HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

FOURTH SESSION—TWENTY-FOURTH PARLIAMENT

9-10 ELIZABETH II

VOLUME III, 1960-61

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE TWENTIETH DAY OF FEBRUARY 1961, TO THE TWENTY-NINTH DAY OF MARCH, 1961, INCLUSIVE

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

ROGER DUHAMEL, F.R.S.C.
QUEEN'S PRINTER AND CONTROLLER OF STATIONERY
OTTAWA, 1961

90205-6—139½

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, February 20, 1961

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

STANDING ORDERS

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD PEPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Margaret Aitken (York-Humber) moved that the third report of the standing committee on standing orders, presented to the house on Thursday, February 16, 1961, be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN AND BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING INVESTMENT AND OTHER POWERS

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-5 (from the Senate) to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FOREIGN INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING CLASSES OF ASSETS THAT MAY BE HELD

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-6 (from the Senate) to amend the Foreign Insurance Companies Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE MANUAL, 1955

Motion No. 47—Mr. Roberge:

For a copy of the new insurance coverage manual issued in October 1955 by the unemployment insurance commission.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have been advised by the unemployment insurance commissioners that these manuals contain operational instructions, that they fall within the class of internal communications within the department, and that on that ground they are privileged documents. In view of that I would ask that the hon. member consider dropping this motion.

Mr. Winch: May I ask the minister why there is so much secrecy about documents of this nature?

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member content to drop the motion?

Mr. Roberge: Yes.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE MANUAL, 1950

Motion No. 48—Mr. Roberge:

For a copy of the insurance coverage manual issued in January 1950 by the unemployment insurance commission.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): The same observation applies to this motion, and I would ask the hon. member to consider dropping it.

Mr. Winch: May I ask the same question? Why is there so much secrecy about these documents?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I ask the minister to let this motion stand? His suggestion that it has always been the practice to regard these documents as privileged is not fully accepted at this moment, and I do not think that is the practice, in the particular context.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The motion is not debatable. If the hon. member in whose name it stands is not content to have it withdrawn, it should stand.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, the hon. member for Essex East does not accept the minister's statement that it is a privileged document, I do not believe it is within the competence of the hon. member to reject the statement made by a minister of the crown. It is a matter for the disposition of the house.

Mr. Winch: In view of the fact that the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order; this is not a debatable motion.

Mr. Winch: The point of order is debatable, sir.

Mr. Speaker: When a motion is called it is open to a minister whose department is concerned to object to the production of a document on the ground that the production is contrary to public policy. It is open to the house to disregard that objection and pass the order, but it is not a debatable motion.

As I understand it, the hon. member for Megantic wishes this motion to stand.

Mr. Starr: Under the circumstances I would have to refuse the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to proceed with the motion?

Mr. Roberge: Under the circumstances I will withdraw the motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

ROADS TO RESOURCES PROGRAM, QUEBEC

Motion No. 49—Mr. Martel:

For a copy of all contracts and agreements entered into by the federal government and the province of Quebec with respect to the roads to resources program, together with copies of all riders and schedules pertaining thereto.

Hon. G. E. Halpenny (Minister without Portfolio): I wonder if this motion could stand, since the minister is unable to be present this afternoon?

Motion stands.

ORDERS IN COUNCIL FIXING DUTIES

Motion No. 50—Mr. Benidickson:

For copies of orders issued by the Minister of National Revenue since December 1, 1958, under the provisions of section 38 of the Customs Act for the purposes of fixing duties.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): This is acceptable, subject to the usual reservations.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if the minister would explain his statement, "subject to the usual reservations"?

Mr. Nowlan: I do not have to explain it; it is well known to the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a point of order. This phrase "the usual reservations" is, of course, an amendment to the motion, and an amendment to the motion would have to be considered by the house. There does not appear to be anything in this motion that would call for any of the reservations usually made, and if the minister is not prepared to say what is involved, then we are being asked to accept something blindly. We should be either told what the reservation is or the motion should be dealt with as it stands.

Mr. Nowlan: This is not debatable. When the hon. member was sitting here he used the expression many times. He knows full well what is meant by that expression. He is simply putting on an act at the moment. It may be that privileged departmental documents are involved. I do not know what is involved in this motion and I am therefore accepting it subject to the rules and practices of this house.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister has seen fit to make a statement about me personally which is in fact completely untrue. I never used this phrase "subject to the usual reservations". This phrase was not used until the present government came into office. It is an innovation which I suggest is a bad practice, to which I have once or twice before taken exception and to which I take the strongest possible exception now. Either the motion should be put as is or the minister should make a formal amendment.

Mr. Cardiff: Go back through Hansard and you will find plenty of cases.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not that phrase.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member takes exception, as a point of order, that in effect the minister proposes a qualification to the order which the house is asked to make, and that in doing so he is proposing an amendment to the motion itself which would have to be proceeded with in the ordinary way.

I think there is some substance to that point of order. We have adopted the practice here of accepting the reservation expressed by a minister and putting the motion subject to that reservation. I think that procedure either implies the unanimous consent of the house—and it is on that basis that I have proceeded in the past—or it implies that the house unanimously accepts the limitation as part of the motion. If hon. members want to go through the full process, I suppose there is a point to be considered. Perhaps the motion might stand today and I will consider the matter and ascertain whether the practice we have been following is, in fact, contrary to our standing orders.

Mr. Nowlan: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I simply say that it is the practice that has been followed ever since I have been in this House of Commons and it had been followed for years prior to that time. The house has, of course, no right to pass an order which is contrary to the practice and the conventions which have been established by it. That is all that was said, namely that we accept this order subject to the usual reservations, whatever they may be in the particular instance of this particular order. There may be no reservations, or there may be reservations. It is impossible to decide that matter until one goes through the whole file. Whether the order is called today or a week from now, the same reservation will be taken.

Mr. Speaker: We have been following this practice, but as the point is taken formally, I shall deal with it on the next occasion when these motions come up for consideration.

Motion stands.

CAUSEWAY CONSTRUCTION, P.E.I.-N.B.

Motion No. 51—Mr. Robichaud:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged from September 1, 1960, to date, between the federal government or any agency or department thereof, with the government of the province of Prince Edward Island, in connection with the construction of the proposed causeway across Northumberland strait to link Prince Edward Island with New Brunswick.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very happy to accept this order with the usual reservation; but to save the time of the house and for the information of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate I may say that the usual reservation is that we are required under the rules of the house or the practice of the house to get the consent of the province. In this case it is the province of Prince Edward Island. Perhaps that statement will satisfy the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

Mr. Speaker: The minister has indicated that the motion is acceptable, subject to the limitation that the consent of one party to the correspondence, namely the province, be obtained before the order be filed. Subject to that reservation or limitation expressed by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

MUNICIPAL HOUSING DEVELOPMENT, TECK MUNICIPALITY, ONT.

Motion No. 52—Mr. Peters:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged between the federal government and the council of the municipality of Teck, relating to a proposed municipal housing development.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this motion is accepted without reservation, because the same practice does not apply to municipalities.

Motion agreed to.

FEDERAL BUILDING, KIRKLAND LAKE, ONT.

Motion No. 53—Mr. Peters:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged between the federal government and the municipal council of the township of Teck, concerning the building of a new federal building in Kirkland Lake.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this motion is also accepted, and perhaps no explanation is necessary.

Motion agreed to.

CAMPBELLTON-CROSS POINT BRIDGE

Motion No. 55—Mr. Robichaud:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged since June 21, 1957, between the Department of Public Works and any individual, engineering consultant firms or others in connection with plans and specifications for the Campbellton-Cross Point bridge, including correspondence exchanged with any groups or syndicate prior to the approval of the project and up to this date.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this motion is accepted on the understanding that correspondence, between the engineering consultants employed by the government and any group or syndicate should be considered privileged, as it is departmental correspondence and is privileged.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the limitation expressed by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No; on division.

Motion agreed to.

REMOVAL OF GENERAL MOTORS PLANT FROM WINDSOR

Motion No. 56—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

For a copy of any written communication or a record of any exchange between the government and General Motors on the subject of an unfounded report of a removal of General Motors plant from Windsor.

Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there is no objection to this question, except that my instructions are that it should be accepted with the usual reservations. If the hon. member objects to that I shall have to ask him to let it stand.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In view of that, will the hon. lady kindly let it stand?

Motion stands.

INCOME TAX

REPORTED STATEMENT BY MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the acting prime minister, who I assume is the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). I wonder whether the minister has seen a reported statement by his colleague the Minister of National Revenue, who sits with him traditionally on budget preparation committees, and whether he concurs in the statement reported to have been made by the Minister of National Revenue in London the other day, that in the next budget income tax increases are more likely than reductions, and that the next budget would undoubtedly have a deficit.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member could scarcely find out what the next budget will contain by asking a question on orders of the day, and it seems to me that is the purport of his question.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, surely the hon. member's question is in order, in view of the statement reported to have been made on this particular matter by the Minister of National Revenue.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is a well established custom that there shall be no budget leaks before the budget is made public. Here was a very definite statement by the Minister of National Revenue as to the contents of the next budget.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is not on a point of order. If the hon. member's question relates to whether a statement made by the Minister of National Revenue was a declaration of government policy, I suppose it could be asked.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I had better answer this question, since I am the one to whom reference is made. In the first place, there could be no budget leak in view of the fact that due to the opposition we have not yet passed the budget that was brought down in December. Therefore it would be rather difficult to deal with future budgets.

What I said was this. I have the text in front of me, and this was a prepared text:

> I think in the present state of international unrest and uncertainty one would not expect the government to substantially cut its expenditures—at this time.

I do not think that is a statement of budget policy. I repeat what I said:

> I think in the present state of international unrest and uncertainty one would not expect the government to substantially cut its expenditures—

I was not talking about income tax.

> —at this time.

It is true that afterwards I was asked by someone in an off the cuff reference as to the chances of increased taxes. I said that in view of the unrest of the day, the Congo situation and all the uncertainties with which the government was confronted, one might also assume that increases were almost as likely as decreases. Again, if that is a statement of government policy which, of course, it is not, then goodness help the government that makes such a statement of policy.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just loose talk.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

UNITED NATIONS

CONGO—INQUIRY AS TO SUPPORT FOR GHANA PROPOSALS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the report from the United Nations secretary general's representative in the Congo to the effect that at least seven political prisoners have been deported to Mr. Kalonji's secessionist mining state and that three are rumoured to have been killed, all this indicating once again that the present United Nations command in the Congo has failed in its mission of bringing peace to that troubled land, will the government back the plan of the president of our sister commonwealth nation of Ghana, Mr. Nkrumah, that a new all-African United Nations command take over the Congo, disarm Congolese troups, free political prisoners and convene parliament?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs): I thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of this question, but in the circumstances I am sure he will appreciate that without in any way accepting his preamble to the question as a statement of fact, the only proper course would be to bring this to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him to make a statement or reply on his return.

CONGO—CONSIDERATION AT SPECIAL OR GENERAL ASSEMBLY MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): In the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I should like to direct a question to his parliamentary assistant, or to his deputy at the United Nations. Is any consideration being given to the report that a special meeting of the United Nations may be called to deal with the Congo situation and, if not, does the hon. gentleman anticipate that at the reconvened general meeting, which will take place on March 7, the Congo situation will be the first issue to be considered?

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs): In reply to the first part of the question may I say I should like to have that stand until the return of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. With regard to the second part of the question, our information is that the United Nations general assembly will be reconvened on March 7 and I would think it very likely that the question of the Congo would be discussed at that time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR EARLY DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the answer just given me by the parliamentary secretary to the minister of external affairs, and in view of the information that there is no knowledge about any special session of the general assembly of the United Nations but that he expects the assembly will reconvene on March 7, is any consideration being given by the government to the holding of one or two days' discussion in this house on foreign affairs prior to the reconvening of the fifteenth general assembly on March 7?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there was not very much encouragement given to such proceeding as a result of the government's attempt to accommodate the similar request made in this house a couple of months ago. However, if there is a request, apart from the debate that will no doubt take place on the reference of the department's estimates to the standing committee on external affairs, that can be taken into consideration and the leader of the house can take note of the request.

Mr. Winch: I am sorry; may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether I understand from the reply he gave me that the government will give consideration to the house discussing international affairs prior to the March 7 reconvening of the United Nations if the official opposition will play ball and allow it?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, in my answer I drew attention to what happened on the last occasion that such a request was made—

Mr. Winch: That was not our fault.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —by the opposition. A date was set aside for the purpose of accommodating the request; then on that occasion the official opposition took a position which precluded the debate from proceeding. On that occasion the hon. member had made a similar request, and I indicated that consideration could be given to his request on this occasion, with a recollection of what had happened on the last occasion.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): On a point of order, since the minister has seen fit to elaborate on this matter, I should like to say, as the minister knows perfectly well, that the circumstances surrounding the proposal for a debate on external affairs last time were such as to make that debate completely ineffective and that was why we objected to it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That was not the reason given by the official opposition at all.

Mr. Winch: That is not an answer. My question is—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has had one supplementary. If he has not got it clarified now I think we might pass on to orders of the day.

SHIPPING

NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR ICEBREAKER TO RELIEVE FLOOD CONDITIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister inform the house whether he has received any request from Saint John or Fredericton that a government icebreaker be sent up the Saint John river as far as Fredericton in order to relieve heavy flood conditions expected in that area with the thaw. If so, has any decision been reached by his department in the matter?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): No such request has reached my office yet.

COMBINES

INQUIRY AS TO INVESTIGATION OF ELECTRICAL COMPANIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that senior officials of a number of companies in the United States have been imprisoned and fined for violation of the law with respect to their monopoly practices, has the minister instructed officials of the Combines Investigation Act administration to commence an investigation to ascertain whether the subsidiaries of these companies in Canada are guilty of the same practices?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): I wish to thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of this question. I can assure him that it is not necessary for me to give special instructions to the officials of the combines investigation branch in order to ensure that those officials are on the lookout for any improper or monopolistic practices.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO REPORTED CHANGE OF ROUTE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works and ask whether he has approved the proposed route of the trans-Canada highway in the province of Quebec as recommended by the provincial authorities, the route which goes through Ile aux Tourtres instead of Ile Perrot.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): The decision in connection with the route of the trans-Canada highway is a matter for each province with regard to that part of the highway which lies within that province. We are asked to consent to the route on which they decide and, tentatively, we have consented to the proposed route referred to by the hon. member for Laurier.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question. Is the minister aware that one of his cabinet colleagues at a meeting in Dorion recently protested against this route? How does he reconcile this with the principle of cabinet solidarity?

Mr. Speaker: Order. On reflection, if the hon. member wants to ask a question on cabinet solidarity I suppose he might ask it.

Mr. Walker: I have not read the article, and hearing this at second hand from the hon. member for Laurier I would not accept it as a facsimile of what was said.

Some hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Walker: In the circumstances I will look into the matter in due course. In any event, I do not think I am called upon to answer a question which is, at best, facetious.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister a further question. Would the minister accept the statement as being first hand if I sent it over to him in a press clipping which appeared over the week end?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO ENLARGEMENT OF PUBLIC RELATIONS STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Can the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Agriculture say whether the minister is making extensive additions to his public relations and information staff?

[Mr. Fulton.]

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): I will take that question as notice.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. gentleman not aware of it?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE—SERVICES OF COMMISSIONAIRES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence or to his parliamentary secretary, notice of which has been given. This question is prompted by a communication received from the Canadian corps of commissionaires employed at the naval base, and also from the Canadian Legion at Sydney Mines. Can the minister advise whether his department is giving consideration to dispensing with the services of the commissionaires at this base, all of whom of course are veterans?

Mr. Egan Chambers (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): I should like to thank the hon. member for sending notice of this question to the associate minister, who is unable to be present in the house today. This question arises because of the study that has been going on at some naval stations to see whether a partial integration of security and firefighting services would be beneficial. At some locations this integration has been implemented; at others, one of which is Point Edward naval base, the responsible officers of the department have recommended that no change be made in the present arrangements.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

LACOMBE, ALTA.—REPORTED INTENTION TO MOVE STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. Speakman (Wetaskiwin): Is the Minister of National Revenue in a position to reply to the question which I asked on February 16 with regard to the removal of the CBX transmitter station from Lacombe, Alberta?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I do not want to give a formal answer to that question today, Mr. Speaker. I have a report coming to me in writing which I have been advised about, and I prefer to wait until I get the written reply.

SUPPLY

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT MONETARY POLICY AND DEBT MANAGEMENT

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, last week we learned that on January 15 in this country 10.8 per cent of the labour force were out of work; that this was the highest level of unemployment for any month since the war, indeed for 20 years, and that it is the highest level of unemployment reached in any western industrialized country.

It is indeed, Mr. Speaker, a sad and worrying situation to the members of this house and particularly, I believe, to the Minister of Labour, who has a special responsibility for employment matters. It is no help in finding ways and means of alleviating this situation to have ministers of the crown travel around the country and, instead of putting forth positive proposals to deal with it, making sneering remarks about the attitude of the opposition when these figures, so distressing to everybody, are brought forward in the house. The other day the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who I am sorry to say is not in the house today, had this to say in a speech at Arnprior:

> It is refreshing to see a man like President Kennedy face the facts before the nation.

It would have been even more refreshing after three and one half years to see the Canadian government not only face these facts but do something that would deal effectively with them. Until recently the government refused to see these facts, so obviously it was difficult for them to deal with them. In early 1960, when we on this side begged for action in this situation, which was serious enough then, we got reassuring statements from members of the government and we got criticism ourselves for daring to bring these matters forward as prophets of doom and gloom. The budget speech of the Minister of Finance last April is the best example of that kind of reaction.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was in March.

Mr. Pearson: In March; I beg your pardon. More recently, Mr. Speaker, we have had the Prime Minister's refusal to agree that the session called last autumn was in any sense a special session to deal with the emergency of unemployment, which was denied at that time. At present we have an obstinate and persistent denial to admit the existence in this country of any recession, even though it began a year ago and even though the President of the United States is not afraid to use that word in connection with his own country, where the situation is not as difficult as it is in this country in terms of unemployment and in certain other respects. Apparently, however, the order has gone out to change the tune in regard to ministerial statements, and this "go with the snow" motif has been dropped for the time being at least.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Except by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Pearson: The Minister of Trade and Commerce, in his speech at Arnprior a few weeks ago which I have already mentioned, had this to say:

> We are facing a difficult time and things are going to get worse before getting better.

The Minister of Public Works made the same statement, and over the week end the Minister of National Revenue said the same thing in London, that things would probably get worse before they get better. I should warn these ministers that on the basis of their own reactions to statements made on this side they are leaving themselves open to the charge of doom and gloom, of giving aid and comfort to the communist enemy, as one minister of the crown interpreted statements made from over here not so long ago.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the words, or some of them, may be a little more realistic now, but these words are not yet being followed by action in any way adequate to the present situation. Even the relatively timid proposals of the baby budget of two months ago are not yet implemented.

Now the government is apparently attempting a new tack by admitting the seriousness of the problem of unemployment, which indeed it is hard for them to deny in the face of the facts, but by placing the major share of the responsibility for doing something about it on everybody else but themselves. As the Ottawa Citizen of February 2 said in a headline to a statement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, "Hees Blames Canadians for Slow-Up".

The Minister of Labour has recently suggested that the government has certainly done its share in meeting the problem, and that further action must now come from labour and management. Over the last three years, Mr. Speaker, we on this side have put forward and have repeated suggestions regarding economic and fiscal policies which in our view and the view of many outside the house would have combatted unemployment and combatted recession.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): What suggestions?

Mr. Pearson: What recession?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He said "What suggestions".

Mr. Pearson: A recession which has resulted in 10.8 per cent of the people of this country being out of work.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He did not say "what recession"; he said "what suggestions".

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): The Leader of the Opposition misunderstood me. I said "what suggestions".

Mr. Pearson: I apologize. I thought the hon. member said "what recession". I am told now that he said "what suggestions". If he will read his Hansard he will find out about the suggestions, and he will find out more before this debate is concluded. It is quite clear, however, to any student of this matter that economic policy and fiscal policy cannot do the job alone, that they must work with and be co-ordinated with other governmental tools, that they must be supplemented by sound debt management policies to promote confidence in our financial markets, and by sound monetary and credit policies to make credit easier and cheaper at this particular time.

These are the two aspects of employment and economic policy that I want to deal with in my remarks and the amendment I intend to move. The Prime Minister told us last week that the labour estimates would be called tomorrow, so we have a right to expect a general debate on other aspects of the unemployment problem without delay, perhaps on Wednesday of this week. The best occasion to go into the whole question of unemployment will be on the estimates, which we expect will be taken up not later than this week. That will enable us to get answers from the Minister of Labour to the many questions we have and, furthermore, it will permit many members to take part in the discussion rather than the small number able to participate in a debate of this kind on the motion to go into supply.

Today, Mr. Speaker, as a backdrop and as a preliminary to the discussion of unemployment which we expect to have on the estimates of the department beginning on Wednesday of this week, I want to initiate a discussion of one of the root causes of our current recession and of present unemployment, namely, the irresponsibility of the government in the field of monetary policy and its incompetence in the field of debt management.

We have already criticized the government more than once in the House of Commons for its inadequacy in these fields. We have criticized the government for its monetary policies, if it has any monetary policy, which I will come to later; for its credit policies; for its debt management policies. That criticism has been echoed and underlined outside the house by bankers, by labour leaders, by financiers, by economists, by financial editors.

Specific and serious criticisms have been made by responsible persons against the government's monetary and financial policies, and up to the present at least the reply of the government to these criticisms has been that the government has no responsibility for monetary policies. When the governor of the Bank of Canada has made important statements in this and related fields, the Minister of Finance so far has refused to say whether or not the governor of the Bank of Canada is speaking for the government. Indeed, the minister has taken a very narrow, legalistic view of the responsibility of the government in this field.

The governor of the Bank of Canada makes his speeches, and he does not answer his critics because presumably he assumes that the government will do so. The governor of the Bank of Canada in Newfoundland and elsewhere has emphasized the danger of the import of capital from the United States at this time adding to our unfavourable balance, while the Minister of Finance goes to New York and emphasizes the fact that the government does not wish to do anything to discourage the import of United States capital for the development of this country. One contradicts the other in this field, and the result obviously is a feeling of instability, a feeling of uncertainty, a feeling of confusion in a field, that of bond markets and finance, where such confusion and uncertainty can do the most harm and where rumours and reactions can indeed be determining factors.

Because no one in this country is clear about what is happening, rumours obviously are rife. There are rumours of complete agreement between the minister and the governor, as indeed there should be, in regard to the content of the latter's speeches. There are rumours of serious division of opinion between them. There are rumours of divisions that exist in the cabinet. There are rumours that the governor of the bank has requested a series of controls which, to say the least, would have an unfortunate effect on our economy.

An economic consultant certainly not unfriendly to the government, Dr. J. R. Petrie, referred to these rumours in a recent speech. His reference to these matters is not only that of an expert but of an objective expert. He said this, and I quote from Dr. Petrie's speech of January 31, 1961, entitled "The Economic Scene in 1961", in which he had some friendly things to say about government policy in these fields. He had this to say:

> One is almost driven to the conclusion that we are creating a schizophrenic image as a result of Mr. Coyne's speech in Ottawa two weeks ago decrying foreign investment in this country, while the Minister of Finance stated the following day in New York that we welcome foreign investment. If Mr. Coyne really wants controls and the government gives in—God help us—then there could be a flight of capital from this country with disastrous consequences. If American investors pull their money out of Canada, it is not difficult to see a 10 per cent discount on Canadian funds—it could be even worse.

He went on to say:

> In short the kind of "cures" which Mr. Coyne is advocating seem to me to be aimed at curing the symptoms rather than the cause of our troubles. If the newspaper reports of Mr. Coyne's ambitions are correct, then the final controls that he wants will determine where we work, what we build, what we make, what we consume and even determine how we live. This to me, gentlemen, verges on dictatorship, and I believe that we should fight against it with all our resources.

Mr. Speaker, that is a very serious criticism on a very important subject. Another criticism came from another non-political source. It came from the president of the Royal Bank of Canada in a pamphlet entitled "Maintaining Canada's Economic Independence". Mr. McLaughlin had this to say:

> The soundest ground for the critics of exchange rate and monetary policy lies, not in second guessing the monetary authorities in the performance of their often unpopular public duties, but in urging that, if their operations were smoother, and especially if the direction of policy were made clear to the banks, the money market, and the public, a number of intermittent crises, and a host of relatively minor upsets in the market, would disappear.
> Under the present system, with a floating bank rate completely useless as a signal, the banks are in the position of having to forecast not only the course of the economy—that's our job—but also the course of monetary policy—and that I maintain is not our job. I realize that the same uncertainties regarding the course of economic events and changes in public policy have to be taken into account by the governor of the Bank of Canada. For this reason all that the banks can realistically hope for is that they may be told, not what monetary policy will be in the future, but what it actually is at the moment. They must be content with "spot" not "futures", so far as monetary policy is concerned. The trouble today is simply that they do not get even this.

That is another very serious criticism, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Would the hon. member permit a question at this point? As a newer member here in the House of Commons I am not thoroughly familiar with the control this government has over the Bank of Canada. Is the Leader of the Opposition seriously suggesting that the governor of the Bank of Canada should be summarily dismissed?

Mr. Pearson: If the hon. member will possess his soul in that patience to which it is accustomed I will be dealing with that subject later in my speech.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): A simple yes or no would answer my question.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important matter, and I propose to deal with it, but not with a simple yes or no, as the hon. member will find out later. Perhaps he is accustomed to dealing with these complicated monetary and financial matters with a simple yes or no. Perhaps he would do the same with the government if he finds that its monetary policy is wrong. I would ask the hon. member if he would answer that question with a simple yes or no.

These are serious criticisms levelled against monetary and financial policy by experts in the field who are not influenced in any sense, as I am sure the minister will agree, by any kind of partisan consideration. These criticisms should be answered. It is time the government dealt with this matter and tried to clear up some of the confusion which does exist in this country by a definite statement of government policy, which we certainly have not had. I hope the minister will take advantage of this debate and consider it as an opportunity rather than, as he often does, an irritation, in order to deal with this matter in a responsible, informed and definitive way. Perhaps he will gives us yes or no answers to some of these questions. His intervention in this debate will, I hope, clear up rather than add to the existing confusion and uncertainty.

Mr. Speaker, there are four areas of controversy in respect of this general subject. One is monetary policy; one is debt management; the third is investment policy of the unemployment insurance fund through the investment committee, and the fourth is interest rates on housing loans. It is not only difficult in all these areas but in some impossible to know who is responsible for what. In all these areas serious mistakes have been made resulting in financial losses; resulting in unnecessarily high interest payments by government and by private borrowers; resulting in increased borrowings abroad and thereby in an artificial maintenance of the high premium on our dollar. The mistakes that have been made in these fields have weakened confidence in the bond market; have slowed down the forces making for recovery in 1958-59, and have hastened the recession in 1960, thereby adding to our unemployment difficulties during the recession.

Before I deal with some of the evidence of mismanagement in this field I want to deal with the question which has just been raised by the hon. member who wanted a categorical yes or no answer; to explain the question of who is responsible, and the question of governmental responsibility in particular. Here the confusion is complete. There are different views by the government as to its responsibility in these different areas. They accept the responsibility for some of them and reject the responsibility for one of the most important. The minister must in fact know that the fiscal, monetary and debt management policies cannot be separated without getting into trouble. Any attempt to separate responsibility in these fields, in the words of Professor Gordon, serves only "to confuse both the understanding of economic policy and the working of responsible government".

The governor of the bank has perhaps unwittingly added to the confusion by giving the impression in some of his statements that he was independent of the government in monetary policy while, at the same time, his responsibility extended beyond such matters. It is not, in fact, his obligation; it is the obligation of the government to explain and defend, if necessary, these policies; I refer to the conversion loan, the investment decisions of the unemployment insurance fund committee, and fiscal policies generally. Hence with the silence of the government and the speeches of the governor, this situation with regard to the two responsibilities could hardly be more confused or more unclear and unsatisfactory.

There is no reason for this confusion in this field of responsibility, because under our statutes and under our system of responsible government the situation is clear. The conversion loan, which is one of the things I have mentioned, was, of course, a debt management decision. There should be no doubt about where responsibility lies there. It is the direct and exclusive responsibility of government, and I am sure it will be accepted as such by the Minister of Finance. In this matter the bank is merely the fiscal agent of the government and certainly cannot be blamed for any policy decision before, during or after the conversion loan, or on this matter of debt management, any more, indeed, than a deputy minister can be blamed for the decisions of his minister irrespective of the advice which he gave his minister.

The investment decisions concerning the unemployment insurance fund are also the sole responsibility of the government. The act is clear in that regard, namely that the investment committee is responsible to the government. The fantastic decision taken in the summer of 1958 to convert all the victory bonds of the unemployment insurance fund into new conversion bonds was essentially a decision of the government, for which the government must take responsibility. The responsibility is not that of the members of the committee, the chairman of which, of course, is the governor of the Bank of Canada and one member of which is nominated by the Minister of Finance, I believe, and the other by the Minister of Labour.

Then we reach the question about responsibility for monetary policy generally. In the preamble to the Bank of Canada Act, often quoted in debates on this subject, parliament has given wide powers to the bank, that is to say to regulate credit and currency in the best interests of the economic life of the nation. That situation is as it should be. The bank, like several other public corporations, however, has an immediate responsibility to the government and an ultimate responsibility to parliament. The governor and the directors are appointed by the government. They can be removed only by parliament, it is true. The budget of the bank is approved each year by the government.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Do I understand that the Leader of the Opposition is saying that the budget of the Bank of Canada is approved each year by the government?

Mr. Pearson: That is what I said, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Surely that is the case.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is the latest mistake.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps the minister will point out what the situation is when he replies. If the minister is now saying that the government of this country has no responsibility for the budget of the Bank of Canada, perhaps he will explain that statement when he speaks. Therefore, although the bank has been given wide powers and specific and important functions, the government, as we see it on this side and as we have seen it for many years, must accept full and sole responsibility for the way in which those powers are exercised and the manner in which those functions are carried out.

Surely that is what responsible government means. The idea that such an agency as the Bank of Canada can report to parliament through the minister without that minister taking final responsibility for its over-all policy, as contrasted with its day to day administration, is both inadmissible and unconstitutional. It would place executive power and responsibility in this field either in the hands of the legislature itself or in the hands of a public servant. This denial by the government of responsibility for monetary policy is merely an effort to evade an inescapable obligation.

That doctrine does not—and I will anticipate this criticism—involve, of course, any interference in the day to day management and operations of the bank. It does not make the bank a department of government or anything like that. The bank should be free of that kind of interference. However, it involves full and sole responsibility for policy orientation and policy content in the hands of the government. No royal commission and no government can change that basic principle of responsible government. That is something that could be done only by a change of legislation, and any such attempt would certainly involve a grave constitutional issue.

If the governor cannot agree with the general policy which the government desires him to implement, then the governor has no alternative, of course, but to resign. If the governor carries out the general policy in the monetary field without any indication of government disapproval, and as the government is responsible ultimately for monetary policy, I think the governor has a right, as we have, to assume that the government of the day is not opposed to the policy he has put forward.

That is the clear line of responsibility for monetary policy followed in all parliamentary democratic systems. It was made perfectly clear in the United Kingdom recently in the Radcliffe report with which I know the minister is familiar. The responsibility of the government and the powers of the bank in this country were laid down in the Bank of Canada act of 1936. The minister of finance of that day—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was before 1936.

Mr. Pearson: The Bank of Canada Act of 1936. When it was discussed in this house the minister of finance of that day, Mr. Dunning,—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The act was passed prior to that time.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It was not a publicly owned bank.

Mr. Pearson: I am talking about the Bank of Canada Act, 1936, as found at page 3620 of Hansard of June 1 of that year, the minister of finance of that day insisted that the government should be given adequate control over the bank. In 1941 the then minister of finance, Mr. Ilsley, on June 13 of that year in the House of Commons, as reported at page 3936, emphasized the necessity of control by the government over the policy of the central bank, and pointed out that a bank management unwilling to carry out government policy would have to resign. The same decision was taken in 1951 by the then minister of finance, Mr. Abbott, on June 20, as reported at page 4383 of Hansard of that year, when he said that ultimate responsibility must fall upon the government; and of course that is where it belongs and beyond the government, of course, parliament, if it desires to change the legislation. In the banking and finance committee of the house in 1954, as the Minister of Finance knows because he attended those sessions, the governor of the Bank of Canada expressed agreement with the interpretation of responsibility which I have just given.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): At what page?

Mr. Pearson: The minister of finance of that day, Mr. Abbott, reaffirmed that position before the committee, as may be found in the committee minutes and proceedings of that year at pages 714, 883 and 1348; and on that occasion that interpretation of responsibility was insisted upon by the hon. member for Greenwood and by the Minister of Finance himself—

Mr. Pickersgill: That is the present Minister of Finance.

Mr. Pearson: —as I should have said, the present Minister of Finance in interventions which in due course will be put on the record of Hansard. Nothing happened—and again I will anticipate what the minister will undoubtedly reply—in 1956 to alter this position with regard to responsibility by any statement on behalf of the government of that day. The then minister of finance, Mr. Harris, indeed confirmed the traditional doctrine and did not try to deny government responsibility. He stated in very clear terms, notwithstanding some misinterpretation that has been given to his words, that the government did accept responsibility for monetary policy. Here are some excerpts, to substantiate my statement, from a speech made by Mr. Harris on August 11, 1956, as resported at pages 7456 and 7457 of Hansard:

> In these circumstances, what kind of fiscal and monetary policies are appropriate? In the first place I would say—> —that government policies should not contribute unnecessarily to the increased demand for goods and services.

And this is important:

Then he said:

> The government is satisfied, and I believe that the vast majority of informed observers are satisfied, that under the economic conditions of the past 12 months it was desirable to moderate the rate of monetary expansion.

Those economic conditions were conditions of boom. Mr. Harris went on:

I know of no responsible person who argues openly for inflation as a solution to the problem of excess demand.

I need hardly say that a condition of "tight money" performs a very important function in our kind of economic system in present circumstances. That is because it compels the borrowers and the lenders of money to review their plans and, if necessary, to revise them. This helps to ensure that the aggregate of all spending plans is consistent with the aggregate production that is physically possible.

Then there is this paragraph:

It is right and proper that our fiscal system at this juncture should emphasize additional restraint in public spending wherever possible. It is equally appropriate that monetary policy should assist by exerting a moderating influence on the expansion of credit.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, was that not the acceptance of responsibility for monetary policy by the minister of finance at that time? The position on this side today is that taken by Messrs. Dunning, Ilsley, Abbott, Towers, Mackenzie King, Macdonnell, the member for Greenwood, the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). Indeed, the present Minister of Finance dealt with this matter with his characteristic dogmatic vigour—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Clarity is the word.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, he was very clear on this point, and perhaps he will reaffirm his support for this statement at this moment. If he does he will clarify the issues very considerably. In doing so, of course, he would have to contradict what he has been saying more recently. But this is what he said on August 11, 1956, as reported in Hansard at page 7459. I am sure the minister does not even need the reference:

The minister has a very direct responsibility—

That is the minister of finance:

—because the action taken by the Bank of Canada in this respect surely has a direct influence on the whole field of action and on the whole field of responsibility of the government in relation to fiscal matters.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, in relation to fiscal matters.

Mr. Pearson: The Minister of Finance continued:

I say, sir, that the government cannot shed its responsibility for full fiscal policy in the broadest sense of the word, and that must include the actions of the Bank of Canada—

Perhaps the minister will agree.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Go on.

Mr. Pearson: The quotation continues:

—even when, in a technical sense, those actions are taken by the governor of the Bank of Canada in the exercise of the powers conferred upon him by the Bank of Canada Act.

[Mr. Pearson.]

He said, even when the governor of the Bank of Canada acts in the exercise of the powers conferred upon him by the Bank of Canada Act, in a technical sense. The Minister of Finance of today, the hon. member for Eglinton then, insisted that the government could not escape its responsibility for those actions, and we ask the government today to take exactly that kind of responsibility. But the government now has a different view. That view was expressed by the present Minister of Finance on April 28, 1959 as reported in Hansard at pages 3098 and 3099, when he said this:

. . . in the matter of monetary policy this parliament has placed the responsibility and . . . power—

I emphasize those words, "responsibility and power":

—in the hands of the Bank of Canada. The government does not exercise any sway in the field of monetary policy.

In regard to something which is decisive and at times determining and always important in the whole field of fiscal and economic policy, the Minister of Finance today says that the government does not exercise any sway in the field of monetary policy. He says "We leave monetary policy and all it stands for", with its indivisible relationship to fiscal and economic policy, "in the hands of the governor of the Bank of Canada. Fiscal and debt management policies, yes; we take responsibility for those. Monetary policy", which is inseparable from those, "no, we take no responsibility".

I say that such division is impossible if confusion and uncertainty are to be avoided, though it is apparently now acceptable to the minister, and I gather it is also acceptable to the bank. I hope the minister will now accept, and not evade this ultimate responsibility by the government, and behind the government by parliament. I hope that in accepting it he will remove doubts, misunderstandings and uncertainties regarding the relationship between the governor of the Bank of Canada and himself, and that he will indicate his own position and that of the government with regard to positions taken and policies that have been advanced by the governor of the Bank of Canada.

After all, the minister and the government did not hesitate to interfere with the operations of monetary policy by the bank, so they should not attempt to evade responsibility for policy—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, to what is the Leader of the Opposition referring?

Mr. Pearson: I am thinking of the intervention of the government in the bank auction of treasury bills some time ago, which had an influence on the rate on treasury bills. The minister knows all about it. He knows all about the cabinet meeting which was held and the auction being postponed an hour or two so the government could make up its mind what to do.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Is the Leader of the Opposition saying that was done to influence monetary policy?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It certainly was.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Such nonsense.

Mr. Pearson: I say that was an intervention by the government in the operations of the bank in the field of monetary policy for which the minister said the government had no responsibility.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It had nothing to do with the bank operations.

Mr. Pearson: The minister can answer that point later. The government is quite prepared to accept full responsibility for the level of interest rates on housing loans. That is something with which one of my colleagues will deal in more detail later in the debate.

So much for the question of responsibility. Now I wish to deal with mistakes that have been made in policy which have had a direct and harmful effect on the economy, on confidence, on national development, on the recovery from the recession and hence on employment. The first evidence of such mistakes is to be found in the field of debt management. Of course we dealt with this previously in the house. More particularly there is the mistake found in regard to the conversion loan. The conversion loan was a bad mistake.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Nonsense.

Mr. Pearson: That is the general view held in the country by experts.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is not held by any expert. What experts?

Mr. Pearson: We could cite dozens of experts.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Name one.

Mr. Pearson: I will indeed, and I will quote some.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Not experts.

Mr. Pearson: That operation weakened confidence in the bond market and got us into monetary trouble. It was unnecessary, it was ill-timed and it was misconceived.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And costly.

Mr. Pearson: And it certainly was costly. Certainly the seventh, eighth and ninth victory loans, and perhaps the sixth also, should have been excluded from it. That would have saved the taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars and would have prevented an acute indigestion in the bond market at the time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Do you realize what you are saying?

Mr. Pearson: I realize what I am saying. Mr. Speaker, this sort of juvenile intervention by the Minister of Finance does not amount to anything in the way of argument.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You are making irresponsible statements.

Mr. Pearson: If we say something on this side of the house with which the minister does not agree, he keeps on throwing out these interventions of "rot", "rubbish" and "nonsense". I would ask the minister to stop using these juvenile tactics and get on his feet afterwards and explain where we are wrong on this and where the government is right.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes. I did not use at all the words attributed to me by the Leader of the Opposition. I simply said the statements were irresponsible.

Mr. Speaker: I understood the Leader of the Opposition to be complaining about the interruptions he was receiving. Perhaps the minister, if he has an interruption to make, would rise, as he has now done, on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: I was just appealing—

Mr. Macdonnell: Would the Leader of the Opposition permit a question? I do not think the hon. gentleman wishes to be unfair. I want to ask him if he wishes to leave the impression that all people of expertise in the financial field were critical of the conversion loan. Does the hon. gentleman not know that many high ranking people still believe this operation was fully justified?

Mr. Pearson: I did not state that all the experts were against it. I said there were many experts throughout the country who though it was ill-timed, ill-conceived and costly as an exercise in debt management.

An hon. Member: Liberal experts.

Mr. Pearson: Certainly not Liberal experts; people who are normally very friendly to the Conservative party. This kind of effort twc years afterwards to evade responsibility for an operation which went sour is not going to help.

An hon. Member: Throw him out. He is too young.

Mr. Speaker: I am not able to hear the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Henderson) well when he is seated.

Mr. Pearson: I am glad to see that the hon. member for Cariboo is still concerned about this matter, and I am sure he will wish to take part in the debate. I hope he will be given an opportunity, because this is a very important matter.

As to whether this operation was ill-timed, it was, of course, undertaken at a time when the bond market was weak. The minister will surely agree with that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I will not.

Mr. Pearson: The minister says "I will not". I thought the hon. gentleman might intervene at this time and say that. But this is what he said in 1959—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Would the Leader of the Opposition confirm the fact that he used the word "undertaken"?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition has the floor unless he has yielded it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He has yielded.

Mr. Pearson: I said that this operation was ill-timed, that it was undertaken at a time when the bond market was weak, and the minister said that was nonsense, or that it was not so, or something like that. Well, as reported on page 2411 of Hansard of April 9, 1959 the minister said:

> After some signs of strength in the earlier months of 1958 the New York bond market broke sharply in mid-June, and continued a pronounced downward trend to the end of the year. The Canadian market, with some variation followed this general trend.

I am grateful for that support for the argument I am advancing that this operation was ill-timed. I think, also, it was misconceived in its objective of 100 per cent conversion of the $6.4 billion of victory bonds, and I have already stated that some of those earlier maturing bonds might well have been left out of the conversion. Before the operation began those bonds were all selling under par. The government established an artificial market and offered to buy them at par during the period of the loan. The Bank of Canada supported the prices of the new bonds after the end of the loan which kept them at par. That, of course, resulted in a very substantial windfall accruing to—what shall I call them—some of the better informed bondholders at the expense of the taxpayers amounting to many millions of dollars. The high pressure campaign—we all remember it—was, of course, very successful. Many Canadians acquired long term bonds not really suited to their more or less immediate need for cash, and when they had to sell them they suffered heavy losses. Moreover, to ensure this so-called success—the minister insists that it was a success—unprecedented high rates of interest were given and a new burden was placed on the taxpayers. Oh, there were beneficiaries all right, but they did not include the taxpayer; they did not include a great number of the small investors, and they did not include the government itself.

Here is what Professor Scott Gordon has to say in his recent book about the conversion loan. I do not think anybody would suggest that Professor Scott Gordon is a Liberal or a Liberal sympathizer. Here is what he has to say:

> The real significance of the conversion is that it proved to be the beginning of a series of acts by the monetary authority which has produced extreme instability in the finance market. The conversion loan itself so racked the prices of government bonds about that they had to be regarded as assets with uncertain and unstable market values. The government bond market was changed from one where savers, make long term investments to one where speculators gamble on the next swing of the pendulum.

Now what about the management of the unemployment insurance fund? What about the actions of the investment committee of that fund, for which the government, we claim, must take responsibility?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? Is that the only expert the hon. gentleman proposes to call in relation to the conversion loan?

Mr. Pearson: Professor Scott Gordon is one expert. There will be many of them called before the debate is over. I do not intend to take up all the time of the house in this debate, but we shall satisfy the hon. member for Carleton; and he can bring his experts forward, too. The facts speak for themselves in this matter.

The unemployment insurance fund is another victim of the conversion loan and of mismanagement by the government. That surely has been documented already beyond argument. At the time of the loan this fund stood at $640 million in government securities, $300 million in victory bonds, plus $340 million in other long term government bonds and C.N.R. securities. The position, therefore, was highly illiquid at a time when new and serious demands were bound to be made on it, as anyone who knew anything about the economic picture and the unemployment picture would have known. The fund could have corrected its position during the period of the loan. It could have sold its bonds at par, bought treasury bills and short term securities, and thus put itself in a better position to meet those demands which were bound to occur in view of the picture at the time. Instead, the investment committee of the fund converted victory bonds into conversion bonds, more than half of them into long term 1972 bonds. Remember, Mr. Speaker, that this fund is no ordinary fund. It is a trust fund financed 40 per cent by industry, 40 per cent by the workers and only 20 per cent by the government. This is a trust fund, and it should have been considered as such.

The conversion policy followed was not, we claim, in the interests of those who contributed to that fund. In order to comply with government policy the fund had to clear the decks and get everything converted. Later the fund had to unload in order to meet its obligations, which were increasing, as the minister must have known they would increase, so in January of this year this trust fund, held in trust for industry and workers, had lost $27 million in that operation; and in borrowing from the government to meet its needs at the rate of between 5 per cent and 5¾ per cent during the two years it had lost an additional $1.7 million. When the full impact of the government decision taken on July, 1958 is known—the full impact of exchanging victory bonds for conversion bonds—the total losses incurred by the fund will be close to $70 million.

The government must take responsibility for this gross mismanagement, and that mismanagement should be investigated before we are asked to replenish the fund as, indeed, we shall be asked to do, because by May the fund will be very low indeed.

I want to say a few words about the operation of monetary policy generally. The Bank of Canada is required by parliament—and these words have already been quoted:

> To regulate credit and currency in the best interests of the economic life of the nation,—to mitigate by its influence fluctuations in the general level of production, trade, prices and employment, so far as may be possible within the scope of monetary action

That surely means, Mr. Speaker, that an active policy on monetary matters and expansion should be followed during recessions when production and employment are declining, and that monetary restrictions should be used in periods of boom, along with other tools of government policy, to prevent rapidly rising prices. Well, let us see what has been the orientation of our monetary policy in the light of that requirement in the Bank of Canada Act.

First let us look at the recession of late 1957 and 1958. During that period the money supply was not materially increased—I think by about $200 million on a comparable basis, over the preceding period, when the government put into effect monetary restrictions because of boom conditions. After 1958 forces in this country began to move for recovery; the economy began to get going again and ministers told us at that time that the recession was over. Let us look at this period in terms of monetary policy. What happened from April to October, 1958? We had the largest monetary expansion during that period since world war II, an expansion of $1.4 billion. That expansion was too large and came too late for the needs and stability of the economy, as indeed the governor of the Bank of Canada recognized in his report in 1958. Why, then, did it take place? It took place to help the conversion loan and enable the minister to claim that the conversion loan had been an unprecedented success. It was not justified by sound monetary policy. It was attempted for debt management purposes.

The next period is from October, 1958 to March, 1960, when the trend toward recovery was continuing, though it was weak and there were danger signs ahead, which we on this side tried to point out at that time.

The peak of the last economic cycle, the peak of this trend toward recovery, was reached, I suppose, in the first quarter of 1960. During that period of recovery and at least of incipient expansion, there was still excess productive capacity and there was still high unemployment, so that there was no danger of a boom like the boom we had in 1956. Yet, during that mild recovery period monetary restrictions were more severe than they were in 1956. Indeed, in 1956 the money supply increased slightly. But during the period October, 1958 to May, 1960 the money supply was actually reduced by more than $300 million, at a time when we were in only slow recovery and in no danger of a boom because there was lots of unemployment and there was excess productive capacity. Yet, notwithstanding that, the money supply was reduced by the amount I mentioned. The decline and dislocation of the financial markets after the conversion loan, as well as huge government borrowings necessitated by its past deficits, the great scarcity of funds and the highest interest rates since the 1920's, forced provinces and municipalities to borrow in the United States market and kept the dollar premium up. In short, Mr. Speaker, the recovery of 1958, greatly weakened by the restrictive monetary policy of 1959 and by the government's debt management policy, resulted in a loss of confidence in the financial markets. That helped to slow the speed and prevent the deepening of that recovery. Therefore from April, 1960 to the end of the year, beginning with the second quarter of 1960, we had this trend toward recovery reversed, and we found ourselves in another recession. In the second quarter of 1960, there was a drop in the gross national product which was the greatest in the post-war period. Yet, from April to the end of August last year, in the face of this condition, the money supply was kept almost stable.

From October there was a fairly rapid increase to facilitate the issue of Canadian National Railway bonds, and after that increase the supply began to decline again, although I confess nobody is quite sure where we are in that regard at this moment. Again, as in 1957 and 1958, the increase in the money supply was too late and was decided not by considerations of sound monetary policy but by the requirement of debt management. The inescapable conclusion that must be drawn is that monetary policy, for which the government claims no responsibility at all, has become a mere instrument of debt management, for which it admits full responsibility. When the government's borrowing causes congestion in the securities markets then the money supply increases; otherwise it is kept more or less constant, presumably to minimize the inflationary potential created not by boom and expansion but by sporadic and rapid increases necessitated by debt management.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the situation, as we see it, as regards the government's operation of monetary policy for which they take no responsibility. In short, Mr. Speaker, credit and currency have not been regulated as required by the act "to mitigate fluctuations in the general level of production, trade, prices and employment". The primary role of the Bank of Canada in implementing monetary policy has been subordinated to the requirements of its secondary role as fiscal agent of the government.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, that this is a very serious criticism but is it not confirmed, at least implicitly, by the governor of the bank himself in his speeches made as a public servant on matters for which the government, and not he, has the ultimate responsibility? For these reasons we think the content, the orientation and the whole question of government monetary policy in recent years should be investigated. Is it, for instance, wise to let the bank rate be determined by the average rate of treasury bills fixed by weekly auctions? Why has the bank never used the cash reserve power it was given in 1954, but has established a minimum liquid assets ratio which is not provided by the act?

Why, since 1957, has monetary policy not made the contribution required by our legislation to mitigate recessions, and why does the governor feel that there is no special obligation in this respect, as he said recently in his speech in Newfoundland?

May I say just a few words in conclusion before I move the amendment?

The general orientation of our monetary policy has been strongly and rightly criticized since the fall of 1957 by many, though not all, highly respected experts—bankers, economists, financial editors, financial commentators. More recently these criticisms have increased both in number and in vigour. We now hear persistent rumours that the government intends to set up another royal commission to investigate the operation of the Bank of Canada generally, and those criticisms. No doubt, if it is done, this device could delay for two or three years the solution of an urgent and important issue which no royal commission can solve.

In the present economic circumstances it is quite normal to expect criticism of monetary policy. Such criticism, if it is legitimate, if it is valid, should not require a royal commission but a change of policy on the part of the government. As I see it, however, that is not the most important aspect of the current issue. It is most regrettable indeed that the Bank of Canada has become the centre of the present controversy because it may weaken seriously the prestige and the authority of a most essential institution whose prestige and authority in this country since it was established have been strong and which has commanded the highest respect. Yet, Mr. Speaker, this danger, this unfortunate possibility, and I will go no further than that, became almost inevitable because of the vacuum created by the government's refusal to accept any responsibility for monetary policy. The central issue, then, can be summarized by the following question: Who is or who should be responsible for general monetary policy?

I suggest that we cannot wait for two or three years to get an answer to that question and to solve such a basic issue. I am quite sure that all hon. members in this house will agree that in our system of responsible government the general direction of monetary policy should not be turned over to any public servant. There should not be any disagreement about this because monetary policy is an essential and basic aspect of general economic policy which is indivisible from it and for which the government and parliament must take responsibility. I would be very surprised indeed if the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) did not agree 100 per cent with that doctrine. If the government does not accept this position, then we do indeed face a major constitutional crisis. So we expect the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) to make a clear statement on behalf of the government on this question during this debate.

The Minister of Finance, contrary to what he has said in opposition, has been contending that such an over-all responsibility has been assigned by parliament to the Bank of Canada. We do not accept that interpretation of the Bank of Canada Act because, among other things, it would be completely incompatible with our system of responsible parliamentary government. If the government maintains its position during the present debate, then the best way to determine this issue is to refer it at once to the banking and commerce committee which could have full power of examination and the right to call expert witnesses and which could begin its work immediately.

If the committee comes to the conclusion that under the provisions of the present act the government has responsibility, then let the government discharge that responsibility. If the committee decides that parliament has assigned complete responsibility for monetary policy to the Bank of Canada, then the government should take the initiative as soon as possible during the present session and introduce an amendment to the Bank of Canada Act in order to correct this fundamental weakness.

One thing surely is obvious. The present uncertainty and confusion must be cleared up as soon as possible. That cannot be done by a long drawn-out royal commission. It can be done effectively and quickly by the government either by recognizing now that it has the responsibility for the general direction and control of monetary policy or by having the banking and commerce committee investigate and report on this matter without delay.

As far as we are concerned, Mr. Speaker, we are convinced that the government has such a responsibility. We say that it must also answer for public debt management, interest rates on housing loans and the management of the unemployment insurance fund. We believe that the government has mismanaged this whole matter, one of such great importance to our economy and of particular importance to our economy at this particular time. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson):

That all the words after the word "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"this house regrets the refusal of the government to accept and discharge its proper responsibility in the field of monetary policy and its demonstrable incompetence to manage the public debt in the interests of the Canadian people, resulting in unduly high interest rates, erosion of business confidence, and consequent deepening and lengthening of the economic recession."

Mr. Fisher: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask your opinion of an amendment which has the house regretting its own demonstrable incompetence. I would draw your attention to the amendment. If you parse the sentence I think you will find that the way the amendment is now grammatically constructed we have this house regretting its own demonstrable incompetence. I suggest to you that this is quite apparent from the grammar of the sentence and it seems to me it would invalidate the amendment completely. I do not want to make any remarks with respect to the grammatical competence of the people who framed the amendment. I would appreciate having your views in the matter.

If you want to come down to specifics, I would ask what the "its" refers to. It is apparent that in the mind of the person who framed the amendment the antecedent of "its" was "government". However, I suggest to you that according to the structure of the sentence it must go back to "house". Therefore I think I have a valid point of order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on this egghead point of order, if I may say so, I may say I have always understood it is the normal rule of construction when there is some doubt as to the antecedent of a pronoun that the next immediately preceding noun to which it can apply is the one to which it does apply. It is perfectly obvious that the next preceding noun to which it can apply is "government" and that, of course, is its clear intent.

Mr. Argue: Did you draft it?

Mr. Pickersgill: No.

Mr. Fisher: On the point of order, if we are going to accept the argument of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate I suggest that the next antecedent is "refusal" which comes between the grammatical antecedents "house" and "government".

Mr. Pickersgill: I said the preceding one to which it could reasonably apply.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, from the official figures we understand that at the present time there are nearly 700,000 unemployed Canadians, or 10.8 per cent of the total working force, and ministers have told us that they expect the situation to get worse. Without any question, that is an emergency. Repeatedly during recent days we have heard demands from the official opposition that the government have a day's debate on unemployment. We in this group have sat here with bated breath waiting for the cannon's roar on unemployment. We have been disappointed. We have just finished listening to the pop gun in respect of one segment of the problem that faces us at this time. We were surprised; we were amazed; we were disappointed. We intended if possible to move such an amendment to the motion to go into supply, but under the rules we were denied the opportunity while the official opposition had the right to properly move a prior amendment. I am sure that the unemployed in Canada will not consider the effort of the leader of the official opposition this afternoon as taking full advantage of the time provided by the rules to deal fully with this serious question of unemployment.

As I have said before, this amendment deals with one important and somewhat highly technical aspect of the cause of unemployment, as has been mentioned by members of this group on repeated occasions.

Once again let me draw to the attention of the house the fact that we were pleased to note that the leader of the official opposition did again put forward one of these proposals which was made previously by the members of this group, namely, that this problem, and the report of the Bank of Canada should be referred to the committee on banking and commerce. There is no question that there is a growing demand in various quarters for a recognition of the influence of the monetary and fiscal policy upon the economic situation that we are suffering from today. That is clearly indicated, as the leader of the official opposition and members know.

There has been a demand from the president of Canada's third largest bank for a thorough examination of the financial responsibilities of the Bank of Canada in respect of the country's unusual financial structure. N. J. McKinnon, chairman and president of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, told his firm's annual meeting that such a study should be painstaking, deliberate and unhurried, in order to allow the most careful consideration and to reach wise conclusions. The heads of the labour movement in this country, including the C.L.C., have asked for a monetary inquiry. Canada's top labour leaders have called for a full-scale royal commission investigation of the monetary policies of the Bank of Canada and James E. Coyne, its controversial governor.

According to a report in the Leader-Post of February 2, 1961, it is stated that fiscal policy, no matter how good, will achieve little if monetary policy is pulling the other way. The report goes on to say that the central bank is apparently sticking to a relatively tight money policy when the opposite is required. Second, its policy has resulted in higher interest rates in Canada than in the United States, which has encouraged Canadian borrowing on the New York money market. Third, the report states that the instability of the bond market and the accompanying wide swings in interest rates must be attributed in part to the management of the Bank of Canada.

We also have Mr. Gordon, the well known economist who has criticized the present fiscal policy of the Bank of Canada, suggesting that this whole matter should be studied. We have had university professors from various parts of Canada giving voice to very similar opinions and criticisms. It is obvious that there is widespread nervousness and growing apprehension in regard to the effect of the fiscal and monetary policies of this government and the Bank of Canada, and a suggestion that they are not conducive to the solution of this very serious unemployment question.

Mr. Speaker, I must say that we in this group on these occasions have to speak more or less off the cuff. The only research department that I have is the member for Kootenay West, so I have to do the best I can without preparation. I will put forward in general, without going into detail, the views of this group with respect to this amendment.

As the leader of the official opposition mentioned, the government claims it has no responsibility in this field. We shall look forward with interest to what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has to say with respect to that statement. There is growing confusion and concern in the public's mind with respect to the delay on the part of the government to crystallize its own policies and attitude toward the monetary and fiscal policy. Therefore, although the amendment does not deal with our point of view as socialists, and I speak as a democratic socialist realizing that we are living in a sick society, we support the amendment which deals with one important segment of the problems that face us today.

This group are socialists in their thinking. Someone might say, what is socialism? We say from a philosophical point of view that socialism is the search for truth in all fields; the building of the good life for all, and the worship of beauty in all its aspects so far as creation is concerned. That is the sort of philosophic phase of socialism in which we believe.

What about the economic aspects of our socialist philosophy? As I said before, we believe this amendment only deals with one segment of the problem. We believe this must be related to the other segments of the problem if we are going to have any effective action in order to meet unemployment at this time. We believe in over-all planning. We feel there must be planning on an over-all scale. There must be a plan in respect of this policy; there must be co-operation between the federal, provincial and municipal governments, there must be co-operation between labour and management. However, in order for that to occur, or for it to be possible, it is necessary for this government, as a federal government, to give leadership in this field.

I have said that we are in a sick society. Sometimes when I read newspapers and much of the correspondence that I receive, and when listening to the debates in this house, I realize more than ever that we are living in a very sick economic society.

We have on that side of the house, Mr. Speaker, a government which is aiming to administer Toryism without tears. We have in the official opposition a group of kindly, well-intentioned gentlemen who are trying to put forward Liberalism with latitudinarianism. Then we have some who believe we can have socialism without sweat.

An hon. Member: With senility.

Mr. Herridge: That indicates the sort of opinion held by some members, and illustrates their concern. It also illustrates to some extent the confusion that faces people at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I said we were democratic socialists, and we believe in economic democracy—and I am speaking of this amendment—and it would be only in keeping for me to explain in some detail what I mean by that. Sometimes we are misunderstood. The public sometimes are not properly informed of what we say in the house and in the country. As I said before, we believe in economic democracy. We are democratic socialists. Socialism seeks to replace capitalism by a system in which the public interest takes precedence over the interest of private profit. I said "precedence"; that does not mean to say that there will not be private profit. The immediate economic aims of socialist policy are full employment, higher production, a rising standard of life, social security and a fair distribution of incomes and property. Who can disagree with those aims? No one, surely, can disagree with them. I even see one of the hon. members opposite apparently indicating that he does not dissent with that statement.

In order to achieve these ends production must be planned in the interests of the people as a whole. Such planning is incompatible with the concentration of economic power in the hands of a few. It requires effective democratic control of the economy. Democratic socialism therefore stands in sharp contradiction, let me emphasize, both to capitalist planning from which we suffer to some extent today as far as corporations are concerned, and to every form of totalitarian planning; these exclude public control of production and a fair distribution of its results.

Socialist planning can be achieved by various means. The structure of the country concerned must decide the extent of public ownership and the forms of planning to apply.

Public ownership can take the form of the nationalization of existing private concerns in the federal, provincial and municipal fields and co-operative ownership on a wide scale. As we have said repeatedly before, there is ample opportunity for what we would term legitimate private enterprise.

Mr. McGee: Will the hon. member tell us from what document he is reading at the present time?

Mr. Herridge: It is a very sound document indeed. I am reading from a document containing socialist first principles; I am reading in part, not in full.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Will the hon. member permit another question?

Mr. Herridge: This document is a co-operative effort. In this respect it is different from the policy of the Progressive Conservative party or the policy of the Liberal party. This document was drafted as the result of a circular sent to all C.C.F. clubs in Canada where these policies were discussed. Then, they were forwarded to provincial conventions and from there to the national convention where the document was drafted as a result of resolutions at the national convention. I note that the hon. member for Cariboo has risen in his place, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Henderson: I should like to tell you my side of socialism. In San Francisco one day, there was on the street corner a gentleman such as the hon. member for Kootenay West—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I am sure we all enjoy the interruptions of the hon. member for Cariboo, but at the moment we are dealing with Canadian affairs. I hope I may be allowed to proceed and to refer to this document where necessary.

Socialist planning does not presuppose public ownership of all the means of production.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Herridge: Oh, certainly.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Will he tell us what socialist planning has done for employment in the province of Saskatchewan, and for the growth and development of that province?

Mr. Argue: Unemployment is lower than in any other part of Canada.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What about the population growth?

Mr. Herridge: My answer to that question is that the present C.C.F. or socialist government was elected in Saskatchewan in 1944 and it has been re-elected by the people of Saskatchewan continually to date. I cannot take the time to go into detail.

Mr. Argue: At the last election no Tory member was elected.

Mr. Herridge: That is a good point. The people have not elected a single Progressive Conservative in recent years.

An hon. Member: And they will not do so in the next federal election.

Mr. Herridge: In reply to the hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker, I would say that our policies have had a greater appeal to the people of Saskatchewan than have the policies of the party to which he belongs.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What have they done for the development of the province?

Mr. Herridge: I leave that matter entirely to the people of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Henderson: The people of Saskatchewan—

Mr. Argue: Tell the hon. member for Cariboo to sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. Will the hon. member for Kootenay West continue?

Mr. Herridge: I rather enjoy these interruptions, Mr. Speaker. I did not hear what the hon. member for Cariboo just said but I suppose it was not of great importance.

Mr. Winch: If he does not listen he will not be back after the next election, much as I like him.

Mr. Herridge: As I said, I am dealing with the fact that we believe there is an opportunity for legitimate private enterprise or free enterprise and by that we mean enterprise that accepts its responsibility to the community and works in co-operation with the federal, provincial and municipal governments according to an over-all plan, which is part of our policy. Trade unions, and organizations for producers and consumers are necessary elements in a democratic society; they should never be allowed to degenerate into the tools of a central bureaucracy or into a rigid corporative system. Such economic organizations should participate in shaping general economic policy without usurping the constitutional prerogatives of parliament. That is why the socialist members of the group in the house—I refer to the members of the C.C.F.—are always among the first to protect the rights of this parliament and of legislature in general.

As a result of this economic democracy, which is the economic aspect of our philosophy, we believe that we can extend the individual freedom of all persons on the basis of economic security and increasing prosperity.

I have just mentioned these matters. I have not gone into detail on what we believe are the principles of economic democracy that are necessary to bring us out of the present situation or shall I say, to cure the present sick society in which we live. We admit that this amendment is a necessary amendment. It deals with one aspect of the problem but it is only a palliative; it deals with only one aspect of a constitutional disease.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me again emphasize that the members of this group are willing to co-operate and to support any immediate measure that alleviates, on a temporary basis even, the suffering of some Canadians from unemployment or ill health or the other sicknesses that prevail. We believe that what is necessary is a completely new approach and a new outlook to the problems that face our capitalist society.

In conclusion again, Mr. Speaker, let me re-emphasize our disappointment at the failure of the official opposition to seize this wonderful opportunity to deal in full with only the problem of unemployment,—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We are the only ones that dealt with unemployment.

Mr. Herridge: —having regard to the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are experiencing great distress and in view of their demands upon the government repeatedly in recent weeks for an opportunity to debate unemployment.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, in rising this afternoon to speak on this motion may I say that, for the sake of the record, I think it would be a good thing to put the motion on the record once again. It reads as follows:

That all the words after the word "that" be deleted and the following substituted therefor:

"this house regrets the refusal of the government to accept and discharge its proper responsibility in the field of monetary policy and its demonstrable incompetence to manage the public debt in the interests of the Canadian people resulting in unduly high interest rates, erosion of business confidence, and consequent deepening and lengthening of the economic recession."

I think any backbencher who rises to take part in this debate should first place on the record a few introductory words.

I do not think there is a member of parliament, irrespective of the political party to which he belongs, at the present time, or any time when we have had unemployment in Canada, who does not feel very sympathetic toward any group of truly unemployed people. I suppose all of us individually within our own parties have certain ideas and a certain philosophy as to what can be done in reference to unemployment.

As I understand the debate today, the official opposition has moved a vote of nonconfidence in the government in reference to its monetary policy. The official opposition says this government is the cause of unemployment. Therefore, I wish first of all to break down into three parts what I have to say this afternoon. Let us look for a few moments at the record of the past. Let us look at some of the things that have been done to encourage employment; and last but not least, let us answer some of the arguments put forward by the official opposition and the last speaker from the socialist group in the corner.

We do not have to go back very far, but for a few moments let us go back and look at the situation that existed. This is the argument. On the political platform, you often hear of the unemployment figures from 1930 to 1935. At that time there was unemployment in Canada. In 1935 the present official opposition took over the government of this country. I have not the exact figures at this moment because I, like the last speaker, did not have time to prepare a speech. However, I think everyone will agree with me that unemployment was very high from 1935 to 1939. In fact, it was as high as it was between the period 1930 to 1935.

Then, war broke out. When war broke out unemployment continued in this country under the Liberal party, which is now the official opposition. Let us move along. Of course, during the war years, when men put on uniforms and industry was speeded up, there was a degree of prosperity. What happened after the war? In 1955 members who are now on the treasury benches were in the opposition. They brought to the attention of the Liberal party the fact that there was a deepening recession at that time. They also set out the problems of unemployment.

Let us go to 1956 and 1957 with regard to this question of monetary policy. Anyone who was in business in towns or cities as well as the farmers, knows what happened at that time. At that time the Liberal party implemented a tight money policy. People who wanted to obtain small loans from the banks had to even cash their bonds because they could not obtain these loans. What did they do? I can only refer to the area I know, the city of Calgary. Money was so tight at that time that all the construction workers were on the streets and out of work.

It was rather shocking to hear the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) stand in his place today and condemn the present government for its monetary policies, especially when one looks back at the time of tight money in 1956 and 1957 and realizes that, by the deliberate policies of the Liberal party men were put out of work and were on the streets of this country.

As I sit in my place in this house it seems to me that the members of the opposition merely give lip service to unemployment. In fact, I honestly believe that the members of the front benches of the Liberal party stay up at night and sometimes they may pray secretly that the recession, if there is a recession, will deepen so, as one member of our party once put it, they can get their jobs back.

Are they really serious about curing unemployment? Do they suggest anything that would improve the economy of the country? After all, criticism is easy. But there was not one constructive thing offered in the speech today of the Leader of the Opposition. He did not suggest anything they would have done under the circumstances. In fact, it seemed to me as I listened to him this afternoon that his speech was completely composed of language opposite to what it would have been had he been in his seat in the government of 1956 and 1957.

I wish to come back for a few moments to the opposition's condemnation of the monetary policy of this government. I will leave that question for some other person in the party to deal with, namely the minister. But let us take a look at this question of a recession. The Leader of the Opposition said he was going to quote various experts. I take some comfort in the fact that if you have confidence in business in this country you can of course get business underway so there will be full employment.

In the Financial Post of February 18 last there is something I think should be placed on the record. There is an article by Mr. Dalton Robertson, who says:

Recession low-point in sight?

I will come back to this article. Every one of us is somewhat sympathetic toward the problem of people who are unemployed. I will digress for a few moments before I continue with the article in the Financial Post.

In the area of the Bow River constituency in 1957, when I first became a candidate for parliament, there was unemployment in the coal mines of Drumheller and Canmore. The Liberal party was in power at that time and there was no work in either of those areas. It was only because of the efforts of this particular government in expanding the coal trade that men returned to employment.

This is just one item, in connection with coal from the areas of Canmore and the Crow's Nest pass in Alberta, when 500,000 tons of coal were sold to Japan. The miners in Canmore were not only able to hold their jobs in the winter but also in the summer. There was full employment in that area. That is just one example of what this government has done.

In the article in the Financial Post of February 18 Mr. Dalton Robertson says:

> There are here-and-there signs that spring may come early on the business front. More life in a growing number of indicators suggest that the bottom of the current recession may be very close indeed.

That is the kind of optimism I like to read. On what does he base those remarks? He says this with reference to some arguments as to what this government has done about the unemployment problem in this country:

> Housing starts are now staging a surprising comeback after a depressed performance throughout almost all of 1960. December starts were up fractionally from a year earlier, January starts were up an estimated 5 per cent—a big switcharound from the 21 per cent, 35 per cent, 24 per cent, 20 per cent, 28 per cent year-to-year declines in July, August, September, October and November, 1960.

He goes on to say that because of the housing situation there is now an economic comeback, and he says there is a sign that the recession low point has been reached. Then he goes on to say this:

> Business inventories as a whole give signs of being worked down healthily toward levels low enough to spark some new production.

In other words, he points out that the inventories of business are now at a low level, so they can go into full production. Those are the signs in business that show, it seems to me, the Canadian people and members of this house that there will be an improvement in the employment situation. This is because of action taken by the present government.

Mr. Dalton Robertson goes on to say:

> Industrial stock prices, usually a portent of things to come, continue on the upgrade. At mid-week, TSE industrials were still riding about 3 per cent above beginning of the year levels and 14 per cent higher than at their mid-summer 1960 low.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

It would seem to me, reading this article in the Financial Post, that Dalton Robertson has faith in this country and is an optimist. I have always said, and I believe this, that if one business has confidence in another business, if industry of one kind has confidence in industry of another kind, that breeds confidence in the whole of the economy and in that way, with a healthy business throughout the country, we can obtain full employment.

The opposition points today in a critical way to the monetary policies of this government. Let me ask them this question. Did the monetary policy of the Canadian government create unemployment in the United States? After all, I think we cannot overlook these facts. The economy of this country, whether we like it or not, is somewhat tied to the economy of the United States. When they have prosperity, we have prosperity; when they have a recession, we have a recession. After all, because of our geographic situation, because of our ties economically with that country—and this is something that has occurred over the years and has been going on since the time of confederation; it is not something new—we must face the that that as goes the economy of the United States, so goes the economy of Canada. When the opposition points and criticizes and blames the monetary policies of this government and says they are the cause of unemployment, how do they explain unemployment in the United States? It seems to me that when we talk about unemployment there are a few facts we should take into consideration.

Mr. Winch: On that phase of the argument, would the hon. member tell us what is the relationship in percentage terms of the volume of unemployment in Canada compared with the labour force as against the unemployment figure in the United States compared with the labour force?

Mr. Woolliams: I have not got the exact figures, but I may say that I think the hon. member's question is a fair one. I think the figures from the United States show that the percentage is less, but it depends on how those figures are made up—whether, for example, the unemployment figure includes married women who have ceased to work and who are drawing unemployment insurance. From the figures I have read, I would say the percentage is a little less, but, as I say, it depends on how the United States figures are composed.

To return to what I was saying, it seems to me that it is not primarily the monetary policy which affects unemployment. We should look at trade itself, and at the relationship between management and labour.

We should consider the effect of the European free trade bloc and its impact upon the economy of the Americas. We should also consider the recovery which has been made generally by those countries which suffered during the war. Let us take a look at our trade. I have already dealt with one item, but let us consider the position with regard to agriculture. I was most happy to learn this month that there have been 60 million tons of grain sold to red China—that this government has been conducting an explosive campaign to expand Canada's trade with countries abroad. It is my belief that as a result of an expansion of trade we will arrive at a healthy economy and, consequently, at full employment.

Now I want to say a few words with regard to management and labour. It seems to me as I stand in my place and think about my own area—and all hon. members have their own areas in mind—that there must be a responsibility placed on both management and labour to appreciate that in order to enlarge and encourage our trade we must be in a position to compete with countries such as Japan and Germany, to name only two examples. Over the years, these countries have eaten into our trade. Let us take for example, the manufacture of nails. At one time we used to export about 40 per cent of our production. Today we import 20 per cent of our production. We have to appreciate, of course—and I know these facts because I have appeared before the tariff board in relation to this particular item—that the wage rate in Japan is 17 cents an hour as compared with about $2.63 in Canada. Now we know that if automation grows rapidly in Canada or the United States we might be able to produce these goods at a competitive price despite the difference in labour costs. But I have been to Japan, and I have seen the growth of automation in Japan. It is increasing there just as it is in the United States. Yet they are working with 17 cent labour and we are working with $2.63 labour. These are the facts with which we must come to grips. These are the practical things. Can we compete with these nations overseas when our wages and prices are so high? It would seem to me that our tendency to price ourselves out of not only our own market but the markets of the whole world is the real basis of unemployment. It seems to me that if Canadians could learn to compete in trade and sell their products not only in our own market but in markets overseas we should be able to attain full employment. This, to me, appears to be the crux of the whole problem. This is why I say there must be a responsibility placed on both management and labour to work together, as two groups, with the government so that we may still be able to compete in world markets.

It is possible to point out that our trade, in many fields, has expanded. But is that expansion as great as it could have been? Take the item to which I have already referred—the manufacture of nails. There is a tremendous market for that product all over the world, not only in the Americas but also in those countries which were laid to waste during the war. The hon. member who spoke from the corner of the house a while ago recommended a controlled economy, or a socialist economy, as the cure for our economic problems. It seems to me that in reply I should put on record once again the position which his supporters actually take in this regard. The hon. member and his friends talk about a controlled economy. As I have said on other occasions, I come from the province of Saskatchewan, and in 1944 when they took over there were approximately 11,000 people employed in the manufacturing industries of Saskatchewan. After the hon. member's friends had been in office for 17 years, or some such number of years, this figure had risen only to 12,000. This might appeal to the Liberals: the leader of the opposition speaking in the provincial legislature recently pointed out that the premier of that province had boasted about bringing in some 60 new industries, whereas, on analysis, it could be shown that they had not arrived on the doorstep at all. This, of course, is the only evidence we have of any socialist experiment in Canada. They talk about unemployment being least in Saskatchewan. I do not know whether that is correct or not, but I do know that more people have left that province in the last 10 years than any province in Canada, and they are still pouring over the border to Alberta and elsewhere. No wonder there is no unemployment there; they just do not want to stay there under a controlled socialist economy. Now, if one looks back, this is the resolution the C.C.F. party passed in 1933—I wonder if they mean it, and if this is the kind of controlled economy they are talking about. This is what they said then:

> We aim to replace the present capitalist system—

I am reading from an article by J. M. Beck and D. J. Dooley which appeared in the Dalhousie Review—an article entitled "Labour parties, new and old". Incidentally, this article might be of interest to the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Pitman); it spells out so well the funeral of himself and his colleagues in the future.

> We aim to replace the present capitalist system, with its inherent injustice and inhumanity, by a social order from which the domination of one class by another will be eliminated, in which economic planning will supersede unregulated private enterprise and competition, and in which genuine democratic self-government, based upon economic equality will be possible.

This is good:

No C.C.F. government will rest content until it has eradicated capitalism and put into operation the full program of socialized planning which will lead to the establishment in Canada of the Co-operative Commonwealth.

In the event, the C.C.F. party has not eradicated capitalism, capitalism in this country has eradicated socialism. The fact is that today in the labour unions people appreciate as never before that when management and capital harnessed properly together are making a profit, labour has a job and labour is earning salaries which make possible a higher standard of living. That is what is so contradictory about this resolution which was passed in 1933. But when they offered that policy to the Canadian people, we know the result. So they met again. They do meet from time to time. They met again in Winnipeg, in August, 1956, and they changed their ideas somewhat. This is what they passed at their last convention held in Winnipeg in August, 1956. I was not there, but they watered the resolution down:

The C.C.F. has always recognized public ownership as the most effective means of breaking the stranglehold of private monopolies on the life of the nation and of facilitating the planning necessary for economic security and advance.

This is refreshing:

At the same time, the C.C.F. also recognizes that in many fields there will be a need of private enterprise.

This is a complete contradiction of what they said in 1933. These socialists are now semi-capitalists. In fact, they are so capitalistic, Mr. Speaker, that when Mr. Fines made a million dollars as treasurer of Saskatchewan he went to live in a province under a Conservative government.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the hon. member, standing in his place in this house, said that because Mr. Fines was the finance minister of Saskatchewan—

Mr. Woolliams: I never said that.

Mr. Winch: —he made a million dollars. I say, sir,—

Mr. Grafftey: The hon. member has it all fouled up.

Mr. Winch: Since the hon. member has made that statement about a former minister of finance of Saskatchewan, I ask him now to prove it or retract it.

Mr. Woolliams: I am very pleased to answer. I said this. After the provincial treasurer made a million dollars he then went to live in the province of Manitoba, under a Conservative government, where he could keep that money.

Mr. Winch: I rise on a point of order; I think it is a genuine one. Because the hon. member—I am sorry—the member, in all his talk has been making not a speech but—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order.

Mr. Winch: —a charge against a previous minister of finance of Saskatchewan that he as a C.C.F. member and as minister of finance made a million dollars, I ask that he produce these facts or retract immediately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Nothing has been said about any member of the House of Commons here. The hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. Woolliams: I might say—

Mr. Winch: The man is a liar in what he said about the minister of finance of Saskatchewan.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order.

Mr. Grafftey: Withdraw.

Mr. Winch: I will not withdraw unless the hon. member withdraws his charge.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. We will wait for a moment until Mr. Speaker comes in.

Mr. Speaker: I am informed of a difficulty that has arisen in the course of debate. As I have it, the hon. member for Vancouver East, in referring to the hon. member for Bow River, used the words that "he is a liar"; and having been asked to modify, reconsider or withdraw that imputation, he has not yet done so.

The hon. member for Vancouver East is an old parliamentarian, and is familiar with the rules and practices of the house. From my experience, I know he has always been co-operative in matters of this kind. I express unhesitatingly my judgment as Speaker —and I have been entrusted with the responsibility by the house—that no hon. member should use such language in reference to another hon. member and if by any chance he does so, under whatever provocation may have compelled him to use those words, he should, on being advised by the Chair and out of respect for the authority of the Chair, do what he is asked to do regardless of what his feelings may be as a result of the provocation or regardless of the issues that may be involved between him and any other member of the house. What is involved here, what is at stake, is the capacity of this house to carry on its proceedings in an orderly and dignified way. The responsibility for seeing that that is done is placed upon the Chair and depends in the final analysis on all members having respect for the authority of the Chair, whether they agree with any particular decision.

As I have said to the hon. member, it is my best judgment that such words should not be used, in these circumstances I would ask him to withdraw them.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to you for having said that after my many years in Victoria and here, I understand the decency, the decorum and dignity of parliament. You were not here, sir, but the provocation was great. The charge which was made I knew was not correct. I tried three times to have it withdrawn. It was not. I then made the statement I did. The situation, sir, is rather strange in that the provocation was great. The charge was a lie, and so I called the man who made it a liar, when on three occasions I could not get him to withdraw his charge. However, sir, this I agree with. To me, the dignity, and the decorum of parliament mean everything. In view of what you have said, sir, I will, of course, immediately withdraw the word "liar". I am asking you, sir, to have a check made of the charges made against a former minister of finance of a province. How you can handle it as Speaker of this house I do not know but I ask you, sir, to study the record and the provocation and I will abide by your conclusion because I know you will do right. I hope that the hon. member who made the charges will have the same decency. I know the rules, sir, and without any qualification I withdraw the word.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the hon. member for Bow River is satisfied with the unqualified withdrawal of the words which were complained of and were used. If the hon. member for Bow River, in view of what has been said, wishes to modify his statements, he will have an opportunity to do so now.

Mr. Woolliams: It is not that I wish to modify the statement in any way. I think my good friend from Vancouver East, and I say that because I have always respected him, misunderstood what I said. He took the viewpoint that I had said that this man as provincial treasurer had made a million dollars. I did not imply that at all. I am not suggesting by any means that he made it because he was provincial treasurer. I am saying that during the time he was provincial treasurer he made a small fortune and went to Manitoba.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, do we have to sit here and put up with this sort of thing?

Mr. Speaker: I take it the hon. member is explaining the remarks which caused the interruption by the hon. member for Vancouver East. Did the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) have the floor?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I take it he also is satisfied with the withdrawal.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, I am.

Mr. Winch: In view of what the hon. member said, I would ask whether he is going to withdraw the reference he made to a provincial minister of finance?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver East will be able to raise any appropriate question of privilege, if what the hon. member for Bow River says is not in accordance with the facts.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, before I was interrupted I was being most critical, may I say to the hon. member in the socialist party, with reference to the controlled economy which they recommend. I had dealt with their philosophy in 1933 and how it was modified in 1956. Now I am coming to the third phase because this afternoon this party has put forward their philosophy as a solution to unemployment. The labour party in Great Britain followed the same policies and it was shown there that they did not solve anything. In fact, the problem remained exactly the same. The fact is that the labour party in Great Britain is now going through somewhat of a revolution. They realize now that the philosophy they once preached about the standard of living of the workers is no longer attractive because workers in Great Britain and workers in Canada especially have a higher standard of living than probably any other workers in the world. So the labour party in England has changed its philosophy and is now making a different appeal. It is rather ironic that the new party seems to be following the philosophy that the labour party in England is now tossing out the door.

Finally, may I say that I feel the question of unemployment depends on the question of healthy trade relations between Canada and other nations. We can only obtain healthy trade relations if we can compete with other nations with respect to the products we manufacture and the agricultural produce that we grow. As I said in the course of my remarks, we have to have a responsibility for leadership on the part of both management and labour. We must be able to compete or take part in the new European free trade bloc. We must learn to compete. We must be able to compete with those countries which have now recovered generally after the war and which are now making the same things we make and seem to be able to manufacture them more cheaply than we can. To me that seems to be the very crux of our problem.

To end where I began, may I say that it would seem that in the view of those people who have some knowledge of our economy, including the Financial Post which I feel in some ways can analyse the situation, the recession has now reached the low point, and it does seem to me that if at this time we follow a philosophy of confidence in our own economy rather than being critical we will once again bring about full employment in this country so that every Canadian worker can have a job and live with his family in dignity.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I do so because of what occurred a few minutes ago. I should like you to issue instructions that under no consideration can Hansard be changed so far as the speech of the hon. member who has just taken his seat is concerned. Would you take that under consideration as a question of privilege?

Mr. Speaker: Yes. The hon. member knows, of course, that Hansard is not subject to change. That is the rule. He should not assume that any hon. member will attempt to change Hansard. Unless otherwise ordered by the house the transcript is published as it has been reported.

Mr. Winch: If that is the rule and it is so ordered by yourself and will be complied with, may I then ask you to take under consideration something that has never happened in the time I have been a member of the House of Commons? An hon. member has made the charge that a man in the position of minister of finance of a province made a million dollars from his position. I ask you to consider that as a matter of privilege and to take under consideration whether such a charge can be made in the House of Commons and what can be done about it.

Mr. Speaker: If reflections are made on the character of members of the house that is, of course, a matter to be dealt with by the house. Statements that reflect on people outside the house can be taken exception to but that does not raise a question of the privileges of the house. The hon. member has taken exception to certain remarks which were made and which I did not hear. I suggest that he allow the matter to stand until the published report is available tomorrow. If he then finds that there is a question of privilege and he wishes to raise it, he may do so on the orders of the day.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, as the seconder of the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), I consider it a privilege to deal with the subject that he has introduced today. Before coming to my main remarks, I wish to make a very brief reference to what was said by the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams). With respect, I think perhaps he will agree that no great portion of the remarks he made could be considered to be directed to the amendment in a pertinent way. However, to the extent that he did refer to monetary policy, tight money and so on, I simply want to make an observation or two.

Apparently he wanted to relate certain situations to what he referred to as "tight money" in 1956 and 1957. I presume he had reference only to the first part of 1957 when the former administration was in office. He made some references to unemployed walking the streets at that time because of the tight money policy, as he described it. To put the record straight, I simply want to refer the hon. member to the latest monthly report and statistical summary of the Bank of Canada, that is for January, 1961. In doing so I wish to suggest to him that if he will look at pages 54 and 55 of the summary he will find figures there concerning the status of the labour force sector of the population.

I want to point out to him that the situation in 1956 and 1957 to which he refers compared with the situation that we are faced with today is as different as day is from night. Under the column headed "unemployed" the annual average for the year 1956 of those without work and seeking work was 197,000, and that is calculated to be 3.4 per cent of the labour force. The government, of course, changed in the middle of 1957 and the average figure of unemployed for the whole of that year was 278,000. The percentage of the labour force was 4.6 for the year 1957 as a whole.

I simply want to refer my hon. friend from Bow River to the latest figures for the month of January, with which he is familiar, and point out that I am perfectly sound in saying that the difference is as great as that between day and night because the total unemployment figure last month was 693,000 and works out to 10.8 per cent of the labour force. I do not think my hon. friend from Bow River has really looked very carefully at the rates of interest that were prevailing in 1956-57, to which he referred, or has in any way made a careful comparison of these rates with the rates prevailing for money since the new administration took office in the middle of 1957. From the end of December, 1955 to June 26, 1957, the treasury bill 90-day loan rates ranged from 2.56 per cent to 3.81 per cent during the term of the previous administration. I want to say that the maximum rate of interest on government securities to maturity that was offered by the previous administration was 4.3 per cent. Since the new government has assumed office government securities have been offered at an interest rate as high as 6.61 per cent. The treasury bill rate indeed hit 6.16 per cent for 90-day money only and 6.87 per cent for money offered by the government for six months.

Mr. Speaker, I also want to make a quick reference to some of the remarks that were made by the member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge). He expressed some surprise today that the official opposition did not directly refer in its amendment, and exclusively refer, to the unemployment situation. I am surprised that it would not occur to an experienced member like the member for Kootenay West that had this been done it might, in the near future, prove of considerable disadvantage to those of us who sit in opposition. The member should know that if a motion of that kind were made now it would preclude us from having a similar debate on a later occasion.

The hon. member for Bow River read some excerpts from last week's Financial Post, an article written by a Mr. Robertson, but he omitted to tell you that in that same article there is quoted the prediction that we may not have hit the low yet. Mr. Robertson referred to the "double bottom yet to come". If we, at this stage, took today full advantage of this opportunity to discuss unemployment in this formal amendment we would not be able to do so again at a later date when perhaps an even worse situation might exist. In addition to that I remind the hon. member for Kootenay West that it was not a member of his party who was the first member during this parliament to suggest that it would be timely to have the Bank of Canada examined in a parliamentary committee. I suggest to him, and I think he will find that I am right, that I happened to be the member who first made that proposal in this paliament in 1959. I repeated the suggestion the other day after the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) received some rebuffs this session in this connection. I suggested that if the banking and commerce committee was not prepared to take up this subject, then perhaps the public accounts committee could do so. I am referring now to the debate of February 15 last.

I now want to follow up the basic points made by the Leader of the Opposition who was suggesting that the cheap and easy money has come too late in monetary policy, and tight money came too early in the cycle. In addition the Leader of the Opposition indicated that it would appear that the Bank of Canada, or whoever is giving direction to the monetary policy, is giving priority to decisions related to debt management rather than monetary policy for the purposes of elimination of unemployment and economic stimulation. The Leader of the Opposition suggested that these two purposes did not appear to be compatible.

As the present administration will soon have been in office for four years, I want to review rather briefly year by year the role that has been assumed by this government in connection with what the Leader of the Opposition described as one of the major tools for coping with the difficulties with which we are faced. Even the member for Kootenay West referred to the failure of the government to properly assume leadership in this field, and admitted this very well might be one of the root causes of the difficulties in which we are.

As I have said, we are all familiar with the fact that a new government took office in June of 1957. We know that very shortly afterwards they cancelled some public works and defence production expenditures which, of course, it was their privilege to do as they had not been responsible for putting them in the estimates, and it did not seem to matter whether or not the administration was directing its attention to fighting inflation or preparing against recession.

I think it is interesting to review some of the public statements that were made by the new Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in the course of the few months following his assumption of office. It is obvious that the bogey to him in the ensuing months after assuming office was inflation, and it seems to be the bogey that has received the major portion of his attention ever since. This has received almost his undivided attention. I find in an address of September 13, 1957 to the newspaper advertising managers association of eastern Canada, delivered at Montreal, he is reported as saying:

> I said that it is the policy of the government to resist inflation. When the government is asking the people to exercise forbearance the people are entitled to require of the government that it do more than exhort them to productive and saving habits. Your government is endeavouring to practise what it preaches. Undoubtedly the full weight of government expenditure can, if allowed to run unchecked, let loose forces of inflation which are difficult to check. The new government was elected on certain undertakings, one of which was to eliminate waste and extravagance.

We know that toward the end of the year, December 6, to be exact, the minister had decided to give to the assembled House of Commons a financial statement. But in the meantime I think that some of his public utterances can very well give to us a clear conception of what was in his thinking in so far as monetary policy leadership was concerned. On November 22, 1957, as reported in the Toronto Telegram the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming), in an address the day previous, was quoted as saying as follows:

> This is no time to be yielding to panic...
> If this is a national emergency all I can say is that practically every country of the world would like to have a national emergency like it...
> We are told that unemployment constitutes an emergency. I say to you that while we have some unemployment and the government will seriously grapple with it, there is no emergency.

The day before his baby budget was delivered in the House of Commons he delivered an address in Toronto to students at Hart House at the University of Toronto. On December 5, he stated as follows:

> No one can fairly say there is an emergency.. Canada has no "crisis" or "emergency" in unemployment—

His colleague who shares with him responsibility for preparation of the budget, namely, the Minister of National Revenue, (Mr. Nowlan), the month previous, gave a speech in Halifax. I quote what his thinking was in November of 1957:

> He urged the people not to be alarmed by predictions of severe unemployment this winter.
> There was always seasonal unemployment, he said and there would be seasonal unemployment this winter—but the picture for the future was brighter than ever and "there is not going to be depression."

There are other ministers who, in the same vein, made speeches at this time and these are quite indicative of the feeling of the government five months after assuming office. One must, however, find a little bit of amusement in one of the phrases in the budget speech of the Minister of Finance on that night of December 6, 1957, because, as reported at page 2009 of Hansard of that year, he said this:

> We trust the committee will, however, recognize the boldness of the government's program and the extent to which it will contribute to confidence and prosperity.

I remind hon. members that the budget proposed tax reductions in the sum of $26,000,000 only to the end of the fiscal year namely, March 31, 1958. At that date the Minister of Finance, with the exception of one or two subtractions of projects, was quite prepared to accept exactly the forecast of revenues which his predecessor Mr. Harris had proposed in the budget of March of that year. Mr. Harris had in March proposed for the course of the fiscal year tax reductions of a value of $55,000,000 and he had brought forward social benefits such as increases in veterans pensions, war veterans' allowances, family allowances, old age securities, old age assistance, pensions for the disabled, the blind and so on which he estimated would amount to $133,000,000 in a full year in addition to the tax reductions of $55 million which were proposed for a full year. There was no suggestion that the new Minister of Finance saw on the horizon economically anything that justified any radical departure from the basic plans that were already provided by Mr. Harris for the fiscal year 1957-58. The Windsor Star commented on this matter after the accounts for the year were available, and on April 4 had this to say.

Mr. Pearson: What year?

Mr. Benidickson: April 4, 1958. The Windsor Star had this to say:

> When our P.C.'s come out squealing their well worn alibi, "We inherited the recession from the previous government," it'll be well to remember this: Former finance minister Walter E. Harris forecast a $152,000,000 surplus for 1957-58. His estimates stood up so well that even after digging into that kitty to keep their "promises" the P.C.'s were no worse than $28,000,000 in the hole on March 31, 1958.

Indeed in this house after the budget of December 6, 1957, had been presented the Minister of Finance was given almost an additional two months in which to think things over. On January 30, 1958, as reported at page 4019 of Hansard, he repeated:

> I have no reason to depart appreciably from that estimate—

The one provided on December 6.

> —and I think at March 31 government operations for the year,—

Then, of course, he was patting himself on the back.

> —thanks to prudent management, will show a respectable surplus.

This I think is about eight months after the minister had taken responsibility for the department and there is no suggestion there that he saw ahead and was planning for anything in the nature of which the Prime Minister soon afterwards, in the election campaign, called a slide.

I now want to come to 1958. Let us have a look at the election. The election was all consuming in time and I think it concluded at the end of March and the government was returned. After a long time away from his office the Minister of Finance was back on the job in the matters of monetary policy and fiscal policy. In due course he prepared a budget in 1958.

Mr. Pickersgill: This time he called it a budget.

Mr. Benidickson: Yes; this time he called it a budget. But he was not very much worried about the situation in Canada economically. In the course of his budget address of June 17, 1958, he said, "Oh, perhaps we are in a mild recession". And as found at page 1235 he said this:

—there are hopeful signs that we have reached the end—

We heard a great deal during the preceding months about public works which, it was suggested, had been provided in some way that was completely new and different from that in which they had been provided in the previous administration. I have here a comparison of the estimates, budgetary and other provisions, for public works programs. I have here the figures found in the blue book of estimates for 1956-57, 1957-58 and 1958-59, in what all members know is contained in one of the columns of a document placed at the back of the book. The heading of the column is "Construction or Acquisition," standard objects of departments. It so happens that for 1956-57 the previous administration provided more funds of this category—I refer to this make-work type of project—than was put in there in 1957-58. When one totals the whole thing one finds that the grand total for 1957-58 was $595 million. This was including loans and advances of a type that might establish work for our people if there had been an aim to create work in that climate. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Finance had practically no changes to make in this area in December 1957. In the following year, when he himself was doing the full planning, this was raised, despite increases in prices and so on, to only $635 million.

The interesting thing is that most of the increases that occurred in 1958-59 were completely with respect to projects that had been started by the previous administration. I refer to the St. Lawrence seaway authority, which had an appropriation that went up from $100 million in 1957-58 to $128 million in 1958-59, and the trans-Canada highway, which again was based on a formula established by the previous government, and which had an appropriation that went up from $30 million in 1957-58 to $45 million in 1958-59.

Those items have very little to do with economic planning on the part of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). Because those increases are approximately $50 million one can see that some of the other construction items were actually shaved, notwithstanding the recession on the horizon.

Let us go on further regarding 1958. We had a winter works conference held, I think, in July of 1958. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) addressed that conference and minutes were recorded. On July 14, 1958, in opening the conference the Prime Minister said:

Government Monetary Policy

I welcome this gathering, which I hope will recommend action to be taken well in advance of the winter.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) was interested in this conference, and after it concluded this heading appeared in the press on July 16:

Labour Minister promises prompt action on winter work plans.

Then the minister was interviewed in August and the press heading is:

Winter job plan ready for cabinet.

Again, in September:

Cabinet studies jobless.

Labour minister Starr said today a government program to combat winter unemployment now is in the hands of the federal cabinet.

But nothing happened. On October 13 the mayors gathered in Ottawa and tried to impress the government with the importance of going forward with some of the proposals that had come out of this summer conference. These included such things as recommendations for sales tax reduction, or elimination of tax on materials used in construction during the winter months. It was urged that there be accelerated capital depreciation allowances for winter plant improvement, and that there be initiated federal-provincial-municipal cost sharing public works.

What was the dismal result? We know that the program of the federal government in this period of economic uncertainty and prospective heavy winter unemployment was not announced by the federal government until October 31. The provinces had then to make a companion offer to their municipalities. In my own province of Ontario the program for that winter was not available to the municipalities until November 21.

I say there was abdication here of the type of leadership so essential to make the most of the situation then prevailing. The house does not need to take my word for this. I can cite one of the most respected bankers of the land in his day. Unfortunately he is now deceased; I refer to the former president of the Royal Bank of Canada.

He looked back on the financial record of the new administration in the utilization of monetary policy for the purposes of creating employment and well-being in this country. I quote from page 13 of the annual report of the Royal Bank of Canada which followed the annual general meeting of shareholders held January 8, 1959. Mr. Muir said:

Last year, as in previous recession years and while the economy was still on the down grade, I urged tax cuts by government and price cuts by business. Instead of tax cuts last year which would have encouraged business activity while reducing pressure on prices, we got increased government spending. Instead of an immediate deficit last year,—

Washington Visit by Prime Minister

This is the important thing:

—timed to coincide with the depth of the cycle, we find ourselves today with a delayed deficit which has timed itself to coincide with the present recovery and the emergence of a new inflationary potential. For it is the great disadvantage of government expenditure as a cure for recession that it is both ponderous and irreversible; it takes time to get projects under way and once started they must be completed.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I understand the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) would like unanimous consent at this time to make a statement on his return from Washington. We are delighted, of course, to see him back in the house.

Mr. Speaker: I gather from the reception to the remarks of the hon. Leader of the Opposition that unanimous consent is given.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON VISIT TO WASHINGTON

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am deeply grateful to the house for giving me the opportunity to make a statement on the meeting which the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green) and I had earlier today with President Kennedy and the Secretary of State of the United States, Mr. Dean Rusk.

I shall begin by reading the text of the communique which was issued at the conclusion of the meeting, for it sets forth in general the nature of the discussions which took place:

President Kennedy and Prime Minister Diefenbaker met today in Washington to discuss informally a wide range of international problems as well as bilateral questions of interest to the two countries. The Secretary of State, Mr. Dean Rusk, and the United States Ambassador-designate to Canada, Mr. Livingston Merchant, assisted in these discussions together with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Howard Green, and the Canadian ambassador to the United States, Mr. Arnold Heeney.

The President and the Prime Minister welcomed this early opportunity for a friendly exchange of views between neighbours, in a tradition consistent with the long and intimate association between the peoples of the United States and Canada.

The President and the Prime Minister reviewed defence and security problems in all their aspects. They reaffirmed their purpose to work together for peace and freedom in the world. They expressed their readiness to co-operate wholeheartedly with all countries which sincerely seek this objective whatever the difference in approach or outlook. They recognized the central importance of the United Nations, as well as the essential role of direct diplomatic negotiation, in the pursuit of peaceful settlements. They agreed on the need to work steadily towards effective agreements under international control in the field of disarmament.

In reviewing bilateral questions of interest to the two countries, emphasis was placed upon the various consultative arrangements of a formal and informal character which have been developed between the United States and Canada as a valuable supplement to the traditionally close and friendly relations between the two governments. The President and the Prime Minister noted with satisfaction that joint meetings are about to take place in Canada between members of both houses of the federal legislatures of the two nations.

The President and the Prime Minister reemphasized the importance of close consultation on economic matters. They announced that the joint United States-Canada committee on trade and economic affairs will meet in Washington on March 13. This joint committee at cabinet level has been of great value over the years in furthering understanding between the two governments on questions affecting economic relations of the two countries.

I wish now to elaborate on the text of the communique by giving the house something of the atmosphere and substance of the meeting. I would emphasize at once that I found on the part of the President and the Secretary of State not only an attitude of the utmost friendliness but an obvious desire to assure the maintenance and continuance of the good relations which prevail between the United States and Canada. For my part, having had this opportunity to sit down with President Kennedy in a common, informal examination of the issues which face our countries, I have returned to Ottawa reinforced in my conviction that with good will and constructive endeavour on both sides there is no problem which we cannot surmount.

Our discussion began with a general review of the international situation. Naturally, the house will realize that I cannot go into detail, but there are certain subjects that should be mentioned.

The problem uppermost was the situation in the Congo and in particular in proceedings which are now taking place in the United Nations. Canada and the United States share the same aims in this complicated and dangerous crisis. We are agreed on the importance of preserving the independence and the integrity of the Congo and on the vital necessity of avoiding civil war in that country. We are agreed that in order to keep the Congo out of the cold war it is imperative to support the United Nations fully. Only in this way will it be possible for the Congolese, in freedom and without violence, and without interference from the outside, to reestablish the internal stability of their country and to provide a new cement to the structure of their institutions so as to work out their political destiny.

We looked at the situation in Laos where Canada, as a member of the international supervisory commission, has had a direct interest for some years. There have been developments there over the week end. These and related developments were discussed, in general terms, with particular reference to the declaration of policy made yesterday by the King of Laos.

As to NATO, the President and I agreed that the United States and Canada, with all member nations, must collaborate in the work of building up the cohesion and unity of the alliance. I drew the President's attention to my continuing view that there are certain problems facing NATO which will require the attention of heads of government as soon as it is possible for them to be assembled.

In the field of joint defence on the North American continent we discussed a number of current questions, including in particular the Canada-United States defence production sharing program.

We also dealt in a general way with the economic field, not going into detail, however, because, as I mentioned earlier, there will be a meeting within the next three weeks of the joint committee on trade and economic affairs at cabinet level.

We discussed the problem of international surpluses and the food for peace program which is now also receiving the attention of the United Nations.

With regard to trade, I gave the President an explanation of Canada's view on trade between our countries and the importance which we attach to improving the trading position of Canada in relation to the United States.

We also discussed the organization for economic co-operation and development and I informed the President that the Canadian government would shortly be submitting the O.E.C.D. convention to parliament for approval. The President assured me that he shared the Canadian view regarding the importance of this convention which is now receiving congressional consideration.

Mr. Speaker, no one could meet with the President without being impressed by his broad and far-sighted view of international affairs. The President and his senior colleagues demonstrated in every way an understanding interest in the relations between our countries. The President revealed a ready desire to preserve the distinctive quality of the Canadian-United States partnership, with each nation discharging its responsibility toward the attainment of the common purpose and without the sacrifice of sovereignty by either country.

In the past we have had the privilege of hearing presidents of the United States speak to the Senate and members of the House of Commons. We have heard President Truman, and President Eisenhower, and I am happy at this time to announce that I extended an invitation—one with which I hope this house and the other place will agree—to President Kennedy on behalf of the Canadian government to visit Canada at some convenient time before the end of the current session of parliament. The President advised me that he would be glad to accept this invitation, subject to the determination of a time convenient to both our countries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The arrangements for the visit will be proceeded with through diplomatic channels. In extending the invitation I expressed the hope that he would mark his first visit to our country as President by consenting to address a joint session of parliament.

To summarize my remarks, I am more than ever convinced of the value of these informal meetings. There is something about our relationship which might well be a model for other nations in the world, as exemplified in the manner which was so evident today when we met together and discussed the problems which face our respective countries. Where there is disagreement we endeavour by mutual concession to arrive at a basis for amicable settlement, thereby epitomizing something which is so necessary in the world today.

This meeting should not be measured in terms of its duration or in the number of flags unfurled but in the opportunity it offered for better acquaintanceship, better understanding and also for making possible a discussion of common problems in a businesslike and informal manner appropriate to the closest of neighbours and friends.

To me this was a revealing and exhilarating experience. The President of the United States has the kind of personality that leaves upon one the impression of a person dedicated to peace, to the raising of economic standards not only in his own country but in all countries, and to the achievement in his day of disarmament among all the nations of the world.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I know it is after six o'clock but perhaps I may be permitted just a word or two to express our pleasure at this time at the Prime Minister's safe and speedy return and our great satisfaction with the message which he has been good enough to give the house about the results of his visit. I am sure all members of the house are particularly happy at the invitation which has been extended to the President to visit Canada. I understand the period is during the present session. That will give the President a good deal of leeway from which to choose a convenient date.

Washington Visit by Prime Minister

Like the Prime Minister, I think we are all impressed by the calm confidence and the sureness of touch with which President Kennedy has approached these grave international problems which confront him. It is a good thing for the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs to have continued a tradition of establishing close personal contact with the leader of the government of our neighbour, and it is a good thing that these close personal contacts now established can be supplemented by other machinery which has been set up over the years. We are conscious of the fact that a new addition to that machinery, the legislative committee of the two governments, is meeting at the present time. All this goes to show, Mr. Speaker, that there is no contradiction in the closest possible friendly relations with the United States with regard to matters of policy of joint interest and Canadian control of Canadian decisions in respect of that policy. There is no contradiction, either in Canada following Canadian policies but doing it in consultation and co-operation with her neighbour. Of course, we expect, all of us, that to operate also in reverse.

The Prime Minister was good enough to mention some of the matters which were discussed. I am amazed that in such a short time they could have covered so many important subjects. I confess that in my experience, in this kind of meeting, it would have taken us a few hours to agree even on a communique. Perhaps a communique was composed in advance, which is sometimes done. In any event, it is reassuring to know that the two governments are in such close agreement on these important things.

The Prime Minister referred to the necessity of re-establishing the independence and integrity of the Congo. At this time I cannot imagine any more difficult problem than that, and it will be solved, as the Prime Minister has stated, not by weakening but strengthening the United Nations and by keeping the cold war out of Africa; and by putting on African countries and some Asian countries the main responsibility for achieving this objective.

The Prime Minister mentioned NATO: I agree with him that here again the main thing is to strengthen, not weaken, NATO, in cohesion and in unity, but to do that in the light of the conditions of 1961 and not 1950, when NATO was born. I venture to say that if we were working out a north Atlantic agreement now it would not be in exactly the same terms as it was then, but the objectives must remain the same, the building up of collective action and collective security in the north Atlantic area.

The Prime Minister has talked about our good relations with the United States and the necessity for maintaining these relations. We all agree with that, I am sure. Neighbourhood, after all, Mr. Speaker, is a fact of geography, but good neighbourliness is a political achievement. I hope the Prime Minister's visit to Washington will strengthen and confirm that achievement.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, it is important to Canada that our Prime Minister and the President of the United States should have a personal relationship, and it is also important that the many outstanding common problems should be dealt with and solved to our mutual satisfaction.

I take it that the Prime Minister's visit to the United States was a very short one, and the opportunity he had to speak with the President was, I am sure he will agree, all too brief. I believe, from what has happened, this is just an introductory one. Although the Prime Minister made a rather comprehensive statement and went over a number of questions that had been discussed, the statement seemed to me to be rather bare of any concrete conclusions on a number of very important problems.

Apparently, there was no conclusion on the question of the arming of the Bomarc missile. Our stand in opposition to nuclear weapons in Canada is clear but this is certainly a problem that I am sure is in the mind of the Prime Minister. There was no settlement. The whole question of Canada's oil policy and necessary markets for Canada's oil—and this involves the United States—apparently has not been settled.

Although there was some allusion to the disposal of agricultural surpluses, the Prime Minister did not state any details as to the discussion of the way in which the United States has moved into very important markets of the world and provided part of their huge surplus food in those markets, at the same time making it more difficult for Canada to extend necessary food markets in those areas.

The Prime Minister went over a number of questions but he did not refer to any discussion of the operation of subsidiaries of United States corporations operating in this country.

A meeting between the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States is necessary from time to time and I am certain is useful. Any contribution that can be made, following these discussions, toward a settlement in the Congo will be a very major contribution to the peace of the world and to humanity. I hope that as this very difficult situation unfolds it will be possible to achieve an arrangement whereby African nations themselves may be given the main responsibility for restoring peace and order in that nation and allowing it to develop in freedom in the years ahead.

We shall certainly look forward to the visit of the President of the United States, and I am certain that all Canadians will welcome the announcement of the Prime Minister that at some date convenient to the President he will be with us in Ottawa.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

SUPPLY

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT MONETARY POLICY AND DEBT MANAGEMENT

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Pearson.

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I want to continue rapidly with this anthology of drift, procrastination and abdication in the field of monetary policy on the part of the government of the day. I was referring to 1958. I am not going to deal with the conversion loan. It was mentioned by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) and I know it will be referred to by others. I do, however, want to put on the record what the Bank of Canada had to say about their co-operation in this respect. We all know that this operation hogged the market to such an extent that municipalities, provinces and corporations were practically pushed out of the money market. The bank explains it this way on page 4 of the report for the year 1958:

> The degree of monetary expansion experienced prior to October 1 was substantially greater than would have been necessary or desirable for monetary and economic reasons alone but was, I believe, justified and unavoidable in order that a strenuous and successful effort might be made to deal with serious problems affecting the financing of the government's cash deficit and the condition of the public debt.

I simply want to draw the attention of the house to the fact that the amount of debt which will mature in less than two years is today considerably greater than the amount of the debt under two years prior to the conversion loan, so not very much progress has been made in this respect. Let us look rapidly at 1959. This was another year of hesitation, confusion and delay. I will just read quickly some of the headlines from the financial papers of Canada during 1959: "Organized Confusion", "Frenzied Finance", "Inconceivable Blunders", "Misguided Muddles", "Abdication of Leadership", "Gross Lack of Understanding", and so on.

We all know that this was the year when a new load of taxes amounting to $352 million for a full year was imposed upon the Canadian people. I want to remind the house that this government seems to be an Indian giver. They bragged a great deal about increasing old age pensions in 1957. At the rate of $9 per person the expenditure works out to about $100 million for a year, but if one looks at the amount of money that is likely to be brought in strictly for the old age security fund as a result of new taxes imposed in 1959 one finds that it works out fairly close to $200 million, so that for every dollar given in 1957 a tax of $2 was imposed in 1959.

Again, the same practice seems to have been put in effect in 1959 with respect to the unemployment insurance fund. Premiums were increased and it was estimated that the increased premiums would bring in an additional $97 million but the new benefits provided that year by legislation amounted to a calculated value of only $24 million, so that in effect another new tax was imposed amounting to the difference, namely $73 million. It would appear that in 1959 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) for a great number of months while the interest rate was rising to unprecedented levels did not seem to see eye to eye and there was a great silence throughout the land. In that year those normally friends of the government made such comments as the following.

The Toronto Globe and Mail said:

> —under Mr. Fleming the government "has not yet arrived at a fiscal policy . . . is simply struggling to raise money for a 12-month period".

Mr. Meyer, the financial editor of the Montreal Gazette, had this to say:

> The lack of leadership here—how more exemplified than by the continuing and unconvincing insistence that the government has not imposed a tight money policy—has contributed quite as much to the high cost of borrowing as has the rising demand for funds on a fixed supply.

In October 1959 the president of the investment dealers association said:

> The underlying issue is the absence of leadership by the government in monetary matters.

I go quickly to 1960. We recall that the minister, with great pride, presented a budget which he thought would be balanced at least to the extent of a surplus in the small amount of $12 million. Unfortunately the surplus seems to have been the thing that has disappeared with the melting of the snows rather than unemployment which the minister suggested would disappear when the snow melted in 1960.

We also find that the minister was wrong not only in 1959-60 but also in 1960-61 to the extent of 50 per cent at least in calculating the growth of our economy in real terms. We then had much fanfare about a special parliamentary session and accompanying that session we were to have a supplementary budget. I have indicated that there seems to be a tremendous amount of drift and procrastination and I say perhaps nothing demonstrates this more than what has happened during this session. We convened in haste and we in the opposition co-operated. We were asked to provide legislation for a productivity council. The council is not operating yet but the legislation was passed before Christmas. We were asked in the budget to provide double depreciation for new industries that might be established in depressed areas. All that has to be done in this regard is to pass an order in council. We have not got that yet.

So far as the National Housing Act is concerned, there was perhaps some opportunity for work-making features here. However, I want to remind the house that as recently as last July the government seemed to be wrong in its guess as to what would be needed in the housing field because the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Walker), who is responsible for housing, blamed the Minister of Finance for having to turn off the tap. According to a press release of July 15 the Minister of Public Works said:

> The present direct lending policy was restricted for fiscal reasons.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we know that in the months of July, August, September, October and November, 1960, housing starts declined 21 per cent, 35 per cent, 24 per cent, 20 per cent and 28 per cent in relationship to the previous year. This is the kind of forecasting as to our economic needs that we have been getting from the present government.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion that I cannot think of anything that this government has indicated to the Canadian people stood high, in its estimate, as an objective in finance policy, which this government has carried out. It talked about balancing the budget. We have each year had deficits of tremendous amounts. The government has said that spending should be reduced. I think the main estimates presented by this government this year in comparison to the estimates last presented by a Liberal finance minister are greater by about $1,400 million. Within a matter of weeks after taking office in 1957 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) rushed down to Hollywood, Florida, and made a speech in which he said that he was glad to be able to say that the cost of living had been checked. The cost of living index, when this government assumed office in June of 1957, was 121.6, and despite a recession we have the paradox that the cost of living index has gone up 8 points; as of December 31, 1960 the index stood at 129.6.

Mr. Speaker, I say that with this record the house and the country should be tired of the assumption from the minister that everything will come out all right, and with a bits and pieces form of legislation which is certainly not satisfactory. This thing has not been thought out in all of the years I have enumerated and the situation this winter is more serious than in any of the post-war years.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Will the hon. member permit a question? Would the hon. member indicate to the house why he did not make this speech during the debate on the budget which concluded only 16 days ago?

Mr. Benidickson: I thought the hon. member for Carleton was the one complaining that I spoke too long on that occasion. I knew that some of these matters should be reserved for the debate on the resolution.

Mr. Chevrier: This speech is perfectly in order.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, at this time we are being asked to condemn the government for its share of the responsibility for the economic conditions in this country. I should like, Mr. Speaker, to take a good look at the economic conditions of this country, but I should like to look at them through the very document which the opposition seems to regard so gleefully; the latest dominion bureau of statistics weekly bulletin dated February 17, 1961. This is the bulletin in which the figure on unemployment was given, and which contains, as well other very important features which indicate a very sound situation in this country but which were overlooked. I should like to deal with these matters one by one.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) in moving his amendment touched lightly on the unemployment situation as a background for his complaint that economic conditions in Canada are bad. I should like to look at the other side of the coin; the other side of the picture, because there is another side. I should like first to discuss the question of employment because employment is something that is overlooked in these arguments.

At page 2 of the dominion bureau of statistics release, we find this statement:

The labour force was 3.1 per cent higher than a year earlier, a substantially greater increase than the 0.8 per cent rise in employment.

Following that we find the figures in respect of the labour force, employment and unemployment. Comparing them between January, 1960 and January, 1961, we find that the labour force increased from 6,203,000 to 6,396,000, representing an increase of 193,000 in the labour force in Canada in that year. The number of persons employed from January, 1960 to January, 1961 has also increased from 5,656,000 to 5,703,000, representing an increase of 47,000. I might say that this increase has taken place during a period when ruin has been shouted across the country. The unemployed have also increased in number from 547,000 to 693,000, showing an increase of 146,000 which does not represent as great an increase as that in the labour force. Therefore, when we look at unemployment and say, yes we have unemployment and it has increased, we have also to look at the fact that there are more people working. There are in fact 47,000 more people working in spite of the fact that the labour force in Canada has increased 193,000 during that period of time.

We should look at the business conditions in this country. First, if we look at page 1 of the dominion bureau of statistics release under the subheading "Merchandising" we find the following statement:

Department store sales in the week ended February 4 were 8.9 per cent higher in value as compared to the like 1960 period. Chain store sales in 1960 reached a new peak of $3,441,775,000, up 4.9 per cent from 1959's previous high of $3,280,263,000. Sales were larger for 7 of the 11 specified trades.

Looking at the details on this item at page 15, we find that the following statement is made:

Department store sales in the week ended February 4 were 8.9 per cent higher in value than in the corresponding period last year, according to a special D.B.S. statement. All regions posted increases as follows: Atlantic provinces, 19.0 per cent; Quebec, 9.5 per cent; Ontario, 6.3 per cent; Manitoba, 3.0 per cent; Saskatchewan, 9.3 per cent; Alberta, 5.6 per cent; and British Columbia, 13.6 per cent.

Turning again to chain store sales in 1960 we find that the following appears:

Chain store sales in 1960 advanced 4.9 per cent to an all-time high of $3,441,775,000 from 1959's previous peak of $3,280,263,000. Sales were higher than a year earlier in all months except May and October.

Finally, sales were larger in 1960 than in 1959 for seven of the 11 specified trades which the dominion bureau of statistics investigated.

Having looked at these particular items of business conditions I think we should look at another matter that causes us concern and that is border crossings: vehicles entering Canada from the United States.

Vehicles entering Canada from the United States in November numbered 1,203,600, an increase of 10.7 per cent over the corresponding 1959 month. Entries in the January-November period rose 2.3 per cent to 17,524,100.

In looking at the details of these on page 14 we find that border crossings in the January to November period were 17,524,100 versus 17,132,700 a year earlier, a rise of 2.3 per cent.

Just incidentally, Mr. Speaker, may I say that there is an extremely interesting item—I do not know whether or not there is any direct connection—on page 10 of the D.B.S. release, namely "Shipments of foundation garments". The D.B.S. release shows that foundation garments are up and that raw hides and skins, the next item, are down. To complete the picture, we find that the population of Canada, as of January 1 this year, has reached an estimated 18,041,000 representing a rise of 2.1 per cent from a year earlier and a gain of 12.2 per cent from the 1956 census. I do not think the population increase is directly attributable to the government but since everything else that goes down is charged against the government, perhaps when something like population goes up they can take a little bit of credit for it.

The other item with which we are very much concerned is the premium on the Canadian dollar. It is not long since the premium was about 5 per cent and 6 per cent, a matter causing great concern to our exporters, our tourist operators and other persons who were deeply affected by the high value of the Canadian dollar. Today the Canadian dollar is 1.1 cents higher than the United States dollar. There is no need to point out the advantages that are accruing and will accrue from this fact. The export trade is going to benefit. The figures that I am about to quote in connection with the export trade were arrived at before the so-called baby budget at the end of this year and their effect had not yet been felt by the time these trades statistics had been compiled.

I should like to look for a moment, in connection with external trade, to the D.B.S. weekly bulletin, issue of Friday, February 3, 1961. Under the item "External Trade" we find the following:

Canada's trade with other countries reached a new peak in 1960, being valued at $10,891,100,000, an increase of 2.3 per cent over the 1959 value of $10,649,200.00. Total exports in 1960 were valued at $5,395,300,000, a rise of 5 per cent over the previous record attained in the preceding year, while imports at $5,495,800,000 were fractionally less than in 1959.

Along the same line in connection with the export trade, we find that the balance of payments is gradually adjusting itself. I should like to refer to the D.B.S. release of December 23, 1960, in connection with the item "Balance of Payments" under which we find the following:

There was a sharp contraction in the deficit from international transactions in goods and services between Canada and other countries in this year's third quarter. At $114 million this was less than one quarter of the size in the previous quarter and only a little more than one third of the deficit in the same quarter last year, and less than in any third quarter since 1955.

I think that these figures can speak for themselves. They indicate that while there is unemployment there is also increased employment. They indicate also a good financial and economic picture in this country. I should like to refer to some remarks made by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) as he was taking his seat. He referred to the consumer price index. If we look at the D.B.S. release of February 17, 1961, the latest one on which we are basing all our other figures, we find this item on page 7 which will give the picture with regard to the consumer price index:

Consumer price indexes declined in all ten regional cities between December 1960 and January 1961 with decreases ranging from 0.1 per cent in St. John's to 0.5 per cent in Toronto.

Food indexes declined in all but one of the ten regional cities with decreases ranging from 0.2 per cent in Montreal to 1.3 per cent in Toronto.

This is at a time when the economic situation in this country is good. The consumer price indexes being held down prevents inflation or the dangers of inflation where people living on a fixed income find the situation difficult with the ever rising cost. I do not say that the consumer price index has been checked or levelled off. But I should like to look a little bit more closely at the figures quoted by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. I feel that he did not give the whole picture in the one instance he picked. The consumer price index in 1949 in June—and I will take the month of June because that is the month he used to start off with; that is the month that the present government took office—was 99.6. From 1949 until 1957 in June there was an increase in the consumer price index in this country of 22 points in a period of eight years or an average increase of 2.7 per annum. In the three years in which this government has been in power the increase has been six points or two points per annum, a difference of 0.7 per annum in the increase. The average increase has been checked and it is beginning to decline.

To take the consumer price figures as of now and to relate them to the D.B.S. release that I have just mentioned, from January 1949 until January 1957 the consumer price index rose from 99.8 to 120.3. This was a rise of 20.5 points in eight years or an average of 2.5 points per annum. In the four years from January 1957 to January 1961, the consumer price index rose from 120.3 to 129.4 at which it stands at the moment, an increase of 9.1 points in four years or an average of 2.3 points per annum.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question about the figures he is using.

Mr. Aiken: Yes.

Mr. McIlraith: Would the hon. member agree that the Korean war, in the first period he has reference to, did have a bearing on those figures?

Mr. Aiken: I suppose one could say that. You could take any given period of time and any given number of reasons. The increase in the cost of living certainly rose very sharply in the period between 1949 and 1954.

Mr. McIlraith: The Korean war.

Mr. Aiken: If the hon. member wishes to credit this to the Korean war he might be honest and credit the unemployment drop in the same period to the same thing. We hear constantly the figures of unemployment and how they dropped during the Liberal regime in 1951, 1952, 1953 and 1954. Certainly they did. Unemployment dropped, and the consumer price index went up. But you cannot have it both ways. If you are going to credit the one to the Korean war, you have to charge the other to the same event. One can take a set of figures and make them prove anything, I suppose; but you have to take figures over a long period of time to indicate what is the real situation.

Taking this particular release of February 17, 1961, there is one black note in the release, and that is the unemployment figure. The other figures in there are very, very optimistic and indicate a very healthy situation in this country, such as the increase in employment and the increase in the labour force. We are getting ahead of the game by a small margin even at this time when things are bad. The unemployment problem is only one thing, and I believe that with the methods the government has undertaken it will be overcome in a short period of time.

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I have heard the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) say many times that he is not responsible for the monetary policy in Canada. I do know that on July 3, 1934, royal assent was given to an act to incorporate the Bank of Canada. I do know also that certain powers were given to the governor, the directors and the executive committee so that they might regulate the currency and credit in the country to the best interests of the economic life of our nation.

I have read the Bank of Canada Act, and section 23, subsection (1) reads:

> The bank shall act as fiscal agent of the government of Canada—

Et cetera. Then subsection (2) reads:

> The bank, if and when required by the minister so to do, shall act as agent for the government of Canada in the payment of interest and principal and generally in respect of the management of the public debt of Canada.

I have always held the view that the Minister of Finance, as this subsection implies, has control over our debt management. If we have good debt management in this country it is much easier for the bank to operate, but if we have bad debt management, as we have had during the last three years, it is much more difficult for the bank to operate and provide all the extra funds this government requires.

In my opinion there is no one living who could adapt the policies of the bank to the inconsistent and changing demands of this government which requires a great deal of money all the time. We have read articles in the press criticizing the governor of the Bank of Canada both for our fiscal policy and our monetary policy. There is no doubt that the frequent statements of the Minister of Finance disclaiming any responsibility in connection with our monetary policy throw certain criticism towards the governor of the Bank of Canada. I think this criticism should be thrown directly at the government, where it properly belongs.

There is no doubt that the minister always knows what is going on in the Bank of Canada. Before the banking and commerce committee on March 18, 1954, as reported at page 715 of the minutes of proceedings of that committee, the former governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Graham Towers, said:

> The government of course, either through the deputy minister of finance who is a member of the board and executive committee or through quite frequent conversations between the governor and the Minister of Finance, is always aware of what the Bank of Canada is doing.

Mr. Towers also went on to say:

> The situation is that parliament has placed squarely on the shoulders of the directors and management of the Bank of Canada the responsibility for monetary policy.

There is no alibi possible for the central bank. Then he went on to say this:

> On the other hand, there is no alibi possible for the government, because if government said: Well, we disagreed with what the central bank did, but parliament has placed the responsibility on them, so what could we do? The answer obviously is that the administration of the day, supported by a majority in parliament, can always alter the legislation. In fact, I doubt whether a disagreement would ever necessitate such a thing, because there are various ways and means by which directors and management can be got rid of. I am sure that in the case of a serious disagreement that is what would take place.

These statements were made by Mr. Graham Towers when he was under close questioning by the then hon. member for Eglinton, now the Minister of Finance. That occurred on March 18, 1954, before the banking and commerce committee. I might say that Mr. Towers and Hon. Mr. Abbott gave similar answers to questions asked by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell).

Why does the Minister of Finance refuse to take any responsibility in connection with the Bank of Canada? The fact is that the fiscal policy of this government has become so bad, so much blame has been directed towards the Minister of Finance, that he finds it convenient to let somebody else take it all, if he can get away with it.

Why does not the minister say he either agrees or disagrees with the policy of the Bank of Canada? I cannot imagine the Minister of Finance disagreeing with the governor of the Bank of Canada and saying nothing; it is not his nature. After all, we all recall that at the Mont Tremblant conference he spoke up rather violently; at least the press said he did and some of the members of the press said he used sledge-hammer tactics when softer and milder words would have better fitted the occasion. He used that kind of language in connection with Mr. Thorndyke of Great Britain. We all recall the threats of retaliation used by the Minister of Finance towards Great Britain—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There never was any threat of retaliation.

Mr. McMillan: It appeared in the press. We all recall those threats concerning Great Britain joining the European bloc of nations.

On the other hand, the other night in Chicago the minister spoke up fairly sharply, I thought, when he brought to the attention of the United States the situation with regard to purchases of Canadian oil. Certainly, the government of Canada and the Bank of Canada are in agreement. If they are not, what is so sacred about the Bank of Canada Act? It has been amended on two occasions to my knowledge and it could be amended again. This government, with its great majority, could easily bring that about. Parliament is supreme. What parliament has done, it can amend. The minister would have us believe that there are two sovereignties in this country—parliament and the Bank of Canada. Now, Mr. Dunning said in the house in 1936, as reported on page 3262 of Hansard:

> The bank may and should resist temporary gusts of public fancy, but in the long run it must show responsiveness to public opinion. In the long run, the bank in the performance of a vital sovereign function must be responsible to the sovereign will expressed through government. There cannot be two sovereigns in a single state.

The government either agrees with the Bank of Canada or it does not, and if it does not and does nothing about it it is spineless. I think it is wrong for a government such as ours to abrogate the authority given it by the people of Canada. I do not think this government should keep on sidestepping and refusing to take responsibility. This leads me to wonder, Mr. Speaker, are they men or are they mice? I know the Minister of Finance will try to talk about something Mr. Harris said. I know that Mr. Harris said at one time on the orders of the day, when he was asked about an increase in the bank rate, that he had nothing to do with that particular increase in the bank rate. That was the case. He certainly had nothing to do with it. However, Mr. Harris said, he had been consulted by the governor of the Bank of Canada, and while the former minister of finance did say he had nothing to do with that particular rise in the bank rate, at no time did he go on record as saying he did not feel responsible for the over-all policy of the Bank of Canada.

We all know that money is like any other commodity inasmuch as the cost of money depends on the supply and demand. The Minister of Finance has been responsible for the high demand and this in turn has resulted in high interest rates. Suppose we assume that the Bank of Canada had all to do with the high interest rates we are paying. Then I say the minister in his own jurisdiction is on record as being responsible for paying higher interest rates on the money he has borrowed. On several occasions, and in particular on January 16, I referred to the various gimmicks which were used in connection with his bond sales. The one to which I referred on January 16 was the 3 per cent 19 months' bond sold at 94.65 to the wealthy friends of this government. Those who bought that bond, if they were corporations paying 50 per cent income tax, had over 5 per cent net after income tax, equal to 10 per cent net before income tax. There have been several bonds of this particular type put out and, in fact, $125 million worth of this issue were sold. At the same time, bonds at 5½ per cent were sold to the public at a smaller discount than those sold to the big investors at 94.65. I suggest to the minister that there is a lot of room between 5½ per cent and 10 per cent where he might have stopped instead of paying those people who wanted to dodge income tax. Even though we assume that the Bank of Canada is responsible for the 5½ per cent or whatever other interest there is it can hardly be said that they are responsible for these big gobs of bonds, and for the profits which are being made, not always but generally, by wealthy people.

In 1957, when Mr. Harris was minister, we were paying our way and we had a daily surplus of $400,000. Then, as I said on January 16, the present minister brought in his baby budget in December, 1957 which changed this surplus into a deficit of $2 million. Every day, and day after day, we have a $2 million deficit when you consider the government's overspending and the depletion in government accounts. No matter what is said of the Bank of Canada we should all realize that the Bank of Canada must see to it that hundreds of millions of dollars are channeled into the Canadian treasury every year in order that this government may meet its huge deficit and other obligations. This is no longer an easy task. I do not think the governor of the Bank of Canada or anybody else could induce bond holders to go on buying long term bonds after the stinging the minister gave those bond holders who bought 4½ per cent bonds at the time of the conversion loan. We know that those bonds fell to a point almost 20 per cent below their face value.

Manu long term bonds were sold to people who could not afford to put up the cash for the duration of the bond; they were willing to put up their cash for a time, intending to sell the bonds later. However, they found out when they came to sell that the value of the bonds had dropped very considerably. They went to the bank, and the bank would not lend any money on the bond. This condition continued for a considerable length of time. I know of some people who had to sell their bonds at a loss and, to say the least, they do not feel enthusiastic about the minister's financing.

At the time of the baby budget in 1957 some sections of the press referred to the budget as budgeting by fraud in that the minister was projecting a surplus over the last three months of the fiscal year when in fact over the whole year there had been a big deficit. Of course, he had a deficit anyhow. Then came the election in March, 1958, and to put it mildly I do not think the handing out of the benefits under the unemployment insurance scheme was meant in any way to lose this government any votes —certainly not in my part of the country, anyhow. Then a little later, came the government's first full budget. At the time of that budget the minister told us he would need a great deal of money during that summer, and immediately afterwards the hon. gentleman launched the conversion loan which, I will say, was ill-conceived and certainly ill-timed.

We all remember the high pressure that was put on holders of victory bonds to change their 3 per cent bonds to long term 4½ per cent conversion loan bonds, and we know that the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) both went on the air in support of this program. They paid the public a bonus to switch. During that compaign, on September 4, 1958, I related to members in this house how I had witnessed the conversion of two bonds. I gave the details of the conversion of one bond. I saw one man at a bank with a $10,000 bond to be converted. It cost the government $350, including $51 accrued interest, to change that bond from a 3 per cent bond to a 4½ per cent bond. In other words, the bonus was $250, the commission to the bank was $100. The government put up $350 to change one bond on which they had paid $300 a year interest to one on which they had to pay $450 interest thereafter, an increase of 50 per cent.

The market became glutted with bonds at that particular time and I understand that most of the small people traded in their bonds. This was not true of the big investment companies. Because those big investment companies unlike the unemployment insurance fund, did not trade in their bonds, they were able to wait around for a higher interest rate that they could get in gimmicks and in treasury bills.

The Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister told us that the patriotic thing to do was to convert. The Prime Minister said it would mean bigger and better jobs. They both said that the provinces and the municipalities would be able to borrow to better advantage. In fact, they said everybody would get money cheaper. We on this side of the house said that the opposite would result. We said that it would cost the provinces and the municipalities more money; that it would cost business more money; that it would bring about stagnation in our economy and unemployment. Certainly, nobody will say that that has not come about. Since we knew that the ministers would be requiring new money at the time of the conversion loan this was not hard to see. You did not need to be clairvoyant or a crystal gazer; you did not need to be an economist, you just had to use common horse sense. I am surprised that the minister himself did not see this.

Mr. McGee: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McMillan: He is generally wrong. I know that on two occasions he prophesied a surplus, but on both occasions he was wrong. I will not get into an argument with the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) on whether he was 100 per cent wrong or not wrong at all, but at least he was wrong on both occasions.

The interest on our debt is up $200 million over 1958 and when you include the extra bonuses and commissions in the last three years, the extra interest has aggregated $600 million. Our extra interest bill per day is over $500,000, and is very close to $600,000 a day.

During the high pressure sale of the conversion loan I predicted our extra interest bill, because of that conversion loan alone, would be $64 million a year. I hit it almost on the nose. I was a little under, however, because I did not take into consideration the cost of printing, bonuses and commissions, which brought it up more than that.

In talking about the extra interest on the conversion loan on September 4, 1958, I said that the extra interest which the Minister of Finance was putting on the people of Canada would build 100 printing bureaus, one every three months for the next generation, or one almost every mile from here to Montreal. All I can say is that I underestimated at that time.

The conversion loan got us into a trap. It is a trap of the government's own making. As expensive as the conversion loan was, it was cheap when you consider the financial manoeuvring and wiggling that have been going on to try to escape from the effects of the loan. I say that the government will never escape from that and we know, if we start talking about printing bureaus—and that subject was to the fore at that time—that the minister could have 36 printing bureaus now before the ink is dry on the last bond that was sold.

I just wish to say a word or two about unemployment. All of this has had a serious impact upon our economy. Many of the unemployed people are in serious financial straits. In many instances their unemployment insurance has run out and they are on relief. The amount of relief is inadequate and varies from municipality to municipality. I read many accounts of the plight of the unemployed in the minister's home of greater metropolitan Toronto. We can see accounts in any of the Toronto papers. Social workers in Toronto are on record as saying that this help is inadequate. They describe men who go from social agency to social agency to get enough help to keep their families together. This surely is not good enough in a society where the government has contrived, deliberately or otherwise, to pay high interest rates to those who have money. I think this is a terrible indictment of the government. This surely is not in keeping with the promise of the Prime Minister that no one would suffer from unemployment as long as he was Prime Minister.

In connection with unemployment, I notice different hon. members rising in their places in the house and talking about, or giving figures on, unemployment at this time, and comparing it with previous times. I think they forget one thing. They forget that the unemployment insurance fund went up from zero to over $900 million under the former administration, and in these last three years it has come down to a point where it is almost bankrupt. I think the advisory committee admits that in their last report.

What has been the government's cure? The government called us back here early in the fall and the minister brought in a budget. There is only one thing in the budget designed to stimulate our economy, and that is this: The minister raises from $25,000 to $35,000 the amount on which the lower 21 per cent of the corporation income tax will apply. Out of this new provision a firm making $30,000 would save $1,500, and a firm making $35,000 or more would save only $3,000. This is not enough in either case to put one man to work.

There is another plan in the budget under which the minister says he will allow double depreciation for one year in those distressed areas where they have had chronic unemployment for some time.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman thinks he is back in the budget debate. The budget debate was concluded several weeks ago when the motion to resolve the house into committee of ways and means was adopted. The resolutions can be discussed in the committee. Therefore, I suggest it is not relevant to this present amendment concerning monetary policy and similar questions. Surely, we are not discussing the budget resolutions on this amendment.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I submit with deference to you that the discussion which has been carried on by the hon. member is clearly and squarely within the terms of the amendment. I think it ill becomes the Minister of Finance to raise a point of order on that matter. If he had wanted to do so I think he could have objected earlier in the remarks of my hon. friend. He did not, and the hon. member who has the floor now has been dealing exclusively with the amendment now before us.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I do not object to the hon. member referring to the budget, and ways and means, but I do not think he should make his whole speech on the budget. I suggest that he come a little closer to the amendment.

Mr. McMillan: I will leave unemployment since we can deal with it at another time and I will touch on another subject which is perhaps appropriate in this debate. I have here an issue of the St. Catharines Standard of a little over a year ago. At that time Mr. Grosart of the Prime Minister's office was in the Niagara district making a speech to the party faithful.

An hon. Member: Where was that?

Mr. McMillan: In the Niagara district.

Mr. Fisher: He is their organizer.

Mr. McMillan: According to his speech, he was not worried about the debt because he said it was easily manageable. He said that he thought the Minister of Finance found the debt easily manageable. Mr. Grosart referred to another matter. He did not think that the government was getting through to the people. I think I can ease his mind on that score and say that the government has got through well to the people. I never knew before who the mentor of the Minister of Finance was. Unfortunately Mr. Grosart's statements do not appear in the press very often and it is hard for us to know what the financial and fiscal thinking of the government is. The Minister of Finance certainly does not take us into his confidence and we would like to get some information from someone in the government.

The other night the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) was in London and he talked about the possibility of an increase in income tax and of a deficit next year. I do not think there is anything new about the matter of a deficit because I think it was three years ago that I predicted that the present Minister of Finance would never have a surplus. Therefore I do not think the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) was giving us any new information.

Mr. Woolliams: Could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. McMillan: After I am through. If I am not out of order, Mr. Speaker, I will make a short reference to trade. The government is trying to do all it can to boost our economy by increasing trade. In December, 1957, the government sent a buying mission to Great Britain. I think the government got things backwards. The Prime Minister gave the members of the mission a great send-off. He told them to buy and not to sell. They went to Britain to buy at a time when industry there was working at full capacity. At that time we had a considerable number of unemployed in this country and in the case of such orders as were placed in Great Britain the mission had to take deferred delivery dates.

Now we have a minister who is following a hard sell policy. We know he is following a hard sell policy because he called a number of trade commissioners to Ottawa and he told them that their chances of promotion depended on their success in the hard sell. We know that we have now sent people to England to try to sell three years after we sent a buying mission there, and at this time industry in that country is somewhat slack and is therefore much more competitive in their home market where we are trying to sell. As I said before, I think the government pays too much attention to politics and not enough attention to government.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is putting it mildly.

Mr. McMillan: The Prime Minister and the premier of Ontario met in Toronto not long ago and a spokesman at the meeting said:

> The party feels that the government has had a good program but we haven't sold it.

The Prime Minister said that the Conservatives plan to mobilize in every part of the country and to expand information services to furnish data on the courses of action taken by the government and how it has fulfilled its promises. "We have just begun to fight", the Prime Minister said, in an apparent reference to the next election. He said that the Conservatives would expand their information services. This is another way of saying that the government feels it has not been able to get through to the public in the way that it would like to. It is another way of saying that the image is not in sharp focus.

This may be a little out of order, Mr. Speaker, but this is just another aspect of the hard sell. From this I can detect that the Conservatives are aware of something sinister and they seem to lament that you cannot sell something that is unsalable.

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) said that it was time to take a good look at our economy. He enumerated different items and all his comparisons were made with last year or the year before which were also Tory years. I have made a tabulation of different aspects of our economy. Our fiscal policy, while not the sole cause, has had an adverse effect in producing these effects: 1. Unemployment is reaching new post-war peaks every month. 2. Carloadings are generally down over corresponding figures of previous years. 3. Business failures are away up so that the press compares them with those in the days of R. B. Bennett. 4. Steel production, the indicator of business, is away down. 5. Mortgage money is so high in cost that many people cannot afford to buy a very modest home. 6. Taxes at all levels of government are year by year reaching new peaks. 7. Hungry people are walking our streets. 8. According to articles in the press, our prestige abroad has dropped, and according to the article, "Canada, A Nation Without a Face", in the current issue of the Financial Post, our prestige is reaching new lows. I do not see how anybody can come to any other conclusion but that our prestige is going down. I hope this is not right. I hope that the government will not expect the governor of the Bank of Canada to take any responsibility in connection with these matters.

Mr. Woolliams: You differ with your leader.

Mr. McMillan: 9. Our bonds have sold among the lowest of the western free world and foreign financial papers, including those in London and elsewhere, criticize our fiscal policy and say we are in trouble. 10. The cost of living is at or near the all-time high. 11. Through lack of decision in the cabinet we maintain interceptor aircraft under NATO in Europe and at home in Canada that are not fast enough to intercept an ordinary commercial jet aircraft.

The people of Malton were building a plane, the CF-104, of which the people of Canada and in the industry could be proud. No matter whether Canadians disagreed with the breaking up of that industry, I think they all lament that the three or four planes at or near completion were put to the blow torch and cut up into little pieces so that nobody could see how good the planes were.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I cannot see that this is material to the debate. The Avro Arrow was as outdated as manufacturing horse collars would be today as far as the agricultural economy is concerned. What has that to do with the debate?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: After the speech you made, you should be the last one to raise a point of order.

Mr. McMillan: Apropos of this, Mr. Speaker, I notice in a letter—the writer being from San Diego, California—it is stated that most of our aircraft workers who went there still recall the anniversary of Black Friday.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I think I have allowed the hon. member to get into a discussion of the aviation business quite far. Perhaps he should now come back to the subject.

Mr. McMillan: I will try to return to a discussion of the economic situation in this country.

After listening to the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) the other day I really felt that the great northern vision had disappeared or became a fleeting mirage.

The people have lost confidence in our government—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Is the hon. member for Yukon rising on a point of privilege?

Mr. Nielsen: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I do not think the hon. member from Welland intended to refer to me when he did. I think he must have mistaken me for someone else.

Mr. Chevrier: What is your point of privilege?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Could the hon. member tell me what the point of privilege is?

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member from Welland referred to something attributed to me which I did not say.

Mr. Chevrier: It is on the record.

Mr. McMillan: Because of the fiscal policy, people have lost confidence in this government which has promised to do much but has done little. If the government would only say what it means, and mean what it says, there might be some return of the confidence required for a healthy economy in this country. If the government would say less about its politics and would remove itself from indecision we would all have less to criticize it for, and would not have to ask then, Mr. Speaker, are they men or are they mice.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member who has just sat down said he would answer a question when he was finished. I should like to ask that question now. Is it true that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), all through the 1958 election campaign and just recently, said that in order to cure unemployment in Canada he would finance on a deficit budget?

Mr. McMillan: That is right, but those opposite seem to forget that if you spend perhaps $600 million or $800 million to stimulate the economy the returns from increased income tax and increased sales tax would offset the deficit to a considerable extent.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): It is customary on a supply motion for the official opposition to move an amendment and to state that the country has gone to pot, and that they no longer have confidence, like the people of Canada, in the government. This is, as I mentioned, a customary motion, and it is the official opposition's duty to choose the subject for debate. Naturally one expects the official opposition to choose the most important subject at the time the supply motion is brought before the house. They have chosen monetary and fiscal policies, as I understand it.

We have now dealt with just about everything in respect of monetary and fiscal policies as well as anything else that can be tied in with them.

I came to this house perhaps a little naive in respect of management by government, the duties of the official opposition and so on, but have always been willing to work, and have listened to a great many subjects. The official opposition has made very determined efforts to speak on unemployment and to give us suggestions as to what should be done. I have had a great deal of difficulty in deciding when the official opposition is serious and when it is actually only making political comments. The previous speaker suggested that this government forget absolutely everything political and get down to business. I would suggest that this would be good reasoning for the official opposition to follow.

I have listened on a number of occasions to discussions in respect of this unemployment situation but have failed to comprehend any concrete solution that the opposition have put forward in regard to this problem. They suggested at one time that the government should get labour and management together. When the government announced that they were going to set up a national productivity council, the official opposition spoke against the measure, yet the council's main work would be discussions with management and labour in regard to creating greater production and thereby greater employment.

We have heard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) speak today about tight money—money loaned out since this government took office—in comparison to the policy of the previous government. He did not mention any figures or go into any great detail concerning what we should be doing which we are not now doing. He did not suggest that we had not lent more money than the previous government because he knows full well that we have. He must realize that we have made money available to small towns.

I might say at this time that this money has been very welcome to a number of small towns on the prairies. We have also increased the number of loans and the amount lent for the purchase of farm lands; we have increased farm improvement loans by more than half as much again. We have also made arrangements for government guaranteed loans to small businessmen.

All these increases have been put into effect since this government took over and yet the official opposition continues to say that we have brought in nothing but tight money policies. We have lent money in respect of winter works projects; we have increased grants to universities. Universities in the province of Alberta receive from the federal government up to $300 per student. We have granted money in respect of university residence construction, for sewage disposal projects, and as one hon. member mentioned in the debate today, we have increased old age pensions by $9 although he did not feel this was much, even though it amounted to some $100 million. He suggested it was nothing to crow about. I think it is evident now that those hon. members who support this view wish now that they had increased the pensions by $9 rather than by $6. We have heard a great deal of discussion about the unemployment insurance fund. No one on the other side of this house has mentioned the increase in the number of days for which an individual can collect unemployment insurance. This is one of the steps that President Kennedy has suggested should be taken in the United States.

A great deal of the discussion has related to the cost of living index. I have here the Canada year book for 1960 which gives the cost of living index for each year. The member from Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) said it had increased from 121 point something to 129, a rise of 8 over a period of approximately four years. Where he found these figures I cannot say.

Mr. Benidickson: The Bank of Canada statistical summary.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am reading from the Canada year book for 1960, page 985, which covers the year 1957, the year in which this government took office. Surely he does not expect that the rise in the cost of living index would be halted immediately on the government taking office. It may have been 121 but I should like him to notice that in 1958 it was 125, and on going down to July 1960 we find it is 127.5, a rise of 2.5 points. Surely that is a proper comparison and has a far better relation to the situation than the figure he used in assuming that this government should have been responsible for everything that happened in 1957 and should have rectified things immediately.

The hon. member for Welland (Mr. McMillan) went on to speak about what was happening. He said that the government should know everything that is going on in the Bank of Canada. From the way in which the governor of the Bank of Canada has been speaking about the Bank of Canada, nearly everyone knows what is going on there. He has been going across the country doing a great deal of talking, something that I think he should not do. He is a person in a responsible position and rather than try to paint a gloomy picture of the economy of Canada or of the finances of Canada—

Mr. Chevrier: He is preaching gloom and doom.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I realize that he is a Liberal appointee and that he may preach just in the way the hon. member for Laurier wants him to preach; I am not sure. However, I think that a person in a responsible position such as that which he holds should have a greater tendency to control his remarks and to keep his comment on Canada to himself or express it to the government in a confidential manner, one or the other.

The hon. member for Welland went on to speak about deficits about the fact that we had a great debt; that debt management was a problem and that the matter of raising the interest for this debt management was an even greater problem. What did the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) say in 1958? He said that we should have a deficit. He said, "If I were elected Prime Minister of this country I would give all Canadians a tax holiday". What would the deficit have been then? What would the problem of debt management have been? What would the national debt of this country have been if he had been able to fulfil half the promises he made at that time?

Mr. Woolliams: Who would know?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I shudder to think what the problem of debt management would have been or what the interest on the national debt would have been.

The hon. member for Welland talked about fiscal thinking. He said that nobody knows the fiscal thinking of the government. May I say that nobody knows the fiscal thinking of the opposition. On the one hand they are talking about debt management. On the other hand they are saying, "You are not doing enough for unemployment". Yet when we bring in measures to increase employment they say, "Too little and too late". Some of these measures have a tendency to reduce the government's working capital. They think these measures should be increased and yet the debt should be managed and everything should be in tip-top shape. As one hon. member on this side said, "You cannot have your cake and eat it too".

The hon. member for Welland mentioned trade and the fact that we had sent a trade mission over to Great Britain. He did not mention the fact that our imports from Great Britain had risen from 8 per cent to over 10 per cent of our imports. He did not quote any figures. He just tried to make a joke about the trade mission going over to Great Britain. He did not mention the fact that the trade deficit has been reduced this year to its lowest point since 1952. He failed to bring any concrete reasoning to bear in his speech. He dealt with the matter on a higher plane, as did the Leader of the Opposition; and I must admit that it was sometimes too high for me to understand.

I was greatly interested in the speech on socialism by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge). Some time ago I asked the member of the new party a question on socialism. I asked him whether he was a socialist or whether the new party was socialist. He gave me some definition of Oscar Wilde's and never answered the question at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. The hon. member for Kootenay West is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Herridge: The hon. member for Acadia said I made some reference to Oscar Wilde. May I say that I do not read such literature.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I said that the new party member had made the statement when I asked him a question: it is in Hansard. I have never been a follower of the C.C.F. party.

Mr. Peters: Thank heaven for that.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I have been in doubt where the new party stands. I have been in doubt whether they stand for socialism or for what they stand. We have often observed the leader of the C.C.F. rise in his place and say, "You backbenchers on the government side always toe the line; you are all a bunch of trained seals; you always vote with the party". When the new party member came into the house we backbenchers thought, "Here is a new train of thought coming into this house; here is a new train of thought that will be produced for the first time. He will vote and he may bring in new suggestions. We shall have to watch him and see how he votes and how his suggestions are received". Mr. Speaker, not once has he voted in a way different from that of the C.C.F. He has fallen right in with them just like a trained seal, and a better one than any we have on this side of the chamber.

I was also in doubt as to where the new party stood. However, I listened to the proposed leader of the new party the other night on television. He went on and on speaking about the great things that public ownership would do. According to him, public ownership would solve all the problems of the whole economy. The financial difficulties of the country would be settled; the unemployment question would be settled; even the drug industry would be settled if he could bring in public ownership. According to him, public ownership would solve all problems. From that speech and from what the hon. member said today about socialism, I gather that the new party is nothing but socialism in a new skin.

The other night on television the leader of the C.C.F. said that public ownership should build the Aurora pipe line. This small pipe line, six inches to eight inches in diameter, is going to run to the United States border from near Waterton lake. He said that through public ownership we could finance it and that we did not need to bring in the Texas buccaneers. If he is going to go this far in public ownership and is going to go into the drug industry, how is he going to create employment and how is he going to rectify the situation as far as the banks are concerned in this country? Actually, what the C.C.F. party is doing is putting a cover over the top of their party, and writing a splashy "new" on the front of it, just like a new box of soap. They are doing just as soap manufacturing companies do when they splashed "New" on the front of their boxes, had a big advertising campaign and sold a little bit more soap. Perhaps they will sell a little bit more soap; I do not know.

But actually, Mr. Speaker, the C.C.F. was founded by labour. Mr. Woodsworth was elected to this house in 1926 as a labour representative and again in 1930. Then in 1932 there was the big conference and they brought in the farmers and they were going to be the new party at that time. Today what are they doing? This summer they are going to have another big conference and reunite the farmers and labour, so they say. The sad facts of the story are that they never had the farmers behind them, that they never reunited anything; and they probably will not do any reuniting in July. We have just seen what the socialists really stand for. We have had another definition today. But if there is any doubt in anybody's mind as to where they are going or what they stand for, it was certainly cleared up not so long ago when the union bosses said, "We will have the premier of Saskatchewan for our leader". They pick the boy; they call the shot. The poor hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) has not much of a chance when they call it.

Of course, this new party is going to be different; it is going to rectify the whole financial situation in this country. Some of the members sitting in the present C.C.F. group in this house say the new party is not going to amount to much. Some of them say this because they do not like union bosses and they realize unions are going to control the new party. Some others say the new party is just a flash in the pan and they are not going to run again anyway. We hear this sort of talk.

Again you have to consider that some C.C.F. members even outside the house might have difficulty in joining the new party because I read in the Toronto Telegram a week ago that communists are not going to be allowed in that party.

Mr. Peters: That does not leave you much hope then.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Of course, if they exclude them, this might bring a new train of thought into the new party; I do not know.

But how will public ownership aid employment, that is the question? How will public ownership cure the financial position of this country, if we are as sick as the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) says we are?

What did the socialists do when they took over in Saskatchewan? They bought out six or seven manufacturing concerns and lost nearly $1 million in those concerns. Is that the way they are going to rectify the financial siutation of this country, buying industries and then losing money on them? That is what happened in Saskatchewan, and this is all common knowledge to anybody who has any close connections with Saskatchewan.

Mr. Peters: How was it you fellows did not do better in the last provincial election?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, these remarks remind me of the proverb in the good book, "A scorner seeketh wisdom, but findeth not; but knowledge is easy unto him that understandeth".

What about the population increase of the province? That is an interesting comparison in itself.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I think perhaps the hon. member had better come back to federal matters that are before the house. The Chair has been quite lenient with the hon. member in allowing him to make comparisons, but I do not think he should be allowed to enter into a full discussion of strictly provincial matters.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I have always understood the rule of the house to be that if somebody speaks on a particular matter others can follow suit and deal with the same subject.

Let us take a look at the earnings per capita across Canada and compare them with the earnings per capita in the province of Saskatchewan. In doing so you have first to compare the population growth in the provinces. In Saskatchewan the amazing and most interesting thing is that it is the only province in Canada that has not grown in population from 1941 to 1956, according to the census taken in 1956. There was a decrease in population during that period.

Of course, some hon. members might well say, "Why did they leave?" This question might well apply to myself. I left Saskatchewan in 1945. I think the decrease in population and the decrease in per capita earning of that province are due directly to the socialist government in Saskatchewan. Their method of doing business does not create the right environment for growth; that is why this province has lagged behind every other province in Canada, even Prince Edward Island.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. I suggested to the hon. member that he get away from provincial matters. I hope the hon. member will take note of my suggestion.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I am not referring to provincial matters in any direct relation to federal matters. I am referring to Saskatchewan because it is the only socialist province in Canada and I am comparing socialist methods—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. If the hon. member can show me what socialism has to do with this amendment I might be very happy to allow him to continue on this different line.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I have always understood that the debate followed the trend set up by the original speakers. The hon. member for Kootenay West spoke of nothing else but socialism. He expounded the theories and pious hopes he had for socialism; how it could rectify all our ills; how we had a sick nation and socialism would cure it. I think I should be allowed to follow the line of reasoning he presented, to see how it could cure our problems.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. If the hon. member will stay in generalties, certainly; but I do not want this to become a debate on socialism in the province of Saskatchewan. That is the point I was trying to make.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I will do my best, Mr. Speaker, to stay in generalities. I have always felt, like many other members of this house, that to solve anything you must get to the—

Mr. Pearson: "Root".

Mr. Horner (Acadia): —root of the problem. Thank you. You must do this to see what you are doing, where you are going. You need to see what somebody else is doing, if you are to study the problem.

There has been a great deal of talk about finance and how we should allow depreciation for capital investment in certain depressed areas; how manufacturing needs finances to get started. Let us look at manufacturing in the province of Saskatchewan; let us compare it with the province of Alberta. I will be brief. In 1943 there were 1,100 established manufacturing firms in Alberta. They employed 18,000 workers. In 1957 there were something like 1,900 established manufacturing firms in the province of Alberta and they employed 39,000 people. They doubled the employment figure.

In Saskatchewan in 1943 there were 960 established manufacturing firms. In 1957 that number had decreased to 844 and employment in those industries only went up by 1,000. You might say, "What has this to do with finance?" I will tell you. In the province of Saskatchewan there is no manufacturing firm that employs over 500 persons. This is the only province in Canada that has no large manufacturing industries.

This points out that large firms are reluctant to invest in socialist surroundings. Of course, the government of Saskatchewan recently realized this. They started a steel plant in Regina. They had to do it with private capital; they invited Texas buccaneers up to start that plant. The government invited them up; the minister of finance of that time went down to invite them up. And in that corner they talk about Texas buccaneers bringing money into this country. They say we have to stop it.

We must consider that in the manufacturing industry in Canada we have a large number of products being produced from a large number of different basic materials. Saskatchewan and Alberta have an equal number of materials available for the development of manufacturing. We have manufacturing companies using those products in Alberta. Saskatchewan no longer has any manufacturer of leather products. Of course, everybody in Saskatchewan knows the socialist government bought out the tanneries and went broke. They went out of business and nobody had courage enough to reinvest in that industry.

The same thing applies to knitting mills in the province of Saskatchewan. They closed down, and nobody has had enough courage to reinvest in them. Until recently the province of Alberta had never taken any steps to clamp down on industry. They recently brought in an industrial tax, which I do not like, but they may get away with it. But last fall—and this is a very good example—we had some large financial concerns interested in investing money in western Canada. Where did it go? Well, it went to a little city by the name of Medicine Hat, Alberta. I was born just north of Saskatoon, I used to turn on the radio and hear them advertise Saskatoon as the hub city of the west. If you look at the map you will realize that Saskatoon is a short distance from Winnipeg, with direct rail connection to Regina, direct rail connection with Prince Albert, direct rail connection with North Battleford, Calgary and Edmonton. It is an ideal location for financial interests to invest in, and far better than Medicine Hat, because transportation costs are one of the most important things to which industry pays attention. Why did they choose Medicine Hat? They chose it because they were afraid to invest money in Saskatchewan under its socialist type of government. An ideal position was available to them, but they passed it over and went to Alberta to turn out their rubber tires and so on. I am referring to the Goodyear Rubber concern which employed 300 men in Medicine Hat last fall. Another important firm, Firestone, went to Calgary and started up there, by-passing Saskatchewan because of fear of socialism.

This shows that although socialism might cure unemployment for a short time, because of the necessary increase in civil servants, it will eventually produce a climate in which business cannot possibly develop.

Much has been said about industry, and how financial capital is lacking for its encouragement—how there is no money left for the development of industry, and so on. But suppose we look at the mining industry. It surprised me to read that the province of Saskatchewan, apart from the production of fuels, has the third largest mineral wealth of all the provinces of Canada. Alberta leads Saskatchewan if you add petroleum, but Saskatchewan ranks second to Quebec in mineral wealth if fuels are excluded. So many times when somebody mentions Saskatchewan, we think: that is the wheat province of Canada. But even the Saskatchewan government has recently agreed that Saskatchewan is no longer the wheat province, but a wealthy province with great industrial resources. They have taken "wheat province" off their licence plates. I do not know if the farmers like that very much. They have, at least, realized they have something else besides wheat, though of course they are not doing a very good job of developing it.

This is easy to see if, for example, one looks at the development of hydro power. Compare the development of hydro power in Saskatchewan with the development which has taken place in any other province in Canada. It has been left far behind. In 1940, Saskatchewan produced 99,000 horsepower units. Today they have got 128,000 horsepower units. Compare this with the situation in Alberta. Alberta, in 1940 had 71,000 horsepower units. Today, they have 312,000 horsepower units. That is a sharp increase in Alberta, compared with a very poor increase in Saskatchewan. And how did that development of power occur in Saskatchewan? Mainly from a large smelter along the Churchill river in the north. Of course, this government has decided to go ahead with the Saskatchewan dam project. The great financial expenditure involved in that province will no doubt create a good many more jobs there and, no doubt, create also to a certain extent, an environment which will allow Saskatchewan to increase its population. The former government realized that the Saskatchewan dam should be built. Jimmie Gardiner, when he was minister of agriculture, said: yes, it is a necessity for Saskatchewan; we must have it. But the prime minister of that day said it was not in the best interest of Canada as a whole. You would not call that a one-man government. It was just that the prime minister said no, and Saskatchewan never got the dam. Now let us take a look at the forest industry. In 1958—

Mr. Peters: Is there any chance of your making a federal speech when you go home to Saskatchewan?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I thought I had been in the house long enough for the hon. member to realize that I come from Alberta, but never mind.

Let us consider the forest industry. In Saskatchewan there are approximately 147,000 acres of forests—almost as great an area as they have in Alberta, which has approximately 158,000 acres. Now let us look at the value of production. Saskatchewan had a net value of production in 1943 amounting to nearly $5 million. Alberta, in the same year had a net production amounting to $5,300,000. The current figures show the value of production in Saskatchewan to have been just below $8 million, while in Alberta the figure was more than $20 million. What could account for this tremendous difference? I can only attribute it to one thing, the reluctance of financial interests to invest in Saskatchewan. Of course, when the present government took over in 1943 they set up what they call a timber board. Anybody who wanted to cut any timber had to sell it to the board and it was hard to get leases. That may have had something to do with the amount of timber cut. Timber cut in 1943 in Saskatchewan was 95 thousand cubic feet; in 1958 it amounted to 55 thousand cubic feet; Alberta, 1943, 99 thousand cubic feet; 1958, 125 thousand cubic feet. Lumber cut in Alberta was three times as much as was cut in Saskatchewan and, as I have shown, the value of the production increased fivefold in the same period.

One could examine every industry, every manufacturing project in the province, and come up with the same conclusion—that there has been a decline in business, a decline in employment and a decline in the whole economy of the province. Socialism is no cure for any of the ills which beset the province of Saskatchewan. This is evident if we take a look at the mining industry. Few people realize that in 1943 Saskatchewan produced 86 million pounds of copper. In 1958 the province produced 75 million pounds, a decrease at a time when production throughout Canada as a whole rose appreciably. In 1943, Canada produced 575 million pounds of copper. In 1958, production amounted to 720 million pounds. Production figures of this kind imply financial backing; it takes money to develop these mining industries. Socialism has not solved the problem in Saskatchewan, where production has gone down.

Take the production of gold, or any other commodity produced in Saskatchewan in 1943. In 1943 Saskatchewan produced 174,000 ounces of gold. In 1958, 86,000 ounces were produced in the province, a decrease again. It was only half of what it was in 1943. While gold has not been a strong commodity in Canada, yet in 1943 Canada produced 3 million ounces and in 1958 4½ million ounces. Therefore, while Canada's production has gone up, Saskatchewan's has gone down under the socialists.

How would socialism work in all of Canada? Well, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind as to how it would work. Our production would go down. We would have no money and no financial interest would be willing to invest in the country.

Let us look at the oil industry. There is no doubt that in the province of Alberta it took money to develop the oil industry, and in that province it has developed immensely. Of course, our socialist friends do not think we should export it. That is all right; that is their view but they are not in power in Alberta or Canada and we can be thankful for that.

What did they do in Saskatchewan? Before any oil industry would go into the province, before it would invest a plugged nickel in the province, the premier of the province had to give a written guarantee that he would not expropriate any of the property or any of the investments in oil development. What did they do three years ago? The provincial treasurer or the premier said that there was oil under the road allowances and that the companies had to give one more per cent to cover the oil remaining below the roadways. That was the small, niggardly approach on the part of the premier of the province to try to squeeze another per cent or so out of the industry.

In some respects the oil industry has been hit hard within the last few years because of the shortage of markets in the world and perhaps in Canada. I have considered this problem very seriously; I have tried to visualize how socialism would cure the sick economy, as the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) described it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I have been advised that his time has expired.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I was going to make one more statement.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): It is a shame to cut off the entertainment, but I believe that is what the rules of the house say and it is a wonder that some people do not abide by them more often.

An hon. Member: Listen to who is talking.

Mr. Howard: If my friend wants to get into an across-the-floor discussion about something that happened earlier, I have just about as much feeling about the actions now as I did then.

After listening to this frenzied, arm-waving hysterical attack on a provincial government, I am reminded of the belligerent, bellowing of a wild bull. It had just about as much sense, too, Mr. Speaker, but there is one thing that comes through in all of this.

Mr. Woolliams: You lack horns.

Mr. Howard: That is something that you do not lack and yours grow on the inside, obviously.

There is one thing that comes through in speeches such as we have just heard from the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) and the one we heard earlier from the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) and the one he made a few days before, and the one he made before that. They were all along the same line of thinking, all exhibiting an inner fear of the socialist movement, all of them afraid of what it will do to them in their own constituencies.

Mr. Woolliams: Don't worry, my friend.

Mr. Howard: I never worry about you, my friend, nor about what comes out of this type of discussion. It is not a rational analysis of the economic problems in the country today, which we are supposed to be dealing with if this amendment means anything, but a hysterical attack on something that neither one of them can understand but which they fear.

Mr. Woolliams: We do not stand alone.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order.

Mr. Howard: You can't stand on your own feet, either.

The hon. member for Acadia started off by wondering whether the Liberal party was really serious, or whether it was playing politics in this particular amendment. I think perhaps he knows the answer as well as the rest of us do, and that is that they are just playing politics and their serious moments are few and far between. The Tories are in the same class. That is why I was sure that my friend from Acadia recognized that the Liberals were not serious in respect of unemployment, which is one of the subject matters with which we are dealing.

I have noticed also that the debate, in so far as unemployment is concerned, which is what I should like to deal with, has oscillated between the juggling of statistics and the making of unprincipled attacks upon people who are not here to defend themselves; the using of a privileged position to get away with what I would call slanderous statements, or what could be slanderous statements if they were made outside. This is unfortunate. I think you will notice also, Mr. Speaker, that those who used the statistics so lavishly, juggled them so ably and distorted the picture of unemployment in this nation, were perhaps in reality paying silent tribute to Mr. Allister Grosart. They took most of the statistics out of "The Record Speaks" to which we have made reference from time to time here. On three occasions I have pointed out that "The Record Speaks", the Tory propaganda piece, is absolutely false and casts some suspicion upon the writers of the statistical material.

Mr. Woolliams: Now we hear the truth.

Mr. Howard: My friend would not recognize the truth if he heard it.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Howard: Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, what is happening is that these people are becoming so blinded by statistics and percentages, hundreds of thousands of dollars and the amount of money in the unemployment insurance fund, that they are forgetting entirely that people are involved; that workmen have been out of jobs year after year because of the fumbling, bumbling and ineptness of this particular government. Almost a year ago now the government made a most stupid blunder in attempting to balance the budget because it was gambling with people's welfare, people's lives, and it did not care so long as what came out was politically advantageous.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: I presume the house will be dealing with this motion tomorrow. Does the house leader want to indicate what the business will be on Wednesday?

Mr. Churchill: We will carry on this debate tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, February 21, 1961

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SEVIGNY—REFERENCE TO REMARKS IN DEBATE ON FEBRUARY 20

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday during the orders of the day the hon. member for Laurier, in a supplementary question asked of the Minister of Public Works, stated that during a speech I made at Dorion last Friday I had protested the proposed route which is tentatively planned to go through Ile aux Tourtres instead of Ile Perrot in Vaudreuil-Soulanges.

The point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is that I never protested this proposed route. In fact the only comment I made during the speech was that I would say nothing about this proposed route in view of the fact that I knew nothing about the matter. As usual the former member for Stormont was misinformed, and I wish to correct this matter.

MR. WOOLLIAMS—CLARIFICATION OF REMARKS IN DEBATE ON FEBRUARY 20

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege in reference to a statement I made in debate as reported at page 2214 of Hansard of yesterday in connection with my remarks about Mr. Clarence Fines, former Saskatchewan provincial treasurer. I want to make it clear to all that I did not imply or intend to imply that any money which Mr. Fines may have made was made from his job or position as provincial treasurer of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Benidickson: I think the hon. member has made a necessary statement.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

Second report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines—Mr. Howe.

WATER RESOURCES

STATEMENT RESPECTING OIL POLLUTION OFF ATLANTIC COAST

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement concerning oil pollution off the Atlantic coast of Canada. On September 1 of last year I issued a press release announcing that the government intended, under the international convention for the prevention of the pollution of the sea by oil, 1954, to extend to 100 miles, the maximum allowed under the convention, the zone off the Atlantic coast of Canada within which ships may not discharge oil. At the present time the zone is 50 miles.

I am pleased to inform the house that no other contracting government has opposed the extension, and consequently extension of the prohibited zone from 50 to 100 miles off the east coast of Canada will take effect on February 25.

It is to be sincerely hoped that the extension will have the effect of substantially reducing oil pollution on the Atlantic coast. Reports of oil pollution have indicated that hundreds of thousands of sea birds are being killed annually by floating oil in the Newfoundland area; that beaches, piers and craft are being fouled, and that damage is being done to lobster fisheries. The situation will be closely watched by the Department of Transport, the department responsible for administering the oil pollution prevention regulations, to see whether a diminution of pollution takes place after the extension comes into force. If not, more stringent international controls may be required to cope with the problem. In this connection it is proposed that a conference to revise the 1954 convention for the prevention of pollution of the sea by oil be held in the spring of 1962 under the auspices of the intergovernmental maritime consultative organization. This conference would permit Canada to suggest any changes to the convention which we deem to be necessary.

