POETRY.

Christmas Carol.
The earth has grown old with its burden of care,
But at Christmas it always is young.
The heart of the jewel burns lustrous and fair,
And its soul full of music breaks forth on the air,
When the song of the angels is sung,
It is coming, old earth, it is coming to-night!
On the snowflakes which cover the sod,
The feet of the Christ-child fall gentle and white,
And the voice of the Christ-child tells out with delight
That mankind are the children of God.
On the sad and the lonely, the wretched and poor,
The voice of the Christ-child shall fall
And to every blind wanderer open the door
Of hope that he dared not to dream of before
With a sunshine of welcome for all.
The feet of the humblest may walk in the field
Where the feet of the Holiest have trod,
This, this is the marvel to mortals revealed,
When the silver trumpets of Christmas have pealed,
That mankind are the children of God.
—Phillips Brooks.

SELECT STORY.

Wolfe the Ranger.

CHAPTER III.—Continued.
"Ah, yes; she lost her father lately, didn't she? You never told me all the circumstances," said Lady Ruth, biting her lip and fixing her brilliant eyes upon the old lady's placid face.
"Did I not, I thought I had. Yes, she lost her father a few months ago. He was a doctor, a scientific man, who took this girl with him?" inquired Lady Ruth.
"Yes, but they were returning to England when he was taken off at some place and died. The poor gentleman was out of his mind some time before."
"How did you come to hear of her through the Armisteads, wasn't it?"
"Yes; they saw her, or came to know something of her, abroad; indeed, she came over in the same ship with them."
"And that's all they know about her, Hom?" remarked Lady Ruth with some rapidity.
"Isn't that enough?" inquired Lady Brakespear, with a placid smile.
"You are always so—I don't like to say suspicious, dear Ruth—I will say cautious."
"I do," repeated Constance. "You shall have it with me for the future, if you like."
"Really?" he exclaimed. "That will be jolly nice."
Constance smiled. "Let me see, I am your governess, am I not?" she said.
"Yes; but I'd almost forgotten it."
"You are not a bit like a governess." You are not a bit like a governess. Constance could have hugged him.
"Well, then, I think I shall lay an embargo on the word 'jolly'; it is expressive, but it is not true."
"All right," he said, gravely; "I won't say it, though George always says it."
"George is a groom, you are Lord Lansbrook," said Constance, smilingly. "I think I think George must be a very nice man or you would not like him. Some more toast? Some milk?"
"Thank you, but I mustn't eat too much for I'm going down to dinner to-day. I don't usually when there is a party; but Lord Elliot is coming to-night, I heard cousin Ruo say, and I always go into dinner when he is here. Ah, you'll like him," he added, contentedly. "He is so handsome and so very jolly—I mean so very kind. He's your god-father, and a most wonderful man. He can do everything, shoot, ride and swim—ah, he can swim! He is teaching me, and he says that some day I shall dive as well as he does, but with a doubtful sigh, "I don't think I shall. What a pretty locket that is," he broke off to exclaim.

