opening remarks I made some reference to the speeches which had preceded mine on this second reading. I do want to except from that general statement the remarks made by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon). In my view a great many of his remarks having to do with particular complaints were in the nature of superficial criticism of individual items rather than being addressed to the principles of the bill. Some of them, at least, contained what I considered to be rather poorly drawn innuendoes. They were points calculated to arouse passions and destroy pride in our civil service and our confidence in it.

In any event, I have no doubt—and it has been my experience—that in any large organization such as the civil service there are abuses from time to time. However, it seemed to me that the speech made by the hon. member did not address itself to the real problem. The problem before us is to enact the type of legislation which will enable such abuses to be corrected by the proper procedures for the relief of grievances and so on. In my view the purpose of this legislation is to provide methods by which such grievances can be remedied.

The hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell) began very well and made some excellent observations in the early part of his speech. In general he was handling the question in an exemplary way. Then he suddenly departed to that spiritual home of his, which I might call that segment of the people of the fine and historic riding he represents, Carleton Toryism. I do hope that he will not press those points in committee because, with deference to him, I suggest that some of them were quite historically inaccurate and not worthy of the earlier remarks he made in his speech.

If the hon. member will examine the text of his speech when it appears in Hansard, I think he will see that when he was speaking about the 1918 act he sought to claim that it was legislation brought about by, I think he used the term, the Conservative government of Sir Robert Borden. My reading of history rather indicated to me that the government headed by Sir Robert Borden at that time was a coalition government.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I said the government of Sir Robert Borden.

Mr. McIlraith: It further indicated to me that the reason for the 1918 act was that, through the rapid growth of the civil service during the first world war and the vigour that was being applied in making appointments on a political patronage basis, there was a revulsion of feeling in the country on that point which was ultimately shared by the government. That was the reason for the legislation and indeed it is thought by many that the legislation could not have been passed at that time by party government. It was a coalition government that made it possible. If hon. members will examine the records a little further they will find that the minister who handled the legislation and presented it was the late A. K. Maclean, and the other minister who seemed to have the most to do with it was the Hon. N. W. Rowell. That is the origin—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? Was the Hon. A. K. Maclean secretary of state or acting minister of finance?

Mr. McIlraith: I think he was the latter, but I am not sure.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Yes; in other words it was not the secretary of state who handled the bill at that time.

Mr. McIlraith: No. As a matter of fact, the act was not in existence at that time and the secretary of state did not have the responsibility of answering to the house.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Maclean was never secretary of state.

Mr. McIlraith: No, quite. The hon. member for Carleton misses the point about it altogether. We now have an act, and the Secretary of State is the one who is answerable to the house on this subject. The Hon. A. K. Maclean was not in that position because there was no such legislation and there was no secretary of state or minister answerable to the house for these matters.

Mr. Chevrier: The member for Carleton came into the house lately.

Mr. McIlraith: In any event, I wanted to check the hon. member on his history on that point and also to point out to him that in his reference to the speech of the hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard), and the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron), he was a little less precise than I think he would ordinarily wish to be in describing their speeches and the position they took. The speeches are on record and I do not propose to go over the points raised by them, but I do draw that matter to his attention and to the attention of the house in case anyone should take his version of the speeches as an accurate representation of the points discussed by them.

This bill is going to the committee and, while it is quite true one could raise a great many matters of principle that are debatable on second reading, I think it is desirable that these matters be discussed at the committee stage. I am concerned with one or two of the matters. At the time I was very critical of the handling by the Minister of Finance of the pay increases in 1959. As he well knows, there were different views on the techniques of his handling of those increases. I do not propose to repeat my criticism of his technique in handling that subject at that time, but I do wish to say that the difference of opinion and loss of confidence arising out of that episode indicated rather clearly the desirability of new legislation at least on that phase of the subject. I think probably the minister himself will agree with that. Indeed, the minister's remarks in presenting this legislation were considerably improved over some of the remarks he made at the time of the pay increases and his handling of that subject. I am quick to acknowledge that, Mr. Speaker. I think the Minister of Finance is entitled to have this said about his remarks so far on this bill.

In any event, the bill now presented does contain a very improved clause 7. I am quite sure that in committee this clause will get a rather thorough examination. It raises one aspect of the question of the technique or method of the public service organizations dealing with the government. While probably under the rules it is a matter that can properly be discussed on second reading, as far as I am concerned it can be better discussed in committee and I am quite prepared to reserve my remarks on it until that time arrives.

The necessity for the civil service bodies having the right to negotiate collectively, a right that is not something given to them at the whim, if you like, of the government but something established by law as their right is very important. That seems to be done by clause 7. Further aspects of it will have to be examined. There are different points of view on whether clause 7 does exactly what we think should be done, and there may be some shortcomings in it. In any event, it is not something that requires further debate here in principle.

Another matter which will require examination in committee is the some 25 or more changes between the bill introduced in the house last year and not proceeded with and the bill now before us. The reasons for some of the changes are readily apparent from reading them; others are not readily apparent and we shall expect to have detailed explanations of these matters in committee.

There is another point which was alluded to briefly by the hon. member for Carleton. It is rather well summed up in a report of the civil service commission of Canada dated December, 1958, commonly known as the Heeney report. While the hon. member did not quote it directly, he obviously had reference to this sentence which I shall read:

> Not much is gained if the "malign influence" of political patronage is replaced by bureaucratic patronage which may be less apparent but which can be no less insidious and demoralizing.

All criticisms I have read of the proposed legislation and all analyses of it have raised this very point as something that will need careful examination in the new legislation. The rapidly developing extent of the civil service administration over the last few decades has undoubtedly required certain additional authority to be given administratively to deputy ministers within their own departments but that being so, there is a counterbalancing necessity of a strengthening of the procedure for any complaints about their administration. Great care will be required in the committee to make sure that the counterbalancing provisions in the bill now submitted are adequate and that they give civil servants who are subjected to the exercise of this added right by a deputy minister the right, if they feel aggrieved, to a proper appeal and proper remedial action.

The whole matter was dealt with at some length in what I thought was a very admirable analysis that appeared in the civil service association of Canada "Journal" for January 1961. The analysis dealt with two phases of last year's bill. The statement set forth was prepared by the national president in collaboration with the executive committee and the research advisory committee of the Civil Serice Association of Canada. The legislation is dealt with generally and then there is a more detailed analysis in part 2 of the statement. I hope that when we get to the committee stage there will be an adequate opportunity when we are hearing the association's representatives to deal with the analysis point by point whether or not all the points are covered by particular clauses of the legislation.

I also hope there will be an adequate opportunity to examine the points that are included in the Heeney report and the appendices thereto, particularly some of the recommendations of that report which were not carried through into the legislation.

There is one other field that is of particular interest in discussing this subject. I have in mind the excellent development work which has taken place in the whole field of the relationship between the public service and government in Great Britain and more particularly the Whitley councils. Without spelling it out in legislation they seem to have evolved a technique of developing procedures that enables certain of these problems I have been discussing and other related ones to be dealt with in a way that is wholly desirable. I would hope that in the committee there will be an adequate opportunity to examine that technique in relation to our legislation.

In that connection I might point out that what I think is a rather interesting article has been prepared by Professor Frankel, who is assistant professor in the department of economics and political science at McGill University and who made a study of the British civil service arbitration tribunal with a view to its possible adaptation to Canadian conditions. Interestingly enough, his research was made possible by a Canada council senior fellowship. I would hope that in the committee stage we can examine this whole subject in some detail with a view to its possible adaptation to conditions in Canada.

The other civil service associations all have their points of view, and while I have referred to the civil service association of Canada's analysis I do not want that to indicate any less interest in the comments and representations of the other civil service associations or public bodies which have dealt with this subject. I hope they can all be heard. I hope that when we come to the committee stage it will not be necessary to press this matter unduly but that we can find a technique of carrying on the work of the committee so that the hearings will be conducted expeditiously but at the same time will be full and thorough. I say that because it seems to me that under our system no government action can be fully effective without a thoroughly competent civil service to carry out policies as laid down by government and legislation as enacted by parliament.

We in Canada have been singularly well served over the years by our civil service. It has received praise from time to time and I think that praise has been well deserved. While some of the hon. members of the present government may not have expressed that praise as vigorously or as frequently as one might have wished when they first took office, it seems to me that in the last year or two they have come to appreciate our civil service. I was particularly pleased to hear the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in his opening remarks acknowledge the high standard of the civil service in the way he did and to hear him pay that compliment, if I may paraphrase his remarks, in the manner he did. Under our system we cannot afford to have a demoralized civil service or a civil service that is operating at less than peak efficiency. This is increasingly so as government inevitably reaches more and more into the affairs of private citizens as time goes on and as the decades pass.

Without saying more I should like to conclude by expressing my appreciation of the fact that this legislation has been introduced and by saying that I look forward with interest to serving on the committee which will examine the bill in a critical and, I hope, a very thorough and objective way.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to comment on only two facets of the debate. The first, which was raised by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai), relates to the question of giving civil servants more scope for political activity. To those hon. members on the government side who seemed to scoff or thought that the remarks of the hon. member for Fort William were a little ridiculous, I might suggest that their party in particular has always stressed the example that we can find in the mother of parliaments and in Great Britain itself. If they check I think they will find that means have been found by both parties in Great Britain ever since 1919 to enable more and more British civil servants to take part in politics.

As I remember, the last figure I saw about a year ago was in a paper that had been prepared and which indicated that some 600,000 employees of the British government, especially those employed in what we would tend to call corporations or arsenals or other such establishments, are free to take part in politics and to belong to a political party. There is a continuing committee always examining various spots in the British civil service to determine when and where in the hierarchy a man reaches a position where it is felt that he can no longer take a free part in politics.

Mr. Macdonnell: May I ask the hon. member a question? Does that include standing for office?

Mr. Fisher: I did not hear the hon. member.

Mr. Macdonnell: When he says they are permitted to become members of political parties, does that include standing for office?

Mr. Fisher: Yes, it very definitely does. In the last general election in Britain there were a number of people in all parties running for office who were government employees. A leave system is arranged. If a person wins he concludes his service, of course, but if he does not win then his leave is terminated and he goes back to the service. They have found great difficulty in delineating just what role a man may have within the civil service before he is free to take part in political activities.

As I look around this house, and I have expressed this view before, I find about 100 lawyers, a great many small businessmen, a great many farmers and a few teachers. I have been able to find only two hon. members who, you might say, come from large scale corporate organizations. I refer to the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) and the hon. member who sits next to him, the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe). In other words, this house lacks representation from the large corporate organizations that dominate our business and financial life. At the same time, as I am sure every hon. member knows who has been around a university, a great deal of our best talent is funnelled off into the civil service. I wonder how much longer we can go on depriving politics of the ability that lies in these two areas, that is to say the very able people who go into the civil service and the very able people who go into corporate organizations.

I know there is no law that says someone who is an executive in a corporate organization cannot run for office, but in the main they do not. They take very little part in politics. This reference, of course, is outside the scope of the debate, but the civil service aspect of it is not. I think it is about time we began to be large enough in spirit, as the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) suggested, to consider this possibility instead of being petty. I know that I had a shock several years ago when I discovered that if a member of parliament made a complaint about a civil servant taking part in political activities, that pretty well sunk the civil servant. This was the accepted Canadian practice. At the time, the Minister of Transport pointed out he was merely following the practice of the preceding administration.

I cannot honestly say that if the members of the civil service were able to take part in political activity and belong to a party, it would do me or my party any particular good. I would say, judging from the political attitude of the provincial civil servants in our part of the country, that most of them would be Conservative. So far as I am concerned, that is fine. I would be agreeable to their taking part in party activities so long as those activities remained within a certain level and did not have an effect on policy decisions.

The second point upon which I should like to touch is not a very popular one with some of my colleagues and, I imagine, with other hon. members of the house. However, this is a personal observation, and I feel I should reiterate it at this time. I feel that there should be much more leeway to bring people in from the outside to fill top positions in the civil service. It seems to me that one of the feelings I often encounter in government—I do not think I am giving anything away—is the feeling that senior civil servants may not be as enthusiastic as they might be about their minister and the things he wants to do. I believe this is unfair, not only to this government but to any government. For that reason, I should like to see much more—not so much of heads rolling at the top—of the practices followed when a minister takes office of surrounding himself with his own people. I do not mean the executive assistants, I mean the senior posts in the department. I believe that the civil service commission and the act should be so set up that the minister could do this.

I would point out to hon. members that such a provision would do two things. It would mean we were developing in Canada the idea of a new cabinet bringing in its own experts to help it with its policy direction and, second, it would eliminate the excuse I have heard so often, "Well, how do you expect us to get things going when so many of the civil servants are against us?" I do not believe the civil servants are against the government and I would not like to make that point. However, I do believe we have a lot of time servers and quite a bit of deadwood at the top of the civil service because of the conditions of employment. If I were a minister I would want to have a little bit of room—enough space at the top—so I could fill it with people who were dedicated, not only to me and the policy I wanted to introduce but also to the subject of the field itself.

Now, as I said, this may sound like heresy but I feel that if we had more of this type of thing we would have much more life and dynamics not only in the civil service but also in the government of Canada. In this particular case, I think we can look to both the United States and British examples and see the way they take advantage of drawing on people on the outside. It seems to me a rather invidious commentary upon the party that took power three years ago that they brought in only one deputy minister. They actually brought him in as an assistant deputy minister but as a result of a death he moved up. Surely, the Conservative party had close to it or within it more people of ability that they wanted to have help them guide the country along with some sense of direction. I am not speaking as a Conservative. I am trying to speak as someone who would like to see some real sense of direction within the administration. As it is now, with our present civil service setup, it seems to me that governments pass on but civil servants go on forever. I am wondering if this is not one of the reasons that I, as an opposition member, feel this government has not had the dynamics and drive one might have expected from it.

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the house that if the minister speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood): I should like to say a word about the speech to which we have just listened. I agree that there should not be any prohibition against bringing in outside people, and obviously there could not be. On the other hand, I like much better the approach adopted by the hon. member for Carleton (Mr. Bell). It was to the effect that if we wanted to have a civil service which would attract the best sort of people, which is what we do want, it was very desirable there should be a feeling that, by and large, the top positions were available to all. I think that is a fair interpretation of what the hon. member for Carleton said. I would be very unwilling to see any other attitude adopted because I think it would work to the disadvantage of the civil service and prevent the attraction of the best people.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I should like to thank all hon. members for the support they have expressed for this government measure, which evidently has gained support in all parts of the house. I do thank all hon. members for the support they have indicated. I had not intended to participate in the debate by way of reply, Mr. Speaker, but certain points have been raised, and in particular by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith), who directed several inquiries to me with which he asked me to deal before the debate is closed.

Most of the matters that have been raised in the course of the debate can be dealt with more conveniently in the committee. Perhaps, however, I might touch on several of these at this time in closing the debate on second reading.

The hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron) indicated in his remarks that he is under the impression that civil servants appearing before appeal boards are not permitted to have counsel. If this is the view of the hon. member, I must tell him he is labouring under a misapprehension, because civil servants are entitled to be represented by counsel in appearing before appeal boards. Indeed, this is the practice in Ottawa, and some of the most eminent counsel at the Ottawa bar appear from time to time before appeal boards on behalf of civil servants.

The individual matter which perhaps engaged most attention of hon. members participating in the debate, concerned the provision in the bill providing for consultation with representatives of appropriate organizations and associations of employees with respect to pay and other terms and conditions of employment.

This provision is for consultation, of course, at the request of such representatives as well as at the instance of either the civil service commission or the Minister of Finance.

I have no doubt that this provision will continue to receive attention when it is before the committee and I do not intend to dwell at length upon it.

I made some observations on the general tenor of the bill in introducing it on Tuesday. However, I should perhaps draw attention to one fact that evidently has been overlooked by some hon. members. We have heard a good deal of praise of the Heeney report and properly so. In speaking on Tuesday I had occasion to pay tribute to this really outstanding report. Nevertheless I invite hon. members to consider the fact that the Heeney report did not recommend collective bargaining. Indeed, the Heeney report did not recommend any provision going as far as the provisions of this bill go. Let me remind hon. members of exactly what it was that is said on this subject in the Heeney report. I am referring now to paragraph 32 of the report under the heading of "employee participation". It reads as follows:

> The commission believes that in the general interest, means should be developed to enable civil servants to participate more effectively in the process by which their salaries and conditions of work are determined. We note that the Prime Minister during the past year had occasion to make reference to the government's interest in improvement in this respect. We have concluded that the differences in the circumstances of private and public employment do not readily admit of the simple and unqualified application to the civil service of the normal industrial pattern of collective bargaining. Nevertheless, we believe that, by developing and enlarging the role of the commission in this area and by strengthening the National Joint Council, it should be possible, with the co-operation of the staff associations, to arrive at a solution which would meet the essential objectives of the employees without involving the genuine difficulties associated with other proposals.
> The outline of such a solution is contained in appendix "B" to this report. It is recommended that, if this proposal meets with government's approval, the commission be requested to develop and institute suitable machinery and procedures to give effect thereto, in consultation with treasury board and senior departmental officials on the one hand and the principal staff organizations on the other. The commission has had in mind the possibility of such development in its review of existing legislation, but we have concluded that it is neither necessary nor desirable that detailed provisions on this subject should be embodied in the law.

Mr. Speaker, I now turn to appendix (b) of the report where in some detail the civil service commission outlines what is called "general consultation between government and employees on pay and conditions of work". There the three members of the commission have indicated in some 12 paragraphs their views on this subject, and they conclude with two recommendations which are as follows:

> We therefore recommend:
> (a) That the government request the civil service commission, in consultation with officials of treasury board and other departments on the one hand, and the staff associations on the other, to develop and institute procedures along the lines described above for the participation of government employees in the determination of levels of compensation in the civil service, and

(b) That, in consultation with the civil service commission, the National Joint Council be requested to examine its constitution and terms of reference, and to submit recommendations to government for making it more useful and effective as a forum of joint consultation in other matters of mutual concern.

The type of collective consultation which the three commissioners there recommended was one in which, as has been described, the civil service commission would sit at the end of a table in a somewhat detached capacity, the representatives of the civil service organizations and associations would sit on one side and representatives of the treasury board would sit on the other, and there would be discussions. This report had barely been made public when at least some of the civil service associations expressed themselves quite forcibly on the subject and indicated that this kind of system did not meet with their views. While there were discussions of that matter, it was made quite clear from the outset that these proposals did not go far enough to meet the views of the representatives of the civil service organizations and associations. I say no more on that subject at this time except to draw the attention of hon. members to the fact that the bill now before the house in this regard goes substantially farther than did the commissioners in their recommendations in the Heeney report.

The next point which perhaps should be mentioned now, Mr. Speaker, is the one for which the hon. member for Port Arthur argued vigorously. He evidently believes that civil servants should be free of all restrictions in the matter of participation in political activities. Evidently he does not stop short of believing that all trammelling restrictions upon civil servants in that regard should be forthwith abolished. This view has not prevailed in the House of Commons and I doubt that it will commend itself to most hon. members.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Mr. Fisher: The minister is not suggesting that those were my views. He referred to me.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No; I meant the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai). I thank the hon. member from Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) for the correction.

The act at the present time is quite specific on this subject. Section 55 of the present act reads as follows:

55. (1) No deputy head, officer, clerk or employee in the civil service shall be debarred from voting at any dominion or provincial election if, under the laws governing the said election, he has the right to vote; but no such deputy head, officer, clerk or employee shall engage in partisan work in connection with any such election, or contribute, receive or in any way deal with any money for any party funds.

(2) Any person violating any of the provisions of this section shall be dismissed from the civil service.

The one change that the present bill would make in that existing provision of the Civil Service Act is to provide that no person shall be dismissed for violation of this provision unless the alleged violation has been the subject of an inquiry at which that person has been given the opportunity of being heard. The new bill ameliorates the provisions in this respect to that extent but it maintains —and, I submit, properly so—the prohibition of political activities on the part of civil servants.

The hon. member for Fort William can complain about this matter if he wishes to do so, as being an interference with the personal rights of a citizen in a free country. However, the fact remains that larger issues are involved here. There is involved the whole question of the public interest; and the public interest has been served by a civil service which has been denied the right to take part in partisan politics. How can you expect a civil service to earn the kind of respect, the kind of approbration which has been expressed frequently in the course of this debate; a civil service that can equally serve succeeding governments regardless of changes in political stripe of governments, that can give the same service to a successor government it gave to the predecessor if the civil service on the one hand is going to be permitted to engage in political activities or, on the other hand, is going to be exposed to them?

There is an element in this situation that has evidently been overlooked by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai). It is the extent to which provisions of this kind protect the civil service. This is something of simply overriding importance. If the civil service did not enjoy the protection of a prohibition of this kind, those who are engaged in the civil service would be open to all kinds of pressures, or could be submitted to all kinds of pressures by any government in office.

In days gone by, long years ago, when our parliamentary system was growing up, measures of this kind would have been of very great protection to the civil service. Measures of this kind were not introduced simply to impose some arbitrary restriction upon the political rights of individuals. They were imposed, first, in order that the public interest might be better served by those who can under all circumstances give equal loyalty to successive governments regardless of political stripe. In the second place, the civil service itself should be protected under all circumstances from pressures exerted upon it by whatever government happened to be in power, or by the party that happened to be out of power if it sought to bring pressure to bear on the civil service to help them win their way into power.

That is the reason for a prohibition of this kind on political activities, so that no civil servant can be dragooned by his minister into taking part in political activities or called upon to make any contribution to party funds. Let us see this in its proper light. It is not an interference with political rights; it is a matter of giving effective protection to the public service against all kinds of subtle pressures that might otherwise be exerted upon it by a government that did not have too many scruples in that respect. I say nothing more on that subject.

I turn next to the matter that was touched upon by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith), namely the numerous changes that appear in the present bill as compared with Bill No. C-77 introduced last June at the 1960 session of parliament. I do not propose to repeat what I said on this subject in moving second reading on March 7. What I said in this regard is to be found in Hansard at pages 2760 and 2761. I drew attention to the fact that there are many changes between the two bills, most of them of a minor nature relating to administrative questions.

However, there are two changes of a quite material nature. These are changes in policy and I outlined them at that time. I do not wish to dwell on this subject, but there is a complete misinterpretation of my remarks on this subject appearing in the Ottawa Journal of March 8 at page 21. This is the sentence:

> Of the many changes in the Civil Service Act contemplated in this bill, said Mr. Fleming, most are "of a minor and administrative significance only".

What I had to say about changes of minor and administrative significance only was with regard to the changes between Bill No. C-77 introduced last June and the present measure. If you compare this measure with the Civil Service Act, you will find that there are many changes, and I think there are enough of them to engage the serious study of the proposed committee for some period of time.

A point was sought to be made that this measure is introduced in the name of the Minister of Finance and not in the name of the Secretary of State. Perhaps I should feel flattered that this should be regarded as a matter worthy of comment by some hon. gentlemen opposite. The fact is that under our existing system of government the Secretary of State answers to the house for the estimates of the civil service commission, but all matters pertaining to pay, salary, working conditions and terms of employment are, and have been for a long time, matters for which the Minister of Finance is held responsible.

Ever since I have been in the house, since 1945, this has been the division of responsibility. My predecessors, Mr. Ilsley, Mr. Abbott and Mr. Harris were the spokesmen of the government in the house for all matters pertaining to salaries, working conditions and terms of employment of the civil service. It has been my privilege in these past three years and eight months to introduce in the house those changes which have been, I trust, of great benefit to the civil service, namely the increases in salaries—

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would permit a question on this point?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I finish? I introduced in the house the measure for increases in salaries, the amendments to the Public Service Superannuation Act, the medical-surgical benefits for the civil service and the increase in superannuation benefits to retired civil servants. These were all matters pertaining to salary, pay, terms of employment and working conditions and were accordingly sponsored in the house by the Minister of Finance. Therefore there is nothing new in this present sponsorship; there is no significance in it such as the hon. member for Ottawa West feared. I can assure him that the independence of the civil service commission was never more completely recognized and scrupulously respected in all our history than it is at the present time.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would permit a question on this point. The examples the minister has given of matters that he brought before the House of Commons pertaining to the civil service have all been matters affecting pay or the financial aspects of civil service employment. Do I understand the minister to claim that matters of hours, employment and holidays have always been treated as matters coming under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not specifically individual holidays. Questions of whether a particular day is a day on which the civil service closes have been dealt with in the house by my colleague the Secretary of State. My remarks on this matter concern terms of employment and working conditions in general. These have been a responsibility of the Minister of Finance. I think no more need be said on that point; it is not a point of significance.

Finally, I think all hon. members are aware of the procedure that has been proposed. It is that following second reading of this bill it should be referred to a special committee to be appointed for the purpose of studying it. I have on the order paper a motion, which will be called immediately after the bill has been given second reading, to establish a committee for that particular purpose. When agreement has been reached among the parties as to the personnel of that committee, it will be appointed and the bill can then be formally referred to the committee for study and report.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the house for the support which those who have participated in this debate have indicated for the measure. I believe it to be a measure of very high importance. Indeed I regard it as one of the most important bills likely to come before this present parliament. I look forward with some degree of gratification to seeing a strong committee appointed which will give this bill a very, very thourough study.

The committee, of course, will be master of its own procedure. It will, if it wishes, be entitled to call on and hear representatives of the civil service organizations and associations and to give the bill a most thorough scrutiny. I believe its importance warrants nothing short of a very thorough scrutiny. I can tell hon. members, having had some experience of scrutinizing this measure in its preparation and the study of the Heeney report that preceded it, that it is a very large subject. But in a matter of this kind the extent of the study on the part of hon. members both in the house and in the committee will be repaid, I believe, by the satisfaction they will derive from dealing with a subject of such great importance to good government in Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

MOTION FOR APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER BILL NO. C-71

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved:

That a special committee be appointed to consider Bill C-71, an act respecting the civil service of Canada, with power to send for persons, papers and records and to report from time to time;

That the committee have power to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable or necessary;

Special Committee Appointed

That the committee consist of fifteen members to be designated by the house;

That the committee be empowered to sit during the sittings of the house; and

That standing order 66 be suspended in relation thereto.

He said: Mr. Speaker, may I make only one comment? Since this motion was placed on the order paper there has been some discussion with the opposition parties, and a wish has been expressed that the committee might be somewhat larger than that contemplated in the motion, namely, 15. Fifteen members were appointed to the committee which sat last session to consider amendments to the Superannuation Act, but since it has been requested by hon. members opposite that this proposed committee should be enlarged, the government has no objection to make, and, accordingly, and if the house would agree, we might substitute "twenty one for "fifteen" in line six of the motion.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I am grateful to the minister for that suggestion. I had already prepared an amendment to the same effect. I think it would be of great assistance to those who sit on this side of the house, because a number of members have expressed not only their willingness but their desire to take part in the proceedings of this committee and they would not have been able to do so had it not been for this change. We would have been entitled to only three members at the most but, as it is now, our representation has been increased and I am sure it will be appreciated.

There is just one other comment I should like to make. I note that the motion contains a provision that the committee be empowered to sit during sittings of the house. I merely express the hope that the committee will not find it necessary to do this. I shall not give the reasons why we feel that way about it, but I am sure the government would not want the committee to sit unless it were really necessary, and in this case it would strike me that since most of the witnesses who are likely to be called will be from the service, in any event, it will not be necessary to get them from the outside and the necessity of sitting while the house is sitting may not arise. I do not wish to make an issue out of this. I simply repeat the hope that it will not be necessary for the committee to sit while the house is sitting.

Mr. Speaker: Have I the unanimous consent of the house to substitute the word "twenty one" for "fifteen" in the third paragraph?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: A consequential change should be made in the last line, which should read:

That standing orders 66 and 67 be suspended in relation thereto.

The change is necessary because standing order 67 says that no special committee may, without leave of the house, consist of more than 15 members.

These changes by unanimous consent will give effect to the arrangement made among the parties. Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Aye.

Motion as amended agreed to.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

General administration—

178. Departmental administration including a grant of $10,000 to Frontier college and the expenses of the international labour conferences, $1,373,104.

Mr. Starr: Last night, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said this as reported on page 2835 of Hansard:

When the minister got up with all his power and might to smear this poor fellow who had been trying to earn a living—

Later, he said:

The minister had to come into the house and break the law made by parliament.

Again, he said this:

—if it is your chance to earn a livelihood you can be smeared in defiance of the law by a minister of the crown sheltering under his immunity in this house.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has thus accused me of using my function in an improper way. He has used the word "smear" which is, I submit, an unparliamentary word. He has accused me of breaking the law. He has accused me of doing this behind the shield of parliamentary immunity. The fact is that he himself is hiding behind the shield of parliamentary immunity, and I intend this afternoon to deal with this matter fully, because to do anything less would be an abrogation of my responsibility both as a member of parliament and as a member of the government.

In the first place, these are all trumped-up charges in every sense of the word, as I shall endeavour to prove very fully.

Mr. Chevrier: The law is clear. It is not a trumped-up charge in that respect.

Mr. Starr: Of course, the hon. member for Laurier has his own version of the law, because it suits him best to have it, and so have his colleagues.

[Mr. Speaker.]

I would refer now to the report of debates for May, 1960. I said at that time, as reported on page 4033:

It was brought to my attention in December of 1959 that certain instructions had appeared in the official manuals of the unemployment insurance commission which would have the effect of limiting the availability of information to members of parliament whether in the provincial or federal legislatures who were seeking information on behalf of their constituents. I felt that this was an undesirable limitation which was being placed upon members of parliament in carrying out their duties, and I immediately wrote to the commission informing them of my views on this matter.

I then quoted from a letter which I had written to the unemployment insurance commission on January 20, 1960. The letter said this, in part:

I do not see how anything in section 98 could under any circumstances be construed as granting authority for a directive against giving out information to members of parliament.

If there is such a directive, I think it should be rescinded.

Mr. Chairman, the directive was rescinded. It is my recollection that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was among those who applauded that statement most enthusiastically at that time.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister permit a question at this time? If the directive to which he has just referred was rescinded, did he give any consideration to amending the act along the same line?

Mr. Starr: There was no necessity to amend the act. If the hon. member for Laurier would allow me to proceed with my statement without any interruption I shall only be too glad to answer any questions when I am finished.

I might add, Mr. Chairman, that my statement in this connection was made in answer to a question of the hon. member for Gloucester who wanted to know whether there was any restriction regarding the release of figures to members of parliament. This, of course, had been quickly followed by a supplementary question from the hon. member for Essex East who asked, as recorded at page 4003 of Hansard:

Has the Minister of Labour given any instructions to the unemployment insurance commission or to any government servant that members of parliament are not to be supplied with information that it has always been regarded as a right of the representatives of the people to have?

This question was couched in the familiar rhetoric of the hon. member for Essex East. At that time last May hon. members of the opposition were terribly concerned about the rights of members of parliament to have information. At this time, when a question is asked by a government member, they claim it is just a planted question and when a minister gives an answer he is breaking the law.

I am dwelling on these points at some length because, as I pointed out, I feel I have a right to do so in a matter involving what I consider to be a libel upon myself as a member and a minister. I feel that I have a right to make whatever explanations are necessary in order to deal with the very serious accusations which have been made. I will go a step further, Mr. Chairman, and say that if such a right is not to be accorded in such circumstances, then I cannot see how it will be possible to carry on business in this house.

I said this also at page 4033 of Hansard of May 19, as part of the context of my remarks:

> Let me repeat, Mr. Speaker, that any member of this house will be given whatever information he requests, provided that the information is available and that it is not of a confidential or privileged nature.

Mr. Benidickson: Hear, hear.

Mr. Starr: The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River says "hear, hear" and he is quite right.

I want to say that in this instance certain facts were made available by the person himself on a Canadian Broadcasting Corporation national program and were used as the basis of a broadcast. In so doing this person removed the veil of secrecy and confidence, if there was any, surrounding his employment record. In view of that, Mr. Chairman, in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Cariboo is as follows:

> Can the Minister of Labour tell the house the circumstances of Mr. Glen Exelby, who was depicted in the main role of the C.B.C. program "Close-Up" last night, and inform the house whether the national employment service is doing anything to secure employment for him?

I repeat, in view of the fact that Mr. Exelby had made most of the information available, there was no secrecy attaching to his employment record. I supplemented that record by saying that he first registered for employment at the national employment office on September 9. I went on to say:

> He had quit his previous employment as a salesman at $6,000 per year and had given the reason that there was "no future".

There is no secrecy about that. I continue:

> On November 29 he was referred as a salesman at $350 per month to Service Steel and Engineering in Hamilton.

There is no secrecy about that. He answered an advertisement put out by the C.B.C. requesting a white collar worker for a television program. There is no secrecy about that. I continue:

> Apparently he was successful in obtaining this employment and I am informed that it was remunerative to the extent of $25 per day.

There is no secrecy about that. As a matter of fact, he earned $50 a day. My reply continued:

> On February 24 the unemployment insurance commission office in Hamilton offered Mr. Exelby a position as a foreman at Frost Metal Products—

There is no secrecy about that, nor is there any secrecy about anything in the reply I made to the question asked by the hon. member for Cariboo. I further said, as recorded in Hansard of March 9, at page 2810, in answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Welland, as follows:

> Is it possible for the Minister of Labour to procure information regarding the employment record of a person registered with the national employment service if he is requested to do so by a member of parliament?
> Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I think it is evident that the hon. member for Welland refers to the reference I made yesterday in respect to Mr. Exelby.

To that, as I looked at the hon. member for Welland, who is now in his seat, he nodded agreement.

Mr. McMillan: I didn't.

Mr. Thrasher: I saw you myself.

Mr. McMillan: I would still like an answer to my question.

Mr. Thrasher: You are getting it.

Mr. Starr: The hon. member nodded agreement.

Mr. McMillan: I didn't.

Mr. Starr: I said:

> If that is so, Mr. Speaker, then I feel that if Mr. Exelby undertook of his own volition to disclose his personal affairs in great detail on a national television broadcast and in so doing created a completely false impression, it is quite proper for me to present certain facts of the same nature.

I should like to refer also to my original statement in answer to the hon. member for Cariboo which I completed by saying:

> I am very sorry that the program did not reveal these facts also—

—since they were evidently in the process of revealing all of the employment facts of this person in question.

Now, the charge of breaking the law, of course, enters the realm of the foolish and has existence only in the inflamed imagination of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, and I am sorry that he is not present at this time. But this is not the first time that a charge of this nature has been levelled. It is a favourite gambit of the hon. member for Essex East, and I do not believe we have to look any further than that for the origin of this charge. It is a charge which he made last year with relation to the administration of the unemployment insurance fund and now it has been resurrected and trotted out to do its duty once again on behalf of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. The statement which I made last May, Mr. Chairman, covers the situation fully.

Mr. Chevrier: I rise on a question of privilege. The minister asked that he not be interrupted and I have acceded to his request. He stated that he wanted to make a statement and has proceeded to do so but in the making of that statement he has now charged motives to the hon. member for Essex East and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, both of whom are away on important business.

The question of privilege I raise is that the minister complains about the fact that he has been unfairly treated and that unfair charges have been levelled against him but he is doing exactly the same thing with reference to the hon. member for Essex East, who did not raise the question, and also with reference to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who did raise the matter by way of a question on orders of the day and also in the debate. My question of privilege is that it seems to me the minister should not proceed in the manner that he complains members on this side of the house have adopted against him.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I had finished making charges, as the hon. member for Laurier wishes to describe them. However, I must point out that I sat here yesterday and had to listen to many falsehoods and charges which were made last evening.

Mr. Chevrier: They were not falsehoods any more than the statement the minister has made now.

Mr. Starr: The statement I made last May covered the situation fully. I indicated my intention at that time of making available to members of parliament and also to members of provincial legislatures information existing in the files of the unemployment insurance commission. There was not a word of objection at that time from anyone sitting on the opposition benches. That statement still stands. This is my policy, Mr. Chairman, and it has been my policy ever since.

Let me point out also that as Minister of Labour I have every right to set such a policy. I had every right in May of 1960 to say that I would make information available to members of parliament. I had every right to make such information available in answer to the question of the hon. and respected member for Cariboo on Wednesday. I also had every right to do what I did last May, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate knew very well at that time and as he knew very well last night when he was making his trumped-up charge.

I remind him and other members of the committee of subsection 5 of section 22 of the Unemployment Insurance Act. This is the section dealing with the employment service. Subsection 5 of section 22 reads as follows:

> The commission is responsible to the minister in respect of the administration of this part.

There is no question of interpretation here, Mr. Chairman, no twisting and turning such as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate indulged in last night when he attempted to interpret section 98. Section 22 gives the minister full authority in the administration of the employment service and the information supplied to the house was information solely and completely relating to employment, over which the minister has full authority.

As a matter of fact, the gentleman in question was not registered for benefits because his salary in his former job was above the insurable ceiling. The information in question is information that is given out to employers every day right across this country. Does anyone think you can operate an employment service and refer claimants to jobs without telling the employer where they last worked, how much they earned and so on? It is also information which had already been made known through the television screens of the nation but in a form that was far from complete.

Why are hon. members objecting to setting the record straight? The answer to that is quite obvious. They do not want the record to be set straight. The hon. member for Essex East suggested today that an injustice had been done to the gentleman in question. Let me assure him that nothing was further from my mind. The only injustice done has been that hon. members of the opposition have sought to make a political football of the gentleman in question, and nobody deplores these tactics more than I do.

I put certain facts on the record because I thought that as a matter of public interest they should go on the record. There was no intention of injuring any person. It was a matter of setting the record straight and that is all.

Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that if the facts had been fully presented on the television program to which I have referred it would not have been necessary to present the full facts in this chamber. However, once a picture had been presented and that picture was incomplete it became a duty to present a full picture, and this was done. To say that there was anything wrong in this is, I submit, just sniveling nonsense.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister said he would answer questions after he sat down and I did not want to interrupt him because of his request. I would ask the minister what distinction he makes between the information which he divulged to the house in connection with this matter and information which might be divulged to a member of parliament concerning the income tax return of an individual?

Mr. Starr: There is a great deal of difference. I want to point out again to the hon. member for Laurier what I said on May 19, 1960, as reported on page 4033 of Hansard. I want to repeat it.

Mr. Chevrier: I would appreciate an answer to the question.

Mr. Starr: There is a great deal of difference in this particular case. I said then:

> . . . any member of this house will be given whatever information he requests, provided that the information is available and that it is not of a confidential or privileged nature.

I say that the difference in this particular case is that the gentleman in question revealed his employment picture of his own volition over the television system of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and that since he did that and made public his employment record there was no secrecy involved in setting the record straight and giving the full picture with regard to his employment record.

Mr. Chevrier: I thank the minister for that reply but it leads me to this question. Once the veil of secrecy has been lifted in regard to a matter of this kind, even though it concerns the income tax return of an individual, does the minister say that a matter of that nature should be revealed to a member of parliament or to anybody else?

Mr. Starr: I think that is putting the question on an altogether different basis. The two situations have nothing in common. If the employment record, as I pointed out, is not confidential or privileged, it can be revealed. If it is, then it cannot. In this particular instance, the veil of secrecy was lifted by the individual himself.

Mr. Chevrier: I will not be long in dealing with this matter but there are one or two questions to which I should like the minister to reply. Do I understand the minister correctly, if an individual lifts the veil of secrecy on a matter such as that to which he has referred—I am putting aside for the moment the income tax return—then, the minister has every right, notwithstanding section 98, to give that information publicly?

Mr. Starr: Well, in so far as an employment record is concerned there is not that same sense of secrecy at all because employers right across this country have access to information in employees' records. It is the only basis upon which many of them are prepared to hire people. There is not that same sense of secrecy or confidential nature as there may be in any other matter. The matter of an employment record is not secret to that same extent.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister has made a statement about giving it to an employer. Well, giving it to an employer is one thing, but giving it publicly is an entirely different thing and it is contrary to section 98.

I come back to the original question: Does the minister take the view that in the statement which he made he was not in contravention of section 98?

Mr. Starr: Yes. There is nothing in my statement of March 8 regarding the employment record of the man in question that is a contravention in any shape or form.

Mr. Chevrier: One last question: Is the minister now going to make public the personal details of an applicant for unemployment benefits?

Mr. Starr: That depends on the circumstances of each case.

Mr. McMillan: I should like to ask the minister if he would be willing to make available to me or any other hon. member of the committee the information he made available to the hon. member for Cariboo concerning an applicant registered in the national employment service?

Mr. Starr: The hon. member has access, by virtue of the rescinding of a directive in respect of these matters, to any information that is available at a local office.

Mr. Henderson: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say that I was the gentleman who asked the question. I saw the film and I was not altogether satisfied. My wife was awake all night because she was crying most of the night about the sobsister who had been on that film. I said, "I will find out in the morning when I go to parliament whether or not this is genuine." This fellow should have had a job with D. W. Griffith, and she could have worked for those two actresses we saw on Sunday. She was just as good a sobsister.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask one further question? In answer to a question I put to the minister as to a representative of the national employment service taking part in the program, he said he did not know. Has the minister inquired and can he tell the committee whether he has ascertained the facts?

Mr. Starr: Yes, I have made inquiries and the officials of the national employment service office in Hamilton inform me that they saw no script and knew nothing of what was going to be in the script.

Mr. Pitman: If the hon. member wishes to ask a question, I shall yield the floor to him.

Mr. Macdonnell: I should like to ask a question of the hon. member for Laurier, and it is this: It seems to me we have to take a common sense view of this case as put by the hon. member for Cariboo a moment ago. We are really ignoring the important effects of what was done. As a result of what took place the other night, a very large number of people in this country, beginning with the wife of the hon. member for Cariboo, have been distressed beyond words. I think a disservice has been done to the whole situation. It so happens that I have a daughter who is a social worker and I know how deeply these people are affected by the distressing cases that come before them.

In reviewing what has happened we have to have common sense. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate to whom I usually listen with great respect, was away below his usual level the other night. I wish he were here today because he is the kind of man who, when he is wrong, will say so. As I say, he was away below his usual level in sneering at the minister. He almost went so far as to say that we on this side were not sympathetic to the unemployed.

In so far as disclosing information is concerned, surely what happened was that Exelby by going on the air, created a situation in which, in the interests of truth and of the facts of life the minister almost had to come to this house and state the truth. I gravely question the judgment of the C.B.C. in this case. When the hon. member accuses the minister of behaving improperly, he seems to me to be ignoring the common sense view. If there was—even the slightest technical irregularity—and apparently there was not, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate appeared to suggest that the minister should have communicated with the board instead of with the representative in Hamilton. Does anyone suggest that if the minister had communicated with the board he would not have secured the information?

Further, let me say a word on the legal aspects of this matter. In law, there are two sides to a question; there is equity as well as law. I suggest that if there is the slightest technical irregularity from the point of view of a breach of the law, which I doubt, from the point of view of equity what the minister did was justified over and over and over again.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want to be drawn into a debate on this matter, and I do not intend to be. However, I am sure the hon. member for Greenwood would not object if I did make just one or two comments on what he has said.

In the first place, I do not believe anybody will disagree with the statement that many people were distressed by what they saw and what they heard. I also want to add that many people were distressed by what the minister said in the house.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Chevrier: Just a moment; I hope I will be allowed to say what I intend to say. I am not charging the minister with having made a statement that did not come from the officers of the unemployment insurance. I think what the minister did was to give the house the information which he received from his own officers. On that point, I do not believe there can be any doubt; that is not charging any insincerity to the minister.

What I do say is this, sir. If it was distressing to hear that one story it was equally distressing to hear the other from the minister and because of this event, if any other occasion arises, not necessarily on television but in some other medium such as the press, the minister may get up and give information which is of a confidential nature, and whether it be on an equitable or on a legal basis will make absolutely no difference. The point is this: Was it legal and was it authorized under section 98 or was it not? The contention we are making is that it was not authorized.

I know what the hon. member for Greenwood would say about an infraction of the law if he were sitting on this side of the chamber. I clearly remember one occasion when the minister of justice in another administration was charged with having broken the law because he had not complied with one section of an act having to do with the administration of a board or commission which came within his jurisdiction.

There was no end of attack on the minister of justice at that time because he had broken the law. There is no doubt that there has been an infraction of the law in this case. It will not serve the purpose for the hon. member for Greenwood to say that although the law has been broken, in equity this is the way in which it should be treated. It will be for parliament to decide that matter and for others as well.

Let me make one final point. The hon. member for Greenwood said that it was important that the truth be told. I would not for one moment stand here and say that the minister has not told the truth. The point is that the person in question, namely, Exelby, has denied at least one if not two of the statements to a reputable newspaper and has said that the statement made by the minister as given to him by officers of his department is untrue. I therefore say to the hon. member for Greenwood that the truth has not been established. It may well be that some of the statements made to the press by Exelby were not accurate. I simply wanted to rise not so the Minister of Labour will think that I am accusing him but rather to say that I realize that he gave information that came from his own officers; and I repeat, whether in equity or whether in law, it was in breach of the statute and should not be allowed.

Mr. Benidickson: Let us clear up the matter in the committee on industrial relations.

Mr. Speakman: May I put a question to the hon. member.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Peterborough has the floor.

Mr. Pitman: I was hoping to begin my remarks on the estimates of the Department of Labour by offering congratulations to the national employment service, and I still wish to do so. I have a good deal to do with officials of the national employment service. I have found them to be most kindly and most effective in their work. One of the things about which I have been most happy is the fact that employees of the national employment service have not begun to act as they did back in the thirties when there was large scale unemployment and to treat workers who came to them with an air of superiority. I have had much experience with the operations of the employment service and I think it is something for which the Minister of Labour can be congratulated.

However, this is the particular problem which I see in this whole situation before us. I would not go as far as to say that the minister has broken the law. However, I would say that he has committed an indiscretion. He has lowered public opinion across this nation of the national employment service employee. I wonder whether people who go into these offices are not going to be rather concerned about giving personal information to these employees, fearing lest the facts disclosed may be made public on the floor of the house, through newspapers or any other medium. I think we have reached the nub of this whole problem. I congratulate the Minister of Labour on the fact that he changed the directive which would not have allowed members of parliament to obtain information. Surely, members of parliament, when going to national employment service employees and asking for information, regard that information as confidential; and surely people at the local national employment service offices in giving information are not going to expect that their member is going to march into that office, find out some pertinent information and then spread it across the local press. If I believed that, I think members of parliament would go into the national employment service offices on a number of occasions which would embarrass this government. The tragedy of this matter is not that what Mr. Exelby said in front of the television camera was evidently or seemingly untrue. The tragedy is that it has brought disrepute on people who are suffering. If the C.B.C. had looked far enough, I am sure they could have found other people.

An hon. Member: Why did they not do so?

Mr. Pitman: I am sorry but I have nothing to do with the C.B.C. I would also suggest that the C.B.C. should bear the brunt of this particular criticism. Perhaps at the same time as I say that I should say that we in a sense have created the situation because the unemployed have a fierce pride. They went through the forties and the fifties believing that unemployment would never come to them, that they were living in a democratic state in an economy that would never let them down, that unemployment insurance would see them through. They do not want to go in front of television cameras except, evidently, people like Mr. Exelby.

I know that we have a local board which tries to find the facts about unemployed families, to get the facts from people who are unemployed. What happens? They could not find one single person who would open his mouth. I have heard people say "Where are your unemployed?" We do not see line-ups of unemployed on the street. No, they are not on the street. They believe that the day of soup kitchens and line-ups by reason of unemployment are over. This government gave them reason to believe that they were over in the election campaign of 1957 and 1958.

No, we do not have to blame the national employment service. That was not the reason why the statement was made. We have a grave situation for the national employment service. I say that the Minister of Labour went much farther than was necessary. He was asked about the circumstances of Mr. Exelby. The circumstances had nothing to do with what Mr. Exelby said to his former employer when he left the service of that employer, when he said there was no future in this particular line of work as advertising agent or whatever it was; that is the real tragedy.

This is what I am wondering about. We are entering into an era of more and more government concern or more and more government planning. This will depend upon more and more information being given by individuals and corporations. Are we going to lose all concern for the rights of people who give information that can be passed on to others who need that information, such as the record of an employee given to a future employer? Are we not going to be in a position where people will be afraid to give information because of what may appear the next day on television or in the newspapers? Have we lost all interest in and all concern for the individual rights of people in this nation? Are we becoming so thin skinned as a government that we cannot now see anything on television without concern?

Are we going to have people standing up complaining every time there is a C.B.C. play about fishermen? Are we going to have the Minister of Fisheries stand up and tell us that because the hold was only half full it does not really give the picture of fishing on the west coast? Are we going to have this continual defence of everything coming out of television and through the public press? Are we going to have a full scale investigation of individuals who put on interviews for the C.B.C.? Are our skins getting so thin as that? Or is it the thought that parliament is so great that we are overlooked and we now have to defend, whether it is television broadcasts or newspaper reports.

An hon. Member: We want to get the truth.

Mr. Pitman: In answer to the hon. member may I say yes, we want the truth. But do you ever get the full truth?

An hon. Member: From the press.

Mr. Pitman: Is not any interpretation only a partial picture from the point of view of that person who makes it? Can you give the history of the employment record of every single person who may be brought before a television camera? I would be the first to admit that that particular incident on the C.B.C. the other night was an unfortunate incident. The tragedy is that it brought disrepute on the unemployed and led people to believe that this was the picture of the unemployed, given by a man who evidently does not have too great a concern for the truth. That is the tragedy; but there is nothing on television or in the newspapers which is the whole truth and nothing but the truth. To that extent I think we have to recognize that we do not live in a perfect world.

Mr. Henderson: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, does not the hon. member think it would be awfully easy if they just put on television—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I will have to ask the hon. member for Cariboo to resume his seat. That is not a point of order.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, I should be very glad to answer the hon. member for Cariboo if he wishes to ask me a question. I am concerned with the truth, and I think all hon. gentlemen on this side of the chamber are concerned with the truth. At the present moment I should say that the truth has been dealt a greater blow through people in this country thinking this is the extent to which the C.B.C. concerns itself with the truth, and to the extent to which the unemployed are led to prevaricate for the sake of—

Mr. Henderson: Last year there was a case in which the woman concerned had to admit it was all false. That was just a year ago. Don't you think—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I would remind the hon. member that we are on the estimates of the Department of Labour and we are not concerned with broadcasting.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, I suggest to the hon. member for Cariboo that his questions would be better directed to the Minister of National Revenue, because I have nothing to do with these matters. Perhaps we could widen the area of discussion in regard to the estimates of the Department of Labour.

Mr. Henderson: I will talk to you outside.

Mr. Pitman: I think the Department of Labour is going to be one of the most difficult departments in the government with which to concern oneself in the years to come. Mr. James S. Band, deputy minister of welfare for the province of Ontario has suggested that in the next decade automation is going to replace four out of five industrial workers. We do not seem to be able to do anything about our problem of seasonal employment. We realize that every four years we have a period of cyclical unemployment and every time this gets worse. There is a greater number of unemployed after each of these depressions and recessions, and in fact we never really fully recover from them.

Looking at the estimates of the Department of Labour I cannot see that this department is really facing up to this situation. As hon. members of the official opposition have suggested, this government has not recognized it as a national emergency. I think what we need in this country is a full realization that this is our No. 1 problem. I think we should have a meeting or conference, something on the scale of the Gordon commission, to look at this problem facing our nation and to ascertain what the unemployment situation is going to be over the next ten or 20 years. It should not be just an economic survey but a full scale inquiry concerned with the problem of unemployment. I realize that other surveys are going on, but surely we could project our plans and commitments over the next five or ten years and give this government or whatever government is in power some idea of what is necessary to solve the problem.

Before we can do anything, surely we have to recognize what is going to develop in this country over the next five or ten years. I am convinced that winter works programs, which were a drop in the bucket last year and are this year two drops in the bucket, are not going to be a solution to this problem. The minister suggested that 200,000 jobs were provided by the winter works program, but in one particular constituency, my own, these jobs were on a six weeks' basis. They tried to pass the jobs around to as many people as possible. Does the figure of 200,000 people employed on winter works programs include those people who had just six weeks' work? If that is the basis on which this number was computed, perhaps that is an area where we should have an actual break-down in the number of jobs, the number of people who tok those jobs and the length of time for which they were employed.

Mr. Thrasher: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the minister said in the house that this information would be made available to hon. members.

Mr. Pitman: Thank you very much. I must have missed that. As I say, to consider work on the winter works program is, I think, completely irrelevant. Too often it was not work that had to be done. There is also confusion here which I think is very important affecting the Department of Labour. That is the confusion between work and welfare. Until we in this country gain some respect for work and labour I am afraid we are never going to be able to compete with other countries in the world in our development. One of the things I have come to dislike about the winter works program is the fact that too many jobs are being carried out. In other words, we have the men digging somewhere when that work could be done by a bulldozer with one man. We employ ten men with picks and shovels simply because that way we will employ an extra nine men rather than put them on the welfare lists. Perhaps that is a good thing. In other ways it is not a good thing because I do not think any man has much respect for the service he is giving to his community when he knows he is being employed simply because the government does not want to give him a hand-out in some other way.

This is not the answer to the kind of economic problems we are going to have over the next five or ten years. Even the winter works projects were restrictive. I know one community which wanted to acquire an area for industrial redevelopment. This was not allowed. This was the kind of job which could have been done and in connection with which men could have been employed. But the program was too restrictive and as a result the project was not allowed under the winter works program.

Also, I think that leaving it to the municipalities is not the way to deal with this problem. The municipalities are overburdened with their own problems and the costs of overseeing the whole project are far too great for them. The responsibility should not be left to them.

I should now like to turn to another phase of the estimates of the Department of Labour. I refer to the retraining scheme brought in last session. I supported this retraining scheme with considerable enthusiasm at the time the legislation was brought in. However, I must say that my enthusiasm has been dampened over the last few weeks because I have failed to see anything very dynamic being done in the scheme.

I should like to repeat the words of the Minister of Labour quoted in a news release put out by his department. The minister said:

> We are now in a period when we can no longer afford the luxuries of indifferent preparation and use of our manpower resources.
> Local school boards and departments of education find it difficult to work adequately in the light of national needs. Business and industry work within their own interests. Without some co-ordinated planning and effort beyond what can be given by ten different school systems considerable confusion will probably be our lot.

Is not that exactly what we have done? The federal government has taken no more responsibility in this regard than simply handing money to the provinces, who in turn have handed it to the municipalities.

What kind of co-ordination do we have on that basis? The minister went on to say:

> We are in competition with nations of the world where the development of human resources is planned on a broad scale. In these countries the development of manpower potential is given a high priority and technical and vocational training is a continuing process from school through years of employment.

That is the very point. There is no national co-ordination. We do not know where we are going. When a group of unemployed people desire a retraining scheme—and I congratulate them for their enthusiasm—the local municipalities have to deal with the matter. They are interested in the program, but they are also overburdened with their own problems. This is no help to a group of people who have been working hard in one job and want to work hard in another.

Then there is this point. How do the municipalities know what are the national needs? They simply look for something which seems to fit, and you have municipalities training welders when there are already welders on the streets looking for work. If for the next ten years the municipalities were given statistics of the needs, we would have a regulated system. At the moment there are completely unregulated programs going on in little areas—none of which are going in any particular direction with any particular knowledge of what they are doing. In other words, I suggest that we are going simultaneously in a great many directions, spending a great deal of money and, consequently, not getting anywhere.

An example of the type of thing we have been doing is illustrated in Cornwall. I hope the hon. member for Stormont will correct me if I am wrong about this. They are there giving courses in barbering and meat-cutting to a limited number of people. In Brantford, 75 people are taking part in a retraining program in connection with radio and technical courses. I believe there are four courses. One course is for radio electronics and I believe another is for stenographic services.

They have no real knowledge of what they are doing. That is the trouble with this whole matter; there is confusion among the people who are to be retrained in these little municipal areas all over the country. These people will go out and find they cannot even get a job with the new skill they have acquired because this skill is already possessed by thousands of people who are on the labour market. Then there is also the question that automation has taken over in that particular job.

I think this problem has to be seriously considered. It has been said that education is a provincial matter. Yes, education is a provincial matter, but training is not education.

[Mr. Pitman.]

There is a difference between training and education. Training welders has very little to do with culture, very little to do with language and certainly nothing to do with religion. This is an area where a national program should be effected in terms of its organization. Who should be organizing it? Probably the mayor of the city. He, and people like him will be stuck with trying to work this training plan for the unemployed.

It may be an ad hoc solution, but is it a national solution? I do not think so. These people have not the time, and they have no idea what direction they should take. This is one field where you should have specialists, where people who have a real knowledge of the problem should move into the area and relate the needs of those to be trained to the needs of the nation as a whole and then set up a scheme adaptable to those requirements. Nothing of the sort envisaged by the present government is going to provide a solution of that kind. In any event, such a project will cost a great deal of money, and some are going to ask: is it worth it? May I read something written by Lord Beveridge which seems to me to be relevant?

> To submit to unemployment or slums or want, to let children go hungry or the sick unattended for fear of increasing the internal national debt is to lose all sense of values.

I certainly agree with that comment. What are the solutions? Perhaps I might also read the following:

> —The state is obliged in as great a measure as possible to provide employment through public works which are useful to the community, and to facilitate, through advice and in other ways, the hiring of those who seek work.

That was a quotation from Pope Pius XII. What is the cost of unemployment? We shall be paying this cost, not so much now as in five or ten years from now. A Catholic service bureau in the Peterborough constituency accomplished a considerable piece of work when it undertook a survey of so-called "down and out" people. The bureau discovered that the great majority of these people had lost their jobs at the age of 35, or 40, and had never really got back into society. Instead they had become a burden to the community and dependent upon the social services provided.

What about the cost to business? We know that the rate of business failures has reached a level not known in the last 20 years. The rate of failure was 18 per cent higher than in January of last year. Doctors find their bills are not paid; teachers find their classes are crowded with people who have no hope of getting jobs and who are cluttering up the education system.

We are still mesmerized by the idea of a welfare state. It is ironic, but we still think that welfare is the answer and we are rushing to try to establish a welfare state at a time when the welfare state is to a large extent outmoded and ineffective in the twentieth century. I am not suggesting that payments now being made should be discontinued, but we have to plan so as to reach a stage where such payments will not be necessary. Let us take the present trends to a final conclusion; we shall find one quarter of the population working and paying unemployment insurance and three quarters of the population collecting it, on the basis of all that is being said about the changing labour markets today. This is the picture, and it is no use talking about socialism and free enterprise, because neither of those words has any reference to realities in Canada today.

We are still mouthing words which have absolutely no connotation.

When the Leader of the Opposition says we can work only in a free enterprise economic structure, that means nothing. We have not got a free enterprise system. No one wants socialism, either. What we do want is an intelligently planned economy which would make proper provision for the needs of our citizens.

I am surprised that so many references have been made recently to President Kennedy. I am surprised at all this enthusiasm for leftwing thinking. The Conservatives here usually regard themselves as being to the political right, but in the United States Mr. Kennedy is now being accused of being in the hands of labour. He is criticized as being too greatly under the influence of whitecollar socialists from Harvard. That is the sort of thing they are saying about Kennedy now.

Mr. Benidickson: Liberal, not socialist.

Mr. Pitman: I am only quoting from the news release I saw. In fact, Mr. Kennedy has congratulated labour on its ethical code and has suggested that business could take a leaf out of labour's book in this respect. Though it is strange to see the government rushing into the arms of Mr. Kennedy it is not without historical precedent, because in the thirties when Mr. Roosevelt was introducing certain reforms Mr. Bennett suddenly became very concerned about what was happening south of the border and tried as best he could to copy what Mr. Roosevelt had done, though he forgot about the B.N.A. Act in the process. So what we have seen in the last day or two is not unhistorical.

I suggest, however, that there is a great difference between what Kennedy is doing and what we are doing here. Even though we may have taken some of the steps Kennedy is taking, those steps, however well intentioned, solve nothing because we never carry them out with imagination, or feeling, or enthusiasm. We simply go through the motions, mouth a few phrases and take a few faltering steps. Our efforts to put on a bold front are not convincing, and I am afraid that the kind of leadership being provided today by Mr. Kennedy is not the kind of leadership we are getting here in Canada.

Until new concepts have been adopted it is idle to look for any real change in the estimates of the Department of Labour.

Mr. Macdonnell: Perhaps I may intervene to comment briefly on what was said earlier by the hon. member for Laurier. If I remember rightly, the hon. gentleman quoted me as saying, in relation to what the minister had said, "Although the law has been breached—" and so on. What I intended to say, and what I think I said was: "Even if the law has been breached in some narrow, technical way—". Of course, the minister did not think it had been breached at all.

Progress reported.

LOTTERY

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADIAN LOTTERY COMMISSION

Mr. L. J. Pigeon moved the second reading of Bill No. C-18, to provide for a Canadian lottery.

He said:

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, in introducing this bill to the house, I cannot help remembering the many remarks made to me since I first mentioned my intention to have lotteries made legal in Canada.

Like my colleagues, I appreciate that, according to the letter and spirit of the Criminal Code we now have in Canada, it is illegal to organize, promote or allow lotteries. It is not my intention to recommend any infringement of the law. On the contrary, it is by submission to the law that we can best serve our political and parliamentary institutions. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is precisely because I am a staunch upholder of the law that I am moving this bill to have certain lotteries legalized.

This project first came to my mind when I was given a brief by the Joliette local of the national syndicates in 1958, recommending the establishment of a national lottery.

I have also read in the press that the international brotherhoods of railway employees have recommended a government lottery. The purpose of this bill is to provide for the establishment and operation of a Canadian lottery and sweepstakes. The bill provides that the governor in council shall appoint ten members of parliament to serve without pay as a commission; the commission would use the staff, property and facilities of the Canadian government and crown corporations to carry out its operations. After allowance for prizes, profits are apportioned among family allowance recipients and so on.

And then you could add to this bill—this is a matter of detail in case a lottery should become legal in Canada and a national lottery was established—that tickets could be sold through post offices, "caisses populaires" or banks.

As you all know, some time ago a large daily newspaper in Quebec, that is La Presse, investigated the matter and found that 98,780 people were in favour of a provincial lottery and 149 were against it. That was an unprecedented success.

I am sure that if La Presse had carried out such an investigation to find out whether the public was in favour of a national lottery, their success would also have been an unprecedented one.

La Presse certainly deserves to be congratulated for calling the public's attention to the matter, while making it possible to debate the matter and find out how it rates with public opinion.

I shall not go over all the arguments that were brought forth again and again in favour of or against a national lottery. I am fully aware that you know them as well as I do. I only want to point out that at one time lotteries were allowed in Canada and that the people who bought tickets then were not any more venturesome or reckless than the people today. There were quite a few lotteries, such as the people's lottery, the province of Quebec lottery, the popular lottery, the Mount Royal lottery, and all those lotteries paid thousands of dollars to the lucky winners, while the promoters collected thousands of dollars, generally used for charitable purposes.

I am not suggesting that the authorities of the time were wanting in foresight when they decided to prohibit lotteries in this country; nor am I suggesting that they were prompted by petty interests that had nothing to do with the lotteries themselves; I shall merely point out that the situation has changed since then.

Today, lotteries are illegal. And what happens? Tell me frankly. Is there any member in this house who has not been offered at some time or other lottery tickets from other countries? I shall not ask those who have bought tickets to rise, but you know as well as I do that this country is full of agents for foreign lotteries who sell millions of dollars worth of tickets annually and who drain our money out of the country. And yet hardly a month goes by without the papers reporting that Mr. So-and-so, perhaps the brother's father or Miss So-and-so won the grand prize in the Irish sweepstakes or the Navy lottery. In every case it is our dollars that are going out of the country. In our estimation about $90 million in Canadian money go to foreign countries every year. In my opinion, we must put a stop to that bleeding of the Canadian people's money to the profit of other countries.

Our people are neither more evil nor more timid than others, and they are as fascinated by games of chance as the people of France, the United States or South America.

Our people like to risk a few cents, even a few dollars, and that is so much money going out of Canada.

Don't you worry, our laws will never prevent our people from betting. They will bet on horses, boxers, hockey games and baseball games. There are even some who bet on federal elections.