The intergovernmental maritime consultative organization is being kept fully informed of the degree of oil pollution in Canadian waters. I should like to mention that included with the official reports we have transmitted to the organization are reports prepared by the Canadian wildlife service and the Audubon society of Canada.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I want to comment briefly on the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The members of this group were pleased to hear of the further measures being taken by this government to prevent the pollution of our coastal waters, and we support them wholeheartedly. We hope that the government will also use its best efforts and give some leadership in co-operation with the provinces in preventing the pollution of international and inland rivers and lakes.

THE PRIME MINISTER

EXPRESSIONS OF SYMPATHY ON DEATH OF MOTHER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, all of us are very conscious of the reason the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) is not with us today. At this sad time for him, I would ask the Acting Prime Minister if he will convey to the Prime Minister the deep and sincere sympathy of the members of the official opposition in the loss of one who has meant so much to him over so many years.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the C.C.F.-New Party group may I say that we should like to be associated with the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition. I am sure our thoughts go out to the Prime Minister, to Mr. Elmer Diefenbaker and the other relatives at this time of their great loss. We realize that the Prime Minister and his mother remained very close until the end. I am sure we speak for all Canada in expressing to the Prime Minister our deepest sympathy at this time of bereavement.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Prime Minister will be highly appreciative of these thoughtful remarks by the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Assiniboia. This is indeed a very sad time for the Prime Minister, but at the same time I am sure he has very many happy memories and derives a great deal of comfort from the wonderful relationship which existed between his mother and himself. We are very, very grateful to hon. members for their expressions of sympathy this afternoon.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, may I make a suggestion, which I put forward in all humility. The office of prime minister is of the utmost importance; the mother of the prime minister is pretty wonderful too. I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether, out of respect for the Prime Minister and his mother, on the occasion of her funeral next Wednesday the house might adjourn. Perhaps we might adjourn during those hours out of respect to her memory and to honour the office of prime minister.

Mr. Green: I appreciate the thought behind the suggestion made by the hon. member for Vancouver East, but I think the Prime Minister would wish the house to carry on with its business and would not wish a course of this kind to be followed.

[Mr. Herridge.]

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INQUIRY AS TO PROTESTS AGAINST INTENDED LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister received a letter from Mr. W. Danyk, secretary treasurer of the Canadian National Railways system employees' local federation of Edmonton, Alberta, in which he strongly protests the nation-wide lay-offs of employees scheduled to be implemented on March 17, 1961 by the Canadian National Railways? If so, is the minister of the opinion that this drastic action contemplated by the C.N.R. is contrary to the assurances of reinstatement of employment given by the minister during the discussion of Bill No. C-45?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the letter referred to by the hon. member. I will check with my office, and if I have received such a letter I will at once communicate its contents to the management of the C.N.R., which is the course open to me in this circumstance.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's answer, and I might tell him that his name is the first one listed on the copy that was sent to me. Has this matter previously been brought to the attention of the minister? Is he aware of any impending move by the C.N.R. to institute this kind of wholesale lay-off?

Mr. Balcer: No, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TELEVISING OF BIG FOUR FOOTBALL GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, arising out of the awarding of a contract to a private station to televise the Big Four football games. It is now being stated that stations such as CFCJ-TV at the lakehead are doubtful whether they will carry the games this year.

My question is, will the minister look into this matter, which is causing considerable concern, and report to the house whether the Big Four football games will be available to stations which previously carried these football telecasts either through C.B.C. outlets or C.B.C. affiliated stations?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I will refer this matter to the corporation and ask for information, and I will advise the house accordingly.

SHIPPING

VANCOUVER—REPORTED LOADING OF WHEAT IN UNCLEAN SHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I am sorry I could not give him longer notice, but only about two hours ago I had occasion to send him a copy of a telegram addressed to me which stated that a shipment of wheat for the order of the people's republic of China is today being loaded in a ship at Vancouver which has not been cleaned. Fuel oil is at the bottom of the ship. I have in mind criticisms made a year ago regarding certain shipments of wheat. I would ask the minister whether he has been able to investigate the truth or otherwise of this allegation.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I certainly will, and will ascertain that ships leaving Vancouver are properly cleaned to carry good Canadian wheat.

SHIPPIGAN ISLAND—INSTALLATION OF MARINE AID STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): May I ask the Minister of Transport if he is now in a position to reply to the question I asked him on Thursday, February 16, with regard to the installation of a Decca station on Shippegan island?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. In the light of the additional information the hon. member was good enough to give me regarding this question about a project for Shippigan island, I was able to make wider inquiries in the department.

I am now able to advise that we are planning to instal a Decca station on this island. The survey of the site has now been completed, and we are working on plans and specifications for the station, which will form part of what will be known as the Anticosti Decca chain. Funds have been included in the 1961-1962 estimates, and the target date for operation is the late fall of this year.

TRANSPORTATION

ROYAL COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO PRESENTATION OF REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. J. Godin (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Could the minister advise the house whether the royal commission on transportation expects to make its report before the deadline date of March 31 this year?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have nothing to add to the information already given by the Prime Minister that the report is expected on or before March 31.

Mr. Godin: Would the Minister of Transport check this matter and advise the house in due course?

(Translation):

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF SPEECH BY SECRETARY OF STATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Yvon Dupuis (St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State with regard to the statements he made in this house on November 18 and February 15 last.

Would he be in a position to table in this house the full text of the speech on immigration he made in the Labelle constituency and which he claims to have in his possession?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I see that my friend does not rely on the statements made by his own colleagues outside the house, and in that he is quite right.

The statements I made are actually correct and I object to the behaviour of certain members who sought to challenge my words. I have been practising law for thirty-three years and—

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have said such a thing. I only asked—

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Speaker, what I said is the real truth. There is no need for a text to bear out my words.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The minister was asked a question about tabling a document. I am not sure that the document in question is one which relates to the hon. gentleman's administrative responsibility. If it is, he would be at liberty to answer the question. I trust that it does not involve more than an answer to the question.

(Translation):

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, I should like to know if the minister is prepared to table the text of the statement he said he had in his possession.

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Speaker, I do not have to table it. What I said is exactly true and no one has the right to question my word.

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked a question and a supplementary, and it seems to me the answer is clear enough.

Mr. Dupuis: This is a new question I should like to ask.

(Translation):

I should like to ask the minister why the word of ten Liberal members would not be worth his own word in this house?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question is quite out of order.

COAL

RAND REPORT—INQUIRY AS TO PUBLICATION OF COMMENTARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the senior minister from the Atlantic provinces, the Minister of National Revenue, in the absence of the Prime Minister. In view of the many communications that I have been receiving from interested groups in the maritimes with regard to the Vissac commentary on the royal commission report of Mr. Justice Rand, could the minister say, first, whether this report will be made public and, second, whether any action on the report is contemplated?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I appreciate the implied compliment when I am referred to as senior minister from the maritime provinces. Then, again, perhaps it is a sign of old age. At any rate I will take the question under consideration, and I am sure that whatever may be said in answer to the details of the question, the report will receive full consideration and will be dealt with by the government following that consideration.

Mr. Argue: Does the minister mean he will give me a further report at a later date?

Mr. Nowlan: I shall be very glad to do that.

[Mr. Speaker.]

CAPE BRETON—REQUEST FOR MEETING OF LABOUR, MANAGEMENT AND GOVERNMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Acting Prime Minister if he is in a position to reply now to a question I addressed to the Prime Minister last Wednesday with respect to the request from the premier of Nova Scotia to the federal government for a general coal conference?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Acting Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I will bring that question to the attention of the Prime Minister.

UNITED NATIONS

CONGO—CONSIDERATION AT SPECIAL OR GENERAL ASSEMBLY MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister advise the house whether in view of the serious situation in the Congo and the problem now facing the security council it is his opinion, or the opinion of the government, that a call be made for a special session of the general assembly to take responsibility for the formation of policy and the issuing of instructions with regard to the Congo?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vancouver East in my absence yesterday asked whether any consideration was being given to the report that a special meeting of the United Nations might be called to deal with the Congo situation.

As hon. members know, during the past week or so the situation in the Congo has been under consideration by the security council. I am happy to report that in the early hours of this morning the council adopted a resolution sponsored by Ceylon, Liberia and the United Arab Republic. The vote on that resolution was nine in favour and none against, with the U.S.S.R. and France abstaining.

The resolution, which with the permission of the house I shall now table and which perhaps could be printed as an appendix to Hansard—

Mr. Winch: Could it be read aloud, sir?

Mr. Green: —defines more clearly the role of the United Nations in the Congo. Among other things it urges the United Nations to take all appropriate measures to prevent the occurrence of civil war in the Congo including the use of force, if necessary, in the last resort. It urges the immediate withdrawal from, and prevention of a further influx into the Congo of all Belgian and foreign military and para-military personnel and political advisers not under United Nations command. It also provides for an impartial investigation into the circumstances of the death of Mr. Lumumba and his colleagues and the punishment of the perpetrators of these crimes.

Part B of the resolution calls for the convening of the Congolese parliament, the reorganization of the Congolese armed units and their elimination as an element in the political life of the Congo.

The resolution does not provide all of the answers to the Congo crisis, but it does give reason for cautious optimism that order may be restored in the Congo and that conditions may be created which will allow the Congolese, through conciliation, to reach a solution to the problem themselves without unilateral interference from outside. Perhaps the most encouraging thing about this resolution is that it was initiated by African and Asian members of the council and has the full support of most of the African-Asian group.

I think in view of these latest developments that the likelihood of an emergency special session of the general assembly to deal with this question has been reduced. There is, of course, an item concerning—and I quote from the United Nations agenda—"the situation in the republic of the Congo" which remains on the agenda of the resumed session of the general assembly which begins on March 7.

In answer to the second part of the question which the hon. member for Vancouver East asked yesterday, I cannot say when this item will be dealt with by the assembly, but I assume that its timing will depend on developments in the Congo.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house concur in the suggestion that the resolution of the security council which the Secretary of State for External Affairs has filed be printed in Hansard perhaps as part of the answer which has been given?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of resolution above referred to, see appendix.]

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I understand correctly that as a result of the decision taken by the security council the secretary general has been instructed to take a firm stand and if necessary to use the power and military force of the United Nations in order to bring about democratic conditions in the Congo and obviate the possibility of civil war there? Have I placed a correct interpretation on the decision of the security council?

Mr. Green: The hon. member with his experience at the United Nations will be able to place his own interpretation on the resolution. I do not think this is perfect, but it certainly should go far to strengthen the hand of the United Nations in dealing with the Congo crisis.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the very far reaching and unprecedented character of this resolution, to which I am certainly not objecting, authorizing the use of international forces inside national boundaries for the first time in United Nations history, I believe, does the minister not think it might be useful to have this resolution of the security council, representing only a number of United Nations members, discussed and confirmed by the forthcoming assembly?

Mr. Green: Well, Mr. Speaker, it may be wise to follow that course, but the important thing is that this resolution has been passed by the security council without any members voting against it. There was considerable concern yesterday that the resolution would be vetoed possibly by two countries, but it has been passed with two abstentions and with no country voting against it. I think that is extremely important. I have no doubt that by the time the general assembly meets the situation in the Congo will have changed considerably and it may be that it will not be necessary at that time to have this particular resolution dealt with in the general assembly.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question on this important matter. In view of the offer by the government of Malaya and the acceptance thereof by the secretary general, the further offer of the government of India to reinforce its personnel in the United Nations force in the Congo, and the decision of the British government to dispatch transport aircraft for the purpose of the operations of the United Nations in the Congo, can the minister say whether or not Canada has been requested to increase in any form its contribution to the United Nations presence in the Congo?

Mr. Green: No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no request for such an increase. There may have been requests from time to time for one or two men with particular types of training, but there has been no request for any general increase.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HOUSING

USE OF PHOTOGRAPHS OF MINISTERS IN ADVERTISEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. J. Godin (Nickel Belt): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works arising out of an advertisement that appeared in the Sudbury Star of February 17, a copy of which I have forwarded to him. Can the minister tell the house whether he has authorized the use of his photograph and that of the Prime Minister in an advertisement promoting a private enterprise to the detriment of other similar businesses in the area?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Unless the advertisement is a public advertisement I think the hon. member's question would be out of order.

Mr. Godin: I presume it may be the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member is prepared to take the responsibility for asking a question based on an advertisement that is published by the minister, I would then permit the question as being within his administrative responsibility, but if it is a private advertisement the hon. member has no right to bring it before the house.

TRANSPORT

P.G.E. RAILWAY—GOVERNMENT POLICY RESPECTING SUBSIDIZATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the minister had his attention drawn to bill No. 15 of the legislature of the province of British Columbia, wherein it is stated that the federal government is expected to make a monetary grant in the amount of $19,812,500 to subsidize the Pacific Great Eastern Railway Company? If the government has a policy in this respect, will the minister indicate whether or not it has previously been announced as government policy and, if so, whether a similar concession would be granted to any other province?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should be aware that, following the proper course in that respect, a similar question has already been placed on the order paper by the hon. member for Vancouver East. It appears in Votes and Proceedings for yesterday. It is a starred question and will be answered tomorrow.

[Mr. Green.]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, a very important question of privilege has been raised by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River in his question. The legislature of a province has a bill before it which asserts that it is expected that a grant will be made by the federal government before we have been told anything about it in the house. Surely we are entitled to know whether this statement in the preamble to legislation of the provincial legislature is in fact a part of the policy of the government.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Winch: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I take it that the hon. member is raising as a question of privilege the absence of an answer to his question today. I am not sure that is a question of privilege; in fact I think it is not. Whether or not a question will be answered is in the discretion of the administration, and it is not customary to comment on the absence or inadequacy of an answer even as a matter of privilege.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, it was not the absence of an answer—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, there is a further point involved. It is whether, after an hon. member has followed the proper course of placing an involved question on the order paper, some other member should be permitted to come along, appropriate the question and ask for an early answer before the time has come for the answering of the starred question. The proper course will be followed in accordance with the rules of the house. Tomorrow is the day for answering starred questions, and I propose to regard this as the question of the hon. member for Vancouver East and to answer it tomorrow when you call for answers to starred questions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, obviously I did not make clear the point I was seeking to make. I would not suggest that failure to answer a question until tomorrow was a question of privilege, but I was suggesting that when the government of a province introduces a bill in the legislature of that province purporting to commit the treasury of this country, this is a proper matter to be brought to the attention of the government in this place at the earliest opportunity, and that any government with a sense of responsibility would wish to clear up the matter at once.

Mr. Speaker: A question has been raised whether this is a proper question to be brought to the attention of the minister, in view of the fact that a question is already on the order paper for answer. May I say I do not know of any rule against anticipation of a question that will be answered by asking an oral question in advance. However, I take it that the minister's explanation stands and that there is no further need to discuss the matter.

DRUGS

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL PENITENTIARY—INVESTIGATION INTO USE OF BARBITURATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. D. Crestohl (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice. On February 7 I addressed the following question to him:

> Will the minister report to the house on any inquiry being held in St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary on the use of barbiturates by inmates?

In the absence of the minister his parliamentary secretary replied as follows:

> There is a full investigation underway ... and a report will be presented to the minister. I am certain that it then can be brought forward to the house—

I should like to ask the minister whether that report is now ready to be presented to the house.

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, my attention was directed to the hon. member's question and the reply made by my parliamentary secretary. I should point out to the hon. gentleman that the reply did not state that the report as such would be presented to the house. What it does mean is that the subject matter might then appropriately be discussed in the house.

In so far as a report is concerned, the only specific report that is being prepared relates to the incident in which an inmate escaped, seized the wife of one of the guards as a hostage, held her hostage for over 24 hours, and was subsequently recaptured after an incident involving considerable violence. The whole circumstances surrounding this incident have been inquired into by one of the deputy commissioners of penitentiaries, and a report is in the course of preparation. I believe it is still being prepared. If it has been completed it has not yet actually come to my desk, but I expect it shortly. It would not be normal for me to lay this before the house, but of course I would be prepared to discuss any matters in connection therewith on my estimates.

With respect to the question on barbiturates generally, there is no specific inquiry; but as is well known we have been concerned for a long time with regard to the situation at St. Vincent de Paul. As I said at Montreal last week, on the occasion of the opening of the Leclerc institution, steps have been taken by the new warden of St. Vincent de Paul which appear to be producing results. The steps appear to be effective. The traffic in barbiturates is not yet eliminated, but the indications are that it has been considerably reduced.

FISHERIES

NEWFOUNDLAND—REPORTED OPERATION OF FOREIGN DRAGGERS AT NIGHT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. I regret not being able to give him notice, but I received the communication on which my question is based just as I was coming into the house.

Has the minister received any complaints from Newfoundland fishermen in respect of foreign draggers dragging during the night time inside the 3-mile limit in the inshore grounds of the Port aux Basques-Rose Blanche area? If not, will he make an immediate investigation and take the necessary steps to safeguard the rights of the fishermen and protect their gear from this practice of foreign draggers?

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, no such complaint has come to my attention as yet. There may have been one received during the course of the day but I am unaware of any as yet. I will have the matter investigated and inform the hon. member as to the situation.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REPORTED INTENTION TO DISBAND CERTAIN CF-100 SQUADRONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of National Defence a question in regard to his statement of February 9, when he said that during the course of this year some four CF-100 squadrons will be phased out. I would like to ask the minister if he can explain that statement in the light of the Prime Minister's statement in Washington yesterday when he said that Canada does not intend to reduce her participation in the North American air defence.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): I do not think those two statements have a great deal of relationship to each other. As the Leader of the Opposition well knows, it was announced about a year ago, and certainly on two or three occasions during the last session of parliament, by my predecessor in this office that these squadrons would begin to be phased out this year. In other words, my announcement that four of them would be phased out during this present year was not a new announcement at all, but was just confirmation of what had been said upwards of a year ago.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, does that mean there are to be five rather than nine squadrons for continental defence?

Mr. Harkness: I think the Leader of the Opposition is capable of that simple arithmetic, Mr. Speaker.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

REPORTED INCREASE IN INSURANCE RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Could the Minister of Transport comment on a report appearing in this morning's Montreal Gazette which states that ships using the St. Lawrence seaway this coming year will be forced to pay insurance rates which have been increased by from 17 to 100 per cent? Would the minister care to say whether this will contribute to an increase in freight costs to ships using the seaway?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the article in question. This is definitely a very important question, and I will investigate the matter.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR BEETS—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Agriculture a question based upon a statement he made in the city of Chatham, in the province of Ontario, about six weeks ago, that he expected within a few days to announce a government sugar beet policy. Is the minister in a position to announce that policy today or to give some indication when the policy will be announced in view of the fact that seeding is not too far away in Canada's most advanced part of the country?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): In reply to the hon. member for Essex East I would say that I am unable to give the date when the announcement will be made, but I think I can say that it will not be too far away.

Mr. E. W. Brunsden (Medicine Hat): A supplementary question with regard to sugar beets. Is it not true that the Minister of Agriculture is taking advice from a greater authority than the hon. member for Essex East, namely the sugar beet growers from Alberta, Manitoba and Ontario?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. minister will not take it as an administrative responsibility to express a preference.

STATEMENT RESPECTING ENLARGEMENT OF PUBLIC RELATIONS STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): I would like to reply to a question asked by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate yesterday in which he asked whether the minister is making extensive additions to his public relations and information staff. The answer is no.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask a supplementary question. Has the minister seen the article by Mr. Victor Mackie which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press of February 18, 1961, in which he says:

> Agriculture Minister Hamilton is out to build up an efficient, high pressure and extensive public relations and information service for his department. He wants more publicity for his policies.

Has the minister any comment in that regard?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer that question by saying first of all that I have not seen the story, but that I think the farmers of Canada have a right to know what this government has done for them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I ask the minister whether he has engaged someone from the Toronto Telegram at a very large salary to tell him how to inform the farmers?

[Later:]

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder, sir, if I might act as arbitrator in this geographical dispute, being about half way between, and ask whether the minister intends to answer my question.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the hon. member put his question on the order paper.

Mr. Pickersgill: I shall be most happy to do so, sir.

SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, February 20, consideration of the motion of Mr. Fleming (Eglinton) for committee of supply, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Pearson.

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT MONETARY POLICY AND DEBT MANAGEMENT

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the amendment before us has allowed for a rather broad and sweeping type of debate upon a number of subjects, which we could reasonably expect to flow from the general wording of the amendment itself. This discussion has dealt somewhat with fiscal policies, somewhat with the objection that certain hon. members have to a particular provincial government in Canada, and somewhat with the question of unemployment, all of which matters are deemed to flow from the content of the amendment itself.

I can understand, of course, how the fiscal policy of the government and the unemployment situation may be directly connected with the amendment, but I fail to understand how references to the activities of any provincial government have anything to do with the amendment. It is therefore my intention to concentrate on the field of unemployment and the matter of our economy in the few remarks I have to make.

I think we have seen over the last few years a kind of blind refusal on the part of the government even to admit that there was something close to economic difficulty in the nation. I am sure we remember very well the famous statement of the Prime Minister in November of 1957, shortly after he took office, in which he said that unemployment is not a serious problem and that we need not concern ourselves with it. Ever since then it appears to have been the policy of the Prime Minister's colleagues and others who support his party to protect the Prime Minister from admitting having made an error in 1957, when he said that unemployment was not a serious problem and need not be dealt with.

Mr. Speakman: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Will the hon. member tell us where this statement appears?

Mr. Howard: I should be glad to do so. I have in my hand a copy of the Winnipeg Tribune of Saturday, November 9, 1957 in which we find the following, and I am now quoting the words:

> Prime Minister Diefenbaker has described the unemployment situation as "not generally serious"—

As I said, this was November of 1957. The action of the government since that time seems to have been to protect the Prime Minister in the erroneous assumption that he had made at that time. Certainly the Minister of Finance, at least up until the baby budget was born, juggled the budgetary items of the nation on the assumption that nothing too serious was wrong.

This is an extremely unwise course to follow. I think the government should be gentlemanly enough to admit their mistakes of 1957, 1958, 1959, and 1960 and face the fact that there is in this nation an unemployment situation that is extremely serious; that workmen and their wives and their families, many of them regularly unemployed every winter and stretching on into the summer, now are seriously suffering, are losing furniture and commodities they have bought on credit, and are obliged to exist at substandard levels on welfare or on unemployment insurance for extended periods of time.

I note that the Prime Minister, according to the Globe and Mail of this morning, was in a lengthy conference with the President of the United States and in fact had his picture taken with President Kennedy. What they discussed, of course, was accounted for a little bit yesterday; but at least President Kennedy, shortly after taking office, had the courage to face the fact that there is in the United States a difficult economic situation and he wants to deal with it. This government has failed to face even that problem, namely the fact that there is an economic collapse in the nation. Again we hear platitudinous phrases such as these: everything is fine, prosperity is just around the corner, and all we have to do is rest our faith and hope in the capitalist system and everything will straighten itself out.

Valentine day was not too long ago, Mr. Speaker. Usually on Valentine day we are supposed to have sweet thoughts for people; it is a day for tender expressions of endearment. In recent years, unfortunately, this purpose has been distorted by the development of a so-called sick type of valentine which is really extremely unkind to the recipient. On February 15, the day after Valentine day, the workers of this nation and the unemployed people in this nation received from the government in office a valentine of the sick type; that was the day on which the latest statistics relating to the labour force were released. Those statistics have been mentioned in the house, have been distorted somewhat in many instances, have been compared with things with which they should not have been compared, and so on.

If one keeps in mind the fact that these statistics are now accepted as the only ones with which we should concern ourselves, and that they were developed and endorsed by the government in office, and if we think in terms of percentages of the labour force, I think we get a clearer picture of what is happening. From this valentine gift to the workers and the unemployed of this nation we find this, and perhaps I could just read briefly four or five statistics. We find that in Canada as a whole and in every region in Canada this year, as compared with the same time last year, there has been a staggering increase in the number of people who are unemployed expressed as a percentage of the working force, the figures being 10.8 per cent for Canada as a whole; 14.9 per cent in the Atlantic provinces; 13.9 per cent in Quebec; 8.5 per cent in Ontario; 7.5 per cent in the prairie region and 13.3 per cent in the Pacific area.

Even if we go back only one year we find that this is undoubtedly the result of a kind of ministerial myopia on the part of the Minister of Finance when he presented the budget of last year. Hansard is full of warnings given by members of this house to the government in office over the last three or four years. The newspapers and economic magazines, including the Financial Post and others, are full of warnings to the government of Canada dating back over the last two or three years that an economic crisis was developing and that it would probably reach its full force and effect some time in the winter of 1960-61, and that is the winter we are in now. But our shortsighted Minister of Finance, obviously with the complete endorsement of his colleagues, refused to heed these particular warnings. Rather than heed them and listen to them, he was more prepared to be a gambler and gamble with the very lives and welfare of the workmen in industry and their wives and children, and place blind reliance on the fact that prosperity might be just around the corner.

This was the gist of the budget in 1960, that everything looked rosy for the future. The Minister of Finance still wore the rose-tinted, visionary glasses to which the hon. member for Timmins referred some time ago. The unfortunate thing is that in this gamble of the Minister of Finance the only thing he could lose was his seat and the seats of his colleagues. But the workers of the nation could lose their jobs, their incomes, their furniture, their refrigerators, cars and television sets, and in some instances the homes they had purchased on faith in the fact that we would have in Canada a government which would have some sense of decency in regard to their welfare and employment.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Howard: Gladly.

Mr. Macdonnell: The hon. member is covering a great deal of territory with a great many generalizations. He has even used the word "collapse". Could he give us some references or quotations to support these, to me, wildly extravagant statements he is making?

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Howard: The one that comes immediately to hand is The Labour Force for the week ended January 14, 1961. This is a government publication. The third sentence of this publication reads:

> Unemployment rose by 165,000 over the month.

I referred earlier to the percentage figures in this same statement. Rather than wade right through these figures, I have them here in tabular form.

Mr. Macdonnell: I am not questioning the percentages of unemployed that the hon. member gave. This matter is serious. We are all greatly exercised about it. But when he uses the word "collapse" I think that is a very extravagant word. As a matter of fact, several million people in this country are working and are producing a very great many things. The hon. member spoke about three or four years of bad times and everybody warning the government. We had a fairly stable period during that time, and at one time we all thought we were perhaps on the way up to a new boom. I suggest that to refer to a period of three or four years of bad times is just an exaggeration.

Mr. Howard: I have a tremendous amount of respect and admiration for the hon. member, but in asking the question he made the statement that everyone was convinced that things were going well. Such is just not the case, Mr. Speaker. The point I am attempting to get to is this. This was what I consider to be a blind, unreasoning, illogical policy in our present capitalist economic system, and is not in fact a good policy to follow. This is the end to which I am leading.

I used the past three or four years as an example because this government was in office. But we could very easily extend that back to the time the Liberals were in office and the so-called 1949 recession, or rolling readjustment or whatever it was, and the 1953 decline—if the word "collapse" is not generally acceptable—in the economy, and the start of the collapse in our economy in 1957 and 1958.

When the Liberal party was in office it had the same blind, unreasoning faith and did absolutely nothing to deter this slump in the economic cycle. This was because it followed the theory that all we have to do in this type of economy is let business run rampant, let business do as it pleases, provide the sort of economic climate within which business can develop and provide employment, build up industries and expand, and so on and so forth. If this is done they believe everything will be fine and dandy and rosy. But history has shown that such is not the case. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I am getting ahead of myself. I did wish to lead into these thoughts but the hon. member, by posing his question, somewhat anticipated my line of argument. However, it is perfectly all right.

We have been convincing ourselves that the correct approach to our economy is to provide, if I may use the phrase which has been generally used, an economic climate within which business will feel at home, will feel comfortable and secure. It is believed that this is all government has to do; that it should provide this sort of climate, whether it be by tax incentives, tax concessions, accelerated depreciation or lower stumpage rates in connection with the lumber industry, special concessions to the mining industry, royalties and that sort of thing.

All these things have been tried at one time or another. The theory is that this is all we have to do and business will function well, thereby the economy will function well and workers will be employed. But it does not happen that way. It occurs for short periods of time, and these periods of time have been decreasing as the years go by. This means that our business cycle is becoming faster, the slumps, the valleys and heights of business activity have become quicker and quicker in the last 20 or 30 years.

The reason this does not function too well is that business primarily is selfish. Any particular industry is selfish to the extent that it is in business and in operation to make a profit. This is the prime motivating force behind business function. The first and prime requisite of corporations, industries or a group of industries in concert one with the other is to make it a profitable enterprise. This is the first and foremost aim.

Following from that, these business organizations or industries have less concern for the effect of this policy upon communities that may be established in their areas. Let us look at the uranium industry. This was of course a government milk-fed group which believed in socialism for the uranium mining corporations themselves. But apart from that and it is not too correct a comparison to draw—they do not take into account too much the effect upon communities within which they are established, if the effect upon those communities is going to override the profit consideration. They do not take into account too much the impact upon the natural resources. The logging industry is a prime example of this. The policy in the logging industry for years and years and years was the old cut and clear policy: "Let us just mow the trees down one after the other, acre after acre, mile after mile, and let us not worry about posterity and whether there will be any trees left for posterity".

It took the government intervention to stop this practice. Finally the government stepped in and said, "This cut and clear policy is not good. You will have to log in a certain way in order to promote the growth of trees in this same spot in later years, either by natural regeneration process or by artificial means. You will have to plant trees." The government stepped in to protect the interests of the people because of this cut and clear policy. This is one instance where the future of the people was endangered because of the selfish approach of the business corporate structure. I do not complain too much about them trying to do this; I complain about the type of economic system that pushes them into doing it. This is what I say is wrong.

They do not concern themselves too much with the effect upon the work force. When the welfare of that work force becomes a consideration overriding profits, profits come first. We all know of instance after instance of this type of thing happening. Examples extend right to the point where business says it is sorry, it has to curtail production, it has to lay people off and it has to shut down industry. Businesses say, "But we have to protect our profit picture as much as possible".

This is what I was leading up to when I referred to the last three or four years. These warnings were given time and time again, that it required government intervention, government planning, government regulation, government co-ordination of some sort to protect the welfare and interests of our people. We have to protect our workmen, because it is impossible for them to protect their own interests and those of their families. These are of paramount importance to workmen. We have to protect them against, for example, the C.P.R., the Aluminium Company of Canada, H. R. MacMillan and Bloedel or any other corporate structure.

The workman is not in the same class at all; he is just a cog in the wheel producing a certain commodity. He has no way of protecting his own right to work, his own job. If the economic situation becomes such that corporations decide to close down, it is unfortunate for such an individual. He has no way of protecting himself. The only element in society as we know it today which is capable of protecting such an individual, such a workman, is parliament, and I am using this term as being synonymous with parliamentary action.

Parliament, as we know, is in practice run by government. Only the government can introduce certain types of measures into the house, and so on. Initially, therefore, it falls on the government to adopt economic policies to deal with the shortcomings in our present system, and I think the government should adopt policies of a democratic socialist type, or policies based on a democratic socialist philosophy, introducing measures which will alleviate unemployment and protect workers in both industry and agriculture as far as this can be done. This is where the government has failed. It has followed blindly an unreasoning faith that prosperity is just around the corner, that business will quickly pick up again, and that this is all that is necessary to keep the economy going.

In January, 1958 the C.C.F. developed some ideas regarding what could be done to deal with the state of our economy as far as we could see the situation at that time. This was at a period when the Prime Minister of this nation was solely concerned about juggling things in order to get re-elected. One of the things we advocated then was:

> To undertake in co-operation with provincial and local governments work on public projects which could be started immediately. This would create new jobs in the quickest possible time.

Following that, we found the government had introduced a winter works program. Another thing we advocated at the time was:

> To undertake a joint federal-provincial program to set up facilities on a permanent, year-round basis to retrain those workers who have become unemployed because of technological changes in industry.

We have just, during this session, seen the introduction of legislation along those lines by the Minister of Labour in his vocational training bill. If this had been done three years ago it would have helped immeasurably at the present time. In 1958 we also urged the desirability of long-range planning and an attempt to co-ordinate activities in the field of business in order to protect the interests of workmen and their families, and to provide them with the highest possible standard of food, clothing, shelter and education, besides ensuring that their standard of living was not decreased because of the inaction of the government.

Well, a conference on unemployment was called. It was designed to bring together various economic groups in the nation, and it was hoped that something valuable would emerge out of the discussions. The only thing that developed was the national productivity council, which cannot do one blessed thing about unemployment right now; first of all because it does not even exist at present and, second, because it is a long range effort in any event.

The Minister of Labour has said that the problem of unemployment is not his responsibility. His responsibility ceased the day after the last election, but will be revived, I am sure, a few days before the next election, whenever that may come. The Minister of Labour, obviously with the complete approval of his colleagues in the cabinet, says it is now labour and management which should get together and set about overcoming our difficulties. It is a commendable and a desirable thing for labour and management to discuss their problems and attempt to reach some mutually satisfactory way of dealing with them in order to improve the economy and promote employment. But, I submit, the Minister of Labour is either speaking with his tongue in his cheek or he is particularly naive when he speaks in this vein. Management is not going to sit down with labour or anybody else and talk about fields of activity within the corporate structure. The stand taken by management has always been to resist every step of the way every attempt by a trade union to concern itself with what management calls its God-given right to manage, and to resist every step of the way the desire of unions to talk to management about anything.

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that many years ago management did not even want to talk with trade unions. That was the position; and it took a law, introduced in the United States, to alter this position. That law said that management must sit down with labour and bargain collectively. That kind of contact arose, therefore, only out of force of circumstances and government protection.

Talk to management about discussing with labour these fields of productivity and prices, and they will tell you it is none of their business. They will not talk to the unions about their profit picture. That is something inviolate, something the corporations want to keep to themselves. They will not talk about the corporate debt picture and take suggestions from labour or anyone else as to whether they should finance their operations in a different way. They will not talk about the amounts placed in their depreciation accounts. They say this is their business and no business of labour. They will not talk about further borrowings, or dividend payments; they would never listen to suggestions that these were too great or too little. They will refuse to talk about expansion into the processing industries and a variety of other equally important subjects. This business of labour and management sitting down and discussing the entire productivity question is a dream. As far as management is concerned it is not in the least interested in discussing these things with labour, and this has been the situation for many years.

Mr. Macdonnell: I apologize for interrupting the hon. member, and if he does not agree I will take my seat at once, but I should like to ask him a question. The hon. member has been making, again, the most sweeping assertions, without any qualification, as to the attitude taken by employers toward employees. I have had a little experience myself —not very wide, but some—and I want to tell the hon. member that I am aware of cases where the situation he is suggesting is simply not so. Is the hon. member not speaking of a few cases where conditions may be as he has described? I suggest to him that to stand up and make assertions of such a sweeping character is not fair and, perhaps, even improper.

Mr. Argue: That is hardly a question, especially coming from someone so experienced as the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Macdonnell: I appreciate that the hon. member has been very kind in allowing me to intervene.

Mr. Howard: I do not object at all; I am sure I shall not lose my place on the floor. As far as I am concerned the statements I have been making are not unfair. They are statements of fact in the light of my experience in this field. If the Minister of Labour expects labour and management to sit down and find a solution to this unemployment problem, then the minister is talking through his hat and he is not going to get any results. It may well be that in some cases an industry or corporation will open its books completely and take suggestions about ways in which productivity might be increased. This might be done in an isolated case, but it would not affect the economy of this nation to any extent. So I say the Minister of Labour is merely abdicating his responsibility in this field.

This is a problem of primary concern because individuals are involved. There were some 693,000 of them involved as of January 14, and there are undoubtedly another 100,000 in addition to that, by now. We in parliament are expected to take steps to alleviate unemployment and lessen the burden on people in the bread lines, the unemployed, those who are on welfare and have no income, who are living hand to mouth almost begging for a bite to eat and something to go on.

It is a sorry shame that political parties will promise anything with respect to employment opportunities in order to get elected. There has been no better example than the Prime Minister with his promises of solving all our problems and providing full employment. This is an unfortunate occurrence. I could use stronger language but I do not want to be unparliamentary. Instead of shrugging off their responsibilities as they did last year and devoting their time to attempting to protect the Prime Minister for his past errors, I urge hon. gentlemen opposite to consider that it is not too late to give the question of unemployment full study, perhaps as is being done at the moment by a committee of the other place.

We cannot sit idly by when there are 693,000 unemployed together with their families and heaven knows how many others. The children of the unemployed, sorrowfully, are the innocent victims of this crisis. We cannot ignore this problem and say that if we wait a little while business activities will pick up, conditions will change and employment opportunities will open. This is the most unkind thing we could do to the unemployed.

The unemployed have a responsibility, too. They should protest their plight in every way open to them. They should march on the federal and provincial governments, carry placards, lambaste the government and take every step open to them to make known their plight and convince the government that action should be taken.

Perhaps I should stop there and move my subamendment. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin):

> That the amendment be amended by adding thereto the following words:
> "and this house further regrets that the lack of constructive government planning in monetary and debt management policies has resulted in the deepening of the unemployment crisis".

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin my remarks this afternoon by quoting with full approval the opening remarks made by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) yesterday, as recorded at page 2207 of Hansard. The hon. member was commenting upon the subject matter chosen by the Leader of the Opposition for his amendment to my motion to resolve the house into committee of supply. Drawing attention to the fact that everyone had been led to expect that the official opposition wished to discuss unemployment conditions in Canada, the hon. member said:

> Without any question, that is an emergency. Repeatedly during recent days we have heard demands from the official opposition that the government have a day's debate on unemployment. We in this group have sat here with bated breath waiting for the cannon's roar on unemployment. We have been disappointed. We have just finished listening to the pop gun in respect to one segment of the problem that faces us at this time. We were surprised; we were amazed; we were disappointed.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Those are very apt words on the part of any hon. member in this house who was present yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Government Monetary Policy

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There is no point of order. The hon. member for Essex East is engaging in his old tactics again.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend keeps lecturing me, but I am going to tell the hon. gentleman that I will take my lecturing only from the Speaker and not from him. My hon. friend says, Mr. Speaker, that we have decided to discuss monetary questions. Will the minister deny that this house was assured by the Prime Minister and by the house leader that we would call the labour estimates tonight and discuss them tomorrow and have a general discussion on unemployment?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is nonsense.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That was a solemn commitment made by the government.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Essex East may have a point to argue, but certainly it was not a point of order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I was going to come to that. It was a prickly conscience that prompted the hon. member for Essex East to rise to his feet and attempt to raise a point of order. The hon. gentleman talked about a solemn commitment. There was no such thing. The hon. member has completely overstated the facts. I shall deal with that. I am going to deal very fully with that subject.

I have said that the remark made by the hon. member for Kootenay West was a very apt remark for any hon. member of this house to have made under the circumstances. We have had on numerous occasions from the official opposition, and not least of all from the voluble hon. member for Essex East, assertions that there is an unemployment crisis, a national emergency.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is no doubt about it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We have had this dinned into us for days. It was only last Wednesday, February 15, that the hon. member for Essex East himself sought to bring this matter forward for discussion on a motion to adjourn the house. It will be found on page 2067 of Hansard of that date. The hon. gentleman asked leave to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26, and I quote the hon. gentleman's words—> —for the purpose of discussing a definite matter of urgent public importance, namely the addition of 165,000 persons to the ranks of the unemployed during the past month.

After you had ruled against the motion to adjourn the house for this purpose, the Leader of the Opposition, as reported at page 2069 of Hansard addressed a question to the Prime Minister, in these words:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he would request the house to give unanimous approval to the calling, immediately, of the estimates of the Department of Labour, so that we can discuss without any delay the serious unemployment situation.

That was the situation last Wednesday. There was a great enthusiasm and a great zeal on the part of the hon. gentlemen opposite to discuss unemployment. The official opposition was given a full opportunity yesterday to call the tune in respect to the subject matter of debate, an uninhibited opportunity. Let me remind the house of what the Prime Minister said by way of rejoinder to the Leader of the Opposition on the occasion to which I referred. The hon. gentleman said:

> Mr. Speaker, there will be a supply motion on Monday, when every opportunity will be given to hon. gentlemen to speak on this subject if it is within the rules of the house so to do. If that motion is passed, and if the house so wills, among the estimates to be called will be those of the Department of Labour.

When the motion that I introduced yesterday to resolve the house into committee of supply is passed, as I trust it will be this evening, among the several departments the estimates of which will be called will be the Department of Labour. Let us examine what the hon. member for Essex East has added to this. The hon. gentleman said that there was a commitment to go on in committee of supply tomorrow.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No, no.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There was no such thing, Mr. Speaker. The subject was not even discussed. I say this, that when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) yesterday in his remarks sought to create this impression he had no basis in fact whatever for doing so. I was very interested in what the Leader of the Opposition had to say yesterday by way of trying to excuse himself for ducking, for sidetracking, for sidestepping a debate on unemployment. It was a completely deliberate choice on his part. Note the way in which he put his remarks in this respect. His statement is to be found at page 2198 of Hansard and it is a fine example of ambiguity. He said:

> The Prime Minister told us last week—

Obviously he was referring to the incident to which I have just alluded in Hansard.

> —that the labour estimates would be called tomorrow, so we have a right to expect a general debate on other aspects of the unemployment problem without delay, perhaps on Wednesday of this week.

Whether or not the Leader of the Opposition intended it, Mr. Speaker, I think that probably most people reading that sentence would think the Leader of the Opposition was saying that the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) had indicated there would be a right to expect a general debate on the unemployment problem without delay, perhaps on Wednesday of this week. But the Prime Minister did not say that at all.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The implication is clear.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The implication is not there and it never was there.

Mr. Pearson: Don't try to duck out of it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): This is just an attempt on the part of the Leader of the Opposition to find an excuse for having deliberately sidestepped a debate on unemployment yesterday. Let there be no doubt that on the motion to resolve the house into committee of supply the Leader of the Opposition had the floor and it rested in his hands to choose the subject of debate. Yet he deliberately chose a different subject and in this way avoided a debate on unemployment.

So the house will be able to understand without the slightest difficulty, Mr. Speaker, just how anxious the official opposition is for a debate on unemployment, let me repeat that they had their opportunity for a two-day debate and they deliberately avoided it. I say that all this talk we have been hearing about a national emergency, about a situation that demanded immediate discussion in parliament, an immediate debate last Wednesday, has been exposed as sheer hypocrisy.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Do you deny that the emergency exists?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Listen to them now, Mr. Speaker. Listen to them. Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition took great offense because I asked him a couple of questions. Oh, yes, he was not to be interrupted, he was above that, but I have hardly begun and the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) has already introduced one of his typical bogus speeches under the guise of a point of order and now the Leader of the Opposition is leading the chorus of intervention.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You are very provocative.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It is an interesting commentary on tactics.

Mr. Pearson: We are following your tactics.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You are a very provocative minister of finance.

An hon. Member: Give us the floor.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Leader of the Opposition can have the floor but I think before long he will be spreading himself on it.

Mr. Habel: He will not need a flag for sure.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the fact that this was a deliberate manoeuvre on the part of the opposition is, I think, further evidenced by the fact that the amendment now under debate is by no means new. This is not a brand new burning subject at all. To every intent and purpose this is a repetition of the debate that was held in the house two years ago on a similar amendment introduced at that time on behalf of the official opposition. They wanted to have a debate on this subject, they wanted to avoid a debate on unemployment and so what they have done now really could have been tagged on to any theme at all.

Let us not think this is evidence of great concern on the part of the official opposition about the matter of monetary policy in this country under present circumstances. Let me ask you, Mr. Speaker, to have regard to the amendment introduced in the house on April 27, 1959. There you will find that the official opposition moved an amendment to virtually the same effect. It was introduced on that occasion by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith). The amendment was in these words, and I am reading from page 3073 of Hansard of April 27, 1959:

> That all the words after "that" to the end of the question be deleted and the following substituted therefor:
> "this house regrets the ill-conceived and irresponsible actions of the government in the field of debt management and monetary policy which have been characterized by:
> 1. The errors and inequities associated with the conversion loan;
> 2. The highest bank rate since the Bank of Canada was established;
> 3. The largest expansion of the money supply in any year since the war;
> 4. The greatest increase in peacetime in the national debt;
> 5. The highest public debt charges in Canada's history.

That was the amendment introduced two years ago. The present amendment is to precisely the same effect and every one of the arguments we heard yesterday was relevant to the debate of two years ago. Indeed, the enumeration that appeared in the amendment of two years ago was the theme of the speeches by the Liberal opposition. They did not introduce new evidence. They simply threshed old straw that was threshed at very considerable length in the debate two years ago. So we have further evidence of the urgency which the official opposition attaches to a debate on unemployment. They did not turn to another urgent subject. They turned up another subject by exhuming the debate of two years ago. The Leader of the Opposition made the same kind of speech as was made on that occasion by the hon. member for Ottawa West and the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McMillan) made the same speech almost verbatim as he made at that time and as he has made numerous times in the house.

This is a measure of the alleged emergency. This is a measure of the urgency in the minds of members of the official opposition in reference to the subject of unemployment. The Leader of the Opposition, deliberately avoiding a debate on unemployment, introduced instead a theoretical lecture on the subject of monetary policy—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Much needed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —with all the Lamontagne earmarks attached to that lecture and the whole speech devoid of so much as one single constructive suggestion. It was buttressed not with new evidence but with stale assertions. So much for the alleged emergency, Mr. Speaker. Monetary policy was the subject that was chosen.

Mr. Pearson: We will deal with unemployment tomorrow.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Another interruption from the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker. I did not catch it but it will be on the record—

Mr. Pearson: I hope so.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —and that will warm his heart.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He said that we will be discussing unemployment tomorrow.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The subject of monetary policy has a bearing, of course, on economic conditions. It has at any time. I am sure that the importance of monetary policy in its proper sphere will be denied by no one. The importance of monetary policy can, of course, be exaggerated and it suited the purposes of the Leader of the Opposition yesterday, of course, to resort to this favourite Liberal tactic. I am not going to make extended comment on this particular aspect of the matter. I could say a great deal on this subject but I will simply put on the record for the instruction of the hon. member for Essex East—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Thank you.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —a statement made several years ago by the late James Muir, then president of the Royal Bank of Canada. I quoted this statement on August 11, 1956, as found at page 7460 of Hansard, and it is in these words:

> Experience shows that monetary policy is more effective against inflation than against deflation. But there are dangers. As I have already pointed out, the policy may go too far. It may also be unselective, curbing healthy as well as unhealthy or excessive bank credit.

No less a person than Lord Cobbold, the governor of the Bank of England, said in a speech in Edinburgh on February 9, 1961:

> I also accept—indeed it is a theme which I have myself argued for many years past—that monetary policy cannot cure all ills and that it is a great mistake to expect it to carry loads which should be carried in other fields of government policy.

Mr. Speaker, I think that these are words that will help to put this subject into its proper focus and perspective. However, Mr. Speaker, the issue that the Liberal opposition has chosen to raise in this debate is an issue as to where responsibility lies with respect to monetary policy in Canada. The Leader of the Opposition has certainly striven to the utmost to create maximum confusion on this subject and then exploit it. Let me leave no doubt in the mind of any hon. member in this house, Mr. Speaker; the government is always prepared to assume its responsibility. It will always measure up to that responsibility and will hold itself accountable to parliament at all times. We have given abundant evidence of that respectful relationship. And, sir, so far as I am personally concerned in this relationship that the minister of finance has with the Bank of Canada, I also give the house full assurance that any matters on which the minister of finance has responsibility, has any duty cast upon him, so long as I have the honour to hold this office that responsibility will be accepted. There will be no attempt to deny or reduce it. But, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to pretend before this house that I have the power in certain areas that I do not, as minister of finance, possess. I do not think it is proper on an issue of this kind for the Leader of the Opposition to pretend that the power or authority which exists is held by the government or the minister of finance when in fact parliament has legislated otherwise. The government is not omnipotent; parliament is, within the terms of the British North America Act and federal jurisdiction. The government's power in all matters financial is derived from parliament; it depends upon enactments.

Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition sought yesterday to create or present an issue as though it lay between the government and the Bank of Canada. I shall have something to say on this subject. I say, Mr. Speaker, and this is the keynote of what I am about to submit, that in the field of monetary policy parliament has given the essential authority to the Bank of Canada and not to the government or to the minister of finance.

When we look for the place where power resides with respect to money supply in Canada we find that parliament has given no power to the government. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, when the Leader of the Opposition criticized monetary policy yesterday he was not, as he tried to represent, criticizing the government; he was criticizing the Bank of Canada. The Leader of the Opposition added the pretence, for his own partisan purpose, that the government has the responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to examine that question and deal with it fully. Let me say at the outset that it is perfectly proper at all times that any question of this nature should be discussed right here in parliament. But, Mr. Speaker, let us be clear in relation to this basic question of where the power does lie and whether responsibility should be fixed on the government or elsewhere. May I remind the house, Mr. Speaker, that not every public institution is subject to the government, or responsible to it. I suppose another comparable example is the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. In its operations and in its programs it is not responsible to the government. It has been fundamental, indeed it has been axiomatic in the relationship between parliament and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation from the outset, that its responsibility was to parliament, not to the government. The view has prevailed in parliament that the government must keep hands off the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

The Leader of the Opposition yesterday was all mixed up on the subject of budgets, Mr. Speaker. I will have a word to say about that. He was outdone, of course, by his right bower, the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin). Any time the Leader of the Opposition makes an error you may be very sure, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Essex East will go him one better, and he certainly did yesterday.

In the case of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, it does submit its budget to the government. Parliament has provided, Mr. Speaker, in plain terms that the budget of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation must be passed on by the government, and it is submitted to parliament along with all the other estimates submitted to parliament by the government. Yet, even in face of that fact, it is a firm and established rule that parliament shall not control the operations or programs of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Where does the responsibility rest here, Mr. Speaker? Not with the government. Parliament has so dictated.

What then of the Bank of Canada? Mr. Speaker, the provisions that parliament has enacted in this regard are very clear. Parliament, in its wisdom, has conferred certain powers upon the Bank of Canada in plain terms. I shall detain the house only by reading several provisions which will be relevant to my later remarks. In section 18, subsection 3, these words appear:

> The bank shall at all times make public the minimum rate at which it is prepared to make loans or advances.

Section 20, subsections 1 and 2, read:

> (1) The bank shall act as fiscal agent of the government of Canada without charge and, subject to the provisions of this act, by agreement, may also act as banker or fiscal agent of the government of any province.
> (2) The bank, if and when required by the minister so to do, shall act as agent for the government of Canada in the payment of interest and principal and generally in respect of the management of the public debt of Canada.

And then section 21, subsections 1 and 2 read:

> (1) ... the bank shall, except as provided in the Bank Act, have the sole right to issue notes payable to bearer on demand and intended for circulation in Canada and may, subject to section 23, issue such notes to any amount; such notes shall be legal tender, and shall be the first charge upon the assets of the bank.
> (2) It shall be the duty of the bank to make adequate arrangements for the issue of its notes at its head office and at its branch offices and agencies in Canada, and to supply such notes as required for circulation in Canada.

Those are very plain terms, Mr. Speaker, and there is the legislative code provided by parliament for the determination of this question which has been so confused by the Leader of the Opposition. The bank acts as the fiscal agent of the government. The government is responsible for debt management, but it has the right to call upon the services of the bank in that regard. The bank is given the sole right to determine what is called the bank rate, as described in section 18, that is the minimum rate at which it is prepared to make loans or advances. This provision is fundamental in relation to the question of responsibility. In regard to the direction of the monetary policy, in section 21 it is provided that the bank has the sole right to issue notes payable to bearer on demand and intended for circulation in Canada.

Then in subsection 2 it is provided that it is the duty of the bank to supply such notes as may be required for circulation in Canada. There is no right reserved to the government under section 21 in regard to the money supply or notes in circulation. The crux of monetary policy is surely control of the money supply. This does not mean that the Bank of Canada is not responsible. It is not responsible in this respect to the government. It is not under the authority of the government. The government cannot give it orders in this regard. Because the government has not power to direct the Bank of Canada what to do in this respect or what not to do, it is not correct to hold the government responsible, as the Leader of the Opposition is seeking to do, for in this relationship the government has no power or authority whatever given to it by parliament in relation to the Bank of Canada. Parliament has chosen to retain this power and authority unto itself, as it has done in relation to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

The Leader of the Opposition yesterday referred to the speeches that have been made by the governor of the Bank of Canada. Mr. Speaker, may I say that I have no right of censorship over the speeches of the governor of the Bank of Canada. He does not refer them to me. Why should he do so? This is a free country. He makes his own speeches and chooses his own themes. I read these speeches afterwards as does the Leader of the Opposition. It is sometimes forgotten by hon. members opposite that this is a free country. I trust that I am not to be held responsible for what may be said by the governor of the Bank of Canada when he exercises his right as a citizen to make speeches.

Mr. McIlraith: He cannot make speeches on that subject as a private citizen. When he speaks on it he speaks as governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There we have the hon. member for Ottawa West making another speech from a sitting posture.

The governor of the Bank of Canada does not speak for the government when he makes these speeches and he does not claim to do so.

We heard what was reported to be a review yesterday of the views expressed on this subject over a period of years by certain of my predecessors and these were put forward by the Leader of the Opposition as some authority, as he argued, for the assertion that the bank has an immediate responsibility to the government and an ultimate responsibility to parliament.

Let us put ourselves clearly on record right now, Mr. Speaker. What I say is this, and I have given chapter and verse in the enactments of this parliament to show it. I say that the responsibility owed by the Bank of Canada is to parliament. It is not an ultimate responsibility. It is a direct responsibility.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We never questioned that fact; that is not the point and the minister knows it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): We have another interruption Mr. Speaker, another speech. This time it is from Essex East and I shall have occasion—

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Pearson: Will the minister permit a question on this specific point?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps he would explain the statement he made on August 11, 1956.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes. I am coming to that matter. I am going to review these statements that were quoted yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition. I intend to deal with the one of mine that he read.

First of all, as his first argument or piece of evidence with which to buttress this assertion that the bank has an immediate responsibility to the government, the Leader of the Opposition yesterday made the statement that the bank submits its budget to the government. Here is his statement as found at page 2200 of Hansard, in the second column. I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to note the relationship of these two assertions:

> The bank, like several other public corporations, however, has an immediate responsibility to the government and an ultimate responsibility to parliament.

I would ask you to note what immediately follows, Mr. Speaker, namely his best piece of evidence for that assertion:

> The governor and the directors are appointed by the government. They can be removed only by parliament, it is true. The budget of the bank is approved each year by the government.

Mr. Speaker, I listened to that statement with consternation and I rose in my place and asked the Leader of the Opposition this question:

> Do I understand that the Leader of the Opposition is saying that the budget of the Bank of Canada is approved each year by the government?
> Mr. Pearson: That is what I said, Mr. Speaker.

Those were bold words, Mr. Speaker. Then, of course, Essex East was not satisfied with this bold declaration so we have this statement on the record—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that when he refers to another hon. member he must, under the rules of this house say "the hon. member for" and give the name of the constituency he represents.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): How does this most hon. member know that I was even referring to him? I said that Essex East was not satisfied with the statement of the Leader of the Opposition. So the hon. member for Essex East then put in his two cents' worth. He, having heard his leader say, "That is what I said", we read this on the record:

> Mr. Martin (Essex East): Surely that is the case.

Mr. Speaker, he was just about as right as he usually is. His batting average has been running rather high; the Martin bureau of statistics is, I think, well in the lead in this house in terms of an all time record of errors.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It certainly worries the minister.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The fact is this. Contrary to the assertions of the Leader of the Opposition and his most honourable right bower there, the fact is that the Bank of Canada never submits its budget to the government or to the Minister of Finance. It never does so.

Mr. Pearson: Will the minister permit a question on that point?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Mr. Pearson: Does the minister deny that certain expenditures of the Bank of Canada have to be approved by the cabinet and that the accounts have to be approved each year by the cabinet?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The situation is plain. The Bank of Canada sets its own budget. It never brings its budget to the government. All that it does in this regard is this: The audited statement of the bank, of course, is forwarded to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Pearson: Of certain expenditures?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No. The statement relates to their holdings of securities and things of that kind, the sort of thing that is normally covered by audit. This is extremely interesting, Mr. Speaker. The Leader of the Opposition now is crawling; he is trying to distract attention from this horrible bloomer that he uttered yesterday. We will not hold the Leader of the Opposition too directly responsible. He never was an economist. But I think that we can hold to account those who write these speeches of his and who are his advisers on economic questions.

Mr. Pearson: I rise on a point of order. The minister has talked about persons writing my speeches. May I tell the minister that I write my own speeches, as he undoubtedly writes his in spite of the dozens of experts he has helping him.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Then, Mr. Speaker, we can understand why the Leader of the Opposition makes these frightful errors in his speeches.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the minister is talking about this one statement about the budget because it gives him a chance to get away from important matters. But does the minister deny the statement I made a moment ago that certain expenditures of the bank must be approved by the governor in council each year.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have dealt with that subject and I have deal with it fully.

Mr. Pearson: Answer the question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am not going to be distracted by the Leader of the Opposition. I am going on to read what was further said. I had asked that question in sheer consternation that an hon. gentleman who has been in this house many years and who sat as a member of the government for nine years, would rise in his place and make this extraordinary statement and then build his whole case on this error, and that another hon. member who has graced this house for 26 years now, would go the Leader of the Opposition one worse, yesterday. The Leader of the Opposition went on to say this:

> Perhaps the minister will point out what the situation is when he replies.

Mr. Pearson: That is what I am asking.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The quotation continues:

> If the minister is now saying that the government of this country has no responsibility for the budget of the Bank of Canada, perhaps he will explain that statement when he speaks.

Let me explain that statement, Mr. Speaker. The statement made by the Leader of the Opposition is totally, utterly and completely wrong.

Mr. Pearson: Answer my question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There never was a time when the Bank of Canada submitted its budget to the government. So, on this foundation the Leader of the Opposition bases his statement which follows:

> Therefore, although the bank has been given wide powers and specific and important functions, the government, as we see it on this side and as we have seen it for many years, must accept full and sole responsibility for the way in which those powers are exercised and the manner in which those functions are carried out.

I do not believe any minister of finance, Liberal or otherwise, has ever gone that far before. When the Leader of the Opposition says this is the opinion he has had for many years, I wonder why in the nine years he was a member of the former government he did not take the simple precaution of proposing an amendment to the Bank of Canada Act to legislate clearly and adequately on this subject for the purpose he had in mind. Why, after some very contrary statements were made by the Hon. Walter Harris, then minister of finance, in 1956 did not the Leader of the Opposition demand that the government bring in the necessary legislation to change the situation as it was described by the then minister of finance.

We have it, then, that the Leader of the Opposition bases his assertion as to responsibility resting upon the government on the fact that the government appoints the governor and the members of the board of directors. These are facts, but the Leader of the Opposition has recognized that once they are appointed they cannot be removed by the government; they can only be removed by parliament. So where does the control by the government rest under those circumstances? All of this is the case that has been put forward by the Leader of the Opposition, with no evidence in support.

He referred yesterday to a statement made by Mr. Dunning in 1936. If you will examine the record, Mr. Speaker, you will see that Mr. Dunning was in this respect speaking on a rather different topic and was simply commenting on an interjection made at that time by Mr. Bennett.

In 1941 Mr. Ilsley made a comment on this subject in broad terms. In 1951 Mr. Abbott—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Read what Mr. Ilsley said.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —made a statement on this subject.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Read what he said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, in 1951 Mr. Abbott was making a statement just in the course of discussion. He pointed out that he had not a copy of the Bank of Canada Act before him. This is to be found at page 4393 of Hansard of June 20, 1951:

> Naturally the governor of the Bank of Canada—

This was just in the course of discussion in committee of supply. There was a running discussion:

> Naturally the governor of the Bank of Canada, the Minister of Finance and his permanent officials operate in very close consultation, and the relationships are very close. The Bank of Canada has certain defined statutory responsibilities which, under the statute creating it, it is obliged to carry out. The government has other responsibilities, and among other things I suppose government policy can inevitably affect the value of currency, and to that extent could negative action which the bank might attempt to take. Frankly,—

Note these words:

> —I did not come prepared this evening to engage in detailed analysis of the relative relationships between the Bank of Canada and the government. I have not the Bank of Canada Act here, but broadly speaking they are parallel responsibilities. The government, of course, if it were not satisfied with the action taken by the governor and the directors of the Bank of Canada, would have to change the management of the bank.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: That is responsibility.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is the very point you have been ignoring all day.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Isn't this interesting, another interjection from Essex East by the hon. member for Essex East. What is this great power that it is said the government has? We are told it would have to change the management of the bank. Can the government change the management of the bank? It cannot. Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition, as is reported at page 2200 of Hansard, recognized that changes can only be made, apart from the effluxion of terms of office, by parliament, not by the government. The government has no power whatsoever, once appointments are made, to change them; only parliament can do that. This is what the Leader of the Opposition said yesterday, as reported at page 2200 of Hansard:

> The governor and the directors are appointed by the government. They can be removed only by parliament, it is true.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Who controls parliament?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member for Essex East is now trying to deny the statement of his own leader. Surely he will have a little respect for his leader—

Mr. Pearson: Read what the governor of the bank said.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —and not make him look more embarrassed than he is. There we have an offhand comment made by Mr. Abbott in those days saying that he had not come prepared to discuss this subject and he did not have a copy of the Bank of Canada Act before him. It is quite evident that the Leader of the Opposition did not have a copy of the Bank of Canada Act before him when he wrote his speech.

Mr. Pearson: I quoted from it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The next reference that we heard yesterday in the interesting speech of the Leader of the Opposition was to the testimony of Graham Towers, then governor of the Bank of Canada, before the banking and commerce committee in 1954. I have a very lively recollection of this particular meeting, as I am sure my hon. friend the member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell) has, because we were very interested to probe the view of Mr. Towers in regard to this relationship between the bank and the government.

The Leader of the Opposition made reference to this subject yesterday. I wish to refer to what Mr. Towers said. There are double references here in the two-volume reports. This reference is at page 714 in the two-volume report, and in the revised one-volume issue it is to be found on pages 25 and 26 of the proceedings of the banking and commerce committee in 1954. This is the statement of Mr. Graham Towers, who was speaking out of years of experience. He had been the governor of the Bank of Canada from the outset, then some 18 years. He said:

> The situation is that parliament has placed squarely on the shoulders of the directors and management of the Bank of Canada the responsibility for monetary policy.

It would be difficult to find a clearer statement than that.

Mr. Pearson: Read on.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I continue:

> It would be of no use for us to come before a committee of this kind—

That was the banking and commerce committee:

> —and say in respect to certain actions which were criticized, we did not like that, but the government wanted us to do it. The proper answer would be; in what act has parliament said that you should do something in the field of monetary policy in which you do not believe? Therefore, we must and do take full responsibility for everything which we have done.

He was there referring to the bank:

> Now, I think myself that the Bank of Canada Act is in this respect of very good act, and better than most, because it is clear. There is no alibi possible for the central bank.

Mr. Speaker, having described the responsibility of the bank in those terms Mr. Graham Towers went on to point out that eventually any change in this system rests with parliament; it has to come back to parliament. I am sure no one will question that the majority in parliament can always alter the legislation, and that is what Mr. Graham Towers proceeded to say.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Read the whole statement.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He said:

> ... the answer obviously is that the administration of the day, supported by a majority in parliament, can always alter the legislation.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. minister permit a question?

An hon. Member: You are out of order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Having traced the situation on this subject in various countries, comparing countries in which the central bank enjoys independence with countries in which the central bank is in effect a department of government, he said:

> Myself, I think that that is a sort of mongrel arrangement, and the central bank should be either a pure department of government and known to the public as such, or it should have independent responsibility.

What the parliament of Canada has chosen is that the Bank of Canada should have independent responsibility.

Mr. Pearson: Read on what he said.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the minister would now permit a question on the quotation he has given?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, but I wish to say that if there are any more of these observations and interjections from the Leader of the Opposition or the hon. member for Essex East from their seats in the house, they will be replied to, and suitably. But you see what happens? It is the same old thing. They are very touchy. Yesterday they would not have interruptions. They would not have questions, even when members were asking merely for an explanation. But now, when the shoe is on the other foot, there they sit. They are close to Hansard. The Leader of the Opposition gets off these wisecracks. It is debate by wisecrack as far as he is concerned, and then he goes on to lard up the record. If that is the way we are going to have the rules observed, then very well, but they must be evenly applied.

Mr. Pearson: On a point of order. I have had the opportunity of looking at Hansard, that is quite true; but I have ascertained from Hansard that the minister himself made 24 interruptions when I spoke yesterday in an hour and ten minutes.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think the Leader of the Opposition, if he is fair, will agree—

Mr. Pearson: Yes, some of them were legitimate.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): All right. We will say no more about that, because the Leader of the Opposition did yield the floor on occasion yesterday, as I have always done when the hon. gentleman has sought to ask questions, and I propose to continue to do so. Did the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. McIlraith) wish to intervene?

Mr. McIlraith: I wanted to ask a question, but I am afraid we have been diverted. When the minister was quoting from the evidence given to the committee in 1954 he ended his quotation with the words: "There is no alibi possible for the central bank." Does the minister not think it would have been only fair to the house to have quoted the next sentence which has a direct bearing on the point?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I went on to stress twice the point in the next sentence and the next paragraph. I laid great stress on that. If the hon. member for Ottawa West cannot read this next sentence I shall be glad to read it for him, but it will not go one inch further:

On the other hand, there is no alibi possible for the government, because if government said: well, we disagreed with what the central bank did, but parliament has placed the responsibility on them, so what could we do? The answer obviously is that the administration of the day, supported by a majority in parliament, can always alter the legislation.

I quoted those words, and that is precisely what I said. The administration of the day, supported by a majority in parliament, could always alter the legislation.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is not the whole picture, and you know it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was the whole picture that Mr. Graham Towers put before the committee. With all respect to the supernatural omniscience of the hon. member for Essex East, I still prefer Mr. Graham Towers speaking with authority on the subject of the Bank of Canada. That will point very clearly to the fact that the government as such has no power to exercise over the Bank of Canada. It rests with parliament. Parliament can always alter the legislation. But short of that, the bank in these matters has the responsibility. That is the effect of the legislation enacted by this parliament as it has been in effect for many years.

Now I proceed to 1956. That was a very interesting time indeed, because there had been a good deal of debate on the subject of tight money, and the government had been holding back on that subject. Finally, on August 10 and 11, the minister of finance of that day was really cornered and we began to elicit from him some statements which have made very interesting reading since. The reference made yesterday to this subject by the Leader of the Opposition was highly selective. He chose to read his extracts from August 11, 1956. He did not choose to deal with what was said on the same subject on August 10, the day before. So I am going to refresh his memory. At page 7351 of Hansard of August 10, the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Rowe) who at that time was acting leader of the opposition pressed certain questions on the orders of the day, and on his second try he got this statement out of Mr. Harris, then minister of finance. The discussion at that time revolved around an increase made by the bank in the bank rate. Mr. Harris said:

The duty of the Bank of Canada is to regulate the interest rate, which is commonly known as the bank rate. That duty and responsibility is imposed upon the bank and not upon the government, and it has not been customary in the past for any minister of finance to comment on the actions of the bank in discharging its duty. As a matter of fact, however, without admitting some of the opinions or facts that have been stated in the question, I may say that there is a considerable body of opinion in the financial world today that unless action of this kind were taken there might be more serious results than if no action were taken.

Then the minister was pressed further by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and he replied:

I answered this question some two months ago by saying that the governor of the Bank of Canada is one of the several advisors to the minister of finance. In this particular matter, however—

That is, the determination of the bank rate.

—he has statutory authority to make his own decisions, that statutory authority having been conferred upon him by parliament. I think it would be correct to say, as I said on the former occasion, that I was advised of this course before it was taken.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is the point. He was advised. That is where the responsibility of the government comes in.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I presume that even the hon. member for Essex East may have been advised, too, Mr. Speaker. But he was advised of what the governor of the bank intended to do in exercise of the authority conferred upon him.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): To make sure it was not contrary to government policy.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The babbling brook goes on forever.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Insults do not enrich your argument. All the hon. gentleman can do is add personal insult. Let him deal with this thing on its merits. The fact is that the governor of the Bank of Canada did seek the advice of those who have final and legitimate responsibility for government in this country.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): You see, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member did not rise to ask a question. He did not ask me to yield the floor. He just stood up and proceeded to make a speech. That is an interesting commentary on his conception of the application of the rules of the house. They are binding on 264 members, but this exalted member is above all the rules of the house.

Mr. Chevrier: You should have been around last night to see how well they were observed.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No doubt the same thing happened then. The hon. member has undertaken to say, presumably on his own authority, that the government was consulted and apparently took some responsibility in relation to approval. That is not what his former colleague, the minister of finance, said. The then minister of finance was pointing out that he was acquainted in advance of what the bank was going to do in the exercise of its own statutory power and responsibility. May I now refresh the failing memory of the hon. member for Essex East because, you see, the hon. member has made another blunder; he has put his foot in it again.

There then followed this question from the present Prime Minister:

Did the minister in any way suggest, having regard to the inflationary tendencies in this country today, that this action should be taken or might be taken by the bank?

To which Mr. Harris replied:

I also answered that question two months ago by saying that this action is the action of the governor of the bank and his responsibility alone.

So, on the facts, you have to make your choice between the hon. member for Essex East, speaking now, some five years after this event with his usual irresponsibility and the minister of finance of that time speaking on August 10, 1956, because the statements made today by the hon. member for Essex East and by the minister of finance in 1956 are completely contradictory.

Mr. Pearson: I was going to ask the minister if he is not aware that, while there is no question about the bank being responsible for policy action, in the evidence to which he has just referred—a part which the hon. gentleman did not read—the statement is made that if action by the bank was in conflict with the policy of the government, the governor would resign.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Leader of the Opposition has pointed out to us that it is only parliament and not the government that has power in this respect in relation to the resignation of anybody, whether governor or bank directors, but the hon. gentleman is wrong again. I have not finished reading this. It is regrettable that hon. members opposite only read Hansard of August 11 and do not look back at August 10. It is a selective habit they have.

As reported at page 7352 of Hansard of August 10, the then hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar, Mr. Coldwell, asked this question:

While it is true that the governor of the Bank of Canada makes the final decision in these matters, is it not a fact that the Bank of Canada was established in order that it might control the economy and carry out government policy in that particular? Is it not a fact that was the main reason for its establishment?

Let me interject here, Mr. Speaker, that had those questions been put to the Leader of the Opposition yesterday he would, of course, have answered yes to both questions.

Mr. Pearson: Nonsense.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): But observe the answer of Mr. Harris:

I do not think that is a correct interpretation of the statute,—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I continue:

—though anyone can put such an interpretation on it if he so desires. I think the purpose was not only to vest ownership of the bank in the government, as has been done, but to vest in the officials of the bank independent authority—

Mr. Pearson: Under government policy.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He did not say that. He said, "independent authority".

Mr. Pearson: Well, that is obvious.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Leader of the Opposition has no right whatever to add qualifications to the statement made by the hon. Walter Harris in this house in 1956. Mr. Harris was quite capable of making his own statements and it is not within the right of the Leader of the Opposition or any other hon. member of this house now to qualify or contradict by qualification the plain statement made on that occasion by the then minister of finance.

The discussion proceeded further and the then prime minister, Mr. St. Laurent, was brought into the discussion. The present Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) asked this question:

Does the Prime Minister know the reason for the increase in the rate and, if so, does he agree that it is necessary?

The then prime minister, Mr. St. Laurent, replied:

The Prime Minister is not the governor of the Bank of Canada, and while I hope that if he were perhaps the hon. gentleman would have more confidence in his decision than in the decision of the present staff, I can assure the hon. gentleman that the matter received very serious consideration and the government has not decided to recommended to parliament any amendment to the act which places that responsibility on the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, that certainly is right and it completely contradicts the assertions made here yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition and volubly supported from a seated position by the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Pearson: Do not be so narrow and legalistic.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The present Prime Minister then directed a question to Mr. St. Laurent in these words:

Will the Prime Minister, having had the reasons from the governor of the Bank of Canada, now give the house the benefit of what those reasons were?

In reply to that question the then prime minister said:

> No, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister will not undertake to have parliament or the members of the opposition act as a court of appeal from the decision made by the governor of the Bank of Canada—

Then there were cries of "Oh, oh," and the then prime minister added:

> —unless and until parliament amends the act which now governs the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, it is too bad that hon. members opposite have sought in this debate to pull the rug out from under the feet of Mr. St. Laurent, but Mr. St. Laurent's statement is there on the record. It is clear, it is incontestable and it stands as a statement of the effect and meaning and proper construction of the provisions of the Bank of Canada Act. It is not open to challenge by any hon. member opposite.

Mr. Pearson: It has been challenged by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, not at all, Mr. Speaker. Mr. St. Laurent was plainly saying what I have contended in this respect and was also contradicting in the plainest terms the kind of specious but utterly empty and inane arguments put forward yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition.

The Leader of the Opposition referred yesterday to the debate which proceeded on August 11 and quoted a statement which I made in that debate. Let me make it very clear that if I had ever foreseen at that time that my remark was going to be wrenched and distorted in the way in which the Leader of the Opposition has sought to bend it out of recognition to serve his argument yesterday, it would never have been said in those terms.

I made my statement with reference to over-all financial policy in Canada. I do not think there is anything in that statement which ought to be interpreted as supporting the thesis put forward by the Leader of the Opposition yesterday that under the provisions enacted by parliament with respect to the Bank of Canada Act, the government has power to direct the Bank of Canada or to call upon the Bank of Canada to observe a position of responsibility to the government as such, rather than to parliament. The Bank of Canada, of course, has its responsibility to parliament.

Mr. Pearson: Read the speech.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have dwelt on that subject at some length. It was read yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition and referred to again today and I have made my own comment on it in what I think are plain and understandable terms.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

From the time Mr. St. Laurent made his comment on the effect of the language of the act in 1956 until the present, the situation has not altered. The act has not been amended. Parliament has not seen fit to amend the provisions of the act and the matter stands there in the position in which Mr. St. Laurent described it in 1956. It is the legislation enacted by parliament that governs the relationships in this matter.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I refer, of course to the relationships between parliament, the government and the Bank of Canada. The decisions that are made in this situation are those of the governor and those of the bank and are not those of the government.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, now.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am seriously trying—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Let us have the question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —to arrive at my hon. friend's position and to fully understand it. Does the hon. gentleman agree with the statement that was made by one of his own predecessors, Mr. Ilsley, who when speaking of a possible disagreement between the bank and the government said in this house in 1941 that in the event of a disagreement between the Bank of Canada and the government:

> —it would be necessary for them—

That is, the bank. I continue:

> —to resign, and they would be replaced by others who were willing to accept the responsibility for the type of policy which the government believed to be appropriate.

Does my hon. friend agree with that statement made by a former distinguished minister of finance?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, no, not in those terms. Not at all.

Mr. Pearson: We do.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is the issue.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Unless, in the event of disagreement, the governor and the directors chose to resign there is nothing the government is in a position to do in that situation except to ask parliament to change the legislation or wait for the expiry of their terms because, as the Leader of the Opposition said yesterday, referring to the governor and the directors—I repeat once more—"they can be removed only by parliament." That was a direct statement.

Mr. Pearson: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? This is a very critical and important matter. I would ask the minister, then, in this situation, does he believe the governor of the bank can do or say what he likes in this field and that the government can do nothing about it?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Let us take the extreme case of a headlong clash, Mr. Speaker. In a situation of that nature the government would have no power whatever to terminate the terms of office of the directors or the governor. In that situation all it could do would be to go to parliament, as the Leader of the Opposition said yesterday in effect. That is all it could do. The government has not been given by parliament any power or authority over the bank or its senior officials or directors in that situation.

Let me now make some comments on the subject of money supply. Here again, the Leader of the Opposition drew a very long bow. Money supply consists of the total of issued currency and chartered bank deposits. May I remind the house of those words which I read from the Bank of Canada Act, that the bank has the sole right to issue notes payable to bearer on demand and intended for circulation in Canada. That is the effect of section 21. Nothing could be plainer. Parliament has emphasized that the Bank of Canada has the sole right in this matter. The bank alone determines what currency shall be issued and in this respect the legislative position is just as it was under the former Liberal administration.

The government has no voice whatever in this matter of money supply. Consequently, in whatever the Leader of the Opposition had to say yesterday by way of criticism in relation to money supply, those are matters over which the government has no control and whether or not the hon. gentleman realizes it—I think he must realize it—his criticisms were directed at the Bank of Canada and not at the government. The government has no power to add to or subtract from or change this money supply or currency that the Bank of Canada is given the sole power to create.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) had something to say yesterday about the increase in money supply from April to October, 1958. I am not going to dwell on this subject but his criticism, if valid, was quite misdirected. He said that the increase in money supply during that period was the largest monetary expansion since world war II. It was in fact $1.4 billion not adjusted for seasonal factors. The increase for the whole year 1958, that is, from the end of December, 1957, to the end of December, 1958, was $1.324 billion or 11.1 per cent. It is customary, Mr. Speaker, to measure the increase by comparison of dates a year apart.

The Leader of the Opposition then went on to attribute to the government's debt management policies all of this increase in money supply and he said it was "too large for the needs and stability of the economy". May I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that between the end of December, 1954, and the end of December, 1955, when he was a minister of the government, the money supply was increased by 10.5 per cent despite the lack of any comparable conversion loan and, indeed, in the face of a net retirement of government bonds of over $300 million. But I realize, Mr. Speaker, that the interesting occurrence, which I should like to put alongside what the Leader of the Opposition said yesterday, took place before Mr. Harris denied responsibility for monetary policy.

The Leader of the Opposition also referred to the reduction of $300 million in money supply between October, 1958, and May, 1960, as "more severe than in 1956". He then spoke of the money supply from April, 1960, to August, 1960, only four months, as having been kept "almost stable". The fact is that it increased $117 million in those four months.

As to the adequacy of money supply, Mr. Speaker, the house will have to be the judge of that. For the information of the house on this point I simply draw attention to the extent of increase in money supply at the end of 1960 compared with the end of 1959. Here I give the extent of increase or decrease in various countries taking the money supply at the end of 1959 as 100:

United States	99
United Kingdom	99
Sweden	104
Australia	104
Canada	105
Germany	107
The Netherlands	107
Switzerland	109

At December 31, 1960, the money supply in Canada was substantially larger than it had ever been before. I will just give the figures at the year end in the following years:

Year	Millions of Dollars
1953	9,789
1954	10,314
1955	11,397
1956	11,438
1957	11,923
1958	13,247
1959	13,193
1960	13,914

The figure at December 31, 1960, is by far the largest on record and it is 5.5 per cent higher than the corresponding figure at the end of 1959.

Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition made complaint about the striking of the bank rate.

Mr. McIlraith: Before the minister leaves these figures, I think he said that the figure at the end of December, 1960, was by far the largest. I take it he meant the largest compared with the same date in the previous year.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Oh, it is away higher than any previous date. The money supply moved up steadily in the second half of 1960.

Mr. McIlraith: It was higher a month earlier, for instance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There are bound to be fluctuations from week to week.

Mr. McIlraith: What I wanted to get was that the minister's figures were all based on comparable dates in previous years.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, and if the hon. member will compare the November, 1960, figure with the November, 1959, figure he will find a similar increase over the 1959 figure.

Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition talked about the bank rate. Again, Mr. Speaker, I emphasize that the determination of the bank rate is the responsibility of the Bank of Canada. The government has nothing whatever to do with it, and that was recognized by Mr. Harris. I give the reference, 1956 Hansard, page 7351.

It was on November 1, 1956, that the Bank of Canada adopted what has come to be known as the floating rate. It was a decision of the Bank of Canada and the Leader of the Opposition has criticized that decision. He criticized it in the face of the very plain terms of section 18, subsection 3, of the Bank of Canada Act. I quote:

> The Bank shall at all times make public the minimum rate at which it is prepared to make loans or advances.

Mr. Harris said in the reference I have just made that it is the bank that determines the bank rate. The government has no control whatever over the rate that the bank sets or over the method it chooses by which to set this rate. If the Leader of the Opposition disapproved of this so-called floating rate, the rate attached by decision of the Bank of Canada to the 91-day treasury bill rate, then he had something like eight months in office to do something about it and he did not do anything about it. It was in his day as a minister that this floating rate was adopted by the Bank of Canada.

I say that the government has no power whatsoever to interfere with the action of the bank in determining this rate or in choosing the method by which it shall determine the rate.

The Leader of the Opposition chose yesterday to make reference to what happened on August 20, 1959, and he described it as an interference with monetary policy on my part. That statement will bear some examination, Mr. Speaker. Here are the words of the Leader of the Opposition as found on page 2202 of Hansard:

> After all, the minister and the government did not hesitate to interfere with the operations of monetary policy by the bank, so they should not attempt to evade responsibility for policy—

When this fell on my astounded ears I asked:

> Mr. Speaker, to what is the Leader of the Opposition referring?

He then said:

> I am thinking of the intervention of the government in the bank auction of treasury bills some time ago, which had an influence on the rate on treasury bills. The minister knows all about it. He knows all about the cabinet meeting which was held and the auction being postponed an hour or two so the government could make up its mind what to do.

It is on this statement that the Leader of the Opposition accuses the government and accuses me of interfering with the operations of monetary policy by the bank. I give to his assertion, Mr. Speaker, an unqualified contradiction. There was on that occasion not the slightest interference with the bank's monetary policy. Since this government came into office there has never been the slightest interference with the bank's monetary policy.

What happened on August 20, 1959, was that a decision was taken, and I take full responsibility for it, that the government would not sell all of the treasury bills for which it had invited tenders on that particular Thursday because I thought that the prices being offered were unsuitable. In effect, the discount that was applied at that time was, I thought, too high, and I was not prepared under those circumstances to have the government of Canada pay that high a price for 91-day treasury bill money. It was a decision in relation to the price the government was prepared to pay on its own borrowings on the 91-day treasury bills. That is what it was. It was not done with a view to affecting the bank rate at all. It was not, as the Leader of the Opposition says, an interference with monetary policy. It was open to the bank at that time to strike the rate at anything it decided upon. It was open to the bank to detach its rate from the treasury bill rate. The purpose of this decision, which I made over in the Bank of Canada office when we saw what the bids were, was in relation to the price on these treasury bills. That was its entire purpose. Whatever bearing this may have had on the Bank of Canada rate for that week was entirely incidental; that was something that the Bank of Canada could set or change in any way it chose. There was on that occasion, and on all other occasions, no interference with the bank or with the bank rate.

Mr. Speaker, one could go on dealing with this subject and others related to it at some considerable length, but it seems to me that the essential issue here is this question of responsibility. Therefore I will pass over some intervening remarks that I had intended to make and take up what the Leader of the Opposition undertook to say about the interest rates. Here he was much less definite; much less effusive than he was in his unfounded assertions about the responsibility in relation to decisions of the Bank of Canada within the scope of monetary policy. He was seeking evidently to argue that the government in some way had raised interest rates. I wish again to make firm contradiction of any such statement. As long as the present government is in office you may be sure it is not going to pay one cent more interest on the moneys that it has to borrow than is strictly necessary. Interest rates are determined in this country—in this free economy —in the light of thousands of transactions. It is a matter of the operation of the forces of supply and demand within quite limited statutory restrictions. The situation in this regard is precisely the same as it was when the former government was in office.

If there has been a fluctuation in the interest rates, Mr. Speaker, I can only say that interest rates are constantly fluctuating; they had risen steadily for two years before we came into office. The rise was substantial, and the consequent drop in market values of issued bonds was very great. There were quoted reductions in values of 14 and 15 points before the former government went out of office. Interest rates declined following the summer of 1957 and they rose beginning in the summer of 1958. There was a rise until the autumn of 1959. After a period of stability they then began to decline again. This is the sort of thing that is going on in the markets of this continent. This also depends on the influence of the bond market in New York.

Now lest the impression be created in the minds of some hon. members that the government has brought about high interest rates let me point out that interest rates in this country, while they are higher than the government would like to see on borrowings that it has to make, are lower than the interest rates in the United Kingdom and have been close to the 1960 rates of interest in the United States, that country which is the largest reservoir of capital in the world and whose rates traditionally are lower than the interest rates in Canada. Let me just run quickly over some figures, Mr. Speaker, in respect of the 91-day treasury bill rates in Canada. Let us take the last three quarters of 1960 and compare them with the last three quarters of 1960 in respect of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Pearson: And the United States.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): All right, I will read right across the page, and the figures will be in this order; Canada, U.S.A., and the U.K.

For the second quarter of 1960; Canada, 3.05; U.S.A., 3.09; U.K., 4.70. For the third quarter: Canada, 2.53; U.S.A., 2.39; U.K., 5.56. For the fourth quarter: Canada, 3.23; U.S.A., 2.36; U.K., 4.85. Those are treasury bill rates. The house is aware that treasury bill rates in Canada have declined since then.

Let us now take the quarterly averages of comparison of the long term interest rates, and again I will take just the last three quarters of 1960. Using the same order, the second quarter: Canada, 5.15; U.S.A., 4.11; U.K., 5.41. For the third quarter: Canada, 4.81; U.S.A., 3.82; U.K., 5.57. For the fourth quarter: Canada, 5.04; U.S.A., 3.90; U.K., 5.53.

Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition yesterday talked about the loss of confidence in the bond market. If confidence has not been lost in the value of government of Canada bonds it is not because the statements of the Leader of the Opposition have contributed anything to the confidence in this country. His effort in this respect has been destructive at all times, and I include what he said in respect of this subject yesterday. Surely the best test of whether there is confidence in the markets of Canada is to look at the figures of the public's holdings of Canada bonds. I could give the figures for some distance back but let me begin with those for 1959. I am giving these by quarters in respect of the general public holdings of government of Canada direct and guaranteed securities. For 1959, March 31, $9,499 million; June 30, $9,934 million; September 30, $10,132 million; December 31, $10,725 million. The same figures for 1960 beginning with March 31, $10,971 million; June 30, $10,800 million; September 30, $10,466 million; and December 31, $11,079 million, an all-time high. There is the answer to the Leader of the Opposition when he talks about loss of confidence in Canada bonds.

Let us look at the recent results. Even since December 20 when the supplementary budget sought to direct Canadians to do more of their borrowing in Canada, what has been the result? The fact is that provinces, municipalities and business have floated issues in the first six weeks of the year, or a little less, aggregating $200 million. The government of Canada put out an issue of $150 million, and none of this financing was done in New York. Has there been any disturbance in the interest rates in Canada in 1961, Mr. Speaker? No, there has not. The Canadian market has absorbed these issues and the market is even a little stronger today, and interest rates are a trifle lower than they were in the beginning of 1961, or on the date of the supplementary budget, being December 20, 1960.

After all this, the Leader of the Opposition yesterday expressed pious regret that the Bank of Canada has become, as he described it, the centre of the present controversy. Here are his words as found at page 2206 of Hansard:

> It is most regrettable indeed that the Bank of Canada has become the centre of the present controversy—

Then he went on to say that it would weaken the prestige of an essential institution. I ask the Leader of the Opposition what he has done to prevent a weakening of the prestige of the Bank of Canada by bringing it into the centre of controversy? Is this any constructive contribution to understanding, fair play and fair judgement?

Then he had something to say on debt management. Debt management is an extremely important subject. It is a factor that is of importance to every person in Canada, no matter what may be his walk of life. This is clearly an area in which the government is responsible, as I have said on many occasions.

The Leader of the Opposition went on to charge that monetary policy has been subordinated in order to serve the interests of debt management. I do not believe that the Bank of Canada has subordinated monetary policy, which is its field, in order to serve the interests of debt management. As I have said, there has been no interference with monetary policy. Monetary policy can never operate in a modern country without regard to debt management policy. This government has applied definite, constructive and beneficial debt management policies. We certainly needed to do so because when we came into office we were bequeathed a doubtful legacy of debt with an extremely short term to it.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

When we came into office the average term of Canada's debt was slightly over six years. Here are the figures. At June 30, 1957, in terms of general public holdings of direct and guaranteed securities, excluding Canada savings bonds and perpetuals, the average term to maturity was six years and eleven months; and in terms of government of Canada, direct and guaranted issues, excluding non-market issues and perpetuals, the average term to maturity of the outstanding holdings at June 30, 1957, was six years and two months. However, we went to work with a view to correcting this unsatisfactory situation which, under some circumstances, could even become dangerous. Our efforts to this end were made necessary as well as desirable by the condition which we inherited. When the Leader of the Opposition talks about timing, I think he had better go and examine in this respect his own nest that he bequeathed to us.

I do not think it would be profitable, Mr. Speaker, to go over the whole story again in reference to the conversion loan. I went into the history of the conversion loan at, I regret to say, considerable length in speaking in this house on April 28, 1959. My review of the conversion loan and the benefits which it brought begins at page 3113 of Hansard of that date and continues. Just to summarize it rather than to repeat, may I say that in that operation five outstanding victory loans that were overhanging the market and involving maturities that were going to begin the following year —the year after the conversion loan, in 1958—and aggregating $6,416,000,000, were the subject of the conversion loan. So great was the success of this most important and largest of all Canadian government financing operations that 90 per cent of those outstanding issues were converted and the result was a substantial contribution to stabilization of the bond market.

We completed this tremendous conversion undertaking none too soon because the market suffered on this continent a continued weakness running into the autumn and to the end of 1958; that weakness stemmed from New York. It was a great weakness in the New York market. Canada was not immune from it. Canada could not, in the nature of things, be immune from it. When the Leader of the Opposition attempts to attribute to the conversion loan the weakness that occurred in the markets on this continent in the autumn of 1958 his statement is fantastic nonsense. Is the Canadian government to be held responsible for a great weakness that developed in the New York bond market through the summer and particularly in the autumn of 1958?

When those crocodile tears course down his furrowed cheeks, Mr. Speaker, let us remember that everyone who converted his bonds not only obtained the advantage of a higher interest rate, the result of his own free decision in relation to conversion, but he also obtained the benefit of better market quotations on the new conversion bonds. Those bonds, with scarcely an exception at any subsequent time, were quoted at higher prices than were the victory loan bonds that were left outstanding in the hands of the owners.

The Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, has dredged up something that occurred three years ago, namely a great undertaking which he praised in generous terms in this house when it was announced in the summer of 1958. I was extremely grateful to him for the constructive statement he made on that occasion; it was a patriotic statement. It was just about the last constructive statement the Leader of the Opposition has made in this house.

Mr. Pearson: That was before we knew how the minister was going to mess it up.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No. It was not messed up. It was a great success.

The Leader of the Opposition yesterday talked about experts but he could not find any experts to quote. There are many experts in this field, people of acknowledged authority, who praised this operation and who in various countries expressed envy of the great and beneficial results of this enterprise in Canada.

Mr. Pearson: How many has the minister quoted?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): When the Leader of the Opposition says as he did yesterday, that the conversion of the ninth victory loan cost hundreds of millions of dollars, he is talking plain nonsense. If any conversion loan was to be undertaken at all, it was absolutely essential that it should cover all five victory loan issues. It would not have been an adequate undertaking otherwise; it would have been a piecemeal undertaking. What is more, it would have not been equitable, efficient or economical. It would have been simply a piecemeal approach at very great cost to have simply converted the first two of those five victory loans. What is more, in the light of what happened in the bond market afterwards on this continent as a result of weakness in New York, Mr. Speaker, there would have been heavy increases in the interest costs to be met if we had not brought about that conversion and if we had allowed those victory loans to run to maturity and had then faced the problem of conversion. This was a farsighted and courageous attempt to meet the problem and it resulted in great benefits to Canada and in terms of debt management.

Let me set alongside those figures I gave earlier as to the average length of debt to maturity what was the situation after this conversion loan had been carried out. Whereas with respect to general public holdings at June 30, 1957, the average term was six years and eleven months, at September 30, 1958 it had risen to 14 years and nine months. In respect of outstanding government of Canada, direct and guaranteed securities, excluding non-market issues and perpetuals, the comparisons are as follows. At June 30, 1957, the average term to maturity was six years and two months; at September 30, 1958, it was ten years and six months. Is it any wonder that this great undertaking won praise in other countries which were envious of the tremendous improvement that had been brought about in our debt position in Canada?

The Leader of the Opposition, yesterday undertook to say something about the unemployment insurance fund, and he said some really weird things in this regard. He said in effect that when the conversion loan was undertaken, not only should the investment committee, operating under the Unemployment Insurance Act, not have converted but it should have turned everything into a virtually liquid position. Ninety-one day treasury bills; this was his theme. He said they should have looked far forward and seen that there would be heavy drains upon the unemployment insurance fund which would have to be met in cash.

It is too bad that these hon. gentlemen, when they were in office, did not have the prescience that they expect of others who follow them. The fact is that the illiquid position of the fund was not new. It merely reflected a continuation of the policy instituted several years earlier under the previous government.

Mr. Pearson: But there was no drain on the fund.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): For the fund to obtain liquidity to the extent of one half of its holdings, as the Leader of the Opposition urged yesterday, would have required a forward view of continual high levels of unemployment which it would have been hard to justify in the summer of 1958 and would have involved the sacrifice of interest earnings on bonds that the unemployment insurance commission chose to hold and to acquire.

The fund did in fact convert the Canada victory loan bonds that it held, but it did not take the longest maturity of the new bond; it took the shortest maturity available to it. To suggest it should have sold all its victory bonds at the time of conversion surely implies support of the market by the Bank of Canada of the most massive kind.

The Leader of the Opposition apparently now thinks there should not have been a conversion. If there had not been any conversion and the fund had held its victory loan bonds, selling them when it needed, it would have suffered greater loss than indeed it did experience in selling its conversion bonds.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Not if they had sold them between July and October.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, should they have been able to look two years ahead and know exactly what was going to happen? If the hon. member for Essex East had been able to claim that kind of prescience I am quite sure he must have made a fortune at that time. If he could have seen what was going to happen two years ahead in the market he would have been the richest man in Canada today, as rich as Croesus.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would the hon. minister permit a question? Does the minister agree that if the investment committee had permitted the sale of its securities between July and October, because the government guaranteed those bonds at par, at their full original value, they would not have lost as they did when they were forced into conversion?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It would have been a most improvident act by any proper standard for the unemployment insurance committee at that time to have sold out, without knowledge that would have needed the hindsight that the hon. member for Essex East enjoys so much today. It would have been improvident for it under the existing circumstances to have sold those bonds and denied itself the benefit of the higher interest yields that were available to it on the bonds. And in selling, it would have sent the market crashing.

You could not put holdings on the market for sale as massive as those of the unemployment insurance commission at that time without shaking the market to its foundations. That is the kind of policy, Mr. Speaker, that these authorities on the other side of the house are putting before us today as the one the unemployment insurance commission should have followed at that time. This is a most fatuous assertion and contention on the part of the official opposition.

The fact is that since October, 1958, the monthly average prices of victory loan bonds in the hands of the holders, those that remain, have been below those of the conversion bonds for all but seven months in this whole period. The figure used yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition would assume that the fund would have liquidated back in 1958 not only its holdings of victory loan bonds but indeed all its holdings. He would in effect have asked the unemployment insurance commission to wreck the market by liquidation at that time of huge holdings that the bond market could not possibly absorb.

He would have destroyed the bond holdings of holders of Canada bonds to the extent of probably scores and scores of millions of dollars. That is what the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Essex East say the unemployment insurance commission should have done; they say the unemployment insurance commission should have embarked on the liquidation of bond holdings running between $500 million and $1 billion at the time.

Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, anything more utterly destructive to the bond market and to public confidence? The Canadian people will have reason to be thankful that the affairs of this country were not in those days, or since, in the hands of such utterly irresponsible people.

Mr. Pearson: A $70 million dollar loss.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I would have thought—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The most serious violation of a trust fund in Canada's history, and you know it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —the greatest mismanagement that could have occurred is the one suggested by the hon. member for Essex East in his utterly irresponsible way, when he concurred with the Leader of the Opposition who, if he does not know better himself, at least has advice available to him to guide him in these matters. I refer him to the former president of the Liberal association of Canada. He certainly would not have told him it would have been a responsible act for the unemployment insurance commission to attempt to liquidate between $500 million and $1 billion of Canada bonds that it held in 1958, throwing them on the market and wrecking the values of the bond holdings of other Canadians.

Mr. Pearson: Why did you force them to sell?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Nothing could be more utterly shameful than a suggestion of that kind. How can anything be more utterly irresponsible than a proposal of that kind? I would think the hon. member for Essex East would want to hang his head after advocating anything as damaging and harmful to Canadian bonds as that.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Evidently you have not appreciated the utter folly of what was proposed yesterday by the hon. gentleman. Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to conclude my remarks long before this. I will say in this belated conclusion that we have had a most interesting kind of contradiction on the part of the official opposition.

Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition delivered what, having regard to the responsibilities, was quite clearly an attack on the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the minister has no right to say that. I delivered no attack on the governor of the Bank of Canada. I delivered an attack on the government because of its irresponsible attitude in this matter. They abdicated their responsibility in this matter. I did not attack the governor of the Bank of Canada.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That, in the mind of the Leader of the Opposition, is supposed to be a point of order, a point of privilege. It is just an abuse of the rules of the house, Mr. Speaker, but the Leader of the Opposition—

An hon. Member: You are an expert on that.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): But I still feel toward the Leader of the Opposition the respect that a former student owes to his professor,—

Mr. Pearson: I thought that would come in.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —a respect which lingers. I recall what a good lecturer he was in history, even though economics never came within the scope of his learning.

I do not say this was a personal attack on the governor of the bank, but it was an attack upon the policy of the bank, upon the policy followed by the governor of the bank—

Mr. Pearson: It was not.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —because the policy he was condemning and criticizing so strongly yesterday is the policy of the bank and of the governor of the bank.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): You accept the policy.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I put that alongside what was said in this house by his deskmate, the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) on December 8 last as reported at page 609 of Hansard. The hon. member for Laurier rose to ask me a question in these words:

> May I direct a question to the Minister of Finance, and ask whether in view of the statement made by several economists of Canadian universities concerning the governor of the Bank of Canada, as headlined in this morning's press, the minister proposes to make a statement expressing confidence in the management of the bank.

The hon. member for Laurier thought the management of the bank was entitled to an expression of confidence. The Leader of the Opposition yesterday attacked hip and thigh the policy of the Bank of Canada, which is the governor's sole responsibility. So I say that here we have two deskmates—

Mr. Pearson: Don't crawl out from under.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —who are apparently completely at loggerheads. It is a great pity that they cannot get their heads together.

Now we have before us an amendment by the official opposition which attempts to put on the record of parliament something which is a denial of the facts. It attempts to say that the government of Canada, regardless of the fact that parliament has legislated otherwise, is responsible for monetary policy in Canada. It has been the decision of parliament from the outset, when this bank was set up, that monetary policy should be the responsibility of the Bank of Canada and that the government cannot interfere in the bank's management of monetary policy. Therefore, this Liberal amendment invites parliament to contradict itself, and I am sure the House of Commons has no intention of doing so.

I think the subamendment introduced this afternoon by the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) merits only one very brief comment. It asks the house to add to this contradictory thesis expressed in the Liberal amendment a further expression of regret that the lack of constructive government planning with regard to monetary and debt policies has resulted in the deepening of the unemployment crisis. It has not resulted in any deepening of the unemployment crisis. The government has followed a consistent and proper course in this matter. It has recognized that parliament has already legislated in this matter of responsibility concerning the management of monetary policy. This government does not place itself above parliament. It recognizes its responsibility to parliament. This kind of amendment could emanate only from those who still retain the imprint of that government which went out of office in June 1957, because it had lost all sense of responsibility to the sovereign House of Commons.

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): The house has just listened for almost two hours to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) dealing with the amendment to his supply motion, an amendment which reads, in part:

Government Monetary Policy

The house regrets the refusal of the government to accept and discharge its proper responsibility in the field of monetary policy and its demonstrable incompetence to manage the public debt in the interests of the Canadian people.

If any proof were needed of the timeliness and validity of this amendment it is to be found in the speech which the Minister of Finance has made this afternoon. The hon. gentleman chose for 20 minutes of the time taken by him to avoid discussing the subject altogether and to point out that the opposition should have chosen another subject for discussion. Throughout the rest of the time allocated to him—and the hon. gentleman has no time limit to observe, while the rest of us are left with a limitation which is somewhat severe at times—

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Your limitations are not only those of time.

Mr. McIlraith: I appreciate the bright remarks of the Postmaster General but I am sure the subject is of no interest to him. Perhaps he could allow those who are concerned about it to debate it. Hon. members on the other side may differ from my conclusions, and others may agree with them, but I am entitled to make them and, surely, the Postmaster General could discharge his duty as a minister of the crown in a better manner than by making remarks and interjections of that kind.

The point I was making is that even if there were no confusion in the public mind about the government's responsibility in the field of monetary policy in the past, there is now because of the hon. gentleman's pronouncements this afternoon. I take it to be implicit in the minister's speech that the government does have a responsibility for fiscal policy. I think that is common ground between us. I take it, also, that the hon. gentleman admits that the government has responsibility in the field of debt management. That, also, is common ground. I take it that it is only when we get to the area of monetary policy that we differ. The minister says that has been given to the Bank of Canada, and that the government no longer has responsibility over it. It is on that point that we differ, and differ very sharply.

Mr. Winch: Who has responsibility, then?

Mr. McIlraith: The government did, and the government still has responsibility over monetary policy. It is unthinkable that any government of any sovereign nation should not have responsibility for monetary policy and it was never suggested otherwise until the present minister was made Minister of Finance. Then he changed his views on the matter and advanced the theory he outlined this afternoon. In the few minutes I have left to me in which to deal with this question I intend to quote briefly what some of our ministers of finance have had to say on the subject. In 1936, Mr. Dunning, dealing with the Bank of Canada legislation, had this to say as reported on page 3262 of Hansard of that year:

The bank may and should resist temporary gusts of public fancy, but in the long run it must show responsiveness to public opinion. In the long run, the bank in the performance of a vital sovereign function must be responsible to the sovereign will expressed through government. There cannot be two sovereigns in a single state.

That was the position taken in the debate in 1936. Then we come to the discussion of this subject in 1941. Mr. Ilsley, on June 13 of that year, had something to say on the subject and I quote him from page 3936 from the Hansard of that date. I should like to quote at greater length but hon. members will forgive me if I quote only parts of what was said. I will give the page reference in each case so that members can read further if they wish. On June 13, 1941 Mr. Ilsley said:

The point which I would like to emphasize is that the responsibility with which the governor and board have been charged by parliament does not in any way relieve the government of responsibility for the monetary policy being pursued by the bank, nor in any way militate against public control of monetary policy. The monetary policy which the bank carries out from time to time must be the government's monetary policy, but the government must leave the carrying out of that policy—

Note that—"the carrying out of that policy".

—the choice of ways and means of executing it, to the management of the bank in whose judgment it has confidence.

If the government is satisfied with the policy which is being pursued, there is obviously no quarrel between it and the bank. Let us suppose, however, that the management of the bank and the government do not see eye to eye in the matter of monetary policy. Let us assume that after the usual careful consideration of the pros and cons, a serious difference of opinion remains. In such a case there can be no question whatever as to the outcome of the dispute. The government's views will prevail.

Mr. Pearson: Here it is. That is the difference. That is responsibility.

Mr. McIlraith: The views of Mr. Abbott will be found on page 4393 of Hansard of June 20, 1951. After a question had been pressed upon him, Mr. Abbott replied:

The government, of course, if it were not satisfied with the action taken by the governor and the directors of the Bank of Canada, would have to change the management of the bank.

After an interjection of the word "yes" by Mr. Low, Mr. Abbott concluded:

So that I suppose it is fair to assume that the ultimate responsibility must fall upon the government.

The minister referred to the questioning of the then governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Graham Towers, in the banking and commerce committee in 1954. I refer hon. gentlemen to pages 714 and 715 of the unrevised committee reports of March 18, 1954. On that occasion the governor of the bank dealt with this subject. Hon. gentlemen will recall that the minister quoted part of this and that I asked the minister a question about it. He had stopped at a certain point in the quotation and I asked him to read the subsequent lines. The portion of the statement I requested the minister to read is as follows:

> On the other hand, there is no alibi possible for the government, because if government said, well, we disagreed with what the central bank did, but parliament has placed the responsibility on them, so what could we do? The answer obviously is that the administration of the day, supported by a majority in parliament, can always alter the legislation. In fact, I doubt whether a disagreement would ever necessitate such a thing, because there are various ways and means by which directors and management can be got rid of. I am sure that in the case of a serious disagreement that is what would take place.

Mr. Towers then went on to elaborate on that subject. Under examination by the present Minister of Finance, who was then the private hon. member for Eglinton and a member of the official opposition, Mr. Towers made it perfectly clear that the government had the ultimate responsibility and that if there were a disagreement, the governor of the Bank of Canada would have to resign. That is perfectly clear.

Mr. Pearson: He has changed his mind now.

Mr. McIlraith: The minister then made reference on this point to a statement made by Mr. Harris, I believe on June 10, 1956.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): August.

Mr. McIlraith: The minister quoted from Hansard of that date. I wish to point out one or two features of the question and answer period on the orders of the day of August 10, 1956 to which the minister made reference earlier. One feature is that Mr. Harris made it very clear that he was advised of the action taken. The then prime minister went on to make it clear that the government of the day had complete confidence in what was done. The government was in accord with it. There was no confusion about a possible difference of view.

I am not certain if the Minister of Finance quoted the following statement made by the then prime minister as found at page 7352 of Hansard of August 10, 1956 in answer to one of the many questions that arose on that occasion:

> —I can assure the hon. gentleman that the matter received very serious consideration and the government has not decided to recommend to parliament any amendment to the act which places that responsibility on the governor of the Bank of Canada.

It was made clear in that question and answer period that the issue that was being dealt with was that the action should be taken through the Bank of Canada. I do not think anyone has contested that. I have re-read that debate very carefully today. As I read it there was no suggestion that the government could abdicate its responsibility in the field.

It is interesting that at the conclusion of the question and answer period—and I remember the occasion well because there was some heat generated in that period—

Mr. More: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. McIlraith: No. I have only 17 minutes left. If the hon. member would like to direct his question to me when I conclude my remarks I will be happy to deal with it.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): That is a good way of not dealing with it.

Mr. McIlraith: I am really perfectly happy to accept the hon. member's question but I have only 17 minutes left at my disposal. In that time I want to develop my argument as best I can. I will be quite happy to deal with questions at the conclusion of my remarks.

I was about to point out that at the conclusion of the question and answer period the request was made that the then minister of finance deal with this subject on his estimates next day. The next day, on his estimates, the minister did deal with the subject at some length. He made it abundantly clear that the government did have the responsibility, and spoke also of the government's agreement with the decision taken by the bank. The references to this matter will be found mainly at page 7457 of Hansard of August 11, 1956. Let me place on the record a statement made by Mr. Harris on that occasion:

> The government is satisfied, and I believe that the vast majority of informed observers are satisfied, that under the economic conditions of the past 12 months it was desirable to moderate the rate of monetary expansion. I know of no responsible person who argues openly for inflation as a solution to the problem of excess demand.

Further along Mr. Harris said:

> It is right and proper that our fiscal system at this juncture should emphasize additional restraint in public spending wherever possible. It is equally appropriate that monetary policy should assist by exerting a moderating influence on the expansion of credit.

Mr. Pearson: That is taking responsibility.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He did not shirk his responsibility.

Mr. McIlraith: No, there was no question of his shirking responsibility. If hon. members will read the evidence given in the banking and commerce committee of 1954, they will find that there was no suggestion made then by the then private hon. member for Eglinton who is now Minister of Finance of the government shirking responsibility.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Or by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell).

Mr. McIlraith: Yes. Indeed, the hon. member for Greenwood was most eloquent about the sovereignty of parliament at that time.

Mr. Pearson: The hon. gentleman certainly was.

Mr. McIlraith: This subject has always been treated in that way up until the time the present government took office. The situation is different now. The Minister of Finance seems to seek to say today that this is all the responsibility of the Bank of Canada. Notwithstanding his physical vigour in speaking and his pugnacious qualities, the minister attempts to depict himself as a poor little helpless man. The Minister of Finance has nothing to say about this policy and could not have any part in it, poor little creature. This is the Minister of Finance who displays great physical vigour in argument, perhaps in an attempt to conceal the lack of careful reasoning that should be applied to a subject of this kind.

The minister in support of his argument chose to quote from the Bank of Canada Act and I should like to place on the record some of its references to the governor in council.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, when the house rose for the dinner adjournment at six o'clock I had started to make reference to the treatment of the legislation, the Bank of Canada Act, by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). We had the extraordinary spectacle of the Minister of Finance on this subject making no reference at all to the request of the opposition that the whole matter of the operations of the Bank of Canada be referred to the committee on banking and commerce. Instead he took the position that the government had no responsibility whatever in the field of monetary policy and said, that the subject matter of monetary policy belonged exclusively to the Bank of Canada.

The minister made some references to the Bank of Canada Act. In the few moments at my disposal I propose to show some of the authority left in the governor in council or the Minister of Finance, as the case may be, under the Bank of Canada Act and to show that the Minister of Finance was not, as he pictured himself this afternoon, bereft of all authority over the Bank of Canada.

The first section I should like to refer to is section 4(2) under which branches and agencies of the bank can only be established with the authority of the governor in council. Under section 5(2) the deputy minister of finance is made a member of the board of directors. He does not have the right to vote but either the deputy minister of finance or such other officer as the minister may designate is made a member of the board. Obviously that is for the purpose of keeping the minister fully informed. Under section 6(1) the governor and deputy governor can only be appointed with the approval of the governor in council. In section 6(3)(a) provision is made for tenure of office of the governor and deputy governor and under paragraph (c) the remuneration of the governor and deputy governor can only be set with the approval of the governor in council.

Under section 9 the minister appoints the directors for terms of three years, so he has exclusive control over that. The removal of directors because of incapacity can only be done with the approval of the governor in council. Then there is a very important provision in section 14. The governor of the bank may veto any action of the board of directors or of the executive committee and if such veto power is exercised the veto must be submitted to the Minister of Finance and the governor in council may confirm or disallow the veto. That is an absolute and very wide power over any action taken by the governor in that connection.

There are other such provisions. Section 17(1) provides that the amount of the capital of the bank is controlled by the governor in council. Section 17(2) provides how the capital shall be divided into shares and that all the shares will be issued to the minister. He is the only shareholder. Under section 20, subsection 2, the bank, when required by the Minister of Finance to do so, shall act as the agent of the government in certain respects concerning the management of the public debt of Canada.

The minister made a lot of section 21(1) which reads as follows:

> The bank has the sole right to issue notes payable to bearer on demand and intended for circulation in Canada—

And so on. He argued that that had something to do with his authority vis-à-vis that of the bank. It is nothing of the sort. When the bank legislation was first enacted each chartered bank could issue its own notes and this provision took away the right of the chartered banks to issue their own notes and gave it to the central bank. The conclusion drawn by the minister from that provision is not an accurate one at all. As a matter of fact, the section goes on to give the governor in council control over the denominations of these notes. The minister's argument on that point is quite specious.

Under section 22(2) the governor in council has certain authority over suspension of the bank to sell gold. In section 23(3) the governor in council is given the power to suspend the gold reserve requirement. In a couple of places in section 24 the receiver general has certain authority over the rest fund, the receiver general, of course, being the Minister of Finance. Section 25(1) gives the governor in council the right to appoint auditors. Section 25(4) gives the minister the right to require the auditors to report to him from time to time. Section 26(1) deals with weekly statements of assets and liabilities. The minister can require such statements and he can prescribe the form. Under section 26(2) a weekly statement of notes is required. Section 26(3) provides for monthly statements of assets and liabilities. Section 26(5) gives power to the governor in council to amend any of the schedules.

Under section 27(2) the governor in council or the minister may require certain other statements. Section 27(2) has to do with the annual report and statements of that type. Section 33(1) deals with the bylaws of the bank and they can only be enacted with the approval of the governor in council.

In other words, the minister struggled very hard to show that the act gives all the powers to the Bank of Canada and leaves him as minister—a man of such energy—bereft of any power in this field. As I have shown by these references to the legislation, the act does nothing of the sort.

The minister also made some references to the conversion loan. Let me tell him that the conversion loan was a monument to his failure in the field of debt management. He should never have included the seventh, eighth and ninth victory loans in the conversion loan and because of his doing so there was incurred some $330 million by way of added interest and carrying charges, as well as a great many other adverse effects. Because he included them in his conversion loan it was necessary for him to make his debt management policies override all other policies and encroach on them in a way that was never imagined before.

One of the fields where monetary policy was subjected to his debt management policy because of his wrong handling of the conversion loan by including all these victory loans was the unemployment insurance fund. This afternoon the minister gave figures and a picture that were quite misleading to the house. I do not say he did so intentionally but he put an interpretation on the position taken by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) that was wholly wrong. The Leader of the Opposition never for one moment suggested that the conversion loan bonds should all be dumped on the market at one time and depress the market. What happened there was that some half of the assets of the unemployment insurance fund at the time of the conversion were victory loans. Of that figure some $90 million were due within two years; that is, they would have matured within a two-year period and have been paid off at par. Of course, if at the time of conversion the victory loans had not been included in the conversion loan their maturities would have met the fund requirements and their value would have held up. I want to point out that the minister in that action made the management of the fund subservient to his debt management requirements, having all public funds converted rather than fulfilling his duty as trustee of this fund, which is provided by employees, employers and taxpayers of Canada. This accounted for the loss, as will be seen from an answer appearing in Hansard of February 15, and from a sessional paper tabled December 21, 1960. This loss by reason of converting the bonds amounted to something in the neighbourhood of $70 million. That misuse of his duties in the field of debt management overrode his duty as trustee. The minister's responsibility as trustee of the fund became subservient to the minister's responsibility in respect of debt management policies of this government. Had he been in a private field outside the government, this wrong action would have left him liable for the loss resulting therefrom. This untenable action—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): It was certainly not untenable.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It is untenable, that is a true statement.

Mr. McIlraith: The minister is trying to make the house believe that he has no authority and no responsibility in the field of monetary policy. He says that parliament can deal with these things. Under our constitutional procedure when parliament has responsibility—I do not subscribe to his view of it at all—surely it is the responsibility of the government and the minister concerned to bring forward the legislation. The minister was so timorous in that field that he did not tell us anything about any responsibility that he does have in this field. He also did not tell us, having taken the position that he is not responsible, although he is the minister of the crown with the responsibility in the field of finance, whether he agrees or disagrees with the monetary policy in Canada that has been carried out since August, 1957—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member. It being 8.15 o'clock it is my duty pursuant to section 4 (d) of standing order 56 to put forthwith the question on any amendments now before the house.

The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The house divided on the amendment to the amendment (Mr. Howard) which was negatived on the following division:

COAL—REQUEST FOR ACTION ON CLOSING OF MINES

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): On March 3, 1959 I introduced in this house a grievance based on the failure of the government to take adequate action to meet the demands of the coal industry. On that occasion I pointed out the seriousness of the coal situation which, since this government took office in June 1957, has reached the proportions of a major crisis calling for immediate action and appropriate measures of adjustment to cope with an urgent situation.

My reason for rising this evening is strengthened by the inability of the government to meet its pre-election commitments and its persistent failure to solve the problems of the coal industry. In the course of my remarks I intend to call attention to the inconsistency of the government's actions, its failure to appreciate the seriousness of the situation and its lack of understanding of a serious problem which must be met face on and handled with a bold and comprehensive determination to undertake a social adjustment in a depressed area where a segment of our population is menaced with grave financial distress and a most insecure future.

As long ago as June 30, 1958, I introduced in this house a motion condemning the government for backing away from its commitment to promote and develop the industry in the Atlantic provinces, and especially for its failure to prevent or avert shutdowns in the Nova Scotia mines. Reference was made to my motion by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan) and on page 1800 of Hansard for July 1, 1958 the hon. gentleman said of it:

> This is one of the great motions of want of confidence in the House of Commons, one of the six motions to go into supply when the substantial omissions of the government are brought to the attention of the house. If this is all the opposition could arraign this government on, then certainly the record of the government is very good indeed.

These were the words of the Minister of National Revenue when we sought to direct the attention of the government to a situation which, we believed, was heading for a major crisis. That crisis exists today. When we in the opposition were urging the government to act without delay to solve a problem affecting an important segment of the population of the maritime provinces we were told that we were attacking a matter which was of minor importance. We were told that we were paying attention to a subject which, in the minister's view, was of very little significance—hardly worth while as the subject matter of a grievance raised on a supply motion.

On that particular occasion we were told by the Minister of National Revenue that the stockpile of coal was roughly 1,400,000 tons but that there were orders for 4,600,000 tons and that orders were still coming in. Here are the minister's own words as reported at page 1801 of Hansard for July 1, 1958:

> It is going to take months, perhaps into the winter, perhaps even into next spring before the whole stockpile is liquidated; and liquidated it will be, because the company will see to it that it moves out and, as I have said, the orders are recurring and multiplying.

And further on the minister went as far as to say, and I quote again his own words which will be found on page 1804 of Hansard for the same date:

> The government believe that the future of the Nova Scotia coal industry can be re-established and is reasonably bright. We have seen an example within the last few days, when the Ontario hydro commission chairman said that within a year or two he would be buying well over one million tons of coal and that within 10 years, even after making allowances for the St. Lawrence seaway and all the other developments of hydroelectric power—he, or rather the hydro commission, would be buying over 10 million tons of coal according to the present expansion program for Ontario.

What is the situation today? Where is that 4,600,000 ton order? Where is that one million ton order for Ontario, referred to by the minister in July, 1958, almost three years ago? Where are all these orders which were recurring and multiplying?

The Toronto Globe and Mail for December 7, 1960 reports as follows:

> Hydro denies coal commitment.
> The Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission must buy its coal at competitive prices and has made no commitment to purchase Nova Scotia coal, a commission spokesman said last night.

I know that government speakers will outline with some personal satisfaction what they have done since taking office to assist the coal industry. I know that in July of 1958 the government took some temporary measures, such as extending the existing subventions in order to prevent more extensive layoffs in the industry.

The fact remains, however, that the government has failed to introduce adequate measures and has shown that it was not capable of grappling with a problem of this magnitude. The present government has been dragging its feet. It has failed to come up with a well thought out program; it has failed once more to recognize the seriousness and importance of a situation affecting 8,000 to 10,000 miners and a population of close to 150,000 people.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. It is my understanding that the rules of this house provide that an hon. member should not read his speech. I submit to you that this hon. member is reading his speech.

An hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, I have extensive notes and extensive quotations and I am following those quotations word for word.

On June 30, 1958 I warned the government of the seriousness of the situation. On page 1757 of Hansard of that date I am reported as having said:

> The present government's policy gives no assurance whatsoever to the coal mines of the Atlantic provinces that at the end of the present year the excess carryover and stockpile accumulated will not force a further lay-off which could be much more serious than the shutdown now taking place.

That is exactly what is happening today. We were accused of being prophets of gloom and doom, of exaggerating the situation. Eight months later, on March 3, 1959, I reminded the government of its failure to meet the demands of the coal industry. I brought to the attention of this house the meeting which was held on February 2 with the Prime Minister and other federal ministers and a delegation from Nova Scotia headed by Premier Stanfield. On that occasion the premier urged increased subventions on an emergency basis as the best means of staving off further lay-offs.

I warned the government that subventions and subventions alone would not keep the miners of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick at work, and would not prevent some of the mining towns of Nova Scotia from becoming ghost towns. I offered suggestions then—concrete suggestions—which at the time were sneered at by representatives on the government side of this house, of areas which are directly affected by the decision recently arrived at concerning certain mines in the Cape Breton area.

The very same hon. member of this house who said on March 3, 1959 as reported at page 1575 of Hansard of that date that my solution meant "fewer miners, less production, no surplus"; the same hon. member who said that my suggestion meant "train fare out of the country" for displaced miners, that very same hon. member is now urging the government to take action on the suggestion which I made in this house two years ago. That hon. gentleman is asking the government to intervene with the Avro company, and Dosco in an effort to persuade them to establish in Cape Breton and not near Montreal their proposed steel rolling plant.

I wish now to refer to an article which appeared in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of February 20, 1961 under the headline, "Cape Breton MP's Call for Immediate 'Crash Program'". The article reads, in part:

An eight-point program to stimulate Cape Breton's economy involving increased expenditure in five government departments and a new conference with Dominion Coal Company aimed at averting or delaying the shutdown of three major coal mines was placed before Prime Minister Diefenbaker Sunday.

Instead of supporting our concrete suggestions in this house, hon. members opposite prefer sundry meetings with the Prime Minister.

Here is what I had to say about this project, not in 1961—not when it is too late—but two years ago on March 3, 1959 as reported at page 1574 of Hansard:

The Avro company should have been influenced to establish in Cape Breton and not near Montreal their proposed steel rolling plant. The government should have intervened and provided the company with every argument and if need be even financial assistance in order to influence it to open this new mill in the Atlantic provinces in the vicinity of the coal mining area.

Instead of sneering at my remarks, hon. members opposite, and particularly those from the areas affected should have used their good influence with the government for the realization of this project, when it was still not too late to intervene.

Hon. members opposite must admit, in view of recent events in the coal industry, that action should be taken at once, even if it means substantial tax concessions or other forms of assistance to provide new industries, preferably with coal as their basis, which would at least restore the economy of the industry to its 1957 level and alleviate this atmosphere of uncertainty and insecurity, this fear and gloom which prevails in Cape Breton today.

Mr. MacLellan: What kind of industry does the hon. member want to locate there?

Mr. Robichaud: I will give more detail about that later on in my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order.

Mr. Robichaud: I say that if 2,000 or 3,000 miners have to be retired from the mines, they must be provided with work at industrial plants located at the pitheads and only then will the problem be solved for years to come.

If two years ago those hon. members who are today urging the government to take action had used their good influence to have this steel rolling plant located in the Sydney area it would have taken care of at least 1,000 of these miners. Will the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), will the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Nowlan), will the silent Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys (Mr. Comtois) once more attempt to convince the population of Cape Breton that they have been deeply concerned with their problems? Will the Prime Minister convince the population of Cape Breton that, as he stated in the house on June 27, 1958, as found on page 1689 of Hansard, "every sympathetic consideration will be given to assure the bringing about of a state of affairs which will ameliorate to the maximum degree possible this very trying and serious problem"?

The present government, Mr. Speaker, in its election promises in 1957 and again in 1958 gave great hopes, great expectations to the coal mining population of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The fact remains, however, that on August 20, 1959, 14 months after we had introduced our supply motion in the house, the Prime Minister announced the appointment of a royal commission on coal. In making the announcement the Prime Minister said that the government felt that the coal problem was a special one and so urgent as to require a special inquiry rather than to be considered by the Borden commission on energy. The Prime Minister admitted at the time, over a year and a half ago, that, and I quote his own words, "subsidies alone were not a final answer to the coal problem", and he indicated that a thorough study of the long term market outlook was required. There again the Prime Minister admitted that a readjustment of coal production had to be made in such a way that the industry would serve its future markets efficiently and economically.

The coal problem was an urgent one when we introduced our motion on June 30, 1958. The coal problem was critical when the Prime Minister announced the appointment of the Rand commission on August 20, 1959. The coal situation had deteriorated further when the report of the Rand commission was made public late in September of last year.

The report of the Rand commission, Mr. Speaker, has now been in the hands of the government for over five months. For months Dosco had made it clear that three mines employing 2,600 men will definitely close this year. The dates have now been fixed at May 31, July 1 and August 12 respectively. For months the government has been aware that the Caledonia mine, the Florence and No. 16 will be closed during 1961.

What has been done to take care of this emergency? On November 23 the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys saw fit to give the house a statement concerning the implementation of the report of the royal commission on coal. What did he have to say on that occasion? Here are the minister's own words as recorded on page 111 of Hansard:

> In short, the Rand report is the type of public document which demands the most serious study from each of us.

I agree with him on that.

> It is also the type of document which demands the most serious, systematic and meticulous study by the government. I can inform you that such a study by the government is in progress. It is occupying the attention of an interdepartmental committee consisting of senior officers of the Department of Finance, the Department of Trade and Commerce, the Department of Labour, the privy council office, the national energy board and the dominion coal board, under the chairmanship of a senior officer of mines and technical surveys.
> The committee has been given clear and specific instructions. It is "to study and report to the cabinet on the recommendations of the royal commission on coal relating to subsidies and research" and on such representations as have been received by the government.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the minister has in mind making public the Vissac report which we have been asking the government to table for over a week. Those were the words of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. The Rand report had been in the hands of the government for two months, and once again we have a government unable to take a decision, a government seeking more delaying tactics before making up its mind. It was a delaying tactic, as I said a while ago, when the commission was appointed on August 20, 1959. It was again a delaying tactic when an interdepartmental committee was appointed in the fall of 1960.

What has the government been doing in the meantime to protect the coal industry? As was so well said in a recent editorial in the Casket of Antigonish on February 9:

> The mood of the average Nova Scotian at the moment is one of lack of faith in the power of the federal government either to recognize fully the problems which face us or to tackle the problems with the required vigour. We feel that Ottawa is either not interested in the problems of a province which, after all, has only 12 seats in a 265-seat House of Commons, or that it is simply not capable of grappling with a problem of this magnitude. In either case, Nova Scotians have every right indeed to be very disappointed with the lack of action at Ottawa.

What has the government done since the appointment of the interdepartmental committee to study the recommendations of the Rand report? On January 9, in an attempt to distract attention from another important event which was taking place in Ottawa on that day, the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys issued a joint statement to the press. Their statement said that Caledonia No. 4 in Glace Bay, due to close January 14, would be kept alive until May 31 and that the Florence mine and No. 16 at New Waterford would continue operations until July 1 and August 12 of this year respectively.

In other words, the government has officially announced that it is prepared to accept the closure of three mines in the Cape Breton area; that it is prepared to accept the laying off of close to 3,000 coal miners, thus wiping out the means of livelihood of tens of thousands of our population. This action of the government has made a farce of the Rand report. It has made a farce of the interdepartmental committee appointed last fall to study this report. The government has repudiated that part of the Rand report on page 30 which stated:

> We cannot cut this island off, and Canada acting with Nova Scotia must, in my opinion, provide conditions to enable it to regain confidence and affirm its will to a new vitality.

The government by this action has repudiated that part of the Rand report on page 42 which stated:

> The need exists in Cape Breton to build up alternative means of productive wealth; and the necessity also of facing up to such a possibility as well as the planning for the minimum disruption in the substitution. It is to try to avoid severe dislocation even within ten years that the recommendations provide for graduated action.

The position of the present government on this matter of vital importance is ambiguous. It is one of delayed action, one of uncertainty and insecurity for the miners and the population generally. The government is acting with regard to this problem in the same uncertain and inactive way it dealt with the Arrow, with Elliot Lake, with Springhill. What has it done for the displaced miners of Springhill, for this unfortunate community which through no fault of its residents was almost overnight forced by a tragedy into the state of a ghost town? It is not a prison farm, it is not $10,000 in winter works, to which the federal government will contribute about $3,000 and which will employ about 14 men for a few days, that will take care of the displaced miners of Springhill. The present government, I repeat, is dragging its feet. It is shirking its responsibility. It is refusing to take adequate measures to solve the coal problems of the maritimes. It has agreed to accept the closure of at least three mines without making any move to find alternate jobs for the miners who will be laid off by such closures. It has agreed to accept closures of three mines when an interdepartmental committee of its own appointment was studying the recommendations of a royal commission. What are we to expect next? Probably an announcement by the Prime Minister or a joint statement by the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys to the effect that the government has decided to appoint a royal commission to study the report of the interdepartmental committee on its study of the report of the Rand commission.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, this government has made a farce of the interdepartmental committee appointed to study the Rand report. This government is refusing to take an overall approach to the whole problem of the coal producing areas. The postponement for a few months of the closing of the three mines in Cape Breton is by no means a permanent solution to these problems. This government has failed to introduce plans for the situation that will arise when apparently the mines must be closed. No steps whatsoever have been taken to relocate the displaced miners, no plans are being made for the future. This is typical of the day-to-day attitude of this government.

The coal industry of Cape Breton will not subsist on subsidies and on subsidies alone. Instead of its sit back and wait attitude, this government must wake up from its lethargy and face the facts. This government must agree to contribute a substantial sum for capital projects in the Atlantic area to be spread over a relatively short period of years.

As I have said before in this house, the government by transferring the coal problem to a committee of civil servants is shrinking away from its responsibility; it is announcing postponement after postponement in dealing with the urgent problem of the coal industry. The government has asked Mr. Rand to make recommendations. Mr. Rand presented his recommendations. Now the government is asking another committee to make recommendations on what it should do with the Rand recommendations. Why is the government stalling; why is it dragging its feet? Is it because there is division; there is disunity among cabinet ministers on this vital problem? I know that some of the recommendations of the Rand report, if implemented, would be detrimental to the coal industry in New Brunswick. The spread in the subsidy payments between Nova Scotia and New Brunswick is too apparent for any government to act according to that particular aspect of the recommendations. The Minister of Forestry (Mr. Flemming), during his by-election campaign last fall, committed himself in no uncertain terms as to the position he would take on the Rand report recommendations. Is this sufficient reason, however, for the government, for the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys, to refuse to state their attitude, their policy on the coal situation?

As I have already said, in my view the recommendations in the report do not provide a satisfactory answer to the human and social problems that are involved in the cut-backs and now in the contemplated closures in the Cape Breton coal fields, nor to the requirement of the coal industry in the province of New Brunswick. Once again I want to put forward a number of suggestions which in my mind the government ought to consider, and consider now, in relation to the urgent problem of the Cape Breton coal area. First, if the government accepts the views of Commissioner Rand that mine closures must take place within the foreseeable future—and this the government has already accepted according to the joint statement from the Minister of National Revenue and the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys which I have referred to earlier—then I maintain that these closures cannot be permitted to occur abruptly and suddenly, because no prior planning has yet been made. The government was warned about this almost three years ago but to date it has refused to act.

As the government has now accepted the view that closures are inevitable, such closures should be allowed to occur only gradually and over a period of time during which, if necessary, the government should underwrite losses of the company to the break-even point. This interim period would provide an opportunity for further planning and investigation as to what can be done to meet the unemployment problem that would surely follow closures. This would give the government the opportunity to do now what it should have done three years ago.

Second, I believe that the government should direct the dominion coal board to explore with the company the economies of a new development at the Lingan area of Cape Breton and, especially, whether federal assistance in opening a new mine might be justified in the long run through substantial reduction in production costs that would make coal more competitive as a source of energy.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Robichaud: When I am through with my remarks, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I was just going to ask him who wrote his speech.

Mr. Robichaud: Third, I believe further that the government should set up at once a committee of practical men who would be given the job of finding new industries that might be located in the Cape Breton industrial area.

The need exists to build at once, to build now and not in three or four years from now, alternative means of productive wealth which would result in a diversified economy for these areas.

These, Mr. Speaker, are positive proposals, proposals which if implemented would result in positive action. The time has passed for Ottawa to pass up opportunities to act, to regard such problems as just another stage in the process of putting off the day of reckoning.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, we have just witnessed a display that I cannot rightly name, other than a reading room address possibly prepared by a research director from—

Mr. Robichaud: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Gloucester is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Robichaud: The hon. member who has the floor has stated that the remarks I have just made were prepared by someone other than myself. These remarks were prepared by myself and represent my own work 100 per cent.

Mr. MacInnis: To that, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we throw away the notes so that we can see who knows what about the coal industry.

Mr. E. W. Brunsden (Medicine Hat): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Medicine Hat is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Brunsden: I suggest we throw away Beauchesne's rules of the house and allow members to read every speech from now on.

Mr. Pearson: We should throw away some of the interrupters.

Mr. Robichaud: Most of them on the government side.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Cape Breton South has the floor.

Mr. MacInnis: The member who has just taken his seat has referred to his knowledge of the coal industry. If there is anyone in the house that doubts his statement just ask the member from Gloucester (Mr. Robichaud), because not too long ago he arrived in the town of Glace Bay and advertised himself in the Cape Breton Post as the official coal critic for the official opposition. Later that same day, while visiting one of the mines in that area, in a discussion with the newspaper people who were covering his visit he candidly admitted that this was his first visit to a coal mine of that type. Following that admission he expressed no surprise at the cost of production. Here we have a man who claims knowledge of the coal industry, and who arrives in a coal mining town advertising himself as the official critic for the official opposition in respect of coal, and then admits that it was his first visit to a coal mine.

The hon. member has taken it upon himself to read many quotations. In fact, his speech was made up mostly of quotations from what somebody else had said about coal in the past. He went so far as to give the members from Cape Breton a pat on the back for what they had been trying to do and I thank him for that gesture. But I would remind him that, while he was on his feet, at no time did he take any exception to the fact that New Brunswick is about to burn oil in the thermal plant. He did not take his government to task for that fact. The miners in New Brunswick are riding on the backs of the Cape Breton miners who came up here to Ottawa to make representations on behalf of the Cape Breton coal miners. The miners of New Brunswick had every advantage of it. The miners of Cape Breton, through their representation, are helping to carry on the coal industry in New Brunswick. Further than that, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Robichaud: Who was premier of New Brunswick?

Mr. MacInnis: This man who rises in his place and asks questions about the mines, and concerning the coal problem has yet to show his face at any one coal conference and add anything to any coal conference. This is the man who professes interest in the matter. He has never shown his face at one coal conference.

Mr. Robichaud: I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member has said that I at no time attended a coal conference. That is not true. I attended two coal conferences and I attended the coal commission.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I indicate to the hon. member that this is not a question of privilege but a matter of controversy.

Mr. MacInnis: I will consider it to be a question of privilege for the benefit of the hon. member. He has yet to attend any coal conference since this government came into office. I have never missed one, and I have never seen him in attendance. If he wishes to do so, he can take that as a question of privilege. I will not withdraw my statement, because I will not withdraw from the truth.

He has made reference to what has gone on in the coal industry. From 1946 to 1956 34 coal mines closed in Nova Scotia. I should like to see where on the record he has raised any objection about his administration. Let me tell you something else about his administration, Mr. Speaker. The former prime minister went into his own province and told the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to leave the coal in the ground for the benefit of future generations for the manufacture of synthetic articles. He said that in New Brunswick. I do not care what was said by the hon. member who represents Bonavista-Twillingate. I said "represents"; he does not come from Bonavista-Twillingate. I do not care what he said. He has been called upon by the public press to apologize for denying that statement and he has not agreed to withdraw it. He has been asked in the interests of journalism in this country to withdraw the denial because it is evident that the former prime minister told the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick to leave the coal in the ground. That is another question of privilege for him if he thinks he can get away with one.

He referred to the coal industry in the years from 1946 to 1956 and what his government did about the use of coal, without one coal conference and without one objection at all from those supporting the government of the day. Let me tell you this, Mr. Speaker. In 1957 through the action of this government the trend that was in progress between 1946 and 1956 was brought to a halt; and it was brought to a halt by the actions of this government. It is granted that there have been a few closures of mines in Nova Scotia, primarily because of disaster and to prevent future disasters. I refer now specifically to No. 25 colliery in my area. It was obliged to close. Otherwise more men would have lost their lives through drowning, as had happened there previously. This mine absolutely was forced to close.

He referred to the action of this government. He referred to the fact that the government announced closures. Let me for a moment come to his aid in putting across his knowledge of coal mines. I will read him a quotation from a former Liberal candidate—and I say former Liberal candidate advisedly —in the last provincial election in Nova Scotia. The quotation is that of James P. MacNeil of New Waterford. As I say, he was a candidate for the Liberal party in the last election. When this propaganda or publicity came out on the part of the government announcing closures, here is what the Liberal candidate in the last provincial election had to say about it:

> Mayor James P. MacNeil of New Waterford, a miner employed in No. 16 colliery charged that the dates for closing of the mines were set by Dosco and not "by an agreement between Dosco and the government."

That is a direct quotation from one of the Liberal adherents in Nova Scotia. That is the truth. It is too bad that the rest of hon. members opposite cannot get up and tell it. As I said when I rose in my place, here is a man who claims to be a coal authority. He criticizes this government for the action it has taken in preventing further closures in Cape Breton. As the indication was that January 14 was the deadline, that matter has been taken care of by this government. The unions got what they asked for at this stage. They got that date shifted back to May 31. It is my hope, and that of every other Cape Breton member, that we can bring about further delay.

The hon. member for Gloucester referred to the Rand commission report. He has indicated that he did not think it was the solution to the problem. I might say that when the last coal conference was held expressions of opinion were voiced of the Rand report. There was not one representative from Cape Breton who took objection to those representations made about the Rand report. It is only in the last couple of weeks that there has been any advocacy of adopting the Rand report. I have to agree that I did not see anything in this Rand report that was beneficial to the miners of Cape Breton, except the one problem they went into, namely the delaying of closures over a period from five to ten years. This is something with which I fully agree and I would advocate the adoption of such a plan.

Let me tell you this, Mr. Speaker, and let us get this straight. This government has offered to go further with Dosco but Dosco will not or would not accept this offer from the government. They have made up their minds. Why did not the hon. member for Gloucester get to his feet and criticize this company? Why did he not do that? He did not do it because he had no knowledge of what the situation was. Why did he not get to his feet and criticize the fact that they are closing No. 4 colliery in Glace Bay? The reason why he did not do that is that he does not know the score. He does not know what is going on in connection with coal.

The fact remains that No. 4 colliery in Glace Bay is not an uneconomical colliery. It is among the top ones, as far as economics is concerned. The company has promoted the idea that it is an uneconomical mine they are closing. That is not so. Caledonia mine in Glace Bay is an economic colliery by their own admission. What happens when you catch the company on this score is that they immediately revert to the argument that it is the quality of the coal. It is the same quality of coal that has been sold from this colliery for 60 years. Caledonia coal can be sold for 57 cents a ton less than other types. There are those companies that desire a lower quality of coal if conditions are right. That only means one thing, namely, price. Caledonia coal could be set up as a separate commodity and sold at 57 cents a ton less than the price which is an economic proposition, 57 cents a ton below the average cost.

There has been no denial at the conference by the company of this argument. Yet the executive officers see fit to feed their propaganda against me for repeating this. They did not stand behind me on that program. Neither did they stand behind me on the other argument concerning coal. They caught Mr. Albert Fairley thoroughly off base, out in left field, but they never stood behind me on that one. Yet they see fit to criticize the actions I have taken on behalf of the miners. All I can say is this. I will stand up in any public assembly and I will fire back what the absolute truth is on this situation. The miners in Caledonia are not getting the support they deserve. The hon. member for Gloucester—the coal critic of the official opposition; the man with particular knowledge of coal; the man who never attended any coal conference—gets to his feet, and what does he say? He rambles on about what somebody else said with regard to coal. He skips what his own prime minister had said about coal. He forgot that he said they should leave it in the ground. He has nothing to say about the criticism I offered to the great champion of labour from Essex East, who did not see fit to answer the correspondence I sent out on coal, but who rises in his place and tries to put himself up on a pedestal as far as the miners of Cape Breton are concerned. He did not himself have enough interest to answer a letter concerning a coal problem, and I think that if he had got together with his colleagues in the house they could have taken action that would have been beneficial to the coal miners.

With reference to the hon. member for Gloucester I am going to make a remark here which, in all fairness, I will give him an opportunity of denying. I understand that he himself has looked for an oil agency in New Brunswick, if not for himself, for somebody in his family. He is perfectly at liberty to deny that.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, I do not think the hon. member has any right to say I have been asking an oil agency for myself or my family.

An hon. Member: Is it true?

Mr. Robichaud: It is not true.

Mr. MacInnis: The hon. member has had his opportunity on the question of privilege and he has not denied it. After all, oil has to come into the question. Everybody else brings oil into the question of the coal problem, so why should not I bring it in? Why has the hon. member offered no criticism of the administration of the day in New Brunswick which is going to use oil in the thermal plant there and by-pass considerable assistance from the federal government? In the event that they used coal in the Saint John thermal plant this government would have assisted to a great extent. They have by-passed that assistance in favour of using oil. I need not go on to explain why the hon. member is probably very much aware why they have by-passed coal.

Mr. Robichaud: Do you want an explanation?

Mr. MacInnis: I want no explanation from the hon. member because I have already told this house, and I will tell it to the world if necessary, that the hon. member is not in possession of any information on the coal problem that I do not possess. In fact I have stated here flatly that the hon. member is not in possession of any information on the coal problem. He does not have an interest in coal, and it is only a hypocritical attitude on his part to get up in the house and say he has.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I draw to the attention of the hon. member that he must address the Chair, and I must also warn him about his last words.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I think I have clearly indicated my stand in the house on the statement I have made. If I am asked to withdraw it, you might as well save your breath because here is one member who does not withdraw from the truth.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has used the word "hypocritical". I think that is an unparliamentary word and should be withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I agree that if the word was used in reference to the hon. member for Gloucester, it should be withdrawn, but I understood the hon. member to indicate he was willing to withdraw that word.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to an attitude which I firmly believe is true and I do not propose now to withdraw from the truth of any statement which I feel I can truthfully make.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If the hon. member used the word mentioned in connection with the hon. member for Gloucester I am sure he will realize that this expression is unparliamentary, and on reflection he will understand that for the dignity of debate in this house he should withdraw the word unconditionally.

Mr. MacInnis: I do not intend to further this argument. I made the statement to the effect that the hon. member's attitude was hypocritical. I do not see why I have to withdraw that in respect to any personalities who may be involved, because my statement has reference to an attitude and was not in reference to the hon. member. I had referred to the attitudes adopted not only by the hon. member but by his party as a whole.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will put it this way. If the hon. member was referring only to the hon. member for Gloucester, he must withdraw that word.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, I have listened very closely to the hon. member for Cape Breton South. He did not say the hon. member for Gloucester was a hypocrite. He was referring to a hypocritical statement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The word was mentioned in a statement by the hon. member concerning the hon. member for Gloucester. I am sure the hon. member for Cape Breton South will clarify the situation and say that he did not refer to the hon. member for Gloucester in this connection, or if he did, he withdraws the word.

Mr. Brunsden: He did not.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I want my stand to be clearly understood. My criticism and my reference to "hypocritical" was referring to an attitude. If the hon. member feels, when anybody on this side of the house makes a reference to an attitude, that it applies to him alone, it only further indicates to me his earlier thinking, when he indicated that he is in possession of a great many facts and a great deal of knowledge.

Does this mean he has all the knowledge of the Liberal party, all the knowledge on all statements that are made? My remarks were to the effect that the statements were hypocritical and there was no reflection on any one hon. member when I said that.

Mr. Chevrier: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I say that the rule is quite clear. It is standing order 35, which says—without reading the whole of it—that no member shall use offensive words against any member of the house.

The words used by the hon. member were "the hypocritical attitude of the hon. member for Gloucester". The hon. member for Cape Breton South, in explaining his position, said he referred to a hypocritical attitude, but he did not add the additional words, namely "the hypocritical attitude of the hon. member".

Those words, in my opinion, according to Beauchesne's, are unparliamentary and should be withdrawn unreservedly.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Cape Breton South said a moment ago, just before the hon. member for Laurier rose in his seat, that he was not referring to the hon. member who had made this address or to any other particular hon. member. He said he was referring to an attitude, and he stated specifically that he was not referring to any particular hon. member.

That is exactly what he said and I am sure Hansard will bear out when we see it tomorrow. If that is the situation there is nothing the hon. member has to withdraw, I submit with deference, because he has said he was not referring to an individual but to an attitude.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It was not very clear to the Chair that the hon. member said he was referring to an attitude of an hon. member. If he wishes to repeat that he was not referring to the hon. member, I think the incident could be closed.

Mr. Crestohl: Mr. Speaker, on this question of privilege, under citation 298 of Beauchesne's second edition it is clearly stated that the following expressions have also been ruled out of order, "hypocritical lovers of liberty" and "hypocrites" even when used without referring to any particular statement by anybody. The expression used is unparliamentary and the hon. member should withdraw it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have already indicated very clearly that the expression used concerning an hon. member was not parliamentary. That is very clear and there is no need for discussion on that. I have asked the hon. member, if he used the expression about the hon. member for Gloucester, to withdraw it unreservedly. If he claims he did not use it in connection with the hon. member for Gloucester perhaps he would make it clear that he was not referring to the hon. member.

Mr. MacInnis: That is exactly what I did before I resumed my seat.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps we could settle the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Gloucester before any other problem is raised.

Mr. MacInnis: I have indicated, as I said before I took my seat, that my reference was to a statement or statements, and that it was not directed to any one member. How much further am I required to go to satisfy this childishness?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the hon. member for Gloucester is satisfied with that statement it would be satisfactory. What I tried to indicate to the hon. member for Cape Breton is that if he used the words "hypocritical statement" as applied to the hon. member for Gloucester, then that expression was not parliamentary and should be withdrawn unreservedly. That is what I am asking the hon. member for Cape Breton to do.

Mr. MacInnis: That is exactly what I have done. I have said that the statement I made was not directed to the hon. member for Gloucester.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have not before me the exact expression used by the hon. member for Cape Breton but I must say that if he claims now that this statement was not directed to the hon. member for Gloucester, I think the house has to accept the denial and therefore the matter of privilege is closed.

Mr. Crestohl: With all due deference, Mr. Speaker, it makes no difference whether or not the expression is directed to one individual or another. The expression itself is unparliamentary. Citation 298 gives a list of expressions which are unparliamentary, and the words "hypocritical" and "hypocrite" are contained in this list.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think I have made myself clear. The hon. member for Cartier is arguing the same thing as he argued before, and I have explained that these words are unparliamentary if applied to a member of the house. However, if they concern an attitude generally or anything that is not connected directly with an hon. member they are not considered to be unparliamentary. I think the incident should be closed, because the hon. member for Cape Breton has made it clear that he did not apply this expression to the hon. member for Gloucester or to a statement made by the hon. member for Gloucester. I think this closes the incident.

Mr. Robichaud: Since it was said that I had made hypocritical statements I want to be sure that the record is not changed tomorrow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member knows that the record cannot be changed. It may be that on consulting Hansard tomorrow he will find it is something else, but the hon. member has stated his remarks did not apply to the hon. member for Gloucester and the hon. member, for the time being, should accept that.

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. Robichaud: I accept your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but I reserve the right tomorrow to refer to Hansard.

Mr. MacInnis: I should just like to wind up my remarks—there has been some delay—and refer for a moment to what the executive of the united mineworkers of America feels about the action taken by this government in delaying any action on the part of Dosco. As I have indicated, I have felt that the attitude of Dosco requires some investigation and some considerable study because it is my belief that the attitude taken by them towards the miners in Cape Breton and the community as a whole is not one which can be accepted. I myself do not for a moment accept the reasons given for closing No. 4 colliery in Glace Bay. Mr. Fairley has at times made statements in reference to this colliery and, as I have said before, not only has he been caught off base but he has been caught out in left field. He has indicated that there has been no development going on in the west side. But miners have told me that this development work is 85 per cent complete. Mr. Fairley tells me there has been no development on that side of the mine. I have on occasions reminded Mr. Fairley that this is not so. The facts are very easily proven by press releases from his own company. However, among the excuses for closing, there is the statement that no development work has been going on. I have made statements which have been severely criticized. The members of the opposition have been receiving newspaper clippings from the local paper in my constituency which severely criticize me. That is part of public life. We all have to stand up to a certain amount of criticism, and I can take it when I consider the source.

I have here a newspaper clipping whose heading says: "Marsh, Dolhanty, say Statements are Inaccurate". They are the president and vice president of UMW District 26. I am a member of the union, a member of the Caledonia Local, a paid up member. The clipping is here for everybody to see, and I face up to the situation every time. They go so far as to say my statements were immoral, and when they say that they are referring to a remark I made at Sydney when I said that 800 miners at Caledonia colliery were not getting the support from their union executive that they could rightfully expect. This is the statement that brought on all the criticism. They say it was immoral. I went on to say I thought the union executive would be satisfied with fewer contented miners rather than a large number of discontented miners. This was the statement they referred to as being immoral. Yet I pointed out clearly that this was exactly the practice followed by John L. Lewis, formerly president of the union in the United States. He advocated the closing of uneconomic mines. Strictly on a business level that idea might have merit. It does not have merit when applied to the Caledonia colliery at Glace Bay because that colliery is economical. Anybody who withdraws from the argument because of that consideration is withdrawing from the truth. It can easily be proven, but this is one portion of the argument which the union has failed to put forward on behalf of the miners of No. 4 colliery.

Now I should like to call the attention of the house to what the executive members of the UMW think of the action taken by this government. In criticizing me, Mr. Dolhanty says:

> I only hope that he is not voicing government policy. We have worked very closely with both the provincial and federal governments over the years. They have given us much help.

I have placed on the record what the UMW executive has said about this government. They have worked very closely together and this government has given them very much help. Those are the words of vice president Dolhanty. There they are in black and white.

I notice that the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) is finally back in his seat. That hon. gentleman saw fit to rise in this house and ask direct questions of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. The hon. member is very seriously concerned about the situation in Cape Breton, so seriously concerned that he failed to answer a letter I sent to him on behalf of these same miners. So seriously concerned with this matter is the hon. gentleman that I have never seen anything that he has said that takes opposition to the policy enunciated by the former leader of his party and then prime minister of Canada. I will remind him what the former prime minister said. Since the hon. member is late in arriving, I will repeat it for his benefit. The former prime minister said, in effect, leave the coal in the ground for future generations so they can manufacture synthetic articles.

One of the hon. member's colleagues took exception to this and has been severely criticized editorially for so doing.

It is my hope and I am sure it is the hope of every hon. member from Cape Breton and Nova Scotia that the closing down of mines in Nova Scotia and Cape Breton can be further delayed. I might say that the action taken by this government has had the effect of continually setting back this date. Attempts have been made for some considerable time to close the mines. A trend of closing mines gained impetus from 1946 to 1956. This government brought that trend to a halt. Regardless of what is said by hon. members of the opposition, this government is the only government that has taken a genuine interest in the miners of Nova Scotia.

The very determined effort on the part of Dosco to close out No. 4 colliery on January 14, has again been delayed to May 31. It is my hope that something will develop between now and that date which will bring about a further delay of these proposed shutdowns.

I wish now to speak briefly about the so-called new party. Apparently it operates under the delusion that it is going to be the saviour of the Cape Breton miner. The new party has a certain element of the Cape Breton miners believing that this new party is capable of saving the industry. I do not know how beneficial the new party will be, but I remind the Cape Breton miners that there is no hope of salvation to be found in the new party. I think there is very little hope of the new party finding itself elected anywhere. As far as I can see personally, it is simply not going to go over. In fact, I draw that conclusion from some of the remarks that have been made from time to time by hon. members down in the corner of the chamber.

I do not mean to hurt the feelings of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue). I have been given to understand through the press and other media that the man who could have the leadership of the so-called new party merely by snapping his fingers is Mr. Douglas. All that is required, apparently is that he accept the leadership of the so-called new party. I do not really get the drift of this matter. They were labour, they became the C.C.F. and now they are merging with labour and farmers to become the new party. I hope they get the name straightened out before too long so we will know exactly what they are.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. Would the hon. gentleman let us know what Premier Douglas has to do with the coal industry?

Mr. McIntosh: We also have coal out in Saskatchewan.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the hon. member has given me this excellent opportunity to bring to his attention what the potential leader of the so-called new party has had to say about the coal industry.

Hon. members will recall that not too long ago a new party seminar was held in the city of Montreal in which Mr. Douglas played a prominent part. For the benefit and interest of the hon. member who directed a question to me I will now quote from newspaper reports relating to that seminar:

Premier Douglas asked what point there would be in nationalizing coal mines or railways when they were obsolete.

Mr. Douglas wanted to know what would be the point in nationalizing the coal industry when he considers it obsolete. How much faith can the miners of Cape Breton, Nova Scotia or any other province in Canada place in the future of coal if this would-be leader ever realizes his ambitions? Of course, I cannot say with certainty what his ambitions are. I am not sure if it is his ambition to lead this group comprised of labour, the C.C.F., the new party or whatever they choose to call themselves. However, Mr. Douglas has flatly gone on record with respect to his attitude toward the coal industry in Canada.

I am very much surprised that Mr. Douglas would tie in the coal industry and the railways. I should hate to think of the position the province of Saskatchewan would be in without the railways. Mr. Douglas has clearly indicated his stand on the coal question. He considers that the coal industry is obsolete and that there is no point in nationalizing it. I am sure that if Mr. Douglas is going to look for any support among the executive of the UMW, which has consistently supported the C.C.F., he will have a lot of explaining to do with respect to this policy.

Mr. Fisher: He is a good Baptist. He can explain it.

Mr. MacInnis: I am afraid that even though he is a good Baptist this policy will not be acceptable to the executive of the UMW. I am afraid that Mr. Douglas, even as a good Baptist, will have difficulty explaining this policy to the members of the executive of the UMW. I almost said "members of the executive of the C.C.F." but that would have been all right because the two are practically synonymous.

Nationalization is what the leader of the UMW is promoting right at this moment. He is promoting it on the basis of the Rand report.

This is something I fail to understand. Mr. Sheppard, a so-called authority, recommended that a committee should go from Cape Breton to study production methods in England. That was the suggestion made in this regard. Mr. Sheppard, the expert, recommended that a committee should study production methods in the old country because they have increased their production by 50 per cent as a result of the production methods employed there. Nobody took into consideration, however, that even with a 50 per cent increase in production the industry in the old country is still behind the production capacity of the Cape Breton mines. It is a ridiculous suggestion to urge that a committee go abroad to examine the production methods in a country where the industry does not have our production capacity per man ton per day. Nevertheless this is the recommendation at which they jumped and which they followed through.

Mr. Speaker: It being ten o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to section 3 (f) of standing order 26 as provisionally amended, to interrupt these proceedings and put forthwith the question on the motion now before the house.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Flynn in the chair.

The estimates of the following departments were first taken up and entered for consideration:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

General administration—

178. Departmental administration including a grant of $10,000 to Frontier College and the expenses of the international labour conferences, $1,373,104.

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

329. General administration including a grant of $2,000 to the Canadian Good Roads Association, $10,667,720.

DEPARTMENT OF TRADE AND COMMERCE

General administration—

394. Departmental administration, including fees for membership in the international organizations listed in the details of the estimates (also includes the National Industrial Design Council transferred from the national gallery), $3,275,445.

Proceedings reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the house leader if in announcing the business for tomorrow he will be good enough to state that he will bring in the estimates of the Department of Labour which were called just a moment ago?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, as has already been indicated I believe, tomorrow the house will deal first with the bill relating to the Mattagami railway which I understand has been reported back from the committee although it is not on today's order paper. If that is the case, it will be the first item dealt with tomorrow. The second item will be No. 9 on today's order paper, the setting up of a sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping. Having concluded those two items, we will then deal with item No. 8 on today's order paper, the resolution to increase the number of members of the board of directors of Canadian National Railways from seven to 12. That is the business for tomorrow.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the acting house leader whether he will give us the assurance that the estimates of the Department of Labour will be called on Thursday or Friday, as soon as we dispose of these three items?

Mr. Nowlan: I cannot give any such assurance. In fact, I would inform the hon. member for Laurier and the house that the intention is to deal on Thursday with the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration including all facets of that department, all matters for which the minister may be responsible such as the national gallery, the film board, the archives and so on. When these are completed on Thursday we will then start to deal with the estimates of the Department of Agriculture and will continue with the estimates of that department on Friday.

Mr. Chevrier: In view of the discussion that has taken place earlier, and I refer particularly to that which took place on February 15 and the questions and answers that were given then, may I ask the acting house leader why the government will not call the estimates of the Department of Labour so that we can discuss certain matters that come under that department?

Mr. Nowlan: There was a discussion on February 15 in which reference was made to the calling of the Department of Labour. At that time the Prime Minister said:

—if the house so wills, among the estimates to be called will be those of the Department of Labour.

Monday came and we had a supply motion but the question of labour was not dealt with directly. No promise or suggestion of a promise was made by the Prime Minister, and we are proceeding with the estimates of the departments as I have outlined.

Mr. Chevrier: In view of what was said and what the minister has read, I wonder why he will not give us the opportunity to discuss the estimates of the Department of Labour?

Mr. Nowlan: The Department of Labour was called tonight. There was an opportunity to discuss labour matters in the last two days, and it is considered to be in the interests of the administration of the business of the house and in the public interest to proceed with the departments I have outlined.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not want to prolong this unduly but we did not have an opportunity to deal with this matter as we would if the estimates were called, because when they are called the minister is before the committee with his officials and we then have an opportunity to put questions and get answers which we could not do on a motion to go into supply. That is the only reason I was pleading with the minister to call them.

It being six minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

NON-OPERATING EMPLOYEES, C.N.R.

Question No. 42—Mr. White:

1. How many non-operating employees were with the Canadian National Railways as of January 1, 1950?
2. Of this number, how many were engaged in a supervisory capacity?
3. How many non-operating employees were with the Canadian National Railways as of January 1, 1960?
4. Of this number, how many were engaged in a supervisory capacity?

Answer by: Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport):

The management of the Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Monthly data for 1950 are incomplete, and for this period annual figures have been substituted. Comparable annual data for 1960 will not be available for another month but the average for the first 11 months of 1960 will permit a reasonable comparison to be made. The average number of non-operating employees for the year 1950 and for the first 11 months of 1960 were as follows:

Year 1950, 75,114; average, Jan.-Nov. 1960, 67,671.

2. Since many supervisory personnel have jurisdiction over other employee groups as well as the non-operating group, it is not possible to identify separately those who have supervisory jurisdiction only over non-operating employees. The total number of supervisory personnel (union and non-union) on the payroll was as follows:

Year, 1950, 8,669; average, Jan.-Nov. 1960, 9,839.

These figures do not include those supervisory personnel who are not separately identified as such in the Canadian classification of railway employees in accordance with which personnel statistics are maintained. The numbers involved, however, are relatively small and are omitted in each of the three periods covered, thereby providing some measure of consistency to the data to permit comparability.

3. Answered by No. 1.

4. Answered by No. 2.

C.N.R. PERSONNEL

Question No. 82—Mr. Chevrier:

1. What was the number of non-operating employees of the Canadian National Railways in January, 1939, January, 1942, and 1960?
2. What was the number of supervisory officers engaged in supervision of these employees in 1939, 1942 and 1960?
3. What was the total number of supervisory officers on the payroll in 1939, 1942 and 1960?
4. How many non-scheduled employees (non-supervisory) were there in 1939, 1942 and 1960?
5. How many "methods" employees are currently employed by the company?

Answer by: Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport):

The management of the Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Monthly data for 1939 and 1942 are incomplete, and for these periods annual figures have been substituted. Comparable annual data for 1960 will not be available for another month but the average for the first 11 months of 1960 will permit a reasonable comparison to be made. The average numbers of non-operating employees for the years 1939 and 1942 and for the first 11 months of 1960 were as follows:

Year, 1939, 51,146; year, 1942, 60,604; average Jan.-Nov. 1960, 67,671.

2. Since many supervisory personnel have jurisdiction over other employee groups as well as the non-operating group, it is not possible to identify separately those who have supervisory jurisdiction only over non-operating employees.

3. The total number of supervisory personnel (union and non-union) on the payroll was as follows:

Year, 1939, 6,972; year, 1942, 7,394; average Jan.-Nov. 1960, 9,839.

These figures do not include those supervisory personnel who are not separately identified as such in the Canadian classification of railway employees in accordance with which personnel statistics are maintained. The numbers involved, however, are relatively small and are omitted in each of the three periods covered, thereby providing some measure of consistency to the data to permit comparability.

4. As pointed out in answer to question No. 3, personnel statistics are maintained in accordance with the Canadian classification of railway employees and do not permit separate identification of non-scheduled employees (non-supervisory). In addition, since company check-off of union dues commenced on April 1, 1953, prior separate identification of non-scheduled employees as opposed to scheduled employees was not possible.

5. As at September 1960, there were 175 "methods" employees employed by the Canadian National Railways on Canadian lines. These include work study analysts, methods analysts, machine analysts and material handling analysts.

Questions

INDIAN BAND TRUST ACCOUNTS

Question No. 106—Mr. Howard:

1. What is the amount of money held in trust for Indian bands under (a) capital account, and (b) revenue account?

2. Is any of this money invested in securities, and, if so, how much, and in what securities?

3. Have any changes been made in such securities since January 1, 1955, and, if so, (a) what specific changes? (b) have any losses been incurred, and, if so, what losses, and on what dates?

Answer by: Hon. Ellen L. Fairclough (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration):

1. (a) $23,802,924.84, (b) $3,550,910.02, (as of January 31, 1961).

2. No.

3. Not applicable.

APPENDIX

UNITED NATIONS SECURITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION ON THE CONGO

A.

The security council

Having considered the situation in the Congo,

Having learnt with deep regret the announcement of the killing of the Congolese leaders, Mr. Patrice Lumumba, Mr. Maurice Mpolo and Mr. Joseph Okito,

Deeply concerned at the grave repercussions of these crimes and the danger of widespread civil war and bloodshed in the Congo and the threat to international peace and security,

Noting the report of the secretary general's special representative (S/4691) dated February 12 bringing to light the development of a serious civil war situation and preparations therefor,

1. Urges that the United Nations take immediately all appropriate measures to prevent the occurrence of civil war in the Congo, including arrangements for cease-fires, the halting of all military operations, the prevention of clashes, and the use of force, if necessary, in the last resort;

2. Urges that measures be taken for the immediate withdrawal and evacuation from the Congo of all Belgian and other foreign military and para-military personnel and political advisers not under United Nations command, and mercenaries;

3. Calls upon all states to take immediate and energetic measures to prevent the departure of such personnel for the Congo from their territories, and for the denial of transit and other facilities to them;

4. Decides that an immediate and impartial investigation be held in order to ascertain the circumstances of the death of Mr. Lumumba and his colleagues and that the perpetrators of these crimes be punished;

5. Reaffirms the security council resolutions of July 14, July 22 and August 9, 1960 and the United Nations general assembly resolution 1474 (ES-IV) of September 20, 1960 and reminds all states of their obligation under these resolutions.

B.

The security council

Gravely concerned at the continuing deterioration in the Congo, and the prevalence of conditions which seriously imperil peace and order, and the unity and territorial integrity of the Congo, and threaten international peace and security,

Noting with deep regret and concern the systematic violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms and the general absence of the rule of law in the Congo,

Recognizing the imperative necessity of the restoration of parliamentary institutions in the Congo in accordance with the fundamental law of the country, so that the will of the people should be reflected through the freely elected parliament,

Convinced that the solution of the problem of the Congo lies in the hands of the Congolese people themselves without any interference from outside and that there can be no solution without conciliation,

Convinced further that the imposition of any solution, including the formation of any government not based on genuine conciliation would, far from settling any issues, greatly enhance the dangers of conflict within the Congo and the threat to international peace and security,

1. Urges the convening of the parliament and the taking of necessary protective measures in that connection;

2. Urges that the Congolese armed units and personnel should be reorganized and brought under discipline and control, and arrangements be made on impartial and equitable bases to that end and with a view to the elimination of any possibility of interference by such units and personnel in the political life of the Congo;

3. Calls upon all states to extend their full co-operation and assistance and to take such measures as may be necessary on their part, for the implementation of this resolution.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 22, 1961

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

RAILWAYS, CANALS AND TELEGRAPH LINES

Third report of standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines—Mr. Howe.

STARRED QUESTIONS

FIRST GRADE BUTTER PRODUCTION

Question No. 131—Mr. Pitman:

1. What percentage of first grade butter produced in Canada is classed as 39-92?
2. What percentage of first grade butter produced in Canada is classed as 40-93?
3. What percentage of butter classed as 39-92 was produced by milk processing plants?
4. What percentage of butter classed as 39-92 was produced by independent creameries?

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows:

1. 64.20 per cent.
2. 31.27 per cent.
3. 20 per cent.
4. 80 per cent.

PIGEON RIVER, ONT. CUSTOMS OFFICE REMOVAL

Question No. 133—Mr. Benidickson:

1. Will the provincial government be paying any portion of the moving costs or costs of new buildings that will result from the shifting of immigration and customs facilities from the border crossing located at Pigeon River, Ontario, to a new site at High Falls?
2. If so what portion of costs will be borne by the provincial government?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 of this question is no. The answer to part 2 is, not applicable.

HOG CHOLERA

Question No. 134—Mr. Pitman:

1. How many cases of hog cholera were reported in Canada in 1960?
2. Did the Department of Agriculture determine the source of infection?
3. Have any steps been taken to ensure that such infection does not recur?

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is that 106 cases of hog cholera were reported in Canada during 1960. The answer to the second part of the question is yes. The answer to the third part of the question is that there can be no positive assurance against a recurrence of infection, but all practical control measures to guard against it are being taken.

FLOOD CONTROL, FAIRFORD RIVER, MAN.

Question No. 135—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Has the federal government contributed to the cost of a flood control project in the Fairford river in Manitoba?
2. If so, under what authority is the contribution being made, and what is the federal share?
3. Has the project actually been started, and, if so, what progress has been made, and when is it expected to be completed?
4. Is the work being performed by contract, and, if so, what is the amount of the contract?

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is that the federal government has undertaken to contribute to the cost of a flood control project on the Fairford river.

The answer to the second part of the question is that this was authorized by governor in council on October 28, 1960. The federal share is 50 per cent of the cost to the province of Manitoba, not to exceed $300,000, to be charged to the parliamentary appropriation in the main estimates for land protection, reclamation and development.

The answer to part three of the question is that the work is more than half done and will be completed in 1961. The answer to part four is that the work is being performed by contracts let by the province. No claims have yet been submitted to the federal government.

GRAIN STORAGE COST

Question No. 136—Mr. Boulanger:

What is the cost of grain storage for each of the years 1957-58-59-60?

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the question is rather ambiguous. It is rather difficult to estimate the total cost of storage if you take into consideration all the people who are involved in the storage of grain. I presume, however, that the hon. member is asking for the storage cost under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act. I do have those figures here, and they are as follows:

Crop year	Storage paid by by government
1955-56	$31,486,187
1956-57	28,816,766
1957-58	35,553,509
1958-59	39,825,304
1959-60	43,604,073

POULTRY IMPORTS

Question No. 137—Mr. Boulanger:

1. What quantity of chicken broilers, fowl, turkeys and parts, have been imported for the calendar years 1959 and 1960?
2. Are turkey and fowl placed under import control?
3. If so, how many import permits have been issued for turkey broilers, turkey heavier weight, turkey parts, fowl and fowl parts, and chicken broilers imported from the United States during the year 1960?

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question requires some statistics, and I wonder whether the hon. member in whose name the question stands, and the house, would consent to allowing the answer to be printed in Hansard at this place.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member agreeable?

Mr. Boulanger: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows.]

1. Imports	1959 (12 months) lb.	1960 (11 months) lb.
Chicken & fowl, dead or alive, n.o.p.	7,214,993	15,410,750
Turkeys, dead or alive, n.o.p.	437,980	4,444,298

2. Turkeys, but not fowl, are under import control.

3. In 1960, 77 permits were issued for turkeys and 22 permits for turkey parts imported from the United States. In the issuing of import permits no distinction is made between turkey broilers and heavier weight turkeys. Fowl and fowl parts, and chicken broilers were not under import control in 1960; consequently permits were not required for imports from the United States.