Constance put her hand to her bosom; a locket of black onyx had slipped from her dress, beneath which it was generally hidden.
She was putting it back, when, moved by the frank curiosity of the large eyes fixed on it, she touched the spring and held the locket out to him.
"Oh!" he said in an awe-struck tone. "I know who it is. It's your father's."
"Yes," said Constance, softly, and she closed the locket and hid it away in its accustomed place over her heart.
"I'm sorry I spoke over it," he said, with swift comprehension of her silent pain. "It's made you remember him. Wouldn't you like to come and see the house?" he added, as if struck by some idea of diverting her mind.
"Very much," said Constance.
"Come along then," he exclaimed.
Hand in hand they went into the corridor and Lord Lansbrook leaned over the balustrade.
"That's the hall; you know that, and you've seen the drawing room. Come into the dining room."
"Let us see the nursery and school room first," said Constance.
"All right, this way," he returned, and led her under an archway to a large room in the south of the house.
"This is the nursery, and this is the school room. Turner, here's Miss Grahame's mother. An elderly woman with a kind and motherly face came forward and dropped a courtesy, and Constance held out her hand.
"Lord Lansbrook and I have been making friends, nurse," she said.
"Ah, yes, miss," said the nurse, looking at her with a fond smile. "He has been telling me about you. You'd find him very tractable, miss," she added in an undertone.
"I am sure of that," repeated Constance.
"Come on; here's the school room," said Lord Lansbrook, leading her into a large room adjoining the nursery.
"That's my rocking horse; that is it was. I've got a real live pony now, and of course I don't ride that; but his handy when I have children come and see me, you know. And this leads to the picture gallery," he went on, taking her into another corridor, at the end of which hung two thick curtains of purple plush. He pushed these aside with his small hands, and Constance found herself in a long gallery lined with portraits and pictures.
"I used to be afraid to come here when I was little," remarked his Ladyship, "they look so live, you know, and some of them are so ugly, aren't they? That one in the armor, the first one in the row, is Guilbert de Brakespear, the founder of our house," he said with an air of innocent pride. "And that's Norman, his son, and so on. There's grandpa—and there's grandpa, and—" He stopped suddenly, for the Marchioness had passed through the curtains and stood behind them.
"Arol is doing the honors, I see. I hope he is not boring you, Miss Grahame. He ought to have allowed you a little grace after your journey."
"I am not in the least tired," said Constance.
"I was just showing her the portraits, grandma," said his Ladyship. "And I think she cares for this sort of thing, you know. Miss Brownjohn didn't. She said she hated portraits, and all that."
"Arol is rather hard on your predecessor," said the Marchioness with a smile as she laid her hand on the boy's curls.
"Yes, he makes me tremble, less I should not come up to his standard; it is rather a high one, I fear," said Constance.
The old lady glanced at the boy's eyes, fixed with rapt attention and childish admiration upon Constance, and smiled.
"I don't think you have much cause for apprehension," she said in her low soft voice.
"And that's me," broke in Arol, stopping before a portrait of himself.
"When I was quite young. Of course, it isn't like me now."
Constance and the Marchioness exchanged a smile, and they were passing on when Lord Lansbrook said:

"Oh, grandma, you must show Miss Grahame Uncle Wolfe's portrait."
A spasm of pain seemed to pass over the old lady's placid face, and she winced palpably.
"Not now; another time; perhaps, Arol," said Constance, in a whisper; but the marchioness stopped.
"I will show it to you now, Miss Grahame," she said. "I should show it to you some time. He speaks of my old son Wolfe, the present marquis."
She went up to one of the apparently solid panels which occurred now and again in the line, and, touching a spring with a wasted finger, the panel slid back, and revealed the portrait of a young man.
It was a singularly handsome face; not unlike Arol's; but there was an expression of audacity and recklessness, an air of "devilry" and wildness, which seemed to proclaim itself from every feature—the flashing eye and proudly curved lip, the low and resolute forehead, and even to the sharply hands which closed as if with ill-brooded impatience over the hunting crop.
Constance looked at it, and as she did so a strange feeling assailed her. She knew that she had never seen the face before, and yet it seemed vaguely familiar to her.
The marchioness noticed the effect the portrait had produced upon Constance.
"He is very handsome, is he not?" she said, with a quiver of motherly pride and sadness in her voice.
"Very," assented Constance almost in a whisper.
"He is my eldest, and God forgive me, was always my best beloved." She put her hand to her eyes. "Perhaps that is why I am punished. But all who know him loved him; yes, notwithstanding his faults, and—and—they were many."
She paused; Constance remained silently gazing at the reckless face, which exhaled a fascination over her she would not shake off.
"You see I speak of him as if he were dead," continued the marchioness, "and it almost seems to me as if I had lost him, still, have done the rest; it is so many years since I have seen him. He was always so wild and reckless, and his father— But it was my fault; my love made me weak and blind to his faults; and yet, with all his wildness, he was so lovable; with all his wildness, he turned her brimming eyes to Constance, "where was not a mother in the country that did not envy me my handsome, generous, headstrong boy."
"Where is he now?" asked Constance, gently.
The marchioness shook her head.
"I do not know. His last letter, three months ago, was dated from America. He may not be there now. He could never stay long in one place, I wrote to him, telling him of his father's death—I had not known where to write for years before that—and begging him to come home. He is the marquis, the owner of all Brakespear, you know," she said with touching simplicity.
"And did he not reply?"
"Yes; he sent me his love and kind messages for all of them, but no word of his return. He may come back at any moment; it would be like him; he may not come until I am not here to welcome him. I close the panel, my dear; it moves quite easily. I could not bear to have his face uncovered, I wrote to him, reminding me that perhaps I had seen him for the last time."
Constance closed the panel, and the marchioness, after a moment or two, turned to her with a smile through her tears.