The bill I have the honour to introduce in the house is not designed to encourage vice or make people spend. Such an idea is very far from my mind. This bill is based to some extent on the desire of our people, as elsewhere in the world, to bet on things that are particularly unpredictable, but where the element of chance can be reduced through serious study.

Between you and me, a bet is always a bet, and those who indulge in that game must be prepared to lose as well as to win.

Lotteries are the expression of that instinct people have of taking a chance, and often the risk is very slim in proportion to what it may yield.

In allowing the organization of national lotteries in Canada, for certain charitable or social purposes, or as mentioned in this bill to increase family allowances, the Canadian parliament would, at the same time, keep in Canada those thousands of dollars now going abroad, which would represent an important factor in our economy.

However, there is one thing we should not overlook. In order to be successful and efficient, a real lottery should cover the whole country. In fact, if the federal parliament decided to pass legislation to allow the provinces to organize lotteries within their territory, we would then be faced with a terrible problem of displacement of funds.

Just imagine for a moment that Quebec and Ontario should organize lotteries, in order to help hospitals or for other charitable purposes, while other provinces would not. What would happen? You know as well as I do, Mr. Speaker, that people of those provinces having no lotteries would hasten to buy tickets in provinces where lotteries exist and you would then have, within the country, important movements of funds, which might jeopardize the financial position of provinces having no lotteries. Such a situation would hardly be desirable.

However, this does not mean I am opposed to provincial lotteries.

Therefore, I believe that if the bill I have the honour to introduce is adopted—and I do hope it will be, naturally—I think the federal parliament will have to arrange for a huge national lottery to be held in order that all Canadians, from coast to coast, may have the opportunity of taking part in it. With one stone, we could kill two birds. We could help finance the charitable organizations selected, or attain such other purpose as may have been designated. Participating Canadians might have a chance to get the lucky ticket.

Here are, in a few words, Mr. Speaker, some of the reasons which prompted me to submit this bill. I wish we could all study it in the same spirit and with the same open mind.

I would also be grateful to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Bell) if he would, in the course of this debate, let us know what he thinks of this bill and the establishment of national lotteries in Canada.

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the two hon. members who have placed on the order paper resolutions to allow lotteries in Canada. I refer to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) whose bill is now before the house, and the hon. member for Mackenzie River (Mr. Hardie), who is unfortunately kept home by sickness.

Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to what the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm had to say. One can disagree with the views expressed by the hon. member in connection with the bill introduced today, but that is not the point. At this stage of the second reading of the bill, it is the principle of the legislation that should be discussed. And it is in that light that I want to talk briefly about the present bill.

The assertion of the hon. member that wagering and betting are here to stay cannot be denied. According to the hon. member, bets are taken even on federal election results. I would add that it is also the case with provincial election results. Perhaps the hon. member could have said more about this.

Mr. Speaker, like many other members of this house who are interested in this matter I am thinking of all the things that are needed in Canada, particularly in the provinces, and of the steps that could be taken to bring about new sources of revenues. Speaking of lotteries, one can admit nowadays that no genuine principle stands in the way of a lottery. I will even go a little further. Reference is made to an amendment to section 179 of the Criminal Code. That section to all practical purposes is inoperative at this time. Why then should we delude ourselves? Why not face the problem?

If I remember correctly, one of our learned professors of political economy, Mr. Edouard Montpetit, told us one day during a lesson on public economy: "The best law in the world becomes inoperative if it is not based on the psychology of the masses". It is quite clear that today—and we should be fair enough to admit it—we ourselves take a hand in foreign sweepstakes, whether they be Irish or English, in defiance of section 197 of the Criminal Code.

In these circumstances, I think we must be realistic and consider that question on the basis of our needs.

My hon. friend from Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm mentioned the poll initiated recently by the newspaper La Presse in the province of Quebec. It is quite revealing that close to 100,000 people who gave their name and address, expressed their wish to see a lottery organized in Quebec. That brings up a very important consideration. I see many problems at this time in the establishment of a federal lottery. We must have regard for the views expressed by some provinces which do not seem prepared to agree. Well, in Quebec, we are ready and I do not see why an amendment to the Criminal Code could not be introduced permitting the establishment of a lottery in order to give effect to the wish expressed by the people of the province of Quebec.

In answer to a question I addressed him recently, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) replied that as a matter of fact, he had exchanged unofficial communications with some premiers on the matter of a lottery. On the other hand, the premier of Quebec stated himself recently that he had talked the question over with the Minister of Justice.

If Quebec taxpayers are in favour of this idea, if the legislature of the province of Quebec is in favour of a lottery, I trust that the premier of Quebec will make a formal request for it to the federal government.

During the discussion on the Canadian bill of rights, several hon. members would have liked to have a national bill of rights, and we recall that the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) then said: "For our part, we are ready. There are certain provinces which apparently are not ready yet. So, we will take the lead."

And, to go one better, at the recent federal-provincial conference the Prime Minister said to the premiers: "You will now have the task of finding your income sources in your respective provinces."

Consequently, this is a way to enable the people of Quebec to get organized, a way to meet their wishes and their needs.

Since we have to decide at this stage on the principle of lotteries, I trust that all hon. members will wish to make known the assent of this house. This is a popular question in Canada today.

May I point out to my hon. friends that many newspapers report the reactions of many Canadians to the effect that there is nothing more deplorable than certain bills submitted to this house being talked out without any decision being arrived at.

On this question of lottery, why should we not take our responsibilities, why should we not adopt today the principle of the bill introduced by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm?

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

I do not wish to unduly lengthen this speech but in conclusion, I simply want to read a few lines from an item that appeared in La Presse of February 15, following a public poll held in the province of Quebec. The article reads as follows:

> Quebec is in favour of a lottery and that is something that the people's representatives, whether they sit on municipal councils, in the provincial legislature or in the House of Commons, must or should realize. Since that poll enabled the taxpayers to enlighten their representatives, they in turn, are bound to inform their governments and bring the necessary pressure to bear upon them.
> Is there any need to spell it out? That question is beyond all party politics.

Mr. Speaker, before concluding my remarks, I wish to say that, to a certain extent, the members are bound by the wish or will of the taxpayers when it is clearly indicated.

Well, those of us particularly who are from Quebec, have received a very clear mandate to try to obtain, through our pressures and requests, that section 179 of the Criminal Code be amended, in order to allow the establishment of a lottery. That is what we are doing today, that is what I, for one, am doing, and what I intend to do whenever the opportunity arises. And I hope, as I said a moment ago, that before long the province of Quebec, through the action of its legislature, will submit to the government of Canada an official request indicating the wish and will of the province of Quebec to establish a lottery in that province.

(Text):

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): About 230 years ago an English writer, Henry Fielding, turned out a verse that expressed some opinion on lotteries and it might be well to lead off by reading that verse:

> A lottery is a taxation
> Upon all the fools in creation;
> And heaven be praised
> It is easily raised.
> Credulity's always in fashion
> For folly's a fund,
> Will never lose ground,
> While fools are so rife in the nation.

This is a most interesting bill that the hon. member has introduced. I think perhaps the most intriguing part of it is that it would tend to encourage something which we had on a much larger scale in Toronto in the thirties when everyone there was much exercised about the baby derby. There were prizes put up by a well known Torontonian which led to a test amongst the mothers to see who could have the most children in so many years. This was a rather outrageous situation but it led to giving the popular press a great deal of scope for publicity and we certainly learned a lot about the problems of mothers who have children on such a regular basis.

The purpose of this bill would really be to provide funds for those parents who had large families—

Mr. Pigeon: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Fisher: Yes.

Mr. Pigeon: Is the hon. member in favour of this bill at this point?

Mr. Fisher: I am going to give the subject fairly complete coverage and I will tell the hon. member where I stand. It seems to me that the purpose to which the lottery would be dedicated is such a highly specialized one that I feel I could be much more sympathetic to the bill the hon. member introduced last year. As he will remember, that bill was linked more directly with charitable purposes. In so far as lotteries are concerned, it seems to me any lottery is a form of gambling. The participants pay money for the privilege of trying for prizes which are given on the basis of chance. There is no skill or cleverness required. Such sweepstakes are based completely on chance.

A prime example of this practice right across the country is the game of bingo. There are all kinds of games going on at the present time that are very much like this game of chance. I think everybody in the House of Commons knows that one is continually being solicited to buy tickets for hockey pools, football pools, the Irish sweepstakes and the very well known Quebec sweepstakes. The point of my remarks is that gambling seems to be inherent in the human nature. There was an article in the Montreal press the other day based upon the theory that the four men who had been murdered in recent weeks were tied up with the numbers game racket. I believe that is some form of lottery.

Surely there is not an hon. member who has not some organization in his home town that is dunning him to buy a ticket for something like an afghan, a bond or a car. The prevalence of these things in the world today is tremendous. If, as Fielding said, lottery is a taxation upon all the fools in creation, then Canada is loaded with fools. The whole question seems to be involved in the approach the hon. member is taking and I think, myself, that in so far as the problem of football pools is concerned—which seems to be involved in the negotiations between Mr. Lesage and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton)—we should put this on some kind of legal basis and get the most out of it.

The question as to whether it should be put on a legal basis is the real crux of the matter. We can look to examples in other democracies that have a longer tradition than our own. At the present time in Great Britain the equivalent of the Minister of Finance has his own field of lottery because if you buy government bonds you are entitled to participate in a draw and if the serial number of your bond is drawn you may earn a substantial sum of money as well as invest in the nation. Ever since 1934 Sweden has had a semi-official lottery and the proceeds are used to support certain charitable institutions. In Britain itself there are the football pools which are an example of a lottery. Some of us think there is an element or a modicum of skill in it, although I think it is capable of exaggeration. When I was in England for several years I enjoyed playing the football pools. I looked forward to the regular custom early in the week of filling out my chart. I do not feel it harmed me or any of the millions of the people in Britain who take part in these particular football pools.

The main reason for the banning of the old lotteries, especially in England in 1823, was the triumph of puritan middle class morality. The other factor that was involved was that legalized forms of gambling of another kind connected with dog racing or horse racing came into effect and the jockey clubs have always been the bitter enemies of the lotteries because they siphoned off a great deal of their take. I have always been amused by the fact that horsemen improving the breed for racing purposes must depend so much upon the gambling revenue that comes in from the tote machines, the pari-mutuel or whatever the system may be. There is nothing wrong with this, and it has been established as a legal form of gambling in Canada for many years. What is the difference between gambling on a horse and buying a ticket on a lottery? Apparently it is the modicum of skill that is involved. I have not met so many successful horseplayers who were satisfied with their skill that one could be really sure on this point. This seems to be the only distinguishing mark we can make between buying a lottery ticket and taking a flyer on a horse.

Here again the British are much more liberal and open about this. It is possible to get in touch with a bookie very easily at the racetrack, the corner store or at some official betting agency. Again, I do not believe Britain has had any great moral breakdown or corruption as a result of this form of gambling, that is what you might call the skilled kind of gambling. This would suggest to me that those who feel that the legalization of lotteries would lead to a break-down in morality are all wrong.

I do not feel that the reasons for the strong opposition to lotteries by the Protestant sects are so related to theological subjects as they are to certain moral rules. Superficially, it might appear strange that religious groups stressing the freedom of the individual to choose his own means of finding God and insisting on the individual's right to worship in his own way should be their brother's keeper in the field of morals. A similar attitude was once noticeable toward insurance, card playing, dancing and still exists toward the drinking of alcoholic beverages. We still have within the protestant sects moral rules that condemn these practices.

I think all who have looked at it historically are aware of the fact this is part of the puritan tradition which is over four centuries old and which still has a great deal of vitality in this country. I think Roman Catholicism tends to take a less jaundiced view of drinking and gambling, perhaps assuming from its long history that these are minor vices.

The Catholic and Protestant attitudes are pertinent to any assessment of the chances for legal lotteries in Canada because strongest support for them comes from Catholic Quebec, strongest opposition from the organized Protestant clergy in the rest of Canada and from newspaper editors who follow their lead. If hon. members want illustrations of this fact, they could go to the various reports of committees which were held and which went into this subject fairly thoroughly. They will find that most of the strongest opposition to lotteries came from mostly ministerial spokesmen for the Protestant groups.

Clergymen and newspaper editors are very influential in swaying legislatures. However, it is also a fact that the moral code of today is less stern than it was 30 years, 40 years or 50 years ago. I think many of us who have followed the newspapers would agree that the newspaper editors have not led the way in relaxing the morals code. In the advertising pages I think there has been a move towards relaxation but not in the editorial pages. I think the same thing holds good in so far as the protestant clergy are concerned.

In recent decades the province of Quebec has taken a great interest in lotteries and several times the provincial government there has tried to have passed bills that would make them legal. The Criminal Code is drawn up by parliament in Ottawa. However, it is put in practice through provincial attorneys general. I think this is one reason why, if you get a province that takes a lenient view of lotteries or raffles, it is unlikely that you will ever get any lottery promoters prosecuted. I think this is why in Quebec you have so many lotteries or raffles. I know that the few times I have been in Montreal during the hockey season there seemed to be a bewildering variety of lotteries or hockey pools in operation. I think the same situation applies in almost all big cities.

The last time that lotteries were a big political issue in Ottawa was back in 1934 when the Senate sent to the House of Commons a bill that would have let provincial authorities set their own course with any lotteries designed for aiding hospitals. I have here copies of that bill and I actually intended to introduce the same bill this year until I discovered that my intention had been, let us say, preceded by the intention of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) and by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Browne). In 1934 Mr. Bennett was prime minister and Mr. Mackenzie King was leader of the opposition. They let it be known that the whole matter was going to be decided on a free vote. The measure was defeated, 105 votes to 57 votes, with almost all the support coming from Quebec members. The vote might have been closer if Mr. Bennett and Mr. King each, as private members, had not spoken against it. Mr. Bennett stressed that his decision was based not on "absolute right or wrong", but on the fact that lotteries had a sorry history, as indeed they have back in the 19th century even in Britain and in Italy. Mr. King was concerned, as one might imagine he would be, knowing the delicate nature of his sensitivities, with the unsettling nature of lotteries. He said:

> What we require in the affairs of individuals and of the nation is less of uncertainty and more of certainty . . . less of reliance on chance and luck, and more reliance on judgment and effort.

That is in context the Protestant ministerial moral line on the whole matter of lotteries. Mr. King went on to state a theme that ran throughout the entire debate of the subject:

> There is no doubt that much of the distress of the times has come about through excessive speculation . . . for too many people . . . have got into the habit or relying upon chance and gambling in one form or another.

The Canadian parliament, influenced by the great crash of 1929 and the subsequent depression, identified the basis of sweepstakes with stock-market speculation. As Mr. J. S. Woodsworth, leader of the C.C.F., put it, if one decried the one, one had to decry the other; that is, if one was against playing the stock market, one pretty well had to be against the idea of the lottery.

Actually, the vital difference between a sweepstake and a stock market speculation is that the latter, like bridge-playing, chess, or even betting on the horses, allows some room for skill or inside knowledge. For some reason, this tends to give such forms of gambling a superior prestige over the forms that are based on pure chance. Depending on the prosperity of your society at the time, there is greater or smaller concern over the fact that no matter how skilful the speculation, it is true in most cases that someone has to lose. One should remember that at one time the insurance business had to be conducted secretly because it was considered to involve forbidden wagers against the outcome of events. Even joint stock companies were once held by religious authorities to be immoral organizations just as, I am sure all members of the house know, at one time Christianity condemned usury or the taking of interest.

In any discussion of the fundamentals of gambling one must come to grips with a mystery called nature. Nature, or the unpredictability of such things as weather and man's behaviour, has always made much of each person's life a gamble, or better, left it open to chance or luck. This is an element with which we are all extremely familiar. It is the common denominator of the whole human experience. I refer to this question of luck or chance. I think it is instinctive with us as human beings that we are willing to take a chance. I suppose the greatest gamble of all is what Haskell used; that is the greatest gamble was related to the belief that God existed. But whatever the case may be, we as human beings are always prepared to take these risks. Yet because of Puritan and moral concepts, we have hesitated to legalize these things and to set up any framework through which we can take decent advantage of them.

I would put it to members of this house that Fielding's remarks about lotteries being a taxation upon all the fools in creation may have some validity; but what sort of tax upon our foolishness is the situation in which four men are murdered in one of our modern cities because they are mixed up with something that is conducted below the level of the eyes of the law? It seems to me that we have strong grounds today, in judging human nature and the Canadian situation, for saying that it is time that we had lotteries and that we used the revenue from them for good and sound purposes. I can think of a number of sound purposes that are obvious; for instance in connection with hospitals, medical research and sports as the British and Swedes do with their football pools, with their general amateur athletic enterprises. In other words there are any number of good things that we could choose for our lotteries and I think such lotteries would strike the common denominator and interest of all Canadians.

Since 1946, the Canadian Institute of Public Opinion has held polls of public opinion on the question of government lotteries. In the first poll there was a majority of only 52 per cent but in the recent ones the appeal has become stronger and stronger. I have just forgotten the exact figures with regard to the last one, but it now appears that almost two thirds of Canadians whose opinions have been sampled by this particular organization would be in favour of some kind of lottery. One of the things that frightens me—

Mr. Macdonnell: May I ask the hon. member whether he is talking about lotteries with some public objective or just lotteries in general?

Mr. Fisher: I am talking about lotteries with a public objective; that is to say lotteries sponsored by the government. One of the problems in connection with legalizing lotteries is this. We might have the prospect of a whole host of various provincial lotteries.

This could create a great deal of difficulty. It would create difficulty, for example, if we had enabling legislation, through the Criminal Code, allowing provincial attorneys general to support this measure. We could have, say, a massive lottery for hospitals in Quebec. In order to reach out and give the lottery the widest possible financial basis they would be selling tickets right across the nation, one would hope and perhaps one would expect, and yet we would be faced with a problem something like that of the question of coloured or non-coloured margarine because these tickets would be going into other jurisdictions.

For that reason I feel strongly that if we are going to have a government lottery it would have to be somewhat along the line set out in the hon. member's bill; that is, something on a national rather than a provincial scale. But we would hope that the benefits of the lottery would go to institutions that might fall within the provincial framework.

Of course, one of the most important questions in relation to legalizing lotteries is this. What will legalized lotteries do to the illegal lotteries which support so many charitable and group association endeavours at the present time? It seems to me that this is something about which we know very little. An inquiry would almost of necessity have to be undertaken in this connection before we supported a measure such as this on third reading. If we did have a large scale legal lottery in Canada, where tickets were sold across the breadth of the nation, what would this do to the church bingos, the ladies' raffles and even the political parties raffles? I know that all three political parties in our part of the country have at various times conducted, or are conducting raffles or lotteries of a sort. This question, of course, is something that I cannot assess.

However, I do not think a well established national lottery based upon something such as the Grey Cup or the Queen's Plate classic in the spring, or events such as these would necessarily interfere with local lotteries that are carried on at the present time and which in many places are the lifeblood of service clubs and associations.

I know that in our city every spring there is a contest sponsored by a reputable service club in which one has to guess when the first ship is going to arrive in the harbour. I understand that in one of the western provinces there is a very large lottery in connection with when the break-up is going to hit a certain place on the river. We do have these lotteries. My own feeling is that a national lottery based on three or four events would not cripple the lotteries held by other organizations.

In conclusion I should like to mention something about the British premium savings bonds. This is a form of government lottery. One of the odd things is that the Canadian government allows these British bonds to be sold in Canada. They can be purchased through a Canadian bank for dollars and any prize money will be paid in dollars. I understand the top prize is $14,000.

In other words, here in Canada you can play the British treasury's bond game. That is another example of a breach that has been made in this question of lotteries being illegal. It seems to me that we have here another instance of a situation where we are ready for legislation that recognizes the interest of the Canadian people on this whole question of lotteries.

I should like to congratulate the hon. member for sponsoring the bill. There is one part of the bill about which I and some of my colleagues are in a little doubt. That is the matter of whether the reward or surplus from the lotteries should be apportioned among family allowance recipients according to a scale that increases with the number of children in the family who are qualified to receive allowances.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question. The hon. member is no doubt aware that a lottery is held among members of parliament, and he has direct control over the result. The lottery is based on when parliament will end.

Mr. Fisher: I am quite aware of that. I am sure the hon. member also has some responsibility. I understand that government members are much more interested in this lottery than are hon. members of the opposition. Perhaps the hon. member would answer my question as to why that should be.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): We do the guessing and you do not; that is the reason.

Mr. Benidickson: You introduce the legislation, sometimes late.

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, in connection with this bill I should first like to say that I do not see any difference between lotteries and many other activities that are carried on today in our country. In this connection I share the same opinion as service clubs and many other people throughout the country.

Everyone is free to dispose of his money as he sees fit. It has been argued that life itself is a gamble. Whether you invest your money in trade, on the stock exchange or any other avenue of activity, you certainly take a chance. I do not think there is anything wrong in the principle of spending a little money on a lottery, say to the amount of one or two dollars a year. I will go further and say that in years of expensive living such as we are going through, there is something to be said in favour of allowing a person to introduce into his life the element of hope and ambition that comes to him from spending a little money on a lottery.

I remember buying a ticket on a car lottery. I paid $1 for the ticket and from the time I bought it to the time the car was raffled I dreamt all day that I was going to win that car. I received a great deal of enjoyment out of the dollar I spent on that ticket. I do not think it did me any harm, and I am sure that, like myself, many people received enjoyment although they did not win the car either.

We often read and hear about the Irish sweepstake results. I am very happy that many of the people who win are not in the rich class. As a result of being fortunate enough to win the sweepstake they are able to enjoy a happy time for the rest of their days. We also read that older people have been able to enjoy happiness for the rest of their lives through winning a sweepstake.

I feel that a lottery under government control, where a great share of the profits would go to the establishment of hospitals, their building and maintenance, to those people who are in need of welfare, to building homes for the aged, or to some other useful public service, would be of great public benefit. The fact that the law governing lotteries is not being obeyed by the public proves that it is not a popular law. You cannot enforce a law that is against popular opinion.

You can trade on the stock exchange, you can bet on the horse races, or you can take part in the games of chance at fairs. You can do these things as much as you like and there seems to be no harm in them; there is no danger of demoralizing our young people. But when you buy one or two tickets on a lottery conducted by a public organization, it is said that our young people are being poisoned morally and socially.

I mentioned betting on the horse races. My hon. friend mentioned this and he said it was a matter of skill. I have been to the horse races and I have placed a $2 bet on the horses. I have seen other people bet $2 on the horses. Well, I did not collect very often. Sometimes you receive $4, but most of the time you see people there who cannot afford to be betting. They are betting on these horses coming in, and they cannot really afford it.

I am not by any means against horse racing, but I would draw to the attention of hon. members that if we are going to have one form of gambling, why cannot we have another? I have mentioned the games of chance to be found at fairs. That matter is a disgrace to this country. I am certainly against this type of betting. You go through these fairs and come to the barkers at the side-shows. You cannot get away from them. You take your family to the fair and go to the side-show and you hear the barker say, "Come on over and win. I will give you a free chance." You see there people who cannot afford to spend their money in this way. They walk over to the barker at the side-show and he says, "Here you are; now pick up a clothes pin". The fellow reaches over and picks up a clothes pin. The barker gets all excited and says, "Yes, you are fortunate You have just won $25. It has not cost you anything. Now, if you give me $5 you can have another clothespin to take off, and you might get a hundred." He gets another off, and the man says: "that is wonderful; now if you go on you have a chance of winning a wonderful wristwatch". It can go on like this for hour after hour, and I have seen ladies crying when they left those stands because their husbands had spent every penny in their pockets. We can allow this kind of thing yet we cannot allow people to spend a dollar on a sweeepstake ticket. What harm would there be in allowing the sale of sweepstake tickets at a dollar? You might win $140,000 and get some enjoyment out of it.

By legalizing lotteries in Canada we would first of all ensure large sums being made available for the maintenance of our hospitals and educational institutions, funds from a source which today contributes absolutely nothing to these purposes. In the second place, such a law would allow people to do legally what they are today doing illegally. I am referring, of course, to small pools on the results of hockey games, bingos and the like. In the third place, such legalisation would, to a large extent, stop the spending of Canadian money on tickets for lotteries run by other countries.

A lottery run under government supervision would mean honest and absolute control. It would attract to Canada millions of foreign dollars. It would supplement the dollars now being contributed by the taxpayer and bring millions into federal and provincial treasuries. In 1931 about $20 million was awarded in prize money in the Irish sweepstakes. More than $7,300,000 went to hospitals from the sale of tickets. We have hospitals and homes for the aged in this country. I read in the paper the other day that the city of Calgary has no more room for the sick in its hospitals and that cases have to be sent to Edmonton. We need hospitals, and how better could we raise the money than through sweepstakes restricted to once or twice a year, as the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) suggested.

A royal commission formed to inquire into the sale of Irish sweepstake tickets in the United Kingdom found that the total sales in connection with the first eight sweepstakes amounted to approximately $90 million. That will illustrate how much money goes from one country to another when events of this kind are involved. If we permitted sweepstakes to be made legal in our country we would see this money coming into our treasuries to provide help for hospitals and other much needed projects.

No one can convince me that the spending of from $1 to $5 a year on lottery tickets by any citizen of this country will tend to demoralize him, his family or his neighbours. I wonder if the people who oppose lotteries have ever been shocked by the hopeless outlook of those of our fellow citizens who have lost their last nickel and mortgaged their future by gambling on the stock exchange, the grain exchange, the mining exchange and similar institutions. The hon. member for Port Arthur suggested that people were gambling on these things. Others say that a great deal of skill enters into it. That may be so, but after all there is skill attached to horse racing. However that may be, the percentage of people who gamble on these exchanges when they clearly have not got the required skill must be very great.

Mr. Deschatelets: I wonder whether the hon. member realizes that if he continues to speak the house will be unable to vote on the principle of this bill?

Mr. Smallwood: I am sure the hon. gentleman is in favour of this bill. He has expressed his views and I believe he would want me to express all of mine. I have got a number of my views across so far—

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Smallwood: There has been a very interesting debate on this subject. Many good points have been raised. While I am sorry I have taken this extra minute or two, I think we have drawn some important opinions to the attention of the house and while this measure may not come to a vote today I am sure the knowledge of all hon. members has been increased a good deal as a result of this debate.

May I call it six o'clock?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: I take it it is six o'clock. Perhaps I could ask the leader of the house whether the business as announced last night for Monday and Tuesday and the rest of next week is confirmed?

Mr. Churchill: I think we can be sure that the announcement of business for Monday and Tuesday stands.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

MILK SUBSIDY PAYMENTS

Question No. 122—Mr. Boulanger:

What has been the amount of subsidies paid for milk to the following condensed-milk processing firms: (a) Carnation Limited (b) Trino Limited (c) Dominion Exchange Dairies, during 1958, 1959, 1960?

Question

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture):

The subsidy of 25 cents per hundred pounds of milk used for manufacturing purposes is payable only to milk producers. The factory or factories receiving milk for manufacturing purposes, acting as agents of the agricultural stabilization board, pay the 25 cent subsidy and after proof of payment are reimbursed by the board. No subsidy has therefore been paid to the condensed milk processing firms referred to.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

Second report of standing committee on banking and commerce—Mr. Cathers.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT

PERSONNEL OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER BILL NO. C-71

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot) moved:

That the special committee to consider Bill C-71, an act respecting the civil service of Canada, established on 10th March, 1961 be composed of Mrs. Casselman and Messrs. Bell (Carleton), Campeau, Caron, Hicks, Keays, Macdonnell, MacLellan, Macquarrie, MacRae, Martel, McIlraith, More, Peters, Pickersgill, Richard (Ottawa East), Roberge, Rogers, Smith (Winnipeg North), Spencer, and Tardif.

Motion agreed to.

(Translation):

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING DEFINITION OF CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Gabriel Roberge (Megantic) moved for leave to introduce a bill entitled an act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Roberge: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to insert in the Unemployment Insurance Act the definition of the words "employee" and "employer" and, through the use of more general terms, to place the service contract and the rental of work in the category of insurable employment.

These amendments are being suggested in order to clarify and facilitate the interpretation of the act by making it more consistent with the intention of parliament when this legislation was passed in 1955.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

(Text):

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LAY-OFFS OF PERSONNEL, MONTREAL—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the displacement of 160 employees—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I am just wondering whether his request would properly be made now. The rule says at the end of routine proceedings. I find that the hon. member is quite correct.

Mr. Chevrier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My motion to adjourn the house is for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the displacement of 160 employees of the Canadian National Railways at the main office on McGill street in Montreal through the substitution of contract labour, which appears to be part of a national pattern affecting employees of the Canadian National Railways across Canada. I would hope that Your Honour would give me permission to establish urgency in this case.

Mr. Speaker: I shall be glad to hear the hon. member. I assume that it is a matter of importance, but the urgency that is involved is urgency of debate. I think I should like to hear the hon. member on the question of whether or not this is one of the administrative responsibilities of the ministry. It seems to me that the point may well be taken that it is a decision of the Canadian National Railways on its own authority.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to deal with those three points if the house will bear with me. Dealing first with the urgency of the matter, I should tell Your Honour that over the week end I received an urgent communication from the brotherhood of railway carmen of America, signed by the local chairman of Lodge 733, Mr. G. Gagnon, and by the president, Mr. H. Myerson.

In this communication two points among many others are made. The first is that these employees are gravely concerned about the announced intention of the Canadian National Railways in the Montreal area to effect layoffs and dismissals of the maintenance and cleaning personnel in the Montreal headquarters building coincidental with the sale of the building at 360 McGill street and the occupancy of the new office building adjacent to the Canadian National Railways station. It is pointed out in this communication that 160 employees are affected, and that unless something is done to stop the contract which is about to be given, if it has not already been given, for the new office building adjacent to the C.N.R. station their position will be an untenable one. It is pointed out that most of the people affected by the decision will be unable to find jobs elsewhere because of their age. They are for the most part over 40 years of age, and the majority of those affected are widows who are the sole support of their children.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If I may interrupt the hon. member. I think he need not labour the point as to the importance of the matter. The question is really one of urgency of debate. I take it that this decision has been made since the estimates of the Department of Labour were under discussion here last Friday.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Therefore it is a matter which has arisen since then. The hon. member might direct his attention to the possibility for debate of this matter in the ordinary course of events, rather than interrupting the proceedings of the house. The other point—

Mr. Chevrier: I have not forgotten the other point, sir. We are dealing with urgency of debate, and Your Honour is quite familiar with the position in so far as discussion in the house is concerned. First there are the labour estimates under which this matter could ostensibly be discussed. The labour estimates have not been called this week and I presume they will not be called, in view of the information which was given on Thursday of last week. Nothing on the order paper indicates, therefore, that there is any possibility of discussing this matter under the labour estimates.

The next point is that the only other place where the matter can be discussed, if at all, is in the committee on railways, air lines and shipping owned and operated by the government. I think the Minister of Transport has indicated in the house that this committee will not sit until after the Easter recess. In any event, it has not been set up yet. As Your Honour knows, I attempted in a general way to deal with this matter on the establishment of the committee on railways, air lines and shipping, and my attention was drawn to the fact that while I could refer to lay-offs in a general way, I was not to go into the matter in detail. I did take exception to that ruling; none the less that seemed to be the decision. So there will not be any opportunity of discussing a matter of this nature until well after the Easter recess.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Your Honour was quite right a moment ago in saying that this matter has arisen within the last day or so. It arose over the week end when the matter has been brought to our attention. Those are the two points that I make with reference to urgency of debate. There will be no opportunity from now until after the Easter recess to deal with the matter.

The third point which Your Honour has asked me to deal with concerns the administrative responsibility of the government. It seems to me that if this matter is not allowed under that heading, then it must of necessity follow that no matter affecting a crown corporation could be discussed under the heading of administrative responsibility of the government. Surely that is not the manner in which the rules have been applied. For instance, if a matter concerned the national harbours board or any other crown corporation, it could well be stated that this was not the administrative responsibility of the government.

I say to you, sir, that it is because, first, the responsibility must rest with the minister whose duty it is to answer for the Canadian National Railways in the House of Commons. Next, it is the government of Canada which owns the shares, on behalf of the people of Canada, of the Canadian National Railways. Third, the government itself is the owner of a number of railways, such as the Intercolonial and, I believe, the Hudson Bay Railway.

Thus I say, sir, with deference that under these three heads the rules allow us to discuss this matter. I should also like to add an additional reason, namely that this is national in its scope. While I have dealt so far only with the situation in Montreal, I have before me here evidence of a pattern which is similar in many other areas, particularly in the three districts affected by this action as they were known before reorganization, namely the eastern district, the central district and the western district where there have been lay-offs amounting to about 6 per cent per year in the staff and personnel of the railway.

There is one final point I should like to make. I think Your Honour has held on one or two occasions in the past that in discussing matters of this kind it is essential to establish not only that the motion be national in scope but that there be a certain confusion existing. My point is this: Thus far the government has indicated no intention on its part of telling the house what these lay-offs have amounted to, and in that respect there has been little or no information—

Mr. Speaker: I think that point is one which might arise if the hon. member is given leave, but not otherwise.

Mr. Argue: I wonder if I might say a word on the question of urgency.

Mr. Brunsden: Would the hon. member for Laurier permit a question?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Brunsden: Did the letter which the hon. member referred to bear a Montreal postmark or a Chicago postmark?

Mr. Chevrier: Unfortunately I have not the envelope here but my memory is quite clear. It came from Montreal and not from Chicago. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps, while the hon. member is referring to the letter, he would tell me the date of the letter?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. The date is March 9, and it is from the office of the local chairman of lodge No. 703, brotherhood of railway carmen of America, and he is Mr. G. Gagnon, of 4477 Bourbonnière street, Montreal. May I complete my answer to that question. The question has been asked, when did I receive the letter? I received the letter by special delivery on Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that this is a Canadian matter, which seems to be an inference that might be taken from the question which has been raised. I have received a letter from the same organization and bearing the same signatures. For your benefit, Mr. Speaker, I may say I have also received a telegram dated Montreal, Quebec, March 10.

As to the question of the administrative responsibility of the government, I think the very fact that the president of the C.N.R. is brought before a committee of this house from year to year at the time when C.N.R. matters are discussed establishes beyond question that parliament itself can deal with important questions of C.N.R. administration.

As has already been pointed out, there is urgency attaching to such a debate because there will not be an occasion on which this question can be raised in the foreseeable future. I also submit this is an indication of a general pattern which has arisen across the country, namely that the C.N.R. is engaged in wholesale lay-offs that are adding to unemployment problems in the country and creating growing hardship among the people who have been dismissed.

I join with the hon. member for Laurier in submitting that this is a matter of urgent public importance. It is essential that it be dealt with and debated by parliament. It is certainly within the administrative competence of the government, and surely it is within the power of parliament to deal with general questions relating to the Canadian National Railways.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that very careful consideration should be given to an attempt to adjourn the house such as the motion moved this afternoon by the hon. member for Laurier. Let us look at the situation. It appears to boil down to a case of a wire being sent to the hon. members for Laurier and Assiniboia by two men who happen to be officers of a union, and on the basis of that wire these two hon. members rise in the house and insist that we should abandon our plans for discussing public business today in order to consider the wire which has been sent in this manner.

Mr. Argue: To consider a matter of urgent public importance.

Mr. Green: Let the hon. member be silent and take his medicine. Surely the rule under which this motion is moved was never designed to meet a situation of this type. This procedure is supposed to be used only on rare occasions when there is a necessity and great urgency for debate. In years past motions to adjourn the house have not been accepted on more than perhaps two or three occasions in a session. Because the hon. member succeeded in getting away with another motion two weeks ago—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Green: —or rather succeeded in having a similar motion accepted two weeks ago—

Mr. Argue: A reflection on Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Green: I withdrew the words "got away with". In view of the success of hon. members opposite in having a similar motion accepted two weeks ago, I presume because this Monday is set aside for the discussion of private members' business they decided to make this attempt.

From time to time men are laid off. We all regret that. Members of the government do their best to avoid that happening. On every occasion when this happens are we to be faced with a motion to adjourn the house to discuss it for the rest of the day? This, I suggest, would be reducing to an absolute mockery the rules for the conduct of business in this house. I suggest that today is a good time to put a stop to attempts of this kind.

There is on today's order paper under "Government Business" item No. 9, a resolution for the setting up of a committee to consider the affairs of Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines. That motion has already been under discussion on one occasion within the last few days, and I have no doubt it will be called again within the next few days. Discussion under that order of business will give ample opportunity to the hon. member for Laurier to raise the point which he seeks to raise today.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the minister permit a question? Is he aware of the ruling of the chair in connection with these matters, that a member may not go into detail so far as lay-offs on the C.N.R. are concerned but may discuss them in a general way only?

Mr. Green: I was not here at the time any such ruling was made, but the hon. member for Laurier has tried to broaden his motion in his remarks. He has tried to lay a basis or foundation encompassing the treatment of employees by the C.N.R. generally, and certainly that matter would be in order on a motion to set up the committee.

Another point is that questions such as these do not come directly under any minister, and nobody should know that better than the hon. member for Laurier—

Mr. Chevrier: That is not so.

Mr. Green: —because he was minister of transport for several years. Time after time when he was asked a question about the Canadian National Railways I have heard him get up in the house and say that he had to consult the president or other officials of the railway and that he could not possibly give an answer until he had done so. Today he has forgotten all about that and he comes here and expects us to deal with some administrative action by the officials of the Canadian National Railways without any opportunity to consult them. Oh, no; today the C.N.R. is entirely the responsibility of the government. There is no question today of the C.N.R. being a corporation operating on its own. This shows what a ridiculous attempt is being made today by the hon. member for Laurier.

In addition to the motion to set up the committee there is to be a supply motion a week from today, and the hon. member for Laurier and his pal from Assiniboia—it is very significant how as soon as one of them makes such a motion the other rushes to get on the band wagon and, of course, that has been done today—will then have the opportunity, either alone or in combination again, to move a motion of want of confidence in the government on this issue, but by that time they will be frying other fish; they will have forgotten all about this particular problem. There will be that opportunity a week from today, however, and I suggest that if we do not take the whole of today to talk about a wire which has been received signed by two individuals the whole process of democracy will not be upset. I suggest this is a lot of foolishness, and that this motion should not be accepted.

Mr. Speaker: I feel that I have heard enough from the hon. members to permit me to deal with the matter unless the hon. member for Laurier wishes to reply to some specific point made by the Acting Prime Minister.

Mr. Chevrier: If I may be allowed I should like to do so. There are two or three specific points to which I should like to reply and I will do so as quickly as I can. The main point is that the Acting Prime Minister has made it quite clear, I think, that there is an administrative responsibility on the part of the government because his whole argument in reply to mine left no other impression. He implied, for instance, that this matter should be taken up on a motion to go into supply which will not be until next Monday if the government so announces this as business for Monday, or in the alternative on the motion for the establishment of the committee on railways and shipping owned and operated by the government. So far as the latter suggestion is concerned, the Speaker and Deputy Speaker have already ruled clearly that the matter cannot be discussed then. The Acting Prime Minister also stated that this matter does not come under any minister.

Mr. Green: I did not say that.

Mr. Chevrier: I took down the words used by the Acting Prime Minister and he said that this matter did not come under any minister. There is a responsibility on the Minister of Transport to report to the house on matters affecting the Canadian National Railways. That has always been the case. It was the case when I was over there, just as it is now, and under that head it seems to me there is a responsibility on the part of the government.

The minister then asked whether every time such an event happens the government is to be faced with a motion such as the one now made. I suggest this is the first time such a motion has been made, and it has been moved not only because of what is happening in Montreal but because of the evidence I have here indicating that the same thing is happening in other parts of the country, in the west, in the central section, in Lauzon, in Moncton. As the whip says, it is happening everywhere that the C.N.R. has jurisdiction, as I will be able to establish if the opportunity is given to adjourn the house.

The final statement made by the Acting Prime Minister was that this motion was being moved because a couple of wires had been received. I did not receive any wire. I made it quite clear that I got a special communication which came to me on Sunday afternoon. It is because of that communication that I consider this matter is urgent and have brought it to the attention of the house.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Stormont supporting the request for leave?

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Surely—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member for Stormont is supporting the request for leave I will hear him; otherwise not.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Indeed not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Laurier, as he is entitled to do, has asked under standing order 26 for leave to move the adjournment of the house to discuss a definite matter of urgent public importance. Each of these requests must, of course, be dealt with on its own facts, and I do not have much difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that this is not a case where leave should be given.

In support of my view I remind the house that this is the sixth private members' Monday, and that to interrupt our ordinary proceedings there should be a clear case which warrants the setting aside of the planned business of the day because this is the last opportunity of this kind which private members will have to discuss their bills and motions. As I say, the case should be a clear one.

I raise the question of administrative responsibility. May I put the facts this way as I see them. First, I should say I am not clear whether the 160 employees referred to by the hon. member for Laurier have been laid off or whether there is a threat or a notice of intention to lay them off, but for my purposes it does not really make any difference. The problem of their employment is, of course, an important matter to them at least and of significance to the Montreal area. However, parliament has given to the Canadian National Railways the responsibility for administering the railway and included in administration is the responsibility for all labour policy. It is true that parliament can change the legislation but it is not true, as I see it, that the government can intervene to direct Canadian National Railways to do something different.

As hon. members will recall, the matter of lay-offs of employees of the Canadian National Railways arises very frequently during the question period, and the minister is always under the necessity of having to say that he will inquire from the C.N.R. to find out what their policy is and that he will bring back an answer to the house. It seems to me that citation 100, which indicates that such matters should relate to the administrative responsibility of the government, might be applied in this case in the sense that the responsibility is indirectly through parliament and not one on which a debate on a motion of this kind could have any direct effect or result. It would be necessary for parliament to amend its Canadian National Railways legislation, if an enforceable decision is to be made or an effective remedy applied.

That may not appeal to all hon. members as a correct summary of the situation, but in addition to that point I think that lay-offs of this kind, whether isolated or part of a pattern, are a continuing problem of employees of the government owned railway which will be coming before the house from time to time when it is sitting, and should be dealt with on the occasions on which it is possible to debate the administrative policies of the Canadian National Railways and the control of these policies by parliament.

I therefore regretfully have to refuse the hon. member leave.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ORDERS IN COUNCIL FIXING DUTIES

Motion No. 50—Mr. Benidickson:

For copies of orders issued by the Minister of National Revenue since December 1, 1958, under the provisions of section 38 of the Customs Act for the purposes of fixing duties.

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): I would ask that the motion stand.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, you will observe that this is motion No. 50 and that the next motion is No. 71. I know very well that the Minister of National Revenue is in Washington today on important business, but I do not know what we have parliamentary secretaries for if it is not so that we can obtain answers of this kind without the delay that has occurred in regard to this one, and I would ask that the motion be put.

Mr. Lambert: As indicated by the minister last week, he wished to examine the documents because there was a point of procedure raised in connection with this matter. The minister has not been in a position to examine those documents, and on that basis I would ask that the motion stand until he returns.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, I do recall that this particular point was raised, and would hope that the minister would be prepared to answer on Wednesday.

Motion stands.

DRUGS—REGULATIONS RESPECTING QUALITY CONTROL

Motion No. 71—Mr. Howard:

For a copy of the proposed regulations by the food and drug directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare regarding the control of the quality of pharmaceuticals, and for a copy of all telegrams, correspondence, submissions, and other documents received by the department or the directorate regarding the said proposed regulations, and for a copy of all communications exchanged between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the director of the food and drug directorate or any other person regarding the said proposed regulations, since July 1, 1960.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am prepared to accept this motion subject to the usual reservation that communications within my department or with other federal government departments fall within a class that must be regarded as privileged.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I feel that the exception the minister is asking for in effect deletes that part of the original request which has reference to the communications. I think those communications have a tremendous bearing on the subject itself, and I do not think I can proceed with the exception.

Mr. Speaker: The minister has indicated his willingness to accept the motion subject to the reservation regarding documents which are confidential, and generally regarded as such, within his department or between his department and other government departments. The hon. member who moved the motion has indicated his unwillingness to accept the motion with the reservation, in which event I would ask the minister whether he wishes to accept or reject the motion before I put it.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I can only accept the motion subject to the reservation as I mentioned earlier.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

OTTAWA—EVACUATION PRIORITIES IN EVENT OF NUCLEAR WAR

Question No. 72—Mr. Regier:

For a listing of names and addresses on a priority basis of all those people who are supposed to be moved out of Ottawa to a supposedly safe place of refuge in case of a nuclear war.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): If you will recall, Mr. Speaker, this motion was to stand until the return of the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: I remember that the last time this motion was called the Acting Prime Minister suggested that it be dropped from the order paper and I rather resisted that action in the belief that it had been the practice not to drop motions in the absence of the mover. But I find that he is correct, in accordance with standing order 19, and that unless the government requests that a notice of motion shall stand when it is called, it is dropped. There is, of course, perfect liberty to reintroduce it. There is nothing final about the procedure; it is in order for an hon. member to restore the motion to the order paper when he returns. Therefore as I read standing order 19 (1), the government has the option of standing the motion, or, if they do not ask to have it stood, it is dropped in the absence of the mover who can proceed with it.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Acting Prime Minister through you whether in view of the absence of the hon. member on official government business at the United Nations in New York, who I believe is expected back in another week or ten days, it could be allowed to stand on this occasion?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): On this point, Mr. Speaker, I endeavoured to review the rules and the practice in the past. Although perhaps this is not a matter of very great moment, nevertheless I think some ruling from the Chair might be helpful for the future.

As we all know, these motions are not debatable. Therefore the presence of the hon. member who has put the motion on the order paper is not absolutely essential. The hon. member is looking for information, and that information is either given or denied by the minister responsible.

In the past the practice has been to permit someone else to move the motion in the absence of the proposer. That was done on March 6. Quite correctly, Mr. Speaker, when the request was made that the motion be withdrawn you stated that this could not be done without the hon. member being present. That is in accordance with standing order 49, which says:

A member who has made a motion may withdraw the same only by the unanimous consent of the house.

However, on looking back in Bourinot's fourth edition on page 300, which deals with—

Mr. Winch: If you are referring to Bourinot you are going a long way back.

Mr. Churchill: I point out to the hon. member who has interrupted that Beauchesne was founded on Bourinot, and Bourinot's rules still carry authority in the House of Commons. Bourinot deals at very great length with this subject and Beauchesne does not. I think the reason Beauchesne does not deal with the subject of motions for production of papers is that the method of procedure had been so well established that the author thought it was not necessary to refer to it.

On page 300 of Bourinot, dealing with this type of motion, it says:

Neither can any motion be withdrawn in the absence of the member who proposed it; but it may be negatived or agreed to in such a case on the question being put formally from the chair.

Then Bourinot gives an example of where that was done; the mover of the motion was absent but the matter was disposed of. In this particular instance the Secretary of State for External Affairs has indicated that the motion is not acceptable. Therefore it is not a question of the hon. member having the privilege of withdrawing, which requires unanimous consent, but simply of disposing of it immediately. It could be put before us by one of his colleagues and then it would be in the hands of the house and we could either accept or reject it as we saw fit; otherwise it stands on the order paper. I think that is unnecessary, particularly in view of the fact that on this question of motions for production of papers there is a sentence in standing order 47 which reads:

All such notices when called shall be forthwith disposed of—

It seems to me that our practice has been to dispose of them except on the request of the government that the motion shall stand for some special consideration, as is the case with order No. 50 on our order paper.

Mr. Speaker: I think the practice has perhaps developed by consent somewhat divergently from the express wording of the rule. Standing order 47, which deals with notices of motions for the production of papers, provides as follows:

All such notices when called shall be forthwith disposed of—

That has already been indicated by the minister. That means they are not debatable. Standing order 47 continues:

—but if on any such motion a debate be desired, it will be transferred by the clerk to the order of "Notices of motions".

That is the special rule relating to this particular type of notice. Then standing order 19 (1), to which I referred previously, says:

Questions put by members and notices of motions, not taken up when called may (upon the requests of the government) be allowed to stand and retain their precedence; otherwise they will disappear from the order paper. They may, however, be renewed.

I think that amendment, when it was introduced to the rules, was intended to prevent the accumulation on the order paper of notices which, if dropped, were not prejudiced in any way. As I see the matter now, unless the government asks that the motion stand or the house accepts a motion on behalf of the absent member so that the question could be voted upon, the rule would require the motion to be dropped.

Mr. Green: Perhaps the hon. member for Vancouver East would communicate with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. I have no objection to having the motion stand until later in the week.

Mr. Speaker: The motion stands at the request of the government. May I say one word more. The views of the mover are of some consequence. In this case the mover has a choice whether to ask that the matter be proceeded with and go to a vote of the house, or to drop it because of the circumstances put forward by the government. For this reason I do not encourage the practice of having a motion moved on behalf of an absent mover.

Motion stands.

DISCONTINUANCE OF STEEL STATISTICS

Question No. 73—Mr. Argue:

For a copy of all correspondence and other documents exchanged between the government and any person, organization, or industry since January 1, 1960, regarding the discontinuance of publication of statistical material, relating to steel operating rates and steel producing capacity, by the dominion bureau of statistics.

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Hon. members will recall that on Wednesday last, as reported on page 2780 of Hansard, the Minister of Trade and Commerce said he wished to deal with this motion having regard to the Statistics Act and, more particularly, to section 15. In the absence of the minister today on government business in Washington, I wonder if the hon. gentleman in whose name this motion is set down would agree that it stand until Wednesday.

Motion stands.

"UNPLACED APPLICANTS" ITEM, ONTARIO MONTHLY SUMMARY

Motion No. 76—Mr. Argue:

For a copy of the item entitled "unplaced applicants" formerly contained in the monthly summary of employment conditions in Ontario published by the Ontario region national employment service office, since September 1, 1960.

Motion agreed to.

FRASERWOOD, MAN., POSTMASTER

Motion No. 79—Mr. Pickersgill:

For a copy of any protests, petitions, or communications received by the postmaster general or any official of the post office department regarding the conduct of the postmaster at Fraserwood, Manitoba, since the appointment of the present postmaster.

Hon. W. J. Browne (Solicitor General): May I ask that this motion be allowed to stand? We received notice of it only today.

Motion stands.

AUTAIR HELICOPTER SERVICES LTD.—POLAR SHELF CONTRACT

Motion No. 81—Mr. Chevrier:

For a copy of the economic assessment of the applicable air transport rates and associated costs made by the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys in connection with the contract awarded to Autair Helicopter Services Limited, as approved by treasury board on March 2, 1961, for the continental polar shelf project.

Motion agreed to.

GLEN EXELBY

Motion No. 82—Mr. Howard:

For a copy of all records of Mr. Glen Exelby that are on file with the unemployment insurance commission or the national employment service or on file with any branch thereof; and for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, or other documents exchanged between Mr. Exelby and the unemployment insurance commission or the national employment service or any branch thereof since September 9, 1960, and for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, other documents, or records of telephone conversations between the Minister of Labour and the unemployment insurance commission or the national employment service or any branch, officer, or employee thereof since January 1, 1961, relating to the said Mr. Exelby.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): In view of the fact that this motion appears on the order paper for the first time today and that in consequence proper consideration has not been given to it, I would ask that the hon. member agree to letting it stand until Wednesday.

Motion stands.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LAY-OFFS OF PERSONNEL, MONTREAL—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport or, in his absence, to the acting minister.

Is the minister aware that the C.N.R. intends to dismiss the 160 members of the maintenance and cleaning staff at the head office on McGill street in Montreal? If so, what action is being considered by the government in order to take those employees on again?

(Text):

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): I will see that this matter is brought to the attention of the officials of the Canadian National Railways, and hope to have an answer in due course.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question.

Is the minister aware that the Canadian National has decided to sell its present main office building on McGill street, and to move into a new building next to the railway station where maintenance services would be carried out under contract instead of being ensured by the present staff, thus putting out of work 160 persons, several of whom have been working for Canadian National for many years? What comments can the minister offer on that subject?

(Text):

Mr. Green: I will make inquiries on this particular aspect of the question, too.

UNITED NATIONS

CONGO—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CURRENT SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I wonder whether the minister has anything to report to the house on the present situation in the Congo, where there has been a further outbreak in the current reign of terror and killing.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have received no further report today on the situation in the Congo.

Mr. Argue: The minister might tell the house whether there has been any recent request from the United Nations for further assistance of any kind from Canada, involving either military personnel or food.

Mr. Green: From time to time there are requests for a very small number of men to carry on services of the type the Canadian contingent is now rendering. I believe there was a request for one such man within the last day or two.

REPORTED DESIRE TO SHORTEN AGENDA—CANADIAN POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of various reports that endeavours are being made at the United Nations general assembly to drop many important items, already referred by the assembly to various committees, in order to facilitate business and shorten the adjourned session, can the minister comment on the Canadian position in regard to this proposal?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, for some days there have been discussions going on between the United States and the Soviet union concerning the agenda for this resumed portion of the session of the general assembly. Those discussions have not yet reached finality. As a matter of fact the general committee which, as the hon. member knows, is the executive committee of the United Nations, was to have met today to deal with the question of the agenda but that meeting has been deferred and may take place tomorrow.

As yet there has been considerable confusion and doubt as to what items will be dealt with during this resumed session. I do not think there is much doubt that disarmament will be one of the subjects discussed.

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Because of the government's interest in certain of the resolutions, may I ask whether Canada is being consulted with regard to any matter that may be dropped?

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Representatives of all the member nations are involved in these discussions. The hon. member will recall that dozens of discussions take place in the United Nations building every day. I would judge it is a regular beehive of activity at the present time in an attempt to work out an agenda from which will have been deleted those items which would aggravate the cold war.

Inquiries of the Ministry

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GLEN EXELBY—INQUIRY AS TO RECEIPT OF LETTER BY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Labour whether he has received a letter from Mr. Glen H. Exelby.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Yes, I have received a letter from Mr. Exelby, to which is attached a copy of an affidavit. I understand the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, as well as others, has also received copies.

In so far as the records of the unemployment insurance commission are concerned, as I outlined them in the house, I would say that in general they are borne out by the affidavit. Basically the facts are that Mr. Exelby was employed for six weeks during a period when according to the television program he had been out of work for several months. Both he and his wife were paid for the program at the rate of $25 a day; that is, each of them were paid that amount. This has never been denied.

Mr. Exelby was interviewed for a job on February 24. According to his own affidavit he told the interviewer that he was doing a show for the C.B.C.—

Some hon. Members: A show?

Mr. Starr: He was hopeful that the show would produce a job but he was not overlooking any bets at all. These are his own words. The result of this interview was that he did not get the job. It is not my intention, nor has it been my intention, to criticize Mr. Exelby or his wife in respect to their appearance on this program—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: There are certain facts in connection with the situation, and these facts are admitted by Mr. Exelby in his own sworn statement. I have mentioned them above, and these are the facts which were not presented in the C.B.C. show. In view of this, I would suggest that the record stand.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would ask the minister if in the interest of the truth he professes to be so interested in—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: —if he would table—

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Starr: Your Honour, I wish to rise—

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, Your Honour, before the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister has interrupted on a question of privilege arising out of something the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said, and I think I should hear him.

Mr. Starr: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate charged me with only professing to be interested in the truth, and I wish to object to that.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think the minister should be too much concernd about a straightforward statement that he professes to be interested in the truth. If it were said that he professes not to be interested in the truth, a question of privilege would arise. I was hearing the hon. member on a point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was in the midst of asking a question when the hon. gentleman interrupted me, sir. My question was this. Would the hon. gentleman in the interests of the truth, and the whole truth, table the letter from Mr. Exelby and the affidavit so all of us can read them?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I feel certain the hon. member has already read them but if other hon. members of the house wish to read them I will be glad to table them.

Mr. Speaker: I think the practice of the house requires the production and tabling, as suggested, of the documents from which the minister has quoted perhaps not verbatim but the substance.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would suggest that in view of the grave injustice that has been done this gentleman—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: —the minister ask leave to have these documents given the same publicity in Hansard that his own erroneous statements were given.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's request has been acceded to. I am not sure why he is rising again.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think Your Honour did not hear my request. I asked the minister if he would ask your leave to have the documents printed in Hansard. That is the request I made.

Mr. Monteith (Perth): The hon. member said tabled.

Mr. Lennard: The hon. member does not know what he wants.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I said I would table the documents. I have only one copy of the letter and the affidavit. I shall have to make photostat copies so I will have one in my possession. I shall table the documents tomorrow.

KITIMAT—REPORTED INTENTION TO SHUT DOWN SMELTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Has he received a six page telegram from the Kitimat local of the united steel workers of America in which it is mentioned that a five to eight week shutdown of the smelter there will take place some time in June, and in which reference is also made to certain lay-offs and certain solutions are requested? Can the minister indicate what action is contemplated with respect to this matter?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, such a telegram was received this morning and an investigation is being made.

NEW BRUNSWICK—INTERIM PAYMENT ON WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day are called I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance whether an interim payment was recently made to the government of New Brunswick in respect of the winter works program?

Mr. Richard A. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): I shall have to make inquiries.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Does the hon. gentleman know that, according to the Fredericton Gleaner, an announcement to that effect was made on March 8—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: —by the hon. member for York-Sunbury?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member was looking in the wrong direction, but I hope he will be more attentive to this end of the room.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether the hon. member heard my question.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—WINNING OF WORLD CHAMPIONSHIP BY TRAIL SMOKE EATERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. I do so with utter delight and pleasure because he is a native son of the Kootenays. I am sure all hon. members of the house will wish to offer their warm and sincere congratulations to the Trail Smoke Eaters for winning the world's hockey championship. As a native son of the Kootenays and Acting Prime Minister of this country, a fact of which we are all proud, does the minister not think this a great achievement and triumph for Canada?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I think all hon. members of the house would wish to join with the hon. member for Kootenay West in congratulating this fine team on their victory. Canadians in all parts of the country are glad they have had this great success in Europe. Of course it is of particular importance to the city of Trail, from which they come and which has supported them so loyally for many years, and it is also of particular significance to all the other residents of the Kootenay district.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

SOUTH AFRICA—INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the discussions which took place today at the commonwealth prime ministers' conference in London with reference to the position of South Africa in the commonwealth, will the Acting Prime Minister tell the house what position Canada has adopted or, in the alternative, has he any comment to make?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe there were discussions this morning in the commonwealth conference concerning the South African question. These discussions were not concluded and will be going on again tomorrow morning. In the meantime it would be quite improper for me to make any statement with regard to what was said in the course of those discussions.

COMBINES

ELECTRICAL APPLIANCES—INQUIRY AS TO RETAIL PRICING GUIDE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice. Would the parliamentary secretary inquire and inform the house whether officials have examined the first retail pricing guide issued by the Canadian General Electric Company Limited after the government's amendments to the Combines Investigation Act last session to ascertain whether consumer electrical goods, in consequence, are no longer available except at prices 25 per cent to 40 per cent higher than formerly?

If an examination has taken place, is the minister satisfied that because of the amendments of last session there is no offence against the remaining provisions of the act respecting resale price maintenance?

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the officials are on the job in this respect, but I shall be glad to refer the matter to the appropriate officials for comment.

PACIFIC PRESS LIMITED—STATEMENT ON STATUS OF INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday and Friday of last week the hon. member for Skeena asked questions about the Pacific Press Limited case. In this regard the director informs me that in view of the commission report the situation is being kept under careful surveillance. Up to the present time no court actions have been undertaken as a result of the report referred to, and as to whether such actions are contemplated, no final decision has yet been reached.

BRITISH COLUMBIA

UNION CONTRIBUTIONS TO POLITICAL PARTIES —CONSIDERATION OF PROVINCIAL LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Justice, notice of which was given some days ago. Has the minister examined Bill No. 42 of the British Columbia legislature to determine its constitutionality with particular reference to the section having to do with direct or indirect contributions of employees to political parties?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member's question is contrary to the practice established in this house about questions relating to the disallowance of provincial legislation.

Mr. Argue: On the point of order you raise, I suggest the practice has been that it is in order to ask questions as to the government's consideration of the constitutionality of a measure. In many cases in the past it has been ruled that it is not in order to debate the matter, and therefore we have not been able to debate similar questions. I am positive I am accurate in saying it has been held in order to ask the questions of this nature on the orders of the day. I refer of course to our procedure with respect to the famous Newfoundland legislation.

Mr. Speaker: This is a matter of some importance, because questions of this kind may arise from time to time. If the hon. member would allow his question to stand I should like to review our practice in this matter. My present recollection is that we have not accepted questions about the exercise of the prerogative of the disallowance of provincial statutes in advance of the time of dissallowance. I shall be glad to look into the matter, and if I am incorrect in my recollection perhaps the hon. member would not be prejudiced by deferring his question until tomorrow.

Mr. Winch: You cannot do it after 12 months.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): On that point, Mr. Speaker, citation 161 on pages 135 and 136 of Beauchesne reads as follows:

> Disallowance of provincial laws is not one of the functions of the dominion parliament.

It goes on to point out that this subject is dealt with in section 90 of the British North America Act, and then says:

> The only authority that can disallow provincial laws is the governor in council... Since the only power enjoyed by our House of Commons in matters of disallowance is to criticize the action of the dominion government after it has either disallowed or refused to disallow a provincial act, it follows that the house must await government action before taking the matter up.

Mr. Winch: That is why the whole thing is farcical.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the house leader for the reference, but I should like to review the matter if the house will allow me.

Hon. W. J. Browne (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw your attention to page 147 of Beauchesne, citation 171, paragraph (m), which says that a question shall not ask solution of a legal proposition such as interpretation of a statute, which is exactly what the hon. member is seeking.

TRADE

"CLASS OR KIND MADE IN CANADA"—REPORTED STATEMENT BY REVENUE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Is he aware of the statement made by his colleague the Minister of National Revenue in Washington, as broadcast over "News Round-Up" this morning, that what is commonly known as legislation of a class or kind made in Canada now before the house will not be used against the United States? Will the minister comment on this statement?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I expect that the Minister of National Revenue will be back in the house on Wednesday, and perhaps it would be just as well if the hon. member for Laurier would ask him the question directly.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is asking about a matter which is to come before the house for debate in due course, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. Chevrier: The matter has already been under discussion, is now on the order paper and has not been completed. The Minister of National Revenue has made a comment on it in Washington, and I think I am entitled to ask the government what its reaction is to the statement as reported over "News Round-Up". I have a supplementary question arising out of the first one. Will the Acting Prime Minister tell the house whether or not it is the intention of the government to lay aside this legislation in so far as the United States is concerned, when the legislation is passed by the house?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, any policy of that kind is not discussed on orders of the day.

Mr. Chevrier: This is a policy which has already been announced by the government and concerning which legislation is on the order paper. Therefore the matter has been determined, and as it has been determined by the government that is why I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether it is the intention not to use the legislation against the United States as is indicated in a report in the Toronto Star headed "Tariff Changes Not Aimed at United States, Nowlan says".

Mr. Green: I am afraid the Liberal brain trust has not been working very effectively over the week end.

Mr. Chevrier: That is a very evasive answer.

INDUSTRY

INQUIRY AS TO FINANCING OF MINING PROJECTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys a question stemming from a statement by M. S. Fotheringham, president of Steep Rock Iron Mines Limited, that it is impractical for the mine to go ahead with development at lake St. Joseph without massive backing by United States funds. Has the government under consideration at this time any measures which would assist in the raising of capital on a large scale in Canada for such mining projects?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Has the minister under consideration any measures which would encourage United States capital to assist such projects?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked a very broad question, as he knows, and I think he can hardly expect anything of that scope to be dealt with on the orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION OF BILL NO. C-70

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have another question I should like to pose and I think I will have to address it to the Acting Prime Minister, because three other cabinet ministers are involved in the particular legislation. Have any requests been received with respect to postponing or delaying the consideration of Bill No. C-70 for this year? If I may clarify that, I am referring to the bill in the name of the Minister of Justice dealing with the furnishing of financial and other statistical information by corporations and unions.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): I will have inquiries made.

PRIVATE BILLS

INTERNATIONAL BRAIN RESEARCH ORGANIZATION

The house in committee on Bill No. S-9, to incorporate international brain research organization—Mr. Fairfield—Mr. Flynn in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a very few minutes to say a few words on clause 1 of Bill No. S-9, to incorporate international brain research organization.