[Mr. Jorgenson.]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND BALANCE

Question No. 138—Mr. Robichaud:

What was the amount remaining in the unemployment insurance fund on the last day of January 1961 as compared with similar dates for the years 1957, 1958, 1959, and 1960?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question consists of a series of figures. May I ask that they be printed in Hansard without being read?

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree that this answer be printed?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They are very short. The answers should be read.

Mr. Pearson: Read them.

Mr. Speaker: Apparently there is some objection. Would the minister read them.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton):

January 31, 1957	$916,429,487.77
January 31, 1958	$838,917,440.79
January 31, 1959	$586,990,920.89
January 31, 1960	$445,885,387.32
January 31, 1961	$283,742,150.10

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE CLAIMANTS

Question No. 139—Mr. Robichaud:

What was the total number of claimants for unemployment insurance benefits on the following dates: February 1, 1956, 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960 and 1961?

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is as follows. As at January 31, 1956, 476,946; as at January 31, 1957, 545,981; as at January 31, 1958, 834,544; as at January 31, 1959, 785,071; as at January 31, 1960, 782,542. The figures as at January 31, 1961 are not yet available.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is the way to read.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE OFFICE, TORONTO—PLANS

Question No. 140—Mr. Bourget:

When will the plans and specifications for the construction of an unemployment insurance office in Toronto be completed?

Mr. Y. R. Tassé (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is that it was originally expected that the plans and specifications would be completed by April 1, 1961. A basic change in the accommodation requirements has been proposed, and until this has been dealt with it is not possible to say when the plans and specifications will be completed.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

(Translation):

Mr. Maurice Bourget (Levis): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Public Works, I should like to put a question to his parliamentary secretary. Could he elaborate on the answer he gave a moment ago to question No. 140, to the effect that the department does not know as yet when the plans and specifications for the unemployment insurance building in Toronto will be completed, while in this year's estimates the item concerning this project has been increased from $400,000 to $900,000?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member seems to want to argue about an answer that has been given. If we were to pursue that course we would have interminable debate at this period. Questions may be asked for the purpose of eliciting information but not for the purpose of presenting a point of view.

Mr. Bourget: But, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the hon. member if he disagrees.

Mr. Bourget: I was just asking the parliamentary secretary how he could reconcile the answer he gave me—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The parliamentary secretary does not have to reconcile answers that are given. That is not the purpose of the question period. If the hon. member wishes to debate it I hope he will defer his debate to the proper time.

FEDERAL BUILDING RENOVATION, KIRKLAND LAKE

Question No. 141—Mr. Peters:

1. Was a contract let recently for the renovation of the federal building at Kirkland Lake?
2. If so, in what places was the advertisement for this work published or displayed?
3. How many tenders were received, and from whom?
4. What was the amount of each tender?
5. To whom was the contract awarded, and where does the successful contractor reside?
6. Was any preference given to encourage local contractors under the winter works program?

Mr. Y. R. Tassé (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes. The answer to the second part is Kirkland Lake and New Liskeard, Ontario. The answer to parts 3 and 4 is that two tenders were received, one from Hill-Clark-Francis Ltd., of North Bay, Ontario, $53,187, and the other from G. L. Hamilton Construction Ltd., Kirkland Lake, Ontario, $65,000. The answer to part 5 of the question is that the contract was awarded to Hill-Clark-Francis Ltd., of North Bay, Ontario. The answer to part 6 is yes. It was part of the winter works program. Advertising of tenders was limited to the immediate area and the contract specified that preference was to be given to the use of local labour.

BOBCAT PILOT MODELS—DEVELOPMENT COSTS

Question No. 142—Mr. Rouleau:

Does the cost of the 20 pilot models of the bobcat plus production tooling, estimated at 3½ million dollars by the Minister of National Defence on February 14, 1961, include the sum of $2,951,371.54 given as the full cost of the development of this carrier up to February 1, 1960, given in the answer to question No. 174, answered February 24, 1960?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): The short answer to this question is, no. The estimate of $3½ million quoted in the house on February 14 last includes the cost of 20 pilot models, production tooling, production improvement and drawings and specifications suitable for the letting of a fixed price contract for the balance of the 500 vehicles authorized.

WHARF REPAIRS, BAY OF ISLANDS, NFLD.

Question No. 143—Mr. Batten:

1. What was the hourly rate of wages paid for day labour on wharf repairs at Cox's Cove, Bay of Islands, Newfoundland, undertaken during the year 1960?
2. What was the hourly rate of wages paid for day labour on wharf repairs at Gillams, Bay of Islands, Newfoundland, during the same period?
3. If any substantial difference exists between these two rates, what explanation is given for such difference?

Mr. Y. R. Tassé (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works): In answer to part 1, hourly rates paid at Cox's Cove, Bay of Islands, Newfoundland, on wharf repairs during 1960 were: foreman, $1.30; timberman, $1.20; labourer, $1.

Hourly rates paid at Gillams, Bay of Islands, Newfoundland, on wharf repairs during the same period were: foreman, $2.15; carpenter, $2.00; labourer, $1.35. That answers part 2.

In answer to part 3, rates paid by the Department of Public Works on various projects across Canada are established on the basis of advice from the Department of Labour as to what rates prevail in the area concerned and at the time concerned. The explanation for the difference in this case is that Gillams is closer to Corner Brook than Cox's Cove, and many of the workers in Gillams are actually employed in Corner Brook. Therefore rates in Gillams are affected more by rates prevailing in Corner Brook. Workers at Cox's Cove are mainly involved in fishing and woods work, and the rates paid by the department there are based on rates provided by the labour department survey as prevailing in Cox's Cove and in other centres in the area.

Starred Questions

WHARF COST, ST. JOHN'S ISLAND, NFLD.

Question No. 144—Mr. Batten:

1. What was the total cost of construction of the wharf built at St. John's island, St. Barbe, Newfoundland, during the year 1960?
2. What was (a) the total cost of material, and (b) the total cost of labour?
3. From whom were materials bought, and what was the total cost in each case?
4. What were the names of those employed, and the total amount of wages paid to each?

Mr. Y. R. Tassé (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works): The answer to part 1 is $17,017.20. The answer to part 2 (a) is $9,345.54 and the answer to part 2(b) is $7,671.66.

The answer to parts 3 and 4 involves a list of some 25 names and figures, so if the house would allow them to be inserted in Hansard as if read that would perhaps be the appropriate course to take.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The tables referred to above are as follows.]

3.—Dunphy's Ltd., Curling, $6,494.05; J. E. Billard, Port aux Choix, $1,467.50; J. E. Billard, Port aux Choix, $109.22; John Farrel, Port aux Choix, $73.75; A. O. Parsons, Woody Point, $6.82; John Rumbolt, Castor River, $297.50; Cost of transporting ballast to site by boat, $896.70.

4.—Wm. L. Parsons, foreman, $1,077.12; Clyde Chambers, carpenter, $757.25; Hubert Chambers, labourer, $429.84; George Chambers, labourer, $514.08; Eli Chambers, labourer, $492.08; Michael Eastman, labourer, $334.56; Walter Galliott, labourer, $461.04; William Offrey, labourer, $582.24; Fred Parsons, labourer, $353.52; Joseph Offrey, labourer, $531.43; Henry Galliott, labourer, $510.00; Nelson McLean, labourer, $464.80; Absalom Chambers, labourer, $492.80; Frank Eastman, labourer, $444.24; Peter Offrey, labourer, $44.00; Francis Offrey, labourer, $44.00; Henry Offrey, labourer, $36.00; U.I.C. contributions, $102.66.

PARCEL POST REVENUES

Question No. 145—Mr. Denis:

For each of the last five fiscal years, what has been the gross revenues derived from domestic mail parcel post?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): The answer to this question is just a column of figures, and perhaps it could be printed in Hansard as if read.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Estimated: 1959-60, $22,086,304; 1958-59, $20,860,194; 1957-58, $19,916,979; 1956-57, $19,149,249; 1955-56, $18,163,471.

ESTABLISHMENT OF T.V. FACILITIES, SKEENA

Question No. 146—Mr. Howard:

1. Has the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation any plans for the development or establishment of television facilities in the electoral district of Skeena?
2. Have any surveys been made of the need for such facilities, and, if so, what are the results of these surveys, and the areas or communities so covered?
3. When is it expected that such services will be installed, in what communities, and covering what areas?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): The answer to part 1 is, yes, as a result of numerous representations which have been received in connection with this matter.

The answer to part 2 is, yes. Preliminary studies have resulted in choosing two locations, Prince Rupert and Kitimat, for further study, with the possibility of Terrace being included if further studies indicate that such a scheme is feasible.

In answer to part 3, may I say that corporation management has approved the detailed study of the Prince Rupert-Kitimat proposal. An on the spot survey will be made this spring as soon as weather and road conditions permit. When the survey data is compiled and the cost of the proposal is determined, a decision as to its implementation will be made.

NEWFOUNDLAND—INDIAN AND ESKIMO EXPENDITURES

Question No. 147—Mr. Granger:

1. Is there an agreement between the government of Canada and the government of Newfoundland to provide certain payments to Newfoundland in lieu of federal expenditures on Indians and Eskimos in other provinces?
2. If so, how much is paid under this agreement, and for what purposes?
3. What is the estimated number of (a) Indians, and (b) Eskimos, in Newfoundland according to the latest available figures?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): This question involves several departments and I would suggest it be made an order for return.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order for return.

PUBLIC WORKS PROJECTS, 1960-61

Question No. 148—Mr. Tucker:

1. What is the total contract value of construction projects which were actually being carried on by the Department of Public Works during the month of January 1961?
2. How many standard post office buildings started in 1960 had been completed, or were under actual construction, up to January 31, 1961?
3. How many slightly larger than standard post office buildings started in 1960 had been completed, or were under actual construction, up to January 31, 1961?

4. What was the estimated cost of furniture and equipment ordered for winter delivery in the winter of 1960-61, up to January 31, 1961?

5. On how many dredging operations was the Department of Public Works actually working at any time since November 1, 1960, and what is the estimated total cost of this work?

6. How many small maintenance and repair work projects for various marine structures across the country was the Department of Public Works actually working on at any time since November 1, 1960, and what is the estimated total cost of this work?

Mr. Y. R. Tassé (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works): This question involves a considerable amount of research, and I wonder if the hon. member in whose name it stands would allow it to be made an order for return.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that this be made an order for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Order for return.

MAIL CONTRACT, LADYSMITH

Question No. 149—Mr. Denis:

1. What is the name of the person who now has the contract for the rural mail delivery at Ladysmith, R.R. 1, Ontario?

2. On what date will such contract expire?

3. Has the said contract been renewed, or will the said contract be renewed in favour of the person who now has it?

4. If not: (a) have tenders been (i) invited (ii) opened? (b) what are the names of the tenderers, and the amount of each tender? (c) to whom was the contract awarded?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, this question inquires about a place entitled Ladysmith, Ontario, which does not exist. I think the hon. member is referring to Ladysmith, Quebec, which does exist.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Subject to that reservation the answers to the four parts of this question are as follows:

1. Reinhold Pasch.
2. 31st March 1961.
3. No.
4. (a) (i) No. (ii) Not applicable.
(b) Not applicable.
(c) James Turcotte.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, we have heard that the Postmaster General tries to be very smart and funny when he says he does not know what the province is. Following the motion I put on the order paper I received a letter written by the district director of the post office, addressed to Mr. R. Pasch, mail contractor, Ladysmith, Ontario. Therefore if I made a mistake in the first place, it was originated by one of his own officials.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member makes a question of privilege out of a rather minor mistake. I am sure his explanation will be of interest.

[Later:]

Mr. Denis: May I direct a question to the Postmaster General following the answer he gave to the house under starred questions to the effect that the contract at Ladysmith, Quebec, if he wishes, will terminate on March 31, that the contractor will be replaced by somebody else and that public tenders will not be called.

I have here a letter from the department and I want the minister to assert whether this report is true and say whether it is the new policy of his department that the new contract for such service is to be awarded to—

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is traditional in this house that correspondence is not read in connection with a question.

Mr. Speaker: I did not hear the Postmaster General.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): I believe it is contrary to our accepted practice to read a letter in the house and found a question on it. Questions are intended to be short, direct and to the point, and I suggest that this wandering explanation leading up to the reading of a letter is not within the purview of the question period.

Mr. Chevrier: What citation supports that view?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. Denis may have a question to ask, but I found difficulty in following what his question was. Could the hon. member state the question he has to ask? Then perhaps we can determine whether there is any need to read the letter.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Further to the point of order, citation 176 of Beauchesne, at page 151, says that on February 24, 1933 a member said he would like to address a question to the minister of labour concerning the town of Transcona. He then read a telegram. Mr. Speaker said:

> The hon. member should ask his question, not read a communication. The communication could have been sent to the minister in charge without it being necessary to read it in the house.

There are further citations to the same effect, pointing out that communications should not be read in connection with questions.

Starred Questions

Mr. Denis: In order to please the Postmaster General I will rephrase my question. I am informed that the contract at Ladysmith will be awarded to somebody else without any tenders being called. I should like to know whether this information is true and, if so, whether it is the new policy of the department to grant new contracts without calling for tenders.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): Having answered the question earlier in the day in exactly those terms—that this contract had been awarded to another person and that tenders had not been called—it is hardly within the purview of the question period for an hon. member to stand up immediately afterwards and ask if that is the true situation.

Mr. Chevrier: Why not say you fired the fellow? Give us the facts.

Mr. W. F. Matthews (Nanaimo): I should like to address a question to the Postmaster General, and I hope this continued nagging by the hon. member for St. Denis will not prejudice the interest of my constituents.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member appears to be making a statement. I suggest we pass to the orders of the day.

COAL MINE OPERATION, CAPE BRETON—SUBSIDY ON LOSSES

Question No. 152—Mr. Dumas:

1. Has any estimate been made of the cost (a) to the federal government (b) to the province of Nova Scotia, arising from the subsidy to be applied against company losses from the operation of three coal mines in Cape Breton for a temporary period?
2. If so, what is any such cost to (a) the federal government (b) the province of Nova Scotia?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the answer to 1 (a) and 1 (b) is yes. The answer to 2 (a) is $2,150,000. The answer to 2 (b) is $350,000.

LAND ACQUISITION FOR AIRPORTS, PITT MEADOWS

Question No. 156—Mr. Winch:

1. Has the federal government acquired land in the municipality of Pitt meadows for airport purposes?
2. If so, how much has been acquired, how much more is to be acquired, and when can final settlement of intended further acquisition be expected?
3. Is it still the intention of the government to proceed with development of an airport at Pitt meadows?
4. If not, what are the intentions regarding properties already obtained in relation thereto?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 is yes.

As to part 2, approximately 700 acres have been expropriated and settlements have been completed in respect of approximately 655 acres. Of the remaining 45 acres, about 9 acres are owned by the municipality of Pitt meadows and the balance by two individuals with whom it has not been possible to negotiate amicable settlements. These two cases have been referred to the Department of Justice for exchequer court proceedings and cannot be heard until the owners involved have filed statements of defence. At the moment it is not possible to say when such steps will be taken by these two individuals and when their cases will go before the exchequer court. With regard to the land owned by the municipality, there is some question as to whether this is actually required, and the matter is still under consideration.

The answer to part 3 is yes and the answer to part 4, consequently, is not applicable.

PACIFIC GREAT EASTERN RAILWAY

Question No. 157—Mr. Winch:

1. Is the government aware that the minister of finance of British Columbia has introduced a bill to authorize payment of advances to the Pacific Great Eastern Railway Company pending receipt of a federal grant, in which it is maintained that the government of British Columbia expects to be subsidized in the sum of $19,812,500 from the federal government?
2. Has the federal government made any commitments to pay these moneys? If so, what amount was committed and has been paid?
3. Has consideration been given to subsidizing the entire construction cost of extending the Pacific Great Eastern Railway from Prince George to the Peace river area? If not, for what reason?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the answers to the three parts of this question are as follows.

1. Yes.
2. (a) No.

(b). The federal government has paid the following subsidies toward the cost of construction of the Pacific Great Eastern Railway:

(i) In 1951-52, for the extension of the line from Quesnel to Prince George, a distance of 82.7 miles at $15,000 a mile and amounting to $1,240,000.

(ii) from 1956 to 1958, for the extension of the line north of Prince George, a distance of 50 miles at $25,000 a mile and amounting to $1,250,000.

3. No.

CLOSING OF CAPE BRETON COLLIERIES—DISCUSSIONS WITH DOSCO

Question No. 158—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Were discussions held between the government and representatives of Dominion Steel and Coal Company with respect to the dates of closing of three Cape Breton collieries?
2. If so, who attended such discussions on behalf of the government and on behalf of the company, and on which dates were any such discussions held?

3. Were representatives of the united mine workers present at any such discussions as to dates for closing of the collieries?

4. If so, who was present on behalf of the united mine workers, and what view did any such representatives take as to proposed dates of closing of such collieries?

5. Did the government reach any understanding with company representatives that discussions would not be reopened with respect to the dates of colliery closures as announced on January 9, 1961?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the answers to the five parts of this question are as follows.

1. Yes.

2. Numerous discussions have taken place over a long period of time with respect to this matter. There is no record available of the dates on which many of these discussions took place. The government was represented on all occasions by the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys and by the Minister of National Revenue and from time to time by the Minister of Labour and by the Prime Minister. The company from time to time was represented by various officials including the president, Mr. A. L. Fairley; the vice president in charge of finance, Mr. Earl Clubb; the vice president in charge of sales, Mr. Charles Appleton; and the general manager, Mr. Harold Gordon.

3. Yes.

4. Present on behalf of the united mine workers were Mr. William H. Marsh, president, district No. 26; Mr. Stephen Dolhanty, vice president; Mr. Michael Higgins, secretary treasurer, and Mr. John E. Delaney, international board member. These representatives asked for postponement of the closing of any collieries, which was accomplished.

5. The answer to this part of the question is no, but the company stated that its decision with respect to the closing of these mines was final and in its opinion in the interests of the coal industry.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue arising out of the reply he gave to starred question No. 158 standing in my name, in which the minister said among other things that the united mine workers had asked for a postponement of the closing down of the collieries. My question is this. Is it not a fact that the united mine workers asked that the collieries should not be closed at all?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): The answer is no, Mr. Speaker.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Question No. 147—Mr. Granger:

1. Is there an agreement between the government of Canada and the government of Newfoundland to provide certain payments to Newfoundland in lieu of federal expenditures on Indians and Eskimos in other provinces?

2. If so, how much is paid under this agreement, and for what purposes?

3. What is the estimated number of (a) Indians, and (b) Eskimos, in Newfoundland according to the latest available figures?

PUBLIC WORKS PROJECTS, 1960-61

Question No. 148—Mr. Tucker:

1. What is the total contract value of construction projects which were actually being carried on by the Department of Public Works during the month of January 1961?

2. How many standard post office buildings started in 1960 had been completed, or were under actual construction, up to January 31, 1961?

3. How many slightly larger than standard post office buildings started in 1960 had been completed, or were under actual construction, up to January 31, 1961?

4. What was the estimated cost of furniture and equipment ordered for winter delivery in the winter of 1960-61, up to January 31, 1961?

5. On how many dredging operations was the Department of Public Works actually working at any time since November 1, 1960, and what is the estimated total cost of this work?

6. How many small maintenance and repair work projects for various marine structures across the country was the Department of Public Works actually working on at any time since November 1, 1960, and what is the estimated total cost of this work?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) raised a point of order under this heading when it was last called. He has advised me that he will not be able to be here today and has requested that the matter stand until Monday.

URANIUM PURCHASES BY U.S.

Motion No. 46—Mr. McIlraith:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the Canadian government, on the one hand, and the United States government on the other, since August 29, 1959, on the subject of the purchase of uranium by the United States of America from Canada.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am advised that there are no such documents, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: In the circumstances is the hon. member prepared to withdraw his motion? Is it agreed that the motion may be withdrawn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

Motions for Papers

ROADS TO RESOURCES PROGRAM, QUEBEC

Motion No. 49—Mr. Martel:

For a copy of all contracts and agreements entered into by the federal government and the province of Quebec with respect to the roads to resources program, together with copies of all riders and schedules pertaining thereto.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have been in touch with the hon. member in connection with this order. I have provided him with a copy of the roads to resources agreement between the federal government and the province of Quebec. There is only one agreement and no riders or schedules pertain thereto. In the circumstances the hon. member has agreed that there would seem to be no need to make a formal return to this motion. I might add that all these roads to resources agreements have been tabled in the house and are available to all hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: In the circumstances does the house agree to the hon. member's motion being withdrawn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

ORDERS IN COUNCIL FIXING DUTIES

Motion No. 50—Mr. Benidickson:

For copies of orders issued by the Minister of National Revenue since December 1, 1958, under the provisions of section 38 of the Customs Act for the purposes of fixing duties.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): With reference to the point you raised a moment ago, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to accept this motion subject to the usual reservations. I understand however that at the request of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, consideration of this order is being deferred until his return when you will rule thereon.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the point of order taken, is it agreed that this motion stands?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion stands.

CAMPBELLTON-CROSS POINT BRIDGE

Motion No. 54—Mr. Robichaud:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged since June 21, 1957, between the federal government or any agency or department thereof, not including the Department of Public Works, with any individual, engineering consultant firms or others, in connection with plans and specifications for the Campbellton-Cross Point bridge, including correspondence exchanged with any groups or syndicate prior to the approval of the project and up to this date.

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): I request that this motion stand.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Perhaps the hon. gentleman could explain.

Mr. Dorion: In deference to the Prime Minister I ask that it stand.

Motion stands.

REMOVAL OF GENERAL MOTORS PLANT FROM WINDSOR

Motion No. 56—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

For a copy of any written communication or a record of any exchange between the government and General Motors on the subject of an unfounded report of a removal of General Motors plant from Windsor.

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): This motion is accepted.

Motion agreed to.

MAIL CARRIER, LADYSMITH

Motion No. 57—Mr. Denis:

For a copy of a petition to the Postmaster General or his department from a group of citizens of Ladysmith, R.R. 1, Ontario, regarding the service of the mail carrier, Mr. R. Pasch.

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, there is still, since my last observation, no place known as Ladysmith, Ontario. If the hon. member is referring to Ladysmith, Quebec, we will accept the motion.

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I used the name "Ladysmith" because this place is known as Ladysmith and it has been so named by the minister's own officials. I have a letter from the Post Office Department, and the officer of the department called the place Ladysmith, rural route No. 1, Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's motion refers to Ladysmith, R.R. 1, Ontario. I understand the Postmaster General indicates that the post office is in Quebec. Will the house consent to the appropriate change being made in the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The word "Ontario" will be changed to "Quebec". Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion with the change made?

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MONETARY POLICY—INQUIRY AS TO REFERENCE TO BANKING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether it is the intention of the government to refer the question of monetary policy, and more particularly government responsibility with regard to it, to the banking and commerce committee for examination during this session?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the latter part of the question in respect of these allegations of responsibility was disposed of yesterday. I think there is no further inquiry called for, and certainly it is precluded by the decision taken by the house yesterday.

As to the first part of his question, this is a matter that was raised several times earlier. I pointed out, Mr. Speaker, that normally the annual report of the governor of the Bank of Canada reaches the minister's desk about March. This question can be taken into consideration in the light of that report.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. Is it the intention of the government to cause an investigation to take place into any aspect of the operation of the monetary policy of the government or the Bank of Canada other than that properly proposed by the Leader of the Opposition, namely a committee of this house?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the curiosity of the hon. gentleman is more evident today than it was yesterday. If it became government policy to arrange for any such inquiry at any time I should be glad to see that the hon. member for Essex East is acquainted with this fact after it has been announced in the house.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LAOS—REASSEMBLING OF SUPERVISORY COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, in view of the report that Russia has given a reply favourable to restoring the Laos international commission, I wonder if the Secretary of State for External Affairs could give us any comment as to whether this new commission is likely to be re-established.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there have been two developments of major significance in respect of Laos during the last few days. The first was that the Soviet union replied on February 18 to the proposals made by the United Kingdom about the reconvening of the international supervisory commission for Laos. These exchanges between the co-chairmen of the Geneva conference—that is the United Kingdom and the Soviet union—are, of course, confidential, and must remain so until the co-chairmen decide to make them public. I can, however, say that further discussions between the co-chairmen appear likely. Canada has, of course, a direct interest in the outcome of these discussions because, as I informed the house on January 16, we are willing, if the United Kingdom and the Soviet union as co-chairmen of the Geneva conference so request, and subject to the agreement of the king of Laos, to appoint a Canadian representative to the commission.

The second development was a declaration on February 19—one day later—by the king of Laos in which he pointed out that the policy of the royal Laotian government is one of non-alignment, non-interference and good neighbourliness; that is to say a policy of neutrality. Further, the king appealed to all countries to respect the independence, sovereignty, territorial integrity and neutrality of Laos, and to renounce all intervention in the internal affairs of the kingdom, even in the form of aid if not sanctioned by international agreements. He went on to express the hope that Cambodia, Burma and Malaya, all close neighbours would form a commission to proceed to Laos in order to establish that the country threatens no one and aspires solely to peace. The purpose of the commission would be to take action to denounce all foreign intervention, direct or indirect, which would imperil the kingdom's independence, integrity and neutrality.

I should like to remind the house that the maintenance of the sovereignty, independence, unity and integrity of Laos, and peace and stability in southeast Asia, are objectives which Canada has sought to promote for many years. In line with this policy, Canada welcomes the declaration of neutrality made by the king of Laos on behalf of his government and his people, and will continue to respect and support the independence, sovereignty and neutrality of the kingdom, as it has in the past.

With these two suggestions having been made the situation is unclear at the moment. It may be that there will have to be some joining together of the two proposals, but at the present time I am not sure just what will happen with regard to the commission in respect of Laos.

Mr. Argue: I wonder whether the minister would care to comment on a further press report that Britain and the United States appear to be shifting position and favouring the formation of a commission of neutral observers?

Mr. Green: I believe the government of the United States has approved of the declaration made by the king of Laos, and that subsequently the government of the United Kingdom indicated that it thought this might be a good idea. So at the moment we are between the two commissions.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The other day the Prime Minister tabled an invitation from Prince Sihanouk of Cambodia for a 14-power conference with regard to the Laos situation. He did not table the reply of the government of Canada to that proposed arrangement. Would the minister tell us what reply Canada made to the proposal for such a conference?

Mr. Green: I am not certain, but I think the hon. member is wrong, and that on February 8 Canada's reply to that communication from Prince Sihanouk was tabled, or in any event that a summary was given to the house at that time.

BROADCASTING

WINNIPEG—PROTESTS RESPECTING LICENCE FOR STATION CKY-FM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Has the minister received any representations protesting the granting of a licence to CKY, Winnipeg, to operate a frequency modulation station on a frequency of 103.1 megacycles? If so, has he conveyed these representations to the chairman of the board of broadcast governors, and will he tell the house what reply he has received?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, offhand I would say no, I have not received any. It is our practice in the office to send these immediately to the board of broadcast governors, or the corporation, as the case may be, and it is possible that I received something in writing and passed it on to the board for their opinion and comment. I will check on the matter and advise the house in the near future.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO CURRENT NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. I rarely bother him. Could the minister inform the house whether diplomatic relations have been re-established between the Minister of Finance and the premier of British Columbia in connection with securing an agreement on the development of the Columbia in Canada?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): There has been no change on the part of the federal government. I think I will have to direct the hon. member, as to the balance of his question, to another source. I have not had any reply to the letter I wrote Premier Bennett several weeks ago, and which I tabled in the house at that time.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Will the Minister of Finance be taking up this question with the premier of British Columbia when he arrives in Ottawa for the dominion-provincial conference?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I do not know precisely when Premier Bennett is arriving, but I believe he will be here tomorrow and Friday. I shall be glad to have the opportunity of discussing with him the making of arrangements for the discussions which were proposed.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

FEDERAL PROPOSALS RESPECTING TAX SHARING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): As the Minister of Finance is shortly to be engulfed by the premiers in his confrontation with them, does he believe that he can tell the house what kind of policy he proposes, in principle, to outline to the provinces when he meets with the premiers tomorrow in connection with this very important matter?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): The usual generous policy, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL PROPOSALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether at the dominion-provincial conference which opens tomorrow the government intends to propose to the provinces ways and means of mitigating the present unemployment problem?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a fiscal conference called for the purpose of discussing fiscal arrangements for the period commencing April 1, 1962.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Does the minister propose to take advantage of the presence of the provincial governments to discuss the government's policy regarding the designation of depressed areas and the federal government's policy in connection therewith?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I never take advantage of anything or anybody, not even the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister will not take advantage of me, will he not on behalf of the federal government begin to do something about this serious problem of unemployment, instead of carrying on day by day doing nothing?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I am interested in the impetuous impatience of the hon. member for Essex East.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Impatience is right.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): May I point out, however, that neither the hon. gentleman nor his leader displayed any interest in this question two days ago, when they had an opportunity of selecting the subject for debate on the supply motion.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the minister has made a reflection on the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker: I agree that the hon. member's point is well taken.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was about to state my point more clearly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I agree that the minister took an opportunity which was not his to make a statement, but it is neither a question of privilege nor a point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a further supplementary question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Oh, my hon. friends opposite do not like us to discuss anything, but we are going to discuss unemployment. Having in mind what the minister said, Mr. Speaker, do you not think the minister owes it to this house to withdraw those words? If he does not withdraw those words I simply suggest to the minister that if there has been any disregard for the unemployed, it lies on the doorstep of this government.

Mr. Hees: Stop smiling.

Mr. Speaker: I trust there will be an early opportunity to continue the debate.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in the light of the answer just given by the Minister of Finance may I ask the acting house leader if he will now reconsider the announcement made last evening and allow the house to proceed at once to a consideration of the labour estimates so that we may examine the relevant minister thereon?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the opposition having had an opportunity, at the invitation of the Prime Minister, to discuss the question of unemployment on the motion to go into supply—an invitation which hon. gentlemen opposite saw fit to refuse—we will not be calling the labour estimates tomorrow.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government violated its promise.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

PRIVILEGE

MR. DESCHATELETS—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege with regard to an answer given to me in this house last January 31 by the Secretary of State.

My question is based on the transcript of the television program involved that has just been made available to me.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand the hon. member wishes to rise on a question of privilege on a reply given to him in the house on January 31. Since the hon. member has not raised the question before, I would think that he should first establish his right to raise it at this late date.

Mr. Deschatelets: I was just about to give the reason this question was not raised before. I have just this morning received the transcript of the notes of the program concerned, so that I was not able to do it before. That is the reason for my question.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, last January 31, I put to the Secretary of State the following question which appears on page 1 of the appendix to Hansard for that date:

> Is it true that last Sunday evening the Secretary of State stated over the French television network that the percentage of unemployed was lower in Canada than in the United States?

The Secretary of State then gave the following answer:

> Mr. Speaker, I do not recall making any such statement. I might have said something along that line. but certainly not in those terms.

I now have here the transcript of the statement made on television last January 29 by the Secretary of State. This is exactly what he said:

In that regard, I must point out however that the percentage of unemployed in the United States is higher, not much, but higher than in Canada.
(Text):

Mr. Dorion: Mr. Speaker, may I raise a point of order?

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member wishes to raise a point of order I will hear him.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister cannot raise a point of order on a question of privilege. A question of order cannot be raised on a question of privilege.

Mr. Ricard: It is up to Mr. Speaker to decide that matter.

Mr. Speaker: It is my view that a point of order could arise on a question of privilege. It cannot arise, of course, when a point of order is being discussed. But if our proceedings are out of order in dealing with a question of privilege, I see no reason why the point of order should not be stated before the matter of privilege has been fully dealt with.

Mr. Chevrier: The question of privilege has not been fully stated.
(Translation):

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, because the very character of the words just spoken by the hon. member indicates that this is by no means a question of privilege. I believe, Mr. Speaker—
(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is for the Chair to determine whether there is a question of privilege raised by what has been said. I think the minister is premature in raising that matter as a point of order. If the hon. member's facts are accepted and if the notes are accepted as being an account of what was said, I have some doubt whether it raises a question of privilege in any event. It may indicate that in his reply the minister was not accurate, but that is not necessarily a question of privilege unless some attempt has been made to deceive the house. I think I should hear the balance of the notes and then give the minister the opportunity to reply.
(Translation):

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Before the hon. member goes any further, may I be allowed to point out that on several previous occasions my hon. friend happened to quote documents in this house, by simply saying: I have here the transcript of a lecture which was given. But I think that before going on with his remarks, he should give some reference as to the source of his information and the transcriber of those notes.
(Text):

Mr. Speaker: That is perfectly correct. The hon. member who is setting up some document as against an answer he received should verify the document, what it is and its authenticity.
(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: This document which I was reading when I was interrupted comes from the C.B.C.—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deschatelets: It is the verbatim transcription of a program televised on January 29, 1961, when the Secretary of State held a press conference.

I shall now go on with his statement, just quoting a few lines, and after having read those lines, I shall state the basis for the question of privilege which I am submitting.

Mr. Fortin: State the question of privilege first.
(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should like the hon. member to give the basis of his question of privilege before he proceeds.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, on television at a press conference the Secretary of State gave figures indicating that there was more unemployment in the United States than we had in Canada at that time.

Mr. Ricard: What is the question of privilege?

Mr. Deschatelets: That was his statement. When I asked him a question in the house the Secretary of State did not correct his statement, which was not correct. Since this program has been shown on many stations, I think I have the right today to correct the situation.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member is simply contradicting something which has been said, that is not a matter of privilege. If we raised questions of privilege every time we disagreed with what had been said on the other side of the house, it would result in perpetual questions of privilege. If that is the hon. member's question of privilege I think he has misinformed himself as to the extent of privilege. All he is saying is that he disagrees with the answer which was given to him, or that he contradicts the answer which was given to him by the minister.

Mr. Chevrier: Your Honour a while ago indicated that you were going to allow the hon. member to state his question of privilege by completing the reading of the notes.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Chevrier: Then Your Honour asked the hon. member to state what the question of privilege was. The hon. member stated it. I am saying to Your Honour with deference that there is a question of privilege because, in answer to a question put by an hon. member in the House of Commons, a categorical answer was given by the minister which is contradicted by a statement made over television. Surely in this House of Commons there is a responsibility resting upon ministers of the crown to make statements which are in conformity with the facts.

Mr. Speaker: I listened carefully to the reply given by the minister to the answer which was read. It seemed to me that the reply was of such a general nature that one could not raise a question of privilege, even if the minister were incorrect in his account of what he had said. It was on that basis that I wanted the hon. member who has raised the point to indicate exactly where he feels there is privilege. He has not satisfied me that there is any question of privilege arising out of these circumstances.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, for guidance may I ask whether it is a question of privilege if a minister in this house gives information on a certain point and then outside the house over the radio gives different information on the same point? Is that a question of privilege or is it not, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Argue: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the Leader of the Opposition stating that is the situation? The notes are of a broadcast on which the question was based as I understand it. Is that correct?

Mr. Chevrier: It is a tape.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, will you allow me to read the statement?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have asked the hon. member to state what is the question of privilege involved.

Mr. Ricard: He does not know.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If he feels that some specific answer which he received was incorrect in some respect and raises a question of privilege, I would like the hon. member to state to the house the words complained of and to what extent he says they are incorrect. Then I can determine whether there is any point of privilege. I do not wish the hon. member to introduce contradictory material until he has first stated the matter of privilege which he claims.

(Translation):

Mr. Deschatelets: Here is the statement:

In that regard—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deschatelets:

The percentage of unemployed in the United States—

Mr. J. O. Latour (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont—

Some hon. Members: Order.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member understands that I am asking him to indicate what part of the answer and in what respect he thinks a question of privilege arises before he goes on to cite contradictory matter.

Mr. Deschatelets: In his statement on the—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

(Translation):

Mr. Latour: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont rises on a question of privilege and, to prove his point, he quotes a document received from the C.B.C. I imagine that at the C.B.C., there are some responsible people. Can he tell us who signed the document on behalf of the C.B.C.?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: With respect to the point raised, the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont is not quoting the letter to which he has referred; he is now indicating what is his question of privilege arising out of the answer. Unless he can establish a question of privilege I propose to close the matter.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State made the statement on television that unemployment in proportion, is higher in the United States than in Canada. This is contrary to fact.

Mr. Ricard: State your point of privilege.

Mr. Deschatelets: When I asked the Secretary of State about this in the house, he should have corrected the statement. He failed to do so. Since I have the transcript here, I would like to read the statement he made on television.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot accept this as a question of privilege. Whether or not what the Secretary of State said is contrary to fact is not something that can be specifically established. It is largely a matter of opinion. If the hon. member wishes to contradict the minister he will have plenty of opportunity to do so during debate.

[Later:]

(Translation):

Mr. Louis Fortin (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, I learned a few moments ago from the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Deschatelets) that certain hon. members enjoy the privilege of access to C.B.C. official records. Therefore, may I ask the Minister of National Revenue if he would find out from the C.B.C. what conditions are required, and what political party one must belong to in order to be granted access to the C.B.C. records?

(Text):

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I will inquire and see what clandestine political influence or interference is necessary in order to get such information.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. Mary.

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): I should like to address a question to the Postmaster General—

Mr. Speaker: I recognized the hon. member for St. Mary, which sounds not unlike St. Denis.

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): I beg you, Mr. Speaker, not to insult my constituents by calling me the hon. member for St. Denis. I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue in French. Although it is a question which seems to be like the one which was asked by the hon. member for Montmorency, I think there is a slight difference. I am sorry; I should have said by the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet.

(Translation):

Could the minister tell the house if the C.B.C. or its employees are authorized to send to hon. members, or to anyone else, the transcript of talks or political speeches made over its stations?

(Text):

Mr. Nowlan: I am sure there are regulations dealing with this matter which I do not want to discuss at the moment. That is why I say I want to see the exercise of whatever influence may be necessary in order to achieve such a result. I will answer the question when I get the information.

Mr. Valade: A supplementary question. If this permission is not allowed, would the minister take disciplinary action against those responsible?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is getting a little ahead of the game. The question is hypothetical.

AIRPORTS

MALTON—REPORTED HOLD-UP OF RUNWAY EXTENSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Pratt (Jacques Cartier-Lasalle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. An article appeared in the Toronto Telegram of February 21 under the by-line of Harvey Currell, in which it was stated:

> Toronto township councillors have blocked extension of a runway at Malton airport until dominion Department of Transport officials are ready to tell them how loud jet noise will be from the big expanded jetport. They also want to know how big the airport can be expected to become in future years and how much valuable land will have to be kept sterile as a result.

Would the minister care to comment on this report, and also is he prepared to ask his department to consider the advisability of using such excess, sterile land around the perimeter of airports for parks and recreational purposes for the benefit of adjacent communities as some small recompense for the increased hazards and nuisances created by the advent of jet-powered aircraft operating out of these airports?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any runway hold-up at Malton airport. As far as runway construction is concerned, we own all the land necessary for our program this year and there will not be any hold-up at this airport.

With regard to the second part of the quotation, I must say that these councillors of Toronto township have asked for a meeting with the officials of my department to discuss this matter, and my officials are at the present time arranging such a meeting for some time in March.

As far as the last part of the quotation read by the hon. member is concerned, it is certainly an interesting proposition; but I would like to point out to him that these lands around the perimeter of airports are very often extremely useful for secondary industries.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

STATEMENT BY ASSOCIATE DEFENCE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

Since the minister attended the meeting of protest against the proposed route of the trans-Canada highway, held in Dorion by the hon. members for Vaudreuil-Soulanges and for St. James, is he now in a position to tell the house whether he concurs in the views expressed by his two colleagues at that meeting?

An hon. Member: He has nothing to do with that.

Hon. Pierre Sevigny (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, since members of the opposition these days seem prone to demand affidavits I would suggest that my hon. friend approaches the 500 or 600 persons who attended that meeting. Those persons, in order to satisfy my hon. friend's curiosity, will be able to tell him that at the very beginning of the speech I made on that occasion, I stated that knowing nothing about the building of a bridge to connect with Ile aux Tourtes instead of Ile Perrot, I would say nothing about it. So, having said nothing, I feel that the hon. member's question has no foundation in fact.

Really, Mr. Speaker, once again in reply to the hon. member, I must say that if members of the opposition keep on talking about nothing, they will soon be considered as men of—well I leave that up to them to decide.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Can the minister tell the house whether he concurs in the opinion of his two colleagues?

Mr. Sevigny: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. If I am not mistaken, the question relates to the trans-Canada highway route, which is the responsibility of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Chevrier: That is right, sir, but it was made a question of privilege by my hon. friend yesterday who rose before the orders of the day to explain his position. I am asking the associate minister now whether he is of the same opinion as his two colleagues from Vaudreuil-Soulanges (Mr. Bourbonnais) and St. James (Mr. Campeau).

Mr. Speaker: His opinion in that matter is not an administrative one and could not be inquired into.

Mr. Chevrier: Then he should not have expressed his opinion.

HOUSING

YUKON TERRITORY—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. In his absence yesterday I gave notice to the officials of his department of my intention to ask this question.

In view of the very urgent need for a policy of housing reform in the Yukon generally and in Whitehorse particularly, can the minister say whether the federal government intends to assist in any way in the immediate relief of a situation which is causing serious health and welfare problems?

Hon. Walter Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his interest in this matter, and I am happy to inform him that an urban renewal program is being developed for the city of Whitehorse to meet the problems mentioned in his question.

The federal government is prepared to lend the territory $145,000 both to purchase land for a new subdivision and to lend the city of Whitehorse funds for roads and utilities. It is estimated that over 100 families will find accommodation in this new area. We are also providing $25,000 to assist in moving to this subdivision or to other approved lots and houses which meet the area's building standards.

The federal government will also participate in a $300,000 low rental apartment project similar to urban renewal apartments in the south. This will provide at least 35 housing units. We will meet our normal 75 per cent share of the cost and are prepared also to lend the territorial government the remaining 25 per cent to encourage early development.

Finally, my department is studying details of a proposal to establish, in co-operation with the territorial government, a home building loan fund to help meet the need in the territory for funds to construct less expensive houses than those which can be approved under N.H.A. regulations. It is hoped that this study can be completed in time for the 1961 construction season in the territory.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON USE OF JP-4 FUEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he has anything more up to date to tell us than his recent statement about the safety issue involved in the use of JP-4 jet fuel, in view of the fact that controversy is still raging since the crash of the Mexican jet in New York, and in the light of the fact that British airway companies in the main have ruled out the use of this fuel by their aircraft.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I am sorry, but I have no statement to make on that subject.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL REVENUE

FREE PORTS—INQUIRY AS TO NUMBER AND VOLUME OF BUSINESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. R. Mitchell (Sudbury): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. I have already given him notice. Could the minister indicate to the house the number of free ports existing in Canada at the present time and their location? I have a second question to address to the hon. gentleman and perhaps he has not had enough time in which to prepare an answer, in which case he might take the question as notice. What was the volume of business at each of the ports during 1960?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Unless the hon. member has given notice I suggest that he put the question on the order paper, as it calls for statistical information.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ABILITY OF R.C.A.F. TO CARRY OUT INTERCEPTOR ROLE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence arising out of a statement he made last week in Toronto to the effect that the role of the R.C.A.F. was to intercept and identify intruders in our air space. Is the minister satisfied that this role can be performed by a reduced number of squadrons equipped with CF-100's?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): What the Leader of the Opposition is attempting to do is to get me to make a statement on policy, which is not our custom on orders of the day.

UNITED NATIONS

DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S. RESPECTING ADMISSION OF RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of a report that at his forthcoming conference with Prime Minister Macmillan, President Kennedy will propose the admission of China to the United Nations on the ground that this will increase the chance of bringing about world disarmament. My question is, did the Prime Minister of Canada or the Secretary of State for External Affairs discuss this question with President Kennedy during their recent visit to Washington?

[Mr. Balcer.]

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Prime Minister made a statement to the house on his return from Washington on Monday, and it would be very improper for me to add to that statement.

Mr. Argue: Could the minister say whether Canada has given any recent consideration to supporting the admission of China to the United Nations?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is endeavouring to secure an answer in relation to policy regarding a matter which is very controversial and important. He would not expect to get an answer to a question of that kind on orders of the day.

COAL

RAND REPORT—STATEMENT ON PUBLICATION OF COMMENTARY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on February 15, on the orders of the day, the hon. member for Gloucester asked whether the Prime Minister had received a request from the island of Cape Breton requesting the government to make public a commentary prepared by Mr. Vissac on the report of Mr. Justice Rand.

The reply is that two such requests were received at the Prime Minister's office on February 14, one from the Holy Name Society of Glace Bay and the other from the Reserve Mines credit union association. Mr. G. A. Vissac, as a member of the dominion coal board, submitted his comments on the royal commission on coal in the form of a report for the consideration of his colleagues on the board. His comments have since been made available by the board to the interdepartmental committee of officials currently engaged in a study of the Rand report. It is not the practice to publish working papers of this kind.

Mr. W. C. Henderson (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister and inquire whether the hon. member for Timmins (Mr. Martin) has crossed the floor.

Mr. Benidickson: He is almost a parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member attempted to speak from his present position it would undoubtedly be true.

Mr. Green: Mr. Speaker, we are very glad to welcome the hon. member for Timmins.

Mr. Argue: We hope he will bring some of you back with him.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

QUEBEC—AUTHORITY FOR CONSTRUCTION OF BRANCH LINE

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. C-69, respecting the construction of a line of railway in the province of Quebec by Canadian National Railway Company from a point at or near mile 72 of the Kiask Falls subdivision in a northwesterly direction to a point in the vicinity of Mattagami lake.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1—Construction and completion. (Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Is the minister going to make a statement following the discussion on this bill which took place in the railway committee?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to add for the moment, but I might, perhaps answer certain questions.

Mr. Chevrier: With regard to the discussion held in this house a few days ago and the one which took place in the committee, I refer the minister to page 2191 of the French Hansard where I asked the minister whether he was going to give us some information later and he replied:

Certainly, with pleasure.

I continued:

The total amount of expenses and profits?
Mr. Balcer: Yes, you will definitely be provided with these figures.

What I was asking for at the time, Mr. Chairman, was a general statement on the operations of this line showing both revenues and expenses in order that the house may have a general idea of its economic feasibility. As the minister knows, Canadian National employees when faced with this question could not give me a satisfactory answer. Moreover, when some members asked for the production of the agreement passed between Canadian National and Mattagami Lake Mines Limited, I think that the railway employees objected to it. I did not press for the production of this document any more than the other members. But without such information which I deem necessary for a proper consideration of the bill, I would now ask the minister who promised to supply this information to have it printed in Hansard.

Mr. Balcer: It is quite true, Mr. Chairman, that I said at the resolution stage that I would give as much information as possible about the revenues and expenses of this railway. Now, my hon. friend has had the opportunity to ask questions when this matter was under discussion before the committee, and the witness representing the Canadian National Railways supplied him with a great deal of information. In fact, he declined to give him information on only one particular point, claiming that it was not in the interests of the C.N.R. at this time to give definite information on the matters raised by my hon. friend.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that, so far, we have given a lot of information. Besides, I stated personally when the resolution was under consideration, that the revenues from that line would cover all operating and maintenance expenses as well as pay off the cost of construction of this line, plus the interest.

In fact, the railway authorities expect to realize a substantial surplus each year.

I believe I have given several particulars about the volume of merchandise that this railway line would handle.

We have also discussed the guarantees, the basis they rest on, the quantity of ore required and so on. I have therefore supplied a great deal of information and I believe that by giving further particulars at this time, I would prejudice the C.N.R. in the negotiation of other contracts elsewhere.

Besides, I think that in that regard I am following the same policy as former ministers of transport.

Mr. Chevrier: Not at all.

Mr. Balcer: Could my hon. friend quote instances where former ministers of transport have given more specific particulars as to the revenues and expenses of certain railway lines.

I know of several instances showing that on more than one occasion when a witness called before a committee of the house pointed out that an answer could prejudice the railway company, my predecessors never failed to ask the committee not to labour the point, always with a view to preventing any prejudice to the railways.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I am not complaining about the information supplied, but about the particulars that were withheld. It seems to me that information regarding economic feasibility is so essential to the discussion of this bill, that the minister should supply it. I am convinced that if such information is available to the minister, he must provide it.

Now, it is on the advice of C.N.R. officials that the minister does not want to give this information, because he claims this will prejudice the interests of the Canadian National Railways.

If I asked the minister to give full particulars—but such is not the case—he might be justified in refusing. But I am not calling for full particulars. I am only asking that the minister give in round figures the general revenues and expenses as well as the profits that the railway might make the first year and in following years.

In my opinion, that information could in no way prejudice the interests of the C.N.R.

The minister also states it is highly possible that such information was not given in the past and that, in this, he is following the same policy as his predecessors.

Yet I somehow remember that on one or two occasions I tabled, even before the bill was referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, a detailed breakdown of estimates prepared by the Canadian National with regard to expenses, revenues and profits of projects.

I therefore see no reason why parliament should not be entitled to such information, particularly when it is available to the minister.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I agree with my hon. friend that, on some occasions in the past, when he was minister of transport, he did table very precise information with regard to the expenses and revenues of certain railway projects. On those occasions, he also indicated the annual profits of the national railways.

But in the present case, Mr. Chairman, I am precisely following the tradition established by my predecessors when a witness was asked to give evidence before the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and stated that he was unable to reveal certain information without causing prejudice to the C.N.R. in their negotiations with other companies or corporations. I think this is a similar situation, and that supplying such information might jeopardize the Canadian National Railways.

The C.N.R., as we know, are a huge concern covering the whole country. Their success is directly dependent on contracts signed with various mining, financial and industrial companies in this country.

Consequently, in revealing at this time the detailed information requested by the hon. member for Laurier, when witnesses called before the committee have stated that such disclosure would be prejudicial to the parties, we would be spoiling things for everybody. I therefore believe that my hon. friend, and every hon. member in this house, will realize that it is preferable to restrict such data. As a matter of fact, I myself have given this house full indications as to the quantities of zinc ore and copper concentrates to be moved annually.

I also stated that the moving of mining products would amount to approximately $2 million a year while the moving of other goods would bring in $225,000. I think that should be enough information under the circumstances.

Moreover, a further guarantee has been supplied by the company when it undertook to pay a fine of $5.10 a ton, if the quantities moved were less than 140,000 tons a year for a period of ten years.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that such disclosures are ample information on the project.

Furthermore, the bill contains additional details with regard to the cost per ton to be paid for the construction of that railway.

The railroad officials who gave evidence readily answered all the questions asked, except precisely those of the hon. member for Laurier, who wanted to have two columns of figures, namely revenues and expenses.

I would not say that the hon. member is asking too much, but he is going against tradition in the sense that when a witness refuses to make a statement before the committee because it might cause prejudice to the company, the Minister of Transport does not supply any information of that kind.

My hon. friend will agree that the stand I am taking now is based on precedents and I would be pleased to indicate some if you wish. In fact I can give one which comes to my mind because I remember something which happened in 1956 in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Mr. Green, at the time a member of the committee, put the following question:

(Text):

The question by the present Secretary of State for External Affairs was:

> Could the agreement between the mining company and the railway company be included in the proceedings?

And the answer:

> At this stage I would like to submit that it is not in the interest of the development of the Canadian National Railways to disclose the details of these guarantee agreements. We have always treated them as confidential documents. We have stated in general terms what they include, but I would respectfully suggest that their details should not be disclosed.

And Hon. Mr. Marler, my predecessor and the successor of the hon. member for Laurier, said at that point:

> I think it really puts the national railways at a disadvantage vis-à-vis its competitors across the country if it is called upon to answer that sort of question.

The present Secretary of State for External Affairs then very courteously said that he would not like to do that, and withdrew his question.

The hon. member for Laurier himself at the sessional committee on railways and shipping on Tuesday, March 28, 1950 at page 121 stated the principle very well, and I should like to quote his statement.

> Well, Mr. Chairman, as far back as I can remember it has always been the policy of this committee to give as much information as possible, but when an officer of the Canadian National Railways makes the suggestion or gives it as his opinion that it might not be desirable to give out certain information, it has been my understanding always that such information was not made public; that in the past the committee has always followed the advice of the officers of the railway.

This principle is so well enunciated, Mr. Chairman, that I would have great difficulty arguing against it. Of course, Mr. Chairman, there seem to have been certain inconsistencies because, as I pointed out, the hon. member for Laurier at that time tabled this information.

I have discussed this particular matter at some length with the officials of the railway and have witnessed their reluctance to divulge any more details than have been given for the reason that it would hamper the railway's interest in this type of development. However, as the record shows, on some occasions net figures were given, and on some occasions they were not.

The passage of this bill will, therefore, not be held up. I think perhaps it would be a good thing to have this particular matter raised at the forthcoming sessions of the committee on railways so that we will have an opportunity to hear the management side of the issue.

Mr. Chairman, when the president of the railways appears before the committee he can be questioned on this particular point and the principle involved. The committee can then make its recommendation, and to whatever recommendation is made I will give my wholehearted support. However, at the present time, in respect of what has been stated in the committee by the witness I would appreciate my friend not pressing further.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I should like to add a few words to this discussion by saying that the precedents mentioned by the minister about the statements made by Mr. Green in 1956 do not at all apply to my question, for Mr. Green was then asking that the contract between the parties concerned be tabled. Now it has nothing to do with that. I am not asking that the contract be tabled. It was the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) who asked for that document, and the representative of the Canadian National declined to produce it. Nobody insisted upon his doing so.

What I did ask—and the minister did not refer to any precedent on that matter—is general information. I am not asking for minute details or particulars; all I want is general information. I believe the precedents referred to by the hon. minister do not apply in this instance.

The minister has just suggested that this question be referred to the committee on railways, air lines and shipping.

Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that if this question were submitted to the committee, C.N.R. officials would give exactly the same answer they gave during the meeting held two days ago.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, what I wanted to say is that the principle itself should be referred to the committee. If the chairman appeared before the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines as a witness, I believe it would be quite appropriate for the members of this committee to put this very question to him. He could then tell them why, in certain cases, officials who testify before the committee are not in a position to release certain information, because it might be detrimental to railway operations. He might choose to give examples and, at that time, the committee may decide on future policy. For my part, as minister, I should gladly adopt that attitude.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I gave up the floor to the minister, but I should like to continue with a few remarks that will be quite short.

I simply wanted to add that I know beforehand what the chairman of the Canadian National Railways would answer. He would support the statements made by his officials, and what the minister has just said. However, I believe it is illogical that the minister himself, after telling that he would supply information, should change his mind two days later.

The minister himself agreed with me when I put the question hardly two days ago. He said: certainly, we will give you all this information in committee. Now, he has changed his mind. It is clearly because C.N.R. officials feel that the information must not be given out.

Mr. Chairman—and this is my final remark—it seems to me that parliament, which is entitled to this information as the minister himself stated, should have it, so that hon. members may be in a position to approve this project because it is economically feasible.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Laurier said the minister agreed with him the other day by saying that he would give the necessary information, and that he has now changed his mind.

On the other hand, the minister now says that he has received from high officials of the Canadian National representations to the effect that it might be detrimental to the company to give the house the required information.

Perhaps that is why the minister changed his mind; it is the privilege of any intelligent man to change his mind when necessary.

We are asked complete details on the economic feasibility—

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I did not ask for complete details on the economic feasibility of the project. That is precisely the point. I feel that the minister is quite right in not giving complete details. I am simply asking for general information, which is an altogether different matter.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, some hon. members make a pretence of asking for general information as to the potential revenue of this particular railway line. Evidently, it is rather difficult to say whether or not the line will be self-sustaining; but in my opinion, the question is of minor importance, because on the basis of what the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Dumas) and the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Martel), said the other day concerning the development potentialities of the area, as a result of the construction of that railway, I feel that parliament would be justified in voting the funds required for the construction of that railway, even if the line were not self-sustaining, which we do not know at this time.

As a result of the construction of the line, that area will, as it were, be opened to civilization. The hon. member for Villeneuve even referred to plans for settlement of the area, and mining and lumber operations there. If all those natural resources remain undeveloped because there is no means of communication with neighbouring areas, the development will be delayed to that extent. On the other hand, the development of the area in general will be economically profitable for the province of Quebec in particular and, in my opinion, all hon. members should consider the expenditure quite justified even if the operation of the line itself is not self-sustaining.

What surprises me, Mr. Chairman—or perhaps I should say that I am not surprised at that—is the fact that the hon. member for Laurier is making such a fuss about approving an expenditure that will benefit Canada as a whole and the province of Quebec in particular.

(Text):

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the caveat that I should like to register here really goes back to much more than this particular bill. It goes back to previous bills like it that have been brought in by ministers of transport. I feel that the minister did not give us enough information. I feel that ministers of transport rarely give us enough preliminary information. Then when we get into the committee examination process, in my opinion the actual statement by the officials who appear before the committee is never as satisfactory as it might be. I should like to give an indication of what dissatisfies me about this bill, although our party is anxious that it should go through.

It is necessary for me to start, Mr. Chairman, with an incident that gave me rather a shock a little bit over a year ago when we were investigating a situation concerning the province of Quebec, the city of Montreal and the federal government in relation to the Jacques Cartier bridge. We discovered the agreement that had been in effect lapsed or abrogated—I do not know what would be the technical term—for a number of years. That was one side of it. Another side was that before changes could be made in connection with the agreement, there needed to be a new table of tariffs in connection with the project; and again it appears that no really strenuous final efforts moving through to a solution had been made to bring this result about. The reason that was given to me by the witness on the stand was that I just did not understand or appreciate the Quebec situation.

It may well be that an outsider cannot appreciate the Quebec situation and the kind of arrangement and diplomacy that needs to go on there between the federal government and the provincial government. But here we have a situation in which this government is going to spend a considerable amount of money guaranteeing a line in the province of Quebec that has more than just ordinary ramifications. It makes possible expenditures of some $50,000,000 in total if you include the refinery and the actual mine, and much more than that if you include the railway expense, the expense of building the townsite and the expense that the provincial government is going to have in putting in the road. In this kind of situation, I think we deserve more information.

At our committee meeting I was rather shocked to discover that the Minister of Transport has not had discussions with the minister who is in charge of natural resources in Quebec. I was just amazed that the minister, in connection with a project of this size, with so much government money going into it, has no idea where it is intended the refinery shall be. He just had the general expectation that it is going to be on deep water. He could give us no real information as Minister of Transport on what the factors were in the location other than the question of power and deep water. We were not given, by the company's witnesses or by the minister, any information that would indicate just where it should go.

One of the arguments I should like to make to the minister and to the committee is that we undertake big development projects of this kind on too haphazard a basis. I have here an article from the Financial Post of February 4, 1961. It is headed "Not Much Cheer for Lead, Zinc". It states as follows:

> Canada's lead-zinc industry—which has hitherto sold half its output to the U.S.—gets little cheer from legislation before the House of Representatives this week.

Then it goes on to point out that there is before the U.S. house a new bill that is backed by the industry, and that has more congressional sympathy and the support of President Kennedy. What this bill sets out to do is really not to liberalize quotas but to protect the lead-zinc industry of the United States even more. The article goes on to state as follows:

> What effect more protection for U.S. mines will have on Canada's three major potential producers is a question mark.
> Mattagami Lake Mines in Quebec, Brunswick Mining & Smelting in New Brunswick and Consolidated Mining & Smelting—controlled by Pine Point Mines in the Northwest Territories are planning big new mines.
> Their combined, planned capacity could add more than 150,000 tons of lead and more than 400,000 tons of zinc to Canada's annual production—double present output.

In other words, we have on the cards—and this mine is a factor—a doubling of our zinc production in this country. Yet ever since I came into this House of Commons, the then hon. member for Kootenay East not the present hon. member, used to be always getting to his feet and worrying about the difficulties that Consolidated Mining and Smelting were having in getting rid of this production in the United States' market and in the world market. My particular point here is that there are indications that on the short run the zinc prospects are not good. Yet we are to have a doubling of capacity. When you have a situation like this it seems to me that we should know more about the kind of agreement that a crown corporation is entering into with the particular mining concern. There is nothing statutory about this agreement. I know it has a legal status, but not for members of parliament. In essence it is outside us in that it does not come within the act that is before us. Another feature about this question of the agreement is this: We had some evidence last year brought out by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, the hon. member for Laurier and myself in the questioning of the president of the Canadian National Railways about the various development lines that he had investigated. He indicated some of the principles that are involved as far as the Canadian National Railways are concerned in setting up these lines. At page 142 of the minutes of proceedings and evidence of the sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping he stated as follows:

> The Canadian National Railways was the originator of this traffic guarantee form of approach to this problem, and we originated it because of past experience where railway lines were pushed, back in the days when political considerations had something to do with these matters—happily gone now. The railways were pushed on that basis, whether it was completely economical for the railway to build the line or not. So we do it on an arm's length basis and consider all the interests not only of the industry that wants the service but also the general effect to the community; and on the basis of our appraisal we are prepared to take care of our share of the risk.

It seems to me we have to take from this statement of policy of the president that they have gone into this whole matter. However, I would argue that we did not get satisfactory answers on this question from the officials of the railway who were before us. I refer to the general effect on the community. What do we know about this matter? It is surely an integrated operation. What do we know about the general effect to the community? We do not know where the refinery is going to be. We do not know whether all the productions from the mine, in terms of concentrates, is going to be shipped all the way to the refinery by the Canadian National Railway. We do not know what are the views of the provincial government of Quebec in the matter.

It seems to me these are all matters about which we could have more information. My own views and the good judgment of the Canadian National Railways executive are not particularly sanguine. I hope to express them later this day when we are considering the motion to set up a committee. But it seems to me, when we have a crown corporation that year after year has been burying itself further and further in deficits, and when we have indications even from Mr. Gordon's own analysis last year of these branch lines that at times traffic has not been everything that could be expected, it all adds up to the fact that we deserve and should have more detail on the agreement and on the project in total, where it is going to go and what it is going to do.

In conclusion of my comments on this matter, may I say I have often wondered what approach the minister takes when he is shepherding a bill through the house. It seems to me that the minister gives the members of the house the fairest treatment when he decides that through his preliminary statement he is going to cover every possible aspect of the situation. Then we have something on the record. I suggest to the present minister that he gives every indication of someone who is going to be very chary in the amount of information he provides.

I am not giving him advice; I am asking him in future, when he is bringing a bill before the house even though it is later going to committee, to cover all the ramifications of the matter. I think he would then save a great deal of the questioning that we have in committee, which often turns out to be futile, and many of the complaints that we have later.

Specifically I should like to know from the minister what attention the government is paying to the views of the people in the Abitibi country that they would like to have a refinery up there. I know this is a legitimate point of view because the people in my part of the country are very anxious to have a smelter, for example, at the lakehead to process the ores that are very close to us.

This is the kind of thing that keens and burns people in an area for many, many years. They ask, "Why was a refinery or a smelter not established in our particular area, instead of being way up somewhere else?" I know the answer the minister gave about the economics of the situation, but the people in the region have a hard time believing some of these particular economics and I am sure they wonder why governments do not get together and try to direct a refinery or a smelter in such a way, even if necessary by subsidization, as to be an integrated part of the economy in the area.

If the minister says this is an interference with free enterprise, I suggest the subsidization of this refinery is an interference with free enterprise. Once you are in the situation of guaranteeing a crown corporation going into the area to help exploit private enterprise, surely you are in a position to suggest to that private enterprise that it do its utmost to help the particular region and economy that it is developing.

The other point I should like to make in connection with this whole arrangement is sparked a bit by the minister but also by the hon. member for Villeneuve. I think I made the same error myself. We talk grandiosely about our tremendous natural resources. One of the things mentioned is that this railway line is going to open up a tremendous pulp and paper area. We have more potential pulp scattered around this country that is not being exploited than we know what to do with. We always live in dreams. I come from a town that since 1922 has been told by politician after politician that some day there is going to be a large pulp mill there. I know the sense of disappointment people feel. All through northern Quebec, if my reading is correct—and my reading is necessarily skimpy—there are hopes that pulp and paper mills will be constructed. In a situation such as this, I think the minister should have more information on what is the potential cordage. What is this government itself doing to see that if we put in a railway line there is going to be some industrial development such as a pulp mill, whether it is newsprint, kraft or whatever the case may be? It seems to me these are all the kind of questions associated with resource development that should be answered in this house and in the committees of the house.

In summing it up, it is a case where we do a tremendous lot of dreaming and big talk about our resources, and then on something like this we vote the money very readily. I think it is a tremendous thing that we are going to have a line of this scope and size. However, there are some doubtful factors in it and we are not given the complete complex of the situation. Unless governments in Canada, and the federal government in particular, are prepared to take the kind of initiative that will develop the thing wholly in the best interests of all, I think we are going to have this damnable failure of government enterprise and free enterprise working together and neither one really giving the leadership that is needed to develop our hinterland and frontier resources.

I think the most wonderful thing that could happen to the Abitibi region of Quebec would be to get not only the mine but also the refinery. I hesitate to accept the argument that a tidewater or a deep water location is fundamental in the economics. I should like to know what are the economics, and perhaps the government of Quebec could do something about shifting them so that the refinery would be placed where it would really do the most good.

I should like to ask the minister one specific question. Has the location or the development of this Brunswick Mining and Smelting property in New Brunswick anything to do with the location of the refinery? That is, are the concentrates from it expected to be treated at this particular refinery that may be going to deep water? That may go some way to explaining the location down on the St. Lawrence rather than in the Abitibi area itself.

In relation to the Abitibi region itself, any hinterland or frontierland area is always told it really has not a large enough labour market to support a complex industry such as a refinery. There are a number of members in this house who come from hinterland and frontier regions and I think they will tell you that labour mobility today is high enough that you do not have to worry about the labour market and the high cost of labour in the those regions. You can be sure that if in Canada there is going to be a new town of a continuing size and a good opportunity to make a go, you will get a flood of people coming into it. This happened at Elliott Lake with very stark results. That is an indication that you can get people to move very easily from metropolitan areas if they know there is a guarantee of remunerative work with some stability.

This is my final point in suggesting that we are entitled to have a certain disappointment about the way this particular bill has been introduced and taken through to this stage.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Clause 1 agreed to.

The Chairman: Before I recognize another hon. member and members of all parties having spoken up to now I think I should warn the committee that in my view the discussion we have had up to now has not been relevant at this stage of the proceedings. We have had what amounts to discussion on the principle of the bill. At this stage of the proceedings, the discussion should be on the drafting of the bill.

I do not intend to prevent the minister from replying or any hon. members asking questions, but I warn the committee that in my view the discussion up to now has not been in accordance with the rules.

On clause 2—Competitive bids or tenders.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I wish to deal very briefly with what the hon. member for Port Arthur mentioned. I do not wish to usurp the function of the minister because of course he will have an adequate opportunity to reply. I was at the committee meeting. I went there to ask one question, particularly. I wanted to ask the C.N.R. officials if they had made an analysis, in connection with their economic report, of the long term future with regard to zinc production and sales. I come from one of the districts where the matter of the Pine Point Railway and the production of lead and zinc are of great concern, and I was interested for that reason. I do not know whether the hon. member was there at the beginning of the meeting of the standing committee but I know he came in later. The statement made by the railway official was, definitely, yes. They had made a careful analysis of this situation and had assured themselves that there was a good long term future in connection with the production of zinc.

I mention this because three zones were mentioned by the hon. member—this area, the area of the proposed railway going into Pine Point, and one other. He pointed out the possibility that these three mines going into production might have the result of building up possibly more of the product than could be absorbed. I do not think that is necessarily the case. At the Pine Point mine, for example, the concentrates are supposed to go to Trail. The situation there is simply that there are certain smelter residues which will be exhausted next year or the year after, and unless concentrates are brought down to the smelter at Trail—concentrates of the order of at least 200,000 tons a year—the operation at Trail will have to be modified and perhaps continued on what would not be an economic basis.

I think that is an adequate answer to the observations which the hon. member has quite properly made. In addition, we must bear in mind the Paley report which has been brought to the attention of the President of the United States. This report stresses the continuing requirements of North America for lead and zinc. The terms of that report are definite, and I am sure the hon. member is aware of them. As far as I know there has been no attempt to suggest that the recommendations and statements contained in that report are not correct.

I am interested in this particular project; I do not want to say anything as to the principle, but I certainly hope it will progress. I am confident from what has been said that the aspirations and desires of those promoting this project will be realized and that it will become of great economic benefit to this country. From my knowledge, and from what has been said in the committee, I believe the economics of this mining area certainly justify the construction of the railway.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a question.

What would happen if the railway line were not completed by the date mentioned in section 1?

Mr. Balcer: Do you have in mind relations between the companies and the railway?

Mr. Chevrier: No. What I have in mind is this: Should the railway line still be incomplete by December 31, 1962, what would then happen?

Mr. Balcer: I think the bill is clear as to what would happen in a case like that.

Therefore, the full completion of the railway will be before December 31, 1962, or at a later date to be determined by the cabinet.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, that was what I was asking the minister. What steps does the governor in council take when he is advised that the line cannot be completed on the date indicated in section 1?

Mr. Balcer: Well, the general pattern, or rather the rigours of section 1 may be corrected by an order in council.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, what happened with the Chibougamau-St. Felicien railway might perhaps happen again; there was supposed to be a three years' delay, when it was the responsibility of the former member for Stormont.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, if the house wishes to pass the bill, very well, we are all for that; but if hon. members want a discussion, we are prepared for that too.

I say to those who a moment ago interrupted the discussion, through an intervention having nothing to do with the question I put to the minister, neither the hon. member for Laurier nor the former regime prevented the construction of the Chibougamau-St. Felicien railway; on the contrary, they are responsible for it.

Besides, Mr. Chairman, in section 1, only one railway may be involved, i.e. the Mattagami railway, and no other such as the Chibougamau-St. Felicien railway.

I would therefore ask you to call the hon. member to order.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to make a few remarks before the third reading of the bill. And it is mainly about what was said a moment ago by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) in connection with the construction of a refinery in that district. Personally, at the resolution stage, I specified that in my humble opinion the refinery in question should be built in our area, that is, in the Mattagami lake area, where the railway will be built and where the mines are now located.

Obviously, the federal government, as well as the Canadian National Railways, both have considered the matter and they probably have not the necessary authority to determine the exact place where the refinery will be built, because that permit is issued by the provincial authorities; but I trust that this matter will be settled or, at least, I hope it will be settled to the benefit of the people of the Abitibi area. That railway will permit the development of a new area that offers great possibilities. I am sure that if the refinery were built there the future of that area would be assured for several years to come. Furthermore, this would permit the opening of new cities, as I already indicated at the resolution stage.

Mr. Chairman, I heard the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) ask a moment ago some information about the economic feasibility of the project, or generally about its revenues and expenditures. I believe that would be interesting. And he mentioned the fact that parliament should certainly be entitled to that information. But the minister explained that the railway authorities could not give that information because it might perhaps be detrimental to their future operations or to other agreements made elsewhere in Canada by the Canadian National Railways.

There is another point which has something to do with that and about which I believe parliament should get information. For the time being, I would not like to unduly embarrass the minister, but I do know, on the other hand, that the matter was referred to at the time the bill was considered by the committee on railways—that the tenders for the construction of that railway were invited for January 23 last.

Those tenders were received and are considered by the Canadian National Railways authorities as being confidential. That is all very well, but I think that parliament which is called upon to vote the sums required to cover the C.N.R. deficits, and which is now asked to pass a special act to provide for the construction of that railway, should be entitled to get that information.

Besides, most departments, I would even say all departments of the federal government, must, when they invite public tenders, reveal the names of the lowest bidders, except when the security of the country is at stake. But in this case, we are dealing with an important economic development, not only for my own area and for the province of Quebec, but for Canada as a whole.

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Once again I remind the hon. member that he is straying away from the subject matter of the bill we are discussing. I ask him to return to the subject.

Mr. Martel: With all due respect, Mr. Chairman, I was stating that the tenders called by the C.N.R. for January 23 last have been received but have been kept confidential.

Mr. Chevrier: That relates to clause 2.

Mr. Martel: I do not think clause 1 has been carried. I believe we still have the right to discuss the general principles of the bill.

The Deputy Chairman: We cannot discuss management. That was supposed to be discussed in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines to which this bill was referred for study.

Mr. Martel: I thought that I could place my views on the record before third reading and ask if this situation cannot be changed with respect to future bills so that information would be made available to parliament. I did not think we had passed clause 1 and could discuss general principles. Clause 2 of the bill, a copy of which I have in French, reads as follows:

(Translation):

The company shall adopt the principle of competitive bids or tenders in respect of the construction of the railway line in so far as the company decides not to perform such work or any part thereof with its own forces, but the company is not bound to accept the lowest or any bid or tender made or obtained nor precluded from negotiating for better prices or terms.

It is precisely on such matters, Mr. Chairman, that I feel parliament should be kept informed. In this case, something unusual has happened, since the project was quite an urgent necessity for the area concerned. Tenders were called as early as last January, that is immediately after the announcement of the project in the speech from the throne.

But I think that normally parliament would have a right to know the names of the lowest bidders and the amounts of the bids. I would not want, however, to embarrass the minister, but I think that parliament has the right to know these things. We are here to represent our constituents.

I know that it was said before the committee that such tenders were considered confidential matters and could not be disclosed before the passage of the act. I realize that it is not the practice to disclose confidential matters. I mention this while the house is studying it, but next time if an amendment is to be made to the Railway Act as suggested in the speech from the throne, I think this question should be settled in order that the members may be informed. There may be nothing wrong in that, but it gives the public the impression that certain matters are hidden. Therefore, if we want the people to continue to believe in our democratic system, that should be changed. After all, we are here to look after the interests of the people, that is of our constituents.

Mr. Chevrier: Could I ask the minister whether in the light of the last part of clause 1, he is aware of instances in the field of railway construction by the C.N.R. where the line had not been completed by the date specified and a request had to be submitted to the governor in council for an extension of time.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I have no such instance in mind at present, but my hon. friend is probably aware of some. As far as I am concerned, however, I could not point out any at the moment.

Mr. Chevrier: Now, with regard to clause 2, Mr. Chairman, and following the remarks just made by the hon. member for Chapleau who wanted information almost identical to what I asked myself, which is of a general character and is quite reasonable, notwithstanding the views of the hon. member for Montmagny-L'Islet (Mr. Fortin), who said that the mere fact of seeking such information was delaying the progress of the bill. I must say, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Chapleau is in the same position.

I cannot accept such an attitude. To my mind, the hon. member for Chapleau is entitled to ask questions, and to seek clarification of any particular point.

As far as I am concerned, I was going to ask the minister, first of all, which part of the work on the line would be carried out by the employees of the C.N.R. and which part would be done under contract.

Again, I think the hon. member for Chapleau was reasonable in asking who submitted tenders and on what basis the tenders were submitted to the C.N.R.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that the remarks of both my hon. friends are quite sensible. When tenders are called, the lowest bidder gets the contract, except for very special reasons.

I want to assure my hon. friends that there is nothing secret about this, that there is no plot involved. The Canadian National received, in fact, 13 tenders.

The other day, a witness appearing before the committee did not have the figures on hand. Today, however, I am able to state that 13 tenders were received. The contract has not yet been awarded by the management of the C.N.R. They had to wait, of course, until the house passed the bill; that is only logical.

Some deposits, which accompanied tenders have been returned to their owners. This was done in order not unduly to retain rather considerable amounts of money, and not to force the firms who submitted tenders to pay additional interest to their bank. Needless to say that those tenders had not been accepted. There was, therefore, no other alternative than to return the money.

As regards the other tenders, as soon as the bill receives royal assent, the management of the C.N.R. will allocate the contract to the lowest or best bidder.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, could the minister, without disclosing the exact amount of the tender, tell us the percentage of the total cost of the project represented by the work for which public tenders have been called? In this way, he will in no sense be disclosing the prices quoted by the lowest bidder.

I would therefore like to know what part of the job will be carried out by private contractors and what part will be allotted to railway employees.

I am asking this question, Mr. Chairman, because the minister knows as well as I do that the C.N.R. have been laying off quite a number of people in the past few years. I therefore think it would be in the interest of the C.N.R. management to have their work carried out by their own people, using their own equipment.

In fact, the C.N.R. now has the necessary equipment, the engineers, superintendents and foremen required for this project.

Perhaps this has been said at the meetings of the committee that I missed on account of illness, but I believe the minister should discuss the matter with the authorities of the C.N.R. which has employees with 20, 25 and even 30 years of experience.

Besides, I know of no more qualified workers than those we call the B and B employees in my district, those who are engaged in the construction of buildings and bridges.

It is proposed to lay a railway line. I do not think private enterprise has employees that are as qualified for this type of work as those I refer to. So I repeat my question and I ask the minister to tell us what percentage of the work will be carried out by private enterprise, so we can deduct the part to be done by railway employees.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, but I do not have those percentages. The only reference I can give is to the schedule printed at the end of the bill.

As far as my hon. friend's argument is concerned, one must admit it might be double-edged. I think it would be unfortunate if the government, every time a project is carried out, hired only its own employees. Employees of contractors also have many problems, especially at certain periods of the year.

One should then seek a happy medium. As far as percentages are concerned, I could not now say what part will be given to railway employees and what part will not.

All I can say is that the schedule mentions an amount of $140,000. Since the proposed line is 60 miles long, the amount is a little over 8 million dollars.

Mr. Bourget: Could the minister at least tell us what are the works for which tenders have been called? Those are obviously public documents, since specifications have been provided to contractors.

Consequently, could the minister tell us what are the various works for which tenders have been called? Are they bridges, culverts, rail laying, brush clearing, etc.? In short, what are the works for which tenders have been called?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, those details have been given to the committee at yesterday's meeting. Mention was made then of the number of bridges to be built on that line, as well as the kind of lines we intended to build. Experts in this field provided exact details.

As for the specifications, I have not seen them personally.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the minister a simple question. If the estimated cost of the railway is $8,400,000, could the minister, in order to give us an idea of the lowest tender, tell us, not the exact amount, but whether it comes near $4,000,000 or $5,000,000, in order that we may determine what portion of the work is to be performed by private enterprise. That is my point, because I do not agree with the minister's view that in employing railway workers for these projects, we would be getting into a vicious circle. He is aware that each year from 4,000 to 5,000 railway employees are laid off and find themselves in a difficult position because, having been engaged in a particular kind of work for 20, 25 and even 30 years, it is hard for them to find other employment.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that I am wandering a little from the principle of the bill, so I shall not belabour the point. However I ask the minister—who is new in this office and whose position is understandable—to urge the Canadian National Railways to keep their employees and not dismiss them after 25 years of service. That is my point. The Canadian National Railways have all the equipment, they have the architects, the engineers, the foremen, and all the experienced men needed to perform the work. I therefore ask the minister to show sympathy to these men and to urge the Canadian National Railways to give them a chance to work. I am sure the minister sympathizes like I do with these people. There is still time to show it.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, I only wish to express my thanks to the minister for the information he gave me and which I accept. As I have said, I wanted to tell the house that when tenders are called, these should be made available to the members of the house and to the public. Such a procedure would prevent the people at large from wondering whether there is something wrong or not. I wanted to mention that point because, as the minister said, certain deposits have been returned by the C.N.R., after the closing date for the receipt of tenders, exactly on account of this attitude, that is without divulging the names of the lowest tenderers. Some business magazines take a close interest in contract matters. I have in mind the Daily Commercial News for February 3, which published certain data about the contract for the building of the railway line. No exact amounts were quoted, but names were given. Such information may have been obtained by inference. I wonder if we could not be told these amounts in due time, once the work has been carried out. I refer to both the amount of the lowest tender and the amount of each tender.

Mr. English: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the Minister whether the C.N.R. is following a different procedure, in building the line into Mattagami, from the procedure used in the past for the construction of the line between Chibougamau and St. Felicien? I am under the impression that the present policy of the C.N.R. is the same as was always followed in the past.

Mr. Bourget: Should one always follow the same policy, make no improvements, no progress, no changes?

Mr. Balcer: I think, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. member for Levis has raised a storm in a teacup. The C.N.R. authorities have always sought to protect their employees first. There is no doubt about that. In a project such as this, certain jobs have to be done by contractors, and they have to go outside to get the work done.

As to the question put to me by the hon. member for Chapleau, I would not want him to feel we have adopted a different policy from the one which was followed in the past, because things were always done this way. What appeared in the Daily Commercial News and other similar periodicals is merely speculation such as anyone can indulge in before the contracts are allocated.

Mr. Chevrier: The minister has not answered the question that I put to him a moment ago and which was quite simple, namely what portion of the work will be done by Canadian National employees and what portion by way of tenders. That is my question. Before the minister answers, however, I would like to say a word on the subject just mentioned by the hon. member for Chapleau. I do not quite agree with his suggestion that tenders should be made public at this time, I mean now, because parliament has not yet approved the bill. If tenders were made public before the bill was passed, I think it would be wrong.

However, there is a lot of sense in what the hon. member is asking, that is that the house should at least know those people to whom deposits were returned. That of course would not reveal the name of the lowest bidder, or of the successful bidder, but in any case we would have an idea of the contractors that were eliminated.

Now, I come back to the two questions that were asked. First, what portion of the work will be performed by the C.N.R. and what portion by private enterprise? Second, why should the minister be unable to give us, not the names of the bidders—I realize full well that he cannot give us that information—but the names of those to whom deposits were returned?

Mr. Balcer: Honestly, Mr. Chairman, the questions raised in the house today should have been asked in the railways, canals and telegraph lines committee when the experts in that field were present. Hon. members could have asked then what portion of the contract would be performed by the railway workers themselves and what portion by a contractor. As far as I am concerned, I cannot give any information concerning those ratios.

As for the second question, well, I think it does not sound serious either. I can see no reason and no benefit in giving, before the contract is awarded the names of the bidders to whom we have returned their deposits because their tenders were too high. I cannot see how they can pretend to serve the public interest by asking such information.

That could only result in a little more speculation. That would urge the subcontractors to exert all kinds of pressure on the two or three general contractors still in the running.

Honestly, I think the C.N.R. management acts very wisely in keeping that information secret until the contract itself is awarded.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Chairman, if we read carefully clause 2 under discussion, we realize that it is not clearly decided that the C.N.R. will have these works performed through tenders or through contracts awarded to contractors. In fact, clause 2 says this:

> The Company shall adopt the principle of competitive bids or tenders is respect of the construction of the railway line in so far as the Company decides not to perform such work or any part thereof with its own forces, but the Company is not bound to accept the lowest for any bid or tender made or obtained nor precluded from negotiating for better prices or terms.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think the minister should be expected to answer that question because it often happens that a public body or corporation calls for tenders for the purpose of carrying out some work on its own account. In many cases, it is only to get an estimate of the cost of such work, and no company is in any way bound by the calling of tenders to carry out the work, either on its own or by way of contracts.

I happen to be the mayor of a municipality, and before getting a job done, I often want to know how much it will cost. I therefore call for tenders, and if I feel that the municipality can do the work at less cost than the prices quoted in the bids, I simply have the work performed by the municipality. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is useless to ask the Minister of Transport whether the Canadian National Railways will proceed by public tender. Even though tenders have been called, the company is in no way bound. In fact, under section 2 of this bill, the company may reserve the right "in so far as it decides not to perform such work or any part thereof with its own forces", not to consider the tenders made and to perform the work itself at a better price.

Such an attitude would, in my opinion, meet the purport of section 2 of this bill, and I am under the impression that neither the minister nor the company is in a position to decide whether such work will be performed by way of contracts awarded to private enterprise or whether the company itself will carry it out.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Speaker, may I reply to my hon. friend from Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin). I know that very often, municipalities call for tenders and then decide they can do the job at less cost.

I feel however—and I think the minister will not deny this—that if the C.N.R. have called for bids on a certain portion of the work, it is because the company actually intended to have that part of the work performed by the lowest bidder.

This is the point I wish to make. Could the minister tell us what portion of the work will be performed by the C.N.R. and what portion will be carried out by private enterprise?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I have just received more specific details with regard to the part of the work to be performed through contracts. I am informed that tenders have been called for tree felling and ground levelling. The other work, will be performed by C.N.R. employees.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, could the minister tell me whether the construction of the bridge piers, for instance—as I understand bridges will have to be constructed on that railway—will be made by what we usually call the B & B team of the Canadian National Railway? Will the steel structure be laid also by the same team or if others tenders will be invited a little later?

That is why I was asking those percentages. Being an engineer, I am perhaps in a better position to understand. That is why I was asking about percentages, in order to know what part, approximately, will be done by the Canadian National Railways employees, and what part will be done by private enterprise.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, not being an engineer, I am not in a good position to reply to that question by giving accurate percentages.

As for the bridges, my information is to the effect that they will be built by the railway employees. I say that tentatively, because I shall have to check again; but I believe that the contracts already granted are in connection with grading.

Mr. Bourget: Clearing and grading.

Mr. Balcer: Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the questions we have asked, the minister told us that the Canadian National Railway itself would cut the trees and level the ground, and that the rest of the work would be carried out by—

Mr. Bourget: No, it is the other way around.

Mr. Chevrier: I understand the Canadian National Railways will carry out all the work, except the cutting of trees and grading, which will be carried out under contracts by contractors.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I say that tentatively, as it is the information I have at present. That is a question which should have been directed to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, when all that information was available.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, if we were given the percentages we would know where we stand.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 3— Maximum expenditure.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, with regard to section 3, concerning the maximum expenditure, what would happen if the amount per mile were exceeded? For instance, it is stipulated in the schedule that the average cost per mile must not exceed $140,000. So what would happen if that amount were exceeded?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, section 3 specifically provides that if the actual amount exceeds the estimate, the governor in council's approval will be required.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, no. I understand that under that section provision is made to exceed 15 per cent of the estimates; so, the governor in council is not involved before that. What I want to know is this: I understand the Canadian National Railways is entitled to spend 15 per cent more than the estimates but if, by any chance, the amount should exceed that percentage, what would happen?

Mr. Balcer: What is meant here is that the bill specifically provides for an expense of $140,000 per mile. Now there will be, in addition to that, 15 per cent for contingencies.

So, for any amount exceeding $140,000, in addition to the 15 per cent for contingencies we would have to get the governor in council's approval.

Mr. Bourget: So you will not have to ask the house to pass another bill.

(Text):

Clause agreed to.

On clause 4—Issue of securities.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: With regard to section 4, which is subject to section 5, I should like to discuss them together, because one is subject to the other or depends on the other. Section 5 says that if the Canadian National Railways Company is in need of money, it may obtain it through a temporary loan guaranteed by a promissory note to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming). Now, as regards section 4, when the line is completed, if the company does not want to borrow money from the Minister of Finance, it may issue obligations, bonds or other securities for that purpose.

So I would ask the following question: What will the company do? Will it proceed, (a) under section 5, or (b) under section 4? If it proceeds under section 4, how will it go about getting money on the market? Will it issue a series of obligations to cover the amount of the expenditure, that is to say $8,400,000, plus the 15 per cent provided for? Who will look after that, and what will be the rate of interest?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, the question is one which strictly concerns the C.N.R. management. They are given certain powers under the present act. How are they going to use them? I believe that they are going to use them in accordance with the act which we are passing today. As far as the terms and provisions of the act are concerned it is up to the C.N.R. management to comply with them which no doubt they will do in the best interest of the railway.

Mr. Chevrier: I believe, Mr. Chairman, that we should be given more information. For instance, what rate of interest will be charged to the C.N.R. by the Minister of Finance? It seems to me that the house is entitled to have that information. Second, if the C.N.R. issues bonds, what rate will it pay?

Mr. Balcer: Concerning the amount of money the C.N.R. may borrow from the Minister of Finance, the rate of interest will be subject to the terms and conditions laid down by the governor in council. Therefore, the rate will have to be set by the governor in council every time the C.N.R. seeks a loan from the Minister of Finance. If that is not done, then it will be the responsibility of the C.N.R. management to decide on the interest rate, and I am not in a position to answer that now.

Mr. Chevrier: No, I do not think the decision rests with the C.N.R. authorities; I believe the decision rests with the Minister of Finance, because he is the one who decides at what rate of interest he will lend money to the C.N.R. The Minister of Finance lends money regularly, and it seems to me that we ought to know what the interest rate will be.

Mr. Balcer: Well, clause 4—since both clauses are being studied together—provides:

> —amounts . . . not exceeding in the aggregate, exclusive of any securities issued to secure loans made under section 5, the sum of nine million six hundred and sixty thousand dollars, bearing such rates of interest and subject to such other terms and conditions as the governor in council may approve.

The amounts mentioned in section 4 are those which the C.N.R. may borrow through bonds, debentures or other securities which the railway company may issue directly. Well, it is said quite clearly there that the interest rate is subject to the terms and conditions which the governor in council may approve. As to loans granted by the Minister of Finance and approved by the Minister of Transport, they are guaranteed under the terms and conditions and bear the interest rate which the governor in council may approve. Then again, it is the same thing as in the other case, because what applies to bonds and other securities which may be issued directly by the C.N.R., applies equally to temporary loans granted by the Minister of Finance, in short, in both cases the interest rate is laid down by the governor in council.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not wish to press the point or to embarrass the minister. I shall let the matter stand. I simply wish to say this: The Minister of Finance determines the interest rate to be paid by the C.N.R.

I remember what it was at the time when I was sitting on the other side of the house—but I know the rate changes because the Minister of Finance announces it from time to time. So I feel that the minister should tell us what amount the C.N.R. is required to pay to the Minister of Finance under clause 5.

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Mr. Benidickson: I think this is an important question, Mr. Chairman, because at times the government itself finds the money for the Canadian National Railways. In the budget presented last March 31 there was some claim that the government had not asked the money market for certain funds because the Canadian National Railways itself had gone into the bond market for new money. Surely the Minister of Transport is familiar with the requirements in this respect. This matter came into the debate on Monday and Tuesday of this week.

In October, I believe, last year the Canadian National Railways decided, itself, to launch an appeal for funds. In consequence of that decision the Bank of Canada, as has been presented to the House of Commons in debate in the last couple of days, enlarged the money supply in order to make this appeal possible. Then a matter of a month after the Bank of Canada came into the picture to facilitate this operation, Canadian National Railways bonds of October, 1960, depreciated by 8 points or 9 points on 100. With respect to the capital requirements related to this bill I think the minister should indicate to what extent the government is taking the responsibility. I think he should also indicate to what extent the Canadian National Railways is obligated to assume any deficits in its operating statements. I think this information is necessary and I should like to hear from the minister.

Mr. Balcer: What we are discussing now is the bill in its present form. The situation as far as the interest rate is concerned is quite clear. It is subject to the conditions set forth by the governor in council once the bill is approved. But as to what the railroad will do, as to whether it will go on the market or whether it will borrow from the Minister of Finance, this is a matter for decision by the management of the C.N.R. I am afraid that I cannot give any further answer.

The Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Clause agreed to.

Clause 5 agreed to.

On clause 6—Guarantee.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: With regard to the guarantee mentioned in this section, could the minister tell us what procedure is followed by the governor in council in giving this authorization and what form this guarantee would take?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I think that the bill is clear on that point. Now, the terms and the conditions of this guarantee will have to be determined in due course. I cannot for the moment give this information.

Mr. Chevrier: But there must be a procedure for all financial transactions between the government and the Canadian National Railways as there was in the past. I merely want to know whether there has been any change. I want to know what form the guarantee would take that the government will give on Canada bonds when the management of the Canadian National will ask the public to lend it over $9 million for the construction of this line, or $50 million, including the $9 million and other amounts that will be needed. What form of guarantee will the government offer for those bonds?

And here is the second question I want to put to the minister—well, I will keep to the one I just asked for the moment.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, the form of the guarantee. In the first place, the bill is in exactly the same form as before. It contains no changes, the formula is the same and it is exactly the same system, basically.

From the point of view of interests, conditions, forms of the guarantee and all that, the system of financing is exactly the same as my predecessors used for the construction of railway branch lines. There is no difference on that point.

Mr. Chevrier: I am prepared to believe that such is the case, but no matter how much I kept repeating this to the colleagues of the Minister of Transport when I was sitting on the other side of the house, no one would accept it. I had to give the proper information and explain to the house sitting in committee what were the forms of guarantee, and each time I said that the bill was similar to others, the discussion was on again and I had to explain again. I was able to give the explanations; sometimes it took hours but I explained what the forms of guarantee were because if I had not done so, especially with the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Macdonnell)—and I am happy to see him here today—who would question me continuously on the financial clauses and to say "It is not sufficient to say that the bill is similar to the one which was passed by the house in the past, the house is entitled to know what are the details in the present case."

That is why I asked the minister which form this guarantee would take. For example, would the guarantee be part of the bond issue of the C.N.R. or would it be a separate document as one might think under clause 6?

(Text):

The Chairman: Shall clause 6 carry?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 7—Deposit of proceed of sale, etc., of securities.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: As for clause 7, the marginal note reads as follows:

Deposit of proceeds of sale, etc, of securities. The proceeds of any sale, pledge, or other disposition of any guaranteed securities shall in the first instance be paid into the consolidated revenue fund—

Well, the sale of what? Is it the sale of bonds or other securities? That is the first thing I would like to know.

Second, what is the meaning of —proceeds of pledge—

I think the house should know how the proceeds of pledge can —be paid into the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Balcer: I understand, Mr. Chairman—as a matter of fact, the hon. member knows quite well what is the answer to his question—

Mr. Chevrier: No, I do not.

Mr. Balcer: In this instance, priority is given to payments to be made into the consolidated revenue fund whenever there are proceeds from a sale or an issue, etc. If the Canadian National Railways owe money to the Minister of Finance, the payments must be made before anything else. That is how I understand it, but naturally, I am no financial expert.

Mr. Chevrier: What is the meaning of proceeds of pledge?

Mr. Balcer: According to the English text —I prefer not to give a definition, for fear of misinforming the house; I would rather not at the moment.

Mr. Chevrier: Without giving a definition, the minister should be able to tell us what he means by "proceeds of pledge", as mentioned in clause 7 of the bill.

(Text):

The Chairman: Shall clause 7 carry?

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: No, Mr. Speaker. The house is entitled to an explanation of the words, first: "proceeds of pledge" mentioned in that clause.

(Text):

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I have consulted a great expert on these matters. He started to give me all the necessary explanation, but I am afraid we are delaying the committee. This is a very important bill and I would refer the hon. member for Laurier to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. If he has some free time after this sitting of the committee he may consult the minister and get all the information he requires on these financial matters and definitions.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: I am not prepared to consult the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Monteith) because he is not an expert outside of his own department, and even there I have my doubts; but I shall give him the benefit of the doubt anyway. If the Minister of National Health and Welfare wants to tell us what is meant by the "proceeds of the pledge", I have no objection to accept his definition but it does seem to me that we should be told what is meant by this expression and also in what way the "proceeds of the pledge" shall in the first instance be paid into the consolidated revenue fund, because it is important for the committee to know the meaning and the definition of that expression.

Mr. English: Mr. Chairman, I think that "the proceeds of any sale, pledge—" simply means that a guarantee is being given.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, I am not prepared to accept the definition given by the hon. member for Gaspe—

Mr. English: Could we have yours?

Mr. Chevrier: —because he is not the sponsor of this bill; it is the Minister of Transport who introduced this bill to the house. Unless the Minister of Transport will accept the definition given by the hon. member for Gaspe; that would be different. But as far as I am concerned, I am not ready to accept it as an explanation of the expression "the proceeds of a pledge".

Mr. English: Mr. Chairman, I have expressed my opinion about the definition of "a pledge" and if I am wrong, I would certainly be pleased to hear the hon. member for Laurier give us his definition.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not the sponsor of the bill.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a suggestion. Let a page boy bring a Larousse dictionary to the hon. member for Laurier; he would certainly find the definition there.

An hon. Member: It is the minister who should have a dictionary.

(Text):

The Chairman: Shall clause 7 carry?

Mr. Benidickson: I think the minister might enlighten the committee as to the result of operations in connection with this line. Would the surplus, the profit or the loss, be incorporated entirely within the normal financial statement of the Canadian National Railways or does the minister propose to come again to the House of Commons in connection with this investment and ask, as he does in the estimates for 1961-62, page 76, item 417, for the house itself to approve payments to the C.N.R. for deficits certified by the auditors of the company arising in certain circumstances?

Will this particular line of the railway be incorporated in the C.N.R. operating expenses for future years or will an item be required such as those enumerated in vote 417 of the estimates in connection with which, if a deficit arises, a parliamentary vote is required.

Mr. Balcer: To the best of my knowledge it would be the first alternative.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: No, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to insist unduly, but I think the minister should now be in a position to give us at least an explanation or a broad definition of what is meant by that phrase, and in what way the "proceeds of the pledge" will be paid into the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Balcer: The definition I have before me is: "The proceeds of the pledge is the amount obtained through the borrowing, against a transfer of security, chattels or real estate".

Mr. Chairman, such "proceeds of any pledge, sale or other disposition of securities" must be deposited to the credit of the Receiver General of Canada in repayment of the temporary loan or loans granted by the government.

(Text):

The Chairman: Shall clause 7 carry?

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: I would refer the minister to subsection (2) of clause 7.

> The board of directors of the company may authorize application to be made to the Minister of Transport for the release of any part of the proceeds deposited pursuant to subsection (1) to the company.

Could the minister explain that second subsection?

Mr. Balcer: I do not think many explanations are necessary here. The subsection is clear; one only has to read it carefully.

> The board of directors of the company may authorize application to be made to the Minister of Transport for the release of any part of the proceeds deposited pursuant to subsection (1) to the company.

Which provides that:

> The proceeds of any sale, pledge, or other disposition of any guaranteed securities shall in the first instance be paid into the consolidated revenue fund or shall be deposited to the credit of the Minister of Finance in trust for the company, in one or more banks designated by him.

Therefore, it is the Minister of Transport who authorizes the withdrawal of that money and its use for the purpose of building the railway.

Mr. Chevrier: But what I would like the minister to clarify is how the proceeds of the sale or pledge of securities from the C.N.R. are to be deposited? It is said in subsection (2) that the application to the minister must originate from the board of directors of the company, or the C.N.R.

This matter does not seem clear to me. This is why I ask the minister to explain.

Mr. Balcer: I did not fully understand the question. Would the hon. member state it again?

Mr. Chevrier: I do not understand the exact meaning of subsection (2), and here is why: I am wondering how the proceeds of the sale or pledge which will be paid into the consolidated revenue fund can be returned or requested from the minister, by the board of directors of the company, pursuant to subsection (2), for the purpose of meeting expenditures in respect of the construction of the railway line.

Because under the terms of the clause we just discussed, the C.N.R. may borrow either on notes, or through bond issues. This is the alternative.

I cannot see any need for subclause (2) of clause 7. Could the minister offer any explanation on that matter?

Mr. Balcer: Subclause (2) provides that:

The Minister of Transport may approve the applications, and upon the request of the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Finance may pay the amount or amounts of such applications or part thereof accordingly.

I think the very wording of the subclause answers the member's question.

(Text):

The Chairman: Clause 7 carried?

Clause agreed to.

Clause 8 agreed to.

On the schedule.

(Translation):

Mr. Chevrier: I have a remark to make with regard to the schedule, Mr. Chairman. Could the minister tell us if there is a marked difference between the estimated cost of the Canadian National and the actual cost?

Of course, he would be unable to answer that question with regard to the present line, because it has not yet been built.

However, the transport division must have faced that situation on some previous occasion. I cannot remember it right now, but, was the estimated cost of the Canadian National in the past not exceeded by the actual cost?

Mr. Balcer: My hon. friend asked that question in the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, the other day, and I have made some inquiries since.

With regard to the Beattyville-Chibougamau-St. Felicien line, which was, I think, built in 1954, the estimate for the 294 miles of track was $35 million, which meant an average cost per mile of $119,184.

The expenses actually incurred amounted to $34,788,219, or an average cost of $118,126 per mile.

We realize therefore that the margin between expenses and estimates was very slight. Nowadays, building costs are higher. That is why the basic estimate of $119,000, made in 1954, when the Beattyville-Chibougamau-St. Felicien line was built, has now increased to $140,000 for the same distance, that is, one mile.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. Chevrier: It is obvious that formerly, the actual cost exceeded the cost estimated by the Canadian National Railways and I suppose we may safely conclude that it will be again the case for the construction of this line.

Mr. Balcer: When I looked over the statistics for the last ten years, year by year, I realized that the estimated cost always went up, which means that it was regularly higher than for the preceding period.

Mr. Chevrier: The building costs may, of course, increase, but that is not my point.

What I would like to know is this: Considering past experience, and also the known figures, can the estimate of the Canadian National Railways which now amounts to $140,000 per mile, be exceeded once the railway line is built, let us say in 1962?

Mr. Balcer: No. I do not quite get the question. The hon. member asks whether the estimated cost arrived at by the C.N.R. or rather whether the C.N.R. will have to prepare new estimates as the months go by. Well, it will not be so. Since the amount is set for the whole contract, the amount will not be greater for the last month than for the first months of the contract.

Mr. Asselin: It is hypothetical question.

Mr. Chevrier: Perhaps my question was not quite clear, but it was surely not hypothetical as the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) seems to suggest.

The figures given by the minister indicate that the estimated cost of the C.N.R. with regard to the railway lines that have been built, those from Chibougamau to St. Felicien, from Beattyville to Chibougamau, and from Barraute to Kiask Falls, has been exceeded in each case. It is a fact.

I am not referring to the increase of construction cost. That is a quite different matter. My point is that the C.N.R. said, according to its estimate—and I refer to the cost per mile only—that it would be $140,000 a mile. Now, I ask whether, in view of the experience with the Canadian National, you think that the $140,000 estimate will be exceeded once the line is completed.

Mr. Balcer: I do not think so. I have confidence in the estimates made by the C.N.R. But the economic position of the country has of course, to be considered. However, I believe the company's officials who placed the cost at $140,000 per mile have based their calculation on normal cost figures for that kind of project. Anyway, it is not up to me, as a mere layman, to say whether the $140,000 figure is or is not a good estimate.

Mr. Chevrier: Now, on January 16 the minister tabled in this house document number 149 which fully explains the expenditures on the building of three railways, those from St. Felicien to Lac Cache, from Beattyville to Lac Cache, and from Hillsport to Manitowadge Lake. There is a detailed account of the amounts spent annexed to that document and on page 1 of the annex there is an expenditure of about $8,400,000 plus 15 per cent, which would make a total of $9,600,000 or so, but I do not remember it too well. Could the minister tell us what percentage of this sum, for instance, would have been spent for land expropriation, engineering work, clearing, grading, bridge building, telephone and telegraph lines, stations, etc? Have the C.N.R. officials prepared a similar statement to that which was tabled in the house?

Mr. Balcer: Frankly, Mr. Chairman, we had a meeting with C.N.R. experts who came here to provide every possible information. One was an engineer, the other was in charge of development and all those people were entirely at the disposal of the committee. I cannot understand why the member for Laurier did not ask his questions at that time. I am certainly not in a position to give him any figures. He asked for certain technical details, strictly pertaining to civil engineering, and technical details about building, and I cannot give them to him. If he had advised me of his intention two or three days ago, I could have done so. But, now—

I sincerely wonder why he insists and why he did not seek that information when the C.N.R. experts were available to the committee.

Mr. Chevrier: Well, Mr. Chairman, I have asked the committee several questions, and I have received some information. On other points, I did not get the answer I was seeking. But that is not the point. Now, we are no longer in the railway committee but in committee of the whole, and it is the minister's responsibility to supply the required information.

The minister can certainly not say that I took advantage of him today. I asked him some questions which seemed simple to me. I asked questions that came to my mind without having prepared them beforehand. I have here the document which the minister tabled himself in this house, and he seemed surprised when I asked him how the nine and odd million dollars provided for that line would be distributed in respect of expropriation, engineering work, and so on. That was certainly not a question which should surprise him, as it was based on a document which he tabled in the house which he has seen and probably studied. I am asking a quite natural question. If he is unable to give me the required information, very well.

Mr. Balcer: I cannot give him that information, Mr. Chairman.

Schedule carried.

Title carried.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time? Now, by leave?

Mr. Chevrier: Next sitting of the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There has been no amendment to the bill. Third reading could proceed today.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, it has been the custom in the past to allow third reading to go over to another day because during the evening or the next day considerations may arise which might place hon. members in the position of wanting to participate in the debate on third reading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is up to the government whether or not it wishes to wait until tomorrow. If the minister wishes to move third reading today he may do so.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) would revise his attitude? This is a project of great importance and many people are waiting for this large project to proceed.

Many man hours will be involved in this project; it is a big project and it will bring employment to a great many Canadians. I do not know why we should delay it.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, in view of the attitude taken, not by the Minister of Transport but by many of his colleagues, the government, in my opinion, does not deserve to get unanimous consent in so far as we are concerned, but—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have indicated to the hon. member for Laurier that since the committee has not amended the bill unanimous consent of the house is not required.

Mr. Chevrier: Will the Deputy Speaker allow me to speak to the point raised by the minister?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: The point I wanted to make was this, and perhaps I made it too bluntly. In view of the attitude taken by certain hon. members toward the member for Laurier in connection with this legislation I do not think that the minister should have made the request he did. But, as I said, sir, I will disregard any of the statements made concerning myself, and in view of what the Minister of Transport said, I am quite sure that those of us who sit on this side of the house are perfectly happy to let the bill receive third reading, notwithstanding the fact that under normal circumstances it should stand over. Since the minister wishes the bill to receive third reading, and in view of the request he has made, we are perfectly satisfied to let it go forward.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I would like to add only one word in answer to the minister.

(Text):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If the hon. member wishes to speak on third reading he will have his opportunity in a moment.

Mr. Balcer moved the third reading of the bill.

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I intend to support the bill. The Minister of Transport just made a statement which seems to indicate that we are responsible for the delay in the passing of this bill. If it is not what the minister meant to say, I offer him my apologies, and I withdraw what I said. However, I understood the minister to say that we had delayed the passing of this bill and therefore delayed creating work for a number of workers.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I asked very politely the hon. member for Laurier whether he would reconsider his decision because this is a potential work-making project.

(Text):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must inform the minister that since he moved the third reading of the bill he is not entitled to speak because having moved it he is considered as having spoken. Is the house ready for the question?

(Translation):

Mr. Bourget: Well, Mr. Chairman, it may be implied, I think, from his remarks that the opposition was being blamed for having delayed the passing of this bill because the minister said: "Well, the purpose of this measure was to provide employment for a certain number of workers". We agree on that, but we are not ready to agree, for instance, that it is the fault of the opposition if this measure was not introduced before today or last week.

Repeatedly, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) if there were certain measures which could provide jobs for the workers and, if so, to introduce them in this house as soon as possible.

Consequently, I do not believe—

Mr. Tremblay: Vote, that is the best way to provide jobs.

An hon. Member: Keep quiet.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, out of respect for you, I shall not answer the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Tremblay) who interrupts again. I shall not answer because I wish to contribute—

Mr. Tremblay: Because you cannot.

Mr. Bourget: —because I want to contribute to the upholding of the proprieties of this house.

Once again, I say that we cannot be blamed under the circumstances, but we may come to the conclusion, by inference, that the minister blamed the opposition for having delayed the passing of this measure which would have provided jobs for workers. Well, the minister knows very well—

An hon. Member: That is what you are doing now.

Mr. Valade: You may not have done so, but you are doing it now.

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, for Heaven's sake, would it be possible for us to be given peace in this house? Could we have it once and for all?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I remind all hon. members that it is against the rules to interrupt the hon. member who has the floor without his permission.

Mr. Bourget: Well, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I have almost completed my remarks and I have only one more minute to go, but I shall allow the hon. member to put his question.

Mr. Valade: Does the hon. member intend to speak until six o'clock?

Mr. Bourget: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to speak until six o'clock, but even if I did intend to do so, may I tell the hon. member that I would not need his permission to do it.

Mr. Chairman, the reason why I rose is because I do not want the opposition to be deemed responsible for having delayed the passing of a measure which could provide jobs for part of the 700,000 unemployed which we now have in this country.

That is the reason for my intervention.

An hon. Member: That is another question.

Mr. Tremblay: Then vote.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Chairman, I feel that the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget) understood very badly.

Mr. Bourget: Perhaps.

Mr. Asselin: —the request for co-operation that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) made to the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier).

The minister simply asked the hon. member for Laurier to reconsider his decision and to have the motion providing for third reading of Bill C-69 passed today. He gave his reasons for doing so. He did not accuse the opposition. On the contrary, it is the hon. member for Levis who accused himself, saying it had been claimed that the opposition was delaying the adoption of this legislation.

The hon. minister simply said this: If the motion providing for third reading were adopted today we could benefit from the fact that this project might be started as soon as possible and thus provide work for thousands of persons. That was what the Minister of Transport meant to say.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to challenge an allegation made by the hon. member for Laurier. He stated in this house that, if the bill was not passed it was because of the attitude of some hon. members on the government side.

Let me tell the hon. member for Laurier that we all co-operated in order to have this bill passed as soon as possible, and that every member in this house, like the hon. member for Laurier himself, has done everything they could to that end.

(Text):

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the acting house leader what the business will be for tomorrow and the rest of the week?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, as I think I intimated last night, tomorrow we will proceed with the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, including all branches of that department such as the film board, the archives, the national library, everything for which the minister is responsible in addition to her regular departmental duties. Following the conclusion of the passing of those estimates we will take up the estimates of the Department of Agriculture and proceed with agriculture again on Friday, and when we have concluded those I will announce on Friday what we shall follow with.

Mr. Chevrier: I take it that there is no intention of going back to matters of transport which were announced last night?

Mr. Nowlan: That is, there is no intention of going back to those on Thursday or Friday.

Mr. Chevrier: Estimates for both days?

Mr. Nowlan: Estimates for both days.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INDIAN DENTAL SERVICES

Question No. 69—Mr. Howard:

1. Since July 1, 1960, has any Indian child other than one attending the Hazelton amalgamated school in British Columbia had any teeth extracted by a dentist or dentists within the government service?

2. If so, what is for each such child, the name, the village from which each came, the date and number of extractions, and the name of the dentist?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Yes.

2. See list attached.

The names of the patients are not shown as this would involve giving information which is normally considered as confidential between the practitioner and his patient.

As many of the children for whom dental services were carried out are in residential schools, the department is unable to indicate in each instance the village from which each child came. However, clinic locations are shown on the attached list.

While this inquiry relates to dental extractions only, it should be noted that more than 1,350 single tooth restorations as well as a considerable number of prosthodontic appliances were provided to Indian children in British Columbia during this same period.

HAZELTON SCHOOL, B.C.—INDIAN DENTAL SERVICES

Question No. 70—Mr. Howard:

1. Since July 1, 1960, has any Indian child attending the Hazelton amalgamated school in British Columbia had any teeth extracted by a dentist or dentists within the government service?

2. If so, what is, for each such child, the name, the village from which each came, the date and number of extractions, and the name of the dentist?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Yes.

2. See list attached.

The names of the patients are not shown as this would involve giving information which is normally considered as confidential between the practitioner and his patient.

As many of the children for whom dental services were carried out are in residential schools, the department is unable to indicate in each instance the village from which each child came. However clinic locations are shown on the attached list.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 23, 1961

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

STANDING ORDERS

Fourth report of standing committee on standing orders—Miss Aitken.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MEMBERS OF U.S. CONGRESS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): From time immemorial it has been a convention in accordance with British parliamentary tradition that no one is permitted within the precincts of the House of Commons except the members, the reason being, as Your Honour knows, that in the days of Charles I and prior thereto, if there was anyone of distinction or power present in the gallery the freedom of members of parliament to speak was, to say the least, circumscribed if not denied. That tradition survives today in the fiction that there is no one present at any time in the galleries of the House of Commons.

Nevertheless, these fears of intimidation on this occasion, however distinguished the delegation, do not prevent me—and I hope the house will not deny me—the privilege and opportunity of welcoming the members of the United States Senate and House of Representatives who are in this city meeting with the parliamentary representatives of Canada. The agenda is an important one dealing with such matters as foreign affairs, defence, and economic problems which activate each of our nations. The relationship between our countries, long one of the closest in the world, is represented officially by such organizations as the international joint commission and the permanent joint board on defence and, on the cabinet level by the committee on joint defence and the committee on trade and economic questions.

These members of the United States congress who are with us today bring to us the strength, the vigour and the knowledge of the co-operation which prevails between our two countries. I for one, many years ago, advocated in this chamber the need of bringing together representatives of the United States and Canada, and I was joined in that opinion by the hon. member for Laurier. In the intervening years those meetings were not achieved, except through the parliamentary group of the commonwealth parliamentary association, until 1958. Since then there have been these exchanges between parliamentarians of our countries which mean so much to each of us, joined together not only geographically but in the mind and soul for the maintenance and preservation of freedom.

Our interdependence cannot be achieved without mutual awareness. There will be problems. There have been problems. We solve them through the instrumentality of discussion and agreement. The removal of misunderstandings is a continuing task with us. We do this in the broad and harmonious perspective of understanding. Unofficial though this organization is, it has already contributed much to understanding between our countries and the solution of problems which have risen, and I know that that function will continue in the years ahead.

It is therefore my privilege as Prime Minister, through you, sir, to extend to Senator Aiken as chairman of the visiting group of senators and congressmen the thanks of the Canadian parliament for their visit with us, coupled with the warmest welcome that we can accord to those with whom we are united in sentiment and dedication.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it gives me very special pleasure to join with the Prime Minister on behalf of the official opposition in the welcome he has extended to our guests from the United States. To adapt that expression of the seventeenth century which the Prime Minister mentioned as one inspiring intimidation, we might say in this case "We spy friends".

This joint committee of the United States congress and the Canadian parliament is, as the Prime Minister has said, playing an increasingly useful part in examining into and strengthening the good relations between our two countries, helping to keep the neighbourhood fences in good repair, a result that does not just happen of itself.

In Canada, relations with our neighbour have been a major concern of ours ever since we became a nation, and indeed before that. The problems arising out of those relations are nothing new; yet we have always, at least in this century, managed to settle our difficulties in a manner which reflects the genuine friendship and underlying good will between our two peoples. Perhaps it is well to recall this at this time in order to keep problems in perspective and to remind ourselves of the deeper and more important things that bind us together in a dangerous world.

Senator Aiken, who is a member of the United States delegation and whom we all know, respect and admire, said the other day that the United States and Canada cannot differ too much because our interests are "hopelessly interlocked". They are also, I believe, "hopefully" interlocked. Co-operation between us in defence, in trade and in everything else is essential. There will be honest differences among us in Canada as to the best methods for achieving co-operation in a changing world, but there will be no differences between us as to the necessity for such co-operation and the necessity for working together in an effort to promote progress, peace and security in the world today with justice and freedom for all.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join with the Prime Minister and Leader of the Opposition in welcoming to our galleries the distinguished representatives from the United States Senate and House of Representatives. In the past I have had the good fortune of being a member of the Canadian part of this joint interparliamentary group, and I can say that in those initial discussions I believe we had a frank exchange of views. I believe that the establishment of this group can and should lead to a better understanding between our nations.

It would not be frank on my part, Mr. Speaker, if I did not say that in view of the C.C.F.-New Party there are major outstanding differences between our two nations with regard to trade, economic, defence and other problems; but we are convinced that with clear and frank discussion, with an honest effort to settle those differences, we can make progress in building democracy, freedom and prosperity.

Our rules are not the same—we find that out every day—as the rules governing debate in the United States congress. Under our rules we are not able to give the same kind of extended welcome that some of us have received on the floor of the United States Senate; none the less, under our procedures where we have party representation, we can say to our distinguished friends that they receive today a unanimous welcome from the Canadian House of Commons.

[Mr. Pearson.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF VISIT OF PRIME MINISTER OF GREECE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I hope the spirit of unanimity will continue after I have finished. Now, sir, I wish to announce that the Prime Minister of Greece, Mr. Karamanlis, has accepted an invitation to pay an official visit to Ottawa. His visit is planned for April 13 and 14; the details of that visit are to be announced later on.

We welcome him as a representative of one of our NATO allies and of a people who have made a great contribution to Canada in the years in which they have been among our citizens.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE WITH PREMIERS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, on a number of occasions last week, asked for the tabling of the exchange of correspondence with the premiers of the provinces in connection with the dominion-provincial conference being held today and tomorrow. With the leave of the house I will table this correspondence now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the Prime Minister ask to have the letters printed in Hansard, as is customary?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman suggests that they be printed as an appendix to Hansard. If that is agreeable to the house, it is acceptable.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent to the printing of the letters just tabled as an appendix to today's Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For correspondence referred to above, see appendix.]

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN DELEGATION TO RESUMED GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish now to announce the composition of the Canadian delegation to the resumed session of the United Nations general assembly on March 7. The Canadian delegation will be led, of course, by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Green). The vice-chairman will be the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt). The remaining delegates and alternate delegates will be drawn entirely from the group who served during the first half of the general assembly session last fall. Arrangements are being made for parliamentary observers to attend. While I am unable at the moment to give their names, they will be drawn, as usual, two from this side of the house and one from each of the opposition parties.

The delegation will be slightly smaller than for a regular session because the assembly disposed of a major portion of its business before it recessed at Christmas. Three of the assembly's main committees have already completed their work, and the delegation to the resumed session is to deal with the work of the remaining four committees.

The delegation will in fact consist of Senator Blois from the other place, the hon. member for Calgary South, the hon. member for Charlevoix and, from the Department of External Affairs, General Burns, the government's disarmament adviser, Mr. C. S. A. Ritchie, the Canadian permanent representative to the United Nations, and Mr. Morley Scott.

The Canadian government for its part hopes that the renewed debates may serve to improve the international atmosphere and that progress will be made particularly on the problem of disarmament.

TRADE

O.E.C.D.—APPROVAL OF CONVENTION AND RELATED AGREEMENTS

On the order: Government notices of motions:

February 21—The Prime Minister—the following proposed resolution:—

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the convention on the organization for economic co-operation and development, supplementary protocol No. 1 to the convention on the organization for economic co-operation and development, supplementary protocol No. 2 to the convention on the organization for economic co-operation and development, and the memorandum of understanding on the application of article XV of the convention on the organization for economic co-operation and development, all of which were signed in Paris on December 14, 1960; and that this house do approve the above agreements.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

UNITED NATIONS

CONGO—INQUIRY AS TO REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of a report to the effect that the Secretary General of the United Nations has called on members of the United Nations to strengthen the emergency force in the Congo. My question is whether the government has taken any action in regard to this request of the secretary general.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the request has not been made just in the terms cited by the Leader of the Opposition. The force requirements under the new security council resolution of February 21 are only now being assessed by those responsible for the United Nations operation in the Congo, who are in the best position to judge which countries can make the most useful contribution. As I indicated to the house on February 21, no request for additional forces has so far been made to Canada. The government is, of course, prepared to examine any requests put before it.

CONGO—REQUEST FOR PROTEST AGAINST POLITICAL MURDERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the minister care to comment on the reported continuation of political murders in the Congo? Will Canada speak out strongly against this revolting blood bath?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt whatever about the revulsion felt in Canada generally, by all members of this house and also, I suggest, in every country of the world, at the continuing reports of assassinations for political purposes in the Congo. It is precisely to put an end to this and other acts of bloodshed in the Congo that the latest security council resolution gives greater authority for the United Nations to intervene in the Congolese situation.

It is too early yet to have arrived at a precise assessment or interpretation of all the implications of the security council resolution of February 21. Various measures calling for procedures of implementation have been included in the resolution. These measures are broad in scope, and it has not yet been established in what way the United Nations will carry them out. Various Congolese leaders are known to have taken strong exception to one or more of the measures envisaged in the resolution.

However, as the most important purpose of the security council resolution is to prevent civil war in the Congo, it can be assumed that the United Nations representatives will rely primarily on consultation, persuasion and conciliation to bring about co-operation among the various factions and with the United Nations forces on the ground. This would appear to offer the best hope of pacification and stabilization in the Congo.

I suggest that at this date we should not be concentrating our attention on this question of the possible use of force. The resolution states clearly that force would be used only if necessary and in the last resort. I am sure that we can rely on the good judgment of the Irish commander of the U.N. forces in the Congo, General McKeown, to act responsibly.

I would point out again that as the purpose of the United Nations is to prevent civil war, its immediate recourse must surely be to the arts of peace, namely patient negotiation and conciliation.

FINANCE

NEWSPAPER ARTICLE SUGGESTING RESIGNATION OF MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance based upon the following statement which appeared in this morning's Globe and Mail:

> It is pitiful to see a minister of the crown so clearly contradicting himself, for the sake of political expediency. Yet we can stand the humiliation of a minister. What is not tolerable is that a responsible minister, for the sake of political expediency, should perpetuate and spread, within the country and abroad—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member rose to ask for information, it seems to me that he is making something of political accusation. If there is a question of administrative responsibility arising out of the report, will the hon. member please ask it.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, Mr. Speaker, there is a definite question. In view of these special harmonious circumstances today I would have thought you would have relaxed the rule somewhat, but be that as it may, I ask the Minister of Finance this question in view of the statement which calls upon him for his resignation if he is not able to handle Mr. Coyne. My question is this. What course does the minister intend to take in view of the statement contained in the Globe and Mail?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the minister intends to pursue a course in better keeping with the rules of the house than that being followed by the hon. member for Laurier. The statement he read was not an item in the newspaper at all; it was an extract from an editorial.

[Mr. Green.]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The question was not asked for information, but I suppose the reading from an editorial based on a particular point of view has sufficiently served the purposes of the hon. member for Laurier. He has, however, succeeded in breaking the rules in several respects already. I do not intend to follow his example in that regard.

Mr. Pickersgill: You are doing it already.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): So far as the Minister of Finance is concerned, Mr. Speaker, his course of action will be governed by his duty and not by dictation from elsewhere.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—IMPLEMENTATION OF DOUBLE DEPRECIATION PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, before my dear friend the Minister of Finance departs from his present ministerial responsibilities may I direct to him a question based on a request made by the president of the Canadian Construction Association, namely that in view of the unemployment situation in Canada the federal government implement its double depreciation program. My question based on this statement is this. Is the minister now in a position to tell the house when we may expect this program to be implemented, if it is to be at all effective in the present unemployment situation?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the statement to which the hon. member refers. Apparently he has earlier access to statements directed to me than I myself have. I may say that the provisions for double depreciation in the case of industries introducing new methods or making new products in Canada were approved some time ago.

UNEMPLOYMENT—INQUIRY AS TO AREAS OF CHRONIC UNEMPLOYMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the statement the minister made the other day, that without question there was an emergency over unemployment, I should like to ask him whether he does not think it is urgent to designate the areas of chronic unemployment and take the necessary steps.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did not say there was an emergency over unemployment at all. On the contrary, I referred to statements made by the official opposition to that effect and expressed more than mild surprise that if the opposition truly held that opinion they had chosen to forgo the opportunity that was presented to them on Monday to have a debate on the subject.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am rising on a question of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member is rising on a question of privilege I will hear him. I was just about to say that I thought no supplementary question would be admissible in this debate, which has already gone too far.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to ask a supplementary question. The minister has called my word into question and I should like to draw his attention to Hansard of February 21, which I looked at just before coming into the house, where at page 2253 the minister is reported as having said:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin my remarks this afternoon by quoting with full approval the opening remarks made by the hon. member for Kootenay West—

The first sentence of the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay West began:

> Without any question, that is an emergency.

He was referring to unemployment.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member has missed the point entirely. He has missed the bus, as usual. He was not in the house when these remarks were made.

Mr. Pickersgill: I just rely on the words.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He was not in the house, so as a Johnny-come-lately he has been reading Hansard. I quoted with approval the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay West when he very properly and severely castigated the official opposition for having talked endlessly about the existence of a national emergency in relation to unemployment, and when they had an opportunity to have a debate on that subject they turned tail and did not choose to do so; they chose another subject, a stale subject, a repetition of a debate we had two years ago.

[Later:]

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if it is a fact that the responsibility for the scheduling of depressed areas in order to take advantage of the double depreciation allowances announced by the Minister of Finance is to be the responsibility of the hon. gentleman's department? In that event, will the minister say when we may expect this policy to be implemented?

Hon. George H. Hees (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I think the Minister of Finance has made the whole situation very clear to the opposition, and I have nothing to add to what he has said.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is the responsibility to be that of the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Mr. Hees: No. The designation of those areas has always been a responsibility of the Department of Labour.

[Later:]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In view of the importance of this matter in relation to the present extent of unemployment in Canada, may I ask the Minister of Labour whether it is a fact that the administration of the depressed area program in connection with the double depreciation allowance policy of the government is to be carried out by his department, or whether it is his understanding that it is to be administered by the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the designation of the labour surplus areas is to be made by the governor in council. I have nothing further to add to what has already been given in answer to questions directed to the Prime Minister some few days ago.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Are we to take from the minister's reply that the members of the cabinet either do not know who is responsible for this program or—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is now expressing an argumentative line of reasoning.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With great respect, Mr. Speaker, surely we are entitled to ask which minister and which department will be responsible for the administration of this very important program. I have asked the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and now the Minister of Labour, and we have not yet received a definite answer. If the Minister of Labour says that the government's policy will be announced in due course, that is all right, but surely we are entitled to know whether that is the reply or whether the government does know who is going to be responsible.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. As the hon. member for Essex East suggested, he has a right to ask his questions, and he has asked them; but I would not think he had the right to go down the front benches putting his questions in order to find out by the sweep and search method. That, however, is not the reason I intervened. The hon. member's question was of an argumentative nature.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I should like to set the record straight. I referred to the answer the Prime Minister gave some few days ago to a question asked, I believe, by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. At that time the Prime Minister said—and I am now attempting to paraphrase—that when the policy was decided upon it would be announced in the normal way. The hon. member for Essex East did not happen to be in the house on that occasion, and I regret this, but if he will read Hansard he will find his answer.

GALT, ONT.—REPORTED INTIMIDATION OF UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. A. Cathers (York North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister any comment to make on a charge reported in the Globe and Mail yesterday as emanating from Mr. Sefton of district 6, united steelworkers of America, to the effect that unemployed workers were being intimidated by the unemployment insurance office in Galt?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I noted with interest the press release issued by Mr. Larry Sefton, director district 6, united steel workers of America, charging intimidation of unemployed workers by officials of the national employment service at Galt. This indeed is a reflection upon the national employment service, the hon. member for Waterloo South, and myself since, I, too was mentioned in this press release. This reference also appeared in the newspaper article to which the hon. member referred.

In essence, Mr. Sefton takes exception to the fact that persons who had forwarded printed cards to the hon. member for Waterloo South were called into the office of the unemployment insurance commission and interviewed with a view to finding employment for them. He also charges that they were reprimanded for sending cards to the hon. member.

My office has been in touch with Mr. Fitzgibbon, the manager of the Galt office, and we are assured that no person interviewed was reprimanded or criticized in any way for having signed the cards in question. What happened was that on receipt of a number of cards which were forwarded in line with what Mr. Sefton describes as—and I quote the report in part—"a postcard campaign for jobs" and which cards read, in part:

—please let me know where to apply. I want work, not unemployment insurance or welfare payments—

—the hon. member for Waterloo South spoke to me and I advised him to forward the cards to the local unemployment insurance commission office and ask the officials of the commission in that office to look into the possibility of finding employment for the signers of the cards. This is normal procedure and something that is done in every case when any individual writes indicating that he or she is without employment.

The necessary follow-up to such procedure is, of course, to bring the individual in for interview with a view to determining his employability and his availability for work. I might say in this connection that while the national placement service are operating in an efficient manner, they have not yet reached the point where they are in a position to refer people to jobs without interviewing them.

The interviews in question, conducted in accordance with the accepted practices for such interviews and in a genuine spirit of attempting to find work for the persons involved, turned up some interesting facts. Perhaps the facts that became evident might account for Mr. Sefton's objection to having such persons interviewed at all.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the minister proceeds, I invite him to consider whether it is necessary to elaborate on what he has already said. After all, the minister is supposed to be giving a concise answer to a concise question, and I consider that he has had an opportunity to give a very full answer in explanation.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): On the point of order you raised, Mr. Speaker, I do not object to the detailed statement the minister is now making, but on such a controversial question it would be more appropriate for him to have made that statement on motions so that it could be commented upon by representatives of all political parties, instead of making it in a way which means that very little comment can be made except by questions.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think it would be still more appropriate for this explanation to be made in committee of supply on the estimates of the Department of Labour so that the hon. member for York

North would not be given privileges not given to other hon. members of the house to discuss this very important question; and I suggest that this be done tomorrow.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Unless the Minister of Labour feels there is some fact essential to the answer which has not yet been given, I suggest that he consider the question as answered.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Assiniboia stated that this was a controversial subject. In fact it is not. There has been a serious charge made against the national employment service office, the hon. member for Waterloo South and myself.

Mr. Speaker: I was not sure when the minister continued whether he was making a matter of privilege out of it or simply answering the question asked by the hon. member for York North. He has amply answered the question raised by the hon. member for York North, and unless there is a matter of privilege or something new I suggest that that should be the end of it.

Mr. William Anderson (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege affecting a great many hon. members of this house in addition to myself as the member of parliament referred to in this report. I think the charge laid against the unemployment insurance office in Galt and against me personally is a downright disgrace. I acted, as usual, in good faith and I am certainly not reported correctly. Not only did I forward the cards and ask that the manager grant the individuals involved an interview, but I personally wrote each individual; but that is not mentioned in the report.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Waterloo South would indicate what charge was made against him and by whom as a basis for raising a question of his privileges as a member of the house. Just a discussion of the background of the matter seems to me not to be warranted unless there was some specific charge against the hon. member's character or conduct made by some specific person, and unless the hon. member can indicate who it was and what the charge was on which he bases his question of privilege.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the charge was laid against me personally and against the office in Galt by Mr. Larry Sefton, district 6, united steel workers of America, the Toronto office. I bring this to the attention of the house only as a result of the minister's statement.

Mr. Speaker: I did not understand the hon. member to state what the charge was that might reflect on his conduct as a member.

Mr. Anderson: The charge was that of subtle intimidation on the part of myself and the manager of the unemployment insurance office in Galt, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I may be mistaken but as I understood the statement the intimidation was alleged to have come from the unemployment insurance office and not from the hon. member. I think there is no question of privilege there and that the hon. member's explanation would be sufficient to deal with the matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Did I hear some hon. member who wishes to say something further or the point?

Mr. Argue: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the serious charges that have been made by certain trade union officials against certain employees of the national employment service, would the minister consider referring the whole question to the industrial relations committee so that the people making the charges and those against whom charges have been made could appear before the committee to give evidence, thus enabling us to get to the root of this matter and see whether or not intimidation has been resorted to?

Mr. Anderson: None of the people involved even answered the letters I sent out to them.

Mr. Starr: I made a complete investigation of the whole matter, and I find that there is no necessity for a referral of this matter to the industrial relations committee because those charges are unfounded. They have been made for political reasons and without any foundation whatever, and those who happen to be unemployed—they are using them to further their political activity. Certain cards are being signed by persons other than those whose names appear on them.

Mr. Argue: That is a rotten statement.

Mr. Anderson: Withdraw.

Mr. Ricard: Did you organize them? It looks as though you organized them.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member should not make such a statement from his seat. If he wishes to take issue—

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: I was not asking the hon. member to withdraw, but if he wishes to take issue with the minister he should find the appropriate time and way to do so.

Mr. Anderson: The leader of the C.C.F. should withdraw. I have proof of what I say right here on my desk.

Mr. Argue: I am not withdrawing.

HOUSING

N.H.A.—INQUIRY AS TO LOANS ON EXISTING BUILDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he say whether the government intends at this session to introduce legislation that would permit N.H.A. approved lending on existing housing?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): As the hon. member knows, Mr. Speaker, declarations of policy are not made in answer to questions at this time.

THE CENSUS

FORT WILLIAM—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister inform the house whether a census commissioner has been appointed for the electoral district of Fort William? If so, will he indicate the name of the person?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the minister answers the question, may I remind the hon. member for Fort William that there are 265 districts, each with four census commissioners. If each member were allowed a question, it would be impossible to carry on any public business for the rest of the week. I suggest that he put the question on the order paper or address it privately to the minister.

Mr. Badanai: May I say that I sent the minister notice of my intention to ask this question. I therefore believe he has the answer.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the minister is not able to answer questions which are not admitted.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REPORTED INCREASE IN PARCEL POST RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Azellus Denis (St. Denis): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. First, however, may I be permitted to congratulate him on his birthday and wish him every success and a long and happy life, outside the house, of course. My question is this. Can the minister advise the house whether the rates of postage on parcels have been increased since the opening of this session? If so, to what extent and on what authority?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for the expression of his regard. I too hope that I shall be around here for a long time, inside as well as outside, and that he will be in that position which he occupies to ask me questions.

It was announced several months ago that there would be an increase in the parcel post rates effective March 1, under the normal authority which applies. Those rates are not established by parliament.

Mr. Denis: I have a supplementary question. Can the minister explain why the house was not informed of this matter in view of the fact that we have been sitting since November last?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking about information that is equally accessible to all members of the house.

NATIONAL REVENUE

REPORTED INTENTION TO CHARGE SALES TAX ON BRAKE LININGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue based upon a telegram I just received from a Mr. Richard of United Auto Parts of St. Laurent and Montreal in agreement with the Canadian automotive wholesalers manufacturing association. I should like to ask the minister whether he is aware of the fact that, effective March 1, all factories doing lining of brakeshoes will have to obtain a manufacturer's sales tax licence and charge that tax to garage owners, the direct effect of which will be to penalize small enterprise and to increase unjustly the price charged to and paid by the general consumer?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to deal in detail with that question, as I should wish to study it in Hansard. However, it is not correct that all manufacturers are obliged to do this. The sales tax applies only to those over the $3,000 limit. I have been told by the department that many protests have been received from other manufacturers to the effect that they have been compelled to pay sales tax while some manufacturers of brakeshoes who have been manufacturing to the extent of up to a quarter of a million dollars have not been paying sales tax. Therefore regulations have been promulgated by the department in order to attempt to correct the situation. I will review the situation again and be in a position to give the hon. member a more definitive and definite answer after I have read the terms of this question.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

LACOMBE, ALTA.—REPORTED INTENTION TO MOVE STATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the other day the hon. member for Wetaskiwin asked me a question with respect to the transfer of a broadcasting station in his constituency. At the time I told him that I should be obliged to make inquiries and would answer in due course.

I am advised by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that this matter has been the subject of representations from many hon. members of the house. I myself have received representations from the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith) as well as from the hon. member for Wetaskiwin, although with a slightly different point of view. Nevertheless they have all been greatly interested in this matter.

The corporation advise me that there are definite plans for improvement of radio coverage for all of the province of Alberta. The corporation has explored the possibility of establishing one or more new stations. A number of areas have been studied, but to date no firm decision has been reached as to the location of new areas or the moving of old transmitters to other areas.

Mr. J. S. Speakman (Wetaskiwin): In view of the economic impact on these small areas, would the minister assure the house that the consideration will be very serious indeed?

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the economic impact, and that is one factor that will have to be taken into consideration by the corporation. But of course the paramount consideration is the provision to the largest possible number of people with the services of the finest broadcasting system in the world, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

NEWSPAPER REPORTS ON HOUSE PROCEEDINGS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges J. Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Minister of National Revenue a question and I was surprised to find my question answered by the press in today's papers.

I hope the minister will also be able to answer the question and tell us whether he is right or whether we must accept the interpretation of the press.

Also, on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Following up that question I asked an additional one, which may be found at page 2306 of Hansard of February 22:

If this permission is not allowed—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member allow the minister to answer before he enters into another matter.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have not had an opportunity of reading the newspapers today to the same extent as the hon. member because I have been busy on other matters. I will certainly read the reports to which he has referred and give an answer in due course.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member rising to ask a further question, or on a question of privilege?

Mr. Valade: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, following that supplementary question, yesterday, I asked another one which appears at page 2306 of Hansard of February 22:

If this permission is not allowed, would the minister take disciplinary action against those responsible?

On page 52 of La Presse of today, I am reported as saying:

Would the minister also have punitive sanctions imposed?

This is obviously different and quite contrary to my question.

(Text):

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member's question of yesterday was not allowed, but perhaps the press pays no attention to the rulings of the Chair.

TELEVISING OF BIG FOUR FOOTBALL GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Perhaps I might take this opportunity to refer to a question asked by the hon. member for Fort William about the purchase by private broadcasting stations of rights to televise football games. This may bring a certain amount of sorrow to people who have always been urging the development of private stations at the expense of the C.B.C. Briefly, however, one private station has paid for the right to telecast football games and the C.B.C. has not been informed of their plans, as, of course, it has no right to be informed of them. It would appear to me at the moment as though these games are going to be sent out by one or more of the private stations.

The C.B.C. is giving very careful attention to this matter and, naturally, is concerned to see that the Canadian public gets the best possible showing of these athletic contests, subject to financial interests and competition.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CANADA-U.S. INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED AIRPLANE EXCHANGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Defence Production as a result of the negotiations that took place in Washington between Canadian and American delegates and of the statement made by the Prime Minister. Could the minister inform us whether some progress has been made about the contract or swap deal relating to the CL-44 aircraft manufactured in Montreal and the American jet fighters? I should like to know also whether the minister is about to make a statement on this matter on behalf of the government?

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, we always welcome proposals from our American friends which are likely to assist our industry, whether it be the aviation industry, the shipbuilding industry or any other. We have received certain proposals that will be looked into and when this study is completed, we shall then report to those concerned.

COAL

CAPE BRETON—REQUEST FOR MEETING OF LABOUR, MANAGEMENT AND GOVERNMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister is now in a position to answer the question which I asked last Wednesday, whether any request for a coal conference has been made by the premier of Nova Scotia and whether any such conference is to be arranged.

[Mr. Nowlan.]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I have not the answer before me. I will provide the answer tomorrow.

BILL OF RIGHTS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—PROTECTION TO TRADE UNIONS IN SPENDING OF MONEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister inform the house whether the constitutional authority of the government or the principles and powers of the bill of rights will be used for the protection against infringement of the right of trade unions in British Columbia to spend their own money?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question seems to ask for an interpretation of the bill of rights and for action which, as I understand it, is in the provincial domain. If I am incorrect the hon. member will so advise me.

Mr. Winch: In the constitution there is overriding power of the federal government over all provincial legislation, including section 92.

Mr. Speaker: That may be a constitutional opinion which the hon. member is seeking at the wrong time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

BUDGET RESOLUTIONS—INQUIRY ON RESUMPTION OF DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in view of the anxiety of the Minister of Finance to discuss certain matters which he said were of tremendous importance to the house on the question of national emergency, namely the budget resolutions, may I ask the minister when he intends to bring those resolutions before the house. The minister has blamed the opposition on several occasions for not co-operating with the government in that respect. I ask him now when the government, either through him or the house leader, intends to bring these resolutions before the house.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Just as soon as there is some indication that we can expect even a minimum of co-operation from the official opposition—

Some hon. Members: Closure.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —and when we can expect that some little progress might be made. Four days have already been spent in debate on one very short budget resolution.

Mr. Pearson: A very important one.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is continually speaking from a seated position. In my remarks of last Tuesday there were 88 interruptions by the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) while seated.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister seems to have departed from the initial question of privilege. In fact it seems to me he has departed from the question as to the business of the house.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, this is now the fourth time—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I had not finished my comment—

Mr. Chevrier: Well, finish it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister did comment on the question raised about the order of the business of the house and he then departed from that subject. That was the reason I interrupted him. If he has further comment to make which is relevant, I shall of course give him the floor again.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was interrupted by the Leader of the Opposition making an interjection from a seated position. I was, on a point of order, taking objection to that repeated tactic on his part. I have indicated that four days have already been spent—

Mr. Chevrier: That is not so.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, are we to have any semblance of observance of the rules by the hon. member for Laurier?

Mr. Chevrier: If you sit down I will tell you.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Four days—may we have order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Chevrier: If you stick to the facts you will.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Four days of the time of the house have already been spent in committee of ways and means in discussion of one budget resolution—a short one—and it was quite evident as this proceeded that progress in this respect was being delayed by deliberate filibuster.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the minister again, but really the matter before the house is not debatable. There was an inquiry, and the hon. minister has answered it.

Mr. Chevrier: The Minister of Finance has made an inaccurate statement which reflects on the conduct of the opposition, and it is this; that four days were spent in the discussion of one small resolution. That statement is inaccurate and not in accordance with the fact. If the hon. gentleman will consult Hansard he will see that one of the days, namely Wednesday, was devoted to the extent of one hour only to the discussion of that resolution. That is what the minister calls one day.

I wish to ask this question. In view of the fact that the budget resolutions have not been discussed in this house for almost two weeks now, will the minister tell the house when we can expect a discussion on these resolutions?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, you allowed the hon. member for Laurier to make a statement which, I say, was a misstatement, before he asked his question, and in the exercise of the same privilege I say again that four days of the time of the house have been spent on this. On Wednesday last, to which the hon. member referred, all the time after the preliminary proceedings, including question time and the orders of the day, was devoted to this subject right up to adjournment at six o'clock. Last week I should have been only too happy to have had the opportunity—

Mr. Chevrier: Little Napoleon.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether you hear the insulting remarks of the hon. member for Laurier—perhaps you did not hear them, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the minister has an explanation to make about the calling of these resolutions I trust he will make it and that we shall not spend the time of the house debating the meaning of matters which are clearly set out in Hansard for both parties to read and interpret.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The government has attached much more urgency to the progress of the budget resolutions through the various stages of debate than has the opposition. This belated interest on the part of the opposition is welcome.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will call orders of the day if there is nothing more to be discussed than the subject of how the government's business should be ordered.

INDUSTRY

CANADIAN CAR, FORT WILLIAM—MAINTENANCE OF OPERATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question which stems from a statement made by Premier Frost in the Ontario legislature last Friday, when he said that he had interceded before and would intercede again with the federal authorities on the role of the federal government in protecting the employees of Canadian Car Company in Fort William against a closing of the plant by the Montreal management. Has the Prime Minister received recent representations from Premier Frost on this subject and, if so, could he give us the gist of his reply?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I will take the question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

BROADCASTING

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF REPORT ON TELEMETER SERVICE, ETC.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask the Minister of National Revenue a question of which I gave his parliamentary seceretary notice. Has the minister received a report of the committee composed of the various bodies officially interested in broadcasting—the B.B.G., C.B.C., C.A.B. and, I believe representatives of the Department of Transport—set up to consider the question of bringing telemeter services, wire hook-ups and things of that sort under the Broadcasting Act? If he has received such a report, would the minister consider having it referred to the committee on broadcasting for such action as they may wish to take?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I am afraid I was tied up this morning. I did not get notice of the question, but my recollection is that I have on my desk now a report from the chairman of the board of broadcast governors acting, I think, as chairman of the over-all committee, making certain recommendations or suggestions to me. I have not had time to study it and I am not certain of what is contained in the report, but I think there will be no objection to referring this matter to the committee for consideration and I will take that question under advisement at once. Unless there is some reason why I cannot do so, I will undertake this immediately.

WINNIPEG—PROTESTS RESPECTING LICENCE FOR STATION CKY-FM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Is the Minister of National Revenue now in a position to reply to the question I asked yesterday about representations concerning station CKY-FM in Winnipeg?

[Mr. Fisher.]

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Frankly, I have not yet had an opportunity to deal with it. I asked someone to brief me on the situation and get the material ready, but I have not had a chance to look at it. I probably shall not be able to deal with the matter until Monday or Tuesday of next week.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Rea in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

Indian affairs branch—
55. Administration, $792,099.

The Deputy Chairman: This item will be found on page 14 of the blue book, and the details on page 151. Shall item 55 carry?

Mr. Fisher: I want to ask the minister a couple of questions in connection with—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Will hon. members who are leaving the chamber please do their talking outside.

Mr. Pickersgill: This applies particularly to the government chief whip.

The Deputy Chairman: We cannot hear the hon. member who has the floor.

Mr. Fisher: Can the minister give me a report on how the Macdiarmid situation is going in so far as the house building project there is concerned, and the situation at the school at Macdiarmid? I will not say there is some confusion, but there is a rather unusual arrangement there where they have a public school with a Catholic priest as the head of it. It is a most unusual situation. It was working fairly well, but I understand there may be some shifts and changes, and I should like to know a bit more about it.

Mrs. Fairclough: I do not believe I can answer that in a few words. If the hon. member will permit me I will send him a full report.

Mr. Fisher: I appreciate that very much. Can the minister bring me up to date on where the department is going with its forestry policy? She will recall that I brought this up a number of times and expressed certain dissatisfaction with the subject of Indian lands not being brought under forest management. I should like to know what further steps have been taken and what effect the launching of the forestry department has had, if any, in bringing more assistance to bear in getting Indian lands forest managed.

Mrs. Fairclough: Of course the whole question is one of establishing proper working relationships with the provinces. In so far as the new forestry department is concerned, I am not in a position to answer for it. In reply, I would suggest that the hon. member might interrogate the minister of that department when his estimates are before the committee.

With reference to the timber operations at Lac Seul and Sioux Lookout agency, the superintendent of the Sioux Lookout Indian agency reports that the timber permit operations on the reserve were quite successful last season. The Indians operated in two separate areas. One group sold the wood produced to Mr. Bowman of Hudson, and the other group to Mr. Saran, Port Arthur. The pulpwood eventually was delivered to both Great Lakes Pulp and Paper Company and Abitibi Paper Company. The Indians have expressed satisfaction with both Mr. Bowman and Mr. Saran.

It had been proposed to put a portion of the timber on this reserve up for sale but the band has gone on record as opposing any sale. They plan to continue with permit operations on the same basis as last season.

Mr. Fisher: A very good development. As to some of the bands in the Nipigon lake area, particularly the Gull bay group and one group on the other side of lake Macdiarmid, I wonder whether any consideration is being given to negotiating with the province for some crown lands which those people could cut and sort of reserve. Their lands are too small, especially Macdiarmid, to be of any great use as a source of pulp. I bring this up because quite a strong effort is being made by the pulp and paper companies of northwestern Ontario to buy more of what one could call privately cut pulpwood rather than using wood off their own limits. Since much of this privately cut wood is obtained from, I might say, settlers, farmers and other people who have managed to obtain short term leases on crown lands, it seems to me there is no reason why the same leases could not be negotiated by the Indian affairs branch for some of the Indian groups. I wonder whether anything is in prospect in that field in the area.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I would have to look into the files to find out whether we have had any applications from groups of Indians for that type of operation. As the hon. member knows, the limits are under the jurisdiction of the provincial government. As I said at the outset, this depends to a very great extent on what arrangement can be made with the provincial government for limits. We will be glad to look into it. If we have had any applications from bands I must say they have not come to my attention. In any event, I know the department would have taken immediate steps to see what arrangements could be made with the province of Ontario.

Mr. Winch: Am I correct in interpreting what the minister has just said to mean that the control of all timber on Indian lands comes under the jurisdiction of the province?

Mrs. Fairclough: No.

Mr. Winch: If not, may I have a short explanation of where the division is as among the federal Department of Forestry, the provincial department of forestry and the Indian affairs branch? If the major control is in the hands of the minister, is any consideration being given to the further development of a plan of woods lot farming on the Indian lands, as far as timber is concerned?

Mrs. Fairclough: Any stands on Indian lands certainly belong to the Indians. What I was referring to was the point brought up by the hon. member for Port Arthur, whether or not we had made application to the province to lease limits on crown lands controlled by the province. I think that was his point, and that was the question I was answering. So far as stands on Indian lands are concerned, we do get assistance from the Department of Forestry with respect to surveys, but the ownership of these stands is certainly in the hands of the Indians.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few observations related to what was said the last time this item was before the committee. A suggestion was advanced by the hon. member for Vancouver East and supported by the hon. member for Skeena that a royal commission might well be appointed to deal with what the hon. member for Vancouver East said was a serious problem in connection with crown lands in British Columbia, in respect of which the Indians had advanced certain claims.

May I point out here that this subject matter was dealt with by the joint committee either last year or the year before. There was, of course, no final disposition, and there could not be; but the matter was mentioned and I think in one or two cases it was dealt with at considerable length in the briefs that were filed.

I submit with respect that when the joint committee considered the matter it became seized of jurisdiction, to some extent; and while I suppose its jurisdiction ceased when the committee lapsed at the end of the session I suggest with deference that this matter might well be pursued by the joint committee when it reconvenes in the not too distant future, I understand. The committee is able to deal with it adequately. If it should happen that the members of the committee discover, as a result of examination of the problem and of witnesses appearing in support of the views set out in the briefs, that something else should be done, I have no doubt that could be the subject matter of a recommendation. But my submission at this time is that surely this is one of the problems that should be dealt with by the committee inasmuch as it has already inquired into it. There is evidence already on record either in the proceedings of 1959 or of last year.

I believe it was the hon. member for Kootenay West who suggested that arrangements should be made so that the Indians would be represented in the House of Commons by a certain number of their race. I believe that matter was also discussed to some extent in the committee two years ago. I remember asking one of the witnesses a question and he took the position that it was not a good idea. He suggested that it might well lead to the sort of electoral cantonization that exists in Switzerland, and that if we were to try to arrange for representation in the house of all the various nationalities it might lead to difficulties.

On the other hand there is this point to consider. It may well be some years yet before there is likely to be representation by Indians in the house in keeping with the number of Indians who have now been granted the vote, and possibly the committee might consider this subject matter having in mind the situation in New Zealand. I do not suggest they should necessarily follow what is done there but certainly this is a point with which the committee might well deal.

There is one other aspect of the work of the committee to which I wish to refer. A suggestion was advanced by one member that an independent agency might be selected to digest the evidence given in previous sessions and give opinions thereon, and the minister quite properly pointed out that this was a matter for the committee to deal with. I should like to point out that a massive amount of evidence and a tremendous number of briefs have been introduced, and while I do not think the committee should surrender its authority to any independent agency to digest and give opinions as to the effect of the evidence, considerable assistance might be given if the department were willing to help in the preparation of a reasonably detailed index of the evidence already given to the committee. To go through the evidence and formulate opinions will be a formidable task. I recognize, of course, that this is a matter for the committee, but possibly the minister might give some consideration to this suggestion. Her departmental officials are acquainted with the briefs. They have had occasion to peruse them, have been present at all the meetings of the committee, and have rendered valuable assistance. A detailed index of the proceedings would certainly be of assistance to the committee.

I wish to make one other general observation and two particular observations. I am interested in many other matters but they can be suitably ventilated before the committee. May I say I was most gratified in examining the estimates of the minister to see what a substantial amount is being devoted to the education of the Indians. I think this was emphasized in the statement of the minister when she devoted at least half the time taken in presenting her statement to the question of education. I think this is most essential and important, because it is at that level that we are going to be able to do something. However, I might point out that if possible we should do even more than we are doing now, not only because of the humanitarian principles involved, not only because we have a duty to undo some of the neglect which has been the lot of the Indians in the past, a neglect which in recent years, I am happy to say, has certainly been dealt with more than adequately. Those are ample motives in themselves, but there is another reason I should like to mention which may be of some assistance to the minister when she is asking for those funds which are essential for the discharge of her responsibilities.

This country has a pre-eminent position among the small and middle size nations of the world today. One reason for that is undoubtedly that the ugly head of racial and colour bias and prejudice has not been observed in Canada. Unfortunately too many other leading countries in the western world are not in that position. In recent days there has been an appalling and atrocious series of riots involving bloodshed which have swept through the world and indicate the possibility of warfare on the basis of race and colour. In the face of this situation I think it is most important for us to remember that in part we occupy the position we do because of the regard which other nations of the world have for us in this respect. If anything, this should be an invitation to the minister to be even more zealous and indefatigable in dealing with this problem, and the same thing applies to her officials. The situation is one where time is not on our side; and in commending the attitude of the department I hope they will have that in mind and that their efforts will be increased even more.

I wish to mention one more point having to do particularly with the question of education in my own area. I have been in touch with the minister and her officials about the matter and have been adequately satisfied as to their appreciation of the problem, but I think I should put my views on record in a general way.

In the northern part of my constituency there are several thousand Indians who until recently lived in a nomadic state in which they engaged in trapping, hunting and fishing. Only in the last generation can it be said that they have come nearer to the settlements in the north such as Fort Vermilion, Harbay and Assumption. In pursuit of the desire to see that these Indians receive an adequate education, arrangements have been made from time to time to take students in the higher grades to Edmonton, Calgary and other larger centres. It is my belief that in some cases a period of transition should elapse before these Indian boys and girls are considered to be adequately equipped to absorb the white culture which is found in the larger centres. I feel that at least for one more generation many of these boys and girls might well fit into the pattern of integration in an area closer to their own homes, where I think the results to be achieved will be more apparent.

I was glad to hear the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River say the other day that he had finally been able to consummate his request for a dormitory and hostel in connection with a residential school. I am glad to move into the vacant room which he has just left. I would urge the department officials to give some consideration to a similar type of accommodation in the Fort Vermilion area. I have been in touch with them as I say, and I have had the satisfaction of receiving acknowledgment from them that they are aware of the problem. But may I say that I honestly and sincerely believe that it may yet be some time before these young boys and girls are adequately equipped to receive and benefit from the education they will otherwise be getting in places like Edmonton.

Mrs. Fairclough: I should like to thank the hon. member for Peace River and tell him that he has anticipated us just a bit. We have prepared a digest of the proceedings of the last two years, as well as an index, which will be made available to the members of the committee when it meets for the first time.

Mr. Stefanson: I have two or three inquiries I want to make on this item and I assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I will be brief. First, however, I want to express my appreciation to the minister for the cooperation I have received from her and her officials. Second, I want to express my appreciation to the minister for taking the time to visit Indian reservations across the country, including the Fisher river agency and the Norway House agency which are located in my constituency.

I believe that the minister is on the right track when she makes a point of visiting reservations to see for herself conditions that exist on various reservations throughout Canada. In addition, she has met many of our Indian people, chatted personally with them, and heard from them first hand about some of their problems. As a result of these visits she has endeared herself to these people and has gained firsthand knowledge of their problems. She is in a much better position to understand and to deal with this matter.

As I have a large Indian population in my constituency, I am very much interested in the department of Indian affairs and their policies. I have had the privilege of serving on the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Indian affairs for the past two years. Through having had this opportunity, I have been able to broaden my knowledge of the problems of the Indians as well as to get a good understanding of the work of the department of Indian affairs.

I want to make two or three inquiries. The first one is with regard to fishing on lake Winnipeg. Last year the regulations with regard to summer fishing were changed and certain areas of pickerel pockets were closed. I approve the stand the department took wherein they supplied the Indians with trap nets. This was more or less on an experimental basis. If this policy is to be continued this summer I should like the officials of the department to have a look at this matter again because the officials from the Manitoba department of game and fisheries have informed me that the nets were not of the right type. They are convinced that the right type of trap net will be successful on lake Winnipeg.

A second item about which I want to make inquiry is a project in which I am very much interested, namely the establishing of herds. This program has been carried out on the Peguis and Fisher river agencies whereby the band have been buying cattle and they have been receiving assistance from the department, either by grant or through loans, which has enabled them to get sizeable herds established faster. This I find a very interesting experiment. If this type of experiment will help to make the Indian self-supporting, it certainly deserves assistance from the department perhaps on an even larger scale than at present. I am pleased to note that this is being done. I am sure that the superintendent in this particular agency is extremely careful in choosing the people to whom these herds should go. He is extremely selective, I am sure, in choosing the type of people who like farming and who are likely to make a success of farming.

The third point I want to raise is the Grand Rapids development. I visited Grand Rapids in the fall and I was pleased to see many Indians working on this project. I talked to many of the contractors and they informed me that the Indians they had hired as tractor operators and truck drivers were very good workers. Also, on this particular project the province of Manitoba has been extremely co-operative. The hydro electric board have been giving preference to Indians. This is the result of the co-operation of the department of health and welfare and the department of labour in the province of Manitoba.

The final point I want to raise is with regard to the model home opened on the Peguis reserve last fall. This home was officially opened and put on display by Colonel Jones when he visited Fisher river agency. I was much impressed with the home and with the type of work that had been done. This house and the furniture were entirely built by the boys and girls of the Peguis school under supervision of their teachers. It showed what these children can carry out under good supervision. I should just like to read what is on this chart of the model home because I think it is well expressed. This is what it says:

Model home as built by the boys and girls of this school.

Then it goes on to say this:

Material costs for the basic structure are approximately $2,500. Furniture, wiring, plumbing etc., as shown on Chart No. 2 are extra.

The boys built the house and the girls made the decorations, drapes, curtains, etc.

We feel that the average Indian family can build a similar home for themselves.

If your circumstances are such that you are unable to finance the total cost yourself, but you are willing to put forth a maximum effort in labour and materials, the department would be happy to help you.

If this is your situation, and if your chief, council, and superintendent so recommend, the department is prepared to assist where necessary. This means that the department would be prepared to furnish all materials, except sand and gravel, for the house shown here. This would be the only assistance from the department and you would be expected to furnish labour and other materials.

Chart No. 2 shows conveniences that can be added to the basic house with costs of materials for these additional conveniences. You would have to pay all material costs and arrange for any labour for any conveniences you wished. The house is designed, however, that these can be added as your circumstances permit.

The more you are prepared to contribute through your own efforts, the better and more comfortable your home will be.

Your superintendent will be pleased to talk with you and your band council about this. The superintendent gets only so much housing money each year and if you and your superintendent can work together to reduce costs in every way possible, many more and much better houses can be built.

I appreciate the fact that these officials recommend and have demonstrated that a house of this type can be built. It does give encouragement to the Indian people to get out and work. The more work they can do themselves, the better homes they will have, and the government is quite willing to give them great assistance in building such homes.

I was impressed with the furniture in these homes. They had made chairs, the dining room table, sofa-beds, desks and double beds; they had bunk beds. So, most of the furniture had been made by these children.

I am wondering whether any progress has been made in putting this program into practice, or whether it is likely to be carried out. It may be said that one should make available central mortgage and housing facilities, but they are a long way from the present standard of many Indian homes. This type of house would certainly raise the standards of Indians and it is quite within the means of many of them. I should like to see this type of home construction put into effect.

In conclusion I wish to say that I was very pleased to see the emphasis which the minister placed on education in her report. I am sure that is the best method of raising the standard of living of the Indian people.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I should like to give the hon. member a little information which I have here. With reference to the use of trap nets, the officials of the department have been in consultation with officials of the government of Manitoba and also with the manufacturers of the nets. It is the opinion of these people that with a few adjustments the nets which were used will be suitable for use this year. Accordingly we think that probably that problem has been solved. We hope so.

With reference to livestock, I would report that the amount requested for livestock purchases for this coming fiscal year is $221,775. This compares with $83,650 provided in 1960-61, or an increase of $138,125. These funds will be used almost entirely for the purchase of cattle, including bulls, largely in western Canada.

This very sharp rise in the amount requested reflects the intensification of our efforts to encourage cattle raising by interested Indians who have an aptitude for this occupation. A large part of the funds will be spent for rotating herds to be lent to Indian individuals. Many Indians will finance cattle purchases through revolving fund loans and band loans, and in exceptional circumstances they will be provided with supplementary assistance from appropriations. The trend in recent years has been toward larger herds in the hands of carefully selected individuals, and this pattern will prevail in the coming year.

Mr. Fisher: The minister indicated earlier, in connection with forestry, that co-operation with the provincial authorities was necessary on forest surveys. There was a loan last year of $50,000 for forest surveys. I think it is $17,000 this year. I notice that three forestry officers for the department are provided in these estimates, which is an increase of one.

How much of the money, $50,000 last year and $17,000 this year, has gone to the provincial governments for services in connection with surveys, or has this survey money been spent by the minister's own forestry officers? If so, I would be rather staggered by that amount of money.

Mrs. Fairclough: I think the hon. member misunderstood me. I said that our own new Department of Forestry was undertaking surveys for us. The reason for the reduction from $50,000 to $17,000 is that the work which was formerly done for us by the provincial government of British Columbia and other outside agencies is now being done by our own staff. Consequently this expenditure was reduced considerably.

Mr. Fisher: Could the minister say, in general terms—let us say, in silviculture terms —what we got for that $50,000 expenditure on surveys. Were these just surveys to develop forestry maps of the areas, or did they extend further into survey plans for roads, logging possibilities and this type of thing?

Mrs. Fairclough: I have not the figures broken down completely, but most of this work was carried out in British Columbia. It was largely for the purpose of establishing just what was available in the respective areas.

Mr. Fisher: Has the minister any indication of what is going to be spent in Ontario? The minister gave statistics in the house previously on the number of square miles of forested areas on reserves in Ontario, and they were considerable.

This whole question of forestry and forest reserves has been opened up by the government, not only with the creation of the Department of Forestry but in all the plans announced by the Minister of Agriculture. I feel that forestry in all its aspects could be one of the most important means of livelihood for Indians in Ontario. Perhaps the minister could indicate how the policy has been directed to fit in with these other developments.

Mrs. Fairclough: While we are looking to see if we have the figures for Ontario for last year I might tell the hon. member that the $17,000 which is in the estimates this year comprises $10,000 for forest surveys and $7,000 for reforestation. This covers all provinces. I have not the figures broken down here.

Mr. Fisher: That is a very minor sum for reforestation. I would hope that in future that would go up. I can understand our not spending money now, in view of the legislation which is pending that may encourage other people to spend this money.

I wonder whether we are now going to have a forestry section within the branch; and if it is expanding, what plans are under way to see that at the technical level young Indians are being trained in the forestry field? We have a school of forestry for people at the technical level, the scaler or cruiser level, at the lakehead; there is another such school in New Brunswick and I believe there is at least one in British Columbia.

I wonder whether any young Indians are being trained in these schools to work in this field, or are they merely being used for axe-men, and that type of thing, in forestry planning?

Mrs. Fairclough: We have some Indians in training in fire fighting, but the staff engaged in forestry at the present time consists of two foresters and provision for a third. They are under the reserves and trust division of the department. I think it would be safe to say that as time goes on and as the work is developed we will certainly train Indians, if we can find Indians who are capable of doing the work which is required of them with the appropriate training.

Mr. Fisher: The reason I raise the point is that we notice that a great many Indians are taking courses in nursing and teaching, and they come back to work with their own people. Surely forestry would be one of the best fields for them.

I thank the minister for her answer and I should like to turn now to another topic. I have raised this topic on a number of occasions. I refer to the whole question of Indians having the vote and to the role being played by Indian agents. It will vary in certain parts of the country, but some Indian agents have a great deal of influence with the people with whom they are associated.

I gather from talking to the hon. member for Skeena and other members from British Columbia that Indians in British Columbia have a more independent outlook than some of those in northern Ontario. At least we were comparing judgments. This is not the question at issue, but I am concerned over the influences which will be brought to bear on Indians in remote areas at election time.

Let the minister try to imagine my constituency. It runs from Fort Severn on Hudson bay down almost to Moose Factory; it is a block almost one third of the size of all of Ontario, with Indians scattered all over the place. Now these Indians have a vote, and I think it is impossible for any politician or any political party to cover them in any way. Yet I know the returning officer, a man of great integrity and seriousness, is going to provide polls for these people wherever possible. My argument is that because it is almost impossible for political parties to influence these people the part played by the Indian agents who are in touch with them, in playing it straight and non-partisan, is very important. I pointed out to the minister that, previously, in the provincial elections when Indians had the vote at these distant places we have had such eccentricities as 200 votes going to one candidate and one, or zero, going to others—and this among a population which is almost illiterate in the main. This, naturally, cannot help but arouse suspicion in the minds, especially, of those parties who get one vote or none at all.

I should like to know whether there has been any memorandum sent to Indian agents in connection with the part they will play in advising or informing Indians of their right to vote at forthcoming federal elections and at the same time to warn the agents that they should play it strictly down the middle and non-partisan. I have no worries about the Indian affairs people in Ottawa being neutral. Perhaps they might be too neutral. But I am concerned that there should be neutrality shown by those who are out in the field. I wonder if the minister has considered sending out such a memorandum?

Mrs. Fairclough: I am sure I can vouch for the integrity of the employees of the department in that field. After all, they are civil servants and they recognize the rules under which they work. I do not for a moment doubt that. As in all other departments, if there is evidence at any time of partisan activity then, of course, there are means of taking care of that situation.

I come back to the subject of forestry. I had intended to say something about it when we got to the question of scholarships, but I will say it now. As the hon. member knows, we have a scholarship fund from which scholarships are awarded annually to students who qualify in authorized fields of endeavour. It is our intention this year to make scholarships available in the field of forestry.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words with regard to the Doncaster reserve, which has been set aside for the benefit of the Indian bands of Caughnawaga and Oka.

That reserve covers an area of 18,000 acres and extends into the ridings of Montcalm and Terrebonne. It is located in line with the parishes of Notre Dame de la Mercie and Ste Luce. A road has already been built which goes through the reserve to connect those two municipalities. Today, that road is in a very bad condition and the people of Notre Dame de la Mercie and of St. Donat have to make a detour of several miles to go to Ste Luce, in the riding of Terrebone, or vice versa.

The poor condition of that road hinders the tourist industry in those two municipalities, an industry which is of vital importance to them. At present, the citizens of Notre Dame de la Mercie and of St. Donat, in the constituency of Montcalm, as well as the people of other surrounding municipalities have to make a detour of several miles to communicate with the municipality of Ste. Luce. After having made some inquiries, I was recently advised that the provincial government of Quebec enjoyed the statutory power of expropriating the lands necessary for the establishment of public facilities, including roads. That statutory power may be exercised by the province with the consent of the governor in council, as provided under clause 35 of the Indian Act.

On a good many occasions I approached the department and I would ask the minister, if it is at all possible, to obtain from the government an authorization for rebuilding that road so that the development of the parish of Ste. Luce, in the riding of Terrebonne, and the parish of Notre Dame de la Mercie, in the constituency of Montcalm, should not be hindered.

I recently received a resolution from the municipal corporation of Notre Dame de la Mercie. It is dated February 17, 1961, and reads as follows:

> Excerpt of the minutes of the regular meeting held on Saturday this fourth day of February 1961, under the chairmanship of Mr. Albert Leguerrier, mayor, it was moved by Mr. Edmond Poudrier, seconded by Mr. Claude Boucher, and unanimously agreed to, that our member of parliament, Mr. Pigeon, be asked to approach the federal government to the effect of having the existing road between Notre Dame de la Mercie, Ste. Luce and Ste. Agathe reopened so that we may have access to Ste. Luce and Ste. Agathe.

Putting, as always, our trust in your co-operation, we remain,

The municipal council of Notre Dame de la Mercie.

And it is signed: Jacques Riopel, secretary.

As you know, a tourist development has been shaping up for the last few years in that district, including the parishes of Ste. Luce and Notre Dame de la Mercie. I cannot understand why the construction of a road across an Indian reserve in the north of Montreal is not authorized. To my mind, this situation is contrary to the public interest, because those municipalities are now unable to expand their tourist industry.

I know that Indians always frown upon the government deciding to proceed with any sort of construction project, as was illustrated when the St. Lawrence seaway was established. However, in my opinion the road , which is already in existence but in very bad shape, is not passable.

I am therefore asking, if possible, that the road be reconditioned, because I do not think it could prejudice the Indian reserves of Oka and Caughnawaga, more particularly as there is only one Indian living in Ste. Luce, where he acts as a reserve warden.