Dangerous.
We often see this sign on roads and streets.
Any kidney ailment is dangerous because you never know where it will end.
Suppose you feel languid, suppose you have several symptoms, there must be poison in the blood for these are the certain signs.
To the fact that poisons get past the kidneys, may be traced every sickness to which you are liable.
Treat the kidneys forthwith and first of all.
It is the safe and proper thing every time; therefore do it promptly and well. We are trying to teach people to turn to Dodd's Kidney Pills as the simplest and greatest treatment of kidney diseases on earth.
Can't you see the point? Every serious disease results from the kidneys being out of order. Dodd's Kidney Pills keep on curing these diseases.
How intense are the fires of love! I exclaimed the poet.
Yes, answered the father of six marriageable daughters, but they do take an awful lot of coal.

A LIFE SAVED

BY TAKING
AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL

"Several years ago, I caught a severe cold, attended with a terrible cough, that allowed me no rest, either day or night. The doctors, after working over me to the best of their ability, pronounced my case hopeless, and said they could do no more for me. A friend, learning of my trouble, sent me a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which I began to take, and very soon I was greatly relieved. By the time I had used the whole bottle, I was completely cured. I have never had much of a cough since that time, and I firmly believe that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life."—W. H. ART AND LITERATURE IN CANADA.
There are cynics who say that there is no public opinion in Canada, no literature. At a dinner given recently by the publishers of Excelsior to Mr. Heston, the guest novelist, this question was discussed, and a leading publisher remarked that there would never be any rapid advance in this country because it is difficult to induce Canadians to read the works of a Canadian author. This statement, however, is not true with regard to Saturday Night, which has as large a circulation as any newspaper of its class in America. Its Christmas Number, which will be issued Dec. 1, is the eighth in a series of art numbers. It will be accompanied this year by five splendid colored supplements; the largest, a reproduction of a painting by a Canadian artist, done specially for Saturday Night, is 2 1/2 x 3 1/2 inches in size. Its title is "Champlain the Explorer," and depicts him and a flotilla of war canoes entering the mouth of a river on Lake Huron. The picture has been praised by the Historical Association as the most interesting and artistic attempt ever made to carry us back to the old days when Canada was little more than a geographical term. The other four pictures are done in sixteen colors, and the book itself, consisting of over forty pages, contains the four picture series in the Saturday Night competition. Following is a list of contents:
An epic, "A Reconciliation at Fort Ellice," by William Blaisdell Cameron. Illustrations by J. C. Cameron.
And prize, "Bob Shew's Play," by W. A. Fraser. Illustrations from photos of "Society," by John McCrack. Illustrations by F. H. Zimman. A. C. Heston prize, "Walter Aubrey," by J. C. Jones. Illustrations by the author.
"Jim Laney's Pass," by E. E. Sheppard. Illustrations by the author.
"From the Solitaires," by Warren H. Warren. Illustrations by G. A. Reid, R.C.A.
"Nanton's Sister," by Alice Aldrich. Illustrated "Henderson of Strathgordon," by Joe Clark. Illustrations by Carl Ahrens, A.R.C.A., and Beatrice Sullivan.
"So Long," an sketch by "Dun."
"Feverish Dreams," (poem), by Alexander McLaughlin.
"The Lure of the World Detective," (poem), by William Cooper. Illustrations by J. W. Bergey.
"Life of Champlain," by George Stewart, M.A., D.C.L.
"As a Little Child," (poem), by Evelyn Durand.
"A Song," (poem), by Gertrude Barlett.
The price of the number, postpaid to any address, is a pasteboard tube to protect it from damage in the mails, is 50 cents, and in point of literary excellence and the quantity and quality of the supplements it far exceeds anything offered by foreign holiday publications. Mr. James L. Hughes, Inspector of Schools for Toronto, has said that the Champlain picture should be framed and hung in every school-room in Canada, and school teachers everywhere should take an interest in bringing it before the public. Teachers and young people can do a good work by sending for a Christmas Number of Saturday Night, and a better work by acting as agent for it and inducing their neighbors to send for it as well. A liberal commission is allowed. Address the Sheppard Publishing Company, Limited, A. Leland Street west, Toronto. The price of the regular edition of Saturday Night, which undoubtedly stands alone as Canada's most interesting and thoroughly high-class illustrated weekly, is 25¢ per year.