Without doubt this is an important measure. We were given a most interesting discourse on the bill by the sponsor when the motion for second reading was before the house. In no way whatsoever am I opposing the bill, but I do feel it raises one or two questions with respect to which I should like to have the comments of the sponsor.

The purport of the bill in principle is to incorporate the international brain research organization for the purposes outlined in the objects set forth in the bill. To be precise, those objects are to develop, support, co-ordinate, promote and undertake throughout the world scientific research and education in all fields concerning the brain, to promote international collaboration and interchange of scientific information on brain research, and to provide and assist in the dissemination of information relating to brain research through any media whatsoever.

In so far as brain research is concerned, I feel it is very important to attempt to understand just what drives an individual, although it is a very difficult problem in view of the fact that almost everyone has an aberration of one kind or another. I should like to hear some comment from the hon. member, who is sponsoring this bill, regarding the research attack on the problem of finding out what is wrong with the mind, and why it is perhaps necessary to establish this additional organization for that particular job.

We all appreciate that there are innumerable associations and organizations, provincial, national and international, which deal with different aspects of research on the human body in attempts to find causes and cures. There are associations in existence today which deal with diseases of the heart and chest, as well as cancer, rheumatoid arthritis and arteriosclerosis. There are of course additional organizations dealing with research regarding both children's diseases and mental health problems. I have only named a few.

In view of the fact that the sponsor of this bill has a magnificent reputation not only as a member of this house but as a physician and surgeon, and in view of his interest in research, I would ask that during the introduction of this bill to incorporate a brain research organization he satisfy us of the existence of some of the problems in this connection. He could perhaps indicate whether he thinks the time has arrived, in regard to research of this type, when an over-all organization should be established. We all know that hardly a two week period passes without our receiving analytical reports from various organizations of this kind. During the same period individuals receive requests to join, make donations and, in general, help these organizations in some way. We all realize that these organizations hold individual drives and community drives in attempts to raise funds.

I would ask the sponsor of this bill to indicate, as I have said earlier, in view of the existence of these various organizations and the legislation both provincial and national which covers them, whether an over-all research body should be established to support the research in respect of these various diseases. I am sure that if these organizations continue attempting to support research in the way they have in the past, we will reach the point where we will be asked to establish an organization to support research into the problems of hangnails and dandruff. I appreciate of course that this is an exaggeration, but I hope the sponsor will appreciate the point I am making. I feel that now is the time for the hon. member sponsoring this bill to express himself about the entire medical research situation and the method of financing research programs. I would certainly appreciate it if the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa would rise at this time and expatiate, as my chemistry teacher used to say.

The Chairman: Before the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa replies I would say that if he follows the suggestion of the hon. member for Vancouver East he will open the door to a wide debate. We might find that we are discussing the whole problem of research, and we are now at the committee stage of this bill, with the sole object of incorporating the international brain research organization. I have no objection to the hon. member making a short reply but I would warn him that I might be forced to intervene if the debate becomes too wide.

Mr. Fairfield: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Vancouver East seems to be puzzled by the number of organizations for research into cancer, heart disease, arteriosclerosis, but I must remind him that these are national research organizations and that the proposed organization is an international research organization respecting brain research. Despite the fact that we have quite extensive research in this country it is fairly localized to two or three spots in Canada and therefore confined. We find, as a result, that most of our discoveries in connection with the brain have been made only in the past 15 or 20 years and have come to light in the main through international meetings which have not been organized, except by research teams from different countries.

At the meeting where this suggestion concerning an international organization was made there were 247 members in attendance. These individuals were not general practitioners or surgeons, but research men who were very much interested in research in respect of the brain. The organization which is now being proposed has that international flavour which is required because of the fact that the different panels and different disciplines throughout the different countries of the world use different methods for research into the brain, and to expect them to carry on this very vital task with the support of one country would be too much to ask. That is why this research organization must be set up.

In so far as the questions of development, support and co-ordination are concerned, I might say that proposals have been extensive but will not be accepted until certain funds are provided. This organization will be a clearing house for information at the outset and, following funds being made available through grants from foundations or grants from UNESCO—one has already been received to assist during this formative stage—the organization will be responsible for the establishing of fellowships to assist scientific workers; for the fostering of medical students who are primarily interested in research; and for setting up temporary research teams in countries where funds do not exist to cover the cost of equipment needed for research in respect of brain diseases.

Through their teachers and many of their finest men in this organization they will be available to promote education in brain research. Through the use of laboratory facilities in some of the larger centres of countries such as the United States, the United Kingdom, the U.S.S.R. and Canada they will make available the apparatus to help underdeveloped countries in their brain research. I hope that answers the hon. member's question.

Mr. Peters: I want to congratulate the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa on the presentation he made on the motion for second reading of this bill. It seems to me that the hon. member must be a highly trained and qualified doctor. Certainly he has done a good deal of research into the reasoning behind the setting up of this international brain research organization. If a number of our doctors in Canada are as qualified to speak on this subject as he has indicated that he is, I think we in Canada will feel proud of the developments that will take place through the leadership of the members that have been suggested as the founding members of this unincorporated association.

The hon. member points out that there were 250 scientists from 30 countries taking part in the convention held under UNESCO which decided to set up this international organization. They held a central meeting. A number of them were polled and a vote was taken which resulted in the setting up of this organization.

In his introduction the hon. member also pointed out that research of a similar and quite often parallel nature was taking place in brain research in various countries throughout the world. He mentioned particularly the United States and Russia who, of course, have pioneered in this field along with Britain and Canada under Dr. Penfield himself. He mentioned that these people in many cases had been developing techniques and doing research of a similar nature, and that if the exchange of information and of the equipment that is necessary for this type of work had been available, and the results of that research had been available, probably the duplication that was taking place would have been avoided and the intelligence of doctors experimenting in these fields would have been directed forward rather than running parallel as it now must.

I was very much interested in reading the names of the various people comprising the original committee or association. The first one mentioned is Herbert Henri Jasper, professor, who is widely known for his work and his teaching in the field of brain development. The next is Wilder Graves Penfield, surgeon, who also is very well known. He has been known for many years as an outstanding brain surgeon in the city of Montreal in the Royal Victoria Hospital.

Mr. Chown: Montreal Neurological Institute.

Mr. Peters: He is a man about whom many stories are told. I can remember one about a young boy being brought down from northern Quebec with a serious brain injury as a result of an accident. When the operation was over and the young lad was on his way to recovery the father, on asking Doctor Penfield how much the bill was going to be, was asked by the doctor how much money he made, and what kind of job he had. When the doctor was informed that the father was a miner in Noranda mine, the bill seemed to have been set in keeping with the earnings of the parent and this young chap was not prevented from receiving the benefit of treatment by this famous doctor. Probably arrangements would be made for the next patient to contribute something toward that assistance.

Brain surgery in Canada, as in other parts of the world, over the years has gone through the same type of reluctant support as that of other forms of medicine from Pasteur and Lister on down. There have always been those who say that you should not play around with things you cannot see, in some cases, and do not understand. It has been a field in which a great deal of difficulty has been experienced when corrective treatment or corrective surgery is attempted; I refer to the field of criminal and psychopathic tendencies. Treatment through the removal or the curtailing of the use of certain lobes in certain cases may solve the problem with regard to sex deviates and others. A continual cry is going up that this type or research or this type of experimentation should not be allowed. In establishing this international organization it seems to me that we have brought into consideration the facts developed in other countries that probably would have a bearing on the relationship between the legislation and the various types of brain treatment that we would have in Canada as a result of the work done in other countries.

Some countries with more progressive legislation in this field than ours will be a factor, I am quite sure, in the work of the international research organization. I expect it will make it much easier for doctors in Canada and in other countries across the world to do initial research work on the correction of brain ailments. One of the reasons I am interested in the people who were named to the original unincorporated association is the fact that these are the people to whom the people of the world will look for guidance in connection with those who will be suffering or who have suffered from brain injuries.

I looked in the library to see what information was available on some of these people. It is surprising and unfortunate that in many cases more information is not available concerning what has been done and the calibre of the people that we are being asked to endorse in this organization. In the Dalhousie Review I read an article written by one of the doctors involved, namely Dr. Wilder Penfield. He was addressing the Dalhousie University faculty of medicine at their annual refresher course in October 1953 and he said in part as follows:

> There is a river not to be found on any map of this terrestrial globe, yet a river well known to all the sons of men, and never very far from any of us. It flows in the Realm of Time. It is Lethe, the river of Oblivion. What memories of noble persons and heroic deeds, what words of wisdom and what glorious thoughts have been engulfed in that dark, remorseless tide.

He was speaking, of course, of research into all facets of brain surgery. He went on to say something that I think most hon. members would be pleased to endorse. He said that in giving these lectures he must wear the mantle of Stewart, who was a former president of that organization. Then he said:

> Each doctor of medicine discovers that he wears a cloak of authority and wisdom in the eyes of his patients, if not in the eyes of his family. It covers the nakedness of our shortcomings. It causes us to stand up straight and tall, each one according to the stature God gave him.

The mover of the bill did not say to what extent the organization was going to involve itself in brain research of types other than those in which it is presently engaged. It has been pointed out by scientists, and it was certainly pointed out by the doctor in the same relationship, that in the science of brain research we have not gone very far. Yet the brain is the fundamental machine which runs the human body and which has developed the human race. It is the machine that gives us those things that are good and in some cases the brain is responsible for those things which are bad. I refer to the malfunctions of the mind that occurred in the late Adolf Hitler. He is certainly not missed by anyone, but pershaps he could have been treated and his undoubted talents could have been put to work in a much better fashion if research in that type of field had been developed to the stage we expect it to develop in the very near future.

Our hospitals in Canada are full of people suffering from mental disorders of one kind or another. Good surgeons will eventually be able to correct a great many of the problems which now affect these people who are in institutions. They have found out exactly what part of the brain produces our faults, controls emotion, memory and the other things that go to make up the human mind. They know that in order to get at these things they have to apply stimulus to the brain. This has only been achieved because of the persistence of people of the calibre of Professor Jasper and Doctor Penfield. If these people, on their own and with very limited resources in many cases, had not been willing to pioneer in this field, particularly in Canada which is a small country with a proportionately small grant for this type of medical development, we would not know what is wrong with a great many of the people who are in our mental institutions.

It seems to me we could gain a great deal from co-operating with countries like Russia, England and the United States and could arrive at a quicker solution to the problem that now exists in Canada. As we look at the statistics of the number of mental patients in hospitals who are under care, we see that this problem is not getting any smaller even though research and surgery facilities have been developed to a great extent. In fact, this problem is getting larger.

The high speed of modern day living, the tensions that are developing at a great rate and the noise factors that are involved, coupled with the lack of exercise and other things that may previously have dissipated some of these tensions, are problems that are being studied in institutions. It has been felt by many people who are concerned with this matter that surgery itself may be a solution for eliminating the tensions that are produced today.

There is another much more positive endeavour, and that is in the field of congenital and pre-natal mental conditions. Many of these conditions are now being prevented by chemistry. Many of the accidents of birth that took place years ago are being prevented by chemistry, the use of hormones and other secretions. These mental ailments are no longer as widespread as they were. A cure is in sight for many of these people born with congenital diseases, and particularly those with submental capacity, through the use of chemical preparations. In the future many more people will be born with normal intelligence, with their minds undamaged, where years ago this was a very large and very worrisome field for doctors. At that time they had no opportunity and no method of checking to find out why this type of development was taking place, or what could be done about it.

I think members of this house are appreciative of the fact that this organization is being born under the auspices of the United Nations, with its support and help, and that it is taking into consideration the best medical research ability that is available. We should be, and are, proud of the fact that this organization is being developed in Canada and that at least for the time being the headquarters of the organization will be in this country.

I think this will mean that those in Canada who are suffering from mental ailments will perhaps in the near future be treated by surgical, chemical and medical methods that will be available here as soon as they are available anywhere else. Probably people across the country will remember these four or five people who are setting up this organization.

As a Canadian I certainly give my wholehearted support to this organization being born and established in Canada.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I might be permitted to say a few words on this matter. I believe it was a week ago today, if I am not mistaken, that the miscellaneous private bills committee met and considered this bill. Unfortunately I am not a member of that committee and I was not able to be there. I certainly would have liked to be there because of the extreme importance of the subject matter of the bill itself and the great advantage not only to Canada but to the world that will undoubtedly accrue as a result of the establishment of this organization in this country.

This organization will collect, correlate and disseminate as much information as it possibly can about all the fields and activities of the brain itself. I know that hon. members of this house who are also members of the medical profession have an intense, close concern and interest in the establishment of this organization. Their closeness of concern, of course, comes from their field of work. Those members who are laymen as far as the medical field is concerned have an equal interest though, undoubtedly, their understanding of the complexities of the problem is not as great. So I am sure those hon. members who are directly interested will not think that because some members of this house are, to a degree, inarticulate with regard to this subject they do not take the interest in it which it deserves, because I am sure we all value the importance which this work has in our society. The brain itself is a most fabulous mechanism and though it may sometimes appear to go awry, even the most massive I.B.M. machine must pale into insignificance, I think, compared with some aspects of its activity.

I believe there is little doubt that the house will agree to the passage of this measure, and I wonder if before we pass from this item the hon. member who is sponsoring the bill would explain in a little more detail the financial arrangements of the proposed new organization. He mentioned, I believe, that the United Nations, or UNESCO, had made one financial contribution. I wonder if he could tell the committee what he expects the financial relationship to be between the organization which he now seeks to establish and UNESCO or any similar international organization. Can he tell us whether or not there will be a large financial contribution made by UNESCO, or whether it is hoped that the public will be able to finance this project primarily by means of private contributions.

Before I close I should like to leave this thought with the hon. member. For some time an immediate concern of mine has been the field of narcotic addiction and alcoholism both of which have been considered in recent years, and, I think, correctly so, to be the result of malfunctioning of the mind leading to conduct which is not in accord with that expected by the majority of society. We look upon the results of these addictions as being due to mental disturbances—mental illness—inability to face reality and an attempt to hide from the realities of life. I hope that when the organization is established it will be able to collect and disseminate information in this field concerning the mental functions of people who have propensities toward addiction to drugs and alcohol to the end that not only here in Canada but in other parts of the world we may have a better understanding of this problem and that we may be able to evolve measures to reduce the waste of human and mental assets to which such addiction leads.

Mr. Fairfield: Perhaps I may answer the question concerning financial support. There has been no approach made, as yet, by this unincorporated body, but there has been some agreement in principle, informally, by government research bodies in Canada, France and the United States. The organization has not so far sought any charitable donations. It is hoped that when the bill for incorporation has gone through parliament certain foundations may be approached with a view to their donating money. Since there has been no incorporation as yet, no approach has been made to the Department of National Revenue as to whether or not this is a charitable organization.

To deal with the immediate budget, the estimates are $250,000 a year increasing by that amount over the next three or four years to a final figure of $1 million a year. Thus, hon. members can see that the plans are extensive and require a fair amount of money. As far as the government is concerned, there has been only the contribution made through the national research council of Canada to defray the expenses of the executive secretary, Dr. Jasper, while he was working on the organization of this corporation.

Mr. Winch: May I ask the sponsor of this bill if there is any relationship at the present time between this unincorporated organization and the mental health organization which presently operates in Canada. If not, will there be any such relationship in future? At the moment, in the absence of a fuller explanation, I cannot differentiate, generally speaking between the broad aspects of brain research and mental health.

Mr. Fairfield: One is, broadly speaking, engaged in research only and the other is more or less concerned with treatment. The mental health foundation is concerned primarily with the treatment of mental diseases. This corporation is concerned primarily with research.

Mr. Winch: On the functions of the brain?

Mr. Fairfield: It will be understood that included in the panels of this organization there are a large number of behavioural scientists who will co-operate with national bodies in any country as far as mental health is concerned.

Mr. Winch: This is, then, a straight research organization having to do with the function of the brain and so on. It has nothing to do with diseases of the brain?

Mr. Fairfield: It certainly has. It has very much to do with diseases of the brain. In so far as many aberrations are now considered to be diseases either caused pharmacologically, or by some lesion, chemical lesion or even traumatic lesion of the brain,—all of these have some connection with mental health. But this is a purely research organization. It is not primarily interested in treatment. It is interested in finding out how to treat these cases.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Objects.

Mr. Peters: I presume this is the clause which has to do with the financing of the proposed organization. What is the method which it is intended to use? Is it to be contributions from the public? How is it intended to pay for the international organization itself?

Mr. Fairfield: I thought I had just answered that question. I think I explained it fairly fully.

Mr. Peters: I was out of the chamber for a few moments.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Central committee.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, what I will have to say in relation to this clause will also apply to clause 5. Clause 4 has reference to the management of the affairs of the organization by a central committee to be composed of members elected or appointed as the organization may prescribe by bylaw from time to time. For the purpose of continuity I should point out that clause 5 refers to bylaws now in existence.

I am concerned about the reference to the appointment of members. From time to time a hue and cry is raised with respect to the executive of voluntary organizations in Canada, the charge being made that the democratic process of election is not followed. I realize it is necessary to have provisions for appointing members and these are useful if they are not abused. Can the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa tell us how appointments are made at the present time?

Mr. Fairfield: Mr. Chairman, I believe I mentioned when first moving this bill that the central committee would be composed of representatives of several different panels representing the fields of neuroanatomy, neurochemistry, neuroendocrinology, neuropharmacology, neurophysiology, behavioural sciences, neurocommunications and biophysics. Each of the first five panels has already ballotted for and nominated two members. With respect to the last two panels, there are four in each of these two groups.

I do not think the hon. member need be concerned on an international basis, although I can appreciate his concern on a national basis. The central committee consists of the group of men in these seven panels coming from all over the world, France, Canada, U.S.A., Italy, Australia, U.S.S.R., Poland, et cetera. In addition to these panel members who are ballotted for and nominated by their panel, the central committee may appoint individual members at large who shall not be assigned to any one of the above mentioned panels. Such members will be selected from leading scientists in neurobiology, general neurophysiology, clinical sciences, or other fields not readily included in any one of the above panels. As new panels are formed in different types of brain research, I suppose the central committee will have authority to name a delegate from these panels.

Mr. Howard: I was interested only in the present arrangement and was not apprehensive about giving a potentially damaging power to someone. While I could not repeat the nomenclature used by the hon. member, I take it from his reply that the central committee is made up of seven representatives elected from seven panels plus three others from additional fields?

Mr. Fairfield: No, Mr. Chairman, there are 18 members from the panels plus the executive secretary who is already a member of the central committee. There are 19 plus 3.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 5—Bylaws, rules and regulations.

Mr. Howard: Paragraph (a) of this clause refers to conditions and classes of membership in the organization. Would the hon. member explain what that means?

Mr. Fairfield: This has reference to the classes I have already named. The panels are the classifications involved.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 6 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 9—First bylaws.

Mr. Winch: Under most acts of incorporation a definite time limit is set between the passing of the legislation and the calling of the first conference or convention. The language of this clause is as follows:

Subject to section 8, the first bylaws, rules and regulations of the organization shall be enacted at a time and place and in such manner as may be determined by the central committee of the unincorporated association—

Some acts of incorporation set the time limit at 12 months or two years. A recent measure passed in this house set the time limit at 18 months. This present provision, however, is indeterminate. The meeting may not take place for 20 years. Why is there no definite provision?

Mr. Fairfield: In drafting this measure reference was made to the form of incorporation of the last international organization to have been incorporated, the international air transport association incorporated in Montreal in 1945. This clause is similar to the clause in the measure incorporating that association. Under the bylaws the central committee must meet in ordinary session every two years.

Mr. Winch: Not according to this clause.

Mr. Fairfield: When this organization is incorporated it will be subject to the bylaws and regulations of the unincorporated organization.

Mr. Winch: Because of the language of clause 8 and because in the unincorporated organization there is a bylaw providing for meeting in ordinary session every two years, no provision of that nature has to be included in clause 9?

Mr. Fairfield: That is correct.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 10 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? Now, by leave?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fairfield moved the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word or two before the motion carries in order to express a feeling which I am sure is shared by every hon. member in the house. May I say how much we enjoyed and appreciated the clarity and understanding of the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa (Mr. Fairfield) in piloting the bill through the house. It was quite evident that he had an intimate and detailed knowledge of all the intricacies of the organization and its past and future activities and I for one wish to express my appreciation of the marvellous job he did in piloting the bill through the house.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

WENDY GRACE MCCULLOUGH

On the order:

Second reading of Bill SD-57, an act for the relief of Wendy Grace McCullough.—Mr. McCleave.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that all divorce bills shall stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Argue: Call them one at a time.

MARIE ANNE SIGOUIN

On the order:

Second reading of Bill SD-70, an act for the relief of Marie Anne Sigouin.

Mr. Broome: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I doubt whether my hon. friends in the corner want to punish our good friend, the second clerk assistant, by making him read all these orders. I should like to suggest that we stand all the rest of the divorce bills.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I would agree provided they are not consolidated and remain in the same form.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Subject to the reservation expressed by the hon. member for Timiskaming, is it the pleasure of the house that all the divorce bills be stood at this time?

Mr. Howard: Without consolidation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Without consolidation.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

AURORA PIPE LINE COMPANY

The house resumed from Monday, March 6, consideration in committee of Bill No. S-2, to incorporate Aurora Pipe Line Company—Mr. Woolliams—Mr. Flynn in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Argue: Where is the sponsor of the bill?

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I was hoping that the sponsor would be here but I can see that his alternate is here.

Mr. Chown: The sponsor is on his way to the house now.

Mr. Winch: I would move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again when the sponsor is here.

The Chairman: Would the hon. member put his motion in writing?

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for Vancouver East does not wish to speak on the bill at this time, I do.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I would move that the hon. member for Jasper-Edson be now heard.

The Chairman: We have a motion before the committee and I will put it right away. It is not debatable.

Motion (Mr. Winch) negatived: Yeas, 7; nays, 38.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I move that the hon. member for Jasper-Edson be now heard.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Chairman, at the outset of my remarks this afternoon I should like to comment on what has happened in the committee on this bill to incorporate the Aurora pipe line. We have witnessed, and I am sure will continue to witness, a determined effort on the part of that small minority to filibuster this bill. This minority is, of course, regarded as the champions of democracy on occasion, but apparently only when it suits their needs. I challenge the sincerity of this minority group in respect of a number of points.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order regarding the imputation that the motive of this group is to filibuster, and that we are insincere in what we say in this house. That imputation cannot be made in this house and I ask that it be immediately withdrawn.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Chairman, I withdraw any remarks I have made regarding the hon. member.

The Chairman: Order. If the point of order is settled by the withdrawal by the hon. member of the offending words, then I must rise myself on another point of order. The remarks of the hon. member are certainly not relevant to clause 1 of the bill under discussion.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Mr. Speaker, I will try to quickly cover the points I have in mind.

The first point I have in mind relates to a statement made by the hon. member for Vancouver South in respect of the construction of the pipe line. Unfortunately, the hon. member chose to raise this question even though he had prior knowledge that what he was saying was not correct.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Broome: I will rise on this point of order myself.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Argue: The hon. member for Jasper-Edson has said that the hon. member for Vancouver South made certain statements in this house knowing in advance that the statements he made were incorrect. I would suggest that such an accusation by the hon. member for Jasper-Edson is unparliamentary and should be withdrawn.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): If I indeed said what the hon. member for Assiniboia has suggested then I withdraw. What I intended to say was that the hon. member for Vancouver South had been assured prior to his statement that the company involved intended to use Canadian contractors on the Canadian construction.

The second point I should like to cover, sir, concerns the whole question of the discussion of this bill in committee. There have been several individuals who have complained in this committee during the discussion. on clause 1. I suggest the hon. member for Skeena was one member who did so. This hon. member, as well as any other hon. member of this house, could have attended at the meetings of the committee discussing this bill if they so wished.

I should like to make one further point regarding the fact that representatives of Pembina Pipe Line Limited, and its subsidiary, Foothills pipe line, did not choose to attend the committee meetings. I would suggest they did not attend because these representatives were quite willing to stand on their own feet and accept their responsibilities and chances regarding this operation. I believe they are happy as a Canadian company to take their case to the Alberta conservation board and the national energy board. I am sure that this company Pembina Pipelines will be given a licence to set up a gathering system within the province of Alberta.

I would draw your attention, Mr. Chairman, to the fact that one year ago another pipe line bill was before this committee in respect of Northern Pipe Line Limited, introduced by the hon. member for Kindersley. At that time our friends in the corner asked if the government of Saskatchewan was in favour of that bill. The hon. member for Kindersley replied that the government of Saskatchewan looked at the bill with favour and we heard nothing more from our friends in respect of that bill. Apparently our friends in the corner go along with anything the socialist government of Saskatchewan puts forward but do not wish to have competition in the field of by-products in Alberta. I point out to you, sir, as well as those members, that the element of competition is of vital importance to the people of Alberta. As I have said previously, this element of competition has a bearing on the determination of the price of these by-products to our farmers, the citizens of the small towns, and the local industries. This competition will determine the price of these very essential by-products, whether used as fuel or raw material by local industries.

Mr. Chairman, as the member for the constituency in which Pembina Pipe Line Limited head office is situated, I assure you that company, as a Canadian company, is not unwilling to take its chances with competition. I assure you, as a citizen of Alberta, that I should like to see the proper development of our resources. I should like to see local and secondary industries developed there to as great an extent as possible. I am sure that the people of Alberta need and hope to see foreign capital coming into our province to assist in the development of these resources. We ask only that Canadians be given an equal opportunity of participating in the financing and operation of these lines. I suggest to you that the government of the province of Alberta, although I do not agree with its policies in every regard, has certainly been successful in respect of the Alberta natural gas company, which was set up to gather gas in the province. I am sure that a similar course will be followed in regard to these by-products, if it is feasible. However, I want to suggest to you finally that if we, as Canadians, cannot accept the incorporation of this company because of the possible competition which will result, there is certainly something wrong with us, and for that reason we should accept this incorporation without further delay. I feel this will be a first step in the direction of allowing the export of some of our by-products which are now in a surplus position.

Mr. Broome: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member who has just sat down made certain references to a statement I made and I should like to quote from Hansard in this regard. I suggested I had information that this pipe line would be built through a negotiated contract with a United States contractor and that no Canadian firm would be allowed the opportunity of participating. This information was not held as a secret but was turned over to the hon. member for Bow River during a conversation between that hon. member and myself. He read certain excerpts from a letter he had which appeared to be rather inconclusive. I felt the excerpts would have been more conclusive had they been placed on Hansard.

I have been reported at page 2677 of Hansard as follows:

> What is the situation in regard to the construction of the line? I feel I am being fair to the sponsor of this bill, as I have informed him of the information I have at hand.

Further on I am reported as follows:

When I conclude my remarks I hope the hon. gentleman will be able to correct me as to the accuracy of my information.

I could have been corrected regarding my information at that time. It could be that the information was correct at that time and that the company has changed its policy since then.

It seems to me that some hon. members around here take the attitude that no one shall have his own ideas about anything in this house, and that no one except someone who lives in Alberta can talk about pipe lines. It is a matter that concerns the whole country and every hon. member in this house. If we want to talk about accuracy of statement, Mr. Chairman, I will refer you to Hansard of March 6, 1961. After certain references the hon. member for Bow River, as reported at page 2705 of Hansard, said:

Under subsection (d) of section 44—

He was referring to the act setting up the national energy board.

—the board must have regard to the question of financial responsibility. That will be considered. It must have regard to the financial structure of the applicant. That will be considered. It must have regard to the methods of financing the line. That will be considered. It must have regard to the extent to which Canadians will have an opportunity of participating in the financing, engineering and construction of the line. That will be considered.

What does the act say? It says that the board "may". There is a great deal of difference. It says that the board may, subject to the approval of the governor in council, issue a certificate. At the end of the first clause it is stated that the board may have regard to the following and it goes on to mention the availability of oil or gas, the economic feasibility, the financial responsibility and all the rest of it. The word is not "must"; it is "may".

Mr. Woolliams: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Broome: Yes.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder whether the hon. member has read Maxwell on the interpretation of statutes wherein it is stated that "may" may be interpreted as "shall", and vice versa. If he has done so, I should like to hear from him.

Mr. Broome: I know how lawyers can twist points. I know that two counsel can be put in a trial; that one can take one standpoint and the other can take the opposite one; and that both can buttress their arguments. All I know is simple language and to me "may" is not "shall". If lawyers would start to write in simple language, it would be a great deal better for them also. We have heard a great deal about Canadian participation in this line. I tried to set the record straight in my opening remarks when I spoke on this bill. I referred to the evidence given by Mr. Burgis when, as reported at page 45 of the committee minutes of proceedings and evidence we find the following. This is with regard to a question by the hon. member for Calgary South who was inquiring as to the financing of the parent company and as to the degree of public participation in that financing. In reply Mr. Burgis said as follows:

Mr. Burgis: Yes. We take the point of view that this is a relatively small line, and it would be quite usual for an oil company to build it as part of their normal operations. In terms of public financing in Canada back in 1957 our directors did offer public participation in the ownership of Hudson's Bay Oil & Gas, when there was no public clamor for ownership.

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): You say in 1957?

Mr. Burgis: Yes.

Mr. Smith (Calgary South): But, what was the final result?

Mr. Burgis: 9.6 per cent—approximately 10 per cent—of the outstanding shares are owned by some 12,000 public shareholders.

I pointed out that you could take one interpretation from these remarks. The interpretation that seems to be taken by the members in their speeches was not the interpretation given in information I placed before this house and it has not been refuted as yet by anyone speaking on this bill. That information referred to the fact that the public participation in this issue came about through rights given to shareholders in Continental Oil and Hudson's Bay Company. These were rights to purchase shares in their wholly-owned subsidiary Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas. Prior to 1957 there was no public participation in the ownership of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas. The inference here is that there was public participation and that it came about through this indirect means.

I wonder how many shares are owned by Canadians or residents of this country in those parent companies, namely, Continental Oil and Hudson's Bay Company. I would venture to make this suggestion about the public participation in these companies—when I say "public" I refer to the Canadian public because I think that is what we should be concerned about in this House of Commons—that Canadian public participation in this parent company, would be, I would guess, and I emphasize the word "guess" because I trust that my hon. friend from Bow River may have detailed information on this matter, not more than 2 per cent to 3 per cent. I just wanted to set the record straight.

I agree with the fact that we want to export these commodities. But I say that in this forum we will let it be known that companies that are going to be incorporated in Canada, based upon our natural resources, shall take care that they are in tune with the climate of opinion prevailing in this country, and that climate is that Canadians shall have the right to participate. This is what I am talking about, namely the right to participate. I am not talking about not bottling up our resources; furthering logical and needed development; or taking by-products of which we have an excess to a market which needs them. All these are good things. But this benefit can be achieved in this new way of letting Canadians take part in these ventures.

This is the reason for my opposition to this bill. At no place in this evidence do I see any indication of a real attempt by the company to take this matter into account. All of the blather and furor cannot disguise that fact. I ask anyone to show me one place where any such evidence can be found. I therefore oppose this bill, Mr. Chairman. When I first spoke on it, I wanted to go to the committee to get the information. I have not obtained the information I wanted. On the basis of what I have been told today and from a reading of Hansard— and I read Hansard because I was not here for the full debate when the bill came up for consideration last Monday—I say that my questions have not as yet been answered. Until they are answered I oppose this bill.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Winch: I have maintained an interest in this bill ever since it was introduced. Through the medium of conversation and that of correspondence I have done my best to obtain every bit of factual information possible. I have either listened to every speech that has been made on the bill since it was introduced or, if I was unavoidably absent, I have read in Hansard the speeches that were made. I find myself now in the same position as that in which I was when the bill was introduced and in the same position as the hon. member for Vancouver South who has just spoken. I do not feel that we can pass clause 1. I am opposed to the bill in question. I am opposed to it for many reasons. In spite of the emphatic denials made by some hon. members, they have not been able to present answers to the problems which arise in the course of the passage of this bill for incorporation; and those answers should be given if it is to receive the authorization of this House of Commons and of the other place and royal assent.

I anticipated that we would obtain a great deal of information in committee. I am very, very sorry that for a considerable part of that meeting we did not have a reporter in attendance and the transcription is not complete. I think we have to emphasize this question. What does this bill mean, either through the reading of the bill, through the information that was given us in committee or that which has been given by the various members who supported the bill? Certain facts stand out. First, not only is it not denied but it is admitted by the sponsor of this bill and others that Aurora Pipe Line Company is a United States controlled company as far as the majority of its preferred and common shares are concerned. Second, it is not interested in developing any secondary industry in the province of Alberta.

It was most interesting to listen a few moments ago to the exhortation of the hon. member for Jasper-Edson in support of the bill. He pointed out his interest in the developing of secondary industry in the province of Alberta. We have it not only on the authority of the wording of the bill itself but also on the authority of Mr. Burgis, who appeared before the committee, that this company is not interested in any sale in Alberta whatsoever; it is only interested in export, and export to the lines of Continental Oil in Idaho and Montana. Of course, there is then a connection, if they wish, clear through to Chicago.

We have heard a great deal from hon. members who support this bill about Canadian ownership, Canadian development and the absolutely vital need for us not to be hewers of wood and drawers of water but to develop secondary industry.

I am not going into detail on this matter because it is well known to hon. members. Some two years ago this house incorporated a company which laid down as a priority requirement that the interests of Alberta should come first; second, the secondary industry in Alberta and then, and then only, export outside the boundaries of our country. Moreover not only is that organization the majority-wise Canadian owned and Canadian financed, or will be so financed if the plans go through, but we also know that they will not just deal with the southwestern corner of Alberta. They are interested in the entire province of Alberta and they have already signed what might be termed preliminary contracts to take up 75,000 barrels a day on an export basis if that much is available. We have this company to compare with the one we are now being asked to incorporate. This company only wishes to deal with the cream of the by-product group.

An hon. Member: Cream, my foot.

Mr. Winch: It only wishes to deal with one small section of Alberta. Everything is for export, and the company has no interest in secondary development. A total of just 11,000 barrels a day is involved.

I think we have a responsibility to very seriously consider these matters. Moreover, I question very much what is behind this bill. I do not think we have been told the entire story. Although we had the admission in committee that the contemplated expenditure on this very short section of line in order to get across the border will be, I think $1½ million, this company is being incorporated for $10 million. The only explanation we have been given so far is that this is normal and it is the general thing to incorporate for $10 million. You will find that on the record.

To me this does not quite make sense. There is something else that does not quite make sense. We have heard the statements of the sponsor of this bill and those who support it that all that is concerned is this one section in southwestern Alberta, this matter of 11,000 barrels a day which they hope to achieve. But when you read the provisions of the bill itself you find that they will have the power, although of course they have nothing in mind whatsoever, to operate in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

If they want powers for that, why are they telling us that all they are interested in is this small section in southwestern Alberta, just 11,000 barrels a day? That is one of the provisions of the bill. Moreover, let us not forget this. I am fairly certain that this question was asked at the time a Hansard reporter was present at the committee. Mr. Burgis was asked whether they envisaged tapping the Yukon and the Northwest Territories and he replied, "That is a possibility. The parent company is doing certain exploration work in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories".

Therefore I say that we have to look behind the actual statements we have heard in this committee and look at the meaning of the words of the bill. We have to look at some of the things that slipped out during the course of questioning in the committee. For an expenditure of $1½ million—which will be the actual expenditure—an incorporation of $10 million is required, and they ask for the powers in a certain section, which I cannot discuss in detail at this moment, in connection with Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. Also, we have the statement of Mr. Burgis in the committee, that in the future there may be this interest in tapping the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. Therefore it is not just a question concerning Alberta but also the Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

In other words, there is that vital question of policy and the motivation of export, export only by the Aurora Pipe Line Company. In contrast to that we have the position of the other pipe-line company incorporated two years ago along the lines I have mentioned, which are set out in the act and in the evidence given before a committee of this house on that matter. This is a very serious matter.

May I also mention another point which I think is a very important one. Speaker after speaker who supported this bill, especially during our last discussion on this matter, emphasized the fact that this company or any company has to go before the Alberta oil and gas conservation board, which of course is not a child of this parliament, and before the national energy board. It was said that there is all the protection in the world in the national energy board. They have the power to look into the particular welfare of Alberta, the general good of Canada, the extent to which the company is Canadian-owned, Canadian financed and everything else. Be that as it may, with all the powers that the national energy board has, that does not relieve the members of this House of Commons and the other place of their responsibility. The job of the national energy board is to deal with something which in their considered opinion should be done for the good of Canada.

It would be a negation of the responsibility of parliament to say: we have the national energy board, so why the heck should we worry about whether the Aurora Pipe Line Company or any other pipe line company is good or bad; let the energy board make that decision. We were not sent here to deal with matters on that basis. That would be the acceptance of a political philosophy of letting the other fellow do it. It is a policy which I can definitely understand coming from some members on the other side of the house—a policy of passing the buck. Let us pass this bill, it implies, and allow the energy board to decide whether or not the results are good for Canada. That might be the way in which some hon. members in this house feel, but others of us feel differently. We are here to listen to all arguments, to get all the information we can, to study the purpose and the effect of every solitary bill and amendment which comes before us, and that is what we intend to do. We intend to accept our responsibilities in connection with the bill now before us, and as far as we are concerned it will not be passed unless we feel it is for the good of Alberta and of this country.

I say there are many points which have not been answered. I say there is a darned sight more in this bill than has ever come out into the open. It is not possible to reconcile the statements which have been made by the executive staff of this company before a committee with some of their other statements. I contend that this measure is a lot of window dressing. There is a lot behind it which may, in one year or in ten years if this bill is passed, come back to haunt those who supported it. This is the third time I have spoken. Let hon. members opposite discredit our position as much as they wish, but we have in mind the acceptance of our responsibility to deal with matters which come before this house; second, to decide whether measures do serve the interests of a locality or of a province or of the nation, and third, to give support and encouragement to a company which is Canadian-owned and Canadian-financed, a company which gives priority to development in Canada and, in particular, to the development of secondary industries. You can go down the line, but I have yet to hear one sound pronouncement as to why we should allow the establishment of this United States company in Canada with the sole right of exporting the God-given resources of this country without, first of all, trying to utilize them ourselves.

Mr. Argue: We are opposing this bill once again because we think it is a bad bill for Canada. We think it is a bill which is unnecessary inasmuch as another program could have been devised to accomplish the obtaining of markets for Canadian products. We think we are maintaining a consistent position—one which we have maintained over the years—and that this government, by supporting the present measure, is doing a disservice to the nation. We believe that once again, according to this measure, we are handing over substantial Canadian resources to the control of citizens from outside our country.

I notice that the hon. member for Greenwood is in his place. I should be most interested if he were to make some comments in this debate. I should be interested to hear his views as to whether the bill now before the committee is the best way to regulate the handling of the products concerned.

The Tory party while in opposition stood for Canadian development, Canadian participation and Canadian control over natural gas and its distribution. But since it took office there has been a complete reversal, a capitulation by the government to the United States interests about which they complained so bitterly while in opposition. When this government took office they did not continue the view which they had expressed with regard to pipe lines while in opposition. They appointed a commission to try to get off the hook, but when the commission reported on the trans-Canada pipe line the report showed to what extent the interests of the nation had been sold out to United States buccaneers and certain budding millionaires in our own country. Now the position taken by the Conservative party is that even in connection with a small, short, tiny pipe line we cannot have public ownership or Canadian participation. That is a far cry from what was said with regard to the great trans-Canada pipe line. In debates on this subject on former occasions—I did not quote these references in my speech on the last occasion—the leader of the Conservative party of the day put forward the position taken by that party when he said this about the attitude of the government as recorded in Hansard for 1956 on page 2181:

> This is the only place to do so and this is the opportunity to declare our economic independence of the United States. This is the time to plan to make full use of the resources which God has given us.

The hon. gentleman went on to say on the same date:

> No matter how friendly any other nation may be I submit it is our duty as representatives of the people of Canada to follow a course which will assure Canada's economic as well as political independence. That course is not served by the resolution now presented to us.

I submit that that course is not served by the passage of the bill which is now under discussion in this committee. The pipe line in question is owned in the main by United States corporations which were involved in the transactions surrounding the trans-Canada pipe line.

I am pleased to see, however, that there seems to be at least a small indication of independence from the other side as was exemplified by the statement we heard today and the statements made on a former occasion by the hon. member for Vancouver South. We welcome his intervention in this debate. We think parliament would be better served if members on the opposite side sometimes gave us a little greater indication that they were exercising independent judgment and not a collective party judgment on this or other issues.

I think there is much to be answered in this debate. I wonder why the hon. member who sponsored this bill cannot give us some clear explanation as to why a capitalization of $10 million should be needed to build half a mile of pipe line. That is one of the strangest things I have ever heard, that you need $10 million capitalization in order to make a $15,000 outlay. This is a preposterous proposition. It is an insult to parliament and to hon. members of this committee to ask that we rubber stamp a measure which provides $10 million capitalization for a $15,000 expenditure. I wonder what this pipe line is going to be made of, because the capitalization works out to $3,784 per foot of pipe line? Perhaps it will be gold-plated but I do not think even if it were it would cost that sum.

What does this company take us for? Why does the company want all this money? Do not tell us it is under the control of the national energy board because that is not true. What is under the control of that board is an assessment as to whether this company should have a licence to export through its half-mile of pipe line.

Mr. Woolliams: What about building the pipe line?

Mr. Argue: It is not going to require $10 million to build it. Surely, my hon. friend does not suggest that. The national energy board will not have control over all the other powers this company seeks to have vested in it.

What would we say about the control the government could exercise over the railway companies of Canada if they presented to parliament a couple of dozen bills or perhaps one omnibus bill which placed under the control of parliament only a half-mile of railway line connecting the railway lines between each of the provinces? That is what this company in effect, is endeavouring to do. If the railway companies were to do what I suggested in that illustration it would destroy the control of parliament over the railway system of Canada because parliament would be given control over only a few miles of railway track on provincial boundaries.

I do not know why this company chose to build a half-mile of pipe line. I do not know why it did not choose to build an even smaller one. All it wants to do is dump products over the border. Perhaps the company thought the survey of the system would not be too accurate.

The company asks to build a mere half-mile of pipe line but once the company is incorporated—if that should happen—it will have the authority given it by parliament to build pipe lines within Manitoba. Parliament will have no jurisdiction over what the company does in Manitoba, provided it does not cross a boundary. The company could build pipe lines in Alberta, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories and parliament would have no control. The company could build pipe lines throughout western Canada with its $10 million capitalization and parliament would have no control, provided the pipe lines did not cross a provincial boundary.

The company is seeking wide powers in this bill. If passed, this measure will give the company not only the power to build pipe lines in half of the nation but will, under the provisions of clause 6, give the company power to build pipe lines for the transmission and transportation of oil and other liquid hydrocarbons and:

(a) within Canada in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia and in the Yukon and Northwest Territories and outside Canada construct, purchase, lease or otherwise acquire and hold, develop, operate, maintain, control, lease, mortgage, hypothecate, create liens or other security upon, sell, convey or otherwise dispose of and turn to account any and all extra-provincial and/or international pipe lines and all appurtenances relative thereto for gathering, transmitting, transporting, storing and delivering of any natural or artificial gas and oil or any products or by-products thereof or any of them—

That is a lot of power for a company with half a mile of pipe line. The company could go all over Alberta gathering products under the powers sought in this bill. The company wants to build only a half-mile of pipe line, on the surface of it, but that is not all we are asked to rubber stamp. This will be one of the smallest pipe lines in Canada in terms of length.

What else does the company seek? Under the provisions of clause 6 the company seeks power to:

—own, lease, sell, operate and maintain aircraft and aerodromes for the purpose of its undertaking—

I do not know what the company will do with aerodromes in relation to a half-mile of pipe line. I have not the foggiest notion what the company proposes to do with all these powers. This is, apparently, an insignificant company. We let it go to the national energy board. Will they O.K. aerodromes and airplanes?

Not satisfied with that, the company also seeks power to:

—own, lease, operate and maintain inter-station telephone—

With a half-mile of pipe line one would think one could shout from one end of the line to the other and be heard. I continue:

—teletype and telegraph communication systems and, subject to the Radio Act—

I thank the company for that concession.

—and any other statute relating to radio, own, lease, operate and maintain interstation radio communication facilities—

It is a wonder the company does not want television facilities.

Mr. Speakman: It may do better than the C.B.C. at that.

Mr. Argue: Someone says, "It may do better than the C.B.C." Someone else wants them to have television facilities. I do not know why the company requires telephone, teletype and telegraph communication systems and aerodromes and airplanes.

An hon. Member: The Bomarc?

Mr. Argue: I do not imagine the company would waste its money on useless contraptions. I imagine this company will spend its money very carefully.

Mr. Chairman, may I call it six o'clock?

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, at six o'clock I was saying that this company, which intends to build a pipe line only half a mile in length, certainly seems to want tremendous powers. It is to be given the power to operate aerodromes, to maintain aircraft, to establish telephone systems, teletype and telegraph communication systems and a host of other powers. But this tiny company, this most insignificant of all pipe lines in relation to its length, is not satisfied merely with having the power to operate pumping stations, terminals, storage tanks, aircraft and aerodromes, etc.

In order, I presume, to facilitate the construction of this tremendous project and undoubtedly in view of the countless number of employees that will be necessary to construct and to operate this half mile of pipe line, the company is asking parliament and my hon. friends opposite to rubber stamp—I think they are rubber stamping it—a provision which will allow the company to purchase, hold, lease, sell, improve, exchange or otherwise deal in real property. They may subdivide this real property into building lots and generally lay the same out into lots, streets and building sites for residential purposes. Apparently they are going to erect a city somewhere along this half mile of pipe line. They may construct streets on this real property and necessary sewerage and drainage systems and build upon the same for residential purposes or otherwise and supply any buildings so erected—

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder whether the hon. member would answer a question.

The Chairman: Order. I just wanted to ask the hon. member for Assiniboia if we are already on clause 6 or whether he is still speaking on clause 1.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the point of order you have raised. Of course I am speaking on clause 1. I was not quoting, as Hansard will show. I was hitting and missing on certain very sweeping powers—

Mr. Brunsden: Mostly missing.

Mr. Argue: —that are very securely embedded in the bill. This company is asking parliament for the right to subdivide its real property, to build houses, to lay out streets, to build sewerage systems and to provide electric light, heat, gas, water or other requisites and to lease or sell the same upon such terms and subject to such conditions—

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder whether the hon. member for Assiniboia would answer a question.

Mr. Argue: I did not hear the question.

Mr. Woolliams: I will put it if you will listen. The Northern Pipe Line Company, which was incorporated last year for the purpose of exporting gas from the province of Saskatchewan, had the blessing of the provincial government and I should like to know whether there were not similar clauses in that legislation?

Mr. Argue: It is not a question of whether there were similar clauses. It is a question of whether it was a similar company and I answer the hon. member by saying no. Even if the company was identical, which it was not, the fact that it was done in one instance is no reason why we should do it again.

Mr. Woolliams: It is all right for the C.C.F. to do it.

Mr. Argue: I challenge the hon. member who has sponsored this bill to clean up this atrocity, to delete certain provisions of this monstrosity. Instead of the sponsor of the bill asking that this company be given the power to be a founder of cities and operator of airports, let him at least ask parliament for what he claims the company is seeking, namely, the authority to build half a mile of pipe line. After this company with its huge capitalization gets these tremendous powers it will have been clothed by parliament with the power to do all these things and I suggest that it is a disgrace; that we should not allow it and that the bill should be amended by deleting these provisions. We are being asked to approve powers to establish metropolitan areas, if you like, to build new cities, if you like. There is no limit provided in the bill, and after they have built all these houses they can lease or sell them upon such terms and subject to such conditions as appear requisite, either to their employees or to others.

Not only are we being asked to incorporate a pipe-line company but we are being asked to give the company the authority to commence housing projects, operate air lines, telephone systems, teletype and telegraph communication systems and countless other things.

Mr. McQuillan: May I ask the hon. member a question? Did he ever have the occasion to incorporate a company under the provincial laws of Saskatchewan by using the services of a lawyer who was worthy of his salt? If he has done so he will know that the terms are broad in any incorporation.

Mr. Argue: They may be broad and perhaps they are so broad that we should deal with them. It might be necessary to have such powers in the building of a trans-Canada pipe line over thousands of miles of territory. It might be necessary to have the right to construct homes for the hundreds and hundreds of employees who would be engaged in the work, but surely it is not necessary to have the power to enter into a housing development embedded in a law for the building of this flea bite pipe line in the province of Alberta, a quarter of a mile in Alberta and a quarter of a mile in the United States.

Mr. Bigg: Will the hon. member permit a question? Does the hon. member think that the building of this pipe line would assist in obtaining full employment for the people of Alberta?

Mr. Argue: The answer to that is that I doubt it because it is a flea bite.

Mr. Bigg: I do not agree.

Mr. Argue: It is a flea bite. The hon. member wonders how many men will be employed.

Mr. Bigg: I said I wondered how many men it would assist to employ.

Mr. Argue: There were 693,000 unemployed in the last count and there will be another count soon. Here is the answer to the question of unemployment: we are going to build a half mile of pipe line. If the government would build these aerodromes and other things perhaps it would be of some assistance.

In this case we have the Yankee buccaneers building the pipe line.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: I am in good company when I use that phraseology. I travel in the same company as the Prime Minister except that he has changed, he thinks it is fine now. Instead of condemning this atrocity he is now promoting it. He is promoting it and I suggest that he should be condemning it on every score. I suggest that it is no wonder the government members of the committee rose to support the motion.

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order. The hon. member said the Prime Minister was promoting this bill and it is not true. This is not the Prime Minister's bill.

Mr. Argue: How will the Prime Minister vote? How will the hon. member vote? Let us see where the government will stand.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order. I suggest the hon. member correct his erroneous statement. This is not the Prime Minister's bill.

Mr. Argue: I did not say it was the Prime Minister's bill.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): Yes, you did.

Mr. Argue: I said the Prime Minister was supporting it and promoting it. My friend used the correct word and I use it as well. The Prime Minister is supporting the bill. The house leader is promoting the bill. He is going to vote for it, and he has been voting for it.

Mr. Speakman: How are you going to vote?

Mr. Argue: I am going to vote against it and have been voting against it. I challenge the hon. Minister of Veterans Affairs to stand up in this committee and say how he is going to vote on this measure. There is government unanimity and he says it is not a government bill. He says it is a private bill and they are not here to exert influence or have any say; just rubberstamping with their host of followers a bill that I suggest is an abomination and against the best interests of the country. I would suggest that it is little wonder, because of all of the bad features of this bill, that the members of the government party on the committee voted against a motion merely to defer consideration of the bill in the committee so that interested witnesses might have the opportunity to appear. I hope that parliament in this session will reject this measure.

Mr. Speakman: I should like to ask the hon. member a question before he resumes his seat. Since he has now completed his speech, and he speaks of course as the voice of authority for his party, perhaps he would now tell us why he is opposed to this bill. I have not heard that as yet.

Mr. Howard: You have not been listening.

Mr. Argue: I am not responsible for the mentality or the lack of it of the hon. member. It is perfectly clear in our view that this bill is such that it should not pass. I am not responsible for the fact that the hon. member is incapable of understanding.

Mr. Brunsden: I should like to ask the hon. member a question.

Mr. Argue: There is a war of Alberta in the house.

Mr. Brunsden: The hon. member talks about unemployment and about trade, but he also talks against this bill. I should like to ask him if he wishes to keep this great natural resource in western Canada landlocked. Does he wish to preserve it for posterity or does he wish to market it today? There will be a time when we have another form of energy and the same thing will happen to gas and oil as happened in regard to coal not very many years ago.

Mr. Argue: If my hon. friend had been listening and had a little more understanding, perhaps he would know what our position is.

Mr. Speakman: Never mind making remarks about people, just answer the question.

Mr. Argue: I realize that hon. members are in a hurry.

Mr. Speakman: Not at all.

Mr. Argue: We are very much in favour of obtaining adequate markets for the surplus products of the petroleum industry, but we think it is the duty of parliament to bring about the incorporation of pipe line companies which will export these products in such a way as to bring the greatest possible advantage to the Canadian nation. We think that is exactly what this pipe line will not do.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, rising once again to speak in reference to this matter, I should like to say that if any member feels there are serious questions that have not been answered I will endeavour to answer them. I am not going to take very long because I am the last one who would want to be accused of talking out his own bill. Certainly if there are any serious and honest questions, I will endeavour to answer them. I will assure every member of this committee that if there are questions which I cannot answer there are men who are connected with this company who will endeavour to supply the information.

It does seem to me, whether we like it or not, that the group in the corner have made up their minds that they are going to talk out this bill. I appeal to their intelligence. I have listened to the member for Vancouver East and have a lot of respect for him. He asked some serious questions this afternoon because he was seriously interested. I hope, in the same serious vein, that I can answer those questions.

I see the member for Assiniboia packing his papers and books. I hope he will remain with us long enough, now that he has finished his speech, to listen to some of the serious remarks that I have to make.

One of the questions that has been asked in this debate is, why is it necessary to come to parliament? Maybe it is my fault for not having answered this question before, but I thought I had. I will endeavour tonight to make this clear. Why is it necessary to come to parliament to ask for incorporation? I trust the members will bear with me when I go through the technical law in this regard, because it is very difficult to make an argument of this type. I am not appealing to emotion but to reason. I am appealing to reason based on the law of this country. If I am wrong, I trust that some hon. member will rise in his place tonight and correct me.

I should like to refer to section 25 of the energy board act, but before I do so I would refer to the fact that we are building one half a mile of pipe line. I should like to mention two points in that regard; first, why must we come to parliament? After I answer that question my second proposition will deal with the reasons for setting out the terms of incorporation as they have been set out. I am sure my friend from Assiniboia, who has a tremendous sense of humour, will bear with me while I read from the articles of incorporation of the Northern Pipe Line Company, and show that the one thing we missed—television—was included in the Saskatchewan bill.

Let us go back to my first point; why do we have to come to parliament? When the National Energy Board Act was passed, which incorporated some of the old pipe-line bill sections including section 25 to protect the Canadian public and the companies by making sure that equity was—I am sorry to see my friend from Assiniboia leaving. I am glad to see him return.

Mr. Argue: I rise on a point of order. I am listening with great interest to the remarks of the hon. member. I have an engagement tonight which I made a month ago. I must keep this engagement and I am already late. My hon. friend said he would be brief but I understand he has more to say.

Mr. Woolliams: I have been talking for only two minutes.

Mr. Argue: I regret very much that I will not be able to hear the hon. member.

Mr. Woolliams: This is one thing that should be noted. It is the first time we have been invited to a political meeting in the House of Commons by the hon. member for Assiniboia. However, let us get down to brass tacks. These good orators from the C.C.F. leave; and this applies not only to members from the C.C.F. I noticed the other day that another good orator left as soon as he had made his point and made the press. I should like to emphasize the press. That is important for some members. Let us get back to the matter under discussion.

Mr. Broome: I rise on a question of privilege. I believe the hon. member is referring to me.

Mr. Woolliams: May I end this argument right now, Mr. Chairman. I had no thought of referring to my good friend from Vancouver South. I want to say that I am really sorry that he even thought I might have done so.

Mr. Howard: Are you thinking about the Prime Minister?

Mr. Woolliams: I want to come back, if you will bear with me, Mr. Chairman, for a few minutes to the question of the National Energy Board Act. Section 25 reads as follows:

(1) No person, other than a company, shall construct or operate a pipe line.

I want you to take heed. Everybody has been seeking facts.

(1) No person, other than a company, shall construct or operate a pipe line.

Then it goes on to say what kind of pipe line. Let us see the definition of company. A company means, under these circumstances, as follows:

(c) "company" means a person having authority under a special act to construct or operate pipe lines;

That is the reason we are here tonight, and have been before parliament on several occasions asking for incorporation. Then, we must go to the definition of a pipe line under the same act. It is defined as follows:

(m) "pipe line" means a line for the transmission of hydrocarbons connecting a province with any other or others of the provinces,—

Those hon. members who have given this matter careful study, and who are really conscientious in their study, will appreciate the fact that the wording of subsection (m) of section 2 is copied directly from the British North America Act. Paragraph (m) continues as follows:

—or extending beyond the limits of a province, and includes all branches, extensions, tanks, reservoirs, pumps, racks, compressors, loading facilities—

And so on. In other words—and let us get down to ordinary language—no company can go before the energy board or do any one of the things we ask parliament to incorporate us for unless they come before this parliament and ask for a bill to incorporate the company. That is the first thing. Then as to the company, the definition of a company is one that is created by a special act and that act, Mr. Chairman, is an act of this parliament. Then it deals with pipe lines, the kind of pipe line suggested by this particular act, and exporting a particular ingredient. That is an important matter. Several hon. members have inquired why we have asked for the incorporation of a company for half a mile of pipe line. No Alberta company, Saskatchewan company or company formed in Manitoba can come before the national energy board. The company, because of the National Energy Board Act, must be a company created by a special act of parliament. That is the reason we are here.

Let us just look back to the past. I always think that history has some advantage in this regard. I am sorry that my good friend from Assiniboia has left because I want to deal with the Northern Pipe Line Company which was incorporated by chapter 61 of the statutes of Canada, 1960. If we go back, Mr. Chairman, to page 4379 of Hansard for 1960, we shall find that the hon. member for Kindersley rose in his place in the House of Commons to sponsor a bill for the incorporation of a company that would export from the province of Saskatchewan the same products as the company of which we are asking incorporation here. The reason that he was the bill's sponsor no doubt was that he is one of our most charming members of parliament in the Conservative ranks, a man who is now 70 years of age and who had a birthday the other day. He rose in his place sponsoring a bill to incorporate a company in the province of Saskatchewan to do exactly what we are doing in the province of Alberta.

An hon. Member: In the same circumstances?

Mr. Woolliams: Why do I make this point? As reported at page 4381 of Hansard of 1960, a member of the C.C.F. rose in his place. Everyone to a man, if they are sincere, would endorse the terms and conditions of the act to which I am referring and which was ridiculed by the hon. member for Assiniboia. Every term and condition was ridiculed, except one. I am sorry but I made a mistake. I do not want to lead the house astray in any particular.

Mr. Peters: You could not do so.

Mr. Woolliams: The hon. member for Assiniboia said that we forgot television. May I refer to page 41 of the 1960 statutes which contains the same identical section the hon.

member for Assiniboia ridiculed in reference to this company. That section was included in the bill with respect to that company and was endorsed by the C.C.F. who wish to talk this bill out. It is contained in section 6 with one clause added "or television communication facilities". He got a big laugh from the House of Commons. I am serious tonight. I do not think it is any laughing matter. I now want to read from page 4381 of Hansard a portion of the speech of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I want to express my appreciation to the hon. member from Kindersley (Mr. Hanbidge) for his fine remarks in presenting the bill to the house.

I intend to emphasize that every term and condition, with the exception of one or two things which I will mention later in this debate, was identical to what we are asking in the province of Alberta and was endorsed by the people who say they are presenting honest and straightforward arguments with no intention of talking this bill out. The quotation continues:

> I should like to hear him, either when he concludes the debate or maybe this information can be made available when the bill is referred to the committee, on the reaction of the government of Saskatchewan—

There is no one in the house who needs to be reminded, even the hon. member for Vancouver South, that the government in Saskatchewan is a socialist government, the only C.C.F. experiment on the North American continent. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam wanted to know the reaction of the Saskatchewan government. May I emphasize that every term and condition that is contained in our bill is contained in the Northern Pipe Line Company bill and was endorsed by the eight members of parliament who today say they rise in their places conscientiously, without benefit of lobbyists, to oppose continually and talk out a bill merely to incorporate a company.

I have listened over the months to men in that corner of the house. I know that hon. members will agree with me tonight when I say that there is tremendous intelligence in that group. I appeal to that intelligence. I ask them to rise and to speak according to their minds and to the dictates of their hearts—

An hon. Member: We will.

Mr. Woolliams: —and to say tonight that they realize that what they did when they voted for the Northern Pipe Line Company and promoted that company as a company from the province of Saskatchewan because they are C.C.F., they did believing it to be proper and of benefit to the province of Saskatchewan. What they did on that occasion I ask this committee to duplicate on this occasion. Perhaps I may just go on reading:

> Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member for Kindersley speaks now he will close the debate.

No one objected to that. Then the hon. member for Kindersley went on:

> Mr. Hanbidge: May I say a word, Mr. Speaker.

He went on to say:

> With regard to the matter raised by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Regier), I have to take that up with Regina. I am quite sure my hon. friend agrees with me that the government of the province is most interested in the development of the resources of the province and will do everything it can to co-operate with us in getting this company incorporated so that it will develop the oil and gas fields in Saskatchewan and promote the sale of the product.

Let us go back for a few moments. As I put the facts on the record tonight, I am speaking without any notes. I would be the last person to put any facts on the record which I did not believe to be true. I know that if my hon. friend from Assiniboia were here and were not at a political meeting he would agree with me.

However, I scanned quickly over the record in the lunch hour and found that this company was incorporated wholly with United States capital. It was wholly under United States control. Not one voice was raised by the boys in the corner, because they wanted to create every advantage for the government of the province of Saskatchewan so people would say they were doing the job well.

This is my plea to them tonight. I am sure some of these hon. members are more serious minded than they appear, and I am sure the hon. member for Peterborough will not laugh if I am completely serious about this matter. We are asking to have the same privilege in the sister province of Alberta which, because of the fate of politics, has a Social Credit government whereas Saskatchewan has a socialist government. In many ways the industries of both provinces compare one with the other. Both are agricultural provinces; both have a petroleum industry.

I come back to the Northern Pipe Line Company bill, the Minnesota pipe line system. If you analyse it, there was not one Canadian dollar in Northern Pipe Line Company. I need not go into details; I need only refer to page 4379 of Hansard, volume IV, 1960. When hon. members rise in their places in the House of Commons, as did the hon. member for Vancouver East, and say that theirs is a responsibility greater than that of the average member, I ask the hon. member to look at the record. On that date, May 31, 1960, he rose in his place in the House of Commons, or remained silent—one or the other—but he endorsed everything we are asking for in the incorporation of our company.

All we from Alberta are asking is to export condensate from the Pincher Creek area. The Pincher Creek area is rather historical. Those who have lived in Alberta—it was not my lot to be born in that province—are rather proud of Pincher Creek because it stands for two things. It is one of the great ranching areas and it is where petroleum was first found in western Canada. It created a great secondary industry, if not the first industry for those western provinces.

All we are asking is to export condensate. I have said this on three occasions, and I certainly have no malice in my heart for anyone who honestly and conscientiously, irrespective of his party, rises and opposes me in sponsoring this bill. I have asked, "What is the definition of condensate?" We have a problem in western Canada, and this is why I ask for the greatest amount of reason from the C.C.F., and I know they have a great deal. We have a surplus of wheat and we have a surplus of cattle. In fact, when I was in Japan the Japanese said, "You Canadians are unusual because your problem is that you have a surplus of everything". Now we have a surplus of petroleum.

Condensate is crude petroleum. It is the kind of product that can be properly exported from the province of Alberta or any western province to the northwest United States. I will repeat this. It can be exported to bring up our exports to 600,000 or 800,000 barrels of crude a day. In order to keep that industry healthy we are asking to build 41 miles of pipe line in the Pincher Creek area. That pipe line will be built by the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company, not by Aurora.

Hon. members have risen in their places and asked, "Why are they not building the 41 miles of pipe line?" I have read the statement which gives the reason the half-mile must be built by a particular company.

As a sponsor of the bill and of the company, which is a Canadian company, I have set out the facts. We have nothing to hide. Surely no one will rise in his place and say that we created the law. When we sponsor a bill that concerns any industry, even if it be in relation to a United States company, that company must abide by the law. That is the reason we must come to parliament to create a company for half a mile of pipe line. The 41 miles of pipe line, if and when this charter is granted and if and when the national energy board and the Alberta oil and gas conservation board approve it, would be built by the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company. This would be to the benefit of people who need employment in the province of Alberta.