I am simply submitting the matter in the public interest. It seems to me we should not prejudice public interest in any part of this country just because the Indians are opposed to the reconditioning of an already existing roadway.

I know that in co-operation with the experts in her department the minister is considering all problems that are submitted to her, and I hope that this matter will be settled once for all, because the problem has been mentioned at least 20 times.

(Text):

Mrs. Fairclough: This is not a new problem by any means, as the hon. member knows. It has been a vexing one for some time because the Indians steadfastly refuse to relinquish the land for the purpose of making this road, and that is their right. The land belongs to them and unless they agree to relinquish it I cannot see what I can do, other than what I have done, namely to keep the hon. member informed.

If the people in the area who would like the use of this land for the purpose of having a road, would approach the Indians themselves in a proper way, they might be able to secure their co-operation but I am afraid that as far as the minister is concerned there is nothing that can be done.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I have a supplementary question for the minister.

What steps do other provincial governments take when they want to build a road through an Indian reserve?

I would very much like to know how they come to an agreement concerning the building of roads, which, after all, will promote the development of the province. I would be interested in getting information on that matter and more particularly on the methods followed by the provinces of Ontario and British Columbia.

(Text):

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, the procedure is precisely as I described it to the hon. member. It is a matter of negotiation between the province and the Indian band concerned.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I should like to get a clearer picture with respect to the supervisory and administrative power in relation to certain phases of Indian affairs. Who would make the decision with respect to a survey of timber reserves on Indian land? Who would decide whether or not the timber should be sold? Who makes decisions as to hunting and trapping rights on Indian lands? In a situation where the Indians cannot sell timber or hunt and trap and where the Indians are faced with hunger, who would initiate action and on what basis would the Indians be taken care of? I could illustrate my question by reading an article which appears in today's Ottawa Citizen:

Indian chief says Tories broke word.

A Manitoba Indian chief told an Indian-Metis conference Wednesday that a number of the 2,000 Indians on his island lake reserve have come to him to ask what they could eat this winter.

Chief Alfred McDougall, speaking in Cree through an interpreter, said the federal government has broken promise after promise.

The government, he charged, has refused to allow Indians to sell timber from their land and has watched without acting while the Indian's main source of livelihood—trapping and hunting—dwindled away.

Chief McDougall said he has been trying for three years to get the federal government to do something about the forest reserves on the Indian land.

This ties in with complaints we continuously hear. Who makes decisions with respect to the welfare of Indians and the utilization of resources on their reserves?

Mrs. Fairclough: In the first instance a request for action comes from the band council. It is not at all unusual that an individual on a reservation will have a difference of opinion with the council of his band. Sometimes we have formal resolutions from band councils and private letters from individuals which are completely at variance.

Mr. Winch: Who has the authority, the band or the chief?

Mrs. Fairclough: In the first place the band would probably pass a resolution which would then be forwarded to the department. Certain deliberations or investigations would take place, as the case might be, depending on the type of problem that is involved. It is the duty of the officials of the department to see that the Indians are properly taken care of and that their resources are preserved wherever possible.

In the case of forests, I think it would be our responsibility to see that they were not depleted to the point where there was no chance of reforestation or ensuring a continuing supply.

I could not answer such a broad condemnation on the basis of an article in the newspaper without having details. I shall be very glad to make available to the hon. member whatever information we have on the particular individual who has made the charges and with respect to conditions on his reservation. The hon. member read a pretty broad statement and like all broad statements it is a bit difficult to deal with it. Without trying to make a flat statement in reply to a flat accusation, I might say that the general charge is not true.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I have a question I should like to put to the minister, prompted by the questions asked by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. I remember some years ago there was a good deal of trouble about provincial roads which went through Indian reserves. I am not talking about proposed roads where there was not a right of way but of cases where rights of way already existed and there were roads of a sort.

My recollection is that the view that was taken at one time was that if this was a provincial highway the provincial government would have to make some contribution to it and the federal government would not simply build the highway through the reserve. I think that policy was somewhat relaxed in one or two cases.

I wonder if the minister could say what the general policy is now with respect to provincial highways that pass through Indian reserves. Who has the responsibility for their upkeep and what contribution does the federal government make? Could the minister say whether there are any outstanding problems in this field?

Mrs. Fairclough: Generally speaking, Mr. Chairman, if it is a provincial highway the responsibility lies with the province for its maintenance. As the hon. member knows there may be extenuating circumstances in certain areas where the road is not heavily travelled by the non-Indian community. As the hon. member knows, we have one area where the trans-Canada highway goes right through a reservation. In that instance I believe the land was purchased outright and of course the highway is the responsibility of the federal government.

The situation varies in different locations depending on the extent to which the road is valuable to the Indians on the reserve and the extent to which it is valuable to the non-Indians who seek to go through Indian lands to arrive at their destination.

At the present moment I cannot think of any particularly troublesome areas apart from the one enunciated by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, which has been a sore point for a long time. Other than that, I cannot recall any that are real problems at the moment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. lady bring me up to date on Pointe Bleue and the Indian reserve across the river from Three Rivers in Nicolet county, I think, although I am not sure of that. There was also a situation in Saskatchewan somewhere in the constituency of the Minister of Agriculture, about which I recall something. No doubt the officials will remember all of these very well.

Mrs. Fairclough: The hon. member is speaking of the road problems only?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, in those three places.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, so far as we know, the problems in both cases have been solved.

Mr. Pickersgill: There were three.

Mrs. Fairclough: In Saskatchewan, we have an agreement with the province on what is known as the grid road system under which the federal government and the province contribute on a fifty-fifty basis. With respect to Pointe Bleue, we have in the current estimates an allotment of $5,000 for the construction of approximately 600 feet of street in the new welfare housing site and $15,000 for the construction of approximately four miles of new road, including widening, ditching and installation of culverts.

The one the hon. member referred to is rather ancient, and to the best of our knowledge there is not a real problem there at the moment, not one that has cropped up lately.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about the reserve in Nicolet county?

Mrs. Fairclough: There has been no problem lately that of which we are aware. We will have a look at it and if our files disclose something—

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not want to take up the time of the committee, but if the minister would have a look at it I would be quite interested to see what happened there.

Mrs. Fairclough: Very well.

Mr. Pickersgill: And also who paid for whatever may have been done.

Mrs. Fairclough: I will give the hon. member a report.

Mr. Pickersgill: I now want to embark upon a subject for which the minister has been waiting for a long time. I should like to start by asking her if all the locatees in the Sarnia reserve, which was sold last year in an iniquitous deal that the minister approved, have been satisfied and paid off?

Mrs. Fairclough: They have all been satisfied and paid off, Mr. Chairman, for lands which have been conveyed.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is really not an answer to my question. My question is whether all the locatees in the area that the agreement of sale covers have been satisfied and paid off?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member knows, because I think he went through the agreement with a fine tooth comb, there are no payments to be made—possibly I had better put it the other way around. The locatees do not require to be satisfied with reference to lands which have not been deeded. Some of the locatees are still holding land for which application has not been made but in so far as any lands which have been conveyed are concerned, the locatees have been satisfied.

Mr. Pickersgill: What does the hon. lady mean by "lands for which application has not been made"? Does she mean that there is some part of the reserve not covered by the agreement for sale? I am talking about the whole area covered by the agreement for sale, whether titles have actually been given to all of it or not. Obviously no title can be given until the locatee is satisfied, at least I would not think so.

Mrs. Fairclough: No, Mr. Chairman, not by any manner or means have all of the lands been resold, let us say.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not talking about resold.

Mrs. Fairclough: I can give the hon. member a report on just what lands have been conveyed but as he knows, from the contract —and here I must say, Mr. Chairman, I have not looked at this for a while; I am now speaking from memory and therefore I hope if I make a slip I will not be charged with having misconstrued the facts. As a matter of fact, if my memory serves me well, the contract permitted the purchaser to designate the lands to which he wished title, and upon having satisfied the terms of the contract, having made payment therefor and having satisfied the locatee, he then acquired title to the lands, which he presumably then immediately resold. I have the details here. Under the terms of the agreement the purchaser has the right to request conveyance of portions of lands sold, or for such conveyance to be made direct to the nominee upon paying in full the individual Indian's interest in the portion required, plus $800, $1,000 or $1,200 per acre, depending upon the area in which the land is located. This is in payment of the common band interest. Under this provision sales have taken place, sales to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario of 173.82 acres; to the Dow Chemical of Canada Limited, 66.66 acres; to the St. Clair Chemical Limited, 10 acres; to the Sun Oil Company Limited, 112 acres; making a total of 362.48 acres which have been conveyed. Up to January 1, 1961, all instalment payments, including half yearly interest payments, as provided for in the agreement, have been made, as well as payment required in connection with portions resold, leaving a balance of principal outstanding at $4,361,-467.82. The total payments made to date are, on principal, including the down payment, $2,160,478.18; interest, $351,626.61; making a total received of $2,512,104.79, from which it will be noted that about one third of the principal has been paid and a little over 10 per cent of the land has been alienated from the reserve.

Mr. Pickersgill: I come back again to the question with which I started. I also want to be quite accurate about this. I understand that any locatee who had any individual rights to any of the land that has been conveyed had his rights extinguished and has been satisfied with what he got; otherwise it could not be conveyed, I assume. If I am wrong about this I should like to be told I am wrong.

Mrs. Fairclough: No, that is right.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is 10 per cent of the the land covered by the agreement of sale which has in fact been conveyed, according to the information just given to us. As to the other 90 per cent of the land which is covered by the agreement of sale, how many locatees are there with whom there is no agreement as to what they will receive?

Mrs. Fairclough: I do not believe we have the information as to precisely how many locatees there were. I can secure that information. As a matter of general information. I am told there was only one locatee who did not sign a surrender. All of the other locatees did sign surrenders.

Mr. Pickersgill: What that means—again I am assuming this—is that every other locatee has agreed that in due course when there is necessity to convey he will convey and at a fixed, specific amount?

Mrs. Fairclough: That is right.

Mr. Pickersgill: So that to the best of the hon. lady's recollection there is only one locatee who has not reached an agreement?

Mrs. Fairclough: That is right.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is the situation?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have been looking over the debate of last year and I want to refresh my own memory again about certain of the facts in connection with this case. The minister will recall that last year I read a statement from the Toronto Telegram which quoted Mr. Macaulay, the minister of energy resources, I think it is, in the Ontario government, as having said that hydro officials had twice been refused permission to expropriate by Colonel H. M. Jones, director of Indian affairs. The hon. lady said at that time, as reported at page 5038 of Hansard:

That is not true.

The hon. lady stands by that statement?

Mrs. Fairclough: I stand by it.

Mr. Pickersgill: That there was never any approach whatever by the hydro with a view to getting expropriation?

Mrs. Fairclough: I think I told the hon. member at the time that there had been something in the nature of a telephone call saying, "if we did apply," or some such thing, "would you consider making a recommendation?" But no formal approach was made.

Mr. Pickersgill: Was any approach made at any time by Ontario hydro, not with a view to getting the federal government to expropriate on their behalf but with a view to getting a surrender to hydro?

Mrs. Fairclough: With a view to getting a surrender of the lands they wished?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mrs. Fairclough: Again, I would have to go back in the records. My officials will tell me if my memory does not serve me well but I think that, first of all, the Indians started to deal with hydro for the lands which hydro desired and then before an agreement was reached the Indians called a halt to the negotiations and proceeded to deal with the other company.

Mr. Pickersgill: When the hon. lady says that hydro began to deal with the Indians, may I say that "deal with the Indians" is a very vague term. Was someone authorized by vote of the band council to negotiate with hydro? What does the hon. lady mean by "deal with the Indians"?

Mrs. Fairclough: They had gone so far as to adopt a council resolution authorizing hydro to negotiate with the locatees and then they reversed their position and withdrew that permission.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course, at every meeting of the band council the Indian agent or superintendent would be present, so this was done with the knowledge of the department at the time.

Mrs. Fairclough: Oh, I presume so. I would have to look up the records.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the hon. lady can find out whether or not this was the case by consulting the director.

Mrs. Fairclough: Again, I cannot say definitely but it is the usual procedure as the hon. member knows. I presume the Indian superintendent was present. He would certainly be present. He would not be absent through neglect or by design. He would be at every meeting, I would think.

Mr. Pickersgill: What I am getting at is this. I am not saying anything about the minister herself, but there was every reason why the department should have known that Ontario hydro was interested in a certain part of the land before the negotiations with the Dimensional Company ever started. That is the point I want to establish.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is correct.

Mr. Pickersgill: Because I argued last year and I intend to argue again, I think with more force this time because of what has taken place in Ontario, that the department, knowing as it did that Ontario hydro was interested in a part of this land, was in the position that there was an inescapable duty on the department and on the minister as trustee for the Indians to make quite sure, before agreeing to sell this land to someone else, that a better deal could not have been made by the Indians with hydro.

It was alleged very strongly in the Ontario legislature last year that Ontario hydro had paid an exorbitant sum for the land that they bought from the Dimensional Company. The facts are all on Hansard for last year and it is not in dispute that land which was sold for about $2,000 an acre to Dimensional with the approval of the department appears to have been resold three days before the original sale, according to certain evidence that was put on Hansard and has never been contradicted to my knowledge, for $5,000 an acre more. It was on the basis of that position that I and one or two other members made the statement last year that either hydro had paid an utterly exorbitant sum for this land, a price which could not be defended, or the Indians had been gypped.

We know that a sufficiently serious view of this whole matter was taken by the premier of Ontario that he caused a royal commission to be appointed to inquire into the question of whether hydro had made an improper deal. That commission has reported, and I must say I have not read its report and do not intend to because that is not within our purview here. I have plenty to do reading those things that fall within the purview of parliament. However, judging from what the newspapers say, the commission reported that hydro had made a provident deal. I think some of us might still have some doubts about that but, as I say, that is not our business. It is the business of the members of the Ontario legislature and it is not our business. But I do say that if it is the case that hydro paid over $7,000 an acre for the land and made an agreement to pay three days before the sale to Dimensional was approved by the minister the Indians were gypped of about $5,000 an acre.

I do not want to suggest for one minute, any more than I did last year, that there was any wrongdoing on the part of the minister or the department but I do say that on the face of that evidence it is very hard not to feel that there was gross negligence, that the department should have taken the trouble to find out from hydro, which after all is a well known and presumably respectable body, what they were willing to pay for this property before a sale was made to a company which, judging from the evidence that was splashed all over the newspapers in Toronto and elsewhere at the time of the royal commission, was not one of the most ancient and reputable organizations in this country. I say that particularly in view of the fact that if the uncontradicted evidence that was put on Hansard is true, namely, that hydro agreed to make payment to this company three days before the federal agreement was made with Dimensional, then this does seem to me to be a really shocking way to treat a trust to the Indians.

I do not intend to spend a lot of time going into the details. I believe this matter ought to be inquired into not just by a provincial royal commission but by the federal government in order to find out whether or not this company already had an agreement with hydro on the basis of which it got a large part of its down payment before the agreement was ever concluded between the minister on behalf of the Indians and the Dimensional Company.

As I say, I think the whole sale was indefensible regardless of whether this hydro incident had occurred at all because I believe the price was not nearly high enough. I think that that valuable land, on which municipal taxes did not have to be paid as long as it was an Indian reservation, should at least never have been sold for less than the amount for which the previous government was willing to sell it. As I said last year and I repeat, I was very glad that the deal fell through because on second thought I felt it was inadvisable to sell at all. I think that land right on the edge of Sarnia, a city developing as that place is, should have been kept in trust in perpetuity for the Indians and that long term leases should have been made on a provident basis so that the Indians would have got the benefit of all this increment and not people like this Dimensional Company.

Whether or not it is true I do not know but I read in a very reputable newspaper the other day, the Globe and Mail, I think, that some mining company was now seeking to acquire a part of this land from Dimensional and, I feel fairly certain, not at the same price that only a year ago Dimensional paid to the Indians. I think this whole transaction was a highly improvident one for the government to have made. I think it would be a bad thing to do with land that was held in trust for all the people of Canada. But when you consider that this was a sale of a part of an Indian reserve held in trust for the Indians, and on the basis of what we know now, reinforced by this whitewashing report of the provincial royal commission,—if that is the right term to apply to it—it seems to me that if hydro made a provident deal, the minister made a most improvident one.

Mrs. Fairclough: I cannot subscribe to that statement, Mr. Chairman. My hon. friend is rehashing a matter that was thoroughly discussed in the House of Commons last year. If he wants to make a statement to the effect that the Indians were cheated, then I make a statement to the effect that his remarks are decidedly irresponsible. The hon. member likes to talk about the deal which he proposed. His deal fell through. It turned out that the people with whom he was dealing did not have any money or it never reached the first stages.

Mr. Pickersgill: Apparently they did not know Ontario Hydro.

Mrs. Fairclough: They never saw fit to go through with the deal that was proposed. It never reached the first stages of fruition. To compare it with the one that was finalized and from which the Indians now have $2.5 million I think is to talk in an absolutely irresponsible way about a deal that has now been in effect for some time.

I might draw to his attention the fact that whatever happens subsequently to lands that are disposed of, that is a matter that scarcely comes under the jurisdiction of this department. When we were advising the Indians with respect to this particular deal, we were not satisfied with one valuation. We had three valuations and none of them came anywhere near the valuation that my hon. friend now likes to propose as being a true valuation for the property.

There are a great many things to be considered about this particular piece of land and its potential. I should like to put on record now the fact that we do not consider that any subsequent deal made by the company and hydro was necessarily one for the consideration of this department. We had no offer from hydro. We had an offer from this company. The offer from the company was for a large parcel of land. Hydro was interested in a relatively small portion of the land. Even if hydro had paid directly to the Indians at the same rate the amount they are reputed to have paid now, the Indians still would not have as much money as they have at the present time from this property.

As I said last year, Mr. Chairman—and I have no hesitation in saying it again—I think we made an excellent deal for the Indians and I have no apology to make to anybody, including the hon. member, for that deal.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have not any apology to make either for what I have said. I did not make any valuation of this land. The Ontario hydro made the valuation of the land. The hon. lady agreed to sell and sold land or allowed to be sold land that belonged to the Indians for $2,000 an acre for which hydro subsequently paid $7,000 an acre; or rather, it was not subsequently because the evidence seems to be that they paid it three days before.

An hon. Member: Can you prove it?

Mr. Pickersgill: Hence it was a willing purchaser, and perhaps a too willing purchaser, that paid $5,000 an acre more than the hon. lady sold for, three days after the first agreement was made, according to the evidence.

If the hon. lady thinks it is none of her business, when her department knew that hydro was interested in this land, to enquire in advance whether they could not make a better deal with them, I regard that as a dereliction of duty and I do not think it is "irresponsible" for any member of parliament to describe it in those terms.

Then the hon. lady says they would not have received so much for the piece of land that hydro took as they have already received for a great deal more land than hydro took. Of course, that is true; but they would have had the rest of the land, something which is a rather important consideration.

If this reserve were up near James bay somewhere, there might be a great deal to be said for the view that it was needed for some special purpose that would exist for only one purchaser, that existed at only one point in time and that would enable the trustees for the Indians to sell at that time and reinvest the money in some other way that would be proper for the Indians. But anybody who has the slightest knowledge of what has gone on in the environs of Sarnia in the last 25 years knows that it is not a matter of speculation—although it appears to have been a matter of speculation in another sense of the term—but rather a matter of absolute certainty that unless we are going to have a deep Tory recession for a long time to come, this land is going to accelerate in value every year. If the government had to pay taxes on the land, if they had a large number of fixed charges they had to meet or if the Indians had been in desperate need of this money—as they were not—there might have been a much different situation. But there was no reason whatsoever for this precipitate, urgent sale except, apparently, the fact this Dimensional company came along and made an offer and managed, without the knowledge of the department, to sell a part of it in order to give them in advance, enough money with which to make their down payment. I say that this transaction, even apart from the hydro aspect of it, was an improvident one. But when one thinks of this hydro aspect which has now, as I say, been whitewashed by a royal commission in Ontario, one gets a different picture. Since the royal commission said that this land was worth $7,000 an acre, the hon. lady either repudiates the royal commission or she makes mincemeat of her sale at $2,000 an acre; and that is exactly what I am complaining about and what I say there is a proper complaint about with regard to those who have a special responsibility and special trust with regard to these Indian lands. It seems to me that there was just a shocking neglect of the proper discharge of that trust.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I repudiate that statement entirely. The hon. member knows full well that the land which was subsequently sold to hydro was not by any manner of means sold for $2,000 an acre. The figure of $2,000 an acre was the average price for the whole area and certainly not the price for the particular section of land which was sold to hydro.

I might draw something further to his attention. Since he seems to be so familiar with the proceedings of this royal commission, he had better read the part where the judge said he felt that the interests of the Indians had been well protected by this department.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I might be allowed to reply to that direct suggestion.

The Chairman: Order. I recognize the hon. member for York North who has been trying to get the floor for some time.

Mr. Cathers: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate is being extremely unfair in his statement.

An hon. Member: He always is unfair.

Mr. Cathers: He states that he has not read this royal commission report and yet he says it was a whitewash. I think he made the same charges here last year with regard to the minister gypping the Indians. I say this to the hon. member: He has done it again and he has not investigated the report of the royal commission. If he had done so, he would not have made these statements he has made today. Another thing the hon. member did was to criticize the price. A large block of land was sold for $2,000 an acre. A small block—an extremely narrow block and a desirable one—was bought by the hydro at a higher price. What is wrong with that procedure? It is just another example of the great foresight of this group across the way, and it is similar to the stand they took the other day with regard to bonds that were sold and which they said should not have been sold. After three years they can see the difference. Frankly, Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member has been most unfair in his charges with regard to this matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am glad I allowed the hon. member for York North to speak first because it is so much easier to reply. It is none of our business what the royal commission says because the royal commission was investigating the conduct of a provincial body.

Mr. Cathers: Why were you referring to it?

Mr. Pickersgill: I was referring to it because, as the hon. gentleman knows very well, the royal commission said that what the hydro did was justified.

Mr. Cathers: How do you know?

Mr. Pickersgill: Because I read the newspapers, as the hon. member also does. I say, Mr. Chairman, it is reasonable to assume that when all three Toronto newspapers agree on a fact, it is likely to be a fact.

There does not seem to be much doubt that the royal commission did say this transaction was justified, that hydro was justified in paying $7,000 an acre. If that is so, that makes the case against the federal government that much worse. If the royal commission had said—as some people think it should have said—that this was a fixed deal and that hydro paid far too much, that would support the hon. lady. But if hydro paid a fair price at $7,000 an acre, then the hon. lady did not get a fair price at $2,000 an acre.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is nonsense.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not nonsense at all. The hon. lady makes a great deal of fuss about this being a small area and the most desirable part. As a matter of fact the only evidence given, which the hon. lady has never attempted to deal with, is that this is about the most undesirable part of this tract of land because it happens to have, not one but I believe two of these hydro lines going across it. It would therefore not be a suitable area for building.

Far from being the most valuable piece of land it is probably, except for hydro purposes, an almost useless piece of land according to the information about this particular tract, that has never been contradicted. The information I have about it may be wrong. I confess I have not gone down there myself and walked over it. I am not speaking from direct personal knowledge. But evidence was put on Hansard last year about these hydro lines going across this particular piece of land, about the purpose for which hydro wanted it and about its unsuitability for building purposes.

I will be very surprised if other tracts of this land are not resold by the present purchaser at an even higher price than hydro paid.

Mr. Ricard: That is normal business.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course it is normal business; I am not criticizing the purchaser. But surely it is the duty of the government not to sell off Indian reserves, that are held in trust for the Indians, for less than their worth and for less than can be obtained for the benefit of the Indians, in order to enable a fly-by-night real estate operator to make a quick buck out of it.

An hon. Member: We do not do that type of thing.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is what you did.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I do not know how many times I have to say this for it to sink in. Possibly it will never sink in.

An hon. Member: He has a pretty tough hide.

Mrs. Fairclough: We had three separate and distinct valuations of this property, taking into consideration not only present values but potential values in the area. The price received by the Indians for their land was a fair price. I cannot go any further than that. Every safeguard that could be taken was taken.

I am sure my hon. friend does not doubt my intentions in regard to the Indians. I have a very grave responsibility toward them. This deal was explained to them in detail; it was a deal they themselves wanted and accepted. I am sure that if my hon. friend, who talks about the fuss I made—and I might say this, he is the worst fussbudget in the house—would think back to his own experience in the department he would know that had this deal not gone through he would have reason to make an even bigger fuss.

Mr. Pickersgill: I certainly would not. I accept the hon. lady's word about her intention; I have never at any time cast any reflection on her intentions. But I am dealing with facts, only with facts, and I intend to deal with facts.

I tell the committee this, and I hope no one doubts my word. I did agree to negotiate with a company in 1957. That company considered, until it found it impossible to finance the transaction, that this land—not quite as much, but nearly as much; nearly the same property—was worth $8 million. The hon. lady sold it for $6½ million. If I had been minister, that fact alone would have given me plenty of reason for pausing, if between 1957 and 1960 the price offered for land—maybe they offered too much—

Mrs. Fairclough: That is why they withdrew. They found they had offered too much.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. lady is misrepresenting the facts. The hon. lady knows perfectly well that the arrangement for financing fell through—

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mrs. Fairclough: That is a very nice excuse.

Mr. Pickersgill: Whether it is an excuse or not, I am saying that if I had been in office and had been considering a transaction to sell Indian lands for $8 million, I would have looked long and hard before selling it for $6½ million.

Mrs. Fairclough: That is precisely what we did.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would not have been satisfied with three valuations, knowing there was another potential purchaser for a part of that land and when, as it turned out, that potential purchaser was already in negotiation with the person to whom the hon. lady was making the sale to pay a price three and a half times as much as the hon. lady sold it for.

In the face of the facts it really does seem to be a transaction impossible to defend in any way.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a comment on this although I have come in late and I do not think I know all the facts. However, two or three things seem to me to be clear.

It seems to me this is a classic case that so often arises, of wisdom after the event. Anyone who has anything to do with business knows that real estate values often do strange things. I had a little experience myself. I sold a house for a figure which makes me blush now when I think of it. Why? Not because it was not a reasonable thing to do at the time, because I had the best opinions and it looked perfectly all right; but that house has since changed hands at figures I do not like to think of.

I do not blame anyone for that. Perhaps I blame myself a little, but I do not blame myself very much. Therefore when the minister tells us—and apparently this is not contradicted in any way—that there was not one valuation, not two valuations but three valuations, and presumably from reputable people, how it is possible to come along and say the matter was gone into hastily and in an ill-considered fashion passes my understanding.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure that when the hon. member for Greenwood sold the house to which he referred he did not watch it change hands to another purchaser the next day, or even the day before, at a price three and a half times higher than he sold it for. That is what happened in this particular case.

The deal between hydro and Dimensional had, according to uncontradicted evidence that was put on Hansard last year—no one has yet attempted to contradict it—already been made before the deal was made between Dimensional and the federal government.

It seems to me that is the most serious aspect of this matter. The department knew hydro wanted this land. The hon. lady admitted that before the hon. member for Greenwood came into the committee. They knew this land was wanted by hydro. Hydro is not like red China; surely it is recognized by the federal government as an entity to which they can speak. It surely should not have been very difficult for the hon. lady herself to pick up the telephone and ask Mr. McCauley or Mr. Duncan if they really wanted this property.

Mrs. Fairclough: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Certainly.

Mrs. Fairclough: Is he saying that, against the wishes of the Indians who expressed themselves as not wishing to deal with hydro, I should have forced them to deal with hydro?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I am not saying any such thing. I am saying that the minister should not have agreed without exploring what hydro would pay and telling the Indians what hydro would pay. I am not saying the minister should have forced them to sell to hydro. I know she could not, according to law.

There is another aspect of this matter which I have not yet mentioned but which I will mention now. There was a meeting of the band council—the hon. lady knows about this because I asked questions about it earlier in the session—and just before the vote was taken the representative of the purchaser, a lawyer, went around and offered each of the Indians another $100. That was immediately before the vote was taken. This to me—

An hon. Member: When was that?

Mrs. Fairclough: That is not true. That is a misrepresentation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then will the hon. lady tell us what happened at that meeting.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, I will tell you. This deal was going through, and since Christmas was at hand the Indians asked whether they could expect to have an advance. They did not get anything extra. The locatees got an advance on the sale price. There is no secret about it. The amount of money was paid by cheque to these locatees whose land was being taken over, and it was an advance on the sale. I suggest to the hon. member that having regard to the fact that the deal was through and the vote had been taken this was a perfectly reasonable thing to do.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think we ought to understand how these things happen. The band council has to vote the surrender of the land before it can be sold. Before the vote was taken, an offer had been made by this company—an offer to pay so much, and so much down—and there seemed to be some doubt whether it would be accepted or not. According to the information given to me, a legal representative of the company, when he saw the way the vote was going, said there would be another hundred dollars paid right away if the vote was favourable. If that had been a vote in a federal election, that vote would have been invalidated, as the hon. lady knows. It seems to me that this is just another of those things which would have made the minister doubly suspicious. That happened before Christmas, if my memory serves me right—

Mr. Speakman: On a point of order, the hon. member has just made an allegation. I think he should be called upon to prove that allegation.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, the allegation is not contradictory of what the hon. lady herself said.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mrs. Fairclough: The hon. member is saying that this proposition was made by the company to the Indians before the vote was taken. I say the proposition was made by the Indians to the company after the vote had been taken, and that is a different thing.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. lady say the vote was taken before they were told that as soon as the vote had been taken they would get this hundred dollars?

Mrs. Fairclough: That is the information I have. I was not at the meeting, and neither was the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I was not at the meeting, either and I have no documents. But, of course, there was a record made of that meeting and the hon. lady could inquire of the superintendent what the facts are. It seems to me it is very important that these facts should be established, because the information given to me—

Mr. Speakman: What information and from where?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have been given information by someone who was there—someone who was interested in the matter—and the information I have been given is that they were told before the vote was taken. It is true no money was paid before the vote was taken, but they were told before the vote was taken that if the surrender was approved they would get another hundred in cash right away.

Mrs. Fairclough: Not another hundred, an advance.

Mr. Pickersgill: Another hundred in cash right away—not an increase in the price, of course.

Mrs. Fairclough: What does the hon. member mean by "another hundred dollars" if he does not mean an increase in the price?

Mr. Pickersgill: I mean a hundred dollars in cash that they would not have got.

Mrs. Fairclough: The hon. member still insists that this deal was made before the vote was taken. Does he insist that the company offered this advance to the Indians or is his informant telling him that the Indians asked for it, which is the information I have.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not know who brought the subject up, but I do not think it matters.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think it matters for this reason: When a vote is being taken on a matter of this kind at a band meeting, all the Indians who are interested not necessarily being present, it is my belief that a financial consideration of that character, no matter who initiated it, is improper. Again, to use the analogy of a federal election, it does not really matter whether you go and ask a fellow whether he will offer you $10 for your vote or whether he comes to offer it to you. Whatever way that happens it is wrong, and I say there seems to have been—

Mr. Speakman: More of these allegations.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member can reply in his own time. I am surprised, if the supporters of the government think this is such a good transaction, that they are so worried about any criticism of it.

Mr. Charlton: It is the insults.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, the only person who is being insulted during this discussion, if one can call it insult, is myself. Imputations have been made concerning my motives. The hon. lady has described me in rather unparliamentary terms—I do not take exception to that, because I know the hon. lady. I have dealt with such facts as I know. I have let the hon. lady interrupt me every time she wanted to interrupt, because I did not want to represent anything which was not a fact. I want to be very clear as to what the facts are. It seems to me that when this company showed this tremendous eagerness to get this land, and when they had their lawyer lobbying at the meeting, suspicions should have been aroused. Why were they so desperately anxious to get this land, and so concerned about giving the Indians a little money before Christmas? It seems to me there was tremendous eagerness to get this transaction through. Another thing which is hard to explain is this: why, when the surrender was made before Christmas, did it take the hon. lady until March 14 to conclude the transaction? Did she have to wait until the other people were sure they had got hydro on the hook before she would conclude it? Does the hon. lady know whether there was any agreement between the company and the hydro before she signed the agreement herself?

Mrs. Fairclough: The answer to the last question is, no. As far as the length of time is concerned, I have already explained that we had not one but three valuations to make. The intervening time was taken up in making a thorough investigation of the situation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Were the valuations made after the surrender?

Mrs. Fairclough: One was made before, and the last two were made after the surrender.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not going to traverse this subject further but there is one other thing I intend to suggest to the hon. lady. This transaction is not completely concluded yet. I am going to propose that the minister talk to her colleagues and suggest to them that an inquiry be made to find out whether or not any understanding or agreement had been reached between the company and the hydro before this sale was completed and, if it was, I suggest that the whole matter be looked into again to make absolutely certain that there is not some redress we can still give the Indians whose trustees we are.

Item agreed to.

Welfare of Indians—

59. Operation and maintenance, including a grant to the province of Manitoba of one half of the cost of a program of community development not exceeding, $50,000, $9,176,563.

Mr. Pickersgill: On this item can the hon. lady tell us how many Indians are receiving welfare at the latest available date compared with the same date last year?

Mrs. Fairclough: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but we do not have those figures immediately available. I shall be glad to procure them for the hon. member.

Mr. Pickersgill: I believe it would be interesting to have the comparison on the record.

Mrs. Fairclough: If the hon. member agrees we will procure this information and I will make a statement tomorrow so that it will go into the record.

Mr. Pickersgill: That would be satisfactory.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am afraid I will have to withdraw that last statement. My officials tell me that they do not think it could be procured by tomorrow. I will, however, make it available to the hon. member at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Pickersgill: That would be very desirable. It would be good to have the most up-to-date information.

Item agreed to.

60. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $2,010,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I believe there is a decrease in this vote. Could the hon. lady say what is involved in this particular kind of construction? Is it housing?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, Mr. Chairman. This vote provides for assistance in the provision of adequate housing with minimum standards for needy Indians and also for the purchase of equipment. The details are for financing, in whole or in part, the construction of 817 housing units including minimum services if required. In addition it relates to the purchase of three new automobiles and equipment such as carpenter's tools, cement mixers for use in house construction, sewing machines for homemakers' courses and similar equipment.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are fewer houses being built this year than last?

Mrs. Fairclough: The winter works program accounts for a part of the reduction. An additional vote was added on to last year's estimates. That accounts for the difference.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am afraid I do not understand that at all.

Mrs. Fairclough: We put through a supplementary estimate in the autumn after the house met in order to do some of the work ahead of time which removed the necessity for putting that amount into this year's estimates.

Mr. Pickersgill: That still does not answer my question. Are more houses going to be built in 1961-62?

Mrs. Fairclough: I am told that our housing program will be maintained at approximately the same level this year as last. Present plans call for the construction of 817 housing units, as I mentioned, in 87 agencies. During the fiscal year 1961-62, work was started on these from funds provided in the supplementary estimates that were put through in November or December last.

Mr. Pickersgill: How many houses are under construction or have been completed in this fiscal year?

Mrs. Fairclough: The estimated number for last year was 907 units. I might add that the 907 included 80 houses to be built from funds provided by the supplementary estimates. There are 817 to be built this year.

Mr. Pickersgill: So that there is a decline in the housing program?

Mrs. Fairclough: No, the hon. member is confused by the construction that was started in the interval between the two years. The 907 included 80 houses for which provision was made in the estimates that went through in November or December. If we were to deduct 80 from the 907 there would have been 827 built last year, but if you were to add 80 to the 817 there would be 897 this year.

Item agreed to.

61. Economic development—operation and maintenance, including an amount of $6,500 for grants to promote Indian agriculture, handicrafts and economic enterprises generally, $1,113,148.

Mr. Pickersgill: As the hon. lady knows, the subject of this vote is, next to education, my favourite. Could the hon. lady produce any figures showing how many Indians are employed? I do not refer to those who have independently secured employment but to those who have gained employment as a result of the various activities of the department under the economic development program?

Mrs. Fairclough: I believe I gave that information in my opening statement, but I will see if we have a recapitulation available. The hon. member is inquiring about figures from the commencement of the program, is he?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps I had better explain what I am really trying to get at as it may save time. I want to know how many Indians are actually employed as the result of this kind of placement activity, and so on, as compared with a year ago.

Mrs. Fairclough: We have the figures divided into two lots, urban placements and rural and seasonal placements. In 1960 there were 3,773 in rural and seasonal placements as against 2,827 in 1959. With respect to the urban placement program, 344 were permanently employed as of November 30, 1960, which is the last date we have. I have to subtract the figure from the total to get a comparison with the year before. On the basis of my rapid calculation, it appears that there were about 150 in this category the year before. It has just about doubled.

Mr. Pickersgill: In a general way does the hon. lady think, notwithstanding the greater difficulty the rest of the population has in finding employment, that as a result of the activities of the placement service and the economic development program she is doing better at the present time than she did a year ago?

Mrs. Fairclough: I think so, Mr. Chairman. As a matter of fact this is a progressive thing. Every Indian who takes a job and makes good at it paves the way for two or three more. It is a snowballing thing. As the people who make a success set an example, it is followed by others. The effects are seen not only among their fellow Indians but their success also makes the respective employers a little more amenable to the suggestion of hiring Indians.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member for Selkirk asked earlier about Grand Rapids and developments in that part of Manitoba which appear to be extremely gratifying. I should like to know about developments at the International Nickel Company at Thompson in northern Manitoba. Has the department been successful in persuading that company to employ Indians?

Mrs. Fairclough: We have been trying, Mr. Chairman. I do not think we have been quite as successful there as we have at Grand Rapids. We are still working on it. There have been some difficulties in the way. We hope we can persuade these people to hire more and more Indians as time goes on. I can assure the hon. member that we are not falling down on the job but are keeping right after them.

Item agreed to.

62. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $511,407.

Mr. Pickersgill: What is the nature of the construction under this vote?

Mrs. Fairclough: This provides for capital expenditures in connection with expanded and accelerated development of commercial enterprises which tend to permit the attainment by Indians of higher standards of living. For instance, it provides for the construction of freezers for storage of food products, including wild game and commercial fish; for the breaking, fencing, ditching and drainage of land; for dams and dikes; for the rehabilitating of waterfowl, and muskrats; ice houses for commercial fishing projects; vehicles used by placement officers; saw mills for cutting lumber for houses or for sale; farm machinery, tractors and conveying equipment; bulls to improve breeds of livestock; garden tools; breeding cattle. These are all included in this item.

There is an item of $266,004. This is mainly in an expanded agricultural and commercial fisheries program, necessitating increases in the amounts provided for breaking and fencing, ice houses, livestock, which includes cattle formerly provided for under operation and maintenance of farm machinery, flooding equipment; outboard motors for commercial fisheries. They are offset by a decrease in the amount for freezers, saw mills and conveying equipment.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is more than doubled, in fact.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes.

Item agreed to.

64. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment including payments under agreements to provide joint educational facilities to Indian pupils, $7,705,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: I notice there was a small increase. Does the hon. lady think she is getting anywhere near catching up on the need for schools?

Mrs. Fairclough: There is a small decrease.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is really what I meant to say. The fact that there was a decrease made me wonder whether the need for schools was somewhat less than it had been?

Mrs. Fairclough: Well, that is a pretty broad question, Mr. Chairman. We are not replacing residential schools unless it is absolutely necessary. Some of the schools which are in use are pretty ancient. There is one place I can think of where the schools were condemned and we will have to dispose of them, and other arrangements are being made. In some instances it is possible to make arrangements with nearby non-Indian schools to absorb the pupils from day schools. This we will do wherever necessary.

I should like to see us reach the stage where all Indian children were in integrated schools but, of course, for a long time there will be areas where children will require residential schools and there will be families who, because of their living habits, will be unable to look after their own children's education unless they do go into residential schools.

Mr. Pickersgill: For the last 10 years we have been spending a great deal of money on schools.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: One assumes that for most of that period we have been trying to catch up with the backlog?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: One assumes that, since the life of these schools is more than 10 years, certainly we ought to be reaching a point when there would be a deceleration in the rate of need for schools. That is the point.

Mrs. Fairclough: It is true that we are catching up to some extent, but there is the other side of the question and that is the tremendous population increase. As I have said on more than one occasion, and as I think I said the other day in the house, about 50 per cent of all Indians are under 16 years of age. This raises a continuing and increasing problem with regard to their education. The offsetting factor, as I have said, is the fact that more and more of them are going into integrated schools.

Item agreed to.

480. To authorize loans, in accordance with terms and conditions prescribed by the governor in council, to Indians in the current and subsequent fiscal years to assist them in acquiring housing, $100,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. lady going to say a word on this?

Mrs. Fairclough: I explained that the other day, but I shall be glad to say something on it. I gave an explanation on the first item of my estimates.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not want to ask for any repetition.

Item agreed to.

The Chairman: That completes the estimates of the Indian affairs branch. the next branch is the national gallery.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF CANADA

253. Administration, operation and maintenance including grants as detailed in the estimates, $975,116.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, the national gallery of Canada is, at this time, completing its first year of operation in its new location in the Lorne building in central Ottawa.

I have been most encouraged by the extraordinary demonstration of public support for the gallery and its activities, which is evidenced by the checked attendance since the inaugural opening of the new premises on February 17, 1960. As of the closing hour last evening, February 22, the attendance was 585,188; in other words, 585,188 visitors have entered the building in that year and five days to enjoy the collections, the circulating exhibitions, the library, lectures and study seminars, which constitute the program of this living museum of art in our national capital.

I should like to point out that in addition to the attractive program of activities taking place in Ottawa, the national gallery of Canada, through its division of exhibition extension services has, since I last reported, circulated 46 travelling exhibitions throughout the length and breadth of this vast country. It has also sponsored a series of lectures on art topics in many centres, from the Atlantic provinces to the west coast. I am informed that a conservative estimate of attendance at these travelling exhibition and lecture services outside of Ottawa is approximately 244,000 persons. These, together with publications, reproductions, technical and curatorial advice, are the services the national gallery provides to the Canadian public at home.

The gallery's services abroad are also activities of considerable significance and value. We have participated successfully in the thirtieth biennale of international art in Venice, Italy, and at present the national gallery, in collaboration with the national museum, is presenting a comprehensive exhibition of Canadian art in Mexico city. The combined attendance at these two events is as yet not fully reported, but it may reach a further 100,000. It will thus be seen that the public attendance at events sponsored by the national gallery, at home and abroad, may be somewhat in excess of 900,000 persons.

In its program outlined for the coming year, the gallery proposes to extend the space devoted to Canadian works in the Lorne building, it having been felt during the past year that not enough space has been available adequately to display Canadiana, particularly that of the French tradition. The north gallery, facing Albert street, formerly employed for the exposition of design centre projects, is to provide additional space for this purpose.

Among the exhibition features of the coming year will be the fourth biennale of Canadian art which will open in Ottawa on May 16, 1961. Following its exhibition in Ottawa, it will be circulated across Canada. For the first time, the trustees have declared a policy of making the biennale an open exhibition. This means that any Canadian who desires to submit work to the jury of selection may do so.

Another important exhibition will be the "Heritage de France", opening in Canada in the autumn of this year. This exhibition will bring to this country masterpieces of French painting of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. The national gallery will be one of the participating institutions in this great international project.

The curatorial division is continuing various projects on basic research; a definitive history of Canadian art, and a dictionary of national biography, dealing with Canadian artists and sculptors born before 1867, are in preparation at the present time. These and many other worthy undertakings are being planned and encouraged by the board of trustees.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, the board of trustees of the national gallery of Canada have, through their careful and imaginative planning of the program of this important agency, justified the confidence and support of this committee.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to detain the committee more than about a minute, but I cannot refrain from expressing a little pardonable pride at the success that has attended the national gallery in the new building, a building which I recall seeing with my mind's eye as I looked out of my office as minister of citizenship and immigration with the architect when we discussed the site, which was visible from that office, and the planning of the building. I just wanted to recall the fact that this was one Liberal vision that became a reality. I confess that even in my wildest dreams I never thought the number of visitors to the building would be as great as in fact it has turned out to be, which would seem to suggest that there are many Canadians who genuinely believe that man does not live by bread alone. Before the estimates carry I wish to ask one or two questions, but that is all I have to say of a general nature.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the rather rapidly read statement of the minister on the national gallery. I hope the tempo of the reading does not indicate the minister's appreciation of the value of the gallery to Canada. I can well understand the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate's pride in the building because I think it is quite correct to say that the conception was during the previous government's tenure, and the excellence of the building and the arrangements are indicated by the very greatly increased attendance.

I have visited the gallery on a good number of occasions and, even though it is still spoken of as a temporary building, I think Canadians can view the building and its contents with pride. I have noticed Canadians and tourists from other countries going through the building who have shown a similar interest, and this is indicated by the attendance of people in the last year.

I want to pay a tribute to the director and his staff. The director is without doubt a man with ideas. He is not only a painter of distinction and a gentleman who has occupied a position with the University of Toronto but, as I was informed only recently, he has also been a military adviser to NATO. I did not know that his activities had covered such a wide field. I was thinking about the national gallery the other day and I remembered reading the submission of the director to the royal commission on arts, letters and sciences. I may say that the present director of the gallery, Dr. Charles F. Comfort, is not only a painter but also composes with considerable cognition because I read his submission with great interest. It is very well written indeed and it is well worth anyone taking the time to read it. It has to do with painting and, as I said before, was a submission to the royal commission on arts, letters and sciences by the present director. I might say that after reading the submission I almost wished the director had taken to literature as well because we lack style in our literature and in my opinion this is a very well written article. The director has this to say:

> In conclusion it may well be asked, under which system is art likely to prosper, where the state plays a part as patron, or where that function relies upon the voluntary interest and support of private institutions and individuals?

He goes on to deal with this question of magnitude and then says:

> It would seem that the only valid reason for a state concern with the arts arises when it is shown that the character of local conditions endangers the preservation and development of the cultural heritage. In a small industrialized modern state, the task of supporting adequate cultural activities has far outstripped the capacity of private and voluntary means, a circumstance which must be well documented in the briefs submitted to the royal commission on cultural affairs. In expressing a hope that some instrument for the assistance and development of the arts may be set up in Canada, I am confident that it would play a most useful and vital part in our spiritual regeneration. But its constitution and the fruitful fulfilment of its function depend upon a careful consideration of the dangers as well as the advantages of such a procedure. The value of democracy rests in a respect for individual rights and individual differences which should be preserved rather than restricted or inhibited.

I think that paragraph puts very well indeed the necessity for assistance by the state in such matters as art galleries, museums and things of that nature if we are going to preserve our cultural heritage. Having made these few remarks I do want to say that certain matters have been brought to my attention and I have two bones, shall I say, to pick on behalf of a number of citizens of Ottawa, some of them of Scots ancestry, who have telephoned me. In fact, a gentleman telephoned me the other day and said he was not in the habit of calling socialists because he was a member of the Progressive Conservative party, but he wanted to bring to my attention certain things that he thought should be corrected so far as the national gallery is concerned.

First of all, I am informed, and I have to depend so far as these matters are concerned on my informants who are quite well known and responsible people, that paintings and statuary worth millions of dollars are in storage in a building on Echo drive. I am told that the building is about 45 by 40 with a ceiling 20 to 25 feet high. I am told that there is also a collection of war paintings there which I am informed is valued at about $2 million.

I understand there are enough paintings in storage in this building on Echo drive to stock a good-sized art gallery and that in fact there are some paintings in storage which have been purchased in more recent years as the result of estimates passed by the house. When the minister replies I trust she will inform the house as to the value of the paintings in storage on Echo drive and possibly give us some idea of the number of paintings and pieces of statuary in storage because I promised these people I would raise this question.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, when we rose at six o'clock in order to refill our personal art galleries, I had paid a tribute to the director and his staff and had dealt briefly with the paintings in storage and with a valuable collection of war paintings that are also in storage.

Before proceeding with the remainder of my brief remarks I wish to say this. It has been a joy to go through the gallery this year not only because of the excellence of the building and of the arrangements, with the exception of one or two things which I shall mention later, but because of the interest I have noticed on the part of young people going through the building. It was not just a casual interest. I have stood there for some time on occasions and have noticed the genuine interest they were taking in the various types of pictures, a fact which indicated to me, particularly in view of the large number who have gone through the gallery—I think the minister mentioned a figure of something over half a million—the great value of the national gallery to us as a nation and the much greater value it can be with proper support, good public relations, a further increase in the number of paintings and so on, particularly in certain schools.

In the estimates this year I notice quite a modest amount for the purchase of new pictures. We support that item wholeheartedly. These are not times when we can be lavish in this respect but I think it is a good thing, even under somewhat difficult circumstances, to indicate our interest by at least the estimate we have at the present time in purchasing pictures this year. I think I heard some reference in some place to the saying that money is required and we cannot afford, as a nation, to let the national gallery stagnate.

Before proceeding further, I want to suggest that if the pictures at present in storage cannot be hung in the national gallery they should be lent to other institutions. I presume some of them will be hung. I know the difficulties under which the director and his staff have worked this year. We cannot expect everything to be done in one year. However, I suggest that as many as possible of these pictures be hung for people to see. As to those which cannot be hung or which possibly are not suitable to be hung in the circumstances under which they would be hung, I suggest that they be lent to other institutions because I believe these things should be seen, particularly by the young people of the country.

As to the war paintings, I know they are in a rather different class. I saw some of them years ago. They are quite large canvasses, I understand. Possibly it would be a good idea if these paintings could be taken over by the national archives and, in any event, hung so that the present and coming generations will have an opportunity to see in graphic form recorded on these canvasses what was done in the years of war.

I now come to another matter that I have been asked to mention by some of my Conservative friends. Last Wednesday I asked the minister why the picture of the Marquis of Lorne was not hung in the national gallery. The minister replied that a picture by the distinguished pre-Raphaelite painter, Sir John Everett Millais, was at present hanging in the national gallery. The people who communicated with me on the telephone and otherwise have been frequent visitors to the gallery—they are Ottawa people—and have failed to see it. Some of them were in the gallery at the time of the minister's reply and they tramped off, hot foot, to see where this picture was. I might say that we found that it is technically correct to say that there is a picture of the Marquis of Lorne in the national gallery, but under the circumstances, hardly one in substance. This fact is felt keenly by some of the Scotsmen in Ottawa.

In order to verify the telephone conversations I have held, I went to the gallery on Sunday. I am told in the first instance that the picture in storage is a magnificent picture about eight feet by six feet, of the marquis in highland costume, in full dress.

At the present time I understand it is resting on its side, with dust on the frame, in this building I previously mentioned. I am also informed on making further inquiries that this extremely striking picture—according to my informant it is striking; I have not seen this picture—is actually owned by the Department of Public Works. I wish the minister would explain that matter. If so, it is a rather unusual set of circumstances.

We all know that the present national gallery building, namely, the Lorne building, is a great improvement over our previous accommodation for the national art gallery. I think it is now quite true to say that we might even have the motto "Enjoy yourself in comfort with Comfort". I raise this point particularly because the Marquis of Lorne was the founder of the national art gallery in 1880. When these people called me and talked to me about this matter I had a sketchy knowledge of the period of Canadian history during which the Marquis of Lorne was governor general of this country, but I made it my business to get a few books from the library and I have been astounded at what I have discovered.

The Marquis of Lorne was a man of vision, culture and great generosity. The Marquis of Lorne was governor general of this country from 1878 to 1883. He was a viceroy. He was an ambassador. He was a unionist member of parliament for a Lancashire constituency. I might explain that a unionist is a Tory who recognizes the impact of industrial civilization and faces life in a more pragmatic way than did his predecessors. The Marquis of Lorne was an economist. He wrote books. I found one in which he carried on a considerable correspondence with Henry George, the person who wrote on the single tax question. He was an artist. I found another book—and I draw it to the attention of the minister and the director—in which are included dozens and dozens of his sketches and drawings. They are delightful sketches and drawings. He was an author; he wrote books. Anyone who reads the two books he has written, entitled "Passages from the Past", which are more or less extensions of his diary, will be informed of the great part he played in Canadian history. He was a composer and playwright. He wrote his own plays and had them performed before audiences composed of guests numbering as many as 500. He was a diarist and he was the first governor general of Canada to, as it were, rap the knuckles of the colonial office in Great Britain with respect to its lack of understanding that Canada was a growing nation and should have her independence in certain matters.

He played a considerable part in creating understanding between the French and British populations in Canada and defending the rights of the French-Canadian minority. He founded the royal society of literature in Canada and in 1880, as I have mentioned before, he founded the national gallery. In his diary there are two or three delightful passages which deal with the first three annual exhibitions or events that took place after the opening of the national gallery.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I go to some length to mention his qualities and great achievements. Anyone reading his books will see that he was a man of great wisdom, of powers of observation and of balance, a student of human nature and of nature.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question? Is the hon. member for Kootenay West a contemporary of the gentleman in question?

Mr. Herridge: That was a sharp question.

Mr. Drysdale: Let's hope we get a sharp answer.

Mr. Herridge: I cannot claim to be a contemporary in time; I can, in spirit and purpose.

Mr. Grafftey: Wisdom is timeless, is it not?

An hon. Member: That is more than the present Tories can say.

Mr. Herridge: Naturally the building was named the Lorne building after the Marquis of Lorne, but "Lorne building" does not mean much to many people coming to the national gallery, or to visitors and tourists. My point is this. Pictures are required when we come to glamourize history, to dramatize history and inform people of our history, of which we should be proud.

There is a painting in the gallery of the Marquis of Lorne. It is about 29 inches by 40 inches and it was painted by Millais. It is a rather drab painting, showing the Marquis with a very pallid countenance. It is on display on a side wall in a side room on the second floor. As a matter of fact, you actually have to kneel to read the small inscription, which is a few inches long and very dark, which says this is a picture of the Marquis of Lorne who was the founder of the national gallery. Because it is in an out of the way place and is so small, many people apparently visit the gallery and have no idea it is there.

My point is this. Just two pictures over and in close proximity to this picture of the Marquis of Lorne is quite a large and posterior view of an attractive nude. I cannot say; I am not a judge, but I am told it is. It almost appears that the picture has been put there to distract attention from the painting of the Marquis of Lorne. I can tell the committee that I stood there for an hour on Sunday and watched people come along—

Mr. Ricard: How did you make out with it?

Mr. Herridge: —and not a single visitor noticed the painting of the Marquis of Lorne: they all headed straight for this other picture.

Mrs. Fairclough: You were standing in front of him.

Mr. Herridge: No, I was standing to one side. On reading the books written by the Marquis, reading his history and some comments in his diaries, I do not think he would be at all flattered or complimented by being in such close proximity to a nude. In fact, I think that out of respect to his memory you ought to put kilts on her. I am speaking on behalf of people who have a sense of Canadian history and who appreciate these facts. I am speaking for many people of Scots descent, and I am sure for all Canadians who value our traditions, history and so on.

Therefore I do urge that the painting of the Marquis of Lorne which is now in storage, the painting in which I am told he is shown in his full highland costume, a painting about six feet by eight feet, be placed facing the front doors on the ground floor as you enter the gallery, and that underneath there be an appropriate plaque which not only mentions that he was the founder of the national gallery but deals to some extent with the great contribution he made to Canadian development and Canadian nationhood.

I think this would be a fitting tribute to the Marquis of Lorne and to his achievements. It would direct the attention of Canadians, visitors and tourists to the fact that this man, the Marquis of Lorne, pictured in front of them was the person who founded the gallery. I am sure that as a result of this they would go away with a much clearer understanding of who he was, what he did and what his founding of the gallery has meant in the years since, and particularly at this time.

I think it would be most suitable to do that. In conclusion I do urge that consideration be given to using the paintings we have in storage and finding some place, possibly the archives for the war paintings. Then, a fitting tribute, such as I have described, should be paid to the Marquis of Lorne and this painting hung in the appropriate place, namely facing the front entrance so that all will know who founded the national gallery of Canada.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could answer the hon. member for Kootenay West. After his very eloquent plea on behalf of the Marquis of Lorne I am sure the director and the trustees will take the whole matter of the proper display of his portrait and such additional information as may be deemed appropriate in the circumstances into earnest consideration.

I may say, though, that it is true the national gallery does not own the portrait which is in storage, and consequently I do not believe it is available for display. An arrangement was made some years ago to store it for the Department of Public Works, and there it rests.

I am not qualified to judge the merits of the two paintings, but I am told that the one hanging in the gallery is much superior to the other. I may say in this regard that the other day the hon. member made the statement that having this one portrait on hand the gallery had gone to the expense of having the other one painted. Possibly he has found out in the meantime that this is incorrect. That painting was presented to the gallery by the artist himself in 1884.

Mr. Herridge: The portrait by Millais?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes. With reference to paintings which are in storage, it is true that there are quite a few paintings in storage but the majority of them have now been moved to the Lorne building where they have better facilities for them. They will, in time, be displayed on the rotation system which is in practice in the gallery.

The rest of the paintings will be removed just as quickly as possible, but I can assure the hon. member that this storage is a temporary arrangement and as soon as possible all these paintings will be in the gallery. It is not possible to show them all at one time. As I mentioned in my preliminary remarks, quite a few paintings are being moved around the country all the time on exhibition. Some of them are removed from the walls of the gallery, sent out on exhibition, others take their place and in that way the pictures are rotated at frequent intervals. In time, all of them will be on view. I am sure the hon. member would agree with this policy, because it adds interest for the viewer to find different paintings on view on different occasions when he visits the gallery.

Mr. Badanai: I should like to make a suggestion with regard to the national gallery. We have a magnificent building of which we are all very proud and it has been named after the Marquis of Lorne whose history we have heard so characteristically described by the hon. member for Kootenay West. However, Lorne building does not mean a great deal to the average visitor to Ottawa and it seems to me that the building needs a sign on the face of it inscribed with the words "national gallery". This would in no way detract from the great fame of the former governor general of Canada and all the attributes which have been ascribed to him, for he was a genius in practically everything he undertook.

As I say, I think the average visitor passes the building without even knowing what is inside. I have met visitors to the city who have wished to visit the national gallery. I have directed them to it and told them what kind of building it was. It is easy to identify, but the difficulty is that no one knows what the Lorne building stands for. I have in mind visitors from south of the border and from coast to coast of Canada. I think we should have one large sign on Elgin street with the words "national gallery" upon it. As hon. members may be aware, the national gallery in London, England, in Trafalgar Square has written on the face of it the words "national gallery". I think we should have that name on the Lorne building—possibly two signs, one facing north and another facing east. Sufficient room is available, and my proposal could be carried out at little cost. I am sure Dr. Comfort would agree with me that the appearance of the name "national gallery" in large letters would add to the individuality of the building and to the stature of the institution. The national gallery is a shrine to which people from all over the country should come in order to see the things we have stored there. I have no objection to the painting which is relegated to some old building and which, as was pointed out by the hon. member for Kootenay West, should be carried on into the new building.

I have no objection to that at all, but I think we should have a name outside the gallery, and I would like the minister to give consideration to that suggestion.

Mrs. Fairclough: This matter is under active consideration at the present time. I agree with the hon. member, and I know the director does, too, that there should be some lettering capable of being easily distinguished, to designate the national gallery as such.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I wish to congratulate the minister for the example her department has given by putting bilingual signs on the national gallery building.

However, if my information is correct, invitations and advertising booklets, which are quite often addressed throughout the country to some personalities and educational institutions are unilingual.

I would highly appreciate it if the director of the national gallery would consider the possibility of addressing those invitations and that literature in both languages in the future.

(Text):

Mrs. Fairclough: As far as I know, the invitations are issued in both languages. The cards have English on one side and French on the other. To my knowledge, that has always been the practice.

Mr. Grafftey: After listening to the opening remarks of the hon. lady, all of us here this evening realize we have much to be proud of in the director of our national gallery and his staff and in the national gallery itself. We also have much to be proud of in this great new building which has been discussed this afternoon. One of the things which was mentioned by the hon. lady—and it has been mentioned before in this house—was the fact that not only do we have this wonderful gallery in Ottawa, visited by so many people, but we also have travelling exhibitions in every corner of this land whose displays have been receiving great attention.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to learn that the national gallery plans to open an enlarged French section to works of art from the province of Quebec.

I am well aware that the art school in our province has acquired a substantial reputation. I am therefore very proud to notice now that the director of our national gallery intends to open to this art a larger section.

(Text):

As was mentioned by the previous speaker, this building bears the name of a distinguished Canadian governor general. As far back as 1880 the national gallery was brought into being. Sir, I remember when I was in high school—

Mr. Pickersgill: In 1880?

Mr. Grafftey: Not quite, but almost. I remember when I was in high school visiting the home of my late aunt, Prudence Heward, of whom I think I have great reason to be proud, where the Canadian group of painters often met. I remember speaking to someone at one of those group meetings who told me that back at the time of confederation, at the corner of Wellington and Bank streets, strangers might have thought they were gazing on a stable, yet appearance belied the fact that this structure really housed the supreme court. It was topped by a skylight, and through that skylight the rays of heaven were first shed on the national gallery which consisted of one small room less than 30 feet square. What a change we see today—a change which is incredible when we realize that 1867 is not so long ago, and that we are a young nation. It is a change that is incredible when it would seem that of necessity many of our citizens were primarily preoccupied with the pioneering, economic considerations of a challenging young country. For this reason we are proud of our Canadian artists and of our gallery.

It has been said we can best judge a man by the company he keeps, and so perhaps we can judge a country in many ways by the art it produces and appreciates. Every great country the world over has produced great art in some form or other.

We know, in Canada, that most of the early painting was done by artists who had migrated from Europe and New England and, having brought with them their material outlook and national traditions, they painted the Canadian scene coloured by their previous life and training. Even the native born painters who followed soon turned to the ateliers of Europe for their guidance. But then came the now famous group of seven and a true Canadian art seemed to be taking form. At the dawn of the century the French impressionists turned the thoughts of the Canadian painter to the pictorial possibilities of his own land. After studying abroad, artists returned with vigour and enthusiasm to paint the subjects of their native provinces.

Yet, whether we are talking about these early movements—the group of seven and the subsequent association of the Canadian group of painters—or the new modern schools, be they impressionists or not, Canadian art has never been merely a vehicle for the expression of a narrow nationalism. While depicting Canada and the Canadian spirit it has always upheld the true traditions of a universal art. We know that our artists and the national gallery under its able director will continue in this work, for a truly Canadian art with universal application has a real and peaceful message for the world of today.

I have already made reference to the group of seven. More has been written about this group than any other aspect of Canadian culture. The time was ripe and they expressed the rising tide of a new national spirit. I believe it was Charles Comfort who said:

> They had just the right blend of national idealism, crusade, lyricism, audacious enterprise, and intellectual and economic independence necessary to make the movement the success it was. At the time the group of seven was preparing for its first exhibition in May of 1920, we had become a confident young nation.

In an official statement made by the group in February of 1933, it was stated, in part, that members of the group of seven have:

> —always maintained for themselves and others the right of freedom of expression, believing that only in diversity of outlook will there ever be a widespread interest in the arts of this country.

So it follows that true art only flourishes when our real democratic freedoms are truly preserved. It has been said before and I repeat it here this evening:

> The spark from heaven, who picks it up? The crowd, never. The individual, always.

Free individual expression in the arts must flourish best under our form of democratic government which is so keenly attuned to the finest aspirations of the individual.

We were told that the first world war was the war to end all wars. Many felt that promise to be an absolute truth. This notion even coloured the creative energies of our artists. They saw a colourful, ordered world key-noted with a feeling of peace and security.

The situation following world war II is different. There is a real danger to the freedom of the individual and the true spiritual democracy for which we in the west stand. The creative artist in Canada today reflects a very different sort of a world as compared with that reflected by artists in the decade after world war II. As one of the younger Canadian painters said before the royal commission on arts, letters and science in Montreal:

> Canadian painting is Canadian only by reason of being first of all painting.

Canadian painting is increasingly appreciated abroad. The admiration of the critics was aroused at the Wembley exhibition in 1924-25 and at the exposition of the Jeu de Paume in Paris in 1927. Today our young painters are being judged on the same footing as young painters from other lands.

It is true to say that it is in the field of painting that the Canadian arts are best known at home and abroad, although if I may digress very briefly I thing that even the painters must admit that Canadians have great reason to be proud—and perhaps I am being unfair in mentioning only two names—of our Maureen Forresters and Glenn Goulds.

To return to my main theme, I believe it is true to say that it is in the field of painting that the Canadian arts are best known at home and abroad. Our reputation in the arts is perhaps based mainly on our painting at this time. Certainly it has been most consistent in expressing a real spirit of Canadianism.

In its brief to the royal commission on arts, letters and science, 1949-51, the federation of Canadian artists recommended that:

> —the whole conception of the functions of the national art gallery be so revised and extended that it shall become the dynamic center of activity in the visual arts throughout the whole of Canada's urban and rural population.

The hon. lady under whose department the national gallery comes has pretty well guaranteed us that, under the able direction of the director, this is becoming, bit by bit, a real fact.

The gallery supports and encourages many travelling exhibitions, as in the past. Its services, as has been said, extend into every corner of the nation. While located in Ottawa, as I said before, the gallery is performing a valuable service across the breadth and width of this land. For that reason I could not resist the temptation of taking up the time of the committee while I congratulated the minister and the gallery on the magnificent task they are performing in Canada today. As my friend the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate so aptly put it, "Not by bread alone do we exist".

Mr. Fisher: After hearing that deeply lyrical tribute to Canadian arts I think we all appreciate and understand why the Prime Minister, whenever he has to make a speech relating to this field, takes the trouble to consult the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

It is not my intention to be lyrical at all.

An hon. Member: The hon. gentleman could not be.

Mr. Fisher: I want to know how much money has been spent on taking art exhibitions to smaller centres. I know there have been exhibits in larger centres but I am interested in communities with a population of less than 50,000. How many exhibitions went out and what is the estimate of the number of people who saw them last year? I should also like to know what are the plans for extending this service.

Mrs. Fairclough: In reply to the hon. gentleman let me say that we do not have the figures of attendance for specific places. We have a record of the travelling exhibitions and an estimate would be that they have been viewed by about 250,000 people in all but what the number would be for each place I could not say.

I believe I can tell the hon. member where these exhibitions were held, but I may not be able to pick out the communities with a population of less than 50,000. As a matter of fact, one of the difficulties in this regard is that the gallery must be careful in sending out exhibitions to ensure that the paintings will be properly protected. These exhibitions cannot be housed in buildings which are not reasonably fireproof, nor can they be displayed under circumstances where proper protection cannot be afforded. This would be one of the reasons why some of the smaller centres could not benefit from these displays from time to time.

Some of the places which might fall into the category about which the hon. member asks are Brantford, Peterborough and Brandon. Etobicoke, of course, is part of metropolitan Toronto; I suppose it is a separate municipality. Islington, again the same would apply there.

Mr. Fisher: Perhaps the minister would let me make my point in regard to this. Over the years the national film board has developed a type of field service that takes its offerings out to the people. It is not an excellent parallel, but they do get their films out to the ordinary people in the smaller places. They have coverage mapped out. One cannot get any conception at all from the hon. lady's estimates of the national gallery of Canada, as to the number of people who are doing this job of distributing and making exhibits. I know that in eastern Ontario a couple of art circles have been built up and I think especially of one that revolves around Queen's University into which exhibits of the national gallery can dovetail or fit. I insist—and I have got the parochial northwestern Ontario view of this—that the national gallery does not mean a thing in the main except for illustrations for history books and that sort of thing until there are exhibits in that part of the country. I should like to see some indication from the estimates that there is some plan to expand and develop those services. I do not feel too sorry for the people in Brantford or Etobicoke if they cannot get to national gallery exhibits because they can go to a good art gallery in Toronto. They can go to museums there. This does not apply to people in the hinterland, in the district areas. I cannot see why this area should not demand service. There are countless members in this house who are demanding that the C.B.C. get out and provide national television coverage for everybody in the country. The hon. member for Churchill is an example of this. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has the same feeling.

If we are to have national cultural agencies, surely they must keep before them, as we are insisting the C.B.C. does, the conception of national service. It is very hard for a musuem or gallery, oriented to Ottawa and to development here, to keep this in front of them especially when they have a magnificent plant and a big establishment. What I should like to suggest to the minister and to the director of the gallery is that fewer than one half of 1 per cent of my constituents will ever come to Ottawa. The distance is from 800 to 1,000 miles and in a situation such as this I think these cultural effects have to go to the people.

I have said this before in connection with both the museum and the art gallery and I should like to underline it again. I ask the hon. lady whether she can just indicate to us how many people in the national gallery are directly involved in what you might call field service, and what are the plans for improving and expanding it?

Mrs. Fairclough: In answer to the last question, there are seven persons at the gallery and two in the field. I might tell the hon. member that in the current estimates we have an item which will cover charges for designing special exhibits for the exhibition extension service to cover the very point that he raises, namely that of making exhibitions available to smaller centres.

I think he was quite right in what he said. It is a matter that is getting the attention of the director and his staff, and we propose to follow this course and gradually expand the extension service to the point where these exhibits may be made available to the smaller communities to a greater extent than they have been heretofore.

I might just say to the hon. member I do not believe that you can actually compare an exhibition of paintings with the showing of films, because for one thing the handling is entirely different and display is on a different basis. Security is also on a different basis. Almost every aspect of service is different in the two fields. I am sure the hon. member would not want to place valuable paintings, particularly those which cannot be replaced, in jeopardy, as they undoubtedly would be in some centres. This is the reason why this whole field is being explored and why we are asking in the current estimates for an amount for this specific purpose.

Mr. Fisher: In this matter of field service, the national film board has expanded its service by putting people out in the field to exploit the field and build up connections so that they know the people who can look after projectors and that sort of thing. They train them; they develop them. They know that right across the country there are people who are interested in developing films. If the national gallery is not prepared to do this I do not know who else can do it. If you have only two field officers in all of Canada, that is a rather petty figure to carry out this chore. I happen to know one of them personally. I know the very good work she does, but how can she possibly cope with and look after this tremendous area in other than a hit-or-miss way? It is just impossible to cover all the settlers from the lakehead to the west coast, let us say, who would appreciate art exhibits. I know the Toronto art gallery, for example, tries to co-operate very much. As a matter of fact, I would suggest that the Toronto art gallery is really doing a chore in Ontario in this particular field that the national gallery should be doing.

In closing, I should like to suggest to the minister that next year a number of us from the smaller places would be delighted to hear that this phase of the gallery's activities had been boosted immensely.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Chairman, I just wish to make one or two brief comments. I think we ought to be grateful to the hon. member for Kootenay West for bringing to our attention the matters that he did tonight. This is not the first time that we are indebted to his diligent and exploring mind. I was very interested to hear what he had to say about the Marquis of Lorne, though it is very difficult for a Macdonnell to be fair to the memory of a Campbell after the unfortunate incident at Glencoe, but I think we should try to be magnanimous in these matters.

I was very interested in the suggestion he made and also in the suggestion made by the hon. member for Port Arthur as to the importance of making available to the public the treasures which we have. If anyone has any doubt as to the importance which art, painting and literature should occupy in human life let us remind ourselves that that peerless leader of men, Churchill, in the midst of war, and all the other things which he was doing, found time both for writing and painting.

I should like to say one more thing with reference to the pictures of world war II which I understand are available. To those of us whose memories go back to world war I, it is always, I think, a satisfying experience to go to the Senate chamber where those fine murals recalling the first world war are available. I do not know whether we have anything similar with regard to the second world war, but I would suggest with deference that after all that was one of the great periods of our national life when life was lived at its intensest. I do suggest that there ought to be somewhere available, not 10 or 20 years from now, the best records which we have of those days which we all remember very well.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Chairman, this discussion has revolved around art. Unlike my friend from Kootenay West, I have no knowledge of nudes; I know very little about the Marquis of Lorne. Perhaps what I am about to say may be slightly out of the purview of the debate. If it is, I ask for indulgence. The wisdom of the ages, sir—and the hon. member for Greenwood touched on this in his reference to that great Englishman, Sir Winston Churchill and his paintings and writings. The wisdom of the ages is before us in words, and I am deeply concerned with the creation of a real national library. It was my impression some time ago that there were two countries in the world without a national library, Canada and Ghana. I learned later that Ghana had a national library and I was informed that there were the rudiments of a national library in Canada.

The Chairman: Order. May I suggest to the hon. member that his remarks will be more appropriate under vote 319 which has to do with the public archives and national library.

Mr. Brunsden: Thank you, sir.

Mr. McGee: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I did not hear the remarks of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and the hon. member for Kootenay West and perhaps I may refer to matters they have already raised. I also regret very much that I did not hear the earlier part of the speech of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

It is not very often that I have occasion to quarrel with the hon. member for Greenwood either philosphically or with respect to the very profound and valuable contributions he makes to the house, but I am afraid we part company on the subject of the murals in the Senate. I have the greatest respect for those persons, the hon. member particularly, who served in the first world war. Several of my uncles are buried in France as a result of that conflict. I understand that the murals in the other place are the result of the generosity of a wealthy Canadian and I sometimes find myself wondering whether what goes on in the other place is perhaps essentially none of our business in the House of Commons. However, occasionally our duty requires us to visit there, and I must confess that I am deeply unimpressed by the particular art form to be seen there.

I understand that these murals were painted and presented immediately after the first world war and the further coincidence of the burning of the parliament buildings. I do not know whether it is the business of the minister or the gallery, but I should like to offer the suggestion that consideration might be given to having something in the form of murals in the other place that would be more representative of Canada. Canada existed before the first world war and has continued to exist since. Great events have occurred in every area of our national life, and to devote the entire space there simply to murals of the first world war seems to me, quite apart from my own artistic evaluation of them, something that might be reconsidered. Procedures in the other place are not the most mobile in the world and if we start now, perhaps by the time some of us are old enough to qualify, something may have happened in the interval.

I am concerned about the national gallery. I had occasion to visit the gallery last session during the noon hour in response to the notices which are sent to members, for which I personally am very grateful. I was impressed with the calibre and standard of the Van Gogh exhibit particularly, but there is something that has always concerned me about the gallery. I refer to the hours that the gallery is open. The population of Ottawa is made up largely of civil servants and those whose activities relate in a very important way to the civil service. If we are to stay within the framework of an eight hour day, it seems to me some consideration should be given to shortening the hours the gallery is open during the early part of the day and extending the time for viewing in the evening.

As far as the people of Ottawa are concerned, by opening the gallery when people go to work and having it closed when people are free to go and visit the gallery it seems to me that in a sense we are defeating the purpose of the gallery. I suggest that some consideration be given to staggering the hours so that people generally in Ottawa will be able to visit the gallery in the evening.

In the township of North York, in my constituency, exhibitions are held at the North York library from time to time. I participated in the opening of one exhibition which was a one man show by Fred Varley. This grand old man of Canadian art was there in person, and as full of life and personality as his paintings. In connection with the exhibition, films of the life of Varley made by the national film board were shown in another part of the library building.

I have suggested in the house before that particularly when the house is not sitting, films such as "The Sceptre and the Mace" should be shown in the parliament buildings on a continuous basis for the benefit of tourists. It seems to me this is something that might be done at the national gallery as well and if it were combined with evening shows at the gallery couples with their children could spend a few hours not only viewing the paintings on display but also finds films related to the exhibits. The national film board has some excellent films dealing with all of the members of the group of seven and several other prominent Canadian artists since that time.

I am suggesting two things, that we think about changing the hours and also combining films with the exhibits. I do not think it would take too much imagination to bring this about. I am sure there are documentary films available from other countries, and again I am thinking of the Van Gogh exhibit. There must be films available dealing with his life that could be obtained and used. It seems to me the most important thing is to take full advantage of the national gallery and to have it open for a longer period during the evening.

I asked this delicate question last year and it was not answered. I hope I do a little better this year. I should like to know two things. I should like to know how the restaurant is doing in terms of profit or loss. I have never managed to eat there but I have been in the area on two occasions during the noon hour and the restaurant seemed to be well filled. If it is not doing too well, as I suspect it is not, I wonder whether any thought has been given to reconsidering the original director's suggestion that there should be a cocktail lounge in connection with the restaurant. I understand from some of my friends in this restaurant business that one way to guarantee putting the operation on a profitable basis, and improving the quality of food, is to combine a cocktail lounge with the restaurant. I should like the minister to enlighten me on these aspects of the situation.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the minister speaks, I should like to make one or two comments which will save her making an extra speech. In the first place, I am sorry the hon. member for Kootenay West is temporarily absent from the chamber because I wanted to take the strongest possible exception to his definition of a unionist. He does not seem to realize that unionists were Liberals, and the extraordinary definition that he conjured out of the air tonight was not really one of his major contributions to history but rather, I would say, to fancy.

I should also like to tell the hon. member for York-Scarborough that once before there was a politician who suggested that those first world war murals be taken out of the Senate and he is no longer in public life.

While I am not seeking to go into any of the circumstances and to ask the hon. lady to take action in connection with them because what has happened has happened, I want to express my very great regret at the resignation and severance of his connection with the national gallery of Mr. Donald Buchanan. Mr. Donald Buchanan, in my opinion, has contributed as much to the development of the appreciation of the arts as has any living Canadian, bar none. Prior to that time, in his connection with the C.B.C., he did more than did any other single person to develop the Canadian tradition of controversial broadcasting on a fair and reasonable basis. That is another thing that I think was worked out almost uniquely in this country, almost before it was worked out anywhere else. He happens to be an old personal friend but I am not saying this on that account. To me, he is one of the Canadians who has made a contribution to our cultural life that is almost unique. I hope that he, having severed his connection with the gallery, does not intend to sever his connection with Canada and that he will find some other useful field into which he can direct his great energies and his sensitive appreciation of those things which I think all too many of us do not appreciate enough.

I should also like to make one observation —and perhaps the minister would like to extend this a bit—about what the hon. member for Port Arthur said. I happen to be one of those Canadians who, quite a long time ago now, first became interested in Canadian pictures not because of what was done by the art gallery of Toronto or by any other institution but because of the wonderful reproductions which over the years have been made available to the Canadian public at extremely low cost indeed, and which have been promoted fairly actively by the national gallery. Although it is true that there are grave difficulties and no one should underestimate them; we have seen what happens to pictures even in the art gallery of Toronto and in some other places, for example recently in Vancouver. The safety of the originals must be the first consideration because these pictures are extremely valuable. However, by the use of reproductions and, as the hon. member for York-Scarborough said a moment ago, by the use of films and that sort of thing, there is a possibility of doing something. Seeing reproductions is not as good, I admit, as being able to see the originals but it is a fairly good substitute; for the beginner, I think in many ways it is almost better than the original. This kind of service can be made available, in the case of reproductions, to any place that has a post office and in the case of films, to any place in which electricity in any of its varied forms of production can be made available.

Finally, may I say that I think it would be useful if the hon. lady would clear up all this mass of rumour that has been going on for the last six months or so about whether the new empire builder in the government, namely the Minister of Trade and Commerce, has gobbled up the design centre and has pushed the hon. lady out into the cold. I think it is about time that the government came clean and told parliament just what the score is, who is responsible for the design centre, and who must argue for it before treasury board. I have no doubt whatever that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, if he even has his toe in the door, will take all the credit. But if the hon. lady has the responsibility, I would rather see her get it, I may say quite frankly.

I thought I understood her to say that the north gallery, the one facing Albert street and formerly employed for the exposition of design projects, was to provide additional space for paintings. Therefore, we should like to know where the exhibits of the design centre are going to be.

Mrs. Fairclough: First of all, I should like to say that we all regret, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has said, that Mr. Buchanan has severed his connection with the gallery. We agree with everything he has said in that regard. However, Mr. Buchanan has chosen to live in Europe and to continue his interest in creative writing. We hope that this will not be a permanent separation from Canada, but it is a matter of his own choice and something over which we have no control.

With reference to the industrial design centre, may I say this? It is true that it has been transferred from the national gallery to the Department of Trade and Commerce, where I understand it will be set up under slightly different circumstances, but that is a matter for the Minister of Trade and Commerce to explain to the house.

I should like to tell the hon. member for York-Scarborough that the national gallery is open every day except Christmas day. It is open each day from ten o'clock a.m. to six o'clock p.m. On Tuesdays it is open right through until ten o'clock p.m. Films are shown in the theatre there every Saturday and on some Tuesday evenings. The extension of these services, of course, is dependent to a large degree on the utilization of the service and on the funds which we can acquire for an expansion program.

Mr. Pitman: I should like to go back to this problem which the hon. member for Port Arthur raised. If we are going to have a national gallery, it must be very much national in interest. I certainly appreciate the opinion of the hon. lady that sending originals to small places is a great risk indeed. In fact, I know of one librarian who loses a great deal of sleep when one of these exhibits turns up at his particular establishment. It is a tremendous responsibility and the problems of fire and theft are very great indeed. I wonder whether the answer does not lie in what the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate suggested. The printing processes today are getting better than they were in the past. I think you get a clarity and depth and colour through these printing processes which are almost as accurate as the originals. Possibly you could send exhibitions of these prints throughout Canada. I think we can only really gain an appreciation of art perhaps at a very early stage in our development.

I wonder whether the minister would think over the possibilities of gathering together kits of paintings—for instance of the Kane paintings, Canadian historical paintings or renaissance paintings and sending them to schools. Perhaps this has already been started. I know the prints which are on sale at the national gallery are excellent indeed. I think this is an area in which the national gallery could perhaps expand its services. I am sure that it would receive the support of a great many members of this house who represent smaller centres. With these few remarks I think I should like to place my vote—and possibly join the hon. member for York-Scarborough in political oblivion—against those murals in the Senate as well.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, art is something about which I know absolutely nothing. Therefore I must speak on it.

An hon. Member: Go right ahead.

Mr. Winch: When I say that, I do not say it in any boastful manner at all. I am sorry that I just happen to be one of those individuals who, in music are tone deaf and for whom art does not do anything at all, even though I have visited some of the finest art galleries of the world. I know that I am one of the few who are just not affected by art and who do not understand it. However, the majority enjoy it. Therefore I certainly want to add my words to those of other hon. members with regard to the possibility of getting more of the benefits of the national gallery to far more of the people of Canada. I think it is a shame that we should have valuable paintings in storage when there are so many people across Canada who would like to see them and to enjoy them. I say they will. My greatest experience with an art gallery was in connection with the Vancouver art gallery at the time of the sit-down strike, when they put us out of there with tear-gas bombs. Maybe that is why I am not too fond of art.

An hon. Member: Art made you cry?

Mr. Winch: Art really made me cry that day, and I don't mean maybe.

An hon. Member: Apparently it did not hurt you.

Mr. Winch: It did not hurt me at all when it came to getting votes, if that is what you mean. The main reason for these remarks, Mr. Chairman, is the information we have received that the pictures of the first world war are still in storage.

It was a great experience for me a year and a half ago in Australia when I visited their most famous war memorials. We found that in the cities of Melbourne and Canberra the major attraction to the people living in those cities, and to visitors, was the war memorials and the fact that they were built around a graphic study of pictures showing what the first world war was actually like and what the conditions actually were.

The reaction of the young people in particular, when they saw these pictures of what their fathers and relatives had to go through at that time not only gave them a thirst for knowledge of the first world war and of their ancestors, but it also illustrated to them the horrors of war and gave them the determination that we must not have another one.

I have not, of course, seen these pictures which are in storage in Ottawa, but after hearing the comments in Canberra and Melbourne I think it would be not only in the interests of education in art and history, but an indication that we should not repeat in the future something that happened in the past. I am sure this would be the reaction if these paintings were assembled and put on display on a basis similar to that in Australia. They would be an education in art, history and in the horrors of war. I certainly hope that if this has not been thought of in the past by the minister and the director of the national art gallery that they will now give some thought to it. There is a threefold value to be gained by this type of picture of the first world war.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I invite the hon. member for Vancouver East to visit the sixth floor of the national gallery, where the paintings of the first world war are on continuous exhibition and are being rotated all the time.

We have more of these paintings than we can hang at one time. There is a continuous exhibition on the sixth floor of the national gallery.

Mr. Winch: I know, but my idea was to have all these pictures properly planned and on display at all times, as they are in Melbourne. People take the entire day just going around from one picture to the other, and it is a real education.

Mrs. Fairclough: I am sorry; we have not the space to do that.

Mr. McGee: Mr. Chairman, in view of the remarks of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate concerning political oblivion I should just like to make this comment, that if after some of the speeches I have heard him make in this House of Commons he did not commit himself to political oblivion years ago, I am not too worried about the remarks I made concerning the Senate.

This occurred to me on reflection after the minister's reply. There was another world war and we all profoundly hope it will turn out to be the last world war, with the emphasis on the "last". If the Senate is somehow wedded to this warlike atmosphere perhaps some thought might be given to the gallery commissioning some artists who still have vivid recollections of the last world war. I refer to people like Hindman and others who were commissioned by the services during the war to paint some murals. These might alternate on the walls of the Senate. They seem to spend money doing some odd things over there. I have noticed that they seem to be involved in painting their names on the ceiling of the foyer. This is an interesting occupation, but I think this idea of commissioning artists to paint second world war scenes might be considered.

With regard to the minister's reply concerning the hours of opening of the national gallery, if I understood her correctly it works out to one evening a week, Tuesday. I think this is a good thing. I was not aware of this. In view of the fact that the house is sitting and most of us are here, perhaps we would not get an opportunity to go over there on Tuesday evenings. It might be a good thing to extend the hours of opening to at least one more evening. The minister also mentioned that films are shown on Saturday afternoons. I would suggest that these films be also shown during the evening sessions.

As I mentioned in my previous remarks, I did not receive an answer last year to my question about the restaurant. I am serious in this regard. I should like to know the financial situation of the restaurant, whether it is making or losing money. I should also like to know what is the position with regard to Alan Jarvis' idea of a cocktail lounge. I did not receive an answer to these questions last year or this evening.

Mrs. Fairclough: I did overlook the question of the restaurant when I replied to the hon. member. But this is not the responsibility of the gallery; it is a concession which is handled between the Department of Public Works and the Canadian National Institute for the Blind.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I am sure the minister will welcome this general discussion in support of this particular vote. A nation is possibly, in this secular world of ours, more often characterized by contemporaries by achievement in the industrial, commercial and secular fields, but not always in the judgment of history. In connection with those things of the spirit, heart and mind a nation is likely to be judged with more cogency than by any other form of endeavour.

By our interest in art, music, education and in these general areas of intellectual activity, we will be possibly judged in the future more than by our material achievements. Therefore I think it is well that when the inspiration comes we should join in expressing our views, immature obviously as some of them have been thus far, on these matters that have such great significance.

When I speak of immaturity of course I do not in this particular have in mind the minister herself. I do not wish anyone to think that because the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and I are associated in support of the same political ideology we are fully in accord with all aspects of our national life. I do not wish to assert that in this particular he does not enjoy preeminence over me both in terms of experience and authority. But I should like it to be known that he is not the only one in this party—and I say this by way of no reflection on him and his attainments—who is interested in this matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have never claimed to be the only egghead.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friend says he is not the only egghead, and I would be the last to claim that distinction. I simply wish him to know—and I say this in the friendliest manner to a colleague—that there are others who have their views about the desirability of furthering an interest in Canadian painting and Canadian culture.

We all recognize the hon. gentleman to be pre-eminent in that field. I do not want him to think I am in any way taking away from his grandeur or the high priority that he has in that regard. I agree with him, however, in what he said about Mr. Donald Buchanan. Mr. Buchanan, was a contemporary of mine at the university. That gentleman has made a contribution, first of all to the gallery, to the design centre, and of course through his writings—his two books —particularly to Canadian painting and to an appreciation of art itself. His books on Morrice and on Canadian painting stamp him as a man of very great cultivation. I would hope that his sojourn outside the country at this time may be temporary, so that he may return to Canada and continue the contribution which undoubtedly, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has said, he has made to this country and to Canadian painting, and to the appreciation of art generally.

He is not, of course, the only one who has made a contribution. I think we should in this national forum, this national parliament, recognize the contributions made by some other Canadians. It is dangerous to mention any Canadian in particular for fear of overlooking others who have also made contributions. However I think it is proper to remember the interest taken by the former governor general, Mr. Massey, both as a director of the national gallery and as one who has the direction of the Massey foundation. The accomplishments of Hart House and the rich contribution which Hart House has made to Canadian painting are largely the result of his imagination and initiative.

There are others like Mr. John Macauley of Winnipeg, one of the notable collectors, I believe of painting in Canada—not only Canadian paintings, but the works of some of the acknowledged masters. Mr. Macauley's service as a director of the national gallery was, I think, a distinguished contribution in this field. I think it deserves to be mentioned.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He is still a director? I am glad to know that. I thought he had retired about a year ago. I am sure the director of the gallery and the minister would acknowledge at once the contribution he has made and continues to make. There are others like the late Mr. Southam, Mr. Percy Fell and many others who, perhaps, unnoticed by many of us have added to our enrichment by their interest and by their unselfish devotion to the direction of the national gallery. I agree with the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate—and I seem increasingly more to establish the fact that I am more in agreement with him than in disagreement— I agree with him that the reproduction of some of the Canadian paintings, in particular those which have been distributed throughout our libraries, throughout our schools, and right in this building in the offices of many members of parliament serve a most desirable purpose.

By the way, I think we owe to the late Mr. Claxton much of the inspiration for the distribution of these reproductions. I well remember first going into Mr. Claxton's home in Montreal about 20 years ago and seeing there, I think, the strongest collection of Canadian paintings I had ever seen in any one home, except, possibly in that of Canada's former governor general. Mr. Claxton took a great interest in Canadian painting. This was only one facet of his great life. He, in his way, inspired many people to appreciate the value of the work of Canadian artists.

The value of these reproductions, however, lies not only in their quality, but in bringing to many thousands of people in this country who are denied the opportunity of visiting galleries, either provincial or national, an acquaintanceship with some of the work of many of our Canadian artists whose original paintings are to be found in the national gallery or in some of the provincial galleries. I well remember once visiting Mr. Henderson in Qu'Appelle, one of those Canadian artists who has perhaps done as much as any other western artist in portraying, particularly, the Qu'Appelle valley and, possibly, to a lesser extent the prairies. I believe three of his paintings are now to be found in the national gallery. I remember his telling me how much he appreciated the initiative taken by Mr. Claxton in seeing to it that two of his paintings were reproduced. He showed me one of them, and the satisfaction which was visible on Mr. Henderson's face justifies my recounting this incident tonight in the hope that this work of reproduction will be continued.

As I say, the value is not so much in the quality of the reproduction, as in that it affords to many Canadians an opportunity of seeing something of these works. This suggests to my mind that there is a strong argument not only for providing reproductions of valuable Canadian paintings, but for seeing to it that there are also reproductions of other paintings. Painting, like poetry, is something which has a national touch about it. But surely, also, it is something which extends across national boundaries. The Canadian interest in painting should not be confined to Canadian painting. It should extend to the works of all artists—the men and women great and small, who have put the consequences of their imagination on canvas—the great painters, the great classicists.

These works, too, should be appreciated and known, and the opportunity for doing so should be afforded. These, too, should be seen by Canadians. I would hope that the suggestion made by the hon. member for Vancouver East might be acted upon, perhaps to a greater extent than is now the case. It may be difficult to provide for mobile exhibitions of some particular paintings, but it should not be difficult to provide for Canadians to see in their local galleries some of the paintings we have here in the national gallery. I do not know what the technical difficulties are, but we now have springing up in Canada in many communities, where a decade ago there were no local galleries at all, galleries and strong local groups themselves engaged in painting and in encouraging the establishment and maintenance of local galleries. I have in mind, for instance, my own community, the city of Windsor, an industrial city, where we have at Willistead, an art gallery in the Willistead library—a very fine local gallery. I should like to pay tribute tonight to the men and women connected with that gallery who have done so much to acquaint the citizens of my city and my county with the value of Canadian painting and of painting generally.

The other day I attended an exhibition in that gallery, an exhibition of paintings executed by citizens of Essex county. It was indeed a revelation to me, as I am sure it was to many others. I suggest to the minister and the director that there is a magnificent opportunity to demonstrate not only to Canadians in my part of the country, but to citizens of the United States across the Detroit river, the high standard of Canadian painting, through exhibiting Canadian works of art in the Willistead gallery.

In the city of Detroit there is a very fine municipal gallery, the Detroit institute of arts, but as one who frequents that gallery from time to time, I cannot recall that there are any Canadian paintings displayed there. I am sure that if the Willistead gallery were adequately stocked with Canadian paintings these would be viewed not only by Canadians living on the Canadian side but by people from the United States living across the Detroit river. The admirable work being done by the Detroit institute of arts could be supplemented by the work of the Willistead gallery, in the sense I have indicated, by providing an increased opportunity of exhibiting Canadian paintings in the Willistead gallery.

I wish to join with the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate in another submission he made. Here again I am expressing agreement, not disagreement, as I indicated I was about to do when I began these cursory remarks. I agree with the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, that vigorous and dynamic personality, must not be allowed to push the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration out of the design centre. The design centre was never intended for the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and I, and I am sure the hon. member for Greenwood and the hon. member for York-Scarborough and all the other great intellectual precursors in this committee, will gather behind the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in resisting the philistines, like the Minister of Justice and others, who seek to invade territory which under the law as it now exists was intended to come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. To say that the design centre—

Mr. Grafftey: There is no such design.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I must take this occasion to enlist the co-operation—and this is the first occasion on which I have done so—of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi, who sits on the opposite side of the chamber this evening, because I am sure the hon. member wants to fully appreciate the significance of the quality which now attends this intellectual dissertation.

I feel there is nothing further I can usefully add with respect to this matter except to say this. Our country, like every other country, will be judged not by its material achievements alone, but by achievements in writing, in painting and in the appreciation of those things that do move men and nations and mould the character of peoples. It is because I believe that to be the case that I join with the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who in his brilliant exposition of Canadian painting tonight, has inspired me into supporting at least this one vote put forward by the present government.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: We are hearing from all the eggheads.

Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I thoroughly enjoyed the oration this evening of that famous friend of agriculture and of labour who apparently spends his time visiting in the homes of millionaires viewing their art collections. I come from way out in the jungle, Dawson Creek to be exact. I wonder if the hon. gentleman would care to make an arrangement with some of these wonderful friends of his who have these paintings to send an exhibit of painting up to Dawson Creek?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will certainly do my best.

Mr. Small: Mr. Chairman, I would consider myself fortunate indeed this evening if I were able to get on at this end of the program. I can only offer up a very fervent prayer at this juncture that I am not included in the galaxy of hon. members to whom the hon. member for Essex East referred in his wonderful remarks.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

I sat here while the hon. gentleman spoke, wondering if the hon. gentleman's latest canonization has gone to his head because he was waxing so eloquent, especially when he was defending his colleague the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate.

I was highly impressed by the remarks made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate when he opened the debate. The hon. gentleman started off on a very high and esoteric plane and the debate was carried on in this vein by the hon. member for Kootenay West. I thought it was simply remarkable.

The hon. gentleman started off by saying that he was most impressed by this wonderful new building which houses the national art gallery, the Lorne building. He explained how he looked out of his office and envisaged the genius of the architects who had brought forth this magnificent new structure which was going to go down in history as a monument to the Liberal regime which got the vision.

I continued to listen the hon. member for Kootenay West who gave a very graphic description which held us all entranced. It was then revealed that the new building is going to be occupied by the national art gallery only temporarily and the actual national art gallery is going to be located somewhere else. At that moment the vision began to fade and grow dim.

The hon. gentleman then went on to say that the building was named after the Marquis of Lorne, a former governor general. On the basis of his description it might well have been named after the marquis of forlorn because this magificent new building is to become very forlorn when the art gallery is moved and placed somewhere else. We have learned that the national gallery is going to be moved and it will also be forlorn in its new location because apparently it is going to be put out where no one will go out and visit it.

One interesting fact that came to light during the debate was that attendance at the national gallery has been simply phenomenal, that the attendance grew from practically nothing to an astounding figure. I believe the obvious explanation is that the national gallery is now located in the right place. It is easily accessible and many people are able to visit it.

Before too long others will probably have a vision of the new art gallery which they will put on paper so all of us can see it. I hope they will bear in mind the fact that the building should be centrally located so that it will be readily accessible.

The hon. member for Fort William was also very forlorn because the present national art gallery does not have a sign. As I listened to the hon. member I could not help but wonder what was the matter with the people in the sign business in Ottawa. I wondered why they had not got busy long ago and sold a sign to the national art gallery to identify it.

The hon. member said that he is forlorn because no one is going to visit the gallery. Who are we to believe? We have been told by one hon. member that the attendance has been magnificent and outstanding and could not have been better, and by another member that no one attended.

The hon. member for Kootenay West went on to say that instead of looking at the magnificent picture of the Marquis of Lorne the people moved over to examine a picture of a nude. The hon. gentleman was not standing in front of the picture of the Marquis but to the side. I suppose he was trying to get a side view of the nude.

This brought to my mind the fact that in the thirties Esquire magazine published some highly amusing cartoons. I recall seeing one depicting three paintings in an art gallery which told a story somewhat the reverse of the one told by the hon. member. One painting was of a nude, one was a somewhat dismal and flat landscape and the third was a rather dull still-life with flowers, and fruit on a plate. Where do you think the crowd had gathered? They had gathered in front of the landscape, and apparently the nude did not interest them at all. Apparently remarkable things happen in art galleries. However, I should like to say that the remarks made by the hon. member for Port Arthur and the hon. members for Peterborough and Scarborough were apropos. The hon. member for Vancouver East made a pertinent point which should be taken into consideration. With respect to the pictures in the Senate, the only reason I can give for their being there is that probably that is the only place large enough to hang them. Now that we have a new gallery perhaps we will find a place for them.

Let us get back to the matter of the art gallery. Mention was made tonight of how Canadian art came to life in the 1920's. It really came to the notice of the people of Canada because the artists of that day, called the magnificent group of seven, transmitted to canvas the rugged vigorous nature of Canada that no one else had been able to capture or surpass. They will go down in history. Some day you will find their paintings in the United States galleries and in other galleries throughout the world, and eventually those paintings will become highly valued and much wanted in the world's great art galleries. The only trouble is there will not be enough of them to go around. If there are not enough to go around, we can supply them with the abstract art or modern art.

On every occasion that I get an opportunity I visit the Toronto art gallery. They come up with some wonderful exhibits. Recently they had an exhibition of pictures by John Sargent. They also have some wonderful pictures on exhibition painted by Hals, Raeburn, Rembrandt and Van Dyck. Afterwards I went around and looked into the other rooms of the gallery where they have those abstracts. Of course, I am sure that the national gallery here has in its basement or someplace else carloads of these things that they would like to have taken away to the dump if they could get somebody to do it. Well, I generally have a look at these abstract canvases. I think it was Sir Winston Churchill who said when he was going to paint: "Think of an innocent, nice, beautiful piece of canvas that is going to suffer the desecration that we people put on it!" I look at these abstracts and I see what mental aberrations have been transmitted to canvas. Sometimes I wonder whether they have been smoking marijuana cigarettes or whether they have given themselves a jab in the arm with cocaine, or whether it is just mental torment or the remains of delirium tremens that they put on canvas. There they are. You make your decision, and then to get a lift you go back to the art gallery and look at the beautiful pictures that have come down from the middle ages, and you say to yourself, "What wonderful artists they were". Then we have to put up with this tripe called modern art that we see on the walls of art galleries.

After listening to what was said by the minister and by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, I thought what a wonderful picture we have now. We have the right building in the right place. We have the right director at the right time in the right place. Then I realized that it was only an illusion that we have not the right building in the right place. We have some other kind of building in the right place, but we do have the right director at the right time and we have to be thankful for that. I am going to leave this with hon. members tonight because I get tired trying to figure out the position of the members of the Liberal party. They argue between themselves as to who is going to get the honour for the emanation of this magnificent building, the admiration of the Liberal party. In the future we will get a good national gallery for the city of Ottawa, and it will be the vision of the Conservative party as usual.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to give an explanation perhaps to the hon.

member who has just spoken as to the magnificent attendance, and I was going to bring this up when we were listening to one of the doyens of the house, the hon. member for Essex East, discoursing on his appreciation of art from an intellectual point of view. The explanation, I would take it, as perhaps the hon. member for Essex East would give it, lies in this. Ottawa in the main, seems to be a Liberal city in so far as votes are concerned. One of the gentlemen to whom the hon. member was referring made this statement two years ago, that the Tories never did give a damn about art. If you reverse this to a certain degree, I think you perhaps have an explanation of a kind as to why the gallery is so popular in the city of Ottawa. But I do want to pass the information to the hon. member for York-Scarborough that there were a great number of painters out doing war painting in world war II. I do not know where the paintings are but they were out in the various units. Several were in the line. I remember one in our regiment. We were always looking at what he was painting. In Holland he was painting a bridge called Moerjsdik. It was the dullest painting I have ever encountered. I cannot say much about the man. He may not have been much of an artist but he was very capable in a game called stook, a western game. He exhibited great artistry in covering his hole card. At this he was very good.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think the hon. lady has ever given an answer about the design centre, and that was a serious question.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, I did. My hon. friend was busy talking to his colleague and he did not hear it. He can read it in Hansard.

Mr. Pickersgill: It must have been a very short answer. Perhaps the hon. lady can say whether the estimates for the design centre are still under her control and where the design centre is.

Mrs. Fairclough: The estimates for the design centre are in the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Pickersgill: Where is the design centre going to be?

Mrs. Fairclough: I think the hon. member will have to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Item agreed to.

254. Payment to the national gallery purchase account for the purpose of acquiring works of art in conformity with section 8 of the National Gallery Act, $200,000.

Mr. Best: I should like to make a few brief remarks on this particular vote, Mr. Chairman. I have enjoyed the debate so far this evening. I should like to congratulate the director of the National Art Gallery and his staff on the excellent work they are doing in their fine new building. It has been my privilege in a few moments that I have had to spare from time to time to visit this gallery, and I hope to do so more frequently in the future.

I should like to add to the remarks made by the hon. members for York-Scarborough and Port Arthur regarding war paintings of world war II. I believe we have a very fair number of these in our railway committee room in the parliament buildings. Great contributions in this field were made during world war II by the present director of the national gallery, Dr. Comfort, and people such as Mr. Will Ogilvy, Carl Schaeffer, and other prominent Canadian artists.

I was rather amazed at the self-admiration society we had here this evening on the other side of the house, and I refer particularly to the hon. members for Bonavista-Twillingate and Essex East. I felt that the hon. member for Essex East was rather crowding his way into the artistic sun, so to speak, staking out a piece of territory there, perhaps in jealous admiration of his predecessor the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate rising from his seat.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Quite true.

Mr. Best: We were surprised to hear the member for Essex East grant pre-eminence in the artistic field, as I believe he did, to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. This sort of admission is rare in this house, for pre-eminence in any field to be granted to someone else by the hon. member for Essex East.

Mrs. Fairclough: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member is under a misapprehension. He is now speaking on vote No. 253 which was passed some time ago. I thought No. 254 had been passed but we are wandering back to it again.

Mr. Best: No. I wanted to speak on 254, the purchase account, which we are now on.

Mrs. Fairclough: I thought the hon. member was talking on the other one.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member was just being as relevant as the rest of us.

Mr. Nowlan: Don't insult him.

Mr. Best: Briefly, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member referred to individuals as intellectual precursors. There are many precursors to intellect, including fish, so I am told—

Mr. Pickersgill: Quite right.

Mr. Best: —but perhaps we can go into that at length at some other time. I am interested in this vote because, to be frank, the amount of money has fluctuated greatly from year to year. I am very glad to see that the amount has been increased by $50,000 for 1961-62. In our national gallery we must have in my opinion paintings brought to Canada from many parts of the world, frequently at great cost. We must have paintings old and new from many countries as well as paintings from our own Canadian artists.

I think it is perhaps just as well that the national gallery does not buy on the basis of the sort of criticism or personal preference that may often be expressed in the House of Commons. In my view that is probably a healthy situation. We all have our personal ideas as to what we like in art, and our ideas in this field are probably as varied or even more so than in the field of politics.

I should like to remark that I hope the gallery is collecting representative works of young Canadian artists as widely as possible. I know they do this to some extent but I have heard some slight criticism in the past that certain groups of our prominent young artists may perhaps have been overlooked. I think our collections in this field should be truly representative as these young artists mature.

I am sure the gallery is also following another method which to a degree might be expanded. I have in mind keeping close track of our young Canadian artists so as to know where they are and what they are doing. Perhaps they might be catalogued to some extent so that they might be better represented in exhibitions in this country and abroad, and also from the point of view of purchases by buyers from other countries. These young artists will be the greatest force in this field in Canada in the future and I think it is of paramount importance that the national gallery continue its work of collecting the best examples of their work and perhaps offer them even more encouragement in this direction.

PUBLIC ARCHIVES AND NATIONAL LIBRARY

Public archives—

319. General administration and technical services, $716,268.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. lady would be agreeable to having the national film board called next so that the hon. member for Dollard, who cannot be here tomorrow, can make an observation or two.

Mrs. Fairclough: Is 319 carried?

Mr. Pickersgill: No. The suggestion I made was that we might call the film board before the archives because the hon. member for Dollard, who absolutely cannot be here tomorrow, would like to make one or two observations about the film board which is in his riding.

Mrs. Fairclough: I have no objection to that. I thought it was a little more convenient to take the archives and national library first because usually there is not as much discussion on them as there is on the film board. I thought we might leave the film board until the last but I have no objection if you wish to call vote 251.

Mr. Winch: You only have two and a half minutes.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that we proceed with vote 251?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item stands.

National film board—

251. Administration, production and distribution of films and other visual materials, $4,988,112.

Mr. Rouleau: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the minister most sincerely for calling the estimates of the national film board at this time. I only have a few words to say to the charming lady who happens to be the minister responsible for the film board and they will be words of praise for the work done by the board. I wish to congratulate the chairman and members of the board and its employees for the work they are doing.

The national film board was once described by an older friend of mine who also happens to be an old friend of the member for Russell—I refer to the mayor of Ottawa, Miss Charlotte Whitton—as the most important medium of communication and information. The purpose of the board is and has been ever since its creation to make Canada better known to the Canadian people and to contribute to the projection of Canada abroad. I am happy to say that the board has discharged its responsibilities very well and deserves our appreciation.

The national film board has been granted a well deserved citizenship award and the board quite rightly is exhibiting the national citizenship award in the entrance lobby of its headquarters in St. Laurent which happens to be in my constituency. This award speaks for itself.

With regard to the purpose of making Canada better known to the Canadian people, I was very much impressed by what I read in the annual report of the board for 1959-60. According to the report, the board completed during the fiscal year 1959-60 353 film productions. Furthermore, in promoting the use of Canadian films by groups of all kinds the board has put 10,182 prints of its films into circulation in Canada. Films produced by the board were distributed to the Canadian people, to people of other lands, to community organizations of all kinds, to commercial theatres and television stations.

As in previous years several films produced by the board were awarded prizes by various countries throughout the world, including France, Italy, Spain, Germany, Switzerland and the United States. In 1958 the minister asked parliament to vote an additional amount of money for the production of films in foreign languages. We as members of parliament cannot place too much emphasis on the importance of such productions if we are to give other nations of the world a proper projection of Canada and the Canadian people. In order that peoples of other lands who cannot understand either of the two official languages of Canada will receive our message, we should make available to them films produced by the national film board in their own languages. Having that in mind, Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the hon. lady three questions. I should like to know how much money the board is spending in foreign language versions, what the board will be spending in the next year and what is its present stock of foreign language versions of its films.

Before resuming my seat I should like to remind the board that we shall soon be celebrating the centennial of confederation in 1867. It is my opinion that the board should start working on the production of films relating to our history so that they may be ready in 1967 to show in Canada and abroad.

(Translation):

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I should like the national film board to be in a position to produce films, as of now, as a preliminary to the confederation centennial celebration.

The national film board could relate the history of two peoples who have united and worked in harmony in the past. Even if there were conflicts between them at times, both made Canada the great country we know now.

Canada's history, though brief, is none the less rich and the national film board could derive its inspiration from it to produce films which would make our country better known. Canadians as well as other people could benefit from such films.

(Text):

Mrs. Fairclough: Perhaps with the indulgence of the committee I could answer those three questions asked by the hon. member. This year $120,690 will be spent on foreign language versions. That is an increase in the appropriation of $30,000 over last year. We now have 700 versions in 34 languages. Next year we expect to have between 90 and 100 versions extra, over and above that number.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall vote 251 carry?

Mr. Winch: No.

Progress reported.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether I could make this suggestion to the house leader. In view of the fact that it now seems to be necessary for the Minister of Labour to inspire questions from his supporters in order to make explanations of his department, may I suggest that the government go ahead and call the labour estimates tomorrow so that we can debate these things in the house in a proper way.

Mr. Winch: May I ask the indulgence of the house to inquire what the business will be for tomorrow?

Mr. Nowlan: In reply to the leader of the opposition, may I say that the business of the house tomorrow is a continuation of the debate of the estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. After that, we will take up the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. I know that my hon. friend the house leader has usually given a forecast of the business of the house next week, although there have been some criticisms of that procedure. If the house would like me to indicate, as a forecast only but a probable forecast, what will happen next week, I will do so. On Monday we will continue with the budget resolutions of the Minister of Finance on which the house has spent some little time already and I assume that we shall be able to conclude this business some time during Monday. Then we will go on with the resolution on today's order paper dealing with the O.E.C.D. Then we shall take the pensions bill assuming it is reported back from the committee as I understand it will be. I believe that these three items will take up Monday and Tuesday. On Wednesday we will deal with the so-called disclosure bill or the financial statistics bill which I think is the better title for it. I refer to the bill which requires certain disclosures from corporations and unions. Then if the Department of Agriculture is not concluded tomorrow—and it will be lamentable if it is not concluded—we will go on with the Department of Agriculture estimates on Thursday and conclude with the Department of Fisheries on Friday.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no intention of taking the Department of Labour next week?

Mr. Nowlan: No.

It being seven minutes past ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

Questions

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

CONFERENCE ON AGING, WASHINGTON

Question No. 103—Mr. Benidickson:

1. Did members of the public service of Canada attend a conference on the aging held recently in Washington, U.S.A.?
2. If so, who attended?
3. Did the conference discuss a program for medical care for the aged, and, if so, what decisions or recommendations in this respect came from the conference?

Answer by: Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1. Yes, as observers.

2. Dr. E. A. Watkinson and Mrs. F. E. Hurst of the Department of National Health and Welfare, Dr. J. N. Crawford of the Department of Veterans Affairs, Mr. Ian Campbell and Mr. Pat Conroy of the Department of Labour and Mr. Humphrey Carver of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

3. Yes. Decisions and recommendations reached by the conference have not yet been published officially.

C.B.C. PREMISES AND PERSONNEL, VANCOUVER

Question No. 107—Mr. Taylor:

1. (a) How many persons are employed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in Vancouver, British Columbia? (b) how many employed in radio, and how many in television?
2. What are the addresses of each of the premises where the employees of C.B.C. work?
3. What premises are owned by the C.B.C.?
4. Have architects been appointed or plans made by the C.B.C. for the construction of suitable accommodation for the entire C.B.C. operation in Vancouver?
5. Has the Vancouver city council recommended construction at a particular site?

Answer by: Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue):

I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

1. (a) 419. (b) Radio, 95; television, 212; integrated services, 112.

2. 701 Hornby street (Hotel Vancouver), 654 Burrard street, 1190 Alberni street, 660 Howe street, 600 West 6th ave., 1200 West Georgia street.

3. The T.V. building at 1200 West Georgia street.

4. No architects have been appointed but preliminary planning is being carried out by C.B.C. architectural staff.

5. The Vancouver city council asked the corporation to consider locating regional headquarters in the civic entertainment and cultural area. However, after consideration the corporation decided to continue with plans previously made.

BREAKWATER LIGHT, BAY DE VERDE, NFLD.

Question No. 110—Mr. Tucker:

1. Have any arrangements been made to put a light on the breakwater at Bay de Verde, Newfoundland?
2. If so, when is it planned to make the installation?

Answer by: Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport):

1. Yes.
2. As soon as possible.

MAIL CONTRACT, HILLVIEW-SOUTHPORT, NFLD.

Question 111—Mr. Tucker:

1. To whom was the latest contract awarded to carry mail between Hillview and Southport, Trinity Bay, Newfoundland?
2. Has the new contractor had previous experience?
3. Was the contract awarded as a result of tenders being called?
4. If so, how many tenders were received, and was the contract awarded to the lowest tenderer?
5. What was the amount of the tender?
6. Who carried mail previously, and what was the amount paid?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1. Donald Avery, Hillview.

2. No information—investigation revealed this tenderer possessed the necessary equipment, his sureties were acceptable and he would be suitable as a mail contractor.

3. Yes.

4. (a) Seven, (b) Yes (one of two tenders at the same amount).

5. $3,000 per annum.

6. William Stoyles, Hillview—$3,390 per annum.

MAIL TRANSPORT, HALIFAX-TRURO

Question No. 116—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Has a change taken place with respect to the system of transporting mail between Halifax and Truro?
2. If so, what system of transportation is now in effect?
3. Are any railway mail clerks affected by the change, and, if so, is provision being made to find employment for these men?

Answer by: Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General):

1 and 2. No. Effective March 13, 1961 service by rail is to be supplemented by a highway service with some local exchanges removed from the train.

3. Information not available pending completion of a survey. However, if any railway mail clerks are affected provision will be made for continued employment.

Prime Minister of Canada,

Ottawa, Ont.

My dear Prime Minister:

This is in pursuance of your letter of January 30 and of the telegram I sent you on February 1, which read as follows:

(Text):

"In answer to your letter I am happy to say that the twenty third and twenty fourth of February as suggested dates for the next federal-provincial conference are convenient to me Stop Letter follows".

(Translation):

The 23rd and 24th of February are perfectly convenient to me, and I shall make arrangements to get away from the session with those of my colleagues who will accompany me.

Since the October conference, we have given further consideration to fiscal arrangements to be established as of April 1, 1962. That further study did confirm the conviction I share with my colleagues that the suggestions you made at the October conference are such as to destroy the equalization principle.

We are also convinced that those suggestions did not take into full account the growing financial needs of the provinces. May I point out, in this connection, that the budget introduced by our predecessors for 1960-61 was of $617 million, while the one I introduced this very morning in the legislative assembly for 1961-62 exceeds $793 million.

Only a more equitable distribution of revenues coming from the main tax fields will enable the provinces to face the heavy obligations that devolve upon them under the constitution.

That is why we urge you to agree to reconsider your suggestions in order to leave untouched the equalization principle and to considerably increase the provincial share in the three taxation fields which are the basis of equalization payments.

You indicate in your letter that your governnment is ready to "introduce a growth factor in the equalization formula". We should like to have more details concerning this growth factor in order to be able to intelligently discuss that matter in Ottawa.

Most sincerely yours,

Jean Lesage.

My dear Prime Minister:

Further to my letter of today's date regarding the proposed meeting of the dominion-provincial conference on fiscal arrangements, there are two suggestions I would like to submit for your consideration.

It would be extremely useful to those of us who will be attending this conference if we could be sent in advance a copy of the proposal which the government of Canada intends to place before the provincial premiers. This would give us adequate time to study your proposals and to be better informed regarding their financial implications for our respective provinces.

There would also be some value in having the federal-provincial continuing committee on fiscal and economic matters meet a day or two in advance of the conference itself. This would give our technical advisors an opportunity to examine the statistical bases upon which the federal government's proposals are predicated. It seems to me this would save a great deal of time at the conference since the participants would come to the conference with a better understanding and appreciation of the proposals your government intends to place before us.

Trusting you will find it possible to give consideration to these two suggestions and again extending my personal regards, I remain,

Yours sincerely,

My dear Prime Minister:

Thank you very much for your letter of January 30th proposing that the dominion-provincial conference on fiscal arrangements be reconvened on February 23rd and 24th.

As you know, our legislature will be sitting at that time and while March 23rd and 24th would be preferable we will be glad to attend the conference on February 23rd and 24th if that meets with the approval of the majority of the provinces.

Looking forward to seeing you at that time and with kindest personal regards, I am,

Yours sincerely,

Dear Mr. Prime Minister:

Your letter of January 30th suggesting dates for reconvening the federal-provincial conference on fiscal arrangements has been received in the absence from the province of the Honourable Louis J. Robichaud.

I have, however, discussed the matter with him by telephone and would now advise that the proposed dates of February 23rd and 24th and March 23rd and 24th are both quite inconvenient to the government of New Brunswick. April would be much more convenient, but it is appreciated that it might be quite unsuitable to other provinces or your government.

In view of the foregoing, I would urge that if either of the tentative dates proposed by you is to be decided upon it should be March rather than February. It is my understanding that several other of the provinces hold similar views.

Your further advice in this regard will be awaited.

Yours sincerely,
L. G. Desbrisay,
Acting Premier.

My dear Prime Minister:

Thank you for your letter of the 30th in which you propose that the dominion-provincial plenary fiscal conference reconvene in Ottawa on the 23rd and 24th of this month.

I am encouraged to learn both from your letter and from the statement in the House of Commons by the Minister of Finance last Monday that the government of Canada is prepared to provide for the growth factor in the equalization formula to be included in the new fiscal agreements.

I am looking forward to resuming our discussions on this constructive basis.

Yours sincerely,

The Rt. Honourable John G. Diefenbaker, Q.C.,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa, Canada.

My dear Prime Minister:

This will acknowledge and thank you for your letter of January 30th in which you suggest that the dominion-provincial plenary conference to discuss fiscal arrangements be reconvened.

You will recall stating, during the October session of the conference, that "both the federal and provincial governments have the constitutional right of access to the fields of taxation which have been shared by means of the tax rental agreements". At the same session, British Columbia expressed its agreement that while the personal income and corporation tax fields were originally the sole domain of the provinces, the circumstances imposed by changing times have established the practice that federal and provincial governments now have equal right to the cultivation of these fields.

In order to implement the principle that, as further stated by you in October, "the government that spends the money ought to collect the money", British Columbia therefore asked the government of Canada to reduce its tax rate in the fields named by 50 per cent, in order that this government could reoccupy directly that 50 per cent of each of the two fields. British Columbia would undertake in return to forgo tax rental payments from the government of Canada and to assume responsibility for all services now covered by cost-sharing agreements between the federal and provincial governments.

Failing federal acceptance of the principle outlined above, it is the view of British Columbia that the provinces should receive minimum rental payments in the following amounts:

(a) From personal income tax—25 per cent of federal rates as applied on January 6, 1956.

(b) From corporation income tax—12 points of the federal levy on taxable income.

(c) From successive duties—50 per cent of federal collections.

Coincidental with the establishment of this formula would be the continued payment of fiscal need subsidies payable from the consolidated revenue fund of Canada to the Atlantic provinces, and perhaps some others, as determined by a competent independent authority; together with continuation and expansion of shared-cost programs.

British Columbia believes strongly that one of the two arrangements outlined above should be accepted by the government of Canada; the preference of British Columbia is for the first formula. Nearly 16 years have passed since the end of the wartime emergency which precipitated entry by the provinces into the tax rental agreements which remain as the basis of federal-provincial fiscal relations to this day. The burden on the provinces of greatly increased costs for education, health and social services, and for much improved transportation facilities, makes a realistic change in the present arrangements most urgent.

As to the dates suggested by you for a resumption of the conference, British Columbia would much prefer the March date but will, of course, accept the suggestion of a February meeting if this is deemed more convenient by a majority of the provinces.

Yours faithfully,

RE PLENARY

Note: A similar letter was sent to each provincial premier save the premiers of Quebec and Prince Edward Island. Copies of which are attached hereto.

Ottawa, January 30th, 1961.

The Honourable Dufferin Roblin,
Premier of Manitoba,
Winnipeg, Manitoba.

My dear Premier:

The dominion-provincial plenary conference called to discuss fiscal arrangements for the period following March 31, 1962, adjourned on October 28th last to meet at the call of the Chair. It seems appropriate now that steps be taken to reconvene the conference. I propose that the meeting be resumed in Ottawa on February 23rd and 24th.

I am sure that all governments have been studying this important subject further with a view to arriving at a satisfactory and workable understanding. The suggestions which I placed before the October conference included the principles of equalization based on fiscal need and the stabilization of provincial revenues. The federal government is also prepared to make provision for a growth factor in the equalization formula. It is our hope that agreement may be arrived at on the basis of these principles.

I realize that on account of the sittings of parliament and the legislatures this is a very busy time for us all. I hope, however, that you may find it possible to be present at the reconvened conference on Thursday, February 23rd, commencing at 10.00 a.m. If these dates are not regarded by the majority of the provinces as convenient, I would suggest alternatively March 23rd and 24th.

Yours sincerely,
John G. Diefenbaker.

The Hon. Jean Lesage,
Prime Minister of the Province of Quebec,
Government House
Quebec City (P.Q.)

My dear Prime Minister:

The federal provincial pleanary conference which had been called to discuss the fiscal agreements which were to take effect as of March 31, 1962 was adjourned last October 28, when it was agreed that the meetings would be resumed on the chairman's invitation. It now seems desirable that the necessary steps be taken for reconvening the conference. I therefore suggest its resumption in Ottawa, on February 23 and 24.

I am certain that all governments, have given further consideration to that important matter with a view to reading an agreement that would be both satisfactory and applicable. The suggestions I submitted at the October conference included the equalization principles based on fiscal needs and the stabilization of provincial revenues. The federal government is also prepared to introduce an expansion factor in the equalization formula. It is our hope that an agreement might be concluded on the basis of those principles.

I realize that, because of the sessions of parliament and of the various legislatures, we are all very busy at this time. However, I hope that you will be able to be present at the resumption of the conference at ten o'clock in the morning of Thursday, February 23rd. If, in the view of the majority of provinces, the suggested dates are unsuitable, I would suggest as alternate dates, March 23 and 24.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) John G. Diefenbaker.

National film board—

251. Administration.

Production and distribution of films and other visual material, $4,988,112.

Mr. Pitman: I just want to say a few words about the national film board from a particular point of view. I think we in North America have a somewhat peculiar view of public agencies. We tend to regard them as likely to be havens of inefficiency, waste and mediocrity, filled with time servers. Indeed, one hears it suggested that they are the last harbour of retreat for incompetence.

In the national film board we have a government agency which derives its revenue, certainly in part, from the government, and which is responsible to parliament and therefore to the people of Canada. We know that its work could never be carried on by a commercial company, yet it is amazing to what extent this agency pays for itself. It sells its services to the extent of nearly $1,500,000, and its rentals amount to well over $500,000. Thus we must remember, when we consider the work of this agency, that parliament is not paying the whole shot.

Part of the work of the film board is to provide services for other departments of government. For example, if the Department of Agriculture or the Department of Trade and Commerce want a film made, the film board is asked to make it. I think one of the most heartening aspects about this government agency is the extent to which it has gained the confidence and won the enthusiasm of the people of Canada. One thing to be noted is that this is an example of a government agency which is not cold and impersonal, as we in North America tend to think government agencies should be. I think it is significant that this agency has gained an unique place in Canadian life, and because of this it has been able to distribute its films at only a fraction of the cost which a commercial company would have incurred, since there are a large body of people who are willing to give their services to the board simply because they regard its work as being important to the community.

As a result of the wide distribution of the films made by the board, over 15 million people in this country have seen them either through school programs or community programs. The importance of the work of the film board to the departments of education can, in fact, hardly be rated too highly. If we include those people who have seen national film board productions by means of television, then of course the number would run into almost countless millions.

Another legend which seems to persist in North America is that the work of government agencies seldom rises above mediocrity. But, as was pointed out last night, perhaps the people of Canada do not realize the number of awards which the national film board has won by reason of the excellent quality of its work. The fact that the board has won seven of these awards throughout the world is something to be noted. It might seem that with regard to this aspect of our national life we just do not know how well our agencies are doing. We have discovered how to make films with a distinctive Canadian style. Canadian films are known because of the way they are made, and I think this shows that the flavour of Canadian life can be expressed through the medium of films. Through the films of the national film board developments in Canada have been made known in other parts of the world. This would indicate that the expenditure parliament is making on behalf of the board is worth while. I hope this will be an indication of what the role of government enterprise can be. Here is a public enterprise that is not competing with private enterprise but is giving business to and supporting private enterprise, and at the same time is making a tremendous contribution to Canadian life.

Here we have an example which shows that we can have an esprit de corps, a justifiable pride, in a public agency. Certainly the films of the board are produced with the highest degree of technical excellence. To the extent that the board changes the public image of government agencies, it is performing a remarkable service in Canada.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, the minister will recall that when parliament was opened by the Queen in 1957 the national film board filmed the proceedings. I am wondering in how many places throughout Canada this film has been shown and if it is still being shown throughout the country.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, while we are locating those figures for the hon. member, perhaps I may be permitted to make a brief statement. Hon. members will notice that for the fiscal year 1961-62 the national film board estimates show an increase of $287,258. The major factor is an increase of $166,395 for salary revisions and merit increases to the board's personnel. Other increases in the operational vote are $50,000 to provide for an extension of the board's production activities, and an increase in Canadian distribution costs of $14,848 resulting from the appointment of two additional district representatives, one in British Columbia and one in Saskatchewan. The sum of $17,254 will be required for additional service and wage increases to members of the Canadian corps of commissionaires. The acquisition of equipment vote shows an increase of $18,416. The balance of $20,345 covers a number of small items.

Item agreed to.

252. Acquisition of equipment, $172,380.

Mrs. Fairclough: I still have an answer coming for the hon. member for Lisgar. The reply to the hon. member is that there were 464 bookings in moving picture theatres in Canada. The picture is being shown in the schools of Canada; it is shown in every part of Canada.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I want to thank the hon. lady for giving me the answer. The reason I asked is that I have had many inquiries from the schools regarding the procedure of opening parliament. I would hope that this film would be shown extensively throughout the schools in Canada.

Mrs. Fairclough: I might add it is available on request.

Mr. Taylor: Has the national film board ever attended any international sporting event in which Canada has participated, and taken pictures of some of our Canadian athletes participating in those games?

Mrs. Fairclough: I am told that the film board has never taken actual pictures of international competitions in which Canadian athletes participated abroad because they have never purchased the right to take those pictures, but the board does have pictures of sporting events in Canada. There is a film which is in course of preparation—it is on the program for this year—which will deal with preparation for competition in the Olympic games.

Mr. Taylor: Just by way of further comment, I know that throughout the country there is keen interest in getting copies of films of such events as the skiing championships at Squaw Valley in which Anne Heggtveit participated. These films, if readily available, could be shown in schools throughout the country and I am sure they would be much appreciated. My point is, can consideration be given to the national film board at least making an effort to take pictures of some of our stars at some of these future international events in order that in due course those films may be shown here and thereby encourage other amateurs to participate as well?

Mrs. Fairclough: The film board will be very glad to consider this suggestion.

Item agreed to.

Public archives—

319. General administration and technical services, $716,268.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Chairman, last evening your predecessor in the chair very properly suggested, since I had included books with art, that I should defer my remarks until this particular vote was reached. I should like to say, sir, that last evening's discussion on art was most illuminating to those of us who have had little opportunity to become more than casual observers in that particular field. Some excellent addresses were made; it is not my intention to single out any one in particular, but it was a cultural evening and was well worth while.

Under this particular vote I should like to speak very briefly on the national library. One of the compensations of being a new member of parliament is the access one has to the parliamentary library, the national library, if he so wishes, and the librarians. To those of us who come from far places the contacts we make are most valuable. As an aside I should like to pay a brief tribute to the parliamentary librarian and his staff. They are always most helpful. Like the rose, I am afraid they blush unseen; nevertheless we appreciate them.

I tried to say last night that my previous knowledge of the national library was very fragmentary. I was told at one time that there were two countries in the world without national libraries, Canada and Ghana. I have learned since that Ghana now has an admirable national library and I have also learned—one learns constantly in Ottawa—that we have the nucleus of a very promising national library in Canada.

My plea is that the promise may be fulfilled. I think it was John Ruskin who once said that books are divisible in two classes, books of the hour and books of all time. Our national library and our archives are concerned with the books of all time. We have made a start, but we need a great deal of development if the national library is to come into full fruition. My information is that there are approximately 400,000 volumes under the control of the national library. It is interesting to note that this represents one book for every 45 Canadians. To me this is pitiful when we think of the tremendous sums of money we spend in other departments which have nothing to do with the development of the Canadian mind.

The national librarian has a very difficult task. He and his staff are working in cramped quarters. They are handicapped in their endeavour to expand the facilities of their organization by not having sufficient room in which to operate. We talk and have talked in the house for the last few years about the creation of a physical green belt. We are building a glorious national capital. My plea is for the creation of a green belt of the Canadian mind, and I hope the day is not far distant when parliament will see to it that in our physical green belt there is built a national library capable of housing the tremendous store of wisdom that has come down to us through the ages and which will enrich not only our own lives but the lives of future generations. Incidentally, I note that the next generation is well represented in the galleries this morning. Generations yet unborn will profit if we establish our national library on the basis on which some of us conceive it should be established.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I was only too happy on this occasion to defer to the hon. member for Medicine Hat who began the remarks he has made this morning on another item in the estimates, and who has made what I think is one of the most useful contributions that have been made to our debates in this session of parliament. Without any reservation whatsoever I should like to congratulate the hon. member both for what he has said and for the way in which he has said it.

It does seem to me that we are taking altogether too long to provide the building which will house the national library. It is a very fortunate thing that for the past few years, since the National Library Act was passed by parliament, we have at least been accumulating some of the books that we ought to be accumulating. I must say that I never before thought of the statistic the hon. member for Medicine Hat gave us this morning when he said that the 400,000 volumes belonging to the national library would represent one book for every 45 people in Canada. I must say I do not think that is one of the statistics I would be proud of, and I doubt if it will be put in that blue book of facts which has been published recently and which is probably not in the national library.

The plain fact is, of course, that until the national library has a real physical home it cannot expand in the way we would like to see it expand and the way it ought to expand. Until it has a proper physical home there cannot be the proper differentiation between the functions of the national library and the functions of the parliamentary library which it would be desirable to make both in the interests of efficiency and economy as between the two institutions. I do feel that it was desirable to let one of the supporters of the government have the initiative that is usually taken by the opposition on the estimates, in the hope that the observations made from this part of this side of the house might not fall on deaf ears but, coming from a supporter of the government, be received a little more sympathetically than otherwise would have been the case. I only wish that the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance were not otherwise engaged at the federal-provincial conference so they could have been here to listen to what was said by the hon. member for Medicine Hat.

We do know, of course, that the site for the new national library is now occupied by No. 1 temporary building on Wellington street, which ought to have been torn down by this time. By doing so this energetic Minister of Public Works, who does a lot of talking about providing winter work, might provide a little more work this winter so the government could then proceed at once with the building of the national library. This should be done. I know the hon. lady can only use her influence with her other colleagues, that the decision will be made by the government as a whole, and particularly those members of the treasury board, on the initiative of the Minister of Public Works. At least we have the opportunity here of saying something about it, and I do hope, when the estimates of the Department of Public Works come up, the hon. member for Medicine Hat will urge the Minister of Public Works to get on with the job. From the way the hon. lady is nodding her head I think he will have her support in the cabinet, where there are secrets which she cannot reveal to us except by the expression on her face.

Mrs. Fairclough: Possibly I might say a word about this subject. I agree with that which has been said and I thank the hon. members for their support. I too am disappointed that we have not been able to get ahead with the building before this, but possibly now that spokesmen in the house have expressed themselves I will have a little more support.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take a somewhat different approach to that which has been taken in this debate so far. I feel that one should always be careful when speaking from a position of special knowledge, though I hardly claim as a librarian to have particularly special knowledge, but one of the points I would like to bring to the minister's attention is something I have noticed while making certain contacts with people. That is that when we have encountered historians and other people who work at the public archives, we find unstinted praise for the administration in the steps that have been taken and where expansion has taken place. Dr. Lamb, the national archivist, also happens to be the national librarian.

I cannot say I get the same reaction as I go around and encounter librarians and other people dealing with books. By this I do not mean that the criticism is nasty or vicious. I think everyone in the library profession appreciates Dr. Lamb's stature as a scholar, but there is a very definite feeling among librarians that the great ability which he brings to his role as archivist detracts from the part he might play as national librarian.

I was very appreciative, as I know were many people in the library profession, of the fact that the Prime Minister saw fit to appoint a trained librarian for the library of parliament. I have no comments to make about the person appointed, but the fact that we now have this recognition would, it seems to me, lead to the next step of the library profession in its move for recognition, and that is to have a national librarian whose training, background and interest is in libraries.

I cannot emphasize too much the favourable reaction to the work of the public archivist in the way he has expanded the types of service offered both in the library and in the manuscript sections. The microfilm facilities and that sort of thing are excellent. I think the scholarity community, especially in the fields of history and associated subjects, are very fortunate.

I would not like to suggest that the reason we have not a national library building on the way is that we have a man at the head of the public archives and national library who is in a dual function. I do not think this is a factor, but I think librarians and people who are interested in books and the creation of a national library centre would feel somewhat happier if we had a national librarian separate from the archives.

I know this is possible. I can imagine the hon. member for Greenwood being prepared to argue that the main thing is to have a man who is a good administrator and yet has a sense of cultural values and an over all good education. I agree that this summation would apply very much to Dr. Lamb. The fact is that today there is no antithesis in library work respecting a person of a high education or intellectual status or scholarly attainments, but it is also a fact that more and more the whole organization of things in library work, as it tends towards increasing documentation, is a very specialized administrative field.

I think one of the greatest problems our society is running into lies right in this field of documentation and library work, how we are going to handle the great many records that are piling up in so many fields. I am afraid the national library is going to have a rather narrow collection, say in the field of natural science or applied science, but I am sure we can count on the national research council to provide us with a national library service in those fields. This raises the question as to what the fields the national library is going to cover and whether it is going to be primarily a documentation centre or will attempt to be the kind of large institution that has a basic collection of books in all the various fields.

I suggest that we might be 10 or 15 years behind the times if we aim to erect a huge institution built around a massive book collection. I think in Canada the emphasis should be upon keeping control of the records and books, building up a service of interchange of books, a crackerjack reference service and, through documentary control, keeping on top of all the flow of information that is pulsing into this country or in the country or about the country from anywhere in the world. That is perhaps the main challenge.

I suggest that it is into this field of specialization that librarians are moving more and more. There tends to be a picture in people's minds of a librarian as a man who reads books and book reviews and who can talk knowingly about general books that may be in a collection. As a matter of fact the best librarians—and I think we must acknowledge that the best librarians are mostly Americans—are in one sense extreme specialists in understanding techniques. I refer to punch-card techniques, I.B.M. machine techniques, the whole business of control and making available information. The institutional kind of national library that is envisaged by many people could, I suppose, be built by a collection of one million or one and a half million volumes.

I wonder what the direction would actually be. We have a collection in Washington today of around the 15 million mark. There is a collection of between eight million and ten million books at the British museum. I have been in the Bodleian library in Oxford. At the time I was there they thought they had between five million and six million books, but they had fairly well lost control of this collection in terms of having it really available to users. The collection at Oxford that was actually available to users through catalogues and ready reference was at that time in the neighbourhood of only one million volumes. I am speaking of ten years ago.

The problem in these larger libraries is quite often, how do you get the service? I know at the Bodleian library you sometimes had to wait an hour or more for a book after you had discovered whether they had the book you wanted and where it was. The British museum is another case in point. I made inquiries there and found they had a magnificent collection and a wonderful service for scholars. They go out of their way, especially in reading room privileges, to help anyone who has a serious scholarly intent. Yet so little of their massive collection is really available. When you see the size of the collection that is available, you understand why this is so, because it is so massive.

The hon. member for Medicine Hat raised the point that we have 400,000 books within the scope of the national library. I do not know too much about the details, but I would doubt whether the national library has available in its present quarters more than 50,000 books catalogued and available. It would seem to me the main thing the national library has done, and we must give credit to the people who originated this, is that it has built up in effect a union catalogue of holdings of most of the academic libraries in Canada. This is what I mean by a type of documentation service, in other words the library acting primarily as a clearing house.

It seems to me that one of the things we are not really crystal clear about when the new building is launched is the range of the collection within the building, how big it is going to be. I think anyone in library work realizes that the initial cost of a book is really nothing in the long run if you have an institutional library. There is a changing pattern as to when the costs of storing a book match up with the costs of buying the book, classifying it, cataloguing it and putting it on the shelf.

In recent years, with the cost of heating and staffing institutions, this point has crept down and down until I think it is recognized by most people in university library circles that within ten years after you put a book on the shelf it has cost you as much to keep it there as it did to buy it and make the preparations to keep it. In other words the space and storage problem is a gigantic one.

If anyone thinks the flow of books is a constant thing they should go and look at some of the books available at the library. They should look at the national library Canadiana, and they will see that in the field of publishing, as in almost every other field, we have a growth potential that has been almost constant. One of the other difficulties about this growth potential and the growth rate has been the fact that publications have tended to vary so much in their format. There is all the mimeographed and other material with which hon. members are familiar. We are moving further and further away from the conventional idea of the book as a hard covered thing, and this raises great problems with regard to storage. It is easy enough to perpetuate the life of a hard covered book, but what do you do about mimeographed briefs, paperbacks, pamphlets and other things which are accumulating so rapidly today and which take so much time to catalogue?

For these reasons I think the concept of our national library needs to be reiterated in terms of the job that library is going to do, and I would suggest that the almost ceremonious conception which many people have of the national library may be already out of date in terms of the use we may possibly have for it. I know it would be very stirring to have the kind of building to which you could take a class and go into a marble hall something like the printing bureau in Hull and see illuminated manuscripts on display. Perhaps we could get Magna Carta and some of the other exhibits of that kind which are on view in the British museum in London and display them.

A service of this kind is one which reminds children of their heritage, but does it really do anything for the serious person who wants to read and study? Does it really do anything when people are able to say we have that big pile of a building filled with a collection that is worth up to a million dollars and still growing, but we are not too sure what that collection is going to be used for and what direction it is going to take. I cannot emphasize too strongly the proliferation of material and the specialization in the field of knowledge. It seems to me that in a field like this we have very grave problems in determining the kind of national collection we want.

Archives, on the other hand, seem to me to be a much simpler proposition in terms of their use both by scholars and by ordinary people. They seem much closer to our history, our traditions and also to our future. The question here that interests and intrigues me, of course, is, for example, the length of time which must expire before records become free and open. For example, I am very much interested in the former member for Port Arthur. If I am ever in a position in the next decade or two to undertake the work, and if I have some available time, I would like to tackle a book or biography of this man. What about the records that he has turned over to the national archives? I quote this as an example. When are these documents to be available?

I think there is another problem which this government, particularly, has not faced; that is, giving some indication of what the members of this government plan to do with their records when their administration ends. We have never had a real definition of what is privy to a minister of the crown and what becomes, eventually, part of the public record and how long documents must form part of the public record before they are open to the scholars. I know that in Britain generally they have a 50-year rule. Sometimes this is waived, and at other times the material is held for longer than 50 years. Again, this is something in the field of public archives I should like to know something about as, I imagine, other scholars would.

There is an increasing interest which I encounter, and which I am sure other members encounter, in genealogy in this country, and here the national archives offers a service especially in connection with earlier census records. I wonder whether the archives or the national library or the national library reference centre should have this chore. I myself, again through personal interest, would like to know more of what could be done through a government agency, either the archives or the national library, toward building up an ability to trace descent not only here but in liaison with other countries. I know a problem which one of my relatives had was that of trying to trace relatives in England because of the variation in the records as between parish records before 1826 and records of births after 1826, which are usually kept in Somerset house, London. One day the Minister of Finance and I were talking and we discovered we probably had certain relationships in common two or three generations ago through families located in southern Ontario.

It seems to me that as we get older as a nation this type of tracing will attract more and more interest. I know the United States in this respect is far ahead of us in its feeling for history and looking back on family records of the past. This is an extremely important phase of reference work in the United States, and I think it is going to become much more so here. I should like to know what plans either the national archives or the national library may have to provide this particular service. I am not suggesting they are not doing a good job now, but it seems to me one can be quite positive that the demand is going to increase and that is going to mean more cost to the government. I should like to know what plans are being made for setting up a permanent service, with perhaps some definite central authority and some publications which explain how to go about the study of genealogy in Canada.

I had some specific questions I wished to ask, but in case other members may want to make some general remarks on this vote I will conclude and come back to the specific questions later.

Mr. Macdonnell: I have a few brief comments I should like to make on this item. I should like to associate myself with what the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has said about what we owe to the hon. member for Medicine Hat for bringing this question up. I do not think we have taken this seriously enough in the past. I have listened to the speech of the hon. member for Port Arthur, who obviously has a considerable knowledge of these things and has devoted careful thought to them. From my own experience I can say something about the dominion archivist. I know something of the extent to which he has diligently pursued historical documents and private documents which are known to be of historical interest.

My particular reason for rising is to say that I know the minister is sympathetic, and I feel that as a result of this sympathy we may be able to get this matter advanced. I understand there is no committee which is seriously considering this question now. I was greatly struck the other day on reading a book by Dr. Cyril James, president of McGill University, on a recent visit he made to Russia, and it almost frightened me to learn from his report that education in Russia is being taken much more seriously than it is here.

I asked myself some very serious questions. It was interesting to read that in Moscow, Shakespearian plays are often produced and are very well attended. Reading the other things Dr. James had to say, I was led to wonder if we are still continuing the pioneer instinct which built up this country but which did not make us feel that libraries are one of the practical or more important things in life. I am wondering if we have reached a stage where we have to do a lot of rethinking.

We have found that part of the reason for our present unemployment situation is that we have not trained our people well enough. That to me raises the whole question of broadening education. Therefore I wanted to make my small contribution this morning in the hope that those who know more about this matter than I do may be enabled to deal with this question, which has come to have an urgency and practical importance which we have not been inclined to attribute to it in the past.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few brief comments. I was most impressed by the felicitous remarks made by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, and I agree with him wholeheartedly in what he said. More surprisingly, I found myself in almost complete agreement with the hon. and learned member for Bonavista-Twillingate, although I thought the hon. gentleman was a bit irreverent when he spoke about a certain blue and white book because we know, of course, that historic truth should always be cherished.

I think we must urge upon the minister the pushing forward of the structural aspects, shall we say, of the national library; but, like the hon. member for Greenwood, I would rather concern myself at this juncture with the public archives in the study room of which I have spent many hours. I am tremendously impressed with the great work Dr. Lamb and his associates have been and are doing. It is extremely important that a good job be done in the national centre, because many scholars have often found that in the smaller areas throughout the provinces there is a regrettable lack of facilities of an archival nature. Therefore leadership must be given at the national level, and Dr. Lamb and his staff in my opinion are giving that leadership in a splendid way.

I quite agree with the hon. member for Greenwood on another point. I think it is sadly true that we Canadians are not an historically minded people. Probably we are not very education minded either. Perhaps this is a hangover of the frontier spirit which causes us to look upon some of these things with the eye of the Philistine.

I think of the dearth of writings concerning our great men which was mentioned by the hon. member for Port Arthur. When we leave the west end of this building we see a fine painting of Canada's fourth prime minister, Sir John Thompson, a man uniquely qualified for leadership and who in his short career made history as an outstanding statesman, yet we find no work written about him other than what was written in a eulogistic way shortly after his tragic passing in 1894. There are, however, Thompson papers, which though not ample should, of course, be more widely and intensively used. There are two aspects to this type of situation. We must collect the papers of these great men, and we must do more about having historic research made upon them.

I believe the hon. member for Port Arthur is quite right in expressing concern about the restrictions on the records. If I had any criticism to advance with respect to the public archives of Canada I would say that they err on the side of being too restrictive with respect to the records. In that respect I feel they compare rather unfavourably with the United States in these matters. It is not every public man, of course, who like the late Mr. Arthur Meighen will leave his papers and say, "Here they are, unrevised and unrepented; so they stand for my lifetime and after". I believe that scholars should not be held too long from the papers of the men who made history. We must encourage those who are bringing about the opening up of the records of our past. I think it is up to us as national legislators to contribute in every way we can to the furtherance of this important measure.

There is one point I should like to commend to the minister. I think the study room in the archives, the one that is open 24 hours a day every day of the week, is a most splendid institution. I have often been troubled in visiting various parts of the country to discover, when I have arrived for a long week end, that I cannot have access to the records at all because everything is closed. The example set by the public archives in Ottawa is most commendable.

Before I resume my seat I should like to say once again that the staff of the public archives are most competent and courteous. While I do not believe the staff is large enough or that their facilities are adequate I would like to say on the basis of my personal experience over many years that they are, under the circumstances, doing a most excellent job and I commend their thoroughgoing devotion to the minister.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, would the minister tell us whether the historical collection which is to be found in the archives building on Sussex street comes under the estimates relating to the public archives?

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, I did not catch the name of the collection. To what collection does the hon. gentleman refer?

Mr. Pitman: The historical collection which takes up three or four rooms is the collection to which I referred. Does this come under the estimates for the public archives?

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that is quite correct.

Mr. Pitman: I wish to say a few words about this collection. I think it is very important in that it is unfortunately the outward expression of the archives to the Canadian public. I believe there is perhaps a confusion of purpose in this building. I think archives are concerned with historical documents and should remain so. Perhaps the collection in the Sussex street building should concern itself with a display of documents from Canada's past in a tasteful and conservative—with a small "c"—way. In this way it would perhaps better serve its purpose than in its present form. At present a number of historical objects of an unrelated and incongruous nature are grouped together.

The national library and archives in Washington, D.C. provide a good example of what can be done in this field. I hope the minister will allow me to criticize in this area. I have supported other areas under her jurisdiction, and perhaps she will permit me to criticize this area. I have never seen a more incongruous or ill-assorted collection of paraphernalia in my life than exists in the historical collection on Sussex street. That was my impression on first visiting the building a few years ago with a group of young people. A historical collection with some kind of pattern, theme or continuity would make a better impression on the minds of young people than a confused collection. I realize that this is an infinitesimally small part of the work of the archives, and I appreciate the tremendous work that is being done in other areas of its jurisdiction including the work it does for scholars, but unfortunately the historical collection is what most Canadians see when they go on sightseeing tours in Ottawa.

For purposes of illustration let me refer to one of this group of rooms in the Sussex street building in which the historical collection is housed. In one room I found a replica of the Vimy war memorial, the colours of the militia of 1775 in an incredibly filthy case, a model section of Ottawa showing improvements—obviously the model was old and the improvements have been executed—a model of the parliament buildings, a model of a ship, the T.T.S. Lady Nelson, a model of a boat used in an Arctic exploration by Stefansson, a great mass of Indian and Eskimo material and a collection of photographs of early generals and lieutenant governors. There was absolutely no pattern whatever.

[Mrs. Fairclough.]

One of my colleagues has suggested that the collection comprises historical junk, but I would not go that far. I would say, however, that it does not give a clear picture of what the archives does. On the basis of a visit to the historical collection I am sure no young person would have any idea of the clarity that characterizes most of the work of the archives behind the facade of this confused historical collection.

It can be done. When I visited the archives I was interested to note an exhibit of Canada 200 years ago. There you have an example of a display which has a theme. You can follow this theme. You can see very clearly something of what Canada was in 1759, at the time of Wolfe and Montcalm and the siege of Quebec. I would bring this to the attention of the minister. I do not think the outward expression of the archives is of the best. I would hope that possibly something much more acceptable could be put forward to the public of Canada when they think of the Canadian public archives.

Mrs. Fairclough: Mr. Chairman, possibly I can deal with the remarks of the hon. member for Peterborough first. The miscellaneous room to which he has referred is intended to touch upon names and events which are familiar to school children. Experience has shown that it is very successful for that purpose. The other room to which the hon. member has referred has been refitted. It had been intended to refit the first room, but it has been such a popular one that they have left it for the time being.

A number of comments were made here this morning, and I thank hon. members for the serious consideration which they have given to this subject.

With reference to some of the remarks made by the hon. member for Port Arthur, I might say that the functions of the archives and the national library dovetail to a degree. That makes it quite natural that one person should head the two departments. Since I believe the hon. member has left a rather unfortunate impression with the committee I may say that no one has been more insistent on the need for an early start of the new building than the national librarian. I know the disappointment he feels over the fact that the building has not been made available with the required space. Owing to lack of space the library has not been able to begin the collection of periodicals and other serials on a large scale.

The other considerations which the hon. member mentioned are being kept carefully in mind by the national librarian, but I should tell him that no attempt at all is planned for a huge, all-inclusive, comprehensive library. As a matter of fact the national research council and the defence research board together, we feel, are filling adequately the needs of science. I may say we have watched the services of those two boards and considered the way in which techniques should be extended to the social science fields in particular with regard to the library. The national librarian is very well aware of that and of the complex body of materials referred to as documentation. I might just add that the library purchases consist almost entirely of reference works for a basic reference collection; that is, dictionaries, encyclopaedias, bibliographies, indexes, and so on.

Another field in which purchase has been made is that of books relating to Canada which are published abroad. Then there is a selection of current books published in Great Britain, France and the United States that appear to have fairly long term value for reference purposes. Special purchases are made when the opportunity offers, and I might mention a purchase of which we are very proud which was made recently, namely that of the Scholes music collection. As hon. members may know, this is a particularly fine nucleus for a music library, a collection made by Percy Scholes, who was not only a very fine musical scholar but a historian of note. We are most fortunate in having this collection in the national library.

In addition, I might just add that all our acquisitions do not come through purchase; many rare books and collections have come to the library either by request or gift. The Howe papers have been referred to by two hon. members. I might tell the committee that those papers are still the property of the estate at the present time, and although we have hopes, the conditions of access have not yet been determined. I do not know how many members of the committee realize that the archives is open 365 days of the year, 24 hours a day. Scholars may investigate to their hearts' content there, having made arrangements with the archives for research which they wish to do, at any hour of the day or night.

One other matter was touched upon, on which I should like to make comment. I refer to the comments with reference to establishing and making available service in the field of genealogy. This is a very expensive service, and most libraries and archives have had to curtail such service owing to the costs. At the present time the archives searches census returns up to 1871, old land records and early military records. I might add that the archives itself does thousands of searches every year.

Mr. Fisher: The hon. lady said that I may have left or created an unfortunate impression. I think she must refer to the suggestion that because Dr. Lamb is not a librarian but is merely an archivist—that is, in the professional sense of the term—he has not pushed as hard for the national library as he might have. I am afraid this is an impression which I have encountered among some librarians, especially those at a distance from Ottawa. I would not like to feel that I left that impression, because I can just imagine it was quite a bit of heartbreak to Dr. Lamb when the national library was not proceeded with.

I should like to make a couple of comments upon the genealogy service. The minister has indicated briefly that it is a very expensive service. I am quite aware of this, and also of the fact that many people tend to think that if they fire off a letter to the government service or even to their member of parliament they should be entitled to a great deal gratis. I know I had a letter the other day from a man who evidently wanted me to provide him with publications totalling in value around $60 or $70. Evidently he just assumed that this was a government publication and that he could get it. But I think we must spell out more publicly, that is to say by way of public relations in the face of increasing demand, just what can be provided in genealogy terms because, with respect to so many people in Canada, once you get back several generations you have to move overseas. There should be some kind of attractive plan to make that type of publication available to our people who want to trace sources in England and in other countries in Europe from which so many Canadians seek their ethnic trail.

We have had a big hassle over the census form this year; we have incurred an expenditure of $170,000 to provide forms so that we can take care of the sensitivities of one group in this country, and it appears we may have outraged some of the feelings of another group. To answer the question in the form is going to require our chasing the ethnic trail on our fathers' side, and I know how difficult it is going to be; but the irony is that as Canada gets older and we become more stable, more and more people are going to be interested in tracing back their ancestry, and I just thought that in finding one's way through the maze of genealogy this particular agency, either the archives or the national library, would be able to give a great deal of help in at least setting out sign posts.

The minister has indicated that the national library is interested in documentation, and I should like to give a specific example. I have been bothered that the Canadian library association has to go before the Canada Council to get a grant to produce the Canadian index, which I think the public archivist or national librarian will concede is a most important reference tool. I think he will also concede that it is typically Canadian and cannot be sold on any remunerative basis to cover the total expenses.

For the last several years it has been supported substantially by the Canada Council; yet we have been told by the head of the Canada Council, both the late Mr. Claxton and Dr. Trueman, that there is no intention on the part of the Canada Council to make this a continuing thing, that the set-up of the council is not such as to permit a whole block of its funds to be gradually nailed down for recurring expenses. This is a popular form of documentation and indexing, but it is immensely useful and at the same time there is no possibility of the service becoming self-sustaining. It is very much a public service.

What contribution can the national library make to this particular indexing; and, since this is a Canadian indexing service, why should it not be the kind of responsibility that the national library undertakes? In essence Canadiana is performing this function for the more permanent kind of publication and the Canadian index of periodicals is, of course, our means of keeping up to date with what is going on in all the periodical publishing fields in Canada. If the national library were to undertake this kind of chore, which seems to be properly within its function, I suggest that it should expand the index so that it will provide the kind of over-all service in the publications field that is not being provided at the present time by the Canadian library association.

The minister has said that the duties of archivist and national librarian dovetail very naturally. In an administrative sense this seems reasonable. I would assume that Dr. Lamb is primarily an administrator, but the point I was trying to make to the minister was that librarianship has become an extremely specialized field. In the field of documentation there is a complexity and a growing experimentation, I might say, in an effort to keep on top of records, and this is one of the outstanding developments of our times in the academic and research fields.

I suggest that the function of the archivist is much different, because archives by their very nature are confined in the main to records of the past and, in the present day, confined properly to public records of the past. While there are common problems in respect of cataloguing, indexing and control of these things, I suggest that librarianship has become more specialized, and that is why I personally feel that the whole field of librarianship would gain through having as head of the national library a man who was a librarian and who was at the administrative pinnacle in that particular field.

The last point I wish to touch on in these remarks has to do with the suggestion of the minister that the conception of the national library collection has already been well worked out, and there is to be no overlapping in the field of science with the defence research board library or the national research council library. This is fine in that particular area, but I should like to know what is being done about the collections in other Ottawa offices. One of the problems that drives me up the wall as a user of the library of parliament is that when you go there and want a technical book on a specialized subject the library does not tend to have it. It has what I think is a pitiful collection in the economic field, particularly in connection with our resources in the field of forestry and allied fields. If you will take a ruler I think you will find that the books in the field of forestry cover 48 or 50 inches in the library of parliament. This is all the information that is available when we go looking for something to help us to deal with the problems that arise and try to help these industries.

This is all very well as a criticism of the library of parliament. You can go there and ask for a book in this particular field. They say that the forestry branch has an excellent library in this field and that they will get the material for you. I will concede that it does seem unreasonable to place within the library of parliament a specialized or extended collection on forestry and all these other fields for the use of maybe 265 members of parliament or a fraction thereof when just seven, eight or nine blocks away there is a magnificent, well indexed collection on forestry in a library staffed by people who know its contents intimately.

The very same criticism applies to the national library and its scope. Dotted across Ottawa we have these various government libraries. The economic research branch of the Department of Labour has a fairly extensive collection. In fact its collection in this field is a topnotch one. The Department of National Health and Welfare has a good collection. Fairly strong efforts are being made to keep these collections up to date and on a continuing basis, and to provide current reference service to the administrators. Service is also provided to the general public and members of parliament.

As a consequence of these departmental libraries in Ottawa, the spectrum of knowledge is fairly well covered. I will not say it is completely covered, but there is this coverage. What sort of overlapping are we likely to get in the national library? Is there a plan to take much of the older material from these collections and put it in the national library? The minister suggested in her reply that the concentration was going to be in the field of social sciences. What does she mean by "social sciences"? Just how embracing is that? For example, is Canadian literary history a phase of social science? What kind of collection of novels is planned for the library? Is the library going to concentrate upon Canadian publications, or is it going to be concerned with the best that has been thought and said in the literary field?

I should like to know whether the national library is going to specialize in the collection of federal and provincial records and publications, or is it going to collect those of the commonwealth or of the world generally? Is it planned to have a supply of the "Congressional Record" on hand? Is the national library going to take over responsibility for the collection of all United Nations publications? I should like to have these questions answered in order to have some idea of the collection that is going to grow in the building we are going to have some day.

Mrs. Fairclough: In answer to a couple of the comments of the hon. member, I might say that ever since the library came into existence in 1952 it has published the Canadian index of periodicals and documentary films. I think the hon. member regretted that there was no such publication available. It has been published every year.

Mr. Fisher: Not by the national library.

Mrs. Fairclough: Yes, by the national library.

Mr. Fisher: The Canadian index of periodicals?

Mrs. Fairclough: The annual Canadian index of periodicals and documentary films has been published every year by the national library since 1952, when the library first came into existence.

Mr. Fisher: What publication is it that is issued by the Canadian library association and supported by the Canada Council?

Mrs. Fairclough: The Canadian library association compiles and puts out monthly mimeographed editions. The national library puts these together into a comprehensive index which is an accumulation of the monthly editions.

Mr. Fisher: While I am concerned with the Canada Council paying a considerable part of the cost for this particular service, my question was directed to why this cost was not taken over completely by the national library. I am sorry I missed recognition of that part so far as the cumulative publication is concerned, but I realize, as I am sure the minister does, that the main cost concerns the actual indexing proportion. The cumulative portion is mainly printing, and the charge is not great. If it is not the case that a very large contribution is being made by the national library, I would like to know how much more it would cost for the national library to take over this complete service.

Mrs. Fairclough: I cannot make an estimate of the additional cost. This is a matter that can be considered and possibly will have to be considered one of these days, but at the present time the information is not available. This whole problem covers a wide field involving many considerations, and I do not think that in a short space of time I can enumerate them all. If the hon. member would like a report in this regard I would be glad to have one prepared.

I might add also, with reference to his comments regarding the information being scattered around, that it is all catalogued, as he probably knows, in the union catalogue which is the key to all the libraries and the books therein. I was wondering as a result of some of the remarks the hon. member made whether he has ever visited the national library.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the reason I would like to know very definitely the role the national library thinks it should play is that we are going to have the Canada Council before the public accounts committee in a few weeks, and I feel that the Canada Council is trying to keep its recurring expenditures and grants as low as possible. If it is seriously considered that the national library could fill this role, it would then follow that there would be more Canada Council money available for scholarships and other things.

Mrs. Fairclough: I think the best solution to this problem is for the hon. member to consult the national librarian. I understand he has never done that. If he would make an appointment to call on the national librarian I am sure he would be glad to supply the hon. member with the information that is available, and I am sure this would serve his purposes.

Mr. Fisher: The minister made the point that I had never consulted the national librarian. There are a tremendous number of people whom I think all members of parliament would like to consult, but it is very difficult to get around to them all. I feel that members make an attempt to focus their attention on questions and suggestions in so far as the expenditures are concerned, and

I suppose primarily we should be interested in cutting them down. I was not trying to suggest, as my earlier comments will show, what in effect might be a cutting down of the whole thing by creating a grand institutional library. I am quite pleased to hear that this is not being conceived. If I can break it down more particularly to Ottawa libraries, I know there is a union catalogue; I also know that libraries are growing all the time, and that union catalogues go out of date. It is a large job keeping them up to date.

Mrs. Fairclough: The hon. member is quite wrong. This catalogue is kept up to date all the time.

Mr. Fisher: Yes, I know that the catalogue is kept up to date all the time, but I was going on to say that this takes considerable time on the part of the librarians both in regard to storing the books and in having the index prepared. What I am trying to get from the minister, and I would appreciate a statement from her not at this time but in the future perhaps in letter form, is how the libraries in the public service in Ottawa are going to dovetail in with the national library. I am not speaking in terms of a catalogue that will be kept by the national librarian, but in terms of the actual coverage and placing of books. Because we have a national health and welfare library, will everything in that field be primarily the responsibility of that department and not that of the national library except in so far as indexing or cataloguing is concerned? Will this also apply to the Department of Justice library in the supreme court building, which I understand tends to be a growing one? I would like to know what the liaison is in this field which prevents duplication.

The point that intrigues me is that if these departmental libraries build up their collections in a good way, as I assume most of them are doing, they finally will reach the stage of competition with the national library in terms of its collection because, as I suggested earlier, the government of Canada in its libraries is covering almost the whole spectrum of publications except perhaps in the literary or historical field.

Item agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: That completes the estimates for which the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration is responsible. We now go to the Department of Agriculture, vote No. 1. This vote will be found on page 4 of the blue book; the details are on page 93.

[Mr. Fisher.]

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Administration branch—

1. Departmental administration, including advisory committee on agricultural services, $991,098.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Chairman, in presenting the estimates of the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year 1961-62 I should like to point out that the summary and the details of services reflect certain organizational changes which have taken place.

During the past year responsibility for the Canadian wheat board and the board of grain commissioners was transferred to the Minister of Agriculture. Also during the year the forest biology division of the research branch was transferred from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Forestry. The total to be voted to the Department of Agriculture in these estimates is $122,202,-953. This includes the amount required for the board of grain commissioners, which is $6.5 million.

There is, of course, no estimate provision for the Canadian wheat board. However, the amounts shown as authorized by statute include $49 million for payment of carrying costs under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act and $920,000 for the provision of interest free cash advances to western grain producers. These items were previously carried in the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce. The amount to be voted, plus that authorized by statute, comes to a total of $172,181,953. The corresponding figure for 1960-61, as shown on page 2, is $205.7 million.

This latter includes the figure for the present fiscal year for the board of grain commissioners for carrying costs of wheat reserves and for advance grain payments. It does not include the amount voted in 1960-61 for the forest biology division. The amounts and details shown for 1961-62 and 1960-61 are therefore drawn on a comparable basis and reflect the requirements for and expenditures on the activities now conducted under the Department of Agriculture.

The committee may be interested in a broad break-down of the $122.2 million among the main categories of departmental activities. The amount required for research is $28.8 million, which is 24 per cent of the total. The administration of legislation requires $32.4 million, or 28 per cent of the total. This covers the wide range of legislation administered by the department, including the grading of farm products, animal and plant health, the Canada Grain Act, the Prairie Farm Assistance Act and the Agricultural Stabilization Act. For rehabilitation, which includes P.F.R.A. in western Canada and

M.M.R.A. in the maritimes, $27.2 million is required. This is 22 per cent of the total. Grants and subsidies require $31.2 million, which is 25 per cent of the total.

The main item in this category is freight assistance on western feed grains, for which $20 million is provided. Included in this category also are quality premium payments on hogs and cheese, lime assistance, grants to fairs and exhibitions and to agricultural organizations. The balance of the vote, some $2.6 million, is required for departmental administration, which includes the economics division.

The committee will note that the amount to be voted in these estimates is $40.5 million less than that granted for the 1960-61 fiscal year. The figure for the present fiscal year, however, includes supplementary estimates to date, the largest item in which was the $42 million for western grain producers' acreage payments. Excluding that amount, these estimates show an increase of $1.5 million over the amount provided for the year ending on March 31.

It will be noted in the details that there are increases in some votes and decreases in others. The largest category of increases is for salaries, which are higher by $7.6 million, due mostly to increases in salary rates. The actual staff increase provided for next year is the equivalent of 73 positions, which is six tenths of 1 per cent of the present staff total. The next largest increase, of almost $2 million, is in the vote for construction of works under land rehabilitation. This is accounted for by greater activity in the construction of the South Saskatchewan dam. In fact $2.6 million more will be required for that project in 1961-62 than was required in 1960-61.

I may say that construction of the dam is proceeding at a satisfactory pace, and on schedule. Stage 1 of the embankment has been completed and stage 2 is nearing completion. Work is proceeding on the downstream diversion tunnels. Contracts will be let shortly for the upstream diversion tunnels and for stage 3 of the embankment.

I think I need not take the time of the committee at this stage to go into details of individual items of expenditure. I know that many hon. members of the committee will be interested enough to discuss these subjects under the respective votes. I do wish to say a word about farm income. In any analysis of farm income in recent years it soon becomes apparent that after the war we were in what can be described as a sellers' market. This was the period of reconstruction in Europe; this was the period of the Korean war. Since about 1953, and possibly starting with the calendar year 1954, we have entered into a buyers' market. Our Canadian industry and Canadian farmers are now faced more than ever before with the crash of competition.

I thought the committee might be interested in seeing just how we were making out in increasing farm income in this period of the buyers' market, or this competitive period which we are now in. I have put together some figures obtained from the dominion bureau of statistics. These figures give total cash income, which does include supplementary payments by the federal government.

I am going to read these figures by calendar years. Perhaps some hon. members will wish to copy them down, so I will read them slowly enough for that to be done. In 1954 the total cash income was $2.378 billion; in 1955 it was $2.384 billion; in 1956 it was $2.647 billion; in 1957 it was $2.575 billion. If one adds these figures together and works out the average, the average total cash income for farmers in Canada for those four years, the first four years of the buyers' market, comes to $2.493 billion. The figure for 1958 was $2.873 billion; the figure for 1959 was $2.808 billion; the figure for 1960, which is not yet final from the D.B.S., was $2.861 billion. If you add the last three figures you will find that the average total cash income for each of those years was $2.847 billions.

Therefore the conclusion which can be derived from this analysis is that during each of those three calendar years there was an increase in the total cash income to the farmers of Canada amounting to more than $350 million. I think this does indicate in some measure the efforts of the government not only to stabilize farm income but to increase it.

Mr. Argue: May I ask a question at this point? Does the minister have any figures or statistics showing the increases in the cost of production over the same period of time?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I will deal with that later on when I deal with net income.

The full picture cannot be appreciated until we examine how many farmers there are. There has been a steady decline in the farm population for many years now, so I will give the figures of the number of farmers and then relate them to income. In 1954, in round figures, there were 594,000 farmers in Canada. In 1955 there were 584,000; in 1956, 575,000 and in 1957, 565,000. If you average the number of farmers in those four calendar years the figure comes to approximately 580,000 during that four-year period of the buyers' market. In 1958 the number of farmers is estimated at 555,000. In 1959 the figure is 546,000 and in 1960, 536,000. If you average the number of farmers during that three-year period the figure is approximately 545,000.

Now, if one takes the average number of farmers in the first four years of this seven-year period of the buyers' market and divides this income among those farmers, the figure of cash income for the years 1954 to 1959 inclusive is $4,303. If one takes the numbers of farmers for the three-year period 1958 to 1960 inclusive and divides the income for the same period among those farmers, the income per farm comes to $5,214. Therefore, comparing the four-year period 1954-57 with the three-year period 1958-60, there is an increase in cash income amounting to $911 per farmer.

It is obvious that this increase in cash income per farm is due, first of all, to the efforts which we have been making to increase farm income and, second, to the fact that there is a smaller number of farmers. By placing these two sets of figures in juxtaposition one can draw, I think, fairly sound conclusions.

Having put on record those figures which deal with total cash income, I should like now to deal with this question which has puzzled farmers for 25 years, namely why it is that farmers do not receive what they call a fair share of the national income. It is not too easy to find some group in our economy which is comparable with the farmers. The only group I can find which seems to give us some basis of comparison comprises those who are engaged in unincorporated non-farm business. So, from the dominion bureau of statistics labour force survey, I am going to put some figures on the record which I think will show how we are making out in our deliberate policy of seeing what we can do to bring farm income up to a fair share of the national income.