Christmas.

Before the next issue of the ACADIAN Christmas, 1895, will have come and gone, with all its attendant festivities and happiness.

The Montreal Witness.

We are pleased to extend our congratulations to the Montreal Witness on the attainment of its Jubilee year, its first number having been issued in Dec., 1845.

To the Buying Public.

Our readers are urged to read our many new Christmas announcements. By doing so they will certainly find much to their advantage.

The good citizenship movement is receiving increased attention all over the country. This is just as it should be.

"The indirect evils of war" has been a very fertile field for humanitarian writers, as these writers rightly thought that although everyone realized the direct evils, altogether too little notice was taken of the indirect.

The Junior Rhetorical.

The rhetorical exhibition of the Acadia Junior class, held on the evening of Tuesday last, was listened to by a large and attentive audience.

Mr. E. L. Bishop, of Greenwich, the first speaker discussed "The Fictitious as a Test of Public Opinion." In an argumentative manner he pointed out the difficulty in using the plebiscite with party government.

Carlyle's "Past and Present" was the subject of the essay delivered by Mr. C. R. McNally, of Fredericton.

Mrs. Caldwell, of Wolfville, spoke of "The Fine Arts as Related to National Life." Art is a revealer of national character. The ideals of national art are but the ideals of the nations interpreted.

Mr. C. D. Schurman discoursed in an interesting manner on "Burke as an Orator." By nature Burke was not greatly favored, to a comprehensive and extensive reading and an independence of thought he largely owed his success.

Mr. S. L. Jones, of Wolfville, spoke on "National Sentiment." National sentiment plays a mighty part, marching hand in hand with Liberty it has gained for the nations the most desirable reforms.

The last speaker of the evening was Mr. W. I. Morse, of Paradise. In a well prepared and pleasingly delivered oration he spoke of the "Church in Relation to Political and Social Reform."

The essays of the evening were all of a high literary order and were well rendered. Scarcely on such occasions has the credit of the class been so well sustained by each speaker.

Apostle Temperance Meeting. Sunday, Dec. 15th, having been set apart by the World's W. C. T. U. as a day to be devoted to the interests of peace and international arbitration.

The Rev. Mr. Hind addressed the meeting in a very profitable and acceptable manner. Touching briefly on the warlike aspect of national affairs in the world to-day, he still thought there was much that we, as individual members of society could do to hasten the reign of the Prince of Peace.

Those who were fortunate enough to be present will not soon forget the practical truths suggested by the speaker.

FOR SALE.

The subscriber now offers to sell lots of land, each 140 feet x 50 feet, situated in the Town of Wolfville, Nova Scotia, for the sum of one hundred dollars (for the two lots) or fifty dollars (for the one lot). Each purchaser are respectfully referred to Mr. G. E. CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACADIAN. DEAR SIR,—Once more I ask the privilege to reply to Mr Coy, whose communication appeared in the last issue of the Acadian. Again he indulges in his pet word "false." In every agreement of sale of which I have had any knowledge since being president of the Wolfville Fruit Land Imp. Co., the restriction clause to which I referred was mentioned. Since becoming manager of the Company I have written all deeds conveying lots save one, and that one was Havelock Coy's. In every deed I have written the restriction clause was mentioned in its entirety. If Mr Coy states a portion of the restriction clause was left out of his deed, he may be able to give the reason why. Mr Coy when in Wolfville made an exchange with me for his lots with the understanding that the restriction clause would be inserted, but he failed to keep his agreement. I do not fear the investigation of the Company to which he alludes nor does his impudence disturb me.

Yours truly, G. E. DeWitt.

Wolfville, Dec. 18th, '95.

The educational institutions on the hill closed for the holidays on Tuesday, and the majority of the students left for their homes on Wednesday. We are glad to note the absence this year of that exhibition of rowdiness which usually marks the last night of the term. This is probably another result of the presence of a police constable, one that will be appreciated by the people of Wolfville.