I come now to the crux of the question. We are asking to do what everyone in their right senses realizes has to be done in order to get rid of our crude. We are right up to our ears in crude, in the province of Alberta, and we want to export it to the northwest United States. Hon. members will recall that we were criticized by the Social Credit government because we did not do it sooner. I am not here to argue the pros and cons of this matter, but we are asking to export a commodity of which we have a great deal. I said this the other day also.

I hope I am making myself clear in endeavouring to answer every question. I hope that when I resume my seat any really serious and honest questions in the minds of any members will be asked of me. If hon. members will put their questions briefly, I will rise in my place and answer them. All I am asking is this. Here we have a petroleum industry. We are asking to export crude petroleum to the United States because we have so much, like our wheat, our cattle and our uranium. We are asking this so we can create an industry that will give employment.

Hon. members from all parties in this house have talked about unemployment, particularly those members in whom I have a great deal of pride because they have risen from the ranks of labour. I have laboured myself. These hon. members have said they want to help people who are unemployed. Surely, to keep an industry healthy in a province, to build pipe lines and export when we have so much of the commodity will create employment. When you create an industry that will help our imbalance of trade with the United States, surely that is the only answer we have to unemployment.

If these hon. members are honest and sincere—and I am going to listen very carefully to what is said tonight—in what they say about solving the unemployment problem, I say to them with all the sincerity I can muster that if we are to reduce unemployment in the province of Alberta we must keep our petroleum industry healthy.

I would draw their attention to one thing. They talk about United States capital. Last week, according to the Calgary Herald and the Alberta newspapers, the Rocky View News and the North Hill News, which are newspapers published in Calgary, a $20 million processing plant for by-products went up within a few miles of Calgary. I believe every dollar of that $20 million was from the United States, but I believe every man who walks into the door when the plant is open will be a Canadian taking his place at work, so that he may live in dignity with his family. I get sick when I hear lip service being paid to the plight of the unemployed. In your hearts you know, you people over there do want full employment but, really, you pay lip service to the idea because what really concerns you is political expediency. Members may accuse me of talking out my own bill, but I cannot sit in my place—I cannot be like those who have been trained longer in parliament than I—and listen to the abuse to which I was subjected this afternoon. It was said that it was a disgrace to bring in a bill which would mean the export from Alberta of a commodity which we have in such surplus. Natural gas is like wheat or any other product which we must sell to survive.

This is no time for joking. The man who has striven to be the leader of the new party in Canada stood in his place tonight and ridiculed proposals along lines which he himself had endorsed one year ago when they related to his own province. For the sake of his own political expediency he endorsed his own proposals at that time because, as he said on the platform, the old parties, the Liberals and the Conservatives, had done nothing for this country. I believe the Liberals and the Conservatives have done a lot for this country, as we all realize if we consider its development since confederation. All this has been accomplished under the Conservatives and Liberals.

Let us return to clause 6. A clause similar in every way was included in the measure respecting the Northern Pipe Line Company which hon. members in the C.C.F. group endorsed. No wonder they look serious. No wonder they are quiet in their places.

An hon. Member: Not serious, but bored.

Mr. Woolliams: If members of that group are bored they should have seen the reaction when they were speaking. I hope those hon. members will bear with me. I know that in their hearts they are conscious of what they would like to do, but because of considerations of political expediency it is apparent what they will do. They will talk out this bill for development.

Mr. Howard: That is not true, Eldon.

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad the hon. member called me by my first name, even though it is not in accordance with our parliamentary procedure. Now I will read clause 6. The company may—

> Within or outside Canada . . . construct, purchase, lease or otherwise acquire and hold, develop, operate, maintain, control, lease, mortgage, hypothecate, create liens or other security upon, sell, convey or otherwise dispose of and turn to account any and all extra-provincial and/or international pipe lines and all appurtenances relative thereto for gathering, transmitting, transporting, storing and delivering of any natural or artificial gas and oil or any products or by-products thereof or any of them; including pumping stations, terminals, storage tanks or reservoirs and all works relative thereto for use in connection with the said pipe lines; and buy or otherwise acquire, transmit, transport and sell or otherwise dispose of and distribute natural or artificial gas and oil and any products or by-products thereof; and own, lease, sell, operate and maintain aircraft and aerodromes for the purpose of its undertaking, together with the facilities required for the operation of such aircraft and aerodromes; and own, lease, operate, and maintain inter-station telephone, teletype, and telegraph communication systems and, subject to the Radio Act and any other statute relating to radio, own, lease, operate and maintain inter-station radio communication facilities;

Every one of the provisions included in this clause was included in the bill which was supported by the hon. member for Assiniboia and his friends. Let us ask a simple question: why are these things included here? As one hon. member said tonight—I do not remember who it was—when you are incorporating a company you must make its powers wide enough to take care of any difficulties which may arise. I may say that I practised law in Saskatchewan, and I had a great deal of respect for the attorney general of that province at that time. When we incorporated companies, all these powers were included in the articles of incorporation. Why make funny speeches? How can members practise socialism in one province and then give lip service to something entirely different outside the province?

Now we come to the capital structure of the Northern Pipe Line Company. It is stipulated that the capital stock of the company shall consist of just two million common shares with a nominal par value, and 200,000 preferred shares of par value of $100 per share. The capital structure is thus greater than that of Aurora pipe lines, but every company which is incorporated always has a greater capital structure than is necessary for its immediate objects, and all of its powers are wide enough to cover various subjects. That is part of the incorporation. It is part of company law. An hon. member may rise in his place and say: why do lawyers do this, that and the other? But I say: if anyone of you is sick, to whom does he turn? He turns to a doctor. Similarly, anyone who needs legal advice about incorporating a company turns to his lawyer.

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Broome: Let him go on.

Mr. Woolliams: I have just one or two other things to say.

The Chairman: Has the hon. member leave to proceed?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Woolliams: My hon. friend from Vancouver South says "Let him go on". Even though he does not endorse this bill he has no objection to my advocacy of it, and it shows there is always good will in our party.

The hon. member asked one or two questions with reference to the building of the pipe line—that 41 miles. I have read the letter of March 3, 1961. I have explained fully that will involve the use of Canadian labour. I have explained why that half a mile of line is proposed to be built by the Aurora Pipe Line Company. It is part of the law, under the National Energy Board Act, and we cannot escape its provisions. We are creatures of the law in this respect as we shall be creatures of the law which this parliament will create when it incorporates this company.

I just want to end on this note. If there are any points which any hon. member conscientiously and honestly believes have been left unexplained, will he put the question in a few words and I, for my part, will try to give an answer in a few words. Let us get on with the job and go forward with a measure which will be the means of creating employment for the people who need employment, because only by trading shall we ever attain full employment. Let us not give lip service to any other formula when only a sound economy based on trade can bring help to the men and women who need jobs.

Mr. Howard: I listened with a great deal of interest and attention to the hon. member for Bow River and his sometimes simpering request to do certain things, particularly, as I understood it, to delve the depths of our consciences and to use that as a guide for explaining our position with respect to this bill. That, of course, has been my approach to this measure ever since it came up for discussion in the first instance. I have repeated time and time again the reason we are concerned about it. That reason is, Canadian ownership, Canadian operation, Canadian control and Canadian interest.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question. Does the hon. member have knowledge of any other company that fits into his formula with respect to complete government control that could do the same job in Pincher Creek? If the hon. member knows of the existence of such a company I should be pleased to hear about it.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Howard: Unfortunately we do not have in office a government that believes in keeping its electoral promises or perhaps we might have had.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That is tommyrot.

Mr. Howard: I hear a noise again.

Mr. McQuillan: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question.

Mr. Howard: Here we are trying to get across—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The hon. member is making false statements.

Mr. McQuillan: I do not often interrupt the hon. gentleman to put questions to him. Perhaps the hon. member would allow a question.

The Chairman: Order. I understand that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni is asking the hon. member for Skeena if he would accept a question.

Mr. Howard: I should be glad to allow all the questions hon. members desire, but I ask that they keep them on the subject of the bill before us. You know as well as I do, Mr. Chairman, how easy it is for hon. members to place blocks and diversions in the way of a steady course of discussion. I will certainly entertain the hon. member's question.

Mr. McQuillan: I will accede to the wishes of the hon. member in the terms of keeping a steady course. The hon. gentleman has been talking about United States ownership and participation. Would he tell the committee where the major part of the membership is with respect to the International Woodworkers of America of which I understand the hon. member is past president of a local and of which one of his colleagues is a past organizer?

Mr. Howard: You bet I will and in the process I will tell the hon. gentleman how little he knows about trade union structures, and especially that of the I.W.A. I would not care to deal with how little the hon. member knows about other subjects.

In dealing with the hon. member's question, let me say I fear that I will be called out of order during the course of my remarks. However, the hon. member for Vancouver South, who supports the government, will bear me out when I say that the membership of the International Woodworkers of America is drawn from among and is controlled by Canadians which is more than I can say for some of the lumber associations to which the hon. member for Comox-Alberni belongs and for this pipe line company. Every cent collected through the I.W.A. is spent in Canada.

Mr. McQuillan: That is your story.

Mr. Skoreyko: That is more than can be said for the pipe-line company in Saskatchewan.

The Chairman: The question was not in order but I allowed that short answer and I think that should be sufficient.

Mr. Howard: Although we have disposed of some red herrings, I suppose there will be more as time goes on. The hon. member for Bow River and other hon. members made reference to what I understand is called the Northland Pipe Line Company.

Mr. Speakman: Northern Pipe Line Company.

Mr. Howard: Yes, Northern Pipe Line Company. Hon. gentlemen went to some lengths to deal with the attitude of the C.C.F. with respect to that bill in an earlier session. A basic distinction between socialists and Tories is that socialists believe when they have made an error there is no sense in compounding it by making another. If I am considered in error for having supported the Northern Pipe Line Company bill that is no reason why I should again make a fool of myself regardless of the circumstances.

The hon. member for Bow River mentioned being sick to his stomach with respect to people paying lip service to the salvation of the unemployed. The hon. gentleman must get violently ill every day when he looks across at the cabinet. No group since the days of R. B. Bennett has been more guilty of paying lip service to this question than the carload of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You have eight right there in that corner.

Mr. Howard: There is a carload sitting opposite.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the hon. member permit a question. If I correctly understood the hon. member for Assiniboia the other day he quoted R. B. Bennett with approval—

Mr. Howard: Wait a minute.

The Chairman: Order. I understand that the hon. member for Skeena is not allowing any questions.

Mr. Smith (Winnipeg North): The hon. member has no answers, that is why.

Mr. Howard: I am not embarrassed; I say only this.

Mr. Woolliams: The hon. member left the impression that he might answer my question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Howard: I shall be pleased to answer the questions of hon. gentlemen on any subject, but particularly the subject of this bill. However, I invite hon. gentlemen to jot down their questions and put them to me at the conclusion of my formal remarks. We all know how easy it is to have one's remarks cluttered up with inconsequential questions that are out of order. With the permission of hon. members opposite I will proceed to deal with the remarks of the hon. member for Bow River and his gratuitous short course in law.

The hon. member's legal lecture dealt with his own interpretation of the subject. I place little reliance on his teaching ability because of his capacity for substituting one word for another and altering their meanings. I refer to his references to "shall" and "may" with which I shall deal later, if hon. members wish.

As reported at page 2705 of Hansard of March 6 the hon. member in his remarks dealt with the structure of the national energy board and the act under which it operates. He said in effect that in 1959 parliament passed the National Energy Board Act giving the board certain responsibilities and therefore we should have faith in the board in carrying out its responsibilities and give rapid and easy passage to the bill before us so the company could appear before the board.

I shall not quote the hon. gentleman's remarks in full but he made reference to sections 10, 27 and 44 of the National Energy Board Act. I shall not quote these sections nor the hon. member's remarks concerning them. I may be guilty of oversimplification in saying that he said that section 10 sets out that the board is a court of record, that section 27 deals with the granting of licences or certificates and that section 44 deals with the responsibility of the board relating to inquiring into the corporate structure of applicants. If I am wrong in my interpretation the hon. member for Bow River can correct me.

The hon. member said, in effect, that this board established by parliament had vested in it certain responsibilities and therefore we should place reliance on the ability of the board to carry out its responsibilities in the best interests of Canada.

The hon. member for Bow River dealt with section 25, in part III of the act, during the short course of law that he gave us gratuitously a while ago. Of course, being a layman in this field, I must grope my way rather blindly and obviously cannot be as glib as the hon. member for Bow River in this regard. I will have to take the words as I understand them. In any event, the hon. member quoted section 25 (1) as follows:

> No person, other than a company, shall construct or operate a pipe line.

Then he referred to the interpretation section which tells us what a company is and said that section 25 was the reason a private bill had to be introduced. Sections 25, 26 and 27 deal with all sorts of things but the key part is that no person, other than a company, shall construct or operate a pipe line. The bill now before us seeks to give authority to a company, as defined in the National Energy Board Act, to construct or operate a pipe line and, specifically, to construct or operate half a mile of pipe line. That is all that is being dealt with in this particular instance. If they spent the whole $10 million capitalization on building that pipe line it might provide some employment because they would be spending at the rate of about $4,000 a foot, but I do not think that is what they are going to do. In any event, I wonder whether or not this a matter which has been considered, whether or not the national energy board under its authority has done so under similar circumstances and whether or not this would not be the proper course to follow if this company sought only to build half a mile of pipe line and did not at some time in the future seek to engage in all these other activities involved in the building of homes, airports and all those other things found in the bill which the hon. member for Assiniboia indicated it was their intention to do.

Let us see what section 49 of the National Energy Board Act says. It reads as follows:

> The Board may make orders exempting lines or parts of lines, not exceeding in any case a length of 25 miles, from any or all of the provisions of sections 25 to 28.

What does section 25 say? It says that no person other than a company incorporated by private act shall construct or operate a pipe line, but the board can waive that provision and can say that a company that does not have to be incorporated by private act can proceed to engage in this sort of thing. When we are given references to and interpretations of the statute by hon. gentlemen who are learned in the law, I for one expect them, especially if they are going to appeal, as some of them have, on the basis of emotionalism and not on the basis of sense or logic, to give us all of the law and point out that here is another possibility which has not been foreseen.

Mr. Brunsden: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, is this a dissertation on the energy board or is it a debate on the Aurora Pipe Line Company?

Mr. Howard: If I may be heard on the point of order, Mr. Chairman, in listening to the remarks of the hon. member for Bow River I thought the discussion concerned the Northern Pipe Line Company which was established last year and has nothing to do with this measure.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to speak to the point of order if I may. The hon. member knows as well as I do that I drew that analogy because someone rose and wanted to know the facts about the capital structure. I pointed out that the capital structure of that company established in a socialist province was identical with that of Aurora Pipe Line Company. That is the reason the analogy was drawn. The hon. member knows it, I know it, and everybody knows it.

Mr. Howard: If I may say another word on the point of order before you rule, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Bow River has now substantiated my position and in effect I think he is asking you to rule that there is no point of order. I was dealing with the National Energy Board Act for the precise reason that other members who preceded me had dealt with it. Specifically, the hon. member for Bow River quoted section after section of that act. I think there is no point of order.

Mr. Brunsden: Speaking to the point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I say that we have before us a bill that is of some importance to the province of Alberta and we are frittering away our time. My friend loves to do so and he wants to talk out the bill, but we are not dealing with the bill. We are dealing with inconsequential matters that are on the fringe of the bill and I respectfully suggest that the hon. member be called to order.

The Chairman: I think hon. members will agree that the debate so far has been rather wide. I would think it would be very difficult to rule that the hon. member for Skeena is out of order because the relationship between the bill before us and the National Energy Board Act has been one of the topics of the debate. I am not making a general ruling but a very specific one and I must say that the hon. member for Skeena cannot be more out of order than other members who have preceded him.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I was not able to find this reference earlier or I would have given it to you. However, I can do so now by way of debate and I wish to do so because it deals specifically with the point at issue. I am referring now to some remarks appearing in Hansard which have to do with the coal industry, of all things and, as found on page 1370 of Hansard, I should like to quote clause 5 of the bill which was quoted then:

> The company shall have all the powers, privileges and immunities conferred by, and be subject to all the limitations, liabilities and provisions of the National Energy Board Act, and any other general legislation relating to pipe lines enacted by parliament with respect to the transmission and transportation of oil and other liquid hydrocarbons.

I forgot to mention that I am referring to the speech made on second reading of the bill on January 24 by the hon. member for Medicine Hat. At that time he went on to say:

> The National Energy Board reports to parliament. There is the safeguard for the people of Canada with respect to the operation of this particular company after incorporation, and it seems to me that that should be sufficient for all of us.

Mr. Brunsden: I did not labour it for an hour.

Mr. Howard: Inasmuch as the hon. member for Medicine Hat opened up the subject on January 24, perhaps he would be kind enough to let me follow along and point out how fallacious his argument was at that time when he said that we should surrender jurisdiction to the national energy board and not consider the matter ourselves.

Mr. Brunsden: Take another 30 minutes.

Mr. Howard: It is quite true that the member for Medicine Hat did not belabour the point for half an hour, but it was six o'clock when he got to that point in his remarks and his speech was interrupted because of the rules of the house. In any event, I will deal with one or two other points.

Mr. Deschatelets: Don't be too hard on him.

Mr. Howard: No, this is all put forward in that kind of spirit of discussion that the hon. member for Bow River referred to a while ago.

Mr. Deschatelets: He has not got much experience.

Mr. Howard: Oh, I beg to differ.

Mr. Bigg: Have a little chat out in the lobby if you wish, but if you are going to speak address the Chair.

Mr. Howard: I am very sorry and I apologize to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the committee for engaging in these remarks on the side. You must admit that they were tempting. I should like now to refer to some of the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver South in his speech on March 6, as found on page 2675 of Hansard. I wish that more hon. members would be like him and would have that independence of mind, depth of conscience and clarity of thought that would allow them to take a stand similar to that of the hon. member for Vancouver South with regard to this bill and, incidentally, with regard to other bills. We all know, of course, that his independence of thought and action does not coincide with the wishes of the cabinet. Let us see what he is reported as saying at page 2675. I will just read those relevant portions. He is reported as follows:

> Some of the statements have been made almost on the assumption by the speakers that it was a government bill, when everybody in the house should know that, as a private bill, the government is not involved in it in the slightest degree.

He goes on to say:

> —the party whip was in no way involved in the decisions that are taken by hon. members in the private members' hour. There is no party whip on this bill. All members are entitled to speak on this bill as they think right and proper.

I agree that is the proper course to take but the implication is clear that in regard to all other government bills members are not entitled to speak or vote as they think right and proper. Is it a proper implication that when the party whip is around, in regard to government legislation, there is no independence of thought in the ranks of the 200 members? I do not know whether that is the situation but I certainly read it into the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver South. We all know how the party system controls the votes of those members on the government side of the house, and I can imagine that there was a big argument during the government caucus regarding that position taken by the member for Vancouver South, which was obviously in opposition to the silent government. I can imagine that there was a question raised on Wednesday morning in that great railway committee room as to why the hon. member for Vancouver South had the temerity to act as an individual, when in reality he was not supposed to. I realize that he comes from British Columbia and possesses that desire for independence which all individuals from British Columbia have, and I have great admiration for him in that regard.

That hon. member made remarks regarding Canadian ownership and control. He read excerpts from the proceedings of that committee. I do not wish to belabour the point by reading them again but I point out that they are available to anyone wishing to read them. He did point out that one of the answers given by Mr. Burgis was not a factual statement. Mr. Burgis did not tell a falsehood. He did not tell the whole truth but phrased the truth in such a way that it led members of that committee into the belief that shares had been offered to the Canadian public, although there was no public clamour for ownership. The member for Vancouver South pointed out quite clearly and honestly that this was not the case. He pointed out that not one share had been offered to the Canadian public, and I believe that is the key to this whole consideration.

Let us refer to some of the remarks made by the member for Bow River in regard to Canadian ownership and participation. One of the extensive arguments that we receive from members on the government side of the house is that we have a national energy board with certain responsibilities, one of which is to see that there is a certain amount of Canadian participation in a particular company. The impression is left that the national energy board will protect Canadian interests and that if there is not a sufficient amount of Canadian ownership of these pipe line companies the board will not grant a certificate. I think that is also the implication of many of the remarks which have been made. Let us see if that is precisely what the National Energy Board Act says. The relevant portion is section 44, and this has been distorted somewhat by my hon. friend for Bow River. Section 44 provides that the board "may" do certain things. This is a permissive word, not a mandatory one regardless of how the hon. member for Bow River substitutes meanings. Section 44 provides that the board may, subject to the approval of the governor in council, do certain things. We find that the government does have a finger in this control. The board is not an agent of the government, but we find a degree of government control which makes sure that the board carries out what it is supposed to do and does not stray too far from Tory philosophy, whatever that might happen to be from day to day. The board may issue a certificate in respect of a pipe line or an international power line if it is satisfied as to certain conditions.

Mr. Brunsden: Are you reading now or just talking?

Mr. Howard: I propose to read section 44(d):

> —the financial responsibility and financial structure of the applicant, the methods of financing the line and the extent to which Canadians will have an opportunity of participating in the financing, engineering and construction of the line.

That does not in any way say that the extent of participation shall be 10 per cent, 2 per cent, 50 per cent or, and I believe Mr. Burgis mentioned this figure, 9.6 per cent. This section merely suggests that the national energy board may have regard to the extent to which Canadians will have an opportunity of participating in the financing, engineering and construction of the line. Those are the powers given to the national energy board to ensure Canadian participation in pipe lines. Presumably this law, introduced by this government, has some connection with a paragraph in the speech from the throne this year which reads as follows:

> You will be invited to consider means by which to encourage a greater participation by Canadians in the ownership and control of industry and resources in Canada.

That is wonderful, and that is from the speech from the throne. To make it official I might say I have the record, another piece of fiction, but, something which Tory members hold up as containing the truth.

Mr. Woolliams: The new testament?

Mr. Howard: Yes, the new testament and I find five specific items in this "new testament"—what a blasphemous reference that is—which are false.

Mr. Brunsden: Speaking to a point of order, the hon. member in the exuberance of his verbosity is calling the speech from the throne a piece of fiction. He referred to a pamphlet as another piece of fiction. I take it he meant the first was also fiction and, if so, he should withdraw that remark.

Mr. Howard: If the hon. member for Medicine Hat has come to that conclusion, then I can in no way account for his interpretation of what the speech from the throne meant. I will tell him that the government has as yet not lived up to the speech from the throne, nor has it lived up to any speech from the throne that has been put forward by this government since it has been in office.

The Chairman: Order. I regret to tell the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak to this bill because I want to support it with all the force and energy that I have at my command.

As a preamble to what I have to say, I want to inform the committee that this pipe line from Pincher Creek to the boundary line is mostly in my riding of Macleod. We are tremendously interested in that area in the development of industry, exports and markets for these surplus hydrocarbons. For those who know very little about the gas and oil business, perhaps I might be pardoned if I just take a moment to say that when natural gas comes out of the ground, on the average 90 per cent in Alberta is wet gas; the other 10 per cent is dry gas. That wet gas must be scrubbed and separated. In that separation, you take out the methane, the ethane, the propane, the butane, the pentane and the sulphur dioxide. The only natural gas that is put through the pipes to Ontario and the United States, in the large 36" pipes, is the methane gas. A market must be found for the other by-products of the gas industry. It is with those by-products and their markets that this bill deals, as they relate to the southwestern part of Alberta.

I want to say this. You cannot sell methane gas unless you take care of the by-products. The conservation board in the province of Alberta requires that these products either be marketed successfully but not wasted; they must be conserved. What is happening now in the B.A. gas field southeast of Pincher Creek is that by-products are being pumped back down into the ground for conservation. What these people want in order to operate economically, to cover their costs, to develop new fields, to increase the size of the industry, to have development, and to give employment—in order to do all these things that we are all hopeful that our industry will be able to do—is to find markets for these by-products. That is what this bill has set out to do. That is why we have been behind it. That is what we are searching for. We are hoping to find markets for these products.

We are splitting hairs when we talk about ownership and a number of problems like that. After all, I have every confidence that the people behind Aurora Pipe Line Company will give maximum consideration to Canadian participation. I believe that these people, deep down in their hearts, want Canadian participation. They want the good will of the Canadian people and may I say that they are out to assist in every way possible to develop industry in western Canada.

There is one other point I wish to make. The B.A. Oil Company, operating seventeen miles south and east of Pincher Creek, is now distributing well over 50 per cent of the natural gas which is being piped to Ontario to warm Ontario homes. That is something to ponder and consider. I refer to the fact that out of that one small area you have this tremendous volume of natural gas. Just west of Pincher Creek some ten or 12 miles, another field is being developed by Shell Oil Company and they also will have their problem of marketing by-products.

Before you can strip out methane and put it through the pipelines to California or export it to Ontario you must find a method by which to take care of those by-products. It is the problem of a market for those by-products that this Aurora Pipe Line Company seeks to solve. That is why I, as member of parliament for Macleod riding, feel it my duty to rise in my place and do everything I possibly can to support this bill.

For the life of me I cannot see how a small and, I may say, vocal group in the far corner of the chamber can continue to filibuster a measure such as this one which is in the best interests of the people of that area. It would give employment. I may say that the other pipe lines which are being built through the Crowsnest pass down to Kingsgate and in that direction are giving a tremendous impetus and employment to the people of that area. But before this pipe line can properly operate from Savanna Creek, from the Shell plant at Pincher Creek and from these other areas we must, above all, find a market for these surplus products. There is no room, when starting a new field to pump them back down into the ground. In other words, at present the only place where by-products can be disposed of is in the ground. So I say that in order for these companies to operate economically, they must have a market for these surplus products.

There is no other way in which to deal with them than to sell them to whomever we can sell them and wherever we can find any market for them. They must be shipped by pipe line. They cannot be transported otherwise; except in the case of sulphur, they must be put through a pipe line. That is the most economical way of transporting them. Then, by fractional distillation they are made into some 10,000 different products. For those hon. members who are not familiar with the oil industry let me say that from these by-products about which we are talking here this evening there can be made approximately 10,000 products that serve the needs of mankind. This number of products can be made from these hydrocarbons that are taken from the wet gas as it comes from these fields.

Again, Mr. Chairman, may I say that I do not want to take up any more time in discussing this bill. However, I hope that those in the far corner will co-operate regardless of the fact that they may think sufficient consideration has not been given to Canadian participation. I believe that is a matter which will be taken care of properly. The bill is not different from the act which has been passed in Saskatchewan; and I am sure that Alberta is in a much more serious condition with respect to the marketing of these by-products than Saskatchewan ever dreamed of being. I therefore hope that those in the far corner, like all other members of the House of Commons, will rise to the occasion and give approval to this bill.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am quite sure that the committee will have been greatly surprised to find tonight that this is just another cog in the wheel of the government that will settle the unemployment problem and that the reason that some of the members of the government are so interested in the immediate passage of the bill is in order the unemployment picture will look that much brighter. This is certainly a new way of solving the unemployment problem. I would not know, of course, but I would think that if you dig with pick and shovel a half mile pipe line you would not employ more than a few men for a few weeks. This is not what this bill is for.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Peters: Certainly.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder whether the hon. member has given any thought to the employment which producing 10,000 barrels of by-products a day means to the Pincher Creek area and the province of Alberta. We are not talking about half a mile; we are talking about the whole industry, how many men will be employed drilling the wells, digging out the by-products and the other things which are connected with the operation.

Mr. Peters: I am afraid we are involved in two or three questions in connection with this bill. To answer that question, I would have to go into what results the oil industry has produced in the field of employment and how much has been taken over by automation.

Very few men run a very large industry in Ontario. I do not think there is very much difference between the operation of the oil industry in Ontario and in the west. Many red herrings have been drawn into this debate. The unemployment question is the last in a long series of such red herrings. If we were going to dig a second trans-Canada pipe line with a pick and shovel I would support the bill on the basis of solving the unemployment problem, but to dig half a mile of pipe line—and I do not care where it starts or ends—is not going to solve the unemployment problem when we consider that we have 600,000 or 700,000 unemployed people.

We are faced with another problem. Many hon. members of this house are not the least bit interested in honesty; they are not the least bit interested in the over-all economy of the country; they are not particularly interested in the employment or the unemployment picture. They are interested in their own little segment of the economy and what the bill is going to do for it. Certainly the last speaker—

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question? The hon. member has just indicated that there is in this house a group of members who are not interested in honesty. Would he mind singling them out?

The Chairman: If the hon. member were to do that he would have to withdraw his words.

Mr. Peters: We heard this afternoon and this evening one hon. member saying one thing and another hon. member quoting from the same document and saying something else. I am suggesting that these hon. members must be using this measure to further their own ends. That, in itself, is not in the best interests of the country.

An hon. Member: You are wrong.

Mr. Peters: Someone is wrong. I do not know who that someone may be.

An hon. Member: You are.

Mr. Peters: By the time we have finished discussing this matter we will probably know.

An hon. Member: Withdraw your statement.

Mr. Peters: The matter is very simple. I think everybody agrees that we are not particularly concerned with this half-mile of pipe line that is being discussed at the present time or the fact that it will export something like 11,000 barrels of crude oil a day. The national energy board suggests that we have an export potential of something like 800,000 barrels of oil a day. What we are now suggesting is that these products must and can be held in Canada and used in Canada for the development of industry in Canada.

Certainly the hon. member who asked the last question should be the last person to object to this aim because in his own part of the country he has seen, as I have seen in mine and as those in northern Quebec have seen, that the exportation of our raw materials has taken place without secondary industry ever being developed.

The previous speaker in this debate talked about developing secondary industry and industry in Canada. If we have a product in a surplus market, I am quite sure that as the price drops for that surplus product there will be an opportunity for some enterprising businessman to go into that field and start developing a secondary industry in which to use this very cheap commodity. We all know that as the demand for the commodity increases as the secondary industry develops, the price will again rise and will level itself off at a competitive price.

The national energy board was of course set up a few years ago when the members of this government believed we should be working towards developing industry in Canada for Canadians and utilizing our natural resources to the greatest degree. The national energy board was set up for this purpose. We are now being asked to set up a company which will, in my opinion, contravene the aims that we had when we set up the national energy board. We are being asked to set up a fully-fledged company whose only purpose is to drain off and funnel out of Alberta these condensates, these high calibre oil and gasoline bearing commodities. We are channelling these materials into the United States, where they will go into the Chicago area and secondary industry development will take place.

We suggest that this secondary industry development can take place in Canada. It can be done by Canadians and used for the benefit of all Canadians. I agree that the hon. members from Alberta are probably unhappy that this was not done immediately, because it would mean an immediate draining off of some of these surplus products—and I am told they are surplus products—to the United States and a few dollars would come back to the Alberta oil fields. Of course, this would be of some advantage to Alberta. But is it not also true that when we carried our coal off to some other place we obtained some advantage out of it? It was certainly true in northern Ontario when we exported our pulp and paper in its raw form into the United States. We obtained some advantage out of it, but how much more advantage would we have obtained if we had established a secondary industry there? That secondary industry could have been established in our area. We would have obtained a great deal more advantage from it for our community and for the country in general.

I think those hon. members from Quebec in particular should be very much interested in this, because they have seen exactly the same thing happening in regard to their northern iron industry. The iron ore goes down through Seven Islands, where we could have steel plants larger than anything on the North American continent, and goes into Pittsburgh where it helps United States development.

If we are going to be only an adjunct to the United States, this is perfectly all right. However, I want to see secondary industry in Canada. This can come about only if we take advantage of whatever natural resources we have. In my opinion they are not the God-given right of those people in Alberta only, but they belong to the whole Canadian economy. We should also start some of these benefits flowing into the eastern markets, because while westerners may talk about a surplus of gasoline and oil, there is no surplus in the rest of Canada. We export 6½ million barrels and we import 6½ million barrels. I do not see where there is any great surplus when one looks at the Canadian economy as a whole.

It seems to me that some of these westerners had better forget about the buccaneers they met when the trans-Canada pipe line come into being and should start thinking Canadian rather than in the buccaneer manner. It is all right to carry the bible under your arm, to preach about all the natural resources we have and how wonderful everything is going to be under the free enterprise system. But it has not been too good in these areas where this type of development has occurred. It is not only the social credit domain that has allowed exploitation on an unlimited scale in those fortunate areas where resources are abundant, but this has also been done in Ontario. I would not like to see again the exploitation that has taken place previously in Canada and which will take place if this pipe line is built.

I agree that it may seem odd to put up such a fight for such a small section of line, but it does not seem to me that it is going to be a small section of line. If an hon. member or one of his friends decided, as a person, to build this half mile of pipe line I am quite sure his exportation program would receive a thorough scrutiny from the national energy board. When this company is established, if it becomes established, I am sure it will not build merely a half a mile of pipe line. I am sure it will eventually have pipe lines running into the Yukon, British Columbia, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and other provinces. If this is not the case, why would they ask for a capitalization of $10 million? Why would they ask for the right to build airports? Certainly, hon. members are correct when they ask these questions, because if they listen to the story being told that all this company wants to do is to build half a mile of pipe line they are bound to say that this company does not need airfields or aeroplanes. They certainly have no need for these things unless there is a question involved of avoiding income tax, writing off assets and getting depreciation. There is no legitimate reason for having this corporation established with such a large capitalization if it does not intend to build pipe lines throughout an interprovincial area.

The initial stage of this venture calls for the draining off of the oil surplus and its transmission to the United States, but tremendous developments will probably take place. One hon. member asked tonight why something had not been done with regard to public utilities on a national basis. It is not true that we do not have one of these developments. You may remember, Mr. Chairman, that only recently the Canadian government bought from the United States a pipe line which they owned lock, stock and barrel. We bought this pipe line, a pipe line which has attached to it airports and even a couple of villages. I would ask the hon. member sponsoring this measure if he can find out from the government what happened to this particular pipe line. I do not think he could find out. But we have, or at least we had, a pipe line which belonged to us, and it passed through the area which this proposed company would like to cover, in part, at least. I suggest that before setting up this elaborate company to export surplus Canadian oil we should find out what has happened to the resources of that concern.

This proposed company will export a relatively small amount in the over-all picture, perhaps less than 1 per cent of our total surplus, or the full amount available for export. Even when this pipe line is carrying its capacity load we shall only be moving one tenth of the amount which the government has indicated would be available eventually for exportation. Hon. members can stand up and talk about lawyers. It is always true, of course, that lawyers are never right and never wrong. At least, they can never be more than 50 per cent wrong because there is always one of them on each side of an argument, though between them they do not make up 100 per cent of the truth. So it is not fair to stand up and give this flexible lawyer-interpretation of the powers said to be needed by the company. I think this committee is entitled to the actual facts. If the company only intends to build half a mile of pipe line, then let this bill be withdrawn. Let us recommend here that the bill go back to the committee. Let the sponsor explain to his principals that he is not prepared to support the present measure with its large capitalization but that he is prepared to sponsor a bill calling for $15,000 to build half a mile of pipe line and to seek the necessary powers commensurate with the construction of a pipe line of this teeny-weeny length.

I think the hon. member for Bow River is not being entirely fair if he talks continually about the money it will cost to build half a mile of pipe line, while at the same time asking us to endorse the granting of powers which seem to me to be wider even than those possessed by the national energy board itself. These powers enter upon many fields. They will infringe on the responsibilities of four or five departments of government. They will enable the company to build airports, fly aeroplanes, construct houses, transmit by radio, build highways, and, possibly, build townsites and schools. If development of this type is, indeed, envisaged, then I think we should be told, in which case I do not think there is a member in this chamber who would not oppose the incorporation of a company for these purposes. On the other hand, if the sponsor is only asking for this restricted development then I think he should make that very clear, and the verbiage which is now in the bill should be removed. I think that is a simple proposition.

I believe it should also be made clear that we in this party are not opposed to the orderly marketing of the surplus of a product, but we are of the opinion that this government must give very serious consideration to the establishment in Canada of secondary industry. Such industries do depend upon government assistance, and, I believe, can only be established with government assistance and direction. I think now is the time when we should decide if we want new secondary industry. It may sound a bit like socialism—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Are you suggesting subsidies, which would mean high tariffs?

Mr. Peters: I am suggesting that if we approve bills of this type we would in effect be subsidizing the people who are going to participate financially, and they are not Canadians. It is not a Canadian company which is going to benefit. I suggest we should subsidize new secondary industries if necessary, particularly in association with the oil industry. In the United States around the city of Chicago there are important secondary industries which live off the waste not only of these condensates but the waste which come from the wastes after the gasoline has been taken out of the condensates. This is not only sulphur. I am told they make coal tar products and all types of manufactures, including aspirin, from these by-products and distillates from the petroleum products and I suggest that if this can be done in the United States it can be done as well and cheaper in Canada.

There would be no objection then, I think, to allowing the exploitation of these finished products. It seems to me we should have learned our lesson by now. I see the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and the Minister of Forestry are here tonight and each of them will realize the vast amount of natural resources we have sent out of this country in a raw state. They would appreciate the fact that in the next generation we must create secondary industries in our own country and foster this new development around the industries with which we are blessed. If I am wrong somebody will correct me—

Mr. Brunsden: You are wrong.

Mr. Peters: But it will not be the minister from Medicine Hat because, frankly, I do not think he can tell me anything on this subject. He just asks a lot of silly questions, but there is nothing he could tell me.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): He would not need to know much to tell you anything.

Mr. Peters: And that goes for the minister from Acadia, too. I do not use the word "minister" in the sense of cabinet ministers but in the sense of people who go around the country spreading the gospel of social credit. I am surprised—

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the hon. gentleman is accusing me and the hon. member for Acadia of being Social Crediters. That is the last thing in the world we want to be. The second last thing would be a C.C.F.'er.

Mr. Peters: I apologize for injecting this note into the debate because we have not time to discuss it. I could point out the similarities but is would not accomplish anything. Those who listen will know. People will support provincially the same candidates they do federally.

It has been said that if it walks like a duck, looks like a duck and smells like a duck, in all probability it is a duck. What we have seen of the exploitation program in Alberta indicates there is a duck somewhere in the picture.

The hon. member for Bow River in his remarks raised two questions. The first was why the pipe line company should come to parliament with this bill, and the second was why we have the present terms of the bill. I am not sure that I know why the company has come to parliament. Section 25 of the National Energy Board Act sets out who may construct and operate pipe lines and states the exception. It is difficult to know why this bill should come before parliament or why the company should require capitalization of $10 million.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. We have heard this a million times. As I recall it, we have a rule against repetition. It is now five minutes to ten. I appreciate that the C.C.F. has decided to talk out this measure but we have heard this argument a million times, and at least a dozen times from the hon. member who has the floor. His needle is stuck on the record. If we could have the record changed, it would not be too bad.

Mr. Peters: I have even less respect than before for the hon. member's intelligence. The hon. member raised these new points this afternoon and spent considerable time explaining them. I humbly suggest that no one has had a chance to talk more than once or twice, the hon. member and I being among those who have had. The hon. member has created confusion with his explanation concerning the $15,000 expenditure and the capitalization of $10 million. There must be an explanation for the discrepancy.

Mr. Woolliams: Section 34, subsection 2.

Mr. Peters: It is interesting to note—

Mr. Kindt: Would the hon. member permit a question. Is the hon. gentleman not aware that the petrochemical industry of western Canada has sufficient by-products to last for 1,000 years? We could export the by-products from the entire field at Pincher Creek and have enough left from other fields for the industry to continue for a thousand years. Therefore, the hon. members opposite are not talking about stopping the growth of western Canada. They cannot attack this measure on that ground. They must in fact attack it on the basis of whether we need those by-products in Canada. The answer is that we do not need them in Canada and should export them.

That is a simple, physical fact which does not appear to have sunk into the head of my hon. friend and until he appreciates that fact he will be arguing on completely false grounds in opposing this bill.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Peters: I noticed that the hon. member received applause for that statement. Let me tell him, through you, sir, that a similar statement was made many years ago with respect to the white pine industry in the Ottawa valley. A scientist like the hon. member came from Sweden, an expert in the white pine industry. He spent several months touring the Ottawa valley and returned to Sweden. He said that no matter how much white pine they cut in Canada, the supply would never be exhausted.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): The hon. member is simply against the export of gas.

Mr. Peters: The scientist said the supply would go on forever, but now there is no white pine industry in the Ottawa valley. The hon. gentleman received applause for making a similar statement with respect to a non-renewable industry, a commodity that cannot be replaced.

Progress reported.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I inquire of the house leader what is the order of business for tomorrow and Wednesday?

Mr. Churchill: There will be a slight change from what I announced on Thursday evening. The first item tomorrow will be second reading of Bill No. C-57 to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act. The second item will be No. 12 on today's order paper, the motion standing in the name of the Minister of Agriculture to empower the standing committee on agriculture and colonization to continue its inquiry into the question of prices of farm machinery.

The third item which I had called, namely the army benevolent fund, I should like to postpone. If the house will give its required unanimous consent I should like instead to proceed with a motion to refer Bill No. C-71 relating to the Civil Service Act to the special committee which was appointed on Friday, the membership of which was listed today.

Mr. Chevrier: What is the number of that item of business as it appears on the order paper?

Mr. Churchill: It is not on the order paper because on Friday we omitted directing what should be done with that bill. There is some slight difference of opinion as to whether or not we have already referred the bill to the committee.

Mr. Chevrier: I was under the impression we had, as I indicated to the house leader earlier.

Mr. Churchill: On Friday we resolved that a special committee be appointed to consider Bill No. C-71 and today we named the committee but we did not actually refer the bill to this committee. That is what I am talking about now.

The fourth item will be item No. 7 on today's order paper, the resolution in the name of the Minister of Labour dealing with programs of vocational rehabilitation for disabled persons.

On Wednesday we will start with Bill No. C-73 which has reference to the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Chevrier: With respect to the consent for which the house leader asked, we on this side are quite happy to give consent in that matter.

Mr. Speaker: That is consent to deal tomorrow with the motion to refer Bill No. C-71 to the standing committee?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It has been established.

Mr. Speaker: Unless the house wishes to refer the bill tonight?

Mr. Hellyer: Tomorrow will be soon enough.

It being four minutes past ten o'clock, the house, adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

HYDROGRAPHIC SURVEYS, NORTHERN WATERS—SHIP CHARTER

Question No. 137—Mr. Tucker:

1. To whom was the charter awarded for a ship or ships to carry out hydrographic surveys in northern waters during the navigation season of 1960?
2. Was the contract awarded as a result of tenders being called?
3. If so, how many tenders were received, and what was the amount of each?
4. Who was awarded the charter in 1959, and what was the amount of the contract?

Answer by: Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys):

1. (a) Shaw Steamship Co. Ltd., Halifax, N.S., (b) Christensen Canadian Enterprises Ltd., Montreal, Que.

2. Yes.

3. Seven tenders were received in the following amounts:

Basic Daily Rate—$590; $665; $750; $750; $750; $1,000 and $1,400. Plus extra charges for victualling, insurance, fuel, oil and overtime.

4. (a) Christensen Canadian Enterprises Ltd., Montreal, estimated $91,080; (b) Bowring Bros. Ltd., St. John's, Newfoundland, $96,700; (c) Shaw Steamship Co. Ltd., Halifax, N.S., $123,770.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 14, 1961

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PICKERSGILL—MOTION TO REFER EXELBY MATTER TO COMMITTEE

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege arising out of the document which was tabled by the Minister of Labour today and which is headed "In the matter of that certain C.B.C. telecast known as "Close-Up", telecast on the evening of Tuesday, March 7, 1961".

My question of privilege is that this sworn statement of Mr. Glen H. Exelby, which has just now become the property of the house, provides evidence that in his statement on March 8, as reported at page 2783 of Hansard, the Minister of Labour misinformed and misled the house with respect to a matter coming under his jurisdiction as a minister responsible to this house.

I think I can demonstrate this by a very brief quotation from the minister's statement and from the document itself. The minister said, as reported at page 2783 of Hansard—

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, what is the question of privilege in this instance?

Mr. Pickersgill: The question of privilege, if I may reiterate it, is that a minister of the crown from his place in the house, misinformed and misled the house—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: —about a matter coming under his jurisdiction, for which he is responsible to this house and to this house only.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Pickersgill: We cannot have two questions of privilege at the same time.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has already raised a question of privilege. If it is proceeded with I will of course hear the Minister of Labour. However, as I understand it the hon. member who has risen on this question proposes to confront the statement of the minister with an affidavit filed by the minister yesterday in response to a question asked in the house. It seems to me that the hon. member is endeavouring to challenge what the minister said. If there is a misleading of the house by an hon. member or a minister, and it is an intentional misleading, it will undoubtedly raise a question for consideration by the house, using the proper procedure. However it seems to me that the hon. member is rising to establish his case rather than to move a motion or suggest a proceeding which might arise if the case were established.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to make a motion so that this matter may be properly brought before the house. My motion, which would be seconded by my hon. friend from Megantic (Mr. Roberge) is as follows:

That the matter of the statements of the Minister of Labour in this house with regard to the case of Mr. Glen H. Exelby together with the sworn statement by Mr. Exelby tabled today be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections for appropriate action.

Mr. Speaker: Before placing this motion before the house it is my responsibility to determine whether there is a prima facie question of privilege. As I understand the hon. member, his question of privilege is that the minister misinformed the house in the statement which he made in answer to a question some days ago.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is correct.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should hear other hon. members before determining whether a question of the privileges of the house does arise, assuming that the facts are correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I submit, with respect, on the point of order—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I submit with respect, sir, that before it would be possible to demonstrate that there is a prima facie question of privilege, evidence would have to be heard. I am prepared to give that right away.

Mr. Speaker: I think it would be no function of mine to hear the evidence. I have to determine whether the facts alleged, assuming they are true, raise a question of privilege. Then it would be for the house, through this motion or whatever means it chose to follow, to determine on the facts, would a prima facie question of privilege arise on the allegation by the hon. member that the minister has misinformed the house?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Once again today an attempt is being made to upset the regular business of the house. I think this is the first time an attempt of this kind has been made in the 25 years I have been a member of the House of Commons. Just to show how ridiculous it is, let me remind hon. members that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate had a copy of this affidavit yesterday. He told us he had received a copy or, in any event, it was common ground that he had one. The question was discussed yesterday. If he was going to raise a question of privilege, that was the time when it should have been done.

Mr. Pearson: It had not even been tabled then.

Mr. Green: There was no need for it to be tabled, as the hon. member had it in his own possession. Surely he is not at liberty to come in today and initiate a question of privilege of this kind. It would be very interesting to know how much the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate had to do with the drawing up and completion of this affidavit.

Mr. Speaker: The question I have to determine and with regard to which I am seeking the assistance of the Acting Prime Minister is whether or not the circumstances which have been alleged amount to a prima facie breach of the privileges of the house. If the Acting Prime Minister could help me with regard to that decision I should appreciate it.

Mr. Green: To put the situation in its very worst aspect, here you have a case where an affidavit by an interested party is produced and an attempt is made to use that against the word which the Minister of Labour gave to the house. I suggest it is stretching things very far if a member of the opposition can go out and get an affidavit from someone whose name has been mentioned in the house and then come in and use that affidavit as part of an attempt to bring in a motion on a question of privilege as a means of attacking statements made by responsible ministers. I suggest that this is going entirely too far, and if we are to have orderly conduct of the business of this house we should be going ahead with the work of parliament and not have these red herrings thrown in every day.

Hon. gentlemen opposite had the opportunity to discuss this question when the estimates of the Department of Labour were up for consideration last week. They have brought it up on every possible occasion, doing their best to wring the last bit of publicity out of the question, and I suggest that when they bring in this motion today they are going too far.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Perhaps I may speak on this question, because it directly affects me. The statement I made in this house was based on information, and correct information, which was supplied to me by the national employment service office, information which I disclosed in this house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Contrary to the law.

Mr. Starr: Well, we know that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is a real expert on everything. I do not purport to be so.

May I call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that there is on the order paper under notices of motion for production of papers a motion, No. 82, which asks for a copy of all the records in this case. Yesterday I asked that this motion should stand until Wednesday when, I said, it would be dealt with. In the circumstances I suggest that the present motion is premature until it has been proven that what I said in this house, based on the information I got from the national employment office, was incorrect. If these papers and records are produced they will substantiate whether the information I got was true or false.

Mr. Grant Campbell (Stormont): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, surely the raising of a question of privilege in the house is analogous to contempt of court, and there is nothing similar to that at all in the present circumstances. Beauchesne states examples of what are regarded as breaches of privilege in citation 111. They include reflections on the character of the Speaker, reflections upon the conduct of the chairman of committees, imputing unfair conduct to the chairman of a select committee and imputations against members of corruption in the execution of their duties.

That surely is what constitutes a breach of the privilege of the house, something analogous to contempt of court. Surely if the hon. member in question is not entitled to impugn the accuracy of information given to the house by a minister he is not going to accomplish the same purpose in this indirect and clandestine way.

Mr. Pickersgill: As I understand it we are discussing whether there is a prima facie question of privilege. We are seeking to assist Your Honour in reaching a conclusion about that matter. The only argument advanced by the Acting Prime Minister against my contention that there is, is that this matter could have been raised yesterday. I do not think it could have been raised yesterday because the document on which it is based was not in the possession of the house then. It is quite true that I had a copy of the document, but I did not have the original; it was sent to the Minister of Labour. Moreover, sir, I felt it would be improper for me, inside or outside the house, to do anything about that document until the Minister of Labour had the opportunity, which he was given yesterday afternoon in this house, to make amends, an opportunity which he did not take.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Instead of which the minister undertook to summarize the document, leaving out important portions of it. I had in the back of my mind, sir, the thought as to whether I should raise the question at that time, but it seemed to me, since the minister had agreed to table the document, that I should wait until the document was in the possession of the house, when it was an official document of this house, available equally to all hon. members, and then at the first opportunity raise what I suggest to you, sir, is a very serious matter indeed, namely a sworn statement by the person affected that statements made in this house about that person by a minister of the crown in the discharge of his duties were untrue. That is surely something about which the minister does not want to have left any doubt whatsoever.

The motion I am making is a motion to follow the procedure of this house to clear up the matter. The Acting Prime Minister said that in the 25 years he had been in this house no such motion had been made before. Well, I do not know where the minister was last year when the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin) raised a motion of a similar character about a much less important matter. Moreover, Your Honour recognized the privilege by implication on March 9 when I raised an earlier question of privilege, which will be found at page 2811 of Hansard with respect to this same statement by the minister. Your Honour said:

> The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has risen on a matter of privilege. The point he makes is that a minister of the crown in the house has not observed the conditions of a statute passed by the house. I think a matter of privilege properly arises under such circumstances—

Surely, sir, if you felt that a matter of privilege properly arose under that kind of circumstance, when at that time we had reason to think what the minister had said was correct, it arises doubly when a man makes a sworn statement—which would constitute perjury if it were not true—that what the minister said is not true and that this house has been misinformed.

Of course, sir, this is not the only evidence. The evidence of the actual employer of this man and the evidence of someone to whom he applied for a job is to the same effect as the evidence given by Mr. Exelby. All these witnesses point to the untruth of two statements made in this house by the minister on March 8. It seems to me, sir, that there is only one proper way to clean it up. Moreover, if Your Honour will refer to paragraph 108 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms already quoted by the learned and hon. member for Stormont—

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Thank you.

Mr. Pickersgill: —you will discover the following:

> Anything which may be considered a contempt of court by a tribunal is a breach of privilege if perpetrated against parliament,—

I suggest, sir—

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Read on.

Mr. Pickersgill: —that false witness given in a court would be comparable to what is charged in this case. By recognizing that there is a prima facie question of privilege and by referring it to a committee, we are not making any judgment one way or another about the matter. We are merely sending it to a committee which can hear all the evidence and form its own conclusions.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, with regard to misrepresentation, may I read on?

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the hon. member's point of order. I recognize the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George.

Mr. Egan Chambers (St. Lawrence-St. George): I will be brief, Mr. Speaker. This house is frequently misinformed and misled. No question of privilege arises unless it is intentional. I do not admit for one moment that the house has been misinformed or misled in this instance, but no allegation has been made that it was intentional nor could one be made. Therefore there can be no question of privilege.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I wonder if I might draw Your Honour's attention to Beauchesne's fourth edition, page 102, paragraph 113, half way down, where it states as follows:

> But a dispute arising between two members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege.

I suggest to you that this is a dispute originated by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who has declined to accept the statement of the Minister of Labour and then on the basis of an affidavit or a statement, or both, made outside the house has attempted to launch here a question of privilege and a reference to a committee.

In his motion also, Mr. Speaker, I point out that he does not make any point of privilege whatsoever. He is so unsure of his facts that all he asks is that these matters be referred to a committee. He has nothing on which to found his statement or his motion would disclose that fact. He is simply asking for an investigation by a committee, yet in so far as the house is concerned the Minister of Labour has placed on record the facts that were in his possession, and his statement as to the validity and the truth of those facts should be accepted. That is the normal practice of this house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, may I say a word about the point just raised by the house leader?

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member who raises this matter wishes to reply to the statement of the house leader, I think I will hear him before I dispose of the matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: I just want to say a word regarding the form of the motion and to draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that in seeking the proper form for my motion I was guided by the advice your honour gave to the hon. member for Timmins on a question of privilege which arose last year.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I feel that no good purpose would be served by further argument as to whether there is a matter of privilege.

There are two points made regarding the matter raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. The first is that there has been delay in raising the matter. The statement of the minister complained of was made, I believe, last week and the reason for questioning that statement which has been given today by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is an affidavit which was referred to yesterday and which the minister was asked to table and has tabled now, and which I think the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate acknowledges he had in his possession yesterday at the time the Minister of Labour made a second statement, although not the original affidavit.

I doubt that I would dispose of the matter on the ground of delay alone, although it is important that questions of privilege should be dealt with when they arise.

The other point, which I think is made most effectively by the house leader, is that there should be more involved than a dispute between two members as to facts. One has to distinguish between the privileges of the house and privileges of individual members. I see nothing that involves the rights or privileges of the individual member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who raised the matter. If there is any proper complaint for the house to raise against the minister it is based on his conduct in supplying information to the house.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate alleges that the information supplied by the minister was not true according to the affidavit in question. If, on nothing further, the house were to accept those circumstances as raising a prima facie question of privilege, it would be very difficult to conduct business in the house because almost any statement that is made by any member or minister could be disputed in some form or other by affidavit or contrary evidence.

Beauchesne recognizes that problem in citation 113, which was cited to me. It appears in Beauchesne's fourth edition at page 102, where he says that a dispute arising between two members, as to allegations of facts, does not fulfil the conditions of parliamentary privilege. I feel there is a necessary element lacking in the case made by the hon. member. I feel that he should have been prepared, if he wished to found a motion on his statement, to allege that there was bad faith on the part of the minister; that he deliberately supplied the house with wrong information. That would to my mind, raise a question of privilege of the house. But in the circumstance of a dispute arising over statements made by the minister in the course of his duty or, for that matter, by any member in his place making statements on his responsibility as a member of the house, one has to remember that the whole of parliamentary procedure is really based on the disputing of such statements in debate. Unless it goes beyond debate, in that sort of dispute, I feel that I would be leading the house into interminable difficulties if I accepted this circumstance as it is before us now as raising a matter of privilege sufficient to found a motion which does not allege that there was in fact a deliberate misleading of the house by the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to leave no doubt on that point. It is my opinion that there was a deliberate misleading of the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: I was dumbfounded to hear what was just said now. I can say to this house and to you, Mr. Speaker, that at no time as a member of parliament or as a minister of the crown have I deliberately misled this house or attempted to mislead it, nor, I hope, in the years to come will I stoop so low as to even think, as the hon. member does, that other hon. members do so deliberately.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I have given my best views to the hon. member on the matter which was raised and on the proposed motion which he submitted. Since then he has rather amplified his statement, but I do not propose to traverse the subject again unless it is raised again.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to have the motion put to the house.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege, I have repeatedly made statements outside this house and in this house which—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Unfortunately I am engaged with a matter of privilege at the moment, which I thought I had disposed of. The hon. member who raised it, if I understand him correctly, has proposed to refer the matter on a different basis to the committee, and I think in the circumstances it would be desirable that he frame his proposed motion to satisfy those conditions before I can accept it.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that the hon. member having raised his point of privilege and having submitted his motion and Your Honour having dealt with it, that should be the end of the matter and he does not then have the opportunity of getting up and making a change in his motion verbally as he has tried to do. I suggest that the matter has already been dealt with by Your Honour and that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has no right whatever to have a second try to reach his original objective.

Mr. Speaker: I think if the Acting Prime Minister followed my last remarks he will agree that is the position I took myself. I consider the request to present this motion as disposed of and if the hon. member wishes to go beyond what he did in his first application today and present a new matter, it is of course his right at any time to do so. In the meantime we shall proceed with the business of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: In view of what the Acting Prime Minister has said I am sure Your Honour would agree that it was Your Honour who raised this point as to whether I had implied deliberate intention, and it was in response to Your Honour's intervention on this point that I made my observation. It never occurred to me at any time that anyone would doubt that if I made a motion of the gravity of this motion I would make it merely because there was a dispute about something that was said. I made it because I considered the minister was lacking in his duty to this house.

Mr. Speaker: As I said, if the hon. member, upon reflection on what has taken place, wishes to present his motion again I will hear him again, but in the meantime I feel we should proceed with the business of the house.

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege, I would like to bring up the question of statements made by myself, supported editorially in the newspapers, upon which the member representing Bonavista-Twillingate has cast reflections. In support of this statement I read the editorial—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member raising something he said himself as a matter of privilege, or something said by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate?

Mr. MacInnis: It has reference to a statement made by the member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will state what his question of privilege is before he starts to read, perhaps we can determine whether it is something that should be raised.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate definitely cast reflections upon me similar to those he has tried to cast upon the Minister of Labour. I can substantiate this by—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think if the statement was made in the house the hon. member should have raised his question of privilege at that time. If the statement was made outside the house perhaps the hon. member would have to establish an attack on his character or moral conduct which would justify it.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate on several occasions has made reference to a statement I made casting reflection, and on the basis of this editorial, which I now have—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has not made any allegation as to what has been said against him, and in the absence of some specific allegation I cannot hear him further by allowing him to read editorials or give that sort of information.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Grant Campbell (Stormont): On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I have been in this house only a short time, but never did I think that if I were to be here for the remainder of my life I would ever hear in this house one hon. member in effect call another hon. member a liar, as has been done here effectually by accusing another hon. member of deliberate misrepresentation. Mr. Speaker, this scandalous conduct is subversive of the proprieties of this house or any other constitutional body such as this one.

Mr. Speaker: To what is the hon. member referring?

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): I am referring to the comment by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate accusing the Minister of Labour of deliberate misrepresentation. I say that is the sort of thing that is a disgrace to this house and this country. On the question of privilege I urge that this accusation be withdrawn and not be left on the permanent record.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the hon. member's concern for the dignity and the fair conduct of the house. The hon. member who was involved in the statement that was made rose and made a statement and denial and did not raise a question such as that which has now been raised by the hon. member for Stormont. I therefore think he might be well advised to leave the matter at the point at which it rests.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): I believe this matter transcends the personal reputation of the hon. member concerned. I believe it is a matter which is much more important than that. It goes to the matter of the dignity of the House of Commons.

Mr. Hellyer: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Is it not a rule of this house that matters of privilege must be raised immediately, as Your Honour has ruled?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, it is correct that several proceedings have intervened. The hon. member expressed a concern which is felt by all hon. members when allegations of that kind are made. However, I must point out to him that the matter was passed in the circumstances that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate was prepared to move in the house to refer the matter to a committee in order to review the allegations which he made. It is true that the allegations were made after he had proposed that the motion be accepted. Perhaps the situation is a bit confused by that fact. However, it is open to hon. members to make charges if they are prepared to back them up by prima facie evidence and by moving the appropriate motion in the house. If the hon. member will refer to his text I think he will find that is the case.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since the hon. gentleman has raised the matter, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be allowed to say that I had no intention and no thought of saying that when the Minister of Labour spoke on Wednesday he knowingly said things that were untrue. I took the word "deliberately" to mean that he deliberately made a statement, and he deliberately made a statement to this house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I might be allowed to clarify my meaning.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is making a statement which I think the house will want to hear, and I trust hon. members will hear it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman made a statement in order to discredit a broadcast and an individual, which statement has turned out apparently not to be true.

An hon. Member: Apparently?

Mr. Speaker: In view of the modification which has been made of the statement, it seems to me that the hon. member—

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): He has just added insult to injury by his qualification.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I was about to inform the hon. member for Stormont that in view of the substantial modification which was made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate voluntarily, notwithstanding that I had indicated that it was not a matter in which I felt I should intervene, I am of the view now that I should not instruct or direct the hon. member to do other than he has done.

STANDING ORDERS

CONCURRENCE IN SIXTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Margaret Aitken (York-Humber) moved that the sixth report of the standing committee on standing orders, presented to the house on Tuesday, March 14, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MOOSONEE, ONT.—WORKING CONDITIONS AT RADAR BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Habel (Cochrane): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister read the report by Mr. Hegge, the business representative of local 1669 of the united brotherhood of carpenters and joiners of America, regarding the conditions of labour at the radar base construction at Moosonee? If so, is it his intention to have the matter investigated at once?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister. Can the minister inform the house whether he has done anything about the matter?

Mr. Starr: It was just brought to my attention about one hour ago.

NEW BRUNSWICK—INTERIM PAYMENT ON WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance whether an interim payment was recently made to the government of New Brunswick in respect of the winter works program. A cheque was issued on February 24.

BARRIE, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO RATES PAID NATIONAL DEFENCE CARPENTERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has a survey of prevailing rates for carpenters been made in the Barrie district of Ontario, and would the minister comment on the complaint by Mr. Derrick Manson, business representative of local 2480 of the united brotherhood of carpenters and joiners of America, that carpenters are being paid 15 cents per hour below the prevailing rate of $2.55?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not feel it is part of my administrative function to comment on allegations made by Mr. Manson with regard to what are the prevailing rates for carpenters in some particular sections of the country. I may say, however, that a survey has been made of the rates paid in the Barrie area and I understand the matter will be considered very shortly by the appropriate government departments concerned.

Mr. Argue: Including your own department?

Mr. Harkness: This is nothing to do with my department.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then why are you answering?

Mr. Harkness: As I think the hon. member knows, surveys of this nature are made by the Department of Labour.

Mr. Argue: What I wanted to know was this. Is it the policy of the Department of National Defence to pay the prevailing rate after the survey has disclosed the prevailing rate?

Mr. Harkness: As I think the hon. member knows, Mr. Speaker, this department and all other government departments pay the rate recommended by the Department of Labour on the basis of the studies they make of these matters.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LATIN AMERICA—U.S.-CANADIAN CO-OPERATION IN ECONOMIC ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the minister care to comment on a press report emanating from Washington that President Kennedy would welcome any move by Canada to join in the proposed plans for economic assistance to Latin America? Has there been any discussion between the two governments on this subject?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no discussion of which I am aware.

Mr. Argue: Has the Canadian government given any consideration to the question of participating in plans for assistance to Latin America?

Mr. Green: No, not yet.

AGRICULTURE

CANNED PORK—REPORTED RETAIL SALE OF GOVERNMENT STOCKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): May I address a question to the Minister of Agriculture or in his absence to the Acting Minister of Agriculture, or to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture, of which I sent notice yesterday. Is the Minister of Agriculture in a position to report on the serious allegation, which I have drawn to his attention, that Kelly Douglas Limited in Vancouver have somehow obtained a supply of canned Spork from government sources and are offering it to the trade wholesale at a price of 7 cents a tin less than that charged by Burns and Company?

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): I wish to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. The agricultural stabilization board offered stocks of canned pork luncheon meat for sale in Canada at a reduced price from April 15 to October 15, 1960. The product packed under a government label as "Canadian pork luncheon meat" was sold directly to any firm applying for stocks. Proprietary brands were sold back only to the original manufacturers. "Spork" is the proprietary brand of Burns and Company, and sales of government stocks of this brand were made only to them. No government stocks of canned pork under the "Spork" label were sold by the stabilization board to Kelly Douglas Limited nor to any other firm apart from Burns and Company.