The figures I intend to quote now are net farm returns per farm. In 1954 the figure was $1,792. In 1955 it was $2,376. In 1956 it was $2,836, and in 1957 it was $2,133. Adding and averaging, one gets a figure which shows that during this four-year period of the buyers' market the net income of farmers was $2,284. But one should compare this with the income of non-farm unincorporated business. In 1954 non-farm incorporated business received, on the average, $2,883. In 1955 the figure was $3,162; in 1956, $3,341; in 1957, $3,351. The average for this period received by non-farm unincorporated business was $3,184 as compared with $2,284 by the farmers. Put as a percentage of farm income, and relating this to the net income of the non-farm unincorporated group, the farmers received 71.7 per cent of the income received by a reasonably comparable group.

Looking at the figures for the years 1958 and 1959, net farm income in 1958 was $2,891 and in 1959, $2,643. Naturally, we have no figures yet for 1960 and we shall not have those figures for some time, but those two years I mentioned give an average of $2,767. Non-farm income has been increasing as well in the last two years. In 1958 it was $3,563 and in 1959 it was $3,619, or an average for those two calendar years of $3,591. Expressing these figures as a percentage of net farm income, as related to non-farm income, the percentage for the last two years is 77 per cent. Therefore during the last two calendar years of the buyers' market as compared with the four previous years of the buyers' market, farm income as a percentage of non-farm income for a comparable group has risen from 71.7 per cent to 77 per cent.

I have been looking at the figures for the first three quarters of 1960. I suggest that when the figures are finally calculated for the calendar year 1960 they will reflect this same upward trend in percentage. Therefore, even though the gradual gain in farm net income as compared with non-farm net income is obvious, it indicates that at the rate we are going it will take about ten years to bring farm net income up to the same percentage level of non-farm income. I put these figures on the record to make clear just one fact, that I do believe we are closing the gap, and this was our intention.

I think it is necessary for me to point out that when one analyses the farm income of this country product by product and region by region, it soon becomes clear that the most variable area is the prairie province area. It soon becomes clear also that the most variable commodities in rate of return are the grain products of western Canada. Therefore it is clear that any government in charge of the selling of wheat, oats and barley has as a first duty to press forward in every way possible to increase the sales of western grain.

I need not tell a committee composed of hon. members knowledgeable with respect to the relationship of eastern and western agriculture that if western Canadian grain is not sold in export markets, the pressure on farmers in every part of the country grows. Therefore it is in the interests of farmers in every part of Canada to closely examine the efforts of the government in the selling of grain in the export market. I do not intend to make any predictions as to what the final total sales will be during this crop year, but I do intend to say something about the efforts we are making to sell grain. I am of the opinion that a good deal of credit goes to my colleague, the present Minister of Veterans Affairs, for the efforts he made through the wheat board in making direct contact with our main customers and in moving into what I call the new market areas to establish the preliminary contacts to make known the type of wheat we have and its particular qualities that would be an advantage to those countries if they used it. This means there has to be a concerted sales effort. In addition to the general approach of the salesman, we must have a concentrated attack on all the problems that are associated with the selling of this product.

It has become very obvious, I believe, that if we are to continue to sell our flour and wheat in some areas of the world we are going to have to exert every effort at all levels to establish flour mills in those countries and provide the bakeries and demonstration units that must be associated with them to get the maximum consumption of bread in countries that have not used bread before.

We are in full course on this program. It is not going to be easy, because we have competitors in the sale of grain all around the world who have the same idea. We have individual promoters in various countries that are actively seeking the same type of opportunity as individuals or groups. However, it will be of interest, I know, for the committee to be aware that we are in full course on this policy ourselves.

Another point I should like to mention in this connection is that it is now very obvious that there are other things for which wheat can be utilized besides the traditional product, bread. It is no secret that thousands of years ago wheat and barley were used as a staple diet not in the form of bread. In many countries of the world where the tendency to turn to the use of the new product, bread, is slow, it might be possible for us to sell wheat ready for human consumption closer to the natural form.

I want to close off in the next few minutes after making known to the committee what we are doing with respect to another aspect of our sales efforts. Starting January 1 we set up under the Canadian wheat board a technical services and market research division, the objectives of which are as follows:

1. To assess at first hand the raw material requirements of the wheat consuming industries in all the potential and actual wheat importing areas of the world.

2. Where it appears likely that Canadian wheat or flour may be used to advantage in such markets, to work with the consumer industries to the end that they become aware of the advantages that can accrue from the use of such wheat or flour. In areas where the consuming industries are already adequately aware of the advantages offered by the use of Canadian wheat, to maintain close liaison with industrial and government technical personnel to ensure the maximum dissemination of technical information and know how, concerning Canadian wheat and flour.

3. To establish and maintain technical liaison in the areas of grain handling, wheat breeding, quality assessment and milling and baking in those countries which export wheat, or which could become exporters of wheat, of a type potentially competitive with any of the various grades of Canadian wheat.

4. To establish liaison with government officials and scientific personnel in underdeveloped countries which might develop in time a bread eating habit. To offer assistance, in these areas, in the establishment of cereal laboratories and in setting up quality criteria.

5. To write, edit, translate and publish such bulletins, pamphlets, press releases, etc., as appear useful in support of the objectives listed under item 2.

At the head of this new division we have a topnotch cereal chemist, a young man. We have as his assistant an expert on Canadian milling. Serving under them will be four or five younger men with multilanguage ability who will learn the techniques of Canadian milling and the chemical properties of our grain and will be able to deal directly with these countries in their own language to make our present and potential customers aware of how they can use Canadian wheat to better advantage. I think this is the type of thing a corporation would do in selling its products through familiarizing the consumers with the best uses of the products it has available.

I thank the committee, Mr. Chairman, for allowing me to run over the normal hour of adjournment for a few minutes. If hon. members will bear with me for another few seconds I will conclude these remarks.

I cannot, as Minister of Agriculture, let this occasion pass without expressing to the committee and to the country my deep concern and anxiety over what would happen to our growing wheat export sales if there were a major rail strike at a critical time during the movement of grain to tidewater, particularly on the west coast. The consequences to the western farmer would be nothing short of catastrophic. I appeal to labour and to management to approach their responsibilities in the full realization of the public interest involved.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, following the remarks made before the lunch recess by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton), when he submitted his department's estimates, I wonder what will be the reaction of the Canadian farmers and, particularly, the farmers of my province.

He quoted figures about the net income of farmers in order to prove that their position in 1960 is better than it was in 1954 or in 1955. But he made no mention of the cost of production index, nor of the spread between production costs and prices of agricultural products; he did not mention farm markets, imports, exports, nor did he refer to the question of butter, hogs and eggs. He did not deal with the Agricultural Stabilization Act, particularly with regard to western grain, in spite of the promises made in 1957 and in 1958.

The minister said that in the main estimates for 1961-1962, certain items had been transferred to the Department of Forestry and so on, and that the estimates of the Department of Agriculture showed an increase of $1.5 million for the fiscal year beginning April 1, 1961. The main items he mentioned refer to research, where the increase reaches 24 per cent, to administration, with a 28 per cent increase, and to expenditures resulting from subsidies, which went up by about 25 per cent. He added that the cost of implementing the rehabilitation and irrigation program has increased by 25 per cent.

It all looks very interesting when only increases are mentioned. But he did not deal at length with the decrease in certain items. However, we shall have the opportunity to raise this matter while these estimates are under consideration.

In the field of agriculture, as well as in the fields of trade, finance, taxes, unemployment and several others, the over-all situation is such that the farmers are losing confidence in their government and, what is more serious still, are losing confidence in their profession. Who would not lose confidence after the fabulous promises made in 1957 and in 1958 by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and his candidates when comparing them to the actual facts?

We recall the promises made during the 1957 campaign by the Prime Minister himself when he said in Toronto:

> We shall provide farmers with their fair share of the national income by a price support policy for farm products which will be related to cost prices.

And he added:

(Text):

> Parity not charity.

[Mr. Boulanger.]

(Translation):

During the 1957 session, which preceded the 1958 election, the government saw fit to introduce a bill aiming at the passage of an act for the stabilization of the price of agricultural commodities.

The preamble of that act was of course very promising; it read as follows:

> Whereas it is expedient to enact a measure for the purpose of stabilizing the prices of agricultural commodities in order to assist the industry of agriculture to realize fair returns for its labour and investment and to maintain a fair relationship between prices received by farmers and the costs of the goods and services that they buy, thus to provide farmers with a fair share of the national income;
> Therefore, the government—

However, after the 1958 election, we saw the government repudiate its promises. Here is the evidence. When, on February 23, 1960, the Liberals moved a non-confidence motion which was in accordance with the preamble of the Agricultural Stabilization Act, 172 Conservative members voted against the motion. In doing that, they voted against their own legislation, against the principles incorporated in that legislation the object of which was to provide farmers with their fair share of the national income.

There are several signs which show that farm income went down in 1959 and 1960, as compared with 1958, the year we were obtaining the full benefit of the legislation passed by a Liberal government.

Mr. Chairman, I will now give figures which do not tally with the ones presented by the Minister of Agriculture this morning, although they are from the dominion bureau of statistics. I quote:

> As a matter of fact, the cash income from the sale of farm products, including payments made under the different acts providing assistance to western farmers, totalled $2.8 billion in 1958, $2.786 billion in 1959 and $2.783 billion in 1960.

We have therefore a continuing reduction of income, in spite of all the legislation passed since 1957 in an effort to stabilize farm income.

If the supplementary payments that are provided under the legislation passed in favour of the western farmers are substracted, we find that the decrease is in the amount of $160 million.

As a matter of fact the cost to the Canadian taxpayers for meeting the commitments under the farm legislation was $77 million in 1960, $22.1 million in 1959 and $60.1 million in 1958.

Moreover, while the farmers were receiving less for their products, they were not paying less for the commodities and services they bought.

The Minister of Agriculture should have told us what has been the increase in the case of commodities and services bought by the farmers these last years.

If we take a basis of 100 for the period 1935-39, we see that the index of goods and services purchased by the farmers in 1956 was 247.6. It went up gradually and in 1957, it was 255.9, in 1958, 259.9, in 1959, 269.5 and, for the first three quarters of 1960, it was 274.4. That means that since 1956, this index has gone up by 26.8.

Let us take now the index of agricultural products sold on the farm. Using the same basis, we see that in 1956, that index was 234.6. It went up in 1958 and in 1959 but went down again during the first 11 months of 1960 to reach 234.7 or nearly the 1956 level.

Therefore, we see that the cost of goods and services purchased by farmers has gone up while the sales price index of farm products is at the 1956 level.

How many times have we heard that the Conservative government would give the farmers the share of Canada's wealth to the production of which they co-operated?

But what is even more serious is the fact that the government and more particularly the Department of Agriculture has just announced in the farm review for January 1961, that the 1961 income would remain at the 1960 level.

When will this government keep its promises? When will it give parity, not charity? When will it put back in each farmer's pocket the $120 that the Liberal government took from him in taxes each year?

Now, I should like to quote what the Minister of Agriculture stated recently to a group of dairy farmers of Canada at a meeting held in Vancouver.

I want to quote these few words to show how the statements of the Minister of Agriculture in this house can differ from the ones he makes elsewhere.

Here is what he said:

(Text):

The purposes are, first of all to take out the ups and downs and to stabilize prices; the second purpose, in so far as products consumed in Canada are concerned, is to use this as a platform on which we can begin to build up the returns to agriculture so as to give them a fair share of the national income or, in other words, moving towards parity of income. This is not charity—this is using the legislative power to give the farmer some of the protection that the other segments of the economy have had. You all know what I am talking about.

The working man has the protection of provincial legislation which sets the minimum wage. He has the protection of the tariff for the goods that he produces for the home market. He has the protection of unions if he works in an organized industry where the union bargains to make sure that he gets his share of the national income. The farmer has not got this kind of help. The businessman also has the protection of a tariff if he is producing for the home market. He has the right to set his own price on the basis of cost, plus a reasonable return. The farmer cannot do that and outside of a few places and commodities where the marketing boards have been used as a bargaining agency the farmers, generally speaking, cannot secure that type of protection.

So what the government has done here is to take advantage of the fact that the federal government is concerned in the future of interprovincial marketing. We have tried to build into the system that act which for the first time is beginning to attack this problem of instability of prices, and to use prices as a device to support and, if possible, raise income.

(Translation):

Since 1957 we have been hearing remarks of that kind from our ministers.

What do they want to say? After the results achieved in farming in the last four years. the remarks of the new Minister of Agriculture today should amount to more than so much hot air. Indeed, the minister should have told the producers to what extent they will have to contribute toward economic activity in the years to come.

Mr. Chairman, I would now like to address myself to the situation of feed grain deliveries in the eastern areas during the summer, until the closing of navigation. We learned in the newspapers that from August to the end of the navigation season, in the harbours of Montreal, Quebec city, Baie Comeau and others, a number of ships were waiting in line for two, three and even four weeks in front of elevators full of grain, particularly wheat for export. Those ships could not unload their cargoes, and there was no feed grain on the eastern markets.

In the meantime, our farmers were having all sorts of difficulties in getting supplies, and when they could get them they had to pay a high premium. Now, this shortage of feed grain on the eastern markets, was due to a decision of the Canadian wheat board to ship only export grades to eastern ports. Incredible losses of the order of $1,000 to $3,000 daily were suffered by ship owners, not to mention the loss suffered by farmers who saw their operating costs increase on account of the higher prices they had to pay for their feed grain.

Although the oats crop will be considerably increased this year over last year, the Canadian wheat board charged 84½ cents a bushel for October oats, compared with 60 cents a bushel paid to western producers, at Fort William.

The feed grain requirements in the eastern areas amount to more than a hundred million bushels a year; and from October to the end of the navigation season, close to 50 million bushels must be shipped to fill the requirements for the winter months. There is not much publicity about this 100 million bushel eastern market, but when a few million bushels are sold abroad, the publicity machine of the Department of Agriculture starts rolling at once. Because of the lack of interest shown by the Canadian wheat board and the government, the eastern farmers will have to pay $300 more per carload for moving their grain than it would have cost them if that grain had been moved by ship at the proper time.

Another consequence the farmers will have to bear will be the one resulting from the discriminatory policy carried out by the board and the government since a decision was made last December 28. May I recall the words used by the Prime Minister himself in a speech made in his home town of Prince Albert, when he said: "From now on, the western mills may also buy their oats, barley and wheat in their own provinces, directly and on the open market, at lower prices than those asked by the board for the domestic market in the east."

Unfortunately for the eastern farmers, he stressed the fact that his government was not taking any position which might be the slightest cause of trouble for the board.

With these words, the Prime Minister gave a blank cheque to the grain mill owners, allowing them to organize for integration. Indeed, with the considerable amounts which they have at their disposal, they will build chicken ranches, pig farms and even packing plants and ultimately take over from the farmers in this country. Then, they will be able to pay their own price for their grain without considering the wheat board or the grain producers.

It is strange that the prairie farmers, who always supported the Canadian wheat board, should have asked for an authorization to sell their grain without being subjected to the regulations of the board. Since then, they get prices 50 per cent lower than they were getting through the board. Today, they are selling their surplus to the grain mills, to other elevators, to other livestock producers, or else they have to increase the number of their animals to use up their grain.

I should like at this point to deal with two particular areas of the province of Quebec which are affected by feed grain prices, the lake St. John and Chicoutimi areas.

I deplore the fact that the hon. members for those two regions are not in the house to learn of the situation which prevails there.

Mr. Grafftey: There are not many Liberal members in the house at this time.

Mr. Pigeon: This matter should also be of interest to the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis), and yet he is absent.

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, Canada's subsidy legislation contains rules that are detrimental to certain regions. I will explain how that is so.

To show the difference in transportation costs paid by the farmers who buy grain, I have chosen two points equally distant from Quebec city.

A freight rates analysis shows that the rate between Quebec and Roberval, a distance of 188 miles, is 36 cents. On the other hand, for the same distance, or almost—189 miles—from Quebec to Bic, the rate is 32 cents during summer and 42 cents during winter, or an average of 37 cents.

At this time, the rates between Roberval and Quebec, and Bic and Quebec are identical, to a cent or so, but when we take the grants that are paid towards grain transportation, we notice that the Roberval area receives 43 cents per hundredweight while the Bic people get 67 cents in summer and 68 cents in winter.

Mr. Chairman, that enables us to see the difference between the grain rates in two areas equally distant from Quebec city, and it shows that the lake St. John farmers are at a disadvantage.

Mr. Chairman, I could quote other figures for the towns of Normandin and Mont Joli, which are located respectively at 219 miles and 217 miles from Quebec city, as well as figures for Chicoutimi and Mont Joli which are located respectively at 228 miles and 217 miles from Quebec city.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the minister should make a survey of the freight rates and tell us in a not too distant future what he intends to do in order to give justice to the lake St. John and Chicoutimi farmers.

In fact, those farmers should be treated on the same basis as those of the rest of the province of Quebec.

The farmers in both these areas have accepted huge sacrifices to remain on the agricultural map of the province of Quebec. They have kept abreast of technological advance, improved their farms, set up co-operatives, and particularly a co-operative packing plant which made it possible to process on the spot meats to be distributed in the area. They have invested millions of dollars, and if their situation does not improve soon, it will become untenable.

It is only with great efforts and sacrifices that those farmers have been able to establish organizations which are the pride of the area.

If they are to preserve the millions of dollars invested in their organizations, it is logical that the government play its part now and treat those farmers in the same way it treats the other farmers in the province.

What I feel can fairly be asked on behalf of the farmers in the province of Quebec is this:

1. The same grain transportation grants for farmers of Saguenay and lake St. John areas as the grants now being paid to the farmers in the other parts of the province.

I wish to point out that transportation costs have increased from 25 cents per hundred weight in 1939 to 66 cents, while those in western Canada did not increase correspondingly.

I think the responsibility to make up for the C.N.R. deficits does not rest with the farmers of Quebec, and especially not with those in the Saguenay and lake St. John districts.

2. That the co-operatives, the mills and the farmers should have free access to the feed grain market of western Canada, on the same basis as the western mills. That they should not be compelled to negotiate with the Canadian wheat board.

In the United States, the grain trade is free. The producer may sell to the government or on the market. That is why he can compete with the Canadian market, specially in the poultry field.

Mr. Brunsden: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Boulanger: No. After I have finished.

(Translation):

American corn is sold for more than 10 per cent less than the Canadian corn number 5, in spite of a custom duty of 8 cents per bushel and the absence of any transportation grant.

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Argue: Let him finish.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee unanimously consent to the hon. member continuing?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the members of the committee for allowing me to complete my remarks, and I can assure you that I shall be rather brief.

If the government does not want to agree to a free market, let there be increased assistance to transport of grain to the east, in order that producers may be on the same footing as those of the prairie provinces.

3. A representative of the east, qualified to explain and defend the eastern farmers interests, should be appointed to the executive of the Canadian wheat board.

4. A grain transport co-ordinator should be appointed to look after supplying eastern farmers at the proper time, so as to spare them the extra cost of rail transport during winter.

5. Demurrage cost on cars which are not unloaded 48 hours after their arrival should be removed, as is the case for cars remaining on the tracks at Fort William.

Since the Conservative government has been in power and prior to the ministerial reshuffle last fall, the fate of agriculture in Canada has been in the hands of a prime minister, of a minister of agriculture and of a minister of trade and commerce, the three of them representing prairie provinces. Their dream, and that of the present Minister of Agriculture, was to make of Canada the paradise of farmers. They have made promises but they have not kept them. If we look at agriculture today we realize that the small farmer did not get the promised parity, but merely charity.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member was attacking the Canadian wheat board I wondered about this one fact. Does the hon. member think that the Canadian wheat board has any control over the marketing of oats and barley in eastern Canada?

Mr. Boulanger: I know that when farmers in the east want to buy grain they have to go to the wheat board and pay about twice what feed mills are paying right now in the west.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I think the hon. member may have misunderstood my question. I wonder whether I could be permitted to correct the record at this time. The Canadian wheat board has nothing whatever to do with the sale of domestic grains in eastern Canada. This is a function of the private grain trade, which includes the co-ops in Quebec. It is their responsibility to buy oats and put them into terminal elevators to sell to the eastern farmer.

The wheat board has a part in so far as it is the board's grain moving through channels to export, but so far as domestic grains are concerned the wheat board has nothing whatsoever to do with them east of Fort William.

Mr. Boulanger: When farmers in the east buy oats, barley or wheat, why do they pay twice what the feed mills in the west are paying right now?

Mr. Grafftey: That has nothing to do with the question.

Mr. Brunsden: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question? He has deplored the lack of a free market for grain. As I followed his remarks, he was speaking in a national sense. I should like to ask him if it is his belief, and the belief of his party, that the Canadian wheat board should be abolished.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, I am a little surprised that the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska is not rising quickly to reply to this very important question, since he is of course considered the official spokesman of the Liberal party—

An hon. Member: He is No. 2.

Mr. Argue: —on agricultural questions. My hon. friend, the No. 2 man, is something of an interloper.

An hon. Member: The hon. member for Essex East is No. 1.

Mr. Argue: No, the hon. member who has just spoken is No. 1. It is just that he gets pushed around once in awhile by the soya bean expert, the hon. member for Essex East. I listened with a great deal of interest this morning to the speech delivered by the Minister of Agriculture. There is certainly a great difference between the kind of speech made by the present Minister of Agriculture, and its manner of delivery, as compared with those made by the long term minister of agriculture of the former administration. This morning, the Minister of Agriculture spoke in quiet and deliberate terms. One would almost have thought one was listening to a very elementary lecture on economics as they affect the agricultural situation. The former minister of agriculture, of course, always spoke in a very loud voice, with great energy and with a glass of water in his hand. He fortified himself very frequently with water as he kept making his points.

Mr. Harkness: Which former minister?

Mr. Argue: I am referring to the minister of agriculture in the former administration. I said "the long term minister in the former administration", and I referred to the Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner. As for the present Minister of National Defence, I would not wish to go over the experience he had as minister of agriculture, but he was not a water drinker. The present Minister of Agriculture used a great many statistics this morning. The former minister, the Right Hon. J. G. Gardiner, was a master in the use of statistics and he used a great number of them whenever he spoke. But I think the present minister has put the former minister to shame. I think my friend Jimmie Gardiner would look like a backrow student who had just entered kindergarten compared with a professional like the present Minister of Agriculture as far as the use of statistics is concerned.

One would never think this was a minister speaking for the Conservative party which used to talk in such eloquent terms about parity prices, a fair share of the national income and an improvement of the farmer's position, or that he was the spokesman for a party which used to talk so eloquently on behalf of the small farmer. Now things have changed. What we got from the Minister of Agriculture when he opened these important estimates was not a review of the government's agricultural policy nor a projection of the prospects for agriculture in the years to come but, rather, a discouraging review of very deplorable conditions in this industry. The most significant figures which the minister used, in my opinion, were those which reflected the decline in the number of agricultural operators and they showed how quickly the small farmer is being pushed to the wall under this administration, as he was under the former administration.

I was surprised that the present Minister of Agriculture did not review this thing which they used to call the farmers' charter of rights, known about the country as Bill 237, under which farmers were to get this parity of income and receive by way of deficiency payment technique the kind of support prices for which they have been asking for so many years.

Mr. Brunsden: On a point of order, the hon. member for Assiniboia has used two terms—"pushed to the wall" and "parity prices". I should like to have definitions of those two terms.

The Deputy Chairman: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Argue: Some members around here learn slowly. The odd one never learns at all.

Some hon. Members: That's right.

Mr. Argue: Under this great charter of agricultural rights the farmer has not been faring well, and I think it was significant that the Minister of Agriculture did not refer in his discourse this morning to the effect of the prices stabilization act upon the prices which have been paid to the farmer. I was, of course, for many years a sharp critic of Mr. Gardiner because the average prices established under this legislation were not payable, as some of us felt they should be, directly to the producer, or they were not guaranteed to the producer. Instead, they were paid to the packing companies and the farmer had to deal with the packing companies and do what he could to get from them the established floor. The deficiency payment technique has provided little assistance to agriculture producers because there is no certainty about the way in which the legislation operates. There is no certainty that a farmer who receives less than the stated average national price will recover his losses. As a matter of fact, his chances of recovering those losses are very poor indeed. No deficiency payment has been made in respect of hogs, yet in at least three months, February, March and April, prices less than the stated national average were received by producers who marketed hogs in those months and such people have in fact incurred a very distinct loss which they have no hope of recovering.

This type of so-called support has been used in connection with the marketing of eggs and as in this field I suggest it has been a very dismal failure from the standpoint of the producer. If, as the present Minister of National Defence used to say, one of the purposes of this type of support was to reduce production at times when there appeared to be a surplus, then it has been successful. However, the reduction has been brought about by paying very low prices to producers and by providing nowhere near the national average price for all the eggs farmers have sold.

I have in my hand a report from the Department of Agriculture showing egg prices paid to producers on a Tuesday of each month at Regina and this shows that in January, 1960, the average price for grade A large eggs was 16 cents. In February, it was 15 cents, in March 26 cents, in April 29 cents, in May 24 cents. These are the lowest prices that have been paid at that point for a great number of years, perhaps since the war years. If one takes these prices for the year and averages them, one finds that the average price for grade A large eggs is approximately 29 cents a dozen. Yet in 1956, the last full year before this government came to power the average price on the same basis was 38 cents a dozen.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Have you got the figures for the balance of the year?

Mr. Argue: I have to be fair and say there was a deficiency payment made. According to the Canadian federation of agriculture bulletin it works out at 2.4 cents on the average for the year. If one takes that 2.4 cents and adds it to the average I have put on the record today one finds that the producers have lost six cents a dozen or even more under this kind of support policy as compared with the prices they were paid in 1956. The whole point I am making is this. Under the present policy followed by the government there is no floor, no certain assurance—

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member—

Mr. Argue: I have the floor and I intend to keep it until I have concluded my remarks. The minister may then ask all the questions he likes. I was saying that under this policy there is no certain floor under eggs or hogs. It is the rough average method with the deficiency payment technique which may result in no payment being made even when prices are below the floor or there may be a tiny payment as was the case with regard to eggs. The present government is a Conservative government—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Grafftey: Progressive Conservative.

Mr. Argue: It has its own philosophy. It is a belief in the free market system. The government has followed that belief consistently. It has dumped hogs and eggs on the competitive market without a floor. There is no indication that step by step other products that have been stabilized for a long time will not be put on the open market at great expense to the agricultural producer.

I think it was significant that the minister made no reference to butter. According to the hints we receive there will be some changes, and butter will be subjected to the deficiency payment technique. If that technique is applied to butter, I hope it will be used only in conjunction with a floor price and not as an average price so that the producers of butter may have a certain guarantee instead of this nebulous, will o' the wisp assurance that is contained in the so-called prices stabilization legislation.

I offer no objection to this as a policy so long as the government does not lower the return to the producers by putting butter in the same category as eggs and hogs, thus helping to bring about the ruination of the butter producer.

There have been some agreeable indications in recent days of additional sales of wheat being made to certain countries of the world. These are welcome and I hope these additions to our regular markets may be maintained.

I believe the minister will agree that some of these sales, and particularly the sale to China, was in the nature of a windfall or extraordinary sale. China faces a famine situation and is unable to buy from the United States the grain she requires. Because of the famine condition and the attitude of the United States with respect to the sale of commodities to that country, Canada was successful in making sales in that market. I am pleased about those sales, but a great deal more must be done to bring about increased grain sales if we are to have any hope of adequate sales on a longer term basis. What has been going on is not so good as to give the government great cause for joy. I have in my hand the last published statistical summary of the board of grain commissioners, dated February 15. It shows overseas clearances of wheat this year to date to be 141 million bushels as compared with 138 million bushels last year, a moderate improvement. Examining other sales, we find that the sale of barley has dropped by an amount greater than the increase in wheat sales. Barley exports have been reduced from 20.6 million bushels to 6.2 million bushels.

Mr. Speakman: What is our surplus of barley?

Mr. Argue: If one takes the overseas clearances for all grains to date this year one finds they have been 157.3 million bushels as compared with 167.6 million bushels last year, a total aggregate drop of 10 million bushels.

[Mr. Argue.]

The minister said the situation was not satisfactory. This year it is even less satisfactory than last year in terms of our accomplishments to this point.

It has been said, and I think accurately, that grain is sold through what might be called a pipe line and that in order that a producer at the extreme end of the pipe line may feed his grain through, the grain obviously must come out at the other end. There is a very accurate relationship over a period of time between farmers' marketings and sales of Canadian grain.

Farmers' marketings are reflected with some variations in the quotas that prevail. The quotas prevailing in western Canada today leave much to be desired.

Mr. Speakman: Thanks to the grain handlers' strike.

Mr. Argue: The grain handlers' strike had precious little to do with the worst set of statistics relating to Manitoba. After all, Manitoba is on the eastern side. I received a bulletin on February 22 indicating that as of February 8, 160 points in Manitoba were still on a 1-bushel quota as compared with 121 points last year at the same time. There were 153 points on a 2-bushel quota compared with 116 points last year. Last year the number of points on 3-bushel quotas and 4-bushel quotas were much higher than they are this year.

Saskatchewan, as of this date, still has 99 points on a 1-bushel quota and 661 points on a 2-bushel quota. Alberta, where one would have expected this great disaster to have had the worst possible effect, is at the moment in a better position than Saskatchewan or Manitoba in that only 6 points are on a 1-bushel quota; 168 points are on a 2-bushel quota, and 373 points are on a 3-bushel quota.

I plead with the minister to exercise every effort before the end of the crop year to equalize the quotas for grain. The minister knows as well as I do, and perhaps even better, that his area has suffered in the past with respect to delivery quotas. His constituency and mine are on the apex of deliveries, as it were. In some years we cannot take advantage of the eastern deliveries and in others we cannot take advantage of the western deliveries; we have to wait to the last. This has been difficult for producers in our part of western Canada.

The farmers' union has put forward a substantial point deserving of consideration by the minister. They ask that there be a guaranteed quota delivery. The guarantee should be such that if the wheat board is unable to take delivery by the end of the crop year then the difference could be paid to the producer for the grain on his farm. If an 8-bushel quota were guaranteed, as was requested, and a farmer at a given point could market only a 6-bushel quota the board should be prepared to buy the difference on the farm in the farmer's storage. The board could then take its own good time in moving out the grain in the days ahead. By this method some equality would be established in the marketing of grain. I suggest that equality is needed and is long overdue.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Did we not equalize the quotas last year?

Mr. Argue: They were not too bad last year. The marketings were not equalized but less damage was done last year by this method than on former occasions, and I was very pleased to see some improvement.

Mr. Cardiff: Improvement under a Conservative government.

Mr. Argue: The hottest issue at the moment, as far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned, is this whole question of the government having allowed the feed mills in western Canada legally to buy grain at bankrupt prices and to go into a system of stealing, in a legal way, a substantial part of the farmer's normal returns from grain. I feel that this action has amounted to an abdication of principle. It has been a great mistake. Ninety eight per cent of the farmers will lose the chance to deliver this amount of grain through a quota system. The fact that 98 per cent of the farmers will not be marketing grain to the feed mills means that greater pressure will be placed upon them to go into the livestock business to an increasing extent. This means—and there is no argument about this—that the total income of western producers from grain will be lost because the prices paid by the feed mills in western Canada today are lower than the wheat board prices, and in some instances the final prices are disgracefully low.

The minister has promised to take a look at this. I hope he will take a thorough look at it, and I express the strong hope that this mistake will be corrected in the next marketing year. After all, the excuse for doing this has been that the wheat board could not police its quotas. The actions of the wheat board were upheld by the courts. The Supreme Court of Canada said that the wheat board had the right to police its quota for all mills, agreement mills and non-agreement mills. Once the Supreme Court of Canada upheld the wheat board this government in effect repudiated the decision of the courts by saying, we are changing the rules and the feed mills will be allowed "legally" to get this grain at bootleg prices.

Undoubtedly, this has been a severe blow to the system of orderly marketing of grain. What happened in the committee this afternoon spelled out exactly what I feared would happen. In the committee this afternoon no less a person that the official agricultural spokesman for the official opposition said it was his opinion that the grain going to feed mills in eastern Canada should be removed from wheat board control. The pressure that goes with this position taken by the official opposition, together with the natural desire of people in eastern Canada to get their grain at the lowest possible price, suggests that those of us who said this was the thin edge of the wedge that would lead to greater pressure being placed on the government to open the door much wider have been proven correct.

I am disappointed with the stand taken by the Liberal party. I think the official stand they have taken today has been a great mistake. They had better have a caucus and take another look at this subject because the people whom I represent will not be happy to learn that the position of the Liberal party opens the door—

Mr. Regnier: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Argue: When I finish the hon. member may ask all the questions he likes.

I appreciate the reasons given for this action, but I think the sooner we return to the position of ensuring that the wheat board quota regulations shall be enforced on all mills in all parts of Canada the better it will be for the Canadian producer and for everyone concerned in this field.

I had hoped the government would tell us today what they were going to do to improve the income position of the farmer. I was curious to learn from the minister whether it was the intention of the government once again to pay the $1 an acre to farmers in the west, amounting to $40 million or $42 million. I would be interested in knowing whether the government intends to change the method by which this payment is made, if it is going to be made, and put it on the unit system, but there was no comment on that.

The Minister of Agriculture wound up his remarks by giving it as his opinion that a railway strike would place the agricultural producers of Canada in a very difficult position. He called on railway and management to do everything possible to avert a strike. I agree with the minister's statements. I suggest that one of the main reasons we are in this position today is the failure of the government to do anything last fall, except procrastinate and postpone the trouble. They said, "We will not settle it in December; we will postpone it until May 16 and then we shall have to settle it all over again," or the railways can go to the board of transport commissioners and get another hike in freight rates which are already too high.

I think the minister might have singled out management a little more in his remarks. The railway workers said, "We will accept the conciliation board report". I cannot speak for them, but I would not be at all surprised if they would accept the report today if the management of the railway companies were prepared to do the same. The minister lumps them together, although it was the railway companies which refused to settle on the basis of the conciliation board report.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Do you always support that policy?

Mr. Argue: The government has a great responsibility to deal with the agricultural situation. I suggest that to do that these steps should be taken.

First, the government should exert every effort to move the surplus of grain within this country to the markets of the world and to the people who need it.

Second, the government, instead of weakening the orderly system of marketing, should maintain it and expand it.

Third, the government should give every help and assistance to the development of the co-operative movement in Canada at the producer and consumer level, a movement that I think can be of great service to the agricultural producers. To this end I would suggest that, at least for a beginning a co-operative branch should be set up in the Department of Agriculture to lend encouragement to the co-operatives in Canada.

Fourth, I suggest that it is time the government defined its income supports for agricultural producers and spelled out just how and what it is going to do to fulfil its commitments to Canadian producers that would provide them with a fair share of the national income.

Mr. Brunsden: Will the hon. member permit a question? I did not have much luck with my questions to the official agricultural spokesman for the Liberal party. Perhaps the last speaker knows a little bit more about agriculture. He has deplored the falling grain markets in western Canada. Unfortunately for him he mentioned barley. I should like to ask the hon. member if he recalls that the province of Alberta, and Saskatchewan to some degree, lost a market for pearling barley in the Orient by virtue of a strike of longshoremen on the Pacific coast which was fully supported and ardently advocated by his party.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Chairman, that statement is another lie. It is a real lie.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Argue: I do not accuse the hon. member of having lied but it is a lie to say that this political party supported that strike. We had nothing to do with the strike in any way, shape or form. As a political movement we offered no support on this issue in any way, shape or form.

Mr. Brunsden: You endorsed it.

Mr. Argue: That is not true either. That is another statement that is completely false. What I suggested was that the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister of Labour and the government, who have jurisdiction over such works as terminal elevators which have been declared works for the general advantage of Canada, should have done more than sit in their seats and say it was up to somebody else to do something instead of proceeding as they should have to Vancouver and trying to do something to bring the parties together.

Mr. Speakman: Mr. Chairman, my first remarks must be, of course, to express my satisfaction and that of the people I represent with the upward trend in both gross and net farm income. The people in the area I represent are quite pleased with the trend and I think they will continue to be pleased. Like the minister, I sincerely hope for a stay in the trend of farm population away from the farms, and I think the efforts of the government are wholly bent in that direction.

The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska has referred to some promises made with regard to farmers and farm incomes and so on in the campaigns in 1957 and 1958. I should like to refer to some more recent promises made not by members of the government but made at the so-called great national Liberal rally. I should like to refer to the Country Guide for February, 1961. In that issue there is an article with a headline in red, naturally, reading, "Buying the Vote". The article reads in part as follows:

> The Liberal rally held in Ottawa early last month may have made the party faithful who were present glow with enthusiasm, but on at least two counts it was a sad performance . . .
> From an agricultural standpoint, the Liberal rally seemed to be completely bewildered and without inspiration. Mr. Pearson accused the Diefenbaker government of "failure to produce any kind of a solution for agricultural problems". Well, if the Liberals think what came out of the rally resolutions is a better guide to success than what is currently being offered, they are badly mistaken . . . Promising western grain growers a parity price on their first 300 bushels of deliveries each year is not an answer to the grain problem.

The article goes on to say:

Let no one misunderstand us. We are not opposed to social advancement on a wide front, either in agriculture or other sectors of our society.

On the other hand, they do not believe in offering something which is impossible of performance. The hon. member also mentioned rather scornfully, I thought, the wheat sales which have just been completed. I might say for his information that the farmers of western Canada were very highly elated at these additional sales. He did not tell us, of course, what the relative figures were of surpluses of feed grains compared with wheat. I suggest that he should look up these figures. He will find that we do not have a surplus of feed grain but we do have a rather large surplus of wheat.

With reference to the stand of the official opposition with respect to agriculture, I go back to something which was said by "farmer Paul" as he was referred to in the Ottawa Journal last fall. The article in the Journal reads in part as follows:

Mr. Martin, beaming at the government benches as he concluded a speech, said that he might have made mistakes here and there. "I will pit my zeal and my desire"—

He said it smilingly, of course.

—"to do something to assist the western farmer against what my hon. friend promised and has failed to do."

I do not look upon the efforts in recent weeks as evidence of failure when we sell over 50 million bushels of grain. In "Ottawa Report" of February 14, 1961, prepared for the Thompson publications, the hon. member for Essex East is also referred to as the "wicked fairy and his mother goose tales". I think the description is very apt.

I was rather amazed to hear the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska speak about direct half-price sales of grain without quotas to the feed mills. I wondered whether he got his figures from the hon. member for Assiniboia or from the Martin bureau of statistics.

Mr. Argue: Don't blame me for his figures.

Mr. Speakman: In this regard I should like to refer to certain information which appeared in a newspaper recently. The prices are given that were being paid on February 16.

An hon. Member: What paper is it?

Mr. Speakman: The Manitoba Co-operator. It gives the prices being paid by various companies at different locations. At Winnipeg, while the initial wheat board price for No. 5 wheat was 95 cents, the federated co-op was paying a non-quota mill price for the same grade of wheat of $1.25. For No. 1 feed oats they were paying 50 cents compared with a wheat board initial price of 46⅝ cents. For No. 1 feed barley they were paying 75 cents a bushel compared with a wheat board initial price of 75¾ cents. McCabe Grain Company of St. Boniface was paying a non-quota mill price of 75 cents for No. 1 feed barley whereas the wheat board initial price was 75¾ cents. Purity Flour Mills at St. Boniface were paying a non-quota mill price of $1.15 for No. 5 wheat whereas the wheat board initial price was 95 cents. There is quite a list here.

Mr. Argue: Is there any No. 2 wheat? I am wondering whether there is any No. 5 in the Manitoba district.

Mr. Speakman: I do not know how western farmers will react to the suggestion the hon. member made with regard to eastern farmers buying directly. They might be pleased with it but it would not suit the hon. member for Assiniboia, of course.

The hon. member for Assiniboia said a lot of things, most of which I will let the minister answer because I think the minister will answer him very effectively. However, there are one or two points I should like to make with regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Assiniboia. He complained about the minister making a comparison of farm incomes when the trend definitely shows an upward movement. Why? He also complained very bitterly about the deficiency payment method used in the marketing of hogs and eggs. He neglected to mention, of course, that not only had the market been stabilized but so had production and that accompanying this stabilization there had been a very welcome increase in the price received by the producer. He forgot very conveniently that there was a surplus of over 1 million pounds of pork which has now been sold because of the action of the government, and I think this answers the hon. member for Assiniboia very effectively.

The hon. member went on to say something about the slow movement of grain from the prairie provinces. However, he conveniently forgot or just neglected to mention a certain strike of grain handlers on the Pacific coast. I want to refer to that strike because in complaining about low farm incomes and farmers being forced to the wall the hon. member neglected to mention the strike.

I shall read a statement from the Western Producer of Thursday, December 8, 1960. This is a paper which is well known by the hon. member and to the policy of which I believe he subscribes.

—in the Western Producer dated the 10th of last month, where it points out that the basic wages paid to the striking terminal elevator workers is $2.12½ per hour including living bonus.

This is higher than the basic wage paid by any other industry in Canada for semi-skilled labour. Yet they have been offered an increase of 5 per cent which will make their basic wage $2.23 an hour. In addition their position lends itself to considerable overtime for which they get time and a half for weekdays or $3.34 per hour and double time or $4.46 per hour for Sundays and statutory holidays.

These workers refused this substantial increase, to the very great detriment of grain shippers particularly in Alberta and the western half of Saskatchewan.

The hon. member at the time this strike was in progress certainly did not come out against it, and I thought his attitude indicated sympathy and support for the strike.

Mr. Argue: That is not true. That is a false statement.

Mr. Speakman: I just said, Mr. Chairman, that I thought that, and it appeared to me that way.

I can quote another headline about which I think the hon. member is pleased. This comes from the Edmonton Journal of February 5, 1961. In big black headlines these words appear:

Feed mill policy 'legalized robbery'.

The hon. member created quite a little fuss in another part of this house—in one of its committees as a matter of fact—by referring to this "legalized robbery". I think what I have quoted on the record explains this very well.

I should like to refer the hon. member to the Manitoba Co-operator of February 16. He apparently does not read some of these publications because he has made the statement that no one supports this change in the regulations which permits these off-quota sales. This article says:

The western agricultural conference in Saskatoon last week supported new Canadian wheat board regulations permitting farmers to deliver grain to feed mills outside of wheat board price and quota controls.

Of course, my hon. friend from Assiniboia, Mr. Chairman, and his little group, as well as the political party that may result from this dreamed of marriage, have all the answers to all our problems. I will read from a little item in the same Western Producer:

As for the C.C.F. having the answers to our problems, all they could bring us is 100 per cent taxation and we would all end up as employees of the state and all freedom would be lost.

I must agree with that statement.

Mr. Winch: I do not.

Mr. Speakman: Of course you do not, belonging to that party.

[Mr. Speakman.]

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion I have a couple of recommendations which I should like to make to the minister and the government. I have made these recommendations before during the past two years. I should like to ask the minister and the government to give their serious consideration to the inclusion of forage crop seeds—by this I refer to clovers, alfalfas and leguminous crops—in the provisions of the Agricultural Stabilization Act. My constituency and that of my colleague from Jasper-Edson are very heavy producers of clovers, alfalfas and other leguminous crops. Having has good crops the last few years we find the farmers receiving as low as three and four cents a pound for some of their seed. I think it would be a very great boon to a rather large section of Alberta agriculture, and the Peace river, if these crops were brought under the provisions of this act.

I must, of course, make my perennial plea that the government pay the acreage payments to western producers again in 1961 on the same basis as in 1958 and 1960. I think general satisfaction has been expressed by the constituents I represent in this method of assistance which has done far more than could possibly have been imagined at the time the first payments were made, not only for the general welfare but for the economy as a whole.

(Translation):

Mr. Racine: A moment ago, after my colleague from Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger) had spoken, I heard some members opposite say that we were numbered, that we were codified, on this side of the house. Well, for their information, I wish to tell them we are not numbered but that on this side, we are in the habit of dealing with problems which are of interest not only to us but to our electors.

We have listened to the minister with much attention. He quoted many figures and statistics. In those statistics, among other things, the figures which struck me most were, for instance, those bearing on the decrease in the number of farmers in Canada. The minister made much of the increase in gross income. On the other hand, if we take into account the decrease in the number of farmers, we readily realize that the figures he gave us are not accurate in so far as the net income of farmers is concerned, on the basis of their number.

For instance, if I understood him well, he told us that in 1958 there were 575,000 farmers in Canada; he added that, in 1959, there were only 546,000 left, which means a decrease of 29,000 in 1958-59. For 1960, he gave the figure of 536,000, which means another decrease of 10,000.

I am sure that if those figures—

(Text):

Mr. Speakman: I do not think the hon. gentleman wants to be unfair to the minister, who is just coming in now, but he is misquoting his figures.

The Deputy Chairman: The minister will perhaps correct him later.

(Translation):

Mr. Racine: Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, if we take into account the national gross income and if we divide it by the present number of farmers, it is obvious that the per capita income has increased. However, I think we should take into account the production cost which has increased substantially.

While those figures on the decrease of farmers in Canada may help the minister in arriving at his income figure, I am sure, on the other hand, that those figures are certainly not to the liking of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Starr) because they are probably included in the number of unemployed we now have in Canada.

I expected the minister to praise the achievements of the government. I expected, for instance, to hear him refer, as several of his colleagues have done in and out of the house, to crop insurance, to the stabilization prices act and to the Farm Improvement Loans Act. But, following a question I asked recently in the house, I found out that not one province so far has come to an agreement with the federal government about crop insurance, except one, I am told, where it is being tried in a certain area.

We also asked a question about the Farm Improvement Loans Act, and we found out that, probably, that measure has probably not yet been been brought to the attention of all farmers, or at least a great majority of them, since only a few of them took advantage of it.

We also expected, and that would have been most important, the announcement of a new policy on butter. If we refer to the Rural Co-Operator of February 14, 1961, here is what we read:

(Text):

It is understood that butter prices could be reduced 10 cents a pound to consumers beginning May 1, if the federal government approves a plan put before it by agriculture minister Alvin Hamilton.

Reports indicate that the 10-cent reduction in the retail price from the present level of around 69 to 71 cents a pound would not affect the price support of 64 cents. The plan is aimed at reducing Canada's butter surplus by making it more competitive with margarine.

Agriculture minister Hamilton has neither confirmed nor denied the report: "I wouldn't care to comment until there is something concrete from the cabinet," he said last week end.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, following the inventory made of the quantity of butter now in existence in Canada, we expected the minister to announce that policy. But he did not, probably for the reason mentioned in that article of the Rural Co-operator, because the cabinet has not yet taken any decision.

However, if we look at the statistics on December 1, 1960, we realize that there were 131,684,000 pounds of butter in Canada. It seems it would have been a marvellous opportunity and a good policy to establish at once that butter subsidy, which surely would not have failed to help decrease that inventory and encourage farmers who are dependent mostly on dairy farming.

The same policy, for instance, could have applied to powdered skim milk, with an inventory of 4.3 million pounds. The same goes for canned pork, with an inventory of 35.8 million pounds.

Apart from that policy of subsidies, another course could be followed, similar to the policy which is carried out now in the United States. It would consist in distributing to the unemployed, of whom there are approximately 700,000 in Canada, part of the farm surplus. Such action would certainly relieve their present plight.

Mr. Chairman, I was also somewhat surprised to see the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Argue) being shocked by the words of the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Boulanger). I think the latter did not want to deal with a question of principle, but rather to speak in favour of the farmers in eastern Canada. Hon. members who preceded me, including the minister, scarcely mentioned those problems, and only my colleague from Drummond-Arthabaska dealt with them.

What he wanted, or rather what I thought he wanted was a lowering of the price for grain which the farmers in Quebec, Ontario and the maritime provinces have to buy.

I do not think he would want a policy detrimental to the western farmers. On the other hand, I do not blame him for his remarks, because he represents, as I do, a district which has to face numerous problems. And, like the Minister of Agriculture himself and the leader of the C.C.F., he has dealt with those issues—and quite rightly so.

To my mind, the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska proved moreover, by quoting the figures of the dominion bureau of statistics, that the farm income did not increase in 1960, but rather declined. To support that assertion, he quoted, as I said, figures supplied by the dominion bureau of statistics. He brought into these considerations a testimony which certainly deserves to be considered, that of the manager of the federated co-operatives, according to whom the farm income in 1960 was $1,450.

Neither did the minister tell us anything about deficiency payments. Like many other members I would have liked to get from him an evaluation of the results of this new legislation introduced by his government. Having read certain news items, we know that as far pork is concerned there has been some reduction in hog production; however, it is true that prices are kept at the same level.

As I said earlier, the minister did not deal with those problems as we would have expected.

I have here an article published in the column "Backstage" of Maclean's magazine. The author is Peter C. Newman, and the title is:

(Text):

—Maclean's magazine, "Backstage," by Peter C. Newman:

Diefenbaker's new vision—agriculture—and his new visionary—Alvin Hamilton.

(Translation):

Under that article, we see a very good cartoon of the minister—I suppose he has seen it. Here is what is said in the article:

(Text):

In the east, Hamilton wants to be Johnny Appleseed.

(Translation):

Now, the speech he made today and in which he failed to mention the problems of the eastern areas, I feel he is neither Johnny Appleseed nor the one who will be able to give encouragement to our many farmers in the future.

The article also states:

(Text):

Hamilton is confident that he can initiate his revolutionary agricultural policies at the same time as returning the prairie vote to his party. "If Alvin succeeds," says one highly placed Ottawa Conservative, "he'll become one of the top figures in the cabinet. If he doesn't, we could lose the next election."

(Translation):

Says this Tory.

The same article mentions something which seems all the more realistic now that we have just heard the minister, and I quote:

(Text):

Only 12 per cent of the Canadians of voting age still live on farms. But a close study of representation in the House of Commons shows that nearly 60 per cent of its members sit for rural areas. The smashing of Quebec's Union Nationale electoral machine by Jean Lesage, and the Tories' ineffectual political handling of French Canada since the 1958 victory, have convinced Conservative strategists that nothing they can do between now and the next campaign will win back this key province. It will be mainly the support or loss of the farm vote that will decide the outcome of John Diefenbaker's next journey to the polls.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I will simply tell the minister, if he wants his policy to be popular in Quebec, to suggest—and I hope he will have an opportunity to make some comments during the consideration of his estimates—a solution to the problems faced by our farmers.

I believe we are justified in bringing those problems to the attention of the minister since he himself and his colleagues did not have any qualms about making innumerable promises during the electoral campaign of 1957 and 1958. I would say to his colleagues and more particularly to the minister that this failure of the government to keep their promises will hardly help them politically, and even worse, their attitude causes the worst prejudice not only to farmers in Quebec but to those in Canada generally.

(Text):

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, in rising to take part in this debate I should like first of all to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture on his appointment to this portfolio and to wish him success in this new undertaking.

I may also say that the farmers in Canada, and in particular the western farmers, have welcomed his appointment and judging from what has been said by them on different occasions, they expect he will do justice to this very important department.

Even when the minister was in charge of another department, the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, his contribution to the agricultural economy of this country was known and felt in this house, the cabinet, and above all in Canada as a whole. Anybody having any doubt about this need only look at the records of the house to see the truth of what I have said.

To the previous minister of agriculture, the present Minister of National Defence, I should like to express my regret at his leaving the department. He has done impressive work as minister of agriculture but has been called upon to take charge of another department. We wish him the best of luck and we know that he will also do justice to his new department.

Agriculture is a very important part of our national economy. Some people like to prove statistically that agriculture's No. 1 position has been taken over by other industries in Canada. This may be true to a certain extent, but nobody can deny the fact that in importance it is and still will be Canada's No. 1 industry for a long time to come. If we look back on our agricultural history we find that western grain has been the life of Canadian commerce ever since our pioneers opened up the west for settlement. The purpose of the Crowsnest pass agreement of 1897 was to make it economically possible for the western farmers to produce grain in quantities large enough for the needs of Canadian commerce, and the government of that day considered the agreement to be a step in the best interest of Canada. What was true then in regard to grain produced in 1897 holds true today in regard to such grains as wheat, oats, barley, rye, flax and rapeseed produced now in the west for commercial purposes. The Canadian economy depends on commerce today just as much as it did then. This nonsense which some people talk about removing the Crowsnest pass agreement on freight charges is nothing less than an attempt to scuttle the whole of western agriculture. Let me say, Mr. Chairman, that no one knows this better than our Prime Minister, who has said on many occasions that the Crowsnest pass agreement is the magna carta of western agriculture.

While I am on this subject of the Crowsnest Pass freight rates I should really say something about the rapeseed freight charges. Rapeseed is the only grain not covered by the Crowsnest pass agreement. However, I shall reserve my comments on the subject until another occasion. Instead, I should like to say something with regard to edible oil.

As far as the tariff on edible oilseed is concerned, this indeed presents a very disturbing situation. The biggest single factor discouraging the use of this oil in Canada is the fact that Canadian crushers are allowed to crush American soyabeans and rapeseed in Canada—products which come in free of tariff—and thereby by-pass the 20 per cent tariff which is now in effect on soyabean oil and rapeseed oil. I ask hon. members to note the situation: There is a 20 per cent tariff imposed on the soyabean oil and rapeseed oil, but no tariff whatsoever on soyabeans and rapeseed. This is what is happening in the crushing industry: the Canadian crusher purchases all the Canadian soyabeans and rapeseed. He does not use any of these beans and seeds to crush into oil for Canadian consumption. He uses these to make up the 25 per cent of Canadian material in the oil and meal that he markets in Great Britain and other favoured treaty countries. The soyabean oil that he sells in Canada is made from American beans and rapeseed. In this way he entirely by-passes the 20 per cent tariff on the oil. In illustration of this point I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members the fact that margarine production in Canada in 1959 amounted to 152.5 million pounds. Only one tenth of the margarine made in Canada is made from oil seeds grown in this country. The rest is made from oils which come into Canada from the United States duty free.

However, I am happy to see that the Minister of Finance has announced in his supplementary budget that the tariff board is to be instructed to adjust this discriminatory tariff imposed on these edible oils.

I should like to touch on another subject coming within the scope of the Department of Agriculture, namely the price of farm machinery. As you will recall, Mr. Chairman, in the dying days of our last session this question was placed before the standing committee on agriculture so that an investigation might be made. As a member of this committee, I have been looking forward to the resumption of this inquiry. Hon. members know that one of our great problems in the farm industry at the present time is the high price of farm machinery. These prices are out of all proportion to the prices which the farmer receives for his produce and, what is more, the prices of farm machinery are constantly rising year after year while the prices of farm products remain the same or, in some instances, even go down. Is it the high cost of labour which can be blamed for this increase in the price of farm machinery, or are the high profits of the manufacturer responsible for the continued increase in prices? Alternatively, is management at fault for not making a sincere effort to put out an economic machine and hold down the cost of that machine? As a further alternative, is the high cost to be attributed largely to wasteful and expensive methods of distribution? These are questions to which answers must be provided.

I have given very serious thought to the inquiries which have been made into the price structure of farm machinery and I have followed very closely what has been said in the press and on the radio with regard to this matter. In particular, I am interested in a financial statement published by Canadian Co-operative Implements Limited of Winnipeg, Manitoba. According to this statement, the experience of the C.C.I.L. over the years has been that in relation to total sales of slightly more than $54 million there has been a net saving of $5,640,000. This saving has been made on sales which represent a very small percentage of total machine sales in western Canada. In 1959, when C.C.I.L. had a better percentage of total sales than in several preceding years, there was a saving of approximately 14 per cent on sales. This was after meeting the competitive market conditions which caused trade-in losses of 16 per cent and cash discounts of up to 13 per cent of total sales.

More than $1,650,000 has been paid in cash to member customers and more than $500,000 has been placed in a deferred dividend position. This is a really interesting statement as I am sure you will agree, Mr. Chairman. I am just citing this as an illustration. I must say I am not personally too familiar with the C.C.I.L. or its operations although I am a member and, in the past, I have bought some machinery from this co-operative. As a member of our standing committee I intend to recommend when it resumes its sittings that Mr. John B. Brown, president of Canadian Co-operative Implements Limited, be invited to appear before the committee as a witness. I am sure he would be able to give us some more information and throw further light on the operation of this co-operative enterprise. It ought to be very interesting to have other witnesses from other farm implement companies, such as Massey-Harris or Massey-Ferguson, appear before the committee. Wholesale distributors and local distributors of farm implement machinery should also be invited to appear before the committee. When all the evidence and information supplied by these bodies is gathered it will make it possible for the committee to get to the bottom of the whole farm price structure.

Another matter that I would like to bring to the attention of the minister is the problem of our Saskatchewan Honey Producers Co-Operative Marketing Association Limited. It is located in my constituency at Tisdale, Saskatchewan, and is one of the best co-operatives of which I know. They, too, have some marketing problems and have presented a resolution to the agricultural stabilization board for their consideration. I will read the resolution into the records of the house but, before doing so, I should like to give hon. members the background, namely that heavy importations of honey from the United States have been coming into Canada for several years at much lower prices than Canadian beekeepers felt they could afford to accept. To prevent further importations swelling the Canadian honey surplus, during the past year prairie producers offered honey to Canadian honey packers at prices competitive with the United States offerings. This sharply reduced their returns. While this action materially reduced United States imports and the Canadian honey surplus, it was only at the price of placing prairie producers in a precarious financial position.

[Mr. Rapp.]

The directors of the Saskatchewan honey producers co-operative therefore requested that the following resolution be put before the stabilization board. The resolution is as follows:

Whereas the present floor price on honey in Canada is 13½ cents per pound, and

Whereas this represents 104 per cent of the weighted average price obtained by Canadian beekeepers for the past ten years, and

Whereas 50 per cent of the national production during the early part of the ten-year period was produced by Ontario and Quebec, now over 60 per cent of Canada's 1960 crop was produced in the prairie provinces where the sharpest price reductions are presently being experienced, and

Whereas most Saskatchewan beekeepers received only 11 cents for their honey in 1960, and

Whereas there is grave doubt that Saskatchewan beekeepers will receive relief under present floor price arrangements, and

Whereas the floor price is intended to equitably protect all Canadian beekeepers, be it resolved that the agricultural stabilization board re-establish the floor price on honey on a regional basis, based on provincial or natural geographical areas, the manner of calculation for each region being similar to that now being used for the whole country, so that while the floor price in different areas might vary, beekeepers in each region will have more assurance of protection in periods of difficulty in their area.

The honey producing industry plays an important role in our agricultural economy. I should like to draw the attention of the minister to this fact and ask if he will see if justice can be done with respect to this resolution.

While I present this resolution and ask for greater protection on a regional basis, I should also point out that we in the west and particularly in the three prairie provinces have problems with respect to the prices established for hogs and eggs under the agricultural stabilization board. Although deficiency payments were welcomed by all western farmers, nevertheless there is a great need for an investigation to see if more justice would be done by paying out deficiency payments on a regional basis and semi-annually. I will not elaborate on this point at greater length. I know that the minister is familiar with my requests and there is no need for me to go into the particulars of this problem at the present time.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to speak about wheat, oats, barley, rye, the Canadian wheat board, box car allocations or deficiency payments. I wish merely to ask a number of questions of the minister relative to the agricultural situation in British Columbia and the attitude of the minister toward it.

I regretted very much the attitude displayed by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin when he spoke earlier. He is an hon. member who does not appear able to ask questions or say anything in this chamber without putting it on a completely partisan political basis. The hon. gentleman was never more guilty of that than when he spoke earlier this afternoon. I hope I shall not follow that procedure. Surely charge and counter charge will not assist us in a policy discussion on the agricultural estimates. What is required now is not partisan political discussion with accusations, charges and counter charges. What we require is information from the minister and if we wish to go beyond that in participating in the discussion we are free to present constructive proposals.

I shall attempt not to follow the example set by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin who was guilty of political partisanship in his remarks today. It is good to avoid following that example because sometimes we might be prone to answer that kind of attack in like manner. If I were to indulge in that type of thing today I would probably begin by telling the minister that his government is sabotaging the agricultural industry of British Columbia.

Mr. McCleave: Non-partisan, of course.

Mr. Winch: However, that is not my attitude. I should like the minister to tell us if he has had time since assuming his important office to raise his eyes beyond the western prairie horizon of rye, oats, wheat and barley and look over the mountains into British Columbia? British Columbia is a mountainous province with four ranges running from north to south. Far too many people do not realize that between those ranges we have some of the most productive agricultural land on the North American continent. Admittedly, sir, I speak as a member from the urban area of Vancouver but I know British Columbia and I love it. With all due respect to every other member in this house, I say that in the Fraser valley of British Columbia, from Vancouver to Hope, in the valley areas, in the mountain ranges, from Salmon Arm, Enderby, Armstrong, Vernon, Penticton, Kelowna, to Osoyoos, we have some of the finest, fertile, productive agricultural lands in North America. This has been proven in the production of soft fruits, hard fruits and vegetables. A change has taken place over the past few years. I tried to raise this matter last session but unfortunately did not get very far with it.

I have lived in Vancouver since 1910, when I was only three years of age. I can remember the productivity of the Fraser valley in regard to berries, and particularly strawberries. Our product went around the world in the shape of jellies and jams, but that situation does not obtain today. Production is now purely for the local market. Why is this so? Because no attention has been paid to the buying up of our canneries and factories by people below the border and exporting to Canada their products, but selling them under the Canadian brand.

It is only a few years ago that in the area from Lillooet to Osoyoos there were 16 canneries. Last year only four were left. I have been advised of one in that area which is going to close this year and which I maintain holds a world record for the quality of its products, namely vegetables, peas, tomatoes, and so forth. Why is this so? It is because the area from Lillooet to Osoyoos is three weeks behind production in California. By the time the agricultural producers in the areas I have mentioned are set to market their products California is set to market its surpluses, and moves them into British Columbia. Certain action has been taken by governments in the past in regard to the situation, and this is the reason certain of our canning companies in Canada, and particularly in British Columbia, were bought out. The reason is simple. If the small canning companies are not there, then the producers have no market to which to sell.

I raised this matter last year in regard to tomatoes and the then minister of agriculture—I am glad he is in his seat at the moment—answered to the effect that a subsidy would be granted for the crop year but it would then cease. I still have the letter to that effect from the hon. member. Wheat, oats, barley, rapeseed and rye are important in many parts of Canada, but berries and vegetables are very important to our province of British Columbia. To the best of my information the situation in the coming year will be worse than it was a year ago. Judging from the information sent to me by growers, I am of the opinion that they are very disturbed at the situation. I say to the Minister of Agriculture, through you, Mr. Chairman, that, much as we recognize the emphasis and importance that the minister has placed on agriculture in the prairies, we would like him to take a good look at the maintenance of agriculture in British Columbia. We would like to hear whether the Minister of Agriculture has any special plans for the protection of our berries, our soft fruits and our vegetable industries. We would like to know whether a special study will be made of the situation there on a production, canning and marketing basis.

We may be known as a lumbering and mining province but, if my memory serves me correctly, our third greatest industry has been agriculture. It has been deteriorating. I fear that it has been neglected and is still being neglected by the federal Department of Agriculture. Just because we may be hemmed in by four mountain ranges and 3,000 miles from Ottawa we should not be ignored. We are an integral part of Canada. I gather from this morning's newspapers that we are such an important part of Canada that if plans go through at the dominion-provincial conference we are going to lose out because of the wealth of our province.

I hope I have not fallen into the despicable line of thought of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin by asking the minister to raise his eyes above the Rocky mountains and look at agriculture in British Columbia and advise us as to present plans for the protection of agriculture in our province, in the Fraser valley from Lillooet to Osoyoos. I made a mistake. I almost ignored that most marvellous agricultural area, especially in so far as seeds are concerned, namely Grand Forks. Now that the minister has taken over this most responsible office I ask him whether a special study will be made of the potentialities of agriculture in British Columbia and whether protection will be given to that great industry?

Mr. Coates: Mr. Chairman, I should like to join in this debate and make a few comments on agriculture as it pertains to the maritime provinces.

First of all, I should like to extend my congratulations to the minister, both on his appointment as Minister of Agriculture and on the enthusiasm he has brought to this department, which enthusiasm was so apparent when he was minister of northern affairs and national resources. I should like to say to him that I was recently in Nova Scotia and in talking with people keenly interested in the agricultural industry in that province I learned that his recent visit to the maritimes was greeted with enthusiasm He has instilled in the people of our area an outlook so far as agriculture is concerned that we like to see them have. Personally I should like to see him come back to visit our people again and I hope he will do so in the very near future.

It has become a regular custom for members of parliament from Nova Scotia to meet with the executive of the Nova Scotia federation of agriculture each year when they come to Ottawa to attend the annual meeting of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. Members from Nova Scotia have come to look forward to this annual meeting as an opportunity to get views of those engaged in agriculture in our area and as an opportunity to have brought to our attention those matters which are felt to be most pressing by the Nova Scotia federation of agriculture.

[Mr. Winch.]

At this time I should like to bring some of the suggestions brought to our attention to the attention of the minister in order that he may be fully aware of the attitude of the federation with respect to the different aspects of the industry. At our recent meeting a number of matters were discussed. One thing that is of particular importance to me as the member for Cumberland is their views with regard to the Maritime Marshland Rehabilitation Act. This act came into operation some ten years or more ago and was put into effect to help marsh owners in our province to improve their lands throught a system of dikes, aboiteaux and dams.

When the act was brought into force some ten years ago it was indicated there would have to be an agreement between the federal and provincial governments and the farm bodies in the different areas in order that all might be aware of the importance of the projects that would be undertaken. At that time an agreeement was made between the federal government and the province that when the work was concluded the province and the marsh owners would take over the maintenance of the projects that had been undertaken. No doubt when this was agreed upon no one imagined the magnitude of the work that would be carried out under the act and in the light of that fact an agreement was reached.

Today, however, as the work draws to a close the province and the marsh bodies both see the tremendous costs that will fall upon them should the maintenance be placed on their shoulders alone. Because of this fact they have emphasized very strongly that the federal government should endeavour to phase in the maintenance work under the agricultural rehabilitation and development legislation. This would mean that those lands that have been greatly improved in value would not now have to be left to revert to their former condition, for if the federal government were to insist that the maintenance be carried out by the province and the marsh bodies that would no doubt be the result over a long period.

It is quite apparent that neither the province nor the marsh bodies can accept the financial obligations that would be placed upon them if the federal government were to insist on their maintaining the work that has been done. If we are to endeavour to keep these lands that have been tremendously improved as the result of the work carried out for the generations of today and tomorrow we must give further assistance and endeavour to phase in this work under the new rural rehabilitation scheme. I ask the minister to give this matter his most serious consideration.

Another point I should like to bring to the minister's attention in this regard is that the headquarters of the M.M.R.A. administration are at present located in Amherst and over the period of the operation of the act a very large and competent staff has been built up consisting of people who are well aware of the problems of the area and who have created a great deal of good will in their negotiations with the marsh bodies. It is my hope that the department will give consideration to using the facilities and the skills that are readily available at Amherst to carry out the provisions of the agricultural rehabilitation and development legislation.

May I also bring to the minister's attention some other points that were emphasized by the Nova Scotia federation of agriculture with regard to which I would appreciate his serious consideration. One point they raised which I have also brought up in debates in the house has to do with unemployment insurance for farm labourers. I know this matter is under study at the present time by the Department of Labour. The representatives of the federation point out that it is a problem that has caused farmers in the maritime provinces a great deal of difficulty in attracting seasonal help. The reason is a simple one. If such people work for someone other than a farmer they are able to get stamps and to qualify for seasonal or regular benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act. If they work for farmers they are not able to obtain these benefits which are so very important to many people in the maritime provinces. I realize that the minister is keenly aware of the circumstances of our farmers in this regard.

Another matter for which they request consideration has to do with the establishment of total disability insurance to be incorporated in the terms of loans made through the farm credit corporation. In Nova Scotia our provincial agricultural loans contain a provision guaranteeing this total disability insurance. The Nova Scotia federation have recommended that this be considered by the federal government as well, and incorporated in our farm credit legislation. It is my belief that we recently have made death disability insurance available through this legislation to farmers at their discretion if the loans are not supervised, but it is mandatory if loans are supervised. I would ask the minister to give serious consideration to the placing of total disability insurance in this scheme as well.

The Nova Scotia federation requests consideration for an increase in the support price for lambs. The federation states that the support price in the maritimes is below that either in Montreal or Toronto, and they wish consideration given to the support price being increased to bring it in line with the prices now available in those two areas.

Another matter which they wished brought to the attention of the government, but one which I feel should more rightly be placed before industry itself, is the equalization of transportation rates on farm machinery in this country. I believe an example could be made in respect of cars better than farm machinery. We know that a car manufactured in Ontario is more expensive in Nova Scotia than in Ontario, while at the same time we find that European cars come to this country and the price is the same in all parts of this country. I should think, since a large proportion of the cars manufactured in Canada are sold in the two central provinces, this problem of equalization would not be a very difficult one. A small increase in the price of cars in Ontario and Quebec would produce enough funds to provide an equal price level across the country. If the European manufacturers see merit in this scheme, I see no reason why our own manufacturers cannot take the initiative in this matter and let the government stay outside, where it should be in respect of such things.

The only other point that I should like to bring to the attention of the minister at this time is the matter of the government's policy on deficiency payments for hogs. I would point out to the minister that last year the Nova Scotia federation of agriculture supported the government when it put this policy into effect. I might therefore point out that as a result of this policy and the attitude of the Nova Scotia federation of agriculture, there has been a very substantial increase in the production of hogs in the maritime provinces. As all hon. members know there has been a substantial increase in the price paid for pork since this policy went into effect and as a result of the guidance provided by the Nova Scotia federation of agriculture, our farmers have benefited materially.

I do not think there is anything more that I wish to add at this time. I wish to thank you all for listening to my remarks.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Chairman, before the time for closing the sitting of the committee, which arrives in a few minutes, I wonder if I could get unanimous permission of the committee to have printed in Hansard two tables which will give the prices at non-quota feed mills in the last two weeks. I might explain my request by saying that three speakers during the debate today have mentioned the prices of these feed mills, and I think the best way to put the facts on the record would be to turn over to this committee the reports made each week by the Canadian wheat board in respect of these prices. Of course, the names of the companies would be omitted. This will enable all members, and other persons across the country, to see the type of sampling we have on these prices.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before that request is dealt with, do I understand the minister to say that these are figures that were procured by the Canadian wheat board and that the board stands behind them?

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: I see no objection.

The Deputy Chairman: Will the committee give unanimous consent to having these figures printed in Hansard as though the minister had read them?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

M.F.W.
FEBRUARY 20TH, 1961

The Deputy Chairman: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of public and private bills, the former having precedence, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO ABOLISH IMPOSITION OF CORPORAL PUNISHMENT

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-10 to amend the Criminal Code (corporal punishment).

He said: Mr. Speaker, before referring to the debate which took place on this subject in April of 1959, I should like to outline the approach that I wish to take in the discussion of this bill today. I should like to say something first of all about the present position of judicial corporal punishment in Canada, and say something about the report and recommendations of the House of Commons and Senate committee on capital and corporal punishment of 1956. I want also to review the latest material that has come to the attention of the public on this question, namely the report of the advisory council on treatment of offenders in the United Kingdom presented to the home secretary in November of 1960.

The present situation in Canada is that courts are sentencing people to be lashed and strapped for a series of serious and unpleasant offences. In 1956 seven people were sentenced to the lash and six to the strap; in 1957, 12 to the lash and 21 to the strap; in 1958, 12 to the lash and 8 to the strap. The latest figures that I could obtain from the department indicate that the applications of the lash in 1959 were up above the 1958 figure of 12, and that the strapping figure was down from the 1958 figure of eight. The lash in particular has been applied. Persons have been sentenced to be lashed, and these sentences carried out, for such crimes as incest, assaults on females, indecent assaults on females, rape, sexual intercourse or attempted sexual intercourse, robbery and robbery while armed.

These are not pleasant matters to contemplate by any means, but these are the facts that are before us as members of parliament and we must deal with them. Committees have dealt with them in the past and the recent committee in England which I mentioned has also dealt with them.

A committee of the house and the Senate, as has been recorded in previous debates, recommended after an exhaustive inquiry into this subject that corporal punishment should be abolished for any of the offences for which it is prescribed in the Criminal Code. When six o'clock was called on a similar occasion in 1959 and the debate adjourned, the hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith), who was the final speaker and the only speaker who took a view in opposition to my own on the matter, had a number of things to say about it. I should like to challenge some of them and set the record straight. One of the things he said was this:

> I recognize that a great body of public opinion is in favour of the intention behind this bill.

Nothing could be further from the truth. The great body of public opinion in this country is no different in substance than the body of opinion in the United Kingdom or, as I will point out later, the Gallup polls taken in 1960 in the United Kingdom. These Gallup polls indicated that approximately 74 per cent of the people of England favoured the retention of corporal punishment and an indeterminate percentage of those favoured expanding it to other categories of crime. Therefore on that account to begin with I think the hon. member misjudged the situation in Canada.

He went on to say in his remarks:

> We have listened this afternoon to a great deal of maudlin sentimentality.

I should like very definitely to set the record straight as far as that particular aspect of this question is concerned. I am not motivated in any sense by a feeling of maudlin sentimentality on the question of corporal punishment. I am concerned primarily with discharging my duty as a member of parliament, to examine the facts and information available on subjects which come before us, reaching a conclusion and casting a vote or taking action to translate that conclusion into the law of the land.

It is in essence a matter of national self-respect, as far as corporal punishment is concerned. Through the centuries and down through the years we have tried a very fascinating and dazzling variety of brutal methods of punishment. In the main they have failed miserably to accomplish our purpose, which is of course to reduce crime rates and to deal with prisoners after crimes have been committed. At the present time Canada has the great good fortune to have a Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) whose activities in the field of penal reform in my view, and certainly this is a view shared by many people in this country, represent the first important steps forward in 25 years in Canada.

Mr. Walter Stewart of the Toronto Telegram used this caption on an article when writing in that newspaper yesterday, "Canada's prisons feel the winds of change". These winds of change, this changing attitude on the part of the penal authorities of this country is greatly to be commended. The fact of the matter is, as I said earlier, that the brutal method has in the main failed.

The advisory council on the treatment of offenders, which presented its report to the home secretary of England last November, was composed of a group drawn from men dealing with prisoners and offenders of all kinds. I should like to quote from the statement made on introducing the criminal justice bill in the English house on November 17, by Mr. R. A. Butler, the secretary of state for the home department. He said:

> One of these is a V.C., who can hardly have been chosen by reason of being a "softie", and another was the chief officer of the City of London police. I mention this because I think that hon. members may want to know what the constitution of the council is. Its members include many from the professions and walks of life concerned with the prevention of crime and reform of offenders.

So this group of people, at the request of the home secretary, proceeded to examine in exhaustive detail the question of corporal punishment. The situation in England was that judicial corporal punishment had been applied for a wide variety of offences up to the time of the so-called Cadogan committee which was appointed in May of 1937.

Finally in 1948, following the failure of the bill based on that committee's recommendations, which recommendations were to abolish judicial corporal punishment, corporal punishment was abolished entirely in England. The committee at that time said:

> We have been unable to find any body of facts or figures showing that the introduction of a power of flogging has produced a decrease in the number of the offences for which it may be imposed, or that offences for which flogging may be ordered have tended to increase when little use was made of the power to order flogging or to decrease when the power was exercised more frequently. We are not satisfied that corporal punishment has that exceptionally effective influence as a deterrent which is usually claimed for it by those who advocate its use as a penalty for adult offenders.

The committee went on to say that they did not limit their investigation to the law as it then stood. They considered also the possible use of corporal punishment for other offences but came to similar conclusions. In particular, they concluded that this penalty was especially unsuitable for sexual offences, which incidentally formed the bulk of the offences in Canada for which corporal punishment was applied in those figures which I mentioned earlier.

This report is of tremendous interest and I commend it to every member of the house who concerns himself with this subject. The committee approached the widest possible variety of sources, people like the association of chief police officers of England and Wales, and the commissioner of police of the metropolis, who incidentally declined the invitation on the ground that it was not the policy of the association or in his view the function of the police to comment on the ways in which offenders are tried and dealt with by the courts.

However, a unanimous opinion was reached by that group, the police officers. It was unanimously agreed that if judicial corporal punishment were reintroduced, the police should not be required to administer it. Other sources of information were approached. The press was informed and in fact it assisted by soliciting a large number of letters commenting on the question. This public opinion poll which I mentioned earlier, the results of which were published in March, 1960, indicated that 74 per cent of the population considered that corporal punishment should be the penalty for some offences. People like the judges of the Queen's bench division and other persons concerned with the administration of criminal law were approached and the result was that a great majority of those consulted agreed that the reintroduction of judicial corporal punishment in certain circumstances might be desirable.

There was a minority of that group who differed. The members of the magistrates association of England and Wales were approached, and a vote on the question indicated that 4,412 favoured abolishing corporal punishment and 1,886 favoured its retention. The national association of probation officers was approached and submitted their findings as a group. They indicated that 89.7 per cent of their group favoured the abolition of corporal punishment. Other sources were approached, and some very interesting opinions were put forward. I shall not go through them in any detail but some of them are of passing interest. Surprisingly, the report says:

> Several of our correspondents suggested that females should be liable to judicial corporal punishment as well as males. They argued that in these days women and girls were often involved in the commission of crimes of violence or other offences for which men and boys might receive this penalty, and that therefore there was no justification for treating the sexes differently.

This view, the report goes on to say, was not shared by most of the witnesses. There were points of view expressed, and certainly I have heard similar views expressed in this country, to the effect that corporal punishment should be applied as an alternative to a sentence in prison or in a corrective institution. The theory is, apparently, that this is a cheaper method and that if our corrective institutions are overcrowded it will avoid congesting them further. Little thought, I suggest, was given to whether this punishment would do any good. The report goes on to say—and I think this is an important factor in any discussion of this problem—

> A striking fact that emerges from a study of the views expressed to us is that different people reach different conclusions on the basis of the same facts or experiences.

This certainly is true not only in regard to this matter but with regard to capital punishment as well. The report goes on:

> It is clear also that individual views on judicial corporal punishment are greatly influenced by emotion, often arising from personal experience.

Most people's reaction in the case of certain crimes which they regard as being particularly heinous is that those responsible should be given a taste of their own medicine. The statistical evidence is examined in great detail and, again, the case for the deterrent quality of corporal punishment simply does not emerge from the facts and figures produced. One interesting comment had to do with the stability of the persons to whom corporal punishment was applied. The report says:

> In general, the more stable the personality the less harm such punishment would be likely to do.

Of course, conversely, medical witnesses were agreed that if an individual already had a substantial element of resentment in his make-up, judicial corporal punishment would be likely to make it worse. Then, of course, there is the situation that the more stable the person the less harm such punishment is likely to do. The converse, of course, is true that the most unstable people, who surely represent the greater threat to society, would be affected in the opposite way. There is further argument and discussion contained in this report, all of considerable interest, relating to the question of just how the person involved would react to corporal punishment and, in particular, the so-called younger set. The report says:

> We discussed this with our medical witnesses, who agreed that while this may be true of some youths, many others, far from being afraid, would accept the risk and exploit the punishment as a means of showing they were tough and could take it. Moreover, in order to maintain their status in the eyes of their associates, many who had received judicial corporal punishment would be likely to commit further offences to show that they had not been intimidated.

This is a fact which we cannot overlook in dealing with the psychology of the gang or juvenile delinquent groups in our society.

The report, of course, inquired into various areas of the commonwealth and different countries in the world and found that in the main there was no important movement for extending corporal punishment or, in those countries which had abolished it, any important movement to have it restored. The arguments in favour of corporal punishment as a deterrent are developed and found wanting, and corporal punishment in relation to modern penological methods fails, of course, on its first application. Every movement we have made in our penal institutions and penal methods is moving away from this kind of approach. There are a number of other matters which come into the question, one of the more important of which is the problem posed by the delay between the sentencing and the carrying out of the sentence. The report concludes on this question:

> We agree that the delay is the most serious practical objection to judicial corporal punishment.

The practical question arises of who is to administer this punishment whether it is by lash, or whip or strap. The policemen do not want to do it; the guards do not want to do it and, certainly, those involved in the rehabilitation aspect of prison life would not want to be associated with an activity of this kind, for after all, they are trying to develop a more positive social conscience in the individual concerned while offering some help on the road back to good citizenship. Perhaps the solution would be to hire a public whipping man, as we now have a public hangman, who would go from place to place, as travelling dentists and doctors do in our society today.

The report makes eight basic recommendations and I should like to run very quickly through them. I would remind members of the house again, that 77 per cent of the people consulted in Britain favoured the restoration or retention of criminal punishment. This committee, having examined the facts, came to the conclusion, in spite of that evidence of public opinion, that corporal punishment should not be reintroduced in Britain, and the comment is:

> If that were to be done it would be putting the clock back not 12 hours but a hundred years.
>
> Second, the present demand for the reintroduction of judicial corporal punishment seems to be limited to this country.—
> Third, we consider that, in these circumstances, the reintroduction of judicial corporal punishment could be justified only if there was a reasonable assurance that it would substantially reduce crime and afford real protection to potential victims. We think that there cannot be any such assurance.
> Fourth, judicial corporal punishment is out of line with modern penal methods and would militate against the success of reformative treatment, such as probation or borstal training.

The report goes on to deal in particular with some of the practical and constructive alternatives such as the physical expansion of institutions, equipment, teaching and training, and an increase in the police forces in the various areas with a high crime incidence. This again is a constructive, logical and practical approach to the question.

Having already delayed the house too long, I would sum up by saying that it seems to be the pattern here and wherever this question has been argued and examined that public opinion in the main favours the retention of corporal punishment, but those groups that are confronted with serious study of the question and the evidence given by qualified persons in the many fields related to criminology inevitably come to the conclusion, which forms the basis of the proposition I now put to this house, that corporal punishment should be abolished in Canada.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words in support of this resolution. I shall make my remarks as brief as possible because I see we have only about 35 minutes left in this debate and I am sure there are many other hon. members who would like to participate. I would not wish to deny anyone who wished to make a contribution the opportunity of doing so.

I am well aware that there is a biblical injunction which says, "Spare the rod and spoil the child". I suppose there are some who would use that as a justification for the use of whipping in connection with crime. I imagine that it is possible for some to look upon the latter as an extension of the former. To me however, there seems to be no connection whatever between the two. The one was meant to be administered by a loving parent as a corrective measure for a person who had not yet achieved the age of reason or matured sufficiently to be able to reason things out for himself. The other is administered by society as a deterrent to crime. If there is any justification whatever for the use of whipping it must be as a deterrent.

The deterrent value of whipping itself is very much open to debate. Certainly it cannot be expected to have much effect upon individuals who have not yet achieved mental or psychological maturity. Even if we accept the argument that it does deter normal persons then we are arguing that the ends justify the means. I have not been able to accept that as a general rule. There may be certain exceptions to that but I have never come across any of them and in any case I feel it is not a very strong argument.

In matters of this kind I feel we should be guided by a higher principle. That principle is inherent in our concept of the nature of man himself, the principle of human dignity. Whatever deterrent value whipping may have for normal persons it does not lie so much in the pain associated with it as in the indignity to the person who has to undergo it. Human dignity is a quality each of us brings with us when we enter the world. So long as we are rational human beings it stays with us, regardless of what crimes we may commit. It would be a very sad state of affairs if the human dignity of a person depended on the varying judgments of the people around him.

This concept in my opinion goes to the very root of our society because it marks off the fundamental difference between our democracy and a society based on an atheistic materialism, the difference between a society based on the concept of the worth and dignity of the individual as a human being and a society built on the concept that man is nothing but a mere animal. Even in the case of animals, we have laws which would prohibit the use of such practices.

As a matter of principle alone—the principle of individual worth and human dignity inherent in man as a created being—I believe that this practice should be abolished. There is nothing at all sentimental about that. It is purely a matter of principle. I think we must make up our minds with respect to principles of this kind. Either we believe certain things or we do not. If we believe that a man, as an individual being, has dignity and worth within himself then the use of whipping for any reason whatever is a contradiction of that belief.

It is these contradictions that have hindered the spread of democracy in this century. People in other nations see that we profess one thing and practise another. I welcome this bill because I believe it asserts a fundamental principle of democracy and one that should govern all our legislation and practices.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I support this bill, Mr. Speaker, and I congratulate the hon. member on again having introduced it. I am not supporting it because of sentiment; I am supporting it on principle and as a result of 25 years study of corporal punishment. The reason I support this bill is that from my experience of 20 years as a member of the British Columbia legislature and my eight years in the House of Commons I have not found any evidence whatever to indicate that corporal punishment, either as a judicial sentence or as a disciplinary measure inside an institution, has acted as a deterrent to further crime or helped to rehabilitate the individual concerned to a social life and a social consciousness.

I should like to ask all thoughtful members in this house—and I am certain that every one is a thoughtful member—to note that Canada is one of only two countries in the modern and civilized world where corporal punishment can be inflicted as a judicial sentence. Canada is one of only three countries in the modern civilized world where corporal punishment can be used either as a judicial sentence or as a disciplinary measure.

I ask hon. members who are here, thereby evidencing their interest in this bill—and I ask the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee) to take note of this fact—to take this opportunity to wipe out one of the most archaic sentences existing in the civilized world. This matter is one which, if studied, will positively sicken you. How many hon. members in the house today have seen the board to which a man is strapped, either horizontally if he is to be paddled, or reclining if he is to be lashed? How many have seen a man with his feet fastened to the floor? How many have seen the paddle, which is a strap with holes in it, the purpose of the holes being to perforate the flesh? How many have seen the lash, the cat-o'-nine tails, with the nine strands of nylon cord? I have. I have been in the institutions and I have seen those boards. I have seen the paddle with the holes in it and I have seen the lash with blood on it. I have seen them. How many considering this matter have seen a man whose back has been lashed so that the blood is drawn and he is put in the penitentiary hospital for 10 days? I have seen these things, sir; the paddle, the lash, the board, the blood and the back.

We in Canada maintain that we are a civilized people. We maintain in this House of Commons—and we rightfully maintain—that we are spending millions upon millions of dollars to put in institutions those who commit crimes against society, for two purposes; to punish them for their crimes and to try to rehabilitate them so that they become useful members of society. What is the experience of those who have investigated this matter of whether corporal punishment deters from crime or rehabilitates prisoners as useful members of society? May I give one experience. A few years ago I went into a penitentiary in Canada and I asked the warden if he would call into his office everyone in that institution who had had the lash or the paddle. He did. I questioned every one of those men. If my memory is correct there were 12 or 13. Of those who had had the lash and the paddle, only one said that it did him any good. All the rest said it created a sense of antagonism, of violence, of hatred, of wanting to get back, not only at the individual who had done it, not only at the warden and the magistrate who had ordered it, but at society which allowed it to be done. That was my personal experience in a penitentiary of Canada.

What I think perhaps is of more account is the report which will be found in volume II of the three year study by the joint committee of the other place and the House of Commons on capital and corporal punishment. In the appendix to volume II will be found the report of an interview carried out by our counsel in the city of Toronto with a number of men who had received the lash and the paddle, some of them many times. Some of them had been out of an institution for over 20 years, and they were asked whether the punishment deterred or not. If hon. members will read that report they will get the answer. They will find only two who said it did them any good. They will find in the report on the others words such as these—since many of these men are now well-known businessmen in Toronto initials are used. With respect to Mr. "A" we find the following:

> He considered it had done him no good. He repeated several times that the strap had no effect in controlling his conduct. He did not want to give the prison authorities any satisfaction. He had gained prestige in the institution after having corporal punishment, particularly because he did not yell.

Again, we find this:

> Corporal punishment was like strapping a person every once in a while to show him who was boss; it was no way to reform a man.

Hon. members can go through the report—I have it all marked—and they will see the reaction of those who were interviewed. What is the opinion arrived at? My own personal interviews with those in the institution and the interviews conducted by the counsel of the joint committee with those who had become rehabilitated, and who had received the strap, indicate to me that it did no good.

I want to add just one more statement. I wish to relate the experience I had in speaking to a man of his reaction to receiving the paddle many years ago. He thought he did not deserve it but he got it. His reaction was, "I wanted to kill the man who ordered it, and I will kill the man who gave it to me". This man told me himself that after discharge the first thing he did was to get a rifle. He went back outside the fence, and he had the guard who gave him the paddle in his sights, and he was just within seconds of becoming a murderer. The reason he did not become a murderer was that he had forgotten to take off the safety catch of the rifle and his pal grabbed the rifle away from him.

The evidence is conclusive that corporal punishment is no deterrent to further crime.

In the majority of cases it creates a reaction which is opposed to the purpose for which the House of Commons votes money, namely to try to rehabilitate as useful citizens those who have broken the laws of society. In these modern times, from the point of view of Christianity, emotion and sentiment I say that to the thoughtful man everything points to the conclusion that Canada should now modernize its criminal and disciplinary laws and, in the interests of decency, common sense and rehabilitation, abolish the use of the lash on the back and the paddle on the buttocks. I sincerely hope that before six o'clock all present will vote to support the bill introduced by the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee).

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I should like to ask the hon. member this question. If a person is now successful in business, let us say, and corporal punishment had been administered at some time during his life while he was in prison, would it not be reasonable to suppose that, whether or not he admitted it, this might have had some good effect in his rehabilitation?

Mr. Winch: I refer my hon. friend to the evidence in which it was said by all that it held them back so far as rehabilitation was concerned.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Who said that?

Mr. Winch: Of all those who were interviewed by counsel for the joint committee, only two said it ever did them any good.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): But would it not be reasonable to suppose that they would not admit that it had done them any good?

Mr. Winch: Their evidence was all given in confidence and I would think they were quite honest in their statements.

Mr. McCleave: Would the hon. member identify the other countries where such punishment still exists?

Mr. Winch: One country is South Africa, the only country in the modern world where women can still be punished in this way and under certain circumstances, such as an attack on a guard, punishment of this sort can still be administered in the United Kingdom for disciplinary purposes.

Mr. W. C. Henderson (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in seconding the motion for the second reading of this bill to abolish corporal punishment. I have never been in a penitentiary and have never seen a whip, so maybe I am talking of something about which I do not know too much. However, in the first world war I was attached to a group from South Africa, and I know that if the negroes in the outfit had done something wrong they were hung up and lashed. I did not see them lashed but I saw them hanging there. They were tied to a cross and their backs were marked where they had been whipped. I think this is degrading.

As far as I am concerned I do not even like to see a horse whipped, let alone a human being. In fact, I am speaking the truth when I say that in Belgium after the war Canadian soldiers would go right out on to the street and pound the drivers of big wagons drawn by Canadian army horses because the drivers were whipping the horses which were hauling the loads that were too heavy. I saw that happen three or four times. As I say, I do not like to see a horse whipped, let alone a human being. It is degrading and I cannot see how any good comes from it because it only stirs up resentment. As the last speaker said, and apparently he knows what he is talking about, a man treated in this way gets murder in his heart.

We have been raised a little differently and I think we have been too long in doing away with such punishment. We should now abolish whipping. According to our teaching it is wrong and, whether we are Christian, Moslem or whatever we are, let us get rid of it by voting for abolition today.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I took part in a debate on a similar bill in 1959 at which time I spoke in favour of abolition of such punishment. I do not propose to review, except briefly, some of the points I made at that time because I still maintain the same views. To those who may turn to the debates of that year, may I say that I quoted from the study of the British committee into the deterrent aspects of the use of flogging and the lash. It seemed to me and to those who made that study, I believe, that there was no deterrent effect whatsoever; that a person was just as apt to be a recidivist without the lash as if he were the type to whom such punishment was administered. The figures and findings of that study may be found in the debate of two years ago.

One point I should like to make this afternoon is that whether or not we pass this measure, and I think there are others who have views they would like to express, the fact remains that the use of corporal punishment is regarded as outmoded in Canada, and that can be proved by the statistics relating to those who have undergone such punishment. In 1959 the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) pointed out that in 1931 about 12.1 per cent of those who were eligible to receive such punishment did in fact receive it and that by 1954 this figure had gone down to .6 per cent. If I may make a comparison in a different way, out of 500 prisoners who would have been eligible to receive corporal punishment in 1931 some 60 or 61 did receive it in that year, whereas in 1954 only three out of a similar group of 500 eligible to receive such punishment did in fact receive it. So the shrinkage is most apparent.

I also have great faith in the approach of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Fulton) to the whole problem of punishment and rehabilitation of the criminal. If the measure of the hon. member for York-Scarborough is not passed this afternoon, I am sure we can hopefully anticipate that something will be done in the not too distant future, perhaps next session if not later this session. This is only a personal hope but I know that the Minister of Justice, with his vast depth of humanity and his great interest in the proper carrying out of his duties, will take us off the hook, for we as civilized people must surely feel rather ashamed and guilty that we are among the very small handful of nations still using such methods.

Mr. Winch: One of three.

Mr. McCleave: One of three, says the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), who very kindly identified the other two in response to a question of mine a few minutes ago.

There is yet another point I should like to make and as it has been made before I will not press it ad nauseam. The use of the lash or flogging is apt to put a special brand, almost like the mark of Cain, upon the person who undergoes such treatment and, as previous speakers have indicated, it is apt to turn the punished person into a criminal seeking revenge. We heard the very graphic story of the hon. member for Vancouver East about the man whose first thought upon leaving the penitentiary was to purchase a rifle—

Mr. Winch: Reform school; he was only 17 years old.

Mr. McCleave: —and to seek revenge. It was reform school. I thank the hon. member for putting me straight. A very important aspect to remember is that we can turn a criminal who might be helped into a savage animal. The support, if any support there is, that society gives to the use of the lash I think would be in regard to very special types of cases; not only the case involving violence on another person, but more likely the case involving a criminal who has sexually molested a little child. Here, when speaking to members of the public one does find, especially if one is a parent or talks to a parent, the greatest abhorrence of this type of person and a feeling almost perhaps without reason, so terrified are parents of this type of person in society. I believe that in this area you would find the chief support for the use of the lash. My answer to that support is that such criminals obviously are very sick indeed and have to be cured by other methods. I do not think it would deter them for one single instant to undergo this savage and mediaeval punishment.

Finally, sir, I am not going to discuss the esoteric subject of the effect of spanking upon Toronto businessmen, but the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo (Mr. Carter) quoted the Biblical injunction, spare the rod and spoil the child. I think that the rod does have its place in society; there has to be a certain chastisement offered, but that is a prerogative of the home where the very young may have certain impressions made upon them by the parents who believe in the use of the rod. I think, however, when one reaches an adult stage habits are formed, and it is too late to start meting out physical punishment upon malefactors.

For these reasons, sir, and mainly because I do not think that the lash has any practical value whatsoever, I certainly support the bill of the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee).

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this very important subject is being brought forward again by the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McGee), and there has been considerable debate on it in the past. I feel most of the speakers have been in favour of the bill, which is against corporal punishment. They have spoken in favour of abolition I think in the same manner as those who are against capital punishment. They seem to be emotional, as are those who speak against forms of capital punishment, but they are more vociferous. Perhaps there are admittedly more today who are against corporal punishment than there are against capital punishment. Nevertheless, there are still many who do not make their thoughts known in this chamber or outside and who still feel that we should in some way retain these two forms of punishment.

I do not have definite views myself, but I do feel that some of the expressions in favour of retention have not been put forward, except by the member for Calgary South (Mr. Smith) in the debate last year. The hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), who is a very interested student of penology and has been for some years, has delivered his informed but emotional speech. I take exception to the example he used of the successful businessmen. They were asked in the questionnaire that was sent out by the 1954 committee whether in their opinion corporal punishment had been of any value in their own careers. I suggest very seriously, Mr. Speaker, that these now respectable citizens would not admit or appreciate the fact, just as members of this house might not admit openly that school punishment had played a very important part in their careers. So the figures in those instances again do not give the whole story. It would be interesting to have figures, and I have not seen any, in respect of those who have not been successful; those who still follow a life of crime, to ascertain whether they had received punishment or not, to what degree, and the part it played in their careers.

An hon. Member: Look at the report.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have spent a day studying the report, Mr. Speaker, and have not seen that reference, but it may be that there are some figures which I missed. I was impressed by the evidence that was given by Colonel Basher, who appeared before that committee in 1954 and was questioned at length about corporal punishment. Two or three of the points that were revealed at that time, and which I jotted down, were significant. The statistics may have changed slightly since then, but he said this only concerned about .44 of the persons in custody. He was asked from a psychiatric point of view whether there might be a different approach now as a result of this scientific, modern trend. He said that in his opinion some individuals need this corporal punishment approach which in itself is scientific. He also went into a great deal of discussion about juvenile delinquency, which is a very serious problem.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): Order. It is now six o'clock.

Mr. Bell (Saint John-Albert): May I adjourn the debate, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the business of the house was announced last night and I presume it is as was then stated. I should like to bring a matter to the attention of the house leader which has to do with the pension bill. We on this side feel that we would be prepared to take that on Monday and also expedite its passage because I understand there is a clause in the bill which, if there is any delay, might make it awkward for the operative clauses of the bill. I wonder if the house leader has any ideas in that regard.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the hon. member for Laurier. It is desirable to get that pension bill through. I announced it last night as being the third matter on the program for Monday and Tuesday. It might be advisable to deal with it earlier, although I understand that it will not be technically necessary. The minister will be in Ottawa tomorrow and I will inform him of the suggestion put forward by the hon. member. It may be that we can deal with that bill with relatively short notice on Monday or Tuesday. I believe that arrangements have been made for an amendment to the bill to correct the technical situation which might arise if the bill was not passed on Tuesday. In any event, I appreciate the suggestion of the hon. member.

There is only one change, Mr. Speaker, that I will have to make in the preliminary announcement which I made last night. At that time I said we would deal with the budget resolutions on Monday and go on with the O.E.C.D. and pension bill on Tuesday.

It has developed that due to circumstances over which we have no control the Minister of Finance will not be in the house Monday night and so the business of the house will be subject to the pensions bill. We will proceed first with the budget resolutions, as I announced yesterday, until six o'clock Monday night. Then on resuming Monday evening we will take up item No. 8 on the order paper, a motion in the name of the Minister of Transport to set up a sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping.

If that is concluded Monday night we will then go on to No. 11, a resolution in the name of the Minister of Agriculture. I think that is a possibility rather than a probability, Mr. Speaker. Then on Tuesday we will revert again to the order of business which I announced last night. In other words, we will deal with the budget resolutions, if they have not been completed. Then, we will deal with O.E.C.D. and the pensions bill, subject to this; that the pensions bill may be advanced, as the hon. member has just suggested it could easily be, over either of those two matters.

I might point this out to the house, Mr. Speaker. Last night, in giving a preview of what might happen during the week, I mentioned the estimates of the Department of Fisheries as a matter which might come up on Friday. I have since been informed that the estimates of the Department of Fisheries have not yet been called, so I suspect we might run into some technical difficulty if we dealt with those estimates on Friday.

The house leader will be back in his place on Monday and we will deal with the business of estimates for the latter part of the week.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the acting house leader knows we have been asking to deal with the estimates of the Department of Labour for quite some time now. This would perhaps be an opportunity to do so.

Mr. Nowlan: That is an alternative that is always before us for Thursday and Friday.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, the members of this group are anxious to see the quick passage of the pensions bill for the reasons expressed by the hon. member for Laurier and we are anxious to co-operate in any way possible.

Mr. Nowlan: Thank you. We are always grateful to receive such co-operation.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

The following answers, deposited with the Clerk of the house, are printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

GROSSE ILE, QUE.—COAL TENDERS

Question No. 104—Mr. Bourget:

1. During the months of April or May 1960, did the Department of Agriculture invite tenders for the delivery of 300 tons of coal at Grosse Ile, Quebec?
2. If so, what was the name of each tenderer, and the amount of each tender?
3. To whom was the contract awarded, on what date, and at what price?

Answer by: Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture):

1. The Department of Agriculture invited tenders for the delivery of 300 tons of coal at Grosse Ile, Quebec, on May 27, 1960.

2. The name of each tenderer and the amount of each tender is as follows: Canadian Import Company, Quebec city, $5,649; Paquet & Fils, Levis, Quebec, $5,694.

3. The contract was awarded to the: Canadian Import Company, price, $5,649; date, August 11, 1960.

WHEAT AND FLOUR SHIPMENTS TO NORWAY

Question No. 112—Mr. Boulanger:

Following the agreement in August 1960 with Norway regarding storage of wheat and flour, how many tons of wheat and flour have been shipped to that country, and what was the turnover since this agreement was signed?

Answer by: Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs):

Twenty thousand tons of flour, there has been no turnover.

FISH PRICES, ATLANTIC PROVINCES AND QUEBEC

Question No. 118—Mr. Robichaud:

1. What was the average landed price paid to fishermen for fresh cod in the years 1945, 1950, 1955, 1956, 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960, (a) in New Brunswick (b) in Nova Scotia (c) in Quebec (d) in Prince Edward Island (e) in Newfoundland?
2. What was the average landed price paid to fishermen for fresh haddock in the same years and same provinces mentioned in question 1?
3. What was the average landed price paid to fishermen for fresh flounders in the same years and same provinces mentioned in question 1?

Answer by: Hon. J. A. MacLean (Minister of Fisheries):

Average prices paid to fishermen for selected species, by provinces, Atlantic coast, 1945, 1950, 1955 to 1960

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, February 27, 1961

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

DEMONSTRATION USE OF ORAL POLIO VACCINE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the house may be interested to learn of a major step forward being taken this week in connection with oral poliovirus vaccine. Starting today, community-wide use of the oral vaccine will be demonstrated in the city of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan. This demonstration, and one being held later this week in Wedgeport, Nova Scotia, will be the first on a community basis in this country.

The new vaccine, manufactured in Canada, is of the Sabin type, similar to that which has been used in other parts of the world.

STANDING ORDERS

CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Margaret Aitken (York-Humber) moved:

That the fourth report of the standing committee on standing orders, presented to the house on Thursday, February 23, 1961, be now concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ORDERS IN COUNCIL FIXING DUTIES

Motion No. 50—Mr. Pickersgill (for Mr. Benidickson):

For copies of orders issued by the Minister of National Revenue since December 1, 1958, under the provisions of section 38 of the Customs Act for the purposes of fixing duties.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, this is the matter with respect to which you said you were going to give a ruling on a certain point.

Mr. Speaker: Is this the matter in which the minister claimed—

Mr. Nowlan: The usual reservation, to which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate took exception.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister would state the reservations that he meant it would put the matter before us. I am not sure whether the point of order was raised on the basis of the phraseology used by the minister or on his claim to incorporate the reservation as a part of the order. Perhaps the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate would indicate.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I shall be very glad to state the position I took the other day. Before doing so I should like to express my appreciation to the Minister of National Revenue for not pressing the point on Wednesday, when I was unable to be here.

The objection I took, sir, was that the minister had said "with the usual reservations", a phrase that has come increasingly to be used about these motions without any statement as to what is that usual reservation. The reason I raised the point was that it did not seem to me there was any kind of usual reservation that could possibly apply to this particular motion. But I also raised it for another reason, namely that I think we are slipping into the unfortunate habit of passing these motions without having an explicit statement, if there is a statement, of the nature of the reservation so the records of parliament will be quite clear on the subject.

Moreover, I maintain that since these motions are not debatable they are, therefore, not amendable, because it is not possible to make an amendment without engaging in debate, and I think the only basis on which an amendment to the motion can be made is with the unanimous consent of the house. Bearing in mind the nature of these motions, which are to get information for use in debate, I think it is very desirable that hon. members should know precisely what they are going to get.

There is another objection to having reservations made even when they are explicit reservations, such as getting the consent of provincial governments. In most instances it is just as easy to have the motion stand and get the consent before the motion is dealt with; then the member who moves the motion knows the material will be produced quickly, whereas in a good many instances there seem to be long delays as a result of these things going off the order paper and into a kind of oblivion. That was the point I was making. I took exception as a member to giving unanimous consent to the reservation in this particular instance.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to prolong the debate on a procedural matter. I used the expression "subject to the usual reservations" because there are various reservations. It may be a matter of confidential memoranda interdepartmentally; it may be a matter of getting the consent of the writer, perhaps a provincial premier, and very often the phrase "subject to the usual reservations" has been used.

I should like to point out that my hon. friend's suggestion, although he has modified it today, was that this practice had grown up under this government and I, putting it mildly, said that it had been followed before. I thought I could find no better authority on this matter than a Nova Scotia minister, and I think all hon. members will agree with that. I find that in 1957, the last time a minister from Nova Scotia representing the Liberal party was sitting on this side, Hon. Mr. Winters said, as found in volume 2, page 1824, "subject to the usual reservation". As found in volume 1, page 793, he said "subject to the usual reservations". As found in volume 3, page 2505, he said "subject to the usual reservations".

I am quite sure that if Mr. Winters took that position it was well founded. I do not have to go back beyond 1957, but undoubtedly there were scores more such instances. In this case the motion seeks orders issued by the minister, which is a rather euphemistic phrase, and I have simply used the reservation in this instance to prevent any confidential or interdepartmental memo from being produced subject to this order.

Mr. Pickersgill: If I may say a word about this point since I did make the observation, like the minister I took the trouble to go through the 1957 Hansard as well, and it is quite right that the minister from Nova Scotia, and on one occasion one other minister, said "with the usual reservations". However, in all the cases I saw there was on the face of them a reference to a provincial government, so that there could have been no doubt of the meaning, although it was a sloppy way to proceed, and I say that without reservation; I quite sincerely hold that view. I think we should maintain the proper forms of parliamentary practice most meticulously. Although I admit that the Minister of National Revenue was right that all the sloppiness was not in one part of the house, there was no ambiguity about those cases, whereas in this case it is quite impossible to see what there could be a reservation about.

There was one other point raised by the minister which is important, and I should like to say a word about it if I may. Hon. members do from time to time set down motions for papers which the government can claim are privileged. Those motions are not out of order. They have never been ruled by any of your predecessors to be out of order. They are motions on which the house can make a decision, and therefore to just say "subject to the usual reservations" with respect to that kind of communication would not be in keeping with the previous practice.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am becoming increasingly alarmed at the number of motions that are accepted with the addition of the phrase "subject to the usual reservations". If the reservation involves a confidential document exchanged between a body of the government and a minister, I can understand the reservation. However, I cannot understand any other reservation. It has been pointed out to the house repeatedly in past years that there are no other reservations, and the consent of a provincial government is not needed in order to have the production of documents. If there is a communication between a provincial government and the federal government and this house decides that it wants production of the document, no consideration should be granted in the case of anything submitted by provincial governments.

In my opinion the term "with the usual reservations" is being enlarged and extended to an unwarranted degree. Unless the matter concerns the internal affairs of a department of the government, I feel that the phrase "with the usual reservations" should not apply, and I do not like the growing tendency that has been obvious over the last five or six years of a minister rising and saying "subject to the usual reservations" when none of us knows exactly what is meant by "usual reservations".

Mr. Speaker: The point which has been raised by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate involves two problems. The first problem is the practice which permits the ministry to claim the right to withhold documents upon certain recognized grounds by asking the house to accept the motion for production of documents on the understanding that certain documents will not be produced. The other question is related to it. As I understand his second objection it is that we are, in effect, amending a non-debatable motion.

Perhaps it would be worth while to take a minute to read standing order No. 47. It reads:

> Notices of motions for the production of papers which the member asking for the same intends to move without discussion, shall be marked by him with an asterisk and shall be placed by the Clerk on the order paper under the heading "Notices of motions for the production of papers". All such notices when called shall be forthwith disposed of; but if on any such motion a debate be desired, it will be transferred by the Clerk to the order of "Notices of motions".

It is clear from a reading of this standing order that such motions are not debatable. They are a special category of motion to be disposed of forthwith or, if they are to be debated, they are dealt with under a special procedure. It is not in order, therefore, to move an amendment. In fact no member could get the floor to move an amendment.

However, there has been a well recognized practice established in the house that a minister, who does not wish to be bound by an unqualified order of the house to produce documents which he does not propose to produce or does not wish to produce for some recognized reason of public policy, may rise and state his objection so that his objection will be a matter of record. This statement is, to some extent, a protection of the minister against the unqualified order of the house calling upon him to produce the documents mentioned. It is a practice which has commended itself to the house and which has been well established. Whatever the significance of such a statement may be, whether or not it amounts to an amendment, it is an established practice. I do not believe the hon. member rose to object to the practice being continued.

It may be of interest to the house to know that when these orders are passed by the house they are noted in Votes and Proceedings without any reference to the reservation made by the minister. He is, therefore, confronted with an order of the house in unqualified terms if he has not risen in his place to claim that certain documents are privileged as interdepartmental communications, confidential documents, private papers or whatever good reason there is, in the public interest, for not calling upon the minister to produce the documents. He might very properly be said to be in contempt of the house if this reservation were not noted.

There is an instance of that kind with which the Prime Minister will be familiar as he was a participant in the discussion. It arose in 1952. I will give the citation because it makes it clear that the practice we have been following in recent years was well established even then. The reference is contained in Hansard for 1952, April 28, page 1647, and that very point relating to the protection of the minister in delaying his compliance with an order of the house was at issue. I express my personal view that it would be preferable for a minister making reservations with respect to an order for the production of documents to do so in terms as explicit as possible. There are at least two categories of such reservations, confidential papers and documents to which other governments are a party. I note that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam states that this latter is not a proper category and that the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate suggests that such an exception should not be allowed and that it would be better to defer the making of the order until any necessary consent of another government had been obtained. Whether we follow this practice or not, I think it would be desirable that the reservation be claimed in specific terms. The minister may wish to follow the suggestion of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and stand the motion, or he may wish to proceed, asking the house to accept the motion, subject to the reservation claimed.

The other problem, that of amending a motion which is not debatable, has been dealt with by the house by unanimous consent, permitting the ministerial reservation to be expressed by the Chair when the motion is put. In effect a condition is attached to the motion with the unanimous consent of the house before the motion is put. The minister is protected by what he has said in the house, so if the minister claims the protection, it should be stated as expressly as it can be stated. The only obstacle to being explicit is that some of these general orders cover documents which have not yet been identified and the minister does not know what he will be faced with when he complies with the order.

Mr. Pickersgill: He can ask it to stand.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, in view of what has been said, I would ask that it stand.

Motion stands.

CAMPBELLTON-CROSS POINT BRIDGE

Motion No. 54—Mr. Robichaud:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, and other documents exchanged since June 21, 1957, between the federal government or any agency or department thereof, not including the Department of Public Works, with any individual, engineering consultant firms or others, in connection with plans and specifications for the Campbellton-Cross Point bridge, including correspondence exchanged with any groups or syndicate prior to the approval of the project and up to this date.

Mrs. Ellen L. Fairclough (Acting Secretary of State): This motion is accepted on the understanding that the correspondence between the government engineering consultants and any group or syndicate is normally privileged.

Motion agreed to.

Motions for Papers

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE STAMPS—APPLICATION FORMS

Motion No. 58—Mr. Robichaud:

For a sample copy, in English and French, of every application form authorized by the unemployment insurance commission for the purchase of unemployment insurance stamps, including forms used in the case of casual labour.

Motion agreed to.

VISSAC COMMENTARY ON RAND REPORT

Motion No. 59—Mr. Argue:

For a copy of the commentary submitted by Mr. Vissac concerning the report on the coal industry by Mr. Justice Rand.

Hon. Paul Comtois (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, on February 21 the hon. member for Assiniboia gave notice of motion for the production of a copy of the commentary submitted by Mr. Vissac concerning the report on the coal industry by Mr. Justice Rand.

As already explained to the house on Wednesday last by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in reply to a question by the hon. member for Gloucester, this paper by Mr. G. A. Vissac, a member of the dominion coal board, is a working paper. It is an internal document, and as such it is privileged.

Mr. Chevrier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. We feel that this is an officer who is not a member of the Rand commission, and the commentary contains a submission that would be helpful as a solution to the problem.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is in effect debating a motion. The minister is entitled in our practice to rise and say that the motion is not acceptable because the document is claimed to be privileged, which the minister has done. If the house wishes a debate there is the rather ineffectual procedure provided of having the motion put under notices of motions, for debate at a later time. I have no choice but to ask the house to either accept or reject the motion in the light of the claim made by the minister.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, in view of the widespread public interest in this matter, in the production of this report—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Argue: I would ask that the question be put.

Mr. Speaker: The question will be put, but the hon. member is debating it in making the statement that the document should, or should not, be produced. The claim is made that it is a preferential document and that it would not be in the public interest to produce it. It is for the house to determine in the circumstances whether the motion should be withdrawn or whether it should be passed.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Argue) which was negatived on the following division:

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COVERAGE INSTRUCTIONS

Motion No. 60—Mr. Robichaud:

For a copy of coverage instructions C-102 to C-108 inclusive, and of any amendments thereto, with regard to rulings on coverage, as contained in the new insurance coverage manual issued in October 1955 by the unemployment insurance commission, together with the corresponding instructions contained in the insurance coverage manual issued in January 1950.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I must give the same information in connection with this motion that I gave as to a similar motion the other day. These are instructions relating to the internal operations of the unemployment insurance commission; they relate to the administration of the act and the methods and procedures to be followed.

I cannot agree to a series of motions which would seek to obtain by a fragmentary process that which was not allowed in a single motion. I am informed by the officials of the unemployment insurance commission that the instructions which go out to the staff and which together comprise the manuals of instruction are of a confidential and private nature dealing with matters relating to internal administration and therefore not in the public interest to produce.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the Minister of Labour has said that instructions to his department as to its operation and principles is a matter of a confidential nature and should not be made public? If so, then we challenge his answer on this.

Mr. Speaker: What the hon. minister said related to the subject matter of this motion which has now to be put:

Moved by Mr. Robichaud, seconded by Mr. Leduc—

An hon. Member: This is unheard of.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

—that an order of the house do issue for a copy of coverage instructions C-102 to C-108 inclusive, and of any amendments thereto, with regard to rulings on coverage, as contained in the new insurance coverage manual issued in October 1955 by the unemployment insurance commission, together with the corresponding instructions contained in the insurance coverage manual issued in January 1950.

Those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Winch: Do I understand—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will have to reserve whatever he has in his mind until the vote has been taken. It is not in accordance with the rules to interrupt the procedure of voting.

Those who are opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

NUCLEAR REACTOR CONSTRUCTION, INDIA

Motion No. 65—Mr. Regier:

For a copy of all letters, reports, or other submissions made to the government in connection with the building of such nuclear reactor in India as was made possible by Canadian participation.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): May I ask that this motion stand, Mr. Speaker? There are certain inquiries to be made before we will be in a position to deal with it.

Motion stands.

AIR TRANSPORT

APPLICATIONS BY U.S. LINES FOR ADDITIONAL FLIGHTS FROM TORONTO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that the civil aeronautics board of the United States has before it for approval applications by two United States air lines to link Toronto with Miami on one flight and Toronto with Washington and Philadelphia by another flight, both flights proceeding via Buffalo? What comment has the minister to make on these applications, which will cause untold harm to Canadian air lines?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I have read this article in the Financial Post, and I can only inform the house that at the present time we are watching the situation very closely.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question. What efforts are being made by the Canadian government to obtain fifth freedom rights for T.C.A. to Miami and Los Angeles and similar rights for C.P.A. to Los Angeles and San Francisco?

Mr. Balcer: These matters are matters of government policy and will be announced in due course.

FREIGHT RATES

GRAIN—REQUEST FOR DISALLOWANCE OF INCREASED RATES TO EASTERN PORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I also have a question for the Minister of Transport arising out of a decision of the board of transport commissioners permitting a 25 per cent increase in freight rates on grain moving through Georgian bay to east coast and St. Lawrence river terminals. In view of the belief in Halifax that high rates will result in a diversion of traffic to United States ports with subsequent damage to the port of Halifax, will the minister or the government consider setting aside the decision under section 53 of the Railway Act?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Well, Mr. Speaker, we will take the matter under advisement.

UNITED NATIONS

CONGO—REPORTED ATTACKS ON CANADIAN PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he has anything to tell the house about the reported maltreatment of Canadian personnel attached to the United Nations force in the Congo by mutinous Congolese forces?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Since this matter covers two departments, perhaps it would be in order for me to give a reply. The house is, of course, aware of reports to the effect that Canadian and other UN personnel were attacked and beaten by Congolese soldiers last night in the vicinity of Leopoldville. I am informed that none of these men was seriously injured and that no Canadian personnel are at present being detained.

The house, I am sure, will join me in deploring these incidents. Urgent inquiries have been made of the United Nations secretary general, and the government's deep concern has been expressed that Canadian military personnel serving with the United Nations forces in the Congo should have been subjected to this kind of assault and indignity. As of this moment the secretary general has not received an official report on what took place, but he has been made aware of the government's request for an immediate investigation.

In addition to the action in question, two members of the Canadian provost corps were arrested while on duty in Leopoldville but released after a short period and without injury. This is in addition to the troops who were taken into custody in the incident I described earlier. They were jostled about but not seriously hurt, and were released after a short time. I should remind the house, too, that according to reports received it was not only Canadians who were the victims of such treatment. The United Nations command immediately issued a warning to the Congolese army and the responsible authorities that such attacks would not be tolerated.

The house will understand, however, that the situation being grave and changing from hour to hour, there is little further one can say at this time. I do want to make one thing clear, and it is this. The United Nations operation in the Congo must be upheld, fraught though it is with risk for all of those who are carrying out their duties there. I am sure the house would wish me to express the sympathy of the Canadian people to the families of those Canadians who were attacked, and to couple therewith the admiration of Canadians for those who are serving Canada under such difficult circumstances.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. In view of the circumstances he has outlined and the situation of the Canadian troops in the Congo, what is the authority so far as our Canadian troops are concerned and what is their equipment? Is it the s.m.g.? Are they authorized by Canada to use this equipment if attacked?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian troops in the Congo are armed with personal weapons only, that is pistols and very light automatic rifles.

Mr. Winch: Up to the s.m.g., may I ask?

Mr. Harkness: I think what the hon. member has in mind is a somewhat bigger weapon. This weapon is somewhat similar to a Sten gun. These are weapons for personal protection only, and the troops are under orders to use them only on the command of the United Nations authorities in the Congo. The general order which has been in effect, as I understand it, is that the men will not use these weapons when they are stopped under circumstances such as those when these men were stopped. This has been the order up to date, so far as I know it.

Mr. Winch: May I ask a supplementary question. I think it is very important. If the troops in the Congo are attacked, and having weapons up to the s.m.g., do they have authority to fire?

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I think I have made the situation as clear as I can. They have, I think, authority to fire if they are personally attacked. However, under circumstances such as these where, as I understand it, a patrol of Congolese soldiers stops a jeep which has two or four Canadian soldiers in it, the normal thing has been for them not to respond by firing.

[Later:]

Mr. Harkness: Perhaps I could clarify the answer I gave a moment ago, Mr. Speaker. If the Canadian soldiers stationed in Leopoldville were attacked in their quarters for example, they would then fire to defend themselves. The situation is along this line, that when there is a concerted attack they are authorized to fire in self defence. However, in a case such as this in which one or two men are stopped by a patrol, as I understand it they have not been authorized to use their arms.

Mr. Winch: What is the authorization if you are attacked by two or a dozen?

Mr. Harkness: I think I have made the position about as clear as I can make it. If there is a concerted attack on a body of Canadian or other troops, they fire to defend themselves. However, if it is a matter of two or four soldiers, something like that, going along the street and being stopped by a patrol of Congolese soldiers, they do not start a fight.

INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN POLICY AT GENERAL ASSEMBLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): This being February 27, and the fifteenth general assembly of the United Nations due to reconvene on March 7, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether in view of the importance of this forthcoming meeting he can give the house any information as to the policy which will be expressed by himself on behalf of the government with regard, first of all, to the question of the Congo. Next, in particular, I should like to ask him if he can give us any assurance that either personally or through our permanent representative he will press for further action with regard to the motion and procedure he put forward in connection with the call for an immediate meeting of the committee on disarmament and for an ad hoc committee.

Mr. Speaker: If the minister wishes to reply he is, of course, at liberty to do so, but the hon. member seems to have asked a range of questions which it would take a considerable time to deal with.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The resolution on disarmament which was originally sponsored by Norway, Sweden and Canada and which is now co-sponsored by 16 other countries still stands, and it will be brought up for consideration at the session which is to commence on Tuesday next.

With regard to the Congo question, I am not yet sure what form the discussion on that very important subject will take, so I cannot tell the house as yet what stand Canada will be taking on that subject.

TRANSPORT

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—INQUIRY AS TO CONSTRUCTION OF NEW FERRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the recent breakdown of the ferry Abegweit on the Prince Edward Island ferry service during severe winter conditions, can the minister inform the house whether the new ferry vessel which is now being constructed by his department will be ready for operation next winter, and whether this vessel is being built for operation under winter ice conditions in the strait?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): This new ferry vessel is now under construction at the Halifax shipyard and will be ready for operation next winter. The vessel is being strengthened for navigation in ice and will be capable of operating as effectively as the Abegweit under winter conditions.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PETAWAWA—REPORTED COMPULSORY MEMBERSHIP IN YACHT CLUB

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Jean Casselman (Grenville-Dundas): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister any comment to make in regard to press reports concerning the possible formation of a yacht club at Camp Petawawa?

[Mr. Winch.]

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which has had a considerable amount of publicity over the week end and probably most hon. members are aware of the situation. However, it is this. A regimental sailing club was organized at Camp Petawawa in the summer of 1960, with membership on a voluntary basis. Membership dues are officers, $10; senior N.C.O.'s $5; men below the rank of sergeant, $3. The amount collected to date is some $1,400. The major portion of this sum has been used to pay for two sailing boats. These were purchased last August, and authority was obtained from brigade headquarters for the initial expenditure to be made from regimental, non-public funds with the understanding that the money would be paid back in due course from membership fees in the sailing club.

The boats were for the use of all members of the club with no rank distinction, and I am informed that during August and September of last year the two boats were mainly used by men of the rank of corporal or below. Since membership is on a voluntary basis, the allegations which have been made that men were forced to pay into this really have no authority at all. There are various explicit instructions from army command headquarters that no forced fees of any kind along this line can be collected.

However, in this particular case one of the six companies in this particular battalion put a notice on the notice board which was subject to misinterpretation. This has now been removed, and I would hope that any misapprehensions or difficulties which may have arisen in regard to this incident have now been set right.

(Translation):

MONTREAL—INQUIRY AS TO AID FOLLOWING STORM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Rodrigue Bourdages (Laval): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of National Defence.

Can the minister tell me if, during the storm which swept down upon Montreal last Saturday and Sunday, a request was made by the municipal authorities of that city for assistance from the Department of National Defence, and if so what was the nature of their request?

(Text):

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, February 26, requests for aid were received from Montreal municipal authorities by headquarters, Quebec command, and the G.O.C. held a co-ordinating conference with Mayor Drapeau of Montreal.

The requests received were for the loan of equipment. Arrangements were made by Quebec command for the following assistance: (a) over 2,000 blankets were loaned to city authorities and delivered to 10 schools which were opened by the city of Montreal to accommodate families who were without heat; (b) Nelson heaters were loaned to hospitals to provide heat in nurseries; (c) electric generators were loaned to hospitals; (d) a field kitchen was set up and cooks provided to provide facilities to cook rations for civilians without cooking facilities in the Dorval area.

During the night of February 26-27 it was necessary to call out a small number of militia drivers to supplement the Canadian army regular drivers who were employed on these duties.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INQUIRY AS TO PROTESTS AGAINST INTENDED LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. I indicated to him that I proposed to raise a question with respect to a question that was raised last Tuesday and appears at page 2242 of Hansard. The question was raised then by the hon. member for Assiniboia. In view of the fact that I too have received telegrams from employees of the Canadian National Railways in two railway terminals in my riding, would the minister comment as to whether or not these C.N.R. lay-offs are on a national basis, and whether or not they contravene the assurances given by the minister with respect to the reinstatement of the employees after passage of Bill No. C-45.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when this question was asked last Tuesday I informed the house that I would immediately refer the matter to the management of the Canadian National Railways. So far I have not received a report in this regard.

SHIPPING

NEW BRUNSWICK—REQUEST FOR ICEBREAKER TO RELIEVE FLOOD CONDITIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. My question is based on the reply I received from the minister to a question I addressed to him on Monday, February 20, when he informed the house that no request had then reached his office for icebreakers to clear the Saint John river up to Fredericton. May I ask the minister, in view of a report that appeared in the Fredericton Gleaner on February 22 stating that letters had been sent on February 10 to Mr. Balcer and Mr. Bell, whether he has received such a request, and what is the nature of his reply.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, at the time the hon. member asked me that question this letter had not reached my desk. I have now received such a letter and have replied to the person making the request that at the present time and in the present circumstances the proposal is not acceptable.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—DATE OF MEETING WITH B.C. PREMIER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the presence of the premier of British Columbia here in the parliament buildings for two days last week, while attending the dominion-provincial fiscal conference, did the minister take advantage of the premier's presence to discuss dominion-provincial financial arrangements related to the development of the Columbia river? If so, has he any information that will enlighten the house as to developments in this situation?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there was opportunity to discuss this subject last week. It may interest the hon. member to know that when the premier of British Columbia and I met each other on Thursday morning we instinctively greeted each other with the words "Hail Columbia". We did discuss the date of the proposed meeting, and I made a proposal. At noon today I received a wire from Victoria confirming the proposal which I had made. The meeting will be held in Victoria on Friday, March 24th.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

INQUIRY AS TO PROPOSED NEW PLANE EXCHANGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. I would like to ask the minister if there is a new defence production deal under discussion with the United States which would see Canada producing the F-104's for NATO countries and getting the F-101's in exchange from the United States for our NORAD squadrons.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Raymond O'Hurley (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to my reply of the other day, when I said we are interested in and appreciative of any offer from the United States to help our aircraft industry. Any proposition that has been forwarded to us from the United States is receiving very thoughtful consideration and study.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. The question I asked the Minister of Defence Production the other day did not deal with an exchange such as I put forward to him today, but dealt with the CL-44. The question I would like to ask the Prime Minister is this. May I ask the Prime Minister whether this question which I have just put to the Minister of Defence Production was discussed with the President of the United States, as stated by Mr. Knowlton Nash in an article which appeared in the Financial Post of February 25.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think all I can appropriately say to that is that during our discussions we covered a variety of matters including these increases in defence production sharing.

BROADCASTING

WINNIPEG—INQUIRIES REGARDING LICENCE FOR STATION CKY-FM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday or Thursday of last week the hon. member for Laurier asked a question of the Minister of National Revenue with respect to an application for a licence by CKY, Winnipeg.

The minister has received inquiries or representations through the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the members for Winnipeg South and Winnipeg North, and the board of broadcast governors have received a considerable number of telegrams and letters from private citizens and television dealers in Winnipeg expressing opposition to the granting of a licence to station CKY for authority to establish an FM broadcasting station in Winnipeg on the frequency mentioned. However, the chairman of the board of broadcast governors on Thursday morning last made a statement and the applicant then deferred his application.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ALLEGED DISPUTE BETWEEN S.I.U. AND BRITISH SEAMEN'S UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Walter Pitman (Peterborough): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. There has been considerable concern expressed in British newspapers that as a result of last year's dispute between the seamen's international union and the British national union of seamen, British ships which carry crews who are members of the latter union may be interfered with in using Canadian ports, including the St. Lawrence seaway, in the coming shipping season.

Has the Department of Labour made any recent investigation of this matter and, if so, could the minister report any progress?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): The Department of Labour has not conducted any investigation into relations between the S.I.U. and the British national union, nor has there been any request for such an investigation to be made.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF FEDERAL PROPOSAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I wonder if I could ask the Prime Minister whether for the convenience of hon. members he would consider tabling the proposal made to the provinces and having it made an appendix to Hansard, perhaps tomorrow?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

BRIDGES

INTERPROVINCIAL BRIDGE, OTTAWA—INQUIRY AS TO SIGNING OF AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. J. McIlraith (Ottawa West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Public Works and ask him whether the agreement has been signed between the dominion government and the governments of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec regarding the construction of a new bridge between Ottawa and Hull.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): I wish to thank the hon. member for Ottawa West for asking this question, and I am happy to say that this morning Hon. Mr. Cass for Ontario and Hon. Rene Levesque for Quebec attended with the mayors of Ottawa and Hull, and Mr. Cass and Mr. Levesque signed with me the final agreement for the completion of this bridge between Ottawa and Hull.

I want to take this opportunity of thanking the governments of both provinces and the authorities of both cities for their complete co-operation in this matter, and also to say at this time that after every previous government had apparently reached a deadlock with regard to this project, it was through the efforts of the Prime Minister of Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

(Translation):

Mr. J. T. Richard (Ottawa East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works. Will the minister table a copy of the agreement signed this morning? In addition, can he tell us if the plans and specifications have been completed and when the work will be undertaken?

(Text):

Mr. Walker: I would be very happy to do that, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): Just in case the Minister of Public Works did not understand my rapid delivery in French a while ago, I wanted to ask him if he would agree to lay on the floor of the house the agreement with the provinces, and also tell us whether the plans for the bridge had been completed and when the work would start. I hope we understand each other.

Mr. Walker: I do not agree to lay the agreement on the floor—

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): On the table, then.

Mr. Walker: I should be very happy to do that, and I apologize to the hon. member for not being able to follow all his question. As far as the commencement of work on the bridge is concerned, we have already taken the liberty of making some borings while the ice on the river was still secure. This very afternoon, now that the agreement has been signed, we have our liaison committee made up of representatives from each of the provinces and each of the cities as well as the dominion government meeting to plan the order of procedure from now on.

All I wanted to say earlier was that this bridge would not have been possible had it not been for the Prime Minister of Canada, whose force has been behind this project from September last.

Mr. Richard (Ottawa East): A supplementary question. May we get rid of all that verbiage and find out when the bridge will be built?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member has received a fairly explicit answer with regard to the time of commencement. I do not think he ought to tempt the minister into the realm of prophesy.

Mr. Walker: With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, I think that question deserves an answer, and the answer is simply this; much faster than it would have been under the late administration.

HOUSING

USE OF PHOTOGRAPHS OF MINISTERS IN ADVERTISEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. J. Godin (Nickel Belt): May I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Would the minister have any comment to make concerning the statement made or the reply given outside this house by members of his department in relation to a question I asked in the house implying that his picture and that of the Prime Minister should not have formed part of an advertisement—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member is inquiring about a private advertisement as I recall the situation. If that is so, then certainly this is not something which is the administrative responsibility of the minister.

Mr. Godin: On the point of order which you have just raised, I feel with all due deference that this is a public matter since the advertisement was sponsored by a minister of the crown. Unfortunately for members of parliament here, the answer to that type of conduct was given by the Department of Public Works, and I have—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would indicate which minister sponsored the advertisement, thus laying the basis for his question. On the information I have, the advertisement was a private advertisement. Perhaps the hon. member would address this question to the minister first, so that it may be determined whether there is involved a matter over which the minister takes responsibility.

Mr. Godin: The advertisement carries the picture and the sponsorship of the minister—

Mr. Speaker: I understand that, but in the absence of any further connection with administrative responsibility I cannot accept the question.

Mr. Godin: On this point, all I am wanting to know for the people is whether the minister authorized this sponsorship of the advertisement, whether it is private or not.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member might ask a particular minister whether he had authorized the advertisement in an administrative capacity.

Mr. Godin: That was the question I addressed to the Minister of Public Works—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Godin: Did the minister authorize the part he took in the advertisement?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): As the hon. member very well knows, the answer is no.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION OF PENSION ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, before we reach the orders of the day I should like to address a question to the government house leader, who also happens to be the Minister of Veterans Affairs, who was unavoidably absent last Friday at the close of our sitting. My question refers to item No. 1 on our order paper, the Veterans Pension Act. I should like to ask the minister what arrangements are being made by the government, in view of the wording of clause 13 of the pension bill, to comply with the recommendations contained in the third report of the standing committee on veterans affairs, one of which is that a date not later than March 1 be made the effective date for the payment of the increased rates of pensions set out in the schedule to the bill.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member is asking a question about matters which are before the house and not a matter of administrative responsibility; or even referring to the business of the house.

Mr. Benidickson: In view of the fact that the acting house leader at the conclusion of our sitting on Friday night indicated that today's orders might be subject to change, I thought this was the most appropriate time to give the house leader, who is actually also in charge of this bill, an opportunity to tell the house at what stage today or tomorrow we might expect this legislation.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, had there been any change proposed in the program for today I would have risen earlier to announce it. The program for today stands.

[Mr. Godin.]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REDUCTION IN SMALL HOLDING REQUIREMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. It is one of great urgency, because spring has come to the Kootenays. My question is based on telegrams that I have received from 12 branches of the Canadian Legion representing over 2,000 members.

In view of the fact that the minister has received representations urging the reduction of acreage for establishment under the small holdings section of the Veterans Land Act, and in view of the fact that the minister and his officials have been giving consideration to this problem for some time, can the minister inform the house when we may expect an announcement of government policy in this matter of such urgent importance to many veterans, who are anxious to have the opportunity to take advantage of this excellent legislation?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has put forward a plea, it is true, but it seems to me that in the terms of the question itself it is a request for a declaration of policy, and furthermore it is not a matter for immediate disposition.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I am only asking when we may expect an announcement, not the policy.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the difficulty here is that an answer to this question would of necessity be a lengthy one, which is contrary to the rules. I fully appreciate the problem. It is under consideration, and very careful consideration. When policy, if any, is to be announced with regard to this matter, it will be announced in the usual manner in the house.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, in view of what the Prime Minister said in this context a month ago, may I now ask him whether he is in a position to tell the house when we may expect to hear from the royal commissioner examining into the state of the automobile industry.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not had any communication from Commissioner Bladen during the last few days. I will communicate with him.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

REPORTED WARNING BY HEAD OF COMMITTEE ON RADIATION HAZARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In the light of the public appeal of last week, in which there was a warning to Canadians of the dangers of nuclear explosions, by Dr. Keenleyside, head of the national committee on radiation hazards, does this national committee still enjoy the good wishes of the government of Canada?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not this committee particularly in mind, but all committees that perform a national duty enjoy the good wishes of the government.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

TIMMINS, ONT.—REPORTED CARRYING OF MAIL BY STRIKEBREAKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. W. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid being accused of a fate worse than death, may I ask the Postmaster General a question across the house instead of going across the house to ask the minister a question. Has the minister anything further to report to the house on the strike situation in Timmins, involving mail contracts being carried out by alleged strikebreakers being paid as low as 65 cents per hour?

Hon. W. M. Hamilton (Postmaster General): Nothing, Mr. Speaker.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

SOUTH AFRICA—INQUIRY AS TO CANADA'S POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, arising out of a report in the London Daily Mail that the Prime Minister has informed Prime Minister Macmillan that Canada is not prepared to give blanket approval to South Africa's re-entry into the commonwealth; and the further statement that the Prime Minister is determined to force an issue upon South Africa's apartheid policy.

Can the Prime Minister assure the house that at the coming commonwealth conference Canada's position will be to oppose the re-entry of South Africa into the commonwealth until such time as apartheid policies in that country have been changed?

90205-6—156

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed to make a statement at some length I may be able to answer, but I would have to have the consent of the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Argue: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, in view of the great importance of this question we should be very happy to give the Prime Minister our consent to proceeding with the statement, even if it is lengthy.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Before the Prime Minister does proceed, I take it that his answer will be in the nature of a statement and will be of some length. I should like to be assured that the entire house is in agreement.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it is to be understood that this is an answer to a question and is not to precipitate a debate here. If I am to answer this question, it is to be an answer in the ordinarily accepted meaning in which answers are given to questions, but it is not to become a means whereby a debate will be engendered.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think the house generally, in a matter of this importance, will not quibble as to the procedural situation. If the Prime Minister feels that he wishes to make a statement on a matter of such importance, I would think it was in the national interest that he be allowed to do so.

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion of the Prime Minister is that he be allowed to make an answer which is somewhat longer than would ordinarily be the case. I take it the house gives its consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have seen the article in question. As the house knows, one of the matters which will come before the Prime Ministers' meeting next week is whether South Africa, after it has taken the final step to become a republic, shall continue to be a member of the commonwealth.

I feel, and I think the house would agree, that it would not be appropriate for me to make any statement which could be construed as prejudging the discussions which will take place. However, I should say this; that any suggestion that there has been a warning as to what Canada might or might not do in certain circumstances is most unhelpful. My views are a matter of record, and throughout my life I have stood against discrimination on the basis of race or colour.

The views that were expressed by me last year are still applicable. I would refer hon. members to a statement which I made on May 16, 1960, when reporting on the just concluded meeting of commonwealth prime ministers. At that time I read the relevant section of the communiqué which was issued. That section reads as follows:

> In the event of South Africa deciding to become a republic and if the desire was subsequently expressed to remain a member of the commonwealth, the meeting suggested that the South African government should then ask for the consent of the other commonwealth governments either at a meeting of commonwealth prime ministers or, if this were not practicable, by correspondence.

It has been found that it would be most practicable to have this matter discussed at a prime ministers' conference rather than a decision made through the medium of correspondence. Then I went on to say:

> This established clearly that membership in the commonwealth is not a formality. These words speak for themselves. They make clear that the prime ministers were not prepared to give an advance assurance that South Africa might remain a member of the commonwealth in the event that a decision was made to adopt the status of a republic. Therefore, the important point is that if a change of status does take place as a result of the referendum—

There has been an affirmative referendum since in favour of a republic. I continue:

> —the consent of the other commonwealth governments will be required as a precondition of continued membership.

To this statement I would only add today that in view of the explosive conditions which prevail in many parts of Africa, it would be far from beneficial to endeavour to dramatise in advance of the conference the differences of view that may exist in different countries of the commonwealth.

The attitude that the members of the commonwealth have taken throughout has been that whatever the strong feelings held by various prime ministers, or whatever their views, there would be no predetermined decision made before all the elements going into that decision had been discussed by the prime ministers of the various countries of the commonwealth.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INTERNATIONAL SERVICE—ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT FOR DISPLACED EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): May I ask the Minister of National Revenue whether the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has been able to arrange alternative employment for persons displaced by the curtailment of the international service?

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): I will have to inquire into that, Mr. Speaker, and advise the house later.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

NATIONAL GALLERY—TRANSFER OF OWNERSHIP OF PAINTING OF MARQUIS OF LORNE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): As the curator of what was until recently an unknown small art gallery, I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works a question. In view of the fact that last week the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration informed the house that the painting of the Marquis of Lorne was in the possession and ownership of the Department of Public Works and therefore not available for hanging in the national gallery, will the minister give consideration to transferring the ownership of this painting to the national gallery?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): The answer to this matter of urgent national importance is yes; it has already been arranged to be transferred.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

REPORTED INCREASE IN INSURANCE RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last, in reply to a question of mine respecting increases in insurance rates on shipping in the St. Lawrence seaway of from 17 per cent to 100 per cent, the Minister of Transport replied:

> This is definitely a very important question, and I will investigate the matter.

Has the minister investigated this very important matter? Can he inform the house whether the rates have been increased or are being increased and, if so, what is the reason?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not a final report on the matter, but I should like to say that this is a matter which does not depend on the seaway authority or on my department; it depends on the insurance companies. I have asked for a report, and as soon as I have it I shall be pleased to communicate it to the house.

Mr. Argue: In getting the report will the minister determine for our information whether or not the high accident rate in the St. Lawrence seaway is the reason for the increase in insurance rates, and what can be done to lower the rate?

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Chown in the chair.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Resolved,—That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the customs tariff and to provide:

1. That the said act be amended by adding thereto immediately after section 2 thereof the following section:

"2A. (1) For the purposes of this act, goods shall be deemed to be of a class or kind made or produced in Canada if

(a) in the case of goods other than goods custom made to specifications, goods of approximately the same class or kind are made or produced in Canada; and

(b) in the case of goods custom made to specifications, adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of such goods within a reasonable period of time.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), goods other than goods custom made to specifications shall be deemed not to be of a class or kind made or produced in Canada unless at least ten per cent of the normal Canadian consumption of goods of the same or approximately the same class or kind are made or produced in Canada.

(3) The decision of the minister shall be final with respect to the following matters:

(a) the normal Canadian consumption of the goods described in subsection (2), and

(b) whether goods are custom made to specifications, and whether adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of such goods within a reasonable period of time."

2. That subsections (9) and (10) of section 6 of the said act be repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(9) For the purposes of this act, notwithstanding section 2A, goods may be deemed to be of a class or kind not made or produced in Canada where similar goods made or produced in Canada are not offered for sale to the ordinary agencies of wholesale or retail distribution or are not offered to all purchasers on equal terms under like conditions, having regard to the custom and usage of trade."

3. That subsection (4) of section 6A of the said act be repealed.

4. That any enactment founded upon this resolution shall be deemed to have come into force on the 21st day of December, 1960, and to have applied to all goods mentioned therein imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after that day, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that day.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, the committee will recall that this matter was up for discussion some 12 days ago. Since then the Minister of Finance has taken the opposition to task because of the delays that they are and have been responsible for in the consideration of these resolutions. I should like to tell the minister that this charge coming from him against those of us who sit on this side of the house is not only unwarranted but unfair. I would ask the minister to consider this in the light of what he has said. Notwithstanding the fact that this matter was under discussion some 12 days ago, the minister saw fit to go off to Winnipeg and Calgary, where he made a number of speeches about which I am not complaining. This, I take it, was on his way to meet Premier Bennett; but, as the committee knows, Premier Bennett would not see the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is not right.

Mr. Chevrier: Then the minister went to Chicago to tell off the Americans. Notwithstanding the fact that those trips must have taken a considerable length of time, the minister has the gall and the effrontery to accuse us in the house of being responsible for delays. It may be that the delays which the minister accuses the opposition of are of his own making because, as he knows or should know, there is a great deal of opposition in the country to the resolution now before the committee. There is a great deal of dissatisfaction not only among the manufacturers but also among those for whom the minister states this is going to be so helpful. I refer, of course, to those who are manufacturers of textiles.

I should like to go back to the textile industry and inquire of the minister what the government has been doing to help them. First of all let us take a look at the position. Mr. W. M. Berry, president of the Primary Textiles Institute, made a statement before the Senate committee on manpower the other day and he is quoted as saying:

> Imported textiles cost 35,000 jobs in the Canadian textile industry last year and the situation is going to get worse unless something is done.

He presented a brief to the committee on manpower wherein there was a complaint that foreign made fabrics were already outselling Canadian made products in the home markets and in which it was said that if the present situation continued another 14,000 textile workers would be out of their jobs before 1970. I will not deal at further length with what was said by the president of the institute before the manpower committee, but I should like to know and I think the house is entitled to know from the minister what has been done by the government to come to the assistance of this industry.

The minister may be aware that in the last but one issue of the Financial Post there was a section dealing with industry in the province of Quebec and a portion of that section was devoted to the textile industry. As the minister knows, textiles are a very important industry in the province of Quebec. Mr. Eric Richter, who writes in the Financial Post, stated in the issue of February 4 last:

> Quebec's big, important textile industry is struggling hard to hang on. For most of the provinces 370-odd mills and establishments, 1960 results were disappointing, even when measured against the lean years the textile industry has had in the past decade.

Then he went on to make this very important statement:

Recent redefinition of "class and kind not made in Canada"—

As outlined in the resolution now before us.

—for customs duty purposes doesn't help the textile industry much. It is already making just about every variety of textile products that can be economically produced.

Here is one person, along with many others, who feels that this provision is not going to be of a great deal of use. I come back to the discussion we had the last time this matter was up for consideration and I should like to ask the minister a question. It has to do with the statement made by the Prime Minister in the city of Cornwall on February 25, 1958, when he stated that he "saw no reason why protection cannot be provided for the textile industry". Then he added:

"We acted to protect the farmers against dumping of agricultural products in this country because we believed it unjust and unfair that the Canadian farmer should be subjected to unfair competition." The Prime Minister followed by explaining he could see no reason why the textile industry would not be treated in the same way.

My question, of course, is this. In the light of that statement made by the Prime Minister, I ask the minister what has been done by the government, by the Minister of Finance or by the Minister of National Revenue to implement this promise. I should not like the minister to create a diversion as he did the other day by asking me what I would do. As the house knows, it is the responsibility of the government in office to take the necessary steps to deal with a situation which is serious and acute. It is the government's responsibility in the light of the statement made by the Prime Minister. But for fear that again I shall be placed in the position of being accused of attacking without offering any alternative and having the minister say to me, "Well, what would you have done?" I will tell him in advance using some of the comments I made in a speech in French which I delivered on the subject matter. I should now like to put those remarks on Hansard.

(Translation):

On that occasion, I said this: It is surprising that, so far, all the attention has been centred on customs duties as if there was no other method likely to assist the manufacturing section of our industry.

That sector needs the intervention of the government because its production costs are too high to enable it to compete with foreign producers on the domestic market.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

We have been suggesting for a long time, Mr. Chairman, that production costs are too high and that the government takes little or no action to help this manufacturing industry to compete with foreign industry.

The immediate result of tariff protection is to increase the price of foreign products and not to lower the price of domestic products.

It seems that the main purpose of the government's intervention in this field should be to bring about a decline in production costs so as to enable our manufacturing industry to face competition. In many instances, costs could be reduced if our production were first of all, more specialized and had access to wider markets.

Such increased specialization would require a more or less extended period of adjustment, according to the special conditions in each industry.

Second, during that period, the government would implement a varied and flexible assistance program likely to meet the concrete requirements of our various industries.

Third, this program could be made up of:

(a) long term loans;
(b) special grants;
(c) specific tax exemptions; and
(d) credit for development.

Other formulas might also be used as, for example, accelerated depreciation. What is most important is that the program must be flexible and well adjusted to the concrete conditions in each industry. It should therefore be implemented in close co-operation with the representatives of labour and of industry.

In brief, Mr. Chairman, societ competition, the necessity of helping underdeveloped countries, the shaping up of regional groups in Europe, the re-awakening of protectionist forces in North America, in the United States as well as in Canada, are, to my mind, a challenge to the western world and, more particularly, to Canada, which though it cannot stand alone, refuses to be finally integrated into the American economy.

The most satisfying answer to that challenge in the economic as well as in the political field, is, I think, to come as early as possible to an agreement with regard to the gradual setting up of an Atlantic economic community.

If, as I said before, our country promoted that concept at the next meeting of the O.E.E.C., of which it is now a member, it would serve not only our best interests, but also those of the free world.

(Text):

I come back now to the question I asked the minister earlier. What has been done by the government to implement the promise made by the Prime Minister in the statement he made on February 25, 1958, and which I outlined earlier?

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): May I ask the hon. member a question before he sits down?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): In the recommendations the hon. member has just put forward there was no mention whatsoever of any increase in tariffs or any other protection for the textile industry. Furthermore no tariff assistance or increased protection was given to the textile industry by the former government when they were in power and therefore I take it that the hon. member for Laurier or erstwhile member for Stormont was at that time either not in favour of increased tariffs or did not have sufficient influence with his colleagues in order to have this result brought about. Is he now or was he in favour of an increase in tariffs to protect the cotton industry?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, if my hon. friend will read what I have put on Hansard, then he will get his answer.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): I have read it. I have followed what the hon. member has just said and there has been no reference whatever to any increase in tariff protection. I assume, then, he is not in favour of it.

Mr. Chevrier: Then, will the hon. member tell me what I said?

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): I cannot say in detail what the hon. member said, but his remarks were directed toward subsidies, tax exemptions or export credits. There was no mention whatever of any increase in tariffs.

Mr. Chevrier: If I may deal with the hon. member's question, Mr. Chairman, and the committee will endure it, the position—

Mr. Lambert: The hon. member is speaking from a lofty height.

Mr. Chevrier: Not any loftier than the hon. member who interrupted because, after all, who does he think he is? If the hon. member wants to take part in the debate, he may do so. I do not believe he has any right to interrupt, from his seat, a member who has the floor.

I have been asked a question and I propose to deal with it unless the Chairman calls me to order. The question that was asked concerned what I would have advocated in connection with the textile mills in Cornwall. I have already put that information on record and I do not intend to repeat it. This statement does not deal with tariff protection because, as I have stated here and as I repeat now, in my opinion that is not the method with which to deal with the situation. In any event, here is a clear promise made by the Prime Minister of this country to the textile workers of Cornwall to deal with the situation. I am asking the minister now, what was done by the government to implement the promise of the Prime Minister? Since this government has been in office, not only has the production of the textile industry gone down substantially but, according to Mr. Berry, no less than 35,000 jobs have been lost to textile workers. As my friend the hon. member for Stormont knows, or should know if he is awake to the situation, no less than three industries have closed in Cornwall.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): The answer was somewhat ambiguous, but from what the hon. member has said I take it that neither is he nor are his colleagues in favour of any form of increased tariff protection for the textile industry.

Mr. Pickersgill: Are you?

Mr. Chevrier: What about you? Are you?

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Yes, personally I am definitely in favour of it. Is the hon. member and his colleagues in favour of it?

Mr. Godin: What about your government?

Mr. Argue: The resolution before the committee, if finally enacted by parliament, will mean a drastic increase in tariffs in this country. The minister has complained rather bitterly on various occasions that the opposition are delaying the passage of this measure. He has suggested that we are conducting something of a filibuster.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, no.

Mr. Argue: The minister has used that very word during questions on orders of the day.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No; these words were applied to the official opposition.

Mr. Argue: The minister has amended his remarks.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, no; it was very clear they applied to the Liberal opposition.

Mr. Argue: The minister has amended his remarks.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, he has not amended them.

Mr. Argue: In my judgment, any opposition to this measure is well founded and is in the interests of the people of this country. To the extent that both opposition parties use the forum of the House of Commons to point out the weaknesses of this measure they will be serving the people of Canada. I do not believe there is any doubt about the fact that the adoption of this measure will mean a drastic general increase in tariffs. After all, if that would not be the result, why would the government be introducing this measure?

There are in the measure important provisions which will mean an increase in tariffs. The main one is perhaps the redefinition of the provision relating to goods of a class or kind produced in Canada. This particular paragraph reads as follows:

> Notwithstanding subsection (1), goods other than goods custom made to specifications shall be deemed not to be of a class or kind made or produced in Canada unless at least 10 per cent of the normal Canadian consumption of goods of the same or approximately the same class or kind are made or produced in Canada.

The addition of the word "approximately" of course widens the scope of this particular section drastically. The minister has said that in the judgment of the government this amendment is necessary because the tariff board and the courts in the last 10 years have rendered decisions that have not maintained the original purpose of this clause. What that addition means, of course, is that the government are not satisfied to take the definition of the courts and other legal bodies involved, but that they want to change the rules. They want to make a new set of rules which they hope will result in a much wider interpretation of this provision, thus enabling the government to go merrily along bringing about general increases in tariffs. This, of course, is one of the bad features of the resolution.

Another bad feature of this measure is the provision stating that a decision of the minister shall be final with respect to the following matters:

> (a) the normal Canadian consumption of the goods described in subsection (2), and
> (b) whether goods are custom made to specifications, and whether adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of such goods within a reasonable period of time.

This provision amounts to the minister's taking unto himself the power of lawmaking. The cabinet minister involved will make these decisions, and there will be no appeal to the tariff board or to the courts. This is the very dictatorial feature of this legislation. This particular feature of this measure is the opposite of good democratic government and flies in the face of everything the Minister of Finance stood for during his many years in opposition. I am certain, Mr. Chairman, that the Canadian people do not like these arbitrary powers placed in the hands of a minister. They did not like arbitrary powers being placed in the hands of ministers in the previous administration and they will not be happy about nor, in our judgment, will they support the placing of these arbitrary powers in the hands of the Minister of National Revenue.

As has already been pointed out, the minister has the right to decide what the Canadian consumption of certain goods is at a given time. By this means he will decide also what 10 per cent of that quantity will be. The minister, by this arbitrary decision, will decide the effect of the law as applied to a given industry. The minister has the further power to decide whether adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of certain goods within a reasonable period of time. I feel that the minister should come clean with the committee. I think he should be frank with the committee.

When this matter was being debated on a former occasion, the minister was asked the value of the commodities that would be affected by this legislation. He is asking parliament for sweeping powers to increase tariffs; he is asking for arbitrary powers which fly in the teeth of basic democratic rights. Yet when he is asked for an estimate of the value of the commodities to which this sweeping legislation would apply, his answer is, "I cannot make an estimate." The minister does not know, so he says. My opinion is that the minister knows only too well that the powers for which he is asking in this legislation will mean a widespread increase in tariffs affecting goods of great value, and the minister for this reason refuses to give parliament an estimate of the goods involved. The minister has made it abundantly clear in his own words that by this legislation, he wants to go back to the position of some ten years ago. What he is saying is that he has no faith in the positions taken by the tariff board and by the courts in the last ten years, and that he wants to change the rules by this amendment.

I think the government is on dangerous ground not only because this kind of legislation is unjustified and undesirable in an economic sense, but because it would seem to me that it opens up the whole question of retaliation under GATT. It seems to me that the government is endeavouring to do by an underhanded method that which it does not dare to do by an open method, namely the increasing of tariffs. The government is going back in my judgment to the days of R. B. Bennett. I know that when members say that this means a return to the days of R. B. Bennett, the minister is extremely sensitive and responds with a statement that the days of R. B. Bennett were not so bad after all. In the view of the Canadian public, any return to the high tariffs of the R. B. Bennett days of 1930 will be a great mistake from which both the country and the present government will suffer.

Mr. Chairman, the Minister of National Revenue has used in my opinion a lame excuse for assuming these arbitrary and sweeping powers. As reported at page 1718 of Hansard he made the following assertion:

> This parliament itself is the high court. This is the court of appeal in which we are standing at the moment. This is the court of parliament to which the minister is responsible; and if any minister committed one per cent of the improprieties to which the hon. gentleman referred this morning the matter would certainly be brought to public attention; there would be discussion and debate in the House of Commons, a matter of public record, and no minister who had any sense of responsibility not only to his own office but to his colleagues and to his government would consider doing such things as was suggested. As I say, this is the final court of appeal, and it is one to which every minister is responsible.

Mr. Chairman, that statement may sound like a reasonable thing when people who are not aware of the workings of the House of Commons read it, but it is impossible for members of parliament to find out the basis on which the Minister of National Revenue will make his decisions. It is impossible for members of parliament to find out why the minister made certain decisions. As a matter of fact the government is saying that the minister is being given these arbitrary powers because he has information which is confidential, which he wants to keep confidential and which he will hide from the House of Commons; and it is saying that no matter how many motions for production of papers that members may put on the order paper; no matter how we may try to ferret out the information in regard to the reasons why the minister makes certain arbitrary decisions that information will be hidden from parliament. It will be said that it is not in the public interest to disclose it which usually means that it is not in the political interest of the Conservative party.

Mr. Chairman, in years gone by we have heard in the strongest possible terms a condemnation by the Minister of Finance, the hon. member for Eglinton—he was sitting in the opposition at the time—in regard to the grave injustice which flows from arbitrary powers. Under this legislation the Minister of National Revenue, will have all of the arbitrary powers that the Right Hon. C. D. Howe in the former administration was accused of having. This government rode to power to a very substantial degree on the argument that the former administration had taken arbitrary and dictatorial powers. That is precisely what this government is doing in this legislation. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that such arbitrary powers are repugnant in a democratic nation.

I think this resolution should be opposed because it is high tariff protectionism. This legislation is the answer of the Conservative government to certain financial friends in certain big corporations who wanted this kind of protective legislation in order to make fabulous profits. This is the pay-off, in my judgment, of the Conservative party to certain financial interests in this nation and it has nothing whatsoever to do with the welfare of the Canadian public. I think it is a mistake for the government to turn the clock back. I think any general increase in tariffs as provided in this resolution will mean an increase in costs to Canada, a reduction in Canadian trade and a lower standard of living. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, we in this group intend to vote against this motion and against this legislation at every opportunity.

Mr. Smith (Lincoln): I have a number of notes here in connection with this matter, Mr. Speaker, but since the debate has been going on for several days now I will make my remarks as brief as possible.

I should like to say, however, that I support this resolution to amend the Customs Tariff most wholeheartedly. I am not an authority on customs tariffs, but I have had considerable experience in this regard in industry in my riding. I am quite satisfied that at the present time there is room for reclassification of a great many items, some of which are not made in Canada which come in duty free, and some of which are made in this country but whose component parts are imported from other countries duty free. At this time when Canadian industries are clamouring for new products to manufacture, I can name quite a few myself that would be made in this country if the normal protection of the Canadian customs tariff were provided, and it should be provided. I might make reference to heavy chains which are used for ships, in mines and in the construction industry. These chains come into Canada at the present time duty free because they are not made in Canada. I should like to remind you, Mr. Chairman, that during the first and second wars those chains had to be made in Canada and were made to a very large extent by hand. Following the end of the two wars there was no change made in the classification and the production of these chains in Canada ceased. At the present time I know of a Canadian chain manufacturer who is prepared to go into the production of these chains if there is a reclassification which will give him the normal protection of the Canadian tariffs.

I might also give a similar example in regard to tire chains for heavy tractors. These tractors are used in the logging industry, in construction and in mines. Those chains now enter this country duty free and if they were reclassified these also would be made in Canada in larger quantities than they are made at the present time.

I might also mention the manufacture of automatic transmissions for automobiles. Since automatic transmissions came into use in Canadian cars or trucks they have all been made in the United States; but automatic transmissions have been installed in Canadian cars to such an extent that it would now be profitable to make them in Canada. However, there is no encouragement for General Motors or for Ford to have them made in Canada when they can bring them in duty free or under a customs drawback. I know for a fact that if adjustment were made in the Customs Tariff certain companies would be prepared to make automatic transmissions in Canada. In fact, negotiations are under way at the present time.

I have mentioned, in my way, three different items whose manufacture here would create a great deal of work if they were given the normal protection of the Customs Tariff. How hon. members opposite can read into this resolution signs that there is to be a general increase in tariff, I find difficult to understand. There is no indication here that such a thing will take place, or that tariffs will go sky high as some hon. gentlemen opposite seem to think. Here there is only a reclassification of certain things which are not made in Canada and certain things which are made in Canada but not enjoying the full benefit of the Customs Tariffs.

The part of the resolution which seems to have provoked the sharpest criticism is that which gives the Minister of National Revenue power to make reclassification. But to whom could such power better be given? You can always get to the minister, but you cannot get fast decisions from the tariff board.

Some hon. Members: Exactly.

Mr. Smith (Lincoln): I may say that only recently I had reason to make for one of our local industries an appointment with the tariff board on the subject of reclassifications. We were told that the tariff board was so busy with reports and recommendations that it would not be able to look into the matter for at least a year and maybe even longer. We must be realistic about these things. We must cut out much of the red tape and bring this thing down to where it belongs. Suppose anyone objects to the decision of the minister. He can turn directly to his member of parliament or to the minister himself, and what could be better than that?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Smith (Lincoln): It would get right to the heart of the problem. As I said, there were other matters I hoped to deal with at this time, but may I conclude by saying that in principle I approve of this resolution. If it goes into effect I am sure that it will be the means of creating many new jobs for Canadians. In my opinion it is not going to cause any general increase in tariff, as the opposition seem to think it will. I may say that I myself would not be in favour of any such general increase.

Mr. Chevrier: Might I have a reply to the question I asked the minister a while ago, namely, what has the government done to implement the promise of the Prime Minister which I put on record?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): First, may I offer a correction of some impressions which the hon. member for Laurier evidently harbours. He seems to attribute to my trip to the west the fact that this debate has not been resumed since we were last engaged upon it on February 15. Let me tell the hon. gentleman that the trip to the west occurred prior to that date. Most of the travelling was done over a week end when the house was not in session, so it had no connection whatsoever with the fact that this debate was not resumed until today. The principal reason was that we had a supply motion on Monday and Tuesday of last week and a dominion-provincial conference on Thursday and Friday. It still is a fact that at dominion-provincial fiscal conferences the Minister of Finance is expected to be in attendance.

As to the question asked by the hon. member for Laurier about the textile industry, I would think, Mr. Chairman, that if you were disposed to make a ruling this matter probably lies outside the scope of the present discussion; but if you think it proper I shall be glad to deal with this subject. The hon. member for Laurier asks what the government has done to assist the textile industry. That, of course, takes us outside the scope of the resolution but I am entirely prepared to deal with this subject if you think it is proper in relation to this particular amendment. We have been engaged upon it for a long time and I do not wish to provide any hon. member with an excuse for going outside it and starting a debate on other matters rather than the class or kind definition. Perhaps, for the sake of answering the hon. gentleman's question, I might just touch very lightly on this subject.

The first thing which was done was to refer the whole textile schedule in the Customs Tariff to the tariff board for review, and the tariff board has conducted an extensive inquiry over several years as a result of which it has made a series of reports. The first report involved recommendations for amendment of the Customs Tariff in respect of the importation of woollen fabrics. We brought to the house legislation to implement that recommendation and the house adopted it over the strong opposition of the hon. gentleman and those who sit with him. Since that time reports have been brought forward affecting other textile items in the Customs Tariff. Various changes have been made. In all cases in which the rates were bound under GATT, these rates have been negotiated with those countries in whose favour the bindings had been entered upon. In all respects the provisions of GATT have been strictly adhered to. One could mention as well the course of discussions at the GATT conference at the present time in the process of renegotiation there.

I remind the house also of the steps which have been taken during discussions with the representatives of the Japanese government in relation to imports of textile products from that country and the measures which have been taken as a result of those negotiations with a view to avoiding a repetition of the kind of concentration that occurred in the export of certain textile products to this country by Japanese firms. In the course of these discussions there has been consultation with the Canadian producers in the areas affected.

I remind the house also of the important amendments which we introduced in 1958 to the Customs Act dealing with the basis of valuation for duty purposes. Again, these were matters of great and urgent importance to the textile industry, but the amendments which were introduced by the government were sternly opposed by the hon. gentleman and those who sit with him. I need not remind the house, I am sure, of the exercise by the Minister of National Revenue of the powers he holds under the Customs Act—powers, incidentally, which existed in the time when the hon. gentleman was a minister of the crown—under which the flooding of the Canadian market by grey goods from China was avoided. I might mention also the present legislation in so far as the dumping of textile products into this country from other countries will be affected, because dumping, as I have reminded the committee in the course of the discussion of this resolution on previous days when it has been before us, arises only in the case of goods of a class or kind made in Canada. That is why this present subject is of great importance to the whole question of dumping.

These are just a few of the measures which the government has taken. One could enlarge upon them. One could add to them. But if one did so it would be quite clear, I think, that we would be going outside the scope of this present debate.

The hon. member then spoke of a statement attributed to Mr. Berry, the general secretary of the Primary Textiles Institute of Canada, in which he said that imports of textiles into Canada have cost 35,000 jobs. I presume he was speaking in the sense that Canadian mills could have produced the particular textile goods to which he referred, and that had they done so 35,000 jobs would thereby have been created. He was not comparing employment in the textile industry today with what it was last year, the year before, or the year before that.

The fact is that the whole employment figure in the textile industry has not varied very much over the past several years.

Mr. Chevrier: It has gone down.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): There has been very little variation. After all, the textile industry in Canada is a series of industries, and in the past several years some have done better and some have not done as well. It is probably better, in the interests of accuracy, to discuss a particular condition in a particular section of the industry and not to attempt to generalize for the whole industry in all its various parts.

My final observation relates to the remarks made by the hon. member for Assiniboia. Here again he was labouring under a complete misapprehension as to the nature of the amendment now under debate. He said the adoption of this amendment will mean large increases in tariffs. He said later it will mean widespread increases in tariffs. I must remind the committee that this is not the fact at all; there is not one single rate to be changed.

This measure does not propose to change one single rate in the Customs Tariff. It is simply concerned with a matter of definition, the definition of an expression that appears very frequently in the Customs Tariff. To see the amendment in its true proportions it is necessary to recall that what is proposed here is simply the restoration of what had been a well established interpretation before the decisions of the tariff board and courts in the past decade.

Another quite erroneous assertion made by the hon. member for Assiniboia was that under this proposed amendment the Minister of National Revenue would take on the right to make law. This assertion is utterly without foundation. The minister has certain functions that he must discharge in relation to these questions, and the powers that the minister has been given under this legislation—

Mr. Pickersgill: "Will be given".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —or will be given —you can take it either way you wish—are not nearly as extensive as are those parliament has conferred upon the minister in many, many other respects, not just in relation to this matter, but many others under legislation passed over the years by this parliament and now in effect.

This amendment concerns simply the question of definition. The hon. member was utterly mistaken when he said that this would give offence under GATT. I must remind him, I have said it several times already in the course of debate, that this question does not give rise to any question of GATT or bindings under GATT. These GATT bindings of particular rates were entered into years ago on the basis, so far as Canada is concerned, of the accepted interpretation of class or kind prevailing at that time. The definition and the interpretation were not bound. They are not the subject of a binding under GATT whatsoever. Therefore assertions that this action will lead to retaliation by other GATT countries falls completely to the ground; they are completely groundless.

As to the assertion that this measure would confer upon my colleague the Minister of National Revenue arbitrary powers, I must take firm issue with any such observation. Reference has been made to what I have said in this house in the past in regard to arbitrary powers. Believe me, Mr. Chairman, if I thought that arbitrary powers were proposed by the measure to be conferred upon my colleague the Minister of National Revenue, I would have done everything in my power to have prevented that objective being furthered. But that is not the fact. These are not arbitrary powers at all. These are necessary powers in the transaction of the business of this country.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit a question at this point? Would the minister not agree that every time an act or piece of legislation is passed in which it is said, "the decision of the minister shall be final", one is conferring arbitrary power? That is the definition of "arbitrary power".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think you have to look at all of the circumstances in a situation of this kind—

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —and we must ask ourselves what is the reasonable view to take of the situation—

Mr. Pickersgill: That is what all tyrants say.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —and not run off with catch phrases. I have said that I yield to no one in this house in my concern regarding arbitrary powers, and I put before the house my view that this is not at all the case of conferring arbitrary powers as has been pictured in observations such as those which fell from the mouth of the hon. member for Assiniboia this afternoon.

This legislation does not take away the right of appeal; the right of appeal continues. What is proposed in the amendment before the house is that in the appeal, in respect of three elements, the decision of the minister is final. We have been over this matter before. There is the question of the reasonableness, the necessity indeed, in the general interest of making provision that in those three cases the decision of the minister should be final. The right of appeal is taken away from no one. The most that can be said is that the right of appeal cannot be invoked on grounds that lie within the three points on which the Minister of National Revenue is given the right to make the final decision.

What are these three points? We have been over them before and I will not delay the committee on them now. The first is, that he can determine the normal Canadian consumption for other than custom-made goods. In other words, he can determine the normal consumption of what we call shelf goods. Surely that is eminently a decision for the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the minister permit a factual question on this point? Would the minister tell us how that determination is going to be made before a decision is made as to what goods are approximately like the other goods in question? How can you determine the normal Canadian consumption of something until you know what that something is?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I contemplate no difficulty over that matter.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then please answer my question.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The question that has been raised by the hon. member is presumably one that arises in an appeal.

Mr. Pickersgill: It arises in administration also.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): An appeal is taken on the question he has raised. There is a right of appeal—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, would the minister allow me to make it clear. I was not raising the question with respect to appeals; I was raising it with respect to administration. I should like to know how this is going to be done, and I think the taxpayer would like to know also.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): In the first instance when it becomes necessary for the minister to make a decision, he will certainly make a decision on those elements on which an appeal can be taken, as well as on those elements where an appeal will not lie. When he is making his decision, of course he will make it on whether the goods in question, being shelf goods, are approximately of the same class or kind as are now made in Canada.

He makes his determination on that element. He also makes his determination on Canadian production; he makes his determination on Canadian consumption, of course. Then in the event of appeal, an appeal can be taken against his decision as to whether or not the goods in question are of approximately the same class or kind as goods made in Canada. An appeal can lie on that question, and an appeal will lie against his determination with respect to the amount of Canadian production. There can be an appeal on that matter. There can similarly be an appeal on the question whether or not the number of articles manufactured in Canada does in fact constitute a minimum of 10 per cent of normal Canadian consumption. With respect to the other matter, the one I was speaking of, namely what is the normal Canadian consumption of shelf goods, his decision on that matter stands, and the appeal can proceed on the other question upon which the right of appeal continues unimpaired. I think this matter is quite clear, Mr. Chairman. I have touched on those matters upon which the right of appeal is clearly preserved and on those matters upon which finality is given to the decision of the minister for clear and good reason.

I am at this point introducing nothing new. Everything I am saying I said in the debate of earlier days on this present resolution. The amendments are designed to meet statistical problems in this regard in relation to the finality of the decision of the minister, and they are designed to permit cases involving class or kind articles to be resolved within a reasonable period of time. How highly important that is to the transaction of business. We have seen appeals that have dragged and dragged. They may involve questions that apply to situations other than those directly involved in the appeal itself. This has had an embarrassing and oftentimes costly effect by reason of the delays caused. In the interest of better administration we are trying here to bring about the termination of these long and costly delays.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I am not satisfied with the answer which the minister has given to the question I put to him earlier. In my opinion two matters are involved here. The first is the statement of the Prime Minister that he would deal with the dumping of textile goods in the same way as the government dealt with the dumping of agricultural goods. In his reply the minister set out a list of the things that supposedly had been done to assist the textile industry. One of those was the reference of the whole matter to the tariff board. He referred to a return having to do with woollen fabrics. I should like to tell the Minister of Finance that there are no woollen mills in Cornwall and therefore this legislation would not be of any use to that community.

Then, he also referred to the legislation which was brought down in 1958. I ask the minister whether that legislation was actually used. Perhaps the Minister of National Revenue, who is now in his seat—I presume he was detained earlier—will answer?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That matter was dealt with specifically in the debate earlier. It was not necessary to invoke those powers. The mere possession of those powers was sufficient to meet the needs of the situation that arose.

Mr. Chevrier: If that is the situation, will the minister give an example of how those powers helped the cotton mills in Cornwall?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I was asked for a statement of what the government had done in relation to the textile industry. I have given that statement. I had some misgivings about being led into a debate on that question because the present amendment before the committee is only one of a number of things that the government has done in relation to this problem. I was asked what the other things were. I have dealt with them. With respect, Mr. Chairman, may I say that we could have a debate on this whole question of government policy and government administration but it will not relate to this present amendment before the committee.

Mr. Chevrier: It will relate to it, as I hope to show in a moment, because I intend to go back to the debate and quote some of the statements made by the minister. I asked the minister whether he would give an example of how the legislation of 1958 actually assisted or helped the mills in Cornwall, and his reply was, "I have already put on the record what the government has done to assist the textile industry generally". My comment on that statement is that notwithstanding all of the matters which the minister has put on record, a number of mills have closed elsewhere than in Cornwall. A mill closed in Hamilton. One closed in New Brunswick, in the area of Saint John: I have forgotten the name of the place but I think it is Milltown.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): Was that not during the previous administration?

Mr. Chevrier: Three mills closed in Cornwall. Therefore, the minister has not dealt very effectively with what was done in at least three areas, let alone the general situation in the province of Quebec and elsewhere where there has been a substantial reduction in employment in the textile mills.

I should like to go back to the statement made by the Minister of Finance on Thursday, February 2, 1961, as recorded at page 1672 of Hansard, where the minister said:

> We have this interesting situation. The hon. member for Laurier was one of those who believed that the workers in the textile mills in Cornwall should have some protection against dumping in the Canadian market of the kind of goods that they were seeking to make in the Cornwall mills. The hon. member apparently has not realized yet that the power to deal with dumping is confined to goods of a class or kind made in Canada, and the erosion that has gone on over the past 10 years has gradually narrowed the power reposed in the government by parliament to deal with the dumping of goods of another nature that are of a class or kind made in Canada, and that applies to the textile goods made in those Cornwall mills.

In the light of this statement made by the minister I ask him which textile goods were ruled by customs during the past 10 years to be of a class or kind not made or produced in Canada and that were similar to, or were approximately of the same class or kind as, those made or produced by the Cornwall mills?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has referred to a statement I made on February 2. Here, of course, I had been speaking in general terms about the textile industry. I am quite sure the hon. member is aware that the Minister of National Revenue has made various orders, for instance, in relation to the definition of seconds. That is of general application, and I am sure that it must have had application, at least in part, to that section of the textile industry that was located in Cornwall.

The dumping provisions did not apply to seconds before that order was made by my colleague.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, the minister cannot really worm out of this quite so easily.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

He says here, as the hon. member for Laurier has just pointed out, that there had been an erosion over the past 10 years. To quote his words:

> —and the erosion that has gone on over the past 10 years has gradually narrowed the power reposed in the government by parliament to deal with the dumping of goods of another nature that are of a class or kind made in Canada, and that applies to the textile goods made in those Cornwall mills.

When the minister says that the erosion applies to the textile goods made in the Cornwall mills, let the minister tell us what that erosion was. What were the decisions of the tariff board in these cases?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was not a reference to any decision of the tariff board. It was a reference to the effect of this course of decision. It affected everything that came within the scope of this problem of determining whether goods were of a class or kind made in Canada. It applied to everything. It applied to textiles, it applied to all sorts of goods and whether made in Cornwall or elsewhere. This erosion that had gone on had made it increasingly necessary, in order to bring the goods within the scope of the definition of class or kind made in Canada, to show that they were virtually identical with goods made in Canada.

That was the position in which the administration of the Department of National Revenue found itself as a result of this course of interpretation. This is a situation that affected everybody. This was the way in which the language that had been used by parliament, which had been given proper effect in the interpretations prior to the last decade, had been narrowed down as a result of this course of decision in the past decade, with effects on all Canadian producers in this field within the scope of some 75 items in the Canadian customs tariff. In particular, as I have pointed out already, the determination that goods are of a class or kind made in Canada is the basis for application of the dumping legislation. It has no application in any other case.

Mr. Campell (Stormont): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, in direct reply to what the minister has said, may I observe that to say in a pontifical way that this applies to all kinds of things does not make it apply. The minister said here quite specifically that it applies to textile goods made in these Cornwall mills and he was talking about the erosion that had taken place over the past ten years. Let the minister cite one single case where the customs department or the tariff board decided in the last ten years that a textile that previously was considered to be made in Canada was no longer considered to be made in Canada. Let him cite one single case. Unless he can do so there is no erosion.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the final observation of the hon. member is, of course, a complete non sequitur. He is trying again to identify decisions of the tariff board or the courts with the effects of the erosion. In the course of administration the department was not in a position to overlook the course of the decisions by the tariff board and the courts in narrowing down the interpretation and, of course, this situation had an effect on the administration. It could not be otherwise. The administration in the department cannot overlook or close its eyes to the results of this course of decision on the part of the tariff board and the courts over the past decade.

This matter has a very direct bearing upon textiles because it is the dumping provisions that are particularly to be invoked in the case of the dumping of textiles in Canada. Here is where the rub lay with respect to the textile field. I remind the house again, and I hope for the last time, Mr. Chairman, that the dumping provisions can be invoked only in the case of goods found to be of a class or kind made in Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I asked the minister to give one example not of a decision by the tariff board but of a decision by the customs administration in the last ten years where they decided that any of the textiles that at any time had been made in Cornwall were no longer made in Canada. That is the only way there could be erosion.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): May I ask a question?

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely the minister is going to answer before a diversion is created.

The Chairman: Order. I recognize the hon. member for Stormont.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): I should like to ask the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate a question. Since we are discussing the matter of worming out of things and since his colleague has wormed out of any answer to the question I asked him previously, let me ask the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate the same question, namely whether he or any of his colleagues are in fact in favour of increasing the tariff on cottons in order to protect the textile industry in Canada. Are they or are they not in favour of it?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will ask that question of the Minister of Finance right now. The hon. gentleman has asked me a question and he can now sit down and let the minister answer.

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): I know the minister's attitude and I asked my question of the member who is on his feet.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not happen to be a member of the government at the present time and I would not waste the time of the committee by answering the silly question asked by the hon. member for Stormont. I intend to put the question to the minister. Is this legislation, as the hon. member for Stormont is representing it to be, for the purpose of increasing protection?

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I say that I am not representing this legislation to be anything.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate has the floor at present and I would ask the hon. member for Stormont to seek his permission if the hon. member wants to speak.

Mr. Pickersgill: I ask the minister, is this legislation for the purpose of increasing the tariff on textiles?

Mr. Campbell (Stormont): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, that is not the question I asked at all, and I should like an answer to my previous question. A direct answer, yes or no, will be sufficient.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member has no right to an answer to his question. He knows perfectly well what my views are but I am not even going to give him the satisfaction of an answer. I am asking the minister, who is mainly responsible for tariffs in this country at the present time and who is answerable to the house, is this legislation for the purpose of increasing the tariff on textiles?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Obviously increases in tariffs do not enter into this situation at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exactly.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I pointed out that this is a matter of definition—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am quite satisfied with the answer.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): —and on the interpretation of the definition will depend whether the lower rate of duty applicable in the event that the goods are not of a class or kind made in Canada shall apply or whether in the relevant cases the higher customs tariff rates applicable in the event that the goods are of a class or kind made in Canada shall apply. That is the situation.

We are dealing with a definition, and so far as textile imports are concerned it is a question of whether the dumping provisions can be invoked.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask the minister another very simple and direct question. Does the minister know of any textile product made in Cornwall in the past ten years that was ever declared by the administration not to be made in Canada?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I am informed that one cannot give a positive answer to that question because a good deal depends on a number of factors that do not admit of a categorical answer. Obviously textiles are in most cases shelf goods.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then why on earth, when the minister now admits he does not know, did he tell us that the erosion applied to textiles made in Cornwall? Surely he had some facts on which to make that statement.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I hope the hon. member is not going to misread my remarks. I was pointing out that this is of general application. This is of general application to the goods described in some 75 items in the customs tariff and this legislation deals with the definition of the term that appears in all of these provisions of the customs tariff. It has that general application and the erosion that has gone on in the past decade is an erosion applied to what had been a well established interpretation of those words prior to the last decade. The erosion that has gone on has weakened the effect of this definition as applied to all of these 70-odd items in the customs tariff. So far as textiles are concerned, the particular application relates to dumping because, and I hope I am saying this for the last time, the dumping provisions can be invoked only in the case of goods of a class or kind made in Canada. The application of dumping, therefore, depends upon the interpretation of those words appearing within the items.

Mr. Chevrier: May I ask the minister another question? Would this new definition concerning class or kind made in Canada apply to tariff item 413(i) which I understand provides for machinery or apparatus of a class or kind not made in Canada, and parts thereof, especially constructed for preparing, manufacturing, testing or finishing yarns, cordage and fabrics made from textile fibres or from paper, imported for use exclusively by manufacturers and scholastic or charitable institutions in such processes only?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, in an academic sense, if that is the basis of the question, certainly the expression "class or kind", with which we are dealing does appear in item 413(i) of the customs tariff and therefore the legislation will apply to that item. I am told, however, that no concrete case is likely to arise under that particular item.

Mr. Regier: I note the minister's appeal when he asked the members of the committee a little while ago to be reasonable. However, I find it rather difficult to understand his complaint against the submission of the hon. member for Assiniboia. The hon. member for Assiniboia claimed the government was asking for authority greatly to increase tariffs. A number of weeks ago the minister admitted this was the purpose of the legislation now before us. However, he has amended his contention now. I assume he has been around the country within the last few weeks and now he pleads, to use his own word, that the change is in the interests of better administration. He is asking that we restore the position of the Canadian producer because of the erosion that has taken place, as he likes to put it.

However, a couple of weeks ago he said the change was in the interests of protecting Canadian producers. Now he says it is in the interests of better administration. I find this alteration in his appeal a little difficult to understand. The minister made light of the amendment which would hand over to the Minister of National Revenue much more authority than he has had heretofore. The right to make law is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. We are being asked now to hand over to the government the right to interpret the law. I find this request rather difficult to appreciate. If I may use the minister's words again, he said we were concerned only with a question of definition. I feel that we are skating on rather thin ice when we are asked for authority to have a minister of the government replace the judiciary, and here we are granting the minister authority to define the law.

I feel that over the years the right to define the law has belonged to the judiciary. We are rather reinforced in our suspicions as a result of a speech made by the hon. member for Lincoln. I assume that this legislation went before a meeting of the Conservative members of this house on a Wednesday morning before it was introduced. The hon. member for Lincoln made some rather revealing announcements. He welcomed this legislation because, in his opinion, it would be much easier to get to the minister than to get to the tariff board. He complained that it was very difficult for ordinary members of this house to get to the tariff board. If I may use the hon. member's own words, to whom would it be better to go than to the local member or the minister himself? In other words, political pressure is to be preferred to a decision of the tariff board. This is what alarms us more than anything else. The government is asking us to grant the Minister of National Revenue authority to interpret every definition in the interests of better administration. He is being granted authority to interpret the law, according to the words of the hon. member for Lincoln, in the light of the number of members of this house who may be running to him and appealing to him on behalf of a particular industry or commodity. I do not like to be placed in a position where I have to appeal to the minister to use his arbitrary powers on behalf of an industry in my constituency that may be in difficulties with the customs branch.

I should like to say a word or two about the submission of the hon. member for Laurier who pleaded for the Atlantic economic community in order, as I understood it, to help out the textile industry of Canada. The hon. member for Laurier also referred the Soviet competition. I ask the hon. member for Laurier to explain how Soviet competition or the development of the Atlantic economic community has anything to do with the difficulties of the textile industry in our nation today. I know this much; our textile industry does not face competition from the U.S.S.R. Indeed, most of the competition that faces our textile industry does not come from within the Atlantic economic community but comes from the mills of the United States and the United Kingdom. Therefore, when he proposes the establishment of the Atlantic economic community, he is not proposing any solution whatever for the problems of the cotton textile mills located in Ontario or Quebec. When he speaks of Soviet competition for the Canadian textile industry, he is not being relevant to the subject of the debate.

However, I should like to return to my earlier contention. When the minister introduced his baby budget, and for a number of weeks thereafter, he pleaded on behalf of Canadian secondary industries which had been eroded by decisions of the tariff board. During the weeks that have gone by, the minister has completely altered his argument on behalf of this legislation and he is now urging us to adopt this measure in the interests of better administration.

When we consider the authority that he is proposing to take away from the tariff board and hand over to the Minister of National Revenue I am afraid that we must oppose this resolution to the very limit of our abilities.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, in connection with the discussion this afternoon two things particularly interested me about the remarks made by the minister. When we were last discussing this resolution the minister made practically no comment. I believe he assumed that because, as he described it, it was a short resolution, and as such not worthy of debate. I think that the shortness of some declaratory resolutions as sometimes the shortness of individuals, is not in any way an indication of their dynamite potentials. I think the Minister of Finance would perhaps be the first to agree with that suggestion.

I should like to receive some direct information from the minister this afternoon. He gave us none the last time we discussed this subject. Surely he cannot expect to have it both ways; he cannot say that the legislation introduced in 1958 was never used, while on the other hand both he and representatives of his party travel up and down the land, particularly in textile ridings, saying that this legislation has been exceedingly helful to them. The minister himself, I believe in the middle of October 1960, addressed the Woollen and Knit Goods Manufacturing Association in his usual vigorous declaratory style saying: "Our actions have been swift, comprehensive and effective". The Minister of National Revenue, with respect to any changes in the Customs Tariff such as we have referred to, now says the amendments of 1958 have not been used. The minister has not yet replied to the hon. member for Laurier who has asked: What has the government done by this legislation that has helped the textile industry?

The second point I should like to make is this, and I regret that I have to go back to the points I raised a week or so ago in regard to the question of erosion. The minister again relies on assertions rather than facts. He says there has been erosion. Without repeating everything I said last week, I would ask the minister to give us illustrations, something concrete in regard to the decisions of the tariff board during the last decade about which he complains or decisions which have gone contrary to what the bureaucrats themselves said was the law. In one case, appeal No. 272 in connection with shovels, I indicated that the bureaucrats were upheld when the tariff board said that their judgment was correct in administering the customs department. A few days after that decision was given the bureaucrats changed their traditional ruling and then met the second appeal, No. 306. Of course, in that case the tariff board overruled the administration.

Let us get down to cases rather than just accept a statement from the Minister of Finance that there has been erosion. Let us have the Minister of Finance indicate to us the cases he regards as the ones which change the intent of parliament as it was enacted prior to a decade ago.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks before the house arises because I know that at eight o'clock the minister has other engagements and that we will be dealing with the resolution to establish a committee on railways and shipping.

I am quite disappointed, as I am sure were the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, in the statement the minister made in answer to questions put by us from this side of the house. I was disappointed in the reply the minister made in his earlier statement of February 2 when he said that this erosion applied to the Cornwall mills. When he was asked about a concrete example he could not give one of that erosion I think the minister should reply to that question giving us an example of this erosion of which he spoke when he made the statement earlier.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, this information was fully given and is on the record. This information was put on the record by the Minister of National Revenue, and myself on February 2 at very great length.

Mr. Benidickson: The minister is undoubtedly referring to his skirting the question and his very unusual interpretation in doing so in respect to the number of cases over the past decade to which he referred. If the minister is not going to reply at this point, having dealt with two of these appeals, I am now prepared to deal with each and every one and indicate my reading of the tariff board decisions. In practically all cases not only did the tariff board uphold what the administration said was law, but it upheld the law as it had been for many years prior to 1950. This is the challenge which we put before the Minister of Finance. We are not asking him to persuade colleagues in his own party that all is serene in connection with this amended law and is not going to convince us. We challenge him to indicate to us details with respect to the erosion which he so frequently asserts has taken place.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

RAILWAYS, AIR LINES AND SHIPPING

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE ON RAILWAYS, AIR LINES AND SHIPPING OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY THE GOVERNMENT

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport) moved:

That a sessional committee on railways, airlines and shipping owned and controlled by the government be appointed to consider the accounts, estimates and bills relating to the Canadian National Railway and Trans-Canada Air Lines, saving always the power of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public monies, and to consider the pension rights of existing or retired Canadian National Railway employees with respect to anomalies which may have resulted from breaks in the continuity of service, and also to consider the arrangements for turn around benefits for employees of the Canadian National Railway, and the said committee should be empowered to send for persons, papers and records and to report from time to time, and that notwithstanding standing order 67, the said committee shall consist of twenty six members.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have a very short statement to make. This motion is to appoint a sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping owned and controlled by the government.

As the house knows, it has been the practice for many years to appoint a committee to review the affairs of the Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines.

In due course, when the annual reports of the two companies have been received and tabled in the house, they will be referred to the committee together with the items of estimates that are customarily considered by the committee. As hon. members are aware, these reports are usually ready during the month of March.

Hon. members will have noted that this year the terms of reference of the committees have been expanded to permit consideration of the pension rights of existing or retired Canadian National Railway employees with respect to anomalies which may have resulted from breaks in the continuity of service, and also to consider the arrangements for turn-around benefits for employees of the Canadian National Railways.

When speaking on the bill to provide for the continuance of railway operations the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) stated that the government would ask that an investigation be undertaken into the objections that have been raised over the years that turn-around benefits have not been properly provided and that pensions had been adversely affected by lay-offs due to economic conditions, particularly during the 1930's. This motion provides for such an investigation.

This committee has always proved its value and I am sure that with the added terms of reference its deliberations will again be conducted with the same thoroughness and efficiency that has characterized its proceedings in the past.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): The house will be grateful to the minister for the statement he has just made, although some of us may think it was brief in nature. I presume the intention in making it brief is to curtail the extent of the discussion on this motion.

I do not intend to deal with this resolution at great length but there are some things which I think need to be said on the occasion of this discussion. The motion as it appears on the order paper is divided into two parts. It seeks, first of all, to establish a committee to consider the accounts, estimates and bills of two crown corporations, namely the Canadian National Railways and the Trans-Canada Air Lines. Second, it seeks the permission of the house for a study to be made of the pension rights of existing or retired employees of Canadian National Railways. This, of course, brings up at once a number of matters which affect both crown corporations.

It will not, of course, be news to the house to learn either from the annual report of the C.N.R., through the minister or through the president of the C.N.R. that the financial position of Canadian National Railways has really worsened. This is not only in the field of freight but also in the field of passenger service. I think one had some intimation of this situation as far back as the report of the royal commission on transportation made by Mr. Justice Turgeon and two of his colleagues in 1951. A careful glance at the recommendations of that report gives some indication that there are a number of factors affecting the operation of the Canadian National Railways and, I suppose I can say, railways in general. One of these factors is the inroads made by aviation into the field of rail transportation and another is the increase in the size of the trucking industry. The motor car and truck and the aeroplane have made tremendous inroads into freight and railway passenger business, this notwithstanding the many innovations which have been introduced by both the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

In 1960 I believe the deficit of the Canadian National Railways may well be the largest in its history. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) brought down his baby budget in December I believe he gave some indication of what the deficit of the Canadian National Railways might be. It was certainly of the order of $75 million.

The railway position in the United Kingdom and in the United States is not unlike that in our own country. Railway expansion in the United States has not kept pace with the increase in population but rather has fallen behind, giving way especially before the advance of the motor truck and the aeroplane in almost every part of the United States. That statement is applicable to our own railways in Canada. Then we had the establishment of a royal commission in 1959 to deal with railway matters. That commission, now known as the MacPherson commission, was charged with a number of problems, two of which were the inequities in the freight rate structure and the obligations and limitations imposed upon railways by law for reasons of public policy.

I think it would be interesting to the house to learn from the minister, when he replies, what is the position of the present royal commission on transportation. When will it report? The Prime Minister in a previous debate stated that the royal commission is expected to recommend a method of freight increases which will prevent discriminatory rates. At the time of the debate regarding the resumption of work of railway employees it was said that the report would be handed down by March 31 this year. That date is coming fairly soon; it is the end of next month. Is this result still going to be possible? Notwithstanding the delays that have been occasioned in the hearing of evidence and in the presentation of briefs since the debate on the railway issue, is the royal commission on transportation still going to be able to meet the schedule that was referred to at that time? Until January of this year the royal commission was still hearing witnesses and only recently has this procedure ceased.

The next point is this. When will the discussion on the briefs take place? Assuming that this discussion were to end during the month of February, this would barely give the commission three months in which to write a report of tremendous importance. As the house knows, the Turgeon report on transportation was handed down after many months of study not only by the chairman of this commission but also by his colleagues. I know from experience that it would have been impossible for Mr. Justice Turgeon to hand down a report in three months on a matter of this magnitude and importance. The matters that have been submitted to the royal commission on transportation are not unlike, certainly in importance, those that were submitted to the royal commission in 1951. Therefore, the question I ask is this. How can the commission in the short time at its disposal have a report of this importance ready by March 31?

I think the minister also might well give some consideration to another matter that has been engaging the attention of the house from time to time. I refer to the question of lay-offs on the Canadian National Railways. What is the position with reference to this matter? I know from experience that the officers of the Canadian National Railways hesitate to give information on this subject not only to the minister but also to the house.

I am not going to debate the propriety of this situation, but I think the minister should take the opportunity to indicate to the house what has been the position with reference to these lay-offs. It has been stated from time to time that about 5,000 employees per year have been laid off by the C.N.R. within the last three or four years. If that is the case, that would be about 20,000 employees.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I mention to the hon. member that in my view he is straying away from the subject matter of the motion before the house. This motion does not permit, to my mind, a general discussion on the problems of transportation or on all the problems which concern the C.N.R.

I do not wish to limit the hon. member but he realizes that if I permit him to speak on all these matters in which he may be interested I shall be obliged to allow the same latitude to all other hon. members. Generally speaking, on a motion to set up a committee the only questions which are relevant are those mentioned in the motion, and specially the expediency of setting up a committee. I do not wish to be too restrictive, but I leave this suggestion with the hon. member.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I have come prepared to debate this point and I have the authorities before me. I do not wish to go into them and take up the time of the house, but I am quite prepared to debate this point.

I say to you, sir, with respect that I think Your Honour is in error, because it has been the practice, on the establishment of this committee at least, not to debate in detail all the things that come up for consideration in the committee—I agree with Your Honour in that respect—but generally to debate seriatim the matters which are likely to come up for consideration in the committee from time to time.

At the time this resolution was being discussed last year, when I had used about ten minutes of my time the Speaker interrupted, as did the Deputy Speaker this evening, and I was then prepared to argue, as I am now, when the then minister of transport (Mr. Hees) himself rose and said, "During all the time that I have been in the house it has been the practice to allow members to deal in a general way with these matters, as the hon. member for Laurier is doing". I think the Speaker then let the matter drop.

As I say, I am prepared to discuss the point of order, but I think perhaps Your Honour will find as I go along that I have no intention of dealing with these matters in detail but only in a general way. When Your Honour interrupted me I had almost completed my remarks in connection with lay-offs on the C.N.R.

I go on to another matter, namely the changes in the regional jurisdiction that have been brought about by the Canadian National Railways. I should like to tell the minister, and through him the officers of the Canadian National Railways, that there is a tremendous amount of resentment by people all across Canada to the changes which have been made with regard to this jurisdiction. I am not nearly as famaliar with this subject as is, for instance, the hon. member for Levis (Mr. Bourget)—

Mr. Benidickson: He spoke previously about this matter.

Mr. Chevrier: —who, I am informed, has spoken previously, and the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) who comes from a railway centre. However, I know there is a great deal of resentment and opposition to these changes. I hope the president of the Canadian National Railways will be able to explain this position because he will find, that our members at least—and I am sure the position is the same with regard to many hon. members who sit on the other side of the house—are displeased with the changes in the jurisdictional areas that have been established. I am sure there is good reason for this change, but on the other hand it has caused a great deal of dissatisfaction and I doubt very much whether it has brought about a great deal of improvement; certainly it has not so in the financial aspect of the operations of the C.N.R.

I wish to say just one word in passing about the operations of Canadian National Steamships. The minister made no mention of this matter. I think we should have some statement on the agreements which were made with the bank of Cuba, I believe, concerning the sale of these vessels of Canadian National Steamships. I think we should be told whether with the exception of one; these ships are all still in the harbour of Halifax. I think we should be given some indication as to whether the payments have been made by the purchasers or by the bank that has guaranteed those purchasers. I think we are also entitled to a statement from the minister on the whole position with reference to the sale of these ships. It seems to us on this side of the house that it was a serious mistake to do what was done on that occasion. If I am wrong in that assumption I should like to be corrected by the minister. To us it was a mistake because after two and a half to three years seven of those ships are still lying idle in Halifax harbour. Surely we are entitled to some explanation of this situation.

I should like to draw to the attention of the house a statement contained in the speech from the throne of 1958 which read:

—you will be asked to authorize the construction of a railway to Great Slave lake.

As the house knows, this railway was to be built jointly by the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway. What is the position of that railway? We know an announcement was made that a royal commission would be established to determine which of two routes would be preferable, the eastern or the western route. In accordance with another statement in the speech from the throne of 1960, a detailed survey is to be made of the western route from northern Alberta. The minister should tell the house what is the position with reference to this railway the construction of which, according to the speech from the throne, was to have commenced three years ago. If the minister is not in a position to tell the house, then the president of the Canadian National Railways should tell us. When he was asked for information in this respect during the last committee meetings he rightfully turned to the minister for guidance, and the minister said that he could not add anything to what had already been said in the house. The committee should be given some information with reference to this matter.

As the minister knows, this afternoon I raised a question concerning air routes. I turn now to another aspect of this committee's work, namely a study of the operations of the crown corporation known as Trans-Canada Air Lines. In so far as our air carriers and our air lines are concerned, there is a fairly serious situation with reference to fifth freedom rights. The Financial Post carried a story to the effect that an examiner of the civil aeronautics board of the United States had recommended to that board the granting of permission to two United States air lines to fly Toronto to Miami via Buffalo and Toronto to Washington and Philadelphia via Buffalo without any corresponding rights being given to Canadian air carriers. At the committee hearings I think the minister should tell us what is being done by the government to offset this serious situation because there can be no doubt that tremendous harm is being done to our air lines.

These are questions that come to my mind now. For instance, why is it that Lufthansa and Air France have the right to fly non-stop between Montreal and Chicago when T.C.A., a Canadian carrier, does not have that right? Why does Alitalia have the right to operate Rome to Montreal with onward rights to Mexico, Chicago and Los Angeles while the Canadian carrier must come down at Lisbon on the Rome-Montreal route and no Canadian carrier has the right to fly Montreal to Toronto and Los Angeles? Then, again, why does B.O.A.C. have an additional point of call at Toronto over and above Montreal when Toronto originates more trans-Atlantic travel than any other Canadian city? Finally, why should United States air lines have many more concessions in this country than we have in theirs? That is what occasioned the question I raised this afternoon about a direct flight via Buffalo from Toronto to Miami, for instance, when T.C.A. has not the right to fly to Miami.

This consideration raises the whole question of the income position of the Trans-Canada Air Lines. Last year they had a small net income of $153,000 as compared with a net income of $548,000 the year before. What is the reason for this situation? I believe one of the reasons is the fifth freedom rights which have been granted by this government—and I repeat "by this government", and not by the former government, as the minister seemed to believe, if one judges by the answer he gave in the house one day to a question—to foreign air lines in exchange for third and fourth freedom rights. Why should foreign air lines have the right to put down and take on passengers in Canada for a destination in another country, when Canada does not possess equal rights in those countries? I refer, of course, to the flights from Paris to Montreal and onward; from Rome to Montreal and onward; from Bonn and Dusseldorf to Montreal and onward. I could go on with other examples. I hope the minister will give these matters consideration.

In my opinion, all these bilateral air agreements between Canada and foreign countries, but more particularly with the United States, need to be re-negotiated; otherwise they will mean a tremendous loss of traffic to T.C.A. With the new planes which are now being operated, namely the DC-8's, it is becoming more and more important to have granted in other countries rights similar to those which other countries are granted in Canada.

I have before me the additional routes which were incorporated in the United States-Canada air agreement as amended.

Mr. Nugent: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I thought the hon. member might be coming to the end of his remarks, but I really cannot see how he can get this detailed discussion of the air rights in agreements with other countries within the scope of this resolution. When you called him to order the last time I think he mentioned that he had just about finished his remarks and was going to stop, but it seems to me that he is getting farther away from the point all the time.

Mr. Chevrier: On the point of order, may I say this. I did say I was finishing my remarks with reference to the lay-offs in the Canadian National Railways, but this is a different matter altogether. My hon. friend wants to know how I can bring this matter within the purview of the resolution. It is very easy to see that the air agreements have a bearing on the operations and the profit position of Trans-Canada Air Lines. This committee is going to deal with the financial position and the operation of Trans-Canada Air Lines. If Trans-Canada Air Lines is not given the rights to operate in other countries in the same way as other countries are given rights to operate in Canada, then surely its profit position is going to be affected.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must say that I was about to rise when the hon. member raised his point of order. It seems to me that the hon. member for Laurier is now discussing the internal policy of the government with regard to international air agreements. Although it may have some bearing on the operations of Trans-Canada Air Lines, it is certainly not a matter which could be discussed in detail at this time in the way in which the hon. member has been discussing it. I might refer the hon. member for Laurier and hon. members generally to a decision of Mr. Speaker on January 18, 1961, as found at page 1184 of Hansard. I do not think I need to read all of Mr. Speaker's comments. I will simply refer to this passage:

> I know that a motion to set up a committee has been used deliberately by the house as a vehicle for debate on external affairs, for example—

In this case we could say on transport policies.

> —but that, of course, is by consent. I think many times the house has debated the substance of a matter to be referred to a committee more by consent than because of its relevance. Having taken that view and realizing the difficulties, I would not feel at all embarrassed, in fact, it might settle the practice if an issue were made of it and the house made its own decision.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

I might say that similar views were expressed by Mr. Speaker Beaudoin in 1955. I refer hon. members in that regard to page 2441 and following of Hansard for March 28, 1955. I might also indicate to the hon. member for Laurier that he has been asking the minister for statements of policy on certain matters. Obviously that type of debate should, in my view, be held on the estimates of the Department of Transport because if the minister is to start debating policies on all matters concerning his department we will certainly not be able to discuss whether it is opportune to set up a committee. That is the only problem with which the house is concerned at the moment.

As I say, I agree with the hon. member for Laurier that references can be made to the subject matters which are going to be discussed in the committee. However, to discuss in detail air policies or even lay-offs, which the hon. member for Laurier mentioned, to my mind is to engage in discussion that is not relevant because it opens up a general anticipatory debate on transport which would be much wider than the type of debate permitted on a motion of this kind. The hon. member for Laurier realizes, as do all hon. members, that he will have an opportunity to discuss transport policies when the estimates of the minister come before the committee of supply. Therefore I ask for co-operation from all hon. members in being more relevant and adhering more strictly—I do not say strictly—to the rules of relevancy.

Mr. Chevrier: I wonder whether Your Honour will allow me to bring one point to your attention. Your Honour has just read the decision of the Speaker. With great respect, may I say that I do not think the Speaker made a decision on that day because if Your Honour had continued to read I think you would have found that, after the Speaker had referred to the matters to which he alluded, it seemed to be generally agreed that this whole subject, which certainly had not been determined by any rule of the house, should be referred to the committee on rules.

I have before me the debate on January 18, 1961 in which the Speaker said, as found on page 1184 of Hansard, that in his opinion the discussion was not a review of all of the matters to be referred to the committee. A little later he said that a wholly different practice had, perhaps wrongly, been consecrated in the house. He did not say it had been consecrated. A little further on he said that there was no specification of what the matters were that were to come before the committee. Then there followed a general discussion into which the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and several others entered.

If one reads the proceedings I think what follows is that the Speaker was asking himself what is the scope allowed in such a discussion. I think he certainly said that one cannot go into details in an interminable manner, and with that statement there can be no quarrel. Certainly he also stated that one can discuss general heads of discussion such as the regional divisions of the C.N.R., as I did; lay-offs on the C.N.R.; curtailment of operations; the royal commission on transportation; Trans-Canada Air Lines; and, in a general way, the air agreements that affect the profit and loss position of Trans-Canada Air Lines.

I think it was also stated that such a discussion should authorize a review of matters that are of urgent importance and cannot be debated prior to the meeting of the committee. That is an important matter. When is this committee to meet? The minister has stated that the reports of the C.N.R. and T.C.A. have not been tabled and may not be tabled until the month of March. The committee may not sit until April after the Easter recess. Therefore, if there is no calling of the estimates of the Department of Transport, as Your Honour has suggested, from now until then, there will be no opportunity whatsoever during a period of almost two months to debate these matters which on the face of them are all important.

It seemed to me that the discussion which followed on January 18 was not terminated in that while the Speaker said there was no general practice the tradition was that one should stick to a general discussion as much as possible. It was suggested, and I think that the suggestion deserved consideration, that the whole matter be referred to the committee on rules. However, I am not going to pursue the matter unduly. I did want to make these points because, with all due respect to you, sir, I do not think there has been a ruling on the matter. I do not think there can be a ruling until the committee on rules deals with the matter. The practice and the tradition of the house are that you cannot talk about these matters interminably but surely on matters of importance such as those which I have discussed so far there should at least be a general discussion. I have tried to discuss things generally. If I have strayed away I am grateful to Your Honour for bringing me back, and I will try to stick to generalities as much as possible.

There is one other matter which I submit to the house is of extreme importance. I have raised it before in the house. I refer to the position of the T.C.A. pilots. As the house knows, 104 pilots of Trans-Canada Air Lines are going to be out of work because of the new DC-8 equipment being put into operation. It was stated by Trans-Canada Air Lines and also by the minister, I believe, that employment would be found for all of these men. I have no doubt that is the intention of T.C.A. and of the minister but that is not the case so far. It was stated that these pilots would be taken on British European Airways or Air Lingas. However, my information is that thus far only 42 of these pilots have been taken on by these air lines. That was the information that was given to me when I raised the matter in the house some weeks ago. If the situation has changed, that is all to the good but I think the minister should make it his responsibility to see that none of these pilots who have given good service to Trans-Canada Air Lines will find themselves out of employment because of the change in equipment from the older, lighter and slower aircraft to the much heavier, more modern and speedier aircraft. I do not believe I need to tell the minister that when the Department of Transport employees in British Columbia were affected by a sale of telegraph lines belonging to the government, it was seen that at least 99 per cent of the employees were given employment of a comparable nature elsewhere. This should be done here, and every effort should be made to find employment for these people.

Then, as a preamble to what I shall have to say later, I should like to state that there are few air lines in the world with the record of safety that Trans-Canada Air Lines possesses. This is a statement that has been made in this house, in the committee and outside of the house. I believe Trans-Canada Air Lines deserve a tremendous amount of credit for the manner in which they operate their air line, in so far as safety is concerned and in so far as their over-all operations are concerned. The safety record is due in large part to these pilots, and it seems to me that for this reason no effort should be spared to see that they are not without employment.

What I have said with reference to safety does not apply to Trans-Canada operations on the ground. I have received a number of letters to which of course I am not going to refer because it would be going into the matter in too great detail. The gist of the complaints in those letters is to the effect that, on the ground, Trans-Canada Air Lines could still tremendously improve their operations. Having said that, and because I do not want to offend against the decision of the Deputy Speaker, I think the minister will understand what I mean. I am sure the president of Trans-Canada Air Lines will equally be in a position to explain this matter to the committee.

I feel, too, Mr. Speaker, that the house and the committee should be given some explanation about the position of air cargo in so far as Trans-Canada Air Lines is concerned. There has been, in the correspondence which I have received, a great deal of complaint concerning the fact that sufficient air cargo is not moved on T.C.A. aircraft. I trust that it will be possible for the committee to get information in that respect.

There are other members who, I am sure, would want to deal with other aspects of the committee's work. I shall not transgress upon the time of this committee to deal with other aspects. I could refer to the transportation services and transportation facilities of the Canadian National Railways in the Atlantic provinces and on the west coast of Canada. Having said all this, I should like now to move an amendment to this resolution. I desire to move, seconded by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson), the following amendment:

That the words "Canadian National" in line 6 be deleted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before I put the amendment would some hon. member wish to discuss a problem relating to the admissibility of the amendment? As I understand it, the amended motion would cover existing pensions rights of retired railway employees of other railway companies. I believe that would be the purport of the amendment, and a problem arises as to the enlargement of the scope of reference of this committee.

Mr. Chevrier: I am prepared to speak to that point, sir, if you would hear me. The amendment which has been moved is, in my opinion, in order, particularly if one has in mind citations 291 and 293 of Beauchesne's fourth edition. Citation 291 reads:

When the house is engaged in nominating the members of a committee, it is not competent for an honourable member to open the whole subject.

Then, the citation continues:

When the house is considering a motion, of which notice has been given, for the appointment of a select committee, a member cannot move in amendment that the committee be given wider powers than those which were set down in the notice.

I do not want to read the remainder of the citation because I think I can establish that what I propose to do does not give wider powers.

Citation 293 reads:

On a motion that a select committee be appointed to examine the recent rise in the cost of living and an amendment that the committee be empowered to examine the effort of present government policies in lessening agricultural production, the Speaker ruled as follows: "Though I find this amendment relevant to the main motion, I cannot yet overlook the fact that questions of policy are so complex that they should not be moved as corollaries to the appointment of such a committee as the one now proposed."

What I wish to do now is to relate my amendment directly to the useful elaboration of these two citations, only parts of which I have put on the Hansard record, and to which Mr. Speaker referred last session. This reference will be found at pages 286 and 287 of the Journals for March 17, 1960. At that time Mr. Speaker was dealing with a similar point, and perhaps Your Honour was present. You will recall that on that date Mr. Speaker has occasion to rule upon two amendments to the motion to set up a defence committee. The first amendment His Honour ruled out of order and the second amendment His Honour ruled in order.

During the course of Mr. Speaker's first ruling he referred to a number of precedents upon which he based his decision. I wish now to draw to your attention to two sentences from this first ruling. The first of these sentences is to be found on page 286 of the Journals of March 17, 1960 and reads as follows:

An amendment to a resolution which introduces something new and different in kind into the terms of reference which the motion sets up for the committee goes too far and would require notice of motion itself before it could appear on the order paper.

The second sentence which appears on page 287 reads as follows:

On the principle that an amendment must not introduce new and different subjects to be referred to the committee, I must find that the second part of this amendment goes beyond what would be acceptable.

It is under this ruling of Mr. Speaker's that I think my amendment to this resolution falls. Therefore, I submit with confidence that my amendment does not introduce something new and different in kind because I am deleting the words "Canadian National Railway" and that it is still a discussion of pensions. It does not introduce something new and different in kind into the terms of reference. Nor does it introduce new and different subjects. If my amendment for example sought to include in the motion such items as seniority provisions, general welfare benefits, then I think it would be defective because such subjects would be new and different in kind. That is why the second ruling made by Mr. Speaker gives an even stronger foundation to my argument.

As you recall, sir, the second amendment changed the period of time covered by the accounts which were referred to the committee. My amendment does not do that but extends the category of employees to be covered under the general grant of power to investigate pension benefits. It does not, in the words of the Speaker's rulings, introduce something new and different in kind, or new and different subjects. It simply is, as I have stated, enlarging the category of railway employees whose pension benefits are to be examined. I therefore contend that if it is in order to extend the time period over which a particular grant of power may be exercised, then it is equally in order to enlarge the category of employees over which an examination can extend.

For those reasons it seems to me that this amendment does not go beyond the scope of the ruling of His Honour of March 17, 1960.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, may I be heard on this point of order. There appears to be some question on Your Honour's part as to whether or not the amendment was expanding the area of consideration proposed. May I remind Your Honour why we are in the arena on pensions at all with respect to a motion that has come before this House of Commons year after year with reference to public activities of our Crown railway and shipping companies as submitted to a parliamentary committee. As you will notice, Your Honour, the motion this year has a substantial change from the traditional procedure. It involves for the first time in many years the suggestion that the committee should consider matters of pension. This change results from what I call a red herring, an ad hoc or off the cuff suggestion made by the Prime Minister when he was embarrassed in the debate on December 1 and 2 with respect to the freeze of the railway employees on the proposed strike. It was only then that any suggestions were made that a parliamentary committee would have enlarged powers during this session to consider the matter of pensions and turn-around rights of railway employees. I say that subject was introduced in a novel way this session by the government. I am sure that, under those circumstances, Your Honour would not want to restrict the opportunity that would normally prevail for an amendment and consideration of alternatives.

Mr. Creaghan: Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply briefly to the argument just introduced by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River.

It is a well known fact that retired C.N.R. workers have been urging the government of Canada since 1945 to increase the pensions paid to former employees of the so-called government owned railways such as the Intercolonial Railway and others in eastern Canada. Since my election to the House of Commons I have consistently placed a resolution in this regard on the order paper. The resolution that was placed on the order paper this year appeared on November 24 and is No. 38 under routine proceedings of this date. This resolution urges the government once again, for the third consecutive session, to introduce legislation providing for an increase in pensions paid to railway employees.

I submit that the proposed amendment is out of order. It is designed to confuse and to put responsibility on a sessional committee to examine the pension privileges of employees of the Canadian Pacific Railway and other railways. I am certain that the interpretation of the minister's resolution would be one which would include not only the Canadian National Railways but certain railways in eastern and western Canada formerly owned or controlled by the government. This resolution would include the right of the committee to examine pensions of various railway companies owned and controlled by the government. I think it would only add confusion and delay and create impossible results for a small committee of 26 members to attempt to determine what pensions railway workers outside of government owned or controlled lines should be entitled to.

On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that all railway workers are included in this resolution if they worked for railways controlled by the government. They are automatically included because in 1922 the Canadian National Railways took over government-controlled railways. The amendment is unnecessary as far as I am concerned.

I should like to see this committee formed, and I have every reason to expect that it will make a thorough investigation into existing hardships. I am sure that the hardships of former employees of government railways will be considered together with inequities which exist, if any, under the current C.N.R. regulations on pensions. I therefore suggest that the point of order is ill-founded. I also suggest that the amendment is unnecessary because it does nothing but add confusion and impossibilities to the task of the committee.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, the argument so far as concerns what might be called the legal interpretation of the words of the amendment is something I do not wish to comment upon. I should like to see the amendment carried and to speak in favour of it. I do want to draw to your attention that the Minister of Transport in introducing this resolution made a statement which indicates that the reason for the expansion of the resolution was a commitment the Prime Minister made in this house. The commitment appears at page 356 of Hansard and reads as follows:

—this year I intend to ask the committee on railways, canals, and telegraph lines, when set up, to undertake an investigation of one of the major grounds of objection on the part of railwaymen, that of the break in pensions.

I feel that anyone who knows anything about the pension situation realizes that the matter is much more of a problem in regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway than it is in regard to the Canadian National Railways in so far as breaks in pensions are concerned.

At page 356 of Hansard the Prime Minister is reported as saying:

I will ask for this matter to receive the fullest investigation by the committee when set up, to the end that, where injustice exists, changes may be recommended by the committee in that particular, as well as in those turn-around comforts and benefits for which railwaymen have asked for so many years.

The point I want to draw to Your Honour's attention is that the reason for the expansion beyond the normal in this resolution is that undertaking of the Prime Minister. I would argue that the undertaking of the Prime Minister is with regard to all railway men and not just with regard to employees of government controlled railways. It is very obvious that as to turn-around benefits and breaks in pensions, the Canadian Pacific Railway employees or the employees of the Ontario Northland Railway are just as much involved as are any others.

My opinion is that the Minister of Transport and the Prime Minister have not given much consideration to this problem. I feel that this sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping is not the committee which should consider the pension situation. I feel that this problem should be considered by the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. I feel that one reason I say this is fairly obvious, namely that it will take a considerable amount of time and a great deal of effort to consider this subject. Individuals will come from across the country to appear before this committee. It is the normal practice that the sessional committee sit during the morning, afternoon and through the night regardless of what is happening in the house. It normally sits for two or three days. I just offer that comment because it seems to me the Minister of Transport introduced the whole matter hinging it on the statement of December 1, 1956. I am pleased that the minister has drawn attention to the Prime Minister's commitment but I think maybe he could clear up any doubt about how efficacious this particular amendment is. It seems to me the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) has tried by this amendment to go much more along the lines of the suggestion the Prime Minister offered than the amendment originally allowed.

Mr. Churchill: I think the proposed amendment is out of order for the reasons which have been so ably set before Your Honour by the hon. member for Laurier, but if you will look at the proposed motion—and the hon. member for Westmorland (Mr. Creaghan) drew this matter to the attention of the house—you will see that the committee there mentioned is a sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping owned and controlled by the government. I think that is the essential part of the motion, which then goes on to speak of the employees. It is referring then, as it states, to employees of a railway that is owned and controlled by the government.

On the two points raised by the hon. member for Laurier referring to the ruling by Mr. Speaker last year, it seems to me that that ruling would apply in this instance because—and here I take issue with the hon. member for Laurier—the amendment introduces something new and something different, something which was not covered in the original motion. The motion refers to pension rates of retired and present C.N.R. employees and the hon. member for Laurier wants to bring in the pension rates of present or retired railway employees whether they belong to the C.N.R. of the P.G.E., the Ontario Northland Railway or any other line in the country. That, surely, is something different from what is covered in the original motion.

In the second place, the amendment is obviously intended to confer on the committee wider powers than those delineated in the motion. Last year Mr. Speaker, following earlier rulings, decided that an amendment which introduced something new and different and which sought to widen the terms of reference was completely out of order, and he ruled accordingly.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I should like to support what the Minister of Veterans Affairs has said. I should like to refer the house to section 291 of Beauchesne's fourth edition which the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) did not read fully. Section 291 says that when the house is considering a motion of which notice has been given for the appointment of a select committee a member cannot move an amendment that the committee be given wider powers than those set down in the notice. There is a principle involved.

Mr. Chevrier: I read that.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I know the hon. gentleman read it, but he is not following it. This amendment would certainly give wider powers, because here the notice of motion is to consider the pension rights of existing or retired Canadian National Railway employees; and when you leave out the words "Canadian National" you go from the particular to the general, you take in the whole scope of railway employees from one end of Canada to the other and, as no one knows better than does the hon. member for Laurier, that is going to take in thousands of employees.

Mr. Chevrier: That is what the Prime Minister said.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): We are not talking about what the Prime Minister said. Both the hon. member for Laurier and the hon. member for Port Arthur are out of order in referring to a debate which is already closed. We are dealing now with the setting up of a committee and we cannot discuss any other subject.

Mr. Chevrier: Even if the committee is to be set up for the purpose of dealing with the Prime Minister's undertaking?

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): The hon. gentleman should not be cross-examining me. He held the floor for an hour without saying anything very much, and what I am saying is correct. You cannot go from a consideration of the position of Canadian National employees to a consideration of the position of employees of all the other railways in the country as well. Suppose this motion involved steamship companies, and instead of "Canadian National Railways" it said "employees of the Canadian National Steamships", would the hon. member suggest that we could consider the position of all steamship employees and would he say it was not introducing something new and different? The hon. member is enlarging the scope of this motion and therefore he is asking the house to consider something new and different. Let us suppose, again, that the motion referred to employees of the Canadian National hotels. Would the hon. member ask us to leave out the words "Canadian National" and consider all hotel employees in Canada, saying, at the same time, that nothing new or different has been introduced? The hon. member for Laurier is completely illogical in his argument tonight and I submit we are simply wasting time in considering it any further.

Mr. Chevrier: Perhaps I may be allowed to reply to what has been said by the leader of the house, first of all, when he stated that this amendement introduced something new and something different. On that aspect all I wish to do is to rely on the ruling of Mr. Speaker in March, 1960, when, in dealing with a similar amendment he came to the conclusion, in a case which I submit is on all four's with this one, that something new and different was not being introduced. In any event, this is not introducing something new. This amendment is withdrawing the words "Canadian National Railways" and therefore it cannot be introducing something new and different.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Chevrier: In so far as the argument of the Solicitor General is concerned, I submit, with deference that it is entirely irrelevant because the hon. gentleman does not take the position which the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) took last year with regard to a similar motion when I moved an amendment not unlike the present one. Objection was taken to it; there was discussion as to whether or not it was in order. The Minister of Transport rose at once and said, "Certainly we have no objection to the house studying this matter". He obtained the approval of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and at once that was accepted. As the Prime Minister made that statement—as the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) has already indicated—as reported at page 356 of Hansard, namely that this is the kind of matter he wishes discussed, there should not be any objection to considering it now simply because of the point made by the hon. Solicitor General.

I draw to your attention, sir, the words of His Honour the Speaker in the ruling he made on March 17, 1960. In that ruling he made it quite clear that since what was being done was not introducing something new and something different, the amendment was in order. I submit, with deference, that this amendment is in the same category.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the discussion has been sufficient to permit me to give a ruling. As to the—

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, may I just make one point of order referring to the activities of the same committee last year—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it referring to the activities of the same committee last year, or to an amendment to a motion setting up the committee last year?

Mr. Benidickson: No, Mr. Speaker, it is referring to procedures and considerations allowed last year in the same committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the hon. member mean the discussions which took place in committee? In my view that matter would not be relevant; that could not help the Speaker to rule on this point.

As to the purport of the amendment, I think the hon. member for Laurier (Mr. Chevrier) has made it clear that it would permit the consideration of the systems of pensions of all railways' employees, and that the motion as now drafted considers only the C.N.R. employees.

As to the applicable citations in Beauchesne, I agree with the hon. member that citation 291 does apply:

291. When the house is considering a motion, of which notice has been given, for the appointment of a select committee, a member cannot move in amendment that the committee be given wider powers than those which were set down in the notice.

The Solicitor General referred also to what we find later on:

The Speaker ruled both amendments out of order on the ground that they raised new questions not contemplated in the notice of motion and proposed to extend the committee's powers far beyond those set down in the notice—

I would also draw the attention of the house to citation 203, paragraph 5 of Beauchesne's fourth edition:

203. (5) An amendment was ruled out because it raised a new question which could only be considered on a distinct motion after notice.

It has been drawn to the attention of the house that the notice of motion reads:

That "a sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping owned and controlled by the government be appointed" to consider—

And the several matters are therein mentioned. Therefore there is no doubt in my mind and I have no hesitation in saying that the amendment, to the extent that it extends the powers of the committee beyond those which it would normally have, would require a different notice.

The hon. member for Laurier will immediately realize that if the government wished to set up another committee to consider the whole problem of retired railways' employees it could do so and could make another motion to set up such a separate committee to consider the problem which he is trying to include in the motion before the house.

As far as concerns the ruling given by Mr. Speaker last year to which the hon. member has referred, I must say that his authorities were the same as those which I have drawn to the attention of the house. Therefore I have no hesitation in saying that this amendment would widen the powers of the committee and would extend the scope of the matters to be considered by the committee.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

I have no hesitation also because, to my mind, when discussing this problem of the C.N.R. employees in committee it might then be relevant to make some comparisons with other pension systems concerning other railways' employees, but the report of the committee shall have to be limited to the problem concerning retired C.N.R. employees. Therefore I rule the amendment out of order.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, would you hear me on the point of order?

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry, but I think the Chair has made it clear that a decision has been reached.

Mr. Benidickson: I think Your Honour—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Benidickson: —has referred to Canadian National Railways as only one company, under the reference—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. At this point I think the hon. member knows that the only thing he can do is appeal the ruling.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I desire, respectfully, to appeal your ruling.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those in favour of sustaining the Chair's ruling will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Deputy Speaker put the question as follows:

The question is an appeal to the house from a decision of the Chair as follows:

"To the motion to appoint a sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping owned and controlled by the government, Mr. Chevrier moved in amendment as follows:

'That the words "Canadian National" in line six be deleted'.

Mr. Deputy Speaker ruled the amendment out of order on the ground that it would widen the powers of the committee beyond those which were contemplated by the notice given thereof, and it also attempted to introduce a substantive question which could be raised only after due notice."

Whereupon Mr. Chevrier appealed to the house from the decision of the Chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Deputy Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the Chair was sustained on the following division:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, we may not win many votes but at least tonight we win the attendance contest. On May 5 two years ago Clark Davey of the Globe and Mail had the following story reporting on the sessional committee on railways:

C.N.R. President Donald Gordon bluntly told members of parliament today that if there is a strong feeling the government owned railway is not being efficiently operated he and his top management team should be fired.

I intend at some time in the committee's proceedings to see what support I can find to take Mr. Gordon at his word because I have reached the stage where it is my view that he has about reached the end of the road as president of Canadian National Railways, and I should like to go on and make some points as to why I feel this is so.

As everyone knows, the head of Canadian National Railways, namely Mr. Gordon, is a very blunt, outspoken, forthright man. He is prepared to take his chances as can be judged by his statement, "If you do not think we are efficient, fire us". In every year that Mr. Gordon has been before the committee when I have been a member of it he has emphasized that he wants Canadian National Railways to be treated as a private enterprise organization with a balance sheet and all its efficiencies. I do not think that is what Canadian National Railways should be but if that is what Mr. Gordon thinks it is, and if that is what he insists his instructions from parliament are, then on that basis I think Mr. Gordon must go. He has had his decade in charge of Canadian National Railways and it seems to me that all he has accomplished every year is a bigger and bigger spending program and in most cases a bigger and bigger deficit. I know that the morale of the railway employees has nosedived and there seem to be no future prospects for efficiency or for any kind of balanced budget on the Canadian National Railways as long as we have Mr. Gordon as the president of the railway.

There is one thing about Mr. Gordon. He does not want only himself to tumble if the railway is found guilty of inefficiency. He thinks his top staff should go too. From what I hear in my constituency in which there are many railroaders there are a great many top staff on the Canadian National Railways. I had a report the other day with regard to one particular place where there used to be a balanced work force and now there are more foremen than there are employees. There seem to be a great many chiefs and very few Indians on the Canadian National Railways. When it comes to determining how many chiefs are to go along with Mr. Gordon I think the committee should investigate this matter and should try to question him when he is before us as to just who he thinks should depart with him if the committee finds, as I think it should, that he is inefficient and that the top management have been inefficient.

There is one thing that has intrigued me about Mr. Gordon. He has worked out a technique that I think most politicians should use. You might call it blunt candour. He is always ready to admit the worst right at the first. I noticed that a couple of weeks ago he made a speech entitled "Total Distribution Costs". He was addressing the Canadian industrial traffic league in Toronto on February 16 and through some kind of courtesy I have a copy of his speech tonight. He said:

> I began tonight with a background of some of the problems of the Canadian National and the railway industry. I have told you of my concern about the inability of the railway industry to hold its share of the transportation market despite very large capital expenditures to improve every phase of its physical operation.

He is being very candid with us. Every year he comes along and asks for more money. Every year we have a generally increasing deficit. However, Mr. Gordon has always taken us into his confidence. He says that in the future things are going to improve but in ten years they never have improved. The situation has deteriorated.

My interest in the railway situation, of course, stems from the fact that the employees are complaining very much about the situation. They have lost faith in the present management. Morale is shot, and all you have to do is to look at the changes in the employment structure and the number of jobs that are disappearing. All you have to do is to visit some of the divisional points to see just how serious things are. Mr. Gordon went on to say:

> I have explained why the Canadian National decided that a physical rejuvenation alone was not enough and how we have undertaken a major organizational overhaul.

This is the point I want to make as a reason why we should consider that Mr. Gordon is inefficient and that it is time he should go. He has been there for ten years and finally at long last out of a clear blue sky he has plucked this terrific change about which we are all hearing.

Mr. Chambers: May I ask the hon. member a question? He says that Mr. Gordon should go. Has it occurred to him that Mr. Gordon probably feels the same way about him?

Mr. Fisher: The hon. member knows it is quite easy for me to go and for him to go. At the next election we can all go. That is perhaps one reason why as a politician who can be booted out any time I am not worried about the tender sympathies of Mr. Donald Gordon. I also have an idea that if he is the great man many people seem to think he is, he can get a job at any time. As the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Small) said last year, why did he not take that damn job down in the United States?

Mr. Nugent: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. While the hon. member may be making a speech which has a great deal of attraction for members in the house I do not think it comes within the resolution. It is my submission that what is at stake here is whether or not a committee should be appointed and, if a committee is to be appointed, what subjects are to be referred to it for its consideration. I can understand hon. members introducing other subjects which they think should be referred to the committee but the point under discussion now is whether or not the committee should be appointed and whether it should consider these matters. Hon. members may have to refer to points which they think should receive the attention of the committee in order to make an argument as to why the committee should give attention to them, but I submit that at this stage it is out of order to deal in detail with the points the committee should consider.

Mr. Broome: On the point of order, may I say that I think we are becoming rather thin-skinned on this point and that I am in favour of the hon. member continuing in the same vein as long as he wants to do so.

Mr. Argue: That is a blow for freedom.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would say that the comments of the hon. member up to now have been relevant but what is contrary to the general rule that I indicated previously is that he may be labouring the point a little too much.

Mr. Fisher: My point is that Mr. Gordon has introduced now a sweeping reorganization of Canadian National Railways. Maybe it is a good one but the three great moves he has made in connection with the railway have indicated to me that he is not in control and cannot direct the destinies of this railway to the best advantage.

Hon. members who have been in the house for some time will recall that the big thing Mr. Gordon wanted to do when he took over Canadian National Railways was to get the debt position of that railway straightened out. Canadian National Railways had to earn a tremendous amount of money for interest charges on a debt for which it was really not originally responsible. Some adjustment was made in the early fifties with regard to this debt position. It was all cleared up and Canadian National Railways no longer had this onerous debt burden. In a way, that was Mr. Gordon's first big ploy.

The second big ploy concerned a tremendous capital input in order to get modern diesel locomotives for the Canadian National Railways. The dieselization program has been completed and most of the railway has been modernized in so far as its signal organization is concerned. Two large humpyards have been put into operation, and a couple more will soon be working. I would not doubt that these improvements have had some considerable effect on the efficiency of the Canadian National Railways. However, they have not brought Canadian National Railways any closer to the kind of balance sheet that Mr. Gordon insisted should be expected from Canadian National Railways. We are no closer to a balanced operation, no closer to a profit position. In other words, Mr. Gordon has failed in his private enterprise direction.

We are now hearing a great deal about the administrative overhaul of the system and the development of a new symbol. This appears to me to be another method of carrying Mr. Gordon for a couple of years, another excuse for delay. I feel that after 10 years Mr. Gordon and those close to him have had their chance. I do not agree that we should consider the Canadian National Railways as a private enterprise. Those are the terms under which Mr. Gordon insists he should operate. I would argue—and our party takes this view—that the whole railway operation in Canada should be consolidated under a government corporation. We feel that almost all railway organizations in Canada today have to receive some form of subsidy. We feel that railway operations need some common plan.

Mr. Drysdale: Would the hon. member permit a question? The hon. member has put Mr. Gordon's position on the basis of private enterprise. However, before the royal commission on transportation, Mr. Gordon indicated that he wanted to abandon many of the passenger lines. He felt that he could effect a saving of some $60 million or $70 million, an amount almost equivalent to the deficit of the Canadian National this year. Does the hon. member agree that Mr. Gordon should be permitted to abandon these passenger lines in order to bring the railway operation into balance?

Mr. Fisher: The hon. member could refer to more than that point made by Mr. Gordon and his officials before the royal commission.

Mr. Drysdale: Do you agree with that position?

Mr. Fisher: I feel there needs to be complete rationalization of railway operations, along with other transport operations in Canada.

Mr. Benidickson: Without reference to words like "rationalization", would the hon. member for Port Arthur just explain the difference between what he calls the operation of a completely publicly owned railroad and what he would propose if the railroad were operated under a socialist scheme?

Mr. Fisher: I do not think I have to go into that matter, Mr. Speaker. I will say to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Benidickson) that I believe it is about time Canadian Pacific Railway operations and Canadian National Railway operations were brought under one organization. I believe it should be a public organization. I feel there is a strong suspicion amongst many employees of the Canadian Pacific Railway that the Canadian Pacific Railway itself would like to get out of the railway business. One certainly is led to the conclusion that both railways are willing to get out of the passenger business, if one is to judge by some of the services which are provided, or the lack of them.

Mr. Benidickson: Do you agree with that? I will bet that you would bail the C.P.R. out.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Will the hon. member permit another question? Would the hon. member tell this house how his plan would permit the railway employees to retain their jobs?

Mr. Fisher: I know the hon. member is worried about the Crowsnest pass rates, but I think if I were to answer the hon. member's question I would have to go far beyond what is relevant in this debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think I must say that I agree entirely with the hon. member.

Mr. Fisher: One of the points that I must touch upon, Mr. Speaker, was raised by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Balcer) and involves the amendment that was ruled out of order. I should like to refer to the position taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) as recorded on pages 365 and 367 of Hansard for December 1, 1960. I should like the minister to explain to us why the study referred to there has been narrowed to a study of the turn-around rights and pension situation of Canadian National Railway employees only. I should like to know why this whole pension question is not being studied as it relates to all railways. It seems to me that was the undertaking the Prime Ministre gave. I think the Minister of Transport should explain this change to us before we pass this resolution.

I know that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River feels this offer of the Prime Minister's was a red herring. I must say that was my own opinion. I felt that it was designed to take the edge off much of the bitterness amongst railway employees. I certainly feel that this resolution is not broad enough to permit the problem to be properly tackled. Those members who follow railroad history will know that some years ago the Canadian Pacific Railway fired a number of employees. Those employees finally got back on the railroad, but their years of service before the firing took place were not recognized for pension purposes. A battle has been fought on this subject by members of parliament for many years, and some success has been attained, but never complete success. This break in service as it applies to pension rights has been one of the big issues, and if we are going to look at the pension situation of Canadian National employees it seems to me the same people should be looking at the pension situation of Canadian Pacific employees. Otherwise, the Prime Minister's promise really becomes a half-hearted one or an incomplete one. I hear one hon. member say, "as usual". I know he is extremely sceptical of the Prime Minister's promises. I will not say I go quite as far as he does, but we must retain a certain amount of scepticism or else we would resign our seats so we could have 265 Tories here.

An hon. Member: That is progress.

Mr. Fisher: What we should be considering at this time in relation to the committee's operations is the impact of automation and the response of the railway to this situation. During the years I have been a member of the committee, Mr. Gordon has always given us grand assurances that the railway is responding to the challenge of automation by providing for the movement of personnel and job training. However, when it comes to the point of giving the details, he will not provide the details. At this point he always begins another favourite gambit which is part of that candour he exhibits and which usually strikes some response from some members of the committee. He begins to play up the bogey of the labour unions and the contract agreements the railways have with the unions. He has told all the members of parliament that they should keep their noses out of these employee matters because a good arrangement has been worked out in the contracts between the management and the unions.

However, when you ask Mr. Gordon for the details of this job training program and the shifts, he says something about the 27 unions with which the railway has contracts; they all have different jurisdictions, different geographical boundaries, and so it is very difficult to get moving. As a consequence, these union people keep coming to members of parliament rather than going through union channels because it seems that neither does Mr. Gordon nor do the unions know what the channels are. I can give you a prime example of just what took place last year. With nine days' notice Mr. Gordon's officials notified the running trades at North Bay, Nakina and Hornepayne that a new freight service there was going to be put in operation a new freight service that would require them to cover two divisions rather than one. These men arrived in Ottawa and asked their M.P's what they were going to do about this situation. The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Godin) and I, being the members of parliament involved, had great difficulty in receiving answers to questions which we asked the officials involved. We received standard responses such as: "It will take some while to consider these things".

I remember asking these railroaders from North Bay, Nakina and Hornepayne what their unions were going to do about this situation. They replied that there was nothing that could be done because this service was to be introduced very quickly. They asked me what I would advise them to do. I advised them to pull a wildcat strike. I told them that was the only thing to do in a situation like this. They did not have to pull a wildcat strike. All they had to do was to threaten to do so. The proposed change was postponed and a more satisfactory basis was worked out. I should like to inform hon. members why I advised these people to pull a wildcat strike. I advised them to do so because I felt it was the only way in which they could get the attention and action of the officials.

A proposed change such as the one I have described involves much more than just the railway. This change involved the community situation of towns such as North Bay, Nakina, and Hornepayne. Perhaps 20 or 30 families would be required to shift very quickly and arbitrarily in order to find work in this situation. Everyone would be prepared to make changes in jobs and in working conditions under certain circumstances. However, what happened last year when Mr. Gordon appeared before this sessional committee? Mr. Gordon assured us that in the future, as a result of the complaints of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River and other members of parliament, there would not be as drastic or as serious a change made in the Canadian National Railway which would have great effects upon the community without the community involved being taken into the confidence of the railway officials. What do we now find as a result of this assurance? We received nine days' notice of the change. That is the way in which the Canadian National Railway management appears to operate in carrying out the undertakings and promises that the president has made so readily before this parliamentary committee.

I hope other hon. members will join with me during the proceedings of this committee this year in pointing out to Mr. Gordon that it is felt he did not meet the challenge two years ago, and in asking him why he should not be fired immediately. I feel that we shall have a most interesting committee this year. I feel that the members of parliament as members of that committee will not be bullied, browbeaten or pushed around by Mr. Gordon. I do not feel they have been so treated while I have been a member of that committee in spite of the interpretation that has been placed upon Mr. Gordon's activities before that committee in the past.

I should like to speak on another point that we have always found unsatisfactory. I am sure that there are other members as well as myself who are anxious to have the officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway appear before the committee. We have never been able to get from the officials of the Canadian National Railway an acceptable statement in regard to its co-operation with the Canadian Pacific Railway officials, something which, of course, is required under a statute which has appeared on the books for a long time. We are always put off with just a little information and the answer that the Canadian Pacific Railways officials do consult with the officials of the Canadian National Railway. There does exists a statute which instructs the Canadian National Railway officials to co-operate, to pool services and to make sincere efforts to get along. Mr. Gordon is never prepared to go so far as to say anything more than that this procedure does take place. We see little evidence of this pooling of services and co-operation. It is for these reasons that I should like to see Mr. Crump appear before this committee so that we could hear his side of the situation in regard to the relationship between the two railways in respect of co-operation. There is no kidding about the fact that Mr. Crump and Mr. Gordon are real buddies when they get together against the railway workers. This fact is shown in the speech that Mr. Gordon made to the industrial traffic league. This is ironical to members of parliament because there is a comparison of like with like. The unions are using a yardstick that the railways in one of their co-operative moments worked out.

Mr. Benidickson: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Fisher: Yes.

Mr. Benidickson: Is it not possible that the hon. member might continue his speech another day when we resume this discussion? He seems to be advocating a monopolistic company and management. How many fewer employees does he think would be employed by the railway under that system? What bargaining rights worth anything would be in existence if the employer under this system was the state?

Mr. Fisher: I am much amazed by the Liberal-Labour member, the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. What good is competition when year after year the jobs become fewer? What good is competition when railway management cannot meet the obligations that a majority report suggests they should meet in relation to their employees?

Mr. Benidickson: I asked the hon. member how many fewer employees the hon. member for Port Arthur thinks there would be as a result of the amalgamation that he proposes under state ownership.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member does not have time to answer that question, it now being ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire what the business is for tomorrow and Wednesday?

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow we will commence with item No. 15 on today's order paper, a resolution standing in the name of the Prime Minister referring to the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development. That will be followed by a continuation of the debate on the budget resolutions. If those two items are completed tomorrow we will resume the debate on item 9 on today's order paper, a motion to set up the sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping. The business for Wednesday is somewhat uncertain because I do not know what progress the house will make tomorrow. Any one of the three items I have mentioned may appear again on the business for Wednesday and possibly there will be a fourth item, namely Bill No. C-67, which is now ready for consideration by the house in committee of the whole.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Question

ANSWER TO QUESTION

The following answer, deposited with the Clerk of the house, is printed in the official report of debates pursuant to standing order 39:

PORTUGAL COVE-BELL ISLAND FERRY, NFLD.—LANDING FACILITIES

Question No. 109—Mr. Tucker:

What is the result of the investigation referred to by the Minister of Transport in his answer to starred question No. 20 on November 30, 1960?

Answer by: Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport):

Existing terminal facilities for the ferry John Guy were found to be unsatisfactory. Temporary repairs and modifications of the terminals have been authorized at an estimated cost of $87,175 and work will be started immediately.

RESEARCH

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West) presented the first report of the special committee on research, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENT OF DEPUTY MINISTER OF LABOUR

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce the appointment of Mr. George Vickers Haythorne as deputy minister of labour. Mr. Haythorne has held the position of assistant deputy minister after a very distinguished scholastic career at the University of Alberta and Harvard University, from which he received a Ph.D. degree in economics. In addition, he has received certain fellowships and scholarships. He has had practical experience as secretary of the Nova Scotia economic council in Halifax from 1938 to 1942, and he was associated with the national selective service, Department of Labour. He was director of the agriculture, forestry and fisheries branch, and director of the economics and research branch up until 1953 for a period of five years. Since that date he has been assistant deputy minister of labour. He is well known for the various articles he has written on matters of economics and political science.

PRODUCTIVITY COUNCIL

ANNOUNCEMENT OF MEMBERSHIP

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have another announcement I wish to make having to do with the national productivity council. We have endeavoured to mobilize the best people available in Canada, in our opinion, so as to be sure that the council can carry out the heavy responsibilities which rest upon it.

As the house knows, there were to be representatives of industry and commerce, labour, the primary industries, the general public and the government. The chairman of the productivity council will be George De Young, president of Atlas Steels Limited of Welland, Ontario. Industry and commerce will be represented by N. R. Crump, president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, Montreal; Mr. George C. Metcalf, president of Loblaw Companies Limited, Toronto; E. P. Taylor, president, Argus Corporation, Toronto; Jean Raymond, president of Alphonse Raymond Company Limited, Montreal. In all these cases various other directorates are held.

Labour will be represented by Claude Jodoin, president of the Canadian Labour Congress; Marcel Pepin, secretary and technical advisor of the national metal trades federation, an affiliate of the confederation of national trade unions of Quebec, who lives in Quebec city; Arthur R. Gibbons, vice president and legislative representative in Canada of the brotherhood of locomotive firemen and engineers, Ottawa; Michael H. Nicols, Canadian vice president, international association of asbestos workers and president of the provincial building and construction trades council of Ontario, Toronto; John D. Carroll, international representative and assistant to Canadian vice president S. Finlay of the international brotherhood of boilermakers, iron shipbuilders, blacksmiths, forgers and helpers, a native of Moncton, New Brunswick, and at present having his office in the city of Toronto.

Agriculture will be represented by Dr. H. H. Hannam of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture; Rene Trepanier of Quebec, formerly deputy minister of agriculture in the province of Quebec; J. E. Brownlee, Q.C., chairman of the United Grain Growers, Winnipeg. Other representatives will be H. R. MacMillan, honorary chairman, MacMillan and Bloedel and Powell River Company Limited, Vancouver; W. H. Kirkpatrick, president, Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, Montreal.

The general public representatives will be Miss Anna Speers, a businesswoman in Winnipeg; H. R. Milner of Edmonton, a director of a variety of corporations; Sidney Buckwold, mayor of Saskatoon, president of the Canadian federation of mayors and municipalities and also at present of the Saskatchewan municipalities association, a wholesaler who operates a number of wholesale distributing firms; A. Russell Harrington, general manager, Nova Scotia Light and Power Company Limited, Halifax; J. F. Cauley, vice chairman, Ontario workmen's compensation board, Toronto.

The government representatives will be George Haythorne, deputy minister of labour; B. G. Barrow, assistant deputy minister, Department of Trade and Commerce; Dr. John Convey, director, mines branch, Department of Mines and Technical Surveys; Dr. A. H. Zimmerman, chairman, defence research board.

This productivity council will naturally be meeting quite regularly and, while every regard has been had to territorial representation, of necessity the representatives must be generally close to Ottawa. The executive director will be John Dickenson, Northern Electric Company, Montreal, an economist of outstanding reputation. This will be the membership of this body, and I am sure hon. members as a whole will appreciate the fact that every consideration has been given to assuring that those who serve will enjoy and do enjoy the confidence of their fellow Canadians and have a contribution to make in connection with this very important matter.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has made two announcements of very considerable interest to the house. In so far as Mr. Haythorne's appointment as deputy minister of labour is concerned, may I merely say on behalf of the opposition that we welcome his appointment as a well merited promotion from inside the department. We are confident that he will discharge these very important duties in a satisfactory way as his predecessors in that office have done.

In so far as the council on productivity is concerned the announcement, for which we have been pressing the Prime Minister for some time, is an interesting one. It shows that the Prime Minister has been able to secure for this council a number of very distinguished Canadians, and very busy Canadians who have their own responsibilities in their own spheres of activity.

We on this side of the house, Mr. Speaker, have felt that the terms of reference of the productivity council are not wide enough to deal with the economic problems that are facing us; and it would have been preferable, we thought, to give the council at this time far wider terms of reference than have been given in the legislation establishing this body. We have pointed out also that this council is not, by its terms of reference, likely to be effective in dealing with economic problems—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I question whether the Leader of the Opposition is limiting himself, as he ought, to commenting upon the announcement when he refers to decisions the house has taken with respect to this legislation.

Mr. Pearson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. However, within the terms of reference that have been given to the council, we agree that the Prime Minister has announced a list of very distinguished Canadians to assist in this important work. We hope that this work, and members associated with it, will be helpful to the economy of our country.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, when the productivity council is being set up we in this group make a point of the fact that, in our view, the council should have the right to make recommendations. Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I am at a loss to know why the government did not appoint personnel to this council who were likely to come to some more progressive conclusions than I think is likely to be the case with this council, which is so heavily weighted by representatives of big business interests. The resolution that was passed by this house, Mr. Speaker, provides for representation from business, but I think the government has bent over backward to select in the main from business interests people who represent the very wealthy in this country but are not in any way representative of general small business.

Mr. Speaker, as far as the representation from labour is concerned, it would seem to me at first glance that the government has weighted the representation on the side of what we might term craft unions rather than having a balanced representation as between craft and industrial unions. I wonder whether the government asked some of the main labour organizations to make recommendations, or whether the personnel were selected by the government arbitrarily, without any consultation, and merely with the consent perhaps of the people who today have been—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will find in the debate an opportunity to discuss in detail the constitution of the committee. If he pursues the line he is pursuing now and makes inquiry or raises questions about the course followed by the government in selecting its nominees, then he will not find himself in a position to object if some answer is proposed to the question which he has raised. I suggest that anything of a controversial nature by way of comment should be reserved for the time of debate, because the practice of the house does not permit debate at this stage. If controversial matters are raised and left unanswered it puts the party making a factual announcement in an invidious position.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, on the question you have raised, I think on reflection you would agree that it puts the opposition in an impossible position if all we can do is butter up the government when it makes an announcement. I have two or three brief points I wish to make in regard to the announcement.

Mr. Speaker: It is not my duty to tell the hon. member what he shall say, but I think I have made it clear that it is not appropriate in commenting on factual announcements by the government of names of its appointees to enter into controversial matters, because there is not supposed to be an opportunity to reply. There will be opportunities to debate the action of the government if it is not approved.

Mr. Argue: Mr. Speaker, on the general question of the announcement of appointments I have made my comments, at least on the part of the business group, and have raised a question about the method of the appointment of the labour people. As far as the agriculture representatives are concerned I would make the comment, Mr. Speaker, that I do feel, while I am making no objections to the people who have been appointed, that the people who have been enlisted to represent agriculture represent only a part of the agricultural movement, and that it will be impossible for them to bring to the committee the consensus of farmers in this country because of the particular people the Prime Minister has selected.

Mr. Speaker, we are glad the government is going forward with this proposal, but we are not satisfied that the government has obtained the best possible personnel, nor obtained them in the best possible way.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, once again the hon. gentleman has—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have risen—

An hon. Member: The Prime Minister is speaking on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I do not know how a point of order has yet arisen, but if the hon. member has a point of order of course I shall hear him.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My point of order arises this way. If the hon. member for Assiniboia is not to be allowed to comment on the statement—

An hon. Member: He did.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —then no one should be allowed to make a reply. The Prime Minister may feel chagrined because of what has been said, but that does not justify this kind of action.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of being chagrined. It is interesting to see the hon. member always coming to the help of those to his right.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I always help the weak.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I can see the Prime Minister rising. I am not sure whether it is on a point of order or a matter of privilege. The Prime Minister knows, as I have indicated, that this is not the time for debate on issues raised by his statement.

In my opinion the hon. member for Assiniboia did go beyond the realm of appropriate comment, but I would hope the Prime Minister would not feel that it was necessary to reply, unless some erroneous construction has been put on his announcement. In that event I should think the house would consider it appropriate to permit the Prime Minister to correct, as any hon. member is permitted to correct a wrong construction which has been put on something he has said. But I should say to the Prime Minister before he proceeds, this seems to me to be the limit of what can be properly done within our practice.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I adhered closely in the announcement to what I am privileged to do and what every hon. member of this house is privileged to do, but when an hon. member chooses, under the guise of referring to what has been said, to make observations that cannot be accepted, I have the right, sir, to reply to those observations that were extraneous.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No. 1 is the fact that strong criticism is made by the hon. member of the labour representation. The head of the C.L.C., who is not completely dissociated from the hon. member, was appointed. In agriculture we have Dr. H. H. Hannam, who is the head of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. That speaks for itself.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am afraid the remarks of the Prime Minister do not come within the limitations which I expressed, but are rather a controversial reply to a question which I agree should not have been raised and which I curtailed when its impropriety became clear.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BRIDGES

INTERPROVINCIAL BRIDGE, OTTAWA—ANNOUNCEMENT OF NAME

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have a short statement to make. With the consent of Ontario, Quebec, Ottawa and Hull, the new bridge to be built across the Ottawa river referred to in the house yesterday will be called the Macdonald-Cartier bridge, in honour of two of the great fathers of confederation, Sir John A. Macdonald, Canada's first prime minister, and Sir Georges Etienne Cartier, French Canada's outstanding leader.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, may I take this opportunity of adding that Quebec was brought into agreement for the first time on participation in the financing of the bridge by the government of former Premier Barrette.

HOUSING

LOANS FOR UNIVERSITY DORMITORIES AND MUNICIPAL SEWAGE PLANTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I have been asked to make a statement on loans for university dormitories and municipal sewage treatment projects. Last December the scope of the National Housing Act was broadened to include two entirely new concepts of federal government lending. Hon. members will recall that the amendments empowered Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation with the approval of the governor in council to make long term, low interest loans to Canadian universities to assist in providing resident student accommodation, and to municipalities to aid in the construction or expansion of municipal sewage treatment projects.

Many universities and municipalities have responded promptly and with enthusiasm to the new legislation. Each loan approved, of course, is another tangible and concrete contribution to the relief of unemployment and, for this reason, I know the house will wish me to report on progress.

First, the universities. Two loans in an aggregate amount of $2,238,000 to provide accommodation for 488 students have already been approved, to Brandon College for 152 students and to the University of British Columbia for 336 students.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Walker: Yes?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is it permissible on motions, Mr. Speaker, for a minister to associate with an announcement of some development of policy a progress report which is nothing more than an apologia for this apathetic government? Is that what we are to have?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has characterized this statement. At the moment I had not come to a conclusion of that kind. Since the question is asked, I may say that it is not proper to rise to make a statement of fact of a statistical character unless it is of sufficient importance to be brought to the attention of the house in this manner. The house frequently requires that announcements of important appointments or actions of the government be communicated to it in the house and I assume that is what the minister is proceeding with.

Mr. Walker: In answer to my hon. friend, Mr. Speaker, I thought the opposition was vitally interested in remedies for unemployment and it is for this reason that this statement has been prepared.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We are not interested in your defence for doing nothing about it.

Mr. Walker: There is no defence in this statement. This speaks for itself.

Mr. Pickersgill: Exhibitionism.

Mr. Walker: To continue, Mr. Speaker, the corporation also has under consideration applications for 12 loans in an amount of very close to $10.5 million which, if approved, will provide living quarters for nearly 2,500 students. There have also been another ten active inquiries.

In our efforts to assist in preventing water and soil pollution, three loans for nearly $8.9 million have been approved for treatment plants and interceptor sewers in greater Vancouver, Peterborough and Fort William. In addition, 14 applications for loans in an aggregate amount of some $12.7 million are now being reviewed. These relate to both sewage treatment plants and collector sewers in centres in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Ontario and Quebec. By far the largest of these is the loan sought by the city of Ottawa, in an amount of more than $9 million. Furthermore, the corporation has received inquiries from 145 other municipalities and, of these, 72 have given us an indication of how much they wish to borrow; the figure is nearly $63 million.

The active interest of universities and municipalities in the new loans is, I submit, further evidence that the legislation sponsored by the government and unanimously passed by parliament in December is both practical and effective, and is already providing many new employment opportunities.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Surely, Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of announcement which should be made when we are in committee of supply. The minister has used the procedure of motions to make an announcement which is contentious, incomplete and controversial, and Your Honour has suggested that on this procedure of motions we on this side of the house are not in a position to reply as we feel we should be able to reply to this kind of statement.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition is quite within the rules in making his point of order, and I trust the house will hear it completed.

Mr. Pearson: If I may be permitted to continue, Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the house consider that this use of the procedure for motions is an abuse of the custom and the rules. The practice in this house should not be so abused.

Mr. Benidickson: This is quite new.

Mr. Speaker: I take it that the minister has completed his statement. If the hon. gentleman had continued in the vein of his last sentence I would have intervened myself, because it did occur to me that there he was making a point of debate rather than disclosing a decision of policy or action of the government.

As I endeavoured to say earlier, the rule which applies to the making of statements and comment thereon is the same for both sides of the house. If it is to be enforced it will have to be enforced on both sides and due regard had to the fact that any controversial or partisan statement will inevitably provoke a response of that kind.

The rules do not provide for debate at this stage of our proceedings, and I must ask the co-operation of both sides of the house to prevent debate. I have no knowledge of the statements which are to be made; therefore I must rely on the ministers who rise to make statements to keep them within the rules. I have no knowledge of what comment is forthcoming, and must do my best to keep it within what I think is a rather difficult line to draw but which nevertheless is a line which must be drawn.

Having said that, I trust that hon. members on both sides will use their best judgment so that this stage of routine proceedings can be used for the purpose for which it is designed, namely to permit the government to make important announcements to the house before they are made to the public. I stress "important" because it is obviously not intended that the time of the house should be taken up in announcing statistical advances of the departments in pursuance of legislation which the house has passed unless such announcements are of considerable urgency and significance.

Mr. Walker: I thank hon. members for the applause which greeted me when I rose in my place, Mr. Speaker. I simply wanted to say that I got this procedure from perusing Hansard for that period when the Liberals were in power.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO AGENDA AND CANADIAN PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister, prior to his departure for London, whether he could indicate to the house in a general way, of course, the nature of the subjects which are likely to be discussed at the prime ministers' conference, and also the names of those whom he will be taking with him to that conference.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows it has never been the practice to announce the agenda in advance. I believe that course has been followed fairly generally throughout the years.

With respect to the second portion of the hon. member's question, I will have an announcement to make on that subject either tomorrow or the day after.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PETAWAWA—REPORTED CONSTRUCTION OF GOLF COURSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence if he would care to comment on a report which has interested many people, to the effect that a golf course is being built at the army base at Petawawa and that military equipment and the funds of the department are being used for this purpose.

Mr. Speaker: Has notice of this question been given?

Mr. Winch: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I think the question is one that would more appropriately be raised on the estimates. If the minister wishes to deal with it, of course, he may.

Mr. Winch: This is supposed to be under way now; and that is why it is important at this time.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): I am prepared to deal with the question if it is permissible. As part of the recreational facilities at Camp Petawawa, authority was given in March, 1957, to construct a golf course. Work has been proceeding since that date and the course is partially completed.

In so far as public funds are concerned, the authority given in March, 1957 involved the provision of $6,000 in cash, the use of one surplus building, the use of land and the provision of some equipment at no direct expense to the public in terms of pay and wages and in such a way as not to interfere with training or administration. In addition, expenditures on power, heat and water would be met from public funds.

The following have been or are being provided from non-public sources: all labour and material, except the $6,000 already mentioned, to an estimated total value of $61,000, and all equipment, labour and equipment necessary for the subsequent maintenance of the golf course except for power, heat and water.

Generally I may say that since the inception of the Canadian forces it has been the policy to provide recreational facilities. This has particularly taken the form of football fields, baseball diamonds, skating rinks and things of that sort. In nearly all instances the expenses were met entirely by public funds. During later years there has been a policy of encouraging units, particularly those in the more remote areas, to engage in as great a program of self-help in the provision of recreational facilities as possible, and this is one example of that type of policy being worked out.

CHURCHILL, MAN.—REPORTED LOSS BY FIRE AT ROCKET BASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. A Manitoba radio station carried a story this morning that there had been a serious fire at the rocket base at Churchill, involving a loss in the neighbourhood of a million dollars. If this is a fact, has the minister any statement to make in connection with it?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): I regret to inform the house that there was a fire at the rocket launching site 15 miles east of Fort Churchill which occurred last night at 30 minutes past midnight. The cause of the fire has not yet been established; the damage to the building and the contents whilst extensive, has not been established either, and any guesses along the lines that apparently appeared in the radio dispatch I think would have no real foundation in fact.

[Mr. Winch.]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONGRATULATIONS TO HON. MEMBER FOR CARIBOO ON BIRTHDAY ANNIVERSAIRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Anderson (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege, one of interest to every hon. member of this house and especially to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, as it affects the estimates of his department.

Is the minister aware of the fact that our esteemed colleague the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Henderson) is today celebrating his seventieth birthday and from now on, as a token of the esteem in which he is held by all hon. members, the government of Canada will honour him with a monthly cheque?

Here's to the man from Dawson Creek
Who never fails his piece to speak.
To boost his riding of Cariboo
And heckle his C.C.F. friend Argue.
He's very sharp in his attack
And seldom do they answer back.
Because they know that if they do,
They'll get a blast from Cariboo.
I hope in the future he'll ease his tension
As from now on he'll get the pension
To spend it wisely and not be caught
On Clayt. Hodgson's tips at the old Connaught.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ROYAL COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask the Prime Minister a question. Although we on this side of the house believe that the government itself should undertake a direct program in the matter of medical care insurance—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure the Prime Minister has not heard what I said because of the volubility of his colleagues.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I remind the hon. member that his question might—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister said he missed it, and I repeat it.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I should interpose. If the hon. member for Essex East had not put his argument before his question the Prime Minister might have been able to hear his question.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, your last remark causes me to observe that you know that I know better than that. In view of the fact that two months have elapsed since the announcement of government policy, may I ask the Prime Minister whether, before he leaves the country, he will announce the personnel of the proposed royal commissions which I believe is unnecessary, to be set up to study the matter of medical care insurance?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the announcement will be made in due course. May I say to the hon. gentleman that following the meeting which was held here in January and some of the excessive promises which were made in this connection, I think a royal commission is necessary.

HARBOURS

VANCOUVER—REPORTED DELAY IN LOADING RUSSIAN GRAIN SHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister's attention been drawn to a Canadian Press dispatch from Vancouver to the effect that the captain of a Russian vessel loading grain in the port of Vancouver has expressed his disgust with what he termed the ridiculous slowness of grain-loading facilities at Vancouver, and that it took 12 days to load a cargo of grain which he said could have been done in one or two days in Russia? If so, will the minister investigate these charges?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I had notice of a similar question from the hon. member for Vancouver East, and I think I will answer them both.

I am advised that loading the Russian ship Tiksi did consume a longer period of time than usual. Several factors contributed to this particular ship being in Vancouver 12 days in all. The Tiksi is a high, three-deck type of vessel not usually loaded with grain in Vancouver. Owing to its construction, the normal flow of grain was considerably reduced. The particular grades of wheat required to make up its full cargo of 10,345 tons necessitated a move from one elevator to another. A considerable portion of the grain had to be sacked, which is a time consuming operation. There were two other vessels taking grain at the berth where the Tiksi was completed, which left only two belts available for the Russian ship during this period. On one day, loading operations were suspended owing to a severe storm. The ship arrived in port during a busy week and was obliged to lay over a week end.

It is very unlikely that a similar situation will occur, and every effort is being made to give good service to shipping in Vancouver harbour.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER SALES TO CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Minister of Agriculture whether negotiations are being conducted at present with a view to further wheat sales to China?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe it is in the public interest to divulge all the activities of the Canadian wheat board in respect of additional sales to any of our particular customers. I think all I can say at the present time is that there is a mission in Hong Kong dealing with this subject.

WATER RESOURCES

WATER POLLUTION—INQUIRY AS TO PROTECTION OF GREAT LAKES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Are there any regulations concerning the discharge of oil and other chemicals in all parts of the great lakes system? Is there any recent report from the international joint commission concerning sewage and other pollution of our international waterways?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of these two questions. The answer to the first one is that under the Canada Shipping Act the Department of Transport has drawn up regulations which concern the discharge of oil from ships in Canadian waters of the great lakes. Problems caused by pollution which originates from land in this area are considered by the Ontario water resources commission.

The answer to the second question is that the international joint commission's report of 1950 on the pollution of boundary waters contained recommendations to the two governments regarding the objectives of boundary water quality control. These recommendations have been accepted by the governments of Canada and the United States. In October, 1959 the international joint commission recommended that the same objectives for boundary water control contained in the 1950 report be adopted for the St. Croix river basin in Maine and New Brunswick. This recommendation is at present under study by the two governments. In May, 1960 the two governments requested the commission to report on the extent and causes of pollution in Rainy river and Lake of the Woods, and to suggest appropriate remedies. An international board set up by the commission is carrying out field surveys and will report to the commission.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I ask a supplementary question. My recollection is that the recommendations by the international joint commission to which the minister has referred applied to international waters. Have these recommendations approved by the two governments been implemented?

Mr. Green: I will have to check into the matter further and let the hon. member have a reply at an early date.

Mr. J. W. Murphy (Lambton West): I should like to ask a supplementary question. Can the minister report to the house whether there has been any progress in the negotiations between the governments of Canada and the United States respecting the dumping of oil and sewage by ships using the great lakes system?

Mr. Green: This question involves not only the Department of External Affairs but also the Department of Transport, and we will have it looked into further.

DRUGS

REPORTED PREPARATION OF DRAFT QUALITY CONTROL REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has his attention been drawn to a recent news release by the Ontario retail pharmacists association, which has no specific date, which indicates that the food and drug directorate of the minister's department has prepared draft regulations to control effectively the quality of drugs in Canada, and that these draft regulations have been circulated to the industry? Would the minister care to comment on that report?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, draft regulations have been circulated to the industry. However, I have not seen the report, and I think I should like to examine it before giving a further direct reply.

Mr. Howard: Would the minister indicate whether or not these draft regulations can be made available to parliament?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): I am not sure what the procedure is. These regulations are accessible, and I presume that when they become final they will be available in the ordinary course of events.

[Mr. Green.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR LIST OF OUTSTANDING RETURNS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask the Secretary of State to be good enough in the near future, as has been customary at this stage of the session, to provide hon. members with a list of orders for returns that have not yet been complied with.

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Surely, Mr. Speaker.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

BRITISH COLUMBIA—FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN OPENING OF NEW LINK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. Payne (Coast-Capilano): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works, notice of which has been forwarded to him. Has the minister or his deputy been invited to be present at the opening ceremony in connection with the upper levels highway between the second narrows bridge and Taylor Way on March 4? Would the minister advise the house as to how much the government of Canada has obligated itself to pay for that part of the trans-Canada highway now completed—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the latter part of the question might very properly go on the order paper, as it seeks statistical information.

Mr. Payne: Would it be in order to have the minister answer the first part?

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): The answer to the first part of the question, whether or not the minister or his deputy has been invited to the opening of this new link in the trans-Canada highway, is no.

Mr. E. J. Broome (Vancouver South): I should like to ask a supplementary question. Is it not true that the federal government paid 90 per cent of the cost of this project as part of the gap program?

Mr. Walker: On completion of the highway we will have paid over $100 million to British Columbia. We will have paid $2.9 million on this particular link and an additional $40 million with respect to that part of the road through the national parks in British Columbia.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

INQUIRY AS TO PROTESTS AGAINST INTENDED LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Having regard to the fact that some of the lay-offs ordered by Canadian National Railways become effective tomorrow, are likely to be on a national basis, and may be in contravention of the Maintenance of Railway Operation Act, what steps has the minister taken to try to inform the house as to the situation in response to a question asked on February 21 by the hon. member for Assiniboia and a question asked yesterday by me?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have followed the usual channel that has been followed by all my predecessors. I forwarded the information at once to the management of the C.N.R. and I am waiting for a report.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to ask a supplementary question. Has the minister made any request to the management of the C.N.R. that these personnel should be kept on the job?

Mr. Balcer: I made the usual request for a report on the situation, and as soon as I have the report I will act accordingly.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF FEDERAL PROPOSAL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is in a position to table and have put on Hansard the document I asked for yesterday.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I am, and I herewith table two copies in English and French.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the Prime Minister ask for permission to have them put on Hansard? Would the Prime Minister ask the Speaker to have them made an appendix to Hansard, as there are a good many requests for the document?

Mr. Speaker: Is there a request before the house that these documents be made a part of the proceedings today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the documents tabled by the Prime Minister shall be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard?

Economic Co-operation and Development

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: For documents referred to above, see appendix.]

TRADE

O.E.C.D.—APPROVAL OF CONVENTION AND RELATED AGREEMENTS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister) moved:

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the convention on the organization for economic co-operation and development, supplementary protocol No. 1 to the convention on the organization for economic co-operation and development, supplementary protocol No. 2 to the convention on the organization for economic co-operation and development, and the memorandum of understanding on the application of article XV of the convention on the organization for economic co-operation and development, all of which were signed in Paris on December 14, 1960; and that this house do approve the above agreements.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this convention is a most important one and marks a tremendous step forward in the economic field. We are happy today to have present in the gallery of this house Mr. Torkil Kristensen, secretary general designate of O.E.C.D. He is a leader in his native Denmark and one of our most respected allies in the field of economic co-operation in NATO. He is here for the purpose of acquainting members of the government with some of the features of this convention in so far as implementation is concerned and the terms thereof.

It is intended, by the establishment of O.E.C.D., to assist in the sustained economic growth and expansion of multilateral trade on a non-discriminatory basis, to the end that economic equilibrium will be secured which will constitute a major contribution not only to the strength and welfare of each and all the member nations, but to the assurance that the countries participating shall remain economically strong and shall have regard to the effect of the policies of each on other member nations. The task of reconstruction in western Europe is essentially complete. It is important at this time, however, that regard be had to supplementing and strengthening rather than replacing existing organizations, while at the same time assuring that current international economic and trade policies shall be carried into effect within the limitations I have mentioned.

This organization, when established, will not take the place of other organizations such as the general agreement on tariffs and trade or the international monetary fund, but will provide a high degree of consultation, close association and co-operation which should be effective instruments for broad and continuing co-operation. It is particularly important that there shall be maintained the closest consultation on all types of economic and financial policies, especially in connection with finding solutions to current international gold and foreign exchange reserve problems as well as in the other fields to which O.E.C.D. will apply.

The acceptance of this convention will recognize the growing interdependence of nations, and the fact that the better off nations shall contribute to the growth and prosperity of the world community. What I intend to do is simply traverse in a general way something of the field of O.E.C.D., leaving it to the Minister of Finance to deal at length with such portions of the convention as he may deem appropriate. He has taken a large part in bringing about the adherence of Canada to this organization. He was present with the present Minister of Veterans Affairs at Paris in January, 1960 when the general framework of this organization was laid. In July, 1960 he went by himself to attend these meetings on behalf of the Canadian government and, finally, was present at the signing of the convention in December, 1960. At that time, he was accompanied by the present Minister of Trade and Commerce. I am sure the house would expect me, as I most willingly do, to pay tribute particularly to the Minister of Finance for all he has done in order to enable the inclusion of Canada among the nations comprising this organization.

The convention provides for the establishment of the organization for economic co-operation and development and, as I said a moment ago, constitutes a great step forward for the countries of the Atlantic community. Indeed, it is no exaggeration to say that this is one of the most important agreements that have come before this house in recent years. One week ago yesterday I discussed this matter with President Kennedy in Washington, and I can say that he fully shares the view I have expressed as to the importance of this convention.

In order to grasp the significance of this development, one has to go back to the unprecedented offer of the United States in 1947 whereby the United States undertook to help European countries help themselves. The full extent of the material and social destruction wrought by war was only then becoming evident. In spite of large scale financial assistance already extended from both the United States and Canada, the European countries acting individually lacked the resources to import vitally needed food and new materials. On the political scene, the freedom and independence fought for at so great a cost seemed once again to be in serious jeopardy.

European statesmen moved rapidly in response to the offer to draw up a joint European recovery program and established an organization, the organization for European economic co-operation, designed to allocate United States aid and promote European economic development. In 1950 both Canada and the United States became associated with this organization with the status of associated countries.

All who have visited Europe have seen something of the phenomenal recovery of the European countries. Indeed, this recovery has been one of the most significant achievements in this era since the war. The extraordinary economic growth and development of the European countries fully attests to the high degree of economic co-operation achieved among themselves and with their partners on this side of the Atlantic, and is a tribute to the industry and imagination of not only the leaders of the several countries concerned but their peoples as well. Indeed, when one looks at the developments since the war and the degree to which ancestral enemies in Europe have become trusted friends—one sees the relationship between France and Germany, enemies for a hundred years—one begins to appreciate that indeed in this age we have seen changes that few could have contemplated or even imagined.

The restoration of external convertibility of major European currencies marked the end of the post-war period, and has underlined the fact that Europe is again in a position to contribute her full share to the solution of the wider economic issues facing the free world.

The accompanying development of the last decade has been the creation of regional groupings, the E.E.C. or common market composed of France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Belgium and Luxembourg, and also the European free trade association composed of the United Kingdom, Norway, Denmark, Sweden, Portugal, Switzerland and Austria. The Canadian government has repeatedly emphasized its hope that these developments would not lead to any loss of traditional Canadian export markets in Europe; and while all the problems in this connection have not been solved, we believe that through close consultation with the European partners these problems will be solved and solved in a manner consistent with the maintenance of the growing interdependence among nations. We believe, and I think the house will agree, that a trade rift within Europe or between Europe and other western countries would be a matter of the greatest concern for all the free countries of the world.

Outside Europe there have also been rapid and significant developments, particularly in the less developed areas of the world. More and more we realize this fact, that there cannot be peace in the world with the peoples of the world half hungry or unpossessed of their minimum needs or lacking the opportunities of those of us who live in those parts of the world where the economies are strong and effective.

Many newly independent countries face the formidable task of raising the living standards of their peoples through economic development, they will not be able to do it by themselves. As the hon. member for Greenwood has so frequently said in this house, if we fail to realize their dependence on us we shall indeed reap a harvest in the years ahead which will not be in keeping with the opportunities that are ours. There is a challenge to the more prosperous countries to devise means, as the hon. gentleman has said so frequently in what I might describe as a crusade which he has undertaken, to encourage and assist those countries through aid and trade policies.

The decision to establish a new framework of economic co-operation including Canada and United States reflects the fact that the purely European goals of the O.E.E.C. has been largely realized. We now face the 1960's. If we are to meet the challenges of this decade I believe that the co-operating countries must forge new and stronger links with each other, and in the preparatory discussions in Paris there was recognition of the need of a new framework for co-operation which would reflect the needs of this decade. While the European economies are now prosperous and largely free of trade controls and restrictions, there are compelling reasons to reaffirm interdependence through concrete co-operation and to realize the fact, as I said earlier, that economic maladjustment whether in Europe or in North America is necessarily of common concern and importance to the western countries on either side of the Atlantic.

All these challenges that we face are well expressed in the three basic goals of the new organization. They are, to achieve the highest sustainable economic growth and employment and a rising standard of living of member countries while maintaining financial stability and thus to contribute to the development of the world economy. Next, to contribute to sound economic expansion in member as well as non-member countries in the process of economic development; and finally, to contribute to the expansion in world trade on a multilateral non-discriminatory basis in accordance with international obligations.

The O.E.C.D. will not provide ready made solutions to these questions or a solution to the trade problems arising through the establishment of the two European regional economic groupings, but the historic significance of what is being done reflects the decision of the free countries on both sides of the north Atlantic to join together and co-operate closely in working out solutions to these problems for their own benefit and for the benefit of other countries throughout the world. The O.E.C.D. has value for Canada and is of special significance to Canada. It brings together countries of the Atlantic area, countries with which we have had historical, political, cultural and economic ties at a time when the traditional pattern of western economic and commercial relationships was undergoing profound and rapid changes. I think I can go further than that and say that I expect that in time other European countries will become associated in the co-operative work of the O.E.C.D.

I might digress for a moment and say something of the organization and of the protocols referred to in the resolution. The convention will come into effect following ratification. That is provided for in the agreement, which says that the convention will come into effect before the 30th September, 1961, upon the deposit of instruments of ratification or acceptance by all the signatories; or on the same date if by that date 15 signatories or more have deposited such instruments as regards those signatories; and after that date, but not later than two years from the signature of this convention, upon the deposit of such instruments by 15 signatories, as regards those signatories.

Some indication as to the comprehensiveness of the membership of the organization is shown by simply reading the list of countries participating: Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Greece, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United States of America. That is a comprehensive list of powers generally devoted to the preservation of individual liberty and the increase of general well-being.

The manner in which the objectives will be attained is contained in article 3, which reads as follows:

> With a view to achieving the aims set out in article 1 ... the members agree that they will:
>
> (a) keep each other informed and furnish the organization with the information necessary for the accomplishment of its tasks;
> (b) consult together on a continuing basis, carry out studies and participate in agreed projects; and
> (c) co-operate closely and where appropriate take co-ordinated action.

Economic Co-operation and Development

There is also provision for aid to developing countries, which it is realized demands the support of all countries rather than being restricted to a few countries, as is often the case. The question as to the structure of the various committees will be dealt with by the Minister of Finance. There is, however, one committee to which I intend to make reference. That is the agriculture and fisheries committee, which is of particular interest to primary industries in Canada.

The provision respecting this economic field provides that there shall be consultations on agricultural, food and fishery policies with a view to promoting the harmonious development of these policies among member countries; that there shall be an examination of the over-all situation of agriculture and fisheries in member countries and of the prospects, including examination of the trend of supply and demand; studies of the possibilities for improving the marketing and distribution of these products with a view to determining measures which could be adopted nationally and internationally; surveys of the market situation for the main agricultural and fisheries products; and formulation in co-operation of proposals for remedial measures in the event of market difficulties; and generally assistance in the agricultural field to the economic, trade, and technical activities of the other bodies of the organization; the promotion of a better use of production factors and of technical progress in the sectors of agriculture and fisheries.

That is a most important section and one that has very great importance economically to Canada, as it has to other countries. The Minister of Finance will deal with the negotiations that took place and generally with the technical fields with which he has been so intimately connected.

I now wish to say a word with regard to the operation of O.E.C.D. in the economic field. I do not take this convention as one that will substitute action for the provisions of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, article II, with reference to economics. Article II reads as follows:

> The parties will contribute towards the further development of peaceful and friendly international relations by strengthening their free institutions, by bringing about a better understanding on the principles upon which these institutions are founded, and by promoting conditions of stabilization and well-being. They will seek to eliminate conflict in their international economic policies and will encourage economic collaboration between any or all of them.

I said this organization would not be a substitute for article II of NATO, but I believe that the nations comprising NATO, having failed to implement by action article II, have left for this organization a large field of economic collaboration. I also believe that O.E.C.D. will carry out, in the main, the hopes of the nations which are signatories to the NATO agreement in the field of economic development, co-operation and collaboration.

This government contends that the organization will help to safeguard the vital trade interests of Canada and ensure that they will be fully taken into account by member countries as those member countries develop their respective policies. We expect that the activities of the new organization will supplement and reinforce the work of the other international arrangements, as I said earlier, including the United Nations specialized agencies.

The O.E.C.D. will require broad support, not only from governments but from the peoples of the member countries and, in particular, from both management and labour. Some consideration is being given to arrangements which would provide for some form of parliamentary association being set up in connection with the new organization which would serve to make the purposes and activities of the organization more widely known.

As one of those who advocated the setting up of the NATO parliamentary association, I believe that a similar body, not in the nature of one that recommends the adoption of policy but rather in the nature of an inquiring organization, would do much to increase the knowledge not only of the participating members of parliament belonging to such an organization but the Canadian people as a whole. My hope is that the O.E.C.D. will become an enduring association. It cannot do so unless there is on the part of all member countries a willingness to make their full contribution through co-operation and consultation in order to ensure the effective use of their respective capacities and potentialities.

I have read the debates of one of the parliamentary institutions of a nation that is giving consideration to this convention and I know that concern and fears have been expressed regarding some of its provisions. I do not share those fears or that concern. I believe that through the establishment of O.E.C.D. the countries of Europe and of North America will be serving notice of their right to co-operate among themselves and with others in order to attain the economic betterment of themselves and of all other nations.

I am seeking the approval of the house for this convention believing that its approval will mean that Canada will give full support to this organization. Our approval will constitute a declaration by Canadians that they intend to contribute to the best of their abilities and capacities to the achievement of its basic purposes.

I mentioned earlier that I discussed this organization with Mr. Kristensen. I was deeply impressed by his dedication to its principles and his realization of the need for co-operation. Today there are signs, as there have been in the last several years, of some weakening in the NATO organization. The nations comprising the North Atlantic Treaty Organization must not permit that thing to take place for any weakening of the organization or of any of its member nations will inevitably lead to the danger of attack and will diminish the certainty of survival.

On the other hand, this organization has principles which are founded on co-operation in the economic field and, if its full implications are lived up to it will so strengthen the economies of each of the member nations as to assure the economic strength of all of us. Thereby it will make a contribution to the maintenance of peace not only among the member nations but throughout the world. I ask the house to give its support to this motion.

Canada since 1945 has demonstrated its belief in the basic principles upon which O.E.C.D. is founded. Canada believes that this organization will help to prevent the break-up of Europe into competitive trade groups or blocs, a potential danger that can only lead to a great and real danger in the future.

Canada also believes that O.E.C.D. will bring together not only the nations of NATO but also the members of the Six and the Seven and will foster good relations between Canada and the United States on the continent of North America in the economic field. While history shows that many of the wars that have taken place have been the consequence of economic competition, this organization is designed to remove the danger of that possibility and to bring about a new unity among nations whose economic strength, when exercised in unity with full respect for the sovereignty of the member nations, can assure that mankind itself and people everywhere will see new economic vistas achieved in their time and generation and thereby the removal of a major cause of potential war. I ask the house to give support to this motion.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) indicated that he would introduce this resolution in a preliminary way, as he has done, and that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) would follow with a more detailed explanation and statement of the case for approval. If the minister would prefer to follow now upon the Prime Minister, that procedure would be quite agreeable to this side of the house and would complete the case for approval.

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the light of the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) I shall be glad now to take the opportunity to follow the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and of enlarging upon some of the aspects of the organization for economic co-operation and development which have been the subject of the Prime Minister's remarks.

On previous occasions I have reported to the house in some detail on the steps taken over the past 13 months which led to the signing of the O.E.C.D. convention by ministers of the 20 countries concerned in Paris in December. I do not propose to review this ground further. The statements are to be found in Hansard of last session.

I should like to say, however, that the successful conclusion of these negotiations in a relatively brief period of time was a significant achievement. It could not have been accomplished without sustained and devoted effort by all those concerned. The representatives of all countries approached the difficult task of reconstituting the O.E.E.C. in a spirit of co-operation that augurs well for the future success of the organization. With this spirit and sense of purpose, I have every confidence that the O.E.C.D. will realize the high aims to which it is committed.

What are these aims? Briefly stated, they are threefold: first, to achieve the highest sustainable economic growth in member countries while maintaining financial stability and thus to contribute to the development of the world economy; second, to contribute to the economic development of less developed countries by increasing and improving the flow of capital and technical assistance; third, to promote the expansion of world trade on a multilateral non-discriminatory basis.

The first of these aims is fundamental. The other two cannot be achieved if the first is not achieved. Sustained economic growth including high levels of employment of resources, monetary stability and equilibrium in international payments are major objectives of economic policy in all countries. If we in the western industrial countries are to achieve a more abundant life in freedom, both for ourselves and for the newly developing areas in the world, we must grow. On such growth depends our ability to raise our own living standards, to give assistance to others and to provide markets for the fruitful expansion of international trade.

The desirability of strong and vigorous growth is self-evident. What perhaps is not so apparent is that it has become increasingly difficult to achieve such growth by unilateral action. Progress made in liberalization of trade and payments since the war and the introduction of convertibility of the major European currencies in the last two years have led to a growing interdependence of the various national economies. They have become more sensitive to changes in world trends and to measures taken in other countries. There are now important limitations on the action which individual countries can allow themselves to take without regard to the external repercussions of their decisions. There are also limitations on the effectiveness of action that any individual country may take in isolation. The program just announced by the President of the United States for improving the United States balance of payments provides a striking illustration of this interdependence. The success of this program will depend to a considerable degree on the extent to which the major western European countries pursue compatible policies. There is thus a clear need for co-operation in economic policy if we are to experience sustained and growing prosperity without sacrificing financial stability.

It is in this context that the O.E.C.D. is likely to prove particularly valuable. It will provide a forum for regular and continuing consultation and review of the economic and financial situation in member countries and the policies pursued by member governments. Special attention will be paid to the international effects of national policies. For this purpose the O.E.C.D. will have two committees, namely the economic policy committee and the economic and development review committee. The economic policy committee will keep under review the economic and financial situation of member countries with a view to attaining the objectives of the convention. It is intended that its sessions be attended by senior officials from national capitals who are intimately familiar with the formulation of economic policies in their own countries. Canada participated in a similar committee in the O.E.E.C. and found it valuable. We believe it will be increasingly useful in the years ahead and that those consultations and discussions will prove to be the central part of the activities of the new organization. If these consultations are to be fruitful, members must have clear knowledge of the problems faced by one another and the techniques used to deal with them. Accordingly, it has been decided to establish an economic and development review committee to hold annual detailed examinations of the economic situation of member countries. In this committee member states will obtain the raw material, so to speak, as well as the understanding required for effective consultation about broad policies.

The O.E.C.D. will also have an important role to play in contributing to the expansion of the economies of the less developed countries. The vast majority of the world's peoples live under the bondage of a grinding poverty from which they are determined to free themselves. The extent to which they succeed may well prove vital to the future peace and well-being of all mankind. If the free industrialized countries are to be true to the highest values of their civilization, as well as to their own economic and political interests, they must assist in this great endeavour.

Their acceptance of this responsibility has already been demonstrated by their participation in the economic assistance program of the United Nations, the international bank for reconstruction and development, the international finance corporation and the international development association as well as through programs such as the Colombo plan. Let me emphasize that the O.E.C.D. will not in any sense replace or weaken these existing agencies and programs. Its main function in the field of aid will be to provide an informal forum in which aid programs and policies can be discussed frankly and be made more effective. In this way we hope it will stimulate an increased flow of aid to developing areas as well as help to ensure that existing resources are used more effectively. It will not, however, establish and administer aid programs of its own. It will not limit or change the nature of Canada's existing programs, such as the Colombo plan, nor will it involve any Canadian obligation to provide additional assistance.

The main body for consultations on aid programs will be the development assistance committee, sometimes called DAG. This committee will take over the functions and characteristics of the development assistance group which was formed early in 1960, and which has already had three meetings.

The development assistance committee will be concerned with methods of providing assistance to non-member countries. The problems of the less developed member countries will be the concern of two other subsidiary bodies. The O.E.E.C. is already engaged in useful programs of technical assistance in less developed member countries, particularly Greece and Turkey. It is expected that these programs will be continued under the aegis of the technical assistance committee. In addition, the development programs of members in the process of development will be discussed in the economic and development review committee.

The extent to which the O.E.C.D. will succeed in stimulating economic growth and in providing increased assistance to developing areas will depend to a significant degree on the maintenance and continued vigorous growth of international trade. This fact is recognized in the organization's third major aim, which is to contribute to the expansion of world trade on a multilateral non-discriminatory basis in accordance with international obligations. The words "in accordance with international obligations" make it clear that membership in the O.E.C.D. in no way subtracts from the obligations which participating countries have assumed through their adherence to GATT and their membership in the international monetary fund. The purpose of discussions in the O.E.C.D. will be to strengthen the effectiveness of these more broadly based institutions and to promote the fulfilment of their objectives. I think it important to stress the nature of this relationship for two reasons. First, it is only by supporting the authority of GATT and the I.M.F. and collaborating with them that the O.E.C.D. will be able to realize its aims in the field of trade and payments. Second, I should like to allay any apprehensions among non-participating countries that the industrial countries of Europe and North America intend to concentrate on their own affairs at the expense of other countries.

From what I have said it follows that the organization's function in the field of trade will be essentially consultative. It has been agreed that much of the earlier activity of the O.E.E.C. in the field of trade, which was based upon a regional approach to European reconstruction, is no longer appropriate and will be discontinued. It is not intended that O.E.C.D. will establish or administer new trade rules. The proposed trade committee will be used for frank discussions of general trade policies and practices, for the examination of specific trade problems primarily of interest to members and their overseas territories and for the consideration of any outstanding short and long term problems between the six countries of the European economic community and the seven countries of the European free trade area association. Within these terms of reference it is hoped that any member country may obtain prompt consideration and discussion by the trade committee of trade measures by another member which may adversely affect its interest, with a view to removing or minimizing such adverse effects. In establishing these terms of reference account has been taken of the interests of outside countries and arrangements will be made for attendance of representatives of the GATT at meetings of the trade committee.

One task of the trade committee may be to consider the problems created by the formation of the two regional trading groups in western Europe. Some work has already been done in this field by the committee on trade problems which was set up on a temporary basis at the Paris meetings in January, 1960. Its work will be taken over by the O.E.C.D. Canada clearly has an important interest in the policies of these two groups and in the nature of any accommodation which may ultimately be reached between them.

The broad activities I have mentioned in the fields of economic policy consultations, aid and trade will be the main preoccupations of the new organization. In addition there will be a series of committees to handle work in more specific fields. There will be an agriculture committee, whose work we hope will be closely integrated with that of other bodies within the organization, to consider agricultural problems and policies pertinent to the organization's objectives. A similar committee will be established to deal with fisheries problems. The organization will also have subsidiary bodies with responsibilities in the field of science and technology. Their task will be to stimulate member countries to increase and to use more efficiently their scientific manpower, and their training and research facilities. The organization is expected to fulfil this role by acting as a clearing house for information and experience and by means of consultations, conferences and the provision of fellowships.

Provision has also been made for co-operation among member states in a number of other fields including tourism, manpower, maritime transport, energy and industry. The European nuclear energy agency, in which members of the O.E.E.C. co-operated in the development of the peaceful uses of nuclear energy, will be retained in its present form. Canada and the United States are to retain their present status as associate members. The European productivity agency of the O.E.E.C. is to be dissolved. Its responsibilities in the fields of science and technical assistance will be transferred to other bodies. Decisions with respect to the continuance of other activities of the E.P.A. will be taken during the coming year.

This then, Mr. Speaker, is an outline of the work on which the O.E.C.D. proposes to engage. I should like to turn now to the provisions of the convention which set forth how the organization is to govern itself in carrying out its manifold tasks.

A council composed of all members will be the supreme body, meeting either at the level of ministers or of permanent representatives. It is authorized to establish an executive committee and such other subsidiary bodies as may be required for the achievement of the organization's aims. There will be an international secretariat headed by a secretary general. He has been given considerable powers and authority. He will serve as chairman of the council when it meets at the level of permanent representatives and he may submit proposals to council or to any other body of the organization. He will be responsible only to council. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has told the house today, Professor Torkil Kristensen of Denmark has been selected to fill this extremely important post. Professor Kristensen is a former finance minister of Denmark and has a very distinguished political and administrative background.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): An excellent man.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): He has already proved his mettle as chairman of the O.E.C.D. preparatory committee which he guided through the arduous and complicated negotiations which preceded signature of the convention. It has been a great joy to the government and all others who have been conferring with Professor Kristensen and his colleagues during the past two days that it has been possible for him and them to pay this present visit to Canada.

To achieve its aims the organization may take decisions binding on all members and make recommendations to members. It will not be able to do so, however, without unanimous agreement. In other words, each member has the power of veto. A member may abstain from voting on a particular decision or recommendation and if it does so that decision or recommendation will not apply to it. It is clear therefore that the organization cannot take action respecting a member without the consent of that member.

There will doubtless be some situations in which it would be desirable for the organization to use its power of decision and recommendation. At the same time I believe it would be wise to do so sparingly. To achieve its major objectives it must rely on action on the part of the individual governments. Governments are more likely to be influenced through the process of discussion itself, in the economic policy committee and other committees, than through the mere formality of a council decision or recommendation.

The last provision of the convention which I should like to discuss is article 15 and the related memorandum of understanding on its application. Under the provisions of this article all acts of the O.E.E.C. council, including decisions, recommendations and resolutions, will lapse, except those which the council of the successor organization decides to carry over. The acts of the O.E.E.C. were examined in the O.E.C.D. preparatory committee in order to determine which should be recommended for retention by the O.E.C.D. with modifications, where necessary, in order to adapt them to the functions of the new organization. Several member countries wished to have reasonable assurance that the recommendations of the preparatory committee would in fact be endorsed by the O.E.C.D. council. A memorandum of understanding to ensure this result was drawn up at their request.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Did Canada have a representative on the preparatory committee?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Who was the representative?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Attendance was chiefly in the hands of Mr. Peter Towe. Mr. Jules Leger was, of course, associated with the representation of Canada in this regard until his illness, and following his illness he was very capably represented by Mr. Peter Towe. Having had some opportunity myself of observing the quality of the work done by Mr. Peter Towe in representing Canada at Paris in this regard, it gives me much pleasure to pay tribute to the excellence of the work he performed.

I said that a memorandum of understanding to ensure what I have referred to as an assurance that the recommendations of the preparatory committee would in fact be endorsed by the O.E.C.D. council was drawn up at the request of several countries. Under it members of the O.E.E.C. are committed to voting for the recommendations of the preparatory committee when these are considered for approval in the O.E.C.D. council. However, Canada and the United States, which are not full members of the O.E.E.C., have been permitted a certain latitude in this respect. We will be released from voting for any recommended act which we specify in a notice to the preparatory committee not later than ten days after the deposit of our instrument of ratification of the convention.

Not all the acts which the preparatory committee has recommended for retention will apply to Canada. Some of them contain provisions which conflict with Canadian legislation or practice. In these cases we have stated that we either would not adhere or would adhere only with specific reservations. Most of the acts which will apply to us are decisions of a technical nature or are relatively unimportant recommendations which are not binding, but merely have to be taken into consideration, thus leaving leaving participating countries freedom of judgment as to the action that may be required. The review of the acts is not yet complete.

The convention I have described, Mr. Speaker, is a flexible instrument. It is designed to equip each of its members better for the challenging roles which await us. Just as in the past 12 years solutions were found through the O.E.E.C. to many problems confronting western Europe, so in the future 18 nations in Europe and two on the western side of the north Atlantic will seek solutions to their common problems through the O.E.C.D.

In the O.E.C.D. Canada and the other members have attested their mutual interest, their common purpose, their interdependence and the renewed vigour with which we shall pursue our declared economic goals. In all aspects of our work we shall be mindful of our responsibilities throughout the world.

To a greater extent than perhaps has ever been the case we live in one world. That world is full of dangers and difficulties. But it also holds great promise of a life in which we can realize our full potential as individuals and as part of the human family. It is my firm belief that through the O.E.C.D. we can move toward this great ideal, that this organization can effectively serve the high hopes of the free world and that it can contribute to the prosperity and well-being of our own people and of other peoples throughout the world. With the willingness of member states to use their capacities and potentialities to promote the objectives of O.E.C.D., I believe the new organization will prove to be a major step forward in international economic co-operation. The Canadian government will do all that lies within its power to ensure that this potential is realized.

The convention has been submitted to the congress of the United States for approval, and is under debate. I believe it has not yet been submitted to the parliament of any other member country of the O.E.C.D. which signed the convention in Paris in December last. Thus, Mr. Speaker, is given to the Canadian parliament the honour, if it so chooses, of being the first parliament among the parliaments of the 20 member countries of O.E.C.D. to give approval to the convention and thus to lead the way to what we believe is a bright future for a beneficent international institution.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the resolution which is before the house, as has been said, is an important one. It deals with extremely important questions and asks the house to approve the setting up of what may become a very important institution. I can say at once, Mr. Speaker, that so far as the official opposition is concerned we are happy to approve the resolution. We wish the institution well, and we hope it will accomplish what it is designed to accomplish in the convention establishing it, which has been signed by a representative of the Canadian government and which is now up for approval.

The importance of this resolution lies not only in its terms, in the convention which sets up the organization for economic co-operation and development, but also in the implications of the organization itself and of the approval that we are being asked to give to the convention setting it up. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) has pointed out this afternoon this convention, in a sense, marks the culmination of the work of European reconstruction. We are honoured, as has been said already, in having in the gallery this afternoon one of those dedicated Europeans who has done so much to bring about not only the successful completion of the work leading up to this convention but all the progressive steps that have been taken toward European unity.

In this organization referred to in the convention we now have a new and broader framework not only for European economic co-operation but for Atlantic economic co-operation. The organization which we are being asked to approve, through approval of the convention, replaces the organization for European economic co-operation which in its day has been invaluable in aiding the progress of Europe toward economic co-operation and unity. I should like to pay my tribute to the work of O.E.E.C., which was so important and with which Canada and the United States have been associated. In replacing O.E.E.C., with Canada as an observer, we are being asked now to approve the full membership of Canada in this new broader organization along with the membership of the United States. I think the extension of membership in that way is not only important but is gratifying.

The Prime Minister said that the organization for economic co-operation and development is not meant to replace in any way article 2 of NATO. I think I am reporting his words accurately. We in this house should not wish, I am sure, to take any action which would weaken NATO in any degree as an organization for collective defence. If anything should be done in that direction, it should be to strengthen NATO. I am not sure, however—and only events will show this—whether the new organization will not in fact begin to replace the work of economic co-operation which was visualized as being performed by NATO under article 2, but concerning which there have always been great difficulties in implementation, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) knows so well.

Indeed, I think I am right in saying that in a discussion before the Senate foreign relations committee of the United States the secretary of the treasury indicated that this organization may eventually take over a great deal, if not all of the work, that it had been hoped might have been done by the implementation of article 2 of NATO. The secretary of the treasury, Mr. Dillon, himself did a great deal to bring the negotiations on O.E.C.D. to a successful conclusion when he was the assistant secretary of state. However, I do not believe we need to worry too much about this possibility provided that such a development did not interfere with other aspects of NATO in any way, shape or form. After all, O.E.C.D. does provide an enlarged foundation at least for Atlantic economic co-operation because when it comes into existence it will include several countries that are not now members of NATO, and their absence from NATO was one of the reasons it was so difficult to use that organization as an agency for economic co-operation.

O.E.C.D. not only has two North American members of NATO in its proposed membership, but I believe I am right in saying every European country except those behind the iron curtain. The minister will correct me if I am wrong.

Mr. Pickersgill: And Spain.

Mr. Pearson: No, I think Spain is a member of O.E.C.D. I believe, therefore, there is at least the broadest possible foundation for Atlantic economic co-operation and development in this organization. It will be interesting to see the action and interaction between the economic discussions of the existing NATO organization under article 2 and the development of O.E.C.D. Although none of the expressions that have been used today by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance give us any reason to believe that they have this matter in mind in asking us to approve this convention, perhaps this organization with its broad membership may become an effective foundation for Atlantic development, and not only in the field of economic consultation.

One who has had a good deal to do with these matters, namely Lord Gladwyn, whom we perhaps know better as Sir Gladwyn Jebb, speaking in the House of Lords on January 20 of this year, had this to say when he was dealing with European co-operation and development, and the desirability of NATO as an agency for that purpose:

> My Lords, such a body exists. It is true that, for political reasons, it cannot call itself an Atlantic community, but that, in effect, is what it is. I refer, of course, to O.E.C.D.—the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development—the 20 members of which comprise all non-communist European states this side of the iron curtain save Finland, plus the United States and Canada.
>
> It does not at present represent a unity—some of its members are members of military alliances, and some most emphatically, are not—but it does represent a common, and basically Christian, tradition, an ethnic affiliation, a geographical area and an economically homogeneous group. Australia and New Zealand are the only really similar countries in the world which are not included, and they, after all, are situated many thousands of miles away from the Atlantic. Six of the members of O.E.C.D. are already on the way to becoming unified. Others may (and, personally, I hope they will) join that unity. But that will not harm O.E.C.D.—rather the reverse.
> Eventually, I hope, it will become rather more coherent. Some day, no doubt, with the aid of those excellent NATO parliamentarians, I trust it will develop an assembly of its own. At this point it might well even absorb the council of Europe. But all this is for the future. At this moment, the rather anonymous Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development is as near a thing to an Atlantic community as we can achieve.

That is a vision for the future, but it is one to which I think most of us will subscribe as something which should be and one day I hope will be realized.

A much more limited expression of the significance of this organization—and I am not quarrelling with that expression—has been given to the house this afternoon by the Prime Minister and by the Minister of Finance. Indeed, the minister himself referred to statements he made in earlier days of this session. They appear at page 196 of Hansard. He emphasized then and has repeated this afternoon that this organization is not meant in any way to override or replace GATT, and that larger trade questions and tariff matters will continue to be discussed within the ambit not of this organization but of GATT itself.

Mr. Speaker, I think we can welcome the expansion of the O.E.E.C. into the O.E.C.D. because it brings the United States and Canada into organic and full association as members of this new organization. The expansion is desirable but of course those who could follow the negotiations leading up to the signature, in so far as one can follow them in the press, know that this expansion was secured at a price. The price is in a sense the watering down, in some respects at least, of the commitments of the narrower and more limited organization of O.E.E.C. At an early stage in the negotiations I understand there was some difference in opinion as to whether trade should be even mentioned in the convention. Agreement was reached in that regard and trade fortunately is mentioned as a subject for consultation. But article 6, to which the Minister of Finance has referred limits the application of any recommendation or any decision taken by O.E.C.D. in trade or in any other matter within the convention to those members of the organization who agree with the decision. In other words, every member of the organization has a veto in so far as that member is concerned over the application of any decision or recommendation.

I know that in all these matters the pursuit of perfection can sometimes lead to failure to achieve anything and it would perhaps have been quite impossible to secure any other result at this time in the negotiations on this subject of international economic co-operation. However, it is hoped that one day the practices of the O.E.E.C. may be acceptable to the members of this wider organization. As the minister has pointed out, that organization does provide for consultation, and that fact in itself can be important. It does not provide for much more than consultation in this field of trade policy and, more important, any consultation will depend on leadership and direction given by the governments inside this organization; I refer to leadership in the right direction which must be an extension of European movement toward economic co-operation and unity across the Atlantic. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that consideration will be the ultimate justification for this organization; namely its ability to make progress in that direction. No hope, of course, has been expressed today which would justify the feeling that this is going to be an easy or quick achievement.

When the O.E.C.D. was signed last December the press communique announcing the signature had this to say on the subject of trade:

> In the field of trade the O.E.C.D. will carry out the following functions: Confrontation on general trade policies and practices at regular intervals or when requested by a member; examination of specific trade problems primarily of interest to members; and consideration of any outstanding short and long term problems falling within the terms of reference of the committee on trade problems established in January 1960.

The Minister of Finance in his statement in this house on December 16 to which I have already referred elaborated on the trade question in these words which I am quoting from page 866 of Hansard:

> The organization will provide a continuing forum for consideration of the effect, on member countries and on others, of the trade groupings that are emerging in Europe. I refer of course, to issues arising from the formation of the Six and the Seven.

Then further down:

> The new organization is, as I have said, to promote the expansion of trade on a multilateral and non-discriminatory basis, thus contributing to the achievement of the purposes of the general agreement on tariff and trade.

Mr. Speaker, in the statements we have had this afternoon from the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance no light has been thrown on the attitude of the government towards these issues referred to by the minister on December 16th arising from the formation of the Six and the Seven. What we should like to hear, as perhaps we shall before this debate is over because it has a very direct relationship to O.E.C.D., is something about the attitude of the government toward the common market and European free trade area, and especially about how Canada's foreign economic policy is to be developed. Now that we are contemplating full partnership in this Atlantic organization we shall have even more to take into account the emergence of these new trade blocs, all the members of which will also be members of the organization for European Economic Co-operation and Development. The government, aside from certain statements, which have been interpreted as threats of retaliation, by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill) in Paris, and implied in some statements of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Pearson: I said that they were interpreted as threats of retaliation.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): They were not correctly so interpreted.

Mr. Pearson: Apart from these statements, Mr. Speaker, the government has given no indication of how it intends to meet the challenge or the opportunities presented by the development of the Six and the Seven. Perhaps there will be greater opportunity to deal with this matter now that Canada is a full member of the organization for economic co-operation and development. We have had no indication this afternoon as yet as to how the government will use Canadian membership in this proposed organization to promote Canadian economic interests, or in what direction Canada will use its influence in the furtherance of long-run economic objectives or in helping to solve these specific problems of the common market Six and the European free trade area with its Seven.

Surely information on that point is of importance before we approve of this particular resolution. Surely a solution of this problem, namely the relationship of the Six and the Seven within O.E.C.D., is of paramount importance to O.E.C.D. itself as it begins its operation. Together the European economic community, the common market, and the European free trade area make up 40 per cent—and we sometimes forget this fact—of world trade and the manner in which their trade relations develop will have a profound effect on the world in general and on Canada, I suggest, in particular. I hope to show this effect a little later.

The common market is now a growing concern. It is no longer any Utopian dream. Commenting not long ago on its first two years of operation the president of the commission of the European economic community, Professor Hallstein, made these claims for the common market. He said that the community is the world's second largest industrial power, and the world's largest trader; that its exports and imports have risen, as indeed they have risen in a most exciting way during its brief existence, resulting from—and we had better not forget this fact—the removal of trade barriers between the members of the common market. Professor Hallstein said that investment in 1959 in the common market countries had tripled in comparison with 1958. He also indicated that businessmen and industrialists inside the common market countries were now pressing for a speeding of the transition period, which I think is to extend over 15 years.

This glowing account, by a man who had so much to do with the formation and development of the common market, of a new and dynamic trading area of 165 million inhabitants is just one more evidence of the magnificent post-war recovery of western Europe. It is an example of what the removal of trade barriers can do in the promotion of economic prosperity. But in Canadian, and indeed in American minds it has also aroused a good deal of apprehension over the impact of a development of this kind on our trade with the common market and the free trade area countries which, as they develop, might take the wrong course. I will explain what I mean by that in a moment.

Perhaps this is one of the things in which the proposed organization we are discussing today can exercise an important and beneficial influence. I am referring to this apprehension which is felt in Canada as to the effect that these developments in Europe, if they take the wrong course, may have on jobs, income and trade. That apprehension was expressed not long ago before the Senate committee on manpower by the president of the Canadian exporters association when he asserted that the formation of the European trade bloc presents a grave situation for Canadian exporters into the area because of proposed high protective tariffs; that is, a high common tariff against non-members of the common market.

That apprehension is understandable because we know how important this market is to Canadian exporters. Indeed, at the present time it is the third largest market for Canadian products. About 40 per cent of our sales to this market are in agricultural products, and another 40 per cent are in primary and semi-processed materials exported largely by the chemical, metal, mineral and pulp and paper industries. This European common market is now growing by leaps and bounds and it is of vital importance that not only should our products not be excluded from it as that growth takes place, because of a high external tariff but that we should be able to share in the advance being made by these European countries. I think that hope and that apprehension lie at the basis of our approach to this particular problem.

So we are bound to ask ourselves this question: will the common market create trade, or will it merely divert trade? Also we are bound to ask ourselves: can the O.E.C.D. in its operations exercise the kind of influence which will ensure the former, namely the expansion and creation of trade rather than the latter, namely merely the diversion of trade?

Naturally if the common market develops on the basis of increased protectionism against traders outside its membership, that would certainly divert the flow of trade rather than create new trade through specialization. So we wonder, whether the common market will have this latter effect, and whether O.E.C.D. will be able to ensure that it does not have it. The apprehension based on those dangers has been created from two sources. One is the averaging method used in setting the common market tariff against the rest of the world, and the range of commodities for which duties are fixed by negotiation.

Mr. Speaker, before I develop that point perhaps I may be permitted to call it five o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to consideration of private and public bills, the former having precedence, pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

PRIVATE BILLS

On the order:

House in committee on Bill No. S-2, an act to incorporate Aurora Pipe Line Company (without amendment).—Mr. Woolliams.

Mr. Churchill: Stand.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I understood from the sponsor of the bill that he was going to ask that it stand this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: The first item called stands in the name of Mr. Woolliams, who is not here. Shall this item stand?

Mr. Churchill: Stand.

Order stands.

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. SD-1, for the relief of Jean George Lipsman.—Mr. McCleave.

Mr. R. J. McCleave (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask, on my own behalf this time, that order No. 2 and all the orders up to No. 24 inclusive and the divorce bills thereafter be allowed to stand today.

Mr. Speaker: That is all of the divorce bills which are on the order paper for second reading?

Mr. McCleave: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may say this. This is done on the understanding that they remain in the orders as they are and will not all stand under one order. That is, they will not be consolidated under one order, as was done a few weeks ago, but will stand as orders No. 3, 4, 5, etc.

Mr. Speaker: Yes. If there is any objection to their consolidation, they cannot be consolidated. We will allow order No. 2 to stand in the first instance.

Order stands.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house agreeable that, without consolidating these orders for second reading, we allow them all to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: That is, orders Nos. 3 to 24 inclusive.

QUEEN'S UNIVERSITY AT KINGSTON

Hon. J. M. Macdonnell (Greenwood) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-7, respecting Queen's University at Kingston.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to speak? Is the house ready for the question? Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. member not have something to say on this matter?

Mr. Churchill: Surely he has something to say about Queen's.

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Speaker, I could talk for hours, but I will restrain myself and do it all in about two minutes. The situation is very simple and is fairly well explained in the explanatory note which reads as follows:

The governing statute, chapter 123 of the statutes of 1882, provides by section 11 thereof, as follows:

"11. The principal shall be vice chancellor of the university, and in the absence of the chancellor shall take his place and discharge his duties."

The purpose of the proposed amendment is to give the board of trustees freedom of decision in the future so that the principal and vice chancellor may be one person or two persons as the board in its discretion may decide.

No change is proposed in the method of appointment, or in the statutory duties of these officers.

If this bill is passed they may, if they see fit, have a principal and a vice chancellor or they could continue as they are. The reason is obvious enough. Like every other university, Queen's has been growing by leaps and bounds. There have been considerable additions to buildings and an increased attendance and staff. It is obvious that the senior executive positions have become more onerous.

The trustees have concluded that they would like to have this provision in the statutes of 1882 altered so that they may in their discretion have a principal and a vice chancellor, two separate officials.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to speak on this question myself but I wonder whether, before the hon. member technically takes his seat, he would allow me to put a question to him. Would the hon. member explain why this parliament rather than the legislature of Ontario has the jurisdiction?

Mr. Macdonnell: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the university was originally incorporated by the legislature of Ontario but in the statute of 1882, chapter 123, I find that some doubt apparently arose. Being only a reformed lawyer I am not able to give all the technical details but apparently some doubt arose as to the competency of the legislature of Ontario in this respect and accordingly this statute, chapter 123, was passed in 1882 for the purpose of curing any possible defect. I think it was one of those things lawyers dream up when they wake up early in the morning. It looks to me as though it has little substance but it had sufficient substance to have that statute passed in 1882.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, could the hon. member say whether it had anything to do with the royal charter?

Mr. Macdonnell: Is the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill) asking me whether the doubt was connected with the royal charter? I am not competent to answer that. I do not know, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

CANADIAN FEDERATION OF MUSIC TEACHERS' ASSOCIATIONS

Mr. J. R. Keays (for Mr. Smith, Winnipeg North) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-8, to incorporate Canadian Federation of Music Teachers' Associations.

Private Bills

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, is the sponsor going to make a statement?

Mr. Keays: Mr. Speaker, knowing of your love for music I am sure you welcome second reading of this bill and possibly you will become a member of the federation at some time or other.

The federation was founded in 1935, bringing together music teachers' associations then existing in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. Since that time all provincial music teachers' associations across Canada, with the exception of those in Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island, are members of C.F.M.T.A. Negotiations are under way to bring these two groups into the federation. At the present time there are approximately 2,400 music teachers who are members of provincial music teachers' associations associated with C.F.M.T.A. Provincial committees meet regularly and there is a biennial meeting held by the federation.

The main object of the federation is to raise the standard of the teaching of music in all its branches across Canada. This is accomplished in two ways, first, by master courses held at every biennial convention which not only raise the standard of teaching but also deal with the teaching of music. In some cases these master courses assist music teachers in obtaining degrees in recognized music schools. Second, the standard of music teachers is raised by insisting that all members of the provincial music teachers' associations be an associate of a recognized music school and have two years' experience in teaching. This insistence in itself has done much to raise the standard of music teaching in Canada.

The federation also conducts a young artists' series whereby each of the provinces in turn holds local auditions. A group from these auditions are then sent on tour across Canada giving recitals in various cities and towns. The organization of these groups and the financial responsibility for them are matters taken care of by C.F.M.T.A. There are many recognized artists in Canada who have achieved their initial start in this manner.

The federation has supplied funds both as loans and as gifts to various groups in various parts of Canada in order to organize music teachers' associations and to assist them in obtaining registration in a provincial charter and has also supplied these groups with personnel to assist them in the organization.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

[Mr. Keays.]

INTERNATIONAL BRAIN RESEARCH ORGANIZATION

Mr. G. C. Fairfield (Portage-Neepawa) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-9, to incorporate International Brain Research Organization.

He said: Perhaps in introducing this bill, Mr. Speaker, I should offer a fairly comprehensive explanation concerning the establishment of this organization.

The purpose behind the organization is, I believe, well explained in the preamble to the statutes and bylaws. The preamble reads as follows:

> Whereas there is need, throughout the world, for the mobilization and direction of a larger proportion of our best scientific resources for research on the brain, an international organization has been created for this purpose.

Progress in medicine generally has been great and in the physical sciences it has been even greater. We have witnessed the development of the atom bomb and the highly technical automated machinery of the last few decades. These developments have far outstripped our understanding of even the most elementary brain mechanisms upon which this fantastic progress is based.

All the achievements of man, including cultural and intellectual thought and behaviour in relation to social and physical environment and man's mental and physical health and welfare depend to a large measure on the relatively unexplored universe of the brain.

This has in the past and will in the future pose a most difficult problem to those who are devoting a great deal of their time and energy in an attempt to explore the universe of the brain and to devise methods of further exploring this realm. The methods and principles applied to the physical and biological sciences should be applied to research on the brain. Even the money applied to the physical sciences, for instance in the development of the atom bomb, far outstrips that which is being spent on research on the brain and the amount of creative energy devoted to the former exceeds that devoted to the latter.

The problems encountered in this field are of the greatest difficulty and complexity and are becoming increasingly acute. In psychiatry the revolution caused by the discovery of psychopharmacological agents and the recognition of the importance of basic knowledge of brain chemistry underlying mental disorder and behaviour, has brought into clear relief not only the importance of basic scientific work in this field, but also the depth and extent of our ignorance.

Within the last five years a revolution has occurred through the discovery of the action of certain psychopharmacological agents on the brain in terms of emulating the symptoms of the mental disorder known as schizophrenia. In neurology there are many debilitating diseases of which we have no real understanding and for which we have no therapy. We feel that a more promising approach to some of the problems in neurology can be made through basic scientific work and biological work on fundamental mechanisms to determine the development of the brain and its function.

In communications, engineering and electronic computers, the need for more basic knowledge concerning how the brain perceives the outside world, how it records memories and how it solves problems, is becoming more acute.

In relation to jet space travel there is a tremendous amount of research required to get the basic knowledge of the brain's reaction to such travel. In brain research we have been very concerned with precise information about the organization and very fine structure of the brain, how it reacts to different biochemicals and how it reacts physiologically to changes in its environment.

In the realm of neurophysiology, with the development of the electronic microscope, we have been able to discover the reaction of single brain cells to stimuli, such as learning, fright, and so on. This is a tremendously difficult problem and very complex. I can recall —it is too long ago to admit to—before world war II, assisting as an interne in brain operations. Since world war II I have observed brain operations in one of the leading neurological hospitals in the western world, that in Montreal, and I can tell the house frankly that there has been terrific progress in brain study and operative technique in a matter of 25 or 26 years. I feel that this progress has been due to the work of those very selfless, devoted people in the brain research field who have not the backing that they should have, because of the lack of co-ordination between groups in different countries of the world which are doing research on brain diseases and functions of the brain. Although they have developed techniques and knowledge in those different centres, heretofore there has been no close collaboration between the findings and the knowledge of those different centres. It is hoped that with the setting up of this International Brain Research Organization greater facilities for co-ordination on an international scale will be brought about. This is to increase and accelerate the exchange of information and ideas between scientists of different countries.

The organization itself stems from a resolution passed by a number of brain research scientists in Moscow at an international meeting of neurologists in 1958. I hope no one will entertain any serious thoughts over the fact that the birth of this organization got its stimulus in Moscow. It has no such appellation. The proposal to form this international brain research organization was then presented to the United Nations educational, scientific and cultural organization by this committee; that is, UNESCO. The first committee was headed by Professor H. Jasper of Montreal. At its tenth session, the general conference of UNESCO recommended that its responsibilities in the field of natural sciences be also extended to brain research. At a meeting in Paris in October, 1959, a study group formulated the main outlines of the organization. They also elected compilers to draw up lists of scientists to serve on seven international panels. These panels are really parts of the study of the brain and consist of the following: neuroanatomy, neurochemistry, neuroendocrinology, neuropharmacology, neurophysiology, behavioural sciences, neurocommunications and biophysics.

The council for the international organization of medical sciences was then charged by UNESCO with the task of helping in setting up the organization to be known as IBRO. Thus, in this bill we have the final act in the setting up of this international organization on brain research.

Over 250 scientists in more than 30 different countries were approached and asked whether they approved of the proposal, and if they did, to elect by ballot those of their scientists whom they wanted to represent them on the various panels. Then, those were to meet as delegates on a central committee held in October, 1960 in Paris.

By July of 1960 an overwhelming majority of the panel members gave their consent in writing and elected their representatives to this central committee, and IBRO was then definitely established. What of this organization? One of its main functions, certainly at the beginning, will be to foster knowledge between different panels of the different countries throughout the world.

As hon. members can readily understand, the research scientists in brain work in Moscow had little liaison, for instance, with the brain research scientists in the United States of America. By means of this organization, which is to be set up with headquarters in Montreal, the findings of those panels or disciplines in the U.S.S.R. will be centralized and funnelled through the central headquarters in Montreal and will be made available not only to scientists in the U.S.S.R. but to brain scientists all over the world. Not only in information alone will this procedure prove of great value to those countries which are just developing and have not as yet research facilities, but this information will be provided in their own language through making use of the facilities of UNESCO for translaton and compilation for the IBRO. They also hope through their program of action to set up fellowships and provide for the exchange of scientific workers. Strangely enough, in the scientific world national and cultural lines do not seem to make very much difference, and the exchange of workers is felt to be of a great deal of importance in this organization. They also think they will be able to provide the facilities and the money to set up temporary research teams.

Through their teaching facilities they also hope to promote world-wide education with regard to brain research. I must say that any research work is a very thankless task. Such workers are not too highly paid. The work takes a great deal of time and effort and even considerable loss of sleep in order to reach an objective. Many who have struggled for years on a project have not yet reached their objective.

They also hope, particularly in the underdeveloped countries, to help in the extension of existing laboratory facilities. Finally, by means of international meetings and conferences which will be held at least every two years they hope to exchange information and to extend their knowledge to research groups throughout the world. I hope the bill will pass without any amendment.

(Translation):

Mr. J. E. Bissonnette (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, it affords me great pleasure as a physician and also as a member of this house, to add a few words in support of this bill which is being introduced by the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa (Mr. Fairfield) with a view to incorporating the International Brain Research Organization.

This bill is a most appealing one because of its purport: medical science and its development.

Owing to its international and highly humanitarian character, medical science must be universal and know no boundary in the distribution of its blessings. It is constantly developing. Everything must be done to support our scientists in their search for new techniques, new drugs, in short for all those things which are likely to relieve suffering and prolong life.

Consequently, this bill purports to facilitate the work of the many scientists of all countries who have tackled the great science of the nervous system, and especially the human brain, which is after all the noblest organ in man since it is the one which is most involved in human activities.

Through the work of those scientists, our hospitals are no longer crowded with epileptics, those poor creatures who may now be of some use to their fellowmen. Thanks also to their work and to their discoveries, a high percentage of patients have been able to leave our mental institutions and live with their families and become of some use to them.

This means that great progress has been made in the knowledge of the nervous system and especially of the diseases of the human brain, so complex in its anatomy and its physiology.

I think that all members of this house should give their full support to this bill to incorporate the International Brain Research Organization. In so doing, there is no doubt that we shall accomplish a noble and highly humanitarian task, for its purpose is to support the efforts of all our scientists and especially to allow them to communicate with each other through the various learned societies dedicated to that kind of research in different countries such as Russia, France, the United States, England and Canada. Moreover it is important that such scientific societies meet, study together and share their knowledge and the results of their work and of their experiments so that science may continue to benefit all mankind.

(Text):

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of this group to express our wholehearted support for what we consider to be an extremely important measure. I also wish to express my appreciation of the explanation of the bill and the historical background behind it which was given by the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa (Mr. Fairfield), the sponsor of the bill.

When we read the bill and see the names of the members of the present unincorporated organization it is obvious that in those names we have a guarantee of the need, value and purpose of this measure. When we read names such as Herbert Henri Jasper, professor; Wilder Graves Penfield, surgeon; and Frank Campbell MacIntosh, professor, being those of the persons connected with the unincorporated organization and who when this measure is passed will be the members of the corporated body, surely there is no necessity to question the real need of this pioneering legislation. It is the first measure of this particular type that has come before the House of Commons in my experience. The persons mentioned as the incorporators are men of distinction with great achievements to their credit and having a world-wide reputation.

As I see it, Mr. Speaker, the bill provides the legal instrument, shall I say, to make possible the extension into the international field of the work they have been carrying on within Canada. It provides opportunities for the co-ordination of this work and for co-operation with people of like talents in all countries. I think we should take particular pride in the fact that the headquarters of what in effect will be an international organization will be in Montreal, Canada. I am sure that decision was not arrived at without some recognition in other countries of the work done by Canadians in this field to which the bill relates. These people will be given an opportunity, through this legislation, to perform an even greater service to mankind.

I was much interested to hear of the discussion that had taken place in other countries on the international aspects of the purpose of this organization which, without any doubt, proves that its activities will be to the advantage of all people. I trust this highly successful effort in international co-operation in this scientific-medical field does give us reason to hope that in the days to come the same co-operation will be extended into the more difficult areas to which, to date, we have not been able to achieve any great measure of co-operation and understanding. On behalf of this group, Mr. Speaker, I wish the persons in this body which is to be incorporated continued success in the great work they have been undertaking for so many years on behalf of mankind.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): I am happy to rise and say a few words in support of this bill, Mr. Speaker. I should like to congratulate the sponsor of it upon the explanation he gave of the bill and the reasons stated for introducing it. I think he gave the house a very lucid explanation.

As its name implies, this organization is an international brain research organization. It will have the job of correlating all of the scientific research information in one centre. The story of the research and the work being done in every brain centre of the world will be available at this centre. If a neurosurgeon, for example, in South America wants to obtain certain scientific facts regarding certain areas of the brain, he will just communicate with this centre and they will be able to give him the scientific facts as well as the names of the surgeons concerned and the places in which the original work was done.

The brain has, for a number of years, lain hidden and unknown to the mind of man. Little by little an unravelling process has been proceeding concerning the various areas of the brain until today we find that lesions are picked up on the encephalogram, by X-ray and other scientific instruments. These developments are of tremendous importance in delineating the areas of the brain in which operations are to be undertaken and in picking up lesions of vessels in the brain.

If I may illustrate a point concerning the mystery of the brain, I would say it has been proven that the silent areas of the brain may contain a great deal of information. Indeed, they may be the storehouse of the knowledge that has been accumulated over the years. This knowledge is stored there and may be recalled and unfolded like a movie film. It has been established that by touching or stimulating electrically certain areas of the brain a patient may, if he is an auctioneer for instance and under deep anaesthesia, start off an auction. In order to correlate some of this data and bring it all together we need a centre which would be acceptable to all and which would contain all the data in the world accumulated from all the parts of the world. This, in my opinion, will be a major forward step in the advancement of scientific knowledge of the brain, mental diseases and so forth. For these reasons, I hope this bill will be passed without delay.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

THE CANADIAN GENERAL COUNCIL OF THE BOY SCOUTS ASSOCIATION

Mr. Stuart Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-11, respecting the Canadian General Council of the Boy Scouts Association.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is essentially very simple. It is to change the name of the Canadian General Council of the Boy Scouts Association, in English, to Boy Scouts of Canada or, in French, Scouts du Canada. Although this appears to be a very simple thing and perhaps would require little explanation, there is a greater significance to this change in view of what has been happening in the boy scout movement in Canada during the years since the last war.

If one looks at the explanatory note, one will find that the present name, the Canadian General Council of the Boy Scouts Association, was established when this association was, in effect, a branch of the Boy Scouts Association incorporated by royal charter in London, England, in 1912. Since that time the Canadian boy scout movement has become an independent body within the international boy scouts conference. The retention of the old name could lead to contradictions and misunderstandings as it does not indicate the independence of the Canadian body.

I think that this is a particularly appropriate year for this action to be taken because on January 27 the boy scouts headquarters moved into its new building in Ottawa which had been long dreamed of, long planned for and worked toward. This building will enable the association to conduct its affairs with even greater efficiency than in the past and also enable it to expand the services which a membership in Canada of approximately 300,000 now requires. It is a rather interesting statistic that in Canada today, a relatively small nation in population, there are 300,000 boy scouts, wolf cubs and their voluntary leaders. This number is growing rapidly. I think it is interesting also to note that in July of this year 3,500 boy scouts from all parts of Canada will be in Ottawa to take part in the Canadian jamboree. There will be in attendance representatives of the Boy Scouts of America, and probably some from Mexico and the other countries of the Americas.

In referring to this matter of the growth of the organization, I would place particular emphasis on the Canadianization of the organization, although I do not do so in any narrow nationalistic sense. It is appropriate, I believe, to consider exactly the place that scouting is taking in the lives of the people all across Canada. I think it is interesting to realize that the movement is now about 50 years old in Canada. As a matter of fact, scouts and wolf cubs are so familiar to us in all our communities that we pretty much take them for granted. We perhaps overlook the fact that this large organization could not continue to exist unless it had the sympathy, understanding and co-operation of individual citizens in every community in which it was established.

A portion of the funds of the association is earned by the boy scouts and wolf cubs through their various ventures and a substantial proportion is obtained from individual citizen subscriptions. Without this assistance the movement could not continue.

We have several thousand men and women acting as voluntary leaders and devoting many hundreds of hours during the year to the training of these boy scouts and wolf cubs. We should realize that this association with its national, provincial, district and city headquarters at various places throughout the country is maintaining a high standard of training for the youth of this country. We should realize that the training standards are jealously guarded by the Canadian association. Training programs for leaders have become widespread and a greater number of adults each year are spending their spare time in an effort to maintain the standard at this high level. I feel it is also important to realize that this effort will only be successful if the people engaged in public life take the time to examine the standards, aims and objectives of organizations such as the Boy Scouts Association. I feel that private citizens should also consider the contribution they can make toward the continued successful operation of this valuable movement.

Boy scout and wolf cub groups exist in every province and in every territory in Canada. Many of the members of this organiation have distinguished themselves over the years in many fields. The boy scout movement is essentially an international organization of brotherhood which has as an objective the developing of self-reliance. But during times of war former boy scouts have served well and I am sure the younger boys will continue to do so.

I feel that the underlying significance of this move to change the name is an effort to emphasize a program that has been accelerated during the years since the war. This effort has been fostered by a sense of Canadianism in regard to the scout program. There has been no departure from the principles of scouting as laid down by Lord Baden Powell in 1908. The objectives vary in different areas and here in Canada we must keep in mind the geographic and climatic conditions of our country. There is in existence, a program an object of which is to promote out-of-doors activities during 12 months of the year. Only a few years ago, I was somewhat surprised when I found myself learning how to camp under canvas in the mountains of British Columbia in January. I felt that this was a marvellous objective for young boys. I was not too sure that it was a marvellous thing for myself. In any event it is as a result of the efforts of the leaders that this program is continuing in a way that provides leadership and training for Canadian youth.

All of the things I have mentioned justify our attention and support. I believe that the change in name as suggested at this time emphasizes to the members of the movement as well as to the public in general that the boy scouts of Canada are endeavouring to contribute to those things we in Canada like to regard as distinctively Canadian.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, as a scout some 60 years ago and scoutmaster some 42 years ago, may I say this.

Mr. Macdonnell: Did the hon. member say 60 years?

Mr. Herridge: Yes, nearly 60 years ago as a scout and 42 years ago as a scoutmaster. I can give my political benediction to all that the member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Fleming) has said in respect of the Boy Scouts Association. I think that is all that is necessary for me to say, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. O. J. Godin (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Fleming) and the hon. member for Kootenay-West (Mr. Herridge) in their congratulations to the organization whose name is being considered by us today. There is a suggestion that the name be changed from The Canadian General Council of the Boy Scouts Association. There is no doubt in any member's mind that these individuals perform wonderful work for the young people of Canada, and assist our youth in realizing their many ambitions. I rise at this time to place on the record certain problems this application faces. Perhaps these problems are not grave in nature but nevertheless they exist. I do not profess to know much about the Boy Scouts Association although I have admiration for the movement as I am sure have many hon. members. I have learned a great deal about the activities of this organization from my brother who has for many years been a scoutmaster.

I feel sure that the hon. member who placed this bill before the house is aware that it was studied by the Senate committee on private bills during which time certain matters were discussed in harmony. I feel that it is my duty to inform the members of this house of these problems, so that when they are again before us in some form or another we will recall this information.

Mr. Speaker, the problem is a simple one. There has been for some years now a similar organization known as the Federation of Catholic Boy Scouts of Canada. I understand this organization has many troops in different sections of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. Hon. members will perhaps realize that in a proposal to change a name it is perhaps not usual to adopt a French translation as well. The French translation of the proposed name is Scouts du Canada. This is not a literal translation of the English name, and for that reason there is some doubt in the minds of the French promoters of this movement. This doubt exists among the French and Catholic groups who feel that within a short period of time they will be in a position to request a charter, something which, of course, is the privilege of any association. When this step is taken this organization will require the French name which is Scouts du Canada. I observe that the word "boy" is struck out in the translation. I make these remarks knowing very well that there is the greatest harmony between these groups which have been in operation and close affiliation for quite a few years.

I think it is important that hon. members realize this fact. If at any time in the future an association which is doing similar work applies for a charter, it could not be refused because the name is similar in some way to the French translation asked for today. I think all hon. members will realize the significance of this matter.

In this house we have possibly a special problem. We are a house which represents a bilingual country. We have no rules or regulations in this regard. We have in the past given approval to associations being incorporated and there has been no request for a translation. An official name has been requested. It is not customary to ask for a translation. I think hon. members realize that if it were possible to accept the translation of the short English phrase it would satisfy the proper function of this group which has been in existence and has done such wonderful work throughout the years. We would thereby protect any similar group of Canadians having the same endeavours in mind, and in that way there would be the recognition of the bilingual factor which we recognize is very special to Canada.

I make these remarks with the greatest frankness and with the desire to create the greatest possible harmony. There is no doubt that the Scouts of Canada, Scouts du Canada, by whatever name we may call them, will promote in Canada all these wonderful things which the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Fleming) mentioned to the house.

I should like to put this statement on the record. If the bill is read the second time and is referred to the committee which studies these private bills, I should want to make sure that all hon. members were informed of the situation, especially if the house felt it should grant the total application, that is to say the English name and the French name which is slightly different. If it granted both—something which is not usual in incorporations under the statutes of Canada—and a similar association later applied for a like name, possibly with the French appellation, hon. members would recall the debate today so that the association in the future would not be deprived of a right that we must agree it has, as have all other associations.

Private Bills

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, on March 23, 1959, I had the privilege of introducing Bill No. S-13 on behalf of the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke (Mr. Fleming) concerning the holdings of real estate by the Boy Scouts Association.

This bill is comparatively simple. We have only a few minutes in which to deal with this matter, but I should like to point out two significant factors in it. The change of name includes the saving clauses which would prevent any legal difficulties in connection with such a change. The most obvious matter is that the name is short and made less difficult than the former nomenclature, namely the Canadian General Council of the Boy Scouts Association. Shortening it up to "the Boy Scouts of Canada" will facilitate easy use of the name and it will be designated in such a way that it will be well known to all Canadians.

The second significant fact is that the new name removes any suggestion that the Canadian association is a branch or subsidiary of the British association. We know that in 1914 scouting was permitted by numerous provincial councils, but in June of that year the Canadian general council, with headquarters at Ottawa, was incorporated. That is the name under which the association has gone until the present time.

The present change to simply "Boy Scouts of Canada" will complete that change-over and will make it quite clear that the Canadian association is an autonomous unit in the boy scouts organizations of the world.

Hon. W. J. Browne (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, everybody will be pleased to see the change of name from "the Canadian General Council of the Boy Scouts Association" to the simple one of "Boy Scouts of Canada", which is the name by which this organization is generally known.

I rise particularly to say that as I look around this House of Commons today I note that there are not many who can boast, as did the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), of the long period of membership that he mentioned. I think he said he was a member 60 years ago.

Mr. Herridge: Nearly 60 years ago.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): But in private conversation I understood from him that he joined the movement in 1906.

Mr. Herridge: Yes.

Mr. Browne (St. John's West): I should like to say also that I have the honour of early membership. I think it must be the earliest in Canada. It was in the fall of 1908 that I joined a boy scout group in St. John's, Newfoundland. I think it must have been about the time that it was introduced in the mainland of Canada, or earlier. It was introduced into Newfoundland by a Church of England clergyman who had just come from England. I looked it up at one time and I believe that was the year it was given recognition as an organization, although it may have been working unofficially when my friend the hon. member for Kootenay West joined a couple of years earlier.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

TRADE

O.E.C.D.—APPROVAL OF CONVENTION AND RELATED AGREEMENTS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker):

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the convention on the organization for economic co-operation and development, supplementary protocol No. 1 to the convention on the organization for economic co-operation and development, supplementary protocol No. 2 to the convention on the organization for economic co-operation and development, and the memorandum of understanding on the application of article XV of the convention on the organization for economic co-operation and development, all of which were signed in Paris on December 14, 1960; and that this house do approve the above agreements.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, at five o'clock I was discussing how I thought the organization for economic co-operation and development, the convention establishing which we are being asked to approve, could operate so as if not to ensure, at least to assist in ensuring that the European movement toward economic consolidation should take the right course; that consolidation and unity should not result in the raising of barriers against countries outside either the European free trade area or, more importantly, the European common market.

There have been worries and indeed some indications of danger on that score from the two sources which I mentioned, namely the averaging method used in setting the common market tariff against non-member countries and the range of commodities for which duties established by the common market are fixed by negotiation.

In the first case, fears have been expressed —and perhaps there is some ground for them —that the increase in the German and Benelux tariffs that resulted from this averaging method will hurt outside countries more than the reduction in the French and Italian rates will help them by the application of the same averaging method.

It is true as the minister and hon. members will know, that the first 10 per cent cut inside the common market on internal tariffs on the way to completely removing these tariffs over the years was applied, I think without conditions, to the GATT countries, but the second 10 per cent cut which I believe took place in July of 1960—and the minister will correct me if I am wrong—was not so extended although members of the common market could voluntarily extend that 10 per cent cut if they so desired. I think that the Netherlands is the only country that has done so.

It is now fairly clear, in my opinion, that if there is to be a further reduction of that kind it is to be extended to countries like Canada and the United States, GATT countries outside the common market only, if they will take reciprocal action in reducing their tariff toward common market countries. There is therefore a problem here which perhaps the O.E.C.D. will be able to take into consideration when it begins operation.

The second danger, namely the fixing by negotiation of duties for certain commodities, presents another problem. The duties in this respect include those on some commodities of great importance to Canada, such as basic raw and industrial materials. They are fixed at such levels that production within the common market may well develop with a consequent diversion of purchases from outside to inside suppliers. We have fears on this score particularly in connection with agricultural products.

The executive secretary of GATT in dealing with this subject has expressed the view that suppliers outside the common market will probably have a decreasing share of this market for agricultural commodities. That forecast was made presumably on plans to fix minimum prices for such products within the community regardless of conditions on the world markets and to protect these minimum prices by levies, quotas, controls and all that sort of thing.

No doubt it is considerations of this kind which are responsible for some of the fears I have expressed and which are being expressed in Canada. I believe it would be helpful indeed if the government would give its own indication of the validity and importance of these fears and tell us what might be the effect on our exports. An appraisal of this kind given before this resolution is passed would be of assistance.

Before I leave that point, in turning to the more encouraging side I want to place on record a statement made by the president of the commission of the European economic community, Walter Hallstein, who said:

> Not only must we continue, and perhaps increase, our present rate of economic growth. Not only must we prove that a free society is competitive. We must also help to stabilize and enlarge the markets we provide for the world's producers of raw materials, and, as the developing countries achieve greater industrial production, so we must develop, with them and accept from them, increasing quantities of manufactures.

The common market should develop along those lines. We would then have little to fear and much to hope from that kind of development.

Perhaps I could also say a word on the organization of the European free trade area and its possible effect on Canada. This free trade area, as we know, includes the United Kingdom. I am glad to say that an increasing percentage of our exports is now going to that market. Most of our exports to the United Kingdom, as part of the European free trade area, which lately have proved so important to us, will not be affected by any proposed arrangements inside the free trade area but there are other important exports which will meet increasing competition in the United Kingdom market as a result of the development of this free trade area.

This situation would be unfortunate at a time when we are doing everything we can to increase our exports to that market which has not only a value in itself but has—I was going to call it an incidental value, though it is more than that—the additional value of making us less dependent on the United States market.

We can all take satisfaction in the fact that our exports to the United Kingdom have increased. They have gone ahead during 1960. Whether we are able to continue this increase in our exports to the United Kingdom will depend on two things. It will depend in part on our willingness to import from them and not to put obstructions in the way of British exports to this country. It will also depend on the ability of the United Kingdom to buy anywhere because of growing exchange difficulties in that country. Although we hope this will not happen, those difficulties may interfere with our continued increase of sales in that market.

Great Britain's trade surplus is declining at the present time. In 1958 it was 800 million, in 1959 it was 140 million and in 1960

it was estimated at only 50 million. To correct that situation which is causing a good deal of anxiety in the United Kingdom there are indications not only that the U.K. may have to take some kind of action against Canadian and other dollar imports. I hope it will not be done by reimposition of any of the controls from which we have been happily free in the last year or two. Rather I hope that—and this is equally important to Canada—the United Kingdom may feel impelled to move into the orbit of the common market. Certainly the information that one gets from the press is that the association of the United Kingdom with the common market is now being more closely considered than before. I know there are difficulties in regard to the United Kingdom coming into the common market; they are mainly difficulties arising out of agricultural trade, but there are ways by which those difficulties could be overcome. If they are overcome, and if the United Kingdom does move across the channel into this market, we would have to be careful indeed of the effect of this on our own interests.

Only this morning, as reported in the New York Times, the Lord Privy Seal of the United Kingdom, Mr. Edward Heath, made a statement as follows:

> Edward Heath, Lord Privy Seal, informed the six common market governments—

Presumably this would be yesterday.

> —that Britain was willing to accept a common or "harmonized" external tariff on non-farm goods as part of a settlement.

That had been the key demand of the common market. Mr. Heath went on to say —and these words have a great significance for our country—that this, according to the press, was a fundamental change of principle in the United Kingdom position.

It would be interesting indeed to hear from the government whether they have any comment to make on what a member of the British cabinet called a fundamental change in the British position in respect of association with the common market.

I should like to put a little more of this report on the record because it is of such great significance. The report in the New York Times goes on to say:

> Mr. Heath's proposal excluded agriculture. It also apparently left intact the present system of preferential tariffs for goods imported into Britain from the British commonwealth. However, Mr. Heath said Britain would have no objection to a reduction of the preferences her exports enjoy in commonwealth markets if the Six wanted to start negotiations with the commonwealth toward that end.

I cannot imagine anything much more important than that development announced only within the last few days, in British policy toward the common market. There was no reference to this matter by the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance but it would be interesting to get their comments on it.