Mr. Winch: I have a supplementary question. In view of the information which I conveyed to the department with regard to a retail firm obtaining it, or being told that it was part of government supplies, will an investigation be made as to whether Kelly Douglas Limited were able to obtain supplies of the government stocks?

Mr. Jorgenson: Yes, I will draw the matter to the minister's attention.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO INCREASED RATES ON U.S. PERIODICALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether he has completed negotiations with the United States postal authorities which will in effect raise the rate received on United States periodicals coming into Canada.

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I would expect to have information for the house on that subject tomorrow.

HUMAN RIGHTS

EDMONTON—REPORTED REFUSAL OF ACCOMMODATION TO U.S. NEGROES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport arising out of information I have received that last week two American negroes who were in Edmonton to assist in a fund-raising tour for homeless Jewish children were refused accommodation in the C.N.R. MacDonald hotel. Would the minister comment on the statement that the C.N.R. in its hotel operations follows the practice of refusing accommodation to negroes?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I question whether the hon. member is right in asking the administration to assume responsibility for day to day administrative acts of an independent Canadian National Railways hotel.

Mr. Argue: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think it is customary to ask the minister to comment on and take up certain matters with the management of the C.N.R. We have been doing it very frequently.

There is a further part to this question which I also think is in order. I should like to submit it and you, sir, can make your decision. Would the minister inquire into this particular accusation, and will he assure the house that the hotel operations of the C.N.R. are conducted in accordance with the principles set forth in the bill of rights?

I think it is an exceedingly important question. I hope I have framed it so that it is in order. I think the minister has a duty to the house to take up such a question with the management of the C.N.R.

Mr. Speaker: If it is a matter of asking the administration to inquire from the Canadian National Railways as to their conduct in this matter, I will of course allow the question.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I received notice of this question just as I was walking down to the house. I was not aware of the facts alleged by the hon. member. However, I will take up this matter with the management of the C.N.R. and report to the house as soon as I have anything to report.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT ON CONSIDERATION OF BILL NO. C-70

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Skeena asked a question concerning Bill No. C-70. He wanted to know whether any requests have been received with respect to postponing or delaying consideration of that bill for this year. The answer to the question is yes.

REQUEST FOR LIST OF OUTSTANDING RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, in her capacity as Acting Secretary of State, what progress the department is making with the laborious task of compiling a list of the returns ordered by this house with which the government has not yet complied.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I inquired about this matter, as I promised the hon. member, and the answer I received was to the effect that they are working on these returns but they have not yet been completed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I was referring to the list.

CHANGE IN TODAY'S ORDER OF BUSINESS

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Could we perhaps change the order of today's business in order to meet the convenience of the house? Last evening we were discussing the reference of Bill No. C-71 to the special committee which is going to study the Civil Service Act. I called it in third place today but perhaps, in view of the expression of opinion last night, we could take it first and dispose of it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would see no objection to that.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRAVEL ACCOMMODATION FOR MEMBERS AT EASTER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Some hon. members and their wives who have to go west at Easter time have not been able to obtain accommodation on the "Canadian". The accommodation has been filled for over two weeks. Will the minister see whether something can be done about this matter so we can go home at Easter time?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very pleased to help my hon. friend and other hon. members to get home for Easter.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MONTREAL—STATEMENT ON REPORTED LAY-OFFS OF CLEANING PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Laurier put to me two questions with regard to the new C.N.R. main office building in Montreal and to the maintenance and cleaning staff in the new building.

As the house is no doubt aware, the two old buildings occupied by the C.N.R. head office have been sold to the Quebec government and naturally fewer maintenance employees will be required for the new building than for the old buildings.

About 120 members of the cleaning and maintenance staff will be affected by the moving into the new building. The cleaning services in the new building will be carried out by a contractor who specializes in this type of work. Negotiations are under way with the contractor with a view to getting him to give priority to the staff that is now looking after the cleaning of the old buildings. In addition, the Quebec government which has bought the two buildings has agreed, at the request of the C.N.R., to give priority for employment to the present staff. The cafeteria operator in the new building has agreed to grant interviews to all railway employees who would be interested in working there.

Moreover, the railway employment office in Montreal is setting up a service for the placement and advising of employees, and each employee will be helped in the consideration of his case. Arrangements are being taken also with the three prospective employers for interviewing the employees within a few weeks. The railway management hopes, and it is the aim it seeks to attain, that the majority of the 120 persons involved as a result of the move into the new building will be offered work. It is perfectly aware of the present difficulties and it studies the matter with great sympathy, particularly as regards the older employees and the ones to be retrained. It is interesting to note that 67 of the 120 employees involved were taken on when they were over 40 years old and 28 when they were over 50.

Meetings have been held with the employees and their representatives and others are scheduled for this week.

(Text):

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can we take it from the minister's answer that he has received the assurance of the C.N.R. management that there will be employment for at least a major proportion of the people affected?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, as I have just explained, the railway company has taken a great deal of trouble in this matter and has explored all possibilities in order to find employment for these people. I am quite sure that with the good will of all concerned the great majority of these employees will be re-employed. As I was saying, the Quebec provincial authorities are going to occupy this whole building, and all these people are available in that building. I hope the province of Quebec will hire the great majority of these people, because they are already employed in the building.

Mr. Argue: May I ask a question for clarification. The minister said at one point that he hoped the C.N.R. would provide employment. In the next part of his answer he said he hoped the province of Quebec would be able to provide employment.

Mr. Balcer: I did not say that.

Mr. Argue: Perhaps I misunderstood the minister.

Mr. Balcer: As I explained earlier, the railway has explored many possibilities and has contacted various employers, contractors and the province of Quebec to find work for these people. Also, the railway itself will employ some of them.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT

REFERENCE TO SPECIAL COMMITTEE FOR CONSIDERATION

Hon. Gordon Churchill (for the Minister of Finance) moved:

That Bill No. C-71 respecting the civil service of Canada be referred to the special committee established to consider the said bill.

Motion agreed to.

COASTAL FISHERIES PROTECTION ACT

REVISION OF DEFINITION OF CANADIAN FISHING VESSEL

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-57 to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill is very short and straightforward. By way of explanation I may say that the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act was last revised in 1953. The main purpose of the act is to protect fisheries in Canadian territorial waters against encroachment by foreign fishing vessels and to regulate the privileges accorded to foreign fishing vessels in our ports.

Subject to any treaty rights, the act prohibits fishing operations by foreign fishing vessels in our waters. A foreign fishing vessel is defined in the act as a fishing vessel that is not a Canadian fishing vessel. The same section defines what constitutes a Canadian fishing vessel. There are four requirements listed in the act as it now stands, and I think the intention was that in order to be considered a Canadian fishing vessel, a vessel had to meet one of these main requirements. Under the law as it presently stands, any fishing vessel which satisfies one of the four chief requirements which I have mentioned is a Canadian fishing vessel within the meaning of the act. That is to say, a vessel registered in a foreign country but owned in Canada would, under the present definition, be considered a Canadian vessel.

In recent years there has been a significant increase in fishing operations in the high seas adjacent to Canadian territorial waters. It is therefore necessary for the protection of Canadian fisheries to clarify the law so as to make sure that before a fishing vessel can be considered a Canadian fishing vessel, and consequently entitled to operate in Canadian waters, it must be registered or licensed in Canada and owned in Canada; or, in the case of fishing vessels which are not required under Canadian law to be registered, that is to say small boats, that they be owned in Canada and not registered elsewhere.

There is nothing complicated or obscure about the amendment. It is intended purely to clarify this section of the act which defines what is meant by a Canadian fishing vessel. There are no other implications in the amendment at all.

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I wish to thank the minister for the brief explanation he has given of the amendment now before the house for consideration. As the minister said, its purpose is to clarify the definition of a Canadian fishing vessel. The hon. gentleman made reference to the purpose of the fisheries protection act, and he also referred to encroachment by foreign fishing vessels which are operating in proximity to our Canadian shores.

I feel that the minister is missing a golden opportunity to amend this act so as to provide proper protection for Canadian fishermen. Under the present regulations as they affect our territorial and coastal waters, foreign vessels are allowed to fish up to three miles from our shores although certain of our own Canadian vessels, vessels of a certain size, cannot come within ten miles of our shores. I recall very well that in years past, when some of the hon. members who are now sitting on the government side of this house were members of the opposition, they took the opportunity provided by consideration of the estimates of the Department of Fisheries to advise the government how it should proceed in order to remedy this most unfortunate situation. I know, and everyone knows, that in the last three years very little if anything has been done to change the position.

We understand that the present amendment will to some extent clarify the definition of what is a Canadian fishing vessel. But let us look carefully at the amendment, particularly as it is set out in subparagraph (a) which is now to read:

"Canadian fishing vessel" means a fishing vessel (i) that is registered or licensed in Canada under the Canada Shipping Act and is owned by one or more persons each of whom is a Canadian citizen, an individual resident in Canada or a corporation incorporated under the laws of Canada or of a province, having its principal place of business in Canada.

Under the old provision it is stated that a Canadian fishing vessel means a fishing vessel that is:

(i) registered in Canada
(ii) owned by one person domiciled and resident in Canada

—and so on. Under the present amendment the word "domiciled" has been taken out and replaced by "resident" only. It seems that under this definition, instead of restricting the interpretation of what is meant by a Canadian fishing vessel we have broadened it.

I repeat that I feel the minister has missed a golden opportunity to improve the position of Canadian fishermen vis-à-vis foreign fishing vessels. As far as I can see now, apart from what has been mentioned with regard to clause 1, all this amendment does is to bring within the definition of Canadian fishing vessels certain small boats which are not mechanically propelled and which, under the present regulation, could not be defined as Canadian fishing vessels.

It is an amendment of very minor significance, as the minister has said. I hope that later on this session when we shall be better able, under the rules of order, to discuss this section of the act in greater detail so far as it relates to the operation of draggers and other foreign fishing vessels operating in proximity to our Canadian shores, we shall be able to get from the minister a definite statement clarifying the policy of the present government so far as the operation of foreign owned fishing vessels is concerned within certain limits of our territorial waters.

When the present bill comes before the committee of the whole we shall be able to discuss the proposed amendment in greater detail, and I hope the minister at that time will be in a position to give us further information.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am also of the opinion that it would be beneficial if amendments were introduced dealing with the territorial waters limit. I know that the circumstances on the east coast to which the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) referred concerning the three-mile limit versus the 12-mile limit seem particularly crazy.

We have a somewhat different problem on the west coast. Conditions on neither coast operate to the greatest benefit of the Canadian fisheries in terms of the territorial water limits being placed where they are at this time. That is not within the ambit of the bill and probably I am out of order in referring to it, but I mention this to put our discussion in its proper perspective and perhaps I may be granted that leeway.

Apparently it is the attitude of the department that the intent of the amendment is to bring under the jurisdiction of this act those small boats engaged in commercial fishing but not required to be registered under the Canada Shipping Act. That was the gist of the explanation given by the department on the west coast concerning the amendment. I have nothing more to say in that regard. Some apprehension has been expressed about the amendment making it easier for foreign vessels to enter our fisheries, and we would appreciate having the minister's comment in that respect. There are other minor questions which I shall raise when the committee stage is reached.

Mr. L. R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to speak briefly on this bill to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act. I wish first to commend the minister for the interest he has shown in all matters pertaining to his department, and especially for the action he has taken which will strengthen the position of the Canadian fisheries.

I also listened with much interest to the remarks made by the two previous speakers, the hon. members for Gloucester and Skeena, with respect to the three-mile limit versus the 12-mile limit. I consider it unfortunate that when the Liberals were in power the hon. member for Gloucester was not more vocal on this matter, which is of vital importance to fishermen on the east coast. I trust that the hon. member will contain his curiosity for a little longer this session, because I am hopeful that before long he will receive answers to some of the questions he has raised.

Originally the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act was designed to protect the fisheries in Canadian territorial waters from encroachment by foreign fishing vessels, and also to regulate the privileges accorded to foreign fishing vessels in our ports. Under the old act it was possible to have a vessel, registered in a foreign country but owned in Canada, considered a Canadian fishing vessel. Conversely, it was also possible to have a vessel registered in Canada owned by a resident who was not a Canadian citizen, and this ship was also classed as a Canadian fishing vessel. However, in recent years there has been a significant increase in fishing operations on the high seas adjacent to our territorial waters. Probably no other country in the world has the complex problems in fisheries management that confront Canada. Our interests on the east coast extend from Georges and Brown's bank, which lie in an easterly direction from Cape Sable, past LaHave bank, Emerald bank, Sable Island bank, Middle Ground, Canso bank, Banquereau, Misaine bank, St. Pierre bank, Green bank, the Great bank off Newfoundland to the fishing grounds off Labrador in the Labrador sea.

Our species range from lobsters and scallops to cod, haddock, pollack, halibut, flounder and almost every known kind of groundfish. Each area and species presents its own special problems requiring individual study and individual solutions, if indeed solutions in some cases exist. The tremendous resources of the sea made their contribution to bringing about the early development of the Atlantic provinces, especially Nova Scotia, and a study of early history will indicate the importance of the fisheries even in the days of Sir John A. Macdonald when negotiating with the United States. Even today the fishing industry in the Atlantic provinces is a potent force in our area's economy, with the commercial value of fish landed in the four Atlantic provinces during the year 1960 amounting to $59,891,000 in payments to the fishermen.

Our problem today when considering fisheries management and assistance to Canadian fishermen does not concern itself only with the protection of fish but also with the creation of conditions under which the entire resource can be maintained or improved for the benefit of Canada and for future generations of Canadians.

The world-wide interest in the ocean and its resources is becoming broadly apparent, and this is not difficult to understand. Resource competition among nations is becoming increasingly intensive, and with the exception of our narrow three-mile territorial fringe, the ocean resources are free. The fish are there for the taking on a first come, first served basis, and we are only now beginning to realize the value of this resource when we see the extravagant claims for expanded territorial seas put forward by certain nations desirous of protecting their fisheries, as well as the oil or mineral rights found on the continental shelf. However, as fishermen, we are mainly concerned with the ocean as a source of food supply; and as the world's population grows, with greater need for living space and less arable land to provide food, greater and still greater emphasis will be placed upon our fisheries to provide highly edible protein.

[Mr. Crouse.]

With these thoughts in mind, therefore, it becomes vitally important and necessary to tighten up the regulations dealing with Canadian fishing vessels. In my opinion these amendments will clarify the law so as to make certain that before a fishing vessel can be considered a Canadian fishing vessel and consequently entitled to operate in Canadian waters, it must be registered or licensed in Canada and owned in Canada by one or more persons each of whom is a Canadian citizen. While I believe still further changes are required for the protection of the rights of Canadian fishermen, these amendments are indeed a forward step and one in the right direction.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, any act that pertains to fisheries and particularly to fisheries protection is of special interest to Newfoundland. This bill will probably affect our province more than any other province in Canada.

If we look back over the history of legislation for the protection of fisheries, we find that there have been very few amendments since 1868 when the first law came into existence. It was entitled the customs and fisheries protection act. As we follow the history of the amendments that have been made we notice that practically all of them have resulted from an effort to expand or clarify the definition of a fishing vessel. The 1868 act lasted right up to 1913, when it was amended to define foreign vessels. In the 1913 act a foreign vessel was described as one which is not navigated according to the laws of the United Kingdom or of Canada. This amendment, of course, preserved the treaty rights which Canada had with the United States, as the government was empowered to allow United States vessels to enter Atlantic ports to purchase bait, lines, outfits and so forth.

In 1952 fisheries protection was separated from customs protection, and the definition of a fishing vessel was further enlarged to include sealing vessels, vessels engaged in the taking of marine plants and also processing vessels which are sometimes referred to as mother ships. The 1952 amendment was also necessary to legalize certain traditional privileges and arrangements between Newfoundland and foreign powers, for entry to Newfoundland ports, which were of long standing and which applied particularly to Portugal and Spain.

The definition of a fishing vessel under the present act is as follows:

(a) "Canadian fishing vessel" means a fishing vessel that is
(i) registered in Canada,

(ii) owned by one person domiciled and resident in Canada,
(iii) owned by two or more persons, all of whom are domiciled and resident in Canada, or
(iv) owned by a body corporate incorporated under the laws of Canada or the laws of a province and having its principal place of business in Canada;—

The bill before us seeks to amend this definition in three important respects. For example, the first condition that a vessel must be registered in Canada is now enlarged to include registered or licensed in Canada. Condition No. 2, that a vessel must be owned by one person domiciled and resident in Canada, has been changed to just resident in Canada. The requirement to be domiciled has been eliminated. Condition No. 3, that a vessel must be owned by two or more persons, all of whom are domiciled and resident in Canada, has now been changed to eliminate the domiciliary requirement and to require the owners to be Canadian citizens. There is also a new paragraph which, as the hon. member for Gloucester pointed out, brings under this act those small ships which are not mechanically propelled and are not required to be licensed under the Canada Shipping Act.

These proposed amendments appear to involve a relaxation of the requirements of ownership which has been brought about by a broadening of the definition. In my opinion the omission of the word "domiciled" makes the definition much more vague than it was before, because the word "domiciled" has a very clear, precise meaning. When we eliminate this word and rely on the definition of being resident in Canada, the definition becomes somewhat blurred because the word "resident" unlike the word "domiciled" has no clear and fixed meaning. It has different meanings in different acts of parliament; it has different meanings in different parts of Canada and in different situations.

I can perhaps understand that there would be some advantages in having such a broad definition. I can see that perhaps it might facilitate deep-sea sportmen who come to Canada and spend a few weeks in some of our Atlantic ports fishing for tuna and indulging in that kind of sport fishing. But if on the other hand we regard the definition of fixed residence as important, then it seems that the use of the word "resident" when dissociated from the word "domiciled" may constitute a loophole which could be taken advantage of and, as the hon. member for Skeena pointed out, it may not achieve the purpose that we intend this legislation to accomplish.

I suggest that the minister might consider writing a definition into this act so that we would know exactly what the word "resident" means as it applies to this particular legislation. It was not possible to do this in the 1913 act because that act included vessels from the United Kingdom, and a person did not have to be a resident of Canada to enjoy the privileges accorded to Canadian ships.

Before I resume my seat, Mr. Speaker, I wish to emphasize one point made by the hon. member for Gloucester. Since we are amending the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act, and since these amendments are so very rare and infrequent, it is a pity that the government did not see fit to include in this bill some clarification of our territorial waters; because this bill applies to territorial waters, and I do not think we can dissociate our discussion of this bill from some discussion of the territorial waters to which it applies. When I looked up the debate in 1952, when the last amendment was made, I noted that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, now the Acting Prime Minister, who was then the member for Vancouver Quadra, pointed out two things; first that in the main act as we have it today the definition of our territorial waters is not clear. He asked for a clarification of that point.

The second point made was that our territorial waters should be extended. I believe it was said at the time, that this question was being considered by an interdepartmental committee. I think it is safe to assume that departmental committee has finished its work and has made some recommendations in this matter. It would have been helpful if the minister had included those recommendations in this bill we now have before us. I refer particularly to the definition of coastal waters. It is not clear to many people whether we determine our coastal waters on a point to point basis, that is on a straight line from headland to headland, or just by following the contour of the coast and extending it three miles offshore. The minister will appreciate the fact that this particular bill will not contribute very much to the solution of the problem of protecting the coastal fisheries in my own particular riding because our best inshore fishing grounds are 12 miles offshore. Unless we can control our coastal waters to that extent our inshore fishermen will always be deprived of the opportunity of earning a livelihood because of foreign draggers fishing in this area.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if the hon. member is bringing into the debate another principle. I think he recognizes that he probably is. This bill is rather narrow in scope, and the particular problem which the hon. member is now discussing, and which other hon. members have touched upon, might better be left until we reach the estimates of this department or until it is relevant to the precise terms of a bill before the house.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to elaborate on this point. I realize that I was perhaps a little outside the scope of this bill but I was seeking to emphasize that this was a golden opportunity for doing something about this particular problem. I hope the minister will give consideration to this problem and bring in legislation to cope with it at an early date.

Mr. J. R. Keays (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few comments with regard to this bill. I notice it contains a very clear and concise definition of "a Canadian vessel". I believe the amendments contained herein will be welcomed by some of my constituents because they are engaged, at this time of the year, in sealing operations and have purchased ships under foreign registry. We heard a rumour last year to the effect that any ship under foreign registry could not fish out of Canadian ports but I believe this rumour has been discounted. This amendment will bring comfort to those ship owners because they will now know that, although their ships are under foreign registry, if they fall within the clear definition of a Canadian vessel and the owner is a Canadian citizen, they will be allowed to continue their fishing operations. I do not believe the words "domicile" or "residence" have too much meaning in respect of these owners being Canadian citizens. I welcome these amendments and sincerely hope that they will clear away the ambiguity which has existed in the past concerning foreign registry and Canadian licensing under the Canadian shipping act.

Mr. C. R. Granger (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, any subject dealing with coastal fisheries is of necessity very interesting to those of us who have ridings with seaports. The protection of coastal fisheries is of vital importance to those of us living in the province of Newfoundland. The minister, as he stated, in presenting these amendments is seeking to clarify and define some points in the present act. This is something with which most of us are in agreement. I feel I should also say that it is of great importance that more be done to protect coastal waters from the incursions of foreign fishing fleets. I have dealt with this subject from time to time and do not intend to make any further comment at this stage. I feel that most hon. members are well aware of the conditions that exist in this regard.

I should like to make brief reference at this time to the remarks made by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg (Mr. Crouse) who presented a very good picture of the importance of fisheries. I would not however associate myself with his criticism of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud) for putting forward the suggestion he made. It seems that whenever a member on this side of the house makes a suggestion, immediately the question is asked, why did you not do it. I feel this is a very poor excuse for the lack of action of those who are now in power.

Mr. H. M. Batten (Humber-St. George's): I should just like to say a word or two about this amendment and to express my agreement with it as far as it goes. I do however suggest, as other members have, that we are looking forward to receiving information from the minister regarding fishing limits. I recognize that you have, Mr. Speaker, already advised members that they should stay within the three-mile limit but I would hope, as the member for Queens-Lunenburg has suggested, that during the present session there may be some legislation dealing with fishing limits.

Last year during the debate on external affairs I made an attempt to place on the record the fishing limits as they presently exist and how they affect the province from which I come. I have looked forward with a great deal of anticipation to legislation which will not only deal with the item we have before us today, but also with fishing limits generally around the Canadian coast.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few remarks in reply. The purpose of this amendment is to clarify the meaning of the act as it now stands. There are four alternatives existing in regard to the definition of "Canadian fishing vessel". The law officers of the crown have advised me that under the present definition a vessel falling within any one of the four alternatives would be considered a Canadian fishing vessel. The main purpose of this amendment is to clear up the ambiguity regarding the Canadian status of these vessels.

Several points have been raised which I feel are out of order, but in view of the bearing they may have on this subject I might perhaps be permitted to say a word about them.

The first question raised was that of the restriction on Canadian trawlers in certain parts of our sea coast where they are required to stay 12 miles out. This requirement is under section 55 of the Fisheries Act. I am hopeful that before the session is over I shall be able to introduce an amendment dealing with that matter which will bring a greater element of justice to the situation in which a number of Canadian trawlers find themselves as compared with foreign trawlers and yet at the same time protect the rights and interests of inshore fishermen in smaller boats. I would not want this to be taken as a guarantee on my part that this amendment will be introduced in this session, but I am hopeful that it will be introduced. We have been working on suitable amendments to the Fisheries Act for several months and I am hopeful that we shall have a bill to bring before this session of parliament.

With regard to the width of our territorial waters, may I say that this again is an entirely different matter as is the baseline from which the width of territorial waters are to be measured. A the conference held under the auspices of the United Nations in Geneva last year there was the required two thirds approval of several matters, one of which was the method of measuring territorial waters. When these twenty two countries, I believe it is, ratify that agreement, this method will come into effect. The matter of the actual width of territorial waters or an exclusive fishing zone is a matter for further international agreement. I still have not given up hope that some international agreement may be reached. As to the need for further amending of this act if agreement is reached, that will depend on the type of agreement.

I think these are the main points on which I wished at the moment to make observations. However, when we are in committee I shall be glad to answer any further questions.

Mr. Robichaud: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Yes.

Mr. Robichaud: My question is based on the statement which was made a few moments ago by the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine to the effect that under this amendment ships of foreign registry could be registered in Canada. Can the minister explain how this can be done?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): There are at the present time, as I understand it, vessels owned, for example, in commonwealth countries and they can be registered in Canada, without being owned in Canada. As the act now stands you could have for example—and an extremely theoretical one—an Australian owner registering a vessel in Canada and under the terms of the present act it would be a Canadian fishing vessel. Conversely, you could have a Canadian owned vessel registered in some other country and, under the present section, it also would be a Canadian fishing vessel. But any consideration of the terms of registration and licensing it depends on what is meant by the term "licensing". If the term "licensing" refers to the shipping act, I think the same vessel would not be licensed and registered. Licensing is for a smaller class of vessel. But if the reference is to licences issued by the Department of Fisheries under which certain vessels operate—and I refer to trawlers especially —then of course the two are required, namely registration and a licence.

Mr. Robichaud: I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member would ask his questions in committee. It would be more convenient to do so then. They are really matters of detail.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Flynn in the chair.

On Clause 1—"Canadian fishing vessel".

Mr. Robichaud: I should like to follow up a question which I asked the minister when we were on second reading of the bill a few moments ago. Is it not true that licensing, as far as the Canada Shipping Act is concerned, applies only to vessels of ten tons and under? That is why I wanted to clarify the statement that had been made by the hon. member for Iles-de-la-Madeleine to the effect that the present amendments will allow foreign vessels—I think he had sealers in mind—to be licensed under Canadian regulations following the passing of this amendment.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I have not the Canada Shipping Act before me at the moment but what the hon. member said is correct, as I understand it. I think it is under ten tons—although I am not sure of the tonnage—where a licence is required rather than registration.

Mr. Howard: It would seem to me that one of the parts of this measure which perhaps needs some additional explanation is the deletion, as it were, of the reference to domiciling. As was pointed out, in section 2(a) of the act now reads as follows:

> (a) "Canadian fishing vessel" means a fishing vessel that is . . .
> (ii) owned by one person domiciled and resident in Canada,
> (iii) owned by two or more persons, all of whom are domiciled and resident in Canada,—

These two paragraphs have pretty well been consolidated now in the phrase "is owned by one or more persons each of whom is a Canadian citizen". The substitution of the words

"Canadian citizen" has been made for the words "persons domiciled and resident in Canada". In so far as Canadian citizenship is concerned, this is an understandable part of the government's feeling for Canadianism and of our attitude also. However, I wonder why there was a deletion of the reference to the words "domicile" and "residents". Presumably there are people who are Canadian citizens and yet have lived in other countries for many years, still retaining their Canadian citizenship for one reason or another. Presumably their residence might be in California, England, Australia or some other country and yet they are still Canadian citizens. These people may own a boat or a ship that is a fishing vessel and which comes within the definition here. I wonder whether the minister can explain the reason behind this and just what it means.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): The concept of domicile is a legal concept, as I understand it. I am not a lawyer. However, it is something that is very difficult to determine. I believe that it is possible to be domiciled in Canada without living here. As the act stated previously, and as the present act is interpreted by the law officers of the crown, all that was required was one of those four alternatives. One of those alternatives was residence and domicile.

Therefore as the act now stands you have the situation where a person domiciled in Canada but perhaps living in the United States and owning a vessel has the privilege of his vessel being considered a Canadian fishing vessel. We have made these amendments in order to tighten up the act. One has to be actually resident in the country, unless one is a citizen.

These requirements are not alternatives any of which may be met. Since both requirements as to registration and ownership have to be met we felt it reasonable to drop the domicile provision. As I said, this is not effective anyway. As far as Canadian citizenship is concerned, we have introduced this amendment because the vast majority of people concerned are Canadian citizens.

There may be situations where a Canadian citizen may temporarily not be resident in Canada. He retains his Canadian citizenship and his interests are in Canada, but he is resident abroad on a temporary basis. Under those circumstances he would not be disqualified.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the minister. One of the alternatives for ownership is as follows:

—a corporation incorporated under the laws of Canada or of a province, having its principal place of business in Canada,—

[Mr. Howard.]

I ask the minister through you, Mr. Chairman, whether it would be possible for non-residents of Canada to take advantage of the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act by setting up a corporation in Canada.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): There has been no change in this matter. The company has to be incorporated under the laws of Canada or of a province. Usually it is under the laws of a province. We believe that in this case the interests of the province are safeguarded when such companies are incorporated.

Mr. McCleave: Perhaps I could put the question in a slightly different way. I realize that there has been no significant change in this particular part of the section dealing with corporations. Is the minister or the department aware that in the past foreign owners have managed to get around the law by using the device of a Canadian incorporation? Has there been such an abuse in the past?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): I think there is no difference between this case and that of any other corporation carrying on business in Canada. I know of no specific case where the law has been circumvented in this regard, and where a special corporation has been set up as a front in Canada so that a foreign corporation could operate fishing vessels and have these privileges. We know of no cases of this type. We have strengthened the act considerably by removing this doubt, because the present act requires only one of four alternatives to be met in order to make the vessel a Canadian fishing vessel. Now, both registration and ownership are required.

Mr. Granger: I should like to ask the minister a question, Mr. Chairman. I refer to sport fishing for tuna, which has some importance in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. Does this amendment affect that type of fishing? For instance, does it have any effect on sportsmen from the United States who want to bring their own boats into this country?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): This act gives authority for regulations to be made. That matter is controlled under regulation by order in council. There is a regulation which permits tuna fishermen to operate from Canadian ports purely as sportsmen. This applies only to United States sports fishermen.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask additional questions of the minister following upon what I have said in regard to the matter of domicile. Perhaps I could get back to that question. As I understood the minister, he said the act provides four alternatives in this connection. He went further and said that one of those was domicile.

I think this is perhaps not entirely correct, because it is domicile and residence; the two are connected. The minister said that while domicile is a rather vague term and a person could be really domiciled somewhere but not in fact living there—and I think this is quite true—perhaps the coupling of domicile with residence may be a bit stricter and easier to understand. I think this is perhaps easier to understand than the proposed amendment.

In as much as these references to domicile and residence have been incorporated in the act for a long period of time—I do not know how many years, but quite a number of years—and nothing untoward has resulted from these words being used, I think it would be in keeping with the desire of the officials and the minister to replace the words "domicile" and "residence" in the amendment before us in order to maintain as high a degree of Canadian ownership and responsibility as possible.

I think perhaps in order to do this in a formal way, rather than just talking about it, I should move the following amendment. I have simply scribbled this on one sheet of paper, but I think that with all the discussion we have had it will be relatively easy to follow the reason for such an amendment. I would accordingly move that paragraph (a)(i) of clause 1 be amended in line 11 thereof by inserting after the word "citizen" the following:

—domiciled and resident in Canada—

The paragraph would then read as follows:

"Canadian fishing vessel" means a fishing vessel (i) that is registered or licensed in Canada under the Canada Shipping Act and is owned by one or more persons each of whom is a Canadian citizen domiciled and resident in Canada—

Then it would carry on as at present.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak in support of this amendment. I mentioned this matter in the course of my remarks on second reading. I have here the Oxford dictionary and "domicile"—this is after "law"—is defined as "place of permanent residence". This is much stronger than "residence", which is defined as living on the spot for certain periods or altogether.

A person cannot, therefore, be a permanent resident of Canada or one who is domiciled in Canada just because he has a summer cottage in which he resides for a few months. If the purpose of this amendment is to strengthen the definition of "Canadian fishing vessel" I feel the word "domicile" should be left in the act as it is at present.

Mr. MacLellan: I think it is well that hon. members should keep in mind the large part that is played in the development of the fishing industry on the east coast by United States capitalized concerns. In my own riding, for example, one of the largest fish plants is owned by Booth Fisheries Limited. This plant employs 270 people who have been working overtime since the middle of January. It is evident that this concern leaves a large payroll in that community, and for this reason I am glad the minister has made no change in connection with the ownership of vessels of corporations owned outside Canada which, as in the case of this Booth concern, provide ships and plants which give important employment inside Canada.

To turn to the question raised by the hon. member for Skeena, may I say that I was pleased to see that the word "domiciled" had been removed from the old law, because in the act as it now exists a person has to be domiciled and resident in Canada. As the hon. member for Gloucester has said, the word "domiciled" implies that a person must live here permanently. Let us take the situation which arises when a United States fish plant is established in Canada. Executives of these corporations come to Canada to live, but they do not necessarily move here permanently. They may come here for a period of four or five years, and then be transferred back and forth between plants in Canada and plants in the United States. It is in our interest to encourage the movement of fish plants from the New England states to Canada, which is something which has been happening in the last few years and which I hope will continue. If the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Skeena were carried it would mean that the owner of a boat would not only have to be a Canadian citizen but he would have to be living in this country permanently, as well as being a resident here. It seems to me it is sufficient that a man who is not a Canadian citizen should have his residence in Canada. That also is a word which implies that he lives here and earns his livelihood here, and I think it is sufficient. To enact that he must also be domiciled here would, I think, be placing a restriction on the development of the fishing industry of a kind that hon. members would not like to see.

I submit that the amendment now proposed by the minister is adequate to meet our purpose and I think we should be doing harm to the industry if we tried to impose further restrictions along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Skeena. I do not see why a man should have to undertake to live here the whole of his life before he is permitted to own a Canadian fishing vessel.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The hon. member for Gloucester gave a definition of the word "domiciled", and then he gave a definition of the word "residence". If he had continued reading the definition of "residence" he would have seen: "a place where one resides, abode".

I do not think there is really much difference between the word "domicile" and the word "residence". Both imply that a person is living permanently in one area. If the hon. member had continued to read the definition of "resident" he would have found in the same dictionary from which he quoted the meaning, "permanent inhabitant of town or neighbourhood". So if a person is a permanent inhabitant, I think we could regard the conditions required by the law as being satisfactorily fulfilled.

Mr. Robichaud: In reply to the minister, may I point out that the word presently in the act is the word "resident". In this respect, in connection with the remarks made by the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond, perhaps I should say that I agree that corporations incorporated under the laws of Canada or of a province, and having their place of business in Canada, must continue to be governed by the provisions already in the act. The change we are discussing affects individuals only. It does not affect corporations, because corporations are provided for elsewhere in the paragraph.

Mr. MacLellan: If I did not make myself clear to the hon. member for Gloucester I am sorry, because I think he must have misunderstood me. In the latter part of my remarks I was referring to the situation of individuals required to be domiciled and resident in Canada. There are many individuals in Canada associated with fish plants owned outside Canada. They are resident here for all practical purposes and they are citizens, for example, of the community of Petitdegrat in my riding. However, if they are to be required by law to be persons domiciled here they must prove that they have come to Canada permanently and that they do not intend to move away again, because the essence of the establishment of a domicile is permanent residence. A person could be resident here, even on a semi-permanent basis, for five, ten or 20 years, but unless he could prove he intended to be resident here forever he could not be said to be domiciled here and he would not qualify under the terms of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Skeena. I think we should be careful before imposing a restriction of that type upon the class of person I have in mind.

Mr. Carter: I think the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond has given us a new definition of "residence". The hon. and learned Solicitor General has just told us that there is not a great deal of difference between "domiciled" and "resident". I think that if we look at various acts of parliament we shall find that the term "resident" is not always defined in the same way. For instance, I think it is defined differently in the Income Tax Act than it is in the Canada Elections Act. The term has many different meanings in both federal and provincial legislation. It has no fixed and definite meaning such as the hon. member would give to it. I think it is on that account that when we use the term "resident" we often place an adjective in front of it and use the phrase "a person who is ordinarily resident". The word "resident" has such a number of interpretations that we have to use that phrase as a safeguard to make up for all the vagueness and uncertainty surrounding it.

I rise to point out to the hon. member for Skeena that if we adopt his amendment—and it is an amendment with which I am inclined to agree—we are going to create another problem, because the hon. member did not say anything about deleting the words "an individual" in line 11. If we insert after "citizen" the words "resident and domiciled in Canada" and then go on to say "an individual resident in Canada" it will be open to this interpretation, that if one person owns a boat he only needs to be an individual resident in Canada but if more than one person owns a boat they have to be Canadian citizens resident and domiciled in Canada. I wonder how the hon. member is going to get over that difficulty.

Mr. Howard: Very easily; simply by moving another amendment. I think we are allowed to move only one amendment at a time. If this amendment carries we shall have an opportunity to move a consequential amendment so that the provision would read, "An individual domiciled and resident in Canada," and both would have the same phraseology.

Mr. Carter: There is a point the hon. member has overlooked. There should be a clarification of what the intention of this amendment is. Even as it now reads it can be interpreted as meaning that if one person operates a boat he should be an individual resident and, if more than one, each individual has to be a Canadian citizen.

Mr. MacLellan: I cannot draw that interpretation from it.

Mr. Carter: If we insert the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Skeena that meaning would certainly be imposed on this clause. The hon. member would then have to make clear in his second amendment that the individual person was also a citizen.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, I think there has been some objection expressed to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Skeena. The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo has raised an objection. However, as far as the government is concerned there is no objection to stipulating both requirements of domicile and residence. I would be quite willing to accept the amendment as long as the objection raised by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo is met. Would the hon. member for Skeena be agreeable to withdrawing his amendment if an amendment to the following effect were proposed. Instead of referring to an individual resident in Canada it would read "a domiciled resident of Canada".

Mr. Carter: A domiciled citizen.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): No, a citizen would not have to be domiciled. Reference would be made to, "one of whom is a Canadian citizen, a domiciled resident of Canada, or a corporation incorporated under the laws of Canada." I believe that would meet the objection.

Mr. Howard: It would meet part of it, the question of having domicile and residence attached to an individual other than a Canadian citizen, but I submit there are a number of persons who are Canadian citizens and who own and operate businesses in Canada but who are resident in other countries on a permanent basis and spend all their money there. If we inject this flavour of Canadianism into our law I believe we should take the next step and see that these people who are Canadian citizens do not live in Florida, California or Mexico, but in Canada where they make their livelihood. I do not suggest that any fishermen live in Florida. I believe the assistant minister of justice is attempting to interject but I invite him to make his comments at the appropriate time. The minister's amendment does not meet the objection that a person should be resident and domiciled where he earns his living and spends his money, and both points should be coupled together.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Chairman, I think it would be a grave mistake to narrow too much the right of an individual to own a Canadian vessel. Problems could arise if a man had to be both domiciled and resident in Canada and had to be able to swear he was a Canadian citizen. I think of people associated with some of our fish plants in the east. They would have to be prepared to swear that they intended permanently to live here. They may not in fact do so, but they must state their intention to do so in order to qualify as a person domiciled in Canada.

What would be done in effect by changing the wording to specify a domiciled resident of Canada would be to rule out from the definition a United States citizen who happened to be transferred to Canada as manager of, or executive of a fish plant and who might be here five or ten years but who would perhaps eventually go back home to Boston or wherever the head office of the plant may be.

I think it would be a mistake to adopt the wording suggested, and I should like to see the minister further examine the legal meaning of this language before a change is made in the clause. I think it would be a serious mistake to say we should limit the ownership of Canadian vessels to Canadian citizens actually living in Canada.

The situation is not unknown in my riding, and some other ridings on the east coast, where a man associated with some of the fish plants owned in the United States moves back and forth between the maritime or Atlantic area of Canada and the New England area of the United States. If we limit the ownership under the definition to a person who is a Canadian citizen actually resident and domiciled in Canada we would, under this narrow definition, eliminate many people who now own vessels or who may in the future be encouraged to operate vessels out of Canadian Atlantic ports.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question before he resumes his seat. Does the hon. gentleman think that the individual employees, the managers of these fish plants, would be, themselves, the owners of the vessels? Is it not more likely that the vessels would be owned by the corporations that are provided for in part in another clause in this measure?

Mr. MacLellan: As far as Booth Fisheries Limited fish plant at Petitdegrat is concerned I am sure the boats would be owned by the corporation, but it might not be unusual for a United States executive to own a Canadian vessel while stationed here for five or ten years. Why should we change the legislation to prohibit his owning a vessel while living in Canada?

I should now like to ask the hon. member for Halifax a question. Does the hon. member agree with my definition of "domicile" as meaning a person who lives in a place with the intention of living there permanently? Does the hon. member agree with that definition?

Mr. McCleave: Yes indeed, Mr. Chairman. I believe the Latin expression is animus manendi coupled with physical presence. I had some experience with this question in a previous and quite famous debate.

Mr. MacLellan: I asked the hon. member that question because I think it is important for those who are interested in this question to agree on definitions. I know that the hon. members for Burin-Burgeo, Gloucester and Queens-Lunenburg are interested in this matter. If a man is to be considered as domiciled here he must be ready to swear he has come to Canada permanently and as hon. members know there are many people now associated with the fishing industry who could not do that.

Mr. Robichaud: I am personally inclined to agree with the amendment suggested by the minister which covers the points raised. I understand that the purpose of this amendment is to strengthen the provisions of the act relating to the ownership of Canadian vessels by Canadians resident in Canada. The danger of the provision as it reads now is that any individual resident in Canada may become the owner of a Canadian vessel. The objection I indicated earlier, and which the hon. member for Inverness-Richmond does not seem to realize, is that the employees of foreign fishing firms in Canada could have a number of boats registered in their own names as a result of the fact they are employees of that firm. In this instance they may be resident in Canada for three, four or five years or more but they are not domiciled. That is why we want the word "domiciled". This word was in the old act. Paragraph (a)(ii) of section 2 of the old act reads:

—owned by one person domiciled and resident in Canada.

That is why we would like to have the word "domiciled" retained.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, with respect to the point just made by the hon. member for Gloucester, I was about to point out that as the act now reads it requires residence in Canada and domicile in Canada.

I might also point out that as far as trawlers are concerned, in order to be licensed under the Fisheries Act they have to be owned by a Canadian, anyway. Therefore, even if this restriction were made a little more lax by requiring only residence rather than domicile as well, it would apply to only very small vessels. I do not think the point is really of much substance. I do not feel that I can accept the suggestion that Canadians who have Canadian citizenship should have any of their rights impaired by requiring them to be resident and domiciled in Canada in order to qualify for ownership of a Canadian vessel, because there may be cases where Canadian citizens have abandoned their country but yet retained their citizenship. I suppose that is possible. It would work a greater hardship on Canadians who are residing out of the country on a temporary basis. I think it would create an unnecessary hardship as far as they are concerned.

Mr. Howard: Before you put the amendment, Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer to the suggestion of the minister, particularly the second part having to do with domiciled, resident, and so on. In essence this is perhaps somewhat similar to what I suggested so far as Canadian citizenship is concerned. I do not wish to be overly critical but the draftsmanship of this particular bill is rather strange and could lead to a variety of conclusions. I understand one of the rules of draftsmanship is that you use the same words throughout a statute if they are to mean the same thing. In lines 9 and 10 reference is made to ownership by one or more persons. In this instance persons are referred to. In line 11 we no longer refer to persons but to individuals. We draw some distinction between an individual and a person. Is one person who owns a fishing vessel and is a Canadian citizen different from an individual who is a Canadian citizen and who also owns a fishing vessel? For the sake of clarity, it seems to me that the word "person" should be used throughout so that we would know what we are talking about.

I make reference to this part of the act only for this specific purpose. Subsection 3 of section 3 of the act makes reference to person. It says "no person". In other parts of the act, reference is made to persons. For instance, the section on offences and penalties says that every person is guilty of an offence who does certain things. Section 8 says, "Every person who violates" and so on. Throughout there is reference to the word "person" either in its singular or plural form. It would seem to me that the word "individual" is sort of out of place if we mean the same thing as we mean when we use the word "person". It would seem to me that we should be consistent throughout and use the word "person" in place of "individual". The amendment reads in part:

—an individual resident in Canada.—

To follow the minister's suggestion, perhaps these words should be deleted in their entirety and this phrase substituted therefor, "a person who is domiciled and resident in Canada". This is the language that is used in the act at the moment. This language permits continuity of expression and will show to those who come after us that at least we, as members of parliament, had a faint idea of what we were talking about when we used the same phrase. Will the minister comment on why the word "individual" was used in one instance and the word "person" or "persons" in another, and tell us whether they are supposed to mean the same thing or a different thing?

Mr. Carter: Before the minister replies would he clarify that point a little farther? The old definition distinguished between when the owner was one person or more than one person? Is this new definition going to wipe out that distinction? If it is not intended to wipe out the distinction, then how are we to read these words "an individual resident in Canada"? Do they apply when the owner is only one person, or do they apply in all cases, whether the owner is one person or more than one person?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): This refers to one or more persons, each of whom is a Canadian citizen; an individual resident in Canada or a corporation.

Mr. Carter: This provision applies whether one person is the owner or more than one? They must all be citizens and also resident in Canada?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): No, they must be one or the other.

Mr. Carter: They must be one or the other.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): All of them must be either citizens or—

Mr. Carter: The amendment reads in part:

—and is owned by one or more persons each of whom is a Canadian citizen,—

An individual can be either a Canadian citizen or an individual resident in Canada.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): That is correct.

Mr. Carter: So that if there are two owners they may be two individual residents instead of two citizens?

The Chairman: Order. It being five o'clock, it is my duty to leave the chair in order to permit the house to proceed to the consideration of private and public bills pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

PRIVATE BILLS

JEAN GEORGE LIPSMAN

On the order:

Bill SD-1, an act for the relief of Jean George Lipsman—Mr. McCleave.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I am going to ask again that these bills stand. I will also make a suggestion for the consideration of the house which will save the time of the clerks who prepare the order paper, and also save substantial printing costs. I suggest that until we do come to the consideration of second reading of the divorce bills all those on the order paper be placed under one order.

The second point I make is that since it is possible that members may wish to comment on individual bills, it be understood that when the time comes for second reading of the divorce bills the unified order be dispensed with, and each bill would then be in a position to be considered separately; that is, each under a separate number.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I comment on the suggestion and reiterate it so that it is clear to me as well. I understand that what is being asked precisely is, first, that all of the divorce bills be consolidated as of this time under one order number so that they will all appear under order No. 1, for argument's sake; and that when the sponsor of the bills decides to proceed with their consideration they will then be each numbered as a separate order so that they can be dealt with separately?

With that understanding we would agree.

Mr. McCleave: That is the suggestion I made to the house, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion made by the hon. member for Halifax, concurred in by the hon. member for Skeena, relating to order No. 1 covering 53 divorce bills, and also orders No. 2 to 96 inclusive covering individual divorce bills No. SD-54 to SD-148 inclusive is that they stand for second reading. It is proposed that all those orders be stood today and that they be carried on the order paper henceforth under one order until they are proceeded with. It is also understood that they may be dealt with individually if requested. Does the house concur in this suggestion?

Mr. Howard: It was my understanding that they were not to be dealt with individually on request but that at that time they appear on the order paper as separate order numbers.

Mr. Speaker: There is a difficulty involved in what the hon. member suggests in that it will not be known when they are to be proceeded with, but in the meantime will stand on the order paper as one number.

Mr. McCleave: Perhaps I can solve that difficulty by indicating that notice will be given to all parties concerned several days in advance. I will make a statement of the intention to proceed with them at some convenient time and they can then be renumbered under separate order numbers. I will make this announcement well in advance of the Tuesday period when bills are considered.

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if there is an impediment involved in the consolidation of these numbers. At the present time we are printing ten pages dealing with these bills. Is there any reason why they cannot be referred to in some specific way rather than printing them day after day?

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker; I think we should deal with one thing at a time. We have not cleared up the question regarding the renumbering of the bills under separate order numbers. I think the suggestion made by the hon. member for Halifax regarding the announcement in advance of his intention to proceed with them would overcome the difficulty I have suggested.

Mr. Speaker: That would involve notice, before the house proceeded with second reading of any divorce bill which, as I understand it, would complicate the matter. If the house is concerned about the economy of printing these bills the suggestion is made that divorce bills coming on the order paper for second reading be consolidated under one order until the time the hon. member, in whose name they stand, wishes to proceed, and they then be listed again. Would the house concur in that suggestion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house leader satisfied with that proposed arrangement?

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I should like to ask a question for clarification. By consolidating these bills we would reduce the number of printed pages to three or four. When they are renumbered again we will expand the number of necessary pages to 10 or 12. Perhaps they could be referred to under one order and, when they come up for second reading and we make an agreement and an order issues to that effect, we could call each bill in turn by its present designation, SD-1 and so on. Would that meet our requirements and eliminate the extra burden on the clerk and printers which would follow?

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): The individual bills could not normally proceed individually to subsequent stages of proceedings if they appear under one order number. They would have to have individual identity, and I think we would be wise to leave them in the way it is suggested they appear finally on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion which I understand the house had agreed to was that these bills be stood and be not printed again on the order paper until the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. McCleave) indicates that he is ready to proceed and that they then be set out seriatim as separate orders.

[Mr. McGee.]

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, that is the best suggestion of all, not to print them in the routine proceedings and orders of the day until, say, proper notice is given on a Friday afternoon for the following Tuesday. That seems to me to be the most commendable suggestion of all. If it were followed, we would really be saving money in this respect.

Mr. Howard: That would be agreeable, but it would be even more agreeable if they never again appeared on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: The Clerk suggests that the order paper in the future, until notice is given by the hon. member for Halifax that he wishes to proceed, will show one order in general terms, to second reading of divorce bills and all divorce bills will be encompassed under that order including those which may come forward in the interval. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-14, respecting Canadian General Insurance Company.

He said:

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, the sole purpose of this bill is to give a French name to the company which, till now, has been known as the Canadian General Insurance Company; it is a question of adding to the name of that company the following French designation: "Compagnie d'assurance canadienne générale".

(Text):

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

AURORA PIPE LINE COMPANY

The house resumed from Monday, March 13, consideration in committee of Bill No. S-2, to incorporate Aurora Pipe Line Company—Mr. Woolliams—Mr. Flynn in the chair.

On clause 1—Incorporation.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, the discussion of this bill reminds me of days gone by. Under what different circumstances are we discussing this bill and its principle compared with the discussion that took place on the famous pipe line bill.

Mr. Churchill: Freedom of speech was endangered then; it is not now.

Mr. Herridge: At that time the present Prime Minister sitting in opposition referred to individuals of the type connected with this bill as Texas buccaneers. Hon. members of the Liberal party who formed the government of that day supported those Texas buccaneers. Only this little group in the corner has been consistent in opposing activity of this nature.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question?

Mr. Herridge: I am quite willing to answer if I can do so.

Mr. Woolliams: This is the question I should like to put to my good friend. Is it not a fact that most of the debate on the former pipe line was on an entirely different point than this debate is on? The debate was on the question of finances, on whether the government of Canada should back the finances. This is entirely different. This case is something like that of Northern Pipe Line of Saskatchewan which the hon. member approved last year.

Mr. Argue: The hon. member was obviously not here.

Mr. Herridge: The hon. member for Bow River is somewhat of a novitiate in this House of Commons. He forgets that years ago we had several discussions on pipe line bills which were almost identical with this one and not related to the one which he mentions at the present time.

However, Mr. Chairman, to carry on, I want to say that this group has been entirely consistent throughout the years in the application of its principles to the circumstances under consideration. I had not taken part in this debate previously. I must apologize even to my colleagues on that account. My time has been taken up to a great extent with my correspondence. My great increase in correspondence has been caused by the Minister of Justice because whenever he makes a speech on the Columbia river, I am obliged to write a great many letters to people who protest.

The Chairman: Order. I trust that the hon. member will come back to the bill under discussion.

Mr. Herridge: I accept your ruling, Mr. Chairman. I can see that you readily appreciate the fact that oil and water do not mix.

An hon. Member: A big laughing matter.

Mr. Herridge: Having made that point, I shall continue. As a matter of fact I was going to make only a brief reference to this subject, and I am sure that I would have been quite as much in order as some hon. members have been. However, I accept your ruling.

On this bill to incorporate Aurora Pipe Line Company, may I say this. I have been looking up the dictionary. I was rather fascinated with the word "Aurora". This is the definition of "aurora" given by the dictionary:

> Luminous atmospheric (prob. electrical) phenomenon radiating from earth's northern or southern magnetic pole; dawn; colour of sky at sunrise; Roman goddess of dawn.

And so on.

I can well understand and appreciate why the company was named the Aurora Pipe Line Company. It will glow with gold. Obviously the company is capitalized so that the cost of the pipe line will work out at $3,784 per foot. In fact the press of today mentions that Aurora's golden half-mile is at the heart of the parliamentary debate and they go on to describe the bill.

Then again I notice that certain persons named have by petition prayed that such and such be done. I was rather fascinated. I understand the technical reason for using the word "pray". However, it always seems to be a sort of anomaly to use the word "pray" in connection with the development of oil. I know some people in Alberta who can pray long and loud and at the same time profit from oil, as has happened in other parts of the world.

On one occasion I had a member of the Social Credit party in this house tell me this when we were discussing a prior pipe line bill, and he told me it in all seriousness. I asked him why oil was not discovered in such quantity until such and such a date. He said "I will tell you why. The good Lord wanted to make certain that there was a Social Credit government in power before he let them find it." I think that is an example of having strong convictions as far as your party policy is concerned and as the beneficence of the Almighty with respect to it.

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I think there must be some facsimile of order in the debate. Standing order 34 (2) reads as follows:

> Mr. Spencer or the Chairman, after having called the attention of the house, or of the committee to the conduct of a member who persists in irrelevance,—

Surely what the hon. member is now discussing is something that is not very relevant to the situation.

> ,—or repetition, may direct him to discontinue his speech,—

What he is saying may be funny to the C.C.F., but it is not funny having regard to the development of this country. Surely we should have something that is relevant to the debate in question.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, an hon. member has a right to refer to previous debates on pipe lines and to discussions with members in relation to those pipe lines. I am laying an historical background for my coming remarks and I wish the hon. member would restrain himself and not be impatient because, on the whole, he is a very well-intentioned person.

Mr. Argue: They want to use closure on a pipe line bill.

Mr. Herridge: Before proceeding I must congratulate the hon. member for Vancouver South or, I should say, the handsome, courageous, and independent member for Vancouver South for having the courage to stand up in this House of Commons and say his piece, although it is obviously not popular with the hon. member for Bow River. I notice that when the hon. member for Vancouver South speaks the hon. member for Bow River looks like a bloated toad that is going to burst. Anyway, I congratulate him on having that courage and that independence.

The Chairman: Order. May I indicate to the hon. member for Kootenay West that his last remarks are, in my opinion, out of place. In the second place I must draw his attention to standing order 59 (2) which reads as follows:

> Speeches in committee of the whole house must be strictly relevant to the item or clause under consideration.

I appreciate the fact that latitude has been given to hon. members up until now. However, I must say that I feel that no injustice would result from applying the rules from now on. I have noticed that we have heard more or less a repetition of speeches that have already been made.

Mr. Argue: I want to make it perfectly clear, Mr. Chairman, that as far as we are concerned we feel that the discussion in a general way on this first clause has been and is in order. Your Honour has allowed a general debate and has allowed the sponsor of the bill to make general statements and to answer arguments. I would hasten to point that, in my judgment, it would be a grave mistake to rule closure on a broad discussion of this pipe line bill at this stage. I think the memories of some members of this committee go back far enough to give them an understanding of the grave and serious implications that will flow from any such attempt. I say that Your Honour, in my judgment, has acted in a right and proper way in allowing general debate on clause 1 of this bill. That general debate having been precipitated, I do not see how you could contemplate at some particular stage that, by an arbitrary decision, the general debate shall come to an end. I submit that the hon. member for Kootenay West must be given the same kind of latitude in discussing clause 1 as that which has been heretofore afforded to all hon. members in all parties in discussing this bill.

[Mr. Herridge.]

Mr. Churchill: I should like to say this, Mr. Chairman: For the hon. member for Assiniboia to use the word "closure" with regard to a request that the rules be obeyed, is just nonsense. Closure is a motion that prohibits debate after a certain stage. Here there is no prohibition of debate at all. Freedom of speech prevails in this parliament.

Mr. Argue: We shall soon hear what the ruling is.

Mr. Woolliams: May I speak to the point of order? The hon. member for Assiniboia spoke to the point of order and he talked about a wide variety of subjects. However, may I say this? I endeavoured to keep this matter on the rails. That is why they have been criticizing me. I said that all we come to parliament for is to incorporate a company. They are the ones that opened the flood gate; and when they get the gate open, they try to press open further gates. That is the situation we have.

I think that you, as chairman, have been particularly courteous to the group in the corner in allowing those hon. members to open the gates so wide. Surely, it is obvious that they do not want this information. They are filibustering this bill and they have run out of ideas.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, and in particular on the point raised by the house leader, I am one of those members of this committee who, like the hon. member for Kootenay West has not yet had an opportunity to speak on this bill. I do not see any reason why the rules should not apply equally to the hon. members from all political parties of this committee. The hon. members who are now complaining supported a similar bill on another occasion, and we should have the same opportunity to speak on this bill that was afforded them on that occasion.

Mr. Argue: We do not have any second-class members of parliament, or we have not in the past.

The Chairman: I should point out to the committee that the chairman cannot do anything other than enforce the rules. However, in order to be able to do that in an efficient and just manner, it is necessary for the chairman to have the help and co-operation of all hon. members. I think the chairman has been fair to all hon. members of this committee.

I have pointed out to the hon. member for Kootenay West that there are rules against repetition and that the remarks of hon. members in committee of the whole should be strictly relevant to the matter before the committee.

I have indicated before, that in my view discussion on clause 1 of a bill could not be the same as it is on second reading. I expressed the view last year that generally the discussion should be on the method of dealing with the problem as indicated by the manner in which the bill is drafted; that is, the draftsmanship of the bill and the method of dealing with the problem on hand.

On the other hand, I do not think the hon. member for Assiniboia is right in intimating that the application of the rules of the house would be the application of closure. That would infer an intention on the part of the Chair, and I think the remark of the hon. member is a reflection on the Chair.

I have tried to be reasonable. All hon. members realize that if they really have something to say on the bill, they are entitled to say it, but I do not think it is in accordance with the rules of the house to speak just for the sake of speaking. I trust that the hon. member for Kootenay West will bear these considerations in mind. I do not intend to restrict him unnecessarily in view of the fact that the discussion has been very wide, but I count on his co-operation to help the Chair apply the rules of debate which the house has decided should apply.

Mr. Herridge: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, if I stirred up a hornet's nest. You have mentioned certain words that I used in respect to the hon. member for Bow River. I believe I used the phrase "bloated toad", which perhaps was offensive. I withdraw that phrase at once and replace it with "a toy balloon about to explode".

While this is just a bill to incorporate one company, this group is taking a particular stand because it represents a certain principle. Before going further I wish to quote briefly from the committee report on this matter. I should say it is a very slim committee report, which indicates that the bill certainly did not receive the attention we were led to believe it would when it passed second reading and was sent to the committee. I think that is indicated by the fact that while this discussion has been going on in committee of the whole, the hon. member for Bow River has repeatedly been offering more and more information. He has been dragged out of his hole, as it were, as the debate has continued.

Mr. Woolliams: That is not fair, and you know it.

Mr. Herridge: I must say that last night he made the most informative speech on the question that he has made to date. I would refer to the committee report. This is the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines for Tuesday, February 21, 1961. On page 38 I find the following comment by the hon. member for Calgary South.

> Do you not feel, therefore, that you should reserve the right to make a decision on these technical problems? Do you think that you, as a member of parliament, are qualified to pass judgment on this?
> Mr. Cathers: I do not think I am qualified to pass on the technical aspects. However, I took an interest in this; I went to the hearings before the Senate, and I was here during the hearings on the Foothills bill. I am not speaking with any expert knowledge, but I say I think it is my right as a member of parliament, when this comes before us, to pass my judgment and to object.

Then the hon. member for Calgary South said:

> You think it is your right, but you have said you do not think you are qualified.
> Mr. Cathers: That is right.

Then the hon. member for Bow River said:

> Actually you said you do not like to hand over that jurisdiction; but did you not, as a fact, when you voted for the national energy board, actually hand over that authority to the national energy board?

I quote that passage to indicate the implications behind the remarks that this is a matter that should not seriously concern parliament, that it is to a greater extent the responsibility of the national energy board. As against that point of view I wish to quote briefly from the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver East. On page 39 the hon. member is reported as having said:

> Mr. Winch: The only matters which come before the national energy board are those authorized by parliament. It would depend on whether or not the company is incorporated. That is what we are discussing now.

I quote that passage to indicate the contrast between the point of view of the hon. members we oppose in this connection and of this group. The hon. member for Vancouver East was reflecting our approach as socialists. This questioning as reported in the minutes of the committee clearly indicates our great concern for the rights, responsibilities and the institution of parliament.

We in this group consider that this bill, in essence, conflicts with stated government policy. In the speech from the throne to the Canadian parliament on November 17, 1960, announcements were made regarding one of the most important subjects dealt with in a report, to which I intend to refer. I wish to quote from the speech from the throne:

> You will be invited to consider means by which to encourage a greater participation by Canadians in the ownership and control of industry and resources in Canada.

That is one of the main arguments of this group. We say this bill does not give effect to government policy which has been stated. Only one member on the government side emphasized that point of view and supported our point of view. It is very interesting to see the Conservative party split on this issue, and I think it will split wider and wider as we approach election day. However, at least one member agreed with us. The hon. member for Medicine Hat is generally so good-natured that what he said was rather unusual.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): How did you stand on Northern Pipe Line?

Mr. Herridge: The way I always stand, straight up.

Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson): What is the difference?

Mr. Herridge: I hope I will not be interrupted for the few minutes longer that I wish to speak. I wish to quote from a report entitled "Policies and Practices of United States Subsidiaries in Canada" issued by the Canadian-American Committee. I may say that this committee is sponsored by the national planning association of the United States and by the private planning association of Canada, and it has been dealing with the very kind of question involving United States capital investment as we are concerned about it in this present bill. The main body of the study deals with major aspects of the behaviour of United States subsidiaries in Canada, including the issue of equity security by subsidiaries; personnel policies; the publication of financial reports and other information; commercial policy; research activities, and contributions to charity and education.

A great deal of information is brought out in this booklet and I am not going to quote from it at any length now, but the report provides a very sound basis for argument in opposition to legislation of the type now before us. I should like to quote from page 10 of this report:

> It has been amply demonstrated that successful modern management usually subordinates the immediate and narrow interest of its stockholders to the long term interest of the corporation. Especially where foreign operations are involved, this often calls for conscious effort to fall in line with the aspirations of the community in which the enterprise operates even if it involves substantial policy changes which are not of apparent immediate advantage to the present corporation as a whole.

Elsewhere, the report states:

> There is also the pressure which comes from the obligation of management to operate its business, wherever located, in the broad interest of its stockholders.

That is what we must expect with regard to the operations of this particular company in the days to come. Further on in this report, the conclusion is reached:

> In certain respects the criticism which some Canadians—including some in high places—make of United States business firms in Canada is unreasonable.

That is fair enough.

> Often it involves sweeping generalizations based on the alleged actions of a few companies. Sometimes it calls for policy changes which it would be unrealistic to expect from any business, whether owned and run by Canadians, Americans, or anyone else.

We are not asking for something which is unrealistic but we are asking that consideration be given to Canadian ownership, Canadian directors, and policies which are in conformity with local and national interests when we are considering the incorporation of these pipe line companies. I should like to put on record one final quotation from page 80 of this booklet:

> That this demand for Canadianization is growing has become apparent during the course of this study. Well informed Canadians see this as taking the form of pressure for legislation affecting such things as foreign equity ownership, Canadianization of directorships, and the publication of financial and other data. Many Canadians, who are accustomed to reform through persuasion and accommodation, look upon the possibility of such legislation with misgiving. In this they reflect the concern of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects that under some conditions the Canadian reaction to extensive foreign ownership and control "might develop into demands for restrictive or discriminatory action of an extreme kind, the consequences of which would be unfortunate for all concerned."
> This report will have served its purpose if, as was said in the opening chapter, it adds greater understanding on the Canadian side of the actual policies and practices, and the reasons for them, of a good cross section of United States controlled companies in Canada, and if on the American side it gives to some parent companies a greater appreciation of the importance to Canadians of their own national aspirations.