It was not long ago that the Minister of Finance expressed great doubt indeed about the United Kingdom association with the common market, and he made some observations which have been interpreted as taking a strong position in regard to any move on the part of the United Kingdom for closer economic ties with the common market. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that a member of the British cabinet has now indicated that those closer ties are about to be negotiated.

Last November, at Ste. Adele, the Minister of Finance had this to say:

> It is difficult for us to see how any accommodation which the United Kingdom might make with the Six could fail to damage to some degree, and perhaps seriously, Canadian interests.

Well, these negotiations are now taking place. The minister went on to say:

> The ability of the Canadian government to maintain existing preferences in the Canadian market in favour of the United Kingdom would inevitably be affected by changes in the access of Canadian goods to the United Kingdom.

This development, which will undoubtedly have significance with respect to the organization about which we are talking about, can be one of great hope, and it can be one of danger to Canada. In my opinion, it involves—and I do not think I am using too strong words when I say this—a challenge to Canada's international economic policies. It seems to me there are four quite distinct lines of approach which a Canadian government could follow in meeting this situation. The first way would be to move in the direction of economic self-sufficiency through increased protectionism. The second way would be to move in the direction of economic integration with the United States. The third way would be to rely on GATT as the foundation of our trade policy and hope to achieve multilateralism in trade through further rounds of tariff negotiations. One of those rounds is under way now, I believe, in Geneva. The fourth way—and the one I think is the best way—is to move toward closer co-operation with Europe with the establishment of an Atlantic freer trade area as a long term goal of Canadian international economic policy to be achieved stage by stage.

So far as alternative one is concerned—and there is some indication that this is the government's preferred way, namely making ourselves economically more self-sufficient, moving toward economic nationalism—that way may provide a tempting short run answer to our difficulties. It may be the way, equally tempting, to Washington; but the experience of the 1930's showed that this approach is sterile and self-defeating. You get indications of this approach in Washington at the present time in the hearings that are now being held there in regard to the approval of the very organization that we are being asked to approve in this House of Commons, where there is developing very strong opposition, no doubt fomented by certain pressure groups, against the ratification of this very convention.

The second alternative I mentioned was economic integration with the United States. We saw press reports of a proposal made not long ago in Toronto by a former member of the administration in Washington, namely Mr. McElroy, who put this proposal forward as a very responsible and serious way out of our economic difficulties. He put forward what he called a North American common market. The United States today is our most important single customer, of course. But the political and other kinds of anxiety caused by our economic relations with that country are more likely to be intensified than to be weakened and removed through seeking this solution of our increased difficulty with that country alone. That does not mean, of course, that we should eliminate the possibility of the closest possible trade relations with the United States as part of a wider Atlantic association. Indeed, our dependence on the United States would be lessened rather than increased if we could fashion a newer and wider economic association on an Atlantic basis of which the United States would become an indispensable part. While there may be in Washington influences which are leading in the opposite direction on the way to greater economic self-sufficiency, there are also in this new administration in Washington forces which I hope and believe are moving in the direction toward Atlantic co-ordination and freer trade within the Atlantic area.

The third alternative, Mr. Speaker, is reliance on GATT. Of course we ought to take full advantage of any further opportunities we have in Geneva for GATT negotiations and for accomplishing further reductions in tariff. I would be the first to agree that GATT has accomplished a great deal over the years in establishing the rule of law in trading relations, in making tariff increases difficult of achievement and in bringing about more extremely important general tariff decreases. During the post-war period GATT has undoubtedly been the chief instrument in tariff reduction and the liberalization of trade, but the question now arises whether GATT can make much further progress in this direction. In my view, and this will be shown in the negotiations at Geneva within the next weeks and months, a new approach outside GATT, by GATT countries in the Atlantic area, if you like, is required under the present circumstances. A new impetus, approach, or initiative should be taken and that new approach can best be taken by the Atlantic countries.

That brings me to the fourth possibility which I mentioned and which I think is the best possibility, namely that of working toward closer economic association between Europe on the one hand and North America on the other, which should take expression in the freeing of trade to the greatest possible extent stage by stage and steadily over the years on an Atlantic basis. That, Mr. Speaker, is not only the challenge but the hope of the future in international economic policy and I do not think that anything less than that will meet the challenge we face.

I express in this house the hope that the government will use its influence in the organization for economic co-operation and development in order to achieve this particular objective. O.E.C.D. could be the beginning of a new trade grouping to embrace the European economic community, the European free trade area, the United States, Canada and, through special arrangements, other free world countries which would like to join in the association. After all, if the European economic community can make arrangements with respect to countries outside that community in order to bring them in, so also could an enlarged Atlantic free trade area be able to make arrangements with countries outside the area so it would not develop in a discriminatory way, which is something, of course, that should be avoided.

That possibility, and it is a stimulating and exciting one, of something to be achieved in the long run, has, it seems to me, occurred to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) only to be quickly rejected by him because in his speech at Ste. Adele last November he had this to say:

> When O.E.C.D. is established it will assume the functions of the trade committee. However, this should not be taken to mean that O.E.C.D. represents an accommodation between the North American and European countries, in an arrangement which will discriminate against the rest of the world. On the contrary, the core of the new body's activity will be consultation and discussion of general economic policies within the framework of the GATT and the international monetary fund.

Mr. Speaker, I think we can go further than that in O.E.C.D. and I hope we will do so. In contrast to that very cautious and limited view taken by the minister on that occasion, let me quote what the minister of trade and industry of West Germany had to say on this point of the extension of the European economic community to include Atlantic countries. Last November Dr. Erhard was interviewed by Bruce Hutchison and he was asked this question by Mr. Hutchison:

> Do you believe the methods of the common market could be extended to include North America in an Atlantic free trade area?

Dr. Erhard's answer was: "In principle, yes". He went on to say that it would have to be brought about in two stages, that first you would have to bring in the European free trade area, including the United Kingdom, and some progress is being made in that direction, and then afterwards North America. He went on to say that Germany would help to make this possible by agreeing to special arrangements to cover commonwealth preferences, which he admitted are a difficulty. He said he believed that it was not only desirable but absolutely necessary for Great Britain to join the European common market. Then he used these words which I think are the heart of the matter:

> It is not a question of finding technical solutions but a political will.

Europe cannot develop toward unity alone. He ended by saying:

> It will be sufficiently strong only within the framework of the Atlantic community.

We on this side, Mr. Speaker, have been advocating consideration of an Atlantic free trade area since the fall of 1957 as a result of important changes which occurred in the world before and after that time. In our view that is the only kind of international economic association which will not only meet the challenge of our own necessity for expanding production and trade but will also meet the economic challenge of the communist bloc.

We have not had much support for that view in the house. It was only a few days ago that the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) in Montreal jeered at the idea of an Atlantic free trade area in which Canada would be a member. But this, Mr. Speaker, must be the objective toward which we work in the present circumstances. When we put forward this idea it has been laughed at as imaginary, idealistic and unrealistic just as the European common market was regarded ten years ago, but nevertheless some distinguished advocates have come out in support of it. I refer to Mr. Adlai Stevenson, governor Rockefeller, Mr. Erhard whom I have mentioned, the prime minister of Denmark and many other western leaders who have come to the same view. In Canada the Canadian Labour Congress and farm organizations now support the idea of expanding trade on an Atlantic basis.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, Canada has a wonderful opportunity to take the lead in initiating and pushing this idea in this new organization that we will hope to support when the discussion on this resolution is completed. Canada can take a leading part in this organization in the direction I have just outlined. Because the words are more fitting than any I could find to support this idea, perhaps I might quote Mr. Bruce Hutchison in an article on this subject on December 14, 1960, in which he had this to say:

> The lesson of these events—

He is referring to the development of the European economic community and the European free trade area.

> —is perfectly clear. Somehow, without any narrow, doctrinaire logic but with flexible, pragmatic methods and by reasonable stages, the principles that made the European six the most prosperous area of the free world must be spread through the whole North Atlantic community and beyond.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the hon. gentleman allow a question? A moment ago he picked up a slip of paper which apparently had on it a statement to which he made reference. The statement was that the Minister of Trade and Commerce had jeered at any proposal for an Atlantic trading arrangement. I wonder whether the hon. member has that slip of paper because I should like to know to what he made reference.

Mr. Pearson: I was referring to a report in the Montreal Star of a meeting in Montreal on February 13, about which there was also a report on the radio. It was to the effect that the Minister of Trade and Commerce had criticized a top Liberal spokesman—that was the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin)—for advocating an Atlantic free trade area recently and had said that such an agreement would result in the shutting down of many Canadian factories and mass unemployment. On the radio report there was a good deal of additional detail as to the minister's attitude and what the minister had said, that if we kept pushing this visionary scheme of an Atlantic free trade area we would put people out of work in Canada at the present time and that would be a fine way of curing unemployment. I think that is not an unfair paraphrase of the attitude of the minister.

Of course, the answer to that is simply that this is the kind of thing that will have to be done stage by stage, as I have emphasized, over the years. The same thing could have been said about the European common market ten years ago, namely that if the European countries come together, if they abolish tariffs between them as they are doing, they will put people out of work in their own country. Instead of that happening, they have proceeded stage by stage in the reduction and eventual elimination of tariffs and in the last two years they have made that area the most prosperous trading area in the world. I suggest the same technique, based on the same principle and applied over the wider Atlantic area might, over the years, have an equally desirable result. This is the time, of all times, when we need that result both nationally and internationally.

This is what Mr. Hutchison said, Mr. Speaker, in one of his articles on this matter and I should like to subscribe to this statement:

> If the process of regional splintering goes on, and the splinters, when formed, restrict one another's trade, then Canada will find itself ground between them.
> Our national identity in the end will only be safe within the widest possible grouping of free nations trading abundantly.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): The resolution introduced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker), Mr. Speaker, asking parliament to ratify the organization for economic co-operation and development is undoubtedly an important one and I am sure that it will receive the approval of the members of this house. This organization, as members are well aware, is composed of some 20 countries that will come together under the rules set out in this document to consult and to consider ways and means of improving trading relations, improving the national economy and providing aid to underdeveloped countries.

The purposes of the organization are set forth in part in article 1 as follows:

> The aims of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (hereinafter called the "Organization") shall be to promote policies designed:
> (a) to achieve the highest sustainable economic growth and employment and a rising standard of living in member countries, while maintaining financial stability, and thus to contribute to the development of the world economy;

I feel that the impetus for this kind of organization has come largely from the success of the countries involved in O.E.E.C. and the common market. They have shown, by consultation and by common programs, that they have been able to raise their standards of living substantially. The fact of the matter is that their standards of living have gone up at a great rate, so successful have they been in arranging their economic affairs. It has been the lack of growth of the countries on the North American continent that have given the impetus to the development of this kind of organization for consultation and for the drawing up of plans.

The O.E.E.C. has been successful in that the countries comprising this organization have made a marvellous recovery in recent years. I am quoting now from an article in the Regina Leader-Post of October 8, 1960 in which is set forth some of the accomplishments of O.E.E.C.:

> As an indication of the growth of O.E.E.C. countries during the 1948-58 period their gross national production has risen 62 per cent, industrial production, 95 per cent, volume of imports from the rest of the world, 56 per cent, volume of exports to the countries of the world 130 per cent, volume of intra-European trade 183 per cent, and population has risen 9 per cent.

There are new developments in Europe today such as the common market and the outer seven. These developments not only show great promise for the countries involved but they pose certain definite dangers for the Canadian economy. I am certain that this kind of organization in which Canada can consult with other member nations can be helpful in working out arrangements so that the welfare of our own nation may be better assured in the years to come. The nations involved in O.E.C.D. comprise not only the nations that belong to NATO but certain additional nations. Over the years many of us have hoped that under article 2 of the NATO treaty economic co-operation and economic arrangements within the NATO organization would be achieved. This development would help the member nations in an economic way. Article 2 has largely been a failure. Economic co-operation has not been forthcoming. NATO has become more and more a military organization and little else.

As a result of the failure of NATO to take advantage of article 2, the organization now under discussion has been made necessary. If O.E.C.D. is a success, as all of us hope it will be, then the more certainty there is that in the years ahead NATO will be a military organization and article 2 will continue to be a part of the treaty that is not being used. I can see definite advantages in the development of O.E.C.D. rather than the development of article 2 under NATO. Nations are coming into O.E.C.D. that are not attached to NATO. It has been said that such countries as Yugoslavia and Finland are showing an interest in O.E.C.D. They wish to become connected with this organization, either in the capacity of observers or associate members.

I feel that such an organization is much more likely to make a contribution to the peaceful relations of the world than would be possible under NATO. I think O.E.C.D., in the provision of economic aid to member nations or to nations outside of the organization, is much more likely to be successful than is the NATO organization in the provision of this economic aid. After all, the underdeveloped countries of Africa and Asia have felt that NATO was a strictly military organization and to accept any assistance from this organization would make them a part of the cold war struggle. These nations, in our opinion, are much more likely to accept aid from O.E.C.D. We feel, therefore, that this is another reason why this organization deserves the support of all members of this house.

I feel that we should be making a mistake if we believed that the establishment of this organization would correct some of the great trading problems that face this nation or correct some of our own internal economic problems. After all, this organization is just a consultative organization. There are no economic agreements flowing from this organization. Within this organization there is no plan for more trade or for the solving of unemployment. There is merely at this time machinery for consultation and the establishment or continuation of a large number of committees that will look into various economic questions. Mr. Speaker, I think we should be all the more interested in the purposes of this organization because it sets as one of its purposes the maintenance of a high level of employment. Certainly Canada needs a high level of employment at this time.

Perhaps through this organization the government can learn ways and means of dealing with the economic problems that face our nation both internally and in the field of international trade. I do not believe there is in the present constitution any provision for a consultative assembly or for a parliamentary organization. I think a consultative assembly or a parliamentary organization would be a useful addition to the committees that are established under this treaty. I would hope that in the days ahead as the organization unfolds and develops there may be a consultative assembly to which parliamentary representation may be made.

We are greatly interested in the effect of the common market on Canada. We are interested in finding out if we can the Canadian government's policy in relation to the common market. We were disturbed when, the government of the United Kingdom having offered to Canada the possibility of establishing a free trade area, our government shied away and refused to come forward with any policy as far as the development of a free trade with the United Kingdom was concerned. The common market poses a threat to Canada. The nations in the common market have been taking, over the years, some 30 per cent of Canadian exports. Our markets for these exports on the common market are not assured and there seems to be every possibility that the United Kingdom in the days ahead might join the common market. If this should happen it will pose a very serious threat to Canadian exports and to our Canadian economy.

At this time the development of widespread consultation among the nations of the Atlantic community is necessary. We think this organization can play a useful role. We look forward to the reduction of trade barriers in this larger group of nations. We think that the destiny of Canada depends to a large extent on the expansion of trade, and the expansion of exports to the various nations of the world. We believe that within this organization we can expect that there will be an improvement in trade relations among the nations concerned. We welcome the resolution and we shall lend our support to the establishment of this organization. We do point out that it is merely a consultative organization and that for the development of the Canadian economy our government must develop new and concrete policies, to which this organization at this time will be of very little help.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Burin-Burgeo): Mr. Speaker, this resolution requires parliament to ratify an agreement which will bring into existence a new organization to be known as the organization for economic co-operation and development. This new organization will replace a somewhat similar organization which was established I believe in 1948. As you look over the membership of this organization you will find that probably the main difference between the new organization and the old one, which was known as the organization for economic co-operation, is that the organization which will be set up in consequence of this resolution will consist of 20 members instead of 18. The two new members that will be added are Canada and the United States.

The aims of this new organization are highly commendable. They are set forth in article 1 as follows:

> (a) to achieve the highest sustainable economic growth and employment and a rising standard of living in member countries, while maintaining financial stability, and thus to contribute to the development of the world economy;
>
> (b) to contribute to sound economic expansion in member as well as non-member countries in the process of economic development;
> (c) to contribute to the expansion of world trade on a multilateral, non-discriminatory basis in accordance with international obligations.

These are worthy and challenging objectives but whether they will be attained or not will, in my opinion, depend on the willingness of the member countries to commit themselves to a greater measure of co-operation and even sacrifice than has been evident in the past. If we look at those membership countries we find that 13 soon found it necessary to form smaller groups outside the main organization. We have six of them banded together in what is known as the European common market or the inner six. Seven more of them are banded together in the European free trade association—

Mr. Grafftey: Tell us something new.

Mr. Carter: —commonly referred to as the outer seven. The fact that this large group of nations had to break up into smaller groups is, I think, evidence that they were unable to solve their most pressing problems as members of that larger group.

As we look back over the history of trading groups the prospects are, in my opinion, not too optimistic.

Mr. Grafftey: The Liberals are never optimistic, are they? They are pessimistic, in fact.

An hon. Member: Une malade.

Mr. Grafftey: Yes, une malade.

Mr. Carter: My hon. and juvenile friend is entitled to his little joke and I should not wish to interfere with his fun at this moment. However, this is a rather serious topic and I am trying to deal with it in a serious manner.

Hon. members will remember that not very long ago the government of Canada was criticized for adhering too rigidly to what is known as GATT. As has already been pointed out this evening, GATT obtained a good many benefits for its member nations but it fell far short of what was expected of it. It fell far short of expectations because it contained a good many loopholes and too many member countries were willing to take advantage of the escape hatches.

We can also think back to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. There were hopes that once NATO had completed its organization to deal with immediate defence problems it would then develop into a trading community. That hope also has been dashed. If we wish to come nearer home I suppose we only have to think back to NORAD, because I do not think any member of this house will assert that, as far as sharing of defence production is concerned, the NORAD agreement has fulfilled our expectations. Therefore I can assure the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) that history is not too reassuring on this particular point.

These high hopes we had in the case of GATT, NATO and NORAD have foundered, and they have all foundered on the rock of self-interest. If this new organization which we are discussing today is not to meet the same fate, we must find a purpose greater than self-interest on which every member country can unite and to which every member country can commit itself.

This afternoon the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) said it was his hope that through this organization member countries would make a full contribution to a world community. I am sure we all share that hope, but let us not deceive ourselves that this objective is going to be accomplished merely by setting up another organization. If there is any comment to be made I think it should be that perhaps we have too many organizations overlapping and all trying to do the same job. Perhaps it is a case of too many cooks spoiling the broth.

Let us not forget this point. If this organization is to fulfil our hopes in making the fullest contribution to a world community, in the final analysis the matter boils down to individuals. First of all it boils down to the people who are responsible for the industry and commerce of the member countries. Many of the nations included in this membership, particularly Canada, the United States, the United Kingdom, west Germany and others are countries which are pledged, at least politically, to a system of free enterprise. It means that those who are responsible for the workings of free enterprise in our country and in other countries must themselves find a purpose greater than self-interest.

Free enterprise has a great many good points. It has developed mass-production techniques. It has produced a quantity of cheap goods and made them available on a wide scale to many people at reasonable prices. It has encouraged a spirit of adventure and the development of genius and invention. These things are all good, but let us not forget that free enterprise also has its faults. While it has accomplished much, it has also led to labour troubles, to bitterness, to class war, and in many cases to a misuse of materials and of natural wealth.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Carter: Not right now, thank you.

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member received the answer he deserved.

Mr. Grafftey: I don't blame him.

An hon. Member: He could not answer.

Mr. Grafftey: He is not very fast-thinking on his feet; I don't blame him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Carter: I think we must examine our free enterprise system and be prepared to put right many of the things that are wrong with it. Perhaps that process may go much deeper than we realize at the moment and in the final analysis it will boil down to individual decisions that in one way or another affect our self-interest.

While we support this resolution and hope that all the benefits that can flow from this new organization will be realized, let us not lose sight of the fact that the prerequisite for that success is the finding of a purpose higher than self interest on which we can all unite to give everything we have and which we all can pursue with full commitment.

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of speaking at length at this point but the hon. member who has just taken his seat has made one statement—consciously or subconsciously—

Mr. Hodgson: Unconsciously.

Mr. Grafftey: —which I personally cannot let go by. The hon. member said that the free enterprise system in Canada had created class warfare. That is an utterly ridiculous statement. If there is any one thing that this country has lacked in its historical and economic context, it is class warfare.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Grafftey: This government has keynoted co-operation between industry and labour and we have no class warfare whatever.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo raising a point of order?

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, I must object to the hon. member's putting into my mouth words which I did not utter.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo that if he feels he should correct a misinterpretation placed on his remarks, the time at which to do so would be when the hon. member from Brome-Missisquoi has completed his remarks. The hon. member cannot interrupt the hon. gentleman who has the floor.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, which has been raised by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo—

Mr. Grafftey: I have not finished my remarks.

Mr. Chevrier: —I think it is within the right of an hon. member to explain what his statement was if he thinks that another hon. member is misinterpreting the statement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I feel exactly as does the hon. member for Laurier except that I suggested that the right time for the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo to raise this point of order was after the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi had completed his remarks.

Mr. Chevrier: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I disagree with your ruling.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is my interpretation of the rule.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss this point and I hope Your Honour will allow me to do so. In discussing it I want to say this. It is permissible for an hon. member to rise at the time another hon. member rises to point out the difficulty in which the statement made by another hon. member—in this instance by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi—places him.

Another matter I should like to bring to Your Honour's attention is this. The discussion in which the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi has engaged is not relevant to the resolution which is before the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is another point of order and perhaps we should settle one point at a time. The hon. member will be familiar with standing order No. 37 (1) which reads as follows:

37. (1) No member may speak twice to a question except in explanation of a material part of his speech which may have been misquoted or misunderstood—

I believe it has been the constant practice in the past to hold that the time to take advantage of this rule is after an hon. member has resumed his seat. Otherwise he would go against the rule that nobody shall interrupt any hon. member who has the floor without first obtaining the hon. gentleman's permission.

Mr. Chevrier: I disagree with Your Honour, respectfully.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would indicate to the hon. member that he cannot express his disagreement in this way.

Mr. Chevrier: I do not think it is against the rules, sir, to do what I have done. If I have transgressed against the rules, I wish Your Honour would point out to me wherein I have done so.

I am rising at this time on the other point of order which I raised a moment ago, namely that the matters the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi has been discussing are not matters which are relevant to the resolution now before the house. I hope Your Honour will see fit to apply the rule in so far as that matter goes.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I agree that if the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi continued for long in the vein in which he started he would be out of order; but it is customary, I think, to allow an hon. member to reply to a statement made by a previous speaker. If the hon. member were to discuss only this point, he would be out of order, of course; but I think he should be allowed at this time to comment on the statement made by the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo.

Mr. Carter: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Graffiey: Mr. Speaker, I had the floor—

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Graffiey: I believe it is the rule that I should be allowed to continue. I have the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I recognize the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Speaker, I can quite understand that it would be right for the hon. member to comment on a statement that I made, but is it in order for the hon. gentleman to comment on a statement I did not make?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Burin-Burgeo will have his opportunity to discuss that matter, but that is not a point of order.

Mr. Graffiey: I am not rising on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am rising to conclude the brief remarks I started to make. I believe that when the record is read tomorrow what I am saying will be borne out.

The hon. member who has just taken his seat said that the free enterprise system has produced class warfare, period. The record will show that tomorrow.

As a Canadian, I say that one of the reasons why I am proud to live in Canada is that we do not have class warfare and this is owing to the co-operation that exists between labour and industry. I believe that an irresponsible statement such as that made by the hon. member is ridiculous in the Canadian context and must be refuted. I will not talk about party politics at this moment. I would say that this state of affairs exists and has existed under all governments, including the present government and the past government. For the hon. member to suggest that class warfare exists in our country, is, in my view, both ridiculous and unhelpful.

Mr. Hodgson: The hon. member said it.

Mr. Carter: I was speaking without notes, Mr. Speaker, but I know what I said. I did not say that the free enterprise system produced class warfare in Canada. I was speaking generally in the historic sense and indicating that from the advent of free enterprise in different parts of the world where the free enterprise system is operating class warfare had developed. My hon. friend took my words and applied them to Canada only.

Mr. Hodgson: The hon. member had better move over among the socialists.

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I also intend to support the resolution now before the house. However, I should like to make some brief observations in this respect.

I agree with the statement made by my leader to the effect that this new organization for economic co-operation and development will in effect replace article 2 of NATO.

In this house and the other place we have an organization known as the Canadian NATO parliamentarians' association. I believe it would be proper if that association would reconstitute itself in order to be known as the Canadian NATO parliamentarians' association in support of the aims and ideals of O.E.C.D. because the association was originally organized to lend support to the implementation of article 2 of NATO. That association ought now to be reconstituted as an association in support of the furtherance of the aims of O.E.C.D. However, my main reason for rising is that I have given considerable thought to article 1 of the convention. Article 1 lists the aims of the organization for economic co-operation and development. Aim (a) reads:

> To achieve the highest sustainable economic growth and employment and a rising standard of living in member countries, while maintaining financial stability, and thus to contribute to the development of the world economy.

It is my contention that at the same time as we are being asked to subscribe to this convention our government stands guilty of a violation of the very first aim listed in the convention, because no one can claim—and I do not think the government would do so—that we have reached anywhere near the highest sustainable economic growth in our nation. We are simply marking time in our national productivity. Canadian agriculture is even being advised to produce less. Canadian industrialists are working not around the clock but on short weeks. They are locking up their plants for as long as one month, ostensibly for purposes of retooling. Many of our industries are locked up completely. If, as the convention says, Canada is to contribute to the development of the world economy, we certainly will be unable to do so if we continue to insist that we can afford to have over half a million unemployed in our country and if we can have Canadian agriculture producing at a rate much below its capabilities.

I find it a little hard to agree to a convention when I realize that we are violating the very first aim listed. Let us look at the next aim listed. We are pledged:

To contribute to sound economic expansion in member as well as non-member countries in the process of economic development.

We note, as do many Canadians, with regret that our government is reducing its annual contribution to the development of the underdeveloped areas of the world. I believe our contribution this year is less than it was last year by a number of millions of dollars, and we certainly are guilty of not obeying the spirit of this aim either.

Under the last aim listed in article 1 we pledge ourselves:

To contribute to the expansion of world trade on a multilateral, non-discriminatory basis in accordance with international obligations.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) has before the house a resolution which will in effect increase Canadian tariffs on imported goods. How that ties in with asking us in the same week to subscribe to a convention in which we pledged ourselves to make our contribution to the expansion of world trade on a multilateral basis is difficult indeed for me to understand. In one item of legislation we are asked to increase tariffs. In the next item of legislation we are asked to give our pledge that we will encourage expansion of world trade on a multilateral basis.

May I return for only a moment to our pledge under aim (b). I have a return which was supplied to me in the House of Commons on November 23 last. I asked this question:

As of December 31, 1959, what was the estimated extent of foreign investment in Canada, and what was the estimated extent of Canadian investment outside of Canada?

The answer I received reads as follows:

As of December 31, 1959, the value of foreign long term investments in Canada is estimated at $20.7 billion and the value of Canadian long term capital investments outside of Canada is estimated at $5.5 billion.

We are importers of capital at a time when we are pledging ourselves to do what we can to make investment capital available in greater amounts to other nations of the world.

I have also a list, in a reply I received on the same day, of our contributions abroad, and it states that in 1959 the federal government gifts abroad totalled $71 million and federal government loans abroad totalled $1.4 million, apart from an increase in Canada's quota in the international monetary fund involving payments of $239 million including $177 million in notes.

[Mr. Regier.]

I notice in the annual report of the international development bank that for every $1 that Canada has invested in the international development bank, as a result of that investment $2 was spent in Canada for the purchase of Canadian goods. If we want to make our economy move, international aid is one way of doing it; it is one way of making our economy healthy and causing it to move ahead. This money is not lost to us; it is not lost to our economy. The supplying of international aid creates employment for Canadians here in making the capital goods that the underdeveloped nations of the world need.

I notice that for every $1 invested by the United Kingdom in the international development bank, $3 worth of goods were purchased in the United Kingdom in connection with the project for which the invested money was used. It is therefore good business, and an aid to our economy, for us greatly to enhance our overseas assistance. I hope the day is not far distant when Canada will meet the recommendations of the United Nations in this respect and that we shall decide to aid underdeveloped nations at least to the extent of one per cent of our gross national production. At the present time our rate is less than one fifth of one per cent and yet we are potentially the richest people on earth and our standard of living takes second place only to that of the United States. In gifts abroad we ought to be spending, or we ought to have spent in 1959 a minimum of $345 million rather than $71 million. That would have been one per cent of our gross national product.

As I said before, I regret to note that this year the government is planning on doing even less than it has been doing in the last number of years, and that the estimates have been reduced in this regard. Therefore, I feel that when we are asked to subscribe to a convention which lists aims (a), (b) and (c) we ought not to have to admit to ourselves that we stand already in violation of these three aims. If we are going to have unemployment, if we are going to have curtailed production, we will not have the wealth that is necessary for us to make our proper contribution on the world scene today. In addition, if we are going to raise our tariffs we ought not to pledge that we are going to support increased multilateral trade among the nations.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house will agree with the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) that the matter which he has presented to the house today, is one that possesses at least a great potential importance. If the expectations for the new organization embraced in the convention which we are asked to adopt, should be realized, it could mean a great deal not only for the United States, Canada and the other 18 member states of the organization but also, from the point of view of an intensification in the political and economic unity of Europe and, as suggested by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson), I would hope a much wider area covered by the phrase, an Atlantic freer trade grouping of nations.

But in supporting the resolution in its present form I think we must not make the mistake of attributing to it qualities that it does not possess. Undoubtedly many did expect and anticipate for this organization a greater flexibility in its provisions; and on that account a greater effectiveness in dealing with the problem it was designed to meet. That problem, as I see it, concerns the enabling of certain countries not members of the two existing European economic blocs to enjoy a liaison in the first place with those two blocs, and in the course of time to evolve an arrangement which will permit the non-participating nations to enjoy satisfactory trading relations with the common market and with the European free trade association.

Undoubtedly what Mr. Dillon had in mind a year and a half ago was to provide through O.E.C.D. a nexus or a liaison between the common market in particular and the United States and Canada. To the extent that his efforts have succeeded I think we owe him a great debt for the successful negotiations which may largely be attributed to his efforts. These negotiations began when he was under secretary of state and were achieved when he became secretary of the treasury in the government of the United States.

I think, however, in order to understand fully the merits and weaknesses of the convention, as it is now presented, one must look at the Canadian scene. Certainly if we are to judge it at all, we must judge the convention first of all in terms of our own interests and then, of course, in terms of its effectiveness in meeting a problem that engulfs all the free nations at this critical time in the history of the world. The fact is that very real dangers do exist under present world trading arrangements. If we in Canada are to avoid these dangers it is absolutely essential that our policies be clearly outlined for all the world to see.

I think we may well ask the government today, what is Canadian policy in this regard at the present time? Are we consciously moving toward greater protectionism with the intention presumably of becoming economically self-sufficient or more economically self-sufficient? Are we still in favour of a freer multilateral trading world or are our policies directed toward closer economic integration with the United States? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) in the public pronouncements he has made from time to time has given us reason to believe that government policy with regard to the responses to these three questions is ambiguous. I have before me a statement made by a distinguished and intelligent Canadian businessman who has expressed his concern in this regard. I refer to Mr. R. H. Fowler of Montreal who said:

> It is difficult to discover, except in most general terms, what Canada's attitude is toward the common market and the outer seven trading blocs in Europe. I suggest that, wherever you turn in this field, there is uncertainty and vagueness both in official Canadian policy and in private industrial attitudes on trading questions.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): What was the date?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This was last fall. I continue:

> Whatever the democratic processes are that should operate to develop national trading policies, they do not seem to be working very effectively in Canada at the moment.

This complaint of Mr. Fowler is not a single complaint. It is to be found not only in the positions taken by parties in this house but in the positions taken by businessmen and others throughout the country. One minute we are led to believe that the Minister of Finance is against the common market in Europe; and if we are to judge from the speech he made at Ste. Adele as reported by the Canadian press on November 18 there is no doubt that what he has said on some occasions in Canada is consistent with the attitude that he was reported as having taken toward the common market in his discussions with the chancellor of the exchequer a few months ago in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chevrier: That was a remarkable speech he made.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If we examine the speech made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) about ten days ago in Montreal, we will find that he too, although he is Minister of Trade and Commerce, has his doubts about the common market, about a multilateral trading world, and about the desirability of removing economic discrimination, although we learn from the morning papers today that his deputy minister, in a speech delivered yesterday in Montreal, took the position that these things deserve our careful attention. Indeed, as I intend to show before I conclude, the deputy minister of trade and commerce regards the common market as both an opportunity and a challenge for Canada. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, of course, notwithstanding the fact that he was one of the co-signatories to the convention on behalf of Canada, I believe, looks upon these instruments, according to some of his pronouncements, as media that should not be encouraged by Canada.

Undoubtedly the common market does hold dangers for Canada in terms of some of its trading aspects. Certain of our goods undoubtedly will suffer in the short term. In the long term certain of our products will stand to obtain an advantage. But this much is clear. Having in mind the problems that beset the western world at the present time, involving conflict with the tremendous economic drive that the Soviet union and its satellite powers are making, we cannot help but encourage any effort that seeks to bring about the unification of Europe, something that we have been striving for in the western world since the end of the first world war, and which Mr. Churchill himself said was an essential element in the foundation not only of European unity but also of world peace.

A few moments ago I put forward some questions with regard to Canadian policy at the present time. I suggested that the answers to three questions are varied, depending upon which speech is made by which minister in which month and on which occasion in which country. The fact is that before we can have a clear policy we must have certain objectives. I suggest to the house that there are three broad objectives which Canada must pursue if we are to meet our challenges in this shrinking world. We must have economic growth and stability in Canada, unfettered by the threat of economic domination from the United States or, for that matter, from any country. We must assist other countries of the free world in achieving economic growth and stability in order that we may meet the east-west challenge. We must do everything within our power to assist the underdeveloped nations of the world to raise their economic development under freedom in order to meet the north-south challenge.

Undoubtedly, the greatest threat to our trading interests is the growing trend toward regionalism, whether it be in Europe or Latin America or even the attempts at certain regionalism right on the North American continent itself. But be that as it may, we cannot overlook the fact that certain developments of the greatest consequence have taken place in Europe. I refer to the Six and the Seven. We cannot stand still in these currents, no matter what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) may say or may have said. I feel that the direction in which we should be proceeding is clear. We in North America must work to associate ourselves with the unity of Europe, and not only with the unity of Europe but with the unity of nations that are like-minded and are prepared to share in the building of that unity.

This is what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Pearson) had in mind today. This is what he had in mind when, on other occasions, he has spoken about the desirability of expanding the unity that now exists in such blocs as the common market to take in other Atlantic countries and even to go beyond that, by embracing countries like Australia, New Zealand, Japan or any other country that is prepared to recognize the essential requirement for economic and political peace at this time, through multilateral trade arrangements. When the Leader of the Opposition spoke on this theme last March he concluded what he had to say by observing, "One thing is certain: If we want to become more independent and less dependent, then we must become more interdependent."

I am not so naïve as to fail to recognize that there are difficulties in building such an area as an Atlantic free trade area. This is not the same thing as the common market. This is not the same thing which Mr. McElroy, the former secretary of defence in the United States, proposed in Toronto a short time ago when he proposed a common market between Canada and the United States. I am not talking about that matter, and that is not what the Leader of the Opposition was talking about. That is a special arrangement that would have to be examined with the greatest care, having in mind the interests of all parts of the two countries concerned. But if we are going to take into account the implications of the cold war now, we must recognize that if the free nations are to face increasingly severe economic competition from the Soviet bloc they must proceed along the lines suggested by the Leader of the Opposition today and on other occasions, both in this house and elsewhere.

The statement today by the Minister of Finance makes it apparent that there is not full agreement between what he had to say and what Mr. Dillon said, when the latter appeared before the Senate of the United States on February 14 last. This may result from the fact that Mr. Dillon was confronted with a particular problem in that country in connection with ratification, and found it necessary to give an emphasis which the Minister of Finance did not give today. It is only fair to say, however, that while I do find a different emphasis in the statements made by Mr. Dillon and the Minister of Finance, both are agreed on the threefold objective of O.E.C.D. They agree that it will be a major forum for efforts to harmonize financial and economic policies for the growth and stability of most of the industrialized nations of the world whose economic behaviour significantly influences the course of the world economy and the trend of international payments. Second, it will provide a solid framework for intensive and frequent international consultation on the financial and monetary policies which must be pursued in order to achieve and maintain a better balance in the international payments position.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, that is one of the main arguments the United States officials offered to congress with regard to this matter, because O.E.C.D. confers on the United States a better chance of maintaining a balance in the international payments position which confronts that country. I suggest to the Minister of Finance that that may well be one of the reasons, apart from the general reasons I have given why Canada should want to see this particular convention ratified early.

Third, the secretary of the treasury points out that O.E.C.D. will bring into being an organization of vital importance for assisting, on a co-operative basis, the development of the countries of the world. The last objective is an important one, because there are certain nations now, notably West Germany and Japan, which do not contribute to the underdeveloped countries anything like the extent which their own economies would justify and permit. The United States and Canada have been, I believe, relatively generous in the assistance they have provided bilaterally to the underdeveloped countries of the world through the Colombo plan. I do not for one moment say that there is not more that we could do. But other countries, likewise, have an obligation, particularly certain of the European nations, and that obligation is imposed on them not only in relation to the particular countries with whom they have had an historic commercial connection, but in relation to the underdeveloped countries of the world as well.

Is O.E.C.D. to completely replace the implications and the intentions originally provided under article 2 of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization? It is now a matter of record that the United States regards NATO as essentially a defensive organization. I share fully the view of the Leader of the Opposition that strong and continued support must be given to NATO in the critical situation that confronts us at this time. Instead of lessening our support for NATO in any way, we must make every effort to make NATO a stronger organization to meet the challenge presented. There can be no shirking of our responsibilities in NATO, but we in Canada believe that NATO would be a stronger organization if more attention had been paid to the directions of article 2 in that treaty and if there had been some recognition and some acknowledgement made by the United States, that one of the ways of building up a strong political defensive alliance was to recognize that all nations in that alliance had not only political but economic problems, economic objectives and economic concerns as well. It is suggested now, because of the sponsorship of O.E.C.D. by Mr. Dillon, that what the government of the United States really proposes is that whatever might have been done under article 2 of the NATO treaty might now be done under the new organization, namely O.E.C.D. It is suggested that NATO's economic role now is as dead as a dodo. That is the current opinion of some in Washington.

It would be well if we had from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fleming) some assurance today in that regard. How does the United States look upon the O.E.C.D? Does it look upon it as a means of escaping the clear desirabilities in article 2 of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization? It may be that, because the new organization will cover a number of countries not in NATO, such as Ireland and Spain, the intention is to create a much wider constituency of interest, and to see that the aims originally intended to be covered are embraced by O.E.C.D. itself.

Mr. Speaker, it is true that the new organization is to have an executive, the secretary general, who many in this house know in the person of Mr. Kristensen, the former distinguished minister of finance in Denmark, and a former professor of one of that country's illustrious universities. I am sure the Minister of Finance was justified in saying that there is perhaps no man in this particular field better endowed and likely to be more dedicated to the prosecution of the objectives of O.E.C.D. But I think that we must take into account certain facts, and those facts are that the new body has no new executive and will have few fixed obligations. It will be less powerful than O.E.E.C. although I fully agree with the Minister of Finance that Canada and the United States have the right to participate much more directly in the new organization than they did in O.E.E.C.

However, one of the reasons that O.E.C.D. will be less powerful is the reluctance of France and the United States to co-ordinate their economic policies fully with other countries.

The minister said nothing about this matter in his statement today. He did not tell us that the agreement before us represents a compromise which, in the view of the United States government, would not compel the government of that country to co-ordinate its actions with others except when it wanted to do so. That lack makes the organization at least in its present constituent terms less powerful and less effective than was the case when the full form and the full plan had been exposed to the world about a year and a half ago by Mr. Dillon himself.

One may join with other members, such as the one who has just spoken, in asking if we are now to ascertain from this new organization that there will be imposed on governments the aim to achieve the highest sustainable economic growth and employment and a rising standard of living in not only member countries but in one's own country. We have had no evidence from the government today of its determination to provide for an increase in the standard of living or to provide for a reduction in the unemployment which confronts our country in more serious proportions now than it does any one of the other 19 members of this organization. We have not heard a word about this matter from the Minister of Finance today. The Minister of Finance of course dodges this question continually. He has been dodging now for almost two and one quarter months. In his baby budget he made only one proposal which was designed to relieve unemployment. I refer to the provision for double depreciation in what he calls chronic unemployment areas and what I call depressed areas.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My hon. friends say order. If we are going to provide for improvement in employment conditions in member countries of O.E.C.D. the way to do that most effectively is to give an example by doing that very thing here at home.

We have heard nothing from the minister today about that most remarkable statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Hees) on February 13.

An hon. Member: Where is he?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I should think that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, as one of the signatories, would have participated in this debate. He may have some preoccupation in the public interest that takes him elsewhere. But it is inconceivable that the Minister of Trade and Commerce—one of the men who signed this particular document on behalf of our country; one who criticizes the common market; one who criticizes a freer political trade area—does not make a statement about this important matter now before us. He more than anyone else has a definite responsibility to do so. I am glad to place his statement of February 13 alongside that of his deputy minister which is as follows:

> The European Economic Community poses both 'a great challenge and a great opportunity for Canadian business', James A. Roberts, federal deputy minister of trade and commerce declared here yesterday.
> The challenge for Canada, Mr. Roberts claimed, consisted of maintaining access to the common market on terms "at least as favourable" as those enjoyed presently in the individual markets of the six nations comprising the E.E.C.
> This, he said, would enable Canada to share fully in the benefits of the economic development and market growth of what already "is the world's largest trading unit".

This statement appears in today's Montreal Gazette. One of the main reasons for the establishment of O.E.C.D. is to provide liaison for Canada and the United States to the common market; posed in these challenging terms by the deputy minister of trade and commerce and repudiated by his own minister on February 13 last. But, of course, we were not reminded of these things today by the Minister of Finance.

Article 6 of the treaty provides for the procedures in connection with the adoption of recommendations and the making of decisions. Unless the organization otherwise agrees unanimously for special cases, decisions shall be taken and recommendations shall be made by mutual agreement of all the members. It is true that no decision shall be binding on any member until it has complied with the requirement of its own constitutional procedures, but the other members can agree that such a decision shall apply provisionally to them. Nevertheless, if a nation wants to do so it can veto a decision of the organization or of the council. The Minister of Finance should tell us whether this is simply to be an organization—

Mr. Chevrier: He will not do so.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —of sovereign states exercising their sovereignty in every instance based on national considerations and not on the interests of the 20 members of the group.

Mr. Benidickson: And related to GATT.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): And related to GATT. On the positive side we were told by those who took part—I refer to Mr. Ball in particular—in the discussions in the United States senate; that the Kennedy administration attaches the utmost importance to O.E.C.D. because it gives the United States the chance to participate as of right in discussions between the members of the common market and the Outer Seven, and to engage in those discussions in a way that will prevent the two rival groups in Europe from settling their differences by arrangements that would damage the interests of the United States. Second, the United States wants it to be a forum. We agree with that view. There should be a place for consultation and discussion.

But if the organization is going to be restrained in the sense in which the words now provide, then the hopes for this organization as contained in the statement of the Minister of Finance are not justified; that is, that this organization could well become historically almost as important as NATO itself.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Who said that?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He said this organization could become—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member who said that?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Finance.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The Minister of Finance said no such thing.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Finance was misreported again.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I have been misreported again by the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin), as usual.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This organization could become almost as important as NATO, if there were a measure of flexibility, that would permit all nations to take into acount the collective interest rather than merely the interest of any one particular country. As the United States is the most powerful country in the whole group, assurances from that quarter would have a very salutary effect. I am sure that Mr. Dillon would like to give these assurances, but he is faced in his own country with a situation that I suppose does not lend itself to any effort on his part to make this constitutional arrangement in O.E.C.D. more flexible than is now the case.

I say to the minister that this is in principle a desirable convention. We will support it because it does lay the foundation of an organization which can lead the western world, and, we hope, other countries as well in the kind of direction that will provide a background for political stability and peace in the world. But the organization as at present constituted does not fully warrant that expectation in its present terms alone.

I say to the Minister of Finance that the position of Canada in putting forward this convention would be stronger if the government itself had today given us its clear views about the common market, and about what we may expect from it both in terms of positive and negative results. If we had received from the Minister of Finance himself the kind of leadership in regard to this matter which every other western country except Canada has given, I am sure the strong sponsorship which he has given to this resolution today would have been accepted without any criticism whatsoever.

The trouble with the Minister of Finance is that he is never prepared in this house to say what he is reported as having said outside this country.

Mr. Chevrier: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): What he said in England is not what he said today.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It certainly is.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The minister says, "It certainly is". What he said today is not what he said the other day at Ste. Adele—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Of course it is.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —as reported in the Toronto Telegram, his own paper, of November 18. But in spite of all the shortcomings of the Minister of Finance, we welcome the positive advantages of this convention.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to.

Some hon. Members: Ten o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that I call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Chevrier: May I inquire from the house leader what the business is for the rest of the week, and perhaps when announcing the business we might have some indication of what we will be doing on Monday.

Mr. Churchill: Tomorrow we should like to start with a resolution dealing with amendments to the pension bill. The resolution will appear in Votes and Proceedings tomorrow. If the house will consent, with that short notice, to accepting the resolution, which is necessary because certain financial obligations are incurred by reason of the amendments, we could proceed with the pension bill itself, which is the first item on the order paper.

The pension bill would then be considered in committee of the whole house, at which time I will move amendments in accordance with the recommendations made by the standing committee on veterans affairs. If that item is completed, we will then take up item No. 11 on today's order paper, which is the continuation of the debate on the resolution introduced by the Minister of Agriculture dealing with agricultural development.

On Thursday we would commence with the budget resolutions. If they are concluded during the course of that day we would then take up the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. On Friday we would deal with the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. Monday would be private members' day.

Mr. Chevrier: It was brought to my attention just before the house leader announced the business that there was some difficulty in connection with the amendments to the pension bill. I can assure the house leader at once that we on this side of the house give our consent to considering the bill as has been outlined.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, this group is also very willing to agree to the minister's proposal in this respect.

Mr. Speaker: In view of what has been said, would the house wish to now order that short notice be accepted tomorrow?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

STATEMENT BY RIGHT HON. JOHN G. DIEFENBAKER, P.C., Q.C., M.P., PRIME MINISTER OF CANADA, TO THE DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE, THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 23/61

I welcome you to this resumed session of the conference. My colleagues and I appreciate that you have come at a season when it is difficult for you to leave your capitals because of the meetings of your respective legislatures or the preparations for them. The fact that all are here is a testimony to the importance of the business before the conference.

Je vous souhaite la bienvenue à cette reprise de notre conférence. Mes collègues et moi savons bien qu'il vous a fallu vous arranger pour venir à Ottawa à un moment de l'année où il vous est difficile à tous de quitter vos propres capitales, soit parce que les assemblées législatives sont en session, soit parce que vous êtes en train de vous y préparer. Le fait que vous soyez tous venus à cette conférence souligne l'importance des questions que nous allons discuter.

All will be agreed that it is desirable that decisions be taken soon with respect to the fiscal arrangements for the period to follow March 31st, 1962, the necessary legislation for which the Federal Government hopes and desires to introduce at the present session of Parliament.

This is the third stage of the Conference which opened last July and resumed in October. The discussion of the fiscal relations between the Federal and Provincial Governments, and of other related matters, has throughout benefited each of us. Each and all Governments have serious financial problems. Each must recognize its heavy responsibilities and at the same time the obligation to take into account the problems of the others who are here. The Dominion Government fully recognizes the burdens and responsibilities resting not only on Provincial Governments but on municipal authorities as well and takes into account the sources of funds that are available to the Provinces and to their creations, the municipalities.

The Federal Government has given proof of its recognition of the financial problems resting on the Provinces and the municipalities and of its desire to aid them. It has enlarged tremendously the payments made out of the Federal Treasury to or for the benefit of the Provinces. Indeed, the conditional and unconditional payments and abatements provided by the Federal Government in the present fiscal year amount to $1,283 million compared to $664 million four years ago. The Federal payments and abatements to or for the benefit of the Provinces have thus practically doubled in this short period. In thus enlarging the aid to the Provinces and thereby easing the burden on Provinces and municipalities, the Federal Government has incurred substantial budgetary deficits. The Provinces must recognize that the Federal Government has burdens too, and must in its policies retain the confidence of the investing public.

The July meeting was largely devoted to having the Provinces state their positions and their claims. In aggregate the claims advanced by them would have increased the financial burdens on the Federal treasury by more than $2 billion per annum, a responsibility which the Federal Government is in no position to assume. At the October meeting, I advanced on behalf of the Federal Government certain suggestions intended for discussion, rather than as firm proposals. All the Premiers commented in detail upon them. At the close of the October meeting, we undertook to take into consideration the views expressed by the Premiers. We have done so. The flexible attitude exhibited by the Federal Government was commented on favourably as the October meeting approached its close. We have endeavoured to apply a like flexible attitude to the further intensive study made since then of our mutual problems in the fiscal area.

The two principal elements in fiscal relations between the Federal and Provincial Governments, which we have fully recognized in previous discussions, have been the sharing of the three direct tax fields which the Dominion and the Provinces jointly occupy, and the equalization arrangements by which Parliament provides direct assistance to those Provinces that are in a weaker fiscal position than others. Some means must be found for dealing with both of these aspects. In particular, the Federal Government agrees that the principle of equalization must be preserved. Furthermore, the element of stabilization will be retained. The proposal which I would now submit on behalf of the Dominion Government will take these elements into account and the new arrangements will cover a period of five years.

The joint occupation by the Federal and Provincial Governments of the three tax fields—personal income taxes, corporation income taxes and succession duties—inevitably creates problems. The present system of tax rentals has achieved, in the case of the eight renting Provinces, a measure of tax uniformity and has simplified collection. The tax rental agreements, however, have severely restricted the Provincial Governments in meeting their financial problems and have deprived them of the necessary flexibility. Moreover, both before and after entering into the rental agreements with the Federal Government, the Provinces have complained that the rental payments to them are quite inadequate.

The agreements which they signed, with effect April 1st, 1957, defined the rent in the following proportions:

(a) 10 per cent of the yield from the personal income tax,

(b) 9 percentage points of corporate taxable income, and

(c) 50 per cent of the yield from the succession duty or similar tax.

The present Federal Government took account of these complaints even though the agreements were in effect and binding and, without obligation to do so, Parliament raised from 10 to 13 per cent the Provincial share of the yield from the personal income tax effective April 1st, 1958. In the intervening three fiscal years, this increase has added $191 million to Provincial revenues and has added equivalent cost to the Federal Treasury.

The discussions last year have made it clear that it would be difficult to reach agreement upon another such rental formula, and equally clear that the Provinces should have more freedom than the tax rental system offered in their view for them to meet their financial needs.

Accordingly, the Federal Government proposes to discontinue the tax rental system when it expires on March 31st, 1962. It will thus be open to and up to any of the provinces to impose whatever taxes, in the three jointly occupied fields, they consider to be necessary to meet their respective financial responsibilities. They will exercise their constitutional right to impose, vary and adjust their levies from time to time as may be necessary in the light of their responsibilities to their Provincial taxpayers and without recourse to the Federal Government. Thus there will be a return to the active responsibilities which the Constitution confers upon both levels of government under the Federal system.

The termination of the tax rental system does not mean, however, that there cannot be a simplified or unified system of tax collection with the advantages it offers. The Federal Government is prepared to undertake the collection of the personal income tax or the corporation tax, or both, for any Provinces which so desire, on condition that the Province under its laws defines the tax base, i.e., taxable income, to be identical at all times with the Federal definition. It will, of course, rest entirely with each Province to establish the rates of the tax which it will impose. One joint return form will be employed for both Federal and Provincial taxes, thus simplifying the task of the taxpayer. Although this service will cost some millions of dollars, it will be provided by the Federal Government to the Provinces without charge.

Parliament has replaced the Dominion succession duty with an estate tax. The Provinces do not possess the constitutional power to enact an estate tax which the Federal Government could collect on their behalf. The Federal Government has no desire to undertake the collection of a Provincial succession duty along with its estate tax because a succession duty involves many detailed problems, both for the taxpayer and for the administration, which it was intended to avoid by adopting the estate tax. The Federal government will, in the case of any Province which chooses to impose a succession duty or similar tax, pay to such Province half of the yield from the Federal estate tax in that Province, calculated in the same way as under the present rental agreements. Should any Province levy a succession duty, we shall be prepared to make the same abatement as at present.

Returning to the Provinces the responsibility to levy their own direct taxes raises the question as to the extent of withdrawal by the Federal Government from the personal and corporation income tax fields. The Federal Government has given very careful consideration to this question. It must continue to discharge its vast responsibilities, to provide equalization payments and also to pay the Federal share of the many programmes now jointly borne by both levels of govern ment, which this year amount to some $44(million. It is simply not possible for the Federal Government to discharge these responsibilities and at the same time comply with the demands of some Provinces for mathematically equal sharing in the personal income tax and corporation tax. The Federal Government, after intensive study and consideration, has decided that it should not withdraw from the corporation tax field beyond the scale of the abatements now allowed in the law. It will, however, withdraw progressively and substantially from the personal income tax field in favour of the Provinces. There are good reasons for this choice. The yield from the corporation tax is subject to wider fluctuations than the yield from the tax on personal income, which has shown a steady rate of growth. The latter is, therefore, a much more reliable form of tax for the Provinces to use. Moreover, the standard rate already provided for in the corporation tax is proportionately larger than that in the personal income tax and corporation profits are generally regarded as somewhat more national in scope and origin than personal incomes and therefore more appropriate for taxation by the Dominion.

Under the system of tax collection rather than rental agreements, there will no longer be abatements. The Federal withdrawal will take the form of a straight federal tax reduction. It will then rest with each Provincial Government to determine its rates of tax in these fields.

Accordingly the Federal Government will ask Parliament for legislation to provide, after April 1st, 1962:

(a) for payment to any Province not imposing a succession duty or similar tax, of 50 per cent of the yield from time to time from the Federal estate tax in that Province;

(b) for reducing the Federal corporation tax by the present 9 percentage points of taxable income, which would be a diminution in the federal tax of about 22 per cent;

(c) for reducing the Federal personal income tax progressively as follows:

(i) for the first year by 16 per cent of its level at that time,
(ii) for the second year by 17 per cent,
(iii) for the third year by 18 per cent,
(iv) for the fourth year by 19 per cent, and
(v) for the final year by 20 per cent.

With respect both to corporation and personal income taxes, the proposal is to reduce the rates below levels that would otherwise prevail at the times specified. Parliament cannot bind itself for five years in advance not to vary the rates of income taxes. It may be essential in the national interest to introduce various budgetary changes that are now unpredictable.

In terms of comparison with the tax rental formula of 10—9—50, which came into effect on April 1st, 1957, and the existing formula of 13—9—50 introduced by the present Federal Government, the formula now proposed will by 1966 become a 20—9—50 formula. Moreover, there will be no restriction on the freedom of each Province to establish its rates of tax as it may choose.

At present the equalization formula is based upon raising the per capita yields of standard taxes to the average of the two Provinces with the highest per capita yield. The Federal Government is convinced that this formula needs to be improved in two respects if it is to serve the purpose over the long run of meeting fiscal need on the part of those Provinces in a relatively weak fiscal position, while preserving equity for all. The present formula disregards sources of Provincial revenue other than the three standard direct taxes. The present Government has had to supplement it by introducing the Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Grants as it has proven to be an inadequate base for determining fiscal need. Furthermore, it entirely ignores the wide variation in the revenue derived from natural resources. In the interests of equity and fairness, we now propose that for the purpose of determining equalization payments, the formula should include not only the yields from three standard taxes (with the increasing rates for personal income tax outlined above) but as well one half of the three-year moving average of gross natural resource revenues as determined by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics. The reason only half of these revenues is provided is to make allowance for the variation in the rates of tax or charge imposed by various Provinces, and to avoid discouraging the development of these sources of revenue. As well, this will permit account being taken of these revenues which arise from the disposal of resources in a manner that should not be brought fully to account in respect of any particular year.

The second principal change that we intend to introduce is to equalize over this broader base I have described, up to the national average of the revenues in question rather than up to the yield in the two highest yielding Provinces. We believe that the combination of these two factors will produce a more equitable result over a long period.

Accordingly the equalization formula will be based on the national average per capita return from a combination of the standard taxes at the progressively increased rates as proposed and 50 per cent of the three-year average of natural resource revenue. The equalization payments will thus ensure to each province the national average return from these revenue sources and will grow as revenues expand.

In order to ensure that the equalization payments calculated on this broader base up to the national average shall not leave any Province worse off than under the present arrangements, we propose to incorporate into the equalization formula two guarantees:

(a) No Province entitled to equalization under the national average formula shall be worse off than it would be under a continuation of the present equalization formula and tax rental agreements, including the Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Grants. Thus Provinces with substantial fiscal need are fully protected.

(b) No Province will receive less in total than it has received on the average in the final two years of the current agreements.

These guarantees will ensure not only that the equalization factor shall increase in general in accordance with the national average of the yield of these major revenue sources, but that it will increase for those Provinces with greater fiscal need as rapidly as it would have increased under the existent agreements.

The Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Grants, introduced by the present Federal Government effective April 1st, 1958, have carried the principle of meeting fiscal need farther than it had ever been carried before. The sum of $100 million was appropriated by Parliament to be paid to the four Atlantic Provinces over a four-year period at the rate of $25 million per annum on the basis agreed upon by them, viz., $7½ million each to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland and $2½ million to Prince Edward Island. In the three intervening years, a total of $75 million has been paid to the Atlantic Provinces as follows: $22½ million each to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Newfoundland and $7½ million to Prince Edward Island. The existing Federal legislation will continue these grants for one further year.

The Federal Government believes that the Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Grants have rendered an enduring service to the Atlantic area in assisting the Governments of each of the Provinces to improve the standard of services to their respective people. The grants have also performed an inestimable role in meeting the problem of Provincial fiscal need in its more acute form. The Federal Government, therefore, proposes to continue the Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Grants, and to increase them, effective April 1st, 1962, from $25 to $35 million per annum for the ensuing five years, with the basis of distribution among the four Provinces being left for them to determine by agreement.

The payments to Newfoundland for the purpose of assisting Canada's newest Province to raise the level of its public services to that prevailing in the other three Atlantic Provinces will be continued for the five-year period at the present rate of $8 million per annum, over and above Newfoundland's share of the Atlantic Provinces Adjustment Grants.

At the meetings in October, emphasis was placed upon the stabilization element in the present arrangements which assures Provinces that their revenue from the rental value of the standard tax rates plus equalization will not in any year be permitted to fall below 95 per cent of the average of the two preceding years. We are prepared to incorporate a like stabilization element in the new arrangements.

We have given further thought to the means of achieving reciprocity of treatment in the position of Provincial Crown corporations and agencies under Federal sales and excise taxes and the position of Federal corporations and agencies under Provincial direct taxes on purchases. We are prepared to waive Federal immunity from taxation and instruct Federal corporations and agencies to pay Provincial purchase taxes and other similar taxes, on the understanding that Provincial corporations and agencies will be subject to Federal sales and excise taxes. We think that this is an equitable arrangement, being in accordance with the general principles followed in regard to the payment of Federal taxes on purchases by Federal departments. We think it is better than reciprocal exemptions as an administrative and accounting arrangement, preserving as it will a fairer relationship between Crown corporations and agencies in general and private businesses.

During the period covered by the current agreements, companies engaged in the forest industries in British Columbia and in Ontario have borne a considerably higher burden of tax rates than other industries. This is because of the combined effect of Federal income taxes and Provincial logging taxes. When the present arrangements were established, it was thought that the logging taxes would provide an alternative method of compensating the Provinces in some measure for the alienation of the natural resources in question. As events have turned out, however, the taxes have become excessive. It is, of course, recognized that the Province of Ontario is not subject to the commitments which were included in the current agreements for Provinces renting their Corporation taxes. There would appear to be no good purpose served by attempting to apportion responsibility for the situation that has been created by the interaction of the taxes of two governments. It is proposed instead that the Federal Government and the Provinces in question should seek agreement by which each will make a concession in the interest of resolving this problem.

The Federal Government will continue to pay to the Provinces to March 31st, 1962, half of the Federal income tax from corporations engaged in the distribution or generation and distribution to the public of electric energy, gas or steam.

It is again proposed that all joint Federal-Provincial programmes involving conditional grants or the sharing of cost be re-examined by the Continuing Committee of Officials with a view to consolidation, simplification and co-ordination where possible. To such programmes the Federal Government in the present fiscal year is contributing an estimated $440 million, as compared with $111 million four years ago. The Federal payments will increase vastly next year as the result of Quebec's adherence to the hospital insurance plan and other cost-sharing programmes; it is estimated that the total of these payments will reach $550 million.

The Federal Government proposes to ask Parliament to relinquish the remaining Federal legislative control over School Lands and School Lands Funds in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. Authority will be sought to enter into amending agreements with these three Provinces to delete Section 7 of the present agreements so as to confer upon these Provinces complete authority over their School Lands and their School Lands Funds.

The foregoing proposal is submitted by the Federal Government in the belief that it will form a satisfactory and workable basis for harmonious Dominion-Provincial fiscal relations for the five-year period commencing April 1st, 1962, and that it will contribute materially to the goals of strengthening the Provinces and through them the municipalities to meet their several responsibilities and will equalize opportunity among Canadians in all parts of this great country.

The Federal Government believes that these proposals represent a greatly improved plan of Federal-Provincial fiscal arrangements. In summary:

First: we have provided at Federal expense for a considerable increase in the Provincial share of the personal income tax. The additional Federal withdrawal from this tax field, by the final year of the arrangements, will have raised the Provincial share by more than 40 per cent above present levels. The proposed Federal withdrawals in the three shared tax fields are such that without increasing the over-all level of taxes, the Provinces can, by the end of the period, be assured of one-fifth of all personal income tax collections, more than one-fifth of all corporation income tax, and one-half of the estates tax. Considering the heavy responsibilities of the Federal Government, we consider this to be a generous proposal. In addition, the Provinces will be quite free to impose the rates of taxation which they find necessary and thus to increase the Provincial share of these tax fields beyond the amount represented by the Federal withdrawal.

Second: we have combined this greater freedom for the Provinces with procedures which offer the hope of simplicity and uniformity. We have done this by offering to collect without charge any of the above taxes at the rates the Provinces wish to impose, laying on them only this one single restriction that the tax base on which they impose their taxes must at all times correspond with that defined in Federal statutes. This we hope will greatly simplify the task of the Provinces and the problem for the taxpayers and will give the advantages of freedom while preserving administrative simplicity and efficiency.

Third: we have combined arrangements to guarantee greater flexibility and freedom in provincial finance with an improved formula for equalization which meets the problem of disparities in the field of Provincial revenues more completely and more realistically. The inclusion of a part of natural resource revenue in this formula recognizes and corrects in a practical way one of the greatest financial disabilities of some of the Provinces. There is no other single revenue source which we could have added to the equalization formula which would have done so much to equalize revenue sources or contributed so much to equity in the calculation of fiscal need. Our decision to move the basis of equalization to the national average is based on financial realism. Naturally Provinces like individuals would prefer to be equalized to the top, but no one can seriously contend that equalization to the top is a practicable goal.

Fourth: in addition to the recognition of the need for equalization based on a broader concept of equality and fiscal need, we have made additional, separate and special recognition of the peculiar disabilities of the Atlantic region. We have done so by increasing the level of these grants by 40 per cent.

We are convinced that this new framework and these main aspects of our proposals should assure a new era of harmonious Dominion-Provincial fiscal relations. These proposals are new in spirit but rest upon the sound principles of financial responsibility and independence of governments. We believe that they will contribute materially to the financial strength and independence of the Provinces and their municipalities and to equality of opportunity for Canadians in all parts of this great country. They will help us all to meet the tasks ahead. I commend them to your earnest consideration.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 1, 1961

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

TRADE

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CONSULTATION WITH HONG KONG AUTHORITIES

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inform the house that several senior Canadian officials, led by Mr. S. S. Reisman of the Department of Finance, will leave for Hong Kong today to consult with the Hong Kong authorities on various trade matters. The purpose of the consultations will be to consider problems associated with the rapid increase of importations of certain products from Hong Kong.

GRAIN

CONFERENCE TO EXPEDITE MOVEMENT THROUGH PACIFIC COAST PORTS

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I should like to advise the house that I have requested the Canadian wheat board to arrange a conference in Vancouver commencing on Monday next to explore ways and means of expanding the volume of grain which can be moved into and out of Pacific coast ports. The conference will be representative of the principal agencies concerned with the movement of grain from the prairies to the Pacific coast and the movement of this grain to terminal elevators and into ocean vessels.

Invitations have been extended to the following organizations: Canadian Pacific Railway, Canadian National Railways, Alberta wheat pool, United Grain Growers Limited, Saskatchewan wheat pool, Pacific group of elevators, Vancouver grain exchange, Vancouver merchants exchange, Vancouver chamber of shipping, shipping federation of British Columbia, trade union representatives, national harbours board, the port warden, the board of grain commissioners for Canada and the Canadian wheat board. It is my intention to attend the conference along with officers of my department.

I want to make the purpose of the conference clear. It is my hope that through the co-operation of the organizations and interests invited, ways and means can be worked out to increase the grain movement through Pacific coast ports. I am hopeful also that those who attend the conference will join in suggestions relating to long-range developments. I think it is the desire of all concerned that the full potential of the west coast grain movement be realized and that the capacity of west coast ports to receive and load grain is keeping abreast with market opportunities, particularly in the Far East.

The construction of the St. Lawrence seaway and additional storage capacity planned by the national harbours board at Montreal, along with private building in the outer St. Lawrence, have added greatly to the efficiency and the capacity of the St. Lawrence route. A new berth is being constructed at Churchill which will speed up the loading of ocean vessels at that port.

Elevator companies operating at Fort William and Port Arthur have work under way there which will improve the loading of grain and, particularly, the loading of ocean tonnage which comes to the lakehead.

Some years ago additional storage capacity was built at Halifax, and the Atlantic maritime ports are having one of the busiest seasons on record. It is the desire of the government that grain handling facilities at all our ports be brought up to the standards required of them in these times.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house will have heard the minister's statement with interest, and will support any steps the government may take to expedite and enlarge shipments of grain through Pacific ports, especially in view of recent reports from such ports that there have been delays in such shipments.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): We welcome the statement which has just been made by the minister, Mr. Speaker. We certainly hope that as a result of the conference there will be not only a speed-up in loadings through the port of Vancouver, but there will be also a discussion of the question of installing new and additional facilities. It is many, many years since there have been any extensions to the port of Vancouver. As a matter of fact the facilities of the port are less now than they were as a result of a fire many years ago. The facilities lost then have never been replaced.

In view not only of the recent complaints concerning delay in shiploadings, but also in view of the statements made within the past month that Vancouver cannot expect to have new lines coming in until port facilities are expanded, we certainly welcome this announcement. We hope satisfactory conclusions can be arrived at and that speedy action will be taken to implement those conclusions.

STARRED QUESTIONS

UNPLACED RADIO AND TELEVISION TECHNICIANS

Question No. 123—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Are there any radio and television technicians registered as unplaced applicants with the national employment service?
2. If so, how many in each category, and in what regions of Canada?

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 is as follows. There are no radio and television technicians as such registered with the national employment service. The answer to part 2 is answered by the answer to part 1.

SCHOLARSHIP GRANTS, ELLA ELIZABETH CLARK AND MASON WADE

Question No. 132—Mr. Pitman:

1. Has any federal department, corporation or council awarded any scholarship, grant-in-aid for study or publication, or research grant to an Ella Elizabeth Clark or to a Mason Wade in the past three years?
2. If so: (a) which agency, for what specific purposes, and under what statutory authority or regulation? (b) what is the nationality and address of Miss Clark and Mr. Wade?

Hon. Noel Dorion (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as it will be necessary to circularize a number of departments in order to secure this information, and as this will take some time, may I suggest that this question be made an order for return.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in respect of that question I should add that if the expression "council" therein refers to the Canada council, on the basis of previous experience and precedence that information cannot be procured. I set out these reasons in some detail on November 27, 1957, at page 1558 of Hansard and will not now repeat them.

Mr. Speaker: The house has heard the proposed limitation with respect to the word "council" as it appears in this question. In making it an order for return as suggested by the minister I assume it will be on those terms.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order for return.

[Mr. Winch.]

NEW HOSPITAL BUILDING, SPRINGHILL, N.S.

Question No. 150—Mr. Robichaud:

1. Has the Minister of Labour received a request from the Springhill miners wives' association for a grant toward the erection of a new 65-bed hospital building?
2. If so: (a) what decision has the government reached on this matter? (b) has the Minister of Labour made a reply to this request, and what is its nature?

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour):

1. A letter was received, dated February 6. The letter requested a new post office, armouries and hospital at Springhill.

2. The federal government, through the Minister of National Health and Welfare, has granted a sum of $178,360 toward a new hospital. This has been expanded by a provincial grant to bring the total of both grants to $445,000. The minister has acknowledged the letter written by the ladies and informed them that all matters that they have raised will receive careful study.

SUGGESTED TARIFF ON OIL IMPORTS, EASTERN CANADA

Question No. 151—Mr. Dumas:

1. Has the government received a communication from the president of the united mine workers, district 26, proposing a tariff of 1 cent per gallon on the importation of foreign oil into eastern Canada?
2. If so, has the government given any consideration to any such proposal, and what decision has been reached?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to No. 1 is yes. The answer to No. 2 is that when the government is in a position to announce its policy in this regard, it will be done.

UNEMPLOYMENT ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS

Question No. 154—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

How many persons are at the present time in receipt of payments under the federal and provincial unemployment assistance arrangements?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Under the terms of the unemployment assistance agreement, provinces may submit claims up to six months after the end of the month to which they relate. As a result the latest month for which complete figures are available is July, 1960. The number of persons assisted in that month was 334,746.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—EXHAUSTION OF BENEFITS

Question No. 155—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Does the unemployment insurance commission have any record of the number of unemployed persons who have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits?

2. If so, how many persons are in this category at the most recent date for which the record exists?

Mr. R. D. Thrasher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour):

1. A count is made, on a sample basis, following the close of each calendar year of the benefit periods exhausted during that year. This does not mean, however, that the persons concerned have necessarily run out of benefit because many of them requalify immediately for either regular or seasonal benefit.

2. The number of regular benefit periods that exhausted in 1959, the latest year for which figures are available, was 306,000.

CUSTOMS DUTY REMISSIONS

Question No. 159—Mr. Benidickson:

1. What class or kind of goods and what customs tariff classification was applicable, with respect to duty remissions to the undernoted companies reported in the public accounts for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1960: Canadian Fairbanks-Morse Company Limited, Montreal; Dietrich-Collins Equipment Limited, Vancouver; International Harvester Company of Canada Limited, Hamilton; Wm. Stairs, Son & Morrow Limited, Halifax?

2. Did an agency of the government make recommendations to the cabinet that all other importers of similar goods meeting the same conditions receive a like remission of customs duties?

3. Under which section of the Customs Act was the original valuation for duty established in each case?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of this question is rather involved but I think perhaps I can give it now rather than have it printed without being read. The answer is as follows.

Canadian Fairbanks-Morse Company Limited, Montreal; class or kind of goods, electric generators; customs tariff classification, item 445f; value for duty established under section 36 of the Customs Act.

Dietrich-Collins Equipment Limited, Vancouver; class or kind of goods, motor vehicles (trucks); customs tariff classification, item 438a; value for duty established under section 36 of the Customs Act.

International Harvester Company of Canada Limited, Hamilton; class or kind of goods, used production equipment, customs tariff classification, item 442; value for duty established under section 38 of the Customs Act.

Wm. Stairs, Son and Morrow Limited, Halifax, class or kind of goods, power shovel; customs tariff classification, item 427; value for duty established under section 36 of the Customs Act.

The answer to part 2 of the question is no, but had the same circumstances existed in respect of other importers, or were they to arise in future and be made known to the Department of National Revenue, it would have been or would be recommended that like remissions be granted to such importers.

The answer to part 3 is answered by the answer to part 1 above.

CANADIAN FREE PORTS

Question No. 160—Mr. Mitchell:

1. Are there any "free ports" now functioning in Canada?

2. If so: (a) what is the location of each of the said ports? (b) what was the volume of business in each of any such ports in 1960?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 is no and the answer to part 2 is answered by the answer to part 1.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—PERSONNEL

Question No. 161—Mr. McMillan:

1. What was the total number of employees on the headquarters staff of the St. Lawrence seaway during the year 1960, including engineers, secretaries, etc.?

2. During the year 1960, what was the number of permanent employees and casual employees employed by (a) the Welland canal section (b) the St. Lawrence river section?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the St. Lawrence seaway authority advise as follows:

In reply to part 1, as at December 31, 1960 there were 182 employees on the headquarters staff of the authority.

With reference to part 2, at December 31, 1960 on the Welland canal section there were 517 permanent and 91 casual employees. On the St. Lawrence river section there were 435 permanent and 45 casual employees.

CENSUS COMMISSIONER, FORT WILLIAM

Question No. 162—Mr. Badanai:

1. Has a census commissioner been appointed for the electoral district of Fort William?

2. If so, what is the name and address of the person appointed?

Mr. E. L. Morris (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the answer to part 1 is no and the answer to part 2 is answered by the answer to part 1.

MONTREAL EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE—PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT

Question No. 163—Mr. Lessard:

Is the right hon. the Prime Minister in a position to report to the house on the practical results of his visit on February 16 last with the executive committee of the city of Montreal?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would tell the hon. gentleman that there is nothing to report additional to what has already been placed before the house.

Starred Questions

BOUNDARY BAY AIRPORT, B.C.

Question No. 164—Mr. Taylor:

1. When did the Royal Canadian Air Force cease operations at Boundary Bay, and when did the signal corps assume control of the property?
2. What was the total cost of buildings, apart from housing units, constructed for the signal corps after the withdrawal of the R.C.A.F.?
3. What buildings and equipment were specifically constructed for the signal corps and what was the cost of same?
4. How many houses owned by the federal government are occupied by members of the signal corps?
5. What is the total value of all buildings constructed for the signal corps?
6. Has any consideration been given to locating an alternative site for the signal centre? If so, what consideration has been given, and who has been appointed to locate an alternative site?

Mr. Egan Chambers (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence):

1. July, 1946.

2. $314,200.

3.

The buildings and equipment specifically constructed for the signal corps and costs involved are:

Chlorinator building	$ 1,100
Sewage pump house	400
Standby generator building	6,000
Operations building	295,000
Electrical switch house	3,500
Sewage pumping station	3,500
Dyke pump house	3,500
Petrol, oil and lubricant storage	1,200
Antennas	300,000
Installed signal equipment	550,000
	$1,164,200

4. 116.

5. $1,548,517, including $1,234,317 for housing.

6. Yes. However, following a detailed survey carried out by army technical personnel, it was concluded that the cost involved in relocating these facilities would not be justified.

BANK OF CANADA SALES TO INVESTMENT ACCOUNT

Question No. 165—Mr. Martin (Essex East):

1. Did the Bank of Canada sell securities in the amount of $40 million to the securities investment account?
2. If so, was this transaction in the field of monetary policy, or alternatively, in the field of debt management?
3. Was the government consulted about this transaction?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, for reasons of public policy which I think will be obvious to hon. members, it has never been the practice to disclose individual transactions of purchase or sale in relation to the securities investment account. Only the net change in the aggregate position of the account is recorded from month to month in the comptroller's statement published in the Canada Gazette.

The securities investment account is used by the Minister of Finance on behalf of the government as a means of employing temporary cash surpluses and assisting in bond refund operations. It therefore falls within the scope of debt management.

HARRY HALLIWELL AND RALPH HEDLIN

Question No. 166—Mr. Pickersgill:

1. Is Harry Halliwell, of the Toronto Telegram, employed by the Department of Agriculture in any capacity?
2. If so, what are the terms of employment including remuneration, and what duties is he to perform?
3. Is Ralph Hedlin employed by the Canadian wheat board in any capacity?
4. If so, what are the terms of his employment including remuneration, and what duties is he expected to perform?
5. Was Mr. Hedlin employed at the suggestion of the Minister of Agriculture?

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the answers to the five parts of this question are as follows:

1. Mr. Halliwell, a graduate in economics of the University of Saskatchewan, formerly an editorial writer and reporter with the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix, reporter, agricultural writer and editorial writer with the Winnipeg Tribune and recently of the Toronto Telegram, is employed under contract by the Department of Agriculture as approved by treasury board and minute 574516 of January 23, 1961.

2. Mr. Halliwell's period of employment is from February 1 to July 1, 1961. His remuneration is $275 per week. Mr. Halliwell's duties are to study the department's informational activities and to advise on the implementation of an effective program of information to acquaint the public with departmental policies and activities and research findings.

3. Mr. Ralph Hedlin of Winnipeg is associated with the Canadian wheat board in the field of public information.

4. It is not the policy of the Canadian wheat board to make public information regarding the remuneration of its employees nor the basis on which they were employed.

5. Yes. The report of the Bracken commission inquiry into the distribution of railway box cars reported that the public relation activities of the Canadian wheat board had not kept the public as fully informed as desirable with respect to its problems, its efforts to solve them, the complications of its task and the important details of its procedures. Since this observation is applicable to all wheat board operations, and since farmers are entitled to know what is being done by the board on their behalf, the professional advice of Mr. Hedlin, formerly assistant editor of the Country Guide, formerly editorial writer for the Winnipeg Free Press and now a freelance writer and broadcaster on agricultural matters, was suggested to the wheat board for this purpose.

"AGENDA 1961"

Question No. 168—Mr. Tremblay:

1. How many copies of the "Agenda 1961", distributed free of charge by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to members of the House of Commons, were printed?
2. How many persons, outside members of the House of Commons, have received a free copy of the said document?
3. Who printed this agenda, and at what price?
4. (a) Have tenders been called for the said printing contract? (b) what are the names of the printing firms invited to submit tenders? (c) what was the amount of each tender?

(Translation):

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of that question is as follows:

1. The Pierre Desmarais printing firm issues an agenda every year. As a tribute to the C.B.C., and to mark the 25th anniversary of the corporation, it decided this year to feature "pictures of the C.B.C." The Pierre Desmarais firm printed its own run plus an extra 1,000 copies which were purchased by the C.B.C., at $1.50 each. These copies do not carry any advertising for the Desmarais firm except for the usual identification of the printer.

2. The 1,000 copies were distributed free of charge.

3. The Pierre Desmarais printing firm. The total cost is $1,858.85, handling and mailing costs included.

4. There was no need to call for tenders since the C.B.C. was using an extra run of a publication that was not its own.

"EDITION SPECIALE"—MODERATOR'S TRAVELLING EXPENSES

Question No. 169—Mr. Tremblay:

1. Does the moderator of the program "Edition Speciale", televised on the French network each Sunday night, receive special remuneration for travelling expenses?
2. If so, what is the amount of such remuneration?

(Translation):

Mr. M. J. A. Lambert (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, since the answer to that question would require that the C.B.C. obtain some information from its French network, may I ask that the question stand until next week? The same remarks apply to question 170.

(Text):

CKY-FM, WINNIPEG—PROTESTS

Question No. 171—Mr. Benidickson:

1. How many communications have been received by the board of broadcast governors from (a) known T.V. service persons wanting to instal antennas, and (b) other persons, protesting that approval of an application by CKY, Winnipeg, for FM broadcast rights on frequency 103.1 might interfere with reception by viewers in Manitoba from Pembina, North Dakota, T.V. station KCND?
2. Which frequencies other than 103.1 might be provided under international treaty arrangements or otherwise for assignment by the board of broadcast governors to a Winnipeg area applicant seeking a licence for a frequency modulation station?
3. (a) Has the board of broadcast governors received any information that a new U.S.A. defence radar station near Baudette, Minnesota, will be utilizing an FM frequency likely to interfere with T.V. reception from channel 7, Winnipeg, to the detriment of Canadian T.V. viewers in the Rainy river district of Ontario? (b) if so, does the board of broadcast governors understand that a decision respecting frequency 103.1 unnecessarily inconsiderate respecting United States T.V. station KCND, North Dakota, would tend to nullify Canadian protests to the U.S. government against the proposed American use of a frequency at Baudette, Minnesota, that would eliminate reception at Rainy river of T.V. programs from a Canadian source?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): The answer to this question is involved, and I should like to make it an order for return. However, I have not had an opportunity to discuss this with the hon. member who asked the question, so in the meantime I should like to ask that it be allowed to stand.

Question stands.

SOLITARY CONFINEMENT, B.C. PENITENTIARIES

Question No. 172—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1956, has any inmate in the British Columbia penitentiary been kept in dissociation for a period of time longer than the normal 21-day maximum?
2. If so, how many inmates, for what period of time, and for what reason in each case?
3. Has any of the said inmates been so dissociated on more than one occasion, and, if so, what were the reasons in each case?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Compilation of the answer to this question will require considerable research and the information will be of considerable length. I have discussed this matter with the hon. member concerned, who has agreed with the suggestion that this be made an order for return, and I so move.

Mr. Speaker: Then this will be made an order for return.

Order for return.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

SCHOLARSHIP GRANTS, ELLA ELIZABETH CLARK AND MASON WADE

Question No. 132—Mr. Pitman:

1. Has any federal department, corporation or council awarded any scholarship, grant-in-aid for study or publication, or research grant to an Ella Elizabeth Clark or to a Mason Wade in the past three years?

2. If so: (a) which agency, for what specific purposes, and under what statutory authority or regulation? (b) what is the nationality and address of Miss Clark and Mr. Wade?

SOLITARY CONFINEMENT, B.C. PENITENTIARIES

Question No. 172—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1956, has any inmate in the British Columbia penitentiary been kept in dissociation for a period of time longer than the normal 21-day maximum?

2. If so, how many inmates, for what period of time, and for what reason in each case?

3. Has any of the said inmates been so dissociated on more than one occasion, and, if so, what were the reasons in each case?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ORDERS IN COUNCIL FIXING DUTIES

Motion No. 50—Mr. Benidickson:

For copies of orders issued by the Minister of National Revenue since December 1, 1958, under the provisions of section 38 of the Customs Act for the purposes of fixing duties.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): May this motion stand until I have completed the inquiries to which the hon. member agreed the other day?

Mr. Speaker: Stand.

Motion stands.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COVERAGE INSTRUCTIONS—FORESTRY

Motion No. 61—Mr. Racine:

For a copy of coverage instructions C-411, C-440 to C-444 inclusive, and of any amendments thereto, with regard to employment in forestry, as contained in the new insurance coverage manual issued in October 1955 by the unemployment insurance commission together with the corresponding instructions contained in the insurance coverage manual issued in January 1950.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I object to this motion for the same reasons I put forward with regard to a similar motion on Monday last.

Mr. H. J. Robichaud (Gloucester): I understand that this decision of the minister is not debatable, and although we regret the decision, in the circumstances, with the permission of the hon. member for Beauce, I would ask that the motion be withdrawn.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: It will have to stand until the hon. member in whose name it appears on the order paper is present to withdraw it.

Motion stands.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COVERAGE INSTRUCTIONS—SERVICE CONTRACTS

Motion No. 62—Mr. Roberge:

For a copy of coverage instructions C-201, C-210 to C-226 inclusive, C-591 to C-595 inclusive, C-614 to C-616 inclusive, and C-822 and of any amendments thereto, with regard to the contract of service, as contained in the new insurance coverage manual issued in October 1955 by the unemployment insurance commission, together with the corresponding instructions contained in the insurance coverage manual issued in January 1950.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I object to this motion for the same reasons I gave with regard to a similar motion on Monday last.

Mr. Roberge: Of course I regret the minister's decision, but in the circumstances I ask for the motion to be withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COVERAGE INSTRUCTIONS—FAMILY EMPLOYMENT

Motion No. 63—Mr. Roberge:

For a copy of coverage instructions C-551, C-561 to C-563 inclusive, C-571 to C-576 inclusive, and of any amendments thereto, with regard to family employment, as contained in the new insurance coverage manual issued in October 1955 by the unemployment insurance commission, together with the corresponding instructions contained in the insurance coverage manual issued in January 1950.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): My objection to this motion is based on the same reasons as my previous objection.

Mr. Roberge: Why not say "ditto"?

Mr. Speaker: With the consent of the mover the motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COVERAGE INSTRUCTIONS—CASUAL EMPLOYMENT

Motion No. 64—Mr. Bourget:

For a copy of coverage instructions C-272, C-321, C-472, C-601 to C-605 inclusive, C-712 to C-717 inclusive, C-830 to C-832 inclusive, and of any amendments thereto, with regard to casual employment, as contained in the new insurance coverage manual issued in October 1955 by the unemployment insurance commission, together with the corresponding instructions contained in the insurance coverage manual issued in January 1950.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): I register the same objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bourget: Like the hon. member for Megantic, I should like to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Speaker: With the consent of the mover the motion is dropped.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

NUCLEAR REACTOR CONSTRUCTION, INDIA

Motion No. 65—Mr. Regier:

For a copy of all letters, reports, or other submissions made to the government in connection with the building of such nuclear reactor in India as was made possible by Canadian participation.

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the correspondence in question appears to relate to a lengthy planning and construction period, spanning some six years in all, perhaps the questioner could be more specific about the particular papers he wishes to have produced in order to facilitate an answer.

Mr. Regier: Mr. Speaker, may I draw the permission of the house to withdraw the motion in order that I might reword it?

Mr. Speaker: Yes; since it has not been proposed it may be dropped at the instance of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

FLOOD CONTROL PROJECT, FAIRFORD RIVER, MAN.

Motion No. 66—Mr. Hellyer (for Mr. Pickersgill):

For a copy of the order in council dated October 28, 1960, authorizing the federal contribution to the flood control project on the Fairford river in Manitoba.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Minister of Agriculture): I have a copy of the order in council; I should like to table it.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO DATES OF BY-ELECTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can tell the house before he leaves for overseas the date of the four by-elections in Canada, or of any of them.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my hon. friend's curiosity. In due time it will be satisfied.

Mr. Pearson: We are anxious to get four more members.

PROVISION OF RAILWAY TIMETABLES FOR MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. S. Speakman (Wetaskiwin): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Will the minister ask the Canadian National Railways to supply the House of Commons with railway timetables, as has been the custom in past years?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I will be very pleased to do so.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—INQUIRY AS TO U.S. OFFER OF POLARIS MISSILES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the minister bring the house up to date on the offer of the United States government of Polaris missiles to NATO? Has this been discussed by the NATO council? Has Canada taken a position in opposition to the Polaris missile?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this whole question is under study, and I am not in a position to make any report.

Mr. Argue: Discussed by the NATO council?

Mr. Green: I am not free to disclose the discussions that take place among council members. There is unlikely to be an early announcement on this question.

Mr. Argue: Canada has not taken a position yet?

Mr. Green: When Canada takes a position in the NATO council that can be announced we will be very glad to indicate it to the house.

CHURCHILL, MAN.—STATEMENT ON LOSS BY FIRE AT ROCKET BASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is the minister now in a position to advise the house as to the extent of the fire damage at the rocket launching site near Fort Churchill?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): I received notice of a question in this regard from the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson) and I give the following answer.

The buildings seriously damaged in the rocket research facilities were the assembly area, including the garage portion and the test equipment area; the lunch room and the generator room adjacent to the assembly room. The fire travelled along the tunnel and involved the block house. There was minor damage to the launch tower itself owing to the activities of the firefighters.

The equipment destroyed included the technical stores test apparatus in the assembly area, two 60 KVA and two 50 KVA generators in the generator room, and the fire control equipment in the block house.

The buildings and equipment were entirely United States owned. There may have been some Canadian equipment in the lunch room or in the assembly area, and there may also have been some D.R.B. equipment in the block house, but this is not yet known.

A board of inquiry is being convened by the commander at Fort Churchill, with a Canadian officer as president and a United States officer as a member of the board.

The Canadian losses are relatively insignificant in comparison with the total loss, although it is impossible at this time to calculate the amount with any degree of certainty.

Mr. Hellyer: A supplementary question. Can the minister say whether, as a result of the fire, any of the D.R.B. planned programs will be delayed?

Mr. Harkness: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think there is no question but that some of the planned programs will be interfered with and delayed to some extent, yes.

Mr. Frank McGee (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the hue of the hon. member for Trinity (Mr. Hellyer), I wonder whether the minister would be prepared to recommend a Florida tan for all hon. members?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): May I say only that I am envious.

PETAWAWA—REPORTED COMPULSORY MEMBERSHIP IN YACHT CLUB

On the orders of the day:

Mrs. Jean Casselman (Grenville-Dundas): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister anything further to report on the continued newspaper comments with respect to the Petawawa yacht club?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in view of allegations with regard to membership fees in the Petawawa yacht club being paid under compulsion, which is contrary to army instructions, it has been decided to send two senior officers from army headquarters and one senior officer from headquarters central command to Petawawa to investigate thoroughly this matter of internal army administration. Brigadier H. E. T. Doucet, deputy adjutant general, and Lieutenant Colonel R. H. Webb from the directorate of administration, army headquarters, Ottawa, and Lieutenant Colonel J. F. Merner from central command have been assigned to these duties.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—IMPLEMENTATION OF DOUBLE DEPRECIATION PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister tell the house which minister will be in charge of the program having to do with the application of the delayed principle of double depreciation proposed a long time ago by the Minister of Finance to deal with unemployment? Which department of government will deal with this proposal?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the information has been furnished on previous occasions. In any event, it is the Department of Labour.

[Later:]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question arising out of the reply given a few moments ago by the Prime Minister. Now that it is clear that the Minister of Labour will be responsible for the program arising out of the proposal for double depreciation to assist in relieving unemployment in Canada, will the minister now announce to the house what are the depressed areas that are to be covered by this program and what are the criteria for a municipality or for an area in order to benefit from this proposal, the only proposal of this kind—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): The answer is "pretty soon".

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Two and a half months.

OTTAWA—REPORTED WORKING CONDITIONS FOR WAITRESSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has his attention been drawn to an article in the Ottawa Journal of February 28 of this year in the column "Below the Hill" by Mr. Tim Burke, which has to do with the working conditions of waitresses in a certain restaurant in Ottawa and which reads in part as follows—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not know how the hon. member relates working conditions in a restaurant in Ottawa to the responsibilities of any minister, unless it happens to be the parliamentary restaurant, in which event the question would be out of order.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, I think it does involve the Department of Labour because unemployment insurance comes under that department.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member asking a question of the Minister of Labour about uemployment insurance? Perhaps if the hon. member would pose his question we could then deal with it.

Mr. Howard: Apparently there were complaints about daily inspections and working conditions and so on, and in the result all the girls were fired. Because of having been fired they are unable to obtain unemployment insurance benefits by reason of the activity of the employer in the first instance. Has the minister's attention been drawn to this matter, and will he undertake an inquiry?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, my attention has not been drawn to this incident. If the hon. member will give me the information I will be very glad to look into it.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR SPEEDING UP OF REFUNDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erhart Regier (Burnaby-Coquitlam): In the light of the present levels of unemployment and therefore the need to enhance the purchasing power of Canadians, I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue whether the government is giving consideration to ways and means of speeding up the refunds due Canadians under the provisions of the Income Tax Act.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, of course this government has always given consideration to all problems which affect the general welfare of the country, and we are doing a remarkably good job in looking after our people.

In so far as any refunds are concerned, if the returns have been properly filed and completed, they go through almost automatically. If there is delay in getting the refunds forwarded, the returns have required further checking. I would appreciate the hon. member, or any other hon. member, bringing to my attention any case where a refund is delayed, and I will make it my personal business to see that the problem is followed through at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Regier: May I ask the minister whether he is aware that refunds are over two months delayed at the present time?

Mr. Nowlan: I may say, Mr. Speaker, there are refunds which are delayed for a year; the returns have been so inaccurate in the information supplied that it has been impossible to discover what the amount should be. Normally I think it is a matter of three weeks. If there is a longer delay than that there is some fault somewhere, perhaps with an official of the department or possibly in the return, and I should like to have the matter brought to my attention.

HOUSING

N.H.A.—INQUIRY AS TO VOLUME OF LENDING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Rodrigue Bourdages (Laval): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. I should like to ask the minister whether the volume of National Housing Act lending that he announced on February 6 has been maintained to date.

Hon. D. J. Walker (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the hon. member, during the first eight weeks of 1961, from January 1 to February 24, requests for loans reached the highest level in the history of Canada, except for a corresponding period of eight weeks in 1958.

Activity during the week of February 24, 1961 was extremely buoyant, with 1,205 requests for National Housing Act loans. This brought the total for the first eight weeks of the year to 7,381, compared with 650 in the same period last year. Of the 1961 total, the life insurance and trust and loan companies received 2,921 requests and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation 4,460.

When these loans become starts, Mr. Speaker, they will offer employment in the first eight weeks alone to 35,000 men; in other words, that number of men will receive employment as a result of this action.

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, without in any way dealing with the subject matter, I wonder whether we are to expect these day to day reports on the part of the minister in an attempt to create the impression that all is well in the housing industry.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member is rising on a point of order with respect to the reply I could hear him, but I think he should indicate what point of order is involved before making statements.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): He cannot with this noise, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Garland: Mr. Speaker, we saw one example yesterday and we see another example today—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I take it the hon. member for Nipissing is rising to object to something that has just taken place. I do not see that there is a point of order, but if there is one perhaps he would point it out. If he feels there is a breach of our practice in what has been done, he is at liberty to draw attention to it.

Mr. Garland: Mr. Speaker, we also had another example a month ago—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is rising with respect to something that has just happened in the house, and he should confine his remarks to that matter.

Mr. Garland: Then, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that housing starts were only up 4.7 per cent in January, which represents approximately 175 starts—

Some hon. Members: Order.

An hon. Member: What is the point of order?

Mr. Garland: I have been denied the right to put the point of order. I am directing a question to the minister.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Closure.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is now asking a supplementary question.

Mr. Garland: In view of the fact that in the month of January there were only approximately 175 more starts than there were in the same month last year, and in view of the fact that last year was the poorest year for starts in several years, can the minister tell us the number of starts that were made in the month of February?

Mr. Walker: The figures for the starts, of course, are slower in being obtained and have to be collected from all over Canada. I am giving the facts as we know them in Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, but if it will help the hon. member I am delighted to say that in the same eight week period the number of loans approved by lenders and the corporation—this means that the builder can start immediately—totalled 6,011 compared with 526 a year ago. The figure for the eight week period this year is probably the largest number of approved loans in the history of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in the same period, and there is no reason why the builder cannot start immediately once the loan has been approved. Does that answer the hon. member?

Mr. Garland: In answer to the minister, may I say it does not answer the hon. member because an attempt is being made to create the impression that all is well when in fact all is not well.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. member will reserve his comments for the time when the issue can be debated. It is not a matter for debate now.

CRIMINAL CODE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT TO PERMIT PROVINCIAL LOTTERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. Deschatelets (Maisonneuve-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Did the minister have any discussions with the premier of any province last week on the question of an amendment to the Criminal Code to provide for provincial or national lotteries? If so, will the minister comment on those discussions?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, a week or so ago I replied to a question regarding this matter, and at that time I said that the matter was under review and when any policy decision by the government had been taken it would be announced in due course. From time to time there are discussions between various ministers and their opposite numbers in the provinces or perhaps other provincial ministers on matters of this kind. Any such discussions would be of an informal and unofficial nature, and I have nothing to report.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY

REPORTED INCREASE IN INSURANCE RATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport). Mr. Speaker, with respect to the inquiry by the hon. member for Assiniboia about a report regarding an increase in insurance rates for shipping using the St. Lawrence seaway, I understand that an increase is contemplated but is not solely related to the St. Lawrence seaway. It is for inland navigation as well as navigation on the great lakes.

I should emphasize that these rates are not under the control of the government but are set by the private companies which write the insurance in the light of shipping experience. The only thing we can do is to ensure that in so far as our governmental facilities are concerned we have done everything possible to avoid the risk of accidents, and this we most certainly have done and will continue to do.

The St. Lawrence seaway authority advises me that while there were 110 vessels involved in accidents within the seaway proper during the 1959 navigation season, there were only 41 vessels involved in accidents in the same area during the 1960 navigation season.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

STATEMENT RESPECTING PROTESTS AGAINST INTENDED LAY-OFFS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the question asked by the hon. member for Assiniboia concerning a letter from the secretary-treasurer of the employees' local federation of the Canadian National Railways system in Edmonton and the two questions on the same matter by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, may I say that I duly received a copy of the letter and referred it to the management of the Canadian National Railways, who inform me there is not a nation-wide lay-off scheduled to take place on March 17, nor is there any large scale lay-off in contemplation. I may say that the hon. member for Edmonton West has also spoken to me about this matter.

The management does point out, however, that the level of the working force of the railway will vary both upward and downward under the influence of seasonal requirements and traffic volume. There are some reductions, approximately 30, being made at various points throughout the mountain region because of lack of work.

With respect to the telegrams received by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, I made inquiries of the management and I am informed that five car helpers at Fort Frances are affected and three labourers at Rainy River.

Both hon. members made some reference to the Maintenance of Railway Operation Act, and I am assured by the management that the provisions of the act have been scrupulously observed.

MONCTON—REPORTED INTENTION TO CEASE MAKING MAJOR REPAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. J. Michaud (Kent, N.B.): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I regret that I did not have time to send him notice of this question, so perhaps he would take it as notice and answer at a later date. Can the minister inform the house whether it is the intention of the Canadian National to cease making major repairs to first class cars in Moncton?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): I will take this matter up with the management of Canadian National.

UNITED NATIONS

CONGO—INQUIRY AS TO SAFETY OF CANADIAN PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Following last week's incidents in the Congo, has the minister received from United Nations authorities any report giving assurance with respect to the safety and security of Canadian airmen and soldiers serving there?

Hon. Howard C. Green (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the concern of the Canadian government has been brought to the attention of the officials of the United Nations.

Mr. Hellyer: Has the government made any suggestions that Canadian personnel be not required to travel in small groups in sensitive areas?

Mr. Green: No, Mr. Speaker.

INDUSTRY

CANADIAN CAR, FORT WILLIAM—MAINTENANCE OF OPERATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has an answer to the question which he took as notice last week, regarding any intercession Premier Frost may have made to him or his government concerning a contract for the Canadian Car Company in connection with the Bobcat vehicle.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I can only speak for myself, but an examination of my files indicates I received no letter.

COAL

CAPE BRETON—REQUEST FOR MEETING OF LABOUR, MANAGEMENT AND GOVERNMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Two weeks ago, and again a week ago, I asked the Prime Minister a question which he said he would answer the next day, whether a request had been made for a coal conference by the premier of Nova Scotia, and if so whether such a conference is to be held.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): With respect to that question, there have been discussions going on among the province of Nova Scotia, the united mine workers and the government of Canada. In a discussion I had with the premier of Nova Scotia when he was attending the dominion-provincial conference, tentative arrangements were made to hold a joint conference in the week of March 20.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO INCLUSION OF FARM LABOURERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister bring the house up to date on the progress being made by the committee inquiring into the possibility of bringing farm labourers under the Unemployment Insurance Act? Has the minister yet received a report?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): As recently as two days ago I made further inquiries as to the progress being made in this area. I am informed that the matter has so many complications, so many difficulties, that the committee is unable to report as yet.

Mr. Argue: Can the minister give the house any idea when a report may be made?

Mr. Starr: All I can say is that I have been pressing for this and will continue to press.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

REPORTED INTENTION OF PRIME MINISTER TO SEEK DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he cares to comment on a report which appeared the day before yesterday in London, England, that at the forthcoming prime ministers' conference the Canadian Prime Minister will propose a commonwealth declaration of basic accepted principles with regard to human dignity.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): I would not want to comment on that. I would simply say, as I have said on many occasions, that while it is difficult to secure a declaration for the commonwealth which would be applicable to all its members, it would be a desirable objective if it could be attained, that the commonwealth might stand for a certain body of principles. When one comes to consider this question from the point of view of parliamentary government, of fundamental freedoms and such various other phases as readily come to mind, the difficulties connected with any such declaration must be apparent.

DRUGS

BARBITURATES—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Romuald Bourque (Outremont-St. Jean): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare; I apologize for not sending him notice. The mayor of Montreal, in view of the seriousness of the goof ball problem, has called a meeting for Friday of this week to study ways and means of combating this evil. I understand the federal government has been invited to send a representative. Is it the intention of the minister to send a representative from his department to attend this most important meeting?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As I mentioned in reply to a question by the hon. gentleman some days ago, the department has a committee working on this particular problem. The invitation has not come to my attention as yet.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO TABLE ATTACHED TO PRIME MINISTER'S SPEECH

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister based upon the speech he made at the dominion-provincial conference and which is attached to Hansard of yesterday as appendix No. 1. Is it not a fact that in addition to the speech there was a table which is not included with this particular speech? Perhaps if that is so the Prime Minister would be good enough to table it so it could appear as an appendix to today's Hansard.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): There was no table attached to any remarks made by me.

PENSION ACT

FURTHER AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COMING INTO FORCE, ETC.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Minister of Veterans Affairs) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That Bill C-67, an act to amend the Pension Act, now before the house, be amended to provide for (a) its coming into force on the first day of March 1961; and (b) certain benefits to dependent parents and to persons deemed to be widows.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Rea in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Churchill thereupon moved that the said resolution be referred to the committee of the whole on Bill No. C-67.

Motion agreed to.

AMENDMENTS INCREASING PAYMENTS, PERMITTING APPEALS, ETC.

The house in committee on Bill No. C-67 to amend the Pension Act—Mr. Churchill—Mr. Rea in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Churchill: I have just a few brief remarks to make.

First I should like to thank the committee for agreeing so readily to the resolution which was occasioned by the necessity of putting it on the order paper because the amendments which are now about to be proposed, place a financial obligation on the government. The same thing was done in the 1953-54 session when a somewhat similar amending bill was before the house.

It is my intention when we reach sections 5, 8 and 13 to have proposed to the house amendments which incorporate the ideas put forward by the standing committee on veterans affairs. I should like at this point to thank the standing committee on veterans affairs for the careful attention that was given to the bill when it was before that committee, and for bringing forward these—

The Deputy Chairman (Mr. Rea): Order. I wonder whether the hon. members who are standing behind the curtain would please lower their voices. It is almost impossible to hear the member who has the floor.

Mr. Churchill: I was just at the point of expressing my thanks to the standing committee on veterans affairs for the careful attention they gave to the bill when it was before that committee, and for bringing to our attention matters which require some adjustment.

We have reached the stage in this bill where we are close to concluding our deliberations. We had a lengthy debate as will be recalled at the resolution stage. The bill was up for second reading and was then referred to the standing committee on veterans affairs for a detailed study. It is now back before us for our consideration section by section. The bill appears to have met with general approval and I hope that the house will be able to deal with it expeditiously today. When we have third reading it will be sent to the other place for their consideration.

As I pointed out earlier in respect of this bill, we have attempted to bring up to date certain aspects of pension legislation that required attention. We have to a certain extent met suggestions that have been put before us by the Canadian Legion and other veterans organizations. The main feature of the bill is to increase pension rates for disabled pensioners. This increase averages 20 per cent across the board and will bring the disabled pensioners' pensions more in line with what has always been intended with regard to pensions. These pensions are partial compensation for injuries suffered on the battlefields. It has been the intention of parliament over the years to have pensions correspond to average incomes in various categories in the country. From time to time the pensions have fallen below those averages. We are at this stage by this increase bringing them up to a position which I think is proving acceptable to our pensioners in Canada. I hope that the house will be able to approve this bill this afternoon.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, this bill has already been thoroughly discussed in committee. We know that all hon. members are anxious to expedite this legislation as much as possible. I rise merely to again express support for this bill and to thank the minister for accepting the recommendations of the committee in regard to increasing the benefits to dependent parents in order to bring them in line with the general increase in other benefits contained in this bill. We regret that, since it was necessary to introduce legislation making these benefits retroactive to the first of this month, the government did not see fit to make them retroactive to the first of January. I think it was the feeling of most members of the committee that it would have been more appropriate to make the benefits retroactive to the first of the year since this action had been foreshadowed in the speech from the throne.

The only other regret we have is that the government did not see fit to include a third provision in the new resolution, namely one to take care of those pensioners who, because they receive war veterans allowance, will not benefit from this legislation. In the committee the minister informed us that there are some 13,000 individuals in this group representing about 9 per cent of all pensioners. Although they will receive an increase in pensions under this legislation, the war veterans allowance they are receiving will automatically be reduced so that there will be no actual benefit. We urge the minister and the government to look further into this problem and to bring forward legislation to correct the position of these pensioners at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, the standing committee on veterans affairs held six meetings. One of those meetings was held in the attic of the west block. We did not mind that somewhat unusual situation; in fact we are so greatly interested in this problem that we would meet in the coal cellar if it were necessary. I want to say that there was excellent attendance at these committee meetings on most occasions although there were absences caused by the number of committees meeting at that time. It is most difficult for members to attend these meetings when there are two or three committees sitting at the same time.

At the meetings we heard representations from the Canadian Legion, and the dominion council of war amputations of Canada, the Canadian council of war veterans associations, and we received a written brief submitted by the national council of veterans associations in Canada.

We are pleased that the government saw fit to accept recommendations of the committee in regard to the bill's coming into effect on March 1, regardless of the date it is proclaimed, and the recommendations that certain widows receive the same percentage increase as the general increase in the bill. Like the hon. member who has just spoken we regret that the government did not see fit to make the bill retroactive to January 1, particularly in view of the state of uncertainty that has existed in regard to this legislation for over a year. We also regret that consideration was not given to those pensioners in receipt of war veterans allowance who will not receive any benefit at all through the passage of this legislation.

The representatives from the Canadian Legion expressed general satisfaction with the increase in pensions provided by the bill and suggested some other amendments which we can discuss later.

The Canadian council of war veterans associations suggested that the increase should have been 33⅓ per cent and suggestions were made as to amendments to the bill itself. The war veterans association of Canada suggested terms which do not come within the compass of the bill. They urged the government to give consideration to extending the provisions for treatment and disability pensions to members of the allied forces who have become citizens of Canada. They asked the government to accept this responsibility.

The brief of the national council of veterans associations in Canada contained only one recommendation urging that the increase should be 33⅓ per cent.

Hon. members of this group are pleased that the government has accepted the two recommendations unanimously approved by the committee. This will alleviate the fears of a number of veterans that they would lose another advantage in respect of this bill. It will also please dependent mothers and other dependents who should be in receipt of these benefits.

I think that is all I have to say but I will possibly make more comments as the clauses of the bill are brought before the committee.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, we are pleased that the minister accepted the amendments which will help to eliminate some of the problems that have existed. I wish, however, to point out the need for hon. members on all sides of the committee to give consideration to urging the government to reinstate the basis upon which the pension was initially granted.

Originally the disability pension was to be approximately equal to the lowest wage rate in the country, namely the wage commanded by the pick and shovel man. Gradually over the years we have lost sight of this ratio. When the various veterans organizations asked for an increase of 33⅓ per cent they were not even asking that the ratio be reinstated to its original premise.

The national council of veterans associations point out how the relationship between the disability pension and the average wage in Canada has altered over the years to the disadvantage of the pensioners.

According to the national council which comprises such organizations as the Hong Kong veterans organization, the average wage rate in Canada in 1939 was $1,220. The basic pension at that time was $900 which represented 74 per cent of the average wage. In 1947 the average wage had increased to $1,800 and the basic pension to $1,128, a decrease in the ratio to 60 per cent. In 1951 the wage rate had increased to $2,480 and the basic pension to $1,500, the pension representing 60.5 per cent of the average wage. In 1957 the average wage had increased to $3,520 and the basic pension to $1,800, a decrease in the ratio to 51 per cent. Hon. members in all parts of the committee should give consideration to urging the government to return the relationship between the basic pension and the average wage to a more equitable basis.

The government, of course, may increase pensions as it sees fit but I think consideration should be given to the proposition I have advanced especially in view of the fact that today we encourage young people to enlist in the armed services.

I was not present at the last meeting of the committee on veterans affairs but what occurred there tends to dispel the belief that no party politics are played with respect to veterans affairs. Various veterans organizations will read with some interest the discussions which took place in the committee. I was surprised at the extent to which politics entered those discussions. I was amazed that hon. members felt under an obligation to follow the instructions of the government instead of advancing their own ideas and making constructive recommendations. The practice of following the wish of the government in this and other committees should not be followed in the future. Particularly with respect to the committee on veterans affairs it is important that politics should not enter the discussion.

I did not participate in the previous debate with respect to this legislation because I wanted to see what would be the result of the deliberations of the standing committee. I am pleased that to a large extent the minister is ignoring the political implications that have arisen in respect of this bill and has suggested today that he will bring in amendments in keeping with the recommendations of the committee.

Mr. Montgomery: I had no intention of speaking, but when the hon. member for Timiskaming rises in his place and charges that politics were used in the committee, I say this to him. Let him repeat that charge; let him name the member who brought politics into the committee and let that member answer to him. As far as I know, no politics were introduced into the committee, at least by supporters of the government to whom the hon. member was referring.

I do not want any member of that committee, as a matter of fact, to lie under such a charge because I do not think any of them had the idea of playing politics. Furthermore, I know the minister did not instruct any members of the committee to vote in any particular way. This is another suggestion the hon. member made and one which I must not allow to pass unchallenged. I think the committee may have felt that it would like to see this pension dated back to January. Some of the members, no doubt, would like to have seen it dated back a year. But there is, as always, the money problem. Everyone co-operated in that report recommending that it be dated from March 1 and I am surprised that the hon. member should get to his feet and make charges which, I believe, are unfair to the other members who served on that committee.

Mr. Carter: I rise to make a suggestion before clause 1 is carried. I presume that the bill when it is printed will have the same format as the one in front of us now, and I think it would be helpful to the veterans who may be studying it if, after clause 1, below the words "substituted therefor" we inserted the written direction "See pages 2, 3 and 4." Then, again, I think it would be clearer if, on the opposite side under the explanatory notes, there could be written the words: "See pages 2a, 3a and 4a".

I know that when I began to study this bill it took me a little time to catch on to which schedules were the old ones and which were the new ones, and I think the suggestion I have made would be helpful to many people who will have to pay attention to this act.

Mr. Speakman: Like the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton, I have a few remarks to make which I had not intended to make. The hon. member for Timiskaming made certain statements; I do not know whether one could call them charges. However, I should like to point out that all of the members of the committee are veterans. In addition, a good many of them are pensioners in receipt of disability pensions and had they voted in favour of extending these provisions back further it could have been said they were voting in their own financial interest.

I should just like to quote a statement which has been made and which appeared in a Canadian Press dispatch of February 20 with reference to the attitude of our friends in the corner and their proposed new political affiliation. It is written by Bill MacDougall of the Canadian Press under the dateline, Niagara Falls, Ontario. The dispatch says that Professor John Morgan of the University of Toronto school of social work was speaking in connection with the proposed formation of the new party. Among his recommendations—

The Deputy Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member would point out to me what relation that dispatch has to the bill now before the committee.

Mr. Peters: I am greatly interested in something that happened in this house a few weeks ago in relation to this bill, namely the discussion of the clauses required to make the provisions retroactive and the accusations which were made at that time together with the results of those accusations.

I hasten to say that in my remarks I certainly did not accuse either members or the chairman of the committee on veterans affairs of engaging in politics, but politics certainly entered into this matter and I should like to refer to the report of the committee on February 23. At that time there was before the committee a motion moved by two members of the opposition. Here is one of the statements that were made. I do not think we need refer to the hon. member who made it although that could be done if it were desired. The statement is as follows:

> May I say this? As long as I have been associated with this committee on veterans affairs this is the first occasion on which political partisanship has come into play.

Then the statement goes on:

> I shall be glad to make my statement without political bias. However, it is a fact that members of the government are placed in an awkward position.

Then, after some other statements by another member, the record continues:

> I wish to say that I am not speaking against these payments being made retroactive. I am in favour of these increases being made to the veterans pensions. I have worked for them consistently for many months, and I believe that the most expeditious way in having them brought in at the earliest moment is for this committee to support the government in the method which they have chosen to bring in these increases, thereby taking no chances for a further delay in the matter. Our best course is to follow along the lines which have been set by the government.

Another hon. member goes on to say:

> We are torn, as it were, between two choices, like a father with two sons. If a recommendation has been made by the cabinet, or by the minister, and apparently it has been, I submit that the government members have no other alternative than to support our government. But on the other hand, we are all veterans; we know how much this means to them, I think that we are being put on the spot.

I suggest that there were political overtones in this statement. In my remarks I did not enter upon a discussion of what those political overtones were. If you still think I am being unfair, Mr. Chairman, I will quote from other sections in the report statements which indicate that many of the members have not yet grown up to the stage where they are able to face their responsibility and make recommendations on the basis of their own opinions. Instead, it is clear they are inclined to prejudge what the government or the cabinet or the minister will do.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

As I said before, I am pleased with the statement which the minister has now made. It is a statement which shows that some members of the committee were prejudging the minister incorrectly, because it appears that the hon. gentleman himself is probably going to make the recommendations as to which the members of the committee should have taken a stand on their own initiative instead of hedging, perhaps in belief that to do otherwise would run counter to their membership in a political party.

I would only point out that these basic requests have been made by organizations to which many of us belong and which most of us support. I have been a member of the Canadian Legion for many years and, speaking for myself, I may say I am one of those who fall into the category mentioned by the last speaker. If this increase becomes effective I will receive an increase in my pension, though it will not be enough to make any difference one way or another. Incidentally, that fact is not to be taken as a reason why I was not at that meeting or as a reason why I would have refused to vote for it.

This is my contention. We should bear in mind the fact that we have an obligation to the veterans to bring their pensions in line with the average wage in the country which they would be entitled to receive if they were in a physical condition enabling them to perform work in that line. Veterans' pensions should bear a fair and just relationship to the average wage in the country. I think we should bear that fact in mind. I am not criticizing anybody and I have not mentioned anybody.

I think we should bear in mind the fact that we should deal with veterans affairs in a non-political way, and hope this will always be the case. The political party to which we belong should not be taken into consideration. We should have consideration only for the larger organization to which we belong, namely the veterans organizations, and the veterans' preference and veterans' status that all members of the committee have attained because of the service they have given to their country should be kept in mind.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 5—Veteran deemed to be married.

Mr. Churchill: On clause 5, Mr. Chairman, I propose to ask the Minister of Labour to move an amendment which clears up a point that has caused a little trouble. This is virtually the same as section 30 (11) (b) of the War Veterans' Allowance Act. It makes provision for the pension commission to deal with those instances in which there is some doubt concerning the validity of a marriage. Here, in regard to the person who is living for seven years with a pensioner prior to his death, that person may make application to be considered for pension purposes if otherwise qualified. This brings the Pension Act in line with the War Veterans' Allowance Act. The amendment will be read by the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I move, seconded by the Minister of Defence Production, that:

Clause 5 of Bill No. C-67 be amended by deleting the word "subsection" in line 2 of clause 5 and substituting the word "subsections" and adding immediately after subsection (5) which follows the following subsection as subsection (6):

"(6) For the purpose of this act, a woman who

(a) was residing with a veteran immediately prior to his death and was prohibited from celebrating a marriage with him by reason of a previous marriage either of such veteran or of herself with another person, and

(b) shows to the satisfaction of the commission that she was, for seven years or more, continuously maintained and publicly represented by such veteran as his wife shall, where the commission in its discretion so directs, be deemed to be the widow of that deceased veteran."

Mr. Carter: We are happy to have this amendment. I think it clears up any doubt that might have prevailed as to the status of the common law wife once the veteran is deceased, and on that account we welcome it.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I am feeling a bit nervous with a minister in front of me and another former minister behind me breathing down my neck, but I must say that I am pleased, as I am sure are all members of the committee, to see this amendment. As any former member well knows, it clears up a bad situation that has come before the veterans affairs committee on repeated occasions throughout the years because of members having most unfortunate cases brought to their attention. I have in my own constituency one which this amendment will remedy, it will bring justice to the unfortunate woman in question. I am sure the veterans organizations will be pleased. While to some this amendment may seem unimportant because it does not affect a large number of veterans or veterans widows; nevertheless it does affect a certain number. By including this amendment in this measure we are doing something that will bring a great deal of happiness to at least a few homes in Canada after this legislation is passed.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 6 and 7 agreed to.

On clause 8—Discretionary pension to parent in certain cases.

Mr. Churchill: On clause 8, Mr. Chairman, we have an amendment to suggest; it is rather lengthy and somewhat complicated. In substance, what it amounts to is this. The amendment will do two things. It will increase the maximum payable from $480 per year to $576 per year, and it will increase the ceiling from $576 per year to $1,296 per year to the dependent parent where the pensioner has died leaving a pensionable child but there is no widow entitled to the pension.

Section 38, subsection 2 of the Pension Act now reads that the pension to the dependent parent cannot exceed the amount stipulated in the section so long as there is either a child or a widow, either or both of whom are entitled to pension. Under the new legislation the child's pension will not be considered in deciding to pension the dependent parent.

This change adds to the financial obligation of the government, I think, only about $75,000 in a grand total of approximately $30 million that we have been considering, but it will count in part of the resolution that we had to use to precede the study of the bill in committee of the whole house.

Mr. Starr: I move, seconded by the Minister for Defence Production, that:

Clause 8 of Bill No. C-67 be amended by deleting subclause (1) of clause 8 and substituting the following subclauses therefor:

"8. (1) Paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section thirty eight of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

'(a) the member died without leaving any widow or divorced wife who is entitled to pension or a woman awarded a pension under subsection (4) of section 36, and'

(2) subsection (2) of section 38 of the said act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(2) Where a member of the forces has died leaving a widow or divorced wife who is entitled to a pension or a woman awarded a pension under subsection (4) of section 36, in addition to a parent or a person in the place of a parent who, prior to the enlistment of the member or during his service, was wholly or to a substantial extent maintained by him, the commission in its discretion, may award to each such parent or person a pension not exceeding five hundred and seventy six dollars per annum, or in any case, where, after the death of the member, the pension to the said widow or divorced wife who is entitled to a pension or the woman awarded a pension under subsection (4) of section 36, has been discontinued, may award to any one such parent or person a pension not exceeding the pension that might have been awarded to such parent or person if the member had died without leaving any widow or divorced wife entitled to a pension or woman awarded a pension under subsection (4) or section 36."

Subclause (2) of clause 8 is renumbered as subclause (3).

The Deputy Chairman: The committee has heard the amendment. Are hon. members ready for the question?

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, this amendment arises out of a recommendation made in the committee where this problem was discussed very fully, and I do not think it is necessary to enlarge on the matter at this time. We are particularly happy that the amount has been increased from $480 to $576. This means a straight 20 per cent increase which corresponds to the other increases in the legislation.

The figure of $576 is merely a ceiling. What it amounts to is that the discretion of the Canadian pension commission has been increased to that extent but it does not follow that all parents will automatically receive the top figure because I understand there is a means test to be applied in connection with any award made under this statute.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, the members of this group are pleased that the government and the minister saw fit to accept the unanimous recommendation of the committee with respect to the amendment of this section. Members of all parties noticed this anomaly in the bill we had before us and suggested this amendment. While I am on my feet I should like to say that I am of the opinion that this section is one of certain sections of the Pension Act that it is difficult to administer with a view to bringing the greatest satisfaction possible to the persons who come under its provisions. I have brought to the attention of the commission a number of cases involving persons who were entitled to some assistance under the act. My experience has been that after an assessment of all the circumstances the commissioners have tried in every way they could to administer this section of the Pension Act as fairly as possible.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 9 to 12 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 13—Commencement of payment of increase.

Mr. Churchill: Clause 13 will be deleted and an amendment substituted which the Minister of Labour will move.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I move, seconded by the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. O'Hurley):

That clause 13 of Bill C-67 be amended by deleting clause 13 and substituting the following clause therefor:

"13. This act shall be deemed to have come into force on the first day of March, 1961."

[Mr. Starr.]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, on two counts I should like to thank the minister for introducing this amendment. First of all, a precedent may be set whereby some consideration will be given to the fixing of a date in other legislation rather than leaving it open. Second, in my opinion he has allowed a much better examination of this legislation by the opposition than is usually the case. A gun was not held at the heads of members of the opposition in that it was not said that additional discussion would mean that the opposition would be doing something to cause delay in people receiving the benefit of the legislation. I think the veterans organizations that were able to appear before the committee and those that were not able to do so will be quite thankful to the minister for making the legislation retroactive and taking away the threat that if the legislation were held up along the line anywhere somebody would have to pay so far as pension benefits were concerned.

Mr. Herridge: Before the amendment carries I should like to ask a question of some importance to some people. It has been the tradition and practice throughout the years for the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs to accept as a personal and almost individual responsibility, shall I say, the work of listening to the representations of and looking after what are known as the non-pensioned widows in Canada. Does the present parliamentary secretary intend to carry on that tradition and practice?

Mr. Jones: Mr. Chairman, I think the duty of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs is to do all those things that should be done with regard to any matter coming under the jurisdiction of the minister. Certainly the matters that have been referred to by the hon. member for Kootenay West are among them.

While I am on my feet I should like to pay my tribute at this time to the work done by the committee and particularly to the chairman of the committee, the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton. All through the deliberations of the committee its affairs were conducted in a very able manner. Once again I should like to point out that in connection with pension matters where, as every member knows, the pension commission operates on an independent basis, the remarks of hon. members in the house and in the committee are most helpful. This is in fact the only direct way in which they can make their views known to all the members of the pension commission.

I should also like to mention particularly the contribution made by the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough in connection with the amendment of clause 8. I say to all hon. members of the standing committee and of this committee that their contributions have been most helpful.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Rea): When shall the said bill be read the third time? Now, by leave?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Churchill moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

AGRICULTURE

PROVISION FOR AGREEMENTS RESPECTING MARGINAL LANDS, RURAL EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES, ETC.

The house resumed from Wednesday, January 25, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle)—Mr. Rea in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to authorize the Minister of Agriculture to enter into agreements with provincial governments or agencies thereof for the undertaking jointly with those governments or agencies of projects for the alternative uses of lands that are marginal or of low productivity, projects for the development of income and employment opportunities in rural agricultural areas, and projects for the development and conservation of the soil and water resources of Canada; for the payment to the provinces of contributions in respect of the cost of such projects undertaken by a province or agency thereof; to authorize the Minister of Agriculture to undertake programs of research and investigation in respect of these matters; to provide for the establishment of advisory committees and the appointment of their members, and to provide for other related and incidental matters.

Mr. Baldwin: When this resolution was last before the committee on January 25, I had made a certain amount of progress in my remarks in connection with it. I should like to repeat now what I said then in support of the minister's viewpoint that this resolution, in effect, has two quite distinct but related and collateral objectives. It seeks to beneficially affect those people engaged in our agriculture industry who, because of the uneconomic size of their unit, the impoverishment of the soil or other reasons, have not been able to achieve the standard of living which we feel should be achieved in this country. In addition, there was also the objective of attempting to make certain that others in the agriculture industry do not come to that level. You may well describe them as twin objectives, namely both cure and prevention. It is well known that prevention is much cheaper than cure.

The minister was of course, quite correct when he pointed out that, primarily, we must direct our attention to alleviating the circumstances of those who are now in difficulty. However, we must not forget the other aspects of the matter to which I referred. Since this resolution was last discussed, Mr. Chairman, it has been considered by others outside of this house. Recently the executive of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture met in Ottawa and presented a brief to the cabinet. I have had an opportunity of reading this brief, as I suppose have other members. On page 10 the federation makes specific reference to this particular resolution. I offer this reference to the committee because it is an opinion that comes from those to whom we may refer as the senior statesmen of agriculture throughout Canada. This opinion is one that certainly cannot be lightly regarded. I quote briefly the comments made by the Canadian Federation of Agriculture:

Broad enabling legislation is being introduced to parliament by the Minister of Agriculture at this session. We welcome this legislation, as you know, since it promises to meet major demands of Canadian Federation of Agriculture policy and important needs of farmers. The government's thinking on this question appears to us to be very much in line with our own. We are anxious to see the program under the proposed agricultural rehabilitation and development act develop strongly and in a well co-ordinated way. It must be administered in a consistent way within the broader concept of optimum use of renewable resources.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. Baldwin: I should be glad to have the questions later, but my time is limited.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): At the end of your speech?

Mr. Baldwin: At the end of my speech, yes. I am going to leave to other members of the committee who may want to speak on this resolution the opportunity to deal with what we might term the substantive measures which are referred to in this resolution and which I hope will be carried forward into the legislation. I think this is a case where a close examination of the resolution indicates that there are also great benefits flowing from what might be termed the procedural elements of the resolution. The minister has suggested the way in which we might achieve these desirable results. These suggestions are not entirely new or novel. However, they do constitute a departure as related to the subject of agriculture.

Marginal Lands

When I spoke on this subject previously I mentioned what we could achieve here and compared that with what had been done in the United States in connection with the Tennessee valley authority project. This project was conceived primarily to deal with wasteland in the Tennessee valley but had the related objectives of community development, soil and water conservation and the provision of recreational facilities. It is my hope that when this legislation is introduced its provisions will be wide enough to permit that type of regional planning, particularly with regard to agriculture. I must, of course, relate it to agriculture. This country needs that type of development in many of the areas of what I might call the perimeter of the development. Agriculture in these areas must become more diversified and more sophisticated. We do not want to see the elimination of agriculture or those farmers brought into the cities who are on what we might call the borderline of making a livelihood and who depend on the type of rural redevelopment in that particular region.

My belief is that this scheme could well be applied on the basis of regional and river-basin area development. I refer, of course, to my own district, namely the Peace river area. May I say in passing, sir, that just recently the President of the United States sent to congress a message in the course of which he underlined the fact that the proper maximum development of the national resources, including agriculture, in his country could well be increased by means of proceeding along regional lines. I believe in yesterday's Toronto Globe and Mail I noticed a news item dealing with the report made by a professor A. K. Cairncross of the University of Glasgow who had made an inspection of the Atlantic area and reported to the premiers of those areas. Professor Cairncross stated that, in his opinion, this country had reached a stage where it must seriously consider regional planning.

A great many things are included in that matter, Mr. Chairman, and I believe they fit within the four corners of this resolution. I refer to soil and water conservation, reforestation, the provision of recreational areas, community development, the development of electric power, and so on. In that connection, may I say that I was very greatly interested in reading not long ago that something along this line had been done in Manitoba, not on the basis of regional planning but on the basis of community planning. This was not a case of large sums of money being given to the community by senior governments. The people living in these agricultural communities and in the market towns which serve them had been helped to help themselves. These people had laid the groundwork, done the planning and persuaded secondary industries to come into the area in order to give them a more diversified way of life. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this is what we might well do under the terms of this particular resolution and the bill which will follow it.

There is one further feature in connection with regional planning and regional development as applied to agriculture areas. We find that governments now must accumulate unto themselves a large repository of power in order to meet the centralization of industry, the growth and centralization of unions and so on. I believe we all agree that is necessary, but regional planning along the lines I suggest would permit a decentralization of power, a decentralization of the administrative authority. I want to relate that matter particularly to the development of the Tennessee valley district.

There was obtained the consent of seven states and the federal government to yield to some extent a portion of their authority, and to vest that authority in a T.V.A. commission. This commission, vested with this authority from the states and the federal government, was able to provide a type of autonomous authority which was of great benefit to the district concerned. It would be good under legislation of this kind to vest authority in a local autonomy in order to allow the carrying into effect of the plans of a regional authority such as the one I have mentioned, and to allow it to exercise that authority without being forced to return to Ottawa, Edmonton, Victoria or the other provincial capitals.

When I refer to the procedural aspect of this resolution I feel that it offers a fair opportunity for advancement. We are in the stage of our national development in which we are ripe for the benefits which will flow from this resolution. I have related this resolution to my own district, namely the Peace River country, an area which up to the present time has been almost exclusively restricted to agriculture. At this time we are now coming to the stage of secondary industry, with pulp mills, logging, timber mills, the development of natural gas and petroleum resources, and many other improvements in our way of life and the way in which our people are able to earn a living. The difficulty we have faced in the past has been the necessity of going to Victoria, Edmonton and Ottawa for authority, and most of the development which I have described has been seriously hampered and hindered by this type of divided authority.

As I said before, I am realist enough to believe that we will never change the situation so far as the provincial authorities are concerned, so far as the boundaries are concerned; but, through the medium of the agencies which are envisaged by this resolution, I am confident that we can make up much of the ground we have lost. For this reason I am pleased to give my strong support to this resolution. I hope that it will meet with the approval of all members.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question? In his speech, which I found interesting, he referred to the representations made yesterday by the federation of agriculture regarding this matter. I am sure the hon. gentleman will recall that the federation of agriculture urged the passage of this bill at the earliest possible moment. I believe they urged the passage of this bill at this session. Does the member not think the minister is therefore in error in causing a delay to take place as a result of the proposal that the bill be studied further before it is given final passage in the house this session?

Mr. Baldwin: I would say this. Judging from the way in which legislation and measures before this house have been held up from time to time, we may well be in Ottawa for some time. Under those circumstances I would suggest that it is probably wise to allow every member from an agricultural area to express a viewpoint at the resolution stage so that when the resolution is translated into legislation the minister will have the advice of all members interested in agriculture, including the hon. member for Essex East.

(Translation):

Mr. Michaud: Mr. Chairman, the resolution which the committee of the whole is now discussing relates to the development and rehabilitation of agricultural areas.

When the resolution was introduced on January 25 last, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hamilton) stated that 21 per cent of the Canadian farms yield less than $1,200 a year to their operators. As far as the Atlantic provinces are concerned, the picture is much darker still than for the country as a whole. These are, by provinces, the figures quoted by the minister:

Province	Percentage of farms with annual production under $1,200
Newfoundland	78 per cent
Prince Edward Island	26 " "
Nova Scotia	61 " "
New Brunswick	59 " "

Marginal Lands

Today, I should like to deal with that problem more particularly as it relates to the province of New Brunswick.

Mr. Chairman, in order to avoid hasty conclusions on the face of those statistics, it is necessary that the scope of the question be enlarged. Indeed, I believe that the explanations given by the minister until now are much too succinct and do not reflect the issue from all its angles.

The statistics given by the minister are quoted from the 1956 census.

Now, this was the definition of a farm in connection with that census:

> Any agricultural unit was considered a farm:
> (a) When the production value was $250 a year; and > (b) when the acreage was three acres or more, without considering the production value.

Again according to the 1956 census, 24.4 per cent of farms in the province of New Brunswick contained from 1 to 50 acres, and 33.5 per cent from 51 to 100 acres of land.

In the light of those statistics, it is obvious that there is a close connection between income and acreage, and it would seem that if such a large proportion of farms in New Brunswick yield such an insignificant yearly income, the cause would have to be found in their size as well as in the quality of the soil. Yet, I am afraid that the Minister of Agriculture when introducing his resolution on January 25 last, left quite a different impression, namely that the low income from marginal or submarginal land was more particularly due to poor soil. That is an error which should be avoided when planning for the rehabilitation of some submarginal agricultural areas. That is why the first essential step when considering the problem would, to my mind, be a detailed classification of soils, in order to find out which are unsuitable for general farming. While it is important to turn to alternative uses any land which is unsuitable for general farming, all land which could produce food economically should be kept in production in New Brunswick.

When introducing his motion, the minister pointed out that agricultural over-production in our country should be taken into account. I must say that such conditions do not exist in New Brunswick, because, except for potatoes, we have to import from 50 to 75 per cent of all agricultural products we consume. The figures are 10 per cent for butter, 80 per cent for cheese, 60 per cent for pork, 50 per cent for beef, 50 per cent for fowl, 35 per cent for eggs and 75 per cent for vegetables.

Need I say more to show that what is needed in New Brunswick is not a program to reduce agricultural production but rather a program to increase it?

On the occasion of a day of economic studies organized in Moncton by the extension department of St. Joseph's University, in December last, Mr. Camille Chiasson, an agronomist employed by the New Brunswick department of agriculture, dealt quite competently with the agricultural situation in the province. His remarks covered four aspects of the problem. These four points, to which I subscribe, are as follows:

1. A regional development program. This implies a detailed survey of all resources of an area and requires the co-operation of all elements of the population: chambers of commerce, educators, clergymen, businessmen, professional associations, co-operatives, etc. To those who would claim that this problem is the sole concern of farmers and that they alone are responsible for a solution, I would recall the words of President Eisenhower who said that the minimum farm income of any area is not entirely an agricultural problem, but that it is related to the whole economy and that it can be settled only by the development of all the resources of the area.

The results of such a survey—they will necessarily vary from one area to another—will allow the guiding of agriculture in such or such direction: improving of farming or breeding methods; introduction of new crops and new marketing facilities; establishment of small industries, etc.

2. The farmer will have to change or at least modernize his ideas. Those who work in our rural areas cannot help notice that the few farmers who succeed are those who have kept pace with conditions and brought in some changes such as an increase of their acreage and their stock, mechanization, specialization, etc. But they are a minority and it is surprising to see the great number of those who are still trying to earn their living on the few acres and the number of livestock which their grandfathers had.

This modernization is no less important in woodlot development. When one thinks of how much waste there is in the exploitation of our forest resources, one is surprised to see there are still some left.

In certain cases, it would be advisable to give back to the forest, marginal or poor lands that should never have been cleared.

3. Where it is impossible to increase farm acreage, it would probably be possible to turn to special productions such as:

(a) sheep, hog or poultry farming;

(b) small fruit or vegetable farming;

(c) blueberries;

(d) Christmas trees.

4. Production and marketing co-operatives. It seems a waste of time to insist on that point, but unfortunately there are too many farmers who are not convinced that there lies their only hope. One should look at what happened in the case of the specialized producers near the larger centers. In spite of the importance of their operations, they have been forced to unite in order to survive. There is no other means to prevent vertical integration.

I should like to point out now that the school would have a great contribution to make to an agricultural development project. Such was the argument of Hon. Adrien Levesque, minister of agriculture in the province of New Brunswick, presented in October last before a group of farmers meeting in Moncton. As a matter of fact, we may wonder to what degree the rural school as it is has delayed agricultural progress.

The fact is that our school system does not predispose the child to love the land and farming. Rather, it prepares our rural youth for life in the cities, not in the country. Not that the rural school should be raised to the level of an agricultural school, but it would only be normal, it seems to me, that without neglecting the teaching of basic subjects it should promote the development of a rural spirit and the knowledge of basic elements of agriculture, which is totally defective in the present system.

One must say, in all fairness to certain areas of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, that certain traditions contribute to underline the agricultural importance of those areas. In those two provinces where potatoes are grown on a large scale, school opens two weeks earlier, that is around mid-August, but they are closed for a corresponding period during harvesting.

Such practice allows school boys to help the industry of the area at the time when labour is more in demand. I must say that where that practice prevails, agriculture is generally more prosperous than elsewhere. Would it be because, among other things, young people have been taught the importance of the industry which is the foundation of the regional economy?

In view of its relation to the matter we are now discussing in this house, I should like to quote part of an editorial published in L'Evangeline of October 26, 1960:

Agriculture is now at the crossroads. Is society directing it towards an impersonal form of farming, whereby the land, having become the property of limited companies, will be scientifically developed by employees who have nothing to say on the management of the company, employees who most likely will be organized, and who will get a weekly salary like their counterparts in industry?

Must we accept the disappearance of farmers' traditional families, tilling the soil, breeding animals, with the help of their sons who thus prepare themselves to take over?

Agriculture must be reorganized in such a way as to allow farmers to enjoy a better way of life, in keeping with their status as land owners. When farmers once again occupy in society the first rank place which is theirs, it will then be easy to promote agricultural pride.

The day is gone when farmers' sons, anxious to operate a farm with success, could quit school when they were 14 years old. Today, farmers are facing technical problems requiring higher education, wide technical knowledge, and great competence.

The rural school should promote love of the farm through a greater awareness and better appreciation and show the way to prosperous farming through respect for everybody's rights and co-operation of each individual for the common welfare.

Mr. Chairman, it has been proved by now that agriculture must keep abreast of the times. Modern agriculture cannot perpetuate customs and routines passed on from father to son. The farmer has to apply new methods, increase his efficiency, and reduce his costs. Moreover, rational farming requires general regional planning involving the co-operation of all farmers in a spirit free from selfishness, pettiness and envy.

Mr. Chairman, those are the many problems which we have to face in respect of all proposed rural projects, and let us hope that the one we have before us will be the answer to the tremendous responsibilities we have to shoulder. In formulating the terms of this bill, and later on, in seeing to it that they are carried out, the government will have to seek the co-operation of all people of goodwill at all levels of our society. The aim is well worth the effort. The government should also consider the wise recommendations made by the Senate committee with regard to this matter.

I want to conclude my remarks by quoting some of the major recommendations of that committee, which might serve as a guide to everyone concerned. I quote:

Whereas there is a need of elimination of problem areas in Canada where farm businesses are small, productivity low, and incomes inadequate for family requirements: The committee recommends,

(1) (a) That further research be undertaken to define more clearly the nature of the problem in low income areas and to pinpoint their location.

(b) That a federal-provincial rural development program be instituted to deal with areas of greatest need.

(2) That in implementing such a program the provincial governments participate on a co-operative basis; such co-operation to include the principle that both provincial and local authorities assume major responsibility for the identification of problems and needs of local areas and the initiation, planning and development of appropriate action programs.

(3) That the federal and provincial governments co-operate in assisting any such program with financial and technical assistance, said financial assistance to be provided through a cost sharing agreement.

(4) That the federal and provincial governments provide for a larger farm-management service and expansion of educational facilities with particular emphasis on leadership to ensure a prompt dissemination of the research results to those farmers who will be most benefited therefrom.

This program is comprehensive and will require a great outlay of funds. Nothing less, however, could provide an answer to the basic problem of our agriculture. It is the future of the family farm and of the whole farming community that is at stake.

(Text):

Mr. Murphy: I should like first of all to congratulate those hon. members who have already taken part in the discussion of this important resolution and I am certainly not excepting, but including, the last speaker who I think made a marvellous contribution to this debate.

This is, I think, one of the most important resolutions to come before us in this present session and I am happy to see the way in which this subject is being approached by members on all sides. The resolution itself is comprehensive and to my mind it is one of the most important to come before parliament since I have been a member. Actually it is in keeping with other progressive legislation introduced by the government this session. I am going to say this. I have been a member of the house for 17 years and I do not recall any other session during which so much progressive legislation has been introduced and passed in such a short period of time.

On reading the resolution one must conclude that it allows a great deal of free-wheeling in discussion. There are two aspects of it to which I should like to address myself. You will have noticed, of course, Mr. Chairman, that one aspect of the motion deals with the water resources of Canada and I should like, of course, to deal with that aspect in particular. There are, in fact, so many facets to it, that a member is not really given the opportunity to deal with all of them. I therefore intend to confine myself largely to the subject of the water supply. Then, if I have time in which to do so, I shall deal with the situation in Holland and Denmark with respect to farming, because conditions there are relatively the same as they are in Ontario.

Water pollution is, in itself, a broad subject but certainly it is going to be one of the major problems facing us. It is, I repeat, a problem, and its ultimate solution will be difficult. However, I am happy to note that this fact is being increasingly realized; and as a result of the work which will be done in consequence of the resolution being passed, I think a great deal will be accomplished. Serious attention must be paid to the water problem we face in this country. I say it is an extremely serious problem. I dealt with one aspect of it in an earlier speech and I hope to say more along the same lines today. I must say that the resolution is timely. As we all know, land use has been a matter for concern to the province of Ontario, and the government of that province has made extensive studies through the conservation council of Ontario and other agencies.

In this great era of change, with an accelerating tempo in almost every facet of our daily lives, the present so soon becomes the past that what we now do, and how we do it, must be equated with a critical eye to the future. This is not easy to do and yet so much depends on how well we do it.

The onrush of technological progress bears with it the hope for the future and, at the same time, a deep concern for the potential dangers it holds. While we exploit the one, we need to take extreme care to understand and to minimize the other. We must be sure that our concepts and our practices are attuned to the times and will keep the scales tilted in favour of man, his health and his well-being. From the monthly letter of the Royal Bank of Canada, Vol. 41, No. 4, entitled, "The Relationship of Man and Nature," I should like to quote as follows:

> To subdue nature, to bend its forces to our will, has been the acknowledged purpose of mankind since human life began, but the time has come for a revision of our conception of the benefits and responsibilities of holding dominion over all other created things. A new spirit is abroad as scientists and laymen realize that man and the rest of nature are united and individible.
> At a time when great elemental forces are clamouring at the bars of our civilization, we need to discard our ideas of 'attacking' the forest, 'bringing under subjection' the mighty rivers, 'conquering' the mountains and 'subduing' the prairie. Instead, we need to make the most of all nature as an ally.

Somehow or other the basis of any conservation program must be tied to the continuing economic welfare of the nation regardless of the individual. The use of our soil and water, forest and streams, must eventually be restricted to those who respect and cherish this franchise. The establishment of this principle must be developed and accepted as part of our national attitude just as other rules of conduct are written into our way of life. They protect the individual as they protect the nation. This is very much the case with regard to food and water. Even the presence of water has not always assured man of his food. Abundance often breeds laziness, and the subsequent neglect of water resources can bring stagnation to man and his food production.

I have had the pleasure of attending in this country and in the United States, many meetings on conservation, particularly concerning water pollution which knows no boundaries. Here is a problem area in which we need to break down the barriers of provincialism, the prejudices of proprietary interest, and the varieties of narrow, hereditary points of view, too commonly shared by so many of us. We all recognize that our advancing society needs more water for domestic use and much more water to produce the things we eat, wear and use. To provide adequate water in usable form, when and where needed, and to do this within a reasonable cost, is essential to our way of life.

It is an interesting commentary in this technological era that the availability of adequate water, the world's most plentiful substance, remains an essential key to man's progress. In this country and on this continent our water resources, their use and misuse, are rapidly becoming a prime critically urgent national problem. Beyond satisfying thirst, there is no single water problem but rather a multiplicity of complex problems, issues and questions spanning the technical, political and social fields. In composite these constitute the ingredients that make up public water policy and, in turn, such policy goes to the very heart of our economy.

What we do, for instance, in making available sufficient water determines in a major way the location and prosperity of industry and its supporting populations. For most industries the availability of water is more important even than is the proximity to raw materials or to markets; and the manner in which this water is used affects agriculture, wild life, recreational facilities and the like.

Consideration must be given to the problem so that the ideal habitat of water fowl and wild life will be protected. I am referring to marshes. When we talk about comparative use we must consider the simple mathematics of space.

Another fundamental consideration is the control of water resources. The manner in which this matter is ultimately resolved draws the pattern of land use of great areas of our continent. Among the things to be considered are the impact of water shortages, the complexities of interregional conflicts, the urgency for expanding beneficial uses. All of these demand not necessarily control but attention and action and some degree of co-ordination.

In the North American countries and, of course, elsewhere each of us has a personal and a proprietary interest in how this is done and even more specifically, where and how the authority for doing it is located and administered. To put the water problem in perspective we must first focus on man, his patterns of behaviour and his new-found upsurging technology. May I say this by way of illustration, and this is very important. The great lakes and their connecting rivers are the natural boundary between the United States and Canada for some 1,100 miles, from Duluth to Kingston. The United States population now approaches 180 million, being up 40 per cent in two decades. The metropolitan growth trend will continue. Within two decades, three quarters of this wall to wall population will live in metropolitan centres. We are seeing the development of gigantic metropolitan complexes extending hundreds of miles along superhighways and major waterways. This development also applies to Canada but to a lesser extent. Technological growth is even more fantastic. This statement holds when viewed by any yardstick you might choose, such as gross national product, raw materials, energy requirements, transportation or communications.

In addition to the oil and gas drilling menace to the great lakes, we must realize that the chemical industry and the petrochemical industry are two segments of our economy which are showing phenomenal growth. Synthetic chemicals, plastics, detergents, pesticides, solvents and the like are skyrocketing, not only in quantities but also in diversity. Literally hundreds of new chemicals come into production and use each year. To illustrate, may I point out that these facts, in the field of plastics in the United States in 1940, production was 150 million pounds. Last year it was well over 5 billion pounds. Synthetic detergents increased in 20 years from 15 million pounds to 1.3 billion pounds. For the same period production of synthetic pesticides and other agricultural chemicals increased from 8 million to 540 million pounds. I cite these particular examples because of their impact as potential pollutants on our water resources, and these will have a great effect on the waters of the great lakes. Our production, Mr. Chairman, as you know, is in proportion to the population of the United States.

In the backwash of these tidal waves are growing needs for usable water and greater competition. These factors will tax to the limit our fresh water resources. It is therefore no wonder that, as a resident on lake Huron and as chairman of the Canadian-American committee on water pollution, I am greatly concerned about oil and gas drilling in the great lakes. We all know that the leases are granted by the provincial government of Ontario. Any pollution from this source concerns several of our departments of government, including external affairs, fisheries, public works, transport, national health and welfare, agriculture and northern affairs and national resources; yet we find ourselves handicapped because we cannot take action unless there is extensive pollution.

I should like to take advantage of this opportunity to pay tribute to the international joint commission which has made great strides in co-operation with the Ontario government and the federal government of the United States in studying the problem and recommending measures to abate the pollution.

A few moments ago I gave an illustration with regard to a run-away oil well not too far from the shores of lake Huron, in Michigan, from which, before it was capped, 100,000 barrels of oil were released. It seems unfortunate that we are obliged to wait for something like this to happen before we can do anything. Yet the provincial government continues to grant leases for oil exploration, which might more properly be termed oil exploitation in many cases, in lake Erie where companies operating for 30 years have never paid a dividend.

Under this resolution I must bring to the attention of the committee the fact that the presence of oil in our water in the great lakes would do much to crucify our tourist industry, our bird life and our fishing, and it would be a menace to health since we in western Ontario are no doubt going to have to depend on our water supply from lake Huron, and this factor is certainly going to affect our agricultural production. I have said before that the area from Toronto to Windsor will be depending on water from Georgian bay and lake Huron before 10 or 15 years have passed.

The national anarchy in water pollution policy and control programs must be ended. It is time for the province of Ontario and the federal government to get together and see the problems and work together to correct them. This must, of course, be done in co-operation with the United States. Today the people are pollution conscious and want action. The federal government can do something about pollution from the ships which are using the great lakes, and the Ontario government can reconsider its policy of contributing to pollution in the great lakes by issuing licences to drill on property they have already leased to these exploration or exploitation companies. We find one agency of the provincial government insisting on sewage treatment plants, and the plants we have in the east and have maintained previously are not good enough; and we find another agency of government granting leases for oil and gas drilling to foul the waters of our great lakes system. Let us stop fouling our own most important natural resource.

While I am on this subject and since I have spoken on this matter previously in the house, I should like to say that we have been complaining about this objectionable oil and gas drilling in the great lakes by those companies which maintain, as they have maintained over the years, that there is no danger of spillage with all their modern technology and new equipment. A moment ago I gave an illustration of the spillage of 100,000 barrels of oil from a well before it was capped. What would have happened had the oil well been in a lake?

I am happy to have heard not long ago from the front benches of this government that some consideration is being given by the federal government of the United States and our federal government to a problem which has faced our two countries for many years, namely the habit of vessels on the great lakes using the great lakes to dump their used oil and sewage. The conclusion of the study should not be too long delayed. In fact, it has been delayed for 50 years, a period which is too long. The quicker this problem is solved the better; and it can be solved because we in this country and the people of the United States want that body of fresh water kept fresh in spite of any government action or inaction.

I am now going to refer to something that was brought to the government's attention last fall. The government must take heed of the protests from the east coast of our country against the practice of the atomic energy commission of the United States in dumping radioactive wastes some few miles off the coast; I do not know how many miles it is. However, I think one of the hon. members from New Brunswick or Nova Scotia raised this question last fall.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that this dumping of radioactive waste offers a new and potentially dangerous pollutant of the nation's water courses. The most serious potential danger to our long range health as far as water pollution is concerned will arise when the radioactive waste dumped at sea by the atomic energy commission starts spreading through the oceans. "Out of sight, out of mind" is not a very satisfactory way in which to handle this problem.

So far, since 1951 the atomic energy commission of the United States has dumped at sea 23,000 steel and concrete barrels filled with radioactive waste, and an A.E.C. spokesman has conceded that these barrels break up in ten years or less. Surely there are other places in the United States, such as rock caves, and so on, where this waste can be dumped until perhaps some years hence there can be a safe disposal system.

I think it is a crime that this practice has been allowed to continue and I am going to suggest to the government that the time for action is now. If these barrels, as has been indicated, will contain this radioactive waste for a period of only ten years or less, this material is then free to flow in the oceans. It is true that the oceans are big but it is also true that there must be plenty of space in the United States, in caverns or other places, where they can store this radioactive waste until the scientists of their country or some other country can determine a safe method of disposal. This nation should not stand idly by and let the United States atomic energy commission dump their continually increasing amount of radioactive waste into the Atlantic ocean or any other ocean.

Previously during this session of parliament I spoke about our sand beaches on the great lakes and referred to their pollution. Sand beaches are important in this or any other country because they afford to hundreds of thousands of youngsters and their parents the opportunity to use these beaches for recreation. Let us not deny them that opportunity in this country.

We in Ontario and people in most parts of Canada are blessed with a great deal of shoreline on the great lakes and on inland lakes and rivers but our population at the moment is only 18 million people or a little better. Consider the situation in the United States. At the moment around metropolitan areas such as Milwaukee, Chicago, Cleveland and Detroit, none of which is very far from the capital of Canada, existing public ownership on the great lakes provides for only one quarter inch of frontage per person living within 50 miles of the shore. There is not a beach on the great lakes that does not show evidence of oil. For thousands of miles on our side of the great lakes every sand beach and every other kind of beach, according to samples taken last year, showed evidence of used oil. It is no wonder that the minister of energy resources in Ontario is much concerned about the practice of ships dumping their used oil into our great lakes system.

I share with him that view and, as I said a moment ago, I hope that our government in conjunction with the United States government will see that this practice is stopped. As I said, this situation is caused by ships using the great lakes. In co-operation with the government of the United States our government can require ships using the great lakes to have on board containers into which their sewage, garbage and old oil can be dumped for proper disposal at some municipal sewage treatment plant. The people of Ontario have put up with this situation for long enough and the time for action is now. I said before and I say again that where people become pollution conscious, as the people of my constituency in southwestern Ontario have become—and I am sure the same should be true of many more areas in Ontario at least—they are more conscious of pollution than they are of taxes.

When I spoke previously I said that I should like to deal with the application of science to agriculture as found in Denmark and Holland. These two countries are today practising scientific farming more effectively than is any other country in the world. While it is true that the land both in Denmark and Holland is relatively flat and that in many sections the soil is particularly good, there are other areas where the soil is far from satisfactory, so that the average high yield per acre recorded for these two countries cannot be credited to soil or climate.

Holland and Denmark have a high agricultural productivity. Holland has a population of approximately 10 million and Denmark 5 million compared with Ontario's population of approximately 5 million. The climate in both European countries is about the same as that in central and southwestern Ontario so that farming conditions should be somewhat similar in the three countries. For many years I have wondered why the farmers in Ontario did not make the same effective use of new discoveries as industry was making on the North American continent. A study of agricultural conditions in Holland and Denmark shows that farming does not need to lag behind industry as these two countries are adapting the same approach in agriculture that big industry has found so effective. The three main factors that have contributed to the extraordinary accomplishments of Holland and Denmark are:

(1) agricultural education, so effective and extensive that it reaches into every farm home in the country; (2) a large and effective advisory service, adequately supported by research institutes, experimental farms, pilot farms and demonstration fields; (3) an agricultural federation operated by farmers that gives a large measure of support and to an increasing degree guides the research and experimental policy of the two countries.

While the results accomplished are similar in Holland and Denmark, the methods they employ are quite different. In Holland the educational system is similar to that practised in Canada only it is far more intensive, starting with the young farmers and continuing through the training of agricultural scientists. In Denmark the training of the agricultural scientists is the responsibility of the state, but the training of the farm youth, either at boarding schools, folk high schools or agricultural high schools, is the responsibility of the communities these schools serve. While the state makes some contributions to the operation of the 28 agricultural colleges that train some 2,500 pupils, the direction and operation are the responsibility of local boards. In addition, night classes during the winter are attended by some 90,000 pupils.

In both Holland and Denmark practical farm experience is considered to be most important and those wishing to enter agricultural schools or to hold any post of importance must have several years' training on a good farm. As seen from the foregoing, agricultural education is held in high esteem in the two European countries.

In Holland the professors at Wagingen are responsible for teaching and the carrying on of independent research. Research institutes, of which there are about 22, are financed by the state but the direction is by a board of directors composed of farmers, college professors, research officials and government representatives.

The advisory services, which have nothing to do with the research institutes, have their own experimental units in different parts of the country. It is in these units that the more practical aspects of research are developed. In addition, many thousands of farm and field experiments are carried on by the farmers under the direction of the agricultural advisers. All senior agricultural advisers are university graduates. The assistants, of whom there are a great many, are graduates of agricultural schools who in addition have had many years of practical training in the research institutes, advisory service units and experimental farms. Because the advisory services have their own experimental units, those wishing to sell farmers new fertilizer, spray material or farm equipment find it advantageous to obtain first of all the approval of the agricultural adviser before approaching the farmers, though this procedure is not obligatory. In addition to the foregoing, the farmers federation is responsible for all quality control whether seed, fruit, flowers or dairy products. In fact, the federation operates many control laboratories. In addition, they operate several soil testing laboratories and finance and operate the farm economic institute at The Hague which employs over 200 people.

The federation is yearly increasing its contribution to the research program of the country. The farmers sit on all research institutes and advisory service boards, and take a direct interest in quality control, economic and research programs. In Holland, many farmers may see a film depicting an experiment which includes the work evaluation of the farmers, the planting and harvesting of crops, the care of cattle and improved living conditions for the people, all of which can be accomplished by the application of science to rural life.

In Denmark agricultural activities are handled in a unique manner. With the exception of the agricultural college and the research farms, practically every activity is controlled and directed by the farmers federation, not by the state. In the case of the college and the research farms, the farmers make up the majority of the boards of each institute. Agricultural advisers, of which there are over 600 or one to every three or four hundred farms—and by the way, may I say that there are eight to ten times as many in Denmark as there are in Canada —are appointed either by the federation or local farmers' associations. The government contributes only about 25 per cent to the operating cost of these services. There are innumerable plant and animal breeding stations throughout the country and farm and field experiments are numbered in the thousands, practically all operated by farmers under the direct supervision of the agricultural advisers. In contrast to Holland, the Danes train farmers to keep first-class books, so that with a relatively small staff of economists they are able to obtain comprehensive figures on yields and quality of products throughout the country. Neither Holland nor Denmark operate with subsidies, their philosophy being that good cultural practice is better than state support. In either country, there is no arbitrary control of the farmers but through demonstrations and persuasion they are encouraged to adopt new scientific methods of farming.

In order to illustrate what extensive scientific application has accomplished in Holland and Denmark, may I make the following few observations.

In so far as Holland is concerned, during the last four years there has been a very marked increase in the amount of grass cut for drying, pressing and silaging. A breed of sheep has been developed that averages 1.88 lambs a year. Strains of fruit trees are under government control. Nurseries receive their scions from experimental stations. Practically all new orchards of apples and pears are dwarf trees, as it is claimed that the early bearing makes it more economical than planting normal size trees.

In so far as Denmark is concerned, over 75 per cent of all cows are bred by artificial insemination. There are 22 progeny testing stations where the quantity and quality of milk produced from heifers is determined in order to build up the average milk production. The same type of progeny control is practised with swine and other livestock, so that even though the present average production is at a high level, it is anticipated that this will still increase due to the new methods of improving livestock.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Murphy: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. As one of the older members of the house, I should like to pay tribute to the minister for introducing at this time such an important resolution which will have such an effect on our economy.

Mr. Hicks: Mr. Chairman, I wish to take this opportunity to congratulate the Minister of Agriculture upon the introduction of this resolution and this new approach to agriculture in Canada. I greatly appreciate being given the chance of expressing my views on certain phases of it. I presume this resolution arose partly as a result of the review of the rural development program in the United States which was undertaken at the request of the Senate special committee on land use in Canada. I am well acquainted with the four members of the Department of Agriculture who made this investigation. The senior member was Dr. Booth, an expert in agriculture economics.

I wanted to make a few remarks somewhat along the same lines as those made by the hon. member for Peace River, especially as they related to the stand of the federation of agriculture on this subject. I received the federation brief yesterday and I read through it rather quickly. I should like to quote from that part of the brief dealing with land and water use and rural development. It reads:

> Broad enabling legislation is being introduced to parliament by the Minister of Agriculture at this session. We welcome this legislation, as you know, since it promises to meet major demands of Canadian Federation of Agriculture policy and important needs of farmers.

As a member of the agriculture institute for Canada, I am certain that the resolution will receive the support of this group of scientific agriculturalists. This institute has a membership of 3,065 at the moment. One prominent member of the institute in my province recently wrote to me, and I should like to read a part of his letter:

> As an agrologist, I am very much inclined to the opinion that the government is to be commended for developing leadership in respect to land use, especially as it pertains to further increase of forest resources. In the long term, the proposal to utilize lands that are submarginal agriculturally for forest is very worth while. I understand that world requirements for pulp alone are going to overtax present softwood stands within a surprisingly few years. In my opinion, the forest resource is actually an agricultural resource and its further development is absolutely dependent on the application of agricultural techniques.
> Recognizing the food surplus situation in respect to North America and the fact that the European mainland anticipates substantial agricultural surpluses within five years, I am satisfied that there is every justification for developing where practicable submarginal lands for the production of softwood for pulp and other timber requirements. In the long term, forestry is an excellent provider of employment. However, I am in no position to say how successful a planning program would be in providing employment over the next 30-50 years.

No branch of agriculture in Canada can remain static. It either goes forward or retrogresses. Never in history has the need for co-operation been greater than at the present time. The task of producing good food economically and of placing it where the thousands of hungry people require it, is one of extreme magnitude. It is suggested that, in so far as land use is concerned, this is a responsibility of the federal and provincial governments. We must embark upon a vast program of economic classification of our land. We must examine the position of agricultural areas in relation to the use of natural resources, land settlement, land productivity, standards of living, opportunities for the uniting of farms and the chances given for employment in other work for those who wish to leave employment on the farms.

The spread between the farmer's cost and his revenue from the sale of his products is serious. In my opinion, land use plays an extremely important role in this connection. The feeding of the poor of the world is not an agricultural problem, in my opinion, and cannot be pinned to the farmer. It is a social issue and can only be treated as such. Personally, I do not feel that the control of production is a serious matter but in some fields this tool should be used. The exception to this statement at the present moment is in regard to wheat and butter. I have made a few inquiries today in connection with butter and I should like to give you some figures in this regard. These figures were supplied by the dominion bureau of statistics.

Butter production per capita in Canada in 1957 was 20.3 pounds, in 1958 it was 19.1 pounds and in 1959 it was 18.1 pounds. From these figures you will notice that there is a gradual decline in the per capita consumption of butter. How do the figures in regard to margarine compare? In 1957 the consumption of margarine per capita was 7.8 pounds, in 1958 it was 8.5 pounds and in 1959 it was 8.7 pounds. You will notice in this case a gradual increase in the consumption.

I have some figures taken from pages 112 to 114 of the Statistical Review of 1959 showing the production of creamery butter and margarine in Canada. These figures run from 23.32 million pounds per year to 28.01 million pounds per year. Incidentally, these figures are for the years 1949 to 1958. The highest production was in 1958, being 28.01 million pounds.

In 1949 the production of margarine was 6.16 million pounds and it has gradually increased over the years until at the end of 1958 we find 12.13 million pounds produced.

I believe that one of the things hurting butter consumption today is fear of heart disease. This fear has been created throughout the country by press reports and in other ways, and even though I am sitting beside a medical adviser I am not convinced that the consumption of butter will do much damage to my heart, at least.

I have just received some figures from the dominion bureau of statistics but I have not had much time to look them over. These figures concern the number of deaths from heart disease in Canada from 1950 to 1959 and show a gradual increase to 48,244. I will give the figures for the years 1950 to 1959. In 1950 the number of deaths from heart disease in Canada was 38,000; in 1951, 39,000; in 1952, 40,000; in 1953, 41,000; in 1954, 41,000; in 1955, 42,000; in 1956, 43,000; in 1957, 45,000; in 1958, 46,000; and in 1959, 48,000.

I admit, of course, that the population of Canada has increased during the same years, a fact which accounts in some degree for the increased number of deaths in Canada per year. Let us look at the percentage of deaths from heart disease during this same period of time. In 1950 the percentage was 31.3; in 1951, 31.3; in 1952, 32.2; in 1953, 32.4; then in 1954, it rose to 32.2 per cent; in 1955, 33.5; in 1956, 33.3; in 1957, 32.4; in 1958, 34.0; and in 1959, 34.5.

Let us at this stage consider this situation. If we believe that the consumption of butter in Canada caused this increase in the number of deaths from heart disease, how can we explain the fact that the consumption of butter has been declining? Perhaps the increase in deaths has arisen as a result of the increase in the consumption of margarine in the last ten years.

Agricultural research no doubt increases production in Canada. We have an excellent supply of tools, equipment and personnel with which to do valuable research work in agriculture but surely no one within the sound of my voice would suggest that research in agriculture be curtailed as a method of controlling production. Research efficiency cannot be built up in a short time. This must take considerable time. I believe farmers' inefficiency is a major problem in our agricultural world today, and the resolution before us hits at the heart of this problem. I do not mean to suggest for one moment that we have a group of inefficient farmers in Canada. My suggestion is far from that. Many farmers are situated on poor land and cannot derive a desirable standard of living under these conditions. It has often been said that the public generally should support the unbalance in farming. This statement may be true over a short period of time but as a permanent policy it would be quite wrong. Things are moving fast in these days. The world today is a product of what we believed yesterday, and the world of tomorrow will be a product of what we believe now. If we are to avoid the mistakes of the past we must be prepared to accept our responsibilities in changing agriculture conditions.

There exists in the United States an agency known as the farmers home administration under the supervision of the United States department of agriculture and it provides almost the same assistance to the eligible farmers as the Veterans' Land Act provides. In other words, it provides farm operators with credit and technical assistance. Loans are made only when farmers are unable to obtain suitable credit at reasonable rates of interest from regular sources. This help is particularly suitable to small farms and provides farmers with assistance somewhat similar to that which the V.L.A. has provided in the past.

The Veterans' Land Act includes many features which, on analysis of the small farm problem, I suggest could be given consideration under this present program. Credit is made available at moderate rates and payments are flexible. Title of the land is held by the department and the farm operator is provided with technical supervision. I feel that what we should envisage is a broad program of rural development.

I should like to quote from a report of the third annual workshop of the Canadian Agriculture Economic Society, 1958 on the small farm problem. This reads as follows:

> To implement this program we will need many well qualified supervisors and managers. Happily in the farm finance field we already have a fine organization and developmental nucleus in the competent personnel of the Veterans' Land Act administration. We can build up the necessary resources and we already have the desire to work. What remains to be done and has to be started without any further delay is to speed up an active program.

I see no reason why similar arrangements cannot be made in eastern Canada, which I consider to be that part east of the great lakes. I would suggest that this arrangement could be similar in many respects to the community pasture program under the P.F.R.A. on the prairies.

Let me give you some figures from the 1958-59 P.F.R.A. reports. Since the inception of this program in 1937, 1,815,265 acres of land have been developed for pasture use. Sixty two pasture projects were in operation in 1958. They handled the equivalent of 117,032 head of cattle. The stock was owned by 5,835 patrons. I claim that this is big business.

A statement by Drummond and McKenzie relating to the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects, of January 1957 points out the drop in the labour force in agriculture. From 1946 to 1955 those engaged in agriculture represented only 30 per cent of the 1946 force. This fact is perhaps due to better wages in industry and the greater use of machinery which allowed lower production costs on farms.

Not likely more than 5 million acres of land can be released for other farm production because of the replacement of the horse by the tractor which has taken place. This figure could increase by a couple more million in 20 years as a result of the same trend.

If a community pasture program takes place in eastern Canada, it will of necessity take place slowly and gradually. It can make better use of marginal lands and will require certain supervision with supervisors having the power to control.

The moving of farm families is a problem where the farm has been held by a family for generations. If farms are to be taken over by the government in order to organize a community pasture the cost of some of the land will be above its actual value because the owner is selling, in effect, more than the land.

The Gordon royal commission forecasts a population in Canada by 1980 of 26.7 million, or 70 per cent more than the population of 1955. The commission also made the following forecast with respect to the total consumption of major food items, taking 1951-55 as equalling 100 per cent: red meats will increase by 1980 to 214 per cent, an increase of 114 per cent; poultry will increase by 1980 to 218 per cent, an increase of 118 per cent; eggs will increase by 1980 to 231 per cent, an increase of 131 per cent; dairy products will increase by 1980 to 168 per cent, an increase of 68 per cent.

The total amount of grain consumed by livestock in 1954-55 was about 12 million tons. By 1980 it is estimated that there will be a 90 per cent increase in the consumption of grain by livestock.

If a program of tree planting is to take place it should not be delayed. Trees take time to mature for harvest; and I am of the opinion that if a program is to be inaugurated it must take place while there are in the north trees which may be utilized while the new trees are growing.

To sum up, I support this resolution in principle. I am proud to think that this government is providing courageous leadership in developing a land use program which should have the twofold effect of (a) creating increased export markets while (b) adjusting the unbalanced situation in respect to agricultural production. We must all realize, of course, that this program cannot be implemented in a decade but must be carefully planned so that it may be brought to its full development over a period of many, many years.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words with respect to this resolution. As all hon. members are aware, Canada is a country richly endowed with natural resources and with a relatively small population. Canada has a population of approximately 18 million and a total land area of nearly 4 million square miles. Only 1 per cent of this land area is now in farms and one half of that 1 per cent is under cultivation. Actually, not too much of Canada's land surface is under cultivation, yet we must develop our resources to benefit all Canadians. This resolution will bring about a greater intensification of the use of our resources and perhaps also a greater diversification of agriculture generally in Canada.

This resolution proposes to take marginal land out of production and perhaps redirect existing production into the production of other products. The year 1960 was a reasonably good one for agriculture on the prairie provinces with the exception of some local conditions. Some parts of my own constituency suffered from dry weather while other parts enjoyed good weather and achieved record crops. Field crops were good in all the western provinces and wheat production amounted to 490 million bushels with a slight increase in the acreage seeded. Under this resolution it is proposed to redirect acreage, so we must examine what products are grown and consider which can best be redirected.

Wheat production in 1960 was up 19 per cent over that of last year. The acreage was up only 1 per cent while the yield was up 18 per cent, in terms of the number of bushels produced. The yield accounted for most of the increase in production. I point this situation out merely to make it clear that any small amount of land taken out of wheat production will not be enough because the yield makes a big difference in the production and unless the acreage can be reduced by at least 10 per cent no great change in production will come about.