We wish to be fair. We do not expect the impossible. We recognize the circumstances under which these companies are financed, controlled and operated. However, we in this group feel there is a principle at stake, and we have to fight for the greater consideration of the national and local interest with regard to the incorporation of this company.

So, in concluding my brief remarks, I wish to say that we oppose this bill because we think it is wrong in principle for the reasons which I and other members of this group have put forward. Another reason is that we believe insufficient study was given in committee to the proposals in this legislation. That is obvious when one considers the importance of the bill and compares that with the slenderness of the report itself. One has only to bear in mind the repeated additions to the information received from the hon. member for Bow River as the debate has proceeded; as day follows day, another leaf is turned in the hon. member's book of information, and its contents made available to hon. members of this committee. All that information could have been presented to the committee when it was studying this bill. We were given to understand that when the bill had received second reading there would be an exhaustive, extensive and intensive study undertaken in the committee.

The second reason for our opposition to the bill is, thus, because of the fact that inadequate study was given to this question by the committee. Finally, we do not believe that legislation of this type is, in the long run, in the national or the provincial or the local interest.

Mr. Broome: I intend to be brief. I should like to take advantage of the offer made by the hon. member for Bow River when he said, as reported on page 2936 of Hansard of March 13:

> If there are any points which any hon. member conscientiously and honestly believes have been left unexplained, will he put the question in a few words, and I for my part, will try to give an answer in a few words?

I have three questions to ask the hon. member for Bow River. First, in regard to the 12,000 public stockholders referred to by Mr. Burgis, how many of those stockholders are Canadians or residents in Canada, and what percentage of the total stock distributed of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas do they own? Second, of the personnel, the operating management—the entire personnel—of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company, how many aliens are employed in the operation?

The hon. member has already answered the question I put to him with regard to the construction work, although I wonder how the story was so common around Calgary. However, I accept the hon. member's word and the statement made by the company that they intend to use Canadian contractors. Incidentally, I have a great deal of sympathy for the hon. member for Bow River because he is having a rough time. I had a similar experience a couple of years back when I piloted the bill through for the incorporation of the Trans Mountain Oil Pipe Line Company. I fought tooth and nail with hon. members over in the corner, but finally they saw reason and the bill went through. However, it was not until the second year that it did.

My third question is this: is the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company planning to increase the percentage of Canadian participation either through the issuance of treasury stock along the line followed by the Alberta Natural Gas Company or other issues recently made in Canada which have been limited to participation by Canadians, if Canadians wanted to buy? In other words, is this company going to become more Canadian?

Now I want to take exception to a remark made by the hon. member for Assiniboia. As reported on page 2930 of Hansard for March 13 the hon. member spoke as follows:

> I would suggest that it is little wonder, because of all the bad features of this bill, that the members of the government party on the committee voted against the motion merely to defer consideration of the bill in the committee so that interested witnesses might have the opportunity to appear.

It is only fair to say that the mover of that motion was the hon. member for Westmorland and the seconder was a member of Her Majesty's Privy Council for Canada, the dean of the house, and they certainly are Conservatives. The person who moved the motion that the committee should recess until a reporter appeared to take evidence was not an alive and alert member of the C.C.F. but the hon. member for the Yukon, although the hon. member for Skeena did second that motion.

I think that hon. members should be fair about this and recognize that the hon. members from Alberta have a problem. I can sympathize with them. The development of the oil and gas industries in Alberta is vital. At this time it has been decided that there are far-reaching national considerations which must be examined in the development of national resources. The purpose is not to stop that development but to give it a pattern. That has been the theme of what I have said in this committee and in the house on second reading.

It is only right and just that the people who come here to assist in the development of national resources should make a profit. The development of our natural resources is a profitable business. It is just and fair that they make their operations good for themselves and for Canada. These are not incompatible statements. This is not Saudi Arabia where the government takes 50 per cent of the royalty, and I believe is now negotiating for 60 per cent or 75 per cent. In Alberta the royalty is 12½ per cent. This royalty is valuable to the people and the government of Alberta. It is a reasonable royalty.

The conditions which have been set out and embodied in the Natural Energy Board Act are reasonable. The thought behind that act is reasonable. The way the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources is handling the development of oil and gas resources in the Arctic is in line with that act, and with the philosophy about which I have been speaking. That philosophy is reflected in the form of certain public bills I have placed on the order paper. There is a coherence and an underlying thread all the way through that we shall not discriminate against foreign capital but shall welcome it, provided it works in partnership with Canadian capital.

In closing my remarks at this stage let me say this to my hon. friends from Alberta. Seventy or eighty thousand United States citizens may run the gas and oil industry in Alberta, but I suggest that Alberta is growing to the point where Albertans can operate many of these enterprises and surely the people of Canada can now participate in every phase of these operations.

Let us have a little bit of sense and reason in this debate. Let us take out the wild statements, such as those made by the hon. member for Assiniboia and those made by the hon. member for Kootenay West when he spoke about the Conservative split. There is no split in the Conservative party. The policy of our party has not changed.

We are discussing a private bill. All hon. members have the right to say what they think in this respect, but I do not think any hon. member or any group has the right to hold up passage of a bill. Hon. members have the right to dissent, but not to obstruct. We can make our positions known when the time comes for the taking of a vote.

Mr. Brunsden: When will that be?

Mr. Broome: I trust I shall not be the only hon. member on this side of the committee who will vote against this bill on third reading, but that is my intention unless the hon. member for Bow River can satisfy me in respect of the three questions I have put to him. This is my last word in this debate at the committee stage.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, perhaps if the hon. member for Bow River cares to answer the questions put to him by the hon. member for Vancouver South my remarks might be somewhat curtailed.

Mr. Brunsden: That would be a good thing.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): In view of the fact that the hon. member does not care to answer or has no answers to the questions posed by the hon. member for Vancouver South I have no choice but to proceed with my—

An hon. Member: Filibuster?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): —remarks in the ordinary course. I have listened carefully to the debate and followed it closely in Hansard. I must admit my knowledge of the oil and gas industry is not too wide and that is why I listened with such interest to the discussion.

I am interested in this bill and in bills of this nature. My riding is, as it were, at the other end of the oil industry and my area, along with others, has supplied the gold with which this pipe line is apparently going to be plated.

This bill represents another in that series of sorry events that have occurred relating to the development of our natural resources. History shows that in the main it has been a question of development of those resources by quick-buck artists. What makes the present bill even more odious is the fact that the quick-buck artists involved are not even of the home-grown variety.

The hon. member for Timiskaming referred last evening to the decline and virtual disappearance of the white pine industry. This came about because of the methods employed by the quick buck artists in the development of our resources. Another recent example is found in the uranium industry. Under a five-year contract the Rio Tinto company took out $93 million net, and those who got it in the neck were individuals who were unfortunate enough to have purchased homes in the area of that industry.

This quick-buck artistry has never been better illustrated than in the development of our oil industry. A most glaring example was the trans-Canada pipe line fiasco of a couple of years ago which resulted in bringing the Liberal government crashing down to earth. Another example recently exposed was that of a western oil company which proceeded to dispose of its products in the United States at prices cheaper than those which were charged Canadian consumers along the route of the pipe line. Gas and oil should be available at cheap prices to Canadian but people have had to sell their homes because they could not keep up with the high cost of this great natural resource when used as fuel.

Because of this type of development, the benefit of this resource has been denied to our people. The costs of promotion have to be paid by someone and it is the consumer who pays. It may be that the costs are extended over so long a period that you will not have a chance in your lifetime to pay them, but will pass them on to your children and theirs. These paper profits are not supposed to hurt anyone but they do hurt the consumer and are built-in over a long period of time.

There have been interesting developments in this debate. The Liberals have been consistent in the position they took in 1956 of selling out Canadian interests to the United States. I do not know if one should congratulate them for their consistency. Apparently they are prepared to follow the same consistent line in their approach to this pipe line company. We also see that the hon. member for Vancouver South was consistent with Conservative policy back in 1956, which was that quick-buck artistry is not too bad provided it is Canadian or, at least, if we are to have some quick-buck artistry it should be confined to Canadians. We should not sell out to United States interests.

I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Vancouver South on his courage and forthrightness. His stand is consistent with what he believes to be the present Tory policy. An illustration of this is found in the excellent words which the hon. member used the other night, as reported at page 2680 of Hansard:

> The only thing for which this government has stood . . . is that Canadians can compete on equal terms with capital coming into this country from other sources.

Unfortunately, apparently this stand, which had been expounded so well by the hon. member for Vancouver South is not shared in this instance by the hon. member for Bow River, and certainly, at least during this debate, not by the two hornets from Acadia and Jasper-Edson. Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, I do not really believe the three hon. members have given a good reason for their stand, unless they are trying to do something which is going to benefit their particular ridings regardless of whether it is in the interests of the province as a whole. Certainly they seem to be disregarding the interests of Canadians as a whole.

Mr. Woolliams: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Yes.

Mr. Woolliams: The hon. member spoke about benefiting a particular riding. I would ask him if Pincher Creek is in the riding of Bow River? From my knowledge of Alberta and western Canada, Pincher Creek is strictly within the riding of Macleod and has nothing to do with the riding of Bow River.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, possibly I did misrepresent the hon. member. If that was not the reason, then unfortunately there is another reason that I can see. We understand that the hon. member, contrary to Conservative policy past or present, appears to be acting in line with Social Credit policy during the pipe line debate of 1956.

Mr. Brunsden: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Argue: Our new Beauchesne.

Mr. Brunsden: Well, you need one. The hon. member for Timmins is attempting to develop a political case for the export of gas and oil, and he has cast some aspersions on the Alberta members. He has tried to talk about uranium, about which he knows very little, apparently; I have not seen him in the research committee.

Mr. Argue: There is no point of order.

Mr. Brunsden: Yes, there is. The point is simply that this debate is supposed to be about a bill having to do with a pipe line, not about Social Credit or the C.C.F. in Alberta, not about the personal views of Alberta members on a selfish basis. It was intimated a moment ago that we came from Alberta. We do, and we are proud of it and we are just as good Canadians as those who come from Ontario.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, certainly I do not think there is any accusation against an hon. member for saying that he is trying to do something for his particular riding. It may not be in the interests of the country as a whole, but I certainly do not think it is any reflection on any hon. member to say that he is trying to promote the interests of his own riding. I definitely try to promote the interests of my riding.

Mr. Brunsden: You are doing a damn poor job, then.

Mr. Peters: I do not think anybody is going to worry about your judgment on this matter or on any other matter.

Mr. Argue: He is out of order again.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): If the hon. member thinks I am doing a bad job, I should like to invite him to debate that question in my riding.

Mr. Argue: He will probably take it out of Hansard.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): There is another point I should like to illustrate; I think it is very important in so far as this particular bill is concerned. I should like to refer to the words of the Minister of Agriculture, formerly minister of northern affairs and national resources. I think the best illustration I can give is to quote just a few extracts from a speech made by the Minister of Agriculture in committee of supply when the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources were under discussion. His remarks were related to conservation and the development of our natural resources. They certainly are apropos of this particular bill. This is what the minister had to say:

—we are the nation on the northern half of this continent and we want to make certain that the interests, not only of the present generation, are protected, but that the interests of generations unborn will also be preserved.

I should like to ask the hon. member for Bow River whether a bill of this kind, when practically all the control of the company is outside of our country, can be construed as applying to the policy expressed by the Minister of Agriculture?

Mr. Smallwood: Will the hon. member permit a question? On this matter of outside control, I think it would be of interest to the committee, since the members of the C.C.F. party are filibustering this bill, if the hon. member would tell us what percentage of United States capital is invested in the exploitation of gas and oil in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I would love to debate that particular issue with the hon. member at some time but I do not think we can do so now.

Mr. Smallwood: I should like to inform the hon. member that over 75 per cent is United States capital. If the hon. member continues to filibuster this bill I do not see how we can waste our time listening to him.

Mr. Argue: Wrong again.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The house will now revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

COASTAL FISHERIES PROTECTION ACT

REVISION OF DEFINITION OF CANADIAN FISHING VESSEL

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill No. C-57, to amend the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act.—Mr. MacLean (Queens)—Mr. Flynn in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

On clause 1—"Canadian fishing vessel".

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, before the business of the house was interrupted at five o'clock the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) proposed an amendment and the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. MacLean) offered an alternative. The member for Skeena was not feeling well and was not sure he would be in attendance this evening. He asked me on his behalf, to withdraw his amendment. He was of the opinion that the amendment proposed by the minister would be satisfactory.

The Chairman: Has the hon. member leave to withdraw the amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment withdrawn.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): We had a useful discussion regarding this matter before five o'clock. I will ask my colleague, the Solicitor General, to move the following amendment:

That clause 1 be amended by striking out in line 11 the words "an individual resident" and substituting therefor the words "a person resident and domiciled".

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): Mr. Chairman, I so move.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time, now?

An hon. Member: By leave.

Mr. MacLean (Queens) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

AGRICULTURE

FARM MACHINERY PRICES—CONTINUATION OF INQUIRY BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Gordon Churchill (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved:

That the standing committee on agriculture and colonization be empowered to continue its inquiry into the question of prices of farm machinery as recommended by the said committee in its fourth report presented to the house July 28, 1960, and that the committee's minutes of proceedings and evidence with regard to this inquiry at the last session be referred to the said committee.

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): I am sure that all hon. members are aware of the widespread interest in this question of farm machinery prices. No member representing a rural constituency could possibly avoid hearing the discussion of this subject. Farmers realize the necessity of keeping production costs down to a minimum in order to compete not only in the export market but in their own domestic market, and have expressed their concern regarding the rise in the price of farm machinery since 1955. The increase in production efficiency on the part of farmers is invariably lost because of the high cost of farm machinery.

On Monday, June 6, 1960, the house ordered that the standing committee on agriculture and colonization be empowered to inquire into the prices of farm machinery and to report to the house thereon. The committee held three open meetings and the persons appearing before the committee at the last session were as follows: Mr. A. D. Holmes, Director, Prices Division, Dominion Bureau of Statistics; Mr. R. A. Stutt and Mr. G. Haase, Department of Agriculture; Messrs. D. W. McGill, Director, and J. J. A. Lefebvre, Machinery Section Head, Appraisers Branch, Department of National Revenue; and Mr. J. T. Wimble of the Appraisers Branch, National Revenue and Mr. W. Kalbfleisch, Chief of the Engineering Research Service, Department of Agriculture.

The chairman gave the following report to the house on Thursday, July 28, which reads as follows:

> Your committee has noted the wide-spread interest in the subject of farm machinery prices.
>
> Your committee held four meetings on this order of reference. It heard representatives from the dominion bureau of statistics on farm machinery prices; from the Department of National Revenue on farm machinery tariffs; from the engineering research service of the Department of Agriculture on the different types of farm machinery.
> Your committee has found that interested persons or organizations would like more time to prepare presentations.
> Your committee recommends:
> 1. That the subject of farm machinery prices be referred to it as soon as possible after the opening of the next session of parliament.
> 2. That the ministers of the different government departments concerned, instruct their officers to offer every assistance to the persons designated by the committee to procure and compile all available facts regarding farm machinery prices.

During the recess a summary of statistics relative to the inquiry into the price of farm machinery, under the direction of Mr. Gordon Haase of the economics division of the Department of Agriculture, has been prepared. Copies of this report will be made available to the members of the committee both in English and in French as soon as possible, when the committee is prepared to resume its investigation.

No one at this time is prepared to say just where the responsibility lies for the price increase. It is to be hoped that during committee sessions an investigation in this regard will take place following which recommendations will be made as to how to minimize the present increase and prevent any further increase.

I do not think it is necessary for me to indicate the nature of the inquiry which should take place, but I am sure that the committee will investigate that which they may deem necessary, whether it be in the manufacturing, distribution or retail field.

I might also add that the interest in all phases of the industry has been shown by the people concerned. It is expected that their views will be heard, in addition to the representations by labour and agriculture. I hope that this motion will be passed today and that the committee will be able to resume its inquiry at the earliest possible opportunity.

(Translation):

Mr. Jean-Paul Racine (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, we welcome the statement just made by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Jorgenson). I want to assure him that we welcome this opportunity of looking again into this matter, because we believe that this study is necessary on account of the questions that are being asked by many farmers and all those concerned with every aspect of agriculture.

It is the utmost importance, in our opinion, that the committee be once more authorized to continue its inquiry into the question of farm machinery prices; besides, the committee included such a recommendation in its fourth report to the house.

I shall speak very briefly tonight because I do not want to anticipate the results of the inquiry that will be conducted by the committee on agriculture and colonization.

This is not the first time, however, that we have been hearing about this committee and I should like to refer to the statement made by the former minister of agriculture on June 6, 1960, as reported on page 4571 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, during the past 10 years, the most frequently heard general complaint on the part of farmers has been over the cost price squeeze. This arises from the fact that during this period the prices received by farmers for their products either have not increased or have not increased in anything like the proportion of the increase in cost of the goods and services farmers have to purchase.

Nothing could be more to the point, Mr. Speaker, and if we refer to D.B.S. figures, for instance, we note that the price index of goods and services purchased by farmers reached 255.9 in 1957; 259.9 in 1958; 269.5 in 1959; 274.4 in 1960. Therefore, from 1957 to the end of 1960, we note a 14.5 increase in the price index of goods and services purchased by farmers.

If, on the other hand, we refer to the same statistics, we find that the retail price index of farm products for 1956, was 234.6 and that it was 234.7 for the first 11 months of 1960.

So, in four years, from 1956 to 1960, the percentage increase of the retail price of farm products was only 0.01.

This inquiry is a must, no doubt, and we, in the committee will give it all our attention but that does not seem to be the main cause of the cost-price squeeze. There may be deeper causes that could warrant a more objective investigation. For instance, what about the farm product marketing organization in this country? Nothing has been done in that field, although our economists have been discussing the problem and have recommended a study of marketing methods by a research committee.

After the then minister of agriculture, on June 6, 1960, had instructed the committee on agriculture and colonization to inquire into farm machinery prices, we hoped that the committee would get to work immediately. But it was not until July 12 next that the first meeting was held. It was followed by three more, on July 19, 26 and 27, 1960. At those meetings, evidence was heard from officers of the departments of agriculture and national revenue, and also from the dominion bureau of statistics. And it was only at the last meeting that we were given questionnaires.

And I think that all the members of the committee had copies distributed to the farmers in their ridings in order to find out what they thought of this price margin on farm machinery.

In 1960, that is during the last session, the committee on agriculture and colonization had this to say in its fourth report:

(Text):

Your committee has found that interested persons or organizations would like more time to prepare presentations.

Your committee recommends:

1. That the subject of farm machinery prices be referred to it as soon as possible after the opening of the next session of parliament.

(Translation):

Who is to blame, Mr. Speaker, we do not know or perhaps we do know it only too well. Still, certain questions remain unanswered in our minds. We wonder what caused the Minister of Agriculture and the government to delay for four months this year the opening of the inquiry by the committee on agriculture and colonization. Even if we blamed the committee for not having met more often last year to consider this matter, I think we must once more blame the government and in stronger terms for this year's four months delay.

Does the government feel that this matter is not important? Does it think that the situation which the farmer must face, as far as the purpose of this inquiry is concerned, is not important? We do not know. And I would not like to put words in the mouth of the minister. However, we cannot help wondering whether the delay suffered in this matter is not deliberate.

We are really wondering whether the new Minister of Agriculture considers what the situation will be at the time of the next general election when the farmers will remind him that the price spread still exists.

The minister might then tell the farmers that his government has foreseen this development and that an inquiry is in progress. Unfortunately, since this government came to power, we have too often seen similar electoral tactics whose only aim is to create a smokescreen to cover the true situation.

However, we on this side do wish that the committee on agriculture and colonization will make haste in order that a report may be submitted to the house before the end of the present session. That is what we hope for and, therefore, we wish the committee to be called as soon as possible.

In closing, I should like to tell the Minister of Agriculture, or, in the circumstances, his parliamentary secretary, that if it so happens that the committee is unable to examine fully this whole question this year, we on this side of the house would suggest that a commission be established to complete the inquiry.

May I repeat that the announcement by the parliamentary secretary of the establishment of this committee is most welcome. We on this side of the house who are members of the committee on agriculture and colonization assure him that we will fully co-operate in order to inform not only the house but in particular our farmers who will know at last what to believe in this matter.

(Text):

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the whole question of prices of agricultural machinery is an exceedingly important one as far as some 600,000 farm families in Canada are concerned. There is probably no item going into the farmer's cost of production that is larger, more necessary or causes him greater concern than the cost of agricultural equipment.

Farmers have faced many grave problems since the end of the war. One has been a failure to obtain markets for agricultural production. Another has been a failure to obtain relatively good prices for agricultural commodities, and a third and very important one has been the almost astronomical increase in the price of agricultural machinery.

According to the statistics which are available prices of agricultural machinery have increased by almost two and a half times since the beginning of world war II. Farm cash income since the end of the war has remained relatively stable, with a small percentage increase over that period of time. In the farmers' view agricultural machinery is a fixed cost over which he has no control, and it is a burden that is resting very heavily on the agricultural industry.

There is a move for expansion and consolidation of farms in Canada and there is tremendous pressure to force farm populations off the farms. I do not think any item has contributed more to the depopulation of agricultural areas than the impossible burden of agricultural machinery prices for most farmers. Since this is such an important matter one would have thought the government would have taken early action to do something about it.

We are dealing with this matter on March 14. It was first raised in the House of Commons on June 6, 1960, and a report was made to parliament by the agricultural committee on July 28, 1960. This report recommended that the subject of farm machinery prices be referred to that committee as soon as possible after the opening of the next session of parliament.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) has failed to carry out the recommendation of the committee. He has failed to bring this motion before the house at an early date in the session. Parliament opened on November 17. It is almost four months since this session began. It has taken the government four months to get this resolution on the order paper, even in the face of a recommendation from the agricultural committee that the question of farm machinery prices be referred to it as soon as possible after the opening of the next session of parliament.

I suggest that the government, by its procrastination and delay has been blocking its own inquiry and has been making it more difficult for the committee to bring forward recommendations at an early date. I suggest that the government, by these delaying tactics, has shown that its well-known promises to bring about a balance between prices of agricultural products and the cost of agricultural machinery have gone by the board and have been repudiated. I suggest that this committee may well provide a great deal of window-dressing and very little action.

The question of agricultural machinery prices is of tremendous importance because according to dominion bureau of statistics figures farmers spent just under $55 million on farm implements in 1944 and $251 million in 1959. That is an increase of five times in the amount of money spent on agricultural machinery. Yet in the face of this tremendous problem and the urgency to do something about it the government has long delayed bringing forward this important motion.

I think there are many items which should be brought before the committee. I think we should bring witnesses before the committee from the main agricultural implement companies in this country. We should ask them to appear before the committee and explain, if they can, why they have done such a poor job in maintaining reasonable prices for agricultural machinery. This spells a difficult problem for Canada because most of the farm implement companies have their head offices located outside our country. It is a question of whether or not we can get witnesses from the majority of these companies—I hope we can, but it does present a problem—since their head offices are located outside this country.

A few years ago the legislature of Saskatchewan undertook an inquiry into the farm implement industry. The inquiry was held in 1952, I believe, and it was a rather exhaustive one. Witnesses from the various agricultural implement companies were asked to come before the committee. The farm implement companies, with the exception of Canadian Co-operative Implements Limited, boycotted the committee, refused to appear and therefore made the work of the committee very difficult.

I trust we will exercise our authority where possible, and our influence where our authority does not extend, to have the representatives of the main agricultural implement companies in Canada appear before our committee. I think we should have representatives from Canadian Co-operative Implements Limited, the Massey-Harris Company, which in substantial part is a Canadian company, and from Cockshutt Farm Equipment Limited, which is also a Canadian company. We should also request the attendance of witnesses from companies situated in the United States. I refer to such companies as the John Deere Company, the International Harvester Company, the Minneapolis Moline Company, the Case Company, the Oliver Company, and any others we think should appear before the committee.

There are a number of questions we should ask them. I think we should ask them why we have such a conglomeration of models with modifications in agricultural machinery. I think the farm implement industry is getting almost in the position of the automobile industry. Through an excessive advertising campaign the implement companies have been trying to sell streamlined tractors with special gadgets. They are following the plans of the automobile companies in this regard, not with the objective of making durable implements that will last for a long period of time, but to bring forward farm implements that fall into the category of having been produced and distributed on the basis of planned obsolescence. Then within a few years, by large scale promotion they hope to again sell these implements to agricultural producers.

In addition to planned obsolescence, there is the question of the power content of many farm implements. I think the companies are promoting power in agricultural implements in exactly the same way as automobile companies have been promoting power in automobiles. I think there is a rather important question as to whether or not they have overdone the feature of power with, of course, a very large increase in cost.

I think there is another important question which the committee should study in its inquiry. I refer to the question of providing spare parts for repairing agricultural implements. It seems to me that farm implement companies do not keep on hand a stock of spare parts for a sufficient number of years. After a few years it is difficult to obtain parts for the implements that have been sold, and farmers must travel 50, 75 or 100 miles or more to a large centre in the hope that they can get repairs made. Even in my part of the country, if they travel to Regina they may be told: we shall have to send to Winnipeg, or we shall have to send to the factory. I think the companies have done a very poor job, a very inadequate job, with regard to providing a complete stock of spare parts likely to be required for their machines over the probable life of the farm implements. I think this is a question into which the committee should make a full inquiry.

I do not know why the government has set up the committee or why they are proposing this motion. They say—the parliamentary secretary has said—it is an endeavour to prevent farm implements costing more or, even better, that it is an endeavour to reduce the price of farm implements. These are certainly laudable objectives. But every time one asks the government to do something about the way in which the great corporations of this country are operated, every time you ask them to plan production or to control prices, what does the government say? It says: we cannot touch free enterprise; it is beyond our control and beyond our jurisdiction. So I would be anxious to learn from the parliamentary secretary just in what way this government feels it can exercise any control over the farm implement companies of this country. I suggest that the government has abandoned responsibility with regard to the operation of these companies, because the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has told us very often that the government has no authority over private business and its operations. When we ask in this house whether or not, for example, General Motors is going to close down a plant in Windsor, the answer is: we have no control; it is beyond our jurisdiction. Very often the government will not even go as far as to make inquiries. If the government takes the attitude that it has no control over the auto industry, how does it expect to bring about the laudable objectives mentioned in connection with this particular committee?

There is the question of price spread, the difference between manufacturing costs and retail cost. There is the great problem of the price spread in the food industry. We had a royal commission set up under this government which brought in a report, but instead of price spreads being narrowed they continued to increase. One can only wonder whether there is a conscientious endeavour on the part of this government to bring about some revision in farm implement prices or whether this is just another case of window dressing, a case of holding a talk-fest and doing nothing about the problem. We have, I think, in Canada an oportunity to do something about farm implement prices because, unlike certain other countries we do have a native farm implement industry. We have the Massey-Harris Company, the Cockshutt Company and Canadian Co-Operative Implements Limited. I suggest that this committee should consider the financial support and encouragement of the co-operative production of farm implements and there should be a full inquiry as to whether we should use to a much greater extent the facilities of Co-Operative Implements Limited so as to bring about a reduction in prices. I think we should consider the possibility of public ownership in the field of farm implements.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is straying a little far afield. The subject matter to be referred to the committee is the only relevant subject matter for debate.

Mr. Argue: I am pointing out some of the problems in the farm implement industry, some of the things into which I think inquiry should be made. I think the whole question of the kind of production we should have in the farm implement field is certainly an area into which the committee should make inquiry.

There is another area in which I think the committee should make inquiry. I would ask the parliamentary secretary if it is the intention that the inquiry should proceed along these lines, namely, an investigation into the costs of the various components which make up the prices of farm implements such as the cost of salaries, wages, overhead, profits and materials. I should like to see appearing before this committee not only experts from the farm implement industry but experts from labour and management to put before the committee information as to the various component costs going into the price of farm implements.

I have in my hand a survey which has been made relating to these costs. This survey is contained in a publication put out by the farm-labour co-ordinating council, which is a body composed of representatives of labour, the Canadian Labour Congress and its affiliated unions, and representatives of the farm unions of Canada. This body found that, comparing 1957 costs with 1945 costs, there has been an increase of 8 per cent in the cost of salaries, an increase of 7.5 per cent in overhead and profits, a reduction in the cost of fuel and electricity by .4 per cent, an increase in the costs of material by 3.1 per cent and a reduction in the cost of labour amounting to 11 per cent. In 1957, wages accounted for 22.9 per cent of the final price of farm implements as compared with 33.9 per cent in 1945.

The bogey has been raised that the higher prices of farm machinery can be attributed to higher labour costs. Let us find out if this accusation can be substantiated. According to this source of information, that is not the case. Increased efficiency and automation have resulted in the reduction of the percentage of cost attributable to labour, and there has been a substantial increase in such things as overhead, profits, salaries and materials.

We trust that the committee will do something about reducing farm implement prices and that it will not be just another talk-fest, another inquiry bringing in another report to gather dust while farm machinery prices continue to rise.

Mr. Speakman: Is the hon. member not a member of that committee himself?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): His attendance record is not good.

Mr. Argue: I have been a member of the committee during part or most of this year. I can tell the hon. member something that I imagine he knows to be correct: It is difficult for me to carry out to the full all these obligations. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) sits on very few committees because he finds it is impossible to attend. This is a difficult job. I hope to be able to attend the meetings. I shall certainly have some ideas to present to the committee, and I hope I shall get co-operation from hon. members opposite in presenting those ideas.

Mr. Laurence E. Kindt (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, we have just listened to a speech from the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) which we have heard on many other occasions; in fact, so often that one could almost predict what words were to follow. It was like listening to a record to which one has grown accustomed. The only unfortunate thing was that the hon. member did not even take the trouble to change the needle. The record was worn out and very scratchy, but still he dragged it out and played it for us. The hon. gentleman did his best. We are all aware that he sought to get publicity among the western farmers, and so he blazed away.

I think we should set the record straight. There has been a delay in getting this price investigation study started. However, I remind the hon. member for Assiniboia, who is a member of the committee on agriculture and colonization, that the delay in large part has been due to the death of the former chairman of the committee, Mr. Hayden Stanton. All matters relating to this committee and the continuation of the study were consequently thrown into an upheaval, and had to be straightened out. The organization of the work had to be commenced almost from scratch.

Did the hon. gentleman take cognizance of that fact in his remarks? No, he simply rose in his place and blamed the government and blazed away in an attempt to achieve publicity among the western farmers.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question.

Mr. Kindt: I shall be glad to answer any question which the hon. member wishes to raise after I have finished my remarks. Let hon. gentlemen in that corner be quiet and take their medicine.

Neither hon. members of the house from agricultural constituencies nor the farmers of western Canada have to be told by the hon. member for Assiniboia that farm costs are one of the most important problems facing the agricultural economy. It is a well-known fact that the price of farm machinery weighs heavily on western Canadian farmers.

The net income position of farmers is determined by two factors, costs on the one hand and prices for commodities on the other. These two factors operate like the two blades of a pair of scissors, and one cannot tell which is doing the most cutting in so far as net income is concerned.

At this time the government is embarking on a study relating to the cost side of the picture. Through the work of this committee the government is seeking to assess the problems relative to the costs of machinery as they affect the agricultural producers of western Canada. Economists have been working on many aspects of the problem for the past six months and I understand a wealth of material has been prepared relative thereto. It is also my understanding that representatives of the farm machinery companies and others will be called before the committee to give evidence. Therefore I say that the work that is about to be undertaken by this standing committee should lead to results and produce information which the farmers of western Canada are eagerly awaiting.

I, too, feel a little disturbed about the fact that the committee did not proceed sooner. At the same time, I realized that the delay was in large part due to the death of the hon. gentleman who served as chairman of the committee. Mr. Stanton put a tremendous effort into the work of the committee. He laid the groundwork for this price study and engaged in extensive correspondence in connection therewith. Had Mr. Stanton lived and continued in good health, I am sure this committee would have been functioning months ago.

In all fairness to the government, it should be said that the work that is about to be undertaken by the standing committee deserves the support and assistance of all hon. members of the house.

(Translation):

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all the members of the house will agree with the parliamentary secretary and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) that the motion before us tonight is a very good one indeed.

Many members have already spoken here on the price spread between the cost of farm implements and their sales price. Farmers in my area had brought up the matter and I raised the matter in the house last year.

The leader of the C.C.F. party said a moment ago that over 600,000 Canadian families are involved here. The cost of farm production has obviously been an important factor in farm desertion not only in Canada, not only in the other nine Canadian provinces should I say, but also in the province of Quebec.

The government was therefore will advised to request the committee on agriculture and colonization to investigate the reasons for such a price spread. Above all, I hope the committee will make useful recommendations for the government to implement in due course.

[Mr. Kindt.]

Last year, during the debate on the estimates of the Department of Agriculture, more precisely on May 6, 1960, on behalf of many people who had brought the matter to my attention, I asked the government to create a royal commission to study this price spread. Exactly a month later, on June 6, the minister announced that the committee would deal with that situation.

I am prepared to congratulate the committee if it is in a position to accomplish as useful a task as would a royal commission. However I question this, not because of inability on the part of any members of the committee, but mainly because the standing committee on agriculture and colonization has many other subjects to consider and to look fully into.

It seems to me that, had a royal commission been appointed for the sole purpose of dealing with this particular matter, the government would have benefitted from very specific recommendations on the causes of this price spread and on the ways and means to prevent another increase and especially, on the ways and means to reduce the cost-price squeeze.

I fully agree with the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) that the committee should summon representatives of large manufacturers of farm machinery in this country. So far the committee has taken evidence only from officials of certain government departments.

I hope it will not be long before representatives of those large industries are summoned to answer certain questions put by the committee.

However, that is all the admiration I have for the solutions suggested or promoted by the hon. member for Assiniboia.

My hon. colleague even suggested that the government nationalize the large concerns selling farm machinery in Canada. Although I am very definitely in favour of private enterprise, I also believe that the government must intervene where private enterprise is detrimental to some sectors of our economy. But between that and nationalizing it, there is quite a margin.

I no longer believe in paradise on earth, Mr. Speaker, nor in incarnate purity in human beings. What distinguishes us is not purity, but veraying degrees of impurity.

People try to have us believe that those new messiahs and prophets will put an end to human misery. I would only ask the government to see to it that the committee gather useful information, in order to abolish that spread between the production cost and selling price of farm machinery.

No need to go any further than the information gathered by the Stewart commission on price spreads for agricultural products, where it was shown that, in certain cases, two or three large companies in this country were making net profits of up to 33⅓ per cent, after operation costs and taxes. I think there is an abuse there on the part of private enterprise. I do not want to have private enterprise eliminated, when it does its duty for the greater welfare of this country, but I do want the government to intervene and put a stop to such abuses.

I trust that the standing committee on agriculture and colonization will stand up to its responsibilities, as the other committees of the house do, and I more particularly wish to see some concrete proposals made to this government which would contribute to eliminate that spread which is conducive to the desertion of the land.

If it is impossible to gather all the information needed to put a stop to such conditions, I hope that the Minister of Agriculture will see to it that a royal commission is appointed without delay in which will be vested all necessary powers enabling it to draw conclusions which will help the government introduce legislation to put an end to such state of affairs in this country.

(Text):

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak for a few moments in support of this motion to set up a committee to study the cost of agricultural machinery. You know, Mr. Speaker, I represent a different generation of farmers from those represented by the hon. member for Assiniboia. I represent a generation that lived under different conditions and experienced circumstances that he never experienced. I also represent a different type of farmer. Circumstances have changed a great deal in 55 years, Mr. Speaker.

I am reminded of the great change of circumstances when I think of the day we first stepped off a river steamer on a beach facing a mountain forest. I think of all the machinery we had. We first had to put off the steamer our settlers' effects which were on the bow of the steamer. First was my father's silk top hat in a leather case, and the second group of articles included an axe, a cross-cut saw, a shovel, a grubhoe and a crowbar. I shall never forget my father turning to my mother, pointing to the top hat and saying, "Charlotte, behold the symbol of the leisured past", and then pointing to this assembled group of pioneer farm machinery, all our machinery at that time, and saying, "Behold, the symbol of the damned uncertain future".

After listening to the hon. member for Assiniboia tonight I must say it seems to me that the price of farm machinery is still the symbol of the damned uncertain future so far as our farmers are concerned, anyway.

There have been great changes from when I was a boy. I said I represent a different type of farmer. I represent farmers who at one time did most of their work by hand. Some of them had one horse and some had two. When you had two horses you were wealthy. They cut their roots for the cattle with an axe or spade and cut their hay with a scythe. I mention these things to indicate the tremendous changes that have taken place when we hear about the cost of the gigantic prairie machines.

I represent farmers who have, relatively speaking in relation to prairie farmers, small holdings; some stock farmers, those with the larger holdings, some poultry farmers, dairy farmers, a good many fruit farmers and some mink farmers. They use a different type of machinery. To some extent they have tractors, spraying machines and all the things required to do this different type of work, different types of machines because of the nature of the terrain and type of farming.

No doubt, the cost of machinery has become an increasing problem, and possibly more so than on the larger acreages where the capital invested in machinery is usually smaller in proportion to the capital invested in land and buildings.

However, I was at a farmer's place in my constituency just before I came down to Ottawa. He was a friend of mine. I asked him what was the cost of the machinery he had on his farm. It was all paid for. He was not a man to buy on time at all. He had $40,000 worth of machinery on his small farm. In those circumstances such a thing would have been unheard of 25 or 30 years ago. Therefore, it is a serious problem; machinery is a serious cost factor with respect to the operations of all types of farming. I am very pleased to see this question is going to be given consideration by the committee. I do hope that the farm organizations will be heard, and representatives of the machinery companies and of labour organizations, so that the committee will get as complete a picture as possible. Because of the, shall I say, multitude of designs and types which, as the hon. member for Assiniboia mentioned increases unnecessarily the cost of farm machinery, I suggest that possibly the committee should hear from agricultural engineers, or persons connected with the design of farm machinery, to get their ideas and see whether they could make some recommendation with respect to standardizing the design of various types of agricultural machinery that are required today.

Another thing the committee should go into is the question of distribution, the location of agencies, the cost of distribution, which I think in some cases is excessive because of the duplication of agents. That could be reduced possibly by some, shall I say, more scientific form of distribution, more scientific system of agencies and arrangements for the sale of farm machinery.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I wish to suggest that in the country in which I live there are a good many farmers, fruit farmers for instance, who make quite a substantial portion of their living off small fruit holdings, peach growing, cherry growing, apple growing, plum growing, pear growing, and such small fruits. I see the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Harkness) looking at me. He knows the sort of people about whom I am speaking. In addition they undertake part-time logging and, in some cases, small sawmill operations, practising a combination of agriculture and forestry. With respect to the people in my district, I suggest—

Mr. Harkness: A very pleasant life.

Mr. Herridge: A very pleasant life under the most scenic circumstances in Canada; but I suggest the committee would be well advised to give consideration to the cost of small logging equipment and related machinery. There is a tremendous duplication in that respect. I have some experience in this connection. I know the difficulty that the small farmer has with respect to the cost of these machines and the duplication of design. On that account, sometimes there is difficulty in obtaining spare parts. The rapid changes which occur today sometimes cause the small man to invest in a piece of machinery today and find out within a year or two that the design has changed and a different type of machinery is more useful. Under those circumstances, his investment has been, to a large extent, depreciated. I suggest that the committee should consider this sector of farming.

I am sure that members of the forest products laboratory, such as Dr. Jenkins and others, would be only too willing to give evidence with respect to the research that is being done by that branch of the forestry department in connection with logging equipment, small saw mill machinery and machinery of that type. I mention these items to indicate that in my district, and I am sure in others, there are difficulties peculiar to this type of activity which result from the type of machinery required by those individuals engaged in these different farming operations.

Mr. Macdonnell: Would the hon. member agree that the picture which he has given us is a picture of unadulterated private enterprise, no doubt initiated but untainted by socialism?

Mr. Speaker: I hope the hon. member will not be beguiled away from the subject by that apparently innocent question.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I will as usual try to keep in order but, in answer to the hon. gentleman's question, which is a fair one, I would suggest it is a form of what we call legitimate private enterprise. I should like to suggest that because of the cost of this machinery there has been a development of a good deal of legitimate co-operative enterprise. Because the cost of spraying machinery, for instance, co-operative societies perform this spraying activity. This is an illustration of our philosophy—namely the mixed economy.

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, as vice chairman of this committee I think I would be remiss if I did not comment briefly on this proposed measure. I would certainly be lacking in my duty if I allowed certain statements made by the hon. member for Assiniboia to stand without comment or contradiction. I can assure hon. members that we have solicited representations from various manufacturing firms regarding farm machinery, including the John Deere Company, International Harvester and Massey-Harris. I think we have had replies from all of them, and these replies have been brought to the attention of this committee. There has been a very sincere effort on the part of the government members of this committee to present the viewpoints of all concerned regarding the prices of farm machinery. We are very fortunate, both in the committee and this house, in having full representation from farm constituencies.

I might say that on April 23, 1959, as reported at page 2985 of Hansard, I brought the increase in the cost of farm machinery to the attention of this house. In the same year, as reported at page 2991 of Hansard, the hon. member for Bow River gave a detailed list of machinery prices and the increase which had taken place over a period of ten years. I think that all hon. members will appreciate the sincere effort of those members from farming constituencies in trying to find a solution to the problem of the increased cost of farm machinery.

I have in my hand, a small sprocket from a Massey-Harris swather which costs $9.35 and weighs only 14 ounces. This will give hon. members an indication of our feeling that it is necessary to find a solution to the problems involved in the increasing cost of farm machinery.

I will not take up any more time at this stage, but I hope that this matter will be referred to the committee at this time.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I should like to say a word or two regarding the remarks made by previous speakers. I was especially interested in the remarks made by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge). I imagine all members of this house will agree that when his father got off the boat and looked at his tools and implements, he regarded himself as a capitalist because he probably owned them. One of the problems facing today's farmer, because of the high cost of these farming implements, is the financing of the necessary equipment to carry out his farm operations. Many farmers in Canada will never own their own machinery but will, as in the case of individuals purchasing automobiles and trucks, be continually financing new models.

The needle referred to by the hon. member for MacLeod (Mr. Kindt) must have indeed been sharp because it produced a number of squawks from that member. I think he was very unfair in his reference to the delay in the commencement of meetings of this committee being a result of the death of the late chairman of the committee. The hon. member should realize that one or two meetings of this committee were held at which time he could have ascertained that this committee was functioning with a new chairman. He would also have known that the clerk of that committee has been responsible for looking after the documents that were assembled. I might inform him at this time that the committee had the services of an economist during the holiday period for the purpose of assembling this material. This material has not gone to waste for want of a chairman. I might suggest that this committee could have taken the opportunity of meeting some months ago, if the house had directed it to do so. There has been ample time, during the last two or three months, to have conducted an investigation into the price of farm machinery. I believe a good deal could have been accomplished during the recess, and this committee would have been prepared to hold meetings to study this whole question of the increased cost of farm machinery.

(Translation):

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, coming from one of the most productive farm areas, not only in the province, but in the whole country, I cannot but take part—be it even as briefly as possible —in this discussion.

It is a generally known fact that the area I have the honour to represent here is very highly mechanized as far as farm production is concerned, and the people there certainly expect me to make a few comments on the legislation now before us.

I am the more interested as representations were made to me that I should speak for the farmers when this legislation comes before the committee.

Mr. Speaker, as I wanted to get more information, I sent a list of questions to our farmers in the various parishes in my riding, in order to know exactly what they think of farm machinery prices.

Opposition members are not the only ones to be interested in this matter. This government has tackled the farm problem as soon as it took over. The legislation now before us only complements those other pieces of legislation enacted since the Conservative party has been at the helm.

I would like to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) and the government for having, once more, got closer to our farmers in studying more intensely this matter which is of interest to all our farmers.

No need to recall here what this government has done in the field of agriculture, as everybody may call to mind the various improvements brought about in different existing acts and measures which more particularly affect our farmers.

Even though some opposition members claim that farmers are not satisfied, I am sure that our farmers know that it is under this government that something has been done for them, and that through its action they will get even more in that field.

I shall not delay any longer the discussion of this measure. I shall not dwell on the complaints made by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) in particular. In fact, he implied that farmers should continue to cultivate the soil with the type of implements used in 1920 or in 1925. No farmer would buy such outdated machinery, because we would be moving backwards if we were to limit the various models to what they were 10, 15 or 20 years ago. You have there a sample of what the administration would be like if, his party unfortunately, had to form a government and thus look after the future of the farm population across the country.

I urge my colleagues and all members in this house to support this measure wholeheartedly since its objective is to help the farm people even more fairly.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: If the parliamentary secretary speaks now, he will close the debate.

Mr. Jorgenson Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to deal with all of the questions that have been raised in the course of this debate, particularly by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue), since most of the questions he raised could be more properly answered in the committee itself. However, there were a few observations made with which I should like to deal now. One of them concerns the alleged delay in bringing this matter before the committee.

Those members who were on the committee last year will recall that a suggestion was made of a concrete nature that the economics division of the Department of Agriculture prepare a summary of statistics for use by the members as a basis for their questions to the various people appearing before the committee. As I indicated in introducing the motion, the English version is now ready and will be available to the members of the committee. The French version is still in the hands of the printer and will be available very shortly. It was felt that this summary should be in the hands of the committee members before they met to continue their inquiry.

The hon. member for Assiniboia also suggested that the committee investigate the prices of component parts of farm machinery. In reply to that suggestion I can only say that the committee itself will decide on its own methods of inquiry. If it decides that it wants to investigate this particular aspect, it will be quite free to do so. As I indicated earlier, the motion is very broad, and members of the committee will have an opportunity to conduct the investigation as they see fit.

The suggestion was also made that representatives of various aspects of the industry be called before the committee. Perhaps it might be timely at this point if I put on the record the names of the various organizations which have indicated that they want to appear before the committee and present briefs. I might also add that members will have an opportunity to question each of the representatives of these organizations as they appear. The organizations referred to include Massey-Harris-Ferguson Limited; the Ontario retail farm implement dealers; the national farm union; the Canadian Federation of Agriculture; the Saskatchewan wheatpool; The Canadian Labour Congress; the International Harvester Company; Canadian Co-operative Implements Limited and Cockshutt Farm Equipment Limited.

The hon. member for Assiniboia also made the suggestion that the government should nationalize the farm implement industry. I am afraid that the next suggestion he will make is that we operate state farms as well and I hope that we never get to that stage.

I want to thank the members of the house for their indicated support for this motion. When the committee meets I hope they will be able to provide us with some answers, and will be able to pinpoint some of the costs that are involved in farm machinery prices.

Motion agreed to.

VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION

PROVISION FOR AGREEMENTS WITH PROVINCES ETC.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the Minister of Labour, with the approval of the governor in council, to enter into agreements with provinces to provide for the sharing of costs incurred by the provinces in carrying out programs of vocational rehabilitation for disabled persons; to authorize the minister to undertake the co-ordination of federal activities in the field of vocational rehabilitation and to undertake research in respect to vocational rehabilitation; and for those purposes to provide for the establishment of a council to be called the national advisory council on the rehabilitation of disabled persons; and to provide further for the payment of the chairman's remuneration and of the travelling and other expenses of the members thereof and for such professional, technical, secretarial and other assistance as the council may require.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Flynn in the chair.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, this resolution introduces legislation to encourage action that will enable many seriously disabled Canadians to rise above their handicaps and play a more useful role in their communities. The humanitarian purpose behind this legislation will appeal to all members of this house as it will bring new hope and encouragement to many of our less fortunate citizens.

The present century has seen great changes in our attitudes towards the handicapped. Medical science can frequently reduce or remove the effects of disabling conditions. Modern artificial appliances can greatly improve the functioning of limbs and arms.

When latent skills of the disabled are developed, many can live happier and fuller lives and make a substantial contribution to the nation's economy. A practical, efficient and vigorous rehabilitation program can form the front line of attack against the ever mounting costs and demoralizing effects of dependency caused by disability.

I am sure we are all familiar with the amazing part so many of our disabled veterans have played in developing Canada. The victims of industrial accidents are now being restored to economic usefulness to an extent previously considered impossible. Voluntary agencies working with various categories of the disabled have brought new lives to many. The word "rehabilitation" is used to encompass a wide variety of medical and vocational restorative services.

Within this concept it is the responsibility of my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to encourage the development and utilization of all those medical skills that can hasten recovery and where possible restore the patient to maximum health. Towards this end the national health grants and hospital insurance have stimulated the better use of our resources and, with improved services in hospitals and rehalilitation centres throughout Canada, have done much to reduce the effects of disability.

The development of a rehabilitation philosophy and the use of rehabilitation techniques within the entire health program are the responsibility of the federal and provincial health authorities. I am glad to say that with the stimulus of federal assistance in this field medical rehabilitation facilities are being improved and a larger supply of appropriately trained medical personnel is now available.

When, in spite of all effort, serious or permanent disability continues to exist, the individual is faced with another problem. It is then necessary to assist him to assess his total problem and wherever possible find some means of utilizing his remaining ability in order to provide as much security as possible for himself and his family.

Since 1954 the federal government has shared with the provinces the cost of providing vocational training for disabled people who are considered capable of benefiting from such procedures. The special placement service of the national employment service of the unemployment insurance commission each year places thousands of disabled people in work which they are able to perform efficiently.

We now have, through the Department of Labour, agreements with nine of our provinces through which they are encouraged to employ staff whose function is to co-ordinate all those services, governmental and private, that contribute to the vocational rehabilitation of the seriously disabled.

During the period up to the present, which has been regarded as something of an experimental one, plans have been worked out and procedures established in these nine provinces—that is, all except Quebec—through which disabled persons may be assessed both medically and vocationally, supplied with appropriate services and assisted to stand upon their own feet and avoid the necessity of dependence upon public assistance.

With so many agencies and services involved it is impossible to measure accurately in statistical terms the total results of the efforts that have been made. Moreover, statistics alone cannot measure the personal satisfaction experienced by rehabilitated individuals.

We do have, however, statistics regarding a group of 5,266 seriously disabled people who have been successfully rehabilitated. When brought to the attention of the provincial rehabilitation authorities, 80 per cent of these 5,266 persons were without earnings and 50 per cent were dependent entirely upon public assistance. In addition, the group had 3,881 dependents.

After securing rehabilitation services in the form of supplementary medical treatment, provision of artificial appliances, training and placement in suitable employment, we find that the annual earnings of the group are around $9,600,000. Prior to rehabilitation the annual maintenance cost for these people ran to $3,900,000. During the period in which they have been employed—some for several years now—there has been an actual saving of around $12 million in maintenance cost and the accumulated earnings of the group have totalled $29 million.

I am sure members of the committee will agree that there can be no doubt about the value of an organized effort of this type. The purpose of this legislation is to encourage the provinces to seek out the seriously disabled and as early as possible bring the constructive forces of rehabilitation to play upon their problems so that wherever possible they can avoid dependence upon their families and friends or public assistance.

By placing authority for this program in statute form, we shall give the provinces the assurance of continued support for their work in this connection. The legislation proposed has been developed with the co-operation of the Department of National Health and Welfare. We have also had the benefit of the advice of a national advisory committee in which government representatives, the voluntary agencies, labour, management, the medical profession and the universities have combined to give their guidance. The views expressed by this group have been studied in preparing this bill.

Under this legislation it is proposed that new agreements will be made with each province setting forth the manner in which the various services required for the rehabilitation of the disabled in that province are to be made available. This will result in a clarification of the extent to which assistance can be received, and we hope that as the qualified staff necessary to administer and operate such programs becomes available we shall see a continued expansion of work in this field.

It is not intended, of course, to give this important segment of our population any advantage over any other group, but rather to help them overcome some of their present disadvantages. It is hoped that by assisting individuals to overcome their handicaps they will enjoy as far as possible the same privileges as the able-bodied and will as far as possible accept the same responsibilities.

Through our work with disabled persons we know that all they seek is a chance to play their rightful role as Canadian citizens. The principles behind this legislation are in keeping with the spirit of the Canadian bill of rights and are being proposed in order that as many of our disabled citizens as possible will be able to participate fully in the life and development of our country. The passing of this legislation will not commit the federal government to any new areas of expenditure. The placing of the authority for the program in statute form will encourage the provinces to plan ahead in developing more effective vocational rehabilitation services. Concluding comprehensive agreements with each province will clarify the responsibilities which both the federal government and the provinces are prepared to accept in this area, and thereby encourage vocational rehabilitation services to be brought to as many of our disabled Canadians as possible.

Mr. Carter: I rise to indicate our support for the principle of this resolution, because we are convinced that any provision to promote and expand a program of vocational rehabilitation for disabled persons deserves the support of all hon. members.

Rehabilitation has as its aim the development and restoration of the disabled person to the fullest physical, metal, psycho-social, vocational and economic usefulness of which he is capable within the restrictions inherent in his environment. As the minister has already told us, rehabilitation has two main aspects. First, there is the human aspect, the enabling of the individual to live a useful, satisfying life and to make a useful contribution to society. Then there is the economic aspect, to increase the economic productivity of the disabled persons and to enable them to contribute to the economy rather than to become a burden on the economy.

The increase in the life span of man which has been brought about by medical science has resulted in an increasingly large proportion of old people in our population who have to be supported by the working population. Between 1901 and 1949 the number of children under 15 years of age doubled, but during that same period the number of people over 45 trebled. There is a limit to the burden which the working population can carry, as well as to the standard of living which it can support. Anything, therefore, which can increase the working population and at the same time reduce the burden which the economy has to carry is a sound economic investment.

I have not been able to find up-to-date figures about the proportion of disabled people in Canada, but surveys carried out in the United States showed that the proportion of the disabled to the total population there was about 20 per thousand, not including disabled veterans. If we apply the same proportion to Canada, it would seem we have about 360,000 disabled persons in addition to our disabled veterans. In 1940 a very important experiment was carried out by the British ministry of labour in the United Kingdom. At that time they had 185,000 disabled men and women who were listed as unemployable, but as a result of that experiment that number was reduced to less than 8,000. That proves beyond doubt that 97 per cent of our disabled persons can be rehabilitated to the point where they can lead useful productive lives and that 80 per cent of our handicapped people of working age are capable of being rehabilitated into employment; that is, they can become economically useful without the benefit of highly specialized and expensive services.

As the minister pointed out this evening our experience with disabled war veterans in Canada has confirmed the result of that British experiment. I think those of us who have had the pleasure of visiting Sunnybrook hospital and other veteran centres have been amazed at the rehabilitation work which has been accomplished there. It is against this kind of background that we must discuss the resolution which is now before us.

The legislation which will be introduced as a result of this resolution seeks to achieve four main objectives. The first is to make agreements with the provinces with respect to cost sharing. The second is to co-ordinate federal activities and to carry out research. The third purpose is to set up a national advisory council on vocational rehabilitation, and the fourth is to equip this council with the necessary staff and equipment and to make provision for salary and operating expenses. I should like to say a word about each of these objectives. In the first place with regard to the agreements with the provinces about cost sharing, may I say that the usual cost sharing agreement worked out between the provinces and the federal government has been on a fifty-fifty basis. That has not proved satisfactory to the poorer provinces because the poorer provinces such as Newfoundland can be ruined by cost sharing schemes. I think this resolution differs from most arrangements of this kind inasmuch as it involves human beings and I would hope that when the minister works out the agreements envisaged in his resolution they will be on a basis of need, and on the basis of the capacity of the province concerned to provide the facilities including trained personnel which are necessary to enable this program to be carried out successfully.

The co-ordination of federal activities is certainly a step in the right direction. At the moment rehabilitation activities are being carried on by the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Department of Labour and the Department of National Health and Welfare. At the provincial and municipal levels we have various provincial and municipal services. Much work is being done voluntarily by private agencies. I would hope that the federal example of co-ordinating the services would be followed by the provinces.

I take it that one of the reasons for this co-ordination is that people would have to deal only with the national advisory council which would serve as a clearing house or liaison for all the work that has to be done in this connection. It is not clear from what the minister said this evening whether the council will actually take over this work or whether it will continue to be carried on by the various departments but be co-ordinated by this body.

Of course, there is a great deal of research to be done in this connection. First of all we need statistical research to tell us how many people will be affected, what age groups they fall in, what categories of disabilities and handicaps are most prevalent in each age group and in addition there will have to be an examination of the research that has been done relating to the techniques and procedures that have been and are being developed in other countries. I presume there will be some co-ordination of the production of films, posters and publications in connection with rehabilitation that are put out by the various departments.

The third objective contained in this resolution is not a new idea. In 1951 a national conference on rehabilitation was sponsored by the Hon. Milton Gregg, who at that time was minister of labour. Also active in the sponsorship were Mr. Lapointe, the then minister of veterans affairs, and my colleague, the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) who was then the minister of national health and welfare. Now that the government has embarked on an expanded program of rehabilitation perhaps the time has come to set up a permanent body.

While on this subject I should like to pay tribute to the work being done with respect to the rehabilitation of the disabled in my own province. I think in particular of the work being done by the tuberculosis association, by the orthopedic wing of the general hospital, by the children's rehabilitation centre and the sunshine camp for small children. The latter has played an important part in assisting the disabled children of poor people in the outlying areas, improving their health to the point where they have been able to undergo surgery and take treatment for their disability.

I also think of the work being done by the provincial branch of the institute for the blind and of the treatment provided to the deaf and dumb children. There is such a host of organizations and agencies engaged in important work of this nature that one hesitates to mention one for fear of overlooking another. I wish to pay tribute to all of them for the work they are doing and have done in my province.

The essence of a program of this nature is the placement service. There is no point in rehabilitating a disabled person and teaching him a trade if after he has learned a trade there is no work for him to do. That has been perhaps the greatest shortcoming in my own province. We have trained people as barbers, clockmakers, taught them to repair clocks, shoes and television sets, but there is no great demand for work of this nature and we cannot place all our disabled people in these trades.

I hope the federal government will develop a policy of giving preference to disabled persons. In my own province, before confederation, the government did have such a policy. It was an unwritten policy but was accepted by the people generally. In every small settlement there is usually someone with some physical disability, one who is crippled, who has impaired sight or who is handicapped in one way or other. Before we became a part of Canada if there was a position as postmaster vacant a disabled person was given preference because it was a job he could handle. We trained people for telegraph offices, for bookkeeping positions and other clerical jobs and under the unwritten policy, disabled persons were given preference.

Since we joined Canada a different policy has been pursued by the federal government and many of these jobs that used to be set aside for the disabled are no longer available. I think it was a good policy and if, when it is set up, the council is going to coordinate all these activities I hope it will develop a policy of giving preference to disabled persons and that this policy will be adopted by the federal government.

Even a policy of this nature will not provide jobs for all our disabled people in a province such as mine where the population is widely scattered in may small communities. One way of solving the problem, and at the same time of making a contribution to the economy, would be for the council to sponsor home industries and handicrafts which will enable disabled people to work in their own homes making some product that has a market value that can be sold to provide an income for the disabled person and his family. It will probably be necessary to establish a national organization of some description to market these products.

We have people of tremendous talent in many of our small settlements. In the words of the old adage, many a rose is born to blush unseen. In our small settlements we have people with a great ability to paint, singers and musicians and people who are skilled in many handicrafts. This I think would be a solution in a sparsely populated province, and possibly it would apply to the maritimes as well as to Newfoundland.

We know from the work that has been done by the Newfoundland outport nurses' association and by the Grenfell mission that there is a demand for handicrafts of high quality. These groups sponsored the purchase of looms so that handicapped people could weave cloth and make knitted goods. The goods were of high quality and found a ready market.

I pass on these suggestions to the minister because the whole program stands or falls on our ability to find some method of providing work for these people after they are trained.

I conclude, Mr. Chairman, in the hope that this expanded program will be successful and that it will contribute greatly to the productivity of our disabled population.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, the minister introduced this resolution and the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo followed. Both spoke about the principles behind this particular resolution. I have to agree wholeheartedly with them. The principles upon which this resolution is based are indeed very good ones. But I do not think it is good enough to bring in a resolution based upon good principles unless we are going to adopt some of those principles and put them to some use. From reading the resolution itself, from listening to the presentation made by the minister and from the information he has provided us so far, I am not too sure just how much good is going to come from this particular resolution.

First of all, the minister said it is to encourage action and it so states in the resolution. The purpose is to permit the federal government to enter into agreements with the provinces to provide for the sharing of costs incurred by the provinces in carrying out programs of vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons, and so on. While it is true that the resolution is based on good principles and it is a nice gesture in the right direction, nevertheless the initiative has been left completely with the provinces. We have no assurance that after the passage of this resolution the condition will be any better in the future than it has been in the past.

The minister went on to say that the purpose was to bring hope, to the disabled. Again, this is quite a true statement so far as it goes. It brought hope to me when I saw the resolution on the order paper. I really thought we were going to get our teeth into the problem and do something more about it than we had been doing in the past. Apparently that is not so, because toward the end of his remarks I noticed the minister said that there would be no new expenditures, no further expenditures in the future on the part of the federal government than there have been in the past. While the introduction of this resolution may bring hope to the disabled, I would remind the hon. member and the minister and the other hon. members that it takes more than hope to buy groceries.

The minister said something about a practical and vigorous program. I believe these were some of his words. I did not get them all down; unfortunately, I cannot write shorthand. Again these are fine words, but the minister failed to indicate any kind of practical or vigorous program which he was going to embark upon as a result of this particular resolution.

The minister went on to say further that the plans up to date and the methods adopted in the past, particularly on the part of the federal government, have been experimental ones. While it has been an experimental plan up to date, if we are to embark on a practical and vigorous program and at the same time confine ourselves to the same amount of money we have been putting into this scheme in the past, I do not see how the resolution will mean anything more than some more window dressing.

Mr. Starr: Will the hon. member allow me? There will be no new expenditures but a great deal more money will be spent on that type of program.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I am coming to that. I should like to take up that point with the minister later.

The resolution mentions that one of the purposes of the measure is to provide further for the payment of the chairman's remuneration and of the travelling and other expenses of the members of the national advisory council that is to be set up. If there are to be no new expenditures, then the expenditures of the council to be set up must be taken out of the money provided in the past.

Mr. Starr: No.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): This means that there will be less money to spend on doing something for the disabled persons than in the past.

Mr. Starr: I am sure the hon. member would not want to leave the wrong impression. An advisory committee has been acting for some time now; it will now be set up under the act.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): This brings me to another point, Mr. Chairman. Apparently the only purpose of this resolution is to take the job that we have been doing in the past which, in the minister's words has been an experimental one, and transfer it from wherever it has been in the past to this new division under the minister. I do not think this is something of which we should be too proud.

The minister quoted a host of statistics. He mentioned 5,266 seriously disabled people who come under this plan, 80 per cent of them formerly without earnings. He went on to say that actual earnings amount to $9 million and the welfare costs came to $3 million. He did not say what their earnings were before, or what the cost of the upkeep is now. Therefore, statistics of this kind which give only one side of the picture are not really very useful.

I have some further remarks to make on this matter but I see the hour of ten has approached. Will you call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Hellyer: Will the house leader indicate the business for tomorrow and the remainder of the week?

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, as announced, we will take up Bill No. C-73, to amend the Income Tax Act, No. 6 on today's order paper. Should that be completed tomorrow we would then carry on with the resolution we were discussing tonight.

On Thursday we will take the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. It will be necessary to make a change on Friday from the order of business that I forecast last Thursday. The supplementary estimates will be tabled tomorrow, and they will be brought before the house for discussion on Friday.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Question

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

NORAD-NATO COSTS

Question No. 101—Mr. Argue:

What was the cost, or what is the estimated cost, to Canada for carrying out our commitments under (i) NORAD (ii) NATO, in the fiscal years, (a) 1959-60 (b) 1960-61 (c) 1961-62?

Answer by: Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence):

(i) Canada has no direct financial commitment to NORAD. The direct costs of the air defence forces in Canada are estimated as follows:

Fiscal Year

(a) 1959-60 .....$171,304,000

NATO costs as shown above consist of the direct costs of the army bridgade and the air division in Europe, the R.C.N. and R.C.A.F. forces earmarked for SACLANT and direct expenditures on mutual aid including contributions to infrastructure and NATO budgets. These figures do not include indirect costs of the type referred to in the previous paragraph.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 15, 1961

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

Fourth report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines—Mr. Howe.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1960-61

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates for the financial year ending March 31, 1961, was presented by Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

TRADE

STATEMENT ON SIXTH MEETING OF JOINT CANADA-U.S. COMMITTEE

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a brief report to the house on the meeting of the Canada-United States joint committee on trade and economic affairs which took place in Washington yesterday and the day before.

The United States was represented by Hon. Dean Rusk, Secretary of State; Hon. George W. Ball, under secretary of state for economic affairs; Hon. Douglas Dillon, Secretary of the Treasury; Hon. Henry R. Fowler, under secretary of the treasury; Hon. Luther H. Hodges, Secretary of Commerce; Hon. Stewart H. Udall, Secretary of the Interior, and Hon. Orville L. Freeman, Secretary of Agriculture. The United States delegation also included Hon. George C. McGovern, coordinator of the food for peace program.

The Canadian government was represented by my colleagues the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of National Revenue, the Minister of Agriculture, and myself. The Canadian delegation also included the under secretary of state for external affairs, Mr. N. A. Robertson, the Canadian ambassador to the United States, Mr. A. D. P. Heeney, and officials of the various departments.

This was the first meeting of the committee since the new United States administration took office. The Canadian ministers were anxious that the United States members should view individual problems in the context of the entire framework of economic relations between our two countries. Accordingly we took the occasion to review at some length the Canadian economic situation and to show which features of our situation were common to both countries and which features were different. Both countries, for example, have shared the same experience of a slowing down of growth and of high levels of unemployment. We reviewed together the measures both countries had taken to stimulate greater economic activity, and we were agreed that an expansion of growth would result.

Both countries have had special problems related to the balance of payments. In this respect, however, our problems in Canada have been somewhat different from those of the United States. It was valuable to have an opportunity at this meeting to explain these differences to our United States colleagues and to analyse features of our balance of payments along the lines I followed in this house when introducing the supplementary budget last December.

The United States balance of payments was examined in the context of the world financial situation. As hon. members are aware, there have been serious problems of international imbalance associated with short term capital movements. Now that the major currencies are convertible and capital moves more freely it is clear that the industrial countries of western Europe and North America will have to continue and improve their methods of consultation about the economic policies of individual countries as they may affect others. We believe that the organization for economic co-operation and development will provide a very useful forum for such consultation.

It was clear from our discussions this week that the members of the committee are in broad agreement that the 1960's will produce new and rather different problems from those both countries have faced in the past. The great expansion of the economies of the western European countries is presenting a competitive challenge to both the United States and Canada. We found that the United States side attached great importance, as we do ourselves, to ensuring that the development of regional trading groups and any arrangements between them do not restrict the traditional access of North American exports to the markets of western Europe. The committee agreed, especially, that in the current tariff negotiations at Geneva the six countries of the common market should assure that access. Canadian ministers were particularly gratified to learn that the new administration would continue to co-operate closely with Canada in pressing the Six for a satisfactory settlement in GATT with respect to trade in agricultural products.

The relations of Canada and the United States with the Six and the Seven will be of the greatest importance in the years to come. The establishment of the new O.E.C.D. will provide a framework in which Canada, the United States and their European partners will be able to examine and discuss each other's policies with respect not only to trade and economic matters but also to the vital task of assisting the less developed countries. I was able to report to my United States colleagues that Canada was the first country to complete parliamentary approval of the O.E.C.D. convention, having done so by unanimous vote of both houses, and Canada is now in a position to ratify.

In the meetings this year special attention was also given to the problems facing the underdeveloped countries. I am confident that the long-standing co-operation between the two countries in this field will be continued and indeed strengthened. I was struck by the conviction within the committee that the developed countries, particularly those with surpluses to invest abroad, must find satisfactory and equitable means to respond to the needs of the developing countries, and above all defeat the threat of poverty and starvation in so many parts of the world.

Ideas and actions, some of which are developing and others of which are planned in connection with the use of food to help raise levels of consumption and standards of nutrition were discussed, including the latest developments in the United States food for peace program. The United States indicated support for multilateral arrangements such as the Canadian proposal for a world food bank, which they had joined in sponsoring before the United Nations general assembly last October.This proposal is at present being given detailed study by FAO and it is expected that recommendations for appropriate action by governments will be forthcoming later this year. Other points relating to agreement on the continuation of close consultations to ensure that present and potential commercial markets for food products are not disrupted are recorded in the communiqué and I need not repeat these at length. I may say, however, that Canadian ministers were very pleased to receive from the new administration such a clear undertaking in this regard.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

The committee also discussed a number of matters less general in scope but of direct importance to trade and economic relations between our two countries. Measures taken by Canada since our last meeting were reviewed. In this regard I had the opportunity to give a full explanation of the proposals put before parliament in the supplementary budget, notably its tariff and tax provisions. As a result of our useful discussions on this subject, I believe our United States colleagues have a full understanding of these proposals.

Canadian ministers raised a number of points bearing on our exports to the United States, such as import restrictions on agricultural products and on lead and zinc, certain customs problems, and the difficulties raised for Canada by the United States export subsidy on cotton manufactures. As a result of these exchanges of view I believe the United States members of the committee should have no doubt about the difficulties faced by Canadian exporters as a result of United States policies in these fields.

This meeting of the joint committee provided a welcome opportunity for Canadian ministers and the new United States secretaries to meet each other and gain a clear understanding of points of view in both countries. This meeting, like previous meetings of the committee, was characterized by the utmost frankness and friendliness.

Following the meeting my colleagues and I had the honour of being invited to call on the President with whom we had a most interesting talk. This meeting afforded an opportunity for further discussion of trade and economic questions and of the visit of the President and Mrs. Kennedy to Ottawa, which is awaited by Canadians with pleasant anticipation.

Mr. Speaker, may I table for the information of the house a copy of the communiqué which was issued at the conclusion of the committee meetings. If it is the wish of hon. members perhaps it could be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the communiqué be printed as an appendix to Hansard today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of document above referred to, see appendix A].

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members will have listened with interest to the minister's statement. Although we have not had the advantage of seeing the communiqué which presumably was issued yesterday and which has now been tabled, nevertheless from the minister's statement and from press reports—especially, I may add, the latter—we are able to get a picture of the meetings that have just taken place in Washington.

The minister in introducing his statement said it had been decided that the individual national problems between the two countries would be considered within the framework of international economic policy. It is perfectly clear from the minister's statement that more attention was given to the framework than to the picture, because the communiqué deals almost entirely with international economic policies and the views of the two governments in respect of them.

In so far as the minister's statement dealing with these matters is concerned, it is satisfactory to note that the two governments are in general agreement on the usefulness of O.E.C.D., which is apparently to be pretty carefully restricted to consultative matters on the desirability of further progress being made in the discussions now going on through GATT and the desirability of co-ordinating policies in respect of international agricultural disposal matters. It is all to the good that the two governments should try to reach agreement on these matters, and that agreement, though in very general terms, seems to find expression in the communiqué so far as we can judge from the minister's statement.

The minister made little reference to individual problems between the two countries. However, we learned from the press that they had come up and the minister indeed did mention that fact, and that there was an exchange of views in regard to them. I would have hoped that there would be no hesitation on the part of the Canadian representatives to take up with the United States governmental representatives such questions as national oil policy, the United States policy on base metals and the policy of that country in giving additional contracts at this time to their uranium producers when only a year ago they told us there was a surplus of uranium and that was why they had to refuse to take up their options on our uranium.

I would have hoped, Mr. Speaker, that the government would make the position of Canada perfectly clear in these matters. We learned from the press—the minister did not confirm the fact this afternoon, though he did mention it—that the United States ministers challenged the assertion that the new class or kind provisions did nothing to contravene Canada's obligations under GATT, thereby confirming the view that we on this side take about these provisions.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Pearson: These ministerial meetings, which have been going on now for six years, are valuable; they are useful and additional machinery between the two countries. In the exchange of views that takes place at these meetings not only are individual problems discussed but ministers on both sides of the border are given a chance to get acquainted generally with each other's points of view. I am sure that at this time this is particularly valuable because of a new administration in Washington. We are told in the press that as a result of this meeting Canadian ministers will now be able to take up the telephone and get in touch with their opposite numbers in Washington. Judging by the communiqué and the minister's statement, I would say that has been the main achievement of the meeting.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the minister said in his statement there was broad agreement between Canada and the United States that the 1960's would produce new problems. I think that is a conclusion that we all were aware of in advance. The minister has outlined a number of problems, but there is no indication in his statement that there has been any conclusion as to the solution for those problems. However, the minister did say that in dealing with the inner six, Canada and the United States would continue to co-operate in pressing on the inner six the need for a satisfactory settlement with regard to agricultural products being imported into that area. We can only hope that this pressure will be successful. Instead of a forward step in obtaining extra markets or increased markets for our products, what it really means is just holding the line.

The minister went on to talk at some length about the problems and the possibilities of expanded sales of Canadian food products and the whole question of economic assistance. There seemed to be no agreement following these discussions. There seems to be no agreement that Canada will have a peace corps. We ourselves are going to do nothing to increase economic assistance by way of a greater provision of food products. There was an assurance from the United States, which we are glad to receive, that that country will not interfere with our normal commercial markets for food products. That leaves beyond decision the whole field of non-commercial markets into which the United States has moved in a very big way.

The minister said that after speaking to the Americans he has come to the conclusion that they have a full understanding of Canada's tariff proposals. I am not sure whether this is good or bad, Mr. Speaker. It might result in some very severe retaliation. I am sure the Americans will thank the minister for his information and instruction.

There has been no settlement of many outstanding problems such as the whole question of the disposal by the United States of its agricultural surpluses in non-commercial markets, the problem of exports of oil from Canada and so on. No doubt there was a very welcome exchange of ideas. The minister talked of a friendly and frank approach. The minister and his colleagues have had so many laudable things to say about the new United States administration that we had really hoped they would have been able to achieve more concrete results.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. I wonder whether in his two-day visit to Washington he had an opportunity to observe the apparent accord and concert between the President of the United States, his new administration, and the chairman of the federal reserve bank, Mr. Martin, aimed at a reduction of interest rates and acceleration in the pick-up of the economy. If so, does he intend to seek similar harmony in this country?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the subject of the relations between the government and the central bank did not enter into our discussions yesterday. I happen to be well acquainted with Mr. Martin, the chairman of the federal reserve bank of the United States, and I think I have some familiarity with the policies that have been followed in the United States in the monetary field.

I think there is no occasion in this situation for casting aspersions or throwing brickbats about in the Canadian field. The fact is that the situation in this regard is precisely as I indicated to the house in a recent discussion of the matter. When the hon. member talks about the program of the new administration in the United States, I should add that there was some little discussion on that matter; attention was drawn by the Canadian ministers to the close resemblance of the program submitted to congress by the President of the United States to that already submitted to this parliament by the government in the speech from the throne read on November 17 last.

Mr. Pearson: That must have made them laugh.

[Mr. Argue.]

Mr. Benidickson: I should like to ask a supplementary question. The minister has referred to some similarities. Did he also notice the gap between the basic interest rates prevailing in the United States and the basic interest rates in this country?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. member is asking for information which is equally available to all members of the house.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TUNISIA AND IRAQ—AMENDMENT OF CANADIAN DIPLOMATIC APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, members of the opposition seem to be very hard to please this afternoon, and I am hoping they will not receive my announcement in such a manner. I am pleased to announce the appointment of Mr. H. F. Feaver as Canada's first ambassador to Tunisia. Direct diplomatic relations have, of course, existed between Tunisia and Canada since September 9, 1957, when His Excellency Mongi Slim, presented his credentials as first ambassador of Tunisia to Canada. The appointment of Mr. Feaver will complete the diplomatic connection with a country whose role in international affairs is one of great and growing importance and with which we have enjoyed particularly effective co-operation at the United Nations. As a matter of fact, Tunisia has made an enviable reputation as a member of the security council during the current year.

Hon. members will recall that Mr. Feaver's appointment as ambassador to Switzerland was announced last month. His present appointment to Tunisia will mean that he will concurrently represent Canada in that country as well. Although his normal residence will be in Berne, he will pay frequent visits to Tunisia.

Mr. Feaver, a native of Nova Scotia, has had a long and distinguished career with the Department of External Affairs both at home and abroad since 1930. He has served in Washington, Tokyo, London and The Hague. He was Canadian minister to Denmark from 1954 to 1956 and Canadian ambassador there from 1956 until his return to Ottawa in August, 1958, where he has since been chief of protocol.

At the same time I should like to announce that for some time it has been the government's hope that it would be possible to establish some Canadian diplomatic representation in Iraq. Discussions to this end have recently been taking place with the Iraqi government. I am pleased to inform the house that it is the government's intention to accredit to Baghdad Mr. Paul André Beaulieu, Q.C., the Canadian ambassador to Lebanon. Under this dual accreditation arrangement, Mr. Beaulieu will continue to maintain his residence in Beirut but will, of course, be in a position to pay regular and frequent visits to Baghdad as well.

Mr. Beaulieu was born in Outremont, Quebec, was educated in Montreal and practised law there prior to the war. He joined the Department of External Affairs in 1940 and has since seen service in Washington, Paris, London and Boston, where he was consul from 1949 to 1951. He was originally appointed chargé d'affaires of the Canadian legation in Lebanon in April, 1958, and became ambassador there in October, 1958, when the status of the mission was raised to embassy.

Mr. Beaulieu's appointment will demonstrate Canada's recognition of the increasingly important role which Iraq is playing in international affairs and the growing need for closer relations between our two countries. This appointment also is one of several, of which the Sudan, I hope, will be another, intended to strengthen Canada's representation in Asia and Africa.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the announcement of these two appointments will be warmly received by the house. It was announced a week ago, although I believe not in the house, that Mr. Feaver had been appointed as ambassador to Switzerland. Now we are told he is to be given the additional assignment of serving as our representative in Tunisia. It is appropriate that Canada should be among those countries to have representation in Tunisia because of the efforts made by Canada toward the admission of Tunisia into the United Nations and the acquiring by her of the status of a self-governing nation.

Mr. Feaver is a distinguished public servant who has represented Canada abroad with distinction on several occasions. He has performed notable and valuable services to his country in the Department of External Affairs here in Ottawa.

The appointment of Mr. Paul Beaulieu as our ambassador to Iraq has fulfilled an intention which the minister from time to time indicated to the house the government had in mind. The minister will recall that on several occasions I asked him if there was any likelihood of an appointment being made by Canada to Iraq by way of establishing a Canadian mission there. The minister replied that consideration was being given to this matter. It is significant that the government of Iraq announced the day before yesterday that it had decided to establish a diplomatic mission in Canada. One wonders why the announcements were not simultaneous. I do not say this by way of criticism, but it is rather unusual that the announcement should have been made in the way it was.

The minister's announcement of the appointment of Mr. Beaulieu provides Canadian representation in a very important area in the Middle East. Mr. Beaulieu, who has distinguished himself as our ambassador to the Lebanon and who has had distinguished consular service in Canada will, I am sure, live up to the high traditions of our diplomatic service.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I am very happy indeed to justify the Acting Prime Minister's hope for a slight area of agreement this afternoon in public affairs. We welcome this announcement as further evidence of Canada's growing friendship with other countries, of an extension of her co-operation and growing influence. The gentlemen whose names have been mentioned as being appointed to these posts have a record of valuable service and are held in the highest regard and esteem by us all.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW CONVENTION BETWEEN CANADA AND UNITED STATES

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): I wish to advise the house that the terms of a new postal convention between Canada and the United States will come into effect on July 1 of this year. This convention replaces one which has been in existence since 1922. The new agreement between our two administrations reviews the exchange of mails between our countries in the light of present conditions and brings up to date informal understandings arrived at over the years.

Of major interest, particularly to Canadian newspaper and periodical publishers, is the inclusion in the new convention of an article stipulating that second class mail in each country addressed for delivery in the other shall be chargeable at a rate not less than the lowest international postage rate in effect for such printed matter. This means, in effect, that postage rates on United States newspapers and periodicals entering Canada will be substantially increased. The higher rate also applies to Canadian publications mailed to the United States, but in view of the relatively small volume of this type of mail it should have comparatively little adverse effect on Canadian publishers.

I might just mention in this connection that about 150 copies of United States publications come to Canada for every copy of a Canadian publication going to the United States. As an illustration, the rate on a typical monthly magazine mailed in the United States for Canada will increase from about 6 cents per pound to a minimum of a little over 8 cents per pound.

The United States has also announced its intention to make rate changes on certain other types of mail addressed to Canada effective July 1. Generally these changes are designed to apply the same rates on such mail as exist for domestic United States mail. No such changes are to be made in Canada, since in the categories concerned the domestic postage rate already applies to mail addressed to the United States.

Under the new convention the service on unpaid or insufficiently prepaid letters and postcards originating in the United States will be improved, as henceforth all such mail will be forwarded promptly rated double deficiency instead of being delayed at origin for the missing postage. Such a practice has been followed in Canada for some time. Also, the maximum weight of parcels exchanged between the two countries will be increased from 15 to 25 pounds and the maximum indemnity for the loss of a registered article increased from $25 to $100. The new scale of weights for parcel post to the United States will, of course, require a revision of parcel post rates on such mail, and this is currently under way.

The convention also deals with a variety of technical postal questions affecting the service between both countries. I should like to express my appreciation here for the cooperative way in which United States postal officials worked with us on the drafting of this convention from the time the project was first suggested by the Canadian Post Office Department over a year ago.

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): I noticed that the Postmaster General read the statement rather rapidly. I did not hear any reference to the royal commission which was presided over by Mr. O'Leary. Perhaps before the Postmaster General made any change in postal rates between the United States and Canada, he should have waited for the report of the royal commission, or perhaps he should have attended before that commission as a witness.

The postal rates between the United States and Canada seem to be about the same both ways, even after these changes. If the purpose of these changes was to limit the number of United States periodicals or magazines entering Canada, I do not believe they will have any effect at all. The only result will be to impose a kind of indirect tax on the periodicals and magazines. Another result of this change will be to increase the cost of living in Canada as well as in the United States.

In conclusion I should like to say I believe the Postmaster General should have awaited the report of the royal commission before making these changes.

[Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace).]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will realize that the minister's statement was simply a statement of information. If he wishes to criticize or debate the subject matter of that statement there will be an appropriate time later to do that.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): We welcome this announcement the result of which is, in effect, an amelioration of the competition of Canadian publishers with United States publishers, although it is difficult to know just how significant this will be. One of the points about this announcement, and it is not a vitally important one but it is peculiar, is that the whole idea was released in the United States on March 6. Despite the fact that we have had parliamentary questions centring on this area since that time, we have had to wait until today for this announcement. There was a full news report covering this change in the United States yesterday, so the people of the United States seem to have had this information when Canadians did not. I was wondering whether, in any liaison the minister might have with United States officials in the future, he could see that we get the same break the United States does in terms of information.

The other point that is not at all clear from the statement, and the minister might clarify this right now, is whether United States publications mailed in Canada are going to be affected by this agreement. It is apparent that publications mailed into Canada are going to be affected, but we are given no information about whether or not the ones mailed in Canada will be affected.

The next point is that the minister has not given us any indication as to whether Canada is going to get a share of the greater revenues that will accrue to the United States postal authorities for handling these periodicals that come into Canada. If the disparity is, as the minister says, 150 to 1, then it is obvious the Canadian post office is going to continue to subsidize United States publications, that is unless some form of rebate is a part of this agreement. It would have been welcome to know whether or not the minister made any gains in that particular field.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the two questions that have been part of the comment of the hon. member for Port Arthur be reserved for the orders of the day.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur raised questions addressed to the Postmaster General which I asked him to refer to this time.

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, it might be simpler if the hon. member would repeat his questions so that we might all be aware of them.

Mr. Fisher: My first question is, does this new convention provide for any rebate of money from the United States revenues taken in on periodicals shipped into Canada, to balance with the providing of the service by Canada, in view of the disparity of 150 to 1 mentioned by the minister? My other question is whether the agreement also covers the question of United States publications mailed in Canada itself rather than mailed into Canada.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first question is no; there is no rebate from the United States to us in respect of such publications. As a matter of fact the universal postal agreement specifically does not permit an understanding of that sort in respect of publications. The reference is to what is called a terminal charge.

In answer to the second question, we almost certainly have to revise our rates here in Canada for United States publications brought into Canada and mailed in this country, but we plan to delay coming to any firm decision in this area until such time as we have the benefit of the views of the royal commission on publications.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Port Arthur raised one other point with which I should deal, with your permission. The hon. member said that he understood that this information had been released in the United States about March 6 and was given to this house only today.

The release today on our part was in complete accord with an agreement between the United States Postmaster General and myself that the information would be simultaneously released in Washington and Ottawa on March 15, and if the news was made public earlier in Washington that is something for which we are not responsible. We have been very careful to keep our agreements of that kind.

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The statement by the Postmaster General relates to other changes and other types of mail addressed to Canada. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman if there are any other postal rate changes in addition to those to which he referred including periodicals and the limitation on the weight of parcel post?

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The United States plans to change its rates on July 1 with respect to a number of other classes of mail such as small parcels which fall into a special class of their own. If I remember correctly the mailing of books will also be affected, and the mailing of certain types of advertisements coming in to Canada. There is a schedule of changes that they have published.

Mr. Denis: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I see that these categories concern domestic postage rates which already apply to mail addressed to the United States. Do I understand it is the rate we now have in Canada or is it the change of rate put into effect on March 1, 1961? As I understand it the Postmaster General by order in council increased the domestic rates effective March 1, 1961.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, the change in parcel post rates applies only to parcels mailed in Canada for delivery in Canada. The rate on parcels mailed in Canada for delivery in the United States was not changed on March 1, 1961, but we anticipate changes in that rate due to the changed conditions of our agreement with the United States.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PEARSON—PRESS PUBLICATION OF BANK OF CANADA REPORT

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which affects all members of the house. At 2.30 this afternoon there was tabled in this house the annual report of the Bank of Canada. A large excerpt from that report appeared in the press which reached the streets in Ottawa, I am informed, at 1.30 this afternoon.

I have no criticism whatever of the fact that the press secured this report. Naturally they are entitled to seek and use any information they can get from government sources, and I do not wish to interfere with their arrangements to that end. I am not criticizing the press—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: —but I do suggest it is a matter of privilege when an official document of this kind is tabled after it has been made public. Hon. members of this House of Commons are entitled to some courtesy and the same advance notice of a publication of this kind that is given to the press.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, no question of privilege whatever is involved in this situation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Parliament means nothing?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Leader of the Opposition has apparently completely overlooked the change in our practice in reference to tabling documents. I refer to the change that was introduced with the amendment of the rules over five years ago. Since that time the procedure in relation to tabling does not occur in the house. It is very rarely now that documents are tabled in the house. Documents are tabled with the Clerk of the house, usually in hours when the house is not in session. The report in question was tabled today because it happened to be the time for tabling. The document was tabled with the Clerk before the house met this afternoon. It was available to any hon. member of the house today.

It was not even my intention to refer to it in the house. Normally we do not refer, and have not for the last six years, to the tabling of documents in the house; they simply go to the Clerk of the house and they are then made available to hon. members in the distribution office. This report is available to hon. members in the distribution office. If the Leader of the Opposition will bestir himself he can obtain a copy of this report from the distribution office, and could have done so at any time today.

Some hon. Members: No he could not.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, on this point of privilege I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is telling us that this document was made available today. I think he used the word "today". I have an idea that the document was made available to the press yesterday. Perhaps the minister would inquire about this.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I do not need to inquire at all; I will deal with that point right now. I did not say the document was not available to hon. members today; I said it was available today. It was filed with the Clerk—

Mr. McIlraith: At 2.30.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —in accordance with the procedures of the house, and copies were made available to the press yesterday with the restriction that the report was not to be released until today. This has been the practice for some years with respect to this and similar documents—

Mr. Pearson: It has not.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —so that the press, having a lengthy document of this kind, might be able to do it justice when the time comes for its official release. This is no derogation from the privileges of the house. The report was available to hon. members of the house before it was permitted to be released by the press.

Some hon. Members: No.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak on this question of privilege. The Minister of Finance takes the position that there is no violation of the privileges of the house in this matter. I wish to take issue with him. I should like to remind the hon. gentleman of one incident which occurred several years ago in which he had slightly confused the facts, but regarding which he thought there was a question of privilege.

Under our rules this report of the Bank of Canada came automatically within the possession of the house only at the hour of 2.30, when Mr. Speaker took his seat. I learned, through addressing myself to the assistant clerk of the house, that the report was effectively tabled as of 2.30 today.

The Minister of Finance now tells us that the document was made available outside this house some time yesterday. The document was not made available to the Leader of the Opposition or to any other hon. member of this house until today, after the house began its sittings. While there is no question here of censuring the initiative of any particular newspaper or journalist, the fact is—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hon. gentlemen may disagree. I remember the days when they stood in this house and were concerned about the rights of parliament—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —but now that they have a great majority they do not seem to be concerned about the rights of parliament. This is an important report; it involves a matter which clearly establishes a difference of position between the government—and notably the Minister of Finance—and the governor of the Bank of Canada, and on that account—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —if for no other—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member might refer to standing order 40, which governs the filing of returns. I take it this is a return required to be made under an act of parliament?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Standing order 40 (1) confirms what the Minister of Finance has indicated. I believe this standing order is now in the form in which it was established only in 1955, when a new practice was adopted in this respect. This standing order says:

(1) Any return, report or other paper required to be laid before the house in accordance with any act of parliament or in pursuance of any resolution or standing order of this house may be deposited with the Clerk of the house on any sitting day, and such return, report or other paper shall be deemed for all purposes to have been presented to or laid before the house.

(2) A record of any such return, report or other paper so deposited shall be entered in the Votes and Proceedings of the same day.

It is clear, of course, that if there is any failure to observe the rules or orders of the house it is a breach of the privileges of the house which entitles an hon. member to complain. However, from what has been said I do not see any complaint that this rule has not been observed. As the matter has been amply discussed, unless somebody wishes to assert that the rule has not been observed and that therefore a breach of privilege arises, I think we might consider the matter closed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I have something to say on this matter. What Your Honour has outlined is the method which does not touch the point in issue at all, which is a question of privilege. This house could not possibly have been seized with this report until it began its sitting at 2.30 and the tabling of the document could not become effective until this house was in session. This house did not come into session until 2.30; consequently no hon. member has had an opportunity of being acquainted with the existence of this report. If anyone had gone to the Clerk—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and asked—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Assuming the facts are as the hon. member indicates, there does not appear to be any breach of the rule. Does the hon. member assert that there is a privilege of the house over and above the rule itself?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of a breach of the rule; it is a question of a breach of the privileges of this house when parliament is sitting—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hon. members may say "Oh, oh" all they want. They may seek to do all they can to thwart us from expressing our view, as they have continually done in the past and as they are doing this minute.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is receiving unusually good attention, and I do not think he can complain on this score.

Mr. Pearson: On this point, Mr. Speaker, if we had asked for this report, having read excerpts from it in the newspapers, at two o'clock we would have been told by the Clerk of the house that it was not available, even though it was in the hands of the press. Surely, Mr. Speaker, it constitutes a breach of the privileges of the house when we cannot secure an official document of this kind, though we tried to do so, because we were told it was not available, and at the same time we were told it was not available it had appeared in the press.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the Leader of the Opposition had better be a little clearer in his statements. He is trying to leave an impression that this document or excerpt appeared this afternoon before 2.30—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right; this afternoon at 1.30.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am not prepared to accept that statement on the strength of what has been said this afternoon, because the last time this kind of exhibition was put on by the opposition we found that what had appeared in the paper, and what was charged to be a breach of the privileges of the house, was not a document or an excerpt from a document at all but a speculative article.

Let me make it perfectly clear that nothing was given to the press which was available for release prior to 2.30 this afternoon, so that the press would not have this information available for release before it was available to members of the house. Hon. members opposite are well aware that this is in accordance with a practice which has been followed for years in this regard, and they are simply throwing up a smoke screen this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: There may be a point of the practice of the house involved, in which case I should be glad to inquire into it and report to the house. If the document was tabled according to the rules it could be received at any time of the day, and if the Clerk follows the practice of holding the document until 2.30, as asserted, and does not release it to members of the house, which I take it is the position taken by the hon. member for Essex East—I see the hon. member for Essex East shakes his head, but if that is the practice of the administrative office of the house although at the same time release is made to the press, there would be a matter for consideration with regard to the internal economy of the house and, as I say, I shall be glad to inquire into that matter and report to the house on it.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if I might give the house the information I undertook to obtain when this particular report was under discussion earlier. At this time the Leader of the Opposition raised the question of privilege about its tabling and the disposition with respect to the press.

I have ascertained that the practice in the Clerk's office is not to release documents which are tabled in accordance with the rule which I read, standing order 40, until 2.30 p.m. The logic behind this is that the rule permits such documents to be tabled by depositing them with the Clerk of the house on any sitting day. By perhaps an excess of caution the office of the house which receives these documents in the name of the Clerk does not consider that they have been received on a sitting day until the house actually sits. Therefore the authority to the distribution office of the house to distribute them is not given until that time. That is the explanation of part of the point which the Leader of the Opposition was making.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, following the reference earlier this afternoon to this matter, the Leader of the Opposition sent over to me a copy of the Ottawa Citizen of Wednesday, March 15, 1961. At page 51 there is an article headed "Annual Report". The article, which bears the caption "By Bruce Phillips, Southam News Services" is undoubtedly a review or report upon the report of the governor of the bank which became available, as you have indicated, at 2.30 this afternoon. That was the time at which the tabling became effective, as you have now said and was the time appointed for its release by members of the press gallery or the press to whom it was made available yesterday. Therefore there can be no doubt that the news report on the report of the governor of the bank did appear in this edition of the Ottawa Citizen dated Wednesday, March 15.

I then caused inquiry to be made at the offices of the Ottawa Citizen to determine at what time this edition of the Ottawa Citizen was published. I am told that it was not published until 2.30 p.m. today. I am told further that the Citizen does not reach Ottawa newstands before 2.30 p.m.; that the Citizen is not delivered to any subscriber before 2.30 p.m., and that the embargo on the report was 2.30 p.m. I am further told that no copy of this newspaper could have come into the hands of any persons expect those in the trade, that is to say representatives of the two Ottawa newspapers, before 2.30 p.m. today.

Mr. Speaker, I can only infer therefore that the copy in question could not have come into the hands of the Leader of the Opposition before 2.30 p.m., but if he tells us that a copy did come into his hands before 2.30 p.m. I think he owes it to the house to tell us how such a copy came into his hands before 2.30 p.m. today.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, certain points are not in dispute. The Bank of Canada report was given to the press yesterday though it was not to be made public, the minister says, until 2.30 p.m. this afternoon. The minister did not give to any member of parliament or the party leaders the same courtesy that he gave to the press. That is all the more astonishing because this afternoon we are about to discuss financial resolutions. This report would have been most helpful to the opposition if we had received it in time. The minister could have made this report available to members of parliament and the leaders of parties on the same basis that he made it available to the press. That would have been a courtesy, at least, to members of parliament, which was not extended to them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: I did not secure this newspaper until I came into the House of Commons, but I was informed that this newspaper had been on the street before 2.30. If that information was wrong I will, of course, withdraw it, and I shall make inquiries, as the minister has made inquiries. I was given that information in good faith and if it is wrong I shall be glad to withdraw. The fact remains that the press had a copy of the Bank of Canada report the day before the minister had the courtesy to make that report available to members of this house in advance of a debate on the financial resolutions.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I realize this is not an occasion for a debate, but I have two observations to make on the statement which has just been made by the Leader of the Opposition. First of all, the hon. gentleman regards it as a discourtesy to the house that copies of this report should have been made available to the press yesterday with a release date of 2.30 p.m. today, that being the time at which it became available to members of the House of Commons. We are being asked, apparently, to believe that this is something unusual. This is not unusual. It has been the practice followed with regard to these matters for years. It is the practice followed with respect to the budget; it is the practice with respect to the estimates. There is no secret about this. It is a fact that the contents of the budget speech are made known to the press, and that has been the practice for many years. It was the practice when the Leader of the Opposition was a member of the government.

Mr. Pearson: That is not true.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is true, and it is useless for the Leader of the Opposition to deny that, because we have simply followed with respect to these various matters —the budget, the estimates and other matters —a practice which was well established before we came into office.

My second observation is that apparently the Leader of the Opposition is not aware of the nature of the business we shall be dealing with for the rest of the afternoon. We are not to be debating financial resolutions. We will have before us the second reading of the bill to amend the Income Tax Act, and what relevance the report of the governor of the Bank of Canada has to the second reading of particular amendments to the Income Tax Act is a conundrum which apparently only the Leader of the Opposition can explain.

Mr. Speaker: I have perhaps allowed the discussion on this question of privilege to go farther than usual before determining whether it is a question of privilege, because I know the house is jealous of its right to receive information from the ministry before any outside body does, or at least on equal terms with any outside agency. It has been asserted that the practice which was followed in this particular case was in accordance with previous practice.

I do not myself recall any precedent for a question of privilege being sustained on the basis that the press had been given documents required to be tabled in the house for release at the time of tabling. However, there may be a question involved, and if hon. members wish to consider the matter for future occasions as a consequence of this complaint they are free to do so. As it stands at the moment, the complaint seems to be based on suggestions of discourtesy.

[Later:]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I tried to obtain a hearing earlier to discuss one of the points raised by the Minister of Finance in connection with the question of privilege regarding the tabling of this document and giving it to the press.

Mr. Speaker: I have not found any prima facie question of privilege and, as I indicated earlier, there has been ample opportunity to express views on both sides. I do not wish to reopen the matter now, even though the hon. member did not have an opportunity to speak at the time.

Mr. Howard: May I rise on a question of privilege, then, to point out that the Minister of Finance gave to the house information which he said he had obtained from the Ottawa Citizen to the effect that the particular issue of that newspaper concerned was not on the streets until 2.30. I say the minister has misinformed the house in this regard because I myself was at the corner of Bank and Regent streets at fifteen minutes after two, and purchased a copy of the Citizen then.

Mr. Speaker: There is no question of privilege there. The minister gave the information he had obtained, as he indicated when he gave it.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. C. A. Cathers (York North) moved that the second report of the standing committee on banking and commerce, presented to the house on Monday, March 13, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

STARRED QUESTIONS

POST OFFICE BUILDING, PARENT, QUEBEC

Question No. 185—Mr. Argue:

1. Is it planned to build a new post office at Parent, Chapleau county, Quebec?
2. If so, has the land been bought on which the new post office will stand?
3. If so, (a) from whom (b) at what price?
4. Has a contract been awarded for the construction of the post office?
5. If so, (a) to whom (b) what is the amount of the contract?

Mr. Y. R. Tassé (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works): The answer to part 1 is yes. The answer to parts 2 and 4 is no. Consequently, parts 3 and 5 are not applicable. I might add that the delay regarding this project is due to the difficulty in obtaining a suitable site, and that site investigations are continuing.

ELECTRIC POWER TAX, NIAGARA-MASSENA

Question No. 186—Mr. Mitchell:

1. Does Canada impose a tax on electric power brought into Canada from Niagara Falls, New York, and then "exported" to Massena, New York?
2. How much power is thus transmitted from Niagara to Massena via Canadian territory?
3. What power lines are used in this transmission?
4. How long has this arrangement been in operation, and by what international or provincial-state arrangement?

Starred Questions

5. What is the annual revenue to the federal treasury from this export tax on the Niagara-Massena transmission?

6. Is any consideration being given to the removal of this tax in this particular instance? If so, for what reason?

7. What is the background of the tax law, what department administers it, and what department collects the tax?

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): The answer to this question is as follows:

1. Yes, if such a transaction were to occur.
2. None.
3. Not applicable.
4. Not applicable.
5. Not applicable.
6. Not known to the national energy board.
7. Section 4(a) of the Electricity and Fluid Exportation Act of 1907 authorized the governor in council, by proclamation published in the Canada Gazette, "to impose export duties, not exceeding ten dollars per annum per horsepower, upon power exported from Canada . . ." Order in council P.C. 397 of March 16, 1925 implemented this provision by imposing a tax of three one-hundredths of a cent (.030¢) per kilowatt hour, to be collected by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on power exported after April 1, 1925. The rate remains unchanged, but since October 1, 1959, the Department of National Revenue collects such duties.

MAIL CONTRACT, ST. ODILON, QUE.

Question No. 187—Mr. Racine:

1. Has the Post Office Department invited tenders for the mail contract with respect to rural route No. 1 at St. Odilon, county of Dorchester?

2. If so: (a) on what date were tenders called? (b) what are the names of the tenderers, and what is the amount of each tender? (c) has the contract been awarded?

3. If not, when will tenders be called?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): The answer to this question involves a tabulation of names and amounts. May I ask that it be printed in Hansard?

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the tabulation of figures be inserted in the record here as the minister's answer?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

1. Yes.

2. (a) January 5, 1961.

(b) Adelard Giguere, St. Odilon, $797.77; Imelda Giguere, St. Odilon, $798.00; Edmond Gilbert, St. Odilon, $835.00; Georges Nolet, St. Odilon, $849.00; Adonia Couture, St. Odilon, $888.00; Arthur Cloutier, St. Odilon, $965,00.

POLAR SHELF HELICOPTER SERVICE EQUIPMENT

Question No. 189—Mr. Chevrier:

1. What equipment is required of a contractor to perform the helicopter services on both the continental polar shelf and the topographical survey?

2. As of this date, what equipment has Autair Helicopter Services Limited in its possession for these jobs?

3. What is the time allowed between major overhauls on Westland Sikorsky S-55 helicopters?

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): The answer to this question is as follows:

1. For 1961 operations we require the contractor to supply: 4 Sikorsky S-55 helicopters equipped with float landing gear; 1 Sikorsky S-55 helicopter equipped with wheel landing gear; 1 Bell 47 G2A helicopter equipped with skid and float landing gear.

In addition, the following are required on all aircraft: (a) H.F. radio transceiver (b) V.H.F. radio transceiver (c) radio compass (d) gyro compass (e) cabin heater (f) engine heater and (g) engine and nose bubble covers and tie down equipment. Major and minor spare parts must also be readily available.

2. Autair Helicopter Services Ltd. report that on March 8, 1961, it had in its possession one Bell 47 G2A and four Sikorsky S-55 helicopters, and arrangements have been made for the fifth Sikorsky S-55. The necessary items of equipment required by the department are also reported to be available.

3. The Westland-built S-55 is not to be used on these projects in 1961.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Question No. 190—Mr. McMillan:

What was the amount in the unemployment insurance fund at the end of February 1961, with securities (a) at par value (b) at the then market value?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The answer to this question is as follows:

Balance at credit of fund based on securities at cost price, $240,627,927.00.

(a) Securities at par value, $253,029,500.00.

Question No. 192—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Who is the postmaster at Fraserwood, Manitoba?
2. On what date was he appointed, and under what authority?
3. Since the present postmaster was appointed, have any protests been received about his performance of his duties, and, if so, how many persons have protested, and what is the ground of protest?
4. What action has been taken as a result of any such protests?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): There is a good deal of information to be given in answer to this question, and I would ask that it be printed in Hansard.

Mr. Pickersgill: That would be quite agreeable.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent to the printing of this answer as if it had been read?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

1. John Melenick.
2. (a) 13th September, 1960. (b) By Postmaster General under authority of section 5(1)(b) of the Post Office Act, chapter 57, 15 George VI.
3. (a) Yes. (b) 2. (c) location of post office and attitude of postmaster.
4. The representations have been studied, but no further action is contemplated.

INCOME TAX RETURNS, JACK DIAMOND, VANCOUVER

Question No. 193—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1957, has a Mr. Jack Diamond of Vancouver, British Columbia, either in his capacity as an individual or as an associate with Pacific Meat Company Limited, Vancouver, British Columbia, completed and mailed or delivered any return of income as required by the Income Tax Act, and, if so, for which years?
2. Have any of the said returns been processed by the Department of National Revenue, and, if so, was it discovered that there was any wilful evasion or attempt at evasion to pay the proper tax payable by him, and, if so, what are the details of any such evasion or attempted evasion so discovered?
3. If the answer to question No. 2 is yes, was any action taken to (a) impose penalties and, if so, what were they, and (b) prosecute and, if so, what is the result of the prosecution?
4. Has the said Mr. Jack Diamond discussed the matter of his income tax returns with any cabinet minister, and, if so, what was the gist of those discussions, and the results thereof?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I have not had an opportunity to discuss this question with my officials since I returned this morning, and I ask that it be allowed to stand for a week.

Motion stands.

MAGAZINE "THE POSTMARK"—PUBLICATION COSTS

Question No. 194—Mr. Denis:

What has been the cost to the federal government of the publishing of the magazine The Postmark, for each of the following fiscal years: 1957-58, 1958-59, 1959-60?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): The answer to this question is as follows:

1957-58, $35,238; 1958-59, $33,271; 1959-60, $33,982.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. It has to do with his answer to the starred question as to the cost to the government of publishing the magazine "The Postmark". Do the figures include the French version of the same magazine, which is called "Le Cachet Postal"?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): I shall be glad to find out, Mr. Speaker.

CONFERENCE ON GRAIN MOVEMENT THROUGH PACIFIC PORTS

Question No. 195—Mr. Howard:

1. Who organized the recent Vancouver conference to expedite movement of grain through the Pacific coast ports?
2. What is the name, address, and organization or city represented by each person who attended the said conference?
3. Were any invitations issued to people, organizations, or communities to have representatives at the said conference, and, if so, to whom were such invitations issued?
4. What recommendations, if any, arose out of the said conference, and what action has been taken or is contemplated with respect thereto?

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): The answer to this question is:

1. The conference was decided upon at a meeting held between the minister and the Canadian wheat board on February 9. Invitations were extended by the minister and the wheat board, and arrangements for the conference were made by the Canadian wheat board.

2. Invitations were issued to the following organizations:

Canadian Pacific Railway Company, Montreal; Canadian National Railways, Montreal; Vancouver chamber of shipping, Vancouver; Vancouver merchants exchange, Vancouver; Vancouver grain exchange, Vancouver; the shipping federation of British Columbia, Vancouver; national harbours board, Ottawa; port manager, Vancouver; board of grain commissioners of Canada, Winnipeg; United Grain Growers Limited, Winnipeg; Pacific Elevators Ltd., Vancouver; Alberta wheat pool, Calgary; Saskatchewan wheat pool, Regina; the port warden, Vancouver; the international longshoreman's union, Vancouver; the grain handlers union, Vancouver; the Canadian wheat board Winnipeg; the Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

If the hon. member wishes the names of individuals, we will have to secure them.

3. Only the organizations listed in (2) above were invited and represented.

Representation was not sought from communities or private individuals.

4. The work of the conference is being continued by two committees, one committee dealing with immediate problems and one committee dealing with long range problems. It is expected that the conference will reconvene in a short time to consider primarily the report of the first named committee.

POSTMASTER, LOUISEVILLE, QUE.

Question No. 196—Mr. Denis:

1. Since September 1, 1960, has a competition been held by the civil service commission for the appointment of a postmaster at Louiseville, county of Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere, Quebec?

2. If so: (a) on what date? (b) who were the candidates at the said competition? (c) what are the names of the candidates entitled to veterans preference?

3. Is the result of such competition known? If so: (a) what are the marks given to each candidate? (b) who has been appointed to the said position?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 is yes. With respect to parts 2 and 3, the competition was held on December 12, 1960. There were five candidates of whom three qualified in the following order: Mr. Marc Paul, Mr. J. Camille Bellemarre, and Mr. Roger Hogue. The results of this competition have been announced.

It is the policy of the commission not to divulge the names of unsuccessful candidates in any given competition. Similarly, the commission considers it in the public interest to regard the marks obtained by any candidate as confidential.

Of the five candidates in this competition, two were entitled to the veterans preference. Neither qualified. The top-ranking candidate, Mr. Marc Paul, has now been offered and has accepted the position.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Transport in his capacity of Acting Secretary of State?

[Mr. Jorgenson.]

In reply to a starred question, he informed the house that the new postmaster at Louiseville is one Mr. Paul. Could the minister tell us if this Mr. Paul is a veteran, and if he was granted veterans' preference?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I am informed that this applicant was much better qualified than the others and was selected on the basis of those qualifications.

(Text):

ADDRESS ON NUCLEAR WAR SURVIVAL BY MAJOR W. J. P. STYLES

Question No. 197—Mr. Argue:

1. Is Major W. J. P. Styles nuclear staff officer at headquarters, Saskatchewan area?

2. Did he recently address the Knox Metropolitan United Church men's club in Regina on "Survival in a nuclear war"?

3. If so, did he (a) discount the chemical and genetic effects on the human organism of strontium 90, carbon 14, iodine 131, and other products of nuclear explosions as unproven? (b) dismiss the possibility of intercontinental contamination of the atmosphere as a novelist's dream? (c) deny the correlation between strontium 90 intake and leukemia and bone cancer?

Mr. Egan Chambers (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, some information in relation to this question has to be obtained from Saskatchewan. I would ask that the question stand.

Question stands.

NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT—MODEL STUDY

Question No. 198—Mr. McWilliam:

1. Has the national research council undertaken a model study of a proposed crossing of the Northumberland strait?

2. If so, when will it be completed?

3. If completed, what is the result of the model study?

Mr. Y. R. Tassé (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have not yet received the information requested in certain parts of this question. The same applies to questions Nos. 199 and 200. I wonder if the hon. member in whose name they appear would allow these questions to stand?

Mr. Speaker: Shall questions Nos. 198, 199 and 200 stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Questions stand.

PROPOSED CONSOLIDATION OF CHEMICAL AND PAPER COMPANIES

Question No. 201—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the proposed consolidation of Dominion Tar and Chemical Company, Howard Smith Paper Mills, and St. Lawrence Corporation Limited, been drawn to the attention of the director of investigation and research (Combines Investigation Act)?

2. If so, when, and to what effect?

3. Has any communication of any kind, commenting on the consolidation, gone forward from the director or the minister to any of these corporations?

Hon. W. J. Browne (Acting Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this matter came to the attention of the director when it first appeared in press reports and, in accordance with the usual practice, was immediately examined in some detail to determine whether the situation warranted inquiry. The general practice, however, is that no information is given out as to whether a particular inquiry is being pursued unless and until a report is published.

MAIL CONTRACT, KITIMAT-TERRACE, B.C.

Question No. 202—Mr. Howard:

1. What person or company holds the contract for mail delivery between Kitimat, British Columbia, and Terrace, B.C.?

2. What schedule of rates apply?

3. What is the departure time from Kitimat, and the sort of mail carried each scheduled run?

4. When did the current mail contract become effective?

5. Was the contract let on the basis of tenders called, and, if so, who were the competing bidders, and the amount so bid by each?

6. What has been the total amount of money to date paid to the holder of this contract?

7. Have there been, since July 1, 1960, any complaints about this particular service, and, if so, from whom were such complaints received, and the nature of each?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, this is a rather involved answer, and I would ask that it be printed in Hansard without being read.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree that the answer be printed without being read?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The text of the answer above referred to is as follows:]

1. Kitimat Express Limited.

EMPLOYMENT SERVICE, HAMILTON—PARTICIPATION IN PROGRAM "CLOSE-UP"

Question No. 203—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. On what date was the national employment office in Hamilton approached to participate in the "Close-Up" program entitled "A Matter of Pride"?

2. What official made the decision that the employment service should participate?

3. Was anyone in Ottawa, either in the unemployment insurance commission or the Department of Labour, advised of this decision, and, if so, who?

4. Did anyone in the employment service have any preview of the program, and, if so, who?

5. Was anyone in Ottawa advised by the employment service in Hamilton that the program would appear on Tuesday, March 7, and, if so, who was advised?

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the five parts of this question is as follows:

1. February 2, 1961.

2. Commissioner C. A. L. Murchison.

3. No.

4. No.

5. The Hamilton local office through the Toronto regional office advised Mr. F. G. Flint, director of public relations at the head office of the unemployment insurance commission, Ottawa.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ORDERS IN COUNCIL FIXING DUTIES

Motion No. 50—Mr. Benidickson:

For copies of orders issued by the Minister of National Revenue since December 1, 1958, under the provisions of section 38 of the Customs Act for the purposes of fixing duties.

Motion agreed to.

RESOLUTIONS RESPECTING SECTION 96A OF INDIAN ACT

Motion No. 78—Mr. Howard:

For a copy of all instructions issued by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration or the Indian affairs branch to Indian superintendents or others regarding the steps to be taken with respect to resolutions by Indian band councils asking that section 96A(2) be brought into force; and for a copy of all telegrams, correspondence, or other documents exchanged between the abovementioned parties since July 1, 1960.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, correspondence and instructions exchanged and issued within the department to departmental officials are privileged. I am not sure what the hon. member means by the words "or others". If there is any other information which the hon. member wishes I will see if we can procure it for him if he will be explicit.

Mr. Howard: The rest of it would not make much sense without the other documents referred to in the motion. I think it should be either accepted or rejected in its entirety.

Mr. Speaker: Do I understand that the minister accepts the motion subject to the expressed limitations?

Mrs. Fairclough: No, Mr. Speaker. All the information that is available was given in the house on March 8, as appears at page 2786 of Hansard, with the exception of what I have described as departmental correspondence and instructions which are deemed to be privileged.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to proceed?

Mr. Howard: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Howard), which was negatived on the following division:

FRASERWOOD, MAN., POSTMASTER

Motion No. 79—Mr. Pickersgill:

For a copy of any protests, petitions, or communications received by the Postmaster General or any official of the Post Office Department regarding the conduct of the postmaster at Fraserwood, Manitoba, since the appointment of the present postmaster.

Motion agreed to.

POLAR SHELF PROJECT—TARIFF RATES FILED

Motion No. 80—Mr. Chevrier:

For a copy of the tariff rates filed with the air transport board by Spartan Air Services Limited, Kenting Helicopters Limited, Okanagan Helicopters Limited, and Autair Helicopters Limited, which were seeking a contract from the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys for the continental polar shelf project for 1961.

Motion agreed to.

GLEN EXELBY

Motion No. 82—Mr. Howard:

For a copy of all records of Mr. Glen Exelby that are on file with the unemployment insurance commission or the national employment service or on file with any branch thereof; and for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, or other documents exchanged between Mr. Exelby and the unemployment insurance commission or the national employment service or any branch thereof since September 9, 1960; and for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, other documents, or records of telephone conversations between the Minister of Labour and the unemployment insurance commission or the national employment service or any branch, officer, or employee thereof since January 1, 1961, relating to the said Mr. Exelby.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I have discussed this motion with the unemployment insurance commission and they have said to me that since Mr. Exelby has already made public his dealings with the national employment service, the commission deems it advisable under the present circumstances to make available the documents requested by the hon. member for Skeena which are in the possession of the commission. However, I wish to point out, Mr. Speaker, that this position of the commission is not to be looked upon as a precedent.

Motion agreed to.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

SOUTH AFRICA—REPORTED WITHDRAWAL FROM COMMONWEALTH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if he can confirm or deny a report that the nation of South Africa has withdrawn from the commonwealth as the result of a decision taken in London. If so, has he any comment to make on that withdrawal?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the position is that South Africa has withdrawn its application to remain in the commonwealth after becoming a republic. This, of course, does not mean South Africa has withdrawn from the commonwealth, but she has withdrawn her application to be allowed to remain in after becoming a republic. The date set for South Africa to become a republic is in May, but at the moment I am not sure of the exact date. It would appear, therefore, that the situation will continue as it is at present until South Africa actually becomes a republic.

I am not in a position to make any further comments on this development which took place this morning. It is expected that the Prime Minister will be back in the house on Friday morning, and I am quite sure he will be making a detailed report to the house at that time.

UNITED NATIONS

SOUTH WEST AFRICA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON CANADA'S ABSTENTION FROM VOTES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): In the light of the government's stated position on apartheid, I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister would care to explain to the house why Canada abstained from voting at the United Nations on a motion designed to end racial discrimination in South West Africa and place this area under United Nations trusteeship.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the facts in connection with this vote at the United Nations yesterday or the day before are as follows. The original draft resolution on South West Africa was introduced only on the morning of March 13. During the debate the resolution was extensively amended and in this altered form it was rushed to a vote that same afternoon. In the debate the Canadian delegation said that we would regret it if an immediate vote was taken on this important and complex resolution, since it had not been possible in the short time available to receive instructions. The delegation explained that if a vote were taken Canada would abstain solely—and this is the key to my answer—because there was inadequate time to receive instructions, and this would not indicate our position on the substance of the resolution. A similar stand was taken by several countries, including Ghana. All these countries urged that time be given to get instructions from their respective governments.

The resolution will now move from the committee stage to the plenary session of the United Nations and there, after due consideration in the department, instructions have been given for our delegation to vote for the resolution.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE

"CLASS OR KIND MADE IN CANADA"—REPORTED STATEMENT BY REVENUE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Can the minister assure the house that the United States authorities are satisfied that the proposed changes in the customs tariff are in no way an infraction of our international obligations?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I do not think I am in a position to read the minds of officials of another nation, or to speak for them. There was a full, frank and free discussion of this matter yesterday. I am sure there is no area of misunderstanding with respect to it.

While I am on my feet I should like to refer to a question which the hon. member asked of the Acting Prime Minister in respect of this matter, at which time the hon. member referred to an alleged statement I had made that this legislation would not be used against the United States. In that connection, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was as far afield as the opposition has been generally in the debate on this matter. What I said, as reported in the Toronto Star, was that this legislation is not designed to discriminate against the United States, and to "discriminate" is quite different from being used. The C.B.C. quotation, to which the hon. gentleman referred in his question and which I received today, a short time ago, quotes me as saying that the proposals are not designed to discriminate against the United States. That is an actual quotation of my words as reported by the C.B.C. and the Toronto Star.

Mr. Chevrier: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The report I had before me at the time was entitled "Tariff Changes not Aimed at United States, Nowlan said". What difference does the minister make, in the application of the class or kind of goods made in Canada legislation, as between the United States and other countries?

Mr. Nowlan: None whatsoever, Mr. Speaker. The first thing to do would be for the House of Commons to pass the legislation. When we get that belated action we will apply the act in accordance with the law.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister. Can the minister say whether the law is actually being enforced at the present time, as was announced by the Minister of Finance, if I am not mistaken, on budget night?

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the hon. member means by his question. The law as it exists today is being applied by the Department of National Revenue and of course will continue to be applied in accordance with the law of the country.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on the point raised by the minister, the Minister of Finance announced in his budget speech that these changes in the tariff would go into effect immediately.

PROPOSED U.S. RESTRICTIONS ON TOURIST IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Since the Minister of Finance made no reference to this subject matter in his report to the house earlier today, could he say whether any representations were made during the recent ministerial visit to Washington in respect of the proposed reduction by the United States of duty free tourist purchases to $100? If so, has he any comment to make?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Views were certainly expressed on this subject by the Canadian ministers. We pointed out that already the balance of tourist purchases and expenditures as between Canada and the United States is very heavily in favour of the United States. Indeed, the Canadian deficit on this one item in our accounts between Canada and the United States amounted last year to $100 million. This is not an unusual figure; it has been running at figures like that for some time.

The view was strongly put forward by the Canadian ministers that in these circumstances there was no occasion whatever for the United States administration to take steps to curb purchases by American tourists in Canada. The United States has the problem of a deficit on the tourist trade over-all which runs into a very substantial figure. Indeed, last year it amounted to about $1 billion. But that is the over-all position. We, representing Canada at these meetings, pointed out that the situation is the reverse in relation to tourist purchases as between Canada and the United States.

Mr. Garland: A supplementary question. Would the minister care to comment on the response which was accorded to those representations?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Those representations received a very courteous hearing.

CHRISTMAS TREE LIGHTS—PRICES FOR EXPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Tucker (Trinity-Conception): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce but in his absence perhaps his parliamentary secretary might deal with it. Could the minister use his influence with Canadian General Electric to get them to set a price on bulbs for Christmas tree lighting so that exporters supplied by that company will not be prevented from promoting exports and making sales?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the hon. member might bring up such a matter on the estimates. After all, Christmas is either past or coming—I am not clear which—and if we deal with all questions that occur to hon. members we will not be out of here by Christmas.

SPORTS

HOCKEY—SUGGESTED ISSUE OF SILVER DOLLARS TO COMMEMORATE WORLD CHAMPIONSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the Trail diamond jubilee society desires a special strike of 25,000 silver dollars to commemorate the Trail diamond jubilee and the winning of the world hockey championship by the Trail Smoke Eaters, would the minister inform the house whether arrangements can be made for the Royal Mint to strike these silver dollars with a suitable and acceptable design?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that all hon. members congratulate the Trail Smoke Eaters on their really magnificent victory. It is a matter of satisfaction to all Canadians. I have today received a telegram from the Trail diamond jubiliee society on the same subject and containing a similar proposal. However, it takes a minimum of six months to produce a newly designed silver dollar of proper quality. The overhead cost is also quite large, and unless a quantity of coins many times 25,000 is produced it would be a costly operation. It has long been the practice to produce commemorative coins only for events of a unique nature and national significance. Obviously this event is one of national significance, but I do not think any hon. member will say it is a unique event for a Canadian team to win a world championship. It has happened before and I am sure all hon. members are confident that it will happen many times in the future.

Mr. Herridge: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister not say it was a unique event in Canadian history for a city's team to win the world hockey championship during the year the city was celebrating its sixtieth anniversary?

Inquiries of the Ministry

OLD AGE ASSISTANCE

REPORTED SUGGESTION AS TO MEANS TEST FOR OLD AGE PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare based on a statement he is purported to have made to a Toronto delegation seeking increased old age pensions. The minister is reported as having said that a means test might have to be applied for any increase over the existing basic amount. Are we to understand that this is a new declaration of government policy?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Certainly not, Mr. Speaker, and any time there is a change in government policy it will be announced to the house in the usual way.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

BANK OF CANADA—CONSIDERATION OF REPORT BY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the banking and commerce committee has not considered a report of the Bank of Canada since 1956—in other words, not during the regime of the present Minister of Finance—would the minister use his good offices to give the nod to the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for York North (Mr. Cathers) and government supporters sitting on the committee to perhaps assure that this might be done in this 1961 session with respect to the 1960 report of the Bank of Canada?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I expect to make a statement in the house on this subject next week, after hon. members have had an opportunity to peruse the report.

INQUIRY AS TO PROVISION OF INTERIM SUPPLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Inasmuch as the treasury will shortly run out of authority to spend money, is it his intention to introduce an interim supply bill before the Easter recess and, if so, when will that take place?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Subject to arrangements being made by the leader of the house, it would be my intention to move for a vote of interim supply next week for the months of April and May in the new fiscal year.

FINANCE

SPEECH IN NEW YORK BY GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Minister of Finance a question. Has the minister any comment to make on the speech delivered in New York last week on the monetary and fiscal policy of Canada by the governor of the Bank of Canada?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): I became aware, after the speech had been made, that the governor of the Bank of Canada had made a speech there. Since that time I have received a copy of that speech, and I presume the Leader of the Opposition has also received a copy.

I take no responsibility whatever for the contents of that speech or for any views expressed in it. The governor of the bank did not consult me before he made it. He did not undertake to speak for the government, and anything contained in that speech is his responsibility. I disclaim any responsibility for anything contained in it. I wish to make that very clear. I am not consulted by the governor of the bank about the speaking engagements he accepts. That has not been the practice.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): A supplementary question. I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if that speech fairly expresses government policy on the subject.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Government policy is declared by the responsible ministers of the government, who are responsible to parliament for their declarations in this respect. Government policy is not declared by the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): A further supplementary question. In respect to those matters in that speech which are not in accord with government policy, what action does the Minister of Finance or the government propose to take?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We shall continue to regard ourselves as servants responsible to parliament. We shall not seek to override the enactments of parliament. It will remain for parliament to decide in those circumstances what is the proper course to be taken.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON SMALL BUSINESS LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. On March 9 the hon. member for Port Arthur asked the minister whether he could give us any information regarding the first month's operations respecting small business loans, to which the minister replied that the report was not available. Can the minister indicate to the house whether the information is available now and, if so, what it is?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, a starred question has appeared in Votes and Proceedings on this subject today. May I say that the lending operations under this act started only about one week before the end of January. Frankly, I think information relating to that short period, even if it becomes available, will be of very little use. I was going to suggest when the question was reached, unless the information to February 28 is available, that perhaps it might be better to wait until we have information to February 28. But again, that is a question of another hon. member, and I presume it will not be reached until next Wednesday.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

HOCKEY—REQUEST FOR TELECAST OF TORONTO-MONTREAL GAME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Would the minister inquire from the C.B.C. about the possibility of televising from coast to coast an event of national interest which is to take place in the Forum at Montreal on Thursday night, between the Montreal Canadiens and the Toronto Maple Leafs?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Without making any inquiries at all I am sure I can say that a lot of Canadians would like to have the opportunity to watch that event on television.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

REPORTED PROPOSAL RESPECTING COMMONWEALTH FLAG AND HYMN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if he could tell us whether the Canadian representatives now in London, particularly the Secretary of State, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Dorion) have presented to the commonwealth conference the proposal mentioned in today's issue of Le Devoir that the union jack be adopted as the flag of the commonwealth and that "God Save the Queen" should be the royal hymn of the commonwealth.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to comment on that proposal.

PUBLICATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether it is expected that the report of the royal commission on United States publications presided over by Mr. Grattan O'Leary will be received soon?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will have inquiries made about that report. I am not in a position to say at the moment.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GLEN EXELBY—REFERENCE OF MATTER TO COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister, and ask whether in view of the statement made by the C.B.C. corroborating the declarations made by Mr. Exelby the hon. gentleman does not think the government should take the initiative in sending this whole matter to a committee of the house for study.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my main reaction to this question is amazement that the Liberal party would be following this big hoax with so much excitement and anticipation.

Mr. Chevrier: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Acting Prime Minister read the statement made by the C.B.C., and has he seen the words in it to the effect that the situation referred to therein was true and that the unemployed salesman, Mr. Exelby, who was the central figure in the program, was "honourable and straightforward" in his dealings with the corporation?

Mr. Green: If hon. members opposite wish to ask questions about this situation I cannot understand, Mr. Speaker, why they do not raise them in the committee which is dealing with the C.B.C. at the present time instead of coming into the house and asking questions which should not be asked on orders of the day.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister if he now considers this program to have been a big hoax?

Mr. Green: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I certainly do.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, does the Acting Prime Minister by that statement wish to imply that the situation of unemployment in this country was not adequately represented by the program over the C.B.C.?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that this series of questions and answers is tending to become a debate, and that further questions might better be kept for a time when this matter could be properly debated.

[Later:]

Mr. J. R. Keays (Iles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he has any comment to make on the C.B.C. statement issued to the press today.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will recall that this matter was the subject of a question earlier in the proceedings, and I think it was dealt with. I do not know whether the minister wishes to accept the question.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I was very much interested to hear the hon. member for Laurier set out certain parts of this C.B.C. statement, but I regret that he did not set out the last part, which states that the program should have given the precise chronology of the periods of Mr. Exelby's employment and this it failed to do. That was exactly my point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: And so did the minister.

WINTER WORKS PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF STATISTICS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour if he is now in a position to give us the information regarding local statistics of the government's winter works program as he promised last Thursday he would do as reported at page 2815 of Hansard?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, that information was sought when we were discussing the estimates of the Department of Labour and I thought at that time that it was required when we next discussed those estimates. However, if the hon. member wishes this information tabled now or tomorrow I shall be glad to undertake to do so.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): As early as possible.

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Translation):

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MONTREAL—REPORTED LAY-OFFS OF CLEANING PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

According to the reply given yesterday by the minister concerning the lay-off of the 160 maintenance employees at the C.N.R. head office, only 40 of them, therefore, are sure of keeping their job whereas Canadian National will do everything possible to find work for the others. This is my question. What will happen to those for whom no job will be found? Will they find themselves out of work after working for the C.N.R. all those years?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I feel that in the circumstances, the C.N.R. authorities are showing a fine sense of responsibility. They have submitted several proposals already and I am convinced that they will be able to be of some use to these people. I am confident that the great majority of the C.N.R. employees in that building will be taken on again and that the Quebec government which will occupy the two present buildings will also be in a position to assist a substantial number of employees.