The yield of a particular product is what determines the amount that will be available to place on the market. As I said, in redirecting land out of wheat production I would think we must redirect at least 10 per cent of the land now used for the production of wheat. Approximately 21 million acres are now given over to the production of wheat so there would have to be the redirection of approximately 2 million acres in order to have a substantial effect on production.

In looking over the figures it will be seen that acreage has already been reduced in Alberta by nearly two and a half million acres. Ten years ago Alberta had a wheat acreage of something over 6 million acres. Today it is slightly over 4 million. A reduction of 2 million acres has already occurred in that province with respect to wheat production. This land has been redirected in the production of barley, oats and other more diversified forms of agriculture.

To redirect more land would take a tremendous effort and whether it will be accomplished through this resolution is something that only time will tell. It appears that we must maintain our export position in world wheat trade. Of course, like other hon. members of this house, I am thankful that we have boosted our wheat exports this year through what perhaps might be described as unexpected exports to communist countries.

While our exports to Great Britain and Germany were down in 1959 I hope that the wheat board, now that it comes under the minister's department, will concentrate on regaining the lost sales to those countries and make every effort to maintain our exports in what we consider to be our regular markets and channels.

In looking at some other field crops it will be seen that barley acreage has increased in Alberta but domestic use has increased as well. Our exports of barley last year were 64 million bushels. Approximately 170 million bushels of barley were consumed at home with a carryover of 120 million bushels. We had a total production of about 230 million bushels. The carryover of which I spoke was at the end of the 1959-60 crop year. That carryover would not be described as a surplus. While I do not think there is too much room for a greater acreage seeded to barley, certainly the present acreage could be maintained without creating any undue burden in terms of storage problems.

The same story is applicable with respect to oats. Domestic consumption is up and while we have some oats in storage, they are not surplus amounts.

In examining our imports of agricultural products I could not help but notice that 12 million bushels of corn were imported last year. Corn is grown principally in Ontario and Manitoba. Acreage in Ontario has doubled in the past ten years and nearly 500,000 acres in Ontario were seeded to corn last year. Perhaps this acreage could be increased again in order to produce more corn and cut down our imports of this particular product which surely can be grown in Ontario and Manitoba and, certainly in the irrigated parts of Alberta. Last year we had an exceptionally good year for durum wheat, and a great deal of it was grown. In fact there was an open quota on durum wheat and no doubt we shall see greater acreages next year though production cannot be expanded to any great extent.

Actually, the oilseeds present the greatest hope for expansion, and this resolution could help by speeding up measures of irrigation which would allow for increased production. Production of flax has remained reasonably constant. There was a rise in exports last year and, no doubt, there will be an increase in the acreage set to flax seed this year. Rapeseed is becoming a prominent crop in western Canada, and I think a greater acreage could be put to rapeseed as a result of measures which could perhaps be adopted in consequence of the present motion, namely, greater land use, an intensification of irrigation efforts, and so on. In fact, production of rapeseed was up by 40 per cent last year and, generally speaking, the farmers did well growing this crop in western Canada. Although the average yield declined somewhat compared with previous years I think that if the government were to take certain steps the acreage under this crop could be increased.

One of those steps would be to specify that rapeseed was a grain, thus allowing it to qualify for shipment at the same rates as those at which other grains are shipped through Canada. This step would reduce the cost of producing this product by something like two cents a pound and would greatly enhance the possibility of its taking over some of the acreage presently set to wheat. Another interesting thing about rapeseed is that only about 5 per cent of the margarine used in Canada contains rapeseed oil. I think that if we could develop domestic markets and lower the freight rate on rapeseed, in addition to creating land more suitable for the raising of this crop, rapeseed could play a more dominant part in our economy, particularly in western Canada. The same comments apply generally to sunflower seed and mustard seed. Production of these two crops could be developed and, perhaps, will be developed to a greater extent now that the new crushing plant has been opened in Lethbridge.

Most of the thought in western Canada in connection with this measure is directed to greater cattle production. Yet our marketings were 11 per cent higher in 1960 than they were in 1959 and our exports of cattle were down by something like 34 per cent. I point this out only to emphasize that while there may be room for a continued expansion of cattle herds in proportion to the expansion of our population, I cannot see the likelihood of their being increased to a point much ahead of the expansion of our population without prices being affected. Though prices remain steady, and even finished on an optimistic note at the end of 1960, I feel there is not much room for greatly increased numbers of cattle. Perhaps our consumption of meat could increase. I think it would increase if some of the chain stores did not feel they had to make such a large profit as they are now making, particularly on beef and pork.

Hog marketings were down last year by 20 per cent from the year before, and if conditions do not change overmuch, prices should remain reasonably steady. However, I do not think there is much room for any great expansion here.

To sum up with regard to the major products of western Canada, wheat is the only product in surplus as to which we should not like to see any increase in acreage. As for rapeseed, durum wheat, sunflower seed, mustard seed and, possibly flax, besides other vegetable crops including potatoes, these products lend themselves well to intensive agriculture, the use of irrigation and so on, and there may possibly be increases in production.

I do not think the production of butter should be reduced. On the other hand, I think consumption should be increased. It is interesting to note that in Great Britain when they decreased the price of butter they found they immediately had more consumers of butter. They found that after they had decreased the price for a year, when they increased it a little the consumer continued to eat butter. But, first, the price had to be decreased in order to attract consumers away from margarine. So I would suggest we should maintain the small dairy herd. A great many farmers today still buy the food for their tables out of the weekly cream cheque and I do not think we should take any steps that would be likely to reduce this cheque; rather, I think we should increase the consumption of this product.

On looking at the measure more closely—

The Deputy Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but it is six o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Habel: Could the leader of the house say whether there has been any change in the program announced last night?

Mr. Churchill: There has been no change. Tomorrow we shall commence with the budget resolutions. If that discussion is concluded we shall go on with the estimates of the Department of Agriculture. On Friday we shall take the estimates of the Department of Agriculture.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR BEETS—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SUPPORT PRICE

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): As a result of the unavoidable absence of my colleague the Minister of Agriculture, may I on his behalf make a short statement which follows negotiations he and I have had with representatives of the sugar refining company involved and the Ontario government.

The agricultural stabilization board has been authorized to support the price of sugar beets for the year 1961. This will stabilize the returns to sugar beet growers in the sugar beet growing areas, namely in Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and Alberta. Sugar beets for 1961 will be supported on the basis of $13.18, national average price per ton for beets yielding 16 per cent sugar, which is 102 per cent of the 10-year national average price. The prescribed national support price of $13.18 per ton for sugar beets yielding 16 per cent sugar is equivalent to the national average support price in 1960 of $14.23 per ton for sugar beets yielding 17 per cent sugar.

As a result, the support price arrangements for producers in Quebec, Manitoba and Alberta will remain unchanged from last year, and any deficiency payments will be equal to the difference between the prescribed price of $13.18 per ton of sugar beets and the national average price per ton received by producers.

In view of difficulties facing the Ontario sugar beet industry in 1961, a special arrangement, for one year only will apply to sugar beets grown in that province. The Ontario growers have represented to the governments that a return of $13 per ton was essential to meet their requirements. The processing company has undertaken to raise its purchase price by 50 cents a ton above the original offer. The province of Ontario will make a contribution, equal to 50 cents per ton, toward deficiency payments, payable in that province. Through the co-operation of the company and the province, Ontario growers will be assured of a market at a satisfactory return.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister of Finance for this announcement. He will know undoubtedly that several times since the middle of January I have asked the Minister of Agriculture to announce a sugar beet policy for Canada which, he said in the middle of January speaking in Chatham, would be announced within the course of a few days.

Though this announcement comes rather late it is nevertheless very acceptable. When I indicated in the house the other day that in southwestern Ontario seeding operations would begin possibly by the end of March and on that account there ought to be an announcement forthwith, some hon. members did not seem to concur in this statement of fact. But Mr. Bissonet of Stony Point, a well know sugar beet farmer in my riding, said the other day, an announcement of government policy was something that was necessary. The minister recognizes the special situation which attends the Ontario sugar beet farmer, and which puts him in a position somewhat different from that of the sugar beet growers of Quebec and western Canada. Certainly the sugar beet grower in Ontario does not have the transportation freight advantage that exists in the case of the sugar beet grower in western Canada, and that has put him in a difficult position.

It has now been decided that there should be a floor price of $13.18 and the Ontario government is going to assist in the matter somewhat, to the extent of 50 cents a ton. The company has undertaken to make a contribution notwithstanding its alleged loss on its operations with regard to sugar beets in the factory at Chatham, Ontario. I am glad to see the Ontario government providing this assistance. It is emulating the practice of the government of the province of Quebec, a government that has for the past year or so been extending similar assistance.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Essex East is getting a bit far afield in his comment on the factual statement.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, with great respect I do not believe I am. I was just about to point out that the Minister of Finance has said that the Ontario government is going to give some assistance, and that this practice has now been followed for some time in the province of Quebec. I do not see that there is anything wrong in that statement. The fact that it enrages hon. gentlemen opposite does not make it out of order.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I understood that you made a ruling that the hon. member was out of order in discussing the political aspects of this question.

Mr. Speaker: I expressed my view that the hon. member was going rather far afield, but if the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka will read the rule he will find when a point of order is taken the member concerned has the right to express his view on it before the matter is made final. I do not disagree with what the hon. member for Essex East was saying, but it seemed to me that he did in fact go a little further than he acknowledged when he spoke to the point of order. I hope he will confine himself strictly to the factual content of the statement so that it will not be necessary for me to rise again.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, in regard to this policy I am supporting the government. This is a matter that concerns farmers in my area and I propose, subject to the rules of this house, to exercise my right. Every time the hon. member for Essex East rises to discuss an important matter of government policy—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —hon. gentlemen opposite seem to delight in making his task extremely difficult.

Mr. Speaker: Order. All hon. members of the house will recognize the force of what has been said and the susceptibilities of the hon. member for Essex East. I trust the hon. member for Essex East does not consider that he is discussing an important matter of government policy because there is no debate. The hon. member is entitled to make limited comment in a non-debating and uncontroversial manner.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I believe that is exactly what I have been doing.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I know that hon. gentlemen find everything—

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I trust the hon. member for Essex East will proceed with his statement, and that hon. members will listen to him.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I shall be very glad to proceed with my statement, Mr. Speaker, but I do not propose to allow this majority to interfere with my rights as a member of this house.

The policy contained in this announcement is, of course, limited to one year. The government announced that it was going to give a sugar beet policy to the country. Let it be understood that this is not a sugar beet policy, because a policy that is designed for one year only does not take into account the hardships and the problems that confront the sugar beet grower. However, subject to this limitation I welcome the statement made by the Minister of Finance. It will clear the air somewhat. It will enable the farmers to begin their seeding and to plan their acreage program, but I regret that it is only for one year.

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, we have listened with a great deal of interest to the statement by the Minister of Finance and the very drastic reaction of the hon. member for Essex East. He seems to take a much longer time on his statements on beets than he does on important statements on wheat.

Mr. Hellyer: The reverse might be said to be true of you.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, when I speak at length I am criticized, and when I speak for a short time I am criticized.

Mr. Hees: You have a dreadful time.

Mr. Argue: The government's policy of national average prices coupled with deficiency payments has not worked out well for many industries, but to date it seems to have been a reasonably satisfactory policy for the sugar beet industry. At least that is the reaction that has come from the sugar beet growers.

I would have hoped that in announcing this policy the government would have announced a support price, a floor price, rather than a national average price, because very often in practice a national average price does not provide a floor and means lower prices for many producers. However, the sugar beet industry is such that fluctuations in price are not as wide as is the case in other industries. I think this announcement, coupled with the further supplementary guarantees from the government of Ontario and from the sugar beet processors themselves, should work out as a relatively satisfactory policy for one year.

The hon. member for Essex East has said this is not a long term policy. That is correct; but we are getting a year to year policy from this government, and for the coming year I hope this policy will be extended.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's comment is going far afield.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYMENT—ELIGIBLE AREAS UNDER DOUBLE DEPRECIATION PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make an announcement with respect to the selection of areas eligible for double depreciation under the program announced in the supplementary budget of December 20, 1960.

Hon. members of this house will recall that one objective of this program is to assist new industries in areas where there has been a substantial degree of continued unemployment over the years. Areas which meet the following criteria may qualify under this program. They are broken down into two categories; areas with a labour force of 10,000 and over, and areas with a labour force of less than 10,000. In those areas where the labour force is 10,000 and over the criteria are first, the area must have been classified by the Department of Labour in a surplus labour market category for 75 per cent or more of the 48 summer months from May to October, 1953-1960. Second, industrial employment must have declined over the period 1953-1960.

Areas with a labour force of less than 10,000 must have been classified by the Department of Labour as in a surplus labour market category for 50 per cent or more of the 48 summer months May to October, 1953-1960. Second, industrial employment conditions must have generally deteriorated over the years.

Areas which qualify will be termed surplus manpower areas. These areas will have the same boundaries as labour market areas served by the national employment service local offices. Localities, as distinct from larger areas, which qualify will be termed surplus manpower localities. These, in most cases, will have the same boundaries as municipalities.

The term "surplus labour market category" used in the criteria, I might explain, has reference to the classification of labour markets which has been published monthly in the Labour Gazette by the Department of Labour since 1953.

Applications may be made by municipal authorities wishing to be considered for designation as a surplus manpower area or locality under this program. Examples of areas and localities which might qualify under this program are Springhill, Elliot Lake and certain localities in Cape Breton. The applications would be made to the Department of Labour, which would undertake the necessary investigations, in co-operation with the national employment service, to determine whether the areas and localities meet the required criteria. Based on the findings of these investigations, the areas and localities which qualified would be designated by the governor in council.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): This announcement, while by no means complete as far as the needs of this problem are concerned, is nevertheless welcome. It is also, I suspect, an answer to the prodding which has taken place from this side of the house since the announcement of this policy last December.

On December 20 the Minister of Finance, in the only reference he made to unemployment, said the government proposed to embark on a program of double depreciation to assist in the relocation of industry and to encourage industry in depressed or chronically underemployed areas. However, no announcement concerning detail has been forthcoming until today.

Much time has been wasted, during which industries and municipalities affected might have been encouraged to take preparatory steps to enable them to take advantage of this particular provision. These steps might have been begun two months ago, and the delay is especially to be regretted when we bear in mind that there is no legislation requiring amendment in this house before the government could act or before municipalities or industries could seek to take advantage of this provision.

Mr. Benidickson: All we needed was an order in council.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes. The Minister of Finance had indicated that only after there had been a full discussion of the budget could we anticipate any formulation of policy, or certainly any declaration of policy. The details announced by the minister will have to be carefully examined. At first glance they do not seem to cover all the details that municipalities or companies will want to consider in their assessment as to what advantage they may derive from this policy. No reference has been made by the Minister of Labour to the criteria which apply in similar circumstances in the United States and Great Britain. What is the required percentage of unemployed in terms of the total work force? Is it to be 5 per cent as it is in the United States, or 4 per cent as it is in Great Britain? Having in mind that our unemployed population represents 10.2 per cent of our total work force, what is required in that regard before a municipality may take advantage of this provision?

Finally, I think that to require the municipalities to make an application is not in the best interests of the efficient operation of this program. The government should designate on the basis of its own determined criteria what are depressed areas, what are distressed areas and what are areas of chronic unemployment in Canada. Having determined that, the government should advise the municipalities of this fact so they may be made aware forthwith of the advantages which this plan proposes to offer them. I suspect there will be much delay as a result of imposing upon the municipalities an onus for action which I believe should rest on the government.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, hon. members and the public generally I am sure will recall that in January of 1958, before that eventful election day, hon. members of the C.C.F. were advocating something of this nature, foreseeing the complications that would arise in our economy under a Tory government. We are thankful that even though it is three or four years late a step is now being made in this direction. It is unfortunate that the minister did not deal with the relocation of industries and employees in areas of chronic unemployment and that the previous government had not the acumen to foresee this problem.

I understood from the statement that the onus is on the municipalities to make application. This is an inadequate approach. In addition to the provision relating to applications, the Department of Labour with its extensive facilities should undertake, if it has not already done so, surveys of areas it considers depressed, designate them as such and institute plans of this nature for those areas without the necessity of application being made.

A couple of weeks ago we were promised that the labour estimates would be dealt with quickly. It is now necessary for them to be called immediately in order that we may examine the details of this plan and see whether it meets the problem.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): May I direct a question to the Minister of Labour arising out of the statement he made a while ago concerning double depreciation. It was not possible for me to follow too closely, but before an area can qualify under the criteria mentioned by him must an application be made by the municipality concerned?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. W. H. McMillan (Welland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. I believe he has given two examples of areas in Nova Scotia where double depreciation would apply. Since the regulations seem to be restrictive, I wonder if he could give one or two examples of areas in Ontario where this would apply apart from Elliot Lake.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the minister is in a position to answer that question, but it seems to me this is a subject matter which the house will be discussing, and the hon. member's questions might well be directed at that time.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, in view of the great importance of this matter it would seem that the question put by the hon. member for Welland was a fair one. Perhaps the minister, since he has the information before him now, would not only reply to the question but would list all the depressed areas which the government has in mind as qualifying for this kind of assistance.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I was prepared to answer the question but the hon. member for Essex East has of course delayed that answer by getting to his feet. Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I have said in this statement. I read it very slowly and carefully, but I will read it again. It reads as follows:

> Examples of areas and localities that might qualify under this program are Springhill, Elliot Lake, and certain localities in Cape Breton.

These have not been determined yet but as this criteria is set out these might qualify. As regards municipalities in Ontario or any other place in Canada, of course applications will be received from the municipal authorities. If the hon. member for Essex East feels that Windsor comes under these criteria then I wish he would say so, in order that it will help the municipal authorities there.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. gentleman has directed his question to me may I ask him if he does not think it is the duty of the government of Canada, particularly a government that said it would resolve unemployment, to decide if the city of Windsor or any other community in Canada in the judgment of the government deserves to receive this kind of assistance?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, since the member for Essex East does not know whether or not Windsor would qualify under this criteria, I might point out that this government will fulfil its obligations to the fullest if, upon the application of Windsor and following a complete investigation, it is found that it does comply with these criteria. The designation will then be made.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Welland rising on a supplementary question?

Mr. McMillan: I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. In all cases does the calculation go back to 1953?

Mr. Starr: The criteria set out provide that with a labour force of 10,000 and over, an area must have been classified by the Department of Labour as being in a surplus labour market category for 75 per cent or more of the 48 summer months, May to October, from 1953 to 1960.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I wish to direct a further question to the Minister of Labour based upon this statement. I would like to ask him whether he or the government has considered the fact that there are some areas in Canada that are not in fact included in municipalities but which might be declared as distressed areas. What is the situation in this regard?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, as I said in my statement there will be two types of applications, one on behalf of surplus manpower areas; the other on behalf of surplus manpower localities. A surplus manpower area takes in the same boundaries as the labour market areas served by the national employment service local offices.

[Later:]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour whether he can tell the house if there is any requirement, before a municipality can qualify for the application of double depreciation, in regard to the percentage of unemployed in terms of the work force; for instance, would a city like Cornwall, where the unemployed population is well over 10 per cent, be able to qualify for assistance?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, any area or locality can qualify if upon application it is ascertained by proper investigation by the Department of Labour and the national employment service that the area qualifies as set out under the criteria that has been set up.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): I would like to ask the Minister of Labour what advantage the government feels there is in putting municipalities to the inconvenience of making these applications.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, the advantage is that should an area qualify, there would be the possibility of an industry locating in that municipality or area.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I do not propose to allow any more supplementary questions. The minister's original statement was discussed at some considerable length and there have been at least six questions allowed. Undoubtedly there will be an opportunity to debate the matter, and I think it would be improvident for the house to take more time or to debate the matter any further on orders of the day.

[Later:]

Mr. W. M. Benidickson (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Since December 20, 1960, when the minister indicated to this house that he had proposals with respect to double depreciation relating to chronic unemployment, has the minister taken any steps by regulation or otherwise under section 11 (1) (a) of the Income Tax Act to provide double depreciation for industries that might be in areas of chronic unemployment?

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the hon. member was in the house earlier this afternoon. An announcement on this subject was made by my colleague the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, I was in the house. I think the information given by the Minister of Labour in no way relates to the question I have raised. I believe the question is properly advanced to the minister who recommends amendments to this house, if necessary, to the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member referred to areas of what he called chronic unemployment. That was the substance of the statement made by my colleagues this afternoon. Was there something more than that in the question?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member asked whether you had passed the required order in council.

Mr. Benidickson: My question was, has the Minister of Finance, who I assume would be the minister advancing amendments which concern the public, through orders in council, under section 11 (1) (a) of the Income Tax Act, since December 20 last recommended or provided regulations that in any way fulfil the declaration asserted in his supplementary budget speech of December 20, 1960?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member will have to be more specific if he wants a more specific answer than the one I gave a moment ago. If he will be specific, I will endeavour to be equally specific in my answer. At the moment he has referred to a statement made in the supplementary budget speech of December 20, concerning the application of double depreciation to new industries located in areas of what he called chronic unemployment. I have drawn attention to the fact that this was the subject to which my colleague the Minister of Labour addressed himself in the statement he made this afternoon, which was followed by many questions.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, when I used the words "chronic unemployment" I was of course using words used by the Minister of Finance on December 20.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is inquiring about regulations which may have been made under a statute. I would think that if regulations had been made, the information would be equally available to all members of the house when those regulations were published. In any event, the hon. member has made three attempts at the question and I think we might proceed to other business.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, I think you will agree—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Benidickson: Yes, I am rising on a point of order, sir. I think you will agree that not all orders in council are made available either to the public or to members of the House of Commons. The Minister of Finance has the opportunity, under section 11 (1) (a) of the Income Tax Act, to carry out what he indicated would be done on December 20, 1960. This kind of information is not available to us all.

Mr. Speaker: Whether it is or not, the hon. member has had three opportunities to elicit information, and it seems to me that the matter has—

Mr. Chevrier: We have a right to know whether anything has been done.

Mr. Speaker: —had sufficient time to be dealt with.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, surely hon. members of this house are entitled to know from a minister whether an order in council has or has not been passed pursuant to an act of this parliament. That is what the hon. member is asking.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members are entitled to ask the minister whether an order in council has been passed. The question has been asked three times without clarification of the question or the answer; I am not sure which. My point is that we should pass to some business which we can deal with effectively. We will pass to orders of the day unless there is any other question to be asked.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to pursue the point of order with which you have just dealt. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The point of order has been dealt with. It is a matter of discretion for the Chair as to how many supplementary questions will be permitted. I have already exercised considerable patience so that the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River could receive an answer. I think enough opportunity and latitude has been given the hon. member, and he must accept my decision.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I seek to ask the Minister of Finance a question on this vitally important matter. Has the government passed an order in council in any further—

Mr. Fulton: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, is it not a fact you have just ruled that sufficient supplementary questions have been asked on this matter, and is not the hon. member seeking to disregard your ruling?

Mr. Speaker: I think the Minister of Justice has taken a very appropriate point. Having limited the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, it would be quite unfair if I were to allow the hon. member for Essex East to pursue the matter.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EASTER ADJOURNMENT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, several members have asked me what are the general plans with reference to adjournment at Easter, as they would like to know well in advance. Whether it be in the form of a motion later or now without a formal motion, by consent of the house, having regard to the fact that in 1959 the house adjourned from March 25 to April 6 and in 1960 from April 13 to April 25, I suggest that at the conclusion of the sitting on Wednesday, March 29, the house might stand adjourned to resume on Monday, April 10. That is the general idea and suggestion that the government has to offer.

Mr. Speaker: If the proposal made by the Prime Minister is unanimously acceptable, it might be accepted now and made an order of the house.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the motion be made at once. So far as we are concerned, we are willing to accede.

Mr. Speaker: It seems that all members of the house are agreeable to the proposal made by the Prime Minister, and by unanimous consent the order might now be made that when the house adjourns on Wednesday, March 29, it shall stand adjourned until Monday, April 10. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT

Hon. Donald M. Fleming (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-71, respecting the civil service of Canada.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO AGENDA AND CANADIAN PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister indicated the other day that he would be in a position to make a statement today with regard to some aspects at least of the forthcoming prime ministers' conference in London. I am referring particularly to the Canadian delegation.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall that I said I would do so today. I am not in any way challenging the statement, but I am unable to make a statement today. I will do so tomorrow morning.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF PROVINCIAL ENERGY BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the minister any comments to make with respect to the tabling by the premier of British Columbia in the legislature of that province yesterday of a first report from the British Columbia energy board which recommended delay in the ratification of the Columbia development treaty until certain essential facts are known?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have received information to the effect that such a report was filed by the premier of British Columbia in the legislature of that province yesterday, but I do not yet have a copy of the report although I have asked for one. Under the circumstances I think it would be inappropriate to comment on the report because I am unaware of its full contents or effect.

Furthermore, I think the house will realize that this is a report by the British Columbia energy board to the British Columbia government, and it seems to me that before commenting it would also be appropriate to know the attitude of the government of British Columbia, because I do not think we should otherwise comment on a report of a provincial agency.

In this connection, of course, I must say that I, and I am sure all other hon. members as well, feel some sympathy for the British Columbia government with regard to the position in which it has been placed.

All members will be aware that the discussions with British Columbia and the negotiations for the treaty lasted for two years; that in those negotiations British Columbia was fully associated; that the premier and other members of the government of British Columbia made statements from time to time to the effect that as soon as a treaty was signed they would be glad to get on with the Columbia river project, and that the treaty itself was signed with the full knowledge and approval of the British Columbia government. I feel, therefore, that they may have been placed in a rather awkward position by the report of their energy board, in view of the fact that for two years they had given study to this matter, and have made public statements that they were fully in accord with the negotiation of the treaty and wanted to get on with the job as quickly as possible.

For these reasons I think that my comments should be reserved until the position of the British Columbia government with respect to this report is known.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Does it remain the policy of the government not to bring this agreement before the House of Commons until agreement has been reached with the province of British Columbia?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that on an earlier occasion. I am unable to say whether or not the agreement will be brought forward before the event to which the hon. gentleman has made reference.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO STRENGTHENING OF ARMED FORCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Will the government follow the lead of the Kennedy administration and the suggestion of the official opposition in this house by adopting measures to strengthen the conventional capacity of the Canadian armed forces?

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the forces of Canada are conventional forces it is rather difficult to see how we can do very much more along that line except in improving their equipment, which we have been doing constantly.

I might say, of course, that some two weeks ago in a speech at Toronto I indicated that the utmost degree of flexibility was necessary in Canada's armed forces, and that they must be trained to meet all three general types of wars in which it is possible they may be employed; first, a general nuclear war; second, a limited conventional war and, third, a brush fire war or police action such as we now have in the Congo. The training and organization of the Canadian forces is directed toward the utmost efficiency in meeting any one of these three situations.

Mr. Hellyer: That sounds like a buckshot answer.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hamilton (Notre Dame de Grace): You don't use a rifle to shoot a goose.

Mr. Hellyer: I wonder whether the minister would consider the possibility of stopping the pouring of taxpayers' money into the Bomarc sinkhole and using it for—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member might reserve that remark for the debate when it occurs.

INQUIRY AS TO ALLOCATION OF NEW INTERCEPTOR AIRCRAFT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Would he comment on a Canadian Press report this morning to the effect that if a new interceptor is obtained from the United States it will be delivered only to the five remaining squadrons of the R.C.A.F. used now for continental air defence.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the Leader of the Opposition is asking a rather hypothetical question on a matter of fairly broad policy, and I do not know how it can be dealt with on the orders of the day.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it is a very specific report to the effect that the nine R.C.A.F. squadrons are to be reduced to five and any replacement of equipment for these squadrons will be allocated only to the five.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Minister of National Defence): I think it is a generally accepted rule of the house that comment is not made on these newspaper articles, which are usually of a speculative character. However, the hon. member will recall that on February 9 last, in reply to a question, I referred to statements made by my predecessor in office concerning the phasing out of the CF-100 aircraft. At that time I said that four of these squadrons would be phased out in an ordered program during 1961.

I can now tell the house that the four squadrons and their dates of disbandment are as follows: 425 squadron, St. Hubert, May 1, 1961; 410 squadron, Uplands, June 1, 1961; 433 squadron, North Bay, August 1, 1961; 416 squadron, St. Hubert, October 1, 1961.

PETAWAWA—INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER RECREATIONAL DEVELOPMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker I would like to ask a specific question of the Minister of Finance. I want to ask this question because I am interested in knowing whether full recreation facilities are available to the armed forces, and because I have been asked to obtain this information. I would like to ask the Minister of National Defence, in view of the moneys spent over the years at Camp Petawawa for a fish pool, a yacht club and a golf course, whether there are any further recreational developments planned, such as a cricket pitch.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the hon. member put his question on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. W. F. Matthews (Nanaimo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. Is there a Sergeant Bilko on the payroll at Camp Petawawa?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I assume that the hon. member has not given notice. His question might go on the order paper with the question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch).

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ECCLES CASE—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, of which I have sent him notice. Is the minister able to report to the house the results, if any, of the investigation into the so-called Eccles divorce case, which was referred to the Department of Justice by the miscellaneous private bills committee during the last session and subsequently referred to the department of the attorney general of Ontario?

Hon. E. D. Fulton (Minister of Justice): As the hon. member has pointed out, this matter was referred by us to the attorney general of Ontario, and since the initial reference certain further investigations into some aspects of the case are being conducted. The results of those investigations will in turn be brought to the attention of the department of the attorney general of Ontario. As my parliamentary secretary indicated to the house on December 7, 1960, this matter relates to the administration of justice in the province.

INDUSTRY

AUTOMOBILES—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Last Monday the hon. member for Essex East asked the Prime Minister if he was in a position to inform the house when we may expect to receive the report from the royal commission appointed to investigate the automobile industry. The Prime Minister's reply was to the effect that he would communicate with Dr. Bladen. I wonder if he now has anything to report in view of the failure of Canada's compact automobiles—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I was not clear for a moment as to why the hon. member was repeating the former question, but I think his final remark probably illustrated his purpose, and it does not appear to me to be in order.

[Later:]

Mr. Badanai: I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I should like to ask him whether he has succeeded in communicating with Dr. Bladen about the report concerning the auto industry. If so, has he a report to make to the house?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): The information I have at the moment is that Commissioner Bladen will be reporting some time during the present month.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SALK VACCINE—REPORTED DOUBT AS TO VALUE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the minister seen the report by several members of the medical profession, which appeared yesterday in many leading United States newspapers, to the effect that there seemed to be a doubt about the value of Salk vaccine? If so, has the minister any comment to make?

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the report to which the hon. member refers. However, I should stress that we have no evidence along the lines that would seem to be indicated in this story. In fact, Salk vaccine in Canada has been up to 95 per cent effective in cases where the dosage was given as directed. Production and use of the vaccine has always been carried out under the strictest control.

I understand that the opinions voiced in the United States are, at best, only those of a small minority, and that the American Medical Association has reaffirmed its support of the Salk program. I should point out also that all vaccine is tested before release by my department's laboratory of hygiene.

Hon. Paul Martin (Essex East): May I ask a supplementary question, based on the minister's statement concerning the production and testing of Salk vaccine in Canada. Is it not a fact that not only the Connaught Laboratories but the institute of microbiology in Montreal carries on a test program after production, and that there is likewise a testing of samples at the laboratory here in Ottawa?

Mr. Monteith (Perth): Yes, that is correct, Mr. Speaker.

DRUGS

BARBITURATES—STATEMENT AS TO FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean asked whether a representative of the department would be attending a meeting tomorrow called by the mayor of Montreal to discuss illegal traffic in barbiturates.

An invitation has been received by the food and drug directorate and has been accepted by the assistant director of inspection and enforcement services. The directorate's chief inspector in Montreal also plans to attend.

TRADE

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING RESTRICTIONS ON U.S. TOURIST IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): I should like to direct a question to the minister of northern affairs. In view of the fact that Canadian tourists spend approximately $100 million more in the United States than United States tourists spend in Canada, and the fact that Canada is the United States' best customer, can the minister say what representations have been made to protest the proposed reduction to $100 in the amount of tariff free merchandise United States tourists will be allowed to take into their country from Canada?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the government is very much aware of the importance of the tourist industry. I can assure the hon. member that all possible steps have been taken to assure that this industry shall continue to make its contribution to the economy of this country.

Mr. Garland: May I ask a supplementary question. What action has the government taken to determine the actual loss in spending by United States tourists in this country as a result of the proposed legislation?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, that is a hypothetical question. I can only reiterate what I have already indicated, that all possible steps have been taken to assure the effective progress of the tourist industry in Canada. These steps include the opening of a new tourist bureau at San Francisco on the west coast.

CIVIL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON REPORTED TEST IN MAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hazen Argue (Assiniboia): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister care to comment on a report in this morning's Globe and Mail to the effect that the emergency measures organization will conduct an operation to simulate a nuclear attack? This operation, to be known as "Tocsin", is scheduled for May. Will the Prime Minister say whether the federal ministers will be transported to a secret emergency shelter outside of Ottawa, while the provincial authorities will be expected to evacuate to a make believe headquarters?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): When the government is in a position to make a report in detail with reference to this matter, it will be done. The subject cannot be conveniently discussed at a time like this in answer to a question.

Mr. Argue: May I ask a supplementary question. Has there been a leak in security regulations?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has already had a conclusive answer.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ESTABLISHMENT OF PEACE CORPS TO AID UNDERDEVELOPED COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Trinity): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Will the Canadian government establish a peace corps of young Canadians to work side by side with their United States cousins in assisting the people of the less developed countries in their efforts to improve their standard of living?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion made by the President of the United States is a most interesting one. Further than that I cannot go.

Mr. Hellyer: May I ask a supplementary question. Would the Prime Minister not agree that this is probably one of the most important steps that could be taken by the west?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking a rhetorical question for the purpose of stating a point of view, and I do not believe it is proper to argue the point.

Mr. Hellyer: May I rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker? Will the Prime Minister give this important matter—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hellyer: —immediate consideration, since he undoubtedly will feel this proposal is deserving of immediate co-operation and Canadian participation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is entitled to ask whether consideration will be given to a matter, but not to repeat his positive statement.

Mr. Hellyer: Does the Prime Minister not intend to reply, and indicate to the house whether or not he will give this matter favourable consideration at a later date?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think the question and the statement made by the hon. member do not deserve any further reply than has already been given.

Mr. Hellyer: I am sure the people of the underdeveloped countries will be glad to hear that.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TELEVISING OF BIG FOUR FOOTBALL GAMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue. While it may seem to be an apparent travesty as a matter of urgent national importance, Mr. Speaker, I should like to assure you it seems important in my part of the country. Can the minister give us a definitive statement from the C.B.C. on the position of affiliates to its network in so far as Big Four football telecasts in 1961 are concerned? Second, has the C.B.C. considered the telecasting of Canadian intercollegiate games over its network in 1961?

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I realize that this problem is of interest to many Canadians. However, it is an involved and complicated one. There are various factors which I do not have time to enumerate here. I cannot give any definitive statement on it today or for some reasonable time in the future, because it is being given careful consideration and study by the corporation. When a decision has been reached and arrangements worked out, if any, I will then be in a position to make a statement to the house.

INTERNATIONAL SERVICE—ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT FOR DISPLACED EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the other day the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate asked me a question with respect to the possibility of alternative employment for those employees of the C.B.C. employed in the shortwave service.

I am advised that several of these employees have been transferred to other appointments in the national service. The corporation is giving careful consideration to this matter and is endeavouring to appoint as many as possible if not all, in the national service. The curtailment of the short wave service is scheduled to take place on March 31.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

OTTAWA—STATEMENT ON REPORTED WORKING CONDITIONS FOR WAITRESSES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, for the information of the hon. member for Skeena, who asked a question yesterday on orders of the day having to do with the discontinuation of employment of a number of waitresses in a certain restaurant in Ottawa, and stating that they were unable to obtain employment insurance benefits by reason of the activity of the employer in the first instance, I might say that officials of the unemployment insurance commission are investigating this situation in order to find out whether the four girls were fired or resigned and are eligible for insurance or not. Their departure followed the dismissal of a hostess.

Adjudication in this case will take place in Toronto. An officer of the Ottawa office is sending a factual report of this occurrence to the Toronto office today. Among the questions to be adjudicated is the question of whether the girls were fired or whether they resigned. In either case, Mr. Speaker, there must be a determination of the cause leading up to the incident in question before the question of eligibility can be resolved.

INQUIRY AS TO TRAINING OF UNEMPLOYED IN ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. R. Garland (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In respect to the vocational training legislation passed at this session of parliament, has the minister's attention been drawn to the charge by Metro chairman Gardiner that Ontario is trying to "shuffle off" on the municipalities the responsibility for training the unemployed. In view of this great difficulty, would the minister comment on the progress being made in this field?

Hon. Michael Starr (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, my information is that there are many plans that will be put into effect. As far as the actual initiative for the organization of these programs is concerned, as a federal government we can only deal with the provinces. We have no intention of interfering in the situation as between the provinces and the municipalities. We have provided the incentive; it is up to them to take up the program.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO CARGOES LOST AT SEA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has any cargo being transported by his department in the northern parts of Canada been lost at sea recently?

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I received no notice of this question. I will have to take it as notice and bring in an answer at a later date.

(Translation):

AIRPORTS

MONTREAL—USE OF RAILWAY FACILITIES TO TRANSPORT PASSENGERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Rouleau (Dollard): I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport. In reply to a question put to him on February 14 last, concerning the transportation by the C.N.R. of air passengers between Dorval airport and downtown Montreal, the minister said that he would pass on the suggestion to the C.N.R. management.

In view of the interest shown in this matter by my constituents and by the passengers in general, may I ask the minister whether he has made representations to the railway authorities and, if so, whether he has anything to report to the house on this subject?

Hon. Leon Balcer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion made by the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Johnson) has in fact aroused a great deal of interest. Many articles have appeared in the press on this matter. After he put his question to me in this house, I got in touch immediately with the railway authorities and asked for a report. I expect that report at any moment.

Mr. Rouleau: Could the minister make a statement during his forthcoming visit to the constituency of Dollard?

(Text):

FORESTRY

INQUIRY AS TO ARRESTING DUTCH ELM DISEASE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Bonavista-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Forestry whether his department is making any progress in finding a means of arresting the Dutch elm disease.

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of this matter, but I will take the question as notice.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Rea in the chair.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the customs tariff and to provide:

1. That the said act be amended by adding thereto immediately after section 2 thereof the following section:

"2A. (1) For the purposes of this act, goods shall be deemed to be of a "class or kind" made or produced in Canada if

(a) in the case of goods other than goods custom-made to specifications, goods of approximately the same class or kind are made or produced in Canada; and

(b) in the case of goods custom-made to specifications adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of such goods within a reasonable period of time.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1), goods other than goods custom-made to specifications shall be deemed not to be of a class or kind made or produced in Canada unless at least 10 per cent of the normal Canadian consumption of goods of the same or approximately the same class or kind are made or produced in Canada.

(3) The decision of the minister shall be final with respect to the following matters:

(a) the normal Canadian consumption of the goods described in subsection (2), and

(b) whether goods are custom-made to specifications, and whether adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of such goods within a reasonable period of time."

2. That subsections (9) and (10) of section 6 of the said act be repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(9) For the purposes of this act, notwithstanding section 2A, goods may be deemed to be of a class or kind not made or produced in Canada where similar goods made or produced in Canada are not offered for sale to the ordinary agencies of wholesale or retail distribution or are not offered to all purchasers on equal terms under like conditions, having regard to the custom and usage of trade."

3. That subsection (4) of section 6A of the said act be repealed.

4. That any enactment founded upon this resolution shall be deemed to have come into force on the 21st day of December, 1960, and to have applied to all goods mentioned therein imported or taken out of warehouse for consumption on or after that day, and to have applied to goods previously imported for which no entry for consumption was made before that day.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, from time to time now, over a considerable period, we have returned in committee to this resolution, the discussion of which seems to have caused some impatience in the minds of certain ministers who are, of course, anxious to get it through. I have no apology to make for contributing, though it will only be for a few minutes, to this discussion.

It has been suggested to us by the Minister of Finance that it is only a small resolution. It is a small resolution but it is one with big implications, implications which extend to the fundamental principle of parliamentary control over taxation. The debate which has already taken place on this resolution has also served to show the historic difference between the two national parties on this whole issue; between a policy of maximum possible trade and a policy of maximum possible protection. No misrepresentation, no distortion of the historical or the contemporary record, can conceal the difference between the two parties in that regard. The record of that difference can be found in the columns of Hansard since 1870.

In earlier parliamentary days there was a straightforward admission of that difference, but now it is not so easy to get exposures by hon. gentlemen opposite of this diversity of approach. Changes are made now, not openly but by subterfuge or, in the language of my hon. friend from Bonavista-Twillingate, by adopting a sly and furtive approach to these matters.

Before I outline very briefly our position in respect of the proposed resolution and its effect on our tariffs I should refer to what the Minister of Finance has told us more than once about the purpose of this resolution. Perhaps the briefest definition he gave of that purpose is to be found reported on page 1667 of Hansard of February 2, 1961:

> The purpose of the proposed legislation is to restore the original concepts relating to this phrase "class or kind" after what I described yesterday as a decade of erosion. In doing so we will provide for the first time some effective means of dealing with goods that have been described in this proposed amendment.

The minister then said there had been erosion. What presumably is meant by erosion is that the tariff board, the exchequer court and the supreme court have disregarded the intentions of parliament and limited the meaning which successive governments intended to give to the class or kind provision in the customs tariff. We do not agree that this so-called erosion has taken place. The government, we claim, has completely failed to show that any significant difference existed over the years between the interpretation given by the customs administration and by the tariff board. In fact we have shown that in many cases cited by the minister the tariff board has actually upheld the customs administration. I think it is correct to say that in all appeals to the courts from the board, save one, the board was sustained.

The government claims that this erosion began in 1950, but presumably in making that claim they have forgotten that Mr. Hector MacKinnon was chairman of the tariff board from 1940 to 1957, ten years before, and seven years after this erosion is supposed to have started. How then do they explain this sudden change in Mr. MacKinnon? Surely they would not deny that no man better understands the real meaning of the United States-Canada trade agreement of 1935, or the Customs Tariff and regulations, or the meaning of GATT than Mr. MacKinnon himself.

We say there has been no erosion, and that the government by this resolution is in effect asking for power to change the tariff surreptitiously and indirectly, because if it were done directly and openly it would amount to a breach of our international trade agreements. That would be bad enough, but the government does not intend merely to change the law. By this resolution and by action which, it hopes, will be taken in connection with the bill, the government intends to nullify the jurisdiction of the tariff board and the courts and to vest absolute power in the Minister of National Revenue over an important field of the Canadian economy.

It is difficult to get an exact estimate of the amount of trade that would be involved in the application of this amendment, though we have tried to extract it from the minister, I believe, during this debate. It has been estimated that more than $200 million worth of imports would be involved annually and, therefore, a very important sector of our trade would be affected.

The government in this matter is in effect giving the Minister of National Revenue the power to decide without any review or appeal whether the duty on a great number of potential imports—I have used the figure of $200 million—will be high or low. Is it to be 7½ per cent or is it to be 22 per cent?

As has been pointed out in this connection, the Liberal government in 1936 clarified the meaning of "made in Canada". It became established that an article to qualify must be made in substantial quantities; and "substantial", as we know, was later defined by order in council as 10 per cent of consumption, with an appeal from that determination to the tariff board and to the courts.

In 1958 changes were made in the dump duty which in many important respects was put under the discretion of the minister. Now the determination of "made in Canada" which is necessary for the application of this dump duty is also to be put under ministerial discretion. From that decision, in respect of certain matters where discretion is given, there is no appeal. There is not even any provision for informing the public when a decision is made, or the terms of that decision. The amendment is perfectly clear on that point. Subsection 3 reads as follows:

(3) The decision of the minister shall be final with respect to the following matters:
(a) the normal Canadian consumption of the goods described in subsection (2), and
(b) whether goods are custom-made to specifications, and whether adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of such goods within a reasonable period of time.

Decision in regard to these matters is given to the minister without appeal and without publicity. Therefore an article in this particular category now becomes made in Canada if the minister determines it to be so, and there is no appeal from that determination. It is this denial of access to the courts, an access which now exists, that is our most fundamental objection to this proposed amendment. I know that the minister in his statements on this matter to the committee has attempted to explain away this denial in terms which he considers to be satisfactory. For instance, on February 27 as reported at page 2460 of Hansard the minister said:

The right of appeal is taken away from no one. The most that can be said—

—and this is a lot—

—is that the right of appeal cannot be invoked on grounds that lie within the three points on which the Minister of National Revenue is given the right to make the final decision.

The right of appeal is taken away from no one, but it cannot be invoked in respect of those three matters the minister mentioned. I consider that mere sophistry. We on this side of the house do not understand how a government which is headed by a Prime Minister who sponsored the bill of rights can justify taking away from the taxpayers the right of access to the courts in matters in which they have enjoyed such access over the years.

If the Minister of Justice were present in the committee I would put this question to him. In any event, I shall place my question on the record. I ask the minister whether he has done what he is required to do, that is examine these particular amendments in relation to the bill of rights. The hon. gentleman is required to do this under section 3 of the bill of rights, which reads:

3. The Minister of Justice shall, in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the governor in council, examine every proposed regulation submitted in draft form to the clerk of the privy council pursuant to the Regulations Act and every bill introduced in or presented to the House of Commons, in order to ascertain whether any of the provisions thereof are inconsistent with the purposes and provisions of this part and he shall report any such inconsistency to the House of Commons at the first convenient opportunity.

[Mr. Pearson.]

I assume that in due course we will get that kind of report from the Minister of Justice which he is required to make under the bill of rights.

That is our basic objection, that the government, in effect, is vesting in a single minister of the crown in certain important matters absolute power to fix the rate of tax which taxpayers will be called upon to pay. We consider that this is arbitrary power. In response to the statement that this is arbitrary power, the Minister of Finance on February 27, as reported at page 2460 of Hansard, replied:

These are not arbitrary powers at all. These are necessary powers in the transaction of the business of this country.

That is another subtle distinction. Our view is that if the rate of tax is to be changed it should be changed in a straightforward way by parliament, and not left to the uncontrolled decision or whim of a minister of the crown as could be done if this resolution were translated into law. We do not think this kind of change is needed at all. We believe it will be not advantageous but detrimental to the Canadian economy, and that by increasing the costs of machinery for production, for instance, it will be particularly harmful to industries which are seeking to expand and modernize in order to improve their competitive position in an increasingly competitive world.

If the government, however, is determined to make these changes in the definition of "goods of a class or kind made in Canada" no doubt its majority will permit it to do so, but we feel we have an obligation to do our utmost to stop the government from taking away the fundamental right of access to the courts which the taxpayers now enjoy in respect of certain matters dealt with in the resolution. No valid reason has been given for denying in future the right of appeal which now exists, and there is every reason for asserting it when it is proposed to give far-reaching powers over the expansion and modernization of industry to a single minister of the crown. That is the basic issue before parliament in this resolution.

We also oppose this measure because it seems to us to be an indirect method of evading our international obligations to our trading partners which is neither honourable, wise nor prudent. Surely if this resolution becomes law it will constitute an invitation to other countries to retaliate against our exports, and the losses to our trade are likely to greatly exceed any small and problematical gains in direct employment.

To sum up, we feel the resolution is wrong. It is dangerous, and should be withdrawn. But if the government will not withdraw it we appeal to the government to at least abandon its intention of denying the taxpayers the access which they now have to an independent tribunal to review the arbitrary tax decisions made by a single minister of the crown.

Many years ago, Mr. Chairman, a former prime minister of this country and leader of the Conservative party, Mr. Meighen, said, as found at page 3414 of Hansard for 1921:

> There should never be an unrestrained discretion in the hands of any minister or any government.

Let me give another quotation from page 4527 of Hansard for June 7, 1955. The paragraph reads as follows:

> In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say that the issue here is deep-seated, clear-cut and fundamental. It is the issue of the rule of law—

We claim that the rule of law is involved in this resolution as an issue.

> —and the preservation of the authority of parliament. It is not simply a matter of the preservation . . . of the substance of parliamentary authority and rule. We will have nothing to do with the grant of powers vastly in excess of need . . . Supreme over any all-powerful executive, in our view, must stand the authority of a free, sovereign and independent parliament.

Those are good words, Mr. Speaker. They were uttered at that time by the present Minister of Finance. We ask him to apply this principle now to this particular resolution and to bring forward amendments to the resolution which will implement the principles which he espoused so strongly when he sat on this side.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): And you opposed.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Mr. Chairman, in his closing words the Leader of the Opposition used a quotation from a speech by the Right Hon. Arthur Meighen. As I listened to the Leader of the Opposition developing his argument this afternoon, I was reminded of another statement made in this house by Mr. Meighen to Dr. Michael Clark. That statement was:

> The hon. gentleman has given us an example of the maximum of merit that a speech may reach without the ingredient of logic or the assistance of facts.

Could there be any words more appropriate to describe all the flurry, fluster and fury which the Leader of the Opposition has just emitted? Perhaps there are some Mr. Chairman, and I will use these to describe what the Leader of the Opposition has said: fanciful, fatuous, fantastic, frivolous and farcical.

What has he done this afternoon in following the lead of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and that of the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River is to succeed completely in perverting and distorting the effect and significance of this resolution. Indeed, sir, in my experience as a member and observer of this parliament I have never heard such extravagance of language, such intemperance and immoderation of argument, and such fatuity of reasoning as have been unleashed against this resolution. In all the amateur histrionics of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate and all the mock heroics of the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon, there has been a total absence of logic, of reasoning. There has been nothing but confusion and distortion.

Mr. Benidickson: He is reading every word.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. member permit a question? Could he say who wrote that prose?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): This particular hon. member has no difficulty in writing his own prose and in speaking his own prose at any particular time.

Mr. Benidickson: Could I ask the hon. gentleman whether he wrote it before he heard the argument of the Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has demonstrated a sufficient number of times on this resolution that his understanding of the issue is in inverse ratio to his volubility.

Let me try to reduce this whole issue to its basic elements and proceed in the simplest terms and by logical steps, I hope, to analyse what is proposed. The first question hon. members must ask themselves is this. Does parliament believe or does it not believe that goods of a class or kind made in Canada deserve a margin of protection in excess of that granted to goods of a class or kind not so made in Canada? If the answer to that question is no, then the matter rests and the committee should defeat this resolution. But if the answer to the question is yes, as I believe it must be, then we must proceed to the next step. How do we determine what is of a class or kind made in Canada?

Hon. gentlemen opposite pay lip service to the principle of class or kind made in Canada but by their words and by their actions they make a travesty of their professions. The fact is that the modern concept of class or kind made in Canada owes its birth to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, to W. S. Fielding and to Sir Clifford Sifton in the anti-dumping legislation of 1904 and later, to the former two, in the tariff revision of 1907. Indeed, in an editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press on January 18, 1961, an editorial which was an uninformed and fatuous comment on the speech I made on the supplementary budget, that newspaper claimed that Sir Clifford Sifton himself was the draftsman of the original class or kind legislation; and it was alleged that he did so as an escape from the pressures of the iniquitous Tories of those days who were allegedly seeking a general tariff increase. Clearly, what hon. gentlemen opposite have been doing in following the lead of the Winnipeg Free Press is to repudiate Fielding, to undermine the memory of Laurier and to do violence to the principles which were espoused by Dunning and Mackenzie King.

Let me put the question again, sir. How are you to determine what is of a class or kind made in Canada? As has been pointed out by the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue and as this legislation provides, the answer resolves itself naturally into a division between so-called shelf goods, that is, goods of standard make ordinarily kept in stock, and goods which are custom made to specifications.

I want to deal with them separately. In the tariff there are some 70 items where the rate of duty depends upon whether the goods are or are not of a class or kind made in Canada. Hon. gentlemen opposite, and particularly the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon, seemed to indicate that there were a great many rates that were going to be changed. Actually there are two rates, one rate if it is of a class or kind and one rate if it is not of a class or kind. Of course, as the house knows, section 6 of the Customs Tariff Act imposes dumping duties on imported goods of a class or kind made in Canada if sold for export to Canada at a price less than their fair market value.

Historically, the phrase "class or kind" was broadly interpreted. For over 40 years under a procession of 17 ministers of customs or of national revenue, Grit and Tory alike, the phrase gave little difficulty in interpretation. The broad interpretation may or may not have been correct but at least it has the authenticity of antiquity, the imprint of 17 ministers of the crown. Had there been no change in this interpretation this legislation, or at least the major part of it, would have been unecessary.

The problem of interpretation is clearly set out in Elliott's work, "Tariff Procedures and Trade Barriers", at page 110, from which I would like to quote very briefly:

> Many of the classification decisions concerning "class or kind" depend on whether, for the particular articles being considered, that phrase is held to refer to a wide or to a narrow range of goods. Since the Canadian market is small many domestic producers find it convenient to concentrate on producing a relatively few sizes, styles, patterns or types. In some industries the Canadian output is a relatively small proportion of the total Canadian consumption even of the exact types of an article produced in Canada. In more firmly established industries the domestic output forms a large proportion of Canadian consumption of the exact types produced and, in some, a substantial proportion even of a broader class which includes other substitute products.

There, sir, is the problem and it was met in one way for a period of over 40 years. But in this last decade a new trend has set in, a trend to narrow the phrase. Decisions of the tariff board upset this historic concept. Whether or not these decisions be correct is not the issue. The fact is that the process which the Minister of Finance described as erosion set in.

The best illustration of this is in another quotation from Elliott's book at page 111. I quote:

> In allowing an appeal from a decision that certain models of Mossberg .22 calibre rifles were of a class or kind not made in Canada the board cautiously remarked—

This is a quotation from the board decision.

> —Dictionary definitions of the word "class" indicates that it is used both for very broad and for very narrow designations, but in the context in which it is used in tariff item 441e it appears to be more or less synonymous with "kind".
>
> Consequently, in interpreting this item the item board has taken cognizance of the more precise designation "kind". Auto-loading rifles are of a kind not made in Canada.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): My time is limited, unlike the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member can speak as often as he likes. The question I wanted to ask the hon. gentleman was this. Was that a decision of the administration that these were not made in Canada or was it an appeal from a decision that they were not made in Canada?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I quoted simply from the .22 calibre rifle case to indicate what, in effect, the board had done.

Mr. Pickersgill: This is merely a factual question that I wanted to ask the hon. gentleman. Was the decision of the administration, not of the board, that they were not made in Canada? The hon. gentleman read a sentence relating to that, and if he would just read it again—

Mr. Benidickson: What was the ruling of the customs department? Was the customs department overruled by the tariff board?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): In this particular case, the tariff board reversed the decision of the department. It is appeal No. 206 of March 17, 1950, and the department was overruled.

Mr. Benidickson: The question I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary is, what had been the made in Canada ruling which was compiled by the customs department up to the time of this appeal? What had been their made in Canada ruling, proclaimed for all in Canada to read?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The department held this to be of a class or kind made in Canada. This decision of the department was reversed, on appeal, by the tariff board.

This brings us to the real core of the issue. In effect, class has been interpreted as synonymous with kind. The phrase is not in any way disjunctive; it is wholly conjunctive and the words are synonymous. Indeed, apparently one of them is redundant.

As I have said, 17 ministers of customs or national revenue took a consistent stand for the broad interpretation of these words. Of these 17 ministers, nine were Liberals. There were such men as these. There was William Paterson, Laurier's minister for 15 years. Oh, yes, there was A. L. Sifton; imagine that. There was the unfortunate Jacques Bureau. There were Georges Boivin, W. D. Euler, J. L. Ilsley, Colin Gibson and J. J. McCann. When my hon. friends opposite attack this legislation, what they are doing is repudiating these great Liberals of other days.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is just nonsense.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): They are establishing a counterfeit Liberalism which bears no resemblance to their historic tradition. I say, sir, they are shadowboxing on this resolution and that must cause some of the great Liberals of the past, including the Siftons; Sir Clifford and Arthur L., to turn over in their graves.

They say, you are taking power away from parliament. On the contrary, what we are doing by this legislation is restoring it to parliament. In so far as shelf goods are concerned, the 10 per cent rule was adopted as a result of trade negotiations with the United States. But where did the government of Mackenzie King embed that rule? Need anybody in this committee be surprised to find that it was in an order in council, and not in a statute of this parliament? The policy was: deprive parliament of control, make a mockery of this chamber, keep control in the east block so that at any hour the 10 per cent rule could be suspended, amended, altered, done away with, made 15 per cent or 1 per cent by a simple executive act. This was the policy of hon. gentlemen opposite. This is not the Progressive Conservative way. We are placing it in the statute, so that only parliament can change it. We are doing this in public, and the anvil of public discussion will assure equity to importers and domestic producers alike.

I should like to deal with an argument put forward by the hon. member for Ottawa West. Of all the fatuous arguments advanced, the suggestion that this legislation infringes the rights of parliament is the most ludicrous. It is the very reverse of the truth.

Mr. Chevrier: This is balderdash.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate the other day, and the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon, suggested that this legislation violated the bill of rights. Such extreme and immoderate assertions, sir, can only demonstrate how far hon. gentlemen go in substituting abuse for argument and innuendo for advocacy.

I should like to speak of another class of goods, those described as custom-made to specifications. In this field, each product is unique or virtually unique. If one goes back over the 50 years of history of class or kind or, I am told, if one reviews the statements over those years of the ministers of customs and of national revenue, although I have never had a chance to do so personally, it is clear beyond peradventure that it was never intended by any government that custom-made goods should automatically be ruled as not made in Canada. Yet this is the direction in which the rulings of the department and of the appellate tribunals have gone.

In carrying out the intention of parliament in respect of this class of goods, obviously there must be a broader ministerial discretion than is necessary or appropriate in relation to mass produced or shelf goods. Surely, if parliament has any interest in promoting the manufacture of goods in Canada, the tests proposed by this legislation are reasonable. The tests are that adequate facilities exist in Canada for the economic production of such goods within a reasonable period of time. Each of these phrases, sir, is capable of simple, rational interpretation. I cannot, for the life of me, see how the competent officers of the customs division, and they are highly competent and skilled, will have any difficulty in interpreting in these words what I believe has been the intent of parliament over the years.

I should like now to deal with what the Leader of the Opposition suggested this afternoon was, in effect, the nub of the problem. I refer to the question of appeal from a ministerial decision. I want to suggest to the committee that all the confused argument has been based upon a false premise, namely the premise that the right of appeal from an administrative act is a natural right. The fact is—

Mr. Pickersgill: It is an existing right.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The fact is that there is no inherent right of appeal except such as may exist indirectly through the prerogative writs.

Mr. Benidickson: We have had it for 25 years.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I will deal with this directly if my hon. friends will only be quiet for a moment. The right to appeal is a right which must be conferred by statute. The fact is that there are very few administrative acts of government that are subject to any appeal whatever. Every day, and every hour of every day, ministers of the crown as well as other public servants take important and vital decisions which are subject to no review—

Mr. Pickersgill: Such as setting tax rates.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): —except by this parliament. My hon. friend from Bonavista-Twillingate sits in his seat and interrupts, but he is too learned an historian—

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be very happy to stand up and ask the question.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I will answer the questions later.

I was going on to say that my hon. friend is too good an historian, and too skilled in the art of government to believe that the right of appeal is the rule. The fact is that it is the exception rather than the rule, and even to be an exception it must be statutory. I should like to refer to the case of Okalta Oils Limited v. the Minister of National Revenue, (1955) Supreme Court Reports, page 824. At page 825 Mr. Justice Fauteux said:

> A right of appeal is a right of exception which exists only when given by statute.

This places the matter in perspective, I submit. There is, of course, always the judicial review by means of a prerogative writ such as mandamus, prohibition and certiorari, or the statutory writ of habeas corpus.

Let me turn now to the type of review which has been conferred by statute in the past in respect of customs matters. When, under the Laurier government, the modern concept of class or kind made in Canada was initiated, the determination of class or kind was the responsibility of customs appraisers, subject to review by or appeal to the board of customs.

The board of customs was the final appellate tribunal. This was the tribunal which existed, and the only tribunal, throughout the whole of the Laurier administration and the whole of the first Mackenzie King administration. Sir, what a great appellate tribunal it was. If my hon. friends will look at the revised Statutes of Canada, 1927, they will find that it had five members: the commissioner of customs, the assistant commissioner of customs and a third, a duly qualified officer of customs, designated by the governor in council. Out of the five members three were customs officers. Then, to get the right degree of objectivity, the other two were the commissioner of excise and the commissioner of income tax, officers of the same department after it became the Department of National Revenue in 1927.

That was the type of appellate tribunal in which the Liberal party believed. From 1904 to 1931, the final court of appeal in respect of class or kind, lay within the department itself. In effect, the department reviewed its own decisions. What a happy, happy situation.

Behind all the utterances of hon. gentlemen opposite those are the facts. If they dare open its pages and examine the report of the royal commission on the customs scandal of 1927—dark pages in the history of Liberalism —let them read what Chief Justice Brown had to say about this technique of review, and how he recommended it be changed to a board of national revenue. Did the government of Mackenzie King change it? No, they left the respondent as the judge and jury.

Who was it that changed this situation? It was the man for whom hon. gentlemen opposite still reserve their most severe strictures. Changing this was part of the so-called iniquity of the R. B. Bennett government. It was that great Canadian, so slandered and vilified by hon. gentlemen opposite, who sought from parliament the right to create a tariff board which would be a court of record, assuming the quasi-judicial functions of the board of customs and exercising as well the fact finding and advisory powers formerly possessed by the advisory board on tariff and taxation or the so-called Billy Moore board.

It was the Conservative party under the maligned R. B. Bennett which placed appeals upon a proper and legitimate basis.

Mr. Benidickson: Perhaps the hon. member would tell us—

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Would the hon. gentleman just possess his soul in patience?

The committee may be interested in knowing how the Liberal government jettisoned all appeals to the tariff board for a period of four or five years. The story is told in Alex Elliott's "Tariff Procedures and Trade Barriers" to which I have already referred. At pages 60 and 61 it reads as follows:

> The terms of two of the members expired in 1943 and the Board no longer had a quorum of two members. Accordingly, until the board was reconstituted the system of informal appeal within the Department of National Revenue became even more important and was more fully developed. Departmental officials express pride in this informal, cheap, and speedy method of appeal.

So that we see, sir, that over the years the actions of the Liberal party have been very different—very different indeed—from their professions of these last few days, or indeed these last few weeks, from the bombast that the committee has heard and been forced to endure.

The house may be interested in one further quotation from Mr. Elliot's book in respect of appeals. At page 59 Mr. Elliot says this about the enactment of section 43A of the Customs Act in 1937.

At the same time the door was closed to appeals for refunds of duty previously exacted by inserting a new section (43A) which validated all official valuations that had been made and confirmed the duties collected under them.

I repeat, sir, the door was closed to appeals. We now see how genuine, how real are the professions of my hon. friends opposite. Not only were they content to take away the right of appeal, but they retroactively deprived prospective appellants of rights which had vested. I suggest they be judged by their acts and not by their expostulations or their professions.

Now, sir, are there statutes where the right of appeal having once been conferred, has been abridged or limited? From July 1, 1954, to June 21, 1957, my distinguished historian friend from Bonavista-Twillingate was the minister of citizenship and immigration and the committee is entitled to assume that he has greater familiarity with the Immigration Act than any other act. Having that overwhelming instinct for reform which he now seems to display, what did he do to amend the appellate provisions of that act? I will mention to the house just two sections. Subsection 4 of section 31 reads as follows:

The Minister may in any case review the decision of an Immigration Appeal Board and confirm or quash such decision or substitute his decision therefor as he deems just and proper and may, for these purposes, direct that the execution of the deportation order concerned be stayed pending his review and decision, and the decision of the Minister on appeals dealt with or reviewed by him or the decision of the majority of an Immigration Appeal Board on appeals, other than those reviewed by the Minister, is final.

Section 39 reads as follows:

No court and no judge or officer thereof has jurisdiction to review, quash, reverse, restrain or otherwise interfere with any proceeding, decision or order of the minister, deputy minister, director, immigration appeal board, special inquiry officer or immigration officer had, made or given under the authority and in accordance with the provisions of this act relating to the detention or deportation of any person upon any ground whatsoever, unless such person is a Canadian citizen or has Canadian domicile.

There, sir, is exposed for all to see, the measure of my hon. friend's histrionic avowals, the measure of attention which should be paid to his flamboyant exclamations of outrage.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since the hon. gentleman has directed his remark to me I think I should be allowed to answer.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): I have just indicated that the hon. gentleman was the minister of citizenship and immigration during this time.

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman has directed a question to me. I do not know whether he wants an answer to it. I will be pleased to supply one if he wishes.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The hon. gentleman will have plenty of time to reply later.

I have said only that the hon. gentleman during this period of years did nothing about this situation.

Mr. Pickersgill: That statement is untrue.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Let us examine the records of this house and we shall see.

I deal now directly with the allegations against the appeal sections of this resolution. If one were to listen to what the Leader of the Opposition said this afternoon one would conclude that the tariff board had been ousted completely. That is the impression he sought to leave, and indeed, Mr. Grant Dexter has said so directly in the Winnipeg Free Press, although he must know how erroneous he is.

The fact is that in all material particulars the right of appeal is preserved intact and such abridgement or limitations as are provided are in lesser particulars, largely of a statistical nature. Such limitations, sir, are commonplace in statutes providing the right of appeal, whether it be the Supreme Court Act or in the provisions for lesser appeals.

In respect of shelf goods, hon. gentlemen seem to say that the one important issue is to determine the normal Canadian consumption and that all else is a mathematical calculation. That is not right at all. The really vital issue or the central problem of all is this. Are the goods in fact of a class or kind made in Canada? On that issue, and it is the vital one, the regular appeal procedure is preserved intact. The regular procedure of appeal remains unabridged in respect of the determination of the amount of Canadian production and in the application of the ten per cent rule. The abridgement relates only to a statistical computation in respect of which the opportunity for error is virtually nonexistent.

My hon. friends have exclaimed that an unscrupulous minister could cook this statistical computation. Any attempt at impropriety would be known to this House of Commons within 24 hours and the real sanction of this high court of parliament would come into play.

The argument in this respect would really carry one to the impossible result that no final administrative decision could be entrusted to a minister of the crown. Indeed, that is exactly what the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate said, as reported at page 1722 of Hansard.

Mr. Pickersgill: I said no such thing.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Then I will read to the hon. gentleman what he said on that occasion:

I say that every administrative decision affecting the rights of a citizen should be subject to an appeal

Mr. Pickersgill: The rights of a citizen, yes.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): All administrative decisions involve the rights of a citizen.

Mr. Benidickson: "Appeal" is the important word.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): If such were the case, we would not have government; we would in effect have a state of anarchy. I think it must be evident to all hon. members of the committee that hon. gentlemen opposite, prodded by the Winnipeg Free Press, are pursuing their old strategy of playing both ends against the middle—I use that expression both literally and figuratively—in regard to tariff policy. They blow hot and cold; they beat around the bush; they straddle the fence.

Mr. Pickersgill: All at the same time?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Let me just illustrate my point. If you look at page 571 of Hansard of February 1, 1960, you will see that my hon. friend from Ottawa East (Mr. Richard) is in favour of the total elimination of tariffs on automobiles from the United States. Yet every member of this house knows that the hon. member for Essex East (Mr. Martin) favours almost prohibitory restrictive measures against the importation of automobiles and automobile parts.

Mr. Pickersgill: What justification is there for that statement?

Mr. Bell (Carleton): The hon. member for Essex East favours sky-high tariffs for all the products of Essex county and free trade for the products of every other county of Canada.

I think the hon. member for Essex East, who has been very noticeable by his silence in this matter, should enter this debate before it is finished and tell the committee what he finds objectionable in this legislation. He has been voluble on other subjects, but he has been noticeably silent on this matter.

I have never been one to believe that to say "raise a tariff item" is to utter naughty words, any more than I am prepared to believe that one instantly surrounds oneself with a halo of righteousness when he says "lower tariffs". My philosophy in this is purely pragmatic. In this day, one cannot be theoretical. It is not really a question of tariffs at all; it is purely a matter of classification, of what will contribute to employment and development in Canada without prejudice to our export trade. In that I believe. This resolution meets that test and on that basis should have the support of the house.

I say to hon. gentlemen opposite, let us be done with silly, political manoeuvring, with the hollow sham of the type engaged in by the Liberal front bench, seeking only to resurrect the political quarrels of yesteryear and doing damage to secondary industry and employment in Canada, as well as to primary producers, east and west alike.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am not rising to speak; I am merely rising to correct an incorrect statement made by the hon. member for Carleton who has just resumed his seat.

The hon. member said I had done nothing whatsoever about the appeal provisions of the Immigration Act. Of course, the hon. member, from the phrase he read, made it very clear that those provisions did not, in fact, in any case apply to Canadian citizens at all. They could not apply to Canadian citizens at all. They apply only to persons who are not Canadian citizens.

However, since the hon. gentleman has taken it upon himself to make this statement, I should like to remind the committee, that in fact I prevailed upon the governor in council to exercise the powers given him under that act to set up an appeal tribunal for landed immigrants and to give every landed immigrant a choice between having his case dealt with finally by appeal board or by the minister.

If the law had allowed me to do so, I would have made it absolutely final; but the law as it then was, did not allow me to make it absolutely final. I also stated on more than one occasion that on the first occasion I had the opportunity to make any suggestions in parliament for changes in the act, I would suggest that this appeal jurisdiction be made final. But I went just as far as the law, which the Minister of Finance helped to enact, allowed me to go. It was made before I came into this house, and I went as far as I could to assure appeals even to landed immigrants.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, for the past 40 minutes I have been sitting in my place listening with awe, fascination and admiration to the outflow of words from the hon. member for Carleton. Over the years I have heard members overcome with the exuberance of their own verbocity, but the hon. member gets the championship in this respect. It was absolutely awesome to follow the flow of adjectives and connotations in his opening remarks when he was trying to get in what I presume was a good offensive, or defensive, with the heavy guns. I thought his words were so wonderful that anyone who followed the hon. member should at least for one sentence try to reply in kind.

I know I can never meet the verbiage of my hon. friend, but I would like to say that in my opinion his remarks were such a vapid, vituperous, vitriolic, vindictive, vilifying, venting from a vacuum as has been seldom heard in this house. Mr. Chairman, I ran out of "v's".

May I in all sincerity say to the hon. member that the way to influence members and win friends and support is not by bombast; it is not by riding roughshod, but by trying to put forward in a calm and deliberate manner that which will answer the objections raised on this side of the house.

Whether the government likes it or not it must be recognized that there is a great deal of concern in Canada about the implications of the matter which is before us through this resolution. Very, very definitely there is major concern in western Canada.

When I spoke on this resolution on February 2 I tried to set forth what was causing concern to the primary and manufacturing industries of British Columbia and the boards of trade. I pointed out at that time that the primary and manufacturing industries and their organizations, and we too, are very seriously concerned about the word "approximately" used in the phrase "goods approximately the same class or kind made in Canada". I pointed out that we thought that if what we took to be the meaning of the minister in his opening remarks was correct, it would go a long way to satisfying those who are disturbed if that section of the proposal were to read, "in the case of goods other than goods custom-made to specifications, goods of the same class or kind similar in nature and purpose made or produced in Canada".

I spoke at some length on this matter on February 2. The minister was good enough to reply in such a manner as to, in his estimation, clarify the situation. I wish to draw the attention of the committee to certain parts of the minister's statement on February 2, as reported at page 1684 of Hansard. The minister said, as reported in column 1:

> I hope I can convince him.

That is, myself.

> As I have said to those organizations which made the recommendations from British Columbia, I think their fears are based on an assumption and I do not think the assumption is warranted. In general I think their fears have been greatly exaggerated.

> I shall be glad now to give to the committee and to the hon. member the substance of the views which have been conveyed to these associations. The concern which they have expressed is to the effect that there will be a material increase resulting in the cost of machinery and tools of production used in their operations and thus their position in relation to export sales will be weakened.

The minister then went on to try to clarify the situation. He spoke at some length, and, as I say, I appreciate that. On the following day, without any comment from myself, I sent a copy of Hansard containing the hon. gentleman's remarks to those organizations in the producing and manufacturing industries which had brought this matter to my attention in the first place. After studying the statement of the minister together with the information he had supplied, these people came to the conclusion that they have even more reason to feel concerned at the present time than they did before. As a result, they are in outright opposition to the proposals now before us.

I know that at least one body has made additional representations to the minister. I refer to the Vancouver board of trade which, apparently, takes a view similar to that taken by many of us here. The longer this debate goes on and the more time we have to study this question, the more concerned we are becoming about the possible effect of the changes in the Customs Tariff in connection with the "made in Canada" rulings which the government proposes to introduce.

So, once again, I have to ask the Minister of Finance whether he can clarify the situation further in the light of these new representations following a study of the statements he made in this chamber on February 2. I should like the minister to say whether or not he can answer the problems which these people foresee and whether he can give them assurances that the government proposals will not mean increasing costs in British Columbia. It is still my opinion, which is reinforced by this recent information, that the legislation we have before us now is, at least, so controversial that it should definitely not proceed until a great deal more study has been given to it by those who will be affected.

I should like in particular to draw the attention of the minister to five points which, in the opinion of British Columbia, are of major concern. They are outlined in a letter to the minister from the Vancouver board of trade. The first of these five points read as follows:

(a) The phrase "custom-made to specifications" is ambiguous because it does not state whose specifications shall be considered. Many custom-made goods are bought on the manufacturer's specifications subject to modifications by the customer. It is suggested the wording should be clarified and provision made for the securing of rulings in advance.

The second point reads:

(b) The words "adequate facilities" seem to mean that a "Made in Canada" ruling could be secured before there is in fact any manufacturer in Canada. Otherwise Canada will be in the anomalous position of having something declared to be "Made in Canada" which has never in fact been made in Canada.

The third point is also very important. It is:

(c) The words "economic production" are not satisfactory because it is not clear to whom the test of economic production is to be applied. Further, if a Toronto manufacturer is declared as having adequate facilities for the economic production within a reasonable period of time for a Toronto customer how does this affect a Halifax or Vancouver customer? Is freight to be a consideration? It is conceivable in the above example that a Toronto manufacturer could be economic to a Toronto buyer and not at all to a Halifax or Vancouver buyer. If freight is to be a consideration then should not the legislation say so?

The Toronto case is, of course, given as an example. That is how they feel in British Columbia, and I agree with them. Then, again, the point is made:

(d) The words "reasonable period of time" are not satisfactory since what is a reasonable period for the manufacturer may be completely unreasonable for the buyer.

Finally, the board states:

(e) The minister's determination may take place at a time when there are outstanding orders with foreign manufacturers. It is departmental practice to acknowledge the problem of "lead time" but there is no guarantee that such practice will be continued when discretion in the matter is vested in the minister without right of appeal. The buyer who had orders outstanding at the date a ruling was made by the minister should be specifically protected in the legislation.

There we have in general the views which have been expressed to the minister. These are the reasons why they are still concerned in British Columbia about the possibilities and the implications of this legislation. I do not intend to take time in order to express their attitude, and my own, with regard to the question of appeal. I think sufficient has been said on that subject already. Anyway, the bombastic arguments used on the government side and the sneers directed against those in the opposition who try to present the situation as they see it, and as they understand it from outside, are not going to resolve these doubts in any way.

I wish to say this. From all the communications I have received, from discussion with my colleagues and from my own studies to the best of my ability I believe that if the proposals now before us become legislative enactments established as regards the made in Canada rulings under section 2(a) 1(a) and under section 2a (1b), there is every possibility—indeed, it is almost inevitable—that the effect at least in western Canada will be to limit our ability to produce in order to be able to compete on world markets. That ability means everything in my province of British Columbia. I feel that costs of production in western Canada and in Canada as a whole are already too high and that the passage of this resolution will worsen the situation. I think it would be especially harmful to the maritimes and to the province of British Columbia.

I have tried to express the views of the primary and manufacturing industries of British Columbia as well as of the board of trade as they were relayed to me. Perhaps I do not understand this problem but surely industry does. This was their feeling which I expressed on February 2 and it is their feeling now. After reading the words of the minister on this subject there is an increasing feeling that this is dangerous to Canada and harmful with respect to maintaining the position of industry in western Canada.

I am always open to conviction. Although much time has already been spent on this resolution I hope the minister will take a little more time in order to answer the questions that have arisen. If the hon. gentleman does not do a better job of explaining than he has up to this time it is the opinion of many in this chamber and of industry in western Canada that the only course open to the minister is to withdraw the legislation for further and continuing study.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I am interested in the class or kind items and particularly those items relating to articles made to specifications.

On February 3, as reported at page 1737 of Hansard, the Minister of National Revenue talked about the construction of a generator in Canada last year which he said provided thousands upon thousands of man hours of employment. The minister said he had ruled that the generator was of a class or kind made in Canada. Therefore, if it entered from outside the country it would be subject to duty. The minister also said there was no appeal and there were no grounds for the dire fears and dread which were expressed by hon. members on this side of the chamber.

I understand from the industry that makes big generators that size does not make much difference since all generators are made to specifications in any event. Generators and generator parts under the British preferential tariff are subject to between 10 to 15 per cent duty if made in Canada and they come in free if they are not made in Canada.

After all, they are all capable of being made in Canada. I think the minister made the proper ruling and this project did provide work to a number of people.

There has been no change in the capacity of industry in recent years and there has been no change in this budget item. At the time of the buying mission to Great Britain, Mr. Duncan gave an order for a larger generator at a time when we had unemployment in our industry here and when the industry in Great Britain had almost full employment.

I was told by the department that that generator was admitted to Canada duty free and that in all probability duty would be charged today. Suppliers in the Niagara district at the time were collecting prices because they thought at that time the generator was to be made in Canada. The people in my area feel that they lost many, many man hours of employment on account of that contract for the generator going to Great Britain. The people in Peterborough where the generator was supposed to be built gave voice to their feeling of keen disappointment later.

This leads me to wonder if there was not some erosion on the part of the government at that time in doing Canadian workmen out of thousands and thousands of man hours of employment.

It may be said that there was no appeal taken at that time. I can understand why no appeal would be taken. Our industry supplies hydro in a big way and they certainly would not want to compromise any future orders they might receive from that quarter.

The minister spoke about the intent of parliament in these items. I wish to ask the minister if, as far as generators are concerned, there was one intent for 1959 and another for 1960?

The Minister of National Revenue in answering a question yesterday said that there was some remission of tariffs to Canadian Fairbanks Morse in connection with the generators. This has to do with the public accounts of 1960. That generator would be admitted in 1959. In 1959 this government was not charging a duty on generators. It has done so, however, in 1960.

As I said, I think the government was right in following the course it did in 1960 but why did it not follow that course in 1959? We have had the government doing one thing one year and a different thing the next year.

Mr. Hellyer: But doing nothing, most of the time.

Mr. McMillan: The government has done this at a time when the decision is appealable. If it is not appealable the government can change it every week or two and we cannot do anything about it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to interrupt the hon. gentleman but if he wishes an answer to his question, I can give it to him if he would prefer to have it now.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member should be allowed to embellish his argument without interruption.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I was just asking the hon. gentleman if he wished the answer now or later. I am prepared to give it now. The answer is very simple, Mr. Chairman. The generator the hon. member speaks of was not made in Canada in 1959 but by 1960 it was being made in Canada.

Mr. Benidickson: On the 10 per cent rule?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes.

Mr. McMillan: In view of the minister's explanation I should like to ask him a question. The generator came in free of duty in 1959. Would the minister extend the same advantage to, let us say, the premiers of Quebec or New Brunswick—gentlemen of different political persuasion—if they wanted to bring one in this year? It seems likely that if Mr. Bennett of British Columbia goes up to the Peace river to build a generating station he might be in the market for a generator. Would the same advantage be extended to him if he wanted to bring in a generator.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not the Peace river, but the Columbia.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The law is uniformly applied but the hon. member must appreciate that at times new products are manufactured in Canada. If one happens to be of the kind we are discussing here then obviously a time comes when an article that was up to that time ruled to be of a class or kind not made in Canada thereafter may be ruled to be of a class or kind made in Canada. These situations change. That is what happened in the case to which the hon. member has just now made reference.

Mr. McMillan: Does the minister then say that the generator of the type and size that was imported by Canadian Fairbanks Morse in 1960 was not of a class or kind made in Canada and would the same apply with respect to the hydro generator?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, let me make this clear. The hon. member uses the words "type or size". I have said, in the language of that statute, that the generator that he speaks of was, in 1959, not of a class or kind made in Canada but that by 1960, because of manufacture in Canada, it was in 1960 of a class or kind made in Canada.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, would the minister inform all of us what in 1960 made the change? Which manufacturers were providing the 10 per cent or perhaps the equivalent that is necessary under the law?

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely the minister is going to answer.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Yes, Mr. Chairman, but I am not sure that I should give names in a situation like this. I happen to know what the names are. I have just received information from my advisers. I do not think the hon. member is going to ask for names. The information is that the manufacture of this type of generator was being carried on in Canada in 1960. I would not mind giving the hon. member the information he requires but not the names.

Mr. Benidickson: I do not want the names.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask the minister whether this generator that was imported in 1960 would be regarded under the present law as shelf goods or as custom-made goods.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The latter.

Mr. Pickersgill: If it was possible to determine that an article of this sort, which the minister said was custom-made goods, had been made in Canada in 1960, can the minister then explain why the present amendment he is asking for is necessary at all?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member is talking about one case but we are talking here about all cases in relation to some 70-odd items of the tariff. The hon. member has simply picked out an illustration of the fact that the situation can change, that an article that is not at some particular date made in Canada can be made in Canada at a later time, and therefore the change almost automatically follows under the statute and the article, if imported, then attracts a higher rate of customs duty.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River proceeds, I might point out that the parliamentary secretary told us this afternoon that the erosion had gone to such a point that custom-made goods were automatically ruled not to be made in Canada, so whom do we believe, the minister or the parliamentary secretary?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): With respect, Mr. Chairman, let us keep this discussion on the rails and close to what hon. members have been saying. I have made my remarks about the erosion and I am not repeating them at this time. The fact is, however, and everybody is aware of it, that when the manufacture of an article is introduced in Canada, if it is introduced in sufficient quantity then the case moves from one of goods of a class or kind not made in Canada into the category of goods of a class or kind made in Canada.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, throughout this debate the Minister of Finance has made what I regard as a specious and improper argument when he has said that the rates of duty are not affected by the amendments before us. On the sole basis of interpretation of language I could agree with him but with respect to the effect in an industrial way we have had many comments during this debate as to what might be involved so far as volume of trade is concerned. The Leader of the Opposition referred to a figure of $200 million of trade imports in this particular arena. That figure, of course, cannot be taken as a maximum because we have to have regard for things that probably were normally produced in Canada and as a result the figure could be terrifically high.

In this debate I think the Minister of Finance has continually avoided a proper answer to the questions we have raised on some of these matters. Certainly there is nothing in what the Minister of Finance calls a short, simple resolution that changes the rates of duty. The hon. member for Vancouver East has been vocal in this debate but I hope that members of parliament from the prairie provinces, who happen to be all on the government side with the exception of the hon. member for Assiniboia, and Conservative members from the maritime provinces will tell us whether they have studied the implications of this resolution and whether or not they have decided that they approve of the resolution. They have been slavishly silent and have been of completely no help to us with regard to these matters.

I think the time has come for members of parliament from these areas who support the government to tell us whether or not they have studied the uncertainties that have been suggested by the opposition. The things that we have suggested are likely to be very adverse not only to consumers and end users but to the possibility, as the hon. member for Vancouver East mentioned today, of new industries in British Columbia in that this legislation, by means of an unnecessarily high impost on the cost of their basic machinery, will increase their costs to the extent that they will not be efficient. I believe these things have to be considered and in my opinion there are many subjects to be discussed in connection with this resolution.

There is the question of our relationships with GATT. There is the question of whether or not the historic concept has been properly presented by the Minister of Finance. I assert that it has not been properly presented to the house by him. I ask the minister at this point to have regard to the situation vis-à-vis GATT. We are all rather uninformed. We are not specialists or experts in this highly complicated field involving trade amounting to perhaps $5 billion or more.

Normally we rely on a minister to come before the House of Commons and, regardless of his political responsibilities, to accept the administrative responsibility to tell all of us in this chamber what we want to know. We expect that of a minister. We do not want quick assertions such as he made in a speech in Toronto when he said that the action of the government has aroused the interest of all our associates in GATT and that the government is confident that what they are proposing to parliament is within the framework of GATT. Members of parliament, I think, usually pay attention to language such as that used by the minister in addressing laymen in Toronto on January 9 when he said that "our proposals have aroused interest". Surely there is a warning to every member of the House of Commons to ask questions with respect to the use of a loose phrase of that type.

I want to know whether or not the minister is prepared to comment upon his responsibility in connection with the alteration of our trading law that is involved in this redefinition as it relates to article X, subsection 3, paragraph (b) of the general agreement on tariffs and trade signed at Geneva, October 30, 1947, by Canada and many other countries. I quote from this section of the agreement:

> Each contracting party shall maintain or institute as soon as practicable, judicial, arbitral or administrative tribunals or procedures for the purpose, inter alia, of the prompt review and correction of administrative action relating to customs matters.

I speak only as a member of this House of Commons, and I do not claim to be a lawyer interpreting this provision. I think it is written in laymen's language. In my opinion, it means that the contracting governments will maintain an appeal opportunity that is above and beyond its customs administration. Of course, prior to the signing of this agreement we had such a procedure in Canada. This meant nothing to Canada.

However, despite the eloquent remarks made this afternoon by the hon. member for Carleton, I suggest that the obvious elimination of appeals in certain areas of customs matters is certainly a violation of this section of the agreement which we made with so many other trading countries in 1947.

I know that the government asserts that our courts have, in some way, in the last decade eroded the situation that existed when we signed this agreement. This particular subject has been debated in this committee on four or five occasions, and on each occasion we have challenged the Minister of Finance, and those who speak for officialdom, to tell us in what respect our partners in GATT can consider that they received what he described as free or non-traded benefits. I do not believe that the minister or his parliamentary secretary has indicated to this committee where we have been giving away, through our judicial processes, something that was not expected in 1947.

I want Canada to retain the things in the agreement that were to Canada's advantage when the agreement was signed in 1947. This administration has not indicated to us in any way that we are not being placed in jeopardy of retaliation in so far as our export industries are concerned. This new proposal is, in fact a departure from what was contemplated by all our trading partners in 1947. I want the utmost for Canada, of course, but what I am afraid of is that, by passing legislation of this kind, we are going to get reprisals, perhaps in a subtle way, from our trading partners. No member of this parliament will hear a word about it, but our exporters will suffer. Our representatives who sit in Geneva year after year, clever and able though they are, are going to be embarrassed by the legislation that is proposed here.

As hon. members of the committee are aware, I have a question on the order paper on this subject. I was rather loath to put it as a formal question, but I wanted to ask this government to inquire about protests that may be received by our representatives at home and abroad. I refer, of course, to people who might feel that, under the terms of the GATT agreement, they were entitled to certain adjustments in the trading arrangements that were outlined in part I of the schedule to the agreement. I regret, Mr. Chairman, that I had to put this question in Votes and Proceedings, but I feel that the minister is so glib that I would not ask him this question. I followed this procedure deliberately because the minister has been too glib in the debate and not too accurate in his information to the committee.

Mr. Smith (Lincoln): I did not intend to enter the debate again. I spoke a few days ago. However, I should like to say that I resented the attitude of the opposition frontbenchers in taking the floor from my good friend the hon. member for Welland. I was enjoying the remarks of the hon. member for Welland and I would have been pleased if he had been given the opportunity of completing his remarks. Perhaps he was saying the wrong thing. He certainly was expressing the principle set out in the resolution we are discussing now. In fact, I do not believe he could do otherwise because he comes from an area in which there is a great deal of secondary industry.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am very glad the hon. member for Lincoln intervened in the debate at this point because otherwise I might have forgotten a point he made the other day in debate and to which I want to refer. I am very grateful to him for reminding me of it.

I want principally to speak about the speech made this afternoon by the hon. member for Carleton who apparently thought that rhetoric and bombast would be an adequate substitute for a total lack of substance, because there was an almost total lack of substance in his speech. I think we would all have been much more impressed if the hon. gentleman in talking about erosion had given us examples of erosion.

As I understand it the Minister of Finance, the Minister of National Revenue and now the parliamentary secretary, claim that the nature of this erosion has been that the tariff board and the courts by their decisions have changed the concept of a class or kind made in Canada from what it was ten years ago, and have narrowed it and limited it in a way in which it was not narrowed and limited ten years ago. If that is not a correct statement of what erosion means according to the minister, I would be happy to be corrected, but I think it is.

I have examined every one of these seven cases that the hon. gentlemen have adverted to, but they have been very careful to see to it that we are never given particulars. Even the hon. member for Carleton, when referring to the case of the .22 rifles, seemed to be singularly lacking in detail. I have here a few details about that case which I think ought to be placed on the record because it is typical of all seven that I have examined in somewhat more detail in private than the hon. gentleman did in public.

In the case of the .22 rifles it is true that there was a decision of the deputy minister that these rifles, of a particular kind, were of a kind made in Canada, but I am informed, and I think quite correctly, that these rifles were not ruled of a class or kind made in Canada in the customs memorandum, series D, No. 51 MCR 14, then in effect at the time this decision was made. That memorandum had not been cancelled. That memorandum I might say, constituted the decision of the commissioner of customs, Mr. H. D. Scully, that the seven models and makes of the .22 calibre automatic rifles were of a class or kind made in Canada on April 11, 1939. In other words that decision of the tariff board was a decision that was in line with the decision made by Mr. Scully in 1939, which the deputy minister departed from in his decision of 1949. The plain fact is that the deputy minister, by his decision, had enlarged what had been the historic concept. The tariff board has properly gone back to that historic concept in every case that I have examined.

Of course the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River mentioned the undisputed details of the shovel case which showed that over the years the shovel case was decided in one way and on an appeal in the way the department had decided over the years and then the deputy minister made a different decision, which was overruled by the tariff board which again went back to the historic concept.

If we had time, sir, we could go through all these cases and show that in every case there was in fact no erosion at all. We could show very much the contrary, that the tariff board and the courts followed the historic trend consistently. What is more, it does seem to me that my hon. friend from Kenora-Rainy River in reading the provision of GATT, drawing to our attention article 10, has given indication that this is so.

Article 10, section 3 (b) reads as follows:

> Each contracting party shall maintain, or institute as soon as practicable, judicial, arbitral or administrative tribunals or procedures for the purpose, inter alia, of the prompt review and correction of administration action relating to customs matters.

Mr. McKinnon was chairman of the tariff board for seven years before 1947 and for ten years afterwards. I do not think anything happened suddenly to Mr. McKinnon which would make him erode the decisions he had himself made. Everyone knows that Mr. McKinnon was one of the principal architects of GATT. Everyone knows that Mr. McKinnon knows better than anyone what GATT meant. I do not think anyone really would be expected to believe that Mr. McKinnon would make decisions that were contrary to GATT.

I would suggest, sir, that this attempt by the government to take away many of the essential elements of appeal to an administrative tribunal is a clear infraction of that section of GATT. It is a deliberate attempt to disregard the provisions of our international obligations.

The parliamentary secretary this afternoon jeered at the reference made by the Leader of the Opposition to the bill of rights. I would just like to draw to the attention of this committee the terms of section 2 (e) of the bill of rights which reads as follows:

(e) deprive a person of the right to a fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice for the determination of his rights and obligations;

No one could deny that at the present time these decisions as to whether an article is of a class or kind made in Canada, are appealable to the tariff board on all the elements and facts of the case, and not on selected facts, selected by the ministry, while other selected facts are to be excluded.

The minister said this afternoon that this was not a determination of the rate of duty, but that is precisely what it is. When the minister makes one of these class or kind decisions he is determining the rate of duty. The minister can arbitrarily and finally, in the case of custom-made goods, and also by jiggery-pokery, if he wants to exercise his powers in the case of shelf goods, make an arbitrary decision which cannot be appealed, and in the case of normal Canadian consumption, one taxpayer might be paying 22 per cent and the other 7 per cent in comparable circumstances from which there can be no effective appeal.

Mr. Benidickson: No one knows about it.

Mr. Pickersgill: As the member for Kenora-Rainy River said, it is done in secret. It may be perhaps done by someone other than the minister himself. As everyone is aware, most of these decisions are made by clerks and not by the minister at all.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Just before he sat down the hon. member said that most of these decisions were made by clerks. I take it we can assume that he himself made a number of decisions for Mackenzie King.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I did not make any decisions for Mr. Mackenzie King because neither Mr. Mackenzie King nor myself happened to be the Minister of National Revenue or a clerk in the department at that time, and that is what we are talking about now. I think there is plenty of scope within the ambit of this resolution to keep us busy without going off into that kind of diverting diversion, if I may put it that way.

Mr. Benidickson: Like British trade.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, like British trade as the hon. member so aptly puts it. Why is the government so frightened of the tariff board? This is a tariff board that they themselves appointed, and yet they are so anxious to take jurisdiction away from the board. That is what they are doing; they are taking away from the tariff board the jurisdiction it now has in the determination of whether a man's obligation is to pay the lower or the higher rate of duty. They are taking away the right a man now has to have a determination by a tribunal.

Why does the government want to do that? Why are they afraid of their own board? What do they think the board is going to do? That is why I was glad the hon. member for Lincoln intervened in this debate because I might otherwise have forgotten this point. The hon. member for Lincoln really let the cat out of the bag the other day. He told us it was not easy to get at the tariff board, but it was easy to get at the minister. That is the reason, and that is the only reason that makes any kind of sense.

I know the Minister of National Revenue, the Minister of Finance, and today the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance, have given the reason that every tyrant has always given for discretion; that it is faster; that it is more efficient; that they are good tyrants anyway. They say, "Maybe the wicked Liberals would do things badly, but not us good Tories. We would assure justice for our friends, and the Liberals do not deserve any justice anyway".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): That is bad grammar. Change "us" to "we" there.

Mr. Pickersgill: I know it is bad grammar, and it is bad law that the minister is trying to enact. No doubt one bad thing tends to generate another. That is exactly the gravamen of my argument.

Why do they want this arbitrary power? What secret, clandestine purpose have they in mind? As the Leader of the Opposition said earlier today, if the government insists on putting in this bad definition and using its majority, a majority from provinces that are going to suffer very seriously because of this law, of course we cannot stop them. But at least it will be the law and at least there will be tribunals to determine the matter. But they insist not only on changing the law; but they say there can be no appeal and a taxpayer cannot get the new matter before the courts.

In his omniscient wisdom the Minister of National Revenue will decide these things. They say that it does not matter anyway, that these things are very easy to decide. If they are easy to decide, what difficulty is there about sending them to the tariff board for decision? Moreover, the Minister of Finance, on December 20 in the debate on the supplementary budget, said this as reported at page 1013 of Hansard:

> —we consider it important to provide for careful investigation and public hearings before major tariff revisions are introduced. This permits all interests and all points of view to receive full consideration. We believe that the tariff board is the appropriate body to undertake this task, and that in order to do so expeditiously the board should be enlarged sufficiently to permit it to adopt a panel system.

In other words, the minister himself in his speech on the supplementary budget said that the tariff board was the appropriate body to decide these questions. Why does he not let the tariff board decide them? It is true the minister said at another point—and I am not going to the trouble to look it up, unless I am challenged; I have the reference here—that there had been a welter of these appeals; but the Minister of National Revenue said there had been very few. Since they are appeals from the decisions of the Minister of National Revenue, I suppose he really knows better than does the Minister of Finance how many there are. If there are very few, it will not clog up the work of the tariff board to decide them. If there are many appeals, it would suggest there are many taxpayers who feel they have a right to take seriously the words that the Prime Minister put into the bill of rights through this parliament, namely that a person should not be deprived of the right to a fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice in the determination of his obligations.

What is a tariff? It is a tax. In this legislation we are saying that the Minister of National Revenue shall decide what the tax is to be, instead of parliament so deciding. As a result of this legislation the Minister of National Revenue will decide whether it is to be a low rate of duty or a high rate of duty.

If custom-made goods are concerned, nobody can challenge that decision at all; there is no way of going beyond it. If shelf-made goods are concerned, all the minister has to do is fix the normal Canadian consumption at such a figure whereby it can be shown that 10 per cent is produced in Canada and there is again no appeal.

In other words, the meaning is taken right out of the right of appeal. It is true that one can appeal on some of the facts, but the board is not allowed to look at the rest of the matter. They will therefore be incapable of making any decision that has any meaning. This is a travesty of justice.

As the Leader of the Opposition said, this is the fundamental problem. We do not like this surreptitious method of trying to increase the tariff, but that is a proper difference between the two parties. If hon. gentlemen opposite want to do that, they have a majority and all we can do is make our arguments in parliament, put up the best case we can and let the house decide. But when it comes to this question of a fundamental right to a hearing that was supposed to have been guaranteed in the bill of rights only one year ago, we think that surely sincerity should be shown in the very first case to come before parliament and the provisions contained in the bill of rights should be put to the test.

We say that the Prime Minister should come to this committee and tell us why he thinks it is necessary to take away the right of appeal which now exists. He should tell us why it is taken away from people with regard to many important, and indeed what could be decisive facts, when it is necessary to decide what tax people are to pay and what rate of tax is to be imposed upon them.

We think the Minister of Justice should tell us why it is so essential to brush the courts aside, because forsooth the Minister of Finance says that the courts have eroded the law. If the courts have eroded the law—the minister thinks, as he always does, that repeated assertion makes something a fact—he has given us no facts to demonstrate this.

When I asked the minister the other day to cite one case where the rulings of the customs department have been reversed by the tariff board over the years, he dodged the question and he keeps on dodging it. This is simply making a travesty of the bill of rights. It is making a travesty of the rule of law, and of course it is seeking to take away from parliament and hand to the minister the arbitrary, final power to decide what one taxpayer shall pay and what another taxpayer shall pay, without anyone else being able to look at the case at all.

That is what we in this committee are being asked to approve in this resolution and to found legislation upon. I say, sir, that no more fundamental issue could come before us. Not only is the jurisdiction and the right of parliament to impose taxes being eroded—that is what the minister is seeking to do—but the right of the taxpayer to a fair hearing and to justice is being eroded. We think these two fundamental principles are the most important, though we do not deny the importance as well of this back door method of trying to increase the tariff.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Chairman, this debate has been going on for a long period of time. I am sure the minister and his officials are getting a bit weary. Still, I believe that if he is getting worried and upset over the delay and the long period of time which has been taken, that is one of the penalties he has to pay for attempting to impose upon parliament by this method the right to give a minister of national revenue the unqualified and unappealable powers which this resolution seeks to confer. This, in my view, is the first and only matter to which we should direct our attention at the moment. It is with regard to this issue that some sensible, logical and reasonable explanation—if there is any—should be made. Following the removal of this final and arbitrary power which is being sought in the resolution we should be in a better position to discuss the other effects of the changes proposed in so far as the economy of the country is concerned.

Speaking for myself, I say this. Unless we can have from the minister sponsoring this resolution some indication that he is prepared to alter paragraph 3 relating to the finality of the minister's decision, unless we can obtain some admission that the hon. gentleman has made an error and that he really does not wish to confer on his colleague in the government authority and power of this type, I have no intention of supporting the other proposals which go along with it.

As the hon. member for Bonvista-Twillingate pointed out a short while ago, toward the end of the last session, with all the trumpeting and fanfare attendant upon a circus, we passed the bill of rights. Presumably we thought that this bill of rights meant something. We took the word of the Prime Minister and others that it meant something and that it would have some baring upon conditions such as those now being sought by the Minister of Finance. However, it is quite obvious that the government really had more verbosity than integrity when it proposed and introduced the bill of rights last session because what we have before us now to my way of thinking, is completely contradictory to the principles contained in the bill of rights and absolutely at variance with the speeches which the Prime Minister and other gentlemen made about rights and freedoms during the last session, in other sessions, and over the years. In addition, it is contrary in my view to all the concepts we have grown up with in this democracy regarding the desirability of removing arbitrary powers from the hands of one or two people in high positions.

For countless years people in this country and in other countries have rebelled against the concentration of authority and power in the hands of one or two persons. The Conservative party, when it was over here on this side of the chamber in opposition, was notable for its objection to the extension of the emergency war measures powers which were wanted when Mr. C. D. Howe was in office. They claimed then that these were arbitrary powers intended to be placed in the hands of one person, that it was shocking to ask for them, and that they should not be continued. The longer this sort of thing goes on, the longer the Minister of Finance and others seek to repeal some of the concepts of democracy and freedom and replace some of the concepts of the bill of rights by a back door approach—I was going to use a word there which came immediately into my mind, but I got into trouble with that a few weeks ago, so I had better not use it again; I will use the word "left-handed"—or a left-handed approach and seek to abridge these freedoms which have taken hundreds of years to develop, they are displaying propensities which are nothing short of tyrannical—and we know that the Minister of Finance is perhaps not lily white in this regard.

I cannot for the life of me understand why the government wants to have these authoritarian powers or why it should want the right to make decisions in secret in some room and not have those decisions brought into the light. I cannot understand why it does not wish them to be subject to an appeal to some other agency or authority such as that which exists in our courts of law. I cannot, as I say, understand for the life of me why they should want this sort of dictatorial power unless there is something nefarious about it, and I am not suggesting there is. I am suggesting, though, that we have so far not received from the Minister of Finance any reasoned or logical explanation as to why he should want his colleague to become more of a dictator than is possible under our present system.

No matter how far the government has convinced itself that it is gentle and kind and sweet and lovable, no matter how far it has convinced itself that it is going to make the right decisions and be generous to everyone and preserve the rights and freedoms of the people, the fact remains that the more that power is concentrated into fewer hands, the easier is the step towards tryranny and dictatorship and the greater is the desire to remove that remains of the freedom and rights of the people. One of these rights is the right to appeal decisions reached in secret behind closed doors by politicians when heaven knows what sort of pressures are used to get them to make particular decisions. We know that cabinet ministers, like other members of parliament, are subject to pressure from time to time. Some of this pressure is political, and some types of it are worse than others. Some are of a minor nature involving, say, a problem connected with unemployment insurance. But we know there are pressures from certain forces in the economy which would like the government in office to enact laws or regulations which would benefit some small group to the detriment of everyone else. These pressures exist whether the government in office is made up of Conservatives or whether it is made up of people having any other political conviction.

I think the Minister of Finance is being extremely unkind and unfair to his colleague or to anyone else who might hold the office of Minister of National Revenue by seeking to give him power and authority of the kind proposed in this resolution. Ministers of the crown are political figures upon whom more pressures are brought to bear than upon private hon. members by way of telegrams, briefs, letters, telephone calls, personal visits, requests and so on. In giving a minister the type of power sought by this resolution we are placing him in a position of being increasingly subjected to political pressures and requests for determinations under this proposal which might be to the advantage of some segments of the economy and to the detriment of others.

The problem is lessened if the minister is strong-willed, determined, courageous and honest but if he is vacillating, weak, dishonest or unscrupulous the danger becomes very real. This has happened in the past. Not long ago in British Columbia the minister of lands and forests found himself in a difficult position. A minister with a lack of integrity and honesty may be unable to resist the pressures exerted and he may agree to make a determination in return for one of a number of considerations or for a variety of reasons. The decision is unappealable and cannot be reversed. The decision of the minister is final with respect to those matters enumerated in this resolution.

I have no intention of granting this authority to any minister, regardless of who may be holding the portfolio. I say that with all due respect for the present Minister of National Revenue. We are not dealing here with the personal qualities of the minister but with the government's resolution.

I will not support a resolution that can lead to the possibility of a power-mad minister, perhaps not long in office, not bothering with the cumbersome difficulties of processing appeals through other bodies but preferring to make decisions in secret behind closed doors, possibly in response to political pressures or pressures that will provide income to the party coffers.

From time to time editorial writers and politicians level accusations against the socialist movement charging that the socialist movement advocates state control. This is true. Many charges are made against the socialist movement by those who like to make a play of the principles for which we stand. Politicians may do this in an attempt to gain political advantage. Never in their wildest dreams, however, would those who make accusations against the C.C.F. think of accusing the socialists of seeking what the minister now seeks in this proposal, namely individual ministerial control which will lead to the whittling away of our democratic institutions and the undermining of our democratic concepts.

Mr. Benidickson: The hon. member is right. It worries the Liberals.

Mr. Howard: I did not hear that observation. I am prepared to sit here day after day while the Minister of Finance attempts to justify his request for tyranny, dictatorship and authoritarian control, but I have no intention of supporting this proposal. If it is possible for the minister to be humble perhaps he will tell us he does not really seek this power and will have one of his colleagues move an amendment granting the right of appeal. If that is done, I will withdraw my opposition, the amendment may be proceeded with and I will support it.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Resolution agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I report the resolution?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Rea in the chair.

INCOME TAX ACT

Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide among other things:

1. That with respect to income of corporations earned on and after January 1, 1961, the amount of the first bracket of taxable income subject to a rate of tax of 21 per cent be increased from $25,000 to $35,000.

2. That for the 1961 and subsequent taxation years the additional tax of 4 per cent imposed on investment income of individuals be repealed as applied to income from sources in Canada.

3. That for taxation years commencing in 1963 and subsequent taxation years a corporation will qualify as an investment company only if not less than 75 per cent of its gross revenue is received in the form of dividends from taxable corporations resident in Canada and that for taxation years commencing in 1961 and 1962 this requirement be 55 per cent and 65 per cent respectively of such gross revenue; however, this requirement shall be 75 per cent of such gross revenue for taxation years commencing in 1961 and 1962 in the case of a corporation that received not less than 75 per cent of its gross revenue in the form of dividends from taxable corporations resident in Canada in its taxation year that commenced in 1960, and 65 per cent of such gross revenue for taxation years commencing in 1961 in the case of a corporation that received not less than 65 per cent but less than 75 per cent of its gross revenue in the form of dividends from taxable corporations resident in Canada in its taxation year that commenced in 1960.

4. That for taxation years commencing in 1963 and subsequent taxation years a trust or corporation established or incorporated solely in connection with, or for the administration of, a registered pension fund or plan shall be exempt from tax only if 90 per cent of its income from investments is from sources in Canada and that for taxation years commencing in 1961 and 1962 this requirement be 70 per cent and 80 per cent respectively of such income; however, this requirement shall be 90 per cent of such income for taxation years commencing in 1961 and 1962 in the case of a trust or corporation that received not less than 90 per cent of its income from investments from sources in Canada in its taxation year that commenced in 1960, and 80 per cent of such income for taxation years commencing in 1961 in the case of a trust or corporation that received not less than 80 per cent but less than 90 per cent of its income from investment from sources in Canada in its taxation year that commenced in 1960.

5. That the exemption from the 15 per cent tax payable by a non-resident person on interest received from a Canadian resident, now granted for interest payable on bonds of or guaranteed by the government of Canada, be repealed with respect to interest on bonds issued after December 20, 1960, other than bonds held by

(a) national governments of foreign countries and their central banks, and

(b) such international agencies as may be prescribed by regulation.

6. That the reduction from 15 per cent to 5 per cent in the rate of tax payable by a non-resident person on interest received from a Canadian resident, now granted for interest on bonds or other obligations of or guaranteed by Her Majesty in right of a province, and for interest on bonds or other obligations provision for the payment of which was made by a statute of a provincial legislature, be repealed with respect to bonds or other obligations issued after December 20, 1960, except bonds or other obligations issued after December 20, 1960 in respect of which a written agreement was formally entered into on or before that day for the purchase and sale, in specified amounts and at specified prices of all of the bonds or other obligations included in the issue.

7. That the exemption from the 15 per cent tax payable by a non-resident person on interest received from a Canadian resident, now granted for interest payable in a currency other than Canadian currency, be repealed except for

(a) interest on any obligation where the evidence of indebtedness was issued on or before December 20, 1960,

(b) interest on any bond or similar obligation issued after December 20, 1960 in respect of which a written agreement was formally entered into on or before that day for the purchase and sale, in specified amounts and at specified prices, of all of the bonds or similar obligations included in the issue, or

(c) interest on any obligation incurred in the course of carrying on a business in a country other than Canada.

8. That the reduction from 15 per cent to 5 per cent in the rate of tax payable by a non-resident person on dividends received from a Canadian resident, now granted for dividends paid to a non-resident corporation which owns all the voting shares (except directors' qualifying shares) of the Canadian resident paying corporation, be repealed with respect to dividends paid after December 20, 1960.

9. That the rate of tax payable by a non-resident corporation on dividends received from a Canadian resident, now limited to 5 per cent in accordance with paragraph 2 of article XI of the income tax convention between Canada and the United States be increased to 15 per cent with respect to dividends paid after December 20, 1960.

10. That with respect to income earned on and after January 1, 1961 a special 15 per cent tax be imposed on a non-resident corporation carrying on business in Canada, other than a bank, life insurance company, transportation company or communications company and that the tax be computed by reference to the amount remaining after deducting from its taxable income earned in Canada the aggregate of

(a) the tax payable under part I of the Income Tax Act, including the tax payable under subsection (5) of section 10 of the Old Age Security Act,

(b) income taxes payable to a province which are not deductible in computing income for purposes of the Income Tax Act, and

(c) an allowance in respect of net annual increases in its capital investment in property in Canada.

11. That where the contractual rate of interest on any bond, debenture, mortgage, note, bill or similar evidence of indebtedness issued by a tax-exempt borrower including a government after December 20, 1960 is less than 5 per cent, and the evidence of indebtedness is issued at a discount which provides an effective yield to maturity, or to the earliest call-date, that exceeds the contractual rate by more than 33⅓ per cent thereof, the whole of the discount shall be deemed to be income in the hands of the first Canadian resident taxable holder of the evidence of indebtdness.

12. That for the 1961 and subsequent taxation years a student in full-time attendance at a university in a course leading to a degree be permitted to deduct in computing his income the tuition fees paid by him in the year to the university, and that the said tuition fees also be deducted in computing the income of the student for purposes of determining whether the student is a dependent.

The Deputy Chairman: I might inform the committee that the terms of the proposed amendment will be found as an appendix to Votes and Proceedings for Thursday, February 2 last.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, with respect to the income tax resolution may I suggest that as it is one resolution with 12 paragraphs we follow the procedure of other years, that you call the paragraphs separately as though they were separate resolutions and that we adopt them seriatim in the order in which you call them.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, if I understood the minister correctly he suggested that the paragraphs of the resolution should be called seriatim. I think it has been the usual procedure to have some discussion about the resolution as a whole before individual items have been called and I would hope that procedure could be followed. That is the procedure we would wish to follow at the present time.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say something on this matter because in former years we have had a discussion on the resolution as a whole. I find, in going back to June 4, 1956, that after a discussion of the income tax resolution that covered 24 pages in Hansard the hon. member for Greenwood said, "We have been all over creation", and the hon. member for Eglinton then proceeded to make a speech that took up another six pages. I think we should have an opportunity at this time to discuss the income tax resolution in a general way rather than proceeding to discuss the paragraphs seriatim. After the dinner recess on the occasion to which I have referred there was discussion of the sales tax and the excise tax. The hon. member for Eglinton at that time discussed such matters as the excise tax on furniture and shoes. He said that members of the house should rise in angry indignation against a government that would dare to maintain a 10 per cent sales tax on shoes and furniture and yet the tax is now 11 per cent. I think we should be granted the same privilege as the chairman of the committee at that time granted the hon. member for Eglinton.

The Deputy Chairman: Do I understand it is the wish of the committee to discuss the resolution as one resolution and pass it as one resolution?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I think it would be the wish of the committee to have an orderly discussion and the subject matters of the 12 respective paragraphs of this resolution vary quite widely. Unless we arrange to call each paragraph separately as has been done in other years, I think we are going to have a very discursive, mixed up and unsatisfactory discussion.

One hon. member opposite, at any rate, indicated that he wished to say something in general. He then proceeded not to talk about the Income Tax Act at all but about the sales tax which has nothing whatever to do with the Income Tax Act. We are not back to the budget debate. Anything that is relevant to any of the paragraphs of the resolution can be said, of course, with respect to each of them, but this is not a warrant for talking about the sales tax.

Mr. Pickersgill: Since this is one resolution, I think it would be our wish to have a certain amount of discussion about the whole resolution and I think we would be quite agreeable after that discussion to follow the suggestion of the Minister of Finance that each item should be taken seriatim. This is a single resolution and under the rules, therefore, we have a right to discuss it as a whole. We would like to do that for some little time at the beginning.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, when the minister introduced his so-called baby budget shortly before Christmas the only reference he made to the most important domestic problem in our country, namely, unemployment, was when he indicated that he proposed to provide for the application of the concept of double depreciation to what he called chronically unemployed areas. Since that bare announcement some two and one half months ago there have been persistent interrogations from the Liberal opposition addressed to the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Prime Minister as to when we might expect a more detailed statement about this proposed policy.

When the policy was announced there was some expectancy in the country that this kind of relief, if embodied in a real plan, might provide some mitigation in certain surplus employment areas, and thereby give these areas some relief from the serious problem of unemployment that attended them and has attended them since this government came into office. However, in spite of our interrogations of the ministry from time to time we were never able to ascertain which department of government was responsible for the administration of this policy. We also were not able to ascertain what kind of criteria would be invoked by the government to determine which areas could qualify for the beneficial consequences of the policy which the Minister of Finance announced before Christmas.

Not only were we unable to elicit any information but we were led to believe by the Minister of Finance that there could be no announcement of the details of the policy designed to meet the serious emergency of unemployment until such time as the budget resolutions had been disposed of in this house.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is what the Minister of Finance told the hon. member for Laurier early in the month of January.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Will the hon. member please direct his attention to the words I used. I said, until the house had passed upon them. I referred to the adoption of the main motion to resolve the house into committee of ways and means. I did not at any time say until after the resolutions had been adopted in committee of ways and means.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Minister of Finance is entitled to his interpretation of his own words and I am entitled to place my interpretation upon them. The record is clear. He indicated to the hon. member for Laurier early in the month of January that it was not possible to announce the number of areas that were going to be included in this plan for assisting the chronically unemployed sections of the country until such time as the budget resolutions had been passed. The minister also told the hon. member for Laurier that a member with his experience should know that was the case. He was naturally assuming that there was no provision in the existing law which would prevent any other course being followed than that outlined in the response of the Minister of Finance.

However, as the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River pointed out a few days later, we had been misled by the Minister of Finance. I shall be kind to the minister and say that he likely forgot the provision in the existing Income Tax Act, which enables the executive to make a decision to provide for the application of added depreciation, if such decision is taken by the governor general in council. There can be no justification, in the face of this situation, for the long delay we have had at the hands of this government in giving to the house and the country even a semblance of the criteria, which the government intends to invoke in the application of this proposal for double depreciation. As a matter of fact, we are not even now acquainted with the facts as to whether or not the government has acquired for itself, pursuant to the Income Tax Act, the necessary power to implement the vague announcement made today by the Minister of Labour.

On orders of the day this afternoon we sought to ascertain from the Minister of Finance whether or not an order in council has been passed which would permit the implementation of this new policy of the government which, by the way, is intended to operate not for a period of years but for one year only. The Minister of Finance, for reasons best known to him, refused to say positively today whether or not the cabinet had in fact acted in the matter.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not do any such thing.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We have the anomalous position of a reluctant Minister of Finance seeming to be unwilling to disclose whether or not the government had, after two and a half months, acted in this matter.

The announcement made by the Minister of Labour today, welcome as it is and to the extent that it goes, has not been clothed with any legal authority whatever in so far as this committee knows. Undoubtedly the governor in council could meet tonight, or perhaps it did meet between orders of the day this afternoon and this period tonight, and could have taken the necessary steps pursuant to the Income Tax Act, to acquire the necessary power to authorize the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Labour, who apparently now is being charged with responsibility in this matter, to implement the program announced a long time ago.

Why the government has waited so long to implement what, at least in principle, is a constructive approach to the solution in part of the problem of unemployment is difficult to understand. One can only suggest it is because this government is used to postponing decisions and to delaying action, and has once again forgotten the assurances that it gave not only to parliament but to the people of Canada in the budget which was introduced by the Minister of Finance shortly before Christmas. The fact is that this program will be implemented long after the event, although we were called here in November to deal with certain emergency legislation, designed mainly to deal with the problem of unemployment in the long term along with this scheme which is designed to deal with unemployment forthwith.

The fact is that this government did dedicate itself to the solution of the unemployment problem when it appealed to the people in 1958, but it has waited over 2½ months before announcing the details of a plan that would give to municipalities and to corporations some indication of the kind of relief which the government intended. The government, therefore, stands indicted by these delaying tactics, this laissez-faire attitude and this lackadaisical manner in whcih it has approached the problem of unemployment in our country. One can only compare this anaemic approach to this serious domestic problem with the attitude taken by the government of the United States. That government has not hesitated to state the character of the problem. It has not hesitated, through its chief executive, to lay before congress proposals which are designed to meet this problem.

Mr. Grafftey: Half of which we have already carried out.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): One method which the United States proposed was the application of this principle of double depreciation for the assistance of what are called in that country, unashamedly, distressed areas. In this country the Minister of Finance takes exception to our referring to these surplus areas of unemployment as "distressed areas". He calls them chronically unemployed areas. I do not know what difference there is between a chronically unemployed area and a distressed or depressed area. The fact is that, in the chronically unemployed areas and in the distressed or depressed areas, we have the picture of thousands of men and women out of work.

Many of those who are out of work are in a very unhappy position because they have exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits and their right to supplementary payments under the Unemployment Insurance Act. They stand in need of assistance to the extent that it is provided by the municipalities, the provinces and this government under the public assistance program that stands on our statute books.

Let us compare the situation in the United States in this particular with the situation that we have today as a result of the vague announcement made under duress by the Minister of Labour. First of all, the Minister of Labour has announced that assistance will be given under certain criteria, and that areas will be divided into two groups, those with a labour force of more than 10,000 and those with less. Areas with a labour force above 10,000 must have been classified as labour surplus areas for 75 per cent of the 48 summer months, that is from May to October, between 1953 and 1960. I call the attention of the house to those years. They must also show a decline in industrial employment during this period. Those areas with a labour force below 10,000 must have been classified as labour surplus areas by the Department of Labour for half of the summer months between 1953 and 1960, and these areas must also show a general depreciation in employment.

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

The areas involved may either correspond to areas served by a national employment service office, or with the boundaries of a municipality. But we have this mere outline, which the Minister of Labour was content to accept as criteria and which was hastily devised, because yesterday we learned for the first time, from the Prime Minister which department of government was going to be responsible for this matter. It will not be forgotten that last Thursday we asked the Minister of Finance who was going to be responsible and we got from him a characteristic reply that revealed nothing. Then the Minister of Trade and Commerce disclaimed any responsibility, although this kind of program in the United States and in Great Britain is carried out under the administration respectively of the secretary of state for commerce in the United States and the president of the board of trade in Great Britain. We learned yesterday from the Prime Minister that the responsibility was going to lie with the Minister of Labour.

From the conduct of the ministry during these last few days under our interrogations I suggest that it was not clear under which department the responsibility for this matter would come. It is clear from the conduct of the ministers that the Minister of Trade and Commerce was to be charged with part of the responsibility. But, because of the reply given yesterday by the Prime Minister when I asked him which minister was to be in charge and he replied the Minister of Labour, it obviously became necessary for subordinate ministers to foregather and decide either in cabinet or among themselves, that the Prime Minister could not be let down, and that the responsibility in fact must now be entrusted to the overworked, overburdened, over-concerned Minister of Labour.

That is the situation. It is no wonder then that we learned from him today details so vague in character as to convey no real information to anyone in this country in regard as to what are the real criteria. The fact that the government has not adopted the criteria being used in the United States or in Great Britain is, of course, of no real concern apparently to the government. The government today in its announcement did not indicate what areas or what communities of the country could possibly benefit from this program. The Minister of Labour charged with this responsibility, sitting now on the treasury benches, when confronted with this situation said: "I ask the member for Essex East to say now whether or not the city of Windsor is to be designated as a distressed area," as though that was my responsibility, and as though I had concocted this weak infant, this new instrument by which the government hopes to combat the problem of unemployment in Canada.

I have no hesitation in saying that Windsor certainly is an area which should receive at the hands of this government the benefits of any kind of program that will encourage industry to stay in the community, and will encourage industry to locate in that area in the hope of mitigating the problem which only now the Minister of Finance is beginning to recognize as really existent in this country at this time.

An hon. Member: The Minister of Finance?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I did not mean to say the Minister of Finance. I must not put too many responsibilities on the Minister of Finance whose burdens now are obviously more than he can bear.

The Minister of Labour today in announcing this program refused to indicate what communities in Canada could in the opinion of the authors of this plan benefit from it. He would not tell us how many communities were covered. That was something that could be determined by hon. members opposite. That was something that could be determined by the member of parliament for Essex East himself, in so far as his own community was concerned. But to let municipalities in Canada know what the government proposes to do for them, that was not the responsibility of the government of Canada. He said in effect, let the municipalities themselves examine this proposal which I make; let them examine the criteria, and if they think that their situation comes within the embrace of our criteria then they can make application. That was an unfortunate attitude for the Minister of Labour to take in the face of this serious problem.

I say to the government that the responsibility which is on it to designate forthrightly the areas in Canada that it regards as coming within the category of a chronically unemployed or distressed area is one that should be recognized by it immediately. Let it say positively that Elliot Lake, Springhill, Cornwall, Peterborough, Windsor and other communities in Canada are areas which fall within the criteria instead of leaving this to surmise and guesswork. Our municipal officials are going to have a great deal of difficulty in analysing what this statement really means unless they are now going to be assisted by the research that the Liberal party has done in trying to interpret for the Minister of Labour what in fact his resolution really means.

It would seem from what the Minister of Labour said today that some 11 communities in Canada may possibly come within the reach of this proposal for a system of depreciation. The minister has referred to Elliot Lake. I doubt whether, under the formula as he gave it to the house, Elliot Lake, ably represented in this house by the Leader of the Opposition, could properly qualify. No one I am sure will deny that the unemployment problem in Elliot Lake is such that it should be one of the communities in our country to benefit from this kind of proposal, which is very limited because it is to be extended only for one year.

The areas which, according to my interpretation, fall in this category—and I give this information for the benefit of these communities in Canada because the Minister of Labour refused to do so—seem to be Brantford, where the percentage of unemployed in the required period is 90.5 on the basis of the last available figure for 1959; Windsor, with 80.9 per cent; Rouyn, Val d'Or, with 76.2 per cent; Shawinigan, with 90.5 per cent; Cornwall, with 80.9 per cent; New Glasgow with 80.9 per cent; Lac St. Jean, with 76.2 per cent; Three Rivers, with 90.5 per cent; and Saint John, New Brunswick with 88.1 per cent. Then referring to the minor areas—two in number—they are Newcastle, with 85.7 per cent unemployed and Drummondville, with 78.6 per cent. That list of names does not include Springhill and does not include Elliot Lake.

I suggest to the Minister of Labour that if he carefully analyses what was prepared for him, he will find that the two examples he gave of communities capable of qualifying for this assistance are communities that will be denied this assistance under the very plan which he announced to the house today.

Have we not reached a sad state in this country, when the government, through the Minister of Labour, in the announcement of a plan has been reluctant to say which communities in Canada can in its judgment qualify for this assistance? That is exactly the position we have had portrayed today by the very limited announcement made by the Minister of Labour. The minister is in the best position to give us this information. The unemployment insurance offices in Canada are administered by the Minister of Labour through the unemployment insurance commission. He is the minister, above all ministers, who has the information which alone determines whether or not a particular area comes within the compass of this particular proposal and is to receive the benefit of the double depreciation allowance.

It is difficult to understand why the minister is reluctant to give this information, except that it is in keeping with the attitude of this government from whom we have had to extricate information as though we were pulling teeth from the strongest jawbone of the strongest organism known to man. We have had to do that in order to elicit the kind of information which we feel the people who are suffering from unemployment in our country are entitled to have.

When one examines this particular proposal of the Minister of Labour, one finds certain conditions that perhaps require a great deal of explanation by the minister, and I hope he will give that explanation tonight. Let us examine the proposition of these two categories. First, areas of 10,000 or more. The ratio of applications for employment on file with the national employment service of paid workers, including those looking for work, according to this plan must have exceeded (a) 6 per cent in industrial areas of 25,000 or more for 75 per cent or more of the 48 months from May to October, 1953-60; and (b) 7 per cent in areas below 25,000 and above 10,000 for 75 per cent or more of the 48 months from May to October, 1953-60. Second, industrial employment must have declined over the period 1953-60.

I would like to remind the committee of one thing at this juncture. The basis for the figures, according to the Minister of Labour, that are going to be used is not the dominion bureau of statistics' figures but the figures of the national employment service. For two and a half years we have argued in this house that the real measure of unemployment was something approximating the number of people in receipt of unemployment insurance and the number of unplaced applicants; that is, the N.E.S. figures. The government has said that these were the wrong standards to use. We were told at the end of last session that the government was going to resort to a new formula. We were later told, before we reconvened in November, that the new standard of measurement of unemployment in Canada was to be one standard, the dominion bureau of statistics' figures.

Yet in the announcement made by the Minister of Labour today, he used the N.E.S. figures, thereby upholding and confirming the position which we in the Liberal party have maintained throughout the last two and a half years. If it is satisfactory to use the N.E.S. figures now, why is it not satisfactory to use those figures along with the unemployment insurance figures to determine the real state of unemployment in our country?

On the basis of the D.B.S. figures we are told by the government that some 693,000 people in the month of January, the last reported period, were out of work. If we are to add to that the numbers included in the standard used by the minister in his statement today, we would certainly be presented with a much higher figure.

With regard to areas below 10,000, the ratio of applications for unemployment on file with N.E.S. of paid workers, including those looking for work, according to the minister as I interpret it, must have exceeded 7 per cent for 50 per cent or more of the 48 summer months May to October, 1953-60. Industrial employment conditions likewise must have generally deteriorated over the years.

This is not the whole story. The minister has said nothing about the major agricultural areas of our country, where unemployment exists in very large numbers. According to his announcement today, agricultural areas are not included—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I am sorry to advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I begin my remarks with an apology. Unfortunately we have not the services of the "Martin B.S." and we have not the statistics in relation to what communities or areas are going to come under this emergency legislation. But I must say I was disappointed, while listening to the hon. member for Essex East, to find that the Port Arthur-Fort William region does not seem to qualify for this particular type of assistance.

To talk about the Port Arthur-Fort William region may seem parochial at this particular stage, but I think what is taking place there in so far as concerns unemployment, and the structural developments in the whole employment picture, is typical of other places in Canada and certainly implies a very strong criticism of these proposals not unlike that made by the hon. member for Essex East. Whether or not we are a distressed area, the communities, including the two municipalities of Port Arthur and Fort William, have undertaken an employment survey of their own, supported by their own funds, and using local people. They had the advantage, through the kindness of the Minister of Labour, of the advice of Department of Labour economists. They are in the middle of a study of our employment situation.

In several months' time they will have a report analysing why our unemployment has skyrocketed very much in the last three years. It seems to me that the basis upon which the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Labour are approaching this matter of what is a distressed area or an area that is going to receive the advantage of these taxation allowances is a most unfair one.

I can explain that best by analysing the unemployment structure in our particular area, which has been of a very high level especially since 1956. We have a very high income level in the region of northwestern Ontario. I think it is one of the highest in Canada. But we have also had an increase in the last three or four years of a very marked unemployment problem. The reasons for this relate to the very nature of the industries.

We have three basic industries, transportation, pulp and paper and mining. I do not know of three industries anywhere else in the nation in which there has been more capital input, more productive gain and the creation of fewer job opportunities. I can give illustrations of this in the pulp and paper industry, where they can now cut twice as much wood as they could ten years ago, with the same labour force. Yet the full effects of all the mechanization in the woods and in the pulp mills, all the dieselization on the railways and the modern loading facilities at elevators, and all the improvements in mine machinery and techniques that have made it much easier to get a ton of ore up from the bottom of the mine, are only now really crystallizing and having their effects.

Our crisis has come upon us very suddenly. It was masked to quite an extent by the expansion in the last few years of the service industries. We have now just about as many bowling alleys, motels, barber shops and service centres as can be supported at this time by our basic industries. Yet if you are going to base this assistance through the tax act and tax concessions upon a look into the past back to 1953, you are not going to get a true picture of the crisis which our area faces. In other words, the whole of this legislation is based on a statistical look backwards to 1953.

It is apparent that the department is thinking in the terms that it is summer unemployment which gives you the real indication of the danger to a community. I insist that is wrong, and one of the reasons it is wrong in areas such as ours is that in the last five years there has been a complete transition in our employment pattern. Where once most of the wood was cut in wintertime, now it is cut in the summer and fall months. That transition would not be noticed at all by the statistical pattern that is going to be invoked in relation to this kind of assistance.

The Minister of Finance himself when he introduced in his budget speech pointed out the limitation on what you could do through these depreciation allowances. It still remains to me to point out that he has scuppered the whole project by the way in which it is going to be applied. I insist just as strongly as the hon. member for Essex East representing Windsor may do that we have a crucial situation at the head of the lakes. If ever there was an area which needed assistance in terms of any kind of allowance for depreciation, it is ours and yet that fact is never going to be revealed from the statistical analysis which is necessary.

There is one other point I want to make clear. I fail to see what the federal government is doing in asking municipalities to deal directly with it and to inform it of their situation. What kind of an informal relationship is this when we have the traditional pattern in Canada of the municipalities, if not being the creatures of the provinces, at least in all their relationships with the federal government going up through the provinces. Surely that is the chain.

I cannot myself understand where the provinces fit into this picture. I know that Premier Frost, despite his political party, has a better understanding of our problems in northwestern Ontario than this government seems to have. He knows we have a crisis up there. He knows what has happened to industries of ours such as the Port Arthur shipyards and the Canada Car factories at Fort William. I doubt if we shall ever build another ship in the Port Arthur shipyards on a commercial basis in view of the changes which have taken place in the conditions of shipbuilding in this country and in the world generally. Yet it is apparent that this government has forgotten those promises, despite the kind words it gave us two years ago through the Minister of Public Works when he was so sympathetic, and so anxious that our big Canada Car plant should carry on. Here we have a huge plant which is now down to a level where 200 men are working in it though it has a capacity in terms of space and equipment to employ several thousand. We have a shipyard which has been working at a capacity of between 20 per cent and 25 per cent. Surely these are the very kind of industries which need this assistance; yet what hope is there under the formula we have had today?

I cannot claim to have understood the formula fully. There may be some loopholes which would enable us to sneak in, but I should like to suggest to the Minister of Finance that on the surface, on a quick interpretation, these concessions are not going to do my part of the country a single bit of good. I hope there are a good many members of parliament irrespective of party who recognize the same thing with regard to these income tax changes and who will get up and inform the Minister of Labour that this is not good enough.

There is one section of the income tax change which is extremely welcome. I must compliment the minister for broadening this provision since he made his initial presentation with relation to education allowances. I should like to know from him whether nurses are included under his heading of technical education in regard to post-secretary school training. That is not clear to me. Certainly where nurses have had a grade 12 education, generally matriculation is considered the completion of secondary level. In many parts of Canada they go on and train on a full-time basis for three years. It costs their parents in many cases a great deal of money even though there has been a trend to paying them a small amount of money as spending money. I think we would be very much indebted to the minister if he would indicate that nurses qualify for this particular provision.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Perhaps I may deal with that question now though we shall be considering it when paragraph 12 is before us later. I should think that nurses attending a nursing school on a full-time basis where the course is open only to graduates of a secondary school would qualify.

Mr. Fisher: I am very pleased to hear that. There is one other thing which is not a matter of interpretation and I think it is regrettable. I am noticing that many of the witnesses who are appearing before the Senate committee on manpower are stressing the need for people after they complete their normal education to carry on with their own development themselves. It has always been the attitude of the income tax authorities that this post-graduate training that they do in part time and spare time increases their capacity or ability to earn more revenue, so the expenses they incur in acquiring this education have never been recognized as deductible for tax purposes.

I wonder whether the minister has not considered that he could give a fillip to both summer training and academic, technical and vocational training of many kinds if he were to provide that seriously undertaken part time training for a graduate degree or for extra vocational training of a journeyman kind could be considered for deduction. It seems to me this is one of the incentives which we could give to a great many people in Canada to improve their talents or improve the position and the ability of the whole labour force of Canada.

The more complex parts of the income tax amendments are beyond my capacity to criticize or to make any suggestions about, but I would reiterate to the minister that it is most disappointing that the indication in the statement we have had today from the Minister of Labour is that this is going to do so little for so many parts of the country which know they are in a crisis situation in so far as unemployment is concerned.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member for Essex East had a very free rein earlier this evening and enjoyed it. It is only right that after he had enjoyed that free rein an hon. member of the C.C.F. opposition should have a similar opportunity to discuss the same question. I think it is quite apparent, Mr. Chairman, that the subject which the hon. member for Essex East chose as the subject of his discourse tonight is quite outside the scope of discussion here.

The suggestion was made by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate that hon. members should be permitted to discuss the resolution generally. I had suggested that we should deal with the paragraphs of the resolution seriatim, but his suggestion was that there should be some opportunity for a general discussion.

Mr. Chairman, nobody took any objection to that course but the subject chosen by the hon. member for Essex East for his discourse is quite outside the scope of the resolution. The hon. member himself reminded us of that. The resolution proposes certain amendments to the Income Tax Act and in the light of this general discussion I take it that anything that relates generally to the proposed amendments, I suppose, is the sort of thing the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate had in mind; but this subject lies completely outside the scope of this resolution.

The hon. member is talking about something that he says was done or something that he feels should have been done by executive action, quite outside the scope of these amendments, under other provisions of the Income Tax Act.

We have the hon. member's speech and we have had part of a speech by an hon. member of the C.C.F. opposition on the same subject. May I respectfully suggest that we resume our discussion on the resolution to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order that has now been raised by the Minister of Finance, the minister will recall and if Your Honour were in the house Your Honour also will recall that only as late as this afternoon on the orders of the day my friend the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River inquired whether under a certain section of the Income Tax Act an order in council had been passed to implement the policy announced in the budget. The minister preferred not to take us into his confidence on that point presumably because there has been no such order in council, or at least we are entitled to assume that until we are advised to the contrary, and are told that an order in council has been passed.

Anyone who examines the budget speech will see at once—and I do not need to take up the time of the committee to read it—that one of the main features of the income tax changes announced by the Minister of Finance in the budget was this change to allow double depreciation.

Until the government condescends to tell us, as it has not yet seen fit to do, we have no means of knowing whether the government proposes to do that by a new and specific enactment or whether it proposes to take advantage of some of the sections of the present Income Tax Act and do it by order in council. The government has not yet condescended to say how this is going to be carried out. Therefore, until we are told specifically how the government does intend to do that, we have every right to assume that in some way in these income tax resolutions—perhaps some hidden way, in some obscure language that has not yet been explained to us—there is a provision which would carry out this intention of the government.

Since this was part of the income tax change suggested in the budget and since these resolutions are the only matters before the committee at the present time to carry out these changes in the income tax announced by the minister in the budget, I submit that it is perfectly proper for a discussion to take place on these resolutions as to how these things are to be brought about and whether the scheme for carrying out what the minister proposed, which was announced to us today on the orders of the day, is or is not an adequate scheme.

We have never yet been told on what legal basis this double depreciation is going to be extended. In view of all these circumstances, it seems to me this is the only possible place for this matter to be debated under our rules at the present time and that we are perfectly entitled to debate it and even to urge that the government should not take so drastic a step as this by order in council but that it should make a specific and well-defined legislative provision for it.

That seems to me to be all the more at issue when we are told that in some mysterious fashion the municipalities which in the budget we were not told were to have anything to do with this are being brought into it in some fashion. We want to know what is the legal basis for bringing in the municipalities.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, may I say this. The hon. member does not need to be told that, whatever may be the proper legal source of the power which has been exercised by the governor in council as was announced today by my colleague the Minister of Labour, the fact is that there is no proposal before the committee for enactment of an amendment to the Income Tax Act dealing with this matter. That is the only matter before the committee at this time.

Accordingly, while there may be a proper time for the kind of discussion the hon. member for Essex East sought to initiate tonight, this obviously is not that time or place.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, may I add my feeble voice to that of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate who, I believe, has stated the situation correctly.

It is true that in so far as we know, although there may be something in the resolutions before us that is an authority not apparent, and although there is nothing directly bearing on this point in these resolutions, the fact is that the announcement made by the Minister of Labour today follows an announcement made by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech, particularly in those passages to be found at page 1007 of Hansard for December 20, 1960.

At that time the minister indicated that the Income Tax Act already allows a rapid rate of write-off for current capital expenditures in the field of research. The minister made reference to this fact to support his announcement that had to do with his observation which will be found also at page 1007 when he said that the purpose of this new program, namely the double depreciation program was to:

> —attempt to cope with this problem—
> The problem of unemployment—
> —in the most effective way by encouraging new industries to establish themselves and provide additional employment in such areas.

When we asked the Minister of Finance in January what the details of this plan were he told us, as I have already recounted, that this would be given the house by him during the course of the discussion on the budget resolutions.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, the minister did not say any such thing.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Knowing the Minister of Finance who has the enviable capacity—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The minister said no such thing. Will the hon. member produce the statement in Hansard to which he refers? I invite the hon. gentleman to do that.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I cannot look it up when I am talking. Perhaps the Leader of the Opposition or the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate will look it up. I have done a certain amount of research. It would be difficult for me to follow all the pearls of wisdom uttered by the Minister of Finance and if I cannot readily put my hands on it the minister will understand it is only because I have to be somewhat selective when I come to dealing with his observations in this chamber.

The fact is that that was the position taken by the Minister of Finance as I well recall it. The minister now says we are not to be given the opportunity of discussing the announcement that arises out of an income tax provision, an announcement made today by the Minister of Labour.

If that position could be properly taken and supported by the Chair—and that I gravely doubt, knowing the high quality of judgment that the Chair possesses—we would be denied the opportunity of discussing this matter for some time. There would be no opportunity to ask questions except on orders of the day; and you know, Mr. Chairman, that when we ask questions we sometimes have great difficulty in being heard and in putting our questions, and we do not always receive the kind of complete replies to which we are entitled.

That being the case, we are certainly entitled to ask ourselves: are we not going to have an opportunity to discuss this important matter? This was part of the budget of my hon. friend. What we are discussing now is not a proposal of the Department of Labour but part of the new budget. We are now told by the Minister of Finance that although this is part of the new budget we cannot discuss it when we are discussing the budgetary resolutions, particularly those having to do with income tax amendments. That is the gist of the position taken by the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance not only should not seek to deny this discussion but should address himself at once to the question again put by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate: was an order in council passed? If an order in council was passed, it would have been passed under the Income Tax Act, amendments to which we are now considering. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that to deny us this right now would be to deny hon. members an opportunity of discussing under our procedures something that is of vital interest and is perhaps one of the most vital subjects that we have had the opportunity of discussing since this session began.

[Mr. Fleming (Eglinton).]

The minister brought forward no authorities for his position. He is obviously embarrassed by this particular debate. He speaks in a low tone and thereby seeks to enshroud his words in an atmosphere of authority, but he produces no authority. I suggest that this discussion is perfectly in order and that we ought to be allowed to proceed with it.

Mr. Pearson: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, the minister is taking the position that the regulations regarding the designation of areas of surplus unemployment brought in at last this afternoon by the Minister of Labour—regulations that we consider to be limited, restrictive and inadequate—have nothing to do with the budget resolution before the committee and that therefore we are not at liberty to discuss this matter. But, Mr. Chairman, as found on page 1065 of Hansard, when the hon. member for Laurier asked the minister on January 16 if he could indicate to the house the areas of the country where unemployment was high, to which areas he promised measures of assistance in his budget speech, the reply to that question by the minister was that in deference to constitutional practice the house would expect that the budget proposals would be adopted before this designation could be made.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Go on.

Mr. Pearson: What the minister said was:

> —would be adopted at least in general before the government proceeded on that course that was proposed in the budget speech.

Therefore the minister himself admitted that there was a relationship between this matter and the discussion of the budget resolutions and that he himself could not give us the information required until we had adopted the budget resolutions covering that as well as other points. Surely, Mr. Chairman, now that these budget resolutions are before the committee for consideration, we are entitled to discuss this matter of the designation of certain areas of surplus unemployment in relation to these resolutions.

The Deputy Chairman: I think hon. members will realize first of all, of course, that the Chair does not make the rules of the house. The job of the Chair is to try to interpret the rules. When the hon. member for Essex East first rose and started talking about double depreciation I began to read the resolution very carefully and I have read it three times. Up to this point I have not been able to find in the resolution any reference to double depreciation.

I have no other alternative than to suggest to hon. members that they try to be more relevant to the particular resolution that is before us. We are not debating the budget. We are debating one resolution of the budget. I am sure hon. members will appreciate the position that the Chair has to take and will do what they can to co-operate.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, there are three main changes in the budget resolution that have to do with reductions in taxation. First of all there is the proposed reduction in the corporation tax. It is proposed that the 21 per cent or lower rate should apply to the first $35,000 instead of the first $25,000. This will mean that a corporation with a net income of $30,000 will save $1,500 or a corporation with a net income of $35,000 or more will save about $3,000. This is hardly enough to put one man to work and it can hardly be considered a stimulus to the economy.

This afternoon I heard the Minister of Labour talk about double depreciation and, after listening to the formula he put forward, it is my opinion that no greater farce has ever been presented to the House of Commons. I can quite understand that the Minister of Finance is not very much interested in unemployment.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I thought you had already ruled that this subject was out of order.

Mr. McMillan: He has not ruled that we should not touch on this subject. Either we should deal with unemployment or we should not do so, and I can readily see in this announcement the idea of the minister that there is no emergency with respect to unemployment.

The second change in the Income Tax Act is the elimination of the 4 per cent tax imposed on investment income exceeding $2,500. I can quite readily see that this is a measure to entice people to buy government bonds. Government bonds have been very unpopular with investors, and by removing this tax I think the minister will attain his objective of getting more people to buy his heretofore rather unpopular government bonds.

The third decrease proposed in the resolution amending the Income Tax Act has to do with tuition fees of university students. Any student in full-time attendance at a university will be allowed to deduct his tuition fees when computing his income tax. I think this is a very good measure and I wish to commend the minister for it. In my opinion the minister might also have included in the resolution a provision by which those people who obtain an honorarium for their work in voluntary fire fighting companies might have received some consideration in computing their income tax. In different parts of Ontario—and I think the same is probably true across Canada—a number of small municipalities are having difficulty in getting volunteer firemen and keeping their fire fighting companies up to strength.

The government is so anxious to get more money all the time that it has made a concerted drive with respect to a number of these firemen and is looking into their back pay. I know that in some areas many of these firemen did not report the income they received as an honorarium for their services as volunteer firemen. These men devote their time to their municipalities and I think they should get some consideration. It is only necessary to list some of their duties to establish this point. They are the backbone of fire protection in our small municipalities. The majority are well trained in fire fighting, rescue work, first aid and other work.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Perhaps the hon. member could indicate to me any reference to firemen and income tax in this resolution.

Mr. McMillan: I might say that earlier, Mr. Chairman, I referred to the fact that on June 25, 1956, the chairman of the committee allowed hon. members to roam all over and at that time the opposition roamed to such an extent that their remarks covered 24 pages. They referred to different classes of people to whom they thought consideration should be extended under the Income Tax Act. After this had gone on for 24 pages and after the hon. member for Greenwood had said that they had gone all over creation, the hon. member for Eglinton rose and made a speech in the same vein that took up six more pages.

The Deputy Chairman: Perhaps the hon. member and I are a little older now than we were then and do not roam so much. I think perhaps the hon. member had better stick to the resolution.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely, Mr. Chairman, we are not going to have our rights abridged in this committee so that it is not possible for us to say that some persons other than those who are actually getting relief under the Income Tax Act should also be included, particularly in view of the fact that the present Minister of Finance, as the hon. member for Welland has just pointed out, covered pages and pages of Hansard doing that precise thing on June 2, 1955. At that time, however, we had a minister of finance who was respectful of the rights of members, who listened politely to what the hon. gentleman said and replied to his arguments instead of raising points of order. I suggest, sir, that my hon. friend from Welland is suggesting that this particular provision apply to some other class of taxpayers and that certainly is within the ambit of this debate if we are to have any debate at all.

The Deputy Chairman: I think perhaps the hon. member for Welland and I understand each other fairly well. I am sure that he will want to come back to this resolution. He was wandering quite a bit, and I am sure he will realize that.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a plea for the firemen. I shall do so very briefly. These firemen are put to a lot of expense as a result of their work in the municipality. They receive only an honorarium of $200 or less. I feel that the Minister of Finance might give them consideration at this time or when he introduces his next budget. I shall not make any further reference to these firemen, but I would appeal to the minister to remember them either at this time or later when he introduces his budget. I hope that will be this month.

The second category of changes relates to the penalty clauses. These penalty clauses are applied in respect of investment companies and in respect of pension plans, when a certain percentage of their income from investments is not derived from sources in Canada. In other words, they do not fare as well under the Income Tax Act unless they invest in Canadian securities. Federal government bonds are considered the No. 1 investment in Canada. Trust funds are usually invested in Canadian government bonds. In this connection, I would remind the Minister of Finance that the unemployment insurance fund is a trust fund, and as a result of poor investments a loss of over $50 million has been suffered in the last three years.

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order—

The Deputy Chairman: Order; I think the hon. member realizes that we are not discussing the unemployment insurance fund. We must stick closer to this resolution.

Mr. McMillan: I do not intend to discuss the unemployment insurance fund; except to say this—

The Deputy Chairman: Order; the Chair has been very lenient with the hon. member for Welland. I do not believe he should discuss the unemployment insurance fund.

Mr. McMillan: I will not mention that word again. However, these same people who have lost so much money in that other fund have their money in pension funds; and if the minister, by his policy, can lose so much money in one fund, why can he not lose a lot in another fund? If his fiscal policy is the same as it has been for the last three years, he will cause $50 million loss or more in these pension funds.

The third category of changes is the withholding taxes by which individuals and corporations from abroad have a deduction in their dividends of 15 per cent up from zero and 5 per cent. The minister said this would discourage provinces and municipalities from borrowing abroad. However, when he was in New York he said this measure was not designed to keep out foreign capital. I do not believe it can do both. He says it will not discourage foreign capital from coming into the country, and at the same time he says it will discourage municipalities and provinces from borrowing in New York. I referred to this provision during the budget debate. If the municipalities and the provinces do go to New York to borrow funds this government, in effect, will be taxing them on new construction, new roads, schools and so on. These New York funds will cost the municipalities and the provinces more because they will have to make up the 15 per cent tax on the interest from these bonds.

I should like to see Canadians develop Canada to as great an extent as they can. However, I feel we are overemphasizing the amount of United States capital in Canada. The newspapers lead us to believe that an evil day will arrive when United States capital will be drawn out of Canada. I believe that people forget just how much United States capital in Canada is invested in plant, pipe lines and other immovable assets. I feel this situation has been rather overemphasized.

I hope to ask some questions in committee on certain phases of the Income Tax Act. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, that I referred to the unemployment insurance fund, but I had to mention it at least once in order to compare it with the pension fund in which the people of this country could lose money if the fiscal policy is conducted in the future as it has been in the past.

Mr. Herridge: I shall, as usual, Mr. Chairman, be brief and strictly in order, the precedent having been set by the hon. member for Welland. First of all, I want to say that I am sure there are numerous small companies that will welcome the first clause in this income tax resolution which provides that the amount of income on which the tax rate of 21 per cent shall apply will be increased from $25,000 to $35,000. I know of a number of small companies, particularly those operating in the primary industries, that are finding conditions not too easy at the present time. This concession will be welcomed by those companies which will, in some cases, continue to operate under great difficulties and in other cases will try to expand, still under great difficulties.

However, Mr. Chairman, in that connection I may say I have always felt there was a certain academic approach to taxation on the part of ministers of finance and, more particularly, on the part of some of the senior officers. I say that with all respect for their ability and the service they are performing for this country. I understand that the Minister of Finance has had a very distinguished career in the legal profession, but that is very limiting. In some respects, lawyers are excellent people. However, I have found them to be something like preachers in that they are very theoretical. I do suggest it would be a good thing if the minister and some of his senior officials were to visit certain typical small industries in this country because when they are laying out rates of taxation on paper it is often done on the basis of arithmetic and without a great deal of knowledge of the circumstances under which certain of our people operate.

In illustration of this I might say that I know of one small company operating under considerable difficulty with all the risks that are involved in the forestry and lumber industries. There are many that are not seen by the Minister of Finance or on occasion by their senior officials. This company has an investment of close to $100,000 but would realize less profit than a ten by ten stall dispensing coca cola and comic magazines to school children. These different circumstances do exist. I suggest, as I have suggested before, that it would be a good idea, particularly for some of the senior officials, to acquire firsthand knowledge of the circumstances under which certain typical industries in this country operate.

With respect to clause 12 of the income tax resolution, I might say that I was very glad to see the original clause and to know that there has been some amendment widening the basis of this clause. This will be of considerable assistance to those persons with limited financial resources seeking a university education. I would suggest that the minister give consideration to the inclusion of living expenses up to a certain family income limit. I am not suggesting that children of wealthy families should receive this consideration, but certainly those children in families of limited incomes should be given some sort of consideration in this regard. I feel that we should do everything possible to make certain that as many young people as possible obtain university education.

Mr. Chairman, I should like very briefly to refer to the situation in respect to those persons who engage voluntarily in the extinguishing of fires, particularly in small communities. I should like to support the remarks made by the member for Welland in his suggestion that some consideration should be given to those voluntary fire brigade men who receive honorariums for their services as such. Mr. Chairman, in view of your anxiety I shall retreat from this attack.

I want very briefly to mention that the Canadian Medical Association has made representations to the minister with respect to the deduction of expenses for refresher courses. This is not mentioned in this resolution Mr. Chairman. I am bringing this to the attention of the minister for his consideration when he is dealing with the main budget. I feel it is necessary, certainly for rural practitioners, to have the opportunity of taking refresher courses, and it will be realized by all that their incomes differ greatly from the incomes of those who specialize in the cities. I would urge the minister to give consideration to these representations of the Canadian Medical Association when he is dealing with his main budget later this year.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to address myself to the first few words in this resolution which are:

> Resolved that it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide among other things:

It will be noted that "other things" which the government is recommending are specified, but it does not tell us what the government is in fact recommending. I think there will be very great disappointment in regard to many of these other things. There are one or two other things which I think ought to be included so that it will be possible for us to pass this resolution with expediency.

Instead of relying upon an order in council made in secret I think that the government should amend the Income Tax Act specifically to carry out the intended policy announced by the Minister of Finance on December 20, which appears at 1007 of Hansard. His statement contained therein is as follows.

> I fully share this optimism about the capabilities of Canadian industry. I am anxious to do everything within our means to encourage initiative and enterprise. As a powerful incentive to these ends I am pleased to announce measures to fulfil three major purposes: first, to assist new industries in areas where there is a substantial degree of continued unemployment over the years;

I would argue, sir, that there should be specific provisions put into the act by this parliament at this session to cover that because, as the minister said, it was a major new thing. I contend that a major new thing should be done by parliament and not done, under the colour of some provision already in the Income Tax Act, by order in council. It seems to me that if the minister thought this important enough to include in his budget speech as a new proposal, it should be among the "other things" referred to in the second line of the resolution now before us.

As found at page 1007 of Hansard, the minister goes on to say as follows:

> —second, to aid the development of new products from processing operations not hitherto carried on in Canada;

I think there should be a specific provision spelled out so that we in parliament know what this is and have some voice in its condition and some say with regard to how this is to be done instead of its being done in secret by the governor in council. I suggest that this provision should be included in this resolution, and it will not be expedient to pass this resolution, in my opinion, unless that provision is included.

The minister goes on to say:

> —third, to encourage the production of new types of goods. Double depreciation will, at the option of the taxpayer be allowed in respect of capital expenditures incurred in the first year for these purposes, but may be applied in any of the first three years.

I would argue, sir, that it may be possible for the governor in council to do that under existing law, but I suggest that when the existing law was made, the use of the law for this purpose was not contemplated. For that reason and because this is new I regard this as something that should be done by parliament and not by order in council.

We have been told something about how one of these three things was going to be accomplished. I am not going to transgress your ruling, sir, by discussing this but I must say that we were not told by the Minister of Labour under what authority, what law, or what statute the policy announced today was being carried out by the governor in council or by the Minister of Labour. We do not know. We are still in ignorance of this.

I would point out again that on December 20 the Minister of Finance produced this as a new policy. I repeat that it is my opinion that parliament should decide the main lines of that policy not in detail but in a broad sense. These details should be decided by parliament and not by the governor in council. Parliament should decide which are the areas of continued unemployment. It is this parliament that is going to relieve certain taxpayers of burdens that other taxpayers will have. That is something that should be done by parliament here and not by governor in council.

I say that the minister should bring in amendments to this resolution—obviously he cannot argue that this would effect the ways and means because he proposes to do it in any event by order in council—and incorporate them in it so that we as the representatives of the people may have a voice in regard to how these things are done. I would urge the minister to give consideration to the suggestion that the law in respect of these policies be included in this resolution instead of these things being done by order in council or in the cabinet. The law in respect to the policy, to which the government attached so much importance last December, should be dealt with by parliament.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I think the argument of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate to which we have just listened is one that cannot be passed over lightly by the Minister of Finance. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate argues that the Income Tax Act—I think it is section 11—was never intended to be used in the particular kind of emergency covered by the announcement made today by the Minister of Labour, and that in fact the amendments now before us should include some provision that would deal directly, legislatively, with the authority which the government must have in order to enable it to implement the announcement made in this regard by the minister on December 20 last.

The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate further argued that he thought the matter was of such importance that it could very well be dealt with more comprehensively in a measure that went way beyond a mere amendment to the Income Tax Act. I think the minister owes the committee an answer to the very useful observation made by my colleague.

When the minister is replying he might also seek to satisfy our curiosity, already exhibited a number of times today, as to whether or not in fact an order in council under the Income Tax Act has been passed, and if one has not been passed, whether it is the intention of the minister—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Order.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member was referring to what might be put into the Income Tax Act. That was quite in order. But I think the hon. member is going a little further than he is entitled to go in asking what has or has not been done in an order in council.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could just put my question, because I do not wish to be out of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not know why hon. gentlemen take this matter so lightheartedly.

Mr. Bell (Carleton): Light-heartedly? The hon. gentleman has been out of order all day.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Is it the intention of the government to deal with this matter, not by the amendments now before the committee but to provide an order in council in the case of each municipality?

The Deputy Chairman: Shall paragraph 1 carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, a most serious suggestion has been put to the minister and surely he is going to have something to say about it.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I can briefly inform the committee that the bill to be introduced following the resolution, when it is adopted, makes no reference to this subject either, so that, as with the resolution, this discussion lies quite outside the ambit of the bill.

It quite clearly follows that the matter is one for executive action within the terms of the existing legislation. That was made abundantly clear this afternoon in the announcement made by my colleague the Minister of Labour. I think the matter is quite clear.

The clauses of the Income Tax Act and the powers thereby conferred upon the executive are precisely the same as those employed by the former government, of which both the hon. member for Essex East and the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate were members, when the government applied the rules as to deferred depreciation a decade ago.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I was not a member of the government at that time. I would just recall that fact to the hon. gentleman's mind.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The hon. member was not a member of the government, that is true. The hon. member for Essex East was. The hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate had the opportunity, because I think he will not deny that he was a power within the government.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do deny that. I have never made any pretentions of that character and I never intend to do so. But that is not really very relevant to the business before us.

If one may put it this way, I was shocked but not surprised by the latest observation of the Minister of Finance, who said that the bill to be founded on this resolution contained no reference to these matters. He said "contained", or some verb in the past tense at any rate,—

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): No, the present tense.

Mr. Pickersgill: —or the present tense. In other words, the minister implied, and indeed said that the bill was already in existence.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Of course it is.

Mr. Pickersgill: The minister makes it worse; he now says, "Of course it is".

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): The bill is ready to be introduced. It must be ready as far as we can prepare it, and that has always been the practice.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think I have the floor. Here is the minister coming to parliament and asking us to resolve that it is expedient to introduce this measure, and he now tells us that it does not really matter what we do.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): I did not say that at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: His conduct in this parliament is such that he has told us the bill is already there and that it does not matter what we do about this resolution, his bill is going to be introduced. In other words, this stage is just a rubber stamp for this arrogant minister whose bill is already in existence. What is this debate about? What is parliament about? If this arrogant government says it has made up its mind already, the bill is there, and we cannot change it, what are we debating? Why do they use this language, that it is expedient to introduce the measure?

This is just another evidence of the way in which this government carries out its policies. It carries out its new policies by secret orders in council based on legislation which was never designed for this purpose. Then when we suggest that certain things should be put into the bill, the introduction of which they tell us they consider to be expedient, they say nothing can be done about it. They say, "It is our bill. It is going to be done that way and it does not matter at all what you in parliament say about it".

An hon. Member: Utter nonsense.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall paragraph 1 carry?

Paragraph agreed to.

On paragraph 2.

Mr. McMillan: Mr. Chairman, I think this paragraph and the next one are penalty paragraphs unless money is invested in Canadian securities. Suppose the amount specified here is not invested in Canadian securities in respect to pension funds and other funds; what tax would then apply?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member is on paragraph 3, and not paragraph 2.

Mr. Pickersgill: Paragraph 2 was carried some time ago.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): It was not.

The Deputy Chairman: I think the hon. member intended to ask his question with regard to paragraph 3. Shall paragraph 2 carry?

Paragraph agreed to.

On paragraph 3.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): With regard to paragraph 3, there is an amendment. It will be recalled by hon. members that for the convenience of the committee I gave notice of the various amendments on February 2. They are to be found in Votes and Proceedings of that day, in the appendix at pages 2 and 3.

There is an amendment to this particular paragraph. I would ask my colleague the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys if he would move this amendment to paragraph 3.

Mr. Comtois moved that the resolution be amended as follows:

By striking out paragraph 3 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"3. That for taxation years commencing in 1961 and subsequent taxation years a corporation will qualify as an investment company only if not less than 85 per cent of its gross revenue for the year is from sources in Canada (which percentage is hereinafter referred to as the "sources requirement") and not more than 25 per cent of its gross revenue for the year was from interest (which percentage is hereinafter referred to as the "interest requirement"), except that

(a) where less than 85 per cent but not less than 75 per cent of the gross revenue of the corporation for its taxation year commencing in 1960 was from sources in Canada, the sources requirement for the taxation years of the corporation commencing in 1961 and 1962 shall be read as "75 per cent";

(b) where less than 75 per cent of the gross revenue of the corporation for its taxation year commencing in 1960 was from sources in Canada, the sources requirement for the taxation year of the corporation commencing in 1961 shall be read as "60 per cent" and for the taxation year of the corporation commencing in 1962 shall be read as "75 per cent".

(c) where more than 25 per cent but not more than 30 per cent of the gross revenue of the corporation for its taxation year commencing in 1960 was from interest, the interest requirement for the taxation years of the corporation commencing in 1961 and 1962 shall be read as "30 per cent"; and

(d) where more than 30 per cent of the gross revenue of the corporation for its taxation year commencing in 1960 was from interest, the interest requirement for the taxation year of the corporation commencing in 1961 shall be read as "40 per cent" and for the taxation year of the corporation commencing in 1962 shall be read as "30 per cent"."

The Deputy Chairman: Hon. members have no doubt read this amendment in Votes and Proceedings. Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall paragraph 3, as amended, carry?

Mr. McMillan: Perhaps the minister would now answer my question. What would be the taxation on these funds if they did not meet the requirements under paragraph 3 as amended?

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, the tax rate at the present time is 21 per cent, consisting of 18 per cent general tax and 3 per cent contribution to the old age security fund. This makes a total of 21 per cent. That is the low rate that is applied to these investment companies.

If they do not qualify for that low rate within the terms of the proposed requirements, then the ordinary general rate would apply.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall paragraph 3, as amended, carry?

Paragraph 3 as amended agreed to.

Paragraphs 4 and 5 agreed to.

On paragraph 6.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On paragraph 6 there is an amendment which appeared in Votes and Proceedings and I would ask my colleague the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys to move this amendment.

Mr. Comtois moved:

That the Income Tax Act resolution be amended by striking out all the words in paragraph 6 thereof following the words "December 20, 1960" where they first appear therein and substituting therefor the following:

"except bonds or other obligations issued after December 20, 1960, for the issue of which arrangements were made on or before that day with a dealer in securities, if the existence of the arrangements for the issue of the bonds or other obligations can be established by evidence in writing given or made on or before that day."

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to pass this amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Paragraph as amended agreed to.

On paragraph 7.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): On paragraph 7, again there is an amendment of which notice was given in Votes and Proceedings of February 2 and I would ask my colleague the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys to move it.

Mr. Comtois moved:

That the Income Tax Act resolution be amended by striking out subparagraph (b) of paragraph 7 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

"(aa) interest on any obligation where the evidence of indebtedness was issued after December 20, 1960 if the obligation was entered into under an agreement in writing made on or before that day, under which the obligee undertook to advance, on or before a specified day, a specified amount at a specified rate of interest or at a rate of interest to be determined as provided in the agreement, to the extent that such interest is payable

(i) in respect of a period ending not later than the day on or before which the obligation is expressed to be redeemable, if the obligation is expressed to be redeemable on or before a specified day, or

(ii) in respect of a period ending not later than one year after the day the obligation was entered into, if the obligation is not expressed to be redeemable on or before a specified day, and for the purposes of clause (i) hereof an obligation shall be considered to be redeemable on or before the first day on which the obligee is entitled to demand redemption thereof,

(b) interest on any bond, debenture or similar obligation issued after December 20, 1960 for the issue of which arrangements were made on or before that day with a dealer in securities, if the existence of the arrangements for the issue of the bond, debenture or similar obligation can be established by evidence in writing given or made on or before that day, or"

The Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the amendment?

Amendment agreed to.

On paragraph 7 as amended.

Mr. Hellyer: Before this clause as amended is carried would the minister care to express an opinion as to whether or not this clause amounts in its effect to another tax on the municipalities and provinces in connection with their borrowing? Reducing the yield to foreign investors would necessarily increase the cost of borrowing to Canadian municipalities and provinces and therefore increase the burden which presently exists due to the high cost of raising money.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): My answer to that question is, no. This is not an additional tax on municipalities. It is, however, an increase in the withholding tax as applied to the payment of interest by the municipality to non-resident bond holders in respect of bonds issued after December 20, 1960. I stress the fact that this resolution and the withholding tax thereby proposed have no application whatever to any outstanding obligations of municipalities up to the date of the budget. In this respect the proposal differs from one which Mr. Ilsley brought forward some 20 years ago. He put forward a similar proposal and at that time he proposed to apply it to all outstanding issues as well as to future issues. There was no little flurry over that, and the resolution in its original form was withdrawn by Mr. Ilsley.

This will have no effect whatever on issues outstanding at December 20, 1960. With respect to issues after that date I think the hon. member will agree that it is very much better for municipalities to do the raising of funds by their bond issues in Canada rather than abroad. I am sure the hon. member must share the concern which I have felt and expressed in budget speeches in previous years over the raising by some municipalities and some provinces of loans in the New York market. They were losing on account of the premium on the Canadian dollar sometimes as much as 5 per cent of their borrowing, and in addition to that they were facing on the day of maturity the prospect that the exchange rate might have changed and that they might be confronted with a further loss if the Canadian dollar at that time should be not at a premium but at a discount.

The Canadian market has shown since the budget that it is quite capable of absorbing the issues which have been offered to it. I mentioned recently that in the first six weeks of this new calendar year provincial and municipal bond issues to the amount of $200 million and a federal issue in February of $150 million had been fully absorbed in Canada without the slightest disturbance of interest rates. In this period the market tended to strengthen and there was a slight reduction in the prevailing interest rates, subject, of course, to the usual fluctuations.

So I think the answer which might be given to the questions and observations of the hon. member is, in all the circumstances, a reassuring one.

Mr. Hellyer: I share the minister's concern about Canadian borrowing in New York. I am sure he appreciates the reason why so many municipalities have had to go to New York in the last few years is the chaotic conditions in the Canadian money market which he and his colleagues have created. This has been a source of concern to us all.

I think the minister will also agree on reflection that if these changes which he is now proposing do increase the prices at which municipalities and provinces can borrow money, it is in fact an extra tax or an additional burden which he is placing on the already over-burdened municipalities.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Far from agreeing I must disagree with practically everything the hon. member has said. I think he will know why without my having to repeat what I have said on other occasions.

Paragraph as amended agreed to.

Paragraphs 8 and 9 agreed to.

On paragraph 10.

Mr. Fleming (Eglinton): Mr. Chairman, on paragraph 10 there is an amendment of which notice was given on February 2 and there is an additional amendment as well. This is the only paragraph to which there is an additional amendment, and I shall ask my colleague the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys to move this new amendment instead of the shorter one of which notice was given on February 2.

Perhaps I might point out that the new amendment embraces the one of which notice was given on February 2, providing for the inclusion of all insurance companies and not simply life insurance companies in the exemption provided. The new amendment contemplates as well extending the exemption to include any corporation which was incorporated before July 1, 1867 for the purpose of carrying on trade in any province or territory now comprised in Canada and which has been carrying on trade in Canada without interruption since that date.

Mr. Comtois moved:

That the Income Tax Act resolution be amended by striking out all that part of paragraph 10 thereof preceding subparagraph (a) and substituting therefor the following:

"That with respect to income earned on and after January 1, 1961 a special 15 per cent tax be imposed on a non-resident corporation carrying on business in Canada, other than a bank, insurance company, transportation company, communications company or a corporation that was incorporated before July 1, 1867 for the purpose of carrying on trade in any province or territory now comprised in Canada and that has been carrying on trade in Canada without interruption since that day, and that the tax be computed by reference to the amount remaining after deducting from its taxable income earned in Canada the aggregate of".

Amendment agreed to.

Paragraph as amended agreed to.

On paragraph 11.

Mr. McMillan: I referred to this as a so-called gimmick by which the minister was able to issue bonds at a discount and give wealthy people in the past a very high rate of interest indeed.

This year in his baby budget the minister said he found the provinces were doing the same thing as he was doing and he proposed to stop it. I think this has been a very bad practice on the part of the Minister of Finance in the past and I should like to ask him if this will apply to federal bonds in future as well as to provincial issues. In the past I have called the attention of the minister to the fact that a bond sold at a discount for just one year would return a high interest rate, but he would go back and give us examples of bonds sold, say, at 97 over ten years so that the appreciation of that bond would only be $3 a year whereas the appreciation in a bond sold at 97 to mature in one year would be $30 on a thousand dollar bond. I think the minister, unwittingly or not, has misled the committee. It is one thing to talk about a bond appreciating up to its face value in one year and it is quite another thing to compare it with one that has appreciated in ten years. That is what the minister has done. That is the way the hon. gentleman has answered me in the past and I think he has been wrong.