Mr. Johnson: Write to Mr. Lesage.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to question the attitude of C.N.R. authorities, but as the present minister is aware, his predecessor stated on several occasions that laid-off employees would be taken on again and they were not in all cases. That is why I put this question and I am not satisfied with the reply.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member asking a further question or is he seeking to comment on what has been said?

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Why did the C.N.R. fail to notify its employees of this situation months ago instead of waiting until last week and giving them only a 60-day notice?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, this question comes strictly under the jurisdiction of the railway authorities. I cannot explain why this procedure was followed. But, to revert to the first question of the hon. member, I should like to tell him that the procedure which will be followed and what will happen to those who will not be taken on again will be exactly the repetition of what happened in other similar cases, in accordance with the various collective agreements or the various agreements entered into between the employer and the employee through negotiations.

Mr. Chevrier: Does the minister consider a 60-day notice satisfactory in the circumstances?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is pursuing a matter which is an administrative decision of the railway rather than of the ministry, and all he could ask would be to get further information.

Mr. Chevrier: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to pursue it because I have asked three questions and I agree that is enough under the orders of the day; but I would bring to your attention the fact that while it is a matter of administrative responsibility of the Canadian National Railways, none the less there is no way in which the house can get information other than through the responsible minister, who is the Minister of Transport. If this position is to be taken, then on any matters concerning the Canadian National Railways or, for that matter, crown corporations, we will not be able to obtain information which we must have from time to time.

Mr. Balcer: On this point, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows very well, because he was previously in this portfolio, that every time questions are asked in the house that are directly relevant to the management of the C.N.R. I have to bring to the house information supplied by the management. So far this session I have always brought to the house detailed information supplied in answer to questions asked. This afternoon the hon. member is asking my opinion as a private citizen; whether I feel that 60 days are the right number of days, or whether 50 days or 70 days would have been better. Well, I am not sure; maybe 120 days or 300 days would have been better, but it is strictly a question of opinion. It is a question for the administration of the C.N.R. and the information should not come directly from me. I shall be very pleased to forward any questions that are relevant to the management of the C.N.R. and bring the information to the house.

Mr. Chevrier: It is the same kind of question that we were asked from day to day when we were on the other side of the house.

Mr. Balcer: And you did not answer it, either.

Mr. Chevrier: You certainly got more information than we are getting now.

Mr. Speaker: The question before the house was one of privilege raised by the hon. member for Laurier. I think it has been satisfactorily discussed and disposed of. If the hon. member has a supplementary question to ask of the Minister of Transport would he defer it until the hon. member for Skeena has asked his question?

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Maurice Johnson (Chambly-Rouville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the building the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) was referring to in his question was sold by the C.N.R. to the government of the province of Quebec, could the Minister of Transport ask the C.N.R. management to suggest to the province of Quebec, at the time they sign their contract, to hire the employees that were laid off because of the sale of that building?

Could that suggestion be forwarded to the minister of public works of the province of Quebec?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure that I followed the question, but if I did it related to a contract between the C.N.R. and the province of Quebec, which would be beyond the responsibility of the minister. If I am in error perhaps the minister will be able to deal with the question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ETHIOPIA—ESTABLISHMENT OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, in view of the announcement made earlier this afternoon by the Secretary of State for External Affairs with regard to the establishment of diplomatic relations between Canada and certain countries in Africa, and in view of the highly strategic role of Ethiopia in many countries in Africa, would the minister tell the house whether the Canadian government is considering the possibility of establishing diplomatic relations with Ethiopia?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Canada and Ethiopia are on very friendly terms, but as yet there have been no negotiations leading to the establishment of diplomatic relations.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SEVIGNY—DELAY IN PROCEEDINGS OF HOUSE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which, I think, has a significant bearing on the rights and privileges of all hon. members.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that the work we have to perform in this house is serious work. Our task here is to see that certain legislation be adopted which is beneficial to the country in general. However, for a few days now, and in particular this afternoon—it is now a quarter to five—members of the opposition have been doing their best to make a great to-do about certain incidents relating to a television program. They are again trying to make political capital out of a normal situation—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member misunderstands the use of privilege when he rises to make a general complaint of that kind and then deals specifically with some conduct which has already taken place. Everything which has happened here today has been done presumably in accordance with the procedure and rules of the house and by the members in the exercise of their rights as members of the house. If any member is abusing the privileges which he has as a member the time to take exception is when the occasion arises. While I appreciate the minister's concern, I think a general complaint of that kind is probably not a matter which should be raised as a question of privilege.

IMMIGRATION

INQUIRY AS TO DEPORTATION OF CANADIAN-CHINESE CITIZEN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether her department intends to persist in a line of conduct which will have the effect of exiling a Canadian citizen of Chinese origin—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: —while at the same time quashing the deportation order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member ask a specific question instead of asking a question about a line of conduct, which rather presents an argument? If there is a specific question to be asked, I would appreciate it if the hon. member would put it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the minister intend to persist in the deportation order which will have the effect of exiling a Canadian citizen of Chinese origin?

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I also ask the hon. lady whether it is correct that her department or she has quashed the deportation order, with which she no doubt is quite familiar, with respect to an inhabitant of Thessalon?

Mrs. Fairclough: That is not correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the hon. lady give the facts to the house?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Speaker, I am a little surprised, because I presume the hon. member received his information from a newspaper report which described certain happenings in another legislature. If he had read the article to its conclusion he would have noticed that one of the speakers in that place made the statement that he had discussed the whole matter fully with the hon. member for Algoma, they had examined the information available and they had agreed that there was no basis for any action.

Mr. Nixon: Which Algoma?

HOUSING

MONTREAL—ALLEGED IRREGULARITIES IN APARTMENT CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Public Works. Has the minister's attention been drawn to a Canadian Press story originating in Montreal to the effect that an investigation has uncovered evidence of inflated subcontract prices and nearly $75,000 in kick-backs to promoters during the construction of an apartment block in the northeastern part of the city, a project which was authorized by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I would ask the hon. member to consider whether he is not dealing with a matter of law enforcement, and not something that is an administrative responsibility of the Minister of Public Works.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Garland: If I may say so with respect, I think the fact that the project was authorized by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation surely brings it within the purview of the minister.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry; I cannot agree with the hon. member. Many crimes can be committed in the building of houses which were approved for construction by the corporation, and that would not make it a responsibility of the department. I think the hon. member's question is out of order.

INCOME TAX ACT

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-73, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that almost three months have elapsed since the minister introduced his so-called bady budget on December 20, is he not going to give the house a statement, which he did not do at the resolution stage, as to the results of the measures proposed by him on December 20 which under our procedures became effective from the time of their announcement on baby budget night?

Mr. Speaker: I must inform the house that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, I have a few comments to make. The house will recall that on December 21, the day following the introduction of the so-called baby budget, I raised a question that was fairly common throughout the land, namely, why did the minister present a budget at all? I think the conclusion was reached that some board of strategy in the government party had decided that it would be good public relations and perhaps the minister was counselled by Mr. Grosart and others to introduce in midstream during the fiscal year what might appear to be radical economic changes. I suggested then that I thought that after reaching the decision to present a budget they found after a little examination that it was not a very appropriate time to go to the money market and carry on other necessary operations that would make possible—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if I might draw the hon. member's attention to the specific matter before the house and ask him whether he does not believe what he is now saying was more appropriate on the budget debate? We have now reached the stage of second reading of a bill arising out of the budget debate. It seems that there is not very much scope for general financial discussions on the bill we have before us. I would hope that hon. members would treat the bill in that manner.

Mr. Benidickson: On that point, Mr. Speaker, may I say that I was about to draw to the attention of the house the fact that we have before us for second reading a bill which is founded on the 12 resolutions introduced on budget night. I believe that ten of those resolutions relate to the field of investment. Subsidiary to that, I suggest we would have to examine such items as the interest rate and, inasmuch as the resolutions referred specifically to foreign investments, we would have before us the very important question of the premium upon our dollar and its relationship to other currencies of the world.

We would have to consider also our imbalance of payments. As the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) said this afternoon, it is most unfortunate that the Bank of Canada report was tabled today instead of yesterday. I do not believe the significance of this coincidence is properly understood by too many members of the house. I have indicated that ten of the 12 resolutions which were presented on budget night relate to such factors and have been imbedded in sections of the bill before us. These sections relate largely to financial and banking problems which inevitably would be referred to in the annual report presented by the governor of the Bank of Canada. His comments respecting 1960 are not available to me as I speak on this occasion. I have tried to be attentive to the debate that has been continuing since 2.30.

Mr. Aiken: That is right; it was a debate.

Mr. Benidickson: I referred to the proceedings of the house which, as I say, have continued, and very properly as the Speaker said, since 2.30.

I repeat that ten out of 12 of the budget resolutions imbedded in this bill relate to investments. These resolutions related substantially to the field of foreign investment and will have some repercussions on the premium rate on our dollar, interest rates, balance of payments and so on. This report of the Bank of Canada which, as I say, was presented after 2.30 today, is a larger document than ever before. For the benefit of those who read Hansard, I want to say that unless each of us went hourly every day from 2.30 until the adjournment of the house to the office in which documents of this kind are deposited, we would have no knowledge whatever of the documents tabled until the printed notice is published the following day—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; we have before us a particular bill that proposes certain quite definite amendments to the Income Tax Act. Surely, on a motion for second reading of this bill the hon. member should confine his remarks to the principle of the bill, and what relevance the remarks of the hon. member have to the principle of the bill must stagger the imagination of anyone. He is complaining now about the rules of the house relating to the tabling of documents, and surely that has no bearing whatever upon the principle of this bill.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) was perhaps exceeding the limits of the debate by referring to a matter which was before the house earlier. I did not object to his complaining he had not the report of the governor of the Bank of Canada, but actually what we are debating as the house has been reminded by the minister, is the principle of a bill which has a number of specific income tax provisions. I do believe the limit of the debate is the consideration of the effect of these specific provisions, if there is any general principle running through them, and if not then the principle of these many changes in the act.

Mr. Benidickson: My point was that ten of the principles that are incorporated in the sections of the bill we are now considering may relate in a very direct way to the recommendations in the Bank of Canada report that became available to us only at 2.30 today. I say it is unfortunate, inasmuch as there is a direct relationship between these ten items contained in this bill, that we did not have this report at an earlier stage. This is the point I make, and I think it is a valid point.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I did say during the budget debate that I felt the contents of this income tax bill were likely to prove very meagre because a decision was made to present a baby budget before it was decided what might be available to put in it. Almost three months have elapsed since the introduction of the resolutions, and my view in that respect has not changed in the interval. I feel that instead of deriving much advantage from this bill a fair amount of damage has been done to this country in its present economic situation, and particularly in its relationships with foreign countries which traditionally have made substantial investments in Canada.

In the first place, I find that there is not too much here that is very trenchant or very vital. On the other hand, as a result of the talk in connection with this baby budget I feel that there has been created abroad quite a blurred image in respect of intentions. I do not need to advance that as my own opinion. I did indicate that I spent a month in New York towards the end of 1960 and I was astonished to find the extent of the anxiety of ex-Canadians who were working in New York as to the possible effects upon Canada, not upon their new country, of what was announced in the speech from the throne and in the baby budget.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the hon. gentleman a question? What date was it he left New York?

Mr. Benidickson: I was back for the baby budget. I was away of course, all through November, but I was back subsequent to the introduction of the baby budget. I think this confusion, rather than the direct effects of this bill, is causing great irratation and is doing Canada no noticeable good in other sections of the world.

There is a danger of creating wrong impressions, even though they may be inadvertently created. The minister must have sensed this danger. Certainly another hon. member of this house has already spoken on this point. I refer to the much admired hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith). He also has spent a great deal of time at the United Nations and in the country to the south. In the debate on the baby budget the hon. member confirmed the alarm that I have expressed, with regard to our contacts in the United States. They do not properly understand the intentions of this government with respect to investment and they are considerably alarmed about this matter.

I think the minister must have recognized this situation, because shortly after the presentation of the budget on December 20 he made a trip to New York city in order to try to allay some of the apprehensions that obviously existed in that financial centre. I report the impressions I received while I was down there. The minister went down to New York on January 18 and made a speech to the Canadian club. He had a very good audience. I had been to the Maple Leaf club a month before.

I want to produce evidence of the confusion between Canada's financial leaders. I refer to the Minister of Finance and the governor of the Bank of Canada. I wish to quote their remarks during speeches made in New York recently. I think these remarks are in juxtaposition to each other.

On January 18 the Minister of Finance in New York said this:

> None of us is under any illusion that Canada could have achieved the rapid and broadly based expansion of our productive facilities during the last decade or more without these investments from other countries. We fully recognize the great benefits which the economy has derived by reason of the new manufacturing and industrial techniques which have been introduced, and of the natural resources which have been developed.

That is what the senior financial official of this government said on January 18. However, a person to whom equal attention is paid in the United States is naturally the governor of the Bank of Canada. He made a speech in the same city on March 7 to the Economic club of New York. I wish to show how much confusion there is in the financial leadership of this country by quoting the words of the governor of the Bank of Canada. I ask hon. members of this house to compare his statement with that of the Minister of Finance. On March 7 Mr. Coyne said this:

> The influence of the $9 billion of new foreign capital of one kind and another over the past decade—

The Minister of Finance had referred to the same decade.

> —if anything has had rather adverse effects on stability of employment and costs of production.

Earlier this afternoon I asked whether or not the Minister of Finance had any opportunity to observe the reported increasing harmony between the federal reserve bank in the United States and President Kennedy and his new administration. If the minister did not have that opportunity during the last two days I hope he will continue to observe developments in that connection. At the present time there is an urgent need for the utmost harmony and co-operation in our monetary relations and we should have a better balance between the policies of the government as expressed by the Minister of Finance—and indeed some of the other ministers—and the policies espoused by the governor of the Bank of Canada.

I am not alone in expressing some alarm about the results of this baby budget. I suggest these things are not very important broadly to anybody's pocket book, but psychologically I think they are important. I am afraid difficulties have been caused that will affect employment. These difficulties cannot be compared to the actual amount of dollars and cents that may come to the treasury as a result of the tightening up of some of these measures with respect to withholding tax.

The minister need not take my word for some of these things. I know he has great regard for certain commentators who have also referred to his baby budget since February, 1961. I have never found the minister in any way minimizing the importance of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. In their bulletin of February, 1961, under the headline, "Yankee Don't Go Home", an article begins in this way:

It would be a pity if the growing sense of national consciousness so apparent in Canada today should become identified in the mind of Americans —or anyone else—with anti-Americanism. In truth, it would be much more than a pity: it would be an unmitigated disaster.

I fear the financial community of the United States is losing interest in Canadian investment unless the interest rate gap that prevails between the countries widens greatly as it has since the baby budget was brought down in December. Timidity has been introduced among foreign investors since the baby budget of the minister because uncertainties have not been properly explained in the United States and some other countries.

The Montreal Star, which is a rather neutral paper politically—

Mr. Chambers: What?

Mr. Benidickson: The Montreal Star was certainly critical of the former regime—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Everybody was.

Mr. Benidickson: —and I do not know whether they are unfriendly to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Defence who comes from Montreal. I do not think they are. However, they had this to say:

This week on our opposite editorial page we published three articles by our Washington correspondent on the present state of Canadian-American relations. These are obviously getting worse, and statements now emanating from Ottawa from time to time are not making them any better.

I think some of the speeches made by members of the ministry and by the governor of the Bank of Canada are not particularly helpful in this regard.

Here is another example. On February 1 the son of a former president of the United States, John Roosevelt, came up to Montreal and said:

We appreciate that Canada must fit its policy to its needs but we are right now rather puzzled as to what the new policies actually entail.

I think John Roosevelt is associated with one of the biggest investment houses in New York. How can such an inquirer obtain more information on this matter when three months after the baby budget was introduced the Minister of Finance does not even deign to give this house any up-to-date report on the results of the measures which became effective as of December 20, 1960? Perhaps this is our biggest Canadian corporation in so far as control of assets is concerned. Last month the president of the Sun Life Insurance Company said that Canada's image abroad under this government is fuzzy. He gave this out at the annual meeting—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I ask the hon. gentleman if he will quote the words used by the gentleman to whom he has referred? He has himself introduced the expression "under this government". I should like the hon. member to make it clear whether those words formed any part of the actual words used by the gentleman he is purporting to quote.

Mr. Benidickson: Certainly this gentleman was referring to the current situation, and he is referring to this federal government.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): But did he use the words just attributed to him?

Mr. Benidickson: I will quote the observation verbatim.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That would be better.

Mr. Benidickson: Very well.

Mr. Bourke, president of Canada's largest life insurance firm, said Canada must beware lest international investors lose interest in her because of Canadian attitudes towards foreign capital.

Then the report goes on to refer directly to Mr. Bourke—

Canada's image abroad was becoming somewhat fuzzy, he said.

Surely this is not a reference to something which happened years ago. He is saying that Canada's image abroad is presently becoming fuzzy.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. member agree that he did not use the words "under this government" and that Mr. Bourke in his statement did not attribute responsibility to this government?

Mr. Benidickson: I do not intend to quibble. I could not possibly be the equal of the Minister of Finance when it comes to quibbling. But in the light of common sense, I am sure Canadians will realize that a man who addresses the public of Canada every year and who says that Canada's image abroad is becoming fuzzy is not referring to anything except what is happening in very recent times.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not the point I was raising at all.

Mr. Benidickson: Now we shall find in this bill reference to some protection that is now being taken by the government in respect to some of the opportunities which have been available in recent years, I think on too generous a scale, to bond investors. I have pointed out in the last three years that the Minister of Finance has at times been almost desperate about borrowing money and that in consequence he has offered gimmicks which have been exceedingly expensive in their net cost to the treasury. But everyone is aware of the eloquence of the Minister of Finance and the kind of language he uses when he is criticized with regard to such a matter. I refer to the Ottawa Citizen of Thursday, March 19, 1959. It states:

> William Benidickson, Liberal financial critic in the commons has suggested that the federal government is paying more for some of its borrowings than appears in interest rates.

This was written following a discussion with respect to the offering of a bond at a substantial discount and at a low nominal interest rate; if a person in a high income tax bracket acquired such bonds he would be doing so at a very substantial advantage. But this is the way in which we are treated when we offer, as is our duty, criticism of the Minister of Finance. I continue to quote from the Ottawa Citizen:

> Mr. Fleming described Mr. Benidickson's statement on this point as "a shockingly misleading and inaccurate statement".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order, the hon. member is purporting to quote a passage from a newspaper of a particular date. If I recall correctly, what that article purports to do is to report a debate which took place in the House of Commons and I put forward for your consideration, Mr. Speaker, the point that when we are dealing with statements made in the course of debate in the House of Commons the proper course is to quote from Hansard itself and not to quote what newspapers have said in regard to the debate in the house.

Mr. Benidickson: On this point of order I suggest there is no such rule as that which the hon. member advances. I think the rule is that an hon. member is not permitted, if there is objection from his colleagues, to quote words which reflect upon this house. These words I have quoted reflect on no one but myself, and if I advance them and make some comment upon them I do not think any matter of privilege can be raised by any other member of the house. These words were used with respect to myself by the Minister of Finance and are reported in the Ottawa Citizen of March 19, 1959. They were used by a minister who intends to make amendments to the Income Tax Act to cover the very thing about which I at that time gave him a warning which he described as "a shocking, misleading and inaccurate statement" on my part.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, the observations now made by the hon. member illustrate very well the reasons why it has been the practice and, if I am not mistaken, the rule of this house that when hon. members purport to refer to statements made in the house they should quote from the record of this house and not attempt to read newspaper reports of our debates with all the interpretations that may appear in such newspaper reports. We have just had an illustration of the reason behind this practice and rule, because the hon. member has just directed his observations in that respect to something quite different from the point of my observations in the debate which he is now purporting to quote from a secondary source.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Does the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River wish to speak on the point of order?

Mr. Benidickson: I will hear your ruling, sir.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): I can refer at once, of course, to Beauchesne, fourth edition, paragraph 157, where it is made clear that it is out of order to read extracts in a debate if they refer to other debates during the same session. That, however, does not apply in this case because I understand the hon. member is referring to a debate which took place in 1959.

Mr. Benidickson: Perhaps Your Honour might hear a word from me while you are perusing other authorities. Just to indicate that the Minister of Finance is following his usual style of being exceedingly technical and and obstructive when criticized, may I recall that some four or five weeks ago the Minister of Finance, reading from papers in his hand, was quoting from Hansard—may I speak hypothetically—that the year he was referring to was perhaps 1957. But what he actually was referring to was a requote which he delivered and which appeared in a subsequent edition of Hansard, and he could not provide the page. The house at that time had the courtesy to accept what the minister had said.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Before the hon. member makes assertions of that kind he should be prepared to give the page reference in the debates of this house, because he will not find anything there to corroborate or substantiate the silly accusations he has now made.

Mr. Benidickson: Well, this debate will afford me plenty of opportunity to go to the library after six o'clock, and I will quote later the hon. gentleman in full.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): I think the hon. member should refer to the exact place in Hansard where this was done.

Mr. Benidickson: Is Your Honour making that ruling both with respect to the question I first raised and with respect to the later point raised by the Minister of Finance? I know that after this second reading stage of the debate has been completed the bill will be further discussed in the committee of the whole and I assure you, Mr. Speaker, and the Minister of Finance that this will be repeated, if desired, complete with Hansard page references.

I wish now to deal with one of the aims of the ten out of the 12 resolutions incorporated in this bill which refer to investment policy, particularly with respect to investments that originate abroad. One of the alleged features that prompted the government to embark on this course was that it would perhaps reduce what was generally regarded as an undesirable and rather substantial premium on the Canadian dollar in its relationship to the United States dollar.

Before we conclude this stage of the debate I should like the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) to explain to us why after three months the dollar is virtually at the point it was when the budget was introduced on December 20, although some temporary hope was raised that the budget itself had accomplished something along the line to which I referred.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Acting Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Speaker, when he was in the chair and before you came into it, had to caution the hon. member several times for being out of order in going far beyond the limits of the present bill.

This is a bill to amend the Income Tax Act in certain definite particulars set out in the bill. This is not a resumption of the budget debate. There is nothing in this present bill that speaks of the exchange rate on the dollar. The hon. member in following this course is, in my submission, simply ignoring the previous rulings of the Speaker when he was in the chair earlier with respect to the hon. member's remarks, and the hon. gentleman is trespassing in fields other than those that are the proper subject for debate here. Surely on this motion we are debating the principle of Bill No. C-73, an act to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak to that point of order and remind Your Honour that three months have elapsed since the Minister of Finance introduced his baby budget on December 20. In the meantime the minister has made in this country and elsewhere speeches in which he has attempted to explain to his audiences the purposes of the legislation which he introduced on December 20.

The minister invariably has said that one of the features he had in mind was the elimination of the large premium on the Canadian dollar in relation to its United States counterpart. I say that if ten twelfths of the contents of this bill relate to matters that could have a direct effect upon the relationship of the Canadian and United States dollar and upon interest rates in this country and in particular in the country closest to us in our trading relationships, it is utterly fatuous for the Minister of Finance to suggest that Your Honour should narrow our discussion to the extent he outlined.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): I was in the chamber when Mr. Speaker made the suggested ruling previously and made comments relating to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson). I have been through this bill and I do not know if I could properly say that the contents of this bill would affect the rate of interest between Canada and the United States, and so on. I do not think that is what I am supposed to do. However, I do not see how that can be considered a principle of this bill; and of course on second reading we must relate our discussion to the principle of the bill. Once again I must suggest to the hon. member that he confine his remarks to the principle of the bill.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, at this time I challenge the Minister of Finance to say categorically that in the amendents proposed in this bill amending the Income Tax Act there was no intention on his part that its provisions should in any way have an effect upon the relationship of the Canadian and United States dollar.

The minister is apparently not going to answer on that point—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very pleased to make my remarks at this stage if that is the wish of the hon. member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): If the minister rises I shall have to advise the house that he will close the debate.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am prepared to do that, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is serious.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member is dealing with a point of order.

Mr. Benidickson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member had not thought of it until the hon. member for Essex East suggested it.

Mr. Benidickson: To continue, Mr. Speaker, I insist, subject to your ruling and after a considerable amount of study, that since the introduction of the resolutions in December one of the basic purposes of the changes was a hope that there might be a narrowing of the gap between the United States dollar and the Canadian dollar. The point I wish to raise at this time, however, is that this seems to be a very belated determination on the part of the government.

A few months earlier in May hon. members of the government did not seem to be the champions of a par or under par Canadian dollar. We have been unsuccessful in obtaining explanations and replies to questions we have raised concerning the fact that this same government through its agencies as recently as May last permitted $100 million to be utilized—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I ask you to deal with the way in which the hon. member is completely ignoring—yes, I say defying—your ruling. He is going completely outside the terms of this bill. The hon. member is making assertions now that I should like to debate on a proper occasion. The hon. gentleman is making assertions with no truth in them and I shall welcome the opportunity to debate them at an appropriate time. The rules of the house do not afford opportunity to any hon. member to debate matters of this nature in relation to this bill. The hon. member must be aware of that fact but he has been running over the line throughout his remarks all afternoon.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address myself to the point of order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): More obstruction.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister says, "More obstruction". I wish to say to the minister that that, of course, is an entirely unparliamentary remark.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): A very true one.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Finance strenuously persists in obstructing his own legislation and I am going to leave it at that. The hon. gentleman gets to his feet and raises points of order without producing any authority whatever. The mere assertion by the minister that something is out of order, in his judgment makes it out of order. The Minister of Finance in his great glory has to be reminded—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I wish the hon. member would speak to the point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the last remarks of the Minister of Finance are so offensive and provocative as to certainly justify some comment from us.

Mr. Cardiff: Why don't you get on with your point of order?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We now hear from the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

Mr. Cardiff: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, we have listened to hon. members opposite raising points of order on this, that and the other thing throughout the entire session and we are getting pretty well fed up—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I am sorry but the Chair can hear only one point of order at a time.

Mr. Cardiff: Why doesn't the hon. member speak to the point of order?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I appreciate the difficulty the Chair has with hon. members on the government benches who at every point resist any suggestion with which they disagree that is made by the opposition; and if hon. members opposite are irritated by our conduct, we want them to know that we in turn are irritated by their constant attempts to prevent us from expressing what we believe are correct opinions which we have a right to express in this house.

Mr. Lennard: You have no opinions. Speak to the point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Since we have had that contribution from the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Lennard) I propose to address myself to the question which Your Honour has asked—

Mr. Lennard: It is about time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Once again the hon. member for Wentworth makes a contribution. All that hon. gentleman is able to do is sit in his seat day after day—

Mr. Cardiff: Speak to the point of order.

Mr. Chambers: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, you have asked the hon. member to address himself to the point of order and he refuses to do so.

Mr. Lennard: He does not have one.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I propose to address myself to the point of order, Mr. Speaker, but when I hear these interruptions I propose, within the rules of the house, to deal with them. While the hon. gentleman is not one of those who offend in that particular, he might use his politeness and his good deportment as an example to some of his colleagues who apparently do not understand the meaning of these words.

On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is raising a point which he feels has a very definite bearing on the proposed amendments to the Income Tax Act. I would refer Your Honour to clause 9 of the bill which deals with the exemption from the 15 per cent non-resident withholding tax at present granted for interest payable on bonds of or guaranteed by the government of Canada. I would also refer Your Honour to page 8 of the bill, where we find the explanatory notes which deal with the repeal of the special 5 per cent rate of non-resident withholding tax on dividends paid to a non-resident corporation by its wholly owned subsidiary corporation in Canada, and then to clause 10 of the bill which seeks to impose a tax of 15 per cent on dividends paid by a resident of Canada after December 20, 1960, to a non-resident organization, and so forth. These particular provisions were suggested by the Minister of Finance to meet certain situations, and one of them may very well be the problem raised by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. Surely the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is justified in saying that the Minister of Finance has been driven to impose this particular form of taxation, namely the 15 per cent tax on dividends paid by a resident of Canada, and a tax on non-residents, because of the premium on the Canadian dollar. That may not be a sound argument but the hon. gentleman has the right to make it, and that is what he is doing. With great respect, I say that he has brought himself perfectly within the rules; otherwise, an hon. gentleman would not be allowed to interrogate the Minister of Finance on why he has resorted to these particular forms of taxation on non-residents or on residents with respect to United States holdings. In view of these particular provisions, surely it is restricting the form of debate to say that the statements made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River are out of order.

If there is some doubt in Your Honour's mind—and I do not think there is—and if Your Honour concludes he is satisfied, that would be the end of it so far as I am concerned because I think Your Honour is very fair in his rulings. I suggest to the Minister of Finance that he is obviously concerned today; he is obviously irritated. If he wants his measures to pass why does he not let some more vigorous person such as the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) do the objecting instead of himself? Every time the hon. gentleman rises in his place he delays the passage of the legislation by a week.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. If hon. members were to be allowed to discuss the effects of this bill, of course, they could go into very many realms of any type of financial situation. However, I do have the feeling that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River was discussing fiscal policies in general. I think I should suggest to him that his remarks should be directed more to this bill to amend the Income Tax Act. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is an old experienced parliamentarian and I am sure he can keep himself well within the bounds of this bill.

Mr. Benidickson: I thank you for your comments, sir. I do not in any way depart from my original statement.

Your Honour referred to effects. Surely, we are permitted to discuss the legislation. Generally we use the word "principles" at second reading stage but I was going to use the word "purposes". Surely, we are permitted to discuss the purposes of the legislation before us. I would hope that one of the major purposes of the bill, or one of the consequences of the legislation, would be a narrowing of the gap between the Canadian and the United States dollar. I think I have made my point adequately in that respect.

In addition, when one considers that ten twelfths of the legislation before us relates to amendments concerning foreign investments, I say that undoubtedly it is of great interest to us when we compare domestic interest rates and foreign interest rates. I hope that when we come to the individual clauses of the bill we shall have every opportunity to pursue this subject unless the minister, when he speaks, informs us that these are not among his purposes. I am not talking about effects because I do not think the effects have been very consequential.

I want to know whether one of the main purposes of the legislation is to have an influence upon the pattern of the spread between the Canadian and the United States dollar? When the minister replies I want him to tell us also the purpose of the legislation in relation to domestic interest rates. I am sure the minister will not be able to escape this, although I was astonished that he did not take advantage of the opportunity, three months after the introduction of this legislation, to bring this house and the country up to date on the results that have flowed from the introduction of this legislation.

When the minister replies I hope he will resolve the great concern that exists all across Canada as to the apparent lack of harmony between the monetary policies that may be initiated by the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that anyone looking around the house would not suggest that we have an inspiring audience this afternoon. I hope to conclude my few brief remarks by six o'clock. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if we apply ourselves steadily from now on to the business of this session, if we have the co-operation of the government and the opposition in the introduction of legislation, we would get through in good time. I suggest that we lose a lot of time because of the repeated delays in dealing with legislation, that is, dealing with the resolution and then dropping it and going on with the bill later, and so on. If we could have the resolution introduced and then the bill so that we could continue the discussion in a logical and sequential manner we would gain a lot of time. I think a lot of time is lost by deferring these resolutions and bills from week to week and going at them in what I call a bits and bobs way. If we did that, Mr. Speaker—I want to sow a seed in the minds of hon. members before I say my little piece on this bill this afternoon—I am of the opinion we could satisfactorily and in a proper way deal with the business of this session so that it would conclude by June 15. I hope I have sown a seed in fertile soil.

Without doubt this is the type of bill on which the major discussion will take place on the various clauses. However, I have a few general observations to make. As I said before, I intend to be brief. I think it is quite safe to say that the principle of this bill is income taxation; it is the application of a section of the Income Tax Act. We in this group, Mr. Speaker, think that the Income Tax Act is the fairest form of taxation and is sound in principle but we have maintained throughout the years that the application of the principle is unfair and that we cannot by any stretch of the imagination say that the application is equitable to all classes of the Canadian people when one considers their varying economic circumstances.

For instance, in the application of the act there is no doubt that certain unfairness is caused by the fact that we do not have a capital gains tax in this country, which makes it possible for persons to make large gains and pay no income tax whatever. I am staying in order as carefully as I can, Mr. Speaker, and I simply want to mention that the fact we have no capital gains tax has caused unnecessary taxation on lower income groups. Then there are concessions to mining, smelting, oil and gas companies and no doubt those concessions make it necessary to continue a higher rate of taxation on the lower income groups.

We do not suggest for a minute that the state does not need the revenue to meet its expenses. However, before proceeding with my few brief remarks on the bill I wish on behalf of this group to urge the minister that when he comes to consider his budget he should give some consideration to the plight of the lower income groups who have had little consideration for some years as far as exemptions are concerned while the cost of living has been going up steadily. I think I have gone very little beyond the confines of what is in order at the present time, Mr. Speaker; and as the minister apparently is in a beneficent mood and is smiling I could not help reminding him of these things which we have repeated from time to time in former budget debates and on other occasions.

We are pleased to see in the bill now before us the exemption allowed for tuition fees. That exemption will be of assistance to a certain group of people who in many cases need it badly in order to carry on their education. We are glad to see the tax imposed on investment income from sources outside Canada because we think that is fair. We are glad to see the increase from $25,000 to $35,000 in the amount of income of companies subject to the 18 per cent tax. That should be of some assistance to smaller companies, particularly those that are having a difficult time to carry on. We are glad to see the repeal of the exemption with respect to the 15 per cent non-resident withholding tax. I have always been of the opinion that was somewhat unfair in relation to what resident Canadians, particularly those with small incomes, have to pay in taxation.

As I said before, our few comments will be made on the clauses concerned. However, on behalf of this group I urge the minister to give consideration to those sections of our society that have not received particular consideration in recent years. We know that the cost of living, the cost of operating the human machine, has gone up. We allow substantial depreciation on machinery and plant equipment but up to the present time we have not allowed sufficient for the deterioration and depreciation that occur in the human machine, and that is a matter of serious concern to the lower income groups. In relation to all our other economic difficulties and the plans that have been made to meet them, in my opinion this is a good time to consider a complete overhaul of the Income Tax Act in the light of the circumstances we face today. I have done my very best to remain in order, Mr. Speaker, and at this point I conclude my remarks.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, when the minister replies I would ask him to give us the reasons that were in his mind with respect to the provisions in clause 2, I believe it is, with regard to tuition fees. The minister has given relief in respect of tuition fees for 1961, which means that it will become effective from the middle of the academic term that began last September or October. I have had a considerable number of representations made to me, and I am sure other members have, by students and student organizations with respect to why the relief is not to be made effective from September or October of 1960 so as to cover the whole of the academic year. When the minister replies I hope he will deal with that aspect.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, as it is about one minute before six may I call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, we have made so very little progress this afternoon that I would ask the hon. member to speak until six o'clock. If the hon. member's remarks pertain to clauses of the bill, perhaps he would consider deferring them until we are in committee. I should be glad to make my reply now, Mr. Speaker, to expedite as far as possible moving the house into the committee stage.

Mr. Speaker: Can the hon. member's remarks be made in committee?

Mr. Carter: My remarks are of a general nature and if I do not have leave to call it six o'clock I will continue. The bill before us now to amend the Income Tax Act arises out of the proposals put forward by the minister in his budget and was announced along with other measures as part of the government's plan to contribute toward a solution of the unemployment problem. It is in that light that I think we must discuss the principle of the bill. We can appreciate the desire of the government to encourage increased Canadian ownership of our industry and increased participation of Canadian capital in the development of our natural resources. These are objectives which command our support but we must be careful that we do not attain these objectives at the expense of other objectives which are even more important. This bill is a part of the government's program to combat unemployment and surely that must be our No. 1 objective today because it is the paramount problem facing Canadians at the present time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire from the house leader what the business is for tomorrow and Friday and will he also give some indication of what the business will be on Monday?

Mr. Churchill: As announced, tomorrow we will deal with the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. With respect to Friday, and this may be subject to change, at the moment we are considering going ahead with supplementary estimates. On Monday and Tuesday we will likely have a supply motion but I will be definite about that tomorrow night.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

"DO IT NOW" CAMPAIGN COST

Question No. 128—Mr. Dupuis:

1. What is the amount granted for the "do it now" campaign?
2. What is the break-down of the cost incurred by such campaign?
3. To what firm was this advertising contract awarded?
4. Was the contract awarded following public tenders?
5. If so, what are the names of the other tenderers, and what is the amount of each tender?

Answer by: Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour):

1. The amount allotted for the "do it now" campaign for the fiscal year 1960-61 is $332,000.

2. (a) Items handled through advertising agency:

Advertising in daily and weekly newspapers	$93,384
Advertising in other periodicals	65,254
Radio and T.V. time	75,160
Production charges	13,500
Public relations	900
Advertising expenses incurred in previous year	3,802
Total	$252,000

(b) Promotional items in support of public service activities by national advertisers and national associations:

Posters, pamphlets, billboard material	$67,249
Exhibits	874
Production of theatre and T.V. clips, radio spots, etc.	5,992
Mailing, shipping and miscellaneous	5,535
Total	$79,650
Grand total	$331,650

3. Contract covering part (a) awarded to McKim Advertising Ltd., Toronto. Part (b) handled directly by Department of Labour.

4. No. Advertising agencies are not competitive on the basis of cost, since all agencies collect their fees in the form of a discount from the various media which carry the advertising. The client pays only the production costs.

5. Not applicable.

MENTAL HOSPITAL, YORKTON, SASK.—FEDERAL GRANT

Question No. 138—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Has the Department of National Health and Welfare received a request from the Saskatchewan government for a hospital construction grant for the purpose of building a mental hospital or psychiatric institute at Yorkton, Saskatchewan?
2. If so, what type of institution does this grant cover, and what is the amount of the federal government's contribution?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. No.

2. See answer (1) above.

APPENDIX "A"

March 14, 1961

MEETING OF JOINT UNITED STATES-CANADIAN COMMITTEE ON TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Communique

1. The sixth meeting of the joint United States-Canadian committee on trade and economic affairs was held at the Department of State, Washington, March 13 and 14.

2. Canada was represented at the meeting by Hon. Donald M. Fleming, Minister of Finance; Hon. George Hees, Minister of Trade and Commerce; Hon. George C. Nowlan, Minister of National Revenue; and Hon. Alvin Hamilton, Minister of Agriculture. The Canadian delegation included the under secretary of state for external affairs, Mr. N. A. Robertson, and the Canadian ambassador to the United States, Mr. A. D. P. Heeney.

3. The United States was represented by Hon. Dean Rusk, Secretary of State; Hon. George W. Ball, under secretary of state for economic affairs; Hon. Douglas Dillon, Secretary of the Treasury; Hon. Henry H. Fowler, under secretary of the treasury; Hon. Luther H. Hodges, Secretary of Commerce; Hon. Stewart H. Udall, Secretary of the Interior; and Hon. Orville L. Freeman, Secretary of Agriculture. The United States delegation also included Hon. George C. McGovern, food for peace co-ordinator.

4. Inasmuch as this was the first meeting of this committee since the new United States administration took office, there was a comprehensive review of basic economic relationships between the two countries as well as recent major economic developments.

5. The committee noted the positive steps taken by both governments to stimulate the two economies and to meet the unemployment problem, and expressed belief that these measures and market forces would lead to an expansion of economic growth in the United States and Canada.

6. The committee reviewed the balance of payments situation of each country including its effect on their mutual trade relations. Attention was also given to developments in the world payments position during the past year. The United States delegation pointed to the major significance of short term capital movements in 1960 and described the recent improvement in the U.S. position in this regard, while stressing that its basic imbalance nevertheless remains. The committee recognized the need for continued progress toward international balance through reduction in basic deficits and basic surpluses; and it was agreed that the events of the past year emphasize the need for continued and improved consultation and co-operation in international financial and economic policies.

7. The committee noted with satisfaction the recent signing of the convention of the organization for economic co-operation and development by the United States, Canada, and the members of the organization for European economic co-operation. The committee expressed confidence that the O.E.C.D. could strengthen the ties among Canada, United States and countries of western Europe, and could prove to be a most useful forum for close consultation on the economic policies of member countries with a view to increasing economic growth and to expanding assistance to the less developed countries.

8. The committee noted certain international economic developments of mutual interest, including the rapid economic growth of western European countries. Recent developments in both the European economic community and the European free trade association were reviewed. Both delegations reaffirmed the support of their governments for European efforts to reduce trade barriers and expressed hope that the development of the regional groupings would conform with the requirements and objectives of the general agreement on tariffs and trade and would avoid discrimination against the exports of the United States and Canada.

9. The committee disclosed the progress to date of the GATT tariff negotiations with the European economic community at Geneva. Noting the interest of both countries in the expansion of world trade, the committee stressed the need for an early settlement which would maintain for both countries undiminished access to the E.E.C. market in all sectors of trade, including agriculture, and the opportunity to share in its growth. In addition, the committee looked forward to the second phase of the current tariff conference when there will be negotiations for reciprocal exchanges of tariff concessions among the participating countries with a view to providing further opportunities for trade expansion.

10. The committee expressed satisfaction with the progress made by various countries in the past year in removing discriminatory restrictions against dollar goods and expressed the hope that forthcoming discussions under the GATT with certain countries still retaining restrictions would result in elimination of discrimination and reduction of the remaining quantitative import restrictions affecting United States and Canadian products. The committee noted that substantial discrimination remains in the field of agricultural products and urged that countries concerned liberalize trade in these products.

11. The United States delegation outlined the new food for peace program, emphasizing the conviction of the United States that agricultural abundance essentially is not a problem but an asset which may be effectively employed to improve nutrition and enhance economic development throughout the world. The United States delegation pointed out that it would continue to be the United States policy to avoid disrupting agricultural markets to the disadvantage of other countries' commercial exports of agricultural products. The Canadian delegation supported the humanitarian objective of the food for peace program and noted that this development would be compatible with Canadian proposals to establish a world food bank on a multilateral basis. The committee agreed that there should be a continuation of the close consultation between the two governments on concessional exports of agricultural commodities through existing bilateral arrangements and in the wheat utilization committee.

12. In its comprehensive review the committee discussed other important matters directly affecting trade and economic relations between the two countries. It was reaffirmed that where problems existed direct exchanges of views at the cabinet level should contribute substantially to their solution.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, March 16, 1961

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CHANGE IN TODAY'S ORDER OF BUSINESS

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Leader of the House): Owing to circumstances which I did not foresee it is necessary to announce a change in the order of business for today. The parties on the opposite side have very kindly co-operated. We shall begin this afternoon with the debate on the Income Tax Act. If that is completed early in the afternoon we shall go on with item No. 11 on the order paper, the resolution in the name of the Minister of Labour dealing with the rehabilitation program for disabled persons. Then at eight o'clock tonight we shall resume the study of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture and continue consideration of those estimates tomorrow.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TUNISIA—ANNOUNCEMENT OF VISIT BY PRESIDENT AND REPLACEMENT OF AMBASSADOR

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): It gives me great pleasure to announce that His Excellency Habib Bourguiba Sr., President of Tunisia, has accepted the invitation of the government to pay a state visit to Ottawa on May 1 and 2. The President and Madame Bourguiba will be the personal guests of Their Excellencies the Governor General and Madame Vanier at Government house during their stay. Details of the program will be announced as soon as arrangements have been completed.

Hon. members will be aware of the significant role which Tunisia has played in international affairs since achieving independence in 1956. President Bourguiba has headed the government of his country since then, and to him personally must go much of the credit for Tunisia's outstanding international contribution. By his wisdom and understanding he has always exerted a constructive influence not only in matters of direct concern to his country but also in major international issues and particularly those involving the Arab world and Africa. It is at the United Nations that Canada has best been able to observe and appreciate the contribution which this dynamic country has made to international understanding.

Any reference to the international posture of Tunisia and the important part played by President Bourguiba would be incomplete without mention of his continuing contribution to a solution of the problem of Algeria. Not only has his moderating influence been felt in the United Nations on this question, but he has been unstinting in his effort to contribute to an honourable solution of a problem which has been such a deep source of friction between his Arab neighbours in Algeria and France. If, as we all hope, this problem is resolved in the near future, the final settlement will owe much to the dedicated efforts of President Bourguiba.

Yesterday I announced to the house the appointment to Tunisia of Canada's first ambassador, Mr. H. F. Feaver. I mentioned, too, that for more than three years His Excellency Mongi Slim has been ably discharging his function as Tunisian ambassador to Canada. It is with regret that we have now received word of Mr. Slim's impending departure for another and very important assignment, for we have learned to value highly his friendship and effectiveness. With President Bourguiba about to visit this country it is, however, particularly fitting that we should receive the welcome news that Mr. Slim's successor is to be the president's son, His Excellency Habid Bourguiba Jr., who will shortly present his letters of credence to the Governor General. His previous appointments have been as Tunisian ambassador to Italy and France, and I am sure the house will agree that the appointment of the president's son here is a mark of the high esteem in which Canada is held by the Tunisian president and government.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am certain that His Excellency Mr. Bourguiba will receive an especially warm welcome when he visits Ottawa, not only because of the constructive part that his progressive young country is playing at the United Nations but even more, perhaps, because of the important mediatory part that Mr. Bourguiba himself has played in what we hope will be a successful effort to bring to an end the unhappy conflict which is now and has been for many years raging in Algeria.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, this group welcomes the announcement of the visit of the president of Tunisia.

We recognize him as one of the architects of constructive solutions to the complicated and difficult problems that face that historic area of the world.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—REQUEST FOR LATEST STATISTICS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour and ask if there is any special reason why the unemployment figures for the last available period are not given to the house and the country today? I understand that usually those figures are given at this time.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Those figures have been released on a variety of dates; the date of each month is not exactly the same. There has been a variation in the issuing dates of this statistic from week to week. I have not checked as to why it has not been issued. If the hon. member wishes me to check into why it has not been issued I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's last statement, will he give the house an assurance that it is not because any particular—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the house might let the hon. member for Essex East say what he has to say. If it is out of order it is appropriate, of course, to rise and say so, or it would be appropriate for me to intervene. I did not hear what the hon. member said. If he considers that it is in order I will give him a chance to ask his supplementary question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure, Mr. Speaker, you will consider that I am in order. Will the minister give the house an assurance that the figures are not being withheld at this time because of any special event that is taking place in the city of Ottawa?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, in order to refute the implication of the hon. member, I definitely say that nothing has been done on the basis of the hon. member's question; but I am not surprised at the implication of the hon. member who stoops so low in many instances in asking questions.

[Later:]

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Essex East has opened the door, may I be permitted to extend a most hearty welcome to the Progressive Conservative party members and supporters from all over Canada who are in the galleries this afternoon.

[Mr. Herridge.]

(Translation):

GRAND'MERE, QUE.—REPORTED CLOSING OF KNITTING MILLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. Richard (St. Maurice-Lafleche): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Revenue.

Is the minister aware that the Grand'Mere Knitting Mills and the Grand'Mere Handicraft, both located in the city of Grand'Mere in my riding, have permanently closed down.

According to an article published in yesterday evening's issue of La Presse, three hundred persons are out of work.

Has the government taken action in accordance with the powers conferred to the Minister of National Revenue under the legislation, either on its own or at the companies' request, in order to assist those industries?

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): The hon. member was good enough to send notice of this question to the minister. The minister and myself have discussed the matter and he assured me that he was unaware of this situation, but that he would inquire and report to the hon. member.

(Text):

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour a question arising out of that which was just asked by the hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche of the Minister of National Revenue, when reference was made to the 300 people who were put out of work at the knitting mills at Grand'Mere. The question is this. Could the minister tell us what measures the government is taking to see that alternative employment is found for those people?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Before I answer that question in detail I should like to have the opportunity to make a complete investigation of that situation, of which I am only at this moment aware. After doing so, then we can decide on the action to be taken.

Mr. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): I would like to ask a supplementary question. Would the minister also find out the number of those persons in the St. Hyacinthe district who have found employment with the Goodyear Cotton Company of Canada Limited?

GLEN EXELBY—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he has replied to the letter he received from Mr. Exelby, and if so, would the minister table the letter in the house in order to complete the record?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have replied and I have no hesitation in tabling my reply.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate of the Minister of Labour a few minutes ago. Does the minister not think it would make the record clearer if other hon. members who may have had such correspondence also tabled it?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

SOUTH AFRICA—INQUIRY AS TO LOSS OF TRADE PREFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Can the Acting Prime Minister say whether, since South Africa has announced it is leaving the commonwealth, there will be an automatic economic penalty by this nation losing its trade preference with Canada?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): As I explained to the house yesterday, South Africa has withdrawn its application for re-entry into the commonwealth after becoming a republic on May 31. For the time being she continues to be a member of the commonwealth.

With regard to the latter half of the question of the hon. member for Assiniboia, may I suggest that in fairness it is not very helpful for Canadians to start advocating that there be reprisals of any kind against South Africa.

Mr. Argue: A supplementary question. Do I take it from the Acting Prime Minister's answer that South Africa will enjoy all the commonwealth trade preferences even while following the apartheid policy which resulted in being forced to leave the commonwealth?

Mr. Green: This is not the spirit that helps to settle difficult problems. The trade preferences are based on treaties between countries. Canada has a treaty with South Africa, and it is the practice of Canada to live up to the terms of her treaties.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Is it or is it not a fact that preferential treatment automatically ends with withdrawal of any nation from the commonwealth?

Mr. Nowlan: What about Ireland?

Mr. Pearson: It was negotiated separately afterward.

Mr. Green: I am not in a position to give a definite answer to this question.

PENSIONS

CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION ON PORTABLE PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. My question is based on a news report of a statement made by the director of the legislative branch of the Department of Labour to the effect that legislation on portable pensions will be introduced in the near future. Will the minister indicate to the house whether such legislation is under active consideration by the government?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. I have had a check made with the person who made the statement, and I am informed that the statement had no reference to federal legislation at this time but dealt only with the possibility of provincial legislation in this field.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

LACK OF IDENTIFICATION WORN BY CABINET MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister primarily for the benefit of his rally supporters. Does he consider there is anything significant in the fact that none of the cabinet ministers appears to be wearing any identifying picture or emblem today?

Mr. Argue: Those who are here.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. member has got out of the administrative field.

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF TRANSPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Augustin Brassard (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport, and I would not do so if I did not know his sense of humour.

He said yesterday, at a meeting in Montreal, that the House of Commons was the only insane asylum managed by its patients.

An hon. Member: That was in 1957.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Brassard: He did not mention any date.

Mr. Speaker, I should like him to assure the house that he was not speaking of the honourable private counsellors of the Queen who are sitting on the government benches today.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): If I used that expression, it is because I have been facing the hon. members opposite too long.

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): On this side of the house, there is not a single one.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRESENCE OF MINISTER FOR DISCUSSION OF PUBLIC WORKS ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question, rather in the nature of a welcome home favour, to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the importance of and interest in the Department of Public Works, will the committee of supply be favoured with his genial and benign presence when his supplementary estimates are under consideration?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is asking about what may transpire in the committee of supply. It would be more appropriate for him to communicate with the minister privately than to expect the house to deal with the conduct of the committee of supply.

Mr. Herridge: I must explain. There is more in this than meets the eye.

CONSIDERATION OF REMAINDER OF THRONE SPEECH ITEMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether he can give the house an indication as to when the balance of the items mentioned in the speech from the throne may be presented for consideration.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the hon. member put that question on the order paper.

[Mr. Brassard (Lapointe).]

Mr. Howard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member's question encompasses a bit too much ground to be answered briefly on the orders of the day.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—CONSIDERATION BY PARLIAMENT REGARDLESS OF B.C. AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Senate foreign relations committee in Washington has unanimously approved the Columbia river development treaty, and that the president of the United States has now asked congress for funds to construct the Libby dam as the first step in the implementation of the treaty, does the government propose to submit the treaty to parliament for approval in the near future irrespective of the position taken by the government of British Columbia at this time?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition knows very well what the position is at the present time, because it has been explained on more than one occasion. As yet Canada and the province of British Columbia have not reached agreement on this particular project, so it would be premature for us to take the step that the Leader of the Opposition has mentioned.

Mr. Pearson: Does the Acting Prime Minister not feel that as Canada has signed the treaty, and the United States has now taken the first step toward implementation, it would be appropriate to have the treaty before the House of Commons at the earliest possible date?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition knows very well that all that has happened in the United States has been that the Senate foreign relations committee has recommended to the Senate that the treaty should be approved.

Mr. Pearson: And money is being voted.

Mr. Green: No money voted at all.

[Later:]

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question supplementary to that asked of the Acting Prime Minister by the leader of the official opposition. Is the Acting Prime Minister confident that an agreement will be reached between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia with respect to the development of the Columbia prior to the conclusion of this session?

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Kootenay West has just as good an idea as I as to whether it is possible to reach an agreement with the premier of British Columbia on anything.

AIRPORTS

MEDICINE HAT, ALTA.—REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE REPAIR PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. W. Brunsden (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister's attention been directed to the dangerous condition of the federally owned airport in Medicine Hat, and has he under active review a program of immediate repair which will make the airport safe for landings and take-offs not only by Trans-Canada Air Lines planes but also by those planes privately owned?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, knowing the very keen interest of the hon. member in this airport I am pleased to tell him that my department has the situation under very active review at the present time.

TRANSPORT

METROPOLITAN TORONTO—REPORTED REQUEST FOR SUBWAY LOAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Could the minister say when the government will be in a position to make an announcement in respect to the application of the corporation of metropolitan Toronto regarding a loan for the construction of an east-west subway?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I know the interest the hon. member for Trinity takes in this matter, and I can inform him that it has been under consideration by the cabinet for some time. This will be a question for cabinet decision, as well as the application received from Montreal, and we hope that very shortly after the return of the Prime Minister a decision will be arrived at covering both applications.

FREIGHT RATES

GRAIN—REQUEST FOR DISALLOWANCE OF INCREASED RATES TO EASTERN PORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, on February 27 I asked the Minister of Transport whether the government would consider under section 53 of the Railway Act, disallowing the freight increase on grain moved from Georgian bay ports to the St. Lawrence. The minister answered at that time by saying that the matter would be taken under advisement. My question now is, since eastern and western provinces have indicated that they will ask the government to disallow this increase in freight rates, has the government now had an opportunity to consider the question?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): The matter is still under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Argue: Could the minister inform the house whether a formal petition has been received from the provinces in this regard, asking for disallowance?

Mr. Balcer: I am not quite sure, Mr. Speaker, whether a formal petition has reached the government.

TRADE

TURKEYS—INQUIRY AS TO QUOTA ON IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Cardin (Richelieu-Vercheres): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, or in his absence to his parliamentary secretary. Is it the intention of the government to abolish the four million pound maximum quota on the importation of turkeys from the United States?

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take the question as notice and give an answer later.

HUMAN RIGHTS

EDMONTON—STATEMENT ON REPORTED REFUSAL OF ACCOMMODATION TO U. S. NEGROES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday the hon. member for Assiniboia asked a question concerning a reported refusal of accommodation to two United States negroes at the MacDonald hotel in Edmonton.

The management of the C.N.R. advise me they have checked with the hotel and have been informed that the hotel management have no knowledge of accommodation being refused under the circumstances suggested in the question. The management further assure me that their hotel operations are conducted in accordance with the principles of the bill of rights.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

RESERVE MINES, N.S.—INQUIRY AS TO POST OFFICE SITE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) in welcoming back one Tory we have not seen in the house for some time. I should like to direct a question to him, the Minister of Public Works, and ask whether during his absence from the house he has been able to meditate on the problem which I know was vexing him before he left, of a suitable site for the post office at Reserve Mines, Nova Scotia, and whether he has reached a conclusion.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I did not realize until now who was behind the many, many letters, anonymous and otherwise, that I have received. I want to thank the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate for disclosing his hand. I can assure him that the matter will now receive just the same consideration that it would have received if he had not asked the question.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —affecting my personal honour—

Mr. Speaker: Arising out of the answer?

Mr. Pickersgill: Arising out of the answer.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member would have to stretch the King's English quite a bit to find any imputation there.

Mr. Pickersgill: With respect, sir—

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that the hon. member be permitted to proceed.

Mr. Pickersgill: With respect, Your Honour, I have been accused of writing anonymous letters—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and that surely is a shocking accusation for one hon. member to make against another. I wanted to assure the hon. gentleman that I have never, unlike some of his friends, been ashamed to sign my name to my letters.

[Mr. Balcer.]

Mr. Ricard: You have somebody else do it for you.

Mr. Speaker: Order. A question of privilege would undoubtedly arise if the answer were given serious construction, but I did not take it in that vein.

Mr. Pickersgill: Nor did I.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SARNIA, ONT.—INSTALMENT PAYMENT ON SALE OF LAND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could address a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in the hon. lady's absence, and ask the parliamentary secretary whether Dimensional Investments Limited made their payment which was due yesterday in connection with the notorious contract made by the government?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. John Charlton (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will get the information for the hon. member.

INCOME TAX ACT

The house resumed from Wednesday, March 15, consideration of the motion of Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) for the second reading of Bill No. C-73, to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. On reference to the clerk's roster I find that the hon. member for Essex East has already spoken in this debate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hon. gentlemen seem to be very sensitive today about something; I do not know what it is. My recollection is that yesterday I asked a question of the Minister of Finance with regard to tuition fees. I was not aware that a question, even though it may have been extended, constitutes a breach of the rules and would not permit a member to speak a second time. However, as always I am in the hands of Your Honour in this matter.

Mr. Argue: You have to be.

Mr. Speaker: I am afraid the hon. member whose intervention seems to have occupied almost two columns of Hansard will have to accept the record as being correct. It is true that he did ask a question, but I think in the circumstances revealed by Hansard and the clerk's record I cannot allow him the floor again.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it can be contested that I did not speak, because I was not even in the house. I intend to speak only long enough to move, seconded by the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier):

> That all the words after "that" be struck out and the following substituted therefor:
> "this house, while wishing to establish special measures in connection with tuition fees and non-resident investment in Canada, inter alia, declines to give second reading to a bill the provisions of which do not include any changes in the tax laws for the purpose of implementing the policy proposed in the supplementary budget in order to assist areas where there is a substantial degree of continued unemployment over the years."

The reason for moving this amendment will be apparent at once to the house. The view was taken by me on behalf of the Liberal party, at the resolution stage, that certain changes which the Minister of Finance proposed in the application of the Income Tax Act should be made by parliament and not by order in council. It is my view that they are of a far-reaching character and the terms and conditions of these proposed tax concessions are of a kind which should be made by parliament—

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: Here we go.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, here we go. Hon. members opposite are never very interested in points of order raised on this side of the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of Finance has risen on a point of order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has read and submitted to you an amendment to the motion for second reading. He is now proceeding to discuss his amendment. I suggest that if he has submitted a motion the motion should be read, because I should like to raise a point of order in connection with the motion. I do not believe the motion is in order as an amendment to the motion for second reading of this bill.

Mr. Pearson: Another gag.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Leader of the Opposition is continuing to make comments from his seat as though he were addressing others on the maintenance of the rules of this house. Nobody breaks them more often than he does. I suggest that he be told what the rules of the house are, because he does not know them.

Mr. Chevrier: You don't know them either.

Mr. Pearson: I shall be glad to make my comments while on my feet.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Minister of Finance has injected two points of order into the proceedings. I think it would be appropriate to deal with the first point of order now, or at the conclusion of the hon. member's speech, whichever is convenient. The question of relevancy is the same. On reflection, perhaps it would not be the same if the amendment were out of order and the hon. member were allowed to speak on it. I suggest therefore, we should deal now with the question whether this amendment is acceptable. I will hear the Minister of Finance on that point first.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): As I understand the rule pertaining to amendments introduced to motions for second reading, an amendment to be in order must assert a contrary principle. The form which is always followed in such cases, as I recall it, is "That the said bill be not now read a second time but that—". Then follows an assertion of the contrary principle. This is not being done in the present case at all. What we have here in effect is an attempt to say that while the opposition are in favour of one provision of the bill they ask the house to decline to give—they do not say second reading to this bill,—but to decline to give second reading to a bill the provisions of which do not include certain other things.

In my submission the amendment shows no adherence to the rule at all in this respect.

The scope of amendments which may be introduced on second reading is very limited, as you well know, Mr. Speaker. When one clears away the mass of verbiage here there are two things which stand out. The first is an attempt to preserve support for one provision of the bill, and then follows an assertion in very vague terms that the house should not give second reading to a bill which does not make provision for certain other things.

I refer to Beauchesne, citation 201, paragraph 12 where it is stated:

> An amendment proposing a direct negative, though it may be covered up by verbiage, is out of order.

I invoke that citation, but I also invoke the clear rule that an amendment is not in order unless it asserts a contrary principle, and I do not find this to be the case in the present proposed amendment. In any event, on examination it will be seen that this is not the type of direct assertion of a contrary principle which is required. The amendment talks about not giving second reading to a bill the provisions of which do not include certain things. That is not the form in which a principle contrary to that set forth in this particular bill, No. C-73, can be put for the purpose of the procedure applicable to amendments on second reading.

The final point I wish to make is that the concluding words of the amendment relating to changes which are said not to be included are not changes which are required in the tax law at all. This is taking the house into an area which under the provisions of the Income Tax Act has been conferred by parliament on the executive branch of government. These come within the regulatory powers conferred on the government by the Income Tax Act.

I refer further to Beauchesne, citation 202, paragraph 15, where it is stated:

> An amendment approving part of a motion and disapproving the remainder is out of order.

That is precisely what we have here, an attempt to preserve or approve that part of the motion for second reading which relates to one of the provisions of the bill respecting tuition fees of university students, while expressing disapproval of the remainder of the measure. That clearly comes within the ban set forth in citation 202 on page 170. It thus seems that on any one of several grounds this amendment is clearly out of order.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to say a word on the point of order raised in his habitual manner by the Minister of Finance. May I deal with the hon. gentleman's last observation with regard to paragraph 15 of citation 202 of Beauchesne at page 170. The minister says this amendment is out of order because it approves part of a motion and disapproves the remainder.

The hon. gentleman did not read all the references made by Beauchesne, nor has he referred to the other authorities. As a matter of fact this particular amendment is on all fours with an amendment which was moved in the United Kingdom parliament, and I have reference to it in Mr. Bailey's well known book "British Parliamentary Democracy" at page 90, where the author says:

> On the second reading the main principles of the bill are discussed. It is in order to speak about the methods proposed for achieving the objects of the bill or about alternative methods which might be employed. The debate might last only a few hours or it may extend over two or three days. Opposition to the bill may take the form of an amendment to the effect that the bill be read "on this day six months" which would, if passed, kill the bill, or by a reasoned amendment setting out the reasons why the bill should not proceed or showing that the objects of the bill could be achieved in some other way.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

It is important to note the particular amendment referred to by Bailey in this context, and I shall read the amendment here moved to show that the amendment introduced by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is on all fours with the motion which was allowed in the United Kingdom parliament. That amendment was a reasoned amendment to the national health service bill of 1946, and it was moved by an opposition member of parliament. It was in the following terms:

> I beg to move to leave out from "that" to the end of the question and to add instead thereof—"this house while wishing to establish a comprehensive health service declines to give a second reading to a bill which prejudices a patient's right to an independent family doctor, which retards the development of the hospital service by destroying local ownership—"

—and so on.

The amendment put forward by my hon. friend is in precisely the same form. This amendment says, in effect, that this house while approving the establishment of special features in connection with tuition fees and in connection with non-resident investment in Canada inter alia, declines to give second reading to a bill the provisions of which do not include any changes in the tax laws to provide for implementing the policy proposed in the supplementary budget so as to assist areas where there has been a substantial degree of unemployment over the years. The Minister of Finance says the amendment is out of order though, as a matter of fact, it is in precisely the form in which an amendment was allowed in connection with the national health service bill in the United Kingdom in 1946. On that score the Minister of Finance has not assisted Your Honour in coming to a conclusion with regard to this all-important matter—

Mr. Chevrier: As so often happens.
